Farming in the Maritime Provinces

Differs materially from farming in Ontario and the West. Conditions are different and our markets net the same. A product profit-able in those sections would not pay the tillage here, and a sugges-tion valuable to a westner, would prove disastrous if followed by our farmers. In subscribing for a agricultural publication it is well to bear this in mind. There's only one paper that treats of farming from a Maritine Province standpoint. It is the
