facturer. I presume that is the line of policy my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, intends to pursue after the close of this session. I suppose he intends to take a copy of this letter around with him, and address one to every manufacturer in Canada; and as a result, they will come down here in swarms, and I should not wonder if the Government would pay their expenses. Do you suppose that those people will give evidence before the Government in favour of the interests of the tax-payers of the country? No, they will merely advocate the interests of the tax-gatherers. The idea of the Government lowering the tariff or being in favour or freer trade with the United States or with any other country in the world is preposterous. I say that the Government dare not change their fiscal policy; they dare not touch the National Policy. It is impossible. Their masters, the combines, will not permit them to do it. Sir, they tremble before these magnates. They know that they are not able to stand as a Government without their assistance, and therefore the country need not suppose there will be any material change in the tariff of this country until they turn out—some people would say the rascals, but I do not go so far—these hon. gentlemen, and put a better Government in their place. There is no danger of the present Government touching the tariff. They are only gaining time, and I have no doubt that before next session comes they will dissolve this Parliament, in order to go before the people before the agitation gets too hot for them. They will not go to the country on the National Policy or on the question of trade relations with our neighbours, but they will bring in some side issue, and, assisted by the money bags and the influence of the Red Parlour, they will try to keep their seats. Now, I am sure that it is very hard for a poor man who is neither afraid nor ashamed to stand up in Parliament and call things by their right names, to carry on an election against the money bags of the Red Parlour and against all other influences that the Government can use to defeat him, such as their promises to spend millions on a tunnel or on the Chignecto Ship Railway. Does any hon. gentleman suppose that all these influences will not be used in the next election? Everybody knows that they have been used in the past, and that they will be used again. Why, Sir, we are told that in the neighbouring province of Quebec on one occasion twenty-four constituencies were bribed with the public money to support the Government. Will any one deny this? Have not these charges been made here; and have not the Government come to the rescue of the parties attacked, and whitewashed them? We have not yet been able to obtain a fair investigation of these charges, because the powers that be screen the attacking parties. They say, Oh, it is not right to attack a man who is high up in the world. No, it is no sin for such a man to spend $125,000 to corrupt the electors of this country. It would be a great sin for a poor man to steal a jackknife and then would have to spend a month or so in the penitentiary; but when these big men steal money by the thousands or the millions, nothing is done. But the country is waking up, and any one who says that Canada is not ripe to-day for free trade with the United States must be blind. I am not going to speak for Ontario or Quebec or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia; but I speak for Prince Edward Island, and I say that that little province is not able to stand the taxes imposed by the National Policy when her natural market is shut against her by the inaction or the narrow-mindedness of the present Government, and by their misrepresentations at Washington. We buy more farming implements in proportion to our population than any other portion of the Dominion, and the protective tariff obliges us to pay 35 per cent on them; and when the time of payment comes, where can we get the money? Where is the home market that was promised us? How can I sell my potatoes in Ontario or in Quebec? Where can I sell my lambs, my sheep, my eggs or my horses? I have to cross the line and go to the United States with them, and when I get there I find that my eggs, my horses and my sheep have to pay heavy duties before they can be sold. Even my poor little lamb, the innocent lamb, is taxed 75 cents, and the old sheep, the mother of that lamb, is taxed $1.50. The result is that I have to sacrifice these things. This National Policy is a knife that cuts both ways; it compels us to pay in some cases about 200 per cent. For instance, on some cotton goods there is a specific duty as well as an ad valorem duty. Cottons which are worth 3½ cents a yard pay 1 cent a yard of duty, while cottons worth 12 cents a yard pay the same. Suppose a poor man who has only 50 cents wants to buy ten yards of cotton. He goes to a store and he finds some cotton as low as 5 cents a yard. Now, that 50 cents worth of cotton, which he has bought, is taxed 10 cents besides the ad valorem duty, whereas the richer man who buys cotton at 15 cents a yard or $1.50 for ten yards is also taxed but 10 cents. Is not that discriminating against the poor man in favour of the rich man? Take the articles of coarse cloth, which is much worn by the labourers and farmers. That was taxed at one time 7½ cents, but now it is taxed 10 cents per pound. The poor man who buys 2½ yards to make a pair of pants, at perhaps only 50 cents per yard, has the same tax to pay as the man who buys a more expensive material, but of the same weight. Say the weight is 2½ pounds, that makes 25 cents which the poor man has to pay on $1.25 worth of cloth, and the rich man who buys more expensive material, costing say $6.25, pays but the same duty. Is not that discriminating against the poor man in favour of the rich? There is another reason why the Government require to impose a high tariff. They require to do so in order to feed at the Government crib another class of people besides the labourers and farmers. The lawyers come in for a very good share. We find that Mr. O'Connor, of Ottawa, gets $14,919. I do not know for what he gets it. We must be a very bad and treacherous people to require all this legal expenditure; or perhaps he earned this money by trying to find out whether the Liberals were disloyal to the old flag or not. Mr. Osler, of Toronto, got $11,350. Mr. Robinson, of Montreal, got $8,405. Mr. H. H. McDonald got $6,700. Burns, Richey and Company, of Halifax, got $6,405, and Mr. C. Robinson, of Toronto, got $5,785. If the hon. members for Halifax and the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) were here, they might be able to tell us how these two last items were earned. Mr. J. A. McDonell, of Toronto, got $2,027, and so on through the whole list, amounting to $103,956, being the amount paid last year to lawyers throughout the Dominion, and nobody can tell for what. But the poor people know that they have to pay all that in order to enjoy the shade of the National Policy. A short while ago I was speaking of the amount paid for printing and publishing, and taking up the report of the Department of Public Works, I find that "L'Evenement," a Conservative paper published in the province of Quebec, and probably owned and inspired by a gentleman who has the honour of a seat in this House, contains an article, under that gentleman's name, printed in French, appealing to national prejudices. The writer of that article complains that while the Government paid $236,925 last year for public printing, out of that the French papers of the province of Quebec only received $6,063, whereas their proportion should have been $59,253. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain why he made that distinction, and why he exposed to the public gaze the fact that the Government have not acted fairly towards the French people. I would like to know why it was that the French people, if they were entitled to $59,000, only got a little over $6,000. The writer continues to say that out of $103,951 paid last year to the lawyers, the French lawyers only received $4,550, and the English-speaking lawyers $99,405, although the lawful share of the French lawyers should have been $26,000. Is it possible that the French-Canadian members of the House are going quietly to allow their compatriots to be robbed in this way? Is not the $59,000 which they had a right to get their share of the tax paid by the French people of this country? Yet we do not hear one word from these gentlemen supporting the Government on that score. They are contented and take things as they come, but the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas) who publishes "L'Evenement" in French, circulates it throughout the province in order to show that the French people are not getting their proper share of public patronage. But I must say that as we are a mixed population, such appeals to national feeling are much to be deprecated and the sooner they are done away with the better. Let every man be a Nationalist and bring up his family according to the traditions of his fathers, but when we have to meet face to face in Parliament and in court and on the market squares and in the stores, we ought to meet in amity and drop those little jealousies and heart-burnings. I say, Sir, it is not right to raise feeling between the different classes making up the people of this Dominion. I contend that the population of Canada is likely to be a hardier people for being a mixed race than if they were all French, all Scotch or all Irish—aye, I will not except even the Irish or English. They will become a hardier people, a more thrifty people for being composed of different races, and nothing should be done to drive them apart, but everything should be done to bring them together. The only way to have all the different nationalities contented is to do justice to every one. But I am afraid that is not the motto of the present Government. The Government does not propose to do anything now to improve the condition of the country. My friend, the Finance Minister, is like a physician who says that the child is sick, that it requires medicine, that he has the medicine and knows how to administer it, but he will allow the child to be sick another twelve months before administering the medicine that will restore it to health. As I say, I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I know and feel that, though the Government will do nothing to improve the condition of the people, yet they will have the face to go before the people and say: We are devoted to the public interest. But that would not be worse than in the last election. I do not know how it was in other provinces, but in the province of Prince Edward Island no candidate could have been returned from Prince Edward Island who was not in favour of free trade with the United States; unless he was a free trader as we understand it and in favour of extended trade relations with the United States. We know that the "Empire," the Government paper, the mouthpiece of the Government, in 1891 stated that it was absolutely necessary to have free trade with the United States, that the Government were in favour of it, that the delegates of the Government had gone to Washington and had made certain offers to the American people which seemed to suit the Americans pretty well. That is where the deception comes in. We were told at that time that they had offered reciprocity with the United States, and had offered to admit certain articles into Canada from that country free. But these delegates told us afterwards that the American people did not want that; they wanted to send to us free their manufactured articles, they wanted us to discriminate against Great Britain and to assimilate our tariff with theirs. We know that these statements are contradicted by the highest authorities in the United States, and this has never been fairly denied or contradicted by the delegates who went to Washington in 1891. Sir, the American people are a shrewd people; they know very well that 99 cents will not make a dollar; they want to get 100 cents for a dollar, and I do not blame them, for I would like to do that myself, but very often I do not get it, particularly when dealing with this Government. I believe the offer made by these gentlemen who were appointed—though I think I am wrong in speaking of them that way, for I do not believe they ever were appointed in the regular way of such duties as they were to perform—the offer they made to Mr. Blaine or Mr. Foster or Mr. Harrison or whoever else was there, was that certain natural products from Canada should be allowed to enter the United States markets without duty. Articles were named, for instance: potatoes, barley, horses, lambs, sheep, mackerel, I suppose, and so on. When the American Government heard that offer, they said: No; that would be a one-sided policy; it would open our market for your products, while it would give us no chance of sending our products to you. Whoever heard of Canada importing potatoes from the United States? Whoever heard of Canada importing lambs, or sheep, or horses from the United States? Whoever heard of Canada importing mackerel from the United States? Why, Sir, it is ridiculous; it is too one-sided. I do not wonder at their not wanting to admit American manufactured articles free of duty, because that would be directly in opposition to the interests of their master, the protected manufacturers of this country. That is the fact, but in order to carry out the pretense, they must make it appear to the people as well as they can that they were sincere in their offers to the people of the United States. Now, Sir, a great deal has been said about the prosperity of this country, and I am not going to say much about that, but I want to say that it is not one-half as prosperous as we would wish it to be, or one-half as prosperous as it ought to be. If the Government had not a policy for the benefit of the few at the expense and ruin of the many, the country would be a hundred per cent better off. For instance, take Prince Edward Island; you will find to-day in that province, with its population of 109,000 people, that it is an easy matter to buy a million bushels of potatoes, and that after all that were squandered last fall—for I call it squandering it when they were sold as low as 16 cents a bushel—you can go there and buy potatoes at from 17 to 20 cents a bushel. Where is the home market that this great National Policy was to open to the people of this country? Sir, we cannot sell to the United States; that market is closed against us. We cannot send the potatoes across the Straits; the tunnel is not yet built, though it was promised some time ago. It is not even commenced. I will not accuse the Government of not being sincere in this matter, but there is too great willingness on the part of the Government to keep the people in suspense and in misery by their promises. Though we have plenty of goods to send to the market, we cannot get rid of our surplus. Then we have the census returns which show the great prosperity in the Maritime provinces. Well, Sir, I find that in the province of Prince Edward Island, according to the census, there are 173 boot and shoe factories. Now, my hon. colleague on my left (Mr. Yeo), and my hon. friend who lives in Charlottetown, who are well acquainted all over the Island, know very well that there is only two boot and shoe factories in the whole Island, and that one is in Charlottetown, Goff Brothers, and one in Summerside, Mr. Fanning. Now, if these returns are so misleading in that particular case, how can we rely upon them in other cases? How can we rely upon them as respects population, as respects the amount of capital invested in industries? In the matter of shoe factories we see they have made a mistake of 171 out of 173. I know there are only two, unless the Government make out that every man who has a last, and a shoe hammer, and a peg awl, and a little wax, and a few pig's bristles, and a little twine, and who puts a patch on a boot, or makes a pair of moccasins, something like the examples of industries in Cagh-nawaga—they put that down as a boot and shoe factory. What I call a factory is an establishment employing a number of men who live by that industry, and there are only two such factories in the province of Prince Edward Island. I say it is deplorable to find such misleading statements in the census. Yet we see that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been taken out of the tax-payers of this country to pay for these unreliable and misleading returns. My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Macdonald) have shown that the population of Canada has not increased as it should have increased, and they have shown how many emigrants have been brought here at the expense of our people and have gone across the line. When the Government have been confronted with these facts they have admitted that the census returns were misleading. Now, if they believe that the census is not to be relied upon, let them ask for another vote of two or three hundred thousand dollars, and try and get an honest and accurate return of what the Dominion of Canada is worth in population and wealth. One gentleman opposite, I think the hon. member for Richmond, N.S. (Mr. Gillies) had the effrontery, last night, to argue that the amount of deposits in the savings banks in Canada was a proof of the prosperity of the people. Why, Sir, we find that in the state of Massachusetts, with only half the population of the Dominion of Canada, the people had eight times as much money in the savings banks as all the people of Canada. Is it any wonder when immigrants come over here and become acquainted with such facts, that they conclude to go across the lines? When they learn that our national debt is $50 per head, and the national debt of the United States is only $17 per head, is it any wonder that they refuse to stay here and go to swell the population of the United States? Perhaps the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) will tell me this argument is wrong, too. Well, if it is wrong it is based upon the census returns of population laid before Parliament by the Government of this country. Then we are told that a great many of our Canadian people are coming back from the United States. Well, it would be worth while to have honest statistics to show how many have really come back. We know very well that in the province of Quebec the exodus is something alarming. I know myself that in one parish the Roman Catholic church was deserted, because the parishioners had left and gone across to the United States; and there are a great many other parishes like that. We find that customs returns from the United States show that $1,250,000 worth of goods were entered in the United States custom-houses belonging to Canadian emigrants, people who have been expatriated from this country, and have gone across the line. That may show a population of a thousand people, or two thousand people; but we want to know who they are, and how many there are. Are they old men? Are they old women, are they infants? No, they are the bone and sinew of this country; they are the people best qualified to build up this country. My hon. friend from Richmond tried to show that population was no sign of the wealth of a country. Well, if population is not a sign of wealth, all I can say is, God help the world. What goes to make the world but population? What good is capital without labour? Take five hundred million dollars and put it in a pile and never touch it; what good is it if there are no labourers whom you can employ with that money? Sir, I contend that without population a country is nothing. Who is it that takes up arms for the rights and liberties of any country but its population? I say that the population of a country is its greatest wealth; a population that increases in the natural way is the greatest blessing Providence can bestow upon a country, and so I say that the exodus of Canadian people across the border is more deplorable than pest, or cholera, or anything that destroys the people. Now, my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, has told us that by not removing the duty on coal oil, but only removing the inspection fee, he has conferred a great boon on the Canadian people. Now, I contend that the taking off of the inspection fee will not materially reduce the price of oil to the consumers. Not long since I saw an article in a Montreal newspaper, accompanied by a picture, showing the American housewife with three dimes in her hand going out to buy oil of a man who is passing. She bought three gallons of oil and had four cents left. The Canadian housewife went out with three dimes in her hand, and she came back with only one gallon and two cents left. According to the Montreal "Star," which, I believe, is a Tory paper, we have paid nearly 300 per cent more for coal oil than should have been paid. I believe that, notwithstanding the reduction proposed as regards inspection and other matters, the consumer will have to pay something over 200 per cent in excess of the proper price. This tax, I desire the House to understand, comes directly out of the poorer classes, because the rich do not use coal oil, but gas or electric light. Of course, those means of lighting are more convenient, but coal oil is absolutely necessary to the people of the country, especially the poorer classes. We were told a few years ago by the present Minister of Finance that these articles were luxuries. They are luxuries with a vengeance. Does the hon. gentleman mean to declare that we should go back 100 years and take cotton and melted lard and thus make a light? Does he mean to say that we should go back and use tallow candles by which to eat supper and read our prayer-book? Does he mean to say that we should go back to the time of the two-wheel cart, when we sat on the axle, instead of driving in the comfortable vehicles of to-day? The Minister of Finance will not come from his house to the Parliament buildings without taking a cab. It is a shame for an hon. gentleman occupying the position of Minister of Finance to cast a slur on the people. In his opinion anything is good enough for the people. In effect he says: "Do not walk on the carpet, for it is reserved for us; do not dare to sit in a cushioned chair, for that is reserved for us; do not dare to have a clock on your wall, for that is reserved for us; do not dare to have any accommodation beyond that suitable for an Indian. That is all the respect the hon. gentleman has for the people. These hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches are installed in office, with salaries of $7,000 and $8,000 a year; they are living on the fat of the land, they are extracting money from the people in order to enable them to get their pay, and that is about all they care for. We have heard about changes of the tariff being made to-morrow, but I do not believe the Government intend to change the tariff. They are divided among themselves on this question. Some hon. members are in favour of taking the duty from corn, but are not in favour of any other changes. Then, those who are in favour of taking the duty from binding twine do not desire any other reduction, and the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), who is not willing to take the duty from anything, nevertheless will vote with the Minister of Finance to reduce the duty on coal oil and binding twine. If his master proposed to remove the duty from corn, he would support him, as he would any proposal to lower the duty on cottons or stoneware. Even if he proposed to increase the duty on china and gold and silver plate, he would support the hon. gentleman. But if such a proposition came from the Opposition, he would vote against it, on the ground that it was an attack on the National Policy, notwithstanding the fact that I have no doubt the greater part of his constituents believe the National Policy is a curse to the country. That policy has undoubtedly enabled the Government to extract more money from the people than the proper needs of the Government require, and has enabled the Government to spend money extravagantly. No one can deny that money has been foolishly and extravagantly spent in the country, and also that it has been used for the purpose of bribing and corrupting certain portions of the electors. Any man who reads the history of this country must know that these are facts that cannot be ignored or refuted. If all reports be true, the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) does not intend to run another election; perhaps he does not intend to return to his constituents, but is devoting his attention to another quarter. I admit that an hon. member who expects to go to the Senate may be excused for speaking in favour of the Government, even although it may be against the interests of his own people. He may vote with the Government and do all the Government want him to do, because when he is once appointed to the Senate he is independent of the votes of the people. I am opposed to gentlemen holding responsible portfolios being pitchforked into the Senate where they are above the criticism of the electors. Two important portfolios are now filled by members of the other Chamber, including that of Trade and Commerce. I have nothing to say against the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or against the manner in which he discharged the duties of Minister of Customs, or in regard to the manner in which he is discharging his present position of Minister of Trade and Commerce, but it is wrong in principle to take power from the electors by placing important Ministers in the Senate. Will any one tell me that it is proper that a Minister occupying a most important position in the Country should be in a Chamber where the members are not responsible to the people? Is that responsible government? George Cole, Joseph Howe and the other fathers of responsible government in the Maritime provinces would laugh to scorn such an idea, and, if they were permitted to stand in Parliament to-day, they would show the people that such action was contrary to the spirit of the constitution, and to the principle of responsible government, and that all important offices should be filled by men who are responsible to the people. If Ministers are responsible to the people, a certain amount of control may be exercised over them. But the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) are quite opposed to this view. They think the Government is doing well, and always acts correctly. These hon. gentlemen, however, must remember that the storm has broken, that the indignation of the people has been aroused. In proof of this, I want nothing more than the fact that petitions already presented by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), contain over 30,000 signatures, I presume most of those of Conservatives, asking the Government to remodel the tariff. Is the opinion of these electors to be disregarded by the Government? We find that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is not alone in his stand on this reform of the tariff, but that he is supported by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and many others. We heard the other day in this House the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Calvin)—a county that I believe never returned a Liberal—we heard him express his dissatisfaction with the tariff, and he made no secret of it. He said that he was sick and tired of it, and that he would vote against the Government and for the amendment of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). He told in no uncertain way what he was going to do, and in that respect he is unlike the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), who spoke one way and voted the other way.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Oh, no.

Mr. PERRY. We have the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Calvin) all in favour of tariff reform, and we saw that the junior member for St. John (Mr. Chesley) felt very shaky on the question last night. He was trembling, and his clothes very nearly fell off him, he shook so much. He did not know exactly how he was going to vote. He told us that New Brunswick was in a state of starvation, and that free trade with the United States would be the making of that province, but at last he wound up by saying that he was willing to take the word of the Finance Minister about tariff reform. Well, he has got more faith in the Finance Minister than I have. I suppose my friend from St. John (Mr. Chesley) will be invited to meet the Finance Minister to discuss the tariff with him. I suppose he will get a card of invitation, and that very likely his expenses will be paid, and I hope he will have a good time. But let me ask him, will he tell the Minister of Finance that the fishermen and the farmers and the labourers in New Brunswick are suffering from over-taxation? Not a bit of it. I believe he will tell him that the industries of New Brunswick require protection, and that perhaps it would be better to add a little more protection on for their benefit. That is the information the Finance Minister is seeking for, as we have seen from the circular addressed, not to the people of Canada, but to the manufacturers of Canada, by the manager of the "Empire," the pet paper of the Government, and a paper that is supported by the Government. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to longer occupy the time of the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Go on.

Mr. PERRY. I know it is not very amusing for my friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron). I did not intend to amuse him, but I thought I would give him a lesson and teach him something, or perhaps I might help him to get into the other Chamber. I hope he will be there before long, but I do not think it will be this year. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, speaking from a Prince Edward Island point of view, that the National Policy is fairly ruining that province. We were told that we were going to have a number of factories there, when the National Policy was inaugurated, and that the farmers would have a home market for their products, but these promises have all been falsified. I know a poor fisherman who lives near me and who caught eighty barrels of mackerel last year, and in order to send the fish to the States, he had to pay $160 duty into the American treasury. In the face of such a fact as that, is it any wonder that the people of the Island want free trade with the United States and that the representatives are bound to support it? I believe we can have free trade with the United States, and I believe that under the Cleveland Administration, if the people of Canada return the Liberal party to power in Canada, we will soon see that happy day arrive when we shall be able to interchange our products free from the barriers which now exist.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of replying to my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Perry). A few evenings ago, when the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) was addressing the House, I was among those who listened with a good deal of attention to that hon. gentleman's remarks, and I was somewhat surprised to hear him make what I considered very extraordinary statements, statements so extraordinary that I thought it my duty at the time to interrupt him and to deny the accuracy of what he said. It is at that hon. gentleman's special request, that I am now about to address the House for a few minutes. He has already been answered at length by my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron) and by my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Gillies), so that it is necessary for me to touch upon only one or two points to which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) referred. I will take the liberty of quoting to the House a few of his assertions:

The people had prospered under free trade or under the nearest approach of it possible under responsible government. * * *

The man in those days who would have ventured to stand up and announce himself a protectionist would have been hooted from the hustings. * * *

We have shown that people are leaving the country and that we are poverty-stricken as compared with what we were years ago. * * *

Of all places in the Dominion Cape Breton has suffered the most. From that island there has been a greater percentage of exodus than from any other part of the Dominion. * * *

The National Policy was withering up the country. * * *

I regret that the people are leaving the Maritime provinces in hordes, as if a plague was there. I regret more than that, that the only member of the House who can be found to cheer the statement is the hon. member from Cape Breton who sits opposite me. * * *

Throughout the whole Dominion, I do not suppose there was any section in which such great hopes were indulged at the inception of Confederation, or so many prophecies of brilliant times made as in the Maritime provinces, and I think if there is one thing both sides can agree upon, it is this, that so far as the Maritime provinces are concerned, at any rate not one of those promises has been fulfilled, and not any province of the three has reached forward to a measurable distance of that prosperity which was predicted and hoped for when we unfortunately joined the Confederation.

It was when the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) referred to the exodus from Cape Breton, and to what he said was the failure of the policy which the Government inaugurated in 1878, to carry out its promises, that I made the interruption, and that he asked me to give evidence to the House in support of my denial of his statements. The hon. gentleman regretted that I was the only member in the House who cheered when that extraordinary statement was made by him. My hon. friend knows very well that when he is pleading in court, and when his opponent makes a weak statement, that is the time he cheers, and I cheered for the same reason. I heard my hon. friend making statements that he could not support by any evidence whatever, in respect to the island of Cape Breton, and more especially the county that I have the honour to represent. My hon. friend made particular reference to the decline, or as he put it, the disappearance from the coasts of the Maritime provinces of the shipping which had been in existence previous to the inception of the National Policy or previous to Confederation. My hon. friend received a pretty complete answer from the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), who addressed the House after my hon. friend had taken his seat, and he also received a good deal of information on the same subject from my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Gillies).

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he adopts the statement of the hon. member for Centre Toronto, that 80,000 steam-boats were tied up to the wharfs?

Mr. McDougall (Cape Breton). I do not. I have not inquired into the accuracy or the inaccuracy of that statement. But as my hon. friend invited me to give evidence to the House on this subject, more particularly with reference to the county that I have the honour to represent, I wish to call his attention and the attention of this House to the present condition of the shipping interest there, compared with what it was during the time of the Liberal Government. I find by the Trade and Navigation Returns that in the year 1873-74, the year in which the hon. gentleman's friends took charge of the Government of this country, the total number of arrivals of vessels in the ports of my county, principally in the ports of Sydney and North Sydney and the outports, was 938, with a tonnage of 242,357 tons, and manned with 7,823 men. After four years' Government by hon. gentlemen opposite that shipping had gone down to 654 vessels, with a tonnage of 68,774 tons, and only 2,158 men. In other words, when they left office the arrivals at those ports were only two-thirds of what they were when they took office, the tonnage only one-fourth, and the number of men only one-fourth. I have figures which show a similar result at other ports, but I will not weary the House by reading them. Now, let me compare these figures with the statistics of the shipping that entered those ports in the year 1891-92. I find that in that year there arrived in the ports of Sydney and North Sydney 732 vessels, with a tonnage of 189,403 tons, and with 6,557 men. Those vessels were entirely deep-sea-going ocean vessels, foreign and Canadian included. Let me explain to the House that in the year 1873-74, and up to the year 1879-80, the shipping at the outports was included in that of the principal ports of Sydney and North Sydney. But in 1891-92, in addition there arrived at the outports 1,052 ocean-going vessels, with a tonnage of 267,824 tons, and with 10,201 men. Now I come to the coasting trade, and I find that in 1891-92 1,680 coasters entered the ports of Sydney and North Sydney, and 1,101 entered the outports, making 2,681 vessels, with a tonnage of 261,163 tons, and with 15,304 men. The number of vessels departing from our ports is something similar. I find that the total departures of coasters in the same year are 2,768 vessels, with a tonnage of 242,818 tons, and with 14,287 men. Now, Mr. Speaker, the House will see the difference in the figures that I have just quoted; and I have confined myself to the county which I have the honour to represent, owing to the fact that my hon. friend asked me to produce evidence in support of my denial of the statements he made to the House, and I think that these figures show conclusively that the statements made by the hon. gentleman were entirely inaccurate, and such as would justify laughter on the part of anybody who knows the facts. Now, Sir, I come to another point. At the inception of the National Policy one of the great industries in which the people of Nova Scotia, and more particularly the people of my county, were interested, was the coal industry, and I may say that the large increase which has taken place in our shipping is an evidence of the development of that industry. But I propose, further, with the indulgence of the House, to give a statement showing the development of that industry since the inception of the National Policy—a development which the people in my part of the country attribute almost entirely to that policy. I wish to refer especially to two phases of that policy,—the protection given to that industry in the markets of Canada, and the protection given to manufacturers in Canada who consume a large quantity of this product. I find that in 1873, the year before the Liberal party came into power, the total sales of coal from the province of Nova Scotia was 811,106 tons, of which 96,762 were marketed in Nova Scotia, 32,611 in New Brunswick, 4,712 in Prince Edward Island, 80,213 in the province of Quebec, 206,747 in the United States, 35,895 in the West Indies, 6,976 in Europe, and 54,141 in Newfoundland. Now, after four years of Liberal government, under the policy which my hon. friend describes as the nearest approach to free trade, I find that the output of coal, instead of being increased, was reduced to 688,628 tons, showing a falling off of 122,478 tons in Nova Scotia during these four years. I find that in 1891, the last year for which I can find figures published in detail, the total output of these mines was 1,849,945 tons. Now, Sir, there appears to be a very big difference between the effect of this great free trade policy on this industry in my county, and the effect of the much-abused National Policy, under which a duty of 50 cents was imposed on foreign coal coming into the country. The difference between the effects of the two policies is just the difference between 688,638 tons and 1,849,945. Let us take another view. The total quantity of coal produced by Nova Scotia in the ten years from 1871 to 1880 was 7,317,430 tons, and during these ten years we had four years of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Under the present Administration, from 1881 to 1890, I find that our total production was 13,910,136 tons. Now my hon. friend and his friends opposite cannot, in my opinion, give this House a single argument to disprove these figures. They are the figures furnished by the Liberal Government of Nova Scotia, and verified from year to year. It may be of importance to show where a market for this nearly 14,000,000 tons is found to-day. As I have pointed out already, we had only in Nova Scotia a market for 89,129 tons. We have now a market for 258,293 tons. We have in New Brunswick a market, not for 17,139 tons, as we had at that time, but a market for 44,005 tons. I am quoting now the figures with respect to the production in my own county, the county of Cape Breton, which has the greatest coal fields of the different counties in which coal is found in Nova Scotia. In Prince Edward Island we have a market for 24,563 tons, where before we had only a market, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, for 6,547 tons. To the province of Quebec we send 528,394 tons, instead of only 44,410 tons, which we sent when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office. In the United States the difference is smaller. We could not be expected to increase our market in the United States with their tariff of 75 cents a ton against us. When we were able to send coal free of duty to the United States, we had a market for some 400,000 tons; but the people of the United States, about the year 1867, imposed a duty of $1.25 per ton on our coal. Some four or five years later they reduced the duty to 75 cents; but notwithstanding that reduction we have been unable to send coal to the United States market. The West Indies took 4,066 tons, and Newfoundland 106,935 tons. These are the places where we got our market for the production of our collieries in the island of Cape Breton, during the season of 1891, and, as I have said already, the figures show conclusively that the effect of the National Policy was not only to increase production but to enable us to get a more extensive market for our coal, and to enable our people to earn more money in that industry and have better returns for their year's work. As another evidence of the fact that the National Policy has encouraged the building up of industries in the province of Nova Scotia, I would just give the figures with respect to the industrial establishments, which figures have been spoken of so often by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. In the province of Nova Scotia our industrial establishments in 1881 were 5,459 in number, and in 1891 we find them to be 10,372. The number of men employed in 1881 was 20,390, and in 1891 the number was 34,250. This does not seem to bear out the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that these industries have not been increased or improved in the province of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) made particular reference to the exodus, and was very ably answered by my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron). But I wish to point out the facts with respect to my own county. According to the census of 1881 we had a population of 31,258, but according to the last census our total population is 34,244, an increase of about 3,000, or nearly 10 per cent. Now, I think my hon. friend might have selected some other county to speak of and some other gentleman in this House to challenge to give contradiction of the statements he was making. When I was first elected to Parliament, in 1878—the Parliament of Nova Scotia—one of my first duties, as I recollect very distinctly, was to ask Parliament for aid for the starving miners in my county. The miners were reported to be in actual danger of starvation.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). When was that?

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). That was in the year 1878. I remember very distinctly that one of the first requests I made to my colleagues in the Provincial Government of that time was to provide some means by which the people engaged in the mining industry might be kept from starving.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That was very kind of you.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). My hon. friend is a professional, and ought to know the propriety of a patient taking his medicine.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is a very happy suggestion, too.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). In addition to that fact, Mr. Speaker, a number of our coal operators in the county of Cape Breton, and I believe in the counties of Nova Scotia proper as well, owing to the depression that prevailed—and at this time hon. gentlemen opposite were in power—were not only unable to market their coal, not only unable to make the coal industry pay, but they were unable to pay the royalty imposed by the law of Nova Scotia. On behalf of a number of these operators, I spoke to my colleagues and begged them to give time for the payment of the royalty until the people could develop their mines with greater success than they were doing at that time, because if they had been forced to pay the royalty that had accumulated, the result must have been the closing down of the mines. To-day these mines are in a state of great prosperity. Instead of these operators losing money or making no money out of their investments, they are making a good profit, so good as to have attracted the attention of people from the south side of the boundary line, so that only a few months ago capitalists from the United States came and bought up all the mines within my county with a view of making large profits. They are not going to invest their money in our country with the view of losing it. After the test of the National Policy for that industry, some twelve years ago, these people see that it would be in their interest to invest their money in that industry. They came down, Sir, and bought up that industry; they bought it with the assistance of the Liberal Government of Nova Scotia, with a view to making money out of it. My hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Perry), as well as many other hon. gentlemen on the other side of House, have repeated again and again the statement that the poor people were oppressed by the high taxation. I do not propose to go into that question; it has been gone into so fully by hon. gentlemen who preceded me that I consider it unnecessary to take up the time of the House in dealing with it at any length. But I am one who is in constant communication with the people in business and have been since I was able to do anything. I know the circumstances of the people to-day. I know what their circumstances were twenty years ago, and I may say thirty years ago. I know, Sir, that there never was a time in the history of the country from which I come, within my knowledge, when the people were as comfortably circumstanced as they are to-day. I know there never was a time when these people could have bought the necessaries of life as cheaply as they can to-day; I know that, because I deal with these people and these people deal with me. My hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Perry), who has just addressed the House, made particular reference to the article of cotton. Sir, cotton can be bought to-day for one-half the price it commanded fifteen years ago. Sugar can be bought at less than one-half what it cost fifteen years ago. Tea that sold at 40 and 50 cents at that time can now be bought at 20 cents, 25 cents and 30 cents. I might go through the list of articles that enter into the consumption of the people, particularly of the poorer classes of people, the farmers and workingmen, to-day, and find that, as compared with the price fifteen or twenty years ago, there is a reduction of at least 50 per cent. My hon. friend has asked the question: Can we send potatoes to Ontario or Quebec? I say we can. I say that potatoes from the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are to-day on the tables of the people of Ottawa and Montreal.

An hon. MEMBER. And good potatoes, too.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Yes; as my hon. friend says, good ones, too. We have facilities for the transportation of these commodities to-day that we had not fifteen or twenty years ago. That is why we can send the products of our different industries to almost any part of Canada to-day where they may be wanted. We are able to send them because these facilities are placed at our disposal, which we could not expect to have had under the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite, judging from the way they dealt with these matters and the effect upon our industries of their policy when in power. I do not wish to take up the time of the House; I do not propose to do so at any further length. There is nothing that I could say now but what has been already said from this side of the House, and, if hon. gentlemen opposite are not now satisfied with these statements, I presume there is nothing I could add that would satisfy them.

Mr. BECHARD. After having heard hon. gentlemen who sit on the ministerial benches, I am tempted to ask myself how it is I am not yet persuaded that this country is in a prosperous condition. We have heard that statement a great many times during this discussion. We had it first from high authority, in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the session; we had it subsequently from the mouth of the Finance Minister himself when he made his financial statement, and we have had it many times from other hon. gentlemen. Now, Sir, since the beginning of this debate a flood of figures has been poured upon us. Letters and telegrams containing the opinions of persons said to be competent in the matter have been read; numberless statistics have been quoted; the power of eloquence and argument has been largely made us of—in a word, nothing seems to have been forgotten that could justify the statement that this country is prosperous. This great effort in support of a once popular but now tottering policy is already before the country, where I am sure it will be received, not as in days gone by, by the cheers of popular sympathy, but with the cold indifference, if not the spontaneous reprobation, of a discontented people. We have now before us the net product of this renewed effort for the defence of a moribund policy, and when reduced to its real proportion, what does it amount to? Sir, it has been demonstrated in this debate by hon. gentlemen opposite that by virtue of the National Policy a village here, a town there, a city somewhere else, have a few more factories than they possessed before the initiation of that policy; that during the last decade they have somewhat increased their population; that the number of persons employed in manufactures is greater by 6,000 or 7,000, and, as the crowning piece of that structure, which seems to provoke the admiration of my hon. friends opposite, as if it were a monument of colossal proportions, they pointed to our manufacturers who are doing well, some of them exceedingly well, and are very prosperous, since they have had an opportunity of becoming millionaires during the short space of ten or twelve years, while the plague of emigration was decimating the population of this country. If it is true that some towns have increased their population, it is equally true that in other parts of the country, in some of the rural districts, the population has remained stationary, and in some others it has greatly decreased. That there is prosperity somewhere in this country, that there is prosperity with a small number, is a fact that no one will undertake to deny; but that the great mass of the people are to-day enjoying prosperity, is an assertion wholly at variance with the real state of things. Before you tell me that this country is prosperous, I want you to explain the cause of the exodus, which inflicts such an immense loss on this country. It is no explanation to say, as has been said, that Canadians do not migrate any more than do the American people themselves, that they only perform a natural act that is performed by Americans living in the northern parts of the United States, and who go to the western states and settle. Sir, those Americans who go to the western states know that they can find there cheaper and better farms than those they possess in the east, and where with smaller means they can settle in a better condition. But, Sir, those Americans who go to the west do not leave their country; it is for them simply a change of latitude, but not a change of country. We would be only too happy if we could see those who leave the old provinces of the Dominion, take a western direction and settle in our western territories, for they would make the best settlers this country could desire. Their case would then be like that of the American people who go from the eastern to the western states; it would be for them, as for the Americans, simply a change of latitude, but not a change of country. But we all know that the greatest part of those who leave the old provinces of the Dominion, take the road to the United States. I do not charge the National Policy with being the principal cause of the exodus, but I do complain that it has not fulfilled the promises made by its promoters during the election campaign of 1878. Not only has it not brought back to Canada, as was promised, those of our countrymen who had emigrated, but it has been powerless even to stop the wave of emigration. Now, you may pile up figures upon figures, heap statistics upon statistics, as high as mountains; you will not thereby succeed in persuading men that they are prosperous, when they do not feel so. When people are content, they do not leave the country. Prosperity, as you well know, makes people contented, and a contented people do not emigrate. I can understand an emigration from the old countries of Europe, where the population is dense, where space is restricted, and where the labouring classes are comparatively poor—I say I can understand an emigration from such countries to this young continent of North America, enjoying the blessings of free institutions, containing almost unlimited space, and possessing inexhaustible sources of natural wealth. These are powerful inducements for the labouring classes of Europe to emigrate to this side of the Atlantic, but emigration from this new country of Canada, so richly endowed with natural advantages of all kinds, with a healthy climate, a fertile soil, with immense natural wealth, with great facilities for education, in a word, with all the advantages which accompany a high state of civilization; I say that emigration from such a country as ours, is a problem which I cannot understand and cannot explain, unless it be from a lack of sufficient development of the natural wealth of the country. When I look at the long and continued procession of my fellow-countrymen to a foreign land, I am irresistibly led to the conclusion that there is an absence of sufficient opportunity for the development of prosperity here. That emigration is not natural, it is entirely abnormal. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lachapelle), in a speech he delivered the other day, expressed an entirely different opinion on this subject. He said that the exodus was a natural fact, that the Canadian, I suppose he was particularly speaking of the French Canadian, is a traveller by nature, and that the principal cause of the exodus of our countrymen is due to their adventurous spirit. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the exodus were limited to young men,

I could understand that there might be some truth in the hon. gentleman's statement. We might, perhaps, say that they had inherited the adventurous and chivalrous character of those of our ancestors to whom we are indebted for the discovery of this country, those who were pioneers of civilization on this vast continent of North America. But when we see whole families leaving every year, by hundreds and by thousands, for a foreign land, I think it would be simply ridiculous to pretend that those people are actuated simply by a spirit of adventure. Those who go to the United States do not go to that country to run after adventures, but they go there because they find greater prosperity than prevails in this country, they go there to obtain more means and in order to place themselves in a position so that, after a few years, they may possibly be able to return to their native country. Canadians do not leave this country because they do not like it, for they prefer this to any other country. They are attached to it and to the home influences that surround their lives, and around which are woven their affections. It is with tears in their eyes and pangs in their breasts they await the moment when they are obliged to bid adieu to their homes, and leave their country for a foreign land. The hon. member for Hochelaga did not show much sympathy for those people, for he said in his speech that he would not be disposed to induce the Government to make any great sacrifices to secure their return. I deeply regretted to hear those words fall from the mouth of an hon. member of this House, and more especially from the mouth of a representative of the province of Quebec, and a French Canadian. I venture to say that, among the representatives of that province in this House, he is the only one who entertains such unpatriotic sentiments. For my part, I thank God I have not the misfortune to share those sentiments, and if I did I hope I would not be so unfortunate as to commit the indecency to give utterance to them. Sir, the work of bringing back the expatriated Canadians to this country is a most noble one, quite worthy of the serious attention and energetic efforts of the Canadian Government. A more patriotic task could not be undertaken, and any man who calls himself a patriot should be prepared to lend a helping hand in the accomplishment of that noble undertaking, for whilst, we expend every year large sums of money to bring to this country people from the old nations of Europe, I am afraid we do not offer the proper inducements to those who are our own countrymen who have emigrated to the United States, and who would prove the best class of settlers that could be procured for our country. The Minister of the Interior, in speaking of the exodus the other day, said, or at least was understood to say, that there were only a few young professional men who left Canada for the United States. There is something true in that statement, but it is not the whole truth. It is quite true that a certain number of professional young men, after completing their studies here, seeing their profession crowded in Canada, leave this country and go to the United States; but if the exodus were limited to those few, certainly we would not see to-day about 1,000,000 native-born Canadians in the United States. The Minister also alluded to the fact that, within the last twenty-five or thirty years, the farmers of Ontario had progressed, that they had improved their habits of living, and each year increased their expenditure. The same observation might be applied to the farmers of the province of Quebec. They also have progressed, they build their houses in a more tasteful manner, they are more comfortable, their table is better, their clothes are richer, and their vehicles almost aristocratic. The farmers in Quebec, as well as in Ontario, have considerably modified their ways of farming: their methods have been improved, their implements are more perfect, consequently, their farms are more productive. They do more work than formerly, and they produce a great deal more in a stated time than previously, and at less expense than before they made these modern improvements. In this way they have increased their revenue, and during ordinarily good times, the farmers not only maintain their ground, but some of them make considerable savings. But they have, on the other hand, increased their expenditure. We all know that a bad crop is very damaging to the farmer, because he has only that resource, and when he is overtaken by a succession of bad crops, two or three years following he becomes indebted, and arrives at the conclusion that the time has come to leave the country and go to the United States. But what is wanted chiefly by the farmer is a good market, where he can obtain remunerative prices for his products. Even the good crop of 1891 did not bring much prosperity to the farmers of this country, because the prices were too low and were not remunerative. The effects of the McKinley tariff are severely felt by our farmers. The price of everything which they have to sell has decreased to a very large extent during the last two or three years. We all know that horses were largely exported from Canada to the United States before the McKinley Bill came into operation, but the price of horses is to-day only one-third of what it was two or three years ago, and their exports to that country has been reduced more than 60 per cent. The price of hay has decreased 25 or 30 per cent. The price of barley has also decreased in an enormous proportion, and the prices of poultry, eggs and of other articles which we used to export in large quantities, have decreased in some instances 33 per cent and in others 50 per cent. The same thing could be said in regard to all farm products, which find their best market in the United States, and the consequence is that with lower prices, the farmers cannot be prosperous and are consequently discontented at the present commercial policy of the Government. Reference has been made many times during the course of the debate to the reduced value of farm lands, and I can state here unhesitatingly, that in the part of the country in which I live, the value of farm lands has decreased by at least one-third. In fact, farms cannot be sold at all, because nobody wants to buy them. The present state of things cannot continue much longer without serious consequences to the country. It creates anxiety and discontent, and the Minister of Finance has himself admitted that there is in the country a feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction. The hon. gentleman said that the Government is disposed to meet that feeling fairly. But what does he propose? He proposes to revise the tariff, but not at present. He says he will do so at next session of Parliament, when he has had time to gather sufficient information. I was glad to hear from the Finance Minister that he intended to revise the tariff, and to reduce the duties upon, we may presume, quite a number of articles amongst the goods which they consume; but I may tell the Finance Minister that whilst a proposal of this kind will be received with satisfaction by the country, it will not give entire satisfaction, and it will not be sufficient to content the people. Farmers would rather pay heavier duties and receive good prices for their products than pay light duties and receive prices which are not remunerative. Our farmers are industrious, sober and frugal; they ought to be successful, but they are in need of one of the principal elements of success in their industry, and that is a good market for the sale of their products. The British market is too remote from Canada to replace the American market for a large number of articles. The British market is good for only a part of the product of the Canadian farmer, and a large proportion of what he produces has its best market in the neighbouring Republic. It is idle to try to make the farmers believe that the American market can be replaced by the British market. Their eyes are opened, and they have had for years the experience which has taught them that the best market which can be obtained for a large portion of their products is to be found in the American Republic.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BECHARD. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Finance Minister has told us that he would favour reciprocity with the United States, provided a reasonable reciprocity treaty could be negotiated. Although, Sir, these words are somewhat vague, they indicate to a certain extent the kind of reciprocity which the hon. gentleman would favour. If it is such as he has vainly sought to obtain from the American Government, I am afraid that the Canadian farmers will have to wait for a long time before they receive the benefit of it. We all know that the hon. Minister is in favour of reciprocity in natural products. I have already said on a previous occasion, and I repeat it here to-day, that if the hon. gentleman would obtain such a reciprocity, the country at large would be satisfied; but the hon. gentleman himself knows from his own experience that such a limited reciprocity cannot be obtained from the Government of the United States. Now, Sir, the hon. Minister is hostile to any reciprocity in manufactured goods, because, he says, it would have the effect of sweeping away all our manufactories. But there are those, and I am among them, who believe quite the contrary. Speaking for myself and myself alone, I would go for a large measure of reciprocity with the United States, a measure of such a large character as to give it permanency, for I consider permanency to be one of the principal elements necessary to give to such a measure complete efficiency. If the American market were open permanently to Canadian products, I venture to say that within a short time you would see American capital flowing into Canada rapidly, to develop our natural resources, such as our mines, our forests and our great water-powers. I am confident that within a comparatively short period the state of manufacturing industry in Canada would be superior to that in the New England states, for we have natural facilities for manufacturing such as do not exist in that country. I know manufacturers in this country who hold this view. One of them, who is in business at Chambly, on the Richelieu River, who began business when a young man with small means, and who is to-day one of the most successful manufacturers in this country, has said to me on many occasions: "My mills are stopped during a certain length of time every year because the home market becomes crowded; but open to me the American market, and my mills will run the whole year long; in my line I fear no American competitor." Sir, I am convinced that this opinion is shared by a large number of our manufacturers, especially those who have been successful and whose industries are natural to this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are in this House and in the country those who are opposed to reciprocity in manufactured articles between Canada and the United States on the ground that it would involve discrimination against British goods. This is merely sentimental, although I must confess that it is an honourable and respectable sentiment. At the same time these gentlemen must not expect that the farmers and the other labouring classes of Canada will tamely consent to be much longer the passive spectators of the comparatively great prosperity which exists on the other side of the American frontier, and be forever deprived of it, for the purpose of remaining the customers of a few British manufacturers. This would be exacting too much from their patriotism. Charity begins at home, and in this case as in many others the moral of self-interest will prevail over sentimental considerations, however respectable they may be. There are also those who are opposed to a large measure of free trade with the United States on the ground that it would lead to annexation. On this point I have already taken, and I still take direct issue with those hon. gentlemen. The lessons of the past in this respect must not be forgotten. We all know that those who started the annexation movement in 1849 had not in view any political object, but that their only purpose was to secure for this country improved commercial relations with the United States. As soon as the reciprocity treaty of 1854 had been negotiated all annexationist feeling vanished away. This is a case in which history would repeat itself, for those who are for annexation to-day are impelled only by the desire to secure to their country thereby better commercial relations with the United States. I hold, therefore, that a large measure, even the largest measure of reciprocity with the United States, so far from developing or encouraging an annexation feeling in this country, would have the effect of annihilating it. By reciprocity with the United States our people would obtain all they need or want. The annexationists would be satisfied, because the reason for annexation would no longer exist. Now, Sir, I tell the hon. gentleman, I tell the Government, I tell all friends of this country, that when my hon. friend from Lislet (Mr. Tarte), the other day, said in this House, speaking of the discontent now existing in this country with regard to our commercial relations with the United States, that if there was a plebiscite taken on this question to-day the result might cause great surprise, I fully concur in the opinion of my hon. friend. There are numerous men to-day in this country who would vote for annexation in order to secure the benefit of free commercial relations with the United States, if they thought they could not secure it otherwise. In the most loyal province of this Dominion, at least according to the boast of some hon. gentlemen on the other side, there is already a nucleus of annexationists who are organizing and recruiting. You may dismiss them from office, if you like, you may expel them from the country, if you can, according to the wish expressed by an hon. gentleman in this House a few days ago, but persecution will not annihilate the cause for which they are working. On the contrary, it will gain friends for it. The best policy to destroy that feeling is to obtain free trade in the largest measure between Canada and the United States; but if we persist in the policy of restricting trade between this country and the American republic we may be sure that nothing can be done better calculated to develop the annexation feeling in this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by telling all parties in this House and the country, that if you want to keep this country a part of the British Empire, or as an independent nation in the future, you must take the means to make our people contented, in securing for them free trade with the United States. We require a share of that great trade which exists on the other side of the line, and which promotes prosperity throughout the length and breadth of that great country; there is the only means of removing the annexation feeling and of giving entire satisfaction to our people. The Government in negotiating such a treaty will have found at the same time the best means of stopping the tide of emigration from Canada to the other side of the frontier.

Mr. LAURIER. I promised yesterday to my hon. friends opposite that we should come to a division upon this question this evening. Therefore it will not be out of place if, at this stage, before we reach a conclusion, I should endeavour to review the situation and see exactly where we stand. When, the other day, the hon. member for South Oxford opened the debate on this side, he stated, and stated truly, that great and unusual this year had been the exception with which the Budget speech had been awaited, but that greater still had been the disappointment which followed. It would be a misnomer, however, to call the speech with which the Minister of Finance moved the House into Committee of Ways and Means, the Budget speech. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, will agree with me that it had none of the characteristics, none of the essentials of what we understand by a Budget speech. There was nothing in it of the financial condition of the country; there was nothing of the proposed expenditure for the coming year, and there was certainly no estimate whatever of the probable revenue. It was not a Budget speech, but a special plea. It was a carefully prepared apology for the National Policy, and when the hon. gentleman concluded by stating, that apart from two small modifications, no change would take place in the tariff, but that the people would have one year more to drink at the cup of the National Policy and taste to the dregs of its blessings, great was the disappointment, not only throughout the land, but even on the faces of some of the hon. gentlemen opposite, who had begged and prayed the hon. gentleman that this cup might pass away from them. Indeed, so great, so loud and so persistent had been the demand for reform of the tariff, not only from all parts of the country, but even from the ranks of hon. gentlemen on the other side, that my hon. friend was forced to notice it, but he noticed it simply to say that he could not accede to it. He promised, however, that he would do so some time, perhaps next year—but he was not sure—but in the meantime he would cogitate, he would ponder, he would consider, he would inquire, and his inquiring, his considering, his pondering, might perhaps take shape in some definite form of action, at some indefinite time. In the meantime, the yoke of taxation is to remain as heavy as it was upon the shoulders of the people; in the meantime, the blessings of the National Policy are to weigh upon the people. What else was to be expected from the hon. gentleman? What else is to be expected from him in the future? Why, Sir, three-fourths of the speech of the hon. gentleman was devoted to the arduous task of convincing the people that they are prosperous. Rachel of old would not be consoled because her children were no more; and the people cannot be convinced because that prosperity, of which they hear so much, is not there. As to my hon. friend, I do not doubt his sincerity whatever. I am quite sure he believes the people are prosperous. I am quite sure that, by dint of repeating and again repeating that the people are prosperous, he has become the victim of his own preaching and has convinced himself of what he has failed to convince others, and if he is really sincere, as no doubt he is, in thinking that the people are prosperous, why should he make any change? It would be madness and folly for him to change a state of things which has brought about this prosperous condition of the people in which his own imagination delights. When hon. gentlemen opposite talk of prosperity, they argue much as James the Second did. According to Macaulay, you remember, James the Second commenced by asserting a proposition, and as often as wiser men showed him that it was erroneous, he asserted it again, conceiving that thereby he had dispelled all objections. It is very much the same with hon. gentlemen. They assume that the country is prosperous, and as often as wiser men endeavour to show them that their position is erroneous, they simply repeat that the country is prosperous. The fact that so many thousands of Canadians every year turn their backs on that prosperity gives them no concern whatever. They ignore the fact, or, if driven to the wall and forced to deal with it, they have the most ingenious theories to explain it away. On a former occasion, the Minister of Finance accounted for the exodus from this country by saying that there was a great movement of population from the east to the west. According to this theory, there must be, somewhere in the west, a centre of gravitation towards which the people of the east are fatally attracted. I will not discuss that theory. The ancients believed that on the Mediterranean Sea ships were fatally attracted to the whirlpool of Charybdis or the rocks of Scylla. But the ancients did not know what we know, that there was such a thing as gravitation. Perhaps, after all, my hon. friend is another Sir Isaac Newton and has discovered some hidden law of nature. Gravitation is a thing which not only applies universally but there are many modifications of it. We know, for instance, that the waters of the ocean are attracted by powerful currents towards certain centres. In certain countries at certain periods of the year the wind blows in certain directions. And so perhaps, after all, there may be in the west a centre of gravitation which attracts the people from the east and unconsciously impels them to abandon their comfortable homes and all the wealth piled around them by the National Policy. Well, Sir, if we really have to battle against some unknown force of nature, in all conscience, in all justice, the National Policy must be held free from blame. If there is in the west some new centre of gravitation which attracts people from the east, it is all in vain that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and ministerial orators and newspapers vie with each other to paint the enchantments of the National Policy; people will go away from their homes, perhaps to have their fortunes shattered, as in the days of old ships were shattered on the rocks of Scylla. But my hon. friend, since he has given attention to that theory, must have observed that it does not apply uniformly upon this continent. It may be that south of the forty-fifth parallel the attraction is from east to west, but, Sir, this does not apply north of that line. North of the forty-fifth parallel, attraction is not from east to west, but from north to south. If the attraction was from east to west, we should have a displacement of population, but no loss, but actually we have a loss of about 1,000,000 people, who are attracted, not from east to west, but from north to south. And the hon. gentleman may have observed that his law of gravitation does not apply to all classes of the population; that one class is exempt from it—the recipients of ministerial favours, those who directly or indirectly live upon the public treasury. But those who work hard for a living, the tillers of the soil especially, upon those it is that this attraction acts. Consideration of these facts must convince my hon. friend that his theory is too fantastic for an assembly composed of men of average common sense. The hon. gentleman must admit, that if there is a movement of population, it is not due to some mysterious agency, but to the well-known law, exemplified in all ages, that when people are oppressed by the conditions under which they live, they will seek relief in emigration, whenever they can emigrate. It is an appalling condition of things when a young country like Canada, which could afford food and shelter for 100,000,000 of men, cannot keep its paltry population of 5,000,000. It is an appalling condition of things, but we are told by gentlemen opposite that there is an offset to this, and we are asked to look at the wonderful development of our manufacturing industries under the National Policy. Well, Sir, here we become the prey of the statisticians of Canada. And the statisticians of Canada are a body of most positive men. For them there is nothing doubtful; they undertake to solve every problem that comes in their way. LaBiche, in one of his most amusing comedies, introduces a statistician, who is an enthusiast in his science, but who at least does not pretend to solve every problem with unimpeachable accuracy. He undertakes to calculate the number of widows who on a certain day cross the Pont Neuf. He very nearly reached perfection, yet not quite absolutely. He calculated that on the day in question the number of widows who passed over the bridge was—if I remember the figures—something like 967, and one doubtful. As to this one, he would not be precise in declaring whether she was a widow or not. He confessed his honest doubt. Our statisticians have no such doubts whatever. They have undertaken to calculate to the last cent what is the capital invested in our manufacturing industries, and according to their calculations the amount so invested is $183,532,827, an increase, as they say, within the last ten years, of $92,664,127. Now, the object of this, the impression sought to be conveyed by these figures, is that the national wealth of Canada is increased by $92,000,000, a very large figure, I admit. But the statisticians of Canada have not told us what proportion of water there is in these stocks, nor have they told us what amount of money was really sunk in these investments. For it is a matter of notoriety that a very large proportion of the money which has been invested in manufacturing industries under the National Policy, has been absolutely sunk and lost. But the impression they seek to convey is, that the national wealth of Canada is greater than it was ten years ago by $92,000,000, invested in the manufactures in this country. Sir, for my part, I have very great hesitation in accepting these figures. As we have seen, the Government refuse to give us the particulars of these census returns; every one has a right to feel doubtful as to whether we have been told the exact truth. But, Sir, even if we have the exact truth here, even if the national wealth is increased by $92,000,000, invested in the manufacturing industries of Canada, I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that the amount lost by the farmers in the depreciation of land far exceeds that amount. It cannot be disputed, Sir, that within the last ten years every farm in Canada has lost in value at least 25 per cent of its former value, perhaps 30 per cent, perhaps 40 per cent. This fact cannot be successfully disputed. Now, Sir, there are in Canada to-day 600,000 men engaged in agricultural pursuits. There are on this side of Lake Superior, at least, 500,000 farms. Now, in Ontario, as far as I have been able to read the statistics of that province, the average value of farms is $2,500. If the average value of these 500,000 farms is placed at $2,000, and if there is a depreciation of, at least, 25 per cent, we have an actual cost to the farmers of Canada of not less than $125,000,000, by which amount these men are poorer than they were ten years ago. Now, Sir, no one can dispute that that is an actual loss. My friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) the other day addressed himself to this view of the question and stated that the loss was not felt, after all, because very few farmers wanted to sell, and it is only the farmer who wishes to sell his farm that feels this loss. But if there is a depression in the price of land, if the loss on the price of farms is at least 25 per cent, as compared with ten years ago, what is the cause? There must be a cause for it. Sir, the cause of the farm decreasing in value is that the profits of the farm have decreased in amount. The capital of the farmer is not invested in bank stocks or railway securities, or other securities, but it is invested in his farm, in his land, and that capital is increased or decreased in value as the profits of the farm increase or decrease. Therefore, when, to-day, we find that the farms all around have decreased in value, we have also the fact that the farmers of Canada have been falling behind in the amount of their wealth. I know what will be the answer to this. I shall be told that this decrease in the value of farms is not to be attributed to the National Policy. I shall be told that it is not due to the National Policy, because the statement has already been made that there is a similar depreciation in the value of farm lands in the United States. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, a few days ago, laboured hard to prove that farms in the United States had depreciated in value as much as they have in Canada, that the farmers of the eastern states, instead of going forward, had actually retrograded. Sir, my hon. friend might have spared himself the labour of proving that statement, because I admit it. I admit fully that farmers in the United States are in the same condition as the farmers of Canada, and that their farms have depreciated in value like the farms of Canada; and I say to my hon. friend that, in making that statement, he has made the most powerful arraignment that ever was made of the National Policy. By that statement the National Policy stands condemned by its own friends, because it is an admission that the same cause has produced the same result in both countries. Sir, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite: What is the National Policy? Is it anything else but a servile copy of the American tariff of protection? What was the cry upon which they went to the country in 1878? Was it not reciprocity of trade, or reciprocity of tariff? For fear that hon. gentlemen may have forgotten their own history, I will refresh their memory by a sentence extracted from the speech of Sir John A. Macdonald, delivered in Hamilton, in 1878:

Mr. LAURIER.

I want the Canadians to say to the Americans: We will have free trade, fair trade, reciprocal trade, if you like; but if you will not have reciprocity in trade, we will not have reciprocity in tariff. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

This sentence of Sir John A. Macdonald was repeated by him in all his speeches, and echoed by all his followers in the press and throughout the country. Upon that cry they won, and, after they had won, as they could not obtain reciprocity, well, they adopted the American tariff. They proceeded after the manner of Chinese duellists. You know in China they have a peculiar code of honour. If a man receives an insult, he sends a challenge to the insulter, which is invariably accepted. But the parties do not meet on the ground. The insulted party disembowels himself with his own sword, and the insulter also plunges his own sword into his bowels; and so the injury is avenged by the death both of the insulted party and of the insulter. So did hon. gentlemen opposite; when they found they could not obtain reciprocity of trade, they adopted reciprocity of tariffs, that is to say, they punished the Americans by adopting their own tariff. At that time the Americans had the war tariff. They were taxing their people mercilessly, and our Government proceeded to adopt their tariff and tax our own people mercilessly likewise. The Americans were plucking the American goose, and our Government proceeded to pluck the Canadian gander. The American tariff was ruining American agriculture, and ever since the Canadian tariff has been ruining Canadian agriculture. Sir, it is well known to-day that agriculture is in a transient condition. The opening of new wheat fields in diverse parts of the world, the increased facilities for transport have revolutionized the price of cereals. You remember that when the National Policy was adopted in 1878 the price of wheat in Canada, on the average, was $1 a bushel. The purpose of the National Policy, avowed, maintained, reiterated, was to raise the price of wheat to $1.50. It is now 60 cents a bushel. It is at this time, when agriculture is less able to bear the burdens than ever, that the agriculturalist is loaded and overloaded by the policy of the Government. At this very moment when from causes over which, I admit, legislation has no control, the Government steps in and, by legislation, places upon the Canadian farmer an intolerable burden of taxation. Everything that he has in his house, in his barn, in his field, is subject to an innumerable list of taxation, and so, at this moment, when, from causes over which legislation has no control, the revenue of the farmer is decreasing, the Government steps in and increases his expenditure. The result is that at this moment agriculture is more than ever deserted as an occupation ; and the further result is, that, to-day, apart from the new wheat fields, land is a drug in the market, and cannot find a purchaser. I have heard the question discussed in this House as to which of the two, the Canadian farmer or the American farmer, was in a better condition. Sir, I look upon this discussion as absolutely useless. The American farmer and the Canadian farmer have been treated in the same way, and the result has been the same ; save, perhaps, that the American farmer, having a much wider market, does not suffer so much. If you desire to know what is the fate of the American farmer, I cannot do better than quote to the House an article from the Chicago "Herald," published last summer during the presidential campaign. I select it from a series of most admirable articles which have since been published in pamphlet form. The editor says :

Thirty years of protective tariff taxation have reduced American agriculture to a position so ignoble that in some places it does not even retain its self-respect. A generation ago the American farmer was the proudest and most independent workingman on the earth. To-day he cannot persuade his own son to remain on the farm.

Very like Canada. The editor goes on to say :

It was the prosperity and independence of the American farmer that first excited the cupidity of protectionists. They wanted to rob him and they invented an excuse. They told him that he needed a home market, and that they would give it to him in return for the privilege of taxing him. When the home market swindle was exposed they beguiled him with the idea that they could and would share their protective tariff plunder with him, and, while going through the mockery of putting a tariff tax on foreign agricultural products, they took occasion to increase their own share of the plunder. The one was a pretence. The other was real and tangible. The home market confidence game has been laid bare in Pennsylvania and New England, the seats of the great tariff monopolies, where fine farms, once the homes of several generations of Americans, are now abandoned and cannot be sold for even the value of the buildings.

More and more like Canada. The editor goes on to say :

The protective tariff is a tax upon consumption. It rests upon nearly everything that the farmer uses or wears. It is on the lumber of his house, on the glass in his windows, on the implements with which he makes his crops, on his dishes, tinware, furniture and carpets, his cutlery and lamps, his clothing, his blankets and his harness. It enhances the price of nearly everything that he buys. It does not add a farthing to the value of anything that he has to sell.

Apart from the tax on lumber, it is absolutely like Canada. Sir, is it to be wondered at that in the year just elapsed, during the last presidential elections, the American farmers made a supreme effort to free themselves from the grasp of the octopus which, for so many years, has had them fast in its arms and has been feeding on the best of their blood. The American farmers joined all other classes, outside of the protected manufacturers, in a crusade against the voracious monster. Now, we were told a few days ago by an hon. gentleman sitting on the other side of the House, that land has also depreciated in value in England. So it has ; but, Sir, the condition of land in England is not to be compared with the condition of land in America. Land in England has always been held as a monopoly by a privileged class. For centuries and centuries a privileged class had legislation in its own hands. It is only a few years since the advance of democratic ideas has displaced the source of power in England, and now it rests in the hands of the whole nation. And so long as that privileged class had it in its power to legislate, they did the best they could to enhance the value of their monopoly. What was the object of the corn laws ? Their object was simply to increase the price of land to the land-owners, and the chief reason which was advanced against the abolition of those laws was this, that it would decrease the price of land and lower the standard of the aristocracy. Undoubtedly of all men who defended the corn laws, the ablest was Lord Stanley, and, in the very last debate which took place in the House of Lords, when speaking of the rack-renting landlords of England and Ireland, he used this very significant language :

My Lords, these are the true aristocracy of the country. If you reduce these men in the scale of society, you will inflict an irretrievable and irreparable injury upon the country.

Lord Stanley was right, undoubtedly, if an aristocracy is indispensable to a nation. But such views we do not hold on this continent. On this continent we hold that all men are free and equal before the law, and that there should be no privileged class ; but the idea which underlies the language of Lord Stanley was, according to his view, true. Freedom of trade would endanger the fate of the aristocracy. At the time of the discussion of the corn laws the rental of land was $12 per acre ; but the price of rental has been reduced until, after forty years of free trade, it is $6 or thereabouts ; and this condition of things will go on. The price of land will continue to decline until it has reached its normal standard, just as in this country and in the United States, if we had freedom of trade, the price of land would increase to its normal standard, because in land as in everything else there is a normal standard which can be moved up or down by artificial causes for the benefit of a privileged class ; but so soon as these obstacles are removed the price will reach its normal standard, its own level, and its level is and always must be based on the relative profit that can be obtained by those who till the soil, and that is the only standard. I may remind the House of this, that when the National Policy was introduced in Parliament a mighty attempt was made to capture the farmers. It was represented to the farmers that they would be greatly benefitted if such a policy were adopted. Of course the National Policy must increase the taxation of the farmers; but it was represented to them that they must submit to the increased taxation, because the higher duties would be the means of establishing in this country manufacturing industries which would afford a home market and increase prices for their products. Let me quote here a speech delivered by Sir John A. Macdonald, which was the text-book at that time of his party. Addressing a meeting of farmers at Bury, he said:

I tell the manufacturer unless he gives protection to the farmer, the farmer will not give protection to him. I say the same thing to the farmer. You must not grumble, if perhaps you have to pay a few cents more for anything we can produce in this country. You must not be hungering for strange markets to get goods at bankrupt, sacrifice prices. No; you must encourage manufactures at our own doors. Who are those artisans and skilled labourers to whom you must pay perhaps a few cents more for the produce of their lands? They are your brothers and sons, bone of your bone, flesh of your flesh, and in return for your giving only, perhaps, the real value to these men of their products, you have at home—at the next village—your reward, because you have purchasers for everything you can raise, not only for the larger crops, but for the egg that the hen drops, and the hen herself, God bless her.

