BUDA PESTH, Sept. 28. - Cardinal Vaszary, Primate of Hungary, at a conference of hishops here today, read a letter from the Pope instructing the Hungarian hierarchy to use their efforts with the House of Magnates to influence a modification of the bill dealing with the religion of children of mixed marriages. The letter says the agitation must be in perfectly legal form. The letter also counsels the episcopate to tolerate without opposition the remaining ecclesiastical reforms of the Hungarian Government.

Out of Ammunition.

LONDON, Sept. 28 .- The Pall Mall Gazette publishes a letter from Shanghai, dies. dated Aug. 17, saying the Chinese navy cannot fight because the ships have only about twelve rounds of ammunition per ship, the regular supply of ammunition having been sold by the captains of the Chinese warships. The correspondent adds that one of these commanders actually sold one of his ship's Armstrong guns, and went to sea one gun short.

Premiums for Japanese Heads. London, Sept. 28.-Inhuman barbarism marks the course of the Chinese army. The Chinese Taotai of Formosa offered a prize for Japanese heads. Coreans have been enlisted and three Japanese heads transfixed on spears are reported to grace the walls of Ping Yang, and the heads of five of their foes were nailed to gates of Whang Ju by Chinese. The North China Daily News also says that Chinese soldiers at several camps have been threatening lady missionaries with insult, and trouble may ensue very

The Chinese Reverses.

LONDON, Sept. 28 .- Capt. Lang. a former director on the Chinese navy and supervisor of the erection of many Chinese forts, said in an interview today in regard to the Chinese reverses: "The inherent conservatism and apathy concerning everything outside of China and the want of esprit du corps have had their natural results. As a matter of fact, the Chinese never expect to have to fight, and their supreme contempt of Japan is a predominant trait with them, Their seamen are as brave as ould be wished, but they have not the slightest patriotism. Their officers are regardless of almost everything but personal advantage, and have always wanted to evade drill and remain ashere. They have hate of Europeans and European ideas. and are insufferably obstinate and conceited. There are admitted exceptions to this rule, however, especially in the case of went ashore at Peniche yesterday, is £220,- Admiral Ting, who is conspicuously a brave and capable officer, whose lead could safely be followed anywhere. I cannot understand the alleged superiority of the Japanese quick-firing guns. The four vessels of the Ching Yuen class were admirably equipped, and I am not disposed in the light of the present information to give the Japanese the credit they claim."

Capt. Lang ascribed the defeat of the Chinese, if they have been defeated, to the feet of their having lapsed from their nigh standard of efficiency since 1890. The only Europeans now in service in the Chinese fleet, he said, are acting in subordinate capacities. In conclusion, he reffirmed his belief that the Chinese had been the victors.

BRAMPTON, Sept. 28 .- Sheriff Brody reeived a telegram from the Department of Justice this evening notifying him that MacWhirrell's sentence had been commuted to life imprisonment, He at once called upon Rev. Mr. Clark, who had been visiting the prisoner lately, to accompany him to the jall to acquaint MacWhirrell with the decision of the Minister of Justice. On entering the corridor where the prisoner sat the deputy sheriff said, "Well Mac, we have brought you the news." Upon this the prisoner's face became of an ashen hue. Not a word was spoken as Mr. Duggan handed him the message. When he had grasped the meaning he jumped four feet straight into the air, and, waving the telegraph blank above his bead, cried: 'Hurrah I hurrah !" After congratulating him upon his narow escape and shaking hands the visitors quietly withdrew. The whole community are pleased with the turn the affair has

DAN ISN'T DEAD.

Although His Funeral Cost Many Tears and $160 in Cash.

DETROIT, Sept. 28 .- Daniel Sullivan, of 291 Cherry street, familiarly known as "Boiler Dan," because he was completely identified with his trade of boilermaking, disappeared from his home over a week ago. Last Monday afternoon Frederick Stasser, who had a butcher shop at the corner of Michigan avenue and Twelfth street, received from Chicago by telegraph the following message:

"Daniel Sullivan dead. Notity relatives. Wire instructions, H. M. ROLSTON," "Undertaker."

ing of the dispatch to Mr. Strasser instead of directly to the relatives was due to the delicate consideration of some friend of Dan's who had formerly lived in Detroit. In no other way could the fact be accounted for. In addition to this the circumstances furnished assurance that the dead body was Dan's.

Dan's brother Michael is by no means wealthy, so he did not go to Chicago, but telegraphed for information as to what he would have to do in order to bring the body to Detroit, and he received this reply:

"Telegraph me $71, as follows: Coffio, $20; embalming, $15; box, $5; clothes, $10; conveyance, $5; expressage, $15 50. H. M.

The body was received at the Mishigan Central depot Wednesday morning by the relatives and an undertaker. The face had been badly crushed, but the family believed they recognized the remains of Dan. The body was therefore removed to the family residence and a well-attended wake was reld, followed by the funeral which took place yesterday from St. Vincent's Church.

After the mass the funeral processionand it was a long one and a credit to Danwent on to Mount Elliott Cometery, and there the casket with its precious contents was buried in the family lot.

THE RESURRECTION. Yesterday afternoon a hackman whom few people knew by any name but that of "Dick," was sitting on his cab near the city hall when he saw Mose Riley approaching. Mose and Dan had been close friends. "Helio, Mose !" cried Dick, "we planted your old side partner this morning.

"What side partner?" asked Mose. "Why, Dan, of course; Dan Sullivan."
"Not much, you didn't," said Mose. "I had soup with him up at the works a short house of correction. He was sent up a week age." Dick satisfied himself that More was not joking, and oil he posted to tell Miss Sullivan, who telephoned to the house of correction and found that what Mose said Dan's brother Michael, with Miss Sullivan and one of Dan's pall-bearers, then rushed off to the House of Correction.

They asked that the prisoner Daniel Sullivan be shown to them, and when the man | students assembled in mass meeting, was brought to the visitors' room they recognized with one accord that he was the Dan. But a few moments were required to learn how he had come there. He had made himself helpless with drink, he had been arrested, and Justice Sellers had sent him up in default of a $3 fine. "But when I was in the Police Court.

after the judge fined me," he said, "I asked Downey, the patrolman, to let Jerry or you, Michael, know where I was, so that the fine could be paid and I could go home. Downey said he'd do so, and I supposed he had. I thought you had made up you minds | was thrown out and killed. to leave me here.

"None of us ever heard a word from Downey," said Michael. "Certainly not," asserted Mr. Phelan. "Otherwise we wouldn't have buried you by prexy this morning." And Dan had to be told the story of his

As the bathing season for this year is now over, and seeing the City Council are not a bit farther ahead with the public swimming baths, I would like to state for the good of the public that at the Central swimming bath there have been no less than 53 persons who have learned to swim, including ladies and girls, men and boys of various ages. Some have come there and have learned to swim before they went out again. These cases are very rare, only four during my experience of bath-keeping extending several years now, having built the first swimming bath in the city. Others generally take from three to ton lessons. I state this simply to show how many precious lives may be saved in a city such as ours if we had a public swimming bath with some person to give instructions in the lifesaving art. There would then be no fear of parents allowing their sons and daughters wagon, one set of double harness and a to have a row or a sail on our picturesque river, knowing they are able to swim it an accident should happen, and therefore in all probability able to save themselves. I think, Mr. Editor, this should be sufficient to stir our city fathers up to erect the swimming bath this fall, so as to be ready for next season, and a better place could not be found than Victoria Park, immediately north of the greenhouse. A pretty building could be put up which would hide the unsightly buildings on Park avenue. Water from the fountain could be used, and then conveyed in various pipes over the park with stop cocks attached and water used to the grass in good order by means of a force pump which could be attached to the different standpipes, keeping down the dust the public will see my scheme is for the general good, and if anyone should kick TN THE MATTER OF T. L., ORME, PORT Stanley—Will be sold by public auction, by J. W. Jones, Esq., at his rooms, Dundas street, London, on Saturday, the 20th October, remedy would be an iron railing or a netting from stone coping to basin of foundation, so that ladies' dogs could not possibly bathe therein. Again thanking you for valuable space in a paper always ready to take up the peoples' cause, I am

Manager of Central Swimming Bath.

The New Free Library. To the Editor of the ADVERTISER: As a great misunderstanding exists in the minds of the public respecting the award in the competition of designs for the new

Free Library building, we deem it advisable to make the following explanations. In inviting designs, the first condition made by the library board was this: "Size of building, 50 feet by 80 feet." Now, it is apparent that a building with frontage of 60 feet and 100 feet, such as the one chosen, has advantages in the way of giving greater scope to the designer for allotment of interior space, as well as offering more imposing elevations. It is also apparent that competitors comp'ying honestly with the above condition were handicapped in competing with one who was allowed to ignore it. If it were found that the board would not be restricted to the space first decided upon and embodied in the conditions of competitien, why were not all the architects to Household Furniture, on Mon- whom copies of these conditions had been feet? We appeal to an unprejudiced public te pronounce as to the justice of the course pursued by this library board.

Our names were prominently mentioned in connection with the objection to the unjust proceeding of the board, but it should be added that every Canadian architect who competed signed the protest, which was published in your issue of yesterday, as each one is aware that he was unfairly, unjustly and shabbily treated by the Public Library Board, who, occupying a position of trust, should act honorably with all citizens. With apologies for monopolizing your valued space, we are, yours very truly, MOORE & HENRY

[Note.-The following firms have atached their signatures to the protest mentioned above: Siddall & Baker (Toronto). Beaumont Jarvis (Toronto) and T. A. Moore, McBride & Farncombe, Moore & Henry and M. L. Buffy, London.]

AILMENTS OF THE HORSE,

The Western Ontario Veterinary Medical Association Formed, STRATFORD, Sept. 28 .- The veterinary surgeons of Western Ontario held a convention in this city yesterday and today. There was a fairly good representative attendance from Perth, Huron, Waterloo, Bruce and Wellington counties.

William Gibb, of St. Marys, president of the Perth County Association, occupied the chair, W. J. McMaster, of this city, acting as secretary. Interesting papers were read by Dr. Berger, of Listowel, and Dr. Walker, of Clinton. The convention then proceeded to form an organization, to be known as the Western Ontario Veterinary Medical Association, and the following officers were elected: President, Dr. Berger, Listowel; vice-president, Dr. Walker, Clinton; secretary. Dr. Carr, Kirkton; treasurer, Dr. McMaster, Stratford.

A BIG CHANGE.

For Some Years Back John Riley Didn't Work on His Farm-He Does Now

-The Reason Why. MILVERTON, Sept. 24.-John Riley farmer living near here, is able to do his farm work right along now, something he could not do for years. The reason was he had a bad form of kidney disease which set in about ten years ago and gradually grew worse. Latterly Mr. Riley was at times unable to lie in bed or stoop to the ground because of his kidney troubles. Now he can make hay in the meadows, follow a plow or handle a reaper with any man in the country. The cause of the wonderful change is nothing more than Dodd's Kidney Pills. Four bottles effected a complete cure of Mr. Riley's kidney disease. Those pills always cure. Look Hero.

Do you fee! blue and despondent? THOMAS NICHOLLS,

Arrested on a Charge Seven Years

Without a Warrant-Discharged on a Legal Technicality-Said to Have Broken Into Sarah Doxtater's House.

About one-third of the Indians from the Oneida reserve, including squaws and papooses, were at the court house yesterday afternoon to either listen to or give evidence in the case of Sarah Doxtater vs. Thomas Nicholls. Both the parties are Indians, Nicholis is a big broad-shouldered fellow, and possesses the strength of a Sandow or a Cyr. He is not attractive enough to win the hearts of the fair young squaws, and was never married. Nicholls was a former resident of the reserve, and it is alleged that seven years ago he went to the house of Sarah Doxtater, broke the door in and demolished the interior fittings. A warrant was then sworn out before Squire Peters, and County Constable Kent came across Nicholls at Southwold station and undertook to arrest him. The handeuffs were put on, but when en route to the jail here Nicholls got away from his captor, had the handcuffs sawed off near Mount Brydges and went to Michigan. He was seen no more until this last Fair week, when Constable

Ward arrested him on Dundas street east. Squire Smyth was on the bench. Mr. J. M. McEvoy asked that the prisoner be discharged. He claimed that the arrest was unlawful, as the original information could not be produced. The statutes distinetly stated that unless an information was laid within six months after the offense no action could be taken. A charge had been made since Nicholis was arrested, but it was useless. [Search had been made for the first information, but it had not been found. Mr. Dromgole argued contra, Squire Smyth consulted Crown Attorney Magee before giving his decision, and found that the contentions of the prisoners' counsel were correct. Nicholls was then dis-

Delinquent Board of Trade Members Must Pay.

Municipal Fire Insurance Discussed-That British Columbia Flood-International Tariffs.

The Board of Trade pulled itself together again last night after a long summer vacation and tackled with renewed vigor the problem of making delinquent mem-bers pay their dues. According to the secretary, these gentlemen range back from two to tour and five years and are deaf to all solicitation.

"And yet they always show up to vote when the officers are elected," said Mr. ohn Campbell.

'Yes," said Mr. Pearce, "and they make more noise than those who pay." "Sue the fellows that you can't collect from," was the solution suggested by Mr. Campbell. It was decided, however, to make a sight draft on all the members who are behind, and at the next meeting it is possible that even more radical steps will

The Guelph Board of Trade is looking for pointers in municipal fire insurance. They thought that $60,000 a year could be saved by that means in Guelph alone, and insurance rates could be lowered and fire brigades supported. It was thought by the board that what might apply in Guelph would possibly not meet the requirements of every city, and the general feeling was that it was not wise for municipalities to manage either insurance companies or banks. The matter was referred to the executive. In connection with the above Mr. Campbell said that he thought that insurance companies were not careful enough who they insured. He believed the majority of an inspector of risks be appointed either by

BIG INSURANCE SCHEME

A Municipal Insurance Bureau - London's Co-operation Asked.

The finance committee last night received a communication from Mr. Daniel Lamb, of Toronto, asking the City Council to co-operate with Toronto in an endeavor to secure legislation for the establishment of a municipal bureau of fire insurance. Ald. Lamb is chairman of a subcommittee appointed by the Teronto council to inquire into the advisability of such a bureau, and a great deal of time has been spent in investigating the matter. A report was recently presented to the Toronto council and was adopted. It dealt exhaustively with every detail of the matter, and showed the small capital required to carry the millions of dollars of risks and the large profits made, ranging from 10 to 75 per cent on the money invested by the shareholders, which, the report said, was paid by the property-holders and ratepayers, as well as maintaining expensive offices and an army of high-salaried officials.

Toronto had gone into extensive waterworks, fire and police systems during the last twenty years, yet with all these advantages lower insurance rates had not been struck. the scheme were carried through the Legislature Toronto intended to largely increase their fire brigade. The committee were convinced that the insurance compapies had united into a close corporation to keep up cates, which were 50 per cent too high. Debentures to the extent of $1,000,000 were to be issued and invested in other negotiable securities for a reserve fund to meet extraordinary losses. An estimate of the operation of the bureau, charging only one-half the present rates, was also given. Two-thirds of the value of buildings, $43,526,811, at 30 per cent would bring premiums amounting to $130,580 43; premium on $130,580,426, value of contents, merchandise, and three times the value of assessed value of buildings, $391,741 28; interest on $1,000,000 debentures, $40,000; total receipts, $562,321 71. The expenses for a year (allowing the average for fire losses the same as last eight years, $227,334) would amount to $488,869, leaving a profit annually to be invested and applied to the reserve fund of $73,452 71. Three commissioners were to be appointed-two from the council and one from the Board of Treasurer Pope was an encyclopedia on the matter, and furnished information relating to the scheme. Ald. Pritchard did not believe that such a bill would ever pase.

Ald. Pritchard was opposed to the scheme throughout and characterized it as an attempt to take money out of citizens' It was admitted that the profits of com-papies were large, but it was thought that if some municipalities adopted the plan and had heavy losses they would be swamped. The matter was laid over for further consideration. The city clerk's memo re inquiry into expenditure at Aged People's Home was up agair. The committee will visit the institution a week from Wednesday. W. A. Hagerman's bid of $2 a month for two rooms in the town hall to be used as a social club was accepted. Assessment Commissioner Grant stated that the Home for Incurables was assessed for $1,500, with taxes amounting to $27 75. Mrs. Patullo had asked that the taxes be remitted. One-half will be struck off. M. J. Kent asked hat the personal as-

History of the Well-Known Business Firm of John S, Pearce, & Co.

Among the pioners of Elgin county was the Pearce family which settled near Col. Talbot's, at Tyrconnell. They were among the very first to hew out homes for themselves in the wilds of Western Ontario. The annals of the Talbot settlement show the Pearce family to be one of integrity and high standing in the community from the time the first tree was felled on the shores of Lake Erie to the present day. Some of the descendants of the first settler still farm the beautiful homestead near Tyrconnell; but others have launched out into the business world and still maintain the high reputation of the family.

No firm is better known to the general public of Canada than John S. Pearce & Co., of London. Starting from small beginnings it now controls one of the largest dairy supply and seed businesses in the Dominion. As their ancestors have been the pioneers in civilization on the shores of Lake Erie, so has this firm, at a later date, become the pioneers in the Dairy Supply business. In 1867 John S. Pearce started a cheese factory at Tyrconnell which he con tinued to work with one in Dunwich and another in Southwold for several years. Finding that it was difficult for cheese and butter makers to obtain the best utensils for their business, he determined to supply this want and started a dairy supply store in London nearly a quarter of a century ago. The start was made in a small room up stairs on Richmond street, and from that their huge business grown, which reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. most important addition to the dairy is the cream separator. The people of Canada being conservative in their tendencies, have not brought it into that general use to which it has come in the United States and some other countries. It has demonstrated its usefulness and benefits, and in the past year has been placed in many factories and farm houses, and the time is fast approaching when the butter-maker who does not have one will be the exception to the rule, John S. Pearce & Co. early seenred the use of the best in the market-the Alexandria-and it has given general satisfaction. There is no more complicated piece of machinery than cream separators, and the greatest skill is required in their construction. Messrs. John S. Pearce & Co. find it judicious to have them manufac-tured in England, where makers have had great experience in their structure. They are made in five sizes, and range in price from $100 to $350. The No. 8, which can be worked by any lady, s becoming very popular on firms where plainly enough that insurance rates will be from five to fifteen cows are kept, and for the No. 7 from 20 to 50. There are everal hundred of them in use all over the Dominion. Ten to twenty per cent. more butter can be made by these separators than by the old method; besides, the skim milk can be fed warm to the calves. John S. Pearce & Co.'s exhibit in the dairy hall at the Western Fair attracted the attention of all connected any way with butter and cheese making. Every modern implement used in the dairy was to be seen. Many of them are new to the general Dairy public, and a great many questions were asked concerning them of the gentleman who had the exhibits in charge. None is more puzzling than the Babcock tester, the little machine which makes bad factory patrons honest and tells the true value of a cow. It is a good witness and will not lie to save the reputation of either. About $6 purchases a machine. and if it causes three or four cows on a farm who give skim milk to go to the butchers' block it will pay for itself and the interests on the cost. Much fault has been found with the condition in which farmers'butter arrives in the market. The best article becomes disgusting ere it reaches its destination if it is not properly packed. The firm, to remedy this evil, supply butter shipping boxes which preserve the contents in first-class form while en route or in store. The old way of working butter with a ladle has made many a farmer's wife and 'daughter tired before the milk was all worked out. Pearce's lever butter worker is a boon to the dairy. It saves time and labor and is very cheap. In the exhibit were gang presses, hoops, milk cans, scale boards, rennet extracts-in fact everything required in the making of first-class cheese and butter.

THE SEED BUSINESS. In the south end of the agricultural hall John S. Pearce & Co. made a magnificent display of seeds and vegetables grown on their trial grounds south of the city. The firm in order to give satisfaction to their customers test all seeds before offering them for sale. Every new variety of grain is carefully planted and everything connected with its growth is duly noted. New kinds of wheat, oats and barley were to be seen in the straw. New varieties of vegetables on the tables were carefully scanned by those interested in market gardening. The king of the vegetable exhibit was the largest pumpkin at the Fair and weighed 191 pounds. Old and new customers gathered around the exhibit, and the verdict of all is that John S. Pearce & Co. are entitled to retain that confidence they have so long enjoyed among the farmers of the Dominion. They issue three distinct and separate catalogues, Seed, Dairy and Bulb, and either will be mailed to applicants.

WHAT ONE MAN CAN DO. A great revolution in the management of the affairs of New York city is imminent, chiefly as the result, in the first instance, of the untiring energy and determination of one man bound on effecting an improvement in municipal, if not in State, management. In New York there exists a society known as the City Vigilance League. Its chief end has been to compel the civic authorities to act in cases of crime connected with drink, lust and gambling. At the head of the society has been Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, who had become seized of the view that the condition of affairs was such that something more than public declamation against evil-doers was necessary. When Dr. Parkhurst and his associates first began to urge the police to action the officials simply ignored the complaints, and told the association to mind its own business. The league made an investigation and reported its results to the police. They only met with a rebuff-with the assertion, "It is a parcel of lies." Dr. Farkhurst tried another expedient to arouse the official conscience, and failing it, to bring the public conscience to bear on its servants. He and a delegation of his committeemen made a round of the district where the laws against morality were known to be flagrantly broken, though the fact was denied by the police, and appeared before the grand jury with the necessary indictments. The interference of this outside society was resented by the police authorities, who strongly protested against being meddled with by an irresponsible body. To make matters werse, some of the New York newspapers joined hands with the authorities, and berated and lampooned Dr. Parkhurst to a degree that would have made any man of less heroic mould give up the contest against the legal recognition of vice. The reverend gentleman was represented as a notoriety hunting mountebank, as a caterer to the vicious elements, and, through his exposure of the shortcomings of the police in tolerating evil on all sides, as a direct agency for leading the young and unwary astray! Nothing daunted, this courthe earth." Is was an arraignment of the civic government of New York and its administrative methods, which stirred official circles to a depth never before reached. Dr.

Parkhurst broadly asserted that the police, who were paid to suppress crime and bring criminals to justice, and who had taken an oath of office to perform their duty, were in point of fact the accomplices of the crim-

gotten gains. This sermon had the desired effect. It aroused public attention to an intense pitch, and moved the State Legislature, then sitting at Albany, to grant an investigation. A committee, known as the Lexow committee, from the fact that a senator of that name was placed at its head, was appointed to inquire into the matter. It sat for weeks during last summer and it will resume its sessions in a day or two. plumbers before they were allowed to work Enough has been revealed, however, to vindicate every charge which Dr. Park-Aurst made against the authorities. It has seen proved that there existed a compact between the police and the worst elements of society by which the laws were openly violated with the connivance, if not with the actual assistance, of the police. The testimony brought out of witnesses got together by Dr. Parkhurst showed that a Police Protective Tariff existed, the duties in which were both specific and ad valorem. Here are some of them in detail:

Disorderly house initiation Disorderly house, monthly payment..... Concert saloons, unlicensed, Liquor saloons (to ward men for privileges of selling on Sundays), per month......

Liquormen, unlicensed (to excise inspector), per month...

in the habit of buying police indulgences or submitting to blackmail, but only of those in which payments have already been proved. So far four captains and eight sergeants and constables have been convicted of corruption and blackmail. They have been dismissed, but Dr. Parkhurst is not yet satisfied, and public opinion in New York, now thoroughly aroused, is backing him. He is receiving the support of the leading newspapers of both political parties, and if it is found, as many suspect, that part of the money thus collected, in the compromise with vice and degredation or as simple blackmail of those doing business in the city, has made its way into the pockets of those high in authority, no excuse such as that made by some Dominion Ministers in recent soundalous transactions-that it was for the benefit of the political "party" and therefore privileged-will hold good.

We have referred at length to this remarkable crusade and the revelations arising from it to show what one determined man can do to improve either civic or national affairs. Some people are in the habit of blaming manhood suffrage for such corruption as has been exposed. They blame municipal institutions; they argue that all men are corrupt; they refuse to vote, or at least to take an intelligent interest in public affairs on the ground that, whether civic or national, "politics" is dirty. They are good men themselves, but they do not deem it to be their duty to assist in making it easy for others to be good and difficult for bad men and women to ply their vocations. Dr. Parkhurst puts all such citizens, wheresoever found, to shame. He has shown that there is a public conscience. He has shown that it can be reached. He has proved what even one man can do to set a great reform movement on foot, and to carry it to an end that will be of infinite law-honoring, decent citizens combine, municipal and general rascality must go. Whatfolly, then, for any good man to refuse tolend his vote, his personal aid, to secure honest rule in every walk of public life !

In this way there would be no material left for inals and sharers with them in their iil- smallpex, which would then be stamped encirely out of the land.

There was quite an array of papers on school hygiene, in which movable desks to suit sizes of children, good printing, physical culture, good ventilation, and the prohibition of novels to young children were talked of. Myopia and Hipermetropia were discussed and bad printing and too much reading of trashy novels were given as causes, together with bad lighting. A paper on sanitary plumbing, recommended an examining board to examine as journeymen or master plumbers. (No mention was made of their bills.) The association was a unit in approval of the Yellow fever was stated to be a disinctly contagious disease, not endemic to North America, but imported, and is preventable by quarantine. The specific germ can be destroyed by disinfectants. The olluted ground was pronounced to be the chief cause of its propagation and spread. Good sewerage and disposal of garbage was the remedy for stamping it out; and although to some extent men may become acclimatized, yet natives as well as foreigners were liable to attacks. Vaccination was given as one of the means of treatment by a Mexican physician. Cremation, separation and dumping were given as means of disposal of garbage, but no crematory was yet perfect enough to receive the approbation of the committee; indeed, all had serious defects, and time was wanted to further examine into the question. In the meantime kitchen cremation was strongly advised. Carsanitation was also the subject of discussion, and both Pullman and Wagners got rather a severe roasting in reference to their badly ventilated cars, but it seemed to be the concensus of opinion that trainmen were more to blame for want of knowledge or care in using the means at their disposal Then the companies and railway corporations were asked to instruct their hands in the ordinary rules of ventilation. The water supply and water tanks were also taken to task, and companies should be very careful in this respect, both to see that good water is supplied to the traveler, and also that the This table is not intended as a complete tanks are regularly cleaned. BAKER MUST CO BACK

So Judge Elliot Decrees-No Further Evidence-Affecting Scenes in the Court Room.

The extradition proceedings in the case of Wm. H. Baker, a native of this city, who is charged with the robbery of the Springfield, Ill., station of the Wabash Railway Company were, concluded before Judge Wm. Elliot in chambers this morning. The decision of the court is just what was expected-that Baker will be taken to Springfield and stand his trial for the crime.

Baker appeared as unconcerned as ever. His wife, children and his aged father were present. At the sight of Baker his wife burst into a fit of crying and walked up and down the room apparently much agitated. Then she left, and, reaching the hallway, fell to her knees in a swoon. Her cries were heard in every cor-Those in the judge's chamber ridor. were much affected by the scene. The prisoner's father and High Constable Schram assisted her back to the court room, where she soon revived. The baby she was carrying was uninjured. The oldest girl who was toddling about caught sight of her father on the opposite side of the room and with her back against the simmons champion heavy-weight pugilist wall began to play peek-a-boo with him, The father smiled.

Mr. McKillop said that the prosecution had no further evidence to offer. Mr. Meredith tendered formally the prisoner's evidence-formally because Judge

Elliot had expressed the opinion before that it was not admissable. "The treaty would be waste paper," said the judge, "if I took upon myself to hear evidence which would conflict with that of the prosecution. Mr. Meredith argued that two distinct offenses had been alleged-theft and felonious breaking-and the prosecution had refused to elect upon which charge Baker should be extradited. This the crown should have done. Another objection was public advantage. The fact is, when the raised to the indictment of the Illinois grand jury being offered as evidence and also the presentation of Gov. FIREMEN IN COMPETITION.

The Various G. T. R. Teams Strive for Victory.

No. 1 Team of the Car Shops Takes First and No. 2 of the Roundhouse Second Prize.

The annual fire drill competition among dispatch says, occupies a high place in the the city G. T. R. fire teams took place at estimation of the people of the Northwest, the corner of Burwell and King streets at Interesting addresses were also delivered 10 o'clock this morning. This competition is for a share of the prize annually offered by the company, as well as for personal satisfaction among the four teams. Much rivalry exists between the companies, and at times at this morning's trial this feeling assumed a degree of boisterousness that was not fair to the team on trial. The street was crowded with friends of the opposing teams and people who had stopped to view the contest. Last year the car shops team carried away both prizes, but this year No. 2 Company of the round house captured second prize, the first going to No. 1 of the car shops. The very best time on the first two movements was made by Company No. 1 of the roundhouse, which did not win a prize. This was the result of a "fluke" on the third move which departed them. No. 2 of the car shops were also unfortunate on the third movement. The first two were made in better time than those of No. 2 Company of the roundhouse, which won second prize, but the third move put them out of the race. The time made in this event was more the fault of the confusion caused by the crowding and jeering of the gang than of the men themselves. They could not discern the command and waited for almost twenty seconds afterwards before starting. The movements were as follows: No 1. run 100 yards to hydrant, connect hose, run out 4 lengths, fix nozzle and break a

2. Extend the line one length and again break a disc.

3. Replace the end length of hose with No. 3 and break a disc. A rest of 60 seconds allowed between each move. The judges were Foreman Andrew Mc-Murchy, No. 1 fire station, and Foreman Findlater, of No. 2. The starter was Mr.

Jerry Loughlin, and the timers Thomas Gillean and Ellis Adkins. The time made in the various movements First Second Third

LONDON FOOTBALL PROSPECTS. The London Rugby Football Club play a practice match this (Saturday) afternoon on Tecumseh Park at 5 o'clock. Visitors who wish after the ball match will witness a hot contest, as the team will most likely be chosen after practice to compete with the Petrolea stalwarts next Saturday. London has a team this year that should do credit to the city, and if the boys will practice regularly under the able management of Capt. Pope they will, at the end of this season, gain the laurels which they have been trying for for so many years. ATHLETICS.

CRICKET.

ENGLISHMEN VS. AMERICANS. PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 28 .- The cricketloving public of Philadelphia were not to be deterred by an east wind and cloudy sky from turning out in force today to witness the second game between Lord Hawke's team and the Gentlemen of Philadelphia. Lord Hawke placed the same team in the field as at the first match, while on the local eleven H. J. Brown was substituted for W. W. Noble and W. Altemus took the place of Clarke, jun., who was ill, Lord Hawke won the toss and sent his team to bat, the Englishmen scoring total of 211, the inning ending just as it was growing dark.

The feature of today's play was the fine batting of the visitors. Every man played steady, patient cricket, without indulging in any swiping. The object of the Englishmen seemed to be to put together as big a score as possible without any individual batting brilliancy. What a stone-wall defense they presented is shown by the fact that Whitwell was the only man bowled; all the other men went out on were destroyed. Damage, $150,000.

The Philadelphians changed their bowlers frequently, but none of them were very effective. The fielding of the team was brilliant at times, but then it would fall off and become loose. The prospects of the Philadelphians beating the Englishmen is dubious. Today's score follows:

BYES. The Brucefield Cricket Club visited Mitchell on Thursday and played a friend-THE WHEEL.

A GREAT SMASH ! Waltham, Mass., Sept. 28.—The biggest cycle record of them all—the paced mile, with pacemakert - was smashed all to pieces by John S. Johnson, of Syracuse, this afternoon, at Waltham Cycle Park, in the mast sensational piece of riding of this whole sensational year. Until this afternoon the world's record was 1:52 35, made by J. P. Bliss at Springfield. The fastest mile ever ridden in the world on a bicycle was 1:51 by Mike Dirnberger. of Buffalo, but this record was not accepted as official as he was paced by horses. But the Waltham track now holds a faster record, Johnson's time being 1:50 3-5. Besides breaking the world's mile record Johnson also beat the three-quarter mile record, doing that distance in 1:23. Johnson came on to the track shortly he fore 4 o'clock, wearing for the first time the orange and black colors of the Buffalo Press Cycling Club. Twice he circled the track to limber up his muscles and an eighth of a mile away from the tape he began to put on steam. Ahead of him flew two tandems their limbs crossed and seamed all over with fresh cuts, the result of the previous day's terrible fall. Behind came the Cal-

from theirs. Johnson rode with the smoothness and ease of a man on a practice spin, yet he cut the tape at the quarter mile in 27 seconds, gaining greater speed each instant. Here Saunders and Mayo drew aside, and the Callahans drew on Johnson to the third in 36 3 5 seconds and the half mile in 55 seconds. At this point Murphy and Steenson on the third tandem began to move along the further turn, gradually gaining momentum until at the instant Johnson dropped the Callahans and sprang for the tandem. They were going at their full speed. It was magnificently done, and to this latter team is largely due the credit of Johnson's great feat. They struck the two-thirds line in 1:13 3.5, and then began a terrific sprint. At the third quarter they had caught and beaten the world's record, making it in 1:23. Faster and faster they flashed down the home stretch, and reached the break and crossed the wire side by side, Johnson finishing in 1:50 3 5—faster time than ever man traveled before by his motive power.

It had grown cold and dark before Johnson came out for his trial contest against time, standing start. He wore a heavy sweater, and lost fully a second by poor work at the outset. He had the same tandems as before, and made a plucky struggle but gave it up before finishing the

Two more class A records were broken by Harley Davidson, of Toronto. He was paced by Louis Callahan and O'Connor on a tandem, flying start. He set the quarter class A record at 27 1-5 seconds, and tho third at 32 2-5. He too failed in his attempts with standing start.

Johnson will next try for the standing start record and then begin to train for the long distances. He is confident he can ride five miles in ten minutes or under, BASSEBAY.

Charges Against Canadians.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28. - Daniel Campbell, an ex-Canadian postmaster and legislator, was arrested here today, charged with embezzlement, and was found working as a hostler. Campbell, it is alleged, left Moosomin. Assinaboia, where he was postmaster two years ago, taking with him something over $600 of the Government's money. He sent his wife and daughter to England, and he came to Chicago, where he has been living ever since, working at odd jobs. A few days ago Campbell registered a letter to his wife in England, giving his correct name and address. It was through this that he was discovered. He came down considerably from his high position, and was found doing menial work in a livery stable. (Special to the ADVERTISER.)