How false this language sounds in view of actual facts? Where is the home market to-day? Where is the nearest village to which the farmer can take his eggs? Whether he takes his eggs to the nearest village or the nearest city he will be glad to get 10 cents a dozen for them, and he will not always be sure of getting that. The home market is a delusion which has long vanished into thin air; but what is not a delusion is the hard fact that remains to the farmer to-day, that though he has not a home market, though he cannot take his eggs to the next village, yet he has to pay a heavy tax on everything he buys; a tax upon his clothing, a tax on his cottons, a tax on his woollens, a tax on the iron he uses, a tax upon the sugar he eats, for though the farmer and the consumer no longer pays a tax into the treasury on sugar he still continues to pay a tax for the benefit of the sugar refineries of Canada. But I will undoubtedly be told: Granted that the National Policy has not benefited the farmers, surely you will not deny that it has developed several industries. I am free to admit that the National Policy has developed a few industries into monopolies, into suckers which extort inordinate profits from the people of Canada; but I question very much whether the National Policy has benefited the great body of manufacturers, the smaller manufacturers and those who have invested a small amount of capital in their own business, because it is obvious that the moment an article is taxed for the benefit of one special manufacturer that manufacturer is of course protected and benefited; but while one manufacturer may be so protected and benefited, two, five or ten manufacturers may be hampered by the tariff, because the articles produced by that one manufacturer may be the raw material of the two, five or ten others who have to use it and are hampered thereby. Take the iron duties. Everybody remembers the great flourish of trumpets with which Sir Charles Tupper introduced his policy with respect to pig iron, in 1887. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) a few days ago alluded to this subject, and I need not go over the same ground; but let me simply remark this: that at the time Sir Charles Tupper introduced his policy respecting pig iron, it was already protected by a duty of $2 per ton and a bounty of $1.50, and by his policy the bounty was increased after three years to $2, and the duty was increased from that moment to $4 per ton. So at that time we gave the producer in pig iron a bounty of $2 per ton and a duty of $4, and Sir Charles Tupper used—I believe my hon. friend quoted his language, but I will quote it again because these facts are instructive—these words:

Now, Sir, the result is that by the adoption of this policy you will give permanent employment to an army of men numbering at least 20,000, increasing our population from 80,000 to 100,000 souls, and affording the means of supporting them in comfort and prosperity. I say, Sir, that if there is anything in the National Policy, if we have not been all wrong from the very start, if the history of Canada shows that this National Policy has achieved for Canada what we said it would achieve,—and I have given the most abundant and irrefragable evidence on that point,—if there is any question on which there ought not to be any doubt in the mind of any hon. gentleman, it is that the application of the same sound policy which we have found so admirable and successful in relation to all other industries, will have the same result in regard to the great iron industry of this country.

Well, Sir, this language is simply ludicrous in the face of what followed afterwards—ludicrous is the word. I show to what extent a man of ability can go when he undertakes to talk protection, as Sir Charles Tupper undertook to talk it at that moment. Although the people of Canada have been saddled with enormous duties the result has been that the production of pig iron instead of increasing has decreased all along, and the result has been that, though we have not reaped any benefit such as Sir Charles Tupper promised, yet at the same time all the manufacturers who use iron, and they are legion in this country, have been hampered, and seriously hampered, by these duties, and if the Minister of Finance were to bring down to the House the petitions and memorials which I understand the Government have received against the duties on pig iron, they would open the eyes of hon. members of this House, for I have it on good authority that for a long time petitions have been sent in begging the Minister of Finance to remove the duties that have done no good to anybody, but have seriously hampered the iron trade. Well, Sir, what is at present the condition of the country? This question can be looked upon from two different stand-points—from the stand-point of the Government, and from the stand-point of the people. The Government tell us that the country is prospering, but what do the people say? What is their opinion and what is their action? The people, Sir, one portion of them fly from that prosperity, and those who remain in the country are begging and petitioning the Government to free them from the National Policy. What is the conclusion to be derived from this state of things? The conclusion is: that taxation by whatever name you call it, taxation however you may disguise it, taxation is an evil which never can produce prosperity. It is an evil, and no good can come from evil. Taxation by whatever name you call it, whether disguised or undisguised, is always an abridgment of the rights of the citizen. It is a toll levied upon his earnings and upon his property. I know very well that taxation by Customs can be so arranged as to divert the proceeds from the public treasury and put it into the pockets of a few favoured individuals, and can therefore have a semblance of prosperity; but, Sir, that prosperity for the few, is always at the expense of the many. Freedom is the normal condition of trade, and freedom is the goal to which we are aspiring. That is the policy of this side of the House. I know very well, Sir, that we cannot for many years have freedom of trade, such as they have in England. I know that for many years we must raise our revenue by Customs duties, but I tell the Finance Minister, that the difference between him and us, is this: That whereas he forms his tariff for protection, and with revenue as merely an incident; we will frame our tariff, not for protection, but for revenue, and we will impede and interfere with freedom of trade only in so far as is absolutely necessary for the purposes of a revenue, and for nothing else. Sir, I stated on another occasion, and in another place, that during the last election in the United States, the people of that country had most emphatically decided for the principle of free trade. My hon. friend the Finance Minister, in opening this debate, challenged this statement, and not only challenged the statement, but actually denied it. He is strong at denying, I admit, but if he denies that the American people, at the last presidential election, practically decided in favour of freedom of trade, I am prepared to hear that the hon. gentleman will deny everything, that he will deny that there are twelve months in the year, that he will deny that the sun rises in the east and moves towards the west, or that he will deny that there is such a thing as an exodus. But, as the hon. gentleman is of a skeptic nature, I will endeavour to give him proof which ought to be sufficient in itself. I will quote to him from the platform adopted by the Democratic party at its last convention in Chicago. Here is how it reads:

We denounce Republican protection as a fraud, a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few. We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only, and demand that the collection of such duties shall be limited to the necessities of the Government and honestly and economically administered.

Sir, denouncing protection has always seemed to me as promoting free trade. Does the hon. gentleman believe the reverse, or does he think differently? Well, if he does, let us go a step further. The hon. gentleman is aware that during the last election the question which was fought upon every hustings in the United States, the question which was discussed in every newspaper, was the merit of protection, on the one side, and the merit of free trade on the other. Is this not sufficient to convince my hon. friend?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. LAURIER. Then, this is not sufficient, let us go a little further. The hon. gentleman is perhaps aware—I am sure he heard it, but if he heard it perhaps he will choose to forget—the hon. gentleman is perhaps aware that during last session of Congress the Democratic party in the House of Representatives organized a scheme whereby they circulated as their own literature, the whole of Henry George's book, "Protection or Free Trade," and there never was a stronger plea written in favour of free trade than that book contains. When the Democratic party in the House of Representatives went so far as to organize a scheme to circulate a whole book written in favour of free trade, will the hon. gentleman, in view of all that evidence, still believe that the issue which was fought at the polls during the last election was not an issue between freedom of trade and protection? If the hon. gentleman still denies that, I am prepared to believe, as I said a moment ago, that he will deny anything whatever. But, Sir, I know very well that, though the principle of free trade has triumphed in the United States—and perhaps this is the little stratagem which the hon. gentleman wants to employ upon this occasion, perhaps this is the refuge he wants to take for himself—I know very well, as well as the hon. gentleman knows, that, although the principle of free trade has been adopted in the United States, that freedom of trade will not be applied in the tariff this year, or next year, or the year after. I know that for a great many years to come, the American people will continue to levy their revenue by a Customs tariff, but I say this to the hon. gentleman: That henceforward, not only as long as the Democratic party are in power, (but I believe, also, that whenever the Republican party comes back to power), that no more shall revenue be levied for the purpose of protection, but that it shall be levied only for the purposes of a revenue, and for nothing else; because, as I have said to the hon.

gentleman, the tariff of protection has been denounced by the American people as a fraud and a robbery. Sir, I have stated, and I repeat it here, that our tariff is simply an imitation of the American tariff, and, as the American tariff was denounced, so now I denounce the Canadian tariff as a fraud. I denounce it as a robbery of the great majority of the Canadian people for the benefit of the few. I denounce it in the name of the thousands whom it has impoverished. I denounce it in the name of the thousands whom it has sent into exile, and I denounce it in the name of a long-suffering nation. Talk, Sir, of reforming the tariff! Gentlemen on the other side of the House expect that my hon. friend the Finance Minister will reform the tariff. Why, Sir, the Finance Minister cannot do it, because he will never dare to extirpate from it the vicious principle which is the bane and evil of it. I know what he will do. He will tinker his tariff; he will patch it; he will polish the surface of it so as to give it the appearance of reform, but as to any measure of reform in the tariff, it will, and must be as hollow as the fruit of the Dead Sea. Mr. Speaker, I come now to an objection which I have not heard in this House, but which is commencing to be circulated in the Government press. I have seen it stated in the ministerial press, not only in one paper, but in several, that the Liberals cannot be sincere in their policy of tariff reform. It is stated that they cannot be sincere when they profess to be in favour of alleviating the burdens which press upon the majority of the people, because, forsooth, only a few months ago, they wanted to assimilate the Canadian tariff to the American tariff, under the guise of unrestricted reciprocity. I denounce this statement as an absolute falsehood, and I defy any man, either in this House or out of it, to quote an expression from any Liberal that he ever attempted or wanted to assimilate the Canadian tariff to the American tariff. Nay, more, Sir, I defy any gentleman, in this House or out of it, to prove that the American authorities ever wanted to assimilate the Canadian tariff to the American tariff, as the price of unrestricted reciprocity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LAURIER. Who says "no." Is there any man in this House who will challenge my statement? Ministers have asserted it, I know, but let them bring the evidence. Let them bring the correspondence which they have in their own possession. If Ministers here made that statement, Ministers on the other side have said the very reverse; and since the correspondence has not been brought down, I for my part refuse to believe the statement. Talk, Sir, of assimilating the Canadian tariff to the American tariff. It would be very shocking, of course, to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who have not hesitated to bring the whole body of the

Mr. LAURIER.

American tariff into our Statute-book—it would be very shocking to them if the Liberal party were now to assimilate the Canadian tariff to the American tariff in the few points in which there is still a discrepancy. They themselves can do it, and do it under the cloak of loyalty. Loyalty, Sir, is a cloak under which we know many things can be hidden, which, if viewed under the full light of day, would be odious and repellant; and this is, perhaps, the reason hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are always so fond of parading in that garment. But I say, Sir, without the least hesitation, that uniformity of tariffs is not at all essential to reciprocity. Of course, I fully admit that if there were between the American tariff and the Canadian tariff a great divergence in regard to some articles, reciprocity in those articles would be almost impossible. There are two reasons for that. The first is that if there were a great difference between the two tariffs in regard to some article, a similar article would be imported from abroad into the country having the lower tariff, with the view of smuggling it into the country with the higher tariff. There is another reason which I will state, and which will commend itself to hon. gentlemen opposite. If there were a great discrepancy between the tariffs in one article, the manufacturer in the country with the lower tariff would have a great advantage over the manufacturer in the country with the higher tariff. But let me say that we have always been in favour of reciprocity. No one would suppose, because we were in favour of unrestricted reciprocity, that if we could not obtain that we should not take anything else. Again and again we have said that if we could not obtain reciprocity along the whole line, unrestricted, unlimited, we should be willing to take reciprocity in natural products, or in natural products with manufactured articles included. But when we adopted the policy of unrestricted reciprocity in 1888, the tendency of the American tariff was a downward tendency. There were many indications of that. The first was the Message of President Cleveland, addressed to Congress in the fall of 1887, in which he had directly attacked the system of protection.

Mr. SPROULE. The McKinley Bill showed it more.

Mr. LAURIER. I will come to that. It is true, shortly afterwards a wave of protection passed over the United States, which resulted in the McKinley Bill; but the McKinley Bill was the last spasmodic effort of a system which was about to fall to pieces and which exists no more. The hon. gentleman knows that the McKinley Bill has been condemned in emphatic terms by the American people in the last election, and he knows that it will be repealed at the next session of Congress. He knows that the party now in power are not only in favour of free trade as a general principle, but in particular are in favour of reciprocity with Canada. Now, Sir, of all the speeches I have listened to during this debate, there was one to which I listened with peculiar pleasure. That was the speech of the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Craig). It was almost a Liberal speech. It is true, it was still tainted with some Conservative heresy, but on the whole it was a very good speech; and when I listened to the hon. gentleman speaking as he did, it seemed to me that he was very much in the position of King Agrippa for the preaching of St. Paul, when he exclaimed: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." I presume that the hon. gentleman is almost a Christian—I mean Liberal; he is trying to lift his party up to a higher sphere; he is in favour of tariff reform; he is even in favour of reciprocity; and he said—I marked the sentence—that he hoped that the Government were also in favour of reciprocity. He hoped it; he was not sure; neither am I. I think they are not; but if they are, then they have an opportunity of getting reciprocity. They can have it. I stated a moment ago that the Democratic party were in favour of reciprocity with Canada. I have the proof in my hand, and I will give it to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman is aware that one of the most important members of the Democratic party to-day in the United States is Mr. Campbell, the ex-governor of Ohio. In the month of December last Mr. Campbell delivered a speech on Staten Island, in which he referred to this very question of reciprocity with Canada. First of all, he referred to the policy of reciprocity put forward by the Republican party in the clause of the McKinley Bill, containing a standing offer of reciprocity to the tropical and semi-tropical countries of South America. Then Mr. Campbell spoke as follows:—

Reciprocity—the kind of reciprocity that that distinguished gentleman, Erastus Wiman, advocates, is something. That kind of reciprocity actually means something, because that means that you shall take the produce of Staten Island whether they be of the farm or of the workshop, and take them to some great country with which you have a large trade, like the provinces north of us, the Dominion of Canada, and exchange them freely for all the products of that country with equal freedom. If you had reciprocity, actual reciprocity with the nations of the world, what would you have?

A voice—"Free Trade."

A gentleman says "Free Trade," Why, it is no use for me to come all the way from Ohio to tell you anything about the situation as to reciprocity. There you have it in two words. If you had reciprocity it would simply mean that you could go down to the harbour of New York with anything you have, lay it on any vessel there and send it to any part of the earth and trade it for anything you wanted and bring those goods back and sell them whenever you pleased.

I sometimes give a definition of reciprocity which is a bit humorous, but which fits the case exactly. It is this: Maude and Claude are a couple of young people. There has been a great deal in the newspapers about reciprocity, and Maude is like most women. She has not bothered much about politics.

She had to get several new dresses this autumn and has been pretty busy generally, and she says: "Claude, I have been reading about reciprocity. Now, what is reciprocity?"

"Why," he says. "Don't you know? Now, if I kiss you and you kiss me back, that's reciprocity." To which she retorted that she always supposed it was something nice.

I am in favour of that kind of reciprocity between us and the country we trade with. If we are going to kiss them, we want to be kissed back a little in return, and when we pick out the girls we are going to kiss, instead of picking out the black ones of south America, I would pick out the white ones of Canada and Europe.

It's a matter of taste, and I believe that the Democrats would just as soon that it would be white.

Now, if my hon. friend will only persuade the hon. Minister of Finance to go back to Washington and offer his cheek for a chaste osculation, the thing will be done at once. But, Sir, it may be said to me: What is the use of having reciprocity, even in natural products, if the condition of the farmers in the United States is worse than the condition of our own farmers? I am sure that I need not give an answer to this question to my hon. friend from East Durham, because he is in favour of reciprocity; neither need I give it to my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Gillies), because he is in favour of reciprocity. But there may be some other gentlemen on the other side of the House who are of the opinion of a former President of the Council, Mr. Colby, who was against reciprocity even in natural products. The advantage we should have in reciprocity, even in natural products, would be this, that protection is one and the same thing on both sides of the line; and if we had free trade only in natural products, the condition of the farmers on one side and the condition of the farmers on the other would be benefited to that extent. But I know that besides the hon. member for East Durham and the hon. member for Richmond, there are many hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are in favour of reciprocity; and if so, I am at a loss to understand the reason why they have always greeted the efforts of the Liberal party for reciprocity with such torrents of abuse. They have stated, again and again, that unrestricted reciprocity would lead to annexation. My hon. friend from Iberville (Mr. Béchard), alluded to that this evening, and I can allude to it again. For my part, I never understood how unrestricted reciprocity would lead to annexation. Will any one tell me how it will? Will any one tell me how it is, that if the Canadian people were to have reciprocity with the United States, restricted or unrestricted, annexation would follow? If we had a commercial treaty with the States, whether restricted or unrestricted, the institutions of our country would continue just the same as they are to-day; the country would continue to be governed under the same British parliamentary system as it is to-day. Every man entitled to it would have a vote as he has to-day. Therefore, how can it be said that unrestricted reciprocity would lead to annexation? Is it to be supposed that if the Canadian people were to come in contact with the American people, our loyalty would fade away? Do hon. gentlemen opposite suppose that, even if we had closer trade relations with the Americans, the loyalty of the Canadian people would vanish into thin air? If hon. gentlemen opposite hold any such opinion, I hold that the much vaunted loyalty of the Conservative party is hollow and unreal, and is brought forward only to do service for party purposes and for nothing else. I have heard it stated many a time by hon. gentlemen on the other side, and in the press, that they find an argument for their contention in the letter of the Hon. Mr. Blake. Mr. Blake gave it as his opinion, and we hear it quoted from time to time on the floor of this House, that unrestricted reciprocity would lead to annexation. I discuss this question fairly, and I will quote the words of Mr. Blake:

The tendency in Canada of unrestricted free trade with the States, higher duties being maintained against the United Kingdom, would be towards political union.

But I ask hon. gentlemen on the other side, whether Mr. Blake did not, upon that occasion, confine himself simply to reciprocity? Did he not also give his opinion as to the National Policy?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LAURIER. Does any one deny it? I am surprised at the power of denial of some hon. gentlemen on the other side. I am surprised that there are gentlemen on the other side who will deny that Mr. Blake said also that the tendency of the National Policy was direct to annexation. Allow me to quote his words again:

The Canadian Conservative party has failed to accomplish the prediction of its promoters. Its real tendency has been, as foretold twelve years ago, towards disintegration and annexation, instead of consolidation and the maintenance of that British connection of which they claim to be the special guardians.

This is the language of Mr. Blake. Two years afterwards, we hear hon. gentlemen on the other side deny that Mr. Blake gave it as his opinion that the National Policy directly led to annexation. If you are, on the other side, against unrestricted reciprocity, because Mr. Blake said that it would lead to annexation, how is it that you still retain the National Policy, which, in the opinion of Mr. Blake, is bound to produce the very same result? Destroy the National Policy at once, put it away at once, because every moment, every day you keep it on the Statute-book, is another step taken towards annexation. There is, however, a more serious objection than this to unrestricted reciprocity. This objection of annexation I do not treat seriously. I do not affect to treat it seriously, I dismiss it altogether; but I say, without any hesitation, that there is more serious objection to unrestricted reciprocity, and that is the discrimination against England. This is an objection, which, for my part, I have always treated with respect. I respect the feeling of gentlemen on the other side, who from motive, which I will not discuss, would hesitate to discriminate against England; but I tell hon. gentlemen opposite that when they take up that question of discrimination against England, they are raising against reciprocity an objection which England long ago abandoned. My hon. friend beside me from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) proved the other day most conclusively, that in the Brown treaty England had abandoned that objection in the most formal manner. It is true that his statement was denied by gentlemen on the other side. It is true that they pretended to prove, by the language of Mr. Brown, that England had never abandoned its objection to discrimination. Well, that is a question we can discuss again. I grant that when Mr. Brown went to Washington, as plenipotentiary of the Canadian Government, to discuss reciprocity, he had it in his mind not to discriminate against England, and he kept that in his mind, not only at the outset, but throughout the whole negotiation. I will quote from his speech, delivered in the Senate in 1875:

I come now, hon. gentlemen, to the objections which have been urged against the treaty from such quarters as entitle them to formal answer. The first of these is the allegation that the treaty discriminated against Great Britain in favour of the United States. Nothing could be more unfounded than this. It was perfectly understood from the opening of the negotiations, that no article could be free from duty in regard to the United States that was not also open with regard to Great Britain, and nothing else was ever contemplated for a moment.

I am not surprised at this, and no one will be surprised at it, when I refer to the first proposal made by Mr. Brown and Sir Edward Thornton, his co-plenipotentiary, to the American commissioners. It was this:

In regard to the addition of certain classes of manufactures—said the British commissioner—to the free list under the old treaty, we reminded Mr. Fish, that the revenue of the Canadian Dominion was largely obtained from a 15 per cent ad valorem duty on manufactured goods, and that any articles made free in Canada under agreement with any foreign country must be made free to Great Britain.

Now, at the same time the English plenipotentiary gave a list to the American commissioners of the articles which they proposed should be included in the treaty. They were as follows:—

- Agricultural implements, to be defined.
- Extracts of bark for tanning purposes.
- Bath bricks; bricks for building purposes.
- Earth ochres, ground or unground.
- Hay; lime; malt.
- Manufactures of iron and steel, to be defined.
- Manufactures of iron or steel and wood jointly, to be defined.
- Manufactures of wood, to be defined.

Mineral and other oil.
Plaster, raw or calcined.
Salt and straw.

Stone, marble or granite, partly or wholly cut or wrought.

Now it is to be remarked that, with the exception of iron and steel, all these other articles were such as we did not import from England, so that there could be no competition from England, and, therefore, no discrimination. The only articles as to which there might be discrimination were the articles of iron and steel, and as to these, they were to be defined. Undoubtedly the British commissioners had it in their mind to define those articles, so that there should be no discrimination against England. But these propositions were not admitted by the American commissioners. So another was made and the following list was finally decided upon. Now, I am calling attention to the list which was finally included in the treaty :

Agricultural implements, all kinds.
Axes of all kinds.
Boots and shoes of leather.
Boot and shoe making machines.
Buffalo robes, dressed and trimmed.
Cotton grain bags ; cotton denims.
Cotton jeans, complete.
Cotton drillings, unbleached.
Cotton plaids ; cotton tickings.
Cottonades, unbleached.
Cabinetware and furniture or parts thereof.
Carriages, carts, wagons and other wheeled vehicles and sleighs or parts thereof.
Fire engines or parts thereof.
Felt covering for boilers.
Gutta percha belting and tubing.
Iron, bar, hoop, pig, puddled, rod, sheet or scrap.
Iron nails, spikes, bolts, tacks, brads or springs.
Iron castings.
India rubber belting and tubing.
Locomotives for railways or parts thereof.
Lead, sheet or pig.
Leather, sole or upper.
Leather, harness and saddlery.
Mill or factory or steam-boat fixed engines and machines or parts thereof.
Manufactures of marble, stone, slate or granite.
Manufactures of wood solely, or of wood nailed, bound, hinged or locked with metal materials.
Mangles, washing machines, wringing machines and drying machines or parts thereof.
Printing papers for newspapers.
Paper-making machines or parts thereof.
Printing type, presses and folders, paper cutters, ruling machines.
Page-numbering machines and stereotyping and electrotyping apparatus or parts thereof.
Refrigerators or parts thereof.
Railroad cars, carriages and trucks or parts thereof.
Satinets of wool and cotton.
Steam engines or parts thereof.
Steel, wrought or cast, and steel plates and rails.
Tin tubes and piping.
Tweeds, of wool solely.
Water wheel machines and apparatus or parts thereof.

Now, it is to be remarked that, whereas the first list submitted to the British commissioners, Mr. Brown and Sir Edward Thornton, contained no article (with the exception of iron and steel, which was to be defined) which we imported from England, the latter list contains a large number of articles which we imported from England, such as cotton, iron, steel, woollen tweeds, &c. Now, Sir, after having read the statement of Mr. Brown, it seems that he had in his mind all the time that the Canadian Parliament would not discriminate against Great Britain in these articles, and that the same course would, undoubtedly, be followed in regard to the treaty of 1874, if it was passed and ratified as in the treaty of 1854, that is to say, all the articles in the treaty which we imported from England would be placed upon the free list when coming from Britain. But before the treaty was signed—when it was completed, but not signed—it was referred by the Canadian Government to Lord Derby, who referred it to the Board of Trade for its opinion upon the question of discrimination, and it is to this I refer the attention of the House. Let me first give the statement of Lord Derby :

Renewal of treaty of 1854 for twenty-one years, including the fisheries, with the addition of the free admission of salt, manufactures of wood, iron or steel articles, or of these jointly, agricultural implements and a few other trifling articles.

And here is the answer of the Board of Trade :

To this no objection can be taken, whatever criticism may have been made on the original reciprocity treaty, on the ground that Canada was setting up differential duties in favour of the United States, both against this country and countries with which we have most favoured nation treaties. No such objection can be taken now.

Now, Sir, that is the answer of the Board of Trade in 1874 : That if Canada entered into a treaty with the United States which included articles imported from England, there would be a discrimination against England, whereas in 1854 objections would have been taken, in 1874 the same objection would not have been taken. Why, Sir, England realized that Canada had progressed ; that Canada has interests distinct from England, and that Canada, having been given the power to govern itself, should be allowed to exercise that power in its entirety. And mark, Sir, the road that had been travelled from 1854 to 1874. In 1854 all the articles included in the treaty, and they were many, were placed upon the free list of Canada. The following are the articles included in the treaty of 1854 :—

Grain, flour and breadstuffs of all kinds.
Animals of all kinds.
Fresh, smoked and salted meats.
Cotton wool, seeds and vegetables.
Undried fruits, dried fruits.
Fish of all kinds.
Products of fish and of all other creatures living in the water.
Poultry, eggs.
Hides, furs, skins or tails undressed.
Stone or marble in its crude or unwrought state.
Slate.

Butter, cheese, tallow.
Lard, horns, manures.
Ores of metals of all kinds.
Coal.
Pitch, tar, turpentine, ashes.
Timber and lumber of all kinds, round hewed, sawed, unmanufactured in whole or in part.
Firewood.
Plants, shrubs, and trees.
Pelts, wool.
Fish oil.
Rice, broomcorn and bark.
Gypsum, ground or unground.
Hewn or wrought or unwrought burr or grindstones.
Dye stuffs.
Flax, hemp, and tow unmanufactured.
Unmanufactured tobacco.
Rags.

As soon as the treaty had been signed and completed and ratified by the Senate of the United States, and ratified by the Legislature of Canada, all these articles except one were placed upon the free list. That one article was dried fruits. Now, of all these articles which were placed upon the free list, and thus made free to Britain, we did not import from Britain any except one, that is coal. As to coal, there could be no discrimination against England to a large extent, for the reason that coal cannot come by vessel further than Montreal, and cannot come much in competition with American coal west of Montreal. And what was the reason dried fruits was not placed on the free list? Simply to discriminate in favour of the Americans. The Americans at that time produced dried fruits, and therefore we discriminated in their favour. It is true, we did not import dried fruits directly from England; but we did import them from Greece, with which country we had, at that time, a treaty on the most favoured nation basis, so that in 1854 England consented to our discriminating against nations with which she had treaties of commerce. In 1874 she consented to discriminate against her own goods. What is the objection raised by hon. gentlemen against reciprocity, limited or unlimited, when England herself has agreed and consented that Canada should discriminate against her if Canada found it to her advantage? Now, Sir, upon this question I cannot do better, I think, than quote to the House an article which I extract from a newspaper, an independent newspaper, the "Week," of Toronto. The "Week" speaks thus in its issue of the 27th January last:

But is free access to the markets of the United States attainable on any conditions which Canada could accept without sacrifice of duty or self-respect? Singularly enough, this is a question in regard to which we have directly contradictory testimony from the only two parties who are in a position to know. According to the version of the late conference given by Messrs. Blaine and Foster, the ex-Secretary, and the present Secretary, respectively, of the United States Government, the conditions offered were such as most persons would pronounce fair and reasonable, viz., that the list of goods to come under the treaty of reciprocity must include manufactures as well as natural products, and that the tariffs must be mutually preferential. This would have involved discrimination to a certain extent against the mother country in common with all other nations, but such discrimination is of the very nature of reciprocity treaties and could not be objected to by Great Britain, who would be only too glad to see a revival of Canadian prosperity and progress upon such terms. On the other hand, according to the recollections of Sir John Thompson and our Mr. Foster, reciprocity was offered only on condition of Canada's adoption of the United States tariff, which is of course a very different matter. This matter should be fairly faced and discussed during the session, not so much to settle the question of correctness of memory, which would be a delicate and unprofitable business, as to pronounce upon the desirability of now taking the American representatives at their word, and seeking a renewal of negotiations on the lines which they have distinctly laid down. It is scarcely conceivable that the incoming Washington Administration will be less favourable to such an arrangement than the outgoing one. What attitude will our Government take, is one of the test questions.

Why, Sir, who does not know that if we had a reciprocity treaty with the United States the prosperity of Canada would be increased to a very large extent? Hon. gentlemen on the other side cannot dispute it, for they admit themselves to be in favour of reciprocity. Therefore, Sir, if our prosperity were increased, our purchasing power would be increased, and if England might suffer in one direction she would benefit still more in another direction, and, therefore, instead of injuring England, as is contended by hon. gentlemen opposite, we would actually confer a benefit on England, on Canada and on the United States as well. This is the reason why we are in favour of that policy. Sir, there is another question to which I want to allude, that is, an issue of fact which was raised the other day by my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who said that when the Government dissolved the House in 1891 they asserted to the people of Canada that they could and would obtain a reciprocity treaty for them with the United States. The hon. gentlemen opposite denied that; but, Sir, I wish now to affirm that every word spoken by my hon. friend from North Norfolk is true, and I affirm as a fact, to which I challenge the contradiction of the hon. gentleman, that when Parliament was dissolved in 1891 by His Excellency upon the advice of the Canadian Government, they did it under a false pretense in the eyes of the Canadian people and with deceit in their mouth, by stating to the people of Canada that they were induced to dissolve Parliament because they had received from Mr. Blaine and the American authorities an invitation to negotiate a reciprocity treaty. Sir, the fact was that it was not Mr. Blaine or the American authorities who had sought for a conference with a view to reciprocity, but it was the Canadian Government who had sought for a conference at Washington with a view of obtaining a reciprocity treaty. Let me call the attention of the House to a state paper which was passed in the preceding month of December, and which was communicated to the press at the same time that the dissolution was announced. It was a Minute of Council, which read as follows:—

The Committee of the Privy Council having learned that the Honourable the Secretary of State for the United States had expressed to Her Majesty's Ministers at Washington his readiness to negotiate for a reciprocity treaty on a wide basis and particularly for the protection of the mackerel fisheries, and for the fisheries on inland waters, and had subsequently stated to Her Majesty's Minister his great desire to conclude a reciprocity treaty, they desire to take the opportunity afforded by these intimations from Mr. Blaine of suggesting the expediency of taking early steps to adjust the various matters that have arisen and now exist, affecting the relations of Canada with the United States.

Now, Sir, you have it in plain language ; here is a state paper, a Minute of Council for which hon. gentlemen are responsible to this House, stating that it was Mr. Blaine who had invited a conference, that Mr. Blaine had manifested a great desire to have a reciprocity treaty. What was their object ? It was simply as my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) stated a few days ago, in order to convey the impression to the Canadian people that they would obtain a reciprocity treaty. They desired to make the Canadian people believe that the Canadian Government could obtain a reciprocity treaty, and that Mr. Blaine had manifested a great desire to have such a treaty. Yet, Sir, far from this being the case, when these gentlemen attempted some months ago to have a reciprocity conference at Washington, before they could enter into negotiations, Mr. Blaine wanted an explanation as to the extraordinary position in which he had been placed in the eyes of the Canadian people. Before he consented to receive the Canadian delegation, he addressed a letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote, in which he said :—

In view of the fact that you had come to the State Department with the proposals, and that the subject was then for the first time mentioned between us, and in view of the further fact that I agreed to a private conference as explained in my Minute, I confess that it was a surprise to me when several weeks later during the Canadian canvass, Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper both stated before public assemblies that an informal discussion of a reciprocity treaty would take place at Washington after the 4th March, by the initiation of the Secretary of State.

Here we see Mr. Blaine protesting against the position in which he had been placed by the false representations which had been made to the Canadian public that he had sought for a reciprocity treaty. Now, Sir, upon this occasion, I put the question to the hon. gentleman: Which statement is true? Was it the statement of Mr. Blaine that it was not he who had sought for a conference, or was it the statement of hon. gentlemen that it was Mr. Blaine who had sought for a conference? Sir, upon this point we have the evidence of Sir Charles Tupper himself who went to Washington before he went to England, and going to Washington in order to have a conference, he was placed in the humiliating position that he had to confess that the impression which had been conveyed to the Canadian public was a false impression. We have a letter of Sir Charles Tupper, addressed to the late Sir John A. Macdonald, explaining his interview with Mr. Blaine, in which he said :

I told Mr. Blaine that I wished, in the outset, to recognize the accuracy of the statement contained in his letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote, which I had seen, in reference to the initiation of negotiations regarding reciprocal trade arrangements between the two countries.

The first thing which he had to do was to tell Mr. Blaine that what he had been stating in Canadian assemblies, that the impression which had been conveyed, was false, and he had to make a recantation before he could be heard. No man in the position of Mr. Blaine, having the respect, not only of his own nation, but the respect of himself, would have consented to treat with a man who had thus misrepresented him in the eyes of another nation, and so when the men who had made the false representation wished to treat with him at Washington, they first had to retract their statement. Now, I ask why was this humiliating falsehood resorted to? Simply to convey the impression to the Canadian people that the Canadian Minister could obtain a reciprocity treaty at Washington. Sir, this is the extent of the degradation to which a party can descend who wants to obtain power and retain it. We do not fight with such weapons. We have a legitimate ambition to obtain our share of public favour, but by such means we will never seek to raise ourselves. We will fight an honest and an open battle. Sir, power has no attraction for us if it has to be purchased at such a price, and at such a humiliation. Sir, the condition of the country is a grave one, but it is not a desperate one. That the people suffer is evidenced by their action, when, by thousands at a time, they leave the country for a foreign soil; by their action, when, by thousands they knock at the door of this Parliament in order to obtain redress from the position in which they find themselves. Sir, a remedy could easily be found if the Government would consent to listen, not to the voice of passion and greed, but to the voice of reason and justice; a remedy could be found in the decrease of taxation and in the extension of our market. Let the Canadian public, let the Canadian farmers and toilers be relieved from the load under which they are now groaning; leave them an open field for their energy and their courage, and at once all the discontent which now prevails in the land will disappear, and then, and not until then, will we enjoy in this country a satisfactory prosperity, substantial and real, and recognized by the people themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. An apology is certainly due to the House, after ten days of a long discussion upon this tariff policy, for asking it at this late period in the discussion to listen a second time to any remarks from myself. However, it becomes necessary that I should say a few words, not only in reply to my

hon. friend who has just sat down, but also in reply to several points which have been raised by hon. gentlemen who have spoken from the beginning of the debate until this time. Happily, I am not under obligation to occupy the attention of this House at very great length in that respect, for neither the cogency nor the novelty of the arguments which have been addressed to the House by hon. gentlemen opposite call for, in most cases, any lengthy reply; and I must also say that most of those arguments have been fully, fairly and completely met, not only many times before in this House, but during this present debate by hon. gentlemen who sit on this side. First, I wish to pay my respects for a few moments to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. My hon. friend has been going about the country sounding the praises and trumpeting the coming triumph of free trade. To-night his vaunted free trade with all its breadth of vision and majesty of thought has resolved itself into trade with one country, to the exclusion, by restrictions, of trade with every other in the world. Before his Toronto and Hamilton audiences he breathed the spirit of a wider atmosphere. He pointed to the battlefields of the United States, and he declared that there had been fought and won the second victory, not for "freedom of trade" as he haltingly tells us to-night, but for "free trade," and rising on the height and expanding on the breadth of that glorious victory for free trade in the United States, he unfolded the curtains of prophecy and declared that the third great country in the world to adopt free trade would be the Dominion of Canada. But to-night, Sir, my hon. friend talks small, very small, indeed. His vision is blinded to the wonderful commerce of Great Britain, his vision is blinded to the wonderful scope of a commercial world beyond the seas in every other country in the globe, and he is willing, for the sake of unrestricted free trade with the United States to raise a Chinese wall against Great Britain and every other country in the world. For in all his long speech to-night he used two paragraphs of argument in favour of free trade, and has not his whole speech been an apology for unrestricted reciprocity, upon which he has already met significant defeat and upon which he will receive significant defeat yet in the future? The hon. gentleman did several things to-night. He was pleasant and sometimes witty, but at no time very forceful in his remarks or his arguments, if I am able to judge. He told a very good story about King James, but he showed he did not properly appreciate it, because he made the application wrongly. He should have made the application to himself and his friends, who have brought up these theories year after year, from commercial union to continental free trade, and although the people have not agreed with them, although the people have rejected them, although the people have conclusively resolved against them by their votes, yet hon.

Mr. FOSTER.

gentlemen opposite, like King James, still declare that these exploded theories are the only true ones, and they still deploy them before the public view again and again. The hon. gentleman found fault with a new law of gravitation, which, he said, I have discovered, and he compared me to a second Newton. There must be, he says, according to my doctrine, some centre of attraction out in the west that draws people inevitably from the east towards the west. He said he did not believe that could be true, because the fact was that the people instead of going from east to west were going from north to south. I would advise my hon. friend to take a map and look along the lines of parallels of latitude running through Quebec, Ontario and New Brunswick and the United States, and he will find two trends of emigration or transfer, from this country and from the eastern states. He will find a trend going pretty nearly due west, along the same zone, along pretty nearly the same lines of latitude; and he will find a trend going from north to south so far as these provinces are concerned and to the United States on the south of us. My hon. friend although he treated this in a light and airy way, and not at all, as I think, according to the merits of the subject, will find, if he deals fairly and honestly with it, that these trends are not fanciful, but they are real, that he cannot get rid of them by ridicule and by any pretended law of gravitation I have discovered or not discovered, for those two trends are absolutely fixed by two things,—land hunger, which takes people to the great prairies of the west, and employment hunger which takes them to the crowded factory towns to the south of us. If there are 1,000 people who go from Canada to the west, 999 of them go from land hunger; and if there are 1,000 who go from Canada to the factory towns to the south, 999 go for employment to towns where industries hum, and where the wheels of the factories resound from day to day. My hon. friend may make fun of my theory of gravitation so long as he pleases; these are, I think, common sense facts, which he and other people will have to face, and of which most people will admit the force and cogency at once. If that be true, he must not ridicule me because I have explained the movement of population upon these two principles, upon those two sets of facts. I think he will find them to be true, and the two lessons I gather from them are, that Canada lost in the early migration, because she had not a great west of her own where people could appease their land hunger; and that if she loses her population in the other direction to-day, it is because we have not had, and have not sufficient factories and industries in order to give employment to the people who hunger for employment. So much with regard to that point. The hon. gentleman, however, has found a scientific and philosophical reason, and it is this: People do not go west because they hunger for land, nor do they go south because of want of employment in the cotton mills and factories as so many of his own countrymen do. Oh, no, there is another reason: They go west, and they go south, for this, and this alone; that in this country they are sadly oppressed, and they fly south and they fly west to the land of freedom, where there are no burdens, and where all conditions are light and happy and peaceful. Now, that may satisfy my hon. friend, and he may prefer that, to my science of gravitation, but I doubt if there are many sensible men who will agree with him in that explanation. The people are oppressed here! In what way? By taxes? Why, the hon. gentleman exploded his own theory, because he proved to his own satisfaction, and he must have proved it to the infinite discomfiture of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); he proved that the farmers in the United States of America, that the people of the United States, except the manufacturers, were ground down into dust and ashes by the fiscal policy of that country. Oppressed here because a moderate 30 per cent tariff is upon them; and they fly away where they can feel the lighter weight of a 60 per cent tariff! Oppressed here, where their direct taxes are light, and going there where they can have a lighter burden of three or four times the amount of direct taxation upon them! Why, my hon. friend must have taken leave of seriousness when he advanced an argument of that kind. Well, Sir, if he did not prove that this was true, to his own satisfaction, he evidently did prove to his own satisfaction that he told a witty and fanciful story, when he brought in that personage of old, who took up his time in counting 967 widows, and one doubtful one. What that may have had to do with the subject before us I cannot say, but I am bound to assert this: That if that solitary watcher had been my hon. friend who has just sat down, he would not have let that doubtful woman go until he had found out her exact status. The hon. gentleman hesitates to believe certain figures of the census. He is an eclectic, is my hon. friend. He takes up the Holy Bible, and he takes out one part of the doctrine and he says: That suits me: I believe in the divinity and inspiration of the Scriptures. He turns over another leaf. Ah, this does not suit him, and he says: I do not believe in the divinity or inspiration of the Scriptures. He takes up the census returns, and as he chants his doleful dirges about the exodus, and proves them from the census, ah, then the census is divinely inspired, and it is authoritatively correct. There can be no doubt about its accuracy at all then, but when he comes to the industries, compiled under the very same rules, by the very same set of people, published in the same printing office, and under the auspices of the same

Government, he declares that it is full of wickedness, and all hypocrisy, and he will not believe it at all. But my hon. friend cannot do that. As with the National Policy, which he talks about so often, and which he and his followers say must stand as a whole or go down as a whole, so it is with the census. It must stand as a whole or go down as a whole, and my hon. friend, according to the arguments which he uses, cannot simply take what suits him and leave what does not suit him. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that we may have—the census states that we had—an increase of $92,000,000 in the capital of industrial establishments; but he says we do not know how much was watered stock, we do not know how much had been sunk before. I suppose if he looks back to 1881 he can make the same remarks with regard to the census of that year. Standing up in 1881, and looking at the increased figure of the amount of investment in these industries, he could have said then: You do not know whether that is right or not, a good deal of that represents watered stock: it does not show what has been sunk before. Well, I think these things would probably be about even. If they hold in the case of the year 1891, they must hold with reference to the census of 1881, and, after all, the average deduction would be about fair. But the hon. gentleman has a wonderful theory. I think he must have learned it from my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who has lately picked up some wonderful phrases: Displacement of wealth is not the creation of wealth. I will come to that a little later. My hon. friend's theory is: That though there may be an increase in the industrial establishments, there has been a wonderful decrease in the value of farmers' lands. He says it is 25 per cent, taking it all through, and to his own satisfaction he states that there is a decrease of $125,000,000 in the gross. He proves himself as observant and as particular in that respect as did the lone watcher for these 967 widows. He declares that the farmers have lost $125,000,000, which more than overbalances this gain of $92,000,000 for the manufacturers. Well, let me ask: Have the farmers' values decreased because the cotton mills and the sugar refineries, and the iron foundries, and other industries have been built up, have carried on certain establishments, paid certain wages, and thereby provided a market for the farmers' products, and added to his returns? Is that the reason? In other words, would the farmers' value in lands have advanced, or have been kept from this depreciation, if there had been no cotton mills and no iron foundries in this country? I think not. I think that you will find that in every town where there is an enterprising community they are anxious for the establishment of industries within the precincts of that town, and a town or city is alive to-day every time that a certain industry is looking for a location. They give bonuses in order to get that industry within their limits. Why? Because they feel that if industries come, and capital builds them up, men and women are employed, and thereby the markets of the surrounding country are helped by the extra demand for the products of the soil. So, Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend has committed a perfect non sequitur in that case. $92,000,000 advance in the industrial capital invested; $125,000,000, as he says, depreciation in farm values, and the one, he tells us, is the consequence of the other. Sir, if he is correct in what he says with reference to the $125,000,000 depreciation, had we had no industries in this country, that $125,000,000 might have been $200,000,000. But, Sir, my hon. friend saw the weakness of his argument, and as he attempted to prove that this depression in farm values came from a protective tariff, so he logically was obliged to go on to show that the same thing took place in the United States. That was a hard and cruel task for my hon. friend. Where were his bowels of mercy? Even at that very moment, he looked straight into the eye of the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who, the other day, took hours to prove that the farmers of the United States were prosperous to a maximum, and that their lot was as happy and as peaceful as it could be. Here comes on my iconoclast friend to-night, and, without a shred of pity, without a single impulse of sympathy, he knocks to pieces the house which my hon. friend had erected, and declares that in the United States of America the farmers' lot is terrible. He read out the picture, as dark as Erebus, darker than the Shades, and yet may I put this statement to my hon. friend: That any time this last four years, at any time this last five years, while the culture of this ultra-protection in the United States was eating out the liver of the farmers, while that was the case, at any time within these five years, my hon. friend would have led the farmers of Canada into the very same conditions, and under the very same tariff. My hon. friend cannot deny that. Well, he saw that there was another flaw to his argument. Then he cited England, to which he declared his opponents would point where farm lands have depreciated. Now, there is no protection in England, and he could not give that reason for the depreciation there. The sequence of his argument would lead him inevitably to this: that if a lesser degree of protection in Canada destroys the farmers to a certain extent and if a larger degree of protection in the United States destroys them still more, where shall we find the paradise in which they do not suffer the same depreciation and destruction, but in which they are prosperous and happy? Evidently in a free trade country; and the hon. gentleman should have been able to point to the happy and prosperous lot of the farmers of Great Britain. He could not do it. If the farmers in the United States have had hard times, harder than we, and if our farmers have had hard times, yet, if you want to find the hardest of hard times, the most depressed of depressions, the most unhappy situation of agriculture, you have only to go to Great Britain, the home of free trade. But my hon. friend had to find a reason why his argument did not work there, and of all reasons he gave one which I should have supposed he would have been most careful to steer clear of. What is his argument? Land, he says, is all monopolised in England at least it used to be; the noblemen have got it; the aristocrats have made deer parks of it; they will not allow the land to go into cultivation; and what should be the effect? That the little land that does go into cultivation ought to rate at high values. That is the inevitable result of his argument; but the hon. gentleman says that these aristocrats gobble up the land and hold it for deer parks, and if a farmer has an acre of free land or land that he pays a rent for, these aristocrats carry their spiteful feeling so far that they grind him down with taxation. The argument will not work. The hon. gentleman showed how the rental price of land in England has diminished; but if he will read more on that subject, if he will go to England and travel there, he will find that to-day land owner after land owner offers to tenants their land without the rent of a single penny if they will only keep it in order and take care of it, and pay its tithes, and they cannot find farmers to take it even at that price. That is so; I know it to be true. Well, Sir, it is a favourite method of argument with hon. gentlemen opposite that when they cannot find real men to knock down they will set up straw men to knock them down; and so my hon. friend, having foundered on the argument in regard to the farm values, gravely declared that the National Policy had for its promoters men who held forth to the people that the National Policy would bring the price of wheat up to $1.50 per bushel. Well, Sir, it may be that some misguided person in an exuberance of enthusiasm on the stump in a moment of weakness may have said it would do this. Hon. gentlemen opposite have their moments of weakness in that respect. I myself have heard them make some most astounding prophecies and promises, which have never been, and cannot be, fulfilled; but I am not going to say that because some few of them failed in that direction the whole party propaganda must absolutely rest or fall upon the fulfilment of those prophecies. Neither is it fair for my hon. friend to say, and he cannot put it forward seriously, that because some person said that the National Policy would make wheat go up to $1.50 a bushel, therefore, the National Policy, not having done that, wheat not being at that price now, the National Policy is a failure and ought no longer to be sustained. Now, he declares openly, and he has done it often, that no legislation can increase the price of wheat or other cereals. By the way, I must ask my hon. friend to take particular care of his new adherent, his youngest recruit, the hon. member for L'Islet. I had the curiosity to read that hon. member's card, which he issued to his constituency. He read it to us here the other night. What is the first line of it? The hon. gentleman pledges himself to have legislation introduced which shall raise the value of the farmers' products, and he also pledges himself that the hon. leader of the Opposition will leave two or three columns standing in the temple of the National Policy. Now, I want to ask my hon. friend if he has had an understanding with the hon. member for L'Islet? Did he really agree and authorize him to say he would introduce legislation to raise the value of the farmers' products? What are the columns that he is going to let stand in this temple of protection? I will leave that between my hon. friends. I have no doubt that they will come to an agreement before this session is over. But, Sir, how would free trade, suppose we had it to-day, increase the prices of the products of the farm? You say that the price of wheat is low to-day—why? Because the production of wheat in the world, measured by the demand, is greater in proportion, and consequently the price falls. Bring in free trade, and what is it going to do? Blast a certain portion of the wheat fields; make the quantity less, and thereby bring it closer to the demand, and thus raise the price? That is the only way it can be done. But my hon. friend may have had a fear of that, and so is not going to introduce free trade, but only unrestricted reciprocity. In that case I am afraid that the hon. gentleman would only fall on the horn of his own dilemma, for he declares that once protection is introduced down goes the value of land, while he promises the farmers that under unrestricted reciprocity, which means a higher protection and greater restriction than we have now, the value of land and land products will rise. Well, Sir, there was a vein running through my hon. friend's remark which is not a new one. It has been a sort of gospel on the part of all hon. gentlemen opposite. They have, as my hon. friend from Charlotte would say, "taken a great cant towards Bidy." They have "taken a cant" upon the line of solicitude for the farmer, and if there is one thing that they preach to-day it is the farmer's depressed condition, and they propose to be the only saviours of the farmer by means of the policy which they desire to bring in. Now, Sir, my hon. friend goes too far in his statement with reference to the farmers. He is too solicitous. The Liberal-Conservative party and the Liberal-Conservative Government know the farmers' condition as well as my hon. friend, and they do something for the farmers, while hon. gentlemen opposite merely talk about them, declaring them to be depressed, and pauperized, and drawing gorgeous pictures of what they would do for them if they were only in power. Is it true that the farmers, as a class, are oppressed by taxation? It is not true. Is it true, as my hon. friend said to-night, that the farmer pays taxes on all that he eats, on all that he wears and on all he consumes? What folly that is, and I will show you why. The farmer requires wood to build his house and his barn. Does he pay a single cent of taxes on the wood in this country where we have a surplus with which to supply the wants of other countries? The farmer requires fuel to give him warmth after he has built his house, and, in nine cases out of ten, he uses the wood of the country as fuel. He cuts his wood in the winter, and brings it to his farm-yard, and keeps himself warm with it. Does he pay any tax on that wood? He uses coal, and every ounce of anthracite coal he uses, which is the coal most largely used for fuel purposes, is free of taxation; and in great portions of this country, bituminous coal lies at his very door, at first cost or almost free, for his taking it at the mouth of the pit. My hon. friend is wrong as regards fuel, and he is also wrong as regards food. It is absurd that we should have to meet an argument of that kind. What our people eat are the grains of this country, the best in the world, and of these we raise a surplus. What they eat are the meats of Canada, the best and firmest in the world, and of these, too, we have a surplus. Our people also consume our butter and cheese, and Canada can make cheese equal to that of the best cheese-producing country in the world, and butter equal to the best butter in the world. The eggs of the patient hen, so much derided by my hon. friend, are meat and food to the farmer, and great quantities are consumed by the labouring men. Is there any duty on those? So we might go through everything that the farmer eats. What does he pay a tax upon in the matter of food? He pays a tax on his mustard and allspice and cinnamon and cloves and things of that kind, and a few cents per quarter would represent the bulk of the duty he pays upon these, as far as his consumption goes. He pays infinitesimal duties on sugar the raw sugars having been made free; and, under the state of things which exists this year, he pays less for his sugar than he would if we had no National Policy. We have taken the farmer's food; let us consider his drinks. What drinks he ought to drink, according to my opinion, are free. His water, tea and coffee are free. If he desires to drink anything stronger—which is optional with himself—it is a luxury he takes, and he has to pay for it, and we will have a tax on that so long as Canada is a country. So my hon. friend must revise his dictum, as far as the food is concerned. The principal items of the farmer are the wood, the brick or the stone he uses in the construction of his buildings; the fuel he uses, the food he consumes, and, in all these particulars, which are the main items of his necessary expenditure, where is the country in which the farmer has so bountiful a supply at his own doors and at so small a cost? Go a little further, and consider his clothing. There is a large number of farmers in this country, whose ordinary clothing is made of the wool shorn from the sheep they themselves raise. The fleece is washed in the running brook, taken to the nearest carding mill, and the yarn is spun by his own wife, and woven on his own loom, or that of the factory near by, and the product is made into garments for himself and family. There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of people in this country who are thus clothed, but my hon. friends do not see them. They are not in touch with the farmer. They keep all their eyes for the city people who dress in broad-cloth. They roam about the streets of the large towns and villages, and see only people who are dressed in tweeds. If they would get in touch with the people, would use their eyes and go among the working classes, and would visit the back settlements, they would find the gray home-spun coats and trousers made out of the wool shorn from the sheep the farmers themselves have raised and the wool of which was carded in the settlement. Go to your cottons, if you please, go to your woollens, if you wish, and I make the assertion here that the woollen and cotton staples, mostly used by our people as clothing, are, taking quality and price together, as reasonable in price as they are in any country in the world. Taking quality and price together, these goods, which are really serviceable for wear—not clayed cotton, not shoddy woollens or tweeds or the like—but, taking them for wear and quality and price, you will get them in Canada equal to any country in the world. Taking all things into consideration, the farmer pays the minimum of taxation; and I say to you that there is no country in the world where the farmer pays less taxation than he does in this country upon all those staple articles which go into the consumption of his daily life. We must look out as well for these gentlemen when they talk of the load of taxation. Taxation in this country is of different kinds. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that $36,000,000 is what we wring in taxes from the pockets of the poor people of Canada. What a fraud that is as an argument—calling that taxation and making the people, who know no better in some cases because they are not learned in figures, believe that a straight tax of $36,000,000 is taken out of them. That statement is not true. Of that amount $10,000,000 is for liquors and tobacco, and no man would get up in this House or any other Anglo-Saxon House of Parliament and ask that these articles should be made free. So long as a revenue is needed, a revenue will be raised upon them. They are not necessities, but luxuries, and the man who buys them buys them with the knowledge that he is paying into the revenue, and when he does, it is a voluntary and not an involuntary tax. Then there are $8,500,000 of earnings in this country. Are you taxed when you put a letter in the post office box with a three-cent stamp on it, and get some person to carry it 5,000 miles for you? I think not; I think you are getting your service done, and paying very cheaply for it. Are you taxed when you buy your ticket and get on a railway, and are whirled from Levis to Halifax or St. John? I think not, for you get the cheapest travelling on the Intercolonial Railway that you can get anywhere. All that goes into these earnings. It is not taxation, but payment for a cheap service and a good service as well. Add these together and there are $18,000,000. Add also the acknowledged luxuries, $2,500,000, and you have $20,000,000 of this which is not necessary taxation at all, which is either perfectly voluntary, or simply a cheap payment for good service. Now, that should be told. I hold that he is not a friend of his country, that he is an enemy of his country, who will, by keeping the truth from the people, raise discontent in the minds of the people—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER—and, if there is any man in this House that ought to say “hear, hear” when I mention that, it is the hon. gentleman who sits opposite me, the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). For, if there is any man in this House who has roused so much discontent and has driven so many people out of the country as the hon. member for South Oxford has by those ingenious diatribes of his, I should like to know who he is. But, Sir, my hon. friend has a brand new gospel; he brought it out to-night. He is going to have a new order of things, a political millennium—all to himself, I am afraid. What does he say? The leader of a party, speaking in Opposition, rises in his place and in a loud voice and in a tone that can be heard from Cape Breton to British Columbia, proclaims the new evangel. What is it? “Taxation is an evil which never produces prosperity; it is an abridgment of every good citizen’s rights.” Now, my hon. friend’s duty is plain. He is the leader of a powerful party. Sometime in the by and by, may be the long by and by, he may get into power. But I want to impress this upon him, that when he gets into power he must practice the doctrine he preaches, and govern this country without placing upon the people, if he is true to his gospel, this evil which he declares never produced prosperity and which is an abridgment of every good citizen’s rights. Sir, that doctrine in a leader of the Government would be arrant foolishness, but in the mouth of an irresponsible leader of an Opposition it is a firebrand. It is a doctrine by which he hopes to win the favour of people who know less about it than he does by inspiring them with the hope that when the Hon. Wilfred Laurier rules this country there will be no taxation at all, none of this evil, "which never produced prosperity and which is an abridgment of every good citizen's rights." Now, does my hon. friend seriously believe what he says, or does he speak on the spur of the moment—in a moment of weakness, perhaps?

Mr. McMULLEN. We do not have them on this side.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, if my hon. friend will keep his wind-mills quiet—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) One is enough.

Mr. FOSTER. One at a time. Well, Sir, my hon. friend when he emitted that aphorism, that wise saying must have been undergoing a peculiar process of absorption from my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), because my hon. friend from South Oxford, not once or twice or two hundred times, but two thousand times, has declared in this House and in the country that we cannot create prosperity by means of taxation. Why, he said the other night that the Minister of Finance might as well get up on a steeple and jump off and then try to hold himself up by his boot strap as to try to induce prosperity by means of taxation. Well, the Minister of Finance has too much regard for his own life to try such acrobatic feats as that, but that trick would not be a whit more absurd than the doctrine my hon. friend has announced. Suppose we go down to Nova Scotia, to the Basin of Minas, and see the muddy waters of the basin when the tide is in and notice afterwards, when the tide is out, the portion of land from which the water has retreated and which is covered with the stratum of fertilizing soil left there by the outgoing water. Suppose a municipality there says: Why, this is very valuable, or might be made so. Here is a tract of one thousand acres of land no one of us is able to reclaim it; but as a municipality we will raise a sum of money by taxing ourselves and we will build a dyke that will inclose this thousand acre tract. They do that; they pay the taxes for one year, for two years, for three years, for five years; they raise the money; they expend it; they battle with the waves; they make the dykes, and you go down there a year or two afterwards and see a thousand acres of the best soil in the world, with its waving grass that brings a perennial income over and above the taxes imposed to pay for this improvement. Yet my hon. friend says that taxation is an evil and an abridgment of every good citizen's rights, that you can never create prosperity by taxation. Maybe you cannot create prosperity or wealth by it, but you certainly bring the unused wealth, you certainly bring the national resources, formerly comparatively valueless, into a state or condition in which they yield revenue, which could not be done without taxation. So it is with every state, with every country. When the North-west was not known; when it was a terra incognita to us, and we conceived the idea of buying it from the Hudson's Bay Company, and did buy it, and paid our $1,600,000 and taxed the people for it, my hon. friend would have told us: You cannot produce wealth by means of taxation. But we paid the taxation to buy the North-west and by means of further taxation we opened it for settlement. But the thousands and millions of acres of fertile land which now and in the future lie open to the sunlight and the breeze with their golden crown of waving grain, will be a standing refutation of the theory that you never can produce wealth by means of taxation. But my hon. friend is not going to have any taxation; freedom, he says, is the goal. My hon. friend says that we must not talk of reforming the tariff, that it is idle for me to attempt it, that I dare not attempt it, that I dare not touch the principle. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to forget one thing, and that is, that there is a line of distinction between a principle and a detail of that principle, that there is a distinction between the tree and the twig on the tree. Suppose my hon. friend was a husbandman. He would go out into the orchard and find a beautiful fruit tree, and as he went up to it, would see some golden fruit upon it. But he would notice here a branch which was mouldering, to use a word which has come into vogue of late. He would find a sucker growth coming out from a part of the tree where it should not be allowed to grow. He would find a branch deformed and gnarly. My hon. friend is the kind of husbandman, who, if he went into the orchard and saw a tree of that kind would promptly take his little hatchet and cut the tree down. My hon. friend is not a good husbandman, consequently he would do that sort of thing, but the real husbandman would look at that tree and say: A fine tree; a good trunk and fair branches; still some mouldering branches and some growth that should not be there. And he would take a sharp knife and carefully cut off the deformities and would leave the tree more beautiful and capable of producing more fruit. This husbandman would enjoy thereafter the fruits of his skill, while the husbandman who would act as my hon. friend, would be cast by the owner into outer darkness, and condemned ever after to listen to the doleful wailings of a party who are commonly called in this country, Grits. My hon. friend says that it is false that they ever proposed an assimilation of the Canadian tariff to the United States tariff. Well, my hon. friend has a short memory. If I were to treat this argument with him as he treated the $1.50-a-bushel-of-wheat argument I would convict him of insincerity at once; and I am not sure that I could not bring it very close home to him if I had here the notes and the speeches that have been made. I will, however, admit this, that my hon. friend had sense enough to know from the first that that was the weak point, and the rock upon which the whole scheme would split, and he was very wary of speaking of it, or coming within touch of it. But my hon. friend cannot have read the American press, he cannot have read the utterances of American statesmen, if he does not know that almost without exception the press and statesmen of the United States have declared that any scheme of unrestricted reciprocity between this country and the United States, is impossible, except upon an assimilation of the tariffs of the two countries. I can give authority after authority, by the hour, for that statement. Everybody knows it.

Mr. CHARLTON. Produce one now.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to weary this House or insult its good sense by producing it; but if my hon. friend has a thirst for information, I will give him my book to-morrow, and he can read for an hour the opinions of the American statesmen and American newspapers in that direction, and in that direction alone.

Mr. CHARLTON. You ought to have come here prepared to verify your statements.

Mr. FOSTER. Sir, I will have something to do with that hon. gentleman before I get through. My hon. friend says that no Liberal has said so, that no United States adherent has said so. I have made my assertion with reference to that, and I invite him to examine the records to see whether it be not true. Well, my hon. friend was not satisfied to leave well enough alone. If he had left that point with the simple assertion that no Liberal had said that they would assimilate the tariffs, that no adherent of the United States had said so, it might have gone on the strength of his word. But my hon. friend went into the dangerous course for him of undertaking to reason, and the further he reasoned, the more effectually he destroyed his own contention. My hon. friend said—and there he touched the weak point at once—that if there was a little lower tariff in one country than in the other, the tendency would be to import goods from the country which had the lowest tariff and smuggle them into the country which had the higher tariff. Then my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), who so valiantly denied the assimilation of tariff the other night, is on record as saying that it must be so, and that the United States people are not such arrant fools as to submit to a scheme of reciprocity in which there is not an assimilation of tariffs. My hon. friend has stated the weak point, and I invited him, as I have invited them again and again, to show to this House how they are going to arrange unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, and discrimination against other countries, without an assimilation of tariffs. The hon. gentleman cannot do it, and there is not a level-headed man in the United States who has expressed himself on this subject, who is not in disagreement with him on that point. Well, Sir, my hon. friend has one strong adherent, a man of whom not much has been heard in United States politics, a Mr. Campbell, of Ohio. My hon. friend declared that Mr. Campbell was a host, and that Mr. Campbell had declared himself in favour of reciprocity; and he brought out a sheet of paper with a very long extract upon it, which he read to the House as Mr. Campbell's offer of reciprocity. What was it? It was an agreement between two foolish young people named Maude and Claude that they would kiss each other. Now, does my hon. friend know not that he is trifling with the question and trifling with this House when he declares that the Democratic party is going to give us, and is willing to give us, a reciprocity treaty upon the ground of a simple story told by Mr. Campbell with reference to Maude and Claude? My hon. friend has declared that the Democratic victory in the United States has been a victory for the freedom of the trade to this extent, that it is going to do away with all tariff for protection, and introduce a tariff for revenue alone. My hon. friend declared in the same breath that in Canada he was going to do away with all protection, and introduce a tariff for revenue. Now, when the United States gets down to a simple revenue basis, and my hon. friend gets Canada down to a simple revenue basis, where will be his basis for reciprocity between the two countries? My hon. friend says that unrestricted reciprocity does not lead to annexation. He knew that a trusted leader of his had declared himself in a different direction, and so he read to fortify himself a few words of what Mr. Blake said on one side, and a little more of what Mr. Blake said on the other. Mr. Blake's evidence is strong evidence whenever it can be quoted against my hon. friend, because in heart he was with the other side, their trusted leader for many a year; and when he was their leader every man of them fell down on his knees and worshipped the superior ability and acumen of Mr. Blake. If Mr. Blake, the trusted leader of the party had so to wrench party affiliations and go against the course of a lifetime, as to break with that party, if Mr. Blake's familiar, and chosen, and hot duty, for years was to rake, with his strong shot, the ranks of the Liberal-Conservative party, any bit of evidence that Mr. Blake gives against the Liberal-Conservative party is in the line of all his wishes, while every bit of evidence that he is forced to give against the party with which he was so long associated, is something wrenched from him unwillingly, and consequently of priceless value in comparison with the evidence given against the other side. Mr. Blake may have thought that the Conservative policy of protection would lead to annexation; but he declared in language that admits no doubt, that unrestricted reciprocity would certainly lead to annexation. He said:

I see no plan for combining the two elements of permanency of the treaty and variability of tariffs, which does not involve a practical control of the latter (tariff) by the United States.

The tendency in Canada of unrestricted free trade with the States, high duties being maintained against the United Kingdom would be towards political union.

Thus far my hon. friend read and then he stopped. But Mr. Blake went on to say:—

And the more successful the plan the stronger the tendency, both by reason of the community of interests, the intermingling of populations, the more intimate business and social connections and the trade and fiscal relations amounting to dependency, which it would create with the States; and of the greater isolation and divergency from Britain which it would produce; and also, and especially, through inconveniences experienced in the maintenance and apprehensions entertained as to the termination of the treaty.

Our hopes and our fears alike would draw one way. We would then indeed be "looking to Washington."

The treaty once made the vantage ground it gave would naturally be used for the accomplishment of its ulterior purpose; and this political end would be a great factor in the consideration by the States of Canadian views upon changes in the joint tariff, or as to the maintenance or termination of the treaty.

The reorganization to which our neighbours look is, of course, the unification of the continent.

That is Mr. Blake's opinion with reference to the tendency of unrestricted reciprocity, and every sentence is an irresistible argument in that way. Mr. Blake went on to say:

Without assured permanence some Conservative predictions of evil, else fallacious, would come true: for our undeniable natural advantages in raw materials, labour, situation and facilities would be unnaturally handicapped.

No manufacturer, looking to the continental market, would fix or even enlarge his capital or business in the country of five millions at the risk of being cut off from the country of sixty-five millions.

Our neighbours, instead of engaging in manufactures here would take our markets with goods manufactured there.

And our raw materials, instead of being finished on the ground, would be exported to be finished abroad.

That is Mr. Blake's opinion, the opinion of a trusted leader of their own, a man who, because his party had taken up the fad of unrestricted reciprocity, was wrenched from his allegiance to that party, and obliged to give reluctant testimony, albeit strong testimony, against the fad and policy which they had adopted. But my hon. friend says that the strongest objection of all to the unrestricted reciprocity plan is discrimination. He admits that discrimination must be had, but he actually had the assurance to follow in the wake of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and base his argument that discrimination would be allowed—upon what? Upon the George Brown draft treaty, which, in 1874, was negotiated by him at Washington. Those three hon. gentlemen, one after the other, have tried to give currency to an idea which is as false in fact as any thing can be, namely, that the draft of 1874 discriminated against Great Britain and that, too, with the consent and approbation of the British Government. I do not charge them with knowing it is false. What I charge them with is, that they who ought to know that it is false, declare that it is true, and on the assertion that no discrimination was either intended or permitted in that Draft Treaty, I stake my reputation as a public man in this country, and I am willing to stand by my statement, and those three gentlemen have either misunderstood or have misrepresented the whole thing. I ask the attention of this House while I prove it. Sir, it can be proved from a variety of circumstances: I am simply going to take the chain as I find it. I find that the treaty was negotiated in 1874; George Brown was the man who negotiated it; Alexander Mackenzie was the Premier of this country at the time. He himself signed the memorandum, outlining the nature of the reciprocity negotiations which were to be followed by George Brown. What does he say? After going over the other provisions, he says:

In the matter of reciprocal trade considered by itself, there is no reason to doubt that Canada would derive very great advantages from an extension of the list of articles named in article 3 of the former treaty, such as follows:—Manufactures in wood, agricultural implements, salt, mineral oils, bricks for building, bath-bricks, calcined plaster, burnt lime, manufactured articles not produced in or exported from England, ochres, ground or unground.

That was on 9th March in the memorandum which was to guide George Brown, and it expressly confined the list to manufactured articles not produced in or exported from England. Let us go on to the second step. The second step will be found in the Minute of Council, approved on 26th March, 1874, in which we find this passage—it must be remembered that at his time the United States were pressing for a manufactured list wider than that suggested:

Sir Edward Thornton's despatch to His Excellency the Governor-General of a late date, indicates a desire on the part of the United States to extend the list of articles named in the Treaty of 1854, so as to embrace the articles of the manufactures of the two countries. The Government of Canada will be willing to agree to such reciprocity—to include manufactures in wood, such as sashes, doors, blinds, pails, tubs, barrels, matches and various other articles of a like nature—agricultural implements, bath-bricks, bricks for building purposes, calcined gypsum or plaster lime, earth ochres, ground or unground, and generally, all manufactured articles not produced in or exported from Great Britain to this country, together with such other articles as the Imperial and Dominion Governments may mutually agree upon, or as may by mutual arrangement be entered at a fixed duty to be specified in the treaty. It is, however, understood that no proposition affecting the introduction of manufactured goods shall be finally determined upon prior to reference to the Imperial and Dominion Governments. As a natural production, salt may be added to the former free list.

The same careful desire was extended at this second stage of the proceedings to exclude articles in regard to which a discrimination was likely to occur in respect to Great Britain, and every precaution was taken afterwards that if this article were extended, it should only be after reference to the two Governments. The Order in Council goes on to say :

Mr. Brown will communicate this view to Sir Edward Thornton, accompanied with the representation that the Government of Canada do not propose any modification in matter of trade and commerce which would in any way injuriously affect Imperial interests.

That is another stage. On 23rd April, 1874, Earl Carnarvon signs a despatch to Earl Dufferin, in which he says :

After consultation with this department, Lord Derby sent a telegram to Sir E. Thornton, informing him that the proposed paper might be submitted to Mr. Fish, but that the proposals should not be made as being the result of the matured decision of Her Majesty's Government, but as preliminary only, and Sir E. Thornton was desired to explain this to Mr. Fish.

Further, this shows the spirit of the instructions, the actual instructions, the prudent care taken that those instructions should not be exceeded, the spirit of the instructions being that there should be no discrimination against Great Britain. That is one set of facts. Now, Sir, I wish to adduce another proof. I suppose the treaty itself may be taken as showing what the treaty means. I challenged my hon. friend the other day to read a single clause of that treaty which made it a condition of the treaty that the articles which were admitted free from the United States into Canada should not be admitted free to Great Britain or any other country. He could not read it, he cannot read it, because it is not in the treaty. But he attempted to make this argument, that although it was not in the treaty, yet it is common sense to believe that if they had made a treaty between each other, whereby certain articles were to come free into each country, with no other word or sentence qualifying it, that necessarily it must be confined to those two countries. The opposite is the exact truth. But I desire to carry the argument further. There is another article in the treaty which provides for a most-favoured nation treatment. Why do they insert most-favoured nation treatment, if the treaty itself gave the United States a preferential market, with a discrimination against Great Britain in regard to the articles mentioned, and which are set out in another article, which hon. gentlemen can read, and which I will not trouble the House by reading? It is an article providing that, if any more favourable considerations are given by the United States to a third country, or by Canada to any third country, the same shall be given by one country to the other.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman read the paragraph which he says provides a more-favoured nation clause with respect to articles named in the treaty?

Mr. FOSTER. I will read the clause, which is as follows:—

For the term mentioned in Article XIII no other or higher duty shall be imposed in the United States upon other articles not enumerated in said schedules, growth, produce or manufacture of Canada; or in Canada upon such other articles the growth, produce or manufacture of the United States, than are respectively imposed upon like articles the growth, produce or manufacture of Great Britain or of any other country.

These two articles go together. The first one is explicit in saying that the two countries shall exchange certain products, and there is no article in the treaty which says there shall be a preferential treatment given to each other. And then the commerce between the two countries is extended on the same amicable line to articles which were not mentioned therein to provide for most favoured nation, but not preferential, terms to either one or the other. Now, Sir, my contention, so far, is this: That the spirit of the instructions all the way through was to prevent discrimination against Britain, and that, when a treaty is made, the treaty makes no mention of discrimination against Great Britain. Then I come to George Brown's testimony. George Brown ought to know as much about it as any other man. George Brown made that speech after all the schedules had been submitted, after the treaty had been completed as far as it was completed, and with full knowledge of the articles in the schedule, which he read in his speech only two minutes before. George Brown read the very schedule that my hon. friend read to-night, and then, after reading that, he expressed himself in this way, as to certain objections urged against the treaty.

The first of these objections which he referred to was that the treaty discriminated against Great Britain, and in favour of the United States.

He declared this objection to be unfounded, and proved it by saying :

It was perfectly understood from the opening negotiations that no article could be free from duty in regard to the United States, which was not also free with regard to Great Britain, and nothing else was ever contemplated for a moment.

Now, Sir, if George Brown had said that, after the first schedules had been handed in, there might have been some ground for the argument of the hon. gentleman; that he spoke about a subject that he was but half through with in the negotiations. But George Brown made the statement after the draft treaty had been concluded, and after he had just read to the Senate the very schedule of manufactured goods which my hon. friend read, and George Brown distinctly states that it was never contemplated for a moment, and that actually no discrimination was allowed in that treaty against Great Britain. My hon. friend thought that he had lighted upon an argument which helped him out, and he read the report of the Board of Trade upon this draft treaty which had been submitted to it by Lord Derby. Lord Derby, who knew the whole tenor and spirit of all the negotiations, knew that assurances had been given to him by the Canadian Government that no discrimination should be allowed against Great Britain, and knew that every step in the work of that treaty-making had been under the direct supervision of that Imperial Government. The board of trade reported what? They reported that they found nothing against the treaty, as it was submitted. They did not mention discrimination. My hon. friend put that in as an aside afterwards, as though they had that in their minds, but the board of trade made that report upon the data of the schedules before them, and the promise that these articles mentioned in the schedules should be free to Great Britain as well as to Canada. But, Sir, if George Brown did not know anything about it, and if my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition thinks he can asperse the character and veracity of the Hon. George Brown, who made as positive a statement as a man could make, and made it with all the knowledge of the facts; perhaps my hon. friend will allow that Lord Derby ought to know something about it. Well, Sir, at that very time, almost at that very moment, there was a fear in England that this treaty as regards this schedule was going to discriminate against Great Britain, and representatives of various trades headed a deputation to Lord Derby and waited on him, and expressed their fears, and implored his intervention in the matter, and what did Lord Derby say?

It was the bounden duty of Her Majesty's Government to insist that British free trade should not be placed at a disadvantage as compared with other countries, in any treaty which might be entered into on behalf of the colonies; also to forbid the imposition of differential duties in favour of the United States as against Great Britain in any such treaty.

And he further assured the deputation:

That there was nothing in the proposed treaty to warrant the conclusion that the Canadian Government were in favour of such a discrimination.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the date?

Mr. FOSTER. 1874.

Mr. LAURIER. What month?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot give you the month.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is important.

Mr. FOSTER. It is important. But, is the date more important than the substance of what is said?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, because it is important to know whether he made that statement before he referred the treaty with the schedule to the board of trade, and got the board of trade's answer that we could discriminate if we pleased, and the English Government would say nothing against it.

Mr. FOSTER. The board of trade never said that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And then his despatch following, in which he said, with the board of trade statement in his hand, that he approved of the treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. The board of trade never stated what my hon. friend asserted just now. My hon. friend is satisfied to crawl out of a very small hole, and the hole he proposes to crawl out of to-night is this: that because he cannot have the exact date and hour, upon which this utterance of Lord Derby was made, therefore, he impugns its accuracy with reference to this treaty. What did Lord Derby say? He assured the deputation:

That there was nothing in the proposed treaty to warrant the conclusion that the Canadian Government were in favour of discrimination.

He said, in addition, that:

It was the bounden duty of Her Majesty's Government to insist that British trade should not be placed at a disadvantage, and also to forbid the imposition of differential duties in favour of the United States as against Great Britain in any such treaty.

And yet my hon. friend tries to get out of all that by asking me for the exact second in the exact hour, and the exact dot to which the minute hand or second hand of the clock pointed, when that statement was made. Well, as I have said before, there is no excuse for such dense ignorance in this matter. The member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) stated the other day that he had been discussing this question for fifteen years, and so also have other hon. gentlemen on the other side. If they are such poor students as not to know the facts, they are poor political leaders to whom to trust the interests of a party still less of a country. This has been frequently threshed out in the papers. We know that the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie time and again gave the same assurance, and the Toronto "Mail," in discussing this matter, said:

We are authorized by the Hon. Alex. McKenzie to state that Mr. McDougall is entirely mistaken in stating that discrimination was suggested or proposed or permitted under the treaty of 1874.

Sir, I have done with that, after having made the argument, I again make the assertion: That no discrimination was intended or was made in that treaty. If my hon. friend has nothing better by which to recommend to the people the adoption of a scheme against which he declares discrimination to be the chief factor of objection, than a baseless assertion like this, his case is lost, and he need not go to the country upon it. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) made another statement the other night equally without foundation, in order to prove that discrimination on another occasion had been proposed. He declared that Sir John Macdonald, the political godfather of the Liberal-Conservative party, had sent Sir Alexander Galt, and three others, in 1865, down to Washington, and through them had offered to assimilate the Customs tariffs of the two countries, which he contended was parallel in principle and in details to what he and his friends propose to do under unrestricted reciprocity. The hon. gentleman made that statement along with the others, and it shows an equal lack of investigation and an equal lack of accuracy. I have before me exactly what was proposed, in a minute made in memorandum by Sir Alexander Galt and his confrères. It was when they were trying to have the treaty of 1854 extended, or something else put in its place. They went down, and they found the temper of the people at Washington against renewing the old reciprocity treaty. One of the strongest objections urged against its renewal was this: That, owing to peculiar internal taxes in the United States, the Americans insisted on a larger impost upon the articles which had formerly been in the treaty list in order to equalize the exchange between the two countries; and the proposition made by Sir Alexander Galt, and his confrères, was this:

The trade between the United States and the British provinces should, it is believed, under ordinary circumstances, be free in reference to their natural productions; but as internal taxes exceptionally exist in the United States, it is now proposed that the articles embraced in the free list of the reciprocity treaty should continue to be exchanged, subject only to such duties as may be equivalent to that internal taxation. It is suggested that both parties may add certain articles to those now in the said list.

If the foregoing points be satisfactorily arranged, Canada is willing to adjust her excise duties upon spirits, beer and tobacco, upon the best revenue standard which may be mutually adopted after full consideration of the subject; and if it be desired to treat any other articles in the same way, the disposition of the Canadian Government is to give every facility in their power to prevent illicit trade.

Memorandum "B" was given as an answer by the United States delegates. They give a list of the articles in the treaty of 1854, and upon all of them they put less or greater duties, which they desired Canada to pay in order to compensate for the disadvantage they claimed to be under on account of their internal taxation. In memorandum "G" which followed, Mr. Galt replied:

In reference to the memorandum received from the Committee on Ways and Means, the provincial delegates regret to be obliged to state that the proposals therein contained in regard to the commercial relations between the two countries are not such as they can recommend for the adoption of the respective legislatures. The imposts which it is proposed to lay upon the productions of the British provinces on their entry into the markets of the United States, are such as, in their opinion, will be in some cases prohibitory, and will certainly seriously interfere with the natural course of trade. These imposts are so much beyond what the delegates conceive to be an equivalent for the internal taxation of the United States, that they are reluctantly brought to the conclusion that the committee no longer desire the trade between the two countries to be carried on upon the principles of reciprocity. With the concurrence of the British Minister at Washington, they are therefore obliged respectfully to decline to enter into the engagement suggested in the memorandum.

That is all there is to that. It affords not the shadow of an argument in favour of discrimination, or in favour of assimilation of tariffs between the two countries. Now, Sir, I have exhausted my own patience, and I suppose the patience of the House, and yet there are two or three points which I feel I must touch upon. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) stated, the other day, that the Government had asserted, when they went to the people in 1891, that they would certainly get a reciprocity treaty from the United States, and that on that assertion, which he declared had no foundation in fact, we had fooled and deceived the people, and gained the election. I am anxious for honest and fair debate in this House, and in my anxiety for it I gave my hon. friend a chance to retract the strength of that assertion, and I supposed he would like a man, say: Well, that was a little too strong; you did not actually assert that, but you left it to be implied. But my hon. friend would not take advantage of that opportunity, and not once, but twice or three times before he finished his speech, he declared that we had actually asserted that we would be certain to get a reciprocity treaty, and that we had carried the country on that cry. Now, I give my hon. friend another opportunity to retract that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. He will not do it. I am not surprised at that; but what does surprise me is that hon. gentlemen who sit beside him on the front benches will stand by him in his refusal to retract a statement which he did not prove and which he cannot prove. When he was asked to produce his authority, what did he quote? He quoted the Toronto "Empire." The Toronto "Empire" is not the Government. He had not stated that the Toronto "Empire" had declared thus and so. He had said that the Government had actually said so and so. But even when he read the extract from the Toronto "Empire," it appeared that the Toronto "Empire" did not say it; and he actually struggled through the whole extract without showing one single syllable or line which could bear out the assertion that he made. The hon. gentleman went on, afterwards, to declare that the draft treaty of 1874 was an actual and square discrimination on all fours with what was proposed under unrestricted reciprocity. Sir John Thompson gave him an opportunity to take that back. He asked a certain question as to whether the Hon. George Brown had made a statement, by way of denial. But the hon. gentleman never answers a question squarely. He did not answer that; but he went off on a side shift. Now, Sir, there are two examples of an hon. gentleman choosing to argue against his opponents by actually falsifying the record, and when he was given an opportunity of putting himself right, utterly declining to put himself right. And he not only stated that in the face of members in this House who could judge of its falsity, but his speech goes out to the world, and it will be by and by, I suppose, printed in pamphlet form, as are all his speeches, and be sent out to a larger constituency, and men will read, and men will say the Canadian Government is a bad Government. Why? Because they declared in 1891, that they were certain to get a reciprocity treaty, they went to the people on this declaration and they did not get it; because they declared against discrimination and that the British Government is against discrimination, and yet, in 1874, discrimination was actually allowed and acceded to by Great Britain. And men will say, we cannot support a Government which can be guilty of such deceit as that. And when asked, why do you come to that conclusion, they will answer: Because Honest John Charlton said so, because Mr. Charlton is a Christian, because he is an elder of the Presbyterian Church, because he is a stickler for the Sabbath, because he is a man who pretends to great goodness, and is truly good, and John Charlton would not say this unless it were so. We will base our political action on what John Charlton says, because we believe in his honesty, I must say that that is a propaganda which ought not to be carried on—not as between parties, for I am not speaking now merely of parties—but as between the man and the people who read what the man says. My hon. friend is very much against the captain of a tug taking hold of a little string, and allowing the shrill whistle of his tug to rend the solemn stillness of the Sabbath morning. I would rather that he would rend the solemn stillness of the Sabbath morn, by letting the tug blow its horn 10,000 times, than that he would offend against the compact upon which society can alone be maintained—truth between man and man; and yet, Sir, if that captain of the tug told a lie to his mate, the minimum of wrong would be done. He would have sullied the purity of his own heart, he would have outraged the confidence of his neighbour; but these two would be the only ones concerned. But what is to be said of a public man who would make these utterances without any shadow of foundation, and who, when given a chance to take them back and set himself right, will not do it, but will spread them as propaganda broad and wide throughout the country. That is not the kind of political warfare that ought to obtain. The hon. gentleman sitting near me, my friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) erred in the same way, I am bound to say through ignorance, as no public man, especially one who proposes to be the leader of the Maritime provinces, ought to err. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) leaned towards me as he spoke; and in that melodramatic manner of his, so well known, always full of vehemence, whether there is anything behind it or not, deliberately accused me of falsifying the record. He reminds me of one of those instruments which, when wound up, cannot be stopped until it runs down and the last clanging note of which makes a greater noise and at greater speed than any preceding revolution. My hon. friend commenced, just after he was wound up, by saying: you said what was not so, but I do not accuse you of doing it wilfully, as you had a certain bias naturally in your own mind which came out in your statement, and, therefore, your statement is not quite correct. But before he got to the last he put it in plain language, and declared that the Minister of Finance had deliberately falsified the record. What record? My hon. friend talks of records. What records? He had in his hands a document. Presented where? To the American Senate. What was the document? A letter. From whom? Mr. Blaine. My hon. friend had before him the statement made a year ago in this House, on the authority of a Minister, in the presence of the two-fellow Ministers who went to Washington—a statement which is longer and fuller than that made by Mr. Blaine. He chose to ignore that evidence and to take the other as the sole record and the sole evidence. Does it make any intrinsic difference whether I made my statement in the privacy of my room and presented it in writing to the House, or whether I stated it in the Budget speech, as my report, made here as a responsible Minister of the Crown, weighing my words and making my statement, as I believed it to be true? What fairness was there in taking Mr. Blaine's letter as the only record, as if my statement were not equally a matter of record? The hon. gentleman in his speech said that Mr. Blaine in his letter included every single thing that took place. How did he know? He does not know. All the probabilities are against Mr. Blaine having written in that letter a record of every thing that took place. As a matter of fact, he did not write one-fifth part of what took place. He recorded no protocols; there were none. He simply placed a letter in the hands of the President, giving in a few sentences his recollection of the conference as bearing on the request of Congress and of what he should report. That was a record, and mine is equally a record, and a fuller and longer one than that. It is reserved for a Canadian, and a person in Opposition, to declare the statement of a Canadian co-member false, and take without question the statement of Mr. Blaine!

Mr. CHARLTON. Do we understand the hon. gentleman to assert that the statement made by Mr. Blaine is false?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has risen in a very stately way and has intoned in a very grave voice, but he is altogether ahead of the record. If he will sit still, I will tell him.

Mr. CHARLTON. Say yes or no.

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, I think the House will take it for granted that my hon. friend is wrong in saying that Blaine's letter detailed everything that took place. Does he still hold to that assertion? Again let me ask my hon. friend if he did not say that I probably might be a little misled from bias in my own direction. Am I alone human, and was Mr. Blaine alone superior to human frailty? Was there no humanity and bias in the Secretary of the United States, which might incline him to give a report in the line of his own wishes? Honestly and fairly, was he not as liable thereto as myself, and yet his statement is taken as a strictly unbiassed report and mine a falsification of the record, unworthy of credence. Now, my hon. friend put a question to me a little while ago, which I will answer, for he (Mr. Davies) said—I can read his words if he doubts me—that the Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, emphatically denied Mr. Foster's statement. Will my hon. friend point out one sentence of Mr. Blaine's which denies one single statement made by me? Put the two records side by side. I say more than Mr. Blaine did; Mr. Blaine says less than I did. I said everything that Mr. Blaine said—I do not mean just in exactly the same language, but I treated every one of the points he treated—but he did not treat all of the points that I did. Mr. Blaine stated that the first proposal made was for reciprocity in natural products, with such extensions and qualifications as the altered circumstances required. I stated that; we agree in that point. Mr. Blaine stated that a list of manufactured articles was to be included along with that of natural products. I stated that the line must be in natural products and manufactures generally. There is a divergence, but that is all. Mr. Blaine stated that there must be discrimination against Great Britain: I stated there must be discrimination against Great Britain. In all these particulars we are exactly alike or we are very close together. For, the rest, I make statements and deal with subjects which Mr. Blaine does not touch, but which were discussed in the conference that took place, and discussed for some considerable time. Now, I ask my hon. friend, whether he has been quite fair to me in representing Mr. Blaine as having recorded all that took place, as giving the only record that should be relied upon, and refusing to take my statement as a record of the case, in refusing to look upon my statement as worthy of credence, at least, equally with that of Mr. Blaine. At least he should give me the credit that he felt disposed to give in the first part of his address, when he said that I had not wilfully misrepresented. I know that when the hon. gentleman reads what he has said and thinks over the matter, he will feel that he has been unfair to me in that respect, as no man should be to his fellow member, sitting opposite to him in the House of Commons, where all men are supposed to be gentlemen. Now, Sir, I have not one word or one syllable to retract of the statement I made last year on that point. I stand by it: I stand by it entirely; I stand by it without any mental reservation; I stand by it in the presence of my colleagues who were there with me. And I ask this House to judge of the sense of fairness of that hon. gentleman who can find the only authoritative statement on the part of the stranger and refuse all credence or credit for honesty to his fellow citizen and his fellow member. Now, Sir, I wish to say a word or two in closing, with reference to the general subject. I find that I have been kept close to the points which have been made to-night or recently, and that I have not touched the general points which I had hoped to deal with, which were made during the debate. I close with this simple thought, and I ask the attention of my fellow members on this side of the House, and I ask the attention of the country as well. These hon. gentlemen may not be very well agreed as to what they want, but they are perfectly agreed as to what they are against. When you come to sum up the expressions of the foremost men as to what they want there is a wide divergence of opinion among them. They agree as to their positive faith in very few principles, and in other respects there is a wide divergence. The hon. gentleman for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) believes in unrestricted reciprocity; he wants access to the United States markets, and believes that it is the only salvation for Canada in the line of development and permanent prosperity. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is determined to devote his life to getting unrestricted reciprocity. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) is less definite and precise. He has found out that it is the best sometimes not to say too much or say it too positively, so this time he harks back considerably, and he sums up his policy in this wonderfully positive and definite form: "We desire the broadest treaty possible consistent with the commercial and political independence of Canada." The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) had a little good humoured chaff with me because, he said, I was indefinite in my statement; but he capped the climax of indefiniteness. He declared: "I want the freest possible trade with the United States, consistent with the dignity, honour and stability of both countries." He is much dissatisfied with me because I stated that I would do the best for the whole country. He determined to be very definite, and this is his definition. I can see my hon. friend going from this House and meeting a farmer, one of those depressed farmers of whom he speaks, and the farmer says: Mr. Paterson, you are just down from the Legislative halls. I know you are a very learned man, and a very famous politician; I know your keenness of vision and your breadth of comprehension. I want to know whether you are going to get me the market of the United States? And the hon. gentleman will satisfy the burning thirst of that poor, depressed farmer by saying: All I can tell you is that I want the freest possible trade with the United States consistent with the dignity, honour and stability of both countries. Then he will meet one of those prosperous manufacturers of his own town, who will come to him with anxiety in his face, and say: Now, Mr. Paterson, what is to be the end of this matter: are we going to have reciprocity, and if we have it, as you say we must, are we to be mercilessly exposed to competition with the United States? And the good member will draw himself up to his full height and say: I cannot tell you whether it will be that way or not; but I can tell you my faith and creed—I want the freest possible trade with the United States consistent with the dignity, honour and stability of both countries. And so he will satisfy every one of his constituents with that most definite and positive statement and, if in his town they do not put up a monument sacred to the great N. P., I am sure they will put up a monument sacred to the positive clearness and definite conception of the great W. P. The member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is the most conservative of all. He says he is not for revolution, he would not hurt an existing industry. He wants a custom revenue and would like to see the man who could be elected in any constituency on a policy of direct taxation. He wants no independence or annexation talk, and he thinks that man no friend of Canada who talks independence or annexation at this time. Yet he has sitting very closely to him a gentleman who has been talking independence in the last few months. And the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has two planks in his policy. One is that legislation should be had to increase the profits of the farmers—

Mr. TARTE. I never said or wrote anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. No; let me have a little conversation with my hon. friend. If my hon. friend will turn up the "Hansard" and look at the report of his speech, and if he will look at the manifesto that he read and which he gave to his county, he will find these two statements in it, or else I cannot read French.

Mr. TARTE. Perhaps that is it.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps that is the reason. I will leave it to him. In that manifesto he said that he is going in for such legislation as will raise the value of the farmer's products, and that Mr. Laurier, if he comes into power, will leave two or three columns still standing in the temple of protection.

Mr. TARTE. I never wrote or never said anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it must be my bad French. I will look that up, and if I find I am wrong I will withdraw it with great pleasure. That is what my hon. friends say on the negative side. Now, I want to draw the attention of the House to what these gentlemen say when they come to the positive side. Here there is no hesitation; there is no lack of definiteness. Their propaganda is plain and firm, and I want it to ring from one end to the other of this country. What is their propaganda? The hon. member for South Oxford says:

Our policy from first to last has been to destroy this villainous system of protection; I care not whether we cut its head off, or cut its tail off, or cut it in two in the middle—what I want to do is to destroy it.

There is no indefiniteness about that. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says:

Protection, Sir, notwithstanding all that may be said in favour of it, is neither more or less than a species of slavery. It is a system as indefensible, upon the broad principle of justice, as slavery. It is absolutely and unconditionally slavery.

That is plain; no round-about method in that. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) says:

We have been attacking this policy year after year. It is a cursed system, accursed of God and man. It must be cut down, and not allowed to cumber the ground.

And to make a long story short, the hon. leader of the Opposition declared to-night that his policy was the destruction of every vestige of protection, by bringing the tariff down to a simple revenue basis. Now, Sir, I am glad to have read these statements, and I am glad to have them so heartily applauded by hon. gentlemen opposite. They will not hereafter try to get away from these expressions of their opinions. Now, I ask my hon. friends in this House who believe in the principle of protection, but who may have some grievance now and then, and here and there, with the tariff; I ask them to weigh these assertions; for whatever the proposition that these gentlemen are putting before the House to-night for us to vote upon, it is with the spirit and the purpose of utterly destroying the principle of protection in this country. A man may have a grudge, may have an objection, to some particular excrescence upon the tariff; but he may be at the same time a firm believer in the principle of protection, and may wish to see it survive in this country. I warn such men as those in this House and in the country from playing into the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite on the ground that their present proposition is a harmless one. By one way we have come up to our large commercial and industrial development in this country. We have in these last few years done wonders in the development of our industrial life. Strangers who come here, and people who study our history, acknowledge it frankly and freely. We who live in this country know the blessings that have come from this policy. It may be a fact that to-day there are excrescences upon this policy, that there are details which ought to be carefully examined, and which ought to be made right, that there are certain respects in which the tariff should be reformed. Hon. gentlemen opposite have cast a doubt upon the good faith of the Government in respect of honestly revising the tariff. I stand here to-night to say that what I stated in this regard was stated with the consent of all my colleagues, and in perfect good faith. I ask the country outside to watch carefully, and not be misled by any phrases that these gentlemen may use; but to understand that it is a struggle in which the existence of the principle of protection in this country is at stake. If hon. gentlemen opposite, having set the battle on these lines, push it to the front, and push it to the finish, this country may wake up some fine morning and find its industries destroyed, its factories closed, its employment of labour discontinued, and multiplied disasters coming upon many a section of this country from Cape Breton to British Columbia. In the proposition before us to-night they put it mildly. It is a little economy, a little revision, and a little of something else; but you must look at the motive that inspires them. A British sovereign held out in the hand and placed within your palm is a good thing. You can buy food and clothing with it; but the same British sovereign pressed tightly upon the opening of your wind-pipe will bring death, and bring it quickly. Outside of these assertions of ultimate purpose on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite the proposition before the House may combine features which are in themselves harmless, some of which may be right; but it is a coin which is meant to strangle the principle of protection and destroy it in this country. I ask hon. gentlemen to weigh carefully these matters; to weigh them when they come before the people; to have them put right upon every hustings, and in every assembly in this country, so that people may vote with their eyes open to the full consequences of their action; and if, after doing that, it be found that this battle, pressed to the finish, as it will be, results in a victory for the principle of free trade rather than protection, so be it: but I have a firm and abiding faith that the way to victory does not lie by that path.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I purpose to begin the few observations that I intend addressing to the House at this hour by some notice of the speech which the Minister of Finance has made in reply to my hon. friend, and to some other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. The hon. Finance Minister began his speech by informing the House that there was neither cogency nor novelty in the speech which was addressed to the House by my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition. The speech which the hon. gentleman himself has made in reply to my hon. friend shows that whatever that hon. gentleman may have said at the outset he felt, after all, that whether the speech had cogency or novelty it was one well calculated to seriously impress, not only the minds of the House, but the people of the country. Sir, the hon. gentleman informed the House that while my hon. friend had talked broadly in favour of the principles of free trade, after all, when his speech and the resolution came to be read, they simply meant reciprocity with the neighbouring republic, and a protective tariff against all the rest of the world. Sir, if the policy marked out by my hon. friend is of the character which the hon. gentleman described in the beginning of his speech this evening, it would not have been so strongly opposed by him. If hon. members will read the resolution on which the House will be called on to vote, it will be seen that it is directly in opposition to the views which the Minister of Finance attributed to the leader of the Opposition. We are not calling on the people of Canada, or on this House as representing the people, to impose a high tax against our trade with all the rest of mankind, in order that we may establish free and unrestricted trade with our neighbours to the south of us. We are asking for a reduction of taxation; we are asking for economy in the management of public affairs. We say that the government of this country may be carried on for a very much smaller sum than that now annually taken out of the pockets of the people for that purpose, and we further say that the taxation of the country should be reduced, and that Parliament should, with as great a degree of rapidity as circumstances will permit, approach to the principles of a revenue tariff. We ask that taxation shall be imposed on the people only to meet the necessities of the Government, and that large sums shall not be taken every year out of the pockets of those least able to contribute, in order that it may become the capital of men who are engaged in other industrial pursuits. The hon. gentleman undertook to give an account of the emigration from Canada to the United States. He said that the trend of emigration was westward with respect to the hunger for land, and southward in respect to seeking employment in the manufacturing establishments of the United States. I will by and by refer to the fact that those same statements were made before hon. gentlemen reached the Treasury benches, and that views which were at that time expressed declared that if hon. gentlemen had an opportunity of adopting a policy, which was then designated the National Policy, they would put an end to emigration either southward or westward, and would adopt a policy that would not only retain the whole of our own population within the limits of Canada, but they would succeed in securing for this country a very large number of people, and a very large amount of capital now on the other side of the Atlantic. The hon. gentleman, in referring to emigration from Canada—for hon. gentlemen can no longer pursue the course they followed a few years ago, and deny there is any expatriation of the population of the country—undertook to account for it by saying that we had no western country open for this population to settle. But we have had the North-west since 1870; no less than twenty-three years have elapsed since that territory was acquired, and since we have been in possession of that country, nearly the whole of this emigration from Canada, which has so developed during the last twelve or fourteen years, has taken place; and so the House will see, if the hon. gentleman himself refuses to see, that that explanation will not account for the fact he has mentioned. Then the hon. gentleman said that the farmers of the United States were as badly off as those in Canada, and that the land-owners of the United Kingdom were even worse off, and he denied altogether the statement of my hon. friend as to the circumstances which led to this condition in the United Kingdom. The hon. gentleman said that it may be true that lands have depreciated in value to the extent of 25 per cent, but he said the cotton mills have not been the occasion of this, that the taxes upon all products of manufacturing industry have not been the cause of this. I dissent from the observations of the hon. gentleman. I say that when the Government adopted a policy which takes a very large proportion of the earnings of the people out of their pockets, a part of which only finds its way into the public treasury, they produced a state of things which stimulated emigration from Canada, and which made 1,000,000 of our people citizens of the United States. The hon. gentleman said that the water the people drink is not taxed, that the wood growing in the forest is not taxed. It is fortunate for the country that the Minister of Finance has not carried his taxation that far. But if by such a policy large fortunes could have been placed in the pockets of a portion of the population, there is no doubt whatever that the same policy which has been adopted with respect to every other industry in the country would have been adopted with respect to the water that runs and the wood of the forest that grows in the soil. In most countries where the principle of free trade is recognized, the discovery of rich mines is an advantage. It is the means of giving employment to the population, and affords an opportunity for the investment of capital; but according to the principle of the hon. gentleman, every discovery made of a natural mineral resource of the country becomes a misfortune to the people. It is an excuse for imposing an additional tax. How much better off would they have been if no iron mines could have been found in Nova Scotia? They would have escaped the enormous taxation at this time imposed on them; and I say the whole policy of the Minister of Finance has been this, that the discovery of new resources has been made an excuse for the imposition on the people of additional burdens. The hon. gentleman has referred to the condition of affairs in England, as if there was any analogy between the land of England and the land of this country. What was the condition of things in England? The policy of protection when it existed there was in the interest of the agriculturist. The country did not produce the quantity of food required; what was required for consumption was far in excess of what the country could produce. What was the result? A tax was imposed on every agricultural product brought in, and an additional price, by this artificial process, was put on the products of the land within the United Kingdom. The land was increased beyond its proper value, and of course when that system was changed, the land decreased in value, and improvements in the modes of intercourse between nations to-day and the diminution in the cost of transportation have produced a further depreciation in the value of land. If the hon. gentleman's theory were correct, the proper course for the people of the United Kingdom to adopt would be to re-establish the corn laws, to impose taxation on food, and they would by such a policy again increase the value of lands once more. That is the policy which the Minister of Finance has adopted, but it has not been adopted on this side of the Atlantic in the interests of the agricultural population, and what free trade did for the lands of the United Kingdom, protection is doing for the land in British North America. I have no doubt whatever as to that fact, and the Minister of Finance, by the policy he is adopting, is really diminishing the value of real estate in the older provinces of Canada. The hon. gentleman further said: We do not tax the agricultural population. Why, he said, the Opposition claim to be the friends of the farmer. So we are. We wish to adopt a policy, not conferring upon them any special advantage, but in the race for life we wish to give them an equal opportunity with persons engaged in other pursuits. That is what the hon. gentleman has denied them. He says there is no tax upon the wood ; but there is a tax upon the axe with which the wood is cut ; there is a tax upon the harness of the horses which draw the wood from the forests, and there is a tax upon the sleigh upon which the wood is put. There is scarcely an article which is used in connection with agricultural pursuits which is not subject to a very heavy burden of taxation. The hon. gentleman has mentioned a number of things upon which he says the farmer is not taxed. But what are they ? They are the natural products of the farm. The hon. gentleman has told us how the farmers are clad. You would suppose almost that the farmer clothed himself with the fleece as it came from the sheep, without it even being woven or spun, or any other industry spent upon it beyond the mere shearing. The farmers may perhaps dress so down in the county which he represents ; but I fancy he will find that the agricultural population of the other portions of the Dominion are clad in quite another way, and that in proportion to their income, the farmers of Canada are quite as large consumers of imported goods as any other class, and that in proportion to their incomes they bear larger burdens than any other portion of the people of this country. The hon. gentleman told us that the burden of taxation is really very little. Why, he says : there is a tax upon tobacco and liquor, and we get $10,000,000 in that way, and that tax you pay voluntarily, and you are not obliged to pay it. He also said that there were $2,500,000 tax on luxuries ; but the people were not obliged to indulge in luxuries, and there were $12,500,000 altogether for articles upon which we were not obliged to pay any tax. I think that a large majority, even of his supporters, will not agree with the hon. gentleman even in this matter. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, referring to one feature of taxation, said that taxation is an evil, and the Finance Minister looked upon that statement as a most extraordinary one, and as one which he had never heard before. It was a novel declaration in the field of political economy to the Finance Minister, and so the leader of the Opposition was dealt with as if he had been guilty of some sacrilege. Now I suppose that there is no difference to the man who pays the money whether $10 are lost on the highway or whether they are taken for the purpose of taxation. He is personally that much worse off whatever way it is taken. If the taxes are applied wisely, he may derive, as a member of the community, some advantage from the taxation, but, so far as the individual is concerned, the assumption by every writer of political economy with which I am acquainted is that taxation is so much absolutely taken from the resources of the individual, and that he is, by the mere act of taxation, that much worse off than he would have been if no such tax had been imposed. So the rule is this : That the Government ought never to take more in the form of taxes from the pockets of the people than are required absolutely for the purposes of the state. The hon. gentleman takes a good deal more than that. He insists upon a policy of protection, and by a policy of protection you take many millions of dollars that never find their way into the public treasury. The hon. gentleman insists upon a tax upon sugar. He does not receive a dollar into the public treasury from that tax, but he takes a very large amount out of the pockets of the consumers of sugar, and puts it into the pockets of those who are engaged in refining sugar within the limits of Canada. So far as that is concerned, I have never been able to see in what way that contributes to the production of wealth. If the hon. gentleman, by that arrangement, succeeds in taking $2,000,000 from the people of Canada, and puts that two millions in the hands of the sugar refiners, he is not adding a dollar to the wealth of the country. He has made many hundreds of thousands of people a little poorer, but he has made one manufacturing establishment a good deal wealthier. The principle which underlies that tax underlies every tax that is imposed for protective purposes. The Finance Minister says that my hon. friend beside me is wrong in saying that you cannot create property by taxation, and he undertakes to show how certain portions of the lands on the borders of the Bay of Fundy that are submerged by the tide, may be reclaimed and made valuable. I would call that, not taxation, but investment : That is land speculation. It is not an act of the Government. It is true that Government, like any individual, may engage in a speculation of that sort. It may be wise, or it may be otherwise, but whether it is wise or otherwise, it is, after all, not an act of Government, and it is not taxation in the proper sense. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the Hudson Bay Company's purchase. We obtained a large area of land to which the Hudson Bay Company made claim, and the hon. gentleman says we paid for that, and he calls that taxation. I say it is not taxation in the proper sense. It is simply a purchase by the Government for which an equivalent was received, just the same as if it had been made, by a private party. But let us take the tax of 40 per cent on cottons. The individual consumer pays this tax. The public do not get it, but there is no doubt the manufacturer gets it, and in proportion as you stimulate the manufacturer you have discouraged the consumer, and the hon. gentleman will see that this is taxation. It is a thing for which, from our point of view, there is no justification whatever. Our resolution is against that policy. It is against the policy of continuing to levy money from the great mass of the population for the benefit of the few. Mr. Hallam, in his work on the Middle Ages, tells of a man who lived in luxury in some point on the Rhine, and no one knew just where his income came from; but he points to the fact that five roads met at his castle, and that a great many wealthy persons travelled in that direction, and so the matter was easily explained and understood. Now the Finance Minister has adopted a policy something like that. He stands where the roads meet: he interferes with commerce; he levies tribute upon the commerce, not for the purpose of encouraging trade, but for the purpose of hindering it. Now, Sir, our resolution does not point to any violent or extraordinary or sudden change. We ask that the Parliament of this country, which claims to represent the people, shall put itself on the right way, and begin its journey in the right direction, in order that it may progress in the right direction as fast as the circumstances of the country will permit. The hon. gentleman said they were not now engaged in interfering with the policy of protection. No, Sir, that policy is to be upheld. The hon. gentleman's speech to-night must, I think, have satisfied everybody that the course taken by the Government during the last fifteen years, is a course which they intend to persist in, and that whatever inclination they may have had to depart from that course, they have been sufficiently stimulated of late to adhere to it; and he states that they will be engaged in lopping off the mouldering branches and cutting off the suckers, as he calls them. What these suckers are, he did not say; but I suppose that articles on which there is a duty of 40 or 50 per cent might come under that designation; and if he proposes to cut out all the suckers from the industries of this country, he will have before him the task of uprooting almost everything that has been planted under the auspices of the Government since the adoption of this policy. The hon. gentleman told us that in the negotiation of a reciprocity treaty it was proposed that there should be an assimilation of tariffs. The hon. gentleman also referred to the interviews which he had with Mr. Blaine. Now, Sir, I have read the interviews with Mr. Blaine and Mr. Foster, and Mr. Blaine says that he never insisted on an assimilation of tariffs, that he did not propose anything of the sort, did not desire it, did not think it was in the interest of the two countries. But the hon. gentleman refers to it as if he himself had not been personally informed that no such thing was insisted upon or was regarded as a necessary condition of a wide measure of reciprocity with the neighbouring republic. The hon. gentleman also refers to the statement of Mr. Blake, and he says that the views expressed by Mr. Blake are conclusive so far as they point against the Opposition, but that Mr. Blake's views as to the tendency of protection are of no value whatever. Well, Sir, I think the hon. gentleman is guilty of the very thing he complains of, unfairly complains of, in my hon. friend in quoting the census. My hon. friend took the census returns so far as they pointed against the Government as conclusive evidence of the condition of things, because the Government would not make or secure, under the instructions they had given, a return that would be detrimental to themselves. In so far as these census returns told against the Administration, they told against them in a less marked degree than, taken by a neutral body, they would be likely to do. Now, I have just this to say about Mr. Blake's criticism; it was the one point which I think was altogether overlooked in that document, that is, the influence of contentment produced by prosperity. If you have a prosperous population you will have a contented population, and if you have a contented population you will have a population altogether unfavourable and inimical to revolutionary projects; and so I think, so far from a reasonable and fair measure of reciprocity tending to produce political or revolutionary changes, if it contributed to the general prosperity of the country, as I think it would, it would have the very opposite effect. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has referred to an abortive treaty that was negotiated on behalf of Canada by Mr. George Brown and Sir Edward Thornton, and he referred to that treaty as if it were a treaty that conclusively established the fact that discrimination was not to exist against any of the products of the United Kingdom. There is no doubt of this, that there is no provision in that treaty in favour of discrimination. Nobody asserted that there was. That Mr. Brown did not desire discrimination at all, I know well. That Mr. Mackenzie did not desire that any article that was put on the free list so far as the United States were concerned should be put on the taxed list as between Canada and Great Britain, is, I think, also true. But the whole point is this, that there is nothing in that treaty that guards against the possibility of discrimination, and it was on that ground that it was made the subject of reference to the Colonial Secretary, and that the Colonial Secretary referred the matter to Lord Derby. Lord Derby expressed his own personal views, but as it was a matter relating to the Board of Trade more than to his department, he referred it to the Board of Trade, and the Board of Trade expressed the opinion that if those articles were made the subjects of taxation as between Canada and Great Britain, that was no ground for objecting to the treaty. The hon. gentleman will see, if he looks at the instructions to the Governor-General, that before 1874 the Governor-General was not permitted to give his sanction to any measure in which discriminating duties were imposed; but after 1874 no such limitation existed, and a greater degree of freedom was allowed to the self-governing colonies than at any previous period. Now, I am not at this moment discussing the question whether discrimination as against Great Britain would be wise or not. I leave that altogether out of consideration. I am calling the attention of the House to this fact, that by the declaration of the Board of Trade at the time that treaty was under negotiation it was shown that the Government of England was not prepared to intervene and prevent a treaty being consummated, because that treaty imposed a tax on English goods while it admitted American goods of the same character free. Every person must know that how far the English would be interested in a matter of that sort, apart from the Government, would depend on the articles that would be put upon the list. Everybody can see that to put on the free list agricultural implements, and a number of other articles that are manufactures of the United States, with discrimination against every other country, would not be a policy that would in the smallest degree interest either the people of the United Kingdom or the people of any other portion of Christendom. And, Sir, that is one of the objections I make to the course taken by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, that when they had an opportunity of negotiating a treaty, they did not take the first step to see whether a treaty really could be negotiated that would be acceptable to the people of this country or not. Now, let me read the extract from the report of the Board of Trade again, which the Minister did not read, and which shows very clearly that, whatever opinions may be expressed, the British Government at that day were not prepared to interfere with the commercial policy adopted by Canada in its negotiations with the neighbouring republic:

They ask a renewal of the treaty of 1854 for twenty-one years, including the fisheries with the addition of the additional free admission of salt, manufactures of wood, iron or steel articles, or of these jointly, agricultural implements and a few other trifling articles. To this no objection can be taken, whatever criticisms may have been made on the original reciprocity treaty, on the ground that Canada was setting up differential duties in favour of the United States, both against this country and countries with which we have most favoured nation treaties.

This objection is not based on the assumption, as hon. gentlemen see, there is no such assumption in the treaty. That is not the ground, but it is that supposing the objection were true, it is no ground for objecting to the ratification of the treaty, for the extract continues:

No such objection can be taken now.

These words show that the Government, at that time, had departed altogether from the course they had hitherto followed. The hon. gentleman complained that my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) had stated that when the Ministers went to the country in 1891, they represented that they would certainly get a treaty of reciprocity with the neighbouring republic. Supposing such words were never used, what inference is to be drawn from what was done? Parliament was elected for five years. Parliament had not sat out its full term, and dissolution had taken place. For what purpose? To fail in the negotiation of a treaty? Was it not assumed that the negotiations were to be successful? Did they not say that they did not want behind them a moribund Parliament? Why, Sir, it would no doubt have been logical, in better form, and more defensible, if the treaty had been first negotiated and an election then had to see whether the treaty met with the approval of the people or not. But before the negotiations were initiated, the proposal was to have an election for the purpose of having the support of the country in favour of the treaty. What was the issue then that the Government wished to make at the elections? It was: Are you ready to sustain us and bestow on us your confidence in order that we may negotiate a treaty of reciprocity with the neighbouring republic? Then there was a further statement to which my hon. friend referred, and which has been referred to again and again, in this House and out of it, that the Government represented that these negotiations were initiated by Mr. Blaine and by his colleagues. I have just one word to say more on this subject before I leave it. The hon. gentleman has complained that his statement made in the House upon his return from Washington was not taken as conclusive. Well, I care not what may be the high character for veracity which the hon. gentleman possesses. I claim, on behalf of this Parliament, as a constitutional right belonging to both Houses, to be put in possession of what passed at these negotiations—to know what report was made to Her Majesty's Foreign Secretary or to the Governor-General—before being called upon to discuss this matter in the House. It was a most unconstitutional and most improper proceeding. It was such a proceeding as had never been adopted in the mother country, and when the hon. gentleman came before this House and made a statement, and asked us to accept that statement implicitly, he did what was unprecedented. He did what a treasurer would do if he were to say to his employers: Gentlemen, the state of your account is so and so, and you have such a balance on hand; you know I am an upright gentleman, of high personal integrity, but I kept no books and paid out your money. That is my recollection, and I want you to take my statement of the facts. I say it would be a preposterous proposition, and no matter what confidence you may have had in the man to whom you may have committed the trust, you would not for a moment entertain a proposition of that sort; and the Parliament of the country was wanting in its duty to the people when it permitted the Minister of Finance to make a statement of what passed at Washington, without laying on the Table, for the information of the House, the report that was made to the Foreign Secretary or the Governor-General. To show that the statement of the hon. gentleman, even to-night, is not in accord with that which was made at Washington, and to show the propriety of having full information on the subject, and not simply the personal recollection of an hon. gentleman several months after, let me read an extract from the statement of the Secretary of the United States, Mr. Foster. He said :

During the reciprocity conference last winter, said Mr. Blaine did not state that in a reciprocity arrangement a uniform tariff would be necessary for both Canada and the United States, nor much less that it should be on the line of the United States tariff. He did ask that the schedule should not be confined to natural products.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, it was to be a schedule, and it was to contain a specific number of articles. It was not a demand on the part of the United States that every product of the industry of the United States should be put on that list. He asked that the schedule should not be confined to natural products, but should include a correct list of manufactured goods, and that the reciprocity should be confined to Canada and the United States, and because of these conditions the negotiations were fruitless. I say again, until the hon. gentleman had entered on negotiations and had ascertained what manufactured products the United States desired to put on that list, he was in no position to say, assuming there were differential duties against the mother country, whether there would be anything really of that character or not, and so I say that the Government of Canada, in the representations they made at the elections and in the negotiations which took place last winter, have been guilty of a grave breach of duty to the people of this country, and on that ground alone should be censured by this House. I have a few things to say with regard to the census. The hon. gentleman has referred to the census, and complains that any doubt should be thrown upon its accuracy. Why, Sir, look at the returns that are made. If the hon. gentleman will look at the figures for the city of London, he will see it stated that there are upwards of 800 manufacturing establishments in that city. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman cannot find half that number. I believe this has been done : That every woman employed by a merchant tailor to make vests or pantaloons at home, that every one employed in a private house in whatever part of the city, is counted as a separate manufacturing establishment, and that the houses in which they live are charged against the capital invested in manufacturing industries in this country. That is my strong conviction. If that is so it is a gross fraud upon the people of this country. It renders these census returns utterly valueless, and this House will be wanting in its duty if it allows any extra-judicial or any extraordinary oath, unwarranted by the law or uncalled for by public policy, to intervene between it and the duties devolving upon it in behalf of the electors of this country. Sir, let me call the attention of the House to some figures given by the hon. gentleman himself to show how utterly valueless these statistics are. In the census of 1881 the wages paid by manufacturing establishments is given at $59,429,000, and the value of materials worked up in these factories at $179,918,000, or $239,347,000 paid for wages and material. Now, the capital employed is $165,000,000, so you would have, to cover interest on capital and wear and tear of machinery and profits, about $70,000,000, or 42½ per cent. Now mark this, that for every dollar of capital, $1.05 of raw material is used in 12 months, and there were employed as labourers in the manufactories during that period 254,935 individuals. Now, I come to the return at the end of the next decade. In the census of 1891 it is stated that $99,762,000 was paid as wages, and $256,000,000 for material, or a total of $355,745,000 for wages and material. Capital is represented at $353,000,000, and profits, interest and repairs at $119,710,000, or 32½ per cent. There are employed 367,935 hands. If the same number of hands were employed in proportion to the capital as in the previous decade, there would be 666,000, so it is perfectly clear there is some thing wrong. Then when you come to the raw material you have for 12 months, 60 cents worth of raw material worked for every dollar of capital invested, as against $1.05 for the previous decade. Now, if you were to take the capital looking at the number of men employed as being in proportion to the number of hands employed, there would be $238,000,000 instead of $363,000,000, so there would be spurious stock of $114,000,000. Now, I do not think that begins to represent the discrepancy between the actual state of things and the state of things as represented, because, if, as I infer from looking at the returns from various localities which I know, every individual employed by a manufacturing establishment and doing work at home is counted as a separate establishment, and the value of the house as part of the capital invested, it will, no doubt, account for this enormous increase of capital. This shows that the whole plan is purely misleading, that it is not honest, that it is not a fair report, and thus it is utterly impossible to form any idea approaching accuracy as to what amount of capital is used in manufacturing enterprises. Sir, it is represented here that there has been an actual increase in the capital invested of $187,000,000, whereas if you were to take off the $114,000,000 of clearly spurious stock or capital, the increase would be $72,700,000, and I am perfectly sure from what I know—and I know many places in the west—that there is no such increase. Why, Sir, I will venture to say that the city of London, in the decade ending 1891, employed many hundreds of hands fewer and had many thousands of dollars less capital invested in manufacturing enterprises than in the previous decade. And the same is true of a great many other places in the west as well as the city of London. Now, Sir, I am not going at this late hour to take up the time of the House in discussing the statements which are worthless and misleading which the hon gentleman has made. He undertook, by taking the year 1879 in one case and the year 1878 in another, to show how trade has grown during the past ten years. The hon. gentleman took the very highest amount in recent years and the lowest amount in the preceding period. Why, Sir, a statement of that sort has no value, there is no means of ascertaining what the progress of the country was from these figures, and if you go back to the year 1872, or 1873 or 1874, you will see that, leaving out the North-west, which was not counted in that period, every other province shows in recent periods a smaller trade than there was in the years which I have mentioned. And so the hon. gentleman has undertaken, by the manipulation of the Trade and Navigation Returns to show that a prosperity exists which has no existence in fact. Now, Sir, let me say I am in favour of the resolution which my hon. friend has moved. I think that it is time that the people of this country should be allowed to retain possession of their own property. You do not do that. Why, if the Government exercises the right of eminent domain and takes a man's property you give him some compensation, but when you put on a high protective tariff in order to interfere with foreign trade and restrict the markets of those who are obliged to find a market abroad and when you increase the price of the goods which the people are obliged to consume which are produced at home, you are taking from the pockets of the consuming population of this country millions of dollars for which nothing is given in return. You are appropriating one man's property and making a present of it to another. That is a business in which a government ought not to engage. Still, I admit, we have established industries in this country and any change should be made so as to produce as little disturbance as possible. But it is absolutely necessary that a change should take place, we should get out of the groove in which we have been working, by which property has been depreciated in value, by which population has been lost, and the energies of the people crippled, and leave every man in this country to be the architect of his own fortunes. Let each man judge as to the industry or business in which he shall engage. Let his success or his failure depend upon his diligence and attention to his business and do not undertake, by levying contributions upon thousands of people in this country, to enable the few to succeed without regard to their business ability, protecting them against the possibility of bankruptcy no matter how reckless they may be, no matter with how little judgment they may manage their business affairs. The sooner that we throw every man upon his own resources and give him an opportunity of becoming the architect of his own fortune, the sooner will we have entered upon the highway to prosperity. For these reasons I support cordially the resolution of my hon. friend. I am in favour of economy in the conduct of the Government, I am in favour of the reduction of taxation. I am opposed to permitting a government to having anything like a surplus. I wish that they shall constantly carry on the affairs of this country under the pressure of scanty revenue, so as to put an end to profitless enterprises, and to prevent the waste of money upon public works and undertakings that can never do any thing else than impoverish the people of this country.

Mr. METCALFE. It is with no ordinary degree of trepidation that I rise to address this national assembly, knowing, as I do, that I am the successor, as the representative of Kingston, of the greatest statesman that Canada has yet produced. I remember at this time that that great statesman, who was the leader of the Conservative party in this country, was the father of the National Policy, or was in a great degree the promotor of that policy. I take great pleasure to-night in speaking a word in favour of that policy and against the amendment offered by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I cannot regard this amendment as made with a desire to do good to the country. We know that the motive which prompts it is the same motive that would prompt the hon. member for South Oxford to offer a vote of want of confidence in this Government. Had he said that this Government does not deserve the support of the House, and put the question fairly and squarely in that way, then there would be some reason why we could give a fair vote upon it. But he has constructed this amendment in such a way that I have no hesitation in recording my vote against it. In order that there may be no mistake as to the grounds on which I was elected to this Parliament, I will read the short address which I spread among the electors in the city of Kingston :

MY DEAR SIR,—As the nominee of the Liberal-Conservatives of this city, I respectfully solicit your vote and influence to secure my return as your representative to the House of Commons of Canada. I have an abiding faith in the principle of Canada for the Canadian people as laid down by our departed chief, Sir John A. Macdonald. If elected, I shall do my utmost to support the policy of protection to native industries and national interests, and shall give unswerving loyalty to the perpetuation of British connection.

Now, Sir, I think I am only carrying out the policy outlined in that address, in recording my vote against this amendment. I oppose this amendment with all my heart. I can see no good that we can do by pulling down the National Policy. I believe that it has helped all classes of the people of Canada, and I think it will continue to help all classes. The Finance Minister to-night has clearly shown that our opponents are wrong, and that this Government is right on this question. If I were able, with a great deal more power, with a great deal more oratory, with a great deal more precision of utterance, to speak on behalf of the National Policy, I would be delighted to do so ; but in a very feeble way I propose to consider, for a few moments, the features of the National Policy that I think are for the benefit of the Canadian people. Now, Sir, it cannot be truthfully denied that the National Policy, since its introduction, has deserved the support of this country. The hon. leader of the Opposition told us to-night that the National Policy needed an apology from the Government side of the House. I desire to say from my place in this House that the National Policy needs no apology at the hands of members of the Government or of those who support the Government. The National Policy finds its own vindication in the progress of the Canadian people. There is one portion of the history of Canada of late years that needs an apology, and that portion of our history is written in dark lines, from 1874 till 1878. Those were dark days in Canadian annals, when the destinies of Canada were in the hands of the hon. member for South Oxford and his friends. If anybody needs an apology, it is the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Opposition benches in this House. When we come to view the National Policy in its right light we find that it has the power to produce good for all classes of the people of Canada. They talk about cheap food. What good is cheap food if human labour is cheaper still ? It is no use for them to tell us what great things they are are going to do to make goods cheap for the Canadian people, when we know that the very slavery the hon. member for South Oxford spoke about, will be the result of their policy of free trade. At first they said they were going to have what they called commercial union. They tried that racket upon the people of the Dominion from one end of it to the other, and that got the grand bounce. Then they brought up another fad called unrestricted reciprocity, and they played their banjos throughout the country at all the political meetings, on that particular string. Then they got the go-by from the people, who would have nothing to do with them. Then they began to send their emissaries over to the United States, and many of them took trips themselves, and they got so mixed up that they hardly know whether they went there or not. Now, they have invented a new fad which they call freer trade. When they argue in this House one says free trade, another says freer trade, and a third, freest trade ; and between them all, if they could have their own way, the people of this country would have no trade at all. If you will let the people of Canada decide for themselves as to what they want, go and ask the men who are making this country, they are the boys who have seen hard times in the past, and they know who these Opposition gentlemen are, who are preaching free trade. I believe they will stay there for the next twenty-five years, if they pursue their present policy.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. METCALFE. An hon. gentleman says "no"; but he has no reason to doubt my statement, if he speaks what is the truth in his heart. They are sure to stay there. Why do they not chip in, and become part of the party of progress, and assist in advancing the interests of the country, and become truly national ? Why are they on the Opposition benches now ? It is because they have been preaching sectionalism in every part of the country. The leader of the Opposition is a gentleman for whom I have great respect, and for whom I entertain very great regard. Any Conservative who sat in this House and heard the remarks he made after the death of our beloved leader, could not but look to him with veneration, respect and esteem for the remarks he made from his benevolent heart. I respect him in that regard, and I believe him to be generous and warm-hearted. But he appears to be suffering from a great delusion or an hallucination to-night. That is what is the matter with him. He is all right so far as natural attainments are concerned, but he has got on the wrong track. If that distinguished leader were to chip in with the right side of this House, what could he not do ? But instead of doing so, he is misleading the people into following him, and is endeavouring to convert members to join his side of the House. He came to Kingston not long ago, and everybody was in love with him. They said he was the nicest man they had seen for a long time, not excepting myself. I am not, however, a bit jealous ; but while he is truly a good man and means well, he has got into bad company, and is playing a bad political game. While I have great respect for that man, I have not as much respect for some hon. gentlemen who sit beside him. The hon. gentleman who comes from South Oxford has endeavoured to pump all the wormwood, gall, bitterness, rancour and venom, and everything that is bad into his followers, and when the leader of a party can be as good as he is under such circumstances, nature must have made him a very great man. The more you listen to him the more you are convinced that he is in the right place as the leader of the Opposition. He said very many funny things to-night, and it is singular when a man gets twisted on the wrong track what wrong statements he can make. He is like a man who belongs to a church who is a hypocrite, for he appears to act according to his light. He has spoken about the law of gravitation. There is enough common sense on the Government side to draw him over, if he will only put himself in the right way. When I was reading up the Baconian theory, I found :

The very law that moulds a tear
And bids it trickle from its source,
That law preserves the earth a sphere,
And guides the planets in their course.

I think the hon. gentleman should apply that to his political gravitation. I take it that the Opposition should act on broad principles, and not be misled by the fad, which they are at present trying to impose upon the people. As I have said, the ladies at Kingston were enthusiastic with respect to the leader of the Opposition; but what did they say regarding the member for South Oxford. They said: Get him down, he will ruin all that Mr. Laurier has done and all that he has said. If there is a man in Canada I understand it is the member for South Oxford. If there is a man in the ranks of gentlemen opposite that the Conservative party should bonus, it is that gentleman. Long live the member for South Oxford; long may he reign where he is on the benches of the Opposition, for I believe, and a great many Reformers believe, that he is an unfortunate individual for the party, and that if he could be transferred to some eminent position, such for example, as that of a judge in the land, or the governor of a province, the party would be delighted, even more than delighted. But bad as I think the hon. member for South Oxford is, there is another individual who comes from a northern portion of a county called the county of Wellington, who is even worse. I wish that hon. gentleman was here, for I do not like to say anything behind his back that I would not say before his face, and if he is within hearing of my voice, or if any page can bring him here, I should like him to come. If there is one principle that can be more clearly laid down in any deliberative body more than another, it is that certain respect should be extended towards our public men. In political warfare, as in everything else, there should be fair play shown. I listened the other evening to that hon. gentleman's remarks, and I thought for narrowness, for smallness, for contractedness, for everything that breathes the spirit of littleness, he was unequalled, and as a gentleman said of another individual: If half a dozen souls such as his could be put in the bladder of a flea they would have more room to wobble than a polywog in Lake Ontario. I believe that of the hon. gentleman. He is infinitesimally small, narrow and contracted, and in a parliament of boys he would not be fit to be their leader, so far as breadth of view is concerned. Imagine such a man a school-master. What would the boys learn of him? They would learn narrowness, not purity of thought. If the late Secretary of State had been present in the House, I do not think that hon. gentleman would have told him that he was all that was bad, all that was impure, all that was wicked and immoral as a public man. I believe he would have been afraid of the castigation that he would have received when that honourable and distinguished man would rise in his place and prove to him and to the House and the country, that he had been maliciously attacked. I read some remarks respecting the foes of George B. McLennan by an eminent writer in the United States, to this effect:

Mr. METCALFE.

The venom that chills and curdles the warm current in the heart of man is found only in creeping and cold blooded creatures; and the inveterate malignity that never forgets or forgives is found only in base and ignoble natures, whose aims are selfish—whose means are indirect, cowardly and treacherous.

I believe that no public man should rise in this assembly and give utterance to such a statement respecting one of the chief public men of Canada who now occupies the position of Lieutenant-Governor. He said: If the people had to deal with him, he ought to be placed behind prison bars, in the city in which I live. As that hon. gentleman is not here in his place to defend himself, I desire to state that he was tried in a fair constitutional manner and not a spot or blemish was found on him. He occupied a position as one of the Ministers and faithfully discharged the duties of his office, and it ill became the hon. member for North Wellington to rise in his place and attempt to make history, that would be quoted in all the papers of the United States, not so much against the individual statesman as against the public men of the Dominion of Canada. They will be apt to say, what kind of a place is Canada? They will say that in Canada there are nothing but rascals and every thing that is bad. If the hon. gentleman had been found guilty of any crime worthy of condemnation, he would never have been allowed to remain in his position as a Cabinet Minister. Would the Premier, who occupies the position of leading statesman in this country, submit to his retaining office; and I wonder that some of the friends of the hon. member for North Wellington did not stop an attack against one of our leading public men. If my remarks to-night have no further good than to suggest to that gentleman that in the future he should curtail his abuse, they will not have been in vain. I described his remarks as being abusive, because, perhaps, I would be unparliamentary if I called them slander, or perhaps still more unparliamentary if I called them political untruthfulness. However, I hope we shall hear no more of such language in this House in the future. I do not believe that any man should shield himself behind the privileges of this House to make a statement which is not true. Every man from his place in Parliament should state just what he would if he were at a town hall, or a street corner, or anywhere else addressing the people of this country, and he should strive on all occasions to tell the truth with regard to our public men. Mr. Speaker, I am more than delighted to have the privilege of speaking on behalf of the National Policy. In 1874 and on to 1876 I was Chairman of one of the largest wards in the city of Kingston, and when that unfortunate revenue tariff policy, that Grit policy, that no-policy-at-all, that policy that was neither fish, flesh, fowl or good political red herring—but that drew a good many red herrings across the track, by going to other countries to get funds to keep things going as well as they could, and it was a poor way they kept it going at that—during the years of that unfortunate policy I saw men, who used previous to that time get $2.50 and $3 a day, coming to me as chairman of one of the wards, and begging to get work at 70 cents a day to provide food for their starving families. Is that what the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Laurier) wants to bring us back to again by his revenue tariff. I can tell him that just as sure as the sun shone yesterday, if he gets into power, and if he adopts such a policy as that, he will bring the people of Canada back to the same unfortunate condition of things as we had during the five years his predecessor in the leadership of his party was in power. I can tell him that the United States will never go back to free trade. They dare not go back to free trade, and my hon. friend knows it. Whatever Government is in power will keep themselves as near the policy of protection as they can in order to retain the reins of Government. If the leader of the Opposition should ever get into power and should adopt a free trade policy he would not be long the Premier of Canada. One hon. gentleman called the National Policy a national poultice. Well, perhaps he was somewhat correct, because Canada was in such an unfortunate condition in 1878 that she wanted some kind of a poultice to draw away the ill effects of the bruises and cuts and hardships inflicted upon her by the policy of hon. gentlemen for the four years previous to 1878. I have, therefore, much pleasure in opposing the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). There is no doubt that it is a motion of want of confidence, and any hon. gentleman who loves the Conservative party, any hon. gentleman who loves the interests of Canada, any hon. gentleman who loves the National Policy, any hon. gentleman who loves national sentiment, and who hates sectional sentiment, and any hon. gentleman who loves the advancement of his country and desires to secure for it a prominent place amongst the nations of the earth should vote down such an amendment. It is an amendment which is calculated only to pull down the institutions of our country, an amendment that is calculated, after mature consideration, on the part of the mover, to smash up the National Policy. No matter what they say, about the National Policy, no matter how the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) may philosophize and tell you in his well drawn sentences and good English what a grand thing it would be to have free trade, and what a bad thing it would be to have the National Policy, we have the undeniable proof that the National Policy has built up this country and that the revenue tariff policy had ruined it. It was protection that built up the United States. It was protection that enabled them to pay their enormous debt so that when they got the award in the Alabama claims, they had so much money they did not know what to do with it. Was it free trade that made the United States come forth in strength and vigor? No, it was protection; and we find that the people of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland are fast learning by experience that the policy of free trade among the protected nations of Europe is a fraud and a delusion and a snare. I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by again stating that I give my most hearty endorsement of the National Policy, and my most vigorous opposition to the amendment of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright).