State of Trade in the United States.

Business Somewhat Better, But Not Up to Normal Figures.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.-R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review o itrade says: Retail trade, the last step in movement from producer to consumer, is at the same time the first step upon which depends empty shelves in the stores and future orders to the mills. After months of unpatural economy buying should be large enough to send the mills further orders very soon. Special inquiry has been made at all commercial conters regarding the state of the retail trade. The main facts disclosed are, first, a marked improvement within the At things a long time before past month, particularly in the necessaries of life; but, second, it appears that the volume of trade at present is on the whole considerably less than in a normal year.

Local Market.

Reported by A. M. Hamilton & Son. London, Saturday, Sept. 29.

London, Saturday, Sept. 29.

We had a real old time market today. There was lots of stuff and lots of people to buy it. Some difficulty was experienced in finding buyers for hay, potatoes and beef, but this is not to be wondered at, as these lines have for some months been much higher than are other markets near by. Sellers found it necessiry to reduce the price, and when that was done the movement became general, and at going to press nearly everything of anything like good quality had found purchasers. Wheat came forward freely; the quality of offering was much quality had found purchasers. Wheat came forward freely; the quality of offering was much improved. Buying was general. The wheat market was quite a satisfaction to both the selling and buying side. London today, for the first time, gave something like the volume the prices paid for the last month deserve. Wheat values were: Hard red, such as Manchester, Golden Cross, Scott and Mediterranean soid at 85c to 81c; soft wheats, Rogers and Clawson, sold at 83c to 85c; whitas brought 87c to 91c. Over 90c was seldom paid, and only for extra clean, pure, bright samples. Oats opened strong at 82c to 84c, with a strong preference for white. Lower advices from outside made millers and shippers hold off early, as they found at those figures they could not realize profits. Roceipts increased considerably towards 9:30 o'clock, and a sharp break of 2c occurred in the general market. Of course some loads sold at the old price to private parties, and in cases where buyers break of 2c occurred in the general market. Of course some loads sold at the old price to private parties, and in cases where buyers were running each other, but the bulk and main sales were at the close being made at 80c and 82c, with whites still loading. Barley receipts were heavier, but did not increase in proportion with other stuff. A few loads were sold somewhere between 80c and 85c, both the buyers and sellers not being inclined to state the actual price. We heard 80c and 81c bid for feeding and 85c for malting samples. Peas steady at 80c to 85c for ordinary stock; 87c to 90c was paid for sound lines, no rye offered. Corn quotatins are about a week old. American corn is about 5c a bu lower since last sales here; it is likely this will effect future sales. Beans were offered in private deals and bids of 10c made; one lot sold at that price in the open market. Eggs still continue to climb the ladder, and today's sales show an exceedingly strong feeling; large lots sold at 14c to 16c per dozen, according to the quantity; retail sales were made at 18c to 10c. Butter was steady and if anything day's sales show an exceedingly strong feeling; large lots sold at 14c to 16c per dozen, according to the quantity; retail sales were made at 16c to 19c. Butter was steady and if anything a little easier; crocks, 29c to 22c; peund rolls. 22c to 24c. Chickens, ducks and geese contributed a good share of today's receipts. The prices were about the same as on Thursday. There was a bountiful supply of meat, and much better sales, as far as the volume is concerned, but not quite so good whon prices are considered. The general price of beef was 5c by the carcass, but some sold at 4½c, and the quality was almost equal to the best. Veal and lamb unchanged. Dressed hogs firm at 36 to $6.75. Trade in hides and sking steady; sales at 1c, 2c and 3c, according to quality. Grapes were easier, selling at 2c for Worden and Concord; 2½c and 3c for Niagara and Catawba. Peaches were steady at 45c to 70c. None of the really choice lots of extras reached the market. The supply was considerably heavier. There was a good inquiry and the stuff went off pretty well Apples steady and unchanged. Fall sold at 30c to 60c per bag; winters, $1 to $1.50 per barrel. All the vegetable list was unchanged, with the exception of potatoes. Early sales of them were made at 70c to 75c. Receipts were too heavy for consumption, and at going to press many lots had not found purchasers and prices had reduced about 10c ber bag, closing at 60c to 70c per bag. Tomatoes were a shade up at 30c to 60c. Hay opened at $9, but before 0 a.m. the receipts came down in the market from all quarters, and there was a regular deluge of it. the receipts came down in the market from all quarters, and there was a regular deluge of it.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL. IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

It pays to advertise, and no place of its size has as good advertising facilities as London to offer merchants. London has always been "newspapered" in advance of the size of the city. For instance, six complete newspapers are issued from this city:

The Daily Morning ADVERTISEE.

The Daily Evening ADVERTISER. The Weekly ADVERTISER. The Daily Morning Free Press.

The Daily Evening Free Press. The Weekly Free Press.

It may not be generally known, that apart from the two evening newspapers mentioned, London is the only place in Ontario. outside of Toronto, in which early morning newspapers are published, which speaks something for the determination of London publishers to keep well in advance of the needs of the community. As to the ADVERTISER, its relations with the general public were never more harmonious and satisfactory than at this moment, though it is our intention within a few weeks to add additional facilities which will still further assist our adver-

It is no part of the ADVERTISER'S methods to underrate the advertising value of any of its contemporaries throughout the Province, sufficient to say that the ADVER-TISER's circle of attached readers present a body of purchasers well worthy the attention of wide-awake business men, and that that circle is extending from year to year.

Our friends the public will please remember that for all sorts of casual advertising, such as Help Wanted, Houses to Let, Amusements, Specific Articles for Sale, etc., etc., the ADVER-TISER is an unsurpassed medium.

A fine morning in June. Lovely June; with its bright blue skie and its summer flowers. Walking about amidst his rose trees, was Mr. North, a rake in his hand. He fancied he was gardening; he knew he was trifling. What did it matter? - his face looked almost happy. The glad sunshine was overhead, and he felt as free as a bird of the air. The anonymous letter, that had caused so much mischief, was rassing into a thing of the past. In spite of Richard North's efforts to trace him out, the writer remained undiscovered. Timothy Wilks was the chief sufferer, and bitterly resentful thereon. To have been openly accused of having sent it by at least six persons out of every dozen acquaintances he met, disturbed the mind and curdled the temper of ill starred Timothy Wilks. As to the general public, they were beginning to forget all about the trouble - as it is in the nature of a faithless public to do. Only in the hearts of a few individuals did the sad facts remain in all their sternness; and of those, one was Poor Mr. North could afford to be happy today, and for many days to come. Bessy also. Madam had relieved them of her Presence yesterday, and gone careering off to Paris with her daughter. They hoped she might be away for weeks. In the seductive freedom of the home, Richard North had stayed late that morning. Mr. North was just beginning to talk with him, when some one called on business, and Richard shut himself up with the stranger. The morning had gone on; the interview was prolonged; but Richard was coming out now. Mr. North put down the rake. "Has Wilson gone, Richard?"

"What did he want? He has stayed long

"Only a little business with me, father." was Richard's answer in his filial care. It had not been agreeable business, and Richard wished to spare his father.

"And now for Bessy, sir?" he resumed, as they paced side by side amongst the sweet scented roses. "You were beginning to speak about her."

"Yes, I want to talk to you. Bessy would be happier with Rane than she is here, Richard looked serious. He had no objection whatever to his sister's marrying O iver Rane; in fact, he regarded it as an event certain to take place, sooner or later, but he did not quite see that the way was clear for it yet. 'I have no doubt of that, father." "And I think, Dick, she had better go to him now, whilst we are at liberty to do as we please at home,' Now!" exclaimed Richard. 'Yes; now. That is before madam comes back again. Poor Edmund is only just put under the sod; but — considering the cir-cumstances— I think the memory of the dead must give place to the wellfare of the "But how about ways and means, sir?" "Ay; how about ways and means. Nothing can be spared from the works at present,

I soppose, Dick.' Nothing to speak of, sir." Mr. North felt ashamed even to ask the quetion. In fact, it was more a remark than a question, for he knew as well as Richard did that there was no superfluous money to draw upon. "Of course not, Dick. Rane gets just enough to live upon now, and no more. Yesterday, after madam and Matilda had riven off, I was at the front gates when Rane passed. So he and I got talking about Bessy. He said his income was small now, but that of course it would considerably augment as soon as Alexander had left. As he and Bessy are willing to try it, I don't see why they should not do so, Dick." Richard gave no immediate reply. He had a rose in his hand and was looking at it absently, deep in thought. His father con-

"It's not as if Rane had no expectations whatever. Two hundred a year must come to him at his mother's death. And - Dick - have you any idea how Mrs. Gass's will is "Not the least, sir." "Oliver Rane is the nearest relative to her late husband, Mrs. Cumberland excepted. He is Thomas Gass's own nophew - and all the money was his. It seems to me. Dick. that Mrs. Gass is sure to remember him; perhaps largely.

She may do so." "Yes; and I think will do so. Bessy shall go to him; and be emancipated from her thraldom here "Oliver Rane has no furniture in his

"He has some. The dining room and his hedroom are as handsomely furnished as need be. We can send in a little more. There are some things at the Hall that were Bessy's own mother's, and she shall have them. They have not been thought much of here, Dick, amidst the grand things that madam has filled the house with.'

"She'll make a fuss, though, at their being removed," remarked Dick. "Let her," retorted Mr. North, who could be brave as the best when two or three hundred miles lay between him and madam. "Those things were your own dear mother's, Dick: she bought them with her own money before she married me, and I have always regarded them as heirlooms for Bessy. It's just a few plain solid mahogany our drawing room furniture in the early days, and it will do for their drawing room now. When Rane is making his six or seven hundred a year, they can buy finer if they

Richard smiled. "I remember once when I was a very little fellow, my mother came in and caught me drawing a horse on the center table with pen and ink. The trouble she had to get the horse out! — and the whipping I had!"

We thought great things of it; I

"Poor Dick! She did not whip often."
"It did me good, sir. I have been sornpulously careful of furniture ever since.' "Ah, nothing like the lessons of early childhood for making an impression," said Mr. North. "Spare the rod and spoil the There never was a truer saying

Then you really intend them to marry at once," said Richard, returning to the

"I do," replied Mr. North in more lecisive tones than he usually spoke. you know, Dick; if girls are not wives at that age, they begin to think it hard. It's better to marry tolerably young; a man and woman don't shake down into each other's ways if they come together late in life. You are silent, Dick."

"I was thinking, sir, whether I could not manage a couple of hundred pounds for them from myself." "You are ever generous, Dick. I don't House.

"In money; in money, Dick," advised Mr. North. "The furniture can be managed; and cash is cash. Spend it in chairs and tables and it seems as if there was nothing tangible to show for it."

Richard smiled. "It strikes me that the argument lies the other way, sir. However, I think it will be better to do as you advise. Bessie shall have two hundred pounds handed to her after her marriage, and they can do what they consider best with it." "To be sure; to be sure, Dick. Lat them be married. Bessy has a miserable life of it here; and she'll be 30 on the twenty ninth of this month. Oliver Rane was 30 the latter end of March,

"Only thirty!" cried Richard. "I think he must be more than that, sir."
"But he's not more," returned Mr. North. "I ought to know; and so ought you, Dick. Don't you remember they are both in the tontine? All the children put into that tontine were born in the same year."
"Oh, was it so? I had forgotten," returned Richard carelessly, for the tontine had never troubled him very much. He could just recollect that when they were children he and his brother were wont to teaze little Bessy, saying if she lived to be a hundred she would come into a fortune. . "That was an unlucky tontine, Dick," said Mr. North, shaking his head. "Of ten children who were entered for it, only three remain. The other seven are dead. Four of them died in the first or second year."

A Good Appetite Always accompanies good health, and an absence of appetite is an indication of something wrong. The universal testimony given by those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla. as to its merits in restoring the appetite, and as a purifier of the blood, constitutes the strongest recommendation that can be urged for any medicine.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, biliousness, faundice, indigestion, sick headachs. 25c. d From an orthodox standpoint many monuments point the wrong way.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvelous rapidity with Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil is earache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above ailment, but also to the hurts, disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, to which the young are specially subject.

When I would go to sleep I would have horrible dreams, and my life became very miserable, as there was no rest either day or night. But with the use of only two bottles of Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY this unhappy state has all been changed and I am a well man. I can assure you, my case was a bad one, and I send you this that it may be the means of convincing others of the wonderful curative qualities possessed by this medicine that are specially adapted for the cure of Dyspepsia. A lady customer of mine had the Dyspepsia very bad, she could scarcely eat anything, and was troubled with pains similar to those I suffered with; and she cured herself with two bottles of Northrop & Lyman's VEGE-TABLE DISCOVERY. I wish you success with your medicine, as I am fully convinced that it will do all you claim for it.

BICYCLEMANIA

Wife Becomes So Infatuated with Her Wheel that Her Liege Lord Loses All Charm for Her_He Had "Bicychlorosis."

[From the Philadelphia Record.] "My Dear Mat-You must not think too hard of your Helen for seeking other pastures and fields that are more inviting. I am a bicyclomaniac. At one time you said that you had bicychlorosis. It must have been contagious. I am infatuated, heart, soul, mind and body, with my wheel; more so, if the sad truth must be told, than I ever was with you. I must not tell you where I am, but this I will tell you-I am gone for good. Some dear old cycle friends of mine are my constant companions. I get more comfort and satisfaction from my wheel than I could derive by being tied down by your side, and it is only right for both of us that I should leave you forever. My wheel is young and frisky, and we are more congenial companions than you and I could be. Do as you please in the matter of divorce, but you can never divorce me from my wheel. Farewell forever.

That letter, written to an unloved husband, will figure in a divorce suit just begun in Common Pleas Court No. 1 yesterday. Mathias L. LaFrene, of No. 3,304 Paschall street, brings the suit through his counsel, Robert J. Arundel, and the papers tell a story of wheeling that is positively pathetic. The LaFrenes were married in Yonkers, N. Y., on Jan. 10, 1890. La-Frenc was then a resident of Rochester, while his wife was a Pennsylvanian. After the marriage they resided in this city at the Paschall street house. The statement continues that she "willfully, maliciously and without reasonable cause deserted libelant in the month of March, 1893, and has continued the said desertion up to the present time." Mr. LaFrene "prays that Mrs. LaFrene be subpænaed to appear before the court on Dec. 3 next and answer the libel and complaint."

Lawyer Arundel said yesterday that both husband and wife were victims of the bicycle habit. That was the cause of their estrangement. They became members of a prominent bicycle club several . years ago, and devoted all their time to riding over the streets and the country roads and through the park. Mr. LaFrene became very ill. At first be supposed he was suffering from a rhoumatic trouble, but the doctor finally declared that he was a victim of the new disease, "bicychlorosis," and that the only way to prolong his life was to abandon his wheel. LaFrene gave up his wheel, but his wife refused to follow his example. Quite to at once upon the nerve centers. It does not infatuated with her wheel every day. She would leave the sick husband at home and go on long excursions. Having been absent for several days she explained, on one occasion, that she had, in company with ome congenial friends, taken a wheeling trip to Altoons. She said, in answer to her husband's remonstrances, that she had become so much attached to her wheel that without it life would have no charms for her. She dressed in the most attractive of the features of the park and the principal city streets and country roads. Then came the letter, the last straw, and LaFrene declded to seek the divorce.

TERRIBLE TORTURE

Inflicted on an Old Man in the Attempt to Rob Him. BROCKVILLE, Sept. 28 .- John Brady, Hugh Brady, Lagorrie Brady and John Murphy, of Kemptville, were brought up for preliminary examination before the police magistrate yesterday. These men are charged by an old hermit named Swords with breaking into his house on the night of Aug. 17 and torturing and robbing him, leaving him bound fast to the Swords, in his ovidence, cords. of being aroused about mid night by the men breaking into his nouse, of his feet being burned, a gag thrust into his mouth, and being left bound to the cords of the bed, after being robbed of $150 in a big pocketbook and $48 38 in a small purse. His foot that was burned is not well yet, and he was only able to put on a boot en Tuesday last. He told that one of the men demanded $50 more. He swore positively that it was the Brady boys and Murphy who committed the deed. He said John was the man at his head, who put the gag in his mouth, and that Hugh was the one who burned his feet. He said the other two hung back. John, he said, showed him the empty purse and said that if he would give them $50 they would not kill him. They left him tied to the cords and he was released next day by a man named Higgins. Swords was subjected to a severe crossexamination, but it did not succeed in tent. No other evidence was taken.

The magistrate committed all four for trial at the next assizes and accepted bail for their appearance, the prisoners in $1,000 each and two sureties of $500 tor

Cornell Canocists Drowned.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 28 .- Edward Arthur Johnson, of Dayton, Ohio, and Clarence Dewitt Goodnew, of Brooklyn, who have ust arrived at Ithaca to enter Cornell University, went out on Cayuga Lake in a canoe Wednesday afternoon during a high wind and next morning the canoe was found upset and full of water. There is but little doubt that both young men have been drowned.