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry indeed to take up the time of the House at this late hour, but before this debate closes, I desire to have a little to say upon the question before the House. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Metcalfe) has extolled in glowing terms the great virtues of the National Policy, but he has not said one single word in its support. He deprecated the idea of speaking unkindly and in narrow-minded terms of other individuals, but his whole speech was upon these lines. He told us that the success of the National Policy was patent and required no apology, but before I get through I will endeavour to show that a very ample apology indeed is necessary for the National Policy. The only argument that he made at all in favour of his chosen policy was the old and worn out statement that from 1874 to 1878 a great depression existed in this country. A great depression did exist in this country then, but the same depression existed throughout the United States, and throughout the entire world, and could you blame little Canada for being depressed under such circumstances? Do you suppose for one moment that the Dominion of Canada was responsible for the depression that existed the world over at that time? Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, what is the history of the National Policy? The record is that the leader of the Opposition in these years went back upon his own policy, that he went back on what he believed to be the truest interests of Canada, and because of the depression which existed at that time, he was enabled to introduce this scheme upon which to float into power. The claim of the hon. gentleman who just sat down, as to the relative love due to party and to country is well exemplified in the whole history of his party in this Dominion. It is true that some of them love their country, but they love their party much more. So far as I am concerned, I love my country first and my party afterwards, and I am willing to sacrifice any interests of my party for the good of my country in any case where my party does not advocate what I believe to be for the welfare of Canada. The hon. gentleman referred to cheap food, but said: What if human labour is still cheaper? I shall endeavour to show the House that under no system of protection is the wages of the labouring man enhanced. You may protect certain favoured institutions, but what means have you of hindering the labour of the world from competing for the labour that there is to perform? If there is one master requiring a servant, and there are two servants seeking employment, the master will fix the rate of wages that he pays; but if there are two masters seeking one servant, and there is only one servant offering for employment, the servant will fix the rate of wages. It is perfectly absurd and nonsensical to contend for one moment that any system of protection enhances the value of labour. Now, the hon. gentleman spoke of the United States having been built up by protection. If there is one country in the world more than another that is suited to a protective system, it is the United States. It is a country having great breadth and depth, and a great variety of climate and resources. Can we compare Canada with the United States in that respect? no; we have a northern climate, and geographically and climatically things are against us. It is very unfair to base an argument on the fact that a country has existed for a certain length of time under a revenue tariff, and for a certain time under a system of protection, because there are other conditions that must enter into the consideration. To make a fair comparison, two countries would need to exist under the same condition of things at the same time. When the hon. gentleman speaks of protection having built up the United States, I would like to ask him what has built up Great Britain? I say it is her free trade policy that has built up Great Britain, and made her the greatest commercial and maritime country in the world. Now, I will not dwell at greater length on the remarks addressed to the House by my hon. friend on my left, and I will refer for a short time to the remarks that fell from the hon. Finance Minister. I am very glad to state that on one question we agree: I being a teetotaler, we agree on liquids; but as to solids we disagree entirely. Now, the hon. Finance Minister, in discussing the subject of farm lands, stated that in Great Britain farms were going begging for nothing at all—that a man could go and obtain possession of a farm simply for taking care of it, without any rental. With all due deference to the hon. Finance Minister, I cannot accept that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Scores of them.

Mr. EDWARDS. In a country like Great Britain, where agriculture is at a higher level than it is in any other country in the world, and where the farmers have at least the protection of the cost of freight in their favour, it is perfectly impossible that the condition of agriculture can have gone so low. The hon. Minister also asserted that it was contended on this side of the House that if our policy should prevail, farm products would be enhanced in value. No one on this side of the House contends anything of the kind; but we do contend that if the policy we advocate shall prevail, the farmer, the lumberman, the miner, the fisherman and in fact every one engaged in developing the natural resources of this country, will be placed in a more favourable position to produce their products cheaply and be in a better condition to compete in the markets of the world for the sale of them. That is what we contend, and in that I think we are perfectly right. I also disagree with the Finance Minister, that a tax levied for any purpose at all is a source of enrichment. I deny that proposition entirely. There is only one source of productive wealth, and that is through the instrumentality of labour. Taxation never created wealth; speculation never created wealth; the interchange of commodities never created wealth; but the earth is the source of all wealth, and it is through the instrumentality of labour that all the wealth we have on the world's surface is produced. Now, I will not attempt to deal with the speech of the hon. Finance Minister any further than to say that in my opinion he is the most effective user of bad logic that I have ever heard in this Parliament. Now, I think that it is well that we have had this debate. I think the condition of the people of Canada is a very serious one, and all who are interested in the welfare of Canada should consider, and consider seriously, what our future is to be. As I stated before, we are peculiarly situated, with climatic and geographical conditions against us to some extent. Our position relatively to the United States is different from our position relatively to any other country in the world, from the fact that we border on that great country for some 4,000 miles. That freedom of trade on a large scale between the two countries would be beneficial to the people of this country. I have no kind of doubt; and in the event of a reciprocity treaty satisfactory to the people of this country not being obtained, there is one remedy which I would suggest as a free-trader—for I am not afraid to state here or in any other place that I am an out-and-out free-trader. At the same time, I recognize, as all other members do, our necessities; and as things are at present, I see no other way of raising our revenue than from excise and customs duties. But if finally we do not get such a reciprocity treaty with the people of the United States, my remedy would be to adopt free trade with the outside world, and while I do not believe that by any other means we could coerce that great nation, I believe that by that means we would. And why? Simply because we would be large importers and sellers to them of the products of other countries, and it would be for them to protect their own borders. Now, I have been here for a few years, and to the methods suggested by members on this side of the House, from time to time, in years past, in order to bring about a better condition of things in this country, the answer invariably was: you are traitors and annexationists. That charge seems to be dissipated by the fact that upon the other side there is quite a number of gentlemen who now seem to hold the same views. Therefore, that argument is discontinued. As I have said, the National Policy was nothing more nor less than a political necessity. The Conservative party had governed the country for a good many years previous to 1874, and when they were out of power they had to devise some scheme by which they might be returned. A very great depression existed in the country at the time, and the people were prepared to accept any suggestion at all for a change; but now, after having had some fourteen years experience of the National Policy, they are just as desirous for a change back to their old friends.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. EDWARDS. Most decidedly they are. Speaking of the National Policy, I call it the irrational policy. It is not a policy that protects or promotes the production of the natural resources of the country. A policy which would be thoroughly national in its character is one which would first promote the interests and the welfare of the producers of the natural resources of the country. I am only going to take up three lines in the discussion I propose to make. I am not so familiar with the fisheries or the mining interests of our country, but am going to refer to our lumber interests, and also the position of the agriculturalists, and that of the labouring man. To show the importance of the lumber trade, which has already been discussed to some extent during this debate, I need only point to the capital invested in our saw-mills, and sash and door and moulding factories, which amounts alone to the sum of $62,944,000. And that does not include the investments in limits, plant and materials of that kind, but refers simply to the saw mills and the factories. The annual wages paid amount to $17,430,000; the annual product amounts to $68,236,000; and the total exports of sawn lumber amounted to, in 1891, for that is the year with which I am dealing, to $18,535,000. The exports to the United States amounted to $10,086,000, to England, $8,448,000. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), in dealing with this question the other night, seemed to me to desire simply to make an attack upon the Ontario Government. That seemed to be the purpose for which the hon. gentleman made his speech, because one cannot come to any conclusion as to what the hon. gentleman's opinion was on the export duty question. He seemed to throw the whole onus of this matter upon the Ontario administration. So far as that is concerned, the province of Ontario, wherein this depletion of our forests which is spoken of exists, was treated at the time of Confederation just exactly as the other provinces were. The lands and the timber thereon were handed over to the province to administer for its own benefit. To show just how much the hon. gentleman knows of this subject, when speaking of the limits that were under license in the province of Ontario, he said that 4,500 miles were under license in the province, while the truth is that before Confederation 12,500 were under license in that province, and since Confederation 9,000 miles have been sold in that province; 6,600 miles are now under suspense, or limits have been cancelled, so that to-day some 15,000 miles are under license in Ontario. The total area of the province is 197,000 miles. The total surveyed portion of the province is 66,000 square miles, leaving 133,000 square miles unsurveyed. Making allowance of 13,000 square miles for water, there still remains in the province of Ontario, 120,000 square miles. Now, he desired to show that the Ontario government were not watchful of the interests of the people, and what means did he take of showing it? He made the statement that a short time ago McArthur Bros., of Toronto, had sold a limit for $550,000, which had been purchased 15 years previously for $75,000. He took the difference between $75,000 and $550,000, and multiplied by the number of square miles under license, and thus came to the conclusion that the province had lost $30,000,000. Well, in the first place, he does not seem to understand the interest question. The purchaser had held these limits for 15 years, having bought them for $75,000. In the meantime the interest would not have trebled, but it would have much more than doubled, the cost of the limit. He does not seem to understand that a great many men go to timber sales and buy limits for very much less than they can get for them. I can quote him instances of gentlemen attending limit sales and paying thirty, forty or fifty thousand dollars for limits that are not worth five cents. So this is simply a speculative matter. Now, I do not know whether this hon. gentleman desires to have the export duty on logs reimposed or not. I may refer to this matter because it was referred to by the Finance Minister in his Budget speech. And I very much regret that he did refer to it. I think, considering the fact that a change of administration in the United States will take place within a few days, and, considering that that administration is favourable to the importation of lumber free, I think it was a very unfortunate matter, indeed, that the Finance Minister referred to the subject at all. I consider that in speaking as he did upon this subject he did a great injury, indeed, to the lumber interests of Canada. I do not say that he did it purposely or that he desires to injure the lumber trade of Canada. Like the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), I suppose he must be forgiven for making the statement, as he does not seem to understand the lumber business. At the same time I consider that he has done the lumber trade of Canada millions of dollars of damage by making that statement. Now-another hon. gentleman also discussed this question, and he desires to have the duty on saw logs reimposed for the reason that the present state of affairs leads to the destruction of our forests and the loss of a valuable asset. Now, Mr. Speaker, by what means do we lose that valuable asset? Before I get through I shall give good reasons for believing that we do not lose the asset at all. The same hon. gentleman stated that he did not think it proper to take the opinion upon this matter of men engaged in the trade; he thought it more desirable to take the opinion of men who do not understand the trade

Mr. SPROULE. That is entirely wrong. I made use of no such expression.

Mr. EDWARDS. So far as that is concerned, as I understand it, the Government of the province of Ontario are the guardians of that interest. The people of Ontario have declared time and again their confidence in the Administration which has under its care the timber limits of the province. I am opposed to the export duty on principle and also as a matter of justice to the buyers of timber limits, whether they come from the United States or from any other country. These gentlemen who advocate the export duty upon logs and who are the promoters of the National Policy of this country would regard it as a piece of barbarism if those countries from which we import our raw sugar and our raw cotton should impose an export duty upon these articles. And I consider that when an individual comes from the United States or any other country to our timber limit sales and bids upon our limits and buys them and thus enhances the value of the limits of the country, it would be barbarism not to allow him to take the material he has bought out of the country in the shape of logs, or timber or lumber or in any other way he pleases. Now, the same speaker does not believe that the admission of lumber into the United States free of duty would have the effect of causing the lumber to be manufactured in this country. Mr. Speaker, as a lumberman I believe it would have that effect. Why do I believe it? Because the taking of logs across the lake is a very hazardous business, a very hazardous business indeed. Moreover, it is a very expensive business and if we had free lumber it would be to the interests of those who are now taking the logs over to manufacture the lumber in this country. Now, there is one thing, Mr. Speaker, which is not well understood in this country and to which I desire to refer. A great many people believe that the cost of producing lumber in Michigan is far greater than in Canada. It is nothing of the kind. It costs three times as much to lay the logs down at the mill in Canada as to lay the logs down at the mills in Michigan. And why? Because of the proximity of the limits and because of their facilities for getting supplies into the limits. Now, I make the statement as a lumberman, and as a lumberman understanding thoroughly this matter, that for some time, up to a year or two ago, the lumber trade of Canada suffered and suffered very seriously. It had a struggle for existence. The very moment that the duty on lumber going into the United States was lowered, we felt at once the beneficial effect, and we have felt the effect ever since. I sincerely hope that this matter will not be interfered with; but if it is, the effect will be to injure very seriously this great industry, the next largest industry in Canada to our agricultural industry. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will revert for a short time to what I consider the condition of the Canadian farmer under the so-called National Policy. The Finance Minister seems to think that it was a great blessing to the farmers of Canada because they were able to drink free water; they had no duty to pay on water, they had no duty to pay on fire-wood that they cut upon their own farms and put into their stoves. He also thought that it was a great blessing to the Canadian farmer that he had no duty to pay on the lumber that goes into the construction of his buildings. How absurd considering it is a product of which we produce a large surplus for export. I would like that hon. gentleman to turn his attention to the question of the imports that enter into consumption by the Canadian farmer, and that pay a very high rate of duty. The hon. gentleman does not want to touch that question, because it would affect his pet, the National Policy. The position of the Canadian farmer is identical with that of the Canadian lumbermen, with the exception of one item alone. The Canadian lumber industry, the second great producing source of wealth in this country, has no kind of protection at all. That industry desires no protection, but it does desire to have imports brought free from other countries that go into the production of lumber; it desires to be able to buy them as cheaply as they can be bought, in order that it may produce cheaply, and compete in the markets of the world with the products of other countries. The Canadian farmer desires exactly the same thing. To pretend that the Canadian farmer is protected, is a fallacy, is a statement that cannot be borne out by facts. I will admit that so far as pork is concerned, the Canadian farmer has some protection, but, Mr. Speaker, that is the only recompense he has for the innumerable things upon which he is taxed. For most of the articles that he produces, a market has to be found in foreign countries; therefore his products come into competition with the products of all other countries.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS. The longer hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear," the longer they will have to stay here. I have not as great a facility for talking as some hon. gentlemen, but this question of the position of the farmer and the lumberman is one that I pretend to understand, and I am going to discuss it if it takes five years.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman approve of the duty that was put upon pork?

Mr. EDWARDS. I consider that putting the duty upon pork is an insult to the intelligence of the farmers of Canada. Sir, if there is a class of men who are down-trodden, who are imposed upon, and who are robbed by the National Policy, it is the farmers of Canada. This pork duty is a sop that is thrown out to them, but it is no important measure of protection to them.

Mr. SPROULE. They will be satisfied with more of that kind of insults.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, let hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of this House have the manliness to adhere to the policy they have been following for the last fourteen years. Let them not shift about as they are now shifting about. Let them not make a pretense that they are going to do something for the farmers, but let them go to the people for their verdict, and all the boodle they can raise will not prevent them from being hurled from power. No, Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Canada, the lumbermen of Canada, the fishermen of Canada, the miners of Canada, those who are engaged in producing the wealth of the country, and in developing its natural resources, have no recompense at all for the infamy that is imposed upon them through the instrumentality of the National Policy. Now, it is rather strange to listen to the arguments that are adduced from the other side. For instance, take wheat. There are those who pretend that the tariff on wheat enhances the value on that article to the farmers of Canada. As long as they have a surplus to export—and I hope that surplus will grow—the tariff will have no effect except a local effect, and I will show you how I think it has some local effect. For instance, if a farmer in Dakota has a quantity of wheat for sale, and one in Manitoba on the opposite side of the line has also wheat for sale, and they want to ship it to the east, if there is only one line of railway to carry that wheat to the lower provinces, in Canada, and there are two or three lines of railway by which it can be transported in the United States, we will say to the Boston market, the tariff then has some effect, because, by competition on the other side of the line in transit, wheat will be carried from the west to the east more cheaply than it can be carried on this side. The effect is that the man who sells the wheat may get more for it, but the man who produces the wheat does not get a fraction more; and that principle applies to all our agricultural products in the same way. When the question of transit comes into play, the tariff may have some effect; but, speaking in a general sense, the tariff has no effect. In my opinion, the interests of the farmer and of the lumberman are identical. Each produces a surplus of products which have to find a market in foreign countries, and, therefore, the price is made abroad for the home product, I further believe that a protective tariff is nothing more than a robber's tariff. It is the meanest system of robbery that exists, and according to my understanding of it, I would no more join a high protective tariff party than I would unite myself with a party of highway robbers. What is the class they rob? Instead of benefiting the labouring men, whom they pretend to protect, that is the very class of individuals first robbed. Why? Because it is through the instrumentality of labour that all wealth is produced. I believe the labouring men of this country, as well as the lumbermen, farmers, fishermen and miners are awakening to the fact that a protective tariff is detrimental to them. What is commerce? Commerce is nothing more or less than the exchange of the products of labour. Any system that steps in between the producer and the consumer and demands tribute before an exchange of commodities can be made is a system of robbery. I am an out-and-out free trader. I recognize the fact that as far as the free traders can go to-day in any civilized country in the world, is to favour a revenue tariff. He cannot go further. But there is another great question that has to be settled, and that is the labour question. I honestly believe that before many years have passed this question will have to be settled. And why? It must be settled, because the producers of all wealth are going to demand their rights, and the only system under which they can obtain their rights is under a system of free trade; and I may be going further than my confrères will be willing to go, but, so far as I am concerned, I thoroughly and earnestly believe that the proper place from which to raise the revenue for carrying on the administration of the country is from the land, the source of all wealth. Those who advocate the single tax system to-day may be called faddists, but I believe it is a question that will very shortly have to seriously occupy the minds of those entrusted with the administration of the affairs of all civilized nations. I observe that the Minister of Finance is prepared to trim a little, and some of his followers are likewise prepared to trim to some extent. I wish to exempt from that category the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Calvin). In expressing himself as he did, and in declaring that he would vote as he stated, he was simply carrying out a pledge given to his constituents at the time of his election, and so far as he is concerned, we have nothing to claim. It is said of politicians that they are a class of men who are looking round to see what the people will do for them. It is also said of statesmen that they are continually seeking what they can do for the people. I thoroughly believe that the Government party are now playing the part of politicians. They are prepared, if they ever had any principles, to sacrifice those principles for the sake of catching the votes of the people of this country. They did not act as did the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, who, when in power in 1878, stood by his principles, and accepted defeat. If hon. gentlemen opposite have any principles to-day, let them stand by those principles: let them advocate the National Policy, as they have done during the last 14 years, and let them take defeat at the next general election like men, as they are sure to meet it.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall delay the House, Sir, but a very short time while I explain the reasons for the vote I am about to give. As we have been so profuse in scientific and other illustrations this evening, let me say, before I go further, that I have read somewhere of mad men, that they reason correctly, but from false premises. I confess to you, Sir, that while listening to this debate, and seeking to learn from it as much as I could, I have sometimes felt as though some of my hon. colleagues in this House lay themselves open to the charge of temporary insanity. If you examine the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) who moved the amendment, and if you examine the speeches of the members on both sides of the House, you will find them, at one time, contending that the Government are entitled to no credit for the prosperity of the country, and that at another time you will find them blaming a Minister for the want of prosperity. You will find this running through the speeches of hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side, and through some of the speeches of the hon. gentlemen on the Government side you will find a major premise that a tariff can actually affect the prosperity of a country. Now, Mr. Speaker, the proposition that by a tariff alone, a Minister of Finance will keep a country back or advance it in prosperity, seems to me to be absurd upon the face of it. But no man can I suppose, be familiar with the history of the countries in Europe, or the history of the United States, or of this country, or the history of any given transaction in regard to the tariff, without saying that certainly a shortsighted Minister, a Minister incapable of taking a large view of the interests of the country with which he had to deal, might do serious injury to the prosperity of the country, and might hold it back. The speech of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Edwards) shared the inconsistency that I have noticed as making up the web and woof of this debate throughout. At one time my hon. friend said he was a free trader out and out, and at another time he said—I took down his words—that he was only going to make gradual changes in the tariff. He told the hon. gentlemen who are now in the position of members of the Government, that they were highway robbers because of this tariff, and yet the highway robbery that is embodied in the tariff he would only change very gradually, so that he would be a sort of graduated highway robber. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in the same way assured us that changes would only be made very gradual so that if the country is not prosperous, if the farmers are not prosperous, if the labouring men are not prosperous, and if the country is in the dreadful condition that according to some parts of his speech the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) thinks it to be, and if this precious National Policy is the cause of it all, even under these circumstances we are to have but very trifling changes in the tariff in case power should pass from the hands of the present holders of it to the hon. gentlemen opposite. Then, Sir, I ask what relief are we going to have from them? These remarks lead me to say that I regret very much to find ourselves here at the end of 15 years, going through the same debate precisely as we did at the beginning of that period. My hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, declared that my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) had pelted us with chestnuts, and although that speech of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) was, I think, one of the best he ever made in this House, still I fancy there were parts of it liable to the charge that the Minister of the Interior made against it. But, Mr. Speaker, the unfortunate feature about one side using chestnut missiles, is, that the other side is almost forced to reply with the same ammunition.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Pea nuts.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says "pea nuts," but he has not yet spoken in this debate. I therefore say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a profitless discussion. We have had as I say 15 years of it. It took ten years to carry Troy. The Greeks stood before Troy for ten years, and at last they captured it. But for 15 years my hon. friends of the Opposition, led by men of great talent, first led by Mr. Mackenzie, then led by Mr. Blake who has carried his talents, his experience and his oratory across the Atlantic to do service in another part of the Empire because he could not agree with his political friends—and I will say this in passing that I am glad to see that he has distinguished himself, as I knew he would, in that arena—this party led by such able men, have failed to successfully attack the National Policy in 15 years. I heartily subscribe, I may say, to everything said by the member for Kingston (Mr. Metcalfe) with reference to the leader of the Opposition. We had Mr. Blake, a very able man, we had Mr. Mackenzie leading the attack on the National Policy, and they have sought by one means and another to assail it, but although it has been declared on the floor of this House to-night that the labouring men and the farmers are rising against that policy, that, Sir, is not the way I read the signs of the times. I say that after 15 years bartering against that policy, it stands to-day—

Mr. WELSH. Rotten.

Mr. DAVIN. No, not rotten.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Mouldering.

Mr. DAVIN. No, not mouldering. It stands there to-day like a fortress that has been attacked and attacked again, but which still remains impregnable. I say that these hon. gentlemen utterly mistake the feeling of the country. I say that the feeling in the country at the present minute is this: Not National Policy or no National Policy; but the feeling is this: shall we retain any abuses that may have arisen under the National Policy, or shall we sweep them away? or to quote the language adopted from the chairman of the Toronto banquet by the Prime Minister, the question is, shall the mouldering branches remain there or be taken away. I believe, Sir, that there are some mouldering branches, and I believe they ought to be removed; and not only that, but I believe that they ought to be removed now. And I may say to hon. gentlemen who, like myself, support the Government, that there is nothing to prevent any private member doing whatever in him lies to amend or improve or add to or take from a tariff. It is done and recognized in England. I remember one occasion when Lord Russell was Prime Minister. I think it was Lord Naas, afterwards Lord Mayo, who moved an amendment to the tariff, and the Government was beaten; and Mr. Roebuck, who thought himself a great constitutionalist, asked if the Government were going to resign. Up rose Lord John Russell and said: Why should we resign? Matters of finance, taxation, customs duties, revenue and all matters of such a character deeply interest every member of the House, and the Government are bound to pay attention to what the members suggest. Mr. Gladstone, too, has allowed his tariffs to be altered; and the younger Pitt—though I do not want to go back so far—was defeated twice and altered his entire financial policy on one occasion without resigning. So that I consider that if there are any mouldering branches we ought to remove them. Now, Sir, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance laid this down, that the Government would not give a measure of protection to any industry which will give it the opportunity of taking unduly from the pockets of the people by creating combines and monopolies and thus making itself a burden instead of a benefit to the country. Now, when my hon. friend lays that down and combines exist, and palpably exist, my hon. friend is in my opinion bound not to wait for a year, because enquiry cannot help him in this matter—there is the combine; it exists. Take for instance the cotton combine. I listened carefully to what the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) said in regard to that combine, and the position that he laid down remains substantially unshaken. He laid it down with great ability, and it remains as unshaken in my opinion as the structure raised by the Finance Minister remained unshaken after the hon. member for South Oxford had taken his seat. Therefore, I hold with that statement on "Hansard" from the Finance Minister, it is not a fit or proper thing to wait for a year before dealing with any combine or in regard to those things that are proved to be opposed to the purpose of the National Policy. In regard to these we are bound to act. Now, in regard to the motion before the House, it is to me a very extraordinary motion. On the face of it any one who is in favour of lopping away the mouldering branch, one would think, ought to be ready to vote for that motion. But look what it says:—

It be Resolved, That the present Customs tariff bears heavily and unjustly upon the great consuming classes of the Dominion.

Now, we shall have to read into that proposition, the language of the mover. It certainly is a fair doctrine that you must take the language of the mover of a motion to explain what he means by it; and what the hon. member for South Oxford means by it is this: that the National Policy is a fraud and delusion.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Carried.

Mr. DAVIN. If my hon. friend means the motion, I do not think it is carried yet. The hon. member for South Oxford declares that this National Policy is a fraud, and has caused a fearful want of prosperity which he really does not prove to exist. He then goes on to say:

And should be at once thoroughly reformed in the direction of freer trade.

Now, what is the meaning of that? We are told by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that only very slight or moderate changes are to be made. Therefore, if it is to be thoroughly reformed, they will be more than moderate changes. But, Sir, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways was taken to task by the hon. member for South Brant because he had read this free trade. Well, I think the hon. Minister of Railways will be forgiven by the supporters of the hon. member for South Oxford, if I point out that knowing the condition of the hon. member for South Oxford, he would not believe his eyes that such bad grammar could emanate from him. Now, what is the meaning of that? Does it mean freer trade than the present tariff. If it means freer trade, he admits that on the whole that is a free tariff. There is his language: It is the comparative freer, that is, freer than free. Whichever way you look at it, it is a bungling clause, and I am not surprised that the Minister of Railways fell into the error he did. Mr. Gladstone, in one of his financial statements, I think it was the statement of 1858, used the phrase freer trade. That was perfectly logical in his mouth, because he was dealing with a tariff, in regard to which you might say that it established free trade, and Mr. Gladstone wanted to make the trade freer; but where is the logic of the hon. member for South Oxford? In fact, looking at his speech, which I have carefully read, it is like many of his speeches that I have looked at, full of a curious allusiveness, and little scraps of learning brought in with an air of pedantry, so that he reminds me of a belated and bewildered pedagogue groping amid confused recollections of an erudition in which he was never at home. Now, take his third proposition in the motion:

And that the amount of taxes collected be limited to the sum required to meet the necessities of the Government efficiently and economically administered.

Why, Sir, I suppose everybody would agree to that; but what is the meaning of it? Will any of us say that this Government are not seeking to administer the affairs of the country as economically and efficiently as their abilities will allow them? And their abilities are considerable. Very few of us would attempt to say—anyway. I would not—that that is not being done. The fact, it is an ill-digested motion intended to catch votes; and to catch votes for what? We must look, in the case of any motion like that, as my hon. friend from Kingston in his admirable maiden speech said, at its political bearing. It is not merely an economical motion, it is also a political motion, and I cannot vote for it unless I were prepared to vote want of confidence in the Government and confidence in the hypothetical government of hon. gentlemen on the other side. I am not prepared to vote want of confidence in these gentlemen; but if I were, I would hesitate long before I could vote confidence in the hypothetical government which would follow. Take the two leaders in this financial discussion. The present Finance Minister is, I think—this is my deliberate opinion—the best finance minister I have observed, since I have been observing politics in Canada; and he has this note of great ability, that he is advancing every year, so that the financial statement we got this time was in advance of last year's, as last year's was in advance of the previous years. Then take the hon. member for South Oxford. I am so far in accord with the Liberal party that I have no confidence in him whatever. So, Sir, taking the one Minister, I should hesitate before I would give my confidence to that hypothetical government. The leader of the Opposition I should not object to see in a government, with a different outfit of principles.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, hon. gentlemen may laugh, but it is true in politics as in other things, that to be strong you must be sincere, and I say we cannot listen to the speeches of those hon. gentlemen without feeling that they are sincere indeed in this, that they want to win; but when it comes to studying their financial policy, sincerity does not seem to me to be their distinguishing characteristic. I will say this, that I should like if we could adopt the same system as that which prevails in the House of Commons in England, of having our financial statement made, not in the House, but in the Committee of Ways and Means, so that a friendly discussion and criticism of the Budget might be had. But we have got into a system of the Finance Minister making, not merely a financial statement but a warlike speech, and the consequence is that we have to discuss the finances of the country amid the heat and smoke and roar of political battle, which, of course, is not conducive to that dispassionate discussion which a financial statement requires. In the House of Commons in England, they are getting into our bad practice a little, but the principle is, as Mr Gladstone said the other day, that the discussion should be a dispassionate one, in committee of ways and means, where the Finance Minister would be able to explain across the table anything requiring explanation and be able to adopt suggestions rapidly made. However, we do these things differently in Canada, and I do not think we have improved on the system followed in the mother country. I suppose we shall go on, nevertheless, having the red rag shaken in the face of the bull and fighting to the end of the chapter. We have had pretty much the same fight for the last fourteen years. During that time, the mouse has gone over its little treadmill, the wheel has been turned in precisely the same way, and if we are to go on like this ten or fifteen years more, the country will be about as much instructed in the end as it is at present. I deprecate that system, and should prefer to see our financial statement dealt with differently; and if hon. gentlemen wish to have a vote of want of confidence proposed, let them propose it squarely. I shall vote against the amendment, because I am a believer in the National Policy, because I believe that policy is as strong to-day in the country as ever it was, and I shall vote against it because it is a vote of want of confidence in the Government, and I have explained that I am not ready to dispossess the gentlemen now on the Treasury benches, and if I were, I do not see on the Opposition benches men whom I (Cartwright):

Masson,	Monet,
Weldon,	Borden,
Bergin,	Mills.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call attention to the fact that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has not voted.

Mr. WELDON. I paired with the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden). I would have voted for the amendment.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means on the following resolutions :—

(In the Committee.)

1. RESOLVED, That it is expedient to amend the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 20, intituled: "An Act to amend the Act respecting the Duties of Customs,"—by repealing the item 184 under section 10 of the said Act,—and to provide otherwise by enacting the following rates of duty in lieu thereof :—

Twine for harvest binders, of hemp, jute, manila or sisal, and of manila and sisal mixed, twelve and one-half per cent ad valorem.

Rope, when imported for the manufacture of twine for harvest binders, ten per cent ad valorem.

2. RESOLVED, that it is expedient to further amend the said Act 53 Victoria, chapter 20, by repealing the item numbered 291, under section 11, and substituting the following in lieu thereof :—

Mining machinery imported prior to the sixteenth day of May, 1896, which is at the time of its importation of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Committee passes the first resolution, I wish to move that it is also expedient that the duty on barbed wire, agricultural implements and cottons should be reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman cannot do that on this item.

Mr. McCARTHY. I move in amendment that binder twine be put upon the free list.

Amendment negatived. Yeas 49 ; Nays 78.)

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman had better report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had a long discussion ; the matter has been fully debated.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there are some details upon which it is evident there will be a difference of opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. But there need be no debate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There can't be any debate at this unearthly hour.

Resolution 1 agreed to.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish now to bring to the attention of this Committee a motion to the effect that the duties on barbed wire, agricultural implements and cottons should be reduced. The Finance Minister was not in when I was addressing the House on the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), but I should like to call his attention—

An hon. MEMBER. Dispense.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I don't know how we can dispense. Mr. Chairman, it may be late, but we are always talking about being Britons and following British precedents, and in England they will sit very late when the interests of the country demand it. I wish—

The CHAIRMAN. I am sorry to call the hon. gentleman to order. The time to make this amendment is when the Speaker is in the Chair, and when he asks the House to debate the resolution.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.55 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 1st March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EDUCATION AND DUAL LANGUAGE IN THE N. W. T.

Mr. DAVIN, in presenting petitions from certain residents of the North-west Territories, praying that the North-west Assembly be given control over educational matters, and asking for a repeal of the clause in the North-west Territories Act relating to the dual language, said: I may say that I have seen in the papers that the language of these petitions is attributed to me, as my own.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. I have never expressed an opinion on the subject at all.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Mr. FOSTER. I said the other day that I would lay on the Table of the House a copy of the instructions to, and the oaths taken by, the census enumerators, and the schedules. I move that an Order of the House do issue for those papers, including copies of instructions to enumerators, the oaths taken by the enumerators, and the schedules.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that these instructions are laid on the Table for the first time?

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not able to say, but I will be able to answer the inquiry later.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. LEPINE (Translation) asked, What are the names of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, and what was the salary paid to each of them in 1892?

Mr. QUIMET. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. gentleman, I beg to state the names of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners are as follows:—Henry Bulmer, chairman of the commissioners; the Hon. Edward Murphy, Messrs. Victor Hudon, J. O. Villeneuve, Richard White, Hugh McLennan, H. Gould, James McShane and Andrew Allan. They received during the year fees to the amount of $4,435.

SICK MARINERS' FUND.

Mr. LEPINE asked, 1. Have the shipping interests of Montreal made frequent complaints to the Government of the tax of 2 cents per ton per voyage, not to exceed 6 cents per ton per annum, levied on shipping by virtue of the Sick Mariners' Act (R.S.C., chapter 76) as being both unjust and impolitic? 2. Has the Government any precedent for the levy of a tax on shipping for hospital purposes in any part of the world other than Canada? 3. Have grants out of this taxation, aggregating some thirty or forty thousand dollars since Confederation, been made to two hospitals in Ontario, one at Kingston, the other at St. Catharines, although no tonnage tax is levied in that province? 4. Has not the levy of this tax of 6 cents per ton per season at Montreal; and elsewhere in the Dominion, brought about a levy by the United States of 15 cents per ton per annum by way of reprisals on Montreal tonnage trading with their ports? 5. Does not the Act of Congress imposing this retaliatory taxation (24 U.S. 81, sec. 11) contain a provision to the effect that whenever Canada ceases to levy her tax the United States will cease to impose? 6. Is the province of Ontario, besides being exempt from the Canadian tax, also, and because of this home exemption, exempted from the retaliatory tax of the United States? and do not these exemptions constitute a serious discrimination against the province of Quebec and in favour of the shipping trade of Ontario? 7. Is it the intention of the Government—(1) to accept this standing offer of the United States and thereby free Canadian tonnage from the retaliatory tax now levied in the ports of that country? and at the same time (2) to promote legislation which will afford tonnage in the province of Quebec the same immunity from taxation as presently exists in the ports of Ontario?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. A petition was received from a number interested in foreign and inland shipping. A resolution was passed by the Montreal Board of Trade and the Montreal Harbour Commissioners in support of the petition, and forwarded to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and a letter from Mr. D. A. Watt, all in favour of abolishing the sick mariners' dues at Montreal. 2. A tax on tonnage is imposed in the United States although not specially called hospital dues. Marine hospitals, however, are maintained out of tonnage dues collected from foreign shipping. Sailors belonging to foreign shipping applying for admission to the hospital, must have a guarantee that the sum of $1 per diem will be paid for medical attendance, and this per diem amount must be paid when the seamen are discharged. 3. The sum of $500 per annum has been paid to the hospital at St. Catharines by a vote of Parliament, and a similar sum to the hospital at Kingston, from 1868 to 1891. Since the latter date 90 cents per diem for each seaman receiving medical attendance has been paid. Under this arrangement the sum of $108 was paid to the hospital at St. Catharines, and $500 to the hospital at Kingston, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1892. 4. The levy of 2 cents per ton, three times in each year, on vessels over 100 tons, and once in each year on vessels under 100 tons at Montreal and elsewhere in the Dominion, as well as river police dues of 3 cents per ton paid twice in each year on vessels of over 100 tons at the port of Quebec, has been the means of causing the United States to retain a tonnage duty imposed on all vessels from the province of Quebec and the Maritime provinces of Canada entering ports in the United States. The duty imposed in the United States on Maritime provinces' vessels and vessels from the province of Quebec does not exceed 15 cents per ton per annum. A duty is imposed upon European vessels with the exception of those from German ports, not exceeding 30 cents per annum. 5. The Act abolishing fees in the United States on American shipping, section 11, provides that the president shall suspend the collection of so much of the duty imposed on foreign vessels as shall exceed the amount collected on American vessels by a foreign country, and indicates the rates of tonnage duty, if any, to be collected under such suspension. 6. The province of Ontario is exempt from tonnage duty in the United States, as no sick mariners' dues or tax of this kind are collected in the province. Sick mariners' dues are collected in the Maritime provinces, Quebec and British Columbia. There is, consequently, a discrimination in favour of the province of Ontario. A circular, signed by the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, dated 10th June, 1891, was forwarded to the collectors of Customs at various ports in the province of Quebec and in the Maritime provinces. The circular was also sent to members of Parliament and shipping firms, requesting them to give their opinions on the subject of the abolition of sick mariners' dues. About eighty replies to the circular were received. The preponderance of opinion was in favour of continuing the collection of sick and distressed mariners' dues, in the interests of seafaring men. 7. The Government is now considering the question of abolishing or retaining the sick mariners' tonnage dues; but no decision has yet been arrived at.

FORT GEORGE.

Mr. DENISON asked, Whether the Government have received a petition from the Canadian Institute of Toronto, praying that steps be taken to preserve the old French stone magazine in Fort George said to be of La Salle's time? Did the Institute give any approximate estimate of the cost, and if so, what was it? Is it the intention of the Government to repair the magazine and otherwise preserve Fort George from further decay?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). A petition from the Canadian Institute at Toronto, transmitted through Col. Denison, was duly received on 12th September last, applying for a grant of money to repair the old stone magazine at Fort George, situated on the left bank of the Niagara River, at Queenston Heights. The receipt of the petition was duly acknowledged to Colonel Denison. In the petition it was stated that the sum of $250 would be required to place the old magazine building in repair. It is the intention of the Government to repair the building, and take such other steps as may be requisite to preserve Fort George from further decay.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, What was the value (a) of the raw material, and (b) what was the output, according to the last census, of the cotton industries?

Mr. FOSTER. In cotton industries (census of 1891), the value of raw material was $4,208,253; and the output, $8,451,724.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, What was the value (a) of the raw material, and (b) what was the output, according to the last census, of the wool cloth manufacturing industries?

Mr. FOSTER. The value of raw material in wool cloth manufactures (census of 1891), was $4,199,067; output, $8,441,071.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, (a) What was the number, according to the last census, of wall paper-making establishments? (b) The number of employees therein? (c) The raw material? (d) The output?

Mr. FOSTER. In wallpaper-making (census of 1891), the number of industries reported was 4; employees reported, 139; value of raw material, $133,700; output, $355,000.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, What was the value (a) of the raw material, and (b) what was the output, according to the last census, in the foundries and machine-working industries?

Mr. FOSTER. In foundries and machine works (census of 1891), the value of raw material was $6,898,017; and the value of output, $16,031,515.

CANADIAN AND AMERICAN SILVER.

Mr. GUILLET asked, 1. What is the percentage of alloy in the Canadian silver coinage? 2. What is the percentage in the American silver coinage? 3. Is the Government aware that it is proposed to largely increase the coinage of American silver? 4. Is the Government aware that American silver currency containing less than 50 per cent silver is being introduced into Canada at par? 5. Is it the intention of the Government to take measures to prevent American silver from displacing our gold standard paper currency and much purer silver currency?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. The percentage of alloy in Canadian silver is $7\frac{1}{2}$. 2. In American, 10 per cent. 3. No. 4. No. 5. The Revised Statutes, chapter 30 provides that no other silver, copper or bronze coins than those which Her Majesty causes to be struck for circulation in Canada or in some province thereof shall be a legal tender in Canada.

GARRISON GROUNDS, ANNAPOLIS, N.S.

Mr. FRASER asked, Has the Department of Militia received a memorial from the inhabitants of Annapolis, N.S., asking that the old Garrison grounds there should be placed in the hands of a commissioner or commissioners for the purpose of having the place reserved as a park and pleasure ground? What action does the department propose to take in reference to the prayer of the petition?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). A memorial from the inhabitants of Annapolis has been received by the Department of Militia and the receipt has been duly acknowledged. The prayer of the memorial that certain military grounds should be used as a park and pleasure grounds is now under consideration, with a view of meeting the wishes of the inhabitants as far as is consistent with the public interest.

LABOUR BUREAU.

Mr. McKAY asked, Is it the intention of the Government to bring into operation the Labour Bureau? If so, when?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is considering that question, and will present a report on it very shortly.

Mr. FOSTER.

MILITARY INTERCHANGES.

Mr. HUGHES asked, Is it the intention of the Government, with a view to enlisting the best class of Canadians, increasing the efficiency of both officers and men, fostering the national spirit and upbuilding and consolidating the British Empire, to take steps towards having successive annual or biennial exchanges between one of the permanent corps, batteries of Canadian artillery and companies of Canadian infantry from Canada, on the one hand, and a battery of Imperial artillery and company of infantry from Great Britain, Gibraltar or other "home" station, on the other?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). As soon as the House has placed at the disposal of the Department of Militia and Defence the funds necessary for carrying out the very important scheme, the matter will receive consideration.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Mr. CASEY asked, Will the Government lay upon the Table at an early date a copy of the instructions to the census enumerators as to the definition of a "factory" or "manufacturing industry," in respect of amount of output, number of hands employed, or otherwise? Also, a statement of the number of factories or "manufacturing industries" in each city and incorporated town in Canada having an output, in the census year, of between $5,000 and $10,000, $10,000 and $20,000, $20,000 and $50,000, $50,000 and $100,000, and over $100,000 respectively? Also, the total number for the Dominion, classified as in the last question?

Mr. FOSTER. I have already laid on the Table of the House a copy of the instructions. With reference to the other two parts of the question, if my hon. friend will put it in the form of a motion for information it will be compiled and given to the House.

AGRICULTURE—LADOGA WHEAT AND TWO-ROWED BARLEY.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked, 1. What sum of money has been spent by the Government in promoting the cultivation of two-rowed barley? 2. What sum of money has been spent in the cultivation of Ladoga wheat? 3. What was the result of the milling test made at Toronto a few months ago as to the merits of the said Ladoga wheat?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. The total amount of money expended in promoting the cultivation of two-rowed barley was $23,389.39. The returns from sales of barley amounted to $16,201.99. The balance or net expenditure was $7,187.40. 2. The total amount spent in the cultivation and distribution of Ladoga wheat was $661.28, exclusive of the cultivation by the Experimental Farms, the proportion of which was not recorded. 3. The result of the milling test of Ladoga wheat made at Toronto by Messrs. McLaughlin and Moore was as follows, in the terms of the conclusion of their report: "Good unfrosted Ladoga wheat, such as the lot we ground will make better flour than No. 2 regular Manitoba wheat, but not so good as No. 1 regular Manitoba." Full particulars respecting Ladoga wheat will be furnished in two or three days by a bulletin from the Experimental Farm.

OYSTER BEDS—LICENSE.

Mr. PERRY asked, How many grants of licenses of oyster-bed limits have been made in Prince county, P.E.I.? To whom made? What are the bounds and limits of each grant, and what is the term of years for which each of these limits has been made?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No licenses have yet been issued for oyster areas in Prince county. A schedule of all applications received and licenses issued in connection with oyster culture, will be found in Appendix No. 6 of the annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the year 1892.

FRENCH CANADIAN ADVOCATES.

Mr. VAILLANCOURT asked, 1. What are the names of all French-Canadian advocates, of the province of Quebec, employed by the Government, in the provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, since 1878? 2. The cases in which they were so employed? 3. The fees and expenses paid to each of them?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot say from memory whether there are any such or not. It is very unusual to employ advocates or counsel outside of the province in which they are members of the bar, excepting in the case of the regular agent of the Department of Justice at Ottawa. I think that the hon. gentleman's question ought to be put as a motion for a return. It will involve inquiry, and will take some time to prepare the information. I am not, however, able to say whether the information exists or not.

CIVIL SERVICE APPOINTMENTS— MESSRS. TRUDEAU AND WHITE.

Mr. CARROLL asked, 1. What was the date of appointment of the late Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Toussaint Trudeau? 2. What was the date of appointment of William White, Deputy Postmaster-General? 3. What was the date of appointment of George Rivers White? Date of promotion? How often was he promoted? Has he passed the civil service examination? If so, the number of points obtained, and was it special or optional examination?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to first question, I find from the civil service list that Mr. Trudeau was first appointed to the service on the 13th of December, 1859.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In reply to the second and third questions, William White, Deputy Postmaster-General, was in the English civil service as a clerk in the General Post Office, from 19th of February, 1846, to the 1st of April, 1854, when he resigned and came to Canada. On 1st of December, 1854, he was appointed first-class clerk (money order office); on 21st February, 1861, he was promoted to be secretary; on 27th June, 1888, he was promoted to be Deputy Postmaster-General. George Rivers White was appointed a third-class clerk 1st July, 1873; on 1st July, 1883, he was promoted to a second-class clerkship; on 14th October, 1891, first-class. In June, 1883, he passed the examination for second-class; and in May, 1887, passed examination for first-class. The examinations passed were the ordinary promotion examinations in each case. The number of points are not given for the reason that heretofore they have been refused upon the ground that the examinations are not competitive.

FRASERVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. CARROLL asked, 1. What is the total amount expended to date on the Fraserville post office? 2. What is the amount of the claims filed for material furnished to contractor Lortie, and not paid for? 3. Is it the intention of the Government to pay the said claims, or some of them?

Mr. OUIMET. The total amount paid on account of the Fraserville post office to the 1st of March is $19,867.94. The total amount of claims filed in the department against the contractors and still unpaid is $9,854.92. The department has been informed that Mr. Lortie, the contractor, has been thrown into bankruptcy, and the balance that may be due to him will be remitted to the proper party to be distributed according to law among his creditors.

GALOPS RAPIDS CHANNEL.

Mr. REID moved for:

Return of the report or reports of plans and surveys of Galops Rapids channel, made by Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would have any objection to adding to that motion, "also copies of any charges that have been made to the department in connection with this work." I understand that some charges have been made about the work not being up to the specifications.

Mr. REID. I wish my motion to go as it is, without any addition.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I would ask that the motion stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

PIER AT YAMACHICHE.

Mr. DESAULNIERS moved for :

Copies of all correspondence in relation to the construction of the pier at Yamachiche.

He said : Mr. Speaker, two years ago, on the recommendation of the member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), then the hon. Minister of Public Works, the amount of $2,000 was voted by this House towards the construction of a pier at Yamachiche; in the county of St. Maurice. Nothing was done that year. Last year, on the recommendation of the hon. Minister of Public Works, now in office, the same amount was revoted. I must offer my best thanks to the hon. Minister for that kindness in regard to my county. But now, and that is very important, nothing at all was done on these works, except this : notices were published in many French and English newspapers, and the contract was given to a gentleman of the city of Three Rivers. That gentleman wrote to me some days ago that he had asked the department for plans and had received no answer. Here is a copy of his letter :

THREE RIVERS, 15th February, 1893.

In reply to your letter which I have just received, I beg to inform you that I have written to the department at Ottawa, to get the plans and a copy of the contract, and at this very moment I have received no news from them. Please tell to the department that plans and a copy of the contract must be sent to me beforehand.

Yours truly,
F. A. VERRÉT.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not like to speak against my party here, but I want to read the following official letters concerning the construction of that pier at Yamachiche. During the last session I received the following letter :—

OTTAWA, 11th February, 1892.

SIR,—I have just received your letter of the 30th concerning Yamachiche.

The plans and estimates prepared by the chief engineer for this work were laid before Mr. Ouimet last week. I think the few words we have said to him on this subject will be sufficient to enable him to give you a proper answer when you speak to him about it.

Yours truly,
A. GOBEIL,
Deputy Minister of Public Works.

In the same year, at the date hereinafter mentioned, I received the following letter :—

OTTAWA, 23rd September, 1892.

SIR,—Referring to your letter of the 5th instant, by which you ask that the works on the pier at Yamachiche be commenced, I am directed to inform you that the plans and specifications for these works are in course of preparation.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
D. A. MACPHERSON,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. MULOCK.

On the 5th of January last, the hon. Minister himself wrote to me, as follows :—

I have the pleasure to inform you that the contract for the pier at Yamachiche has been given and that the works will begin at once.

J. A. OUIMET.

And subsequently, the 16th February, this note was sent to me :

On my return to the office, I found your note concerning the Yamachiche plans, and I saw Mr. Coste who will send these plans to-day to Mr. Verret, the contractor. The plans could not have been sent before to-day, because they had not yet been signed by the Minister.

A. GOBEIL.

I make these remarks, not to blame the hon. Minister himself, but to inform my constituents that it was through no fault on my part that the delay has taken place in the construction of that pier. I hope this work will be commenced and finished soon, at least before the expiration of the present Parliament.

Mr. OUIMET. There is no objection to bringing down all the papers the hon. gentleman asks for. I have listened very carefully to his remarks, and I do not know if he intends to throw any blame upon myself or the employees of my department. I know we have done the best we could to complete the pier, which is wanted. The delay has been because of difficulties in the way of preparing the plans, and because the engineers, in making their reports, stated that the price of the pier would be too high for the usefulness of it. The wharf is now under contract, and I hope it will be completed at an early day.

CIVIL SERVICE—SUPERANNUATION.

Mr. McMULLEN moved :

That inasmuch as in the opinion of this House it is desirable that the gross amount of the annual expenditure of the Dominion should be reduced and the drain on the people's resources thereby be stopped, it is expedient to repeal the Act providing for the superannuation of civil servants.

He said : Upon several occasions I have drawn the attention of this House to the enormous expenditure and the evidences of extravagance connected with the administration of the Civil Service Superannuation Act. I am glad to notice that it is the intention of the Government this year to make considerable changes in the direction of bringing the Act more within the fund that will be provided by the contribution of the civil servants than has been the case in the past. Still, I contend that in the present condition of the Civil Service and with all the opportunities and privileges of insuring their lives and the great advantages now offered by insurance companies, a system of superannuation of this kind is quite unnecessary, more particularly in view of past results and of the abuses that have attended the administration of the Act from its inception to the present time. I think these things clearly point to the necessity of the total abolition of this system. There is no necessity whatever that it should have a further existence in this Dominion. I believe if the question of the continuation of the superannuation system was left to a vote of the civil servants of this country, they would almost unanimously decide in opposition to its continuance. It has been abused in the past, and men have been superannuated, not because they sought superannuation, but merely because the place was coveted by some other person who brought influence to bear upon the Government in favour of superannuating the incumbent, in order that he might get the position; and we have to-day the ridiculous exhibition of between 500 and 600 superannuated civil servants in this Dominion, a great many of them in the prime of life. Now, in order to bring this whole question before the House and the country, I will give to the House a statement of all superannuations, from year to year, from 1881 down to the present time :

1881—Return laid on the Table of the House on the 15th February, 1882, for year ending 31st December, 1881 :

79 retired at a cost of $30,431 78
Gratuities 3,225 00

Annual cost afterwards $27,207 78

1882—Return brought down the 20th February, 1883, for year ending 31st December, 1882 :

74 retired at a cost of $39,991 51
Gratuities 5,529 02

Annual payment $34,392 49

1883—Return brought down 21st January, 1884 :

64 retired at a cost of $32,376 54
Gratuities 3,151 66

Net annual loss $29,224 88
17 superannuated under 55 years old.
10 under 50 years old.
7 under 40 years old.

1884—Return brought down 3rd February, 1885, to 31st December, 1884 :

53 retired, total cost 24,309 95
Gratuities 2,310 26

$21,999 69
15 superannuated under 55 years old.
11 under 50 years old.
8 under 45 years old.

In order to give the House some idea of the sums that a number of those individuals have drawn, and also the sums they have paid in, I will read a carefully prepared table of the names of those who have drawn the largest amounts. These are all names that were on the list in 1886, and I added to the amounts drawn by them up to that date the further amounts drawn to 30th June, 1892. I will give the gross amounts drawn up to the present year, as follows :—

Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear from the statements which I have presented and which have been carefully prepared from the records laid before Parliament, that the manner in which the superannuation system has been abused in this country for the last twelve years, has seriously drawn upon the resources of the people in order to meet these extravagances. The idea of our contributing to the livelihood of some 550 civil servants retired at a loss, for twelve years, of one million and three-quarters dollars to the people of this country, clearly shows that the Act has been grossly abused. Had the Act been allowed to remain on the Statute-book as it was at its inception, and making the deductions from the officers which was originally provided for, we would not have to-day the exhibition which was shown by the statement I have given. But during the time of the Hon. Mr. Tilley as Minister of Finance the deductions from civil servants for the Superannuation Fund were cut down 50 per cent, and on the other hand, a great many people were superannuated, not because they sought superannuation, but because their places were wanted for friends of the Government, who brought influence to bear to remove the incumbents from office so that they might be installed in their positions. I could give several cases of this kind. You have the case of Mr. Shakespeare, who was appointed postmaster in Victoria, and the superannuation of Mr. Wallace, the previous postmaster, much against his will. You have the cases in Toronto where postmasters have been superannuated once or twice within the last twelve years in order to make room for others who have pressed their services on the Government, and you have the case of the postmaster of Montreal, who was superannuated a short time ago in order to make place for Mr. Dansereau, who gets about $4,000 a year, while the previous postmaster is drawing something like $2,000 a year. So you can go through the Government offices from the Atlantic to the Pacific and you can see evidences of the extravagances perpetrated for the purpose of meeting the urgent appeals of political friends, whereby we have the exhibition we have to-day of about 550 civil servants superannuated, and living on the country at an expense of $250,000 per year. The hon. Finance Minister is bringing in a Bill for the purpose of changing the system, but I contend that the whole system should be wiped out. There is no necessity whatever for its continuance, seeing that members of the civil service have every opportunity like other people to insure their lives. This system was adopted in imitation of the English system, which was introduced at a time when the privileges and advantages of life insurance were not so generally known or enjoyed as they are to-day, and in England the people are slow to part with customs and institutions which have been in existence for many years. But I am satisfied that in England the superannuation system has not been abused to the extent that it has been in this country. If it had been, the indignation of the people would no doubt have risen against it. From information that I have obtained, I believe the members of our Civil Service themselves would be glad to see the Act repealed, because a deduction is made on their salaries each year towards the fund, and in many cases the really efficient and faithful servants who labour long and efficiently and eventually die in the service get no advantage whatever from the Act. It is only the drones or the men who are removed to suit the convenience of the Government who reap the advantage of the system. If the system were not in existence the Government would not have at their hands the power to force men out of the service, and abuse that power as they have done from year to year. When I state that we have to-day on the superannuation list no less than 149 men who have been retired under the age of 55 years, 103 who have been retired under the age of 50, and 71 who have been retired under the age of 45 within the last twelve years, these facts of themselves are, I think, clear evidence that the Act has been grossly abused. Now, I contend that the Government should wipe out the whole system, and make some arrangement with those now on the list, and give them to understand that they must in future provide for themselves. In the next place, I contend that there is no class in the country better paid than the Civil Service. The average salary of our civil servants is above the average salary of bank clerks, school teachers, ministers or any other class in this country; and when that is the case, on what ground can any person plead that we should continue the system? Now, I challenge any person to contradict the statements I have presented to this House, carefully gathered from the records of Parliament from year to year, showing the operation of the system for the last twelve years, and in the face of these facts, I think it must be admitted that the whole system should be abolished at once. The labouring classes, the farming community, the pioneers of this country who have come in and waged war with the forests and turned them into fertile fields, men who have become old and gray and decrepit, are obliged to provide for themselves in their old age, and if they do not do so they must die in the ditch or go to the poor-house; and I want to know if these men are not entitled to more consideration at the hands of this House than a lot of civil servants who are well paid and who go to their offices at 9.30 and leave at 4? I say it is an outrage upon the struggling masses of this country that they should have been compelled to pay nearly $2,000,000 in the past twelve years for the purpose of providing retiring allowances for these people for the rest of their lives. I had not an opportunity of presenting these facts at the time the hon. Finance Minister brought in his Bill. I do not know whether he will take much notice of them; but when his Bill comes up for discussion again, I hope that a motion will be made to abolish the whole system and leave the Civil Service to provide for themselves, and thus relieve the people of this country of the heavy drain to which they are subjected under the operations of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has opened up the discussion with a view to bringing this subject to the attention of the House to-day. The whole subject will necessarily be discussed on the Bill which I have introduced and I would suggest to my hon. friend not to press his motion, after the information he has given, but to allow the discussion to be taken up again on the Bill, when it will be carried on with something more of a practical purpose than it can be at the present time under an abstract resolution.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This will be very practical if it is carried.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the suggestion is a fair one. The subject will come up again on the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Meantime, it is understood that the hon. gentleman does not contradict my hon. friend's figures, some of which are remarkable enough to call for the attention of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not understood at all. No doubt these figures will be brought up at an opportune time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope at that time the hon. gentleman will be prepared to give some fair explanation of the figures which my hon. friend quoted, because if he be correct in stating that 70 people under the age of 45 have been superannuated, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the Superannuation Act has been most grossly abused; and whatever may be said of the theory of the measure, when it comes to be so abused very few indeed, I think, can honestly defend it.

Motion withdrawn.

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILWAY CO.

Mr. CORBY moved for :

Copies of all communications, memorials, &c., addressed to His Excellency in Council, to the Dominion Government or any member thereof, since 1888, urging the granting of a federal subsidy to the Central Ontario Railway Company to enable that company to extend its line from Coe Hill northward.

He said: In moving for this information, I do so as the railway in question passes through my constituency, and through the county of Hastings. We are anxious that this company should extend its line from its terminus, now at Coe Hill, in the northern and mineral part of Hastings, which will develop large timber resources; and it is asking from the Dominion Parliament a revote of $3,200 per mile, and an extra subsidy of $2,800 per mile, for twenty miles, from Coe Hill to the village of Bancroft. I might say that this company has constructed, and has now in operation, 115 miles between Picton and Coe Hill, at a cost of nearly $2,000,000. It has shown its good faith by expending that large sum without any assistance from the Dominion Parliament. I might say that for part of the road running from Trenton to Picton, the company received from the Ontario Government, and the municipalities through which the road passes, $155,000; but for the road from Trenton to Coe Hill, a distance of 72 miles, it has not received $1 in the way of subsidy from the Dominion or Ontario Parliaments. The company desires to extend its line, later on, from the village of Bancroft, via Maynooth, to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway in the neighbourhood of Mattawa, which will give a through line by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Sudbury. This line cost will in the neighbourhood of $15,000 per mile, and will shorten the distance between Trenton and Sudbury, or Sudbury, via the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, by 150 miles. Iron ore can be shipped from Sudbury, via Trenton, there put on steam-barges, and then conveyed to Charlotte, at a cost of 25 cents per ton; or, in other words, it will cost to take the ore to Charlotte about 25 cents per ton, and in the neighbourhood of 75 cents per ton to Cleveland. The company will thus be able to carry the ore to these two points, and return cargoes of coal can be brought back at about the same rate. We have unlimited water power at the town of Trenton to operate an electric plant for the separation of the iron ore from the rock, thereby making a large saving in the shipping of ore from Trenton to Charlotte or Cleveland. We expect, when the Cleveland Administration comes into power that they will take off the duty on iron ore, and if they should, I see no reason why we ought not to have smelting works and rolling mills in the town of Trenton. I might say that, at the present moment, the Americans are experimenting with electricity in order to discover a means of smelting by that process. Should they discover that process, we have an unlimited water power by means of which we could operate large smelting works and rolling mills. I might state that I have a report here from Mr. T. L. Bolger, Civil Engineer and Provincial Land Surveyor, on that portion of the country from Coe Hill to the village of Bancroft. His report is as follows:—

To the Directors of the Central Ontario Railway.

I beg to report as follows:—

SIRS,—Since making my last report and while definitely locating the line from Coe Hill to Bancroft, a distance of some seventeen miles, I found the disturbance of magnetic needle caused by the presence of magnetic iron ore so great for most of that distance as to render the needle useless; in many places the variation was as much as twenty to thirty degrees from the true course.

In fact, ore appears to be present all over the district and distinct veins are known to exist for many miles beyond.

The quantity of iron along not only this portion of the line; but, in fact, along the greater portion of the line to be built, is so great that it would be difficult to convey any definite idea by representing the amount in figures.

Fortunately the amount of hardwood adapted to the manufacture of charcoal is scarcely less abundant. Maple and birch are found all along the whole of the proposed line.

The birch, it is safe to say, would be inexhaustible for fifty years to come.

The ore and the fuel are here directly together, and iron of a very superior quality ought to be produced very cheaply.

Yours truly,
(Signed) T. B. BOLGER,
C.E. & P.L.S.

I do not intend to take up the time of the House at any length with regard to this question, and I will conclude my few remarks by expressing the hope that the Government will grant the application of this company for a revote of $3,200 per mile, and an extra grant of $2,800 per mile, for twenty miles. This company is also anxious to extend its line from its terminus in the town of Pléton to the Bay shore, and there connect with the steamers plying in the Bay of Quinté. I am satisfied that if this line be built, it will develop large mineral resources in the county of Hastings, and also large and valuable resources of hardwood timber, and I hope the Government will see its way clear to grant this subsidy.

Mr. CARSCALLEN. Mr. Speaker, the construction of the railway to which my hon. friend (Mr. Corby) has just referred is a matter of deep interest to the constituency I have the honour to represent. I think it incumbent upon me, therefore, to second the resolution he has presented, which I do with great pleasure, and also to urge upon the Government the necessity for the proposed extension. As has already been stated, the construction of the road will open up one of the largest and most valuable mineral deposits in Canada. There are very large deposits of iron ore, gold ore, mica and other valuable minerals now lying idle for the want of transportation facilities such as would be furnished by the building of this road. That district has other great resources, including valuable timber, such as oak, ash, maple and other hard woods, which, under present circumstances, are not floatable on the stream, cannot be got to market, and are logged and burned on the ground. The people of that district have already shown enterprise in the development of their industries, one of the principal of which is still in its infancy, the cattle industry. When I tell you, Sir, that the few cheese factories already established in the section referred to have to haul their product in wagons over a very rough road, a distance of thirty and forty miles in order to reach a railway, and have to drive the cattle they design to sell a like distance, I am certain that no hon. gentleman in this House will oppose the assistance asked for. I think it was in 1885 the Government granted a bonus of $3,200 a mile to this very road. For some reason, known only, I presume, to the owners of the railway, this was allowed to lapse, but we ask now, what we confidently expect, a renewal of this grant and an additional grant of $2,800 per mile to encourage the building of this road and to give these people railway facilities which are necessary almost for their existence. I ought also to add that the railway, which it is now desired to extend, has been built and operated by private capital from Trenton to Coe Hill, a distance of 74 miles, and has not, as yet, received aid from either this or the Ontario Government, and I trust the usual sum per mile may be given us at this session in order that my constituents may receive the benefit of transportation facilities so necessary for their welfare and so necessary to place them on an even footing with other sections of the country.

Motion agreed to.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved for :

Return of any correspondence which may have taken place between the Government and any of the railway companies which have received public lands in aid of railway construction, in reference to the prices at which these lands are held and as to the steps taken by these companies to fulfil their trust by securing the early settlement of the lands so granted.

I am not going to detain the House at this moment with any lengthened observations upon the motion which I have put upon the Paper. I think that motion is important in itself and that it calls for the very careful consideration of members of the House, especially of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. We know, Sir, that when we entered upon the policy of aiding railway companies in the construction of railways by grants of land, especially in the outlying territories of the country, this was done, not as an end in itself at all, but as a means for securing the settlement of those lands which were granted. I have always been of opinion that it was a mistake not to fix a maximum price for these lands so as to exercise some control over the colonization of the country. But, Sir, there can be no doubt whatever of this fact, that the country would never have thought for one moment of making these appropriations and aiding in the construction of railways, but for the purpose of securing the colonization and settlement of the country through which the roads run. Now, I think, Sir, that, while it is important that railway companies should be allowed to secure to themselves fair compensation out of the lands which have been so appropriated subordinate to the very important trust that has been imposed upon these corporations. There can be no doubt that where the railway company receives a large grant of land, embracing hundreds of thousands of acres, with the view to the construction of a road, they receive these lands upon the express condition that they shall procure settlement and that the road shall furnish facilities for the colonization of these lands. Now, Sir, I do not know how far the Government have undertaken to exercise a supervision over the prices put upon these lands, or the efforts made by corporations to secure their colonization and settlement. That the Government have such control, I think, will admit of no question. It would be a monstrous proposition to say that once the company acquired these lands it may fix a very high price upon them, a price so high that none of the lands would be brought into the market, and that the Government or public lands, which are everywhere interspersed through these railway grants, alone should be settled up. Of course, Sir, where every alternate section of the country is reserved by the public, and especially where the lands so reserved are offered gratuitously for settlement, the chances for settlement of the public lands will immediately precede the settlement of those belonging to the company. But, Sir, this fact is to be borne in mind, that where alternate sections of land are interspersed among lands belonging to the state that are already settled, very many settlers would prefer to purchase these alternate sections rather than go at a greater distance from settlements that have already been established. I know that one of the objections that is frequently made by persons who go into the North-west, one of the reasons given in many cases of the abandonment of lands that had already been taken up, has been the large unsettled spaces which make anything like a continuous and dense settlement well nigh impossible. The settler is not likely to go where the number of his neighbours is so few that churches cannot well be maintained or public schools established. In order that you may have contiguous settlement, the land must be held at something like a reasonable price. Now, I am bringing no charge against any railway corporation that has received public lands. I have stated principles, which may have been strictly conformed to, and I prefer to state them rather in advance of any information that may be given, because I will, I think, satisfy everybody that I am not making those statements with the view of censuring any corporation, or making charges against any of the parties who have received those lands. I hope the Government have not been indifferent with regard to this subject. I hope that the correspondence which I move for, actually exists, and that the interest of the Government has been active and continuous, that the correspondence will disclose that fact, and that proper steps are being taken to secure the continuous colonization and settlement of land fit for settlement throughout our North-west Territories. Sir, it seems to me, and I think it must seem to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, that the progress of colonization and the settlement of the country have been very far from satisfactory. Every hon. gentleman on that side of the House, as well as on this, admits that the country is well adapted for settlement, that there are large areas of fertile land upon which the settler will be able to make a living, as well as on any other prairie section of the continent. That being so, it is important to inquire why the progress of settlement in that country, especially with the railway facilities that exist at the present day, has not been more rapid than it has been for several years past. I trust that the Government will be able to bring down the correspondence, that they will do so at a very early day, and that the House will have an opportunity of considering what has taken place, what the policy has been, how far supervision has been exercised, and whether any objection has been made to that supervision. I think that when we have that correspondence the House will be in a better position to consider the subject, and to take whatever steps may be necessary to secure a more rapid colonization and settlement of the country than have taken place in the years that are past.

Mr. DALY. In reference to the motion that has been made by the hon. gentleman, I only hope that he will not feel greatly disappointed when the returns are brought down; because to my knowledge I do not think that any amount of correspondence exists between the Government and the different railway companies that have received land subsidies from the Government in aid of those railways. I do not know, from my experience in reference to the corporations that have built lines of railways through Manitoba and the North-west Territories, that it would have been necessary for the Government to urge these different companies to place the price of their lands at such a valuation as would admit of a rapid settlement of that country; nor do I think that it is reasonable to suppose that those railway companies, who are, of course, mainly interested in the sale of their lands and the settlement of that country, would place the price of their land at such a figure as would lead to the results which the hon. gentleman has indicated. Now, the average price of lands sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and by the Manitoba and North-western Railway in Manitoba, is from $2 to $6 per acre. I may say for the information of the hon. gentleman that the Canadian Pacific Railway has sold a very large quantity of land during the past season in the south-western portion of Manitoba, at figures running from $2 to $6 per acre. The Government price of land to-day is $3 an acre; and the hon. gentleman will understand that if the average value of lands held by those companies is placed at from $2 to $6 an acre, according to situation, and according to proximity to market, that valuation is not a high one. That same state of facts exists in the North-west Territories. The lines of railway that have been constructed there, the Regina and Long Lake, as it is commonly called, the Edmonton Branch, running from Calgary to Edmonton, and the Galt Railway, are selling their lands also at from $2 to $6 an acre. These lands are sold upon the most reasonable terms. The terms upon which the Canadian Pacific Railway sells its lands, are in ten annual payments, that is, a payment down, and nine deferred payments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum. The same policy has been adopted by the other lines of railway; and the best evidence that can be given that the people are satisfied with these prices, is the fact that the purchasers, according to the returns I laid upon the Table the other day, with the names and location of purchasers from the Canadian Pacific Railway during the last year, are mainly residents in the province of Manitoba and of the North-west Territories, men who have a good knowledge of the value of lands, and consequently do not think that the prices placed upon them were too high. I hope that some correspondence may be found, and I have no doubt that it will indicate to the hon. gentleman and to the House that so far as the Government is concerned, not only the present Government, but those that have preceded it, have had in view the fact that the railway companies should not conduct their operations entirely with a view to returning a dividend to the shareholders, but that having received these land subsidies from the Government, they should be instrumental in peopling that country. I am glad to be able to state for the information of the hon. gentleman and the House, that the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Manitoba and North-western, and the other companies have made great efforts in connection with immigration. They have agents in Great Britain and in continental Europe, and are supplementing the efforts of the Government in every direction to bring people to that country. I am glad to be able to say that since I have had charge of the department, I have met with a cordial support from the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other corporations who have built railways in that country. They are giving the Government every support in our endeavour to bring immigrants to this country, and I may take this occasion to state now that from the reports we are receiving daily from our agents in Great Britain and in Europe, there is every indication of a large immigration to Canada this year. I may say in conclusion that so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Manitoba and North-western, the Long Lake and Regina, the Calgary and Edmonton, and the Galt system of railways, are concerned, I have found in my correspondence with those gentlemen, and in meeting the officers of those different lines of railways, that they seem to be actuated by one motive, and that is to assist the Government in every way they possibly can to people our western plains.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I desire to inquire, whether the Government have received from the various railway companies returns of lands sold or settled each year, and whether such returns can be brought down?

Mr. DALY. So far as my knowledge goes, I think it is only compulsory on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to make such return. The return from that company I laid on the Table of the House within fifteen days of the opening of Parliament, in accordance with the provisions of the Act. No doubt, I shall be able to obtain the information which the hon. gentleman desires. If the statute requires that other railway companies shall make similar returns, they will be obtained. If the statute does not require such returns to be made, I will endeavour to have returns prepared.

Motion agreed to.

SUGAR DUTIES.

Mr. LANGEЛИER moved :

That it is expedient and to the interest of the great bulk of consumers, to admit free of duty all foreign sugars, whether raw or refined.

He said : I do not expect that this motion, of which I gave notice some time ago, will be carried, in view of the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance in his Budget speech. On that occasion he stated that the only changes proposed to be made by the Government in the duties at the present time were as regard binding twine and coal oil. I desire, however, to avail myself of this opportunity to call the attention of the Government to an important question. The hon. gentleman stated that he would avail himself of the vacation, in which to study the question of the general effects of the tariff; and there is one article of importation which requires even more attention than coal oil, and that is the article of sugar. Two years ago the Government made a change in the tariff in regard to sugar. It was then stated that the change was to abolish all duties on raw sugar. Every one, however, knows that this is not correct, that the duties have not been abolished on all kinds of sugar, but only on sugar not exceeding No. 14 Dutch standard. Hon. members will remember that at the time I exhibited several samples of sugar, many which were tasted by hon. members—raw sugars produced in Jamaica. They had been sent to me by a friend, who had them from a member of the leading sugar firm in Jamaica, Messrs. Lascelles, DeMarco & Co. Those gentlemen, observing by the newspapers that the Government had introduced resolutions to abolish duties on raw sugars, thought they would introduce their sugars into this country, and they proposed to make large shipments to Canada. When those gentlemen arrived here and exhibited their samples of sugar to the Customs authorities, they were told that they could not be admitted free of duty, and that they would have to pay a duty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound, which is the duty now levied on the manufactured article. They at once stated that they could not pay the duty, as the sugar was not refined, but was only manufactured with greater care than sugars produced in the Spanish West Indies. The Customs authorities told them, however, that one sample was No. 16 and another No. 18 Dutch standard, and, under our tariff, the duty has to be levied on all grades over No. 14 Dutch standard. I am told by a gentleman intimately acquainted with the question, that sugar under No. 14 is in such a condition that it cannot be consumed, but must be handled by the refiner. What has been the result? We see the result in the figures given by the Minister of Finance from the Trade and Navigation Returns. Very little sugar was imported last year in a refined state, only 8,500,000 pounds, or not 3 per cent of the whole quantity of sugar imported paid any duty which would go into the public treasury. Practically all the sugar imported has been imported in such a state that it had to pass through the hands of the refiners, and the refiners, of course, increased the price of sugar by the amount of the duty. The effect of the present tariff is to shut out, almost completely, as shown by the official returns, all kinds of sugar which can be consumed as imported, and to compel the consumers of sugars in this country to take all their sugars from the refiners. The result has been that the importations, as shown by the Trade and Navigation Returns, were 345,000,000 pounds last year, that paid a duty of nearly $3,000,000, which went, not into the public Treasury, but into the hands of the refiners, the handful of refiners we have in this country. The Minister of Finance and his friends on the Government side have, several times, boasted that they have given the people of this country a free breakfast table, because they have abolished the duties on tea and coffee. Sugar, however, is a more important article for the breakfast table than either tea or coffee.

Mr. FOSTER. No; that is a great mistake.

Mr. LANGELIER. I take the figures respecting the quantity of tea imported—I do not refer to coffee, of which a small quantity is imported. A very large quantity of tea was imported last year, and yet the whole value of the tea imports reached only one-third of the value of the sugar imports. The value of the sugar imported was over $9,000,000, while the value of the tea imported was only $3,500,000. These figures show that sugar is much more important on the breakfast table of the consumer than either tea or coffee; and if it is so desirable to give to the people, and especially to the labouring classes, a free breakfast table, sugar should be made as free as tea or coffee. Why this is not done can be gathered from the remarks made by me a few moments ago. There is no one interested in maintaining the duties on tea and coffee, but the sugar refiners, who have great influence with the Government, are interested in maintaining the duties on sugar, because they give them the opportunity of taking $3,000,000 from the consumers of the country. The consumption of sugar, last year, was 70 pounds per head. The Minister of Finance said that each person in this country consumed, last year, at least 70 pounds, which gives 58 cents tax which each individual pays, not into the public treasury, but to the sugar refiners. I hold, therefore, that, in the revision of the tariff, which is going to take place next year, the Government should not forget to deal with sugar. If they do not think proper to abolish altogether the duty, which they might, perhaps, find difficult, it would be to the advantage of the consumers to impose only the American tariff. I am informed that, under that tariff, the United States admit free all sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard. I hope the Government will find it possible, if not to abolish completely the duty on sugar, at least to place sugars not exceeding No. 16 Dutch standard on the free list.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman who has made this motion has informed the House that the effect of the present duty on raw sugars is to put $3,000,000 a year into the treasuries of the sugar refiners of Canada. I have to congratulate him upon the great stride he has made in his calculations. In previous years we have heard from the hon. member from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) the amount computed at $2,000,000, and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), who is a more reliable authority on the sugar question than the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), or the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier), placed it at $600,000 a year. I think it will be a gratification for the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion, and who is so anxious that the consumers of Canada should not pay any excessive price for their sugar, to hear, that the average price of sugar refined in Canada during the past year has been lower than that of the similar article in the United States of America. The hon. gentleman expresses very great anxiety on behalf of the consumers, and he has instituted a comparison between the per capita quantity of sugar used and the quantity of tea used; at least I think that was the hon. gentleman's argument. I need hardly remind him that when his friends were in power, and controlled the public affairs of this Dominion, they did not show any very great anxiety for the consumers of Canada in the matter of the sugar duty, or the duties on tea and coffee, because the hon. gentleman will remember that during the Liberal regime, tea and coffee, which are now free, and raw sugar under No. 14 Dutch standard, which is also free, were then subject to a considerable duty. I do not understand the hon. gentleman to say of his own personal knowledge that the sugar refiners of Canada made $3,000,000 during the past year. I assure him that such was not the case. I am interested in a sugar refinery in the city of Halifax, and I can tell him that the result of the year's business for us has been: that we made one and a half per cent on the amount of capital which is invested in that refinery. If I compute that amount on the original cost of that refinery, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the profits for the year did not amount to one per cent. I think he will recognize that that is not an excessive return for the capital invested. As a matter of fact, the institution to which I refer paid a dividend of 6 per cent upon a very reduced capital, but even that amount of money was not all earned during the past year. In order that we may bring this question to a practical test, and in order that hon. gentlemen opposite may have no excuse for reiterating these wild statements to the effect that $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 were made by the Canadian sugar refiners during the past year, I have ascertained from those engaged in the business—I speak of the Halifax refinery—that the average price of granulated sugar refined in Canada sold last year was 4½ cents per pound. Most of the sugar refined by that institution was imported from the Island of Cuba. It tested 96, and it cost 3¼ cents per pound, a difference of ¼ of a cent between the prices of the raw and the refined, of about 75 cents per 100 pounds. In the previous debates which have taken place on the sugar question, hon. gentlemen opposite computed that it cost 60 cents per 100 pounds to change the raw into refined sugar. If to that 60 cents we add the difference in the test between raw, and the granulated sugar, we find it is equal to 12 pounds, we have as the cost of manufacturing, and the difference in the test, an average of 72 cents. If you deduct that from the 75 cents, and then compute the quantities of sugar imported into Canada, hon. gentlemen will see that there was no such sum of money as they have stated made by the sugar refiners of the Dominion. We all recognize that this motion is simply an attack upon the National Policy, but hon. gentlemen opposite in their wildest attacks upon that policy, have seldom contended that the full amount of duty has been paid by the consumers. In this particular instance, the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Laugel) has simply said that we have imported so much raw sugar, and that amount, estimated at eight-tenths of a cent per pound, amounts to so much, and that consequently that amount was made by the refiners. The hon. gentleman will, I trust, permit me to tell him that the practical experience of those engaged in the business is entirely different, and in the case of one of these refineries, that in the city of Halifax with which I am connected, I know that no such rate of profit was realized. I trust, in view of the fact, that he will recognize that he is labouring under some very great mistake. It was contended in previous years, although the hon. gentleman did not raise the contention this year, that the consequence of the difference existing between the Canadian tariff and that of the United States, resulted in the fact that the Canadian consumer would pay more for sugar than the American consumer. He has pointed out to the House that under the American tariff you can import sugars under 16 Dutch standard, and that instead of eight-tenths of a cent per pound, as in Canada, the duty there is five-tenths of a cent per pound. It will be a gratification to the hon. gentleman, and I am sure it will be a gratification to all hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, to know, that their predictions have not been verified, and that instead of the Canadian consumer during the past year paying more for his sugar, as a matter of fact, he has paid less than the American consumer. The average price for granulated sugar in Canada has been about $4.12½ per 100 pounds, while the average price in the United States for granulated sugar during the past year has been about $4.42½ per 100 pounds, showing that granulated sugar has been selling lower in Canada than in the United States. The hon. gentleman's contention was that the price of sugar to the consumer was increased by the full amount of duty. I have shown the hon. gentleman from figures which cannot be disproved, that, when he computes the cost of manufacturing, the price of raw sugar, the price at which the granulated has been sold, and the difference in test, and if he will carefully make that calculation, he will realize that no such sum as he stated was made by the Canadian refiners. I think he will recognize that he has been misinformed when he states that the people of Canada have had $3,000,000 added to the price of their sugar in consequence of the present tariff.

Mr. LANGELIER. I have only one word to say in reply to the hon. gentleman. He stated that the figures I gave do not agree with those given last year by the hon. member for South Oxford, and the hon. member for South Brant. It is quite evident that they could not agree, because the figures of my hon. friends were based upon the consumption of the previous year, whereas mine were based on the consumption of last year, which was nearly double that of the previous year; and that immense increase of consumption shows what a reduction of the tariff on an article of such large consumption as sugar means to the people. Then the hon. gentleman in comparing the price in Canada with the price in the United States, speaks of the average price during the year; but it is possible to prove almost anything by means of averages. That is not the way to show the difference in price. If the price of sugar was lower in the United States than it was in this country, how can he explain that only such a very small quantity, almost a ridiculous quantity, of refined sugar has been imported into this country from the United States or from any other country?

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman must have misunderstood me. I said that refined sugar was cheaper in Canada than it was in the United States.

Mr. LANGELIER. The hon. gentleman says that the refiners do not make large profits. Then why does he not agree with me in proposing the abolition of the duty? The treasury gets nothing at all from the duty; the returns from sugar during the past year have been almost nothing; and if the refiners make no profit, why should we retain the duty on sugar at all? That is the best argument in favour of the motion that has been presented to the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are accustomed every session to hear those gentlemen who are interested in the National Policy defend the provisions of the tariff that apply to themselves. The hon. gentleman has on former occasions attempted to justify the duty on sugar. Even before the duty was reduced last year, he sought to make this House and the country believe that the people of Canada were under a lasting obligation to the refiners of this country for supplying them with sugar at such very low prices; but since the duty has been reduced to eight-tenths of a cent a pound they are getting it much cheaper than before. The hon. gentleman fought very vigorously for the continuance of the old duty, but now, after the duty has been reduced, he says the refiners have made no money. Well, they have had all the necessary protection, and if they do not make money there must be a screw loose somewhere. It is not because the people of this country get their sugar at lower prices than they ought to, so that there must be some other reason. According to the figures given by the hon. Finance Minister, 350,000,000 pounds of sugar were consumed in this country last year, and on that quantity the duty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound would give the hon. gentleman and those interested with him in the refining business $2,800,000; and if they have not made that much money, the hon. gentleman would have us believe that it is owing to their magnanimous desire to supply sugar to the consumers at a lower price than the duty would enable them to charge. Now, we would like to have the evidence of that. The hon. gentleman says that the Canadian people get their sugar at a lower price than the Americans. We know that there has been a combine in sugar in the United States; but why has the hon. gentleman said nothing of the price of sugar in England? Why has he not tried to prove that the Canadian refiners were selling sugar to the people more cheaply than they could have imported refined sugar from England? Will he dare to say that? But it suited him to quote the American price only. We know perfectly well that everywhere along the border the price of sugar is less on the American side than on the Canadian side. We know that it is smuggled into Canada in considerable quantities on that account. We know that in order to give the hon. gentleman and those associated with him in the refining of sugar the entire control of the Canadian market, the Government provided that no sugar above 14 Dutch standard should be admitted into Canada free. Had they admitted sugar up to 16 Dutch standard, the poorer classes of this country would have got their sugar duty free. The hon. Finance Minister said that the Government were giving the country a free breakfast table, but that was not the case. The fact is that the hon. gentleman and those interested with him have been enabled to pocket the amount of the duty. He has tried to show that the price of sugar during the past year has been lower in Canada than in the United States. We do not wish to confine ourselves to the United States in making comparisons. We wish him to compare the price here with the price in a country where sugar is on the basis of free trade; and if the hon. gentleman does that, he will hardly say that without the duty the people could not import sugar as cheaply as it has been sold in Canada. If that is so, I would like him to give evidence to show that the refiners did not get the advantage of the duty. They certainly must have pocketed the duty, because their prices charged are as high as they can extract from the consumers and compete with the imported sugar. Every gentleman in this House connected with the combine is prepared to cry poverty, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman who sits to his right, and who is head of the cordage combine, is prepared to state that that combine is not making money, but has been getting poorer instead of richer, and I dare say a great many of the other combines, which have been making money in this country, would be quite ready to make a similar statement.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) has found fault with me in striking an average, for the purpose of comparing sugar in Canada with that in the United States. If he will tell me any more accurate way of reaching a conclusion, I shall be very glad to oblige him by making a calculation in that way. I thought the way I took was the fairest and the usual way: that of averaging the price during the year. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct in basing his calculation on the increased quantity of sugar consumed during the year, and in stating that the quantity is nearly doubled. The fact is that sugar is so low that the consumption of it very materially increased. As regards the remarks made by the last speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot speak the second time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman would go to a town in western Canada on the border he would find he could purchase one-third more sugar in the United States for the same amount of money than he can in Canada.

Mr. KENNY. I do not know that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, as my hon. friend opposite has said, the hon. gentleman is quite prepared to deny that he could obtain the same grade cheaper in the United States than in Canada, and, of course, all these gentlemen who are fattening on the public are prepared, on the shortest notice, to declare that we can get it just as cheap here. Then why not double the duties and get it for nothing? That is the proper way to deal with this question.

Mr. FOSTER. That is an extreme view.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is an extremely logical deduction from the statement of the hon. gentleman. We know that these combinesters cannot always exact the uttermost pound of flesh. We know that they are prepared on all occasions to get the whole of eight-tenths of a cent per pound, which a generous Government gives them for the purpose of keeping their various refineries in profitable operation. But just so long as the various duties exist, just so long will these gentlemen make use of their opportunities, as far as they dare. It is not always prudent or practicable for them to take the entire amount out of the duty, which the Government, misusing its power as trustees of the people, practically steals from the pockets of the general public for the purpose of pensioning these particular members of the Red Parlour. It is perfectly well known to all who have paid attention to the subject that in this washing of sugar an extremely small number of hands are employed. Turning to our own census returns, I find that on an imaginary manufactured product of about $10,000,000 worth, which, I think, is the sum put down as manufactured goods by the refiners, the total number of hands employed was 723 in order to manufacture the quantity of sugar we consume. The hon. gentleman may be perfectly correct in saying that, if you strike an average, it will not turn out that the entire amount has been exacted; but is none the less correct, as my hon. friend has stated, that if the circumstances of the market favour them, the Government of Canada has put it in the power of the refiners to exact eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the whole 334,000,000 pounds which they refine. Circumstances may prevent them from getting the whole of those $3,000,000, and that is the reason why, the other evening, in discussing this question, I put the amount, not at $3,000,000, as I might justly have done, but at $2,000,000, which, I think, is about the tax inflicted on the people of Canada at this moment through the instrumentality of the present tariff. The fact of the matter is, I do not care what the price may be in the United States; but I know that there are men in Canada who would be prepared, if they had perfect freedom of trade, to lay down sugar, of quite as good quality as that which the refiners furnish us with, for at least half a cent, probably six-tenths of a cent per pound cheaper than the price at which it is now sold in Canada, and if you want to get a true measure of the amount taken out of the pockets of the people, you will find that it is perhaps not quite $3,000,000, but about $2,000,000 per annum. Our trade returns show that we have received about $80,000 of revenue from sugar compared with $2,000,000 divided between my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) and Mr. Senator Drummond, the chairman of the Conservative Association for the propagation of true doctrines in the province of Quebec, and more especially in the district of Montreal. We know perfectly well what is the reason this is allowed to continue.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Statement showing: 1. What is the total sum spent by the Government since Confederation in each province of the Dominion on the public works, classified as (1) harbours, piers and breakwaters, (2) improvements of rivers, and (3) dredging and dredges. 2e How much of the sum so spent in the province of Quebec was expended on works within the Harbour of Montreal. 3. (1) How much money the Government has loaned to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec towards the construction of the new harbour works in that city; and (2) what amount of interest, derived from the revenue of the said works, have the Harbour Commissioners paid to the Government in respect of the interest due on the said loans; and (3) how many years' interest, if any, are in arrears. 4. (1) How much money the Government has lent to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal towards the construction of harbour works in that city; and (2) how much interest is due thereon.—(Mr. Lévesque.)

Copies of all correspondence, papers or Orders in Council relating to the superannuation or retirement of Mr. Trudeau, late Deputy of the Minister of Railways and Canals.—(Mr. Edgar.)

Copies of all documents, correspondence and Orders in Council existing in the Departments of Railways and Canals and Justice, in relation to the claim of Hormisdas Martial for compensation for damages resulting from serious injuries incurred by him while working for the Government at the repairing of the Chambly Canal at St. John's, in 1886; also copies of the enquête had at Montreal before Judge Burbidge, and of his judgment dismissing the petition of right on the ground of prescription.—(Mr. Laurier.)

Copies of all accounts, letters, receipts and other documents in relation to the claim of Charles I. Labrie, of Lévis, for professional service in connection with expropriation, during the construction of the St. Charles Branch.—(Mr. Frémont.)

Copies of all correspondence, between any of the Judges of the Supreme Court, or the Provincial Superior Courts and the Department of Justice, concerning the Criminal Code, previous and subsequent to the passage of the same.—(Mr. Laurier.)

Correspondence, petitions and papers that are in the possession of the Government relating to the disallowance of Chapter 1 of the Acts of Nova Scotia dated 1892, "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to Mines and Minerals," including any petition of David McKeen, Esq., M.P., and others, in respect of the said Act.—(Mr. Weldon.)

Copies of petitions from County Councils and other municipal corporations asking that railways under Dominion control be compelled to build culverts on natural watercourses crossing their lines, and correspondence relating thereto.—(Mr. Casey.)

Correspondence and reports in reference to alleged irregularities occurring in the post office at Kempville from the 1st January, 1890, to date.—(Sir Richard Cartwright.)

Copies of all correspondence and petitions asking for a change in the post office at St. Sebastien, in the county of Beauce; and of the report of the Post Office Inspector in relation thereto.—(Mr. Godbout.)

Statement showing all payments made for the deepening of the River du Loup; the persons to whom such payments were made; the prices paid in each case for the several works; the amounts received by each person.—(Mr. Guay.)

Copies of all letters, telegrams and correspondence between the Government or any member thereof and the late English Financial Agents of Canada in London and the Bank of Montreal in reference to the recent change of agency at London.—(Sir Richard Cartwright.)

Copies of all correspondence, inspectors' reports, petitions and papers respecting the establishment of a new post office at Rougemont, or respecting the location of the post office at that place.—(Mr. Borden.)

Copies of all reports, documents, maps, manuscripts and correspondence in relation to exploring expeditions heretofore made to James' Bay and Hudson Bay.—(Mr. Joncas.)

Copies of all correspondence between the Government and the Quebec Board of Trade, respecting the appointment of a fishery officer in the place of Mr. W. H. Whitely, for the Bonne Espérance Division, from Checatca to Blancs Sablons.—(Mr. Joncas.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

MANITOBA SCHOOL CASE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When the motions were called to-day, I was engaged, and overlooked, for the moment, to make the motion respecting the Order in Council in regard to the Manitoba question which I promised to lay on the Table, but, with the consent of the House, I would move:

That the copy of a report of a special minute of the hon. the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 22nd February last, be printed, and that rule 94 be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 2) to disfranchise electors who have taken bribes.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WELDON. It is suggested that to change this section to make the sixty days run from the election, rather than from the publication in the "Canada Gazette" of the receipt by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery of the return of the writ, would be bringing the section more into conformity with the Controverted Elections Act. Therefore, I would ask that the clause read as follows:—"Whenever, within sixty days after the date on which an election is held," and so on; and also that the word "voter" be substituted for "elector" in all the subsections.

Mr. SPROULE. I think this clause will give rise to a great many inquiries. After an election, rumours are always floating about, and one tells another that bribery has prevailed, that such and such a thing has taken place, and on the strength of those reports, a man may file a petition, honestly believing it to be correct. I believe he ought to file some kind of a declaration when a protest is entered, because we find that many turn out to be erroneous after the court has examined them.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I think, in a matter of this importance, where the existing machinery is so widely departed from, and new machinery is adopted, and where the House is asked, and, in fact, to some extent, has adopted a principle at variance with that which now exists, the House should have some intimation from the Government how far this Bill meets with their approval. It is not a matter of minor importance, like the amendment to a private Bill; it is an amendment of one of the most important Bills on the Statute-book. I question whether it is entirely desirable that such a Bill, although introduced by a private member, should be entirely left to his guidance; and I think the House ought to know how far the Government are disposed to facilitate the Bill, and approve of its principle. For my own part, I must say that I am not in thorough accord with the principle of the Bill, but I do not know that this is the proper time to discuss it. The Bill was read a second time very hastily, and at that time I think the majority of the House imagined that we would have heard some expression of opinion from the leader of the Government as to the principle involved in the Bill. We propose here to punish those who receive bribes, whereas we do not take any cognizance of, or propose to punish, those who are, by a long odds, the more guilty, those who are administering the bribes. In an ordinary constituency there will be found a number of very poor men, men who are subjected to temptation by their richer neighbours, and who, sometimes, no doubt, weaken and succumb to the temptations which their richer neighbours place before them. My humble judgment is, that the man who is most to blame is the man who lines his pockets with five, ten, twenty, or thirty thousand dollars, and goes in for the purpose of debauching a constituency; and the poor, unfortunate man, who, in the excitement of the moment, is seduced into accepting a five dollar note, is not one-half as guilty as the scoundrel, who, for the purpose of debauching a constituency, takes in a large amount of money and bribes the electors. The House is concerned at the present time in passing a very severe measure to punish the poor fellow who accepts a small bribe, while it is ignoring absolutely its duty to punish the man who offers the bribe. It has seemed to me, in the little time I have had to give to the consideration of the Bill and the existing law, that if the existing law is defective—and I think, owing to the decisions of some of the judges, it is defective—our duty would rather lie in the direction of strengthening the existing law, than in introducing a new and novel procedure. For instance, supposing a petition is filed after an election against the return of a candidate, and some hundred or more cases of bribery and corruption are given as particulars. If the defendant goes into court and coolly acknowledges, or if his counsel acknowledges, that he has lately discovered that one man whom he has to acknowledge under the law as an agent, has unwittingly been a party to what is in strict law a breach of the election law, the election is at once voided, and the judge at once stays his hand and refuses to go into the other charges. He says: It has been confessed that a breach of the law has taken place, a breach of the law which, according to a strict legal construction, voids the election, and, therefore, I will stay my hand and receive no more evidence. That has been the decision in a celebrated Ontario case, and has been followed in a great many others by most of the judges, I think, throughout the Dominion. Now, it has always seemed to me that that decision struck at the very root and object of the Controverted Elections Act. The Controverted Elections Act not only provided for an investigation into the cases of bribery which were put in issue by being placed in the particulars, and into the examination of those cases, in as far as a breach of the law voided the particular election complained of; but the law went on to declare that the judges should go on and ascertain whether there was a general system of bribery in the constituency, and report to Parliament. But this object is practically avoided by the judge who decides that when one case of corruption is proven, the election is annulled. It appears to me that the law is defective, and ought to be amended in this respect, that even if one case is proven which voids the election, the judge should go on and hear all the cases in which evidence can be given, so that it may be ascertained whether there has been a general system of bribery and corruption. I am speaking now entirely for myself. I have not communicated with my friends, nor do I know how far they are in unison with me. But speaking entirely for myself, I say that this Bill does not meet with my approval at all, because it strikes a blow at the man who, of all others, is the more innocent, and allows the more guilty to escape. I cannot divest myself of the idea which is prevalent in this country, whether based upon the truth or not, that at every election there are a large number of men who deliberately go into a constituency with a large amount of money and debauch that constituency. To say that these men should go scot free, while the poor devil who receives a dollar is to be hounded down and punished, singled out as if he was the only culprit, does not appear to me to be legislating exactly upon those lines of justice and fair-play which should control the legislation of this Parliament. I submit these views to the House, and I think it is right to ask that before we go further with the Bill the committee should hear from the leader of the Government how far the principle of the Bill meets with the approval of the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. Minister who introduced the Bill explained it in a way that I thought was very forcible, and as the views he put forward on the second reading were not in any way challenged, there was no further discussion, and I did not consider it necessary on the part of the Government to express any view respecting it. As the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), however, desires to know what my opinion is, I beg to say that, so far as I am concerned, I am entirely in sympathy with the hon. gentleman's Bill, and approve of its principle. I think the principle is a sound one, and it seems to me what the hon. member for Queen's has said merely amounts to this after all, that there may be another offence in connection with elections not embraced in this Bill. That may be an excellent reason why we should seek further amendments to our election law, but I think this Bill takes up one very prominent vice connected with elections, and undertakes to deal with it, in an entirely new way. It is true, and it remains to be seen whether the Bill, when passed, will be anything more than an experiment or not. But I agree with the introducer of the Bill that the experiment is well worth trying. I do not agree with the view presented by the hon. member for Queen's about the more prominent vice being that of the person who offers bribes. From any experience I have had in observing election petitions, I am inclined to be led to the conclusion that there are not many cases in which persons go into counties with large sums of money and offer bribes to electors, but that the case is very common of large numbers of persons in a constituency standing off and in the most bold manner demanding that they shall be bribed before they take any part in the election. There are constituencies in which, it is said, that year after year there are districts which, during election periods, are put down by candidates on both sides, as requiring so much money in order to get the vote of the people out, and that whole classes of persons like those, sometimes whole communities, require to be dealt with in a very drastic way. The hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill explained to the committee that our present procedure fails to meet cases of this kind. When an election case breaks down, either from the circumstance which the hon. member for Queen's has just mentioned, of a single case of bribery having been proved and the trial therefore coming abruptly to a conclusion, or when the actual condition of the constituency fails for any other reason to be brought to the notice of the judge, there is practically no procedure by which an inquiry could be prosecuted, and if there were no petition at all, there would be no opportunity for an inquiry. What the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) proposes is that there shall be a procedure by which twenty persons can come forward voluntarily at their own expense and risk and undertake to institute an inquiry into corrupt practices which have prevailed at the election, notwithstanding the candidates themselves and their friends, it may be, do not think it worth while to present a petition for the purpose of preventing the return. My hon. friend thinks that under these circumstances an effort would frequently be made to purge the constituency, as he expresses it, and put down that which is a crime against the rights and privileges of Parliament, as well as the representative rights of the people themselves, and it seems to me he should be aided in doing that. The Bill aims at carrying out that object and endeavouring to accomplish that result, even though there should be other results that should be aimed at also.

Mr. LANGELIER. I agree with the hon. member for Queen's, that it is very undesirable to punish the poor man who receives a bribe and not punish the rich man who bribes him. Both these results should be secured. Every one is aware, who has an experience at elections, that a great deal of bribery takes place that is not reached by election petitions. The rules for the trial of election cases are very strictly followed, by the judges of our province, and in consequence it is sometimes difficult to reach the real truth in connection with bribery. When elections are protested there are some times one hundred cases which do not appear to have much foundation for them, and they cannot be pressed unless they are entered in the particulars. I do not know the practice in other provinces, but Quebec judges are very strict in confining the parties to the particulars. Very often the parties do not know exactly whether this man or that man has been guilty of bribery, and the truth is elicited only in the course of the investigation, or at all events it is only possible then to fix the charge on a certain party. These charges must be contained in the particulars. After a certain time, however, amendments to particulars are not allowed. I remember very well a case in which, after the trial had proceeded one or two days, amendments of particulars was refused, even although a most gross act of bribery could be proved. The case was connected with the county of Kamouraska, and after two days a gross case of bribery came to light. The parties had been screened, and the case was not brought forward because it might implicate some of the parties. I remember the particulars of the case very well, because I acted for the defendant. When the case was opened out completely, the parties came forward and filed affidavits stating that a gross case of bribery had been committed during the election. The judge would, however, not allow the particulars to be amended; I am not saying the judge was wrong, for he was only following the practice of that province. The judge decided that the application came too late, that the parties knew the facts long before the trial took place; and in fact it was well known that they did not want the facts to come to light until the last possible moment, and so a gross briber was left unpunished, and could not be reached by the trial. Machinery such as is proposed in the present Bill would prove very effective in certain places with which I am acquainted. I know of a parish in the neighbourhood of Quebec, where it is publicly stated that there is only one elector who does not offer to sell his vote. He is well known, and he is known as the man who does not sell himself at the election. If we could reach the people in such a parish—and there are very few parishes of that kind in Quebec—great good would be done. I could name the parish, for it is well known throughout the district of Quebec. We should punish under this law not only parties who bribe, but parties who offer themselves to be bribed. That is the greatest pest at elections—people coming to election agents and offering to be bribed, on the plea that travelling expenses or other expenditure are required. I think the mere asking of money should be punished as an act of bribery. In committee the Bill might be further amended so as to still more effectually prevent bribery at elections.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think we are called upon to discriminate between the wrong-doing of the briber or bribee. This is a Bill to deal with one class of offence, and if there is another class, it can also be dealt with. At present we are dealing with the question as to how to administer a great public trust. The franchise is a trust, and if the electors do not guard it, they should not continue to enjoy it. This measure is in order to get discovery in the first place, and the law at present is radically defective in that regard. The only machinery by which discovery may be secured now is cumbersome, and practically a dead letter. Whether this may be the best measure we can have or not I cannot say at present, but I approve of the spirit of it, as I approve of any measure that has for its object purifying the electorate and guarding the interests of the people. I have not studied the Bill, and I feel free to offer amendments in committee on it. I believe the time has arrived when the electors who do not guard this trust, ought to be taught that the franchise is the gift of free men, so long as they make a proper use of it, but that, so soon as they abuse it, it becomes a danger to the state, and they should not have the benefit of it.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I have already given my opinion on a Bill not altogether similar to this one, but referring, however, to amendments to the Electoral Act, which Bill was not read a second time. I think that Bill was still better than the one under consideration. The present Bill aims at giving electors power to ask for an inquiry, at fishing for cases of bribery any one of them might suppose to exist. It would entail a large expenditure, an expenditure of two or three thousand dollars in some cases. The Bill states that twenty-five electors or more, should they have any reason to believe that bribery prevailed, might ask for an inquiry. And what reasons will they have to believe that bribery prevailed? They will always have some, particularly if they are twenty-five followers of the defeated candidate. They will always have reason to believe their candidate was only defeated owing to bribery cases. Well, the commissioner will have to go on the spot—he will be compelled to go—and there give notices; he will summon a certain number of witnesses. How many will he summon? Twenty-five, thirty or five hundred? Now, who is going to pay all these costs? Is it the candidate, or the member against whom this inquiry is held. They would be ruined right off. Since I have been here two amendments to the Electoral Act were brought up; the object of these amendments is good, I confess—it is to prevent bribery.

Of course, the hon. gentlemen will never say they are the parties who give bribes; it is always the fault of the electors. Well, in my opinion, the electors are less guilty than we are. That must be admitted. It must be admitted that if some of them take bribes, it is because we offer them advantages.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) It is no pleasure for all that.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) And we go further. We say to them—to those especially whom you cannot rely upon: "Do not trouble yourselves; keep at home; they will come and fetch you in a carriage; there will be supplies." I repeat that here, because that is what happens, and it is, perhaps, the best way to carry elections. If we punish the electors only, we are wrong. Let both be punished, the elector and the candidate. I stated already, and I state once more, that bribery is effected through canvassing from door to door. In public meetings bribery is impossible. The canvassing is done by the candidate himself or his agents. They go in a house, and we know what happens then. Well, in my judgment, a simple amendment to the Electoral Act stating in substance: "Any candidate who, either personally, or by his agents, will canvass or try to canvass the electors, will be guilty of a bribery case sufficient to have the election annulled," would be the best means to cause bribery to disappear. The candidate would not canvass personally nor allow canvassing to be done. For, when a man allows himself to be put in nomination, it is with the hope of carrying the election and avoiding a contestation. Coming back to the Bill now before us, I say that either in its whole, or taken section by section, it is infeasible. I am, perhaps, going a little far, but it seems to me it is contrary to the principles of the English law to have a commission appointed to fish for evidence, in order to find out guilty parties. It is something extraordinary, that will be found in no English statute. I will not further extend my remarks, for the Bill was well discussed; but I beg, Mr. Chairman, to move that the Committee rise.

Motion agreed to (Yeas, 33; Nays, 30), and Committee rose.

DUTY ON BINDER TWINE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Mulock:

That it is expedient to place binding twine on the free list.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend now to speak at any length upon this matter, for it has been fully threshed out both on the motion itself and in the debate on the Budget. But, since the original motion was made, some circumstances have happened which somewhat change the aspect of the proposition. For example, the Government have since reduced the duty on binder twine from 25 per cent to 12½ per cent, and that is a concession so far as it goes. Since this motion was introduced, a Mr. Morris, connected with the Consumers' Cordage Company, has been good enough to give his views to the country, and he gives now as the only reason why twine should not be placed on the free list: That the American farmers' harvest, terminating before the Canadian harvest, Canada would be a slaughter market for the surplus stock of the United States. I turned up the evidence given by Mr. Morris before a committee of this House in 1888, and I find that when he was examined in the month of May in that year, he stated that he had been a member of a combine for the manufacture of cordage in Canada; he manufactured about one-third of the whole output for the year; and in answer to a question, he stated that at that time, namely, in the month of May, he had sold the whole of his output for the year. Therefore, according to the custom of the trade, in 1888 at least one-third of the product of the Canadian mills was sold by the manufacturers early in the year. It would seem, therefore, that, when he gave his evidence here, it was not the custom of the consumers of binding twine to postpone obtaining their supplies until after the American harvest. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there are good reasons why this motion should be adopted. You will remember, Sir, that it was established by incontrovertible evidence, under the hand of the Cordage Company itself, that it was the second largest manufactory of its kind in the world, that it had practically unlimited capital and was not in need of protection in Canada. There has not been a single argument advanced why this company is in need of protection now. It has all the capital that it can require; it has the ramifications of its business well established; it is established in the midst of the consumers; and no one has yet stated that it cannot manufacture binding twine as cheaply as the same article is manufactured elsewhere. Therefore, not a single argument has been advanced in favour of the maintenance of the protection of the binding twine except this one, that our market, being a week or two later than the American market, stands a chance of being made a slaughter market for the American output. If that is the worst that can happen, I ask how is the Canadian farmer going to be prejudiced by getting his binding twine cheaper than the Canadian manufacturer can turn it out? The bugbear put before us is that the Canadian farmer may get his binding twine cheaper than the American farmer. Now, when the manufacturers in Canada, having succeeded in inducing the Government to give them a high protection, abuse their advantage and combine against the people, I hold that they have no longer any claim upon Parliament for protection, and that that protection should be wiped out. The wiping out of the duty should act as a deterrent against the formation of such combinations. You cannot conceive of a company having more disinterested itself to consideration at the hands of Parliament than the company that now pleads with us for protection. I think all will agree with me that when industries combine in our midst to take advantage of an artificial state of trade, caused by a protective tariff, and unite, not for the common good, but in order to obtain illegitimate gains from the people, that protection should be withdrawn, for two reasons. It should be withdrawn as a matter of right; it should be withdrawn because it is due to the people that they should not be at the mercy of an unjust combination; it should be withdrawn also as a deterrent to evil-doers—to others inclined to do the same. Now, Sir, we have had it on incontrovertible evidence that the Canadian combine has acted in the way I have mentioned; and if you stop at a half measure, giving it still some reward, you are, in fact, offering a premium for the repetition of such works. Now, what has this company caused to be done? It has extracted for some years more than it ought from the farmers of Canada, and it has compelled the farmers of Canada to unite for self-protection—to collect a large capital and establish a factory in Brantford. A short time ago a deputation from the Patrons of Industry waited on the Government; I was present, and we had it on the evidence of some of the officers of that association that some persons intimately connected with the organization had invested something like $100,000 in plant and buildings in order to manufacture binding twine to enable the farmers thereby to escape from the bondage of the Consumers Cordage Company. This monopoly has also compelled the Government of Ontario to expend a considerable amount of public money in the purchase of plant to manufacture this article, and in like manner we have had it announced by the First Minister that the Government of Canada have been obliged to take steps in a similar direction. We have had this combination taking possession of a large number of independent industries that were in full healthy existence in Canada. It first leased them, then bought them up, and closed up some of them; it runs a few others; and it having thus brought the consumers within its grasp and paralyzed the trade, a large amount of public money is necessarily expended in the endeavour to escape from the monopoly. That being the case, the Parliament of Canada cannot, on the present occasion, administer a more wholesome rebuke to all persons and combinations inclined to conspire in this way against the public good than by withdrawing the protection which is artificially thrown around this industry. Regardless altogether of the question of protection and free trade, I think every person must concede this one proposition, that when a number of people in the same trade combine against the public good, they have declared war against the people, and it is the duty of the people to protect themselves and, if possible, to render that combination inoperative for the future. This particular combination, having, as it were, put itself outside the pale of parliamentary protection, is now, I think, entitled to be left to conduct its industry as best it may, and I trust that it will be able, as I believe it is, to conduct it profitably still. The House is also bound to teach others that there is but one way in which they can hope to continue to enjoy such protection as Parliament gives, that is, not to abuse that protection. For these reasons, I hope, the House will see its way to adopt the motion which I have placed in your hands.

Mr. LISTER. I know no reason, Mr. Speaker, why the farmers of Canada should be taxed more than the farmers of the United States upon binding twine they require to use for the purpose of harvesting their crops. Coming, as I do, from the frontier, I have perhaps a better opportunity than most hon. gentlemen in this House of comparing the existing prices on the two sides of the line; and I can state that in the city of Port Huron, within three-quarters of a mile of the town of Sarnia, binding twine of the best quality is selling at 8 cents a pound, while in the town of Sarnia the very same quality is sold at 10 cents a pound, or a difference of 24 per cent, or 1 per cent less than the protection afforded by the tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, Sir, there can be no real reason for continuing any duty upon binding twine. We know perfectly well that only a few months ago the concerns engaged in this business in Canada were owned by an American syndicate or combination. It is a matter of actual knowledge that an American concern, which was carrying on that business in Canada, undersold the Canadian institutions, and the result was that a cordage company of the United States succeeded in acquiring all the cordage factories in the Dominion. Those gentlemen thus acquired the power of limiting the production, and, by so doing, they were enabled to take full advantage of the tariff. The result of all this was that a few gentlemen in Halifax have become, within the last few years, very wealthy indeed. Commencing with a very small business, they enlarged the factories from year to year, and succeeded in amassing great wealth. How has that been done? It has been done by the Act of this Legislature, which says, in effect, that the farmers of this country shall pay into the pockets of this combine 24 cents upon every dollar's worth of twine which they buy. Why should the farmers of this country pay more for their binder twine than the farmers of the United States? It cannot be asserted that this industry requires any tariff protection, when it is borne in mind that the binder twine manufacturers here can purchase the raw material as cheaply as can the American manufacturers. It cannot be gainsaid that the manufacturers of this country can procure machinery equally as good as those of the factories in the United States, and it will not be said that they cannot procure as skilful workmen as any to be had in the United States. Then, so far as this manufacturing interest is concerned, the manufacturers on both sides of the line are upon terms of perfect equality, and in a position to compete with each other on equal terms, so that our factories ought to be able to furnish twine as cheaply as those of the United States. Why should this particular industry be bolstered and nursed by a protective policy? We know that the manufacture of twine is the smallest portion of its business. We know that the manufacture of cordage is its principal business, and the manufacture of binder twine only an incident of it. We know that the Government of this country, feeling that this tax is a burden upon the people, feeling, no doubt, that these manufacturers were extracting from the people greater profits than they had a right to exact, felt it to be their duty to reduce that tax by convict labour, and the nominal reason given was that it required employment for our convicts. But I venture to assert that the real reason was to allay, if possible, the discontent pervading the farming community of Canada. They held out to the people that, at all events, this particular factory in the penitentiary would be able to reduce the price of this commodity, through the competition thus created against our protected manufacturers. That, to a certain extent, was done also by the Provincial Legislature of Ontario, and we find, as my hon. friend from York (Mr. Mulock) told us, that, in order to protect themselves against the exorbitant demand of the binding twine manufacturers, a number of farmers subscribed \$100,000 for the purpose of erecting a factory in Brantford. We know that they built that factory. We know that they are turning out binder twine, and we know that those farmers have told the Government and the country at large that they want no protection, but are able to compete with any factory on the continent. That being the case, why should the Government continue to keep on this article a tariff which is so offensive to the great majority of the people of this country. We find that the farmers of the lower provinces get their twine for nothing. Their twine is free, and the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton told us the other night that almost everything the fishermen of Cape Breton require to use is free, but, while boasting of that, he refused to accord to other portions of the Dominion privileges which that particular section of his enjoys. But this binder twine industry is not really the worst of the industries bred by the tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, if one thing can be worse and more inexcusable than any other, it is the duty the Government have placed upon the wall-paper used by the farmers of this country. When I tell you, Sir, that wall-paper can be purchased in Buffalo for $4\frac{1}{2}$ cents a roll, and that the duty on that is $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents a roll, you will understand how iniquitous is the tariff. 130 per cent is charged on the wall-paper used by the great majority of the people; but, as you go up to the finer qualities, the duty is reduced to an ad valorem of 35 per cent. So that while the labouring classes, while the toilers of this country have to pay 130 per cent on their wall-paper, the richer classes are only required to pay 35 per cent on the quality they use. Go through the tariff as you will, and you meet the same unjust discrimination against the poor in favour of the rich. Take the item of nails. In the United States the quality of nails used by the farmers generally, namely, wire nails, can be purchased for \$1.50 per keg, and the duty upon this is $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, so that the duty is equal to the cost of the nails. I may tell you, Sir, that in Port Huron these nails are sold readily at \$1.50 per keg of 100 pounds, while in Sarnia they are sold at \$2.90 or 10 cents under the tariff fixed by those hon. gentlemen. Go through the whole tariff if you will, and you will find that it bears with great hardness upon the labouring classes, while it bears with great lightness on the richer classes. That portion of the community best fitted to bear taxation is let off easily, while the class least fitted to bear it is most heavily taxed. There can be no excuse for refusing to take the duty off binder twine. Four-fifths of the people of this country demand that it be taken off. Petitions have poured into this House signed by thousands and thousands of farmers who beg and pray that this Parliament, in its power and might, shall relieve them of this tax amongst others indicated in those petitions. We will not be responsive to the voice of the people unless we yield to their reasonable demand, which I think is one of the most reasonable that has ever been made to this House.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. You would naturally think that, after the vote of last night, which gave hon. gentlemen opposite such a black eye, they would not venture to bring up this trade question again, at least this session. As a farmer, I should be wanting in that true manhood that characterizes the farmers of this country did I not raise my voice on this question. Perhaps these gentlemen who criticise this duty never sat on a binder for five minutes; many of them perhaps never saw a binder except from looking through the windows of a parlour car or from the hurricane deck of a fine steamer; and when they get up here and discuss the question of binder twine, a question that interests the farmer and the farmer alone, it shows me that they are not looking after the interests of the farmer; but they are looking after their own political interests, and, Mr. Speaker, until they can prove that the American farmer pays less for his twine than the Canadian farmer does, they have no case, and I say now, and I defy contradiction, that they have not and they cannot prove on the floor of this House or outside that the Canadian farmer pays more for his binder twine than the American farmer does. I set forth this matter before the House last year, and the statements I then made have never been contradicted. For ten years the American farmer, compared with the Canadian farmer has paid $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent more for his binding twine. Consequently, I say, and I say squarely and above board, that in this respect the Canadian farmer has no grievance. I can prove now, and I defy contradiction, that the Canadian farmer last year got his twine at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound cheaper and of better quality. I want to know what case these gentlemen can make out of this turmoil. For my part, as a farmer using the twine, I cannot understand why they should create this turmoil. I am sure my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) talked binder twine in my riding, and we gave him such a black eye that I should have thought he would never mention it again. I think the Government, of which I am proud to be a follower, has shown its good nature by yielding and taking one-half of the policy of the Opposition. In my riding the Goliaths of the party of gentlemen opposite were present to carry on the war against me, and they discussed this question in every part of the riding; and binder twine increased my majority. Now, the hon. members of this Government have been blessed with a little of the milk of human kindness, and they have met them half way, and so they have left them only half a ball of binder twine to harp upon. If the old Baldwin Reformers of this country could revisit the earth and look upon the shattered fragments of their policy there would be such a shaking of dry bones as has not been heard of since the days of Joshua. The doctor smiles. I am glad I have pleased him.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am very easily pleased.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. Now I want to say, Mr. Speaker, with regard to this binder twine question, that, so far as I am concerned I am tired of it. As a farmer I am sorry the Government touched it at all. I have a better opinion of the farmers of this country than to think they are going to be biassed by a few pounds of binder twine. I know the farmers of this country, and I know the advantages they receive from the National Policy. I know that the farmers of this country are not narrow-minded. The farmers of this country know that they are protected on beef, flour, pork and corn, to five times the value—aye, twenty times the value—of the binder twine, and I think I can speak with confidence that the farmers of this country do not thank the Government for this change. As a farmer, I am ready to stand alone rather than break into the National Policy. I am a National Policy man, you all know it. I will stand or fall by the National Policy. I know that it means the national existence of our country. I have said that before in this House; so far as I am concerned, I would never touch it; still I am pleased that our Government has yielded to the wishes of the few, because I think it is the few, for I know the people in my riding are not satisfied with the change; but they have met the few half way, and I say: Well done for the Government. I said last year that if it was the last vote I was ever to give I would support this Government; and I may say so with all the greatest emphasis after having heard the remarks of gentlemen opposite. The last time I addressed the House and went into this binder twine question, and as the National Policy has been assailed, I think, perhaps, I had better refer to that address. I made a speech that was full of facts, which no man has dared to attempt to confute, which no man can confute. I have the figures and I can give them under oath, if necessary. However, after I took my seat the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) took me to task, and I think I had better at once set the hon. gentleman's troubled mind at rest. He said I came to the House as a supporter of Sir John Macdonald, and that, for his part, he was not bound to any party. I will only ask the members of this House to judge of the hon. gentleman's actions, and I think they will easily come to the conclusion as to which side of this House he belongs. Now, I think it was very unkind of the hon. gentleman to come up to my riding to canvass against his brother farmer. I think, if he is a true farmer, he ought to come up and help his farmer friend. I recollect the first time I ever saw the hon. gentleman there. There had been a few $10 American bills found in our town previous to the election, and I was on my way up street—stories have been the rule in this debate, and I may tell this, it is a true story—I was on my way up street, hunting for a detective, after I had heard about these American bills. I saw the hon. gentleman amongst a crowd of the faithful on the sidewalk, and being on the lookout for new comers—they were numerous at that time—I did not hurry by. The hon. gentleman said: "What's that luikin' at me?" and they told him, "That's the Tory candidate," and the hon. gentleman said: "Where is the meeting? lets us get at him," but some of his friends said to him: "You had better have tea before you tackle him; he is an old-timer." They had tea and went up to the meeting. The hon. gentleman talked National Policy, horses and cattle, sheep and lambs, woollens and flax, tweeds and blankets, and he gied this Government an awfu' go'n' over. And after all the scandal he could heap upon the Conservative party, the National Policy, represented by your humble servant, still lives. Now, with regard to the remark that the hon. gentleman made about me, I wish to set myself right before this House. If ever there was an honour conferred upon me in this House, it was in the statement that I came here as supporter of the late Sir John A. Macdonald. I am proud that I was a follower of that grand old chief, Canada's greatest son. There was another Sir John who came next, and I am proud to say that I followed him while he stood on the same principles as the old chief did. Now, we have another Sir John, who is called Sir John the Third, and while he follows up the National Policy and the national dignity of this country, and the national dignity of this House, he is going to have my undivided support. Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question of binder twine, I propose to prove conclusively that the Canadian farmer gets his binder twine cheaper than the American farmer; consequently the Opposition have no grounds for making all this turmoil throughout the country. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) said it was cheaper in the United States than it was in Canada. Will you bear with me while I read some letters from manufacturers in the United States, and other manufacturers in Canada by which I will prove conclusively that the Canadian farmer buys his twine cheaper than the American farmer? Sir, it has been my duty, as a public man, having been assailed as a farmer, and having fought an election upon this question—it became my duty to give this matter a study, for I am in dead earnest about this thing. I do not believe the farmers of Canada are so foolish as to throw away their national existence for a ball of binder twine, or ten balls of binder twine. I will first read what the farmers of my county think about this question:

LINDSAY, January 16th, 1892.

At a meeting of the Ops Liberal Conservative Association held last Saturday, the following motion was carried unanimously:—

This man, Johnson Ellis, is one of the best men we have in our county. He can poll more votes than any other man in our county. He is very popular, is as good a farmer as we have, has been a member of the council for many years, and could be reeve if he wished to run.—

Moved by Johnston Ellis, Esq., seconded by George Smith, Esq., that this meeting heartily endorse and approve of the course pursued by Mr. Fairbairn during his term in Parliament, and as farmers and farmers of the township of Ops (over 150 present) we approve of his vote and speech in the House of Commons, on the binder-twine question, and for the loyal and undivided support which he has given the National Policy during the last session of Parliament, he is deserving of the support of all the farmers in South Victoria, in returning him to Parliament, and that this meeting pledge Mr. Fairbairn to use every lawful means to secure his election in the coming campaign, —carried unanimously.

(Sgd.) JAMES McLEAN, Chairman.

That is what our farmers said about it. I can give you hundreds of testimonials from our county in the same direction. Now, I will go on and read correspondence that I have received from different points in the United States and in Canada.

LA FAYETTE, Ind., Jan., 26th, 1893.

Replying to your letter of the 27th instant, addressed to Mr. Todd, asking for ruling retail prices on binder twine for the season of 1892, will say that we have sold white sisal for 10 cents, standard for 11 cents, and 600 feet manilla for 12½ cents.

These prices are subject to slight fluctuation in favour of spot cash customers.

Yours truly,
JAMIESON BROS.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Jan. 28th, 1893.

Yours of the 27th received, in regard to the price of twine to the consumer by the retail dealer, that is something that is very hard to get at as there is such a variation of prices, as those that bought early in the fall of course got a very low price on twine and those who bought later in the season paid more. As usual among the retail dealers, those that bought at a low price, thought they had a snap on it and in many instances cut the prices in order to hurt their competitors. We think as near as we can give the ruling price on twine was: sisal, 10 cents, standard, 10½ cents, standard manila about 11 cents, manila 12 cents, and pure manila from 13 to 15 cents.

Yours truly,
HAMILTON BROS.

CHADWICK, ILL., Jan. 29th, 1893.

In reply to yours of the 27th instant, concerning the retail price of twine in 1892, would say:

Sisal...	10 cts. early.	11 cts. later.
Standard...	11 do	12 do
Manila mixed	11 do	13 do
Pure manila	14 do	15 do

These figures of course varied some, but were about the standard price of the different grades throughout the country.

Yours truly,
MILLER, SMITH & Co.

PEORIA, ILL., Jan. 30th, 1893.

The retail dealers in this city last season sold twine at about the following prices. One dealer, being in very poor standing, asked as follows:—

Sisal.....	10 cents.
Standard manila.....	12 to 12½ cents.

Another dealer asked for:—
Standard..... 10½ cents.

Another dealer asked for:—
Standard..... 10½ to 10¾ cents.
Standard manila..... 11½ to 12 cents.

Very truly yours,
LUTHY & CO.,
By D. W. VOORHEES, Jun.,
Vice-Pres.

GERMANTOWN, WIS., Jan. 27th, 1893.

Have sold your manila to my customers at 12 cents; sisal at 9½ cents; Plymouth manila at 14 cents; ½ N. Z. and ½ manila at 13 cents; 9-10th N. Z. and 1-10th manila at 10½ cents.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) PH. G. BUERRWÄECHTER.
Mr. FAIRBAIRN.

SIoux FALLS, S.D., Jan. 30th, 1893.

Replying to yours of the 27th inst., I would say that the average retail price on binder twine in this city was as follows:—

Sisal.....	10½ cents.
Standard.....	11 cents.
Standard manilla.....	13 cents.
Pure manilla.....	14 cents.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) O. S. SWENSON.

VALLEY CITY, NORTH DAKOTA, 29th Jan., 1893.

In answer to your letter of 27th January, in reference to prices paid by consumers of binding twine for the year 1892, will say:

Pure manila.....	15 cents.
Standard manila.....	13½ "
Standard.....	12 "
Sisal.....	10½ "

The above are brands used here, and prices paid by consumers.

Yours respectfully,
A. H. GRAY.

PORT HOPE, 6th Feb., 1893.

I sold silver composite twine last season at 8 cents, less 5 per cent discount wholesale. Farmers in this district bought silver composite at from 7½ to 8 cents cash and 8½ cents credit. Please send me your latest cordage price list and oblige

Yours truly,
THOS. CARSON.

TORONTO, 6th Feb., 1893.

In answer to your telegraph we sold the farmers:—

Crown brand.....	10½ cents.
Red cap brand.....	11½ "
Blue ribbon.....	12½ "

We sent you an advertisement of Feaker & Runians Bampton, quoting, I think:—

Crown brand.....	9½ cents.
Red cap.....	10.60 "
Blue ribbon.....	11.50 "

We did not quote prices to the Patrons of Industry.
Yours,

THOS MERIDITH & CO.

LUCAS, Ont., Feb. 2nd, 1893.

Your message to hand, and in reply—twine was sold retail to farmers as follows:—

Crown brand.....	10½ cts.
Red cap.....	11½ "
Blue ribbon.....	12½ "

To Patrons of Industry as follows:—

Crown brand.....	10½ cts.
Blue ribbon.....	12½ "

Less 5 per cent discount; netting, $9.97½, $10.92½, $11.37½.

Those are the prices sold by us which we can confirm under oath if required, and we know that in all cases when the Patrons bought a quantity that the above was the price paid, and in many cases they got it in small lots as low as fifty pounds in each purchase at same price.

Yours respectfully,
W. & C. STANLEY.

BRAMPTON, Feb. 6th, 1893.

In reply to yours of this date, re our retail prices of binder twine to the farmers in our section of the country for the season of 1892, were as follows:—

Composite silver	7½ cts. per lb.
Crown brand	9½ “
Red cap	10.65 “
Blue ribbon	11.70 “
Blue cap	11.70 “

We made no difference in price to the Patrons of Industry, the above price was alike to all farmers.

Yours truly,
PEAKER & RUNIANS.

American prices to farmers, season 1892.

La Fayette, Ind.	10 to 12½ cts.
Cedar Rapids, Ia.	10 to 15
Chadwick, Ill.	10 to 15
Peoria, Ill.	10 to 12½
S. Germantown, Wis.	9 to 14
Sioux Falls, S. Dakota.	10½ to 14
Valley City, N. Dakota ...	10½ to 15

The lowest prices above were for pure sisal.

Canadian prices to farmers, season 1892.

Lucan, Ont.	9.97½ to 12½ cts.
Toronto	10½ to 12½
Brampton, Ont.	9½ to 11½

The lowest Canadian prices were for twine containing a portion of manila, and therefore, better than the lowest American.

Silver composite twine was sold as follows:—

Port Hope	7½ to 8½ cts.
Brampton	7½

These are figures which hon. gentlemen opposite will not attempt to prove untrue, and until they are proved to be untrue, hon. gentlemen opposite have no case before the country on which to make an appeal to the farmers. My opinion as a farmer, and as one acquainted with machinery is that the best twine is the cheapest. I am sorry the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is not in his seat to-night, because I desire to refer to the kind of twine I found used in the North-west Territories when I visited that country and was driven over it by the kind and social people living there. One fact that struck me forcibly was the presence of sheaves in the fields. In that country, during harvest time, there are only two men to do four men's work, and everybody appears to be over-burdened with work, so every sheaf left in the field in consequence of bad twine or defective machinery is never garnered, but is allowed to remain to rot. I remember driving through the country and noticing these sheaves, and I passed these remarks to Mr. Bell, of Indian Head: "How is it, Mr. Bell, that you have so few sheaves in your field compared with the farmers around you?" His reply was: "I have learned the lesson to use good Halifax twine, and it pays me best. I never expected to see you, although I read your speech; I want to shake by the hand one who is educating the farmers to use the best twine and save the crops in the field and not waste them." Mr. Bell took me into his store-house and showed me sample balls manufactured in this country and in the United States—not many in this country—and he said: "I will give 25 cents per pound for Halifax twine rather than use any of these other twines. We are selling our wheat for 72 cents per bushel, and the loss of twenty-six sheaves would pay for the binding twine for a day's reaping, and I know it pays me to get the best binding twine, and the only place where I have found it is at the Halifax factory." We had a striking lesson taught the farmers in our county. After reading speeches delivered in Parliament on this question, our farmers sent to the other side for their binding twine. It might have proved satisfactory if it had not rained, and if the grasshoppers had not got at it. It was ingeniously made by some mechanical process, there being sisal in the centre, covered with tar. That portion of the twine which did not come apart, owing to the rain, was destroyed by grasshoppers; and I can assure Mr. Stairs that our farmers will not go for their twine to American manufacturers again. I was on the farm of a neighbour while thrashing was going on. He had a binder of the same make as my own, the maker was a good Reformer, and he had great trouble with it. The boys blamed the machine, and said it served the farmer right, when a Tory bought his binder from a Grit, he got a good one and a Grit got a bad one. They never thought of the quality of the twine; but when the rain came and the grasshoppers got at it, the people thought there was something wrong about the twine. Every one knows that the knotter is an intricate part of the mechanism in connection with the binder. No matter how skilfully the machine is made, if good twine is not used, the knotter is liable to get out of order. I have been told by machine manufacturers, that they have had more difficulty with respect to binding twine than to any portion of their machinery, and that in nine cases out of ten, the farmer improperly blames the machine instead of the inferior twine which he is using. So far as regards myself, it matters little to me, as a farmer, what the Government do in this matter. As a farmer I would rather they did not touch the duty at all, but as they have touched it, I think they went far enough with it, and I am satisfied so far as I am concerned. It is my opinion that if the Government of Canada had offered a premium for the best binder twine, they could get into the Canadian market, they would be doing more for the farmers than they have done by knocking off 12 per cent of the duty. I am satisfied of that from my experience in the North-west, where I saw so much waste because of the bad American twine used there. I may state that I have got good satisfaction from the twine supplied by the Halifax company, and it would in my opinion be a great benefit, if no inferior qualities of twine were allowed to be sold. I know that the Government in this matter believe that they were acting in the best interests of the farmers, and they have done very well, but I hope they will not go any further, because if they did, there would be the risk of the Americans coming in here, and after doing up our Canadian manufacturers, place an inferior article on the market which would be detrimental to the interests of the farming community. I was rather pleased to hear my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) congratulate the Government the other day on the step they had taken on this matter. I am afraid, however, that he found the policy of the Government was not favourable to his party, and I believe he was speaking more in the interest of his party than in the interests of the farmer. As a farmer, I repudiate the manner in which hon. gentlemen opposite have referred to the great farming community of this country. We heard the assertion of the hon. member for Prince county (Mr. Perry), who told us that we were as badly off now as we were 100 years ago, and that we were denied privileges to-day which we enjoyed at that time. I can refer back to my school days, much less than 100 years ago, when we had to walk three miles through an unbroken forest to school, sit on a saw log, with a hewn plank for a desk, and an open fire at the end of the room. We can look around with pride and pleasure to-day and see the marked progress of our Canadian people. To-day we have more money invested in schools in Canada than is invested in any country, of the same population, under the sun. We have more money invested in churches, and we have more money invested in charitable institutions, relatively speaking, than any country in the world. There is no hunger amongst us. Everybody who will work can have plenty to eat, and let me say that there is more sin, more want, and more hunger in one city in the western states than there is in the entire of this fair Dominion of Canada. We can compete man for man, and woman for woman, with any other people on the face of the earth. What are hon. gentlemen opposite grumbling about? Why we have more wealth on this continent according to population than there is in any other country on the face of God's earth. There is among our people in Canada more happiness, more true piety, more true charity, and less want than in any other country. If you gentlemen opposite were honest, if you would do as you should do, you would bow your head in submission to Almighty God for the blessings we enjoy in this country. It would become you more as Christians, and it would become you better as politicians, and better as statesmen, to do this than to talk about blue ruin. Why, you would have something to live for, and when the time came you would have something to die for. Hon. gentlemen opposite have occupied two weeks, and spent the money of the country in the Budget debate, and then they got so sacrificed last night that there was scarcely one of them left. I would forgive hon. gentlemen opposite for that, but when they pickled their policy down to binding twine, I cannot forgive them for that. Be Canadians; be proud of your country, which is the right arm of the greatest Empire in the world. We have a right to be the proudest people in the world, and we should stand by the old flag of England, which is the emblem, by land and by sea, of civil and religious liberty, and the truest religious liberty in the world, too. There are some good Canadians I know on the opposite side of the House, and if we could only get them over to this side we would make men of them. Let me say in conclusion, that as a farmer, I hope the Government will not any more interfere with the duty on twine. I may say that I am prepared to stand by the third Sir John, as well as I stood by the first Sir John, and I will stand by the National Policy, too. Hon. gentlemen opposite make little of the National Policy, but I tell them that the National Policy is the national existence of this fair Dominion of ours. You talk about free trade, about continental free trade, about commercial union, about tariff reform. I have fought my opponents on all these policies, but in my last election I only had to fight them on the duty of binding twine. I expect the next time to have to fight them on half the duty on binding twine, and to knock them out on the first round.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. Speaker, this question has received a good deal of attention from the House and the country. It would appear from the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down that there has been no demand for the reduction of the duty on binder twine. The hon. gentleman is scarcely satisfied with the Government for having taken some of the duty off; he would have been better satisfied had it remained as it was. He forgets that while in other industries many of those things which are the raw materials of the manufacturers are allowed to come in duty free, binder twine, which is a raw material of the farmers, is taxed, and on what ground he justifies that, I cannot understand. He tells us that he is a farmer; but I think, if you examine his speech closely, you will find that he is a politician first and a farmer afterwards. Otherwise he would not allow the farmers to submit to a duty which is oppressive, unfair and inequitable. The hon. gentleman told us that he went to school, and consequently he is a reading gentleman. It is a wonder, then, he has not seen in the newspapers of the day the demand which has been made in all portions of this country for a reduction of the duty on binder twine. It is a general demand on the part of the farming community made through their papers, through the Patrons of Industry, through the farmers' institutes, through the Dairymen's Association. From all these official bodies memorials have come to the Government asking that this duty be taken off. A deputation from the Patrons of Industry waited on the Government the other day with that object in view. It is singular, indeed, that all those farmers did not know their own business, and are sending deputations to Ottawa which they know will not do them any good. It is singular indeed that all these farmers would take these steps if they did not feel that in this duty they had a grievance which they desired to have redressed. Now, in the North-west there is a great demand for the removal of this duty. I saw the other day in the "Regina Leader" a report of a meeting which shows clearly how anxious and how alive the people in the North-west are on this subject. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has had to listen to the wishes of the people in his constituency and in the great North-west in favour of the reduction of the duties on other articles. I see by this report in the "Regina Leader" that a meeting was held at Craven Valley, at which the hon. member was present; and in order to show you the earnest feeling of the people there on this subject, I will read what they did at that meeting. It would appear that in the North-west the hon. member for West Assiniboia is an extra-judicial member of the Cabinet. He is not a controller; he is not the Minister of the Interior; probably he is what might be termed the Minister of the Exterior, and the people appeal to him to come to their rescue and relieve them of this unjust and cruel tax. Here is what happened:

Mr. Hoskins moved that this memorial be signed by all present and be handed to Mr. Davin to send to the Minister of Railways.