David's Boodle Discovered. ALLEGHENY CITY, Pa., Sept. 28 .- David Morrison, of Allegheny City, died several years ago, leaving a lot of money secreted in his house, but it could not be found. Yesterday while the furniture was being packed up for removal an old bookease was found, and, on taking it to pieces, an old box fell to the flour, which contained gold and certificates worth $75,000.

which he executes his remarkable feats. He is simply a marvel beyond the comprehension of the ordinary mortal, and is one of those instances-of where it is necessary to see in order to believe. His programme this season is an entirely new one. The "Serpentine," "Butterfly" and "La-Blanche" dances, to be presented here for the first time by Mme. Farewell. The 125 members and friends of the Christian Church, who gathered in the school room of the church last night, had a very unpleasant duty to perform. The pastor, Rev. T. L. Fowler, who is about to remove to Toronto to take charge of a college, was given a farewell, and it was for the purpose of breaking the ties which bound people and pastor together for a few years in as pleasant a manner as possible, that the assembly was held. Refreshments were first served by the energetic ladies of the church, and the programme was proceeded with. Mr. Frank Ball, president of the Y. P. S. C. E., acted as chairman. A number of solos were rendered by members of the choir before Mr. C. O. Stapleton stepped to the front and read an address. It was on behalf of the church management and expressed the most sincere regret at the departure of the paster. Accompanying the address was a gold-headed cane. Mr. Fowler was greatly touched by the kindness of his congregation and wished them even greater prosperity than they had yet enjoyed. A review of the church work was given, and showed that when he took charge, a little over two years, there were 27 names an the members roll. Since then 122 had been added, by baptism and otherwise; 8 were baptized, but had not become members, while 29 had been diamissed by letter and otherwise. Mrs. Fowler was active in every branch of the church work, and the Y. P.S. C. E. presented her with an address and a heavy oak easy chair. What is London's loss is Toronto's gain is the conviction of every person acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Fowler.

The Awful Crimes Committed Against Fashion by the Thoughtless-Some Things That Should Never be Forgetten -Public and Home Weddings.

It is surprising and painful to note the number of young persons who prepare to rush into matrimony with no knowledge of the proper manner of entering the estate. A young man will propose to a young woman before he knows whether he will have to wear white gloves or pearl-gray ones. He will assume the awful responsibility of marriage without knowing who should pay for the bridal boquet. He will prepare to set up as a householder and head of a family when he is ignorant of the proper cost to wear at a noon wedding. Then he spends weeks of agony trying to decide these questions. One familiar question concerns the expenses of the wedding. With the excepception of the clergyman's fee and the presents which the bridegroom makes his ushers and the bridesmaids, the expenses are borne entirely by the bride's family. If their income is not sufficient to give her a "show" wedding they must content themselves with a quiet one, for it is entirely opposed to the dictates of propriety that the bridegroom should pay for any of the festivities the bride's people choose to indulge in.

At a church wedding there must be ushers and there may be bridesmaids. The groom, with the best man, waits at the altar the coming of the bride. The ushers advance two by two, followed by the bridesmaids. At the altar the couples separate and form almost a semicircle. bride tenters the church with her father, or whoever is to give her away. Her maid of honor precedes her. The The best man's duty at the ceremony is to find the ring and give it to the groom at the proper moment. The maid of honor holds the bride's boquet. The procession leaves the church with the bride and bridegroom leading, the best man and maid of honor following immediately, and the rest of the party back of them.

At the reception following a wedding the bride and bridegroom are assisted in receiving by their parents. The reception takes place in the bride's home.

A home wedding may be as elaborate or as simple as the bride chooses. The processional is dispensed with usually. She enters the room on her father's arm, is conducted to the place where the bridegroom, best man, and clergyman await her, hands her bouquet to the maid of honor at the proper time, and is quietly

The wedding dress should be made with high neck and long sleeves. Nothing can be in more questionable taste than decolete wedding gowns. If the bride is a idow she may not wear the conventional nite frock and veil. If she is not she saay wear what she pleases, but unless she shooses the customary white silk it is better for her to wear a traveling gown and bonnet. At a wedding occurring after 6 o'clock the bridegroom, best man, and ushers should wear the usual evening garb. At a morning, noon, or afternoon wedding they should wear fine striped or checked trousers, black frock coats, and white four-in-hands or bow ties. All the persons whom the bride wishes to keep on her list of calling acquaintances must be invited to either the church ceremony or the reception. All persons who are invited must call on her afterward. Generally the bride gives two or three wedding receptions to give her friends a chance to clear off this debt. It is customary for all those who are invited to either the ceremony or reception to send some token of their regard, but it is not absolutely necessary.

don, for the manner in which that British colony shows the way in most directions is wonderful. Nowhere else is the woman's movement so rampart, and a recent wedding at Christ Church, under the suspices of the New Zealand Dress Reform League, has beaten even the antipodean record. The bride, Miss Kate Walker, and the bridegroom, J. R. Wilkinson, had already joined hands by collaborating in the publication of a pamphlet on "Dress Reform and What It Implies;" but, not satisfied with this achievement, says London Sketch, they resolved to don reform garments on their wedding day. The upper part of Miss Walker's attire was convenventional to the extent of including a veil, the lower part sinking-or rising-into a modified pair of breeches. Her costume was of stone-blue bengaline, with vest and revers of white silk embroidered with gold. She wore a beautiful wreath of jessamine instead of the time-honored orange blossoms, gloves being discarded and the veil falling in graceful folds over the shoulders. The bridesmaid, Miss Nellie Walker, wore a suit of cream silk, with a beautiful lace collar. The lady in whose house the wedding was held wore a brown cashmere suit trimmed with handsome braid. All the suits were nearly of the same design-neatly fitting knickerbockers, long coat with revers and long vest, the coat being edged with cord to match the material. Most of the gentlemen wore knickerbockers.

Bonnets for Autumn Wear.

It is announced that we are to prepare for a radical change in bonnets. This statement, if true, will be bailed with pleasure by matronly women, at least, who have for many seasons had only Hobson's choice in the matter of a bonnet, for the article known as one proved a most inadequate head-dress, says the Philadelphia Times. Head covering it never pretended to be. A youthful face and a mass of waved or frizzled hair were necessary to make it becoming, and on this account matrons have more than ever before elected for the large, protective round hats, with brims that shaded the face, and their daughters have for dressy wear chosen the tiny toy bonnets. Now probably there will be a reversal, of this order. It is also said that the towering aigrettes and nodding flowers and foliage set up from the back of the hat or bonnet are to be laid low. Width in front will be correct. Lace wings and bows of velvet or ribbon are requisitioned to produce this effect. Strings may be dispensed with, but when used they are short and made of velvet cut crosswise and fastened under the chin with fancy headed pins. Strings, to most women, are very becoming additions to bonnets. For autumn wear deep yellow Tuscan straw, trimmed with green velvet and pink or deep red geranium blossoms, is a favorite combination with milliners. The boatshape hats flood the market just at present, and, while it is a becoming shape for the majority of faces, it has not sold well, say the importers, because it was likely to become common, say their customers, but no one need refuse them on this account, for the sailor hat has certainly proved a hundred times more common than the newer boat-shape hat.

The Frigate Bird. Though the petrel is swift, the frigate bird is far swifter. Seamen generally believe that the frigate bird can start at daybreak with the trade winds from the coast of Africa and roost the same night upon the American shore. Whether this is a fact has not yet been conclusively determined, but it is certain that this bird is the swiftest of winged creatures, and is able to fly under favorable conditions, two hundred miles an hour

CLEANING THE KITCHEN

RULES FOR THE WOMAN WHO HAS TO SCOUR AND SCRUB.

The Proper Way of Cleaning Sinks-The Materials That Make Fall Kitchen Cleaning Comparatively Easy-A Secret About Keeping the Floor Clean and White.

Lives there a woman anywhere who does not dislike the thought of cleaning the kitchen? She may enjoy cocking, for cooking is a fine art; she may delight in dusting or in dish-washing-but when it comes to cleaning paints, tables and dressers, polishing stoves and spigots, scouring zines and sinks, then most women admit they would rather be men. Still there are certain rules of procedure which will reb even kitchen cleaning day of some of its terrors.

In the first place it is necessary to have on hand a large number of flannel rage for scrubbing and cleaning paint. Merino underwear is also excellent for this purpose. In fact, any cloth that is soft, absorbent and that will not shed lint, is to be desired. In addition to the soft, wet cloth, a dry one made of old Russian crash that has done service as a dishcloth should be kept. A scrubbing-brush of hard bristles is best. The soft excelsior brushes are of little use.

Tables and shelves should be cleaned first, so that if through carelessness on the cleaner's part and the operation of the law of gravitation the water should descend upon the floor it would not be undoing previous labor.

Tables that have been neglected may be bleached by spreading on them over night a layer of wood ashes, made into a mortarlike paste with water. The next morning brush it off and scrub. The same paste may be laid on floors when spotted with

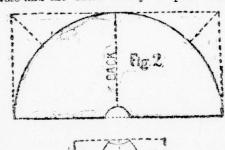

After tables are scrubbed sinks should be cleaned. Put a lump of washing soda as large as an egg at least over the sink hole, and pour a kettle of boiling water over every part of it, using the sink brush to send it into all the greasy parts.

After tables, dresser and sink have been cleaned the paints should be attended to before scrubbing the floor. All finger marks on the woodwork and doors should receive attention. The chairs if painted. the backs of them if caned, and the window-sills and casings all require attention. It may seem needless to state that floors should be always thoroughly swept before they are scrubbed, yet thoroughness in this respect is one of the great secrets of keeping the floor white and clean with but little trouble. In cleaning floors never wet too large a space at once. Always in using the dry cloth rub it well beyond the space now being cleaned to the one last done. The use of a little soda or borax in the water is excellent for boards, and if they have been neglected a small lump of lime in the water greatly helps to make them white.

To clean oilcloth do not scrub it unless it has been badly cleaned many times, when with the fine corrugated surface now usual, the dirt, or rather the dirty water allowed to remain in it, will have made it so grimy that it will be necessary to use a soft brush and serub in the direction of the lines. But usually warm water, one wet and one dry cloth are all that are required. Oilcloth and paint need the wiping with a coarse dry cloth as much as boards, and will repay the extra trouble. Skim milk used in place of water to clean cilcloth will give it brightness and lustre. When kitchen floors are painted they may be treated in the same manner as the oilcloth. Before painting any floor all cracks should be closed with putty or a preparation of putty and white lead, or any other good filling material that has been found satisfactory, and after painting this will give a perfectly smooth, firm surface, that may be quickly cleaned with very little hard scrubbing.

The "Jupe Eventail." For once the tyrant fashion is reasonable and the skirts lately adopted being found graceful, becoming and convenient hold their own against drapery, loopings, paniers and other innovations. What is called the "jupe eventail" is something new and is bound to become popular. As the diagram shows it has a gored front with circular back, and when properly cut should fit snugly about the hips and measure five yards round the bottom. This skirt is more stylish when devoid of trimming and short enough to just clear the ground. A petticoat of moreen cloth with two or three ruffles across the back breadth should always be borne under this skirt to give the desired "spread" to the back; for, be it understood, these skirts are not stiffened at all, but softly padded. This idea of padding the skirt, by the way, we owe to the French, and after one has enjoyed wearing one treated in this manner the wonder naturally arises how we ever endured the stiff, ugly-looking and uncomfortable interlining of haircloth so much in vogue the past season.

THE POWER OF HOME. Some Truths That Caunot Too Often be Promulgated.

The great hope of a nation is centered in its homes. They are wonderful in their forming and their restraining power, if they are what they should be. But, alas for us! if we fail to make them mighty forces to withstand corruption and drive back the tide of evil. If we are to have honest men in our halls of legislation, men to whom principle is more than party, and honor more than the spoils of office, the fathers and mothers have a work to do at home. If we would stay the tide of intemperance, there are the best opportunities to work around our own firesides, among our own children, for lessons early learned are longest remembered.

It is pitiful to think how many children grow up in unloving homes, where harsh words and bitter fault-finding are the rule, and gentle, kindly tolles the exception. Weary mothers, well meaning, doubtless, but "encumbered with much serving," speak many bitter words at those around them; fathers, absorbed in business, take little time to amuse and instruct their children, while merry, cheerful laughter is too often hushed with harsh, impatient words-words that may yield an awful harvest. If we could see the great aggregate of misery and sin directly traceable to unhappy homes. I think we would let the unkind word more often remain unsaid. What if the little feet leave a track upon the clean floor, and little hands drop mittens or stemless flowers upon the carpet sometimes, it scarcely calls for the bitter words mothers so often use. If the husband forgets an errand at the village store, he may be as likely to remember it another time if gently reminded as when harshly reproached with "never remembering anything!" Too many times the first lessons in deceit and falsehood are learned at the mother's side: fathers, by their practice, teach their boys to give scant weight and short measure.

I know a mother who opened her door to receive some unwelcome visitors one day, telling them she was so glad to see them, when her little daughter of five spoke up in utter astonishment, "Why, mother, you said you did hope they were not coming here!" We may think that if we teach them the decalogue it is enough, but our children will be very likely to pay more attention to our practice than to our precepts; and "if father or mother does so, we can."

We have each of us our work to do. parent and child, and are mutually responsible for the condition of our home. Do we do our duty toward making it the pleasantest spot on earth? If we do our part faithfully, God will help us; if not, 'sin lieth at the door. Fathers and sons are too often driven away from the liomes that should be Wives and daughters grow sad and heart-broken sometimes because fathers and husbands forget to bring sunshing home with them.

Let me give you a little sketch of my ideal home. It is full of comforts, make some of our blind to see, then we though it may be bare of luxuries. Whether it rans or shines, indoors there is warmth and brightness. If a father has cares he does his best to forget them. that they may not darken their hearts. The mother has worries, but is not anxious to prove herself a martyr, so lovingly and cheerfully she casts her burden on him who is able to bear it, and makes home bright and shining. Seeing father and mother wise and cheery, the children will learn to do their part When trouble comes, as to all it must, it loses half its weight if met and borne and His own received Him hot, even His ant room, with some of the many little Him things that make home happy-a few pictures (and many, if possible), that early the young may learn to love beauty, and the older ones may rest their tired eyes upon them when life grows dreary as even here it sometimes the deluge, the destruction of Sodom, Jonah may. It shall be a home good enough in the belly of the fish, Lot's wife becomfor visitors, but not too good for "our ing a pillar of salt, etc. How unlike Him own," and never by any chance so elegant that sunshine, home-light, and our family are shut out.

Let us make our homes places of rest and peace, of purity and good cheer; schools where all that is noble and pure | widow in Israel, leaving us to infer that it is taught; and, above all, types of that other home where enters nothing that makes a lie.—Sunday Magazine.

The Sun Bath.

One of the greatest cures is the simple sun-bath, which very few people really appreciate. The solar heat gives to the ting of these gems. whole system a strength and vigor which no nourishing food can impart. It is so essential to our health and happiness that when it is taken away from us we become weak and puny. When winter is over most city people are with Isa. i, 3, 4. Oh, wretched unbelief weak, run down and pale; but when they go out into the warm sunlight again new strength and health quickly come to them. The sun bath is absolutely essential. Take it every day. Cut down the trees that are so close to the house that they obscure the sun, and light. If one is forced to stay indoors own righteousness (Jas. i, 20; Rom. x, 3, 4). all day, try to get near the sunny window where the full effects of the sunlight can be felt.

Care of the Teeth.

To keep the teeth clean should be one of the things early taught a child. If every person would be particular with his or her teeth from childhood up there God service (John xvi, 2). How can the would be less suffering and the dentists would soon find their business on the decline. Nevertheless it is due the skillful dentist to say that he does help allay suffering, and by going to him in season much disfigurement could be avoided. Cleanliness is a very important item with the teeth. They should be well cleaned with a brush and clear life voluntarily. No human power took it water after each meal and before retiring. Fine soap is not at all harmful, while it aids in the cleansing process. Powdered chalk is also a good thing, and five cents worth will last a long time.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

LESSON I, FOURTH QUARTER, INTER-NATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 7.

Text of the Lesson, Luke iv, 16-30-Memory Verses, 16-19 - Golden Text, Heb. rii. 25-Commentary by the Rev. D. M.

16. After His meeting with the woman of Samaria and Histarrying there for two days He went on to Cana, where He had wrought His first miracle and from thence healed the nobleman's son at Capernaum without going near him. After that He went to Nazareth, where He had been brought up, and there we find Him in today's lesson. We notice that it was His custom to attend the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and it could not be because of the spirituality of the service or of the worshipers, as is evident from verse 28; but, whatever they were, He could worship in spirit and in truth.

17. In the synagogue worship of today there are always several who take part in connection with the reading of the Scriptures, and He on that occasion was asked to take part in the reading. He either selected what we call the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah, or else that was the portion for the day.

18. Apart from the Spirit who wrote the book, there is no possibility of understanding it or of proclaiming it with power. Consider John xvi, 13; Acts i, 8 Luke xxiv, 49, and lay it to heart. If we are filled with the Spirit and the word, we will have good tidings for the poor, health for the broken hearted, deliverance and liberty for the oppressed, and the wounded by satan, and sight for the blind.

19. We will when controlled by the Spirit show forth or be telling God's salation from day to day (Ps. xcvi, 2) and make manifest that it is still the acceptable year of the Lord, the day of salvation. the hour when the dead hear the voice of the Son of God and they that hear live (II Cor. vi, 2; John v, 25).