Mr. Sutton seconded the motion, which was carried nem con.

Mr. Hoskins then moved that a similar memorial be sent to Mr. Davin to transmit to Mr. VanHorne, which, being seconded by Mr. Sutton, was carried.

Mr. Davin spoke at some length, saying that he would do all in his power.

Mr. Henty moved, and Mr. Wylie seconded, that a vote of thanks be given to Mr. Davin for his kindness in coming out to that meeting.—Carried.

Mr. Seed said if it would be appropriate at that general meeting, he would move a vote of confidence in Mr. Davin. (Cheers.)

Mr. George McNeice seconded the motion, which was carried amid applause.

Mr. Davin addressed the meeting on politics and was well received. He condemned the duty on binder twine.

Mr. Russell said the farmers on the prairie wanted the duty off barbed wire and all kinds of cotton.

Here is the part I wish to draw the attention of the House to:

Mr. Davin said he would consider it, and hurried away to the team. As he drove away the yeomen of the valley raised "three cheers for Davin."

Now, you see, that the North-west members who formerly opposed taking the duty off binder twine, have been obliged to come to the House this session and ask for a reduction in the duty. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that every farmers' institute in Ontario and in other provinces has petitioned the Government for a reduction of the duty. I understand also that every branch of the Patrons of Industry has asked that binder twine be put on the free list. The Grand Lodge of the Patrons of Industry yesterday at Toronto unanimously passed a motion to the same effect. The Dairymen's Association passed a similar resolution. Now, it is a singular thing that those gentlemen who use this commodity do not know what they are talking about, or do not know what they want. It would appear from what the hon. gentleman says that the farmers would sooner pay a higher price for their binder twine than get it at a cheaper rate. I do not think the farmers or any other class of people would regard that as a common-sense proposition. They desire to get their commodities as cheaply as they possibly can. It is necessary for them to do that because the price of grain runs so very low at this time, and every impost on the farmer or upon any other class of the community that is not necessary for the maintenance of a revenue is not desirable and should be discontinued. It is time that the Government realized this fact. We know that the most influential, the most deserving and the most industrious class of people we have in Canada are the farmers, and when they come and memorialize the Government to put on the free list the binder twine which they use in binding their grain, it would be a very easy matter for the Government to yield to their request, seeing that they do not derive much revenue from this duty, but are keeping it on merely to oblige a few people who are manufacturing this article. The hon. member for South Victoria spoke of the good quality of the twine supplied by the Halifax factory. I am very glad to hear of that. It would seem very singular if we should learn that that hon. gentleman was an agent for that factory, seeing the kindly manner in which he has spoken of its product. It might be just possible that it would not cost the hon. gentleman anything for his binder twine for next season.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh! Shame, shame!

Mr. LANDERKIN. Such things as that might possibly occur.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have not the slightest am not like the hon. gentleman. I do not want the Government to put the duty back so as to make the price of binder twine higher. I do not think that the hon. gentleman would ask the Government to impose a duty on sugar again in order to make sugar higher.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. I pay for what I buy.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have not the slightest doubt about that, and when you have a farm, you will find out that the Government will make you pay. The Government can always get something out of the farmers, and that is the reason they oppress them. They are a class of men who are permanently located and have a visible means of support, but because they are in that position, I do not know that it is a proper policy for the Government to tax them more than they do other people. I do not think that the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn), when he reads his speech and revises it, will fail to revise it very thoroughly, and to knock a large measure of tariff reform out of that speech. I do not think he will leave it in its original shape. I do not think that, as a farmer, he will agitate for the classes of the community. I would advise the Government to deal out the farmers and every other class the same measure, and put them on the same platform, and then the farmers and everybody else will be satisfied; but I do not think that any class in the community has a right to be taxed for the benefit of any other class. That is the reason why I oppose this tariff from top to bottom. It distributes the burdens unequally by taking money out of the pockets of one class and putting it into the pockets of another. It is an unequal and unjust distribution of the wealth of the people. That is one reason why I oppose it and shall continue to oppose it. I do not oppose it in the interest of one or another class, but in the interest of all the people. There may be people who will stand up and endorse high tariff as beneficial, but I do not approve of that system and will not support it in this House or elsewhere. I say that this duty is vexatious, that it is not just to the farmer. I do not see how any one can reconcile it with justice, that the fishermen should get the twine that they use in their nets free of duty when the farmers have to pay a duty on the twine they use. Why take the duty off the twine used by the fishermen and impose it on that used by the farmer?

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. There is not a pound of fishermen's cord manufactured in Canada, and that is why the fishermen get theirs free. If the hon. gentleman knows what he is talking about, he will admit this. It is not the same thing at all. There is as much difference between the two as there is between binder twine and woollen yarn.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not think that excuse will hold water. If protection is good for the one class, it is good for the other. If free trade is good for the one, it is good for the other. The hon. gentleman has let himself down very hardly. He advocates free trade for the fishermen. Well, if it is a good thing for the fishermen, why is it not for the farmers. I hope the Government will reconsider this matter before the end of the session, and put binder twine on the free list, especially as they derive very little revenue from the duty. In doing so, they will meet the wishes of the farmer, as manifested in their various institutes and orders, and in their memorials and petitions to the Government.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. I rise to a point of order. I am a farmer, and not an agent, although the hon. gentleman has accused me of being an agent. He has also stated that I am likely to get my binder twine for nothing on account of the speech I have delivered. As far as I am individually concerned, I hope I will, but I never expected to do so, and I have always paid for what I have got, and to make a gross insinuation and charge of this kind against a gentleman who has risen to express his honest convictions is discreditable to this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite have neither the figures nor the ability to confute the arguments on this side in favour of the National Policy, and so they resort to the expedient of striking a man below the belt; and when an hon. gentleman does that, I have a perfect right to rise and resent the insult. If I were allowed to tell some of the stories which this hon. gentleman circulated against me, when he came into the campaign against me in South Victoria, I could perhaps make him blush.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I only said that I hoped the hon. gentleman would get his binder twine free; but if that does not please him, I hope he will not.

Mr. CAMERON. I would not trespass on the time of the House at this stage, had not my hon. friend, who has just taken his seat, complained that the fisherman gets his twines and his nets free of duty, and had he not, on this ground, appealed to the prejudices of the farmers of the west, who have to pay a duty on binder twine. I beg to call my hon. friend's attention to this fact, that if there is any class in this Dominion whose industry is highly protected it is the farming class. Their wheat, their flour, their cheese, their butter, their pork, their beef and all their grains are protected; but where is the protection of the fishermen? Their products are not protected, because the fishermen of Newfoundland, who are the greatest competitors of the fishermen of the Maritime provinces, are allowed free access to our markets. It ill becomes hon. gentlemen opposite to appeal to the prejudices of the farmers of the west against the best consumers they have for their products. It matters but little to the consumers of this Dominion whether it is the Patrons of Industry or the wire-pullers among the politicians of the west who mislead the farmers into believing that their interests are not protected under the National Policy. If they will be deluded into believing that their interests are neglected and led to disturb the National Policy under which they are prospering, they will be the greatest sufferers, and it only requires a little reflection on their part on the condition of things between 1867 and 1879, when their products were not protected to convince them of that fact. If the duty be taken off binder twine, and everything else which the farmer consumes, then why not take the duty off flour, off wheat, off pork, off corn, and everything else which comes into consumption in the eastern part of the province?

Mr. FORBES. Why don't you, then?

Mr. CAMERON. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Forbes) feels a little uneasy at what I am saying, because, when a question of this kind arises, he does not seem to have the courage of his conviction. Those who are favourable to the National Policy are favourable to it because they want to balance the interests in this Dominion, east and west, in such a manner as to interchange trade and create a market for all the products which this Dominion affords. And I have no hesitation in saying, as I have said before, that if that fails, then, in my opinion, Confederation must fail. The farmers, as I have already said, are more protected, and I say it is not the opinion of the farmers of the west, or else I mistake the intelligence of that class, that binder twine should be permitted to come into Canada free of duty. It has been proven by those who use it that it can be purchased in Canada cheaper than on the other side of the line. It is manufactured in Halifax, Brantford, and the Central Prison, Toronto. It is offered for sale at 9 cents per pound. There are two reasons why binder twine should be protected. First, because we want a good quality of binder twine. It stands to reason that if American twine is allowed to come in free of duty, they will send the poorer article manufactured on the other side into the Canadian market, which would injuriously affect the farmers of this Dominion. Another reason is, that if there is any article on which the manufacturers on the other side of the line, the middlemen and the carriers pay the duty, dividing it amongst themselves, that article is binder twine; because in the Dominion it is manufactured to a greater extent than is required for the supply of the market. If any comes from the other side of the line, it must come at the expense of those who manufacture, or sell, or carry it, in exactly the same manner as flour, from the other side of the line. Flour is not one cent per barrel dearer to the consumers of the Dominion because of the duty. Such is the state of trade in all lines produced within the Dominion in excess of the market. Until our friends opposite prove that binder twine is dearer in the Dominion on account of the duty, they should not be appealing to the prejudices of the farmers of the west, because there is not the shadow of a doubt—and a few years may convince the farmers of the fact—that there is no class in the Dominion that will lose so much by the repeal of the National Policy as the farmers of the west.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has made particular reference to the member for Queen's, N.S., therefore, I feel it my duty to make a few remarks on this occasion. He says that free twine and nets are an offset to free Newfoundland fish coming into the Maritime provinces. In other words my hon. friend holds that the Maritime provinces' fishermen, who have a large surplus of their catch, are injured in the home market by the imported Newfoundland fish, and, therefore, they have a right to free twine and nets. If ever there was a ridiculous argument addressed to this assembly, it is that of my hon. friend. He says that the farmers of the west are protected by having the fishermen of the Maritime provinces secured to them as a market; in other words, the fishermen of the Maritime provinces must pay a higher price for what they use for the benefit of the farmers of the west. These fishermen must seek a foreign market for all their surplus product, and, having free twine and nets, they are supposed to pay more than they otherwise would for these protected products furnished by the farmers of the west. If that kind of thing is good for one class of industry, it is good for another, and the fishermen, lumbermen, miners and shipbuilders, should not be obliged to pay higher prices for what they use. The hon. gentleman said the farmers' wheat, flour, cheese, pork and beef are all protected, and that the farmers have a large market in the fishermen for their surplus of these products. But he must know, if he has studied the tariff that every barrel of beef or pork the fisherman uses for deep-sea fishing, is taken out of bond without duty at all. Therefore, his argument must fall to the ground. The fishermen are granted the special privilege of importing their beef and pork from foreign markets, and they get the greater part of it from the United States, whose producers can sell cheaper in the Maritime provinces, perhaps because they have less land carriage, and freight is less than by rail from the west. In other words, the fisherman of Nova Scotia gets his beef and flour cheaper than the lumberman and miner, because the present Government dare not tax them on those articles. They would be hurled from power by the free vote of the independent fishermen of the Maritime provinces. The fishermen of Nova Scotia are taxed heavily enough on everything they use in their daily living, and in other respects they are the only free trade independent party in the Dominion of Canada. They suffer not so much as other industries from the National Policy, except that it has the direct effect of keeping them out of the foreign markets, where they must sell their surplus in competition with the world. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat should study more fully the questions upon which he speaks, and the interests affected before he cares to put himself upon record. Had he studied the matter more fully, the fishermen would not thank him for saying that the fishermen, who cannot be protected under the National Policy, are made the slaughter-market to sell the surplus of the products of the west, at a price artificially enhanced. What offset have they got? None at all, and they are limited in markets for the sale of their surplus products. My hon. friend says that on binder twine coming from the United States into Canada, the producers, middlemen and carriers must pay the duty, and, therefore the duty has no effect in raising the price of binder twine. It seems to me a child's argument for the hon. gentleman to give himse dixit against the statements of thirteen to fifteen thousand farmers of the Northwest, and the older provinces of Canada, who have put themselves on record by petitions against this tax. I am not going to presume upon the indulgence of this House by discussing the merits of this tax. I shall simply say that I feel well justified in voting in favour of taking off the tax on binder twine for the benefit of the farmers of Canada, for two reasons. First, that the farmers themselves have come to Parliament in a body and have asked that it be removed in toto; second, and this is a more convincing argument, that the Government themselves have seen the folly of the tax and have taken off half of it. Surely, if half a loaf is good for a starving man, a whole loaf will be better. Why not remove it, then, all at one blow? If it is better that the upas-tree should be cut down entirely rather than its deleterious effects should be spread broadcast over the land, why not apply the axe to the root of the tree, and hew it down at once? For these reasons I shall vote in favour of the motion asking the Government to remove the duty entirely from binder twine.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has evinced a warm interest on behalf of the poor fishermen down in that country, and he endeavours to take my hon. friend to task because he was generous enough to say that the National Policy is a tax for the purpose of raising a revenue, which we cannot do without; and, therefore, he, as a Maritime province member, believes that it should be distributed as equitably as possible over the whole country, among the farmers and fishermen alike. He goes on to say that while the fisherman has some consideration shown him, because the cord which he uses is free of duty, therefore he is entitled to bear a share in some other line, and that other line is the pork, and the flour, and the food that we send them from the west. Now, it is rather strange to see these hon. gentlemen evince such an interest in behalf of the fishermen to-day, when they had not a word to say in behalf of these same fishermen when, a few years ago, their friends were in power and taxed them to the extent of 17½ per cent upon their nets, and their food, and their pork, and everything else; but to-day they are ready to condemn a Conservative Government, who have given a greater consideration to these poor fishermen, than they previously enjoyed, and reduced their taxation in other lines as much as possible. I do not think the hon. gentleman can take credit to himself for accomplishing much in this House, when he endeavoured to criticise what the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) said, to the effect that this tax ought to be equitably distributed all over the country. Now, there is another thing in which the fishermen receive a substantial advantage that the people of Ontario do not—they have the fishery award bounty distributed to them every year. It is true that is something which arose out of a dispute between this country and the United States as to the violation of fishery laws, which brought back a large amount of money to Canada, and that money was set apart for the benefit of the fishermen, and is distributed to them every year. Therefore, in all fairness, I think I may claim that the fishermen are dealt liberally with. I am somewhat surprised at the attack which the hon. gentlemen made to-night. They seemed to evince a burning desire to do something for the agriculturists of the country. But if I correctly interpret their aim, I should say it is not so much a burning desire to help the poor farmer as it is to make an attack upon the National Policy. The National Policy is a bugbear which, whenever it is put up before any of them, always raises their temper to an unusual degree. This is one way that they can endeavour to create sympathy amongst the farmers and make them believe that they are dealt unfairly with. They have taken up this idea for the purpose of endeavouring to convince the farmer that the Government is somehow or other doing an injustice to them, and if they can accomplish their object in making the farmers believe this, it may bring the farmers round to their side. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) was one of the first to jump into the breach in defence of his friend who made this motion. I thought it was very strange that that hon. gentleman sat so silent the other day, when the question of the duty on coal oil was before this House, a duty which, according to the calculation of the hon. member's friends on that side of the House, was 150 per cent; and yet he sat silent, when the farmers were labouring under this burden, paying this extra tax, and did not open his mouth in their defence or attempt to have the tax reduced. I think we need not look far for the reason of his silence, when we remember that he represents a district of country where coal oil is produced, and, if I am correctly informed, he is largely interested in the trade himself. He has no desire for the farmers' welfare then. He is willing they should pay 150 per cent duty on coal oil, but when it comes down to an article on which they only pay 12½ per cent duty, and that for the purpose of raising a revenue, then he has a new-born zeal for the farmers that was never displayed up to that time. I think it is not creditable to the hon. member for West Lambton that he can only find his voice when the farmers are taxed 12½ per cent, but, on the other hand, when they are taxed, according to the calculation of his own friends, 150 per cent, then he has nothing to say. I do not think that the farmers will give him very much credit for sincerity. Now, the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), who made this motion, I am bound to assume, is anxious to do something for the farmers; at least he says that he is anxious to do something for the farmers, and I suppose the reason is because they have votes. I might be charitable enough to suppose that because he is a farmer, he knows the heavy burdens under which they are labouring, and from self-interest, if from no other motive, he asks the Government to take off this tax entirely, because it is a burden that he cannot bear. But knowing that he is a millionaire, I do not think he is very much oppressed with that burden. If I remember rightly that hon. gentleman, a few years ago, gave information to the Committee on Agriculture, that one of the most profitable lines in which the farmers could engage to-day was planting their farms with walnuts, as he had done; for he told us that he had planted ten barrels of them, and they matured from eighteen to twenty-five years. Surely that burden cannot be a heavy one for him, and I cannot understand how he can object to pay this duty upon binder twine when he needs so small a quantity of it to harvest his walnut trees. Therefore, I am bound to assume that his motive is a good one; but I rather fear it is for the purpose of convincing the farmers of North York that he is anxious to do something for them; that he is their friend, and in return for his efforts in their behalf he will expect them to support him at the polls when the proper time comes. Now, as I said before, the first aim of the National Policy is to raise a revenue, and it is only fair that this revenue tax should be distributed over the people of the country as equitably as possible. If the farmer on this item pays a duty of 12½ per cent, it is the lowest duty that is paid upon any line of goods that is brought into the country, so far as I know. Take my hon. friend from North York, with his broadcloth on his back; he paid at least 45 per cent on that, and the farmer will not grumble at it. I think the farmers will be fair enough to admit that if our city friend pays 45 per cent upon what he uses, they will be willing to bear their share of the burden by paying 12½ per cent upon binder twine. Now, then, how much do the farmers pay upon this item of binder twine, is a fair question for inquiry. I know a little about farming, because I happen to have been running a farm for some years. I know a little about the prices, and I know something about what is paid by farmers in my county for binding twine. He says that this duty is very high. The fact is that the duty amounts to about 2 cents per acre. If there are practical farmers in this House I am sure they will bear me out in that, they know about the amount of binder twine that is used for an acre of grain. I took the trouble last year, when my grain was being cut, to find out what it cost. I found that binder twine was sold at 10½ cents a pound, and there was used a little less than 2 pounds an acre. If it takes a little less than 2 pounds to the acre, and there is only 12½ per cent on that binder twine, and if it can be bought at wholesale prices at less than 9 cents a pound, then the duty only amounts to about 2 cents an acre. The average farmer who is cultivating a 100 acres, has rarely more than 50 acres of crop, and a share of that is in pease, potatoes, turnips and other vegetables, for which he does not require binding twine. But even if he required binding twine for every acre of it, it would cost him only $1 for the amount he used upon that 50 acres of crop. Now, that is not an awful burden which bears upon the farmer.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman says that this tax will only cost the farmer $1 a year. He means, of course, the extra price caused by their paying a duty. Will he say on what principle he defends the proposition that any industry can tax the farmers even $1?

Mr. SPROULE. Upon the principle that we must raise a revenue; upon the principle on which the hon. gentleman and his friends taxed the farmers 17½ per cent on sugar to raise a revenue; upon the principle that his own friends taxed their tea to raise a revenue; upon the principle that they were obliged to tax everything, even the necessaries of life which the farmers consumed, for the purpose of raising a revenue. That is how I defend it. So long as the revenue must be raised, and this is the easiest way in which it can be raised, and the way in which the smallest burden is cast on the farming community, then I stand by the principle of raising a revenue in this way, because I think it is in the interest of the farmers. The hon. gentleman told us that many farmers asked for this change, including the Patrons of Industry. If by asking the farmers can save money, I do not blame them for making the request. If I could avoid paying money in a similar way, I would be likely to ask it. I do not therefore blame the farmers for asking that reduction in the tariff; but when it is explained that this represents a small share of the cost of the Government of the country, they will be willing to pay 12½ per cent duty on binding twine, and not grumble about it. Any farmer who owns 100 acres of land, and only raises 50 acres of crop on which he uses binder twine, he will only pay $1, and the average farmer does not bind 30 acres of crop, some not more than 20 acres, but if he cultivated every acre and used binding twine, it would only cost him $1 for the whole duty, and when he understands this he will not grumble about paying that small sum. The Government have lowered the duty for the purpose of satisfying, as far as possible, the demand that has come from that large representative class. But the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite have been booming this subject for all it is worth among the farmers, and endeavouring to create a very strong impression that there is great injustice done to the farmers because any duty is imposed on binding twine, and in order to convince the farmers that this is the case. Mr. Mowat is putting in machinery at the Central Prison in Toronto for the purpose of manufacturing this twine. What is the explanation? They are going through the country telling the farmers that they are paying heavy burdens in the shape of increased cost of binding twine on account of the duty being imposed. But although they have put in machinery and obtained their labour free of cost, the Provincial Government cannot turn out the finished product for less than 9 cents per pound wholesale, if I am correctly informed, although manufacturers sell it for less than 9 cents, because it is sold in my county at 10½ cents, and every retailer must have a profit of 1 cent or 1½ cents per pound. That represents only 15 per cent profit on the goods, and no merchant will carry goods and sell them at a less profit than 25 per cent. So there is no strong ground for contending that the farmer is paying a heavy duty on binding twine to-day. I do not question the right of any party to establish a factory to turn out binding twine, but it is unfair to men who have invested their capital in that industry that the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite should establish a manufactory at Central Prison in Toronto. I hold that this manufactory will never be a success there. Why? Because in that manufacture, as in the manufacture of every other article, skilled labour is required, and the convicts there are under terms of sentence not exceeding two years. If you employ those convicts who are only under sentence of one year or even two years, they are unable to work a sufficient length of time to learn the business and work at it long before their terms of sentence will expire. It is said they are selling it at 9 cents a pound. Now, by selling it at that price they will be doing no better for the farmers than the manufacturers are at present doing, even with a "combine" among them—and I do not defend the "combine"—and notwithstanding the injurious effects of the combine and the fact that the penitentiary will have labour free of cost, the statement is made that it will not be able to produce twine at any lower price than it is manufactured to-day. Accordingly, farmers could not receive very much benefit from it, and if that were the case, the farmers would not receive much benefit even if the Government removed the whole duty.

Mr. SPROULE.

But I hold that the farmers are prepared to bear their fair share of the burdens respecting the government of this country with any other class. When the farmers remember that we have taken the taxes from tea and sugar and reduced the tax on salt, and, in fact, reduced the taxes on all the necessaries of life, on which hon. gentlemen opposite were obliged to impose taxes when they were in power, I believe they will admit that no great injury is done if they are called on to pay a small duty on binding twine and thus contribute to the revenue of the country. What was the total amount of the duty collected on binding twine last year? According to the Trade and Navigation Returns, the amount was $42,741. That was certainly not a large sum for the farmers of the country to pay, and when they understand, as they will understand at the close of this debate, the situation fairly, they will admit they are not paying a very exorbitant duty. They will not give very much credit to hon. gentlemen opposite who are endeavouring to convince them that they are burdened by this duty, and have not a word to say in their defence, but grieve regarding the payment of 12½ per cent tax on binding twine, and they will come to the conclusion that there are other people in the world than hon. gentlemen opposite who are interested in their welfare.

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS.

Mr. WELDON moved :

That Bill (No. 2) to disfranchise electors who have taken bribes, be placed again on the Orders of the Day on Monday next for consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the House divides on the question, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a question, which I asked him when the House was in committee, but which, owing to the fact that the division was shortly afterwards taken, he did not answer. So far as this Bill goes, I have no objection to it whatever. My objection was based entirely on the fact, that it stopped short at an important point, my objection was wholly that the Bill punished those who accepted bribes by depriving them of a civil right, while it did not allow an investigation into that which I consider the most important matter that can be referred to a commission for inquiry. It did not allow the judges to inquire where the money came from that was used as bribes, or who it was who offered to give bribes. It appears to me that if a commission, composed of judges, is to issue to inquire into bribery within a certain district and find out the individuals who have received bribes, it should be competent for them, and it should be their duty, too, to inquire from whom bribes were received, and from whom the money came. If I had received an assurance from the hon. gentleman that he would be prepared to consider, in a kindly spirit, amendments in that direction, I would not have opposed the Bill, because I am with him in his desire to suppress bribery and corruption, and it was because he seemed to stop short at the point where he should have gone on that I was opposed to this Bill in committee. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman if he has any objection, in case the Bill goes into committee, to extend its clauses so that the judges who are entitled to make investigation shall go further, and when it is proved that there are ten, twenty or a hundred men who have received bribes, endeavour to ascertain from whom they received them and from whom the funds came. If my views were adopted, not only the men who received bribes would be disqualified, but those who furnished the money, and the agents through whose hands the money passed, would also be disqualified from the exercise of any civil responsibility and the holding of any office under the Crown.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. WELDON. The motion of my hon. friend from L'Assomption last night was so great a surprise that the Bill was out of committee before I was fairly aware what the effect of the hon. gentleman's speech was. My understanding of French is not so quick that I was able to ascertain whether the hon. gentleman was supporting or opposing the Bill, and I had scarcely ascertained from an hon. friend near me the purport of the hon. gentleman's remarks when the motion was carried that the committee rise. I intended to answer the question of the hon. member for Queen's. The Bill in no way alters the existing law. It strikes down no part of the criminal law and takes no power to punish men who are guilty of bribery. The man who is guilty of giving bribes to-day can be proved guilty of a criminal offence and be subject to severe punishment. This Bill does not interfere with that provision of the law. But my hon. friend from Queen's to-day does not take the position he occupied last night. I understood his position last night was this: that the Bill in depriving the bribee of the right to vote should have gone farther and have also deprived the briber of the same rights. There is a great deal to be said in favour of that change; and, to be frank with the hon. gentleman, I must admit that the Bill as first drafted was in that direction, but, after consultation with some friends, I drew the Bill in its present form, for I arrived at the conclusion that such a feature would not be logical, for there is no evidence that the bribe-giver is not an intelligent voter, although he is a criminal and punishable as such. Although it may be shown that he is a bad man, it is by no means established that he is not competent in the exercise of his own vote. If this Bill were to become law, the people deprived of their votes are the bribe-takers who, like children, are unable intelligently to exercise the franchise, while the giver of bribes can be dealt with under the criminal law; and I assure the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) that his suggestion is altogether alien to the purposes of the Bill. His idea is undoubtedly a very excellent and admirable idea, but one altogether alien to my purpose, and it would be like mixing two subjects as incompatible as oil and water to accept his suggestion. I assure my hon. friend that if he will bring in a Bill this session or next session perfecting the existing law in the direction he points out he will have one unflinching supporter at all costs on this side of the House, and that would be the member for Albert. My hon. friend's idea is, however, a different one altogether from mine. This Bill, as I tried to explain on the second reading, does not aim to punish, although as a consequence the briber loses his vote, but the principle of the Bill is that a man who sells his vote is like a child, and to protect the State must, for a time, be deprived of his vote. That is the one idea I had in drafting the Bill, and I strictly adhere to it; but, if the House comes to the conclusion that the other idea expressed by the hon. member for Queen's should be embodied in the Bill, and that the bribe-giver shall be disfranchised as well as the bribe-taker, I shall be happy to accept the amendment. It does not follow that the man who gives a bribe does not take care of his own vote, whereas the man who sells his vote is like a child in a position of trust. I hope the hon. member for Queen's will see the point, and I again assure him that if he will move in the direction he has indicated either this year or next year, and I hold myself answerable for what I say, he will have one hearty and cordial supporter in perfecting legislation in the direction he has indicated.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I myself, yesterday evening, when this Bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, moved that the committee should rise without reporting. I gave some of the reasons that led me to make that motion. I cannot help saying there seems to be a desire to introduce into this country what there was formerly in certain countries of Europe—I refer to the inquisition. They are not satisfied with a law by which an election can be protested and annulled for a single case of bribery; I say they are not satisfied with that; they want to go further by trying to bring about the adoption of an extraordinary law. It is well known there are in this House some gentlemen who never indulge in bribery, still it does not prevent their election being protested and their having to pay useless costs. Under the existing law, a single case of bribery is sufficient to have an election annulled and the man disqualified who took a bribe for his vote, the same as he who gave it to him. However, that is not sufficient, and we want some persons who, purer, more honest, more scrupulous than all the rest, aim at preventing bribery by infeasible means. I cannot accept the idea of creating in our midst a court of inquisition going all over the counties and fishing for bribery cases, not to ascertain whether such and such individuals charged with corruption are really guilty, but to ascertain whether there were bribery cases. Those who are in favour of this measure intend, therefore, to fish for bribery cases and nothing else. I say it is contrary to the very principle of the English law. The object of the Bill they are asking to revive is that two or three commissioners should be appointed with a good salary, and wander from place to place, accompanied by a secretary, himself liberally paid, to do what? To ascertain whether there were bribery cases. Suppose these bribery commissioners, installed in a county or a parish, and proceeding to their inquiry, do not find a single bribery case? Well, they will go elsewhere, I suppose, and the candidate will be forced to follow them, accompanied by his counsel, in order that there should not be perjuries to make him appear guilty when he is not. You see to what trouble and expenditure such a law would expose those who indulge in politics. It must not be supposed that bribery alone could have a member returned. What I am aware of, and what I can state, is that in the province of Quebec there is not much bribery effected, for the reason that we are not able to afford it. We are not as wealthy as in Ontario, where people can spend some $30,000 during an election. Our means are rather short to allow us to go so far. Those who are in a position to expend such sums as these might well not be apprehensive as to the expenditure such a commission of inquiry would entail for them; but we, of the province of Quebec, are not in such circumstances. I understand the statute relating to controverted elections. Such as it now exists is sufficient to prevent or punish the bribery cases that may happen. The Bill of the hon. member (Mr. Weldon) aims at nothing short of having this House state that in future there will be a court of inquisition charged with making inquiries so as to find out bribery cases. The law which disqualifies a member for a single bribery case seems to me stringent enough. What more then do they want? Is the subject of the Bill to create places for friends? If such is the case, at the expense of whom will that be? Is it not true it will be either at the expense of the candidate or candidates, either at the expense of one or more electors? It is not fair. As I stated a moment ago, the member or candidate who can afford to spend, without ruining himself, $30,000 to have himself returned, will always find the means to get through all this some way or other. But the party who can only afford to spend some $500 or $600 to cover all the expenses of his election, which is not a large sum, will not be able to bear all these additional costs of the court it is desirable to create by this Bill. I fancy they do not want to fully and unjustly ruin those who meddle in politics;

however, it is the result that will be reached should such a measure be put into the Statute-book. I would repeat, as I already stated during a previous sitting, the object of this Bill is good, since it is to prevent bribery. Every one regrets, and I myself above all, that there should be bribery during election times; every one would like to have elections as pure and honest as possible; it is a general desire, I know, and it is admitted by every one, but the more the existing law will be changed, the more it will be cut, allow me to use the word, the more it will be parcelled out, the more they will add to it amendment after amendment, change after change, the more it will be made unintelligible, and the more, therefore, we will depart from the object in view. For these reasons—and I do not think it my duty to further extend these remarks now—I think the hon. member would do better not to urge the adoption of his motion.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Canada Atlantic and Plant Steam-ship Company (Limited).—(Mr. Forbes.)

Bill (No. 70) respecting the Nakusp and Slocan Railway Company.—(Mr. Mara.)

Bill (No. 71) respecting the Drummond County Railway Company.—(Mr. Taylor, for Mr. Cleveland.)

Bill (No. 73) further to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act.—(Sir John Thompson.)

VACANCY IN VAUDREUIL.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received from the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada a certified copy of the judgment of the said court in the matter of the election appeal for the electoral district of Vaudreuil, by which the appeal was dismissed and the judgment of the trial judges, voiding the election, confirmed. In conformity with chapter 9, section 46, of the Revised Statutes, he had issued his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said district.

CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 72) further to amend the Act respecting Certificates to Masters and Mates.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the Bill be read the first time.

Mr. HAZEN. Explain.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Bill makes a very slight change in the present law. It is simply to remove the restriction under the present Act against British subjects who may desire to come up for examination to obtain certificates as masters or mates of vessels. That is the whole object of the Bill.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the House for a few moments to this Bill, in order that it may be discussed at greater length later on. I am pleased to see that the hon. gentleman is introducing an amendment to our navigation laws, but I may say, on behalf of the seafaring people and ship-owners of the Maritime provinces, that it is not broad enough to satisfy them. At the present time, the people engaged in this business are considerably disturbed on account of the existing laws bearing on these matters. Already 25 per cent of our shipping is missed from the register. A few years ago the Maritime provinces owned more shipping than the entire tonnage of the rest of the Dominion, and St. John, N.B., in its best days, had some 280,000 tons of registered shipping. We have to acknowledge the loss of nearly one-half of that, which has disappeared from our register books and which perhaps will not be restored. We wish now to go into the matter and to make some inquiry as to what caused this decline, and to discover whether there is any remedy. Of course, in considering the matter, it is fair to acknowledge that there has been a revolution in the ocean carrying trade of the world. I refer to the change from wood to iron in the construction of ships, and from sailing to steam as a means of propulsion. This revolution has almost completely vanquished the splendid fleet of wooden ships that Canada once possessed and which played so important a part in the commerce of the world. A few of the ports of the Dominion appear to have recognized the change and prepared themselves to meet it by adopting steam. Montreal, I think, has to a large extent supplied herself with steam power and a few of the other ports have also done the same. In addition to the foreign-going ships, we have enjoyed a large and prosperous trade in the coastwise carrying, the West India and the South America trade, in which are engaged a class of wooden vessels which have so far withstood the encroachments of iron and steam, and I have always hoped and believed that this class of vessels might be spared from the wreck of our once great marine interests. I do believe that it is yet possible that this fleet can be saved. Now, Sir, in prosecuting that business, we are not allowed immunity from competition. Our neighbours to the south of us own and control many millions of tons of like vessels, perhaps the greatest and best coastwise fleet ever known to the world, and we are in close competition with them. They are prosecuting the business with great vigour, and we notice with alarm that their fleet is increasing, while ours is declining. The people of the Maritime provinces say that that decline is largely due to the inequality of the restrictions and navigation regulations in force in the two countries, and for a few moments I will ask the attention of the House while I briefly review these regulations. I will take up the first one which the Minister has dealt with, that relating to masters and mates. Our coastwise vessels are required to have certificated masters and certificated mates. In the United States all that a master requires is American citizenship and the goodwill of the owner to appoint him. The mate may be anybody whom the master or the owner sees fit to appoint. Those who are not in the business may say that there cannot be any trouble in getting certificated masters and mates, but there is. The men who make the best masters and mates are those who go to sea early in life, so that they do not get advantages of an education. But they become familiar with the sea, they learn the business, and they contend that they do not require a theoretical knowledge of the science of navigation. They say that their business of handling vessels lies chiefly along the North American coasts, through fogs in the summer and snows-torms in winter, and that the science of navigation is of no benefit to them. They navigate their vessels by means of their coast chart and their soundings, and as a matter of fact they do learn to guide their vessels with great safety. They start from their place of departure, and thread their course through currents and counter-currents, with head winds and fair winds, and reach the port of their destination with a certainty that is remarkable. Well, Sir, as these men show good habits and efficiency, they look for advancement; they ask to be made masters of vessels; but they say, "We cannot pass the technical examination, and if you cannot give us charge of a vessel, we shall have to take charge of an American vessel, which we can get readily. So that the Canadian owner is either forced to part with his well-trained man, or invest his money entirely in American vessels. Then, with regard to mates, we find that the number of applicants at the examinations grows less and less every year, and the Canadian vessel owner and manager finds that he cannot get certified mates when he wants them. If a man is able to take a mate's certificate, he is able to take a master's, and he wants a master's pay; and he is dilatory about taking any other position or about going upon a vessel under another master. Now, with regard to the question of pilotage, the American coastwise vessels prosecute their business freely; they enter any port from Maine to Mexico free from the burden of compulsory pilotage, while our vessels are subjected to that burden. There is no question relating to shipping over which there has been more controversy of an acrimonious character than this question of compulsory pilotage; and while I speak on behalf of vessel-owners, far be it from me to say anything against pilots as a body of men. I believe them to be brave and noble men, who have rendered splendid service in guiding stranger ships to our ports and in giving them safe departure from our shores. But the home port men contend that they require to know the coast within the pilotage limits just as much as the pilots do. They spend their time on board of a schooner and with a certificated master and a certificated mate; and while understanding their business, they say it is a burden and a hardship for them to pay the demands of compulsory pilotage every time they enter port in prosecuting their regular business. If you come to consider the matter from their stand-point, you will find that the system is very burdensome. They really do know the coasts, and they know their business, and many of them would scorn to have a pilot on their vessel. In times of storm they say they cannot get a pilot, and then they have to take care of their vessels themselves; but on a fine day, when everything bids fair, the pilot comes out and waves his red flag, takes charge of the vessel and then it is subject to pilotage dues. They contend that the coastwise vessel is compelled to pay five times the pilotage proportionately that any other class of vessel has to pay; and if you inquire, you will find that they are telling the truth. Pilotage at our ports bears very unevenly on the smaller vessels. I will give you an instance. A ship owner some time ago showed me a memorandum of two pilotage bills which he had got in the port of St. John. One was for a steamer of 2,000 tons burden, and the other for a schooner of 218 tons burden. They were both spoken in the same pilotage limit. The steamer cleared with 2,500,000 spruce deals and the schooner with 270,000 spruce deals; but the steamer, with ten times the cargo, had to pay the pilotage funds some $70, and the schooner $40. Now, the steamer required the pilot, and while the schooner did not ask for a pilot, it was compelled to pay. On the other side, it is contended that the compulsory pilotage system must be kept up because the pilots must have their living. Well, that appears to be a weak argument. I think the law of supply and demand would soon regulate that. The compulsory pilotage seems to be a mere relic of barbarism. If a man wants a pilot, let him get one. That is the argument of men engaged in this trade, and it appears to be almost unanswerable. If you wish to satisfy yourself as to that, make inquiry at those ports where compulsory pilotage does not exist or where it has been in part abolished. I believe that in the port of Quebec vessel owners have been relieved to the extent of 250 tons, while in the United States the system has been abolished. If we have to determine between the extinction of the pilot and the extinction of the vessel, it would appear to be the safer plan to let the pilot be extinguished. Again, it is said that the demand for pilots does not exist to-day as it did in earlier days. Hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars all along the coasts have been expended in establishing beacons and buoys and lighthouses to guide the mariner into his port of safety. Charts are everywhere to be had, showing the exact depth of water, and the mariner is better skilled than he used to be, so that the dangers which formerly existed do not exist to-day. Everything points to-day to the necessity of compulsory pilotage disappearing, especially in countries like this. I will now take up the deck-load clause. In the United States, the people with whom we have to compete, have no deck-load law. We have one now which is in part applied to our coastwise vessels. These vessels go to South America with a full deck-load; but are restricted from going to the West Indies similarly loaded. The American master loads his vessel according to his judgment. He takes on board whatever he thinks is safe, and then can get his clearance at any American port. In the Dominion, however, when the 1st of October arrives, the Canadian master has to observe the deck-load regulation. He cannot put lumber on deck higher than six inches above the rail, even though he has not the full quantity of boards the merchant wishes to ship. There is an inconsistency and an absurdity in allowing a vessel to go to Newfoundland or South America, even as far as Cape Horn, with a full deck load, and yet though she has to pass the West India Islands, she cannot stop at those islands. One or the other must be wrong. If a vessel can go to South America, surely she can go to Bermuda. So great is the inconsistency that the shippers are clamouring for its remedy. In addition to this, we have a load-line threatened. It is an old saying that it is time enough to bid the old gent good day when you meet him; but I can almost hear the sound of his feet, and I think I am justified in dealing with the matter. In the United States such a thing as a load-line has never been dreamt of; but I believe it is now proposed that we shall adopt a load-line for the Dominion or be subject to the British load-line. If we have to choose between the two, I would say by all means submit to the British load-line. From all I can learn, there is not one redeeming feature with reference to the proposed load-line, as applied to our small tonnage. It means, if applied to them, a loss of from 10 to 20 per cent upon our best coastwise vessels, while it means the extinction of our small ones. When it comes to be applied to all that class known as the wood-boat schooners, and others engaged in carrying lumber to American ports, as a matter of fact, these vessels load almost level with the water, and follow the coast for safety, taking advantage of the harbours to shelter them from storms, and I am prepared to say that the ratio of loss among that class is smaller than in any other engaged on the Atlantic coast. If a load-line is to be adopted to apply to that class of vessels the risk will have to be put on the covering-board, and there is no set of tables to allow the ordinary cargo to be carried that I have seen that can be applied to these vessels and preserve them from extinction.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you prefer the British load-line?

Mr. BAIRD. Because very few of our vessels will put themselves in the way of having that brand of inequality on their side. I speak of it as a brand of inequality, because, when they carry that to the ends of their days, the loss will be so great it will leave a brand so that the vessel will be almost unsaleable in the markets of the world. Few of our vessels prosecute the same business that they did eight or ten years ago, of carrying deals to British ports and then loading coal or railroad iron for Rosario or other ports in the Argentine Republic. Steamers now carry those across, and then the cargoes are transferred into lighters. It appears that all the British legislation is aimed directly at what we call our popular vessels—the broad-beamed, shallow-draft vessels. We have to contend with bars of sand thrown up by action of the sea all along the coasts of North and South America, so that a vessel of 500 tons, drawing only 10 feet of water is worth 20 per cent more than a vessel of the same dead-weight capacity drawing 12 feet. Every inducement is given us to keep that class of vessels in use; but if you put a load-line upon them you will destroy their usefulness. We always use them deeply submerged. Mr. Plimsoll has heard of this, and he appears to report things in a desperate condition; but I can assure you, Sir, that he labours under a great mistake. These people prosecute their business with as much safety and prudence as any other class, and their ratio of loss is as light as that of any other class.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What about insurance?

Mr. BAIRD. I am prepared to say that the underwriters make no discrimination whatever, whether the vessel be narrow or deep, or whether she is broad and shoal-draft. Nearly all the United States vessels are built with that special end in view, of getting through the shallow waters, and carrying their full freight to its destination. This is what gives them a special value. Now, the proposals on behalf of the shipping men, which I would like to lay before Parliament and the Government, are these: that coastwise vessels should have certificated masters, but not certificated mates. In reference to compulsory pilotage, I can only speak of the port of St. John. Other members may speak for their ports. It is the imperative demand of the people of St. John that they should be relieved of compulsory pilotage up to 250 tons, while actually engaged in the coastwise trade. Surely their demand is not unreasonable. With regard to the deck-load law, I would suggest that the deck load to the West Indies be made to correspond with that of South America, and with reference to the load-line I would say, make no legislation whatever. If it is not the intention of the Imperial Parliament to take charge of our vessels, and actually force this load-line upon others than those which enter their ports, let them remain as they are. Give no load-line, because there is none that can be made satisfactory to our people for coastwise vessels. In dealing with this, I would ask the House not to look upon it as a sectional question, or as legislation simply for the benefit of the Maritime provinces. It is not in the interests of the east or the west alone, but concerns men from the centre as well as down by the sea. It is a national question. I am speaking on behalf of the merchant marine of Canada, not those interested in St. John alone, but in every part of the Dominion. A country appears to have no real standing at all unless it is known on the seas. The history of the past shows that all countries have miserably perished, in the commercial sense, as great states, when their ships no longer were found on the highways of the sea. We are desirous still to be found on the sea: but if the strong arm of this industry is to be strangled by burdensome regulations, it is not unreasonable for us to ask that the Government should relax these regulations and give our ship-owners the liberty they ask. We are not asking for money. The shipping interests have never come before the Government, like other industries, asking for money. That is something unheard of on their part, and I respect them highly for it. They have never had any protection except the slight rebate of 60 cents per ton on the iron used in the construction of ships. As a class, they have been harshly legislated against, and have borne their heavy burdens without complaint; and when they ask for liberties of this kind, it would come hard to their minds if they were refused. This is the first time these things have been fairly before the House, and I trust they will receive reasonable consideration from hon. gentlemen on both sides. So now, I think, I have placed these things as fairly and squarely before you as I possibly could, and, if you look them over, you will find them pretty true, for a parliamentary statement. If you are not satisfied that they are generally correct, then I would ask, if it would not be reasonable that a commission should issue to inquire into these things, to find out whether our shipping is declining and whether these restrictions these navigation laws, bear heavily upon us. If you have doubts about the matter, let the commission issue. But by all means do not let the matter stop here. Let us have some amendment, let us give some relief to these men who are crying out for relief. It is not fair or reasonable that we should stand by and look on in mere unavailing regret while this industry is declining. I trust you will not consider me too urgent or impertinent if I ask that something ought to be done, and that at once.

Mr. WELSH. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the hon. gentleman's remarks on the shipping interests of the Dominion, and I quite agree with him on every point, and quite approve of his remarks. But it seems to me I can see several difficulties in the way of the application of a remedy. If a remedy can be devised I shall be glad to support it. The hon. gentleman is quite right in reference to the decrease of our shipping and in saying that we have to compete not only with Americans, but also with foreigners of all kinds, Swedes, Danes and Russians, and it has come to this, that of our lumber-carrying trade from New Brunswick for Europe, nine-tenths is carried by foreigners. They sail without any restrictions to load line or fittings, while we are bound by certain rules and regulations, under the arrangement made by the Dominion of Canada with the Imperial Government. Suppose one of our ships takes a cargo of lumber out, before she can clear from a British port she is subject to inspection by the Board of Trade, and, even if she is classed A1 with us, before she can clear with a cargo for South America or the West Indies, she will have to arrange her load-line and boats. Also as to pilotage, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, but there may be a question how we are going to remedy this without making fish of one and flesh of the other. As to the certificates of masters and mates also, I think the hon. gentleman is quite right, but I do not see how we can make a change for the better without departing from the rules laid down by the Dominion law that Colonial ships shall have certified masters and mates. In the coasting trade, I understand, the rule does not apply; you can carry a cargo from one British port to another without a certified master. But in going down to the West Indies, you must have a certified master and, as my hon. friend remarks, it is very difficult at all times to get masters and mates. I have known vessels to be detained for a week or ten days and then obliged to send away to another port to bring in master and mate. That is a great drawback to the West India trade. I approve of everything the hon. gentleman has said; his remarks do him great credit, showing, as they do, that he has considered this matter very closely. If there is a remedy I shall be glad to hear it, and to support it when it is proposed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not wish to interpose in this debate, and not being a practical merchant do not intend to follow the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Queen's, N.B. I was much pleased to hear the remarks that he, as a practical man, has made, because they bear out the statements I have made on previous occasions based upon the figures of the Trade and Navigation Returns and other statistics. I am glad he has endorsed these statements, because many hon. gentlemen seem to think I made the statements from a party stand-point, and that I had a malicious pleasure in making them. The hon. gentleman told you to-day that there is no use blinking the fact that our wooden shipping is being paralyzed, and that to-day we do not take the position among the commercial nations of the world that we ought to take. I made a statement the other day, in discussing this matter, that though there appeared to be an increase in the tonnage of vessels to and from Canada, an examination of the figures would disclose the fact that, so far as Canadian bottoms were concerned, there has been no increase at all, that the surplus exports of Canada are carried by foreigners and that the profits of carriage are made by them. Some hon. gentlemen seem to think that statement was made from a party stand-point. I shall be glad to join with the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) if he can find a means of removing the restrictions from our vessels or a means by which any onus or burden can be withdrawn without doing injustice to the seamen. I quite agree that this is a question which should be above party politics. But the moment a statement is made with reference to the shipping interests, there are some gentlemen who know nothing about it, who deem it necessary to rush in and, as they think, score a point by contradicting the statements made. When I gave a statement of the terribly depressed condition of our shipping in the Maritime provinces and the immense losses that had been suffered, the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) must needs attempt to show that I was speaking of a subject I knew nothing about and made the statement that 80,000 steam-ships tied up at the wharfs of the world.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, Sir, we are not going to discuss these matters, but to call his attention to the fact that there are not 80,000 steam-ships in the world altogether.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have drawn the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he must not carry on this discussion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I acknowledge that, Mr. Speaker, and I am not going to do it.

Mr. HAZEN. I desire to say a word before the motion is declared carried. This discussion is upon a subject which is of very great importance to this country. It arises on a Bill introduced by the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Costigan) concerning the examinations of masters and mates. A few days ago I found the following paragraph in a St. John paper :—

FALLING OFF IN MASTERS AND MATES.—A great falling off is reported in the number of persons coming up for examination for masters and mates' certificates before the marine examiners. Where the board used to sit at least once a month and have all the way from six to twelve applicants, now they do not have to sit more than once in two months, and the number of applicants is less than one-half.

One of the troubles is that in the Canadian Act dealing with the subject there is a provision that no certificate shall be granted to any master or mate who has not been domiciled in Canada for three years, or has not served for three years on a vessel registered in Canada. That applies even to British subjects, and to show how partially it applies in many cases, I can illustrate by what occurred not very long ago when an American vessel owned in St. John, belonging to Mr. Howard Troop, was destroyed by fire, or lost in some way. Having every confidence in the master, Mr. Troop wanted to put him on board another ship, but found he could not do so because he did not have the necessary certificate. He naturally thought, as this man was a British subject, that all he would have to do was to go to St. John and pass an examination before the board there. When he came to St. John he found he was not eligible for an examination; and so Mr. Troop had to send him to Liverpool to pass an examination, and when he came back Mr. Troop put him on one of his vessels in St. John. This clearly shows that the domiciliation clause in our Act, which I presume was placed there with some intention of giving special protection to our own Canadian seamen, does not protect them at all, as a certificate granted in Great Britain, or a certificate granted in almost any colony of the Empire, has just the same effect in Canada as a certificate has granted under our Canadian law. The Dominion of Canada was the first colony which was granted the right of issuing certificates. Since that time the privilege has been extended to New Zealand, New South Wales, Malta, South Australia, Tasmania, Bengal, Newfoundland, Bombay and Queensland; but, with the exception of Canada, none of those colonies have a domiciliation clause in their Act; neither do they require applicants for certificates to serve any length of time in vessels registered in the colonies. It will thus be seen that in this respect the law in Canada is exceptional. While it was intended, I think, originally, specially to protect our own seamen, it will be seen that at the present time it really works to the disadvantage of our own seamen, and to the disadvantage of those who own our vessels and who control our tonnage. Now, the Bill introduced by the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries provides that in the case of a British subject who has served, I think, for three years on any vessel, that service will be sufficient to enable him to get a certificate in Canada. But it is very doubtful if that goes far enough, even, because shipping men sometimes find it difficult to get British subjects or Canadians to take command of their vessels, in many cases being forced, I believe—the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., will correct me, if I am not right—to employ Norwegian sailors, who are in most cases very excellent men, and other foreign subjects. Now, there is an impression amongst shipping men that the Act should be made to extend to them, and if, though not British subjects, they have served for three years on any British vessel, they should be entitled to get their certificate here in Canada just the same as any Canadian or any other British subject. Now, it is evident, I think, from what I have said, that it is time an amendment was made to this Act, and I trust when the Bill gets into committee that it will be carefully considered by this House, and that an amendment will be framed and adopted that will remedy the evil that is complained of by our shipping men at present. With regard to the pilotage question, which my hon. friend from Queen's has referred to, of course it seems absurd that the owner of a coaster, which does not carry passengers, should have to employ a pilot whether he wants to or not, though his own captain, in many cases, perhaps in the majority of cases, is quite as well able to make his way through the waters in which he sails, as any pilot is. It must be borne in mind, however, that it is contended by owners of shipping that a certain number of pilots are required in every port, that no port is an efficient port without pilots, and no port is thoroughly equipped for shipping, no port is thoroughly safe, unless it possesses a certain number of well-trained pilots, who have made a study of the gales, and the tides and the currents, and know all about navigation in the waters they navigate, in order that when strange ships come to port, they may be there to bring in these ships in safety. I think it is a proposition which can not be disputed, that no port is efficient unless it has a number of trained pilots. Now, let us go a little further. Would it be possible, for instance, in a port like that of St. John, unless there was some sort of compulsory pilotage law, to maintain and pay a corps of trained pilots year after year, as they are maintained at the present time? My learned friend from Queen's thinks it is possible. There are many shipping men who hold that view; but it seems to me that is a branch of the subject that should be very carefully looked into before we come to a settlement on this matter. Now, pilots possess, it seems to me, certain rights. Speaking specially with regard to the port of St. John, these men have been brought up and trained to this business, they understand it, they have had to pass a certain examination, they have had to study for the purpose of passing these examinations, and have had to get certificates. They have to provide themselves with pilot boats and with the necessary outfit; therefore, from their stand-point, they have certain rights, which, to some extent, ought to be protected. In saying this I do not mean that the owner of a coaster that simply plys along the Atlantic coast—vessels not over 125 tons are exempted from pilotage—I do not mean to say that from that rate up to 250 tons they should be compelled to pay pilotage, whether they want to or not. It may be there is a great deal of force in the contention of the hon. member for Queen's, that the large iron vessels, the foreign vessels, if I may call them so—I mean those that are not owned in the port—pay, as a rule, much less pilotage proportionately than small vessels which never require the services of a pilot, which are owned in the port, and, in proportion to their tonnage, pay a much higher rate than large iron vessels, which carry thousands of feet more deals every voyage they make. This question must be carefully looked into, and if the rates are not fair, they should be made so. We have also to consider whether a step should be taken which could, in any event, make it possible for a port to be left without the services of some trained men who could be called upon in an emergency to take charge of a ship whose master does not know the waters he is navigating. With regard to the load-line question, as I understand it, that matter is not within the control of this Parliament. The British Act of several years ago provided for the making of a load-line, and the representative of this country in London, Sir Charles Tupper, made representations to the Imperial Board of Trade, and accordingly the Act was amended so as to provide that if any self-governing colony of the Empire enacted laws for the placing of the load-line along similar lines and on similar principles to those that prevailed in the British Act, such Colonial Act would be taken by the Imperial Board of Trade as sufficient. It will be remembered that this Parliament enacted a load-line Act, but exception has been taken to it, as I understand, by the officers of the Board of Trade in Great Britain, and the matter is still in abeyance. It does seem absurd that in our vessels, which have deeper holds and better capacity for carrying dead weight in every way, the load-line should be marked in the same way as it is marked upon iron vessels in Great Britain. If that is done, it must work a great deal of injury eventually to our trade. But, as I said before, that is a matter with which this Parliament, unfortunately, cannot deal, and that being the case, it is for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to communicate with our High Commissioner in London and ask him to represent to the Board of Trade in Great Britain how necessary it is, in dealing with Canadian shipping, that they should deal with this load-line matter in a way that will not result injuriously to our interests.

Mr. KENNY. In common with other hon. members I listened with great interest to the very instructive speech made by the hon.

member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) in regard to the Atlantic coasting shipping of the Dominion. We recognize that the hon. member for Queen's is a competent authority, that there is no man in the Maritime provinces who is more familiar with the Atlantic coasting trade than my hon. friend. He has proved that fact conclusively and to the satisfaction of members of this House to-day. I quite agree with my hon. friend that in that coasting trade, competing as we are with the Americans, it is absolutely necessary, if we are to be successful in that competition, that our coasting vessels should not be hampered by any unwise legislation. My hon. friend has pointed out that in the American coasting trade it is not necessary that the mates of vessels engaged in that trade should possess certificates. I know from my own personal experience that in Halifax our West India vessels have been detained for some time owing to the fact that the owners could not procure mates who had certificates. On some occasions the owners were so embarrassed that they telegraphed to the Minister of Marine at Ottawa, asking him to grant special permission to allow their vessels to clear without a certified mate. The Minister replied that he had no jurisdiction in such matters, that Parliament had enacted the law, and it was his duty to carry it out. I know as regards those vessels which are engaged in the coasting trade, and when I say coasting trade I would extend the term to the West India trade, that if we are to compete successfully with the Americans, our vessels must have the same privileges which our American competitors enjoy. We must remember, too, that there is a great change going on in the shipping of the world, and nobody knows it better than the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh), who is a practical mariner, and this change is not confined to the ocean trade, but also is observable in the coasting trade, and to-day raw materials like coal and pig iron are transported along the American coast by barges towed by steamers, very similar to the manner in which grain is transported across our inland lakes. It would be a very great hardship if those barges were subjected to compulsory pilotage.

Mr. HAZEN. That is so.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend from St. John says that at the present moment those vessels are subjected to that restriction. I am afraid such is the case, and I think that restriction should be removed. I agree, therefore, with the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), that in the coasting trade it is not necessary that the mates of those vessels should possess certificates. So far as regards our ocean ships, I think the mates should possess certificates. I believe it is very desirable that our young men who take to the sea and engage in that calling should be qualified for the positions which they may be called upon to fill, and be as well qualified as their competitors, be they English or foreigners. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) referred to the paralyzed condition of the shipping of the Maritime provinces. You, Mr. Speaker, reminded him that it was not proper to refer to a previous debate, but the hon. gentleman said to-day that at the present moment there was general paralysis in the shipping industry of this Dominion, and he was inclined to attribute that condition to the policy of the present Government, or at all events that was the insinuation, and I think he dated this paralysis from about 1878. My hon. friend objected to a remark made in a former debate by the hon. member for Toronto Centre (Mr. Cockburn) because he was not an expert in shipping matters. I am, therefore, forced to the conclusion that my hon. friend, when he spoke so authoritatively, must pose as an authority in such matters, and being engaged in the shipping business myself, and having one or two idle ships in different parts of the world, I shall be very much obliged if the hon. gentleman, as a mere matter of charity, will inform me of any place where shipping is not depressed to-day. Let me tell him that I am interested in a ship that has been idle in San Francisco since February 24, 1892. Only to-day one of my friends engaged in shipping came to me to ask what he was to do with a ship he had waiting for orders at Anjier. There is great depression to-day in shipping in the distant east as well as in the west. With such an extraordinary, unparalleled condition of depression, the owners of ships do not know what to do. I think even the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) would hardly blame the National Policy for the fact that a vessel has been idle in San Francisco for over a year, and another Canadian ship cannot find employment at Anjier, but probably in the constituency in which the hon. gentleman lives, he may induce, if not now, at the next general election, some of his friends to place this great depression which exists in shipping, and which we all recognize and deplore and some of us feel very sensitively, at the door of the National Policy. The reduction in the tonnage of our Canadian wooden ships—my hon. friend knows it, and I think he should have stated it to the House—is due to the extreme competition of steam vessels, and to-day iron sailing ships have replaced wooden sailing ships, for it must be remembered that the only ships ever built in the Maritime provinces have been wooden vessels. That is another argument in favour of the position taken by the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), that we should more jealously guard the trade that is left to our wooden ships, the coasting trade. Yesterday's Order Paper bristled with motions attacking the National Policy as regards sugar, iron, binder twine, everything we can manufacture in our country is assailed by hon. gentlemen opposite. I stated what is a palpable fact, which I think even the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) will not contradict, that the depression in shipping is owing to the fact that we cannot build iron ships in this Dominion, not at least on the Atlantic coast; and we never shall be able to build them until we develop our iron industry, and we can only do that under the National Policy, under a protective tariff, in the same manner in which the iron industry of every country in the world, including England and the United States, has been developed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the hon. gentleman will show how the iron industry is protected in England?

Mr. KENNY. The iron industry was protected in England to the extent of $10, $20 and $30 per ton in the early days.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When?

Mr. KENNY. In the initial stages of the development of the iron industry in England, and England to-day would hardly have attained the supremacy she occupies as a great manufacturing country, the basis of which is the iron industry, if she had not protected her iron industry in its initial stages. That is the answer I have to make to the hon. gentleman's remarks. It is not necessary to travel across the ocean for examples of the beneficial effect of protection on the iron trade, if we will only look south. We are told sometimes that these hon. gentlemen opposite look to the United States for the sign by which they shall conquer, and if my hon. friend will look to the policy of the United States in reference to this matter, he will find that under protection, the iron industries have developed enormously and that they are now building iron ships in the United States. Now, one or two words with regard to the Pilotage Act. I am aware that the Pilot Commissioners of Halifax sent to the hon. Minister of Marine a recommendation that Canadian vessels engaged in the coasting trade should be exempt from pilotage. As I understand the present Act, it only exempts vessels of 120 tons or under, and I understood from my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Baird) that he recommends that this exemption should be extended to vessels of 250 tons. I hardly think it would be possible for us to make a separate law for each port, but that it would have to come under a general Act, so that I understand, the exemption of vessels of 250 tons would meet the views of my hon. friend. In making such a radical change in the Pilotage law due consideration would have to be given to its effect on our pilots, and some fair arrangement should be made on behalf of the men who have been for so many years engaged as pilots in our ports, as it would not be possible for them to revert abruptly to other occupations.

Mr. GILLMOR. I was very much pleased with the speech of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird). I am not very familiar with the subject of this discussion, but formerly I had something to do with vessels, and it occurs to me that his suggestions are worthy of consideration. His remarks were delivered in a tone free from politics, and I think my genial friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) would have done well if he had followed his example. I was delighted to hear a discussion in which there was no talk of the National Policy, and no protection. The hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Baird) does not want any protection. I agree with him that the kind of protection the shipping wants is for the Government to allow owners of coast vessels to do their own business in their own way, and as they best know how to do it. With regard to the protection of shipping and iron industries in England, my reading of history is, that the British Government did undertake to protect her shipping over 100 years ago, and they protected it so much that they would not allow their colonial ships to do anything, the result of which was that they got into a fight and got a thrashing. That was the result of protection, and the English Government have been wiser ever since. I believe, what my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Baird) suggests is, that the people in New Brunswick should be allowed to build the kind of ships they can build there now, and that they should be allowed to compete on equal terms with their neighbours on the other side of the line. Our people now invest in schooners, because the American vessels have the preference in the trade, and therefore they are making money which our small vessels are not. It has occurred to me during this debate that we are looking now with our mind's eye towards the great Atlantic; whereas all the time in the past we have been looking to the west, as though the whole Dominion and all its interests were settled in the great prairie. I want that our people should be allowed to build their ships and sail them in their own way, and make money, and the reason that my hon. friend's vessels do not get enough to do now is because commerce is declining. It ought not to be so, and I trust it will not long continue to be so. I want to see our ships built by our own mechanics. I want to see our ships manned by our own seamen, I want to see our ships loaded with the products of our own soil, and I want to see them make money under these circumstances. If we had the commerce that we ought to have, our seafaring people ought to make a good living. I am sorry for my friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny), that, like other ship-owners, his ship is lying idle in San Francisco. I do not understand why a maritime people, I do not understand why men with the energy of Canadians, and I do not understand why men with that force of character, and with the means that we ought to have, cannot keep pace with the times, in shipping. Perhaps the trouble is that shipping is overdone, that there is too much of it for the business of the world, and if such is the case it cannot be helped. The suggestions made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) are sound, and the Government should pay attention to them. I do not believe that it is necessary for the masters of these coasting vessels to have certificates. Education is always good, and navigation is good, but it is quite impossible for these young men who go as boys to sea to get it. I know, however, that they are very competent mariners, and that the science of navigation is not at all needed in order to do the coasting trade successfully. In my opinion it is absurd that vessels should not be allowed to go to the West India Islands under the same deck-load laws as they go to South America. I believe that the maritime interests of the county I represent would assent to every proposition made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird). I trust, in conclusion, that the Government will give due consideration to what has been said.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Mr. Speaker. I am sure that every one interested in the coasting trade of the Maritime provinces will be glad that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) has brought this matter to the attention of the House. There is no hon. gentleman in the House, as his speech has shown, who is more conversant with the subject, and I am sure that the remarks he has made will have great weight, not only with those who come from the Maritime provinces, but with those who represent the other provinces, and who desire to see every branch of trade in every section of the Dominion develop to the greatest extent possible. I do not intend to lengthen the discussion, because I cannot better express my opinions than by endorsing what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Baird) has said. I wish, however, to emphasize one point to which he directed the attention of the House, and that is, the question of requiring certificates from the mates of our vessels going to the United States ports and the West Indies. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that in the city of St. John it has caused great inconvenience and expense to the owners of this class of vessels. I desire to say from my experience that while it may be oppressive to them in large ports like St. John, it is far more oppressive in the outports. I have known cases of vessels loaded at the outports for the West Indies, for which there has been the greatest difficulty to obtain certificated mates. Indeed, it is quite impossible to obtain them at the outports, and in some cases the owners are obliged at great expense and at considerable delay to send to the city of St. John for a mate. It will be readily seen that while our shipping labours under this disadvantage, the profits of the trade must be seriously interfered with. I hope that the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries will take this question into his serious consideration, and remove the disability under which this class of shipping now labours. I quite endorse, too, what the hon. gentleman has said with regard to the regulations governing the deck loads of our vessels going to the West Indies. It seems to be absurd that a vessel loading for the West Indies is not permitted even to carry as large a deck load as a vessel going on a longer voyage to South America. However, I do not wish to enlarge upon that point. I also endorse the observations of the hon. gentleman on the question of compulsory pilotage, but it is not necessary for me to detain the House by repeating the arguments which have been so well presented to it already.

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to say a few words on the question before the House. In Great Britain previous to 1854 there were no restrictions on either masters or mates. Prior to that year they were not required to have certificates; but after the Act came into force all who had occupied positions as masters or mates in the merchant shipping of Great Britain were granted certificates of service, and from that time to the present every master and mate has had to pass an examination of competency before the Marine Board. At the present time there is no restriction upon the coasting trade of Great Britain or Ireland, and the Dominion Government should not place any more restrictions upon our merchant marine than Great Britain imposes on hers. Therefore I hope the Minister of Marine will see his way to abolish the system from our coasting trade, including even the West Indian trade. Regarding harbour dues, in my native town the custom was when a vessel arrived light, to charge her only half the harbour and pilotage dues. The system of a harbour line or draught of water line seems to be a very unfair one, because if a vessel is flat-bottomed, she has a great advantage over one of a different construction. If harbour dues or pilotage dues are to be continued, the tonnage of the vessel should be the basis of the charge, and when a vessel comes into port wind-bound or without a cargo there should be a scale of charges accordingly. That is the custom in Great Britain, and I do not think we should treat our shippers differently. Now, my hon. friend from Halifax wanted to bring the National Policy into this discussion.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) did it.

Mr. GIBSON. Well, you continued it. Now, I wish to say that when I came to this country in 1870 the village of Port Dalhousie and the city of St. Catharines in the county I have the honour to represent were thriving places, famous for their shipbuilding; but I am sorry to say that in both those places the grass is growing where the ships used to be built. One reason for that is that the Government have imposed a duty of 35 per cent on everything that may be imported for the repairing of a vessel, while a vessel ready-made and manned by foreign seamen can be brought in free. The result is that instead of the work being done along the line of the Welland Canal, as it formerly was, it is done at Buffalo, where iron can be got at cost. In this way the duty drives the work of repairing out of the country as well as stops the shipbuilding. Therefore I hope the Minister in charge will take this matter into his consideration, and adopt some of the suggestions which have been made this afternoon. If pilotage and harbour dues are to be imposed on ship-owners, they should be fixed on a sliding scale, as is done in Great Britain, and a vessel without a cargo should be charged according to her tonnage and not according to her draught of water. Any person who understands shipbuilding, which I happened to learn in my young days, knows that the draught of a vessel may be diminished or increased according to its construction, and the owner of the vessel should not be put to any disadvantage on this account.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have listened with much interest and attention to the remarks which emanated from the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), and I fully endorse his views. I represent a county which has a shipping port of no small importance, and I have found that the same grievance to which the hon. member for Queen's has given expression has been complained of by ship owners and masters in the port of Lunenburg. I fully agree with our hon. friend that mates should have the privilege he asks for them, and that it is an advantage to ship owners cannot be disputed, for I have known numberless instances of vessels having to remain in port for weeks because mates could not be had on account of the restrictions imposed upon them. If mates can sail coastwise without restriction, even to the United States, why not be allowed to sail to the West Indies. With regard to the load-line, I fully endorse the hon. gentleman's views. I cannot see why we should be restricted in the way we are, when vessels going to South America are permitted to load as they please. Regarding the port dues of vessels, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the limit should be 250 tons for coastwise vessels instead of the limit of 120 tons. We find the inconvenience very considerable in visiting the port of Halifax with some of our vessels, whereas if that restriction were removed, it would be more satisfactory. With regard to the remark made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) that trade is paralyzed. I am pleased to inform the hon. gentleman that the trade and shipping, and the tonnage of the port of Lunenburg and in the county which I have the honour to represent, shows no diminution, but, on the contrary, shows an increase, and that trade has been steadily increasing from year to year. Last year the number of vessels built within the county exceeded thirty, and this year, I am inclined to believe, the number will be no less but probably greater. I am glad indeed this matter has been brought up and so ably commented upon by the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) and I hope it will receive the consideration of this House.

Mr. CHESLEY. The hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) has placed this matter before the House in a very fair and reasonable way. With regard to the law requiring certificates from the masters and mates, that has always seemed to me, instead of a protection, just the reverse. Under that law, no matter how capable a man may be and how good an examination he may pass, unless he can show that he has had three years' service in a Canadian vessel, or has been domiciled in Canada for three years, he cannot obtain a certificate; and the result is that, instead of complying with these conditions of service or domicile, he will leave the country and seek employment elsewhere. The effect of the Act in that particular has therefore been to deprive Canada of the service of some of the best men we might have obtained as masters and mates, and the object of the Act, the protection of Canadians as masters and mates, is thereby defeated. I would like to see the law so altered that any man qualified, no matter whether he has lived in the country or not, should, on passing the required examination, be at once granted a certificate without further trouble or expense. With regard to the compulsory pilotage question, a good deal may be said on both sides. While it is a burden perhaps and a hardship to require our small coasting vessels to employ pilots, the fact still remains that it is necessary that every shipping port should have a complete system of pilotage in the interest of the business of that port. That being the case, the question we have to deal with is what exemptions we should make, while maintaining the system; and I have no doubt that the Act could be so amended as to meet the difficulty. Another question referred to by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) is the deck-load line. The men engaged in the coasting business of this country build their vessels to suit that trade; some are built drawing a light draught and others drawing a greater draught, and the construction of the two kinds is entirely different. A load-line applicable to one class of vessels would affect the value of another class very materially, and I cannot see why any system of legislation should be had which will, when carried out, damage the carrying capacity of any one class of vessels. Now that this question has been so well debated, I hope it will be taken up and considered in all its aspects, and that what is considered a great encumbrance will be removed from this important business. We all know that the coasting trade and shipping business generally is in a very depressed condition. The coasting trade is one we ought especially to foster. I hope, now that the question has been brought before Parliament, that every means of inquiry will be used and every effort made to relieve this important business of some of the burdens it now carries.

Motion agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CARSCALLEN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make a change in the management or personnel of the officials of the Geological Department, during the present year? Is it the intention of the Government to establish a branch of the Geological Department during the present year that will attend particularly to mineralogy and mining operations, in order to aid in the development of our mineral resources? Do the Government intend to establish an assay branch in connection with such department?

Mr. DALY. There appears to be no reason for making any changes at present, either in the management or personnel of the Geological Department, and the Government has no intention of doing so. The documents, circulars and reports which I will furnish the hon. member will probably suffice to show the hon. member that there is, and has been for several years, a division or branch of the Geological Department such as he refers to. There is also an assay and chemical branch, as is shown by the numerous assays and analyses, the results of which are published in the reports of the survey every year.

FISH HATCHERIES AT MILTON AND BEDFORD.

Mr. FORBES asked, Why the fish hatcheries at Milton, N.S., and at Bedford, Halifax county, have been closed? Whether it is the intention of the Government to re-establish said hatcheries? What results have followed from said hatcheries; and whether any, and what irregularities have led to the closing of said hatcheries?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. There is no fish hatchery at Milton, Queen's county, Nova Scotia. There is a small shed cheaply constructed as a subsidiary building, in which a few eggs may be transferred from the Bedford hatchery just previous to their hatching into fry. This building is only used for—say, five or six weeks during the year, and will in all probability be used again this year, if circumstances will admit. 2. The Bedford hatchery, Nova Scotia, is not closed, as a large number of salmon, salmon trout and whitefish eggs will be hatched in it the coming spring, and the fry distributed in several of the waters of Nova Scotia. 3. The results from the Bedford hatchery have been satisfactory, as shown by the reports from many of the fishery officers and guardians of that province. 4. No irregularities have led to the closing up of the Bedford hatchery, or the subsidiary building at Milton. Some difficulties have arisen in the collecting of full supplies of salmon eggs for the Bedford hatchery. The necessary provision to overcome this difficulty in the future is now under consideration of the Government.

ALLEGED COTTON COMBINATIONS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, In view of the very important statement made in this House on the 17th of February, by the hon. member for West Ontario, regarding the combinations formed by the cotton manufacturers of Canada, and in view of the promise of the First Minister last session, as follows: "If it were established, as the hon. gentleman seems to assert, that the tariff was the means of enabling such a company to act oppressively to the consumers, it would certainly not very long remain so." what action do the Government intend to take?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government intend to make careful inquiry as to the accuracy of the important statement which was made to the House on the 17th February last by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), but information at present before the Government leads to the conclusion that the statement was made on erroneous information.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That Government Orders have precedence on Monday, 6th March, after Questions to be put by Members.

He said: I beg to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Government fully appreciate the courtesy and good-will which has induced members of the House to agree to the Government taking to-day for the transaction of Government business, and to facilitate otherwise the transactions of the matters which are on Government Orders, although we are unfortunate enough to have lost the greater part of the afternoon in the discussion upon the first reading of the first Bill on the Paper for introduction. I ask an extension of the same kindness on the part of the House to enable us to take Monday next. If I were to believe, Sir, statements which I see in the press—and I do not always believe statements I see in the press—an hon. member of this House, who is not in his place, and whose absence I regret, has made the statement for publication that owing to rumours which have found their way into the press he has reason to believe that my duty will call me elsewhere before many days, and that he intends to take care that I shall not slip away until an important question relating to educational affairs in Manitoba receives treatment at his hands in this House. I beg to say, Sir, with reference to that statement, that the Government ask the House to take Monday for Government Orders, with a view to giving that gentleman an opportunity of making any statement he has to make or bringing forward any business in connection with that subject. An opportunity will be given him on that day if he wishes to avail himself of it.

Mr. LAURIER. I presume I know the hon. gentleman to whom the First Minister alluded, though he has not named him. I do not see the hon. member in his seat. At all events I understand from the statement of the First Minister now that on Monday the House will be moved into Committee of Supply so as to offer the hon. gentleman an opportunity of bringing up that question of Manitoba schools, if he so chooses.

Motion agreed to.

MANITOBA SCHOOLS CASE.

Mr. McCARTHY. May I ask whether it is the intention of the Government to bring down, and have printed the last Minute of the Privy Council with reference to the Schools Act? I find in the papers that have been printed the document ends with the Order of the 29th December last. I understood from the First Minister that since that time a further Minute or Order in Council has been made, and I understood the hon. gentleman to say also that he proposed to bring that Order down.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was brought down yesterday and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—THE DUTY ON COAL OIL.

Mr. LISTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the House to a few remarks as reported in "Hansard" made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) last night. Speaking to the question then before the House, the hon. member undertook to reproach me for not taking what he considered a stand upon the question of the reduction of the duty on oil, and he goes on to say in the course of his observations:

If I am correctly informed, he is largely interested in the trade himself. He has no desire for the farmers' welfare, then. He is willing they should pay 150 per cent duty on coal oil, but when it comes down to an article on which they pay 12½ per cent duty, and that for the purpose of raising a revenue, then he has a new-born zeal for the farmers that was never displayed up to that time.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have not had for eleven years, directly or indirectly, remotely or nearly, any interest of any kind in oil lands or in the oil trade in any way. I desire, furthermore, to say that I was not in favour, and am not in favour of the farmers of this country paying 150 per cent duty upon coal oil. I think it ought not to be necessary for a member of this House to rise and make this statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LISTER. I shall certainly take another opportunity of referring to that hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I certainly accept—

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the hon. gentleman has a personal explanation to make he cannot enter into a discussion.

PRIVILEGE—DIVISION ON CORN DUTY.

Mr. TEMPLE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege with reference to my vote last night. I thought last night from the merriment of some hon. gentlemen, that they had been out to dinner, but that is not the case now. I desire to say that the resolution presented by the hon. gentleman from Compton (Mr. Pope) had my sympathy, and I voted in favour of it; and when I told you, Mr. Speaker, that things were mixed up a little around here—

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman's vote has been recorded in the Votes and Proceedings as he intimated that he intended to give it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman is complaining that he did not fully exercise his privilege.

Mr. TEMPLE. What I want to explain to the House is this, that at the second vote I did not vote at all. It was a mistake of the clerk, not a mistake of mine; therefore, I do not think I should be accused of voting three or four times, although I would be perfectly willing to do so. I wish to say further, that I think the clerk was not altogether to blame in this case, because sometimes he cannot tell whether hon. gentlemen wish to vote or not. I think when hon. gentlemen vote they should stand up so that the clerk can see them, instead of merely bobbing their heads.

REPRESENTATION OF CANADA AT FOREIGN CAPITOLS.

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Minister of Finance, to whom I have given private notice, whether he will be prepared shortly to state the result of his communication with the Administration in England as to the resolution that was passed last session on the motion I had the honour to make, and which ultimately was amended by one of the Ministers to read as follows:—

That it is expedient that communications be opened with Her Majesty's Government in order to bring about such fuller representation of Canadian interests at Washington and at the Capitols of other countries in which such representation may be found desirable as may be consistent with the proper relations which should exist between Great Britain and Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to my hon. friend I may say, that according to the tenor of that resolution. Sir John Abbott and myself, when in London, had several conferences with the Colonial and Foreign Offices. We were received very kindly by Lord Roseberry, and the subject was fully discussed between us. My impression as a result of these conversations is that serious difficulties seem to be in the way of Canada having representatives at foreign capitols with ambassadorial or ministerial functions, arising out of a variety of considerations, some of which were touched last year when we were discussing the question here. My impression, also, is that the Foreign Office and the Government will be willing to facilitate in any way a full representation of Canada's interest, through their Minister at any of these capitols, and further, would be willing to act in every possible way so as to give a Canadian agent or unofficial representative, whatever advantages could possibly be given through the Embassy, or by the Minister representing Great Britain in that country.

Mr. LAURIER. Are we to understand from the hon. gentleman that no communication has been made to the Imperial Government with regard to the resolution of the hon. member for Simcoe?

Mr. FOSTER. What my hon. friend may understand is in the line of what I have said, that Sir John Abbott and myself had personal conferences with the Colonial and Foreign Offices when we were in London; but as yet no official written communications have passed.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me there is a dereliction of duty on the part of the Government in making no official communication, when a vote of the House had been passed ordering the Government to take such steps.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we have had evidences enough of the importance of having communications on these extremely serious questions, put down in writing, to avoid misunderstanding on both sides. The hon. gentleman is aware that in other important negotiations there is a direct conflict of testimony between himself and the officers of another state.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite unfounded, however.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite well founded, in my judgment.

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is in a position to give the House any more information with respect to the French treaty which is alleged to have been signed by the Canadian Commissioner in Paris. I have had a number of communications from gentlemen in the lobster and other lines of business, who are interested in the French trade, pressing for information. It is important that they should get the information, so that they may make arrangements with respect to this trade at the earliest possible date. The newspaper press contains unauthorized statements of the contents of the treaty, which may be very misleading; and it is in the interest of the commercial public that the hon. gentleman should make known at the earliest moment, the provisions of this treaty. It has been signed over a fortnight.

Mr. FOSTER. The First Minister stated the other day that a copy of the treaty would be laid on the Table in the latter part of this week, and certain other papers I am anxious to lay on the Table along with it, are now being prepared. I hope they will be ready to-morrow, if not, they will be ready the first of next week. I desire, when laying the treaty on the Table, to make a short statement. We may expect it the first of next week.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 42) to amend the Act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I desire to call attention to the reason for the first section. The boundary line of the province of Ontario has been altered since the district of Nipissing was established, and the Bill, as introduced last year, did not extend the limits in accordance with the new boundary line. I am informed by the law clerk, by whom the Bill has been prepared, that the boundaries named in the Bill, in so far as they are named, are taken from the Ontario statute, and otherwise, that is to say, as regards the new boundary of the province itself, he has followed the line closely as it can be traced on the map, in accordance with the description contained in the Imperial statute as to the boundaries of Ontario. I desire to amend the clause by inserting at the end, a few words which were accidentally omitted in drafting the Bill, and which are in the present Act, namely:

And the said electoral district of Nipissing shall also include that part of the district of Algoma, bounded by a line running along the western boundary of the townships of Long and McGiverin, and then northerly along the western boundary to a point intersecting the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Ridout Station, then to the northern boundary of the province of Ontario.

On section 2,

Mr. CHARLTON. Was New Edinburgh a portion of the new electoral district before ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is simply adding the words: "and shall return two members."

Mr. CHARLTON. Then New Edinburgh was not included before

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not under the Act of last session.

On section 3,

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the reason for this clause ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It refers to unorganized territory east of the river; in the Act, it reads west.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). I would like to ask the First Minister whether it is the intention to introduce a section into this Bill re-defining the distribution of seats in Toronto. The hon. Minister promised last session that he might do it, and I think it would be a very opportune time for him to do it now and to assimilate the electoral divisions to the new municipal divisions of the city.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not remember what occurred last year, but I suppose that what I said was that it could be done at any time. It is a subject that has not been considered in drafting this Bill. We intended to avoid as much as possible any matter of controversy and simply to correct errors of description which occurred in drafting the Bill of last year.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). I do not think it would involve any party controversy. It would make the electoral divisions of the city much simpler if we took as a basis the present municipal divisions. Under the old system there were thirteen wards in Toronto, but now there are only six.

Mr. OUIMET moved a section respecting the description of the electoral division of St. Hyacinthe. He said: The description of the county of St. Hyacinthe remained as it was according to the original establishment of the county in 1864, but since then the parish of Ste. Marie de Madeleine has added a certain part of the parish of St. John Baptiste, and it is in order to include about twenty farmers there that the amendment is moved. As it is now these farmers are in no county.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) The reasons just given by the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) in support of his motion are perfectly true. The changes made by the motion are only a matter of detail; they were rendered necessary in order to allow a certain number of electors of the parish of St. Jean-Baptiste to exercise their right of vote, which they would be deprived of should the law remain as it is. These electors are included in the parish of Ste. Marie Madeleine. It was formed with part of those of La Presentation, St. Charles and St. Damase, in the county of St. Hyacinthe and with a slight portion of the parish of St. Jean-Baptiste. Were not the change effected just introduced into the law, or were not a new enumeration of the parishes included in the county of St. Hyacinthe inserted into the statute, twenty-five electors at least would be deprived of their right of vote. I had the honour to hand over to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) a petition signed by the interested electors, and asking for this change in the law. I fully approve of the amendment just made. I would add that through this change the limits of the county of St. Hyacinthe will be, as regards the House of Commons, exactly the same as those for the Local House.

Committee rose and reported, and Bill read the third time and passed.

INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the hon. First Minister could state when we may expect to have laid on the Table the copyright papers which he promised some time ago. He told us that a despatch had recently been received from England, and I think that we should have all the information which the Government proposes to bring down, as I think the House should have something to say on the subject during the session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think I shall be able to lay them on the Table next week. If I am able to make a more definite statement, I will inform the hon. gentleman.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—NOVA SCOTIA COAL MINES.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, two or three times during this session, by a side-wind, the attention of the House has been called for a moment to the fact that some unusual legislation has recently been enacted in the province of Nova Scotia with respect to the coal mines of that province. It was a curious incident that directed the attention of Parliament, and through Parliament the attention of the press and the country, to one phase of the question. I will not say it is a phase of no importance, but certainly it is a phase with which this Parliament has nothing in the world to do; that is, the relation of the legislation in question to the safety of the North Atlantic and West India squadron. There was a possibility that in case of a long war at some future day, this fleet would be cut off from access to the coal supply in Nova Scotia. I have nothing to say to-night in addition to what I have already said on that matter, more than this, that we have taken all the steps that were possible to us, not as members of Parliament, but as citizens of the country, to transmit to Lord Roseberry, in the constitutional way, the Mines Act, a copy of the lease, which contains the terms given to the company recently organized in Nova Scotia, a copy of the old lease, which sets forth the condition of the mining laws heretofore, and a copy of the charter, which embodies the powers of the company; and we accept the views expressed by several of our friends across the House, that after the Imperial authorities have been acquainted with the facts, it would be pure impertinence and nonsense for us to go any further. We may be sure, therefore, that the Imperial authorities—the Foreign Secretary, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the Lords of the Admiralty—are very well able to take care of their own concerns, when their attention is called to the facts. Coming to the real question, Sir, there can be no doubt, judging by what I myself heard and saw before I left my home in Halifax to attend my duties in Parliament, judging by what I have read during the past three weeks in the papers of the province, judging by the telegrams I have received daily, and the enormous amount of correspondence that I have had from the lower provinces, that the question of the recent coal legislation in Nova Scotia is one of the deepest interest to public men. In a few weeks, when the question will be fully mastered, it will be one of deeper interest to the people of the lower provinces generally, than any question that has arisen since the union of the British provinces. The condition of public opinion in those provinces, so far as I could learn while among the people, and so far as I have been able to learn since from the telegrams and letters that I have received, is this. There are some who think that the laws enacted by the Nova Scotia Legislature are capable of great good; that they are capable of bringing about and are likely to bring about an enormous development of the coal measures of Nova Scotia; that they are likely to build up our cities in the eastern part of that province, and to give us a growth of population at considerable distances from the coal measures by reason of the trade that will stimulate; and that they will develop a large carrying trade; and that opinion is shared by a large number of the leading men of the province. On the other hand, the view is held that by the large powers given to the great corporation which now controls more than half the coal mines of that province, and for the lack of the customary checks and guards, those powers are capable of being used in a very different way; and that, seeing that they are subject to but one check and control for the unprecedented term of 100 years, these great powers, if not in our day or lifetime, in the lifetime of our children or our grandchildren, may be used so far as to bring harm and disaster upon the country. Besides these two classes, which are, collectively, but few in number, there is a much larger class who are standing in a dazed attitude, who have never seen the old or the new mining leases, who have never read the charter, who are not acquainted with the mining laws of Nova Scotia, or with the history of these laws, and who, for the life of them, do not know whether the Local Government is right in its contention, or whether right is on the side of the opposition thereto, but are waiting all the while under the shadow of a great fear. The question is not well understood; it is very complicated; it is mixed up with questions of fact and law; the literature of it takes, not hours, but days to intelligently study and master. Only those who have gone through the mining laws of Nova Scotia from first to last, and taken days, and even weeks to the study, have a certain knowledge of the question. The length, the number of the documents, the complexity of the Mining Act—all make it necessary that he who undertakes to speak on this question shall be free to trespass on the attention of his hearers, and speak with some deliberation and length; otherwise, he cannot put before the House the information he has gathered on the subject. Having had the very great advantage of living in the city of Halifax, the centre of interest in this matter, of hearing some of the debates in the Legislature, of reading the daily papers supporting and opposing the Government, or having daily controversy and dispute with those who hold strong opinions, one way or the other, and having followed the question as well as I was able to do, I deem it my duty to try and put before Parliament and the country—especially the people of the Maritime provinces, who can most quickly be reached by means of speeches made in this House—the opinion I have been led to entertain from my work and study. No intelligent man can have any doubt that the franchise, put in the hands of the one great company which is now controlling the coal measures of the county of Cape Breton—including something more than one-half the coal areas of the province—will enable that monopoly, provided they have bought the mines with judicious economy, provided they have not paid too high prices for their properties, and will not have to pay dividends on too large a capital, to produce coal more cheaply than could individual miners. And in the matter of the transport of Cape Breton coal to Lake Ontario, to supply the city of Toronto, and also the city of Hamilton, no doubt these gentlemen, with their schemes, will be able to considerably reduce the cost of transport. They claim that, with the larger capital they are putting in the mines and the economy which naturally follows a united management they will be able to carry coal to Montreal at a cost of from 75 to 80 cents per ton, which, compared with the present rates, will mean a saving of from 55 to 60 cents per ton in the matter of transport. Then, they say it costs from 23 to 25 cents on an average to take the coal at Montreal out of the barge and put it into the car; but they claim that by means of the advantages to be gained by bringing the cars and the barges nearer together, they will be able to cut that cost down by 12 to 15 cents; and I have not heard any practical men challenge the substantial soundness of these figures. Everybody must know that by handling a business under one controlling intelligence, a great saving must be effected in production slightly, in transport enormously, in terminal facilities appreciably. If the new company are content with the present price of coal, they will be able to make money very rapidly at a cost to no one, but as a reward of their own vigour and brains and management; and no one should wish them ill in carrying out a scheme of so much hope and so much promise. I shall not take up the time of the House in making any lengthy statement of facts although it will make the case clearer if I make a brief statement of the mining laws of Nova Scotia. As long ago as 1826, Nova Scotia was blighted by a monopoly of coal. The king of that day gave to his brother a lease of the mines in the eastern part of the province for sixty years, and this improvident spendthrift, the Duke of York, becoming hard-up for money, mortgaged those mines to a London jeweller. If I had the skill in phrasing of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I could show how this nobleman turned the black diamonds of Nova Scotia into glistening white diamonds, and hung them about the neck of one of those fair and frail ladies who drove into chronic embarrassment several of the sons of George the Third. Those who then got control of the mines, like dogs in a manger, would neither work them nor allow others to work them, and for twenty or thirty years the mines remained unproductive. At one time this state of things gave rise to something like a civil war in Nova Scotia, and troops had to be sent down there to keep the peace. About thirty years ago the province rose in its might and broke the monopoly, calling to its help Sir Adams Archibald, whose long, useful and noble life ended but a few short weeks ago. Sir Adams went to London, and the Hon. J. W. Johnstone went with him, and they succeeded in breaking that lease and freeing the coal measures of that province. The last generation of Nova Scotians knew something about monopoly. They wrestled with it. They were staggered by it and broke it. Some of us fear that this generation of Nova Scotians are again plunging into that condition against which their forefathers struggled so vigorously, and from which they were freed by the good laws of Sir Adams Archibald, and Judge Johnstone, and Joseph Howe, and Sir William

Young—able men of whom Nova Scotians are proud, and who were as worthy men as any the North American provinces have ever produced. Those men took care, as the Mining Acts will show, while they offered fair inducements to capitalists and reasonable safety and security to the money invested, to protect, in every way possible, the public interests. They would not allow one person to have too large an area; they would not allow him to lease more than one mile, but afterwards enlarged the area to two miles; they would not allow too long leases, but terminated them all at the end of twenty years, with the right of renewal subject to this provision that the Legislature, if any of the powers given were abused, could step in and cancel or amend the lease. They took care also to keep control of the royalty, which, I admit, was a dangerous power as against the mining people and investors, because I think it was an unfair threat to keep hanging over the heads of people, who put in their money, this right of raising the royalty at any session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But not at the end of the term that the royalty could be raised?

Mr. WELDON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But not during the period of the lease?

Mr. WELDON. The law had passed through three stages. I shall read the statute in a moment which gave them the right to alter the royalty at any year. That was the law in 1892. In the third place there was the right of taxing, which the province held and that, to be sure, was a reserved power, by means of which these people could be kept in check. Again, there was a provision that if the holder of a lease wished to assign his privilege he had to apply for license to do so, had to get the Government's permit, so that these privileges could not be handed over from A to B without the revision of the executive. Again, it was one of the terms in the old lease and another safeguard against abuse that the lease was forfeitable on any one of a large number of conditions. These, then, speaking generally—I will be more specific in a moment—were the rules that Johnson and Ritchie and Young, all lawyers of the last generation, thought it fair in the public interest to throw around the great coal property of Nova Scotia. For they knew that in all the old provinces of British North America they alone had the coal. They knew though they could not foresee all that has happened, that there must hereafter be a greatly increased demand for coal. In making these laws they held the doctrine that coal was a public property, and in granting the land they would not grant the coal, because they held it would be a great power to prevent abuse if the public could have an undoubted control of the coal. Does not the experience of the last year, does not the experience of the last two years, does not the run of events in the states opposite us, in New York, in Maryland, in New Jersey, in Pennsylvania, prove that our fathers were right? Does not the spectacle we see there give us warning? We see these commonwealths being oppressed by coal combines and using every device in their power to break the control of the combine. We see them resorting to all sorts of measures fixing maximum prices here, establishing a tribunal there, compelling coal peddlers to take out licenses in the third state, cancelling leases in the fourth, in a fifth appealing to courts to dissolve combinations with the railway companies, and all with the end of striking a blow at monopolies and keeping them within bounds. Here we have evidences of a people struggling as best they can in the absence of remedies which the wisdom of our forefathers has put in our hands to deal with such dangers. Now for the new laws, one passed in 1892 and two others during the late sitting of the Legislature in this year of grace, 1893. I wish to call the attention of the House for a moment to the charter of the Dominion Coal Company, and I do not know that it differs very greatly from some charters that are occasionally—I will not say smuggled—but carried quickly through our committee. It is a peculiar charter, however, and a very injudicious one. There are one or two features of this charter to which I will call the attention of the House. Clause 2, paragraph (a) of the charter of this company which is called the Dominion Coal Company, takes power to mine, quarry, and work coal and other mines. They have wide powers. In paragraph (b) they take power, for instance, to purchase a railway like the Intercolonial Railway. It says: "to purchase, alter and maintain railways." Paragraph (k) in the same clause gives them power to sell out to another company or to buy from another company. Clause 5 says: "Aliens, whether resident in the province or elsewhere, as well as British subjects, may be directors." This clause which is in conflict with our company's Act, clause 9, says: "The annual meeting of shareholders may be held in such place or places within or without the province as may be decided upon." So the meeting may be held in Boston or in Pittsburg. Clause 13 says: "It shall be lawful for a company to enter into an agreement to purchase, lease or acquire coal, iron or other mines." I call the attention of the House to that section which gives them power to buy and control other mines if they can find owners who are willing to sell. Clause 14 says: "The debentures are payable in Nova Scotia or elsewhere, as may be decided upon." Some clauses are in conflict with our policy in this Parliament as declared by our Acts in reference to this class of companies. The document to which I now ask the attention of the House is the lease. The lease given to this company will stagger those members of the House who have not been reading the Nova Scotia or New Brunswick papers, and have not read the text of that document. I think it will be a genuine surprise to them to find that in Nova Scotia a political leader of the experience and undoubted ability of the leader of the Legislature of that province should have put his name to an agreement of this character. I am reading from "An Act for the further Encouragement of Coal Mining," which validates the lease to the so-called Whitney syndicate. And, to make my statement clear, I think it will be fair as I go along point after point to read the text of the old lease and the text of the new lease on the same subject-matter to show in what respect the safeguards established in the last generation have been abandoned by the public men of Nova Scotia to-day. I indicated the number of checks upon mining leases to guard against monopoly and extortion, one that a lease must not cover more than so much territory, another that the lessee's control shall not last more than twenty years. Another that the royalty shall be under the control of the provinces. Fourth, that the province shall have control of taxation. Fifth, that when an interest is assigned the assignee shall come and get leave from the Executive. Sixth, conditions of forfeiture. Let us take these one after the other and see what changes have lately been made in these respects. As to area, the old law was that one man or one corporation should not have more than one square mile. Subsequently that was enlarged so that one man or corporation could hold two square miles, and in some extraordinary and special cases, five square miles. Under the present law the Dominion Coal Company can have all the coal measures in the county of Cape Breton, a radical departure in policy. It is within the knowledge of all of us that they have practically acquired all the coal mines of value or of any considerable importance in the county of Cape Breton. As to the point of time, the old laws declared that a lease should hold for twenty years with the conditional right of renewal. I would like to read the section in the old law on that point: "To have and to hold the said mines during the full term of twenty years. And if the said lessee shall, six months before the expiration of the term hereby demised, give notice of his intention to renew the said lease for a period of twenty years, then the said lessee shall be entitled to a renewal thereof upon the same terms, conditions and covenants as are contained in these presents or as prescribed by chapter 7, Revised Statutes, or by any Act that may be passed by the Legislature of the province, and in like manner to a second and third renewal of twenty years each." So that the right of renewal was conditional.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you consider that would increase the royalty ?

Mr. WELDON. I will not speak about the royalty. There is a special section dealing with the royalty. They could do almost anything under that, however, in the way of dealing with a new danger. If there was a combine they could provide against it. They could do anything they pleased to keep these people in check, if they thought they were abusing their powers. Now, under the new lease it is not so. I will read the clause in the new lease.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman kindly read the first clause, giving the names of the directors of the new company ?

Mr. WELDON. I think I can remember them. Mr. Henry M. Whitney is one, Henry F. Dimock, Hugh McLennan, F. S. Pearson, W. B. Ross, Sir Donald Smith, W. C. Van Horne, Alfred Winsor and Robert Winsor, are the others.

Mr. DEVLIN. And Mr. McKeen ?

Mr. WELDON. No ; he is the manager. I was speaking before my hon. friend from the county of Ottawa put his question, of the terms in the old lease which said that the lessees should hold for twenty years, with a qualified right of removal. The new lease runs :

To have and to hold the said beds of coal, areas, mines, powers for and during and until the full end and term of ninety-nine years, to commence and be computed from the first day of July, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-two.

It is only fair to those who argue against me, to say that they contend the old lease was for eighty years, because there were three terms of renewal. I think it is clear this provision says it is a twenty-year lease, with the qualified right of renewal, as against ninety-nine years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think you said they had a right to renew.

Mr. WELDON. I said a qualified right of renewal, in the sense that the Legislature can step in and enact any checks they like. On the question of royalty the old lease had this clause :

Provided that the Legislature shall be at liberty to increase, diminish, or otherwise change the royalty.

The new lease puts in a clause that the Legislature cannot alter the royalty for 99 years. The royalty now is 12½ cents, last year it was 7½.

Mr. FRASER. Does the hon. gentleman say it was 10 cents ?

Mr. WELDON. It is a mere matter of detail. I think I told my hon. friend that for some years it had been 7½ cents on run of mine ; last year it was made 10 cents. I will read the section of the Mines Act which fixes the duty at 10 cents, section 117, clause 9 :

Ten cents on every ton of 2,240 pounds of coal.

That is the law of 1892. In the old lease the Government had power to alter the royalty. In the new lease they have no such power. I do not press that as a weak point, had the term of the lease been short. I am with the coalmen on this point. I think they had a right to some fixity of royalty for some stated term, and that it is hardly fair to keep their heads under this impending sword all the time. Others may differ with me, but I am inclined to think that was reasonable. On this question of royalty, I shall refer to a fact, taking particular care to express no opinion of my own in this matter. Mr. McKeen, Mr. McLennan and the rest of the coalmen complain bitterly that Mr. Fielding was guilty of a breach of faith, so much so that they sent petitions up here, as I have learned, asking for the disallowance of this Act which we are asking to have amended, but not on the same grounds. They complain that in Mr. Fielding's Bill of 1892 something was wrong, that it was practically a breach of faith, and they ask to have that Bill disallowed. I moved yesterday for the papers, I have not got them yet, and cannot speak certainly on this phase of the subject. Mr. McKeen and the coalmen say that the real reason for the House amending the law, was Mr. Fielding's breach of faith. I am careful not to say that, but they say it. The reason given by the new syndicate why they have covenanted in this way to take themselves absolutely for 100 years out of the control of the Nova Scotia Legislature, is that Mr. Fielding, was guilty of a breach of faith. That alarmed them. I am only giving the reasons which these gentlemen give to justify these most extraordinary contracts and documents which take corporations absolutely out of the control of the Legislature of Nova Scotia for a hundred years. They say they could not trust the Legislature. They also say that not only was the changing of royalties contrary to what Mr. Fielding's Government said he would do, but the Legislature kept tinkering with the mining laws in such a way as to keep the coalmen perpetually in terror, altering the conditions, and jumping on them, and threatening the forfeiture of their lease. I do not know whether that is true, whether it is a fair attack on the Fielding Administration or not. I have no opinion on this to give, but it is part of my argument to say that that is the reason why Mr. McKeen and these gentlemen have been pressing the Government for twelve months to disallow the Bill up to the day when this new company bought them out, and then they called off their dogs and asked the Government not to disallow this Bill. On the next point in the old lease, I can find no clause that says a word about taxation; therefore, there is, on the part of the province, no abandonment of the right to tax these corporations.

Mr. FLINT. The Premier of Nova Scotia stated in his speech that there can be no other taxation except a royalty, but the power of municipal taxation was left.

Mr. WELDON. My hon. friend did not understand me. I said that in the old lease there was nothing said about taxation; therefore, the common law right of taxation was still left to the Legislature. In the new lease at page 6, clause 4 reads as follows:—

That the royalties and payments hereby reserved shall, and the same are hereby declared to be in lieu of all provincial burdens or taxes already imposed or taxed, or to be hereafter taxed.

My hon. friend from Yarmouth was quite correct in saying that this phrase was cleared up during the course of the debate in the last session of the Legislature, by the interpretation being given that the company has immunity from provincial taxes, but not immunity from county or city taxes, and the credit for that restriction, and I must say it in common fairness, was due to the leader of the Opposition, who took that point and forced the Government to reconsider the matter and go back to Council; and he carried his point and secured this great protection for the county of Cape Breton, and the school sections thereof, that this corporation shall pay such taxes as may be imposed. Let the Opposition have the credit of carrying that very important amendment. I desire now to refer to the assignment of the lease. The old lease runs as follows—I am reading from page 2:—

And the said lessee shall not hereafter, during the term hereby granted, assign, transfer or set over the premises hereby granted, or any part thereof, to any person or persons whomsoever without the license, consent or approbation of Our Sovereign Lady the Queen.

By these provisions, if an assignment took place and any apprehensions were entertained that matters were going wrong and that the coal measures were being grabbed by some agency that meant mischief, there was the right of control, a very valuable right indeed to be held in reserve, and indicating the care with which the instrument was drawn. Look at the new lease, page 6, and hon. members will find clause 5 as follows:—

And the said lessor further covenants and agrees to and with the said lessee, if the said lessee during the pendency of his demise sells, assigns, transfers, hands over or otherwise parts with the premises hereby demised, the said lessor will grant unto the said lessee any necessary license, and will secure the ratification of the Governor in Council thereto.

This provision guarantees that they can make an assignment without it being necessary to go back to the Executive for power to assign. I desire now to contrast the terms of the two documents in regard to the matter of forfeiture. I desire to read from page 3, which contains the most remarkable and dangerous clause in the Bill—I am now referring to the forfeiture clause in the new lease. In the old lease the safeguards were abundant. I will read the whole clause of the old lease as to forfeiture, this being the most important of the whole:

Provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared, and the said lessee, his executors, administrators accept this grant or demise under condition, that in case any fault shall be made by the said lessee in keeping such book or books of account or in delivery of affidavits as aforesaid payment of the said rents or royalties hereby reserved, or in laying before the Commissioner of Public Works and Mines of the said province such account or accounts in writing or in keeping and having forthcoming, as aforesaid, such plan or plans, or if the said lessee, executors shall at any time or times hereafter assign, transfer or set over or otherwise part with the premises hereby granted, or any part or parcel thereof, or with the said term or any part thereof, or this lease, to any person or persons whomsoever, for the term above granted without the license consent and approbation or rectification of our said Sovereign Lady the Queen, her heirs, shall not continue the bona fide and effectual working of the said mines, shall not open or work, or shall not strengthen and secure, or shall not ventilate or drain the mines opened in a skilful, workmanlike and scientific manner as aforesaid, then the present letters patent shall be utterly null and void the contrary thereof in these presents notwithstanding.

That is to say, that under the old lease the lessees might forfeit the lease for breach of a number of conditions. The corresponding clause in the new lease will be found on page 7, and I will read the remarkable words:

Nor shall this instrument, nor any, nor all the rights, powers, or privileges herein granted, be adjudged or become forfeited, or null or void, on any ground other than the non-payment of the royalty or rental as hereinbefore set out, and then only in such manner as hereinbefore stated.

One clause more and I have done with this instrument, and it is clause 9; and I desire to say, on behalf of Mr. Fielding, who is responsible for the lease, that he is a journalist, and not a lawyer, a fact which hon. gentlemen will gather on reading the terms of this clause:

And that any legislation of the province of Nova Scotia now or hereafter to be enacted during the pendency of this lease at variance with the provisions of the said agreement shall not be held to modify or diminish any of the rights, powers or privileges herein granted unto the said lessee, its successors or assigns.

That is to say, that the Legislature of a British province undertakes to tie up succeeding Legislatures for 100 years, and declare that the Legislature shall not, for that period, amend or alter the Acts of 1892-93. Of course the Legislature cannot exercise such power.

Mr. LISTER. Not amend the lease by any Act?

Mr. WELDON. We know they cannot bind future Legislatures in strict law, but what improvidence and incapacity to include such terms in an instrument, and what eagerness on the part of the Boston syndicate to demand such extreme terms. Does it not justify the opinion that the syndicate were able to twist Mr. Fielding like a glove round their finger, and does it not indicate great haste on the part of Mr. Fielding to secure the royalty of 12½ cents instead of the old royalty of 10 cents per ton, so that he forgot everything else. He was in such haste to get his exchequer full that he would not delay placing his name to that document, for there never should have been such terms in the instrument. These, Mr. Speaker, are the franchises of the Dominion Coal Company. The coal barons, to borrow a term which the hon. member for South Oxford is in the habit of using, with this charter and lease and with the Act, to which I have not yet referred, can go back to their entrenchments, can fill the moat with water, can pull up the drawbridge and let down the portcullis and bar the castle door. How can you storm their stronghold? What can you do for the period of 99 years? Cannot they defy you? Have you any way to bring them to reason in case they use their powers oppressively? I have many friends among the members of the Whitney syndicate, men whom I know very well and with whom I have had very many and very friendly discussions, not once or twice, but many times, and we have been able to talk over this matter very freely. Some of them are owners of large coal properties, and have made money. At least one of them is an officer of the new company, and is no doubt paid a large salary, because he is an able and capable man. I am reminded that we have two such friends. I wish them both well and great success. As regards our friend, Mr. McKeen, we all wish him well. I have heard how he took enormous risks in developing his coal property in Cape Breton within the past twelve years, and when his coal property was earning nothing, by sticking to his guns and faithfully prosecuting his enterprise he worked his way through, and I do not begrudge him, nor does any hon. member in this House begrudge him the good fortune that has overtaken him. We can therefore talk freely and in a friendly way with these gentlemen. But they say: You and your friends are needlessly alarmed, you are haunted by a spectre, a bogey. Your apprehensions are childish. They say: We will confine ourselves to Cape Breton, and there will be the coal measures of the counties of Cumberland, Pictou and Inverness to protect you against the oppression of a monopoly. We say these are words of promise. The syndicate make them by word of mouth, but they will not take the responsibility of embodying them in writing, for when the leader of the Opposition in the Nova Scotia Legislature asked the Government to put in the charter a clause covering this point, they scornfully rejected the amendment. They say again: We mean business. I believe they do. They say: We are going to put in money and work these mines in good faith. But why, then, will they not put this undertaking in writing; why do they not restore the old clause which says that the lessees shall bona fide and effectually work these mines or forfeit their lease? For my part, I have no doubt that it is their present intention to work the mines; but why do they not allay apprehension as regards the future? An amendment in that direction was proposed and scornfully voted down in the Legislature. Again they say: We are most respectable men. Who denies it? Then they say there are Canadian directors on the board, such as Sir Donald A. Smith. We know it. Then they say there are Canadian gentlemen of wealth and responsibility such as Mr. Hugh McLennan. Who challenges that fact? We know those are names synonymous of all that is worthy. But we know very well, for they tell us so frankly, that they do not hold half the stock, and therefore cannot control it. If this company should use their franchise unfairly, then the Canadian directors, if living, and we sincerely hope they may live long, will do all that is possible to prevent such action, but undoubtedly if they should find themselves placed between the devil and the deep sea, they will sell their stock and go out of the company. They cannot, of course, control it. They are old men, and while we hope they will live long, they cannot live 99 years, nor the half of that term, and after their day danger may come, and danger is likely to come. They say again, and I referred to that a moment ago: We had to contract ourselves out of the control of the Legislature of Nova Scotia, because we had tried these gentlemen since 1886, and they have broken faith with us, until capital became panicky and until capital was inclined to withdraw from Cape Breton. We who believe we are doing our best to fight this question on behalf of the coal consumers of our province made an answer to that declaration. We prepared a memorandum which was drafted by my colleague from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) and myself, and it was what we considered an excellent business proposal. I should have said that the coal company covenant in Articles III and IV in the early part of the lease to work the mine, to drain the mine, to shove it up, to ventilate it, to allow the inspector to go down, and to show the plans; but in the forfeiture clause, there is no penalty provided for neglect to do these, and the trouble is: how can you get at them if they so neglect. Perhaps, it may be said: You can resort to any action for damages, but let me ask: how can you assess damages? Practically, is that much of a remedy? Practising lawyers know well that an action for damages is almost a useless remedy in such a case as this would be. This forfeiture clause in the old lease extended to the 'non bona fide' working of the mine, and that clause I have read. The proposal which we made to some leading members of the new syndicate; and to which I have referred, was in substance, this : Whenever the Legislature of Nova Scotia by joint Address declares that the Dominion Coal Company has broken its covenants, or unduly enhanced the price of coal to the Canadian consumer, then, this declaration should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, to whom we in this Parliament would give the mandate to hear and try, and if the court found that those people had broken their covenants or unduly enhanced prices, that they should be subject to the penalty, for a serious offence, of forfeiture of the lease, and for a minor offence, of a money fine. What could be fairer than that proposal? It was an offer to leave the syndicate with these powers, to give them that lease, to give them that charter unamended; but to subject them to this reference to the Supreme Court under certain conditions, and we all know that that would have protected them from any frivolous or vexatious attacks. You cannot get the Legislature of a province to jump upon a coal company like this, unless there is a very strong feeling throughout the province that they have acted unfairly, and even then, should the Legislature decide that, our proposal was to put the question of their behaviour before the highest tribunal in the country. As reasonable men they should say yes to this proposal. This would protect them from the caprice of the Legislature. My Speaker, we are also assured that the other provinces cannot be hurt by these Nova Scotia laws. We are also told that we could not suffer in New Brunswick, that they could not suffer in Prince Edward Island, and that the people could not suffer down the St. Lawrence, because the Dominion Parliament had in its tariff an instrument that would protect the consumers. They told us that the Dominion Parliament could knock off the 60 cents duty on soft coal and let it come in from other countries. That is a good answer at the present time. The control of the tariff is an adequate protection against great extortion today. It is an adequate protection unless and until these people could make a reasonably strong combine with the coal interests in two points; in West Virginia and Pennsylvania. These are the two coal districts whose coal comes to tidewater, and which can send coal to the lower provinces. Before Virginia and Pennsylvania coal could come into New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, even with the duty off, coal would go up; to a moderate degree—opinions differ as to how far—but at all events it would not increase to an oppressive degree. But it is possible to perfect a combine between the Nova Scotia interests on the one hand, and the Virginia and Pennsylvania interests on the other; if the coal interests in these districts stand together and fix prices, then we would be helplessly at their mercy, and we would have no remedy until the Welsh or Scotch coal came to Canada. We may be told that coal from Great Britain comes in sometimes. It does come here in small quantities, lumber vessels bring it in ballast, but not a tenth part of what is sufficient to supply the demand. If there was a large demand for this coal from Great Britain of course you would have to pay commercial rates of freight which would be very much higher than the rates on the quantity which comes as ballast, and you would still be at the mercy of the coal combine. Another argument I heard advanced a great many times in this House, in favour of this coal deal is: that business was stagnant in Cape Breton, that something was wanted to brighten it up, and that coal mining there had been a failure. I do not think that is a fair statement. I looked up the Nova Scotia journals, and I can give you the approximate figures for the quantity of coal mined. I find that for the last fifty years the coal production has practically doubled in every succeeding decade. In the last decade some 14,000,000 tons of coal were mined, in the decade before 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 tons, in the decade before that, 4,000,000 tons, and in the decade before that again about 2,000,000 tons. During the decade in which we are now running we would have about 30,000,000 tons of coal mined, at the old rate of growth, and that while not a very rapid growth of the industry, is at all events not a discouraging growth. I may say that in the last ten years the rate of growth has been above the average. The outlook for the country was not discouraging, and when we know that in two or three years we will have fourteen feet of clear water from Montreal to Lake Ontario, the present coal operators, looking to the future, might have themselves undertaken to increase their output, to diminish the expenses, and to supply the demand. What was more reasonable than that they should together make a sort of a mild combine or combination, and build these big barges for their own trade. Why could not they send their own coal up to Lake Ontario and save the 60 cents a ton in transport, and the 20 cents a ton in terminal facilities, and 15 cents a ton in the cost of handling, and put that money in their own pockets under the old law? Why could not they do that under the old twenty-year term lease. We would all be glad to see them make money, and we would also see that we had the old safeguards to keep us from extortion? The answer to what I am saying now is given by my friends here who believe in this coal deal, and who approve of it. They say: That there can be no soft coal combine to control the coal in any appreciable degree in the United States. I do not believe that. There are some 19,000,000 or 20,000,000 people in North America, north of the Potomac, and east of the Alleghanies, including the people of the eastern provinces of Canada, which are largely consumers of coal, and practically the coal measures from which these people must get their supplies are from West Virginia and Pennsylvania and Nova Scotia. It may be said that other states of the Union have enormous coal supplies. So they have. But they are not within range; they are too far off; freights would be too high and coal would be too dear to enable the people on the Atlantic seaboard to take their supplies of coal from these remote areas. We cannot hope to see any relief from Alabama with its enormous output of coal; nor from Arkansas with a small output, nor from Colorado with a larger output than all Nova Scotia, nor from Georgia, nor from the Indian Territories, nor from Kansas, nor from Kentucky, nor from Montana, nor from New Mexico, nor from Tennessee. We can put these states out of mind for the purpose of considering the coal supply of the lower provinces and the New England states. I say that the 20,000,000 people on the Atlantic seaboard north of the Potomac River must get their coal from Nova Scotia and the coal deposits of Pennsylvania and West Virginia; and any man who will look at the mining map of the continent, as I have done, with the assistance of some mining experts, will find the case made strong and clear. I have some very striking figures here, issued by the United States Geological Survey, of the Department of the Interior at Washington, under the authority of Mr. Parker, and they will show you that more than 80 per cent of the output of West Virginia is in five counties which are all compacted together, and it is no great trick to form a combine there. It does not require more than one-eighth of the money that Mr. McLeod, and the gentlemen associated with him required to form the hard coal combine in eastern Pennsylvania, and it is more than likely that within twelve months such a combine will be formed. It is a much greater task to form a soft coal combine in western Pennsylvania, where there is a larger area. But there 80 per cent of the output is to be found in seven counties, which lie side by side. So that a man of brains and money, like Jay Gould, or Mr. McLeod, with ability for organization, would not find it a much harder thing to consummate a combine of the soft coal in western Pennsylvania than it has been to form a combine of the hard coal in eastern Pennsylvania; and when that is accomplished, what will be the position of the poor people of the Maritime provinces and the lower St. Lawrence? That combine, when it is formed, will have power to put up the price of coal to a point where coal from Great Britain will come in to our relief. If they put the price up 50 cents a ton, it will cause a drop in the value of the stocks of every manufacturing concern in the Maritime provinces. If they put it up a dollar a ton, they will shut up half the factories in New Brunswick where coal is used for power. These people need not hold out to us the delusive hope that there will not be an increase in the price. With the enormous powers that the combine will possess, with a commercial instinct, why would they not put up the price, and make what money they could? We have had some experience of that. I am older than I used to be, and I am slower to believe than I used to be. I used to trust the assurance of the amiable men in these combines. I do not trust them now. They held out hopes which I afterwards found to be illusory, and now I am slow to believe their assurances. I wish to call the attention of this Parliament to the experience of our neighbours in the state of New York with some of the gentlemen who made similar representations. They were forming a combine there in hard coal, and what did these combinesters say? They said: Oh, we do not intend to put up the price; we have no idea of doing that. What we propose to do is to cut down the cost of production, lessen the cost of transport, and effect economies in terminal facilities, commissions, etc., and make our money in that way. Now, let me show you what the New York Legislature within one year afterwards said about that combine." These gentlemen were profuse in their promises a year ago, that they would not raise the price to the consumers, but by means of consolidation they would economize the cost of production, transport and sale, and make profit in that way." They have made no such economies. They have made money by the much simpler device of increasing the price. I have also here the report of a committee at Washington which grappled with the same difficulty. That committee, and the whole Congress of the United States, on behalf of the people of the United States, gave their ear to the cry of the oppressed poor of the city of New York, and of other cities, against the cruelty of this combine; and even such papers as the New York "Tribune," and the New York "Herald" joined the complaint. But I am not now reading from the New York "Tribune" nor the New York "Herald," but from the report of Congress which came into my hands the week before last; and what does that report say? I ought to read the whole ten pages of the report; it is only regard for the patience of the House that prevents me. This report to Congress is, from beginning to end, an indictment of the men, who had promised to rely for their profits on economies which they would effect, but who did nothing but turn the screw and put up the price. That is how they made their money. But there are, in the report, one or two striking things having a special bearing upon the present case, that I will read. They point out that where three or four strong institutions are working at the one industry, the power of the one which is strongest—although it may not have the half of the whole property—will control them all. And that is the very thing we have to fear. They say that although six railway companies were mining coal in the anthracite region of the Schuylkill and Lehigh valleys, the strongest of those was the Reading Railroad system, which only carried 40 per cent of the whole anthracite output to tidewater. Nevertheless that company was the controlling factor of fixing the price of coal on the Atlantic seaboard. This is what they say :

By this arrangement the Philadelphia and Reading controls at least 40 per cent of the anthracite coal going to tidewater, and becomes an important and dominating factor in determining not only the output, but the price of the product.

Now, if the combine that carried 40 per cent could dominate all the other people, in the same business, how much more could Mr. Whitney and his colleagues, who control more than 60 per cent of the magnificent coal area of Nova Scotia, regulate the price here, aided by this perfect abandonment of all guards against extortion and cupidity. My hon. friend beside me from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) says you cannot guard against cupidity. I say you must. We have seen enough suffering in these ten years, as the Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) developed so clearly in his committee a few years ago. We have seen enough of the oppression and cruelty of the combines, and so we must profit by what we have seen and not abandon our legislative guards against the cupidity and power of these corporations. I differ from my hon. friend from Halifax. This report goes on to explain how they worked the thing, how they perfected the combine, how they squeezed out the weaker mines. To those mine owners who would not sell out they refused to furnish cars, or if they did afterwards furnish cars, they, who were both miners and carriers and who were bound by the Interstate Commission to treat all alike in freight charges, charged such heavy freight on the carriage of coal as to leave nothing for the miner. As regards the companies in the ring itself, who owned both mines and railroads, the freight charged was a mere matter of book-keeping. If they sold their coal at New York at $4.50 per ton it mattered nothing what proportion they credited to the mines, and what to the railway, as the railway owned the mines. But they took care to credit the railway with the bulk of earnings. What became of the independent people who were outside the combine? They, too; had to sell at $4.50 in New York. They had to carry their coal over the combines' railway, and if the combines charged them freight at $4 per ton that only left these people 50 cents for their coal. They were consequently starved, and squeezed out, and were glad to sell. It is reported here by this committee that this ring actually charged for carrying coal nearly twice as much as they charged for carrying grain and cotton, although the latter is a much higher class of freight. What fairness and reason was there in that? On its face, is not that an oppressive and tyrannical exercise of power? I need not read further. That record is the strongest indictment that can be given against these gentlemen. They come with smooth words in their mouths; but we know how much we ought to trust them. You may say that we have no combine. I do not know. The charge has been made frequently in the papers that the Reading people have formed a combine with Mr. Whitney, and that charge has been steadily denied. At first I thought that was a bogey, a pure guess, founded on no reason, and that the facts were as Mr. McKeen and others had explained them to us. I thought at first that Mr. Whitney had started this scheme against an anticipated rise of price in Pennsylvania. Very likely it was so; but it seems to me that when Mr. Whitney opened negotiations with Mr. Fielding he found the Nova Scotia Premier was a mere child in his hands. Mr. Whitney soon saw that by giving a 12½ cents royalty to Nova Scotia he could get whatever terms he asked for. He was a street car owner—a coal king he might be. He says to himself—thanks to this benevolent young Nova Scotian: I have such powers in Nova Scotia that the coal and railway kings must now reckon with me. I will stand in with Mr. McLeod of the Reading and Mr. Van Horne of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will take the responsibility of saying that I have received within the last two days a confidential telegram, saying that on the 7th, 8th and 9th of last December, Mr. Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. McLeod of the Reading system, and Mr. Whitney, of the Boston Tramway system, were known to be together in Boston. On the 8th December a telegram was sent to Mr. Fielding from Mr. Whitney: "Come on; we want to talk over things with our friends." And shortly after this the combine was perfected. I have no reason for drawing any conclusion, but this coincidence gives rise to the strong suspicion that Messrs. VanHorne and McLeod assisted at the birth of this combine. It is hard, in the face of it, to take those two facts, without having the suspicion that the Reading people were in the background. It may be that our friends here knew nothing about it. "There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy." There are more things going on in the minds of Mr. Whitney and Mr. McLeod and Mr. Van Horne, than even our friends from Halifax and Cape Breton know of. Mr. Speaker, what is their last solace? They say that the Legislature of Nova Scotia can regulate the price. Can they? I have respect for the Legislature of Nova Scotia. In times past, that has been a body of which the people were proud. I say not one word against it to-day. But I cannot shut my eyes to the history of this continent. I know what has gone on in the way of lobbies in the legislature south of the line; and my fear is, if we look to the future that the influence of the lobby, which up to this hour, happily, has been a foreign institution, may hereafter extend to this country and settle in some of our provincial capitals. And then, if it does, the power which it had at Albany, New Orleans, and Harrisburgh, and I think I may say, without recklessness, in Washington, may also assert itself there. If the coal lobby, and the railway lobby, and other lobbies, come to this country and settle in our provincial capitals we may not, in the future—and we must look ahead a hundred years—find that protection in those legislatures, even if they have the powers claimed for them, which we will need. I think I have tired the House a good deal, and before I have done will enliven it by referring to some most interesting facts, which I discovered a day or two ago, on reading extracts from the famous Colton letters. These letters were left by Colton to his wife, and stolen from that lady's desk by some thief, and put into the hands of some Congressmen. These letters were written by a famous millionaire to his agent in Washington. To those members who have not read them, there are some extracts which will be interesting, as to the methods and instruments by which a coal and railway lobby does its work. I will read extracts from those famous Colton letters. Here is one signed by this many millionaire and arch lobbyist at Washington, C. P. Huntington. The Scott referred to is Tom Scott, of the Pennsylvania railroad:

Scott is prepared to pay or promise to pay a large sum of money to pass his bill, but I do not think he can pass it, although I think this coming session of Congress will be composed of the hungriest set of men that ever got together, and that the devil only knows what they will do.

Then it seemed there had been a congressman from California giving them some trouble.

I notice that you say of _____ he is a wild hog; don't let him come back to Washington, but as the House is to be largely Democratic it would be well to beat him with a Democrat. But I would defeat him anyway, and if he gets the nomination put up another Democrat and run against him and in that way elect a Republican. Beat him.

Yours truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

This is Mr. Collis P. Huntington, the famous lobbyist and millionaire. That is the way these gentlemen interest themselves in the politics of their country. In the investigation before a committee of Congress which took place it came out that there were five millions that had been spent by the Union Pacific Railway for which they had no vouchers. They were pressed to say where that money had gone and the answer given was very curious. I quote from volume VII., page 3701, of the report of the Commissioners of the Pacific Railway. This is what they say to the gentlemen quizzing them:

Most of the money ($4,818,355.07) was expended, no doubt, to prevent Congress and the departments from robbing us of our property.

Again I refer to the battle between the Union Pacific and the Pennsylvania people. Page 3704 of the same volume is a letter to Mr. Colton:

All the members in the House from California are doing first-rate except _____, and he is a damned hog anyway, you cannot fix him.

On the next page there is a letter:

Scott is working mostly among the commercial men. He switched Senator _____, of _____ and _____ of _____ this week, but you know they can be switched back with proper arguments when they are wanted.

He says again on page 3707:

With $200,000 I can pass our Bill.

One of the members asked him: Do you mean to say that the members of Congress are purchasable? And he answered, that he would be very sorry to say that. "It would be a strange thing, however, if, out of three or four hundred men there was not more than one that was unworthy." And then follows a remark painful coming from such a man: "Eighteen hundred years ago the best man that ever lived selected twelve men and 16⅔ per cent of them were 'short weight.'" I need not tire the House, but I will give one last quotation. After this man had gone through it all he wrote a letter. It sounds like a chapter from Ecclesiastes written by Solomon after he had sounded the depths of sensuality and self-indulgence. Writing like an old broken wretched roué he pens these last letters in Ecclesiastes. This man's letter sounds like it. It is written from New York:

I returned from Washington last night and I am as near used up as ever I was in my life before. I am spending my last winter at Washington. As I feel, I would not spend another for all the property we all have. * * * It is very distasteful

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

There, Mr. Speaker, is the record of fraud brought to light of one gigantic lobby and our apprehension is that it would be an evil day for this country if, unfortunately, the powers of some of these concerns should fall into the hands of these gentlemen. I say gladly that gentlemen now representing the people are incapable of such rascality, but we should take care that when our children and grandchildren appear upon the stage of life such powers should not exist to corrupt the Legislature. We know that in Washington coal lobbies are the most wealthy, the boldest and most unscrupulous. I have heard American after American familiar with Washington life, say that the coal lobbies were notoriously so. I do not think I need to dwell upon that. Here is Mr. Bryce's book, the work of a warm friend of the United States. I do not know where you will find such a description of the lobby as Professor Bryce gives in his book the American Commonwealth. I do not think it necessary to read all he says. It is a dark picture, relieved only here and there by flashes of lurid, glaring humour. I will read only one passage to the House. He is dealing with a very abnormal condition of things, when the carpet-baggers were in power in the south during the reconstruction period. He says some states are corrupt and some are not. He names those that are corrupt and those that are not.

But the lowest point was reached in some of the southern states shortly after the war when, the negroes having received the suffrage, the white inhabitants were still excluded as rebels, and the executive government was conducted by northern carpet-baggers under the protection of federal troops. In some states the treasury was pillaged; huge state debts were run up; negroes voted farms to themselves; all kinds of robbery and jobbery went on unchecked. South Carolina, for instance, was a perfect Tartarus of corruption, as much below the hades of Illinois or Missouri, as the heaven of ideal purity is above the ordinary earth of Boston and Westminster. In its legislature, there was an old darkey, jet black and with venerable white hair, a Methodist preacher and influential among his brother-statesmen, who kept a stall for legislation, where he dealt in statutes at prices varying from $100 to $400.

Well, Mr. Speaker, should this evil of the lobby come to this country we cannot rely too much upon the strength in days to come of these local legislatures to protect us. And thus I come to my last point, that is that if there is no other protection we must protect ourselves. They can raise the price of coal, so I have argued and so I believe. They have the power to oppress us. There are no local remedies that I can discover. Have we any remedies in our own hands that are really useful and effective? We call this the Dominion of Canada, and "Dominion" surely means control. As the Fathers of Confederation said, they were framing a Union with a stronger central power than that of the republic to the south. The republic had just issued from the throes of civil war, and every student of politics said that the weakness of their system was that there was no strength in the national authority. The fathers of Confederation said they were going to give stronger control to the central authority in this new union in the north. I can find that in the debates on Confederation. I have here one citation and I think I can show the same thing was reiterated time after time. The point was taken clearly by Sir George Cartier in the controversy between him and the leader of the French-speaking Liberals. And the point was made, as I remember well hearing these debates as a boy. The lawyers in our province one after another told us that the federal authority was to be made stronger than it was in the United States. The source of strength is in this article of the Constitution which I will ask the liberty to read. Section 56 of the British North America Act says:

Where the Lieutenant-Governor assents to a bill in the Queen's name, he shall by the first convenient opportunity, send an authentic copy of the Act to the Governor-General, and if the Governor-General in Council, in one year after receipt thereof, thinks fit to disallow the Act, such disallowance being signified by the Lieutenant-Governor, by speech or message to the Legislature, shall annul the Act from and after the day of such signification.