20. Having closed the book, He gave it to the minister and sat down, and all in the synagogue fastened their eyes upon Him. This may have been the first time they had ever heard Him read the Scriptures. Think of God, manifest in the flesh, reading to men His own word. He would surely read distinctly and give the sense and cause them to understand the reading (Neh. viii, 8). If you turn to Isa. lxi, you will see that He stopped in the middle of a sentencee. He did not read "and the day of vengeance of our God," for that day has not vet come. There is already an interval of over 1,800 years between the two clauses of that sentence. He knew how to divide the word of truth.

21. He began to talk to them by saving. 24. The words of this verse may not seem to some as a very important statement, but surely every word of God is important, and special attention is demanded by the sayings which are prefixed by His "Verily I say unto you," which is equivalent to the "Thus saith the Lord" of the Old Testament. THE SUN'S TEMPERATURE. Its Heat Has Always Been Overestimated, it is Now Said. It is easy to infer that the problem of the sun's temperature is a difficult one, from the fact that the estimates of various republic authorities range all the way from the millions of degrees contended for by Secchi and Ericsson, to the three, four, or five thousand of Pouillet and Vicaire, says C. A. Young in the Cosmopolitan. The very high estimates, however, are obviously wrong, being based on the hypothesis that the amount of heat radiated by a body is proportional to its absolute temperature. It really increases much more rapidly, as has been known for a long time, and the low estimates referred to are founded upon a purely empirical law deduced from this knowledge-a law of more than doubtful application to conditions differing so much from those of laboratory experiments. For the past decade the value assigned by Rosetti (about 18,000 degrees F.) has been very generally accepted as the most probable; but within the last two years new investigations by Le Chatelier, in France, and by Wilson and Gray, in Ireland, working by different methods, both apparently improvements on Rosetti's lead to reasonably accordant values, which are considerably lower-14,000 and 12,000 degrees.

Within a few months Scheiner, of Potsdam, has come upon a spectroscopic phenomenon which in a general way confirms these results, without, however, deciding between them. Among the lines in the spectrum of magnesium there are two which behave in a curiously contrasted way. One of them, having a wave-length of 435.2 microns. is conspicuous in the spectrum produced by the electric arc. where the temperature is not far from 6,000 degrees F., but is wholly absent from the spark-spectrum at a temperature much higherprobably not less than 20,000 degrees. The other line (wave-length 448.2) is brilliant in the spark-spectrum, and absent in that of the arc.

Now this latter line is very conspicnous as a dark line in the spectra of the great white stars, like Sirius and Vega, and wanting in the solar spectrum, while just the reverse is true of the other. Hence, the obvious conclusion that the white stars are much hotter than the sun, and that the temperature of the sun's absorbing atmosphere is approximately that of the electric arccertainly not lower than that, but also certainly not so high as that of the electric spark. As for the atmosphere, or shell of incandescent cloud, which constitutes the visible surface of the sun, it must be much hotter than the absorbing atmosphere. It is a pity that observation does not fix the limit of possibility somewhat more closely, but to do so it would be necessary to determine just the temperature at which one of the magnesium lines gives place to the other, and so far as we now know, it may be anywhere between 6,000 degrees and 20,000 degrees.

SEEING BY ELECT RICITY. Professor Bell is Conducting Some Astonishing Experiments.

Professor Alexander Graham Bell is spending these months at his place in Nova Scotia, engaged in a series of investigations which will no doubt have important and perhaps sensational results. His outdoor work is devoted to experiments in "aerial navigation," in connection with Professor Langley, of Smithsonian Institution, while in his laboratory he is endeavoring to demonstrate a problem to which he has given a great deal of thought, and in which he thoroughly believes. It is to harness electricity to light, as it has been harnessed to sound, so that the people may be able to see a great distance, just as the telautograph enables them to write and the telephone enables them to speak at a great distance. Professor Bell firmly believes that it will be possible some day to see from Washington to New York as easily as one can convey the sound of the voice that distance. He insists that the fact has already been demonstrated and that it only remains to con struct the apparatus necessary to bring the possibilities of the discovery into actual and practical use. This is exceedingly difficult-much more difficult than the construction of the telegraph instrument or the telephone, for the reason that the vibrations of light are so much more rapid than the vibrations of sound. But Professor Bell is confident that he will soon be able to discover a diaphragm sufficiently sensitive to receive the vibrations of light and produce the effect necessary to convey the impressions to the human vision .-Chicago Record.

New Zealand's Experience.

The introduction of predaceous animals, to hold certain pests in check, has not proved an unqualified success in New Zealand. A local paper of that colony states that the weasels, which were imported to keep down rabbits and rats, are increasing so rapidly as to become a serious menace to poultry keepers. Their success in keeping down the rabbit pest is problematical, and so far are they from destroying rats, it appears that they fraternize with them. one farmer having found a rat living on

THE ECONOMY OF GAS ENGINES.

An Interesting Resume of Their Value as a Means of Power Producing.

In a paper read before the Incorporated Institution of Gas Engineers in London, Mr. Bryan Donkin gave a number of facts as to the extent to which gas engines are used and the degree of economy they have attained. He said that, according to Mr. Dowson, gas engines for electric lighting, developing about 7,000 horsepower, had been sold in England and Otto engines for 11,000 horsepower in Germany. Messrs. Crossley informed him that the number of Otto gas engines in use in England was about 20,000, and he might assume that there were about nearly double this number for all kinds of gas engines.

At "Chateau Lay" an Otto gas engine. feeding about 650 glow lamps, consumed 1.2 pounds of fuel per indicated horsepower per hour for the manufacture of its Dowson gas. At the Chelsea flour mill a 60 nominal horsepower twin cylinder gas motor, with Dowson gas, used during a full load test about .87 pound of anthracite and coke per indicated horsepower per hour. The engine had a cylinder 17 inches in diameter by 2 feet stroke and made 156 revolutions per minute. At the Leven tweed mills there were, he said, four gas engines with Dowson gas, developing 200 horsepower. These engines used during a six days' test 11 pounds of anthracite per brake horsepower per hour. With coke from the gas works the consumption was 12 pounds per hour.

At Godalming paper mills there were gas engines giving 400 indicated horsepower, with an avarage consumption of one pound of fuel per indicated horsepower per hour. At a weaving mill in Halifax there were four gas engines of about 200 indicated horsepower using 1.2 pounds of gas coke per horsepower per hour. At the Uxbridge waterworks a water pumping test was made in February, 1892, using generator gas. The consumption was a pound of coal per indicated horsepower, or 12 pounds per horsepower of water lifted per hour. The approximate power was 16% indicated horsepower. The whole of Messrs. Crossley Bros, large works are driven by gas engines using Dowson gas made from anthracite coal. There are eight gas motors from 12 to 30 nominal horsepower, indicating collectively about 325 horsepower. The firm stated that the consumption was from 1 to 11 pounds per indicated horsepower per hour. The net cost of the anthracite fuel, labor, interest on capital and repairs worked out at about 21 pence per 1,000 cubic feet. Compar ing this with average town gas and allowing for the difference in thermal value, the equivalent cost would be about 10 pence per 1,000 cubic feet. A single cylinder gas motor indicating 280 horsepower, driving a large flour mill in France, was lately seen by Mr. Donkin working with generator gas trials gave about three quarters of a pound per indicated horsepower per hour. The engine will give a maximum of 320 indicated horsepower.-Providence Journal.

The Fairy Ring of Helena.

The well known circle on the pasture lands about six miles east of Helena near the old overland stage road and which has been a curiosity and a source of speculation for years, is identical with the fairy rings so common in some parts of England. There were formerly two of these rings, but one has entirely disappeared within the last few years. The remaining one is about 200 feet in diameter and forms a perfect circle. The ground forming the circle is about two yards wide and quite destitute of vegetation. Many theories have been advanced as to the cause of these rings. Some say that it is the result of lightning; others that a herd of buffalo, pursued by wolves, stopped and formed themselves into a circle as a means of defending their young, and thus tramped out the grass.

These rings have attracted the attention of scientific men, and recent investigations have shown they are the result of the centrifugal development of certain kinds of fungi, among which is the common mushroom, which shows a tendency to grow in this manner. The spot where it has grown is unfitted for its continued nourishment, and the spawn extends outward to new soil, forming the circle. These rings are common in eastern Montana along the Musselshell river, but the one near Helena is the most perfect in the state. -Heiena (Mon.) Independent.

Laboring in High Altitudes. According to an American journal, some curious facts were brought to light on the capabilities of men to labor at merry terms in the same nest with four high altitudes, during the construction of the Peruvian Central Railroad. This line starts at Lima, and, proceeding inland, reaches its highest point at the tunnel of Galeria, 15,645 feet above sea level. It is stated that men were able to do a fair "sea level" day's work as long the cod would not bite, while on the as the altitude did not exceed 8,000 feet southerly side they did. By attaching to 10,000 feet above sea level, but beyond this there was a sudden falling off in the work of one-fourth to one-third up to the heights of 12,000 feet, and at still higher elevations 100 men were required

THE HOME GYMNASIUM.

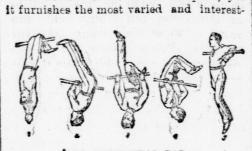

SOME EXERCISES THAT WILL PROVE ATTRACTIVE AND VALUABLE.

Work on the Horizontal Bar-Hanging by the Hands-Breasting the Bar-Hanging by the Legs-Circling the Bar-The Mus-

In this article are detailed some of the rudimental exercises in the home gymnasium. You should begin training so moderately that you will never feel a soreness

With the gymnasium you can develop nearly every muscle of the body; and you can learn to do some exceedingly clever feats, but it will require time and patience. Go at it with the same system that you study mathematics or Latin.

The horizontal bar is the simplest, yet

THE HORIZONTAL BAR. ing forms of exercise and amusement any other two gymnasium adjuncts. The muscles of the arms, wrists, chests, abdomen, legs and hips are chiefly benefited by bar exercise.

In the exercises herewith described, the bar should be at a sufficient height above the head to require a slight spring to grasp Stand directly under the bar, jump up and grasp it firmly with both hands, the palms facing from you and the thumbs on same side with fingers. Practice this until you can sustain your weight, either at a standstill or swinging back and forth, for several minutes. Then practice hanging with one hand

Grasp bar firmly as before, and gradually, by bending the arms at the elbow, raise the body until your chest is even with the bar. Once or twice will fatigue you at first, but continue it until you can breast it seven or eight times successively.

Grasp bar with both hands, bend the knees, bring them between your hands. and hook them over the bar. Let go with your hands, allowing the body to drop, head downward. To reach the ground from this position, swing back and forth vigorously until the head rises about even with the bar, and, on the forward swing unhitch the legs from the bar and spring quickly to the ground, alighting on the feet. This, on first appearance, seems difmaking them over a mattress or sawdust) will perfect you in it.

(See fig. 2). Breast the bar as before dearound the bar until you lie flat upon it. From this position you circle round and round the bar as many times as practicable. Circle it both forward (that is, going around in opposite direction from the one hands. Loose one leg, bring it as far back as possible and with a very vigorous kick throw it forward, carrying the body around the bar. As the body falls over the bar, repeat the kick for the second circle. After will go around of its own momentum.

(See fig. 4). Grasp bar firmly with both hands. Bring the legs between them and had done without thinking of himself at indigestion and kidney troubles. He had bend them over the bar. Pull the body up all. with the arms until the small of the back rests on the top of the bar. Now, raise the body erect, pulling the seat back between the hands, and assume a sitting posi-

CHEST WEIGHT. ease yourself forward off the bar, throwing the arms around it (one at a time). With the hands clasping your pantaloons at the sides, swing your legs back and forth, vigorously carrying the body over the bar. Repeat the motion as body falls over the bar for the next revoluion. This is the celebrated muscle grind movement.

The primary exercises on the rings are so simple that detailed descriptions are unnecessary. Swinging back and forth, "chinning" and "breasting" the rings, "skinning the cat," hanging by the legs, etc., should be practiced for several weeks, You will then improvise more difficult and interesting ones.

For gymnasts who care for bexing the striking bag is an admirable apparatus. With it you can train yourself to hit a powerful blow. The bag should hang about even with the breast.

Use light chest weights at first, say from two to four pounds. Never exercise long enough to fatigue yourself. Assuming position designated in the figure, carry the rings above the head, down to sides, and out at arm's length. Then turn the back to rings and repeat same motions. All of the exercises are simple, but in the course of time wonderfully effective.

FAMOUS ANIMALS.

Tray, the Noble Life-Saving Dog of the London Docks. Trav was one of those noble dogs who live about the docks and save people who fall into the water. Some of these dogs have received medals for bravery, in saving life, from the Humane Society. We do not know that Tray ever got a medal; probably not, but he certainly deserved one, and he got something much better than any medal, and that was a poem by Robert Browning, who made him celebrated.

One day a little beggar child was sitting on the edge of the quay. She was playing with her doll, and singing to herself and having a nice time, so that she forgot how near she was to the edge, and all at once she lost her balance and fell into the

The poor child screamed as she fell in and the people on the dock all rushed to the edge and looked over, but the water was very deep, ten or twelve feet, and the current very strong, so that the men were afraid to jump in after the poor little girl, who was drowning before their eyes. To be sure they had to think of their own wives and children before risking their lives to save her. While they were all calling on each other for help, and none willing to be the one to come forward, a dog ran up. He was not afraid, and he did not stop one minute to think about whether he would get drowned.

He saw the child struggling in the water and he leaped over at once. He dived down to the bottom, then he rese near her and in a minute he had her tight and swam with her to land.

The people took her from him and she stood on the pier dripping with water. Then they turned to Tray to praise him, but he was gone. He had jumped over

They were surprised. They thought another child must have fallen in without their seeing it, but they were quite willing that Tray should have all the respon-

Hang by the legs as before which the little girl had in her hand when described, but do not let go with the she fell over, and now he came to her with it. It was just as good in Tray to save the doll as to save the child, but the people laughed at him, except the little girl. Tray trotted off home. He did not know what a hero he was or how much better than the the first two or three revolutions the body people who thought themselves so much wiser than the dog, and yet would not run a risk of hurting themselves to do what he his district. Engraving on Eggs. Here is an experiment pretty and simple: Write upon the eggshell with wax or varnish, or simply with tallow, and then immerse the egg in some weak acid, such, (See fig. 5). From the sitting position for example, as vinegar, dilute hydrochloric acid, or etching liquor. Wherever the varnish or wax has not protected the shell, the lime of the latter is decomposed and dissolved in the acid, and the writing or drawing remains in relief.

A few precautions must be taken in order to be successful at the experiment. In the first place, as the eggs that are to be engraved are usually previously blown, so that they be preserved without alteration, it is necessary before immersing them in the acid to plug up the aperture in the extremities with a bit of beeswax.

As the eggs are very light, they must be held at the bottom of the vessel full of acid by means of a thread fixed to a weight, or wound round the extremity of a glass rod. If the acid is much diluted, the operation, though it takes a little longer, gives better results. Two or three minutes usually suffice to give characters at have sufficient relief.

LOOKING FOR HELP.

Longing for Release from the Bondage of Suffering.

Thousands Must Die if Paine's Celery Compound is Not Used,

IT CURES THE WORST CASES

George J. Smye Had Kidney and Liver Troubles and Indigestion.

HIS CONDITION WAS ALARMING.

The Great Medicine Made Him Well and Strong.

He Says: "I Am a Living Witness to the Worth of Paine's Celery Compound."

Although Providence has given to us and our children a glorious heritage-a land of penty and peace; this fruitful Dominionyet there are thousands looking and longing for help and release from bodily sufferings and infirmities. The people who are calling for help and rescue from peril, have tested medical skill and the boasted virtues of numerous patents, but no relief or cure has come to them. They must perish-die-if their various troubles are not met by some honest and scient fic remedy.

Amongst the suffering thousands we find those burdened with liver and kidney complaint, heart disease, dyspepsia, in digestion, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness, sleeplessness, and a score of other common ailments.

Let all such take courage; thousands who have suffered in the past have been made well and strong by Paine's Celery Compound, This wonderful king of medicenes has grappled with the most difficult cases-cases that were pronounced incurable by the doctors. These honest facts should be sufficient warning and encouragement to those who seek a cure. Experience and severe test work has proven that Paine's Celery Compound can do the desired work effectually

"I am a living witness to the worth of Paine's Celery Compound." These are the words of Mr. George J. Smye, of Sheffield, Ont., a man respected and well known in a trying and disappointing experience with a host of medicines that did not even reheve him. Oh! blessed change, happy experience when Paine's Celery Compound was used. He is now a well man and able to work on his farm every day. The same blessed results may be yours, sufferer, if you use the same curing and life-giving medicine.

Mr. Smye writes as follows: "It is with great pleasure that I testify to the value of your great medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. For nearly two years I suffered from indigestion, kidney and liver troubles. After trying several medicines that did not effect a cure, I decided to try your Compound. Before using it I was so low in health that I could not eat or sleep. I could not lie in bed owing to pain in my back; it was only by resting on elbows and knees I was enabled to obtain a slight degree of ease. Before I had fully taken one bottle of your medicine I began to improve. I have now taken in all fourteen bottles with grand results. I am a farmer and am now working every day. Any one may refer to me regarding these statements, or to any of my neighbors around Sheffield, where I am well known. I am a living witness to the worth of Paine's Celery Compound.

Mr. R. Ferrah, the popular druggist of Galt, Ont., vouches for the above statements made by Mr. Smye.

It is a somewhat frequent remark, drink traffic! both by the friends and opponents of the license system, that in Canada today, as our laws now stand, the licensed saloon is just as legal and just as much entitled to protection as the school or the church. That is very true. A United States journal "goes one better" for its existing laws. It remarks that "the Government now gives greater protection to the brewery and distillery than it does to the schoolhouse or church." We are not sure but as much can be said for our Dominion Government, as our laws now stand. Is not that fact worth some pretty hard thinking about?

A few years ago certain anti-prohibi tionists, both in Canada and the States, started the bug-bear cry that prohibition would stop immigrationthat many emigrants from European countries would never come to a country at all where their "personal liberty" would be thus interfered with, Now the tables are turned. One leading United States journal, the Manchester Times, is favoring prohibition the buildings for such an asylum be for the reason that "If you want to stop undesirable immigration, shut up the saloons. The crowd will not seek to come here with beer and whisky shut off." Our United States neighbors are passing through a bitter experience these times.

The Toronto hotel men gave a very elaborate luncheon last week to the members of the New York State Hotel-Keepers' Association who visited their city. Of course there was an abundance of "good cheer" provided on the table, but one of the leading city dailies remarked on the fact that not over one-tenth of the guests drank any liquors at all, and "none of them made fools of themselves." In all this they set a good example to a good many of their friends. These men have a good deal of practical experience about the effects of drinking, even in moderation, and what they have seen has, no doubt, led them to the same conclusion as old Dr. Samuel Johnson that it is easier, as well as safer, to leave at the right point after drinking has once been indulged in.

The Cornwall Lesson.

The investigation of the case of the recent murder of Patrick Cosgrove at Cornwall is giving additional evidence of the way that crimes are multiplied and convicts are manufactured because of the legalized drink traffic.

Cosgrove, as has already been stated in these columns, was drinking freely that fatal night with several boon companions. He spent all his money in that way and then lay down for shelter in an open coal shed, where he details of the measure convinced even was found by Green and got his death blow. Green, now on trial for the murder, had a bad name for drinking, and had also got out of money in but our remembrance of them is that was in a stunned condition. He seems leaving him dead.

A third man in the terrible case, a leading witness, and by some, suspected of having a hand in the crime, Carney, also furnishes an apt illustration of the connection of drink and crime. In his cross-examination at the preliminary trial last week he very reluctantly gave some of the incidents of his own history. First he had been bucket of evil. It would be a grand a popular Methodist in Nova Scotia several times committed to Cornwall thing to thus save even a hundred or and Ontario, years ago, but went to jail for drunkenness, six years or so two "brands from the burning" of the ago. Then, he served four years in liquor traffic, but in this case the ounce ing, because of poor health. slaughter, having killed a man "in a efficient prohibition, will be worth there is a vigilant committee whose drunken row," and was sentenced at more than the pound of "cure," in the business it is to look after law enforce-

About Inebriate Asylums,

A deputation of the Ontario Medical Association waited on the Ontario Government last week, asking for the institution of an inebriate asylum for the Province. Drs. Rosebrugh, Barrick and Geekie were the deputation. They urged that the present prison treatment of habitual drunkards had little or no effect in lessening the evil, and a Provincial asylum should be established where such could be medically treated, and that the respective munishare of the expense of the maintenance of those from their respective Sir Oliver, speaking for the Government, seems to have given but little encouragement to the deputation. He is reported to have stated that some years ago an appropriation was asked by the Government and granted by the Legislature, for such an asylum at Hamilton, but the matter was subjected to such a severe criticism that the project was dropped. An insane asylum was erected there in its stead. He intimated, however, that should erected by private enterprise "perhaps' the Government would make an appropriation towards its maintenance.

There seems to be something very anomalous in the suggestion that while the Ontario Government shall go on licensing the sale of liquors and deriving an annual revenue of over $300,municipalities shall also continue to go on supplying him whenever he is derive nearly an equal sum from the out. same source, and the Dominion Government receives some millions in excise from the liquor-makers, that prito provide, at their own expense, buildand to community again the wrecks not know what he was doing, and as from the legalized liquor traffic.

Everybody knows that should the Provincial and Dominion Parliaments enact an official law prohibiting and stamping out the liquor traffic there would be no more inebriates, and no more need of inebriate asylums. Everybody knows, too, that so long as the Dominion and the Province continues only in this case you dropped in a to legally sanction the existence of the iquor traffic and draw large revenues therefrom, a larger number of inebriates will be manufactured every year from one to 5 cigars for the cent. liquors alone entirely than to stop just in Canada than 100 well-equipped and expensively conducted inebriate asylums can cure. The cure of an inebriate, at best, even if every one of them could be cured—which is far from being the case—is but a very imperfect remedy for a very serious evil. If men are to be allowed to go down into such depths of degradation, disaster and disease first, and cured later on, the Government would be but poorly doing its duty for the protection of the homes, the happiness and the safety of the country.

When the inebriate asylum measure of the Ontario Government was before the Legislature some years ago, as now referred to by Sir Oliver Mowat, the many of its friends that any such at-

In many countries the mass of men have no political rights, yet they do not become like women. In England, Wyoming and Canada women have had political rights for years, yet they have not become perceptibly like men. "The difference in the mental and emotional constitution of men and women" is inherent in their nature, and is not an artificial result of political conditions; therefore, no modification in the system of suffrage is likely to obliterate it. Henry Ward Beecher said he should as soon be afraid that roses would turn into pinks and pinks into roses, if they grew side by side in the same flower-

Dr. Buckley affirms that "to govern in the state would unfit woman for her position in the home." This is the crucial point of his argument and he returns to it again and again. there is a natural instinct that leads them to submit to persuasion and to resist force. This is illustrated in the old fable about the comparative success of the wind and the sun in their efforts to make the traveler take off his cloak. All men dislike personal coercion. But all men do not dislike to have others vote as well as themselves; nor do they object to the voting of persons who could not with propriety exercise authority over them in private life. A father would resent having his son address him "in the imperative mood," but he does not resent the fact that his son has a vote as well as himself, and shares with him in governing the community. Every man would resent having his wife domineer over him in the house; but it is not every man, wife share with him in the government of the community as expressed by a vote. Dr. Buckley's idea seems to be that any exercise of authority by women is unfeminine. The Women's Christian Temperance Union has always two main objects in view, total abstinence for the individual and total prohibition for the state. Whatever lines of effort will lead up to these ultimate ends ought to engage our earnest attention and co-operation. It is a well-known fact, and much to be regretted, that among the better class of society, so-called, and even among those who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, there is much ignorance of the evil effects of the use of alcoholic stimulants, and I presume the statement will surprise many when I say that I have heard of members of the W. C. T. U. who take a whisky sling to prevent taking cold. Of course they argue that it is only as a medicine, and therefore they do not violate their pledge, but I believe that the sooner we, as White Ribbon women, come to realize that we must shun the very appearance of evil, the better it will be for our influence over

How shall we reach the large class of society not now in sympathy with our work, and educate them first to total abstinence, and from that to the I am thoroughly persuaded that the most successful way is by holding parlor meetings.

We fondly hope and expect that the coming generation, boys and girls who are now in our public schools, will have their minds so enlightened upon this question that they will from choice be total abstainers all their lives, but for the people who have not had the benefit of special instruction upon this subject, it is our duty to impart to them the knowledge we have gained through earnest investigation. There must be some special inducement to secure the presence of those we wish to reach, for they rarely attend our regular meetings. We must be some respects upon its own level. To do this we need never lower our standard, in fact should we do so, we would defeat the very object we wish to attain. Let it always be remembered, able a report, notwithstanding the hard we are total abstainers and Prohibitionists.

What I mean by meeting society upon its own level is that we may use some of the means they use for securing the presence of those we wish to have attend our "parlor meetings."

First of all, and chief in importance, Is the place. In every community there are those whose position in society is such that their favor is coveted, and people are glad to accept their invitation to an afternoon or evening at their home. Sometimes we have these among our own members, its friends some woman who would be meeting.

At the close of the annual address the president left several tabulated suggestions which were adopted.

Several ministers came in during the session and were introduced by the courtesy committee. They gave us words of cheer and complimented us on our business-like methods of conducting our meeting.

Previous to the election the president read a grand paper on "Consecration." Tellers were appointed, and on motion the retiring president kept the chair, conducting the election, there being no superior officer present. A short prayer was offered previous to balloting. The officers elected were as follows: President, Mrs. B. D. Livingstone, Tilsonburg; corresponding secretary, Miss Jacobs, Norwich; recording secretary, Mrs. (Dr.) Brown, Otterville; treasurer, Mrs. John Manson, Burgessville; vice-president, Miss Poldon, Norwich.

Then followed a short school of methods. The papers included "Dress Reform," "Narcotics," "What constitutes skillful workers, or Consecration." After these able (and bristling with hints for work) papers had been given, a parliamentary drill was given by the president. Many of the women thoroughly enjoyed it. I heard one woman say: I just wish we could have a drill every little while. Why, we are so ignorant that is all that ails

The resolution committee prepared several resolutions which were left with limited. They are as follows:

6. Resolved, that we bring all the pressure to bear that is possible on the Government that they give us women factory inspectors, and that mercantile establishments be under Provincial inspection instead of local.

Then followed the usual resolutions of courtesy. The evening programme was very full. Rev. Mr. Treleaven gave the address of the evening. Some from a distance assisted in programme. The local Band of Hope gave some very nice selections.

A Turnip Dinner.

Bobby French was a bright, browneyed, 8-year-old boy. He enjoyed playing, but he liked to work, too. He believed with all his earnest little heart that whatever was worth doing at all was worth doing well. Another thing he believed was, if he had any unpleasant errand or disagreeable duty to perform, that was the thing to do first. One warm October morning Mamma and Papa French rode away in the big market wagon to the next town, several miles from Bobby's home. Mamma French was going to spend the day with her sister, and Papa French intended to sell the big wagonful of squashes that Bobby had helped pick the day before.

soberly down the narrow lane till he turned the corner and was out of sight. Then he sighed.

"I should so have liked to go!" he murmured, "but the chickens would 'a' missed me, I s'pose, an' I'd 'a' got an absent mark at school if I had," he continued; "an' I s'pose it's better, as mother says, only I don't want to go to Miss Newhall's to dinner! They always have turnips these days, an' I just can't bear turnips! Oh dear!" he sighed again, "if mother had only 'a' let me an' Towser have dinner together !" His face brightened at the

"But I promised," he exclaimed, decidedly, "an' so I've got to go!"

He skipped up the elm-shaded driveway, locked the house, tucked his books under his arm and ran swiftly across the fields to the wooden school-

All the morning Bobby thought of those disagreeable turnips. Only once did he forget them, and that was at recess when they were playing "prisoner's base," and his side won. In the joyousness of that moment Bobby forgot everything save the glory of a hardfought victory.

But his trouble came back to him vividly when John Parker spelt t-u-r-n-i-p-s in the spelling class with his usual drawl, and poor little Bobby's delight vanished.

When 12 o'clock came he walked very, very slowly to Miss Newhall's neatly painted cottage, and knocked on the door with a feeble tap.

"Oh, it's you, Bobby," she exclaimed as she opened the door. "Come right in. Dinner's onto the table a-waitin' for you these last ten minutes!"

Bobby took off his cap, gave his hands and face a good scrubbing, and walked meekly into the darkened din-

Miss Newhall's brother James and sister Clara were all ready at the table. Bobby said, "How do you do?" in a dazed sort of way as he took his seat. His eyes were looking intently at a big blue and white dish of turnips in the center of the table. His heart went down into his boots.

Miss Newhall helped him bountifully to meat, potatoes and turnips.

Bobby looked at them one moment, and then plunged his fork into the center of the pile! He ate them fast and hurriedly, and now the last piece was gone from his plate. He took up his knife to cut his steak.

"Why, you like turnips as much as I do!" exclaimed Miss Newhall, glancing delightedly at his plate, "Pass you plate an' have some more! There's plenty of them," she declared, as Bobby shook his head. "I cooked an extra lot on purpose."

Again the steel fork plunged into the turnips, but as the last bit was eaten the clock struck one! School began at one and Bobby was tardy.

He said good-by hurriedly, leaving the rest of his dinner untasted, and ran back to school.

Harold's Ride.

He was a little city boy, and he did not know anything about the country. He was afraid at first to go a step alone. He wanted his mother or his nurse with him. The crowing of the rooster frightened him, the mooing of the cow seemed to him a terrible sound. As day after day went by and Harold saw that the rooster crowed as often when he looked the other way or when Harold was in the house, he concluded that the crowing was not a threat to eat him up; he lost his fear of the rooster. When he heard the cow moo down in the meadow, where she could not see him, he concluded that the cow had no intention of tossing him on her horns. Day after day he grew braver and braver, and then he did what little boys are apt to dohe did not want anyone with him; he wanted to manage himself. He would go to the barn and get right into the stall with the horse, or climb on the mow and throw down hay until it tumbled on the floor from the manger. At last, after riding on the wagon with the man three or four times, he decided that it would be a good thing to jump up behind as he had seen large boys do. He looked at his short legs and at the wagon, and grew sorrowful when he realized that he could not jump so high. But one day he saw the ice wagon go along the road, with the low step behind.

"Now," said Harold, "I'll do it." The wagon stopped at the gate, and Harold hid in the bushes until the man climbed back on the seat. While he was gathering up the lines, Harold, with his short fat legs sticking out, got on the step. There was a creak and a rumble. The man was going home, and was in a hurry. He struck the horses, and they started off at a good trot. Poor Harold! Over stones, into ruts, over bumps, went Bobby stood very still by the low the great, lumbering wagon. Around stone wall and watched old Jim trot corners, up and down hills. Harold expecting every minute to be thrown off. He had never thought about the getting off! Would the wagon ever stop? Would he ever see his mother again? "Oh dear! why did I ever want to ride behind?" he thought. It was awfully hot and dusty, and very uncomfortable. The wagon gave another turn in a big gate, and then stopped. By this time Harold was crying hard, and did not feel at all like And among the dark pines, and along

The sudden death, on Aug. 28, of Mrs. Celia Thaxter was briefly recorded in the Advertiser of last week. The peculiar charm of Mrs. Thaxter's poems was closely inwrought with her unusual life-history. -a man of strong character in most ways, but of some eccentricities, and given to a pessimism born of disappointment and unfair treatment-retired to one of these islands some 50 years ago, and there took charge of a lighthouse. On Appledore, in these Isles of Shoals, most of her life was spent. There her father became the landlord of a quiet resting-place for seekers for health and beautiful surroundings, and the guests were generally of a rather select and intellectually interesting kind. The young girl found food for her mind as well as for her imagination. Soon, when she was but 16, came to her a romantic love-story with a happy ending. Her suitor, having been ordered off the island by her irascible father, built a hut on an adjacent islet, and continued his wooing with a pertinacity that won its reward. Thereafter Mrs. Thaxter saw more of the outside world, finding a congenial circle of cultured friends in Boston; but a large part of the year she still spent in Appledore, and there most of her books were written. As I recall her, all her motions were as unconfined in their grace as those of the waves, her companions; her voice had the resonance and the sweetness of the sea sound, and her verse gave the poetry of the sea with a music that she might have caught from its creaming up the shingle, from its singing to itself in starlight and dawnlight, if it had not been the voice of her own great soul.

All my memories of her are of delightful pictures. I had not seen her for some years, when I went into a statuary shop, and there, in the large room full of the cold white figures of gods and goddesses, stood a regal woman clad in royal purple, fresh and ruddy, her golden-bearded son beside her looking like a young viking, and the contrast between her strong vitality and those moveless statues made her seem the very embodiment of life. Again I see her as she described her days during one winter when her mother's illness kept her at the Shoals. the whole family having moved into the large dining-room at Appeldore, that seats some 500 people. Two sides of the room were occupied numberless flowering plants; at the lower end were the range, the milk- popular man in the trade. pans, the kitchen and dairy paraphernalia, the Norwegian maids with their long yellow braids; at the upper end was Celia, with her rugs, her easel, her student-lamp. And there through the great windows and the glass doors she saw the moon rise out of the sea on the one hand, and the sun sink into it on the other, shut in by winter storms, and just as much shut in by the steely blue of the waters, wild and tossing as far as the eye could see, only the glint of the sea on a slant sail by day and the lighthouse lamp wheeling slowly and laving its long golden and crimson beams upon the murmuring darkness giving her word of the world beyond. There was something in it like the lady of the castle of old days who sat on her dais at one end of the great hall, with the servants and retainers at the other end, only it was a thousand times

Molecular Life in Diamonds.

If you think your polished diamond is a mere aggregation of inanimate crystals, you are away wrong. If you imagine that its components are devoid of orderly, coherent motion, you are that we are given to understand that diamonds are masses of active molecules. Inasmuch as every body is composed of multitudes of exceedingly small, yet not distinguishable molecules, it might be concluded that in a solid, at least, these particles would be clustered together in an indivisible mass. This theory as applied to diamonds is incorrect, and has been completely overthrown by the researches and experiments of Sir Robert Ball, of Liverpool. The facts set forth by Mr. Ball with reference to the structure of the diamond are fascinating. He asserts that were the sensibilities of our eyes increased so as to make them a few million times more powerful, it would be seen that the diamond atoms, which form the perfect gem when Dr. J. D. Humor in the Pulpit,

There is a good deal of it-most of the unconscious kind, of course. As. an organist of many years' standing, the face. The man who had thrown it | holding appointments in various churches, I have noted several amusing incidents connected with either sermon texts, baptisms, prayers, or praise material.

On one occasion, while the incumbency was vacant, a stranger officiated, and, curiously enough, selected for his text the words of Matthew, chap. ix., v. 36: "But when he saw the multitudes he was moved with compassion on them because they fainted and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd." Better than this, however, was the case of an assistant, who, had just been appointed chaplain of a prison; for, preaching his farewell sermon, he astonished the people by announcing as text: "I go to prepare a place for you." Surely in innocence he did it, as in the instance of that other prison chaplain who is recorded to have addressed the prisoners from the words: "It is good for us to be

Dr. Boyd, of St. Andrews, tells us that he once heard a remarkably eloquent and pathetic sermon from the text: "A colt, the foal of an ass." But I have known the ass to figure in a better light than this. It so happened that the parson had two curates, one very old and one very young. He could not go on with the older one, and, being offered a better living, he accepted, and took the young curate with him. Of course he preached the usual "farewell," and it surprised not a few of us when he gave out as his text: "Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder and worship." In this matter of texts, however, we were quite outdone by the old Puritan divines. It was one of these who dared to announce the abbreviated text: "A wonder was seen in heaven—a woman;" and it is solemnly recorded that another, giving out, "Unto us a son is born," in this way notified the surprised congregation of an event which they had been awaiting for some weeks! It is to be feared that sometimes in churches where no liturgy is used humor is to be found even in the prayers. The Comber Murder Case.

At the Essex County Assizes held at Sandwich last week, Joseph Truskey, of Comber, was convicted of a most brutal murder of Constable Lindsay, an inoffensive man and a peace officer of that village. Seldom do the court reports tell of a more cruel and brutal crime. Lindsay was shot down in the public streets, dying almost instantly, leaving behind him a wife and young family to mourn their irreparable loss. He was perfectly defenseless at the time and was guilty of no provocation or offense whatever. Some time becore, in the discharge of his duty as a constable, he had arrested Truskey on a charge of cruelly ill-using his horse, and this seems to have been all the reason the convicted murderer gave for his terrible act.

The published reports of the bloody crime, which were given early in May, made no mention of the fact that drink had anything to do with the case-a somewhat extraordinary thing in cases of that kind. The published reports of the trial, however, go to show that there were many of the usual associations of the drink traffic and the murder case. The deadly shooting took place right in front of a licensed tavern and right after the murderer had come out of the bar-room, where he had been drinking.

William R. Pizer, the proprietor of the hotel, was a principal witness. According to his evidence Truskey was in the bar-room threatening dire vengeance on Lindsay. The latter overheard what was said and walked out. At the same time Truskey started out of the front door and immediately he saw Truskey shoot his victim, who died almost at once.

William Ludlin, deputy reeve of the township was also a witness. He testified that "Tuskey and Ludlin met in the bar-room of the Pizer house on the night of the murder. Truskey bought the drinks and said, 'This is the last drink you will ever have with ame. I am going to end it all tonight," using considerable vile language regarding his victim of a few minutes

Andrew Loyst, another witness, who lives adirectly opposite Pizer's hotel swore that he saw Truskey step out from the hotel and soon after saw him fire his third shot into the body of his prostrate victim. For the defense it was claimed that impulses, over which he had no control, and it was when in a frenzy like this that he committed the crime. Dr. Cruikshank, for the defense, gave an opinion that he was suffering from "masked epilepsy, or epilepsy which existed in a dormant state in the prisoner, and was only called into action when an irritant" was present. He was not even asked if a sufficient "irritant" might not be a number of drinks in a bar-room-such as causes hundreds of others to lose self control. The fact that the man had been drinking at the time does not appear to have caused even a word of comment In this case, either from the judge, or the crown attorney, or the lawyer for the defense. Judging from the large experience in many such cases it does not require a stretch of the imagination to suppose that had there been no licensed bar-room at Comber, and no drink on that fatal night, there would have been no murder.

Crime in Canada.

the criminal statistics of Canada published, the 1893, just total number of convictions for all crimes in the Dominion during that year amounted to 35,653. This is quite a large increase on either of the preceding years, and on the average of the past ten years. Of the persons convicted 32,151 were males and 3,502 females. The disproportion stands nearly 10 to 1. The total number of convictions for drunkenness during the year amounted to 11,651, being 236 greater than the year previous, but 545 less than the average of the ten years from 1881 to 1891. The "drunks" alone, it will be seen at a glance at the above figures, constitute nearly one-third of the whole. It is a well-known fact, however, that drunkenness does not constitute one-half the crime that comes out of drinking. As the news columns of the Home Guard of this week, and of most weeks, will testify, a large number of the assaults and murders, and other crimes have their origin directly in the fact that the men who committed these crimes did so because they had been drinking. In a Large proportion of the cases there is good reason to believe that no crime of any kind would have been committed had there been no drinking beforehand.

Then, there were 2,669 convictions during the same year for violations of Liquor laws, such as unlicensed selling, selling during prohibited hours, violations of the Scott Act and the like. When these various offenses are added together they well confirm the several times repeated assertion of the venerable Premier of Ontario that threefourths of the crime, poverty, misery and insanity of this country has its origin in intemperance.

Another Object Lesson.

An object lesson of a practical character has just been given to the people at the St. Catherines assizes. Mary Jane Hiles, a dissipated and degraded woman, was charged with burning two dwelling houses and a barn. She pleaded guilty, and stated in doing so, that an attempt was at first made to hire her to commit the crime, which she refused to do. She was then freely supplied with whisky, and did the act. The judge sentenced her to seven years imprisonment. The unfortunate was at the dock with a still more unfortunate child, but five months old.

"Another victim of the drink traffic," one exclaims. Yes, there are a host of victims of the traffic in this case besides the actual drinker. What about that child? Into what a shame and wretchedness it has been born. What about the owners of the property thus destroyed? What about the heavily burdened tax-payers, who have thus an addition of $1,225 of taxation saddled upon them to meet the expenses of the prison sentence? Each and every one of these persons are "victims of the drink traffic," whether they drank or abstained themselves. And yet some people go right on prating about "personal liberty" and "yested rights" in this same drink traffic.

They must be much attached to their parasols, for you never see them -even as late as 8 or 9 o'clock at night-but they have their parasols open, getting shade from something. Not long ago some natives of the Congo region were brought to Europe. Among them was a black man named Mansonna, who had learned some French, but who had seen nothing of European life. When he was asked what struck him most in Brussels, which was the first city where he stopped, he said:

"It is this-that people run around so. Why do they do it?"

"Life is short, Mansonna," he was answered, "and we must get a living." "But that," he answered, "is not a reason for running around so. Do you not have women enough to support you? And there is the land, which God has made the property of all men; why do you not use it?"

No explanation could make it clear to him why people "ran around so." "And you are," he declared, "beyond all doubt a race of sorcerers, else you could not build such high huts. They are enormous, vast, they go to the sky; but in them you must live one on top of another. I do not like that way. I like a little hut, and no one to live on top of me.

I like better than your rivers the river which flows beside my hut, and I like to see it through the tall grass. Ah, you read Mr. Murphy. "Now Oi aint have no such tall grass! And where,

THE JUDGE'S STORY.

Hon. John M. Rice Tells How He Was Cured of Sciatic Rheumatism -Crippled for Six Years.

The Hon. John M. Rice, of Louisa, Lawrence county, Kentucky, has for many years served his native county and state in the legislature at Frankfort and Washington, and until his retirement was a noted figure in political and judicial circles. A few days ago a Kentucky Post reporter called upon Judge Rice, who in the following words related the history of the causes that led to his retirement: "It is just new science or result of science, a new about six years since I had an attack of rheumatism, slight at first, but soon developing into sciatic rheumatism, which began first with acute shooting pains in the hips, gradually extending downward to my feet. My condition became so bad that i eventually lost all power of my legs, and then the liver, kidneys and bladder, and in fact my whole system, became deranged. I tried the treatment of many physicians, but receiving no lasting benefit from them, I went to Hot Springs, Ark. I was not much benefited by some months stay there, when I returned home. In 1891 I went to the Silurian Springs Wakeshaw. Wis. I stayed there some time, but without improvement. Again I returned home, this time feeling no hopes of recovery. The muscles of my limbs wers now reduced by atrophy to mere strings. Sciatic pains tortured me terribly, but it was the disordered condition of my liver that was I felt gradually wearing my lifaway. Doctors gave me up, all kinds of remedies had been tried without avail, and there was nothing more for me to do but resign myself to fate.

"I lingered on in this condition, sustained almost entirely by stimulants, until April, 1893. One day I saw an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. This was something new, and as one more drug after so many others could do no harm, I was prevailed upon to try the Pink Pills. The effect of the pills was marvelous and I could soon eat heartily, a thing I had not done for years. The liver began to perform its functions and has done so ever since. Without doubt the pills saved my life, and while I do not crave notoriety I cannot refuse to testify to their worth. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2 50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schencetady, N. Y.

LEADEROFTHE PATRONS

CAREER OF THE MAN WHO HAS BEEN THUS HONORED.

The Member for Frontenac and His Successful Record in Municipal Politics and His Daily Avecations-A Man of Progressive Ideas-A Cartoon Representing His "Sure Pull."

Joseph L. Haycock, M.P.P. for Frontenae county, has been elected leader of the Patron party in the Provincial Assembly. The new leader is comparatively a young man, being only 44 years of age, having been born near Switzerville, Lennox county, in 1850. He was third son of Frederick Haycock, an Englishman, who came to Canada in 1837. His mother was a Thompson, who came from Ireland in 1819, and a sister of Rev. James Thompson, a pioneer Methodist minister. Mr. Haycock attended a common school near his home, and later took a course in the Newburgh grammar school with such instructors as H. M. Deroche, Q.C., of Napanee, and Prof. J. Camp-

Mr. Haycock laid the foundation for the flow of language with which he is so capably endowed. Then came the activities of life and for three years he dealt out goods to the farmers and villagers who frequented T. Sexsmith's store at Selby. Soon he quit storekeeping and returned to his father's farm. In 1872 the family removed to Cataraqui, having secured the Beamish property. But farm life was, just at this juncture, too monotonous for the bustling youth, and he came to Kingston. He spent three months in the Glasgow warehouse, and then found more congenial employment with Sexsmith & Stevenson, of Napanee. Some time later he resumed farm studies, though in different form, he and his father ten years the partnership existed and the firm had the most extensive and profitable dealings in New York, Boston, Montreal and elsewhere. In 1882 the member bought out his father, and since that date he has been successful as a market garden er. He has also combined auctioneering with his business, and his voice has been heard to the decided advantage of the sellers of stock, implements, etc.

Writing con amour the Canadian Farmer's Sun, the organ of the party, says: Mr. Haycock is a man of progressive ideas; he has a wonderful capacity of legislative enactments, and in the excitement of debate and the turmoils of strife of opposition he always maintains a calm, imperturbable spirit. Seldom does he get "rattled," to use a vulgarism. For seven years he serv. ed as a municipal legislator in Kingston township, as reeve three times and deputyreeve three times. Twice he was elected by acclamation, and the last occasion he was in the council the reeveship was again offered him by acclamation. He has been a vigorous worker in farmers' institutes and agricultural societies, and is now president of the Frontenac Association. He has served as a school trusteee, and is a past master of Frontenac lodge, No. 363. A.F. & A.M. In his early life and until recently his political leanings were Liberal; but he always maintained and declared for the interests of the farmers, and when the Patrons' platform was formed he became an ardent supporter and an active worker in the lodge formed at Cataraqui. Because of his qualifications as a speaker, thinker and worker, he has always been foremost in the ranks of the yeomanry, and there is no doubt of his zeal and ability being utilized in the Legislature of Outario. In social life he is witty and genial; religiously he is attached to the Methodist church. He was married in 1877 to Miss Martha Grange, of Napanee, a sister of J. T. Grange, ex-M. P. P., Lennox. The home is blessed with five children.

Mr. Haycock is one of the leading poulterers in Canada, in fact his plant is said to be the largest in the country. Only for his interest and enterprise Frontenac would not have been represented in live stock at the World's Fair. At the Industrial Fair Mr. Haycock won 53 prizes with 58 exhibits in the poultry line, and at the World's Fair his success was equally remedy for all coughs, colds, hearseness, preat his prize earnings last year being pain or soreness in the chest, bronchitis, HELMHOLTZ.

One of the Greatest Scientific Lights of the 19th Century.

Professor Hermaun Ludwig Ferdinand von Helmholtz, the celebrated physiologist and physician died on the 8th September, 1894, from the effects of a stroke of paralysis. He was born in Potsdam, August 31, 1821.

Professor von Helmholtz was one of the giants of modern science. Like his illutrious colleague, Professor Rudolph Virchow, he enjoyed a reputation which extended into all the countries of the civilized world and which drew students to the University of Berlin from the four corners of the globe. His long lifa-he was born just seventy-three years ago-has been one of strict devotion to science. He took little interest in other matters, seldom appeared on the platform. except to speak on scientific subjects, and rarely wrote unless to proclaim a new theory, defend an old one, or reply to a personal attack. Last year, accompanied by his wife, a brilliant, entertaining woman, he visited the World's Fair as German representative, and was honorary president of the International Congress of

The Professor was born at Potsdam, where his father was a professor in the "gymnasium," or public school. He studied medicine, and in 1848 was appointed professor of anatomy in the Academy of Fine Arts at Berlin. Later he filled professional chairs at Konigsberg and

PROFESSOR HERMANN VON HELMHOLTZ. called to the professorship of physiology at Berlin. It would be difficult to describe within reasonable limits all the Professor's contributions to the advancement of scientific learning. His works, which are well known throughout Europe, have reference principally to the physiological conditions of the impressions on the senses. His first great production was a treatise on "The Conservation of Force," which was published in 1847, and set forth, clearly and indisputably, for the first time, the interchangeability and indestructnature, such as light, heat, electricity, chemical and animal vitality. While pursuing his investigations on this subject he demonstrated for the first time a difference in chemical composition between the active and quiescent museles, and proved, by means of ingenious devices, that thought is not instantaneous.

The readiness and ability shown by Helmholtz to present to the public at large, in intelligible language, the results of his researches, which have often been of the most abstruse character, contributed largely to his fame. Thirty years ago he began his successful career as a popular lecturer on scientific subjects by an exposition of the theory of the conservation and correlation of forces, which attracted almost as much attention as his great work on that subject. Ten years ago an English translation of some of his popular scientific lectures was published, and it has been widely read. In 1870 he was admitted to foreign membership in the French Academy of Sciences, a prominent member of which body, on the occasion of his election, characterized him as "the foremost and greatest naturalist of the age," and added that "nothing is wanting to his glory, but he is wanting in ours." In 1883 the German Emperor issued a decree by which the distinguished savant was raised to the status of nobility.

THE KING OF COREA.

A MONARCH WHO IS MUCH BETTER THAN WAS SUPPOSED.

The Real Troubles at the Seat of the Oriental War the Officials and Not the King-Great Pomp Observed in all Court Functions.

One of the most interesting men in the world to-day is the king of Cores. The war between Japan and China is being fought over him, and the future of Asia is involved in the struggle. The king is the absolute ruler of 12,000,000 people. The land of Corea belongs practically to him, and the development of its immense na-

The king's palaces cover nearly one thousand acres. They lie at the foot of a ragged gray mountain, and a thick wall of stone as high as a two-story house runs around them. This wall is entered by a half dozen great gates, at which, day and night, soldiers are stationed to see that only the proper people go in. Each gate has its own rank, and there are special entrances for servants and low nobles. The great central gate is reserved for the highest. It has three doors, and the middle going into the handling of produce. For ibility of all the manifestations of force in only kings and princes are supposed to go of them is kept for royalty alone, and

At my audience with the king I was conducted into a magnificent corridor, so long that you could not see the end as you stood at the top and looked down it. was lighted at the top and on both sides by beautiful lattices of white paper. The woodwork was papered with this wonderful Corean paper, which is as smooth as ivory and as strong as leath-The floor was covered with matting as fine as the web of a Panama hat, and so thick that our feet sank as softly into it as they would have done had it been Brussels carpet. The corridor had many landings. We descended from one to another by easy steps, and after a walk of perhaps a quarter of a mile, we came out of it into an open hall, which looked out upon the gardens of the King, and gave a view of the new palace in the distance.

This room was furnished in foreign style, and the highest officials of the king and a number of great nobles of the court were gathered within. Each noble had his serwant with him. Tall, broad-shouldered men, clad in brown gowns and gorgeous hats, stood about as guards.

These are known as the brown-coated kesos. They are the body-guard of the king and, like the famed soldlers of Peter the Great, have been picked out for their height and strength. Nearly every one of them is over six feet, and their long gowns The devil always hates a man whom God | make them look like giants. In addition to these, there were servants in red caps. servants in caps of purple and servants with gorgeous headdressings of blue. The officials were clad in their court dresses, and the head of each showed a topknot shining through its fine Corean cap of horse-hair, which, with its great wings flapping out at the sides, forms the official

These men were all very dignified. We were introduced all around by the cabinet minister who conducted us into the room, and we then sat down to a long table upon which were plates filled with assorted cookies about the size of macaroons. At each man's seat there were champagne glasses, and the servant opened a half dozen or so of cold bottles while we chatted and waited The American minister had his presentation first. He spent about half an hour with his majesty, and then one of the English-speaking officials came into this room and told me that the king was ready

The king was dressed in a gown of crimson silk, cut high at the neck, and embroidered with gold medallions as big around as a tea plate. There was one of these medallions on each of his shoulders, and one covered each side of the gown at about where the fifth rib is supposed to be located. This gown reached to his feet. It was gorgeous beyond description and it harmonized with his cream-colored complexion. The sleeves of the gown were very full, and out of them a pair of delicate shapely hands came from time to time, and clasped each other nervously. On one of his fingers I noticed a magnificent diamond ring, and it seemed to me as though the great solitaire must cut his fingers, as he clasped and unclasped his hands, now folding them together, and now pulling one finger after the other, as though he would crack the joints. He shook his own hands at me in Chinese fashion as I came up. I bowed, and I looked him straight in the eye while we talked together. I was not more than five feet away from him, and there was a little table between us. Above us shone the incandescent globes of the Edison electric light, and there was a European carpet on the floor.

The audience was largely given up to the passing of compliments, and it lasted. I judge about twenty minutes. During it I had a good opportunity to study the ting, and I photographed, as it were, his form and features upon my brain. He is about five feet six inches in height. He is well built, but not heavy. He has beautiful bright black almond eyes, a complexion the color of rich Jersey cream, and teein as white as the tasks of an African elephant. His face is full and it shines with intelligence. He has a thin moustache and a few hairs of black whiskers. He smiled frequently, and now and then he laughed melodiously. He seemed to have a stone of about the size of a boy's lucky stone in his mouth while he talked, and this from time to time got between his teeth while he listened. When he spoke it sunk back into his mouth, taking the place of an old maid's plumper or the tobacco quid of one of our congresomen. I don't know why he uses this stone, and I am not altogether sure that it was a stone. It seemed too hard for wax, and chewing gum has not vet been introduced into Corea. The king of Corea is now 42 years old, and he is in good physical condition.

monarch on the face of the globe. His troubles to-day come from his ofncials. He has been so bound round by them that he did not know the condition of his people, and he has been hedged in as was the Mikado of Japan a generation ago. You cannot imagine the pomp of this king. No one can go in front of him. He never moves about the palaces without there are eunuchs at his side to hold up his arms, and the officials must get down on all fours and bump their heads on the floor whenever he comes into their presence. He spends his nights in working, and he sleeps in the daytime.

FERTILIZERS.

Method in Applying in Order to Obtain the Best Results.

Considerable attention has of late been given by foreign investigators to the methods of applying fertilizers in order to obtain best results. Especially has the question of distribution and depth demanded attention. Among these igvestigators are Schlosing, Grandeau, Heinrichs, Hansen, Pranet and Peterman. The first of these has been experimenting several years, and his results seem to be accepted by many as conclusive, as they have been confirmed more or less fully by others. They indieste a decided advantage from replacing the common method of uniformly mixing the fertilizing material with the whole mass of surface soil, by that of applying the materials in rows parallel to those in which the plants are seeded. Schlosing experimented on a very poor artificial soil, In water-tight boxes, with a fertilizing misture containing sulphate of potash, nitrate of soda, bone superphosphate and sulphate of magnesia. In the first series, the salts were dissolved in water and intimetely mized with the soil; in the second, they were mixed with an equal quantity of distilled water, the surface leveled, and applied in trenches four or five inches spart and about five inches in depth. Wheat, potatoes, beets, peas and beans were grown in the boxes. The excess of yield in the second series was 6.3 per cent. In the case of the wheat, 29,9 in the beans and 26 in the potatoes.

Pronet experimented in the same line with potatoes grown on plats of hills and plain soil with fertilizers carefully mixed with the soil in one series, and in the other applied in trenches parallel to the rows of petatoes. The yield of tubers was larger where the fertilizer was applied in pows than where it was mixed with the

The theory is presented that the sulphate of potash remains partly in solution and partly in a fixed state in combination with humus, and that the superphosphate is probably entirely fixed by the bases of the soil; that on the plats where the fertilizing material was thoroughly disseminated, the surfaces of contact of the potassic and phosphatic fertilizers with the constituents was very great, and therefore the fixation of those substances was very rapid. On the plats that received the fertilizers In rows parallel to the line of plants, the surface contact was greatly reduced and the fertilizers were rendered insoluble more slowly. It is reported that the roots were more thoroughly developed in the vicinity of fertilizers, which were more completely utilized.

Hansen has experimented for three years past on the comparative action of liquid manure spread over the whole surface, or applied only between the rows, and on the differences in results of application in June, July and August, The crop was angar beets. The average of three years' results shows that, as compared with effect of application between the rows taken as 100 that of fertilization uniformly of the whole surface was 86, when made in June, 65 when made in July, and 26 when made in August.

The results are interesting and suggeslive, yet the conditions of the experiments have not been altogether favorable to the final settlement of the question, as the organic nitrogenous fertilizers used have all been of a kind readily transformed into mitrates and carried down by drainage into the lower levels of the soil. It is true, also, that the pots received a larger amount of water at more regular intervals than would ordinarily be furnished in farm practice by rainfall. It is evident that this increase of yield is of sufficient practical importance to render desirable further tests and more detailed study of the subject. - Country Gentleman.

a pleasant prospect from the sides and rear. The hiproofed wings, at either side, seem to guard the domestic life affording a restful quiet and often obtained in an exposed location, and the high central roof rising shove the porch adds dignity to the whole. The construction of this frame cottage is such as lends a character to the house different from a conventionally plain building, and yet it lacks the expensive detail work usually found in an original plan-the framing of the roofs being the most difficult part of the construction, and will readily be understood from a little study of the plans. Entering at the front (see first floor plan), winding steps lead to a square porch, whose curved front affords an extensive view up and down the street; and on summer evenings this is an attractive place, with windows opening out upon it from the two front rooms. The transverse hall is lighted by a large Window at the farther end; at the right of the entrance is a large square parlor, with windows on every side. A mantel with a leasant chimney corner seat for reading at the rear, alongside the wide folding ors opening into the dining-room; ireplace is also placed in a corner for your children, of this room, which communicates with the outside chimney running up in the angle of the house. A door leads into the front hall, and through an entry access is had from the back porch; while an inside passage, fitted up with china and pantry closets, is lighted from the entry, and separates the dining room from the kitchen and cellar stairs. The kitchen has the conveniences of a range, with hot water boiler upon a broad hearth in a niche at one side, a sink with set tubs near by, and a

A corner is cut out of this room to provide for a very convenient, light and airy pantry; although it is small, yet with the closet room already spoken of, it is sufficient for the usual needs. A passage between the kitchen and hall isolates it from the front of the house, keeping away steam and odors.

The other wing of the building is occupled by the family rooms, consisting of a sitting room half screened from the hall by a portiere across the recess, which has a cost closet at one end; at the farther corner of the sitting room another portiers shuts off a small sewing room. The symmetry and regularity of the sitting room aid the decorator in making this a very pretty apartment. Between the sewing room and the passage is a bedroom with fireplace, closet and wardrobe. The central feature of the hall is the broad staircase, rising between the partition walls and having a baluster on either side; at the head of the stairs a windowed door opens upon a balcony over the rear porch. Three large chambers surround this hall, with plenty of closet room in each, and chimney connection in every room. There

American Agriculturist. Agricultural Science. At the recent meeting of the Society for the Promotion of Agricultural Science, held at Brooklyn, N.Y., Prof. Wm. Saunders, president, in his opening address, gave a review of the work of experiment stations in the United States and Canada, particularly the latter. A feature much dwelt on was the experiments in hybridizing grain and fruit. Over 700 varieties of grain have been produced, of which 400 are still under cultivation, in the attempt to develop useful sorts. The most numerous hybrids have been those of different kinds of wheat. The Red Fife, the leading Canadian wheat, has been crossed with many imported varieties, the most noteworthy being the Ladoga wheat, a bearded variety from Russia, grown in high latitudes near the lake of that name, and ripening earlier than the Red Fife, and several varieties from the Himalaya mound tains, at altitudes from 400 to 11,000 feet. Avbrids have been produced, ripening from four to six days sooner than the Red Fife. The drawbacks have been that the Ladoga wheat makes flour which gives bread of dark color; and the Himalayan wheat is generally less vigorous than Red Fife. However, by selecting the best hybrids, improved varieties of wheat are being developed; 227 of the 400 thus created, are still preserved and cultivated.

In barley, numerous hybrids have been produced, the two-rowed and six-rowed having been crossed, as well as other vari-

Prof. Saunders believes that he has produced a genuine cross between wheat and rye, and that for the first time, as he discredits the alleged cross claimed by a New Yorker several years ago. Successful crosses been made also of different varieties of peas.

Small fruits have been the subject of numerous experiments. The black currant has been crossed with the gooseberry. and with the white current. These several crosses produced bushes which blossomed profusely, but utterly failed to ripen fruit. The leaves in many cases were entirely divested of the strong odor characteristic of black current.

A more successful venture was the crossing of a large red raspberry with black cap, resulting in a large purple cap berry. Prof. Saunders was re-elected president for the current year, and Prof. Wm. Frear, Pennsylvania State College, secretary and treasurer.

Budding Fruit Trees. Fruit trees which are almost worthless can be rendered valuable by budding good varieties on them. The months of early fall are best for this as the work should be done before the sap ceases to flow.

A Rock-Ribbed Truth. Time put into farm improvements is a better patrimony than money in the ban

USELESS IMPROVEMENT. 2 John E. Reed Discusses the Subject in The Practical Farmer. Breeding up by a proper selection of pure bred stock for a cross upon the herds is no more important than the proper care which is just as necessary for their improvement and the ultimate success, which is only possible by it. whether dealing with the pure bred strains or of common herds. John E. Reed in the Practical Farmer says: In a general way it may be said that efforts to improve are judicious and commendable. The man who is satisfied with himself and his surroundings, and who is willing to let things run along as they are is not likely to be successful. If there is to be progress, or even if a man is to maintain the position which he has already reached, there must be active effort. Drifting takes a man away from the point which it should be his constant aim to reach. The rule above stated applies to farmers as well as to other classes of people. Though their lives are passed in comparative seclusion, there are numerous obstacles to their success. These hindrances must be overcome by active effort, or else there must be a surrender of all reasonable hope of improvement. The farm that is allowed to run itself will produce but little for its owner, and whatever progress is made will be in the direction of a decline. There can be no question that to the farmer, as well to the men in other lines of business, improvement is the very keystone of the arch of success. Yet, strange as it may seem, there are a great many farmers to whom various improvements which they effect prove of no permanent benefit. This is not the fault of the improvements. Neither does it show that the theory which led to their adoption was incorrect. The improvements in themselves are all right, and the theory upon which they are based is without a flaw. The trouble comes from a neglect on the part of the farmer to make the charges which. under the new order of things, are needed to harmonize the various interests and conditions which have been affected by his action. There are various directions in which improvements which should be of great benefit to the farmer are made of no account.

Examples of the failure above described may be seen in almost any farming community. It is not very uncommon for a farmer who has had an old pair of horses, that had become slow and stiff by age, hard work and a lack of any special care, to sell his team and buy a much finer one. For a while all goes well. But in a few months the new horses begin to decline in appearance and efficiency and in a year or two they look nearly as bad as the old team did. The cause of this depreciation in appearance and also in value is apparent to all observers. When the new team was purchased the horses were in good condition. They had been well fed, moderately worked, and care had been taken to protect them from exposure to storms and from extremes of temperature. By these means the animals had been kept in good condition. But when these points were neglected, and the horses were deprived of the care which they had formerly received, they began to gravitate toward the condition of the team which they had superseded. In efforts to improve their dairy stock a large number of farmers fail to secure any permanent success. Perhaps even more farmers fail here than meet with disappointment with their teams. The decline in appearance and value is more quickly seen, and is more sharply marked, than it is with horses. This is especially true when very fine stock is secured to take the place of ordinary animals. When a farmer sells his native cows which are hardy and used to only moderate rations, and in their places obtain a lot of Jersevs which have been highly fed and carefully protected from storms, he gets a very much more valuable class of animals than he had before. But if this is all that he does, the improvement which he has made will be useless. In order to gain any benefit, or even to prevent a loss, from the change which he has made, he must also make a radical improvement in his methods of feeding and caring for the cows. If the Jerseys receive no better food and care than the natives had, they will not give a great return. They cannot yield butter fat without suitable materials from which to make it and, being accustomed to richer food, they cannot use coarse fodder to as good advantage as can stock of a lower grade. Neither can highly bred animals that have been carefully protected from injurious influences endure as much exposure as the hardier native stock is able to withstand without any great discomfort. The one class has been long used to, and now absolutely requires, very careful treatment. The other is capable of very largely looking after itself. There is no question as to which is the better of the two, if the conditions under which they are kept are favorable; but if the animals are to have short rations and little care it will be well to keep those which are already inured to this kind of treatment. The same principle applies to all other classes of domestic animals. Whatever class of animals he keeps it will pay the farmer, and pay him in the most liberal manner, to improve his stock by purchase or breeding, if in addition to this he gives suitable food and care. Otherwise, such improvement will be utterly useless. In all parts of the country there is a pressing need of genuine and permanent improvement of the live stock, but there is no call from any quarter for the useless improvement which begins permanent success must depend.

BLUE ANDALUSIANS. Pretty Fowls and Prolific Layers That

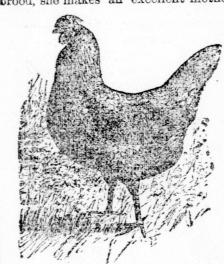

Are Worth Breeding. The Andalusian breed, shown in our illustrations, belongs to the Mediterranean division of fowls, which also includes the Spanish, Minorcas and Leghorns. There is a tradition in England that the first Andalusians in that country were imported from Spain in 1851. Whatever may be the facts in regard to this, it is certain that they have been crossed with other breeds subsequently to the date given. In fact many fanciers are of the opinion that the Andalusians were "made up" by crossing black and white Minorcas or black Spanish with a possible dash of Dominique Leghorns. But the Andalusian has become recognized as a distinct and well-established breed. The fowls present a unique combination of the true Spanish form with a color rarely seen in other pure breeds. In size, form, and general appearance, except the color of the plumage, back and legs, the Andalusians strongly resemble the Minorcas. Like them, the comb is single, rather large, deeply serrated, upright on the males and drooping to one side on the females. The face is bright red, showing but little above the eyes; ear-lobes white. The beak, shanks and toes are slatv blue. The general color of the plumage in both sexes is slaty blue, the feathers on the breast being finely laced with a darker shade, and the hackles, saddles, wing-coverts and sickle feathers of the male very dark blue, approaching to

They are very little given to sitting, and when one becomes broody and is given a nestful of eggs. she is quite likely to change her mind in a few days, leaving her charge in a condition which is neither eggs nor chickens. But when one perseveres to the end and brings off her brood, she makes an excellent mother.

though she is quite likely to resume laying regularly while the chicks are still following her. The chicks are very precocious, feathering out while very young. The little cockerels begin to crow at an age when those of most other breeds are still in the down. They are also very pugnacious, although their infantile disputes rarely end in very serious bloodshed. As broilers they are unsurpassed. They are fit for the gridiron at an earlier age than many Asiatic breeds and the flesh has a delicate, gamy flavor. The Andalusians succeed well in the north with proper care and winter protection.

Abertion in Cows. The London Times Stock Journal Bays that at the council meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society last month a detailed report from the special committee on abortion in cattle was submitted. So far as the inquiry had extended the committee believed that they were justified in making the following recommendations:

(1) For practical purposes and with a view to the adoption of the necessary precautions, the disease should be deemed to be contagious; (2) for the purpose of prevention, strict sanitary precautions, including habitual cleansing and disinfection of places where breeding cows are kept, should be insisted on, and particular attention should be paid to the character of the food and the water with which the animals are supplied; (3) the treatment by the aid of antiseptics is certainly to be recommended, and the evidence which has been already furnished in favor of the use of a solution of bichloride of mercury appears to the committee to justify the advocacy of its general employment in every case where the disease presents itself in a herd. It may be advisable to state that in view of its poisonous nature it is necessary to guard against any injurious consequences arising to pigs or poultry from the careless disposal of the sweepings from the sheds in which this disinfectant has been used; (4) on the question of experiments for the purpose of proving whether or not the disease is of a contagious character, the committee do not feel justified in advising the society to expend a large sum of money in this direction. At the same time it is impossible not to realize that a decision on that point is a matter of very considerable importance, and the committee recommend that an additional sum of £200 be placed at the disposal of the veterinary committee for the purpose of well, but which afterwards fails to further scientific investigations into the comply with the conditions upon which causes of abortion in cattle.