That section was not put there for fun. There is a section which gives this federal executive of Canada control and supervision over all the laws of all the provinces of Canada. I grant you it is a dangerous power, it is a power that must be carefully and sparingly used. Different lawyers in time past have had different theories as to what was the lawful and proper use of this power. I suppose it is not wrong for a young lawyer to give his opinion, if only because it is his duty, and has been for years, to study this class of questions as well as he could, and we have come to the conclusion that it is not wise to disallow an Act because it is ultra vires. The Attorney-General of Ontario says, for instance, an Act is intra vires; the Minister of Justice of the Dominion declares that it is ultra vires. What right has one or the other to decide that controversy to which they are parties? It is the practice in this country now to refer such questions to the courts, unless the Minister of Justice thinks the Bill has been passed by inadvertence, so to speak, and then he will call the attention of the Attorney-General of the province thereto, and if the Attorney-General adheres to his position and insists upon it, the practice in our day, and I think it a sound practice, is to refer the question to the courts. But how if the province has acted contrary to its own interests? Then it must be allowed to go wrong; the constitution guarantees its right to go wrong, as Mr. Blake has happily said. It would be an act of impertinence for us to interfere and disallow the Act. She has the liberty of error, as Mr. Blake said, she is the judge, and we are not the court of appeal. But in the third case where a province has gone well within her powers, where she has passed laws which oppress and hurt other provinces, then we have a right to step in. If we can make out a strong case to show that the province of Nova Scotia has given power to people to hurt, and cripple, or injure other provinces, or the whole Dominion, then I say that not only may we exercise this power, but we must do so: Otherwise we are no Dominion, we are just a loose group of provinces. There must be a sovereign control, there must be a central control, and if it is not exercised in that case, in Heaven's name, when can it be exercised? There is, under section 56, the power of which we have heard so often, and if it is not to be exercised in the case of ultra vires, if it is not to be exercised where we have a province legislating to its own hurt, then what case is left this Parliament to interfere? It ought to be exercised where a province, in pursuing its undoubted powers, in dealing with her own property, has hurt neighbouring provinces. Now, I think the whole question is: Can we make a case to show that Nova Scotia, under the laws of this year and last year, has hurt us in New Brunswick, or in the other provinces? Now, coal differs from all other public properties. It is not like Crown lands or forests. Consider the facts of geography. We need not fill our heads with cobwebs. We know that in those four provinces there is only one province that has coal. Coal is local, lumber is everywhere. Coal is vital to your mills, to your hearths, to your forges, to your factories. The poor in all cities want coal. It is indispensable to a degree that nothing else in this country is indispensable. Upon those two facts, that coal is local, and yet indispensable, I base my argument that it differs from everything else in this country. It is local and vital to every industry and many a family in all the provinces. Therefore, I say you cannot answer me by bringing up the case of Crown lands or Crown timber. The cases are not parallel. So I say that if we can make out a case that New Brunswick is hurt, New Brunswick has a right to come here and ask this great Dominion Parliament to control a little province who may endeavour to fill her coffers with revenues wrung out of the people of the sister province. I live in Nova Scotia. I am delighted to find that Mr. Fielding is filling his treasury, and, of course, as a good citizen, we are all glad to see the exchequer full. I do not desire to utter one word that will give breath and spirit of hostility to the province in which I live, and where I earn my living. Heaven forbid that I should do so. But as a public man I speak here for another province, one of whose counties I represent. It is my duty to do so. I am speaking for those around me, men more thoughtful and more able than I am, who are profoundly alarmed at this transaction. I am not speaking now from a party point of view. Has not this country four times—in 1878, 1882, 1887 and in 1891—pronounced in favour of a policy that gives protection and a stimulus to manufacturing industries? What in the world ever induced the lower provinces to take up with a protective policy? Only one consideration. We knew that in these coal measures of Nova Scotia there was buried the sunlight, as Dr. Dawson said, of pre-historic summers, a tremendous power, that men would bring up to the surface and set free, to drive the wheels of our factories. If we had had no coal, how unwise it would have been for us in the lower provinces to advocate a National Policy.

And now, what right, in common fairness to the neighbouring province, has Nova Scotia to strike down, as she has power to do, those interests in the neighbouring province, by putting it in the power of a combine to raise heavily the price of coal? This country has paid $50,000,000 to build the Intercolonial Railway, and I congratulate the Minister of Railways in the success which has accompanied his policy of economy and retrenchment in the management of that road. Now, if this combine is able to put up the price of coal $1 a ton, it means a loss of $200,000 to the country on this railway, which uses 200,000 tons of coal a year. I think the great mass of people who burn coal—those who burn wood have protection, but many in the cities cannot get wood except at inordinately high prices—have a right to protection. I am proud here in this august chamber to plead for the poor. I am proud to remember here that many of us are children of men who supported their families with the labour of their own hands. Many of us know now, although we did not know then, the pathetic economies of our parents to give their children better chances in life than they ever had. We are a poor recreant crew indeed if our hearts do not go with the classes from which we sprung. The few who are rich can always take care of themselves. I have no feeling of envy to those who, by their strength of will, by their activity and intelligence, can make great fortunes; but I have a bitter feeling of hostility to those who corrupt the electorate and legislatures to get an undue power, an opportunity to plunder the great mass of the people. It is because I am apprehensive that something like that will happen hereafter, that I now speak as I do. It is because I feel that we may fall into the hands of those who will do just exactly as we have seen great combines do in other places. I turn now to a legal phase of the question. I have under my hand several authorities to show that the power of disallowance must be exercised, when wrong or hurt is done to the general welfare. Sir John A. Macdonald, in his report in 1868, which has been quoted by Mr. Blake and by Sir John Thompson, in the 4th paragraph thereof, in deciding whether any Acts of a provincial legislature should be disallowed, said:

The Government must consider whether it affects the interests of the whole Dominion.

In paragraph 5 he says:

The power of disallowance should be exercised with great caution, and only in cases where the general interests of the Dominion imperatively demand.

In paragraph 8 he speaks of this power being exercised, where measures are prejudicial to the general interests of the Dominion. The argument was pressed upon their lordships, the Judicial Committee, that they should do in England what Chief Justice Marshall did in the Supreme Court of the United States—that they themselves should protect the federal authority. They cited a judgment of that famous jurist in the case of McCulloch against the Bank of Maryland. It was proved how he protected the federal authority. That relief given by the judicial authority in Washington must in Canada be given by the interposition of the federal executive. That is the sum and substance of my argument on that point. The case I am quoting is the Bank of Toronto vs. Lambe. Here is the last sentence. Speaking about the Dominion Constitution, their lordships said:

At the same time it provides for the federated provinces, a carefully balanced constitution under which no one of the parts can pass laws for itself except under the control of the whole acting through the Governor-General.

If the Prime Minister were not here I would say that I have kept the clearest opinion, although entirely in the line of the opinions I have quoted, to the last. The most valuable statement of the law is contained in two reports made by Sir John Thompson as Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice laid down this proportion that "in deciding whether any Acts of a Provincial Legislature be disallowed, the Government must consider whether it effects the interest of the whole Dominion or not," intimating that where an Act could not be disallowed on the ground that it was ultra vires, it could be disallowed on the ground that it affected injuriously the general policy of the Government. Again, the Minister of Justice, when dealing with a Manitoba statute declared "the power of disallowance should be exercised with great caution, and only in cases where the law or the general interests of the Dominion imperatively demanded it," as "being prejudicial to the general interest of the Dominion." I think in those two sentences and the citations I have made from the earlier reports, the House will find the sum and substance of my legal argument in that regard. The case of Manitoba was not unlike this case. There was no doubt as to the power of Manitoba to do what she liked with her land and money. She had taken them to build her railways, which she had power to do under the Constitution. The British North America Act, section 92, clause 10, paragraph A, undoubtedly gave her the power, but the Minister of Justice decided that, although she had this power, it was contrary to the policy of the Dominion to let her build that railway, running in that direction, and therefore the Provincial Act was disallowed. Take another case, that of a province which had undoubtedly the right to pass laws regarding its public credit and which passed such a law, but in the opinion of the Governor-General and his advisers it was harmful to the general credit of Canada. It was contended in regard to that provincial statute that the Dominion as a whole could not allow a province to repudiate any part of its debt, because it would smirch the reputation of the country, and as the Dominion has $200,000,000 of money borrowed in London, we could not afford to have any part of our people repudiating their debts. Although the Act passed was wholly within the competency of the Legislature, it being against the public credit, the Federal authorities asked that it be amended, and if that had not been done they were prepared to insist on its disallowance. In conclusion it will be asked, what suggestion have you to offer? Admitting that this province has the power to pass such legislation as may be the means of oppressing the people and crippling and even destroying their industries, we ask the Federal authorities for protection and for relief. What a singular fact it is in the history of our province that at the very hour and the very year in which the people are fighting in Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and elsewhere, combines in coal and railways that are grinding the face of the poor and oppressing the common people, the British people in the north, blind and deaf to what is going on so near to them, are abandoning the old guarantee. Here is a new danger looming up in enormous proportions, and yet our people are blind and deaf, and are willing to abandon the old safeguard that the wisdom and foresight of their fathers gave them in this regard. It is no use to say that if these concessions are abused we will take them away. I have heard that argument used, I have heard it mentioned in the corridors of this House—that after we have given the company those vast franchises, we will take them away if they abuse their powers. But they will use their powers, and they are paying money for the right to use them. It is useless to talk of the company abusing its powers if they are simply doing what they have bought power to do. This will be more clearly the case after discussions in the Legislature in the press and in Parliament, during which it was pointed out that the company had those powers; they would be even the more entitled to claim that they possess those powers if it had been openly and notoriously stated thus and so, and it would be impossible ten years hence to say: those are their rights, but instead of using them, they are abusing them. It was pointed out in the newspapers and in our Provincial Legislature that the powers were capable of being used in the way I have indicated. The company will be able to say: We have paid our money for that power, and it would be a breach of faith to take away our rights. I do not know how you could ask English people hereafter to tear up the charter. The most objectionable law remains yet to be pointed out. By the Act of 1892, Mr. Fielding took more advanced ground, and took power by Order in Council to lease all coal lands in Nova Scotia, if the owners were willing to sell, to one person, if it were thought proper, and for 1,000 years, if such was thought proper, at a royalty of 10 cents per ton, the purchaser having perfect immunity from taxation. I refer to section 156 of the Mining Act of 1892, under which power is taken to throw all the outstanding coal measures of Inverness, Pictou and Cumberland into the hands of the Whitney syndicate, if thought proper, for a royalty of 10 cents per ton and for a period of 1,000 years. It is not fair to answer: You should not presume that they will abuse their powers. I am driven to the conclusion by current events that they will abuse their powers. Word comes that another combination is seeking some portion of these coal lands, and there is a public alarm as to what the terms of the other agreement and settlement are. So there is no hope and no comfort to be drawn from these considerations. The agreement with the Whitney syndicate will last for 100 years. We who are here in this House to-night playing our little parts on the stage of public life will have passed away, and as Cardinal Wolsey said, we shall be forgotten and sleep in dull cold marble, and no more mention will be made of us and another generation will come. The youngest child born to any member of this House who lies at its mother's breast to-night will grow up and grow old and die, and still that company will enjoy its powers, and we shall have no legal right to break its charter. What right have we to take away our children's inheritance and birthright? What right has this generation to reach out its dead hand through the 20th century? In common fairness, what right have we? And if we are to deal with this matter, and if we are to have an amendment to section 156 of this law of 1892, it must be before the 4th of August next, because the Bill was received by the Secretary of State on the 4th August last. If no amendment is made it will be perfectly within the right of Mr. Fielding, by Order in Council, to let the Whitney Syndicate or any other have these areas of coal for as long a time as he likes, with entire immunity from taxation. Such an arrangement never comes again before the Government for revision. You cannot get at them for 100 years, or for as long as they choose to give this power to this other syndicate. This is our last chance, and, therefore, if I never make another speech in this House, I avail myself of the opportunity to say on this question, that I, at least, who was in Halifax when this bargain was made, who have given the best study I could to it, and spent weeks in considering it, that I believe it to be—and I wish to see my words go to the country—a measure capable of great mischief and likely, in the time to come, to do great mischief to the Canadian people.

Mr. KENNY. Mr. Speaker, before this question is taken up by the legal members of the House—because I recognize that it is a matter with which the lawyers can deal more ably than the lay members—I wish, as a simple business man, to say a few words on the matter now under the consideration of the House. I always listen with the very greatest attention and the greatest possible respect to every word that falls from my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon). I recognize, as, in fact, all members of this House recognize, his singleness of purpose, and the strong sense of duty which actuates him in all his conduct in this Parliament. He has referred to the advantage of living in the city of Halifax, and I can say that numerous as are the advantages of residence in that favoured city, one of them is the fact that amongst its residents is my friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), and, as a representative of that community, I think it is only due to him that I should pay to him this tribute of my respect. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this question is largely a legal one, and it would be a very great act of indiscretion, it would be indeed, an impropriety for me, to attempt to deal with that aspect of the case. I must leave that to hon. gentlemen learned in the law. I have the greatest possible respect for the lawyers. I know very well that we could not get on in this House without them. I know that, individually, if we are in trouble and in difficulty, we appeal to them, and we always find them sympathetic and we always find them ready to share our last dollar with us. My hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), in his opening remarks, told us that in viewing this coal question from an Imperial standpoint, he would not make any lengthy reference to that aspect of the case in this House, but that he and other gentlemen had considered it their duty to lay their views in that respect before the representative of Her Majesty in this country. I share with these gentlemen the earnest desire which we, as Canadians all feel—for we are proud to belong to the British Empire—that nothing should be done in Canada that would, in the slightest degree, injure Imperial interests. From the first I never felt anxious in that regard, for it is my belief that if Mr. Whitney and his associates went to Wales to-morrow and had the money, and could make satisfactory arrangements with the great coal owners, it would be possible for them to acquire every mine in Wales and Great Britain. Therefore, if that is a possibility, as I believe it to be, I think we may have no anxiety as to Imperial interests in this matter. My hon. friend says that, in the interests of the other provinces of the Dominion, we should interfere with this recent coal Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia, but my hon. friend himself admits that he must make out a very strong case before this Government would be warranted in interfering in provincial matters. Let me briefly point out to the House what I consider to be the condition of the coal property of the province of Nova Scotia. When Nova Scotia joined with the other provinces to help to form this great and grand Dominion of ours, certain assets of that province were transferred to the Dominion of Canada, and certain assets were retained by the province itself for provincial purposes, and amongst these assets were the coal mines. Therefore, I contend that the coal fields are the property of the province of Nova Scotia, that the Legislature of Nova Scotia has a perfect right to deal with them as it may see fit, and that in that matter the Government of the Dominion has no right to interfere. Mr. Speaker, the Act of the province of Nova Scotia may have been a very bad piece of provincial legislation. It may result unfavourably to the interests of the province, but that is a matter for the province to deal with, and that is a matter for which the present Government of that province will be held to account when it next appeals to the people. As a matter of fact, without saying one word in favour of that legislation, I cannot ignore the fact that both branches of the Legislature of Nova Scotia—the lower House by a very large majority and the upper House without a division—approved of this legislation. The Lieutenant-Governor of the province has also given his assent to it, and now my worthy and esteemed friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) says: "Oh, there is a possibility, even a strong probability, of this legislation becoming injurious to the neighbouring province of New Brunswick, and, therefore, the Federal Government should interfere in this domestic matter in Nova Scotia. My hon. friend has given this matter very careful consideration, and I am sure that, having heard so much of this question in this House and out of it, hon. members who take an interest in all that appertains to the welfare of the different provinces, will be glad to have had the explanation of his views. I candidly admit that I have not had the opportunity nor the time to read all these long legal documents to which my friend referred, and if I had had, possibly I would not have understood them. I have no doubt, at all events, that I would not be able to appreciate them as a lawyer would; but all the same I am not in a dazed condition on the question, to use my friend's phraseology. I admit that there are possibilities of this coal legislation acting injuriously and unfavourably to the province of Nova Scotia, and if we were to conjure up all possible evils that might happen we might spend a long time in proving to our satisfaction, that it must undoubtedly and inevitably result injuriously to the province. My hon. friend has referred to the year 1878, when a policy was inaugurated in this country which I had always supposed aimed at the greatest possible development of our industrial and natural resources. I think that the acquisition of something like $7,500,000 of capital, which is to be used in the development of the coal mines of one portion of this Dominion, will carry out the policy and can hardly result injuriously to adjoining provinces. My hon. friend imagines that the people who have invested this large sum of money may invest other large sums in other coal properties in the province of Nova Scotia. Well, Sir, I read to-day in one of the Toronto papers that it is rumoured that another company has been formed—call it what you like, a combine or an association—for the purpose of acquiring other coal properties in Nova Scotia, and we know very well that in these large investments of capital, in its own defence capital is frequently driven to make further investments. But we must not imagine that it will necessarily follow that all these arrangements are going to result injuriously to the people of Nova Scotia, or the people of the adjoining province of New Brunswick. As regards the leases and the forfeiture clauses, I would not attempt, as I have said, to discuss them merely from the bold legal point of view. I am disposed to a great extent to view them from the commercial aspect, and when I find men investing so large a sum of money as $7,500,000, bargaining to pay to the province of Nova Scotia the sum of $125,000 a year as royalty, and binding themselves also to pay 6 per cent interest on $3,000,000 and 8 per cent interest on another $3,000,000, I do not think the owners of that property, who have to pay the interest on their bonds, are likely to keep the property idle. My hon. friend's apprehension is that they will unduly increase the price of coal, and I think that is really his only apprehension. My hon. friend referred to the cupidity and extortion which are possible under this arrangement, and he finds especial fault that the old form of lease which existed in the province of Nova Scotia has been abandoned, and that the province has given this new company a lease for 99 years. Now, my hon. friend knows full well that it would not be possible for us to legislate as to the price of coal for 99 years. Why, to-day we are bothered with the question of the price of coal in England and the price in the United States with bi-metallism and the appreciation of gold and the depreciation of silver, and these questions must be considered in our legislation. I therefore think that we must look at all these matters as commercial men look at any venture into which they embark. There is a certain amount of faith necessary, and we must assume that where capital is invested to the extent that it is in this instance it will be employed in the development of the enterprise. My hon. friend has himself pointed out that by improved methods, greater business ability, economy of transportation, and so forth, a large profit will inure to the owners of this enterprise without at all increasing the price of coal. I infer from his argument that without advancing the price of coal one cent a ton, a large profit will accrue to them from the changed methods of conducting their business. That argument alone, I think, would have warranted the enterprise. My hon. friend has mentioned in the course of his speech that the Government of the province of Nova Scotia, by the manner in which it annoyed and irritated the coal owners of that province, induced this coal combine to demand longer leases. Well, that may be; but my hon. friend must also remember that two-thirds of the capital of the company comes from a foreign country, where the people are not in the habit of dealing with short leases, where no combination of men will invest their money in coal property without acquiring the fee-simple; and I do not believe it would be possible to obtain a large amount of money in the United States for investment in coal enterprises in Canada on short leases. The answer of American capitalists would be that the money could not be obtained on any such terms.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman excuse me asking him a question? If I understood the hon. gentleman who brought this matter up, the leases in existence were for 80 years, and the present lease is for 99 years, so that the extension is only for 19 years. Is that correct?

Mr. WELDON. When the hon. gentleman looks at the lease he will see that it answers that question. It is but a 20-year lease, and the right of renewal is by no means absolute. At the end of the 20 years the Legislature may step in and make whatever alterations in the terms it likes.

Mr. KENNY As I said before, this may be a bad piece of provincial legislation. It may have been unwise for Mr. Fielding to advise the Legislature which he leads to make this arrangement. I do not want to go into the merits of the question; but we must remember that under any circumstances these leases will lapse if $125,000 is not paid into the treasury of Nova Scotia every year, and that under the old lease, if I understand them aright, the only financial penalty imposed upon those who did not work the mines was that they had to pay $30 a year on every square mile, and they might lose their lease. But, as a matter of fact, I think myself the practice in Nova Scotia has been that the leases, under those circumstances, were not forfeited. The alarm of my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) then is principally as regards the price of coal, and he has referred to the fact that the leases might be forfeited under the old leases, while it is possible that could not be done under the new leases. And he also mentioned that this company has on its board of direction, four Canadians. I think it is a matter of notoriety that at least one-third of the capital of the company is held by Canadians, and he says truly, that while it is in the hands to-day of gentlemen whom we respect and regard very highly, and in whom we all have every confidence, it is quite possible that that stock will change hands. In fact, it is a moral certainty that it will change hands. It is quite as likely that the control of the company will pass into Canadian hands as go anywhere else. My friend showed very poetically what might happen to our children's children as regards the acquisition of this property. In all human probability our children's children, as Canadians, will very likely control and own the whole property. I have no intention to attempt arguing the legal aspect of this case. I only, as a representative of Nova Scotia in this Legislature, wish to express the opinion—and I do so in all deference to my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon)—that this is a matter with which we have nothing to do here. It is a matter which pertains solely to the province of Nova Scotia, and on which the Legislature of that province has already emphatically spoken.

Mr. McKAY. This question has been so exhaustively and ably discussed by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that anything I can say will probably have very little effect one way or the other. Nevertheless, this matter has been spoken of as one affecting the Maritime provinces and the province of Quebec almost entirely. I look beyond that, and I consider that it is, if not a national question, certainly one, the importance of which extends beyond these two provinces to Ontario. Although these gentlemen may raise the price of soft coal in the Maritime provinces and Quebec, these provinces have their relief, because, as has been explained by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), when the price reaches beyond a certain limit, they can import British coal. From this relief, however, the province of Ontario is entirely debarred. We are entirely at the mercy of the miners and coal companies of western Pennsylvania and Virginia, and cannot get our coal from any other source. We have felt in our province how seriously the combine in anthracite coal affected the price. We saw how clever manipulators, by forming a combine, raised the price of coal, and although that combine is now apparently burst, still I notice it has strength enough left to decide that the prices will remain as they are. We have seen how possible it was for these men: McLeod of the Reading Coal Company—an apparently small concern at first, but which gradually extended and embraced all the people interested in coal—succeeded in controlling the market. And it is quite possible that a combine may be organized in soft coal. It is possible for the soft coal mine owners and the railways interested in the carriage of that coal, to form a combine such as was formed in hard coal. Rumours have been floating about for the past two or three weeks that such a combine is in contemplation between the West Virginia and the Pennsylvania coal mine owners, and experience has shown that there is nothing in the United States laws to prevent such a combination from being formed. The gigantic combination of the Standard Oil Company is an illustration of the facility of one syndicate to obtain control of large areas and rule the market, for the company gathered together interests much more widely diffused than the soft coal interests. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) thinks that relief could be got by this Government knocking off the duty, but we found that that mode did not answer in the case of hard coal. This Government knocked off the duty, and their action had no material effect on the price. It did not lower the price one iota, and if it had any effect it must have been to put 60 cents a ton into the pockets of railway companies or dealers. I believe it is the duty of the Government to do everything in its power to prevent the coal combine being formed. It is possible that Nova Scotia has the right to deal with its coal fields just as Ontario has the right to deal with its timber and mineral wealth; but if there be any means by which this Government may protect the public it would be advisable for the Government to use those means. I am speaking more now as an Ontario man, representing a province which this matter may in the future seriously affect, and I hope that what has been said by the hon. gentlemen who spoke so magnificently on this question will have the effect of inducing our Government to take some action.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I must endorse all that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has said, not only as to the zeal, but as to the perfect sincerity of my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) in bringing this subject to the notice of the House, and I do so the more heartily because what the hon. gentleman has said here he has urged in other places with equal force and earnestness. I am not able to agree with the hon. gentleman, although I am prepared to admit that in some respects he has made out a strong case against the measure which he complains of. The hon. gentleman started with the admission, to which, however, he did not give sufficient force in the subsequent argument, that the property which is dealt with under the statute about which he makes complaint, is the property of the province of Nova Scotia. Now, there can be no doubt upon that subject, and I wish to read the section of the British North America Act which makes it the property of the province, for the purpose of showing, that the hon. gentleman, while admitting the fact, has not given full credit for the force of that fact. At the time of the union of the provinces in 1867, the value and position of these coal lands and all this mining property was as well understood. I suppose, in all the British North American provinces as it is to-day. It related to a matter of familiar history to every child in Nova Scotia. The minerals of the province, the coal deposits of the province, as the hon. gentleman has stated, were granted to the creditors of the Duke of York. For the purpose of realizing from these deposits, they formed an organization known as the General Mining Association, and not a pound of coal could be raised in the province without the consent of that association, as owners in fee simple of these mineral beds. I think I am correct in saying "in fee simple"; at any rate, it was practically that. The terms upon which the province long ago, about forty years ago, obtained re-lease of the rights of the General Mining Association were, at the time of the union of the provinces, perfectly well known. Among other rights, the association obtained the right to keep the properties they had discovered and opened and worked, and they re-leased to the province of Nova Scotia, to be part of the public domain, all rights to the other coal areas. In 1867 one of the problems which arose for the consideration of those who were promoting the scheme of union, was the disposition of that valuable property. I suppose all what the hon. member has urged upon the House to-night, as to the interests of every province of Canada, present and future, in the supply of coal, must have been foreseen. There must certainly have been present to the minds of those who framed the scheme of union, the future interest—using the word interest in its widest sense—which every province of the coming Dominion would have in the development of these mines and in the production of coal at a rate which would make manufactories numerous throughout the country, and cause the various industries dependent on steam to be developed without an excessive burden arising from an increase in the price of coal. With full view, as we must presume, of all the interests concerned, it was deliberately laid down, not that these coal deposits, of such special value as the hon. gentleman has stated, of such great importance to the future welfare of the united provinces, should be the property of the Dominion of Canada, that they should be given to the province. The provision of the British North America Act, section 109, is as follows:—

All lands, mines, minerals and royalties belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the union and all sums then due and payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof and to any interests other than that of the province in the same.

Now, while the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) admitted this, he insisted that, although that property belongs to Nova Scotia, she should not be permitted to do with it what she pleases, but, in parting with it, the terms of her bargain must be revised by all the other provinces of Canada. I must say, while I admit the force of the case the hon. gentleman has made against the providence of the bargain which is embodied in the Acts of Nova Scotia, I am not prepared to admit for my province, that her property is her's only to sell on terms which the other provinces of Canada approve. Now, tion, and not a pound of coal could be raised in the province without the consent of that association, as owners in fee simple of these mineral beds. I think I am correct in saying "in fee simple"; at any rate, it was practically that. The terms upon which the province long ago, about forty years ago, obtained re-lease of the rights of the General Mining Association were, at the time of the union of the provinces, perfectly well known. Among other rights, the association obtained the right to keep the properties they had discovered and opened and worked, and they re-leased to the province of Nova Scotia, to be part of the public domain, all rights to the other coal areas. In 1867 one of the problems which arose for the consideration of those who were promoting the scheme of union, was the disposition of that valuable property. I suppose all what the hon. member has urged upon the House to-night, as to the interests of every province of Canada, present and future, in the supply of coal, must have been foreseen. There must certainly have been present to the minds of those who framed the scheme of union, the future interest—using the word interest in its widest sense—which every province of the coming Dominion would have in the development of these mines and in the production of coal at a rate which would make manufactories numerous throughout the country, and cause the various industries dependent on steam to be developed without an excessive burden arising from an increase in the price of coal. With full view, as we must presume, of all the interests concerned, it was deliberately laid down, not that these coal deposits, of such special value as the hon. gentleman has stated, of such great importance to the future welfare of the united provinces, should be the property of the Dominion of Canada, that they should be given to the province. The provision of the British North America Act, section 109, is as follows:—

All lands, mines, minerals and royalties belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the union and all sums then due and payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof and to any interests other than that of the province in the same.

Now, while the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) admitted this, he insisted that, although that property belongs to Nova Scotia, she should not be permitted to do with it what she pleases, but, in parting with it, the terms of her bargain must be revised by all the other provinces of Canada. I must say, while I admit the force of the case the hon. gentleman has made against the providence of the bargain which is embodied in the Acts of Nova Scotia, I am not prepared to admit for my province, that her property is her's only to sell on terms which the other provinces of Canada approve. Now,

Sir, we have a perfect right, the hon. gentleman contends, to revise every statute of the province relating to mines and minerals, lest a bargain be made which will tend to increase the price of coal. The other provinces, then, have the right to insist that the coal lands shall be sold on terms which suit the other provinces, in order that the price of coal may not be enhanced to those provinces. Notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman claims that coal is a peculiar commodity, he must logically claim the right to revise the bargains which the province of Ontario makes with regard to her timber limits, and those which every province makes with regard to public lands. The hon. gentleman's contention is, that coal is an article of such prime necessity that the coal areas ought to be controlled by some sovereign authority. If so, why were not the coal lands made the property of the sovereign authority? Surely that point must have been quite as well understood in 1867 as we understand it to-night, and if the province of Nova Scotia was fortunate enough to acquire mineral properties of peculiar value, we are not, therefore, to refuse her the use of the assets which the framers of the Constitution gave her twenty-six years ago. Nova Scotia was peculiarly unfortunate if the assets allowed to her in order that she might carry on the public services which were placed under her control, and for the management of which she was to be responsible, such a species of property, that she must be controlled by the other provinces every time she wished to bring it into the market. Now, my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) has presented such a case with regard to the providence of the bargain as might properly be urged if the Act which he seeks to have disallowed were a Bill before this House and upon which we had to vote. I must confess that the argument he made against the Act would incline me very strongly to vote against it, if it were a Bill before this House: at any rate, would urge me to vote against it, until I heard the points answered which the hon. gentleman made as against the providence of the bargain. But he is not asking us to refuse to pass a Bill before us for disposing of a valuable piece of property, but to disallow a statute which one of the provinces has made for the disposal of its own property. Now, it seems to me that in presenting his argument upon that subject, admitting the force of the logic and the wealth of eloquence with which he illustrated the argument, he has, after all, simply put this case before the House, and I shall ask the House to consider whether he has done anything more—that the bargain which he seeks to have disallowed here is one which contains great possibilities of good and great possibilities of evil, both for the province and for the rest of Canada. What are the possibilities of good? The hon. gentleman, with perfect candor, has admitted them. He admits that coal is a valuable asset of the province, and he admits that the Provincial Government has parted with the property under terms which, will greatly aid the provincial treasury. He admits, further, that the bargain which he condemns will probably increase coal development by diminishing the cost of its production; that it will economize the management of this industry, now carried on by several distinct companies; that it will apply improved methods of shipment, that it will reduce the charges of mining as well as the charges of management; and that it will in every way lessen the cost of output in order that coal may reach the market at a much lower price than it does now. Surely these are great advantages; they are great advantages to the Provincial Government and to the people of the province, not only as affording increased markets, but as stimulating a productive industry in which great numbers of people in that province find employment, and as putting it in the power of the new company to sell its coal at a lower price than companies now operating can sell it for. The hon. gentleman has admitted, therefore, a great deal when he has admitted the possibilities for good which this legislation contains. He has brought before us in very startling terms the possibilities for evil which it contains. But if it is simply, as I have supposed it to be, a case presented to the House for disallowance of a statute which is clearly within the powers of the province to pass a statute which relates to the property of the province, and not to a dollar's worth of property of any other province; if it is a case simply of a bargain made within the provincial powers by a province for its own benefit, containing great possibilities of good as well as possibilities for evil, I submit he has presented a case in which the Provincial Legislature ought not to be controlled by the power of disallowance. Surely, if the matter is within provincial power, if it may be a very beneficial scheme for the people of this province, I may ask this House, who, in the nature of things, and who, according to the spirit of the Constitution, is the best judge to decide upon the question of the fitness of that legislation? The people of Nova Scotia have selected a set of gentlemen to conduct the affairs of that province, the most important of which are affairs connected with this very provincial property; the people selected a set of gentlemen to deal with this property to dispose of it in this way, selected a body of gentlemen in whom some of us have not confidence; but they selected them by an overwhelming majority, and we may fairly be called on to admit from every indication, whether from the popular vote or the vote of each branch of the Legislature, that the men who passed this Act are the constitutional representatives of that province. Now, it seems to me that the argument is conclusive against this Government interfering, for the hon. gentleman has not presented any different case from that which I have stated, namely, a case of legislation intra vires, and of legislation which may be good, and still has possibilities of evil in it. Although I think one might stop there, I cannot refrain from going into the allusions which the hon. gentleman has made as to the possibilities of evil in this bargain. While I repeat that the bargain is one which does not meet with my approval as a citizen of that province—as I am proud to say I am—I think it is one that binds me, when it is made by a perfectly constitutional authority, acting as I have stated, not only within its powers, but with reference to the property of the province itself. The hon. gentleman feels that this ought to be disallowed in the interest of the other portions of the Dominion of Canada, even though it be beneficial to the province of Nova Scotia itself. Now, I beg to say that in my humble opinion, as to the matter of property, the other people of Canada have no interest in the question whatever. I am using the term "interest" in its narrow meaning, as indicating proprietorship. An interest they have, as everybody in every corner in the Dominion has an interest, in the propriety of the legislation in the most distant province in it; but as to a proprietary interest, there is only one province and only one set of people that have any interest here, and I humbly submit that the other portions of this Dominion have no right to call into exercise the powers of disallowance against a provincial statute of that character, simply because they do not approve of its policy, or fear that the provincial property is being parted with on terms that may inflict some inconvenience upon them. To that kind of argument I think the answer is that twenty-six years ago these provinces made their bargain, and the people of the province of Nova Scotia undertook to carry on the duties, and responsibilities, and burdens of Provincial Government on the faith of that bargain. If the other provinces once gave up the control of that property you have no right to resume control over it, or to revise the terms on which it was sold or leased, than you have to re-vest yourselves with the property itself, and declare, contrary to the terms of the British North America Act, that the minerals belong to Canada and not to Nova Scotia. Now, there are many circumstances connected with this bargain which the hon. gentleman is right. I think, in apprehending will fill with alarm a great many people outside the province, as well as within it, with regard to the possibilities of the increased price of this valuable production; but when one reflects upon that, one realizes that they are only the ordinary incidents of a large transaction in such property. The danger is not from the investment of foreign capital in the province, or the control which foreign capital may exercise. From the hour when the terms of the bargain with the Duke of York's creditors were broken, down to the present time, it may be said in general terms that the mineral production of that province, as regards coal, gold and other minerals, has been the result of American capital and enterprise. If at any time American capital had been withdrawn from any of the mines in that province, they would have been practically closed. We have done our best in that province to attract American capital; but everybody knows that so far from that being deemed by any political party, or any individual, a detriment to the province, it was regarded as one of the greatest advantages that could be procured that foreign capital and enterprise should come in and unlock our treasures. But the hon. gentleman is inclined to think that this company, in consequence of the amount of capital it controls and the extent of the property it has purchased, is more likely to take the attitude of a combination than any of the previous companies. I do not agree with that reason. If the hon. gentleman will turn his attention to the history of trusts and combinations in the United States, the country of all others in which they have most flourished, he will find that as a rule the most of them have been opened by companies forming trusts and combinations among themselves. What the hon. gentleman fears with respect to this particular company and this organization was quite as possible and quite as much in the interest of the coal owners all along as it was in the interest of this particular concern. The duration of the lease is another circumstance which excites alarm in many minds, and it may be a circumstance indicating improvidence in making the bargain. But I am not prepared to admit that the case on this point is conclusive at any rate, when I remember that in some of the greatest coal producing countries in the world it is not a question of 99 years, it is not a question of giving title for a period which will outlast the youngest child at its mother's breast to-day, as the hon. gentleman said, but for all time the title in those mineral lands is given. So it is in the United States, and so it is in some portions of this country, for in the greater portion of our North-west Territories the well-established practice under the authority of this Parliament has been not to convey the coal areas under the limited tenure which prevailed in Nova Scotia, but to give patents in fee simple for lands known to contain coal and to give them at exceedingly moderate prices. It is true, as the hon. gentleman has said, that the province has parted with its right to increase the royalty upon the coal. I doubt very much whether that would be an effective and advantageous remedy for the province to have in its hand. An increase of royalty would almost certainly increase the price of coal. It may also depress the industry itself and so decrease the employment and output at the mines. But let us do the province justice, whether the administration of its affairs is in the hands of Liberals or Conservatives; let us do it the justice to say that time after time during the last twenty years, not only the province itself but the coal owners likewise, have made representations to the Federal Government to the effect that they would be willing that we should assume the proprietary interest and give the province, in lieu thereof, a substantial or fair equivalent. We have never felt it was the proper thing for us to revise the terms of Confederation to that extent, to take from the province the property which was given to it at the time of union and undertake to provide for its services in another way. The province has never looked upon the royalty otherwise than as a means of replenishing a treasury which needs the money to carry on its local services from day to day. The reasonableness of a provision against an increase of the royalty is apparent when we consider one or two facts with respect to it. The first is that the royalty had already reached a sum of ten cents per ton, which was pretty burdensome on the coal owners as we can judge from the fact that upon the out-put in the province of Nova Scotia upwards of $100,000 per year is obtained from the royalty. By this bargain the royalty is increased to 12½ cents per ton, and there was some reason, I think, on the part of those who were purchasing the mining property with a view to large operations for insisting that, for the term of their lease, that rate of royalty should not be revised. To revise it would not only diminish their profits, but as I have said, it could result only either in a decrease of production or an increase in the price of coal. With respect to the former right of the province to revise the royalty from time to time on the expiration of leases, this must be borne in mind: that while those leases have run a great many years and have occasionally been renewed as they expired, never in any case, I think, I am speaking from memory only, until the recent expiration of them, when the needs of the province seemed to demand a larger revenue, has that clause in the lease been availed of by the province to increase the impost on the production of coal. These circumstances seem to me to some extent, I do not say entirely, to destroy the force of the hon. gentleman's objection to the scheme itself, but I merely mention them, not for the purpose of insisting by any means that they do so, but only as points that occur to us here, who have not had the full opportunity of considering the matter which members of the Nova Scotia Legislature possessed. They seem to weaken the force of the hon. gentleman's case as presented to the House, and his claim for redress by disallowance on the ground that the legislation affects the burdens and interests of other provinces of Canada. But even if the hon. gentleman were able to prove that the case in that respect is full of danger, I repeat, what I said at the outset, that the hon. gentleman has made a case against the providence of the Act, but he has made a case which is rather for the consideration of those who had the power and responsibility of passing the Act. I do not think as at present advised, that it would be our duty to present to His Excellency, advice that this legislation should be disallowed. Notwithstanding that, I give the hon. gentleman credit for the great zeal with which he has entered into the subject, and which is a zeal I know purely in the public welfare.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, I very deeply regret that my hon. friend the First Minister has not been able to make a different reply to the magnificent speech which was delivered by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon). I thought, as I listened to that calm, convincing and very conclusive presentation of the case that my hon. friend the First Minister would have been sufficiently impressed by it to have been able to make a different answer from the one he has made to-night. I understand that the ground upon which he refuses to interfere may be divided into two parts—in the first place, that the case is not strong enough, and in the next place, that however strong the case may be, he would not be justified in interfering, because the property is the property of the province. My hon. friend admitted that the case would have been sufficiently strong at all events to have made him oppose the passage of any such Bill through this House; but he said that my hon. friend from Albert had stated that there was a possibility of good in this measure as well as a possibility of evil, and on that ground he considered that it was not reasonable to ask for disallowance, or rather an amendment of the Act in question. My hon. friend from Albert said that there was a possibility of good in this measure, but he pointed out also that experience on the other side of the line had proved that although the possibility of good existed, that possibility did not become effective. He pointed out that the operation of these great monopolies in the United States had been in the very opposite direction; and I think we have good reason to believe that when this enormous combine is controlled by people from the other side of the line, who have been in the habit of carrying out their policy as we know they have carried it out there, we have good reason to fear that the same result will be experienced here. A possibility of evil, Mr. Speaker, is there—it has not been denied by any one—not only a great possibility, but a great probability of evil; and my hon. friend simply asks that the possibility of good in this measure may be secured to us—that the good may be secured and the evil avoided. He simply asks that the Government of Nova Scotia may be induced so to deal with this measure as to avoid the evil which they can avoid, and give us the benefit of the good. He asks that the measure should be so amended by representations made to the Nova Scotia Government, that if the Legislature of Nova Scotia deems that those powers which have been conferred on this company are improperly or tyrannically used, that Legislature itself shall be able to refer the matter to the highest tribunal in this country to say whether or not those powers are being abused. If that could be done there would be no possibility of evil, and whatever good there was in the measure would accrue to the people of Nova Scotia. This is an unheard-of transaction in Canada. Every lease which has been granted to any corporation mining coal in Canada has been guarded in the public interest by certain conditions of the greatest importance; but in the lease which has been granted to this enormous foreign syndicate, we find that every one of these safe-guards has been virtually struck out. They have all been placed in the lease, but whereas in every other case heretofore the violation of any one of those conditions voided the lease, when we come to the penal clause of this lease we find it deliberately enacted that the violation of these conditions which have hitherto so carefully guarded in the public interest shall not void the lease.

Mr. AMYOT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him, what about sales instead of leases, as in the province of Quebec? Immense areas of land there are not only leased but sold.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not speaking of lands. I am speaking of those safe-guards which it has been considered necessary in the public interest to throw around this thing coal, which is the very life of the manufacturing industries of this country; and when my hon. friend the First Minister says that at the time of Confederation the coal was given to the province of Nova Scotia, and it was given, although it was known by those who entered into the bargain of Confederation that it was of so great importance, and that had it been intended that we should interfere with that and guard it as something separate, it would not have been given to the province of Nova Scotia—when he asks, why it was given in that case, and why it was that it was not reserved for the Dominion, I say: The reason why it was considered safe to give it to the province was that we have it in our power under the constitution to control the province in the use of it. I understand that there is no question of law involved in this matter at all; I would not venture to speak upon it if it were a question of law. It is admitted that we have the power to disallow if we please. Then it is a mere question of policy, on which every member of this House has a right to form an opinion, as to whether the power which we undoubtedly possess by law should be exercised in this case. If that be right, and I presume that is undeniable, it then simply comes to be a question as to whether the case is strong enough to justify interference by us.

Mr. McNEILL.

It has been shown that this commodity, which is essential to the industries of this country, and the great bulk of which lies in the Maritime provinces, has been handed over bodily to this syndicate to do with it as they please, without let or hindrance, for ninety-nine years, so that they are given the power to put their hands on the throat of every industry, at all events east of Montreal. If that does not make a sufficiently strong case for the interference of this House, it is almost impossible to make a case strong enough to justify such interference. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) does not pause there. He goes further and shows that not only will these people, who now own two-thirds of the coal measures in Nova Scotia, practically, in all probability, control all the coal measures in the Maritime provinces, and thus have at their mercy every industry east of Montreal, but there is every reason to believe they will be able to enter into an arrangement with the people who supply coal to Ontario, by means of which they will run up the price in that province also. So that not only will the manufacturing industries east of Montreal be at the mercy of this foreign syndicate, and those other foreign corporations whom they may call into their assistance, but the manufacturing interests of Ontario may be also, in a very short time, at their mercy. If that is not a sufficiently grave state of affairs to warrant the interference of this House, I do not know when a serious and grave case has been made out.

Mr. AMYOT. Before the hon. gentleman closes his speech, I wish to tell him that he did not understand my interruption. I did not speak of extent of land alone, but of extent of land including mines. The DeLery Gold Mining Company purchased from the Government an immense extent of land. It is gold mining and not coal, but they have not thought of carrying that for the future, because they have sold it entirely.

Mr. McNEILL. I was speaking of coal.

Mr. FRASER. I would not, perhaps, have addressed the House after the lucid exposition given of the whole question by the Minister of Justice—which I think ought to be a quietus on this discussion—had not the hon. gentleman who has just sat down made reference to certain matters, in which reference he was not correct. I do not charge the hon. gentleman of being wilfully incorrect, for no doubt he got his information from somebody else. In the first place, he says that two-thirds of the coal areas of Nova Scotia are owned by that company. That is not correct. Not more than half of the areas now worked are owned by it. There are large areas both in Inverness, Victoria and Richmond which are not worked, and consequently are not included.

Mr. McNEILL. My authority for the statement I have made is the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougall), who, I think, is as good an expert on coal matters as anyone in this House, and he tells me very positively that at least two-thirds of the known coal areas in Nova Scotia are controlled now by this company.

Mr. FRASER. I stated that no doubt the hon. gentleman was quoting what he had heard, but that his information is not correct. If it were necessary to add anything to what the Minister of Justice has said, it does seem to me very strange that hon. gentlemen who voted last night to keep up a combine should talk so much now against a combine, and that only an anticipated combine, and draw a tearful picture of what might happen in the future. I did admire, Sir, the wealth of imagery of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), and could not help being impressed by the picture he so skilfully depicted. But I was bound to think that the picture was not in keeping with several votes that hon. gentleman has given in this House. It is very easy, when an interest particularly appeals to a man, perhaps selfishly, to raise a cry of alarm concerning what is likely to happen; but let us look at the facts, so far as this syndicate is concerned. I agree with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), that it is a matter of some importance that $7,500,000 should go to the province of Nova Scotia. I regret much that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has spoken about the Provincial Secretary as if he had been swindled by Mr. Whitney. If the hon. gentleman had read the correspondence which took place between Mr. Fielding and Mr. Whitney, he would have known that Mr. Fielding was the first man to approach Mr. Whitney in this matter, and would not have said what he did. Let it not be forgotten so far as this particular syndicate is concerned, that they will have to pay, whether they mine or not, to the Government of Nova Scotia $122,000 per year, and if you add to that the interest of $7,500,000, you will have $500,000, which that company must raise in some way if they do not mine. Is it not a good thing that that much money should be invested in the province of Nova Scotia? Mr. Fielding, in the interests of the people of Nova Scotia, was the first to see, upon the suggestions made to him by friends in Nova Scotia, that this was a good arrangement. Now, I am not going to put my own opinion against that of a gentleman whose opinion on this question is worth a great deal more than mine. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has spoken, and so have a large number of the best men of Nova Scotia. I hold a letter from Mr. Graham Fraser, who, I think, will be taken as the best authority in Nova Scotia on this question, being a gentleman who has done more to develop the iron industry of that province than anybody else. What does he think about it? He says that he believes that the Boston capitalists invested their money on business principles, and that their scheme was a very good thing for the province. Mr. Fraser is interested in manufactures all over Canada, and it is therefore of the greatest importance to him that he should obtain his coal at the cheapest possible rate. Let it not be forgotten that half the coal in Nova Scotia is not mined by the syndicate to-day. All the mines in Pictou and Cumberland are worked by other companies outside of this company altogether. Are we to assume that because the mines of Cape Breton come under this syndicate these others are to be wiped out altogether? How are you going to prevent these men, even without the legislation against which such a cry is raised, from purchasing these properties if they will? It is feasible in Nova Scotia for one company to get a transfer of a lease from any other company, and that was never objected to by the Government except on one condition, and that was that a royalty had to be paid before the transfer would be assented to.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman will not say that the Government always claimed control, and that they could use control if danger threatened.

Mr. FRASER. I do not know what the Government claim; but I know that if this company had bought properties from other parties in Cape Breton the transfers could have been made without any interference by the Government, provided the royalties were paid. I regret the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) speaking about Mr. Whitney having Mr. Fielding by the throat. Those who know Mr. Fielding know that he is not the man to be taken by the throat, either by Mr. Whitney or by any other man.

Mr. WELDON. I desire to correct the hon. gentleman. I spoke of Mr. Whitney taking Mr. Fielding around his finger like a glove.

Mr. FRASER. If the hon. gentleman did not say that, at least that was my impression of what he said.

Mr. WELDON. Let the hon. gentleman refer to "Hansard;" he will see what I said.

Mr. FRASER. I think perhaps the hon. gentleman may have used both. In any case, I want to inform the House generally, many members here do not need to be informed, that Mr. Fielding is not that kind of man, and, if the hon. gentleman thinks that Mr. Whitney can use Mr. Fielding in the way he mentions, he is mistaken. I regret that a person from Nova Scotia should speak of Mr. Fielding in that way, because the people of Nova Scotia know that as a business man or in his devotion to the interests of his province, Nova Scotia never had a better Premier than Mr. Fielding, and even opponents have written to express their approval. So far as the question of municipal taxation is concerned, the hon. member is wrong, Mr. Speaker, about the leader of the Opposition being the means of calling attention to this question. When he introduced his Bill, and before Mr. Cahan had said anything upon the subject, Mr. Fielding announced that Mr. Whitney had objected to the royalty on the ground that in the United States they were not accustomed to royalties, but when they bought a mine bought it outright. It was pointed out to him that the several states, though they did not charge royalties, had a state tax, so that in this respect the two were equal. Mr. Fielding stated that he pointed out clearly to Mr. Whitney that there were municipalities in the province whose revenues were raised by a tax upon local properties, and that the Legislature would not undertake to exempt him from such taxation, but that he must pay such tax as was levied upon him for municipal purposes. To this Mr. Whitney agreed.

Mr. WELDON. What Mr. Fielding says confirms what I stated. No doubt he meant that municipalities should be allowed to tax this property; but his instrument was drawn so badly that it did not provide that. It was amended at the instance of the leader of the Opposition; I know that, because I was consulted legally at the time. I do not blame Mr. Fielding; he is not a lawyer, and is not blameworthy for such an error.

Mr. FRASER. But he knows as much as some lawyers, and he had very good advice.

Mr. WELDON. Very bad advice on that point.

Mr. FRASER. That may be a matter of opinion. But I want to state that the very thing to which Mr. Cahan referred, had been arranged for by Mr. Fielding and agreed to by Mr. Whitney before Mr. Cahan mentioned it. I think the hon. gentleman was not as frank as he usually is, when he spoke of the twenty-year lease. It is a lease for twenty years, with the option of renewal; so that it is for all practical purposes a lease for eighty years. The lease now under discussion is for a period of ninety-nine years, with power in the Government at the end of that time to terminate it. More than that, this company has to pay 12½ cents upon every ton of coal mined, whereas every other man who holds a lease now or hereafter, pays only 10 cents. The hon. gentleman says this is to be a combine, but that could hardly be, seeing that it starts out with this disadvantage. Mr. Fraser, speaking of the matter, makes a statement, I think, of very considerable importance. He says that Mr. Fielding is quite right in making a long lease with the Boston syndicate, and that when he was in London trying to raise capital upon their iron mines, Sir Charles Tupper told him that the difficulty which stood in the way of mining enterprises was, that the Government could increase the royalties and that this difficulty he could readily understand. Here is a business man who spoke from practical experience. Capitalists are not going to invest in a matter which depends on the whim of the Government; it must be a business transaction. So that all the coal lands already working in Nova Scotia, in Pictou county and Cumberland county, and all the mines that will be opened hereafter, have advantages, as compared with this syndicate. And how is it this syndicate has any advantage? Simply, as the hon. gentleman himself said, because they can mine cheaper and carry cheaper, and, as the hon. Minister of Justice said, the people of Ontario and Quebec are going to get coal cheaper than before. I do not know myself so much about the combines, or what they are capable of, as the hon. gentleman has learned from his study. But I do not give much credence to the letters to which he has referred. I think I can remember, though I was not a member of the House at the time, that certain letters written by a member of Parliament here about what he had done with regard to other members, who distinctly denied what was said, and declared that their accuser was lying. I do know that there is, unfortunately, corruption in the United States. I am not sure but there may be corruption here. But I do not believe all those who are floating these schemes say. I do not believe that all the money has been advanced and spent that they say has been advanced and spent. So far as coal is concerned, it is a commodity required by all, and the Creator has placed enough of it under the ground for the wants of His creatures, and as each generation comes forward, it will be found that there is enough of this good gift to supply them all. I know that in several places in Nova Scotia there are indications of other coal mines than those already discovered. Now, there is another point outside of that, namely, the provincial point. I thank the Minister of Justice for giving, in no uncertain manner, his idea of what provincial rights are in this respect. If there were certain mines in Ontario, and the people of that province thought fit to legislate as Nova Scotia has been doing with regard to its minerals, I would be very sorry indeed if the people of Nova Scotia should attempt to interfere on the ground that possibly the price of coal might be raised a little. There is one way of killing a combine to which the hon. member referred. Given a state of things where an article is free, I do not fear combines very much. It is only when they are assisted by legislation that circumstances are favourable to combines. But give to any particular article which men produce, a free field over the world, and you will find that people will not be troubled with combines with respect to it. If there were a combine in coal the ships of the hon. member for Halifax would soon find ready work in carrying cargoes from Nova Scotia to the south, and bringing back coal.

There is another point. I have not the honour of an acquaintance with any of these gentlemen, except the hon. member for Montreal (Sir Donald Smith), who is one of the directors of that company; but I do know that out of the nine directors, four of them are Canadians. I do know that over a quarter of a million dollars in this company were taken in less than two days in the city of Halifax. Now, that looks as if the people of Halifax had money, and as if they were not afraid to invest it in this company. That is a good sign. But how can it be possible that this company alone, unless they purchase—and they are excluded from purchasing any where except in the county of Cape Breton—

Mr. WELDON. That is not true.

Mr. FRASER. That is the way I read it.

Mr. WELDON. Read the charter.

Mr. FRASER. I may be wrong, but as I understand it, it refers to the county of Cape Breton and to the island of Cape Breton. Now, I do not say but that this company can extend their operations, I do not say but that they can extend themselves all over the province, that they may eventually buy up every coal mine in Nova Scotia. There is nothing to prevent them doing it now, and there never has been. The law gives them the same chance now that they always had, and how are you going to prevent it? Certainly, not by stopping this particular transaction. It may be necessary to say that one company shall not own more than a certain area; but are you going to hamper trade in that way, or are you going to parcel it out among a certain number? Everybody knows the improvements that have been made in coal mining which makes it impossible to conduct these operations now as they were conducted formerly. I can remember when a coal mine was worked near New Glasgow and when there was just one horse to raise the coal about 200 feet. That method has passed away. Even the methods now pursued in some of the mines of Cape Breton and Pictou County, although very good, must give place to the larger and improved operations. But it is a matter of surprise to me that, for the first time, this question has now been raised about the Americans coming in and investing their capital here. On this point I will read from a letter I have received from a friend:

Our mines have been largely owned by Americans for many years. Mr. McKeen's company, which is selling to the syndicate, was largely an American company. Other American companies operated in Cape Breton several years ago. Some party got up a combine, and obtained possession of all the coal mines in Pictou County except the Drummond.

That I know. Every mine in the county of Pictou, except one, is owned by one corporation, and curiously enough, the head office of that company is in the city of New York to-day, and has been for years. Neither respect for the Empire nor anything else, brought the hon. member for Albert forward to speak about American combines controlling the mines in Pictou County. But because his province is making a good bargain, he has raised this point. I give the hon. member for Albert credit for being honest in his opposition to this bargain, and glad am I that he has contributed to-night to the literature of this country one of the finest efforts against combines that I have ever heard. He almost gave us a text book against combines, and has told us what we should do against monopolies in this country. But he did not say a word when all the mines in Pictou County except one, which was owned largely in the city of Montreal, went into that American combine, whose president lives in the city of New York, and does all the business there, and only comes down once a year to the mines. Surely there was just as much danger to the county of Pictou at that time as there is now. I am glad that this matter is now set at rest. I believe that the bargain is a good one for the people of Nova Scotia and for the Dominion of Canada. As was well said by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), you cannot bring $7,500,000 into any part of Canada without the whole country feeling a pulsation from one end to the other. I am glad this discussion has brought out this declaration from the Minister of Justice as to provincial rights. The matter is settled now, and these gentlemen will go to work. We will have the money invested, and well invested. I fear no combination, nor am I afraid but that my children or grandchildren will be able to grapple with any question of that kind when it arrives. Fortunes change hands so quickly, operations are carried on with such lightning speed to-day, that posterity can look after itself and will do so. The hon. member for Halifax referred to the upper House of the Nova Scotia Legislature, composed in part of Conservatives, who ratified this measure. In the upper House are such men as the Hon. Dr. Parker, a life-long Conservative, and the Hon. Robert Boak, an independent man of means, and these men have approved of the measure. There was objection in the lower House, but in the upper House, where criticism might be expected, not a word was said. For myself, though I do not understand so much about this transaction, perhaps, as others, I am willing, when those legislators have so acted, to accept their verdict that the measure is a wise one, especially when the best information I can obtain from gentlemen who have given the question consideration, leads me to the conclusion that the measure is a good one. I hope the matter is now settled, and that the operations will be as successful as I believe they will be under this new company which was organized in the United States, for I believe this enterprise will do more than anything else in reviving and increasing the coal trade and developing our trade, not only with Canada, but with the United States, bearing in its train the advantages which must always follow the investment of capital from outside—new trade and increased prosperity. The Government of Nova Scotia will also be relieved from any possibility of being compelled to impose direct taxation on the people, and they will be able to build roads and bridges and give additional sums for educational purposes and do the work of the province better than before, by reason of this transaction carried out by Mr. Fielding, and which is described as a business-like transaction, and one of the best ever made in Nova Scotia. I trust, therefore, there will be no interference whatever, either from outside or inside, with this Act, by the only power that could interfere, namely, the Dominion Government, and that this matter is now settled, and that we shall have peace.

Sir DONALD SMITH. It was not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to say anything on the question now before the House, but it has been suggested to me that did I remain altogether silent, my position, and that of the Canadian gentlemen with whom I have the honour to be associated in what is called the coal deal, might be misunderstood. I am not in the habit, I hope, of wearying this House with many words, and it is certainly not my intention to do so now. I wish to say only, that this matter of the coal deal, this Dominion Coal Company, is purely a matter of business. Those who held a number of mines in Cape Breton were working them apart, and it was thought that it would be very much better that they should join together: there would be very great economy effected in doing so. Some of those mines were worked with appliances not at all equal to what is required in the present day in coal mining. Notwithstanding that, they made a fair return for the money embarked in them, and I will say frankly, with respect to the particular mine with which I myself and my friends were concerned, that we received a very handsome dividend, having divided this last year 10 per cent. At a time when consols are at 2 or 2½, we look upon that as a very fair return. But we felt that by joining hands we could do a very great deal better—not that we wish to have more than 10 per cent, but that we would be glad to have it continued to ourselves and to those who might come after us, and we felt that by uniting we could work far more economically, and so the better assure that this dividend would be permanent. It would not, however, have been very prudent for the few people who were interested in the mines to have taken upon themselves the burden of furnishing all the additional capital required for this purpose, so we looked around, and we found in Boston good and energetic men, with ample means, who would be glad to join with us in the enterprise. With them we came to an understanding to form a company organized under the laws of Canada, and they as well as we are subject of course to the laws of Canada, in regard to all property held within the Dominion. It has been said that this company might be a danger to the Dominion. With all the care that we gave to the subject, narrowly looking into it in every way, we did not see that it could be so, and how is it possible that any such danger should arise simply because we have a few American gentlemen in this company, who certainly hold a large interest in it, while at the same time the holding of Canadians in it is also very material.

Mr. WELDON. Not a majority.

Sir DONALD SMITH. A sufficiently substantial interest in it to assure that no unfairness could be done towards Canada in any respect.

Mr. WELDON. I do not wish to be understood as having made a misstatement, as I appear to have done, in view of the hon. gentleman's statement. My information was that the members of the company representing Canadian interests all told were decidedly below one-half. Does the hon. gentleman say that they represent more than one-half.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I have not cared to say whether they represent one-half or one-third, but I did say that the Canadian interest is of a substantial character, that Canadian stockholders will have a very material influence in the administration of the company. Does the hon. gentleman from Albert think that those gentlemen who are Canadians, I hope equally as good Canadians as himself, men who are not less devoted to the interests of their country, and not less loyal to their Sovereign and to the Empire than is the hon. gentleman himself, would have entered into this transaction if they had considered there would be any danger to Canada in doing so? Does he believe we would have bartered their independence, their interest in Canada, or our privilege of being citizens of this Dominion for any amount of money? No. It was purely a business transaction, and I desire to say that it is so looked upon, not only by those who are Canadians but by those Americans, men of high honour and integrity, who are also connected with it. How could there possibly be any danger? It has been said, as I have seen stated in the newspapers, that England might be at war with Russia or other foreign power, and that these people might then treacherously shut up the mines or render them unworkable; in other words, would sell themselves to the enemy. Could there be anything more ridiculous than such an idea, how could this be carried out while this corporation must work under the laws of Canada? I desire to say no more on this subject than this: That my Canadian friends who are connected with this undertaking would have had nothing to do with it, had they considered that they were acting otherwise than as good subjects of Her Majesty and good Canadians. In everything they have done, they have done it simply as a business transaction and with the assurance that from their actions no danger or detriment could arise to Canada or the Empire.

STEAM COMMUNICATION BETWEEN HALIFAX AND ST. JOHN.

Mr. FORBES. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the Government a matter of very considerable importance to the shore counties of the province of Nova Scotia, as well as to the county and city of St. John. I refer to the steam communication between ports of Halifax and St. John and intermediate ports. The history of the service is within the recollection of the Government, and of many members in this House. As far back as 1871, the Federal Government granted a subsidy of $10,000 a year to aid a steam service along the south shore of Nova Scotia, between Halifax and St. John, touching at intermediate ports. From that year down to 1887 inclusive, the subsidy of $10,000 was granted for that purpose. Steamers were first put upon that route by Mr. F. W. Fishwick, a citizen of Halifax. He built up the service to such a large extent that quite a large trade was developed, and the citizens were very well satisfied with it. In 1888 the subsidy was reduced to $7,500, for what reason does not appear upon the records of Parliament, and I do not know accurately. In 1889, that subsidy was further cut down to $5,000, and in 1891 it was reduced to $4,000. Last year it was increased to $5,000, and this year I do not know what the Government intend to appropriate for it. I do know, however, that the steamship company managing that service has ordered the closing of their warehouses, and has given its agents notice that it will discontinue the steamers unless a larger subsidy is granted. On account of a letter received from the manager of that company on the 18th of February, and on account of letters received by other members of the House, the members for Shelburne (Mr. White), St. John (Messrs. Chesley and Hazen), and Digby (Mr. Bowers), and myself, waited upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and impressed upon him the necessity of increasing the subsidy, and he promised to bring the matter under the consideration of the Government. To-day, I am in receipt of a telegram, which reads as follows:—

LIVERPOOL, N.S., March 1.

Urge on Government the following unanimous resolution, passed at meeting yesterday:—That the Dominion Government be requested, in granting further subsidies for coastal service, to insist on steamer having satisfactory speed, not less than 12 knots, and for such service to grant the old rate of subsidy—$10,000.

(Sd.) SECRETARY OF MEETING.

I know that the wish of the citizens of Liverpool expressed in that telegram, is joined by the citizens of the counties of Shelburne, Yarmouth and Lunenburg, as well as the cities of Halifax and St. John, and the Government should, I believe, immediately act upon the request here made. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley) represented to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the discontinuance of this service would mean an annual loss of $35,000 to the city of St. John, and I can well believe that a larger amount than that would be lost to the city of Halifax. In the case of the counties of Queen's and Shelburne, which are non-railroad counties, they have learned to depend entirely upon this service. Except by coach, they have no other means of communicating with the outside counties, and with the centres of commerce in the province and in the Dominion. I would most earnestly urge upon the Government the necessity of giving this matter immediate consideration, and to notify the company, or else ask for tenders for an other service unless the present company give us a better boat than they have had on the route for the last few years. It is necessary that we should have that service continued and that we should know it at as early a date as possible so as not to disturb trade or stop traffic. I understand that the company now performing the service lost last year $5,000 not including charges for wharfage, agencies, clerks, printing, &c., which would bring the total loss up to about $10,000 for the year. Part of their loss accrues from the fact that the missing link between Digby and Annapolis was completed, thus diverting a portion of the trade of the western counties from the sea route along the shore to Halifax. In addition to that, one or two local lines of steamers have been subsidized from Barrington west to Yarmouth, and from Lunenburg east to Halifax. Both of these local lines have to a certain extent infringed upon the trade of this main shore service, and I fancy that would, in some degree, account for the loss to the company. Nevertheless I urge upon the Government that this condition of affairs simply strengthens the rights of Queen's and Shelburne and that these counties, which have not had their just share in the railway subsidies granted by Parliament, should be amply provided with steam communication. When we, in the counties of Shelburne and Queen's, get our just proportion for railway subsidies, and have our lines in operation, I can say on behalf of the citizens of these counties, that they will not then demand from the Government such a subsidy as is now necessary for these steamers. I know that I will be supported in this demand by the members from the shore counties, and especially by the hon. member from St. John (Mr. Chesley). I trust that the Government will give the full subsidy of $10,000 this year. I would also suggest that the Government should by some means so arrange the subsidy as to compel the company to put a better boat on the service than we have had for the last few years. If this is done the citizens of the shore counties will be deeply grateful. I again urge upon the Government to give their earnest and immediate consideration to this matter.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Inasmuch as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, in company with the hon. members for St. John and myself, have lately waited upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and pressed upon him the necessity of increasing the subsidy to these boats; and that Mr. Baker, the manager and principal owner of the boats, has since visited Ottawa, and that in company with the hon. members for Halifax and St. John and myself, have had another interview with the Premier and the Minister of Trade and Commerce in respect to this matter. I think it is hardly necessary for me to take up the time of the House by recapitulating the various arguments we then advanced. It is quite true, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Forbes) says that the counties of Queen's and Shelburne would perhaps suffer more from the doing away with these boats than any other counties. These two counties are without railway accommodation, and if this boat is taken off, the shore would be without steam communication of any kind, east or west. The subsidies having been reduced and the traffic having decreased somewhat, these steamers are not running at present, so that these counties, as well as other places along the shore, are without necessary communication between St. John and Halifax. We would all be extremely glad if the Government would take this matter into consideration, and comply with the request made by hon. members of this House who are interested. There is one thing, however, in which I hardly agree with the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes). He has read a telegram from which it appears that at the meeting held in Liverpool the people desired a boat on the route that would make at least 12 knots an hour. Now, while we should all be delighted to have a better and more speedy boat than we have at present, we fear that if such a condition were imposed, with even the increased subsidy, which I trust the Government will grant, the result may be that we shall have no boat at all. I am satisfied that the company which has put these boats on the route would not go to the expense of building or purchasing any other boats than those they have now; and while the "City of St. John" is not the best boat in the world, or the boat that we should exactly like to have, at the same time we should be willing to put up with that accommodation until the time arrives, which I hope is not far distant, when we shall obtain the benefit of the railway accommodation which has been given to all the rest of the province of Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FORBES.

(In the Committee.)

Exchequer Court $1,500

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was asked to explain this item, and this memorandum from the Registrar of the Exchequer Court will do so.

With reference to my demand for additional contingencies to the amount of $1,500, I beg leave to state on your suggestion that my contingencies for the current year are $4,000, that up to date I have expended nearly $3,000, that the judge informs me that his travelling expenses during this fiscal year will amount to $900, that the expenses of the sheriff, constables, reporters and type-writers in connection with recent cases, have already cost $604.70, but I have smaller accounts outstanding and more cases to be tried. I anticipate the cost of printing the Admiralty Rules will be about $600 or $700. I will have to pay the salary of Mr. Clarke, and the running office expenses, such as printing, stationery, &c., from the contingencies down to June, 1893. Mr. Clarke is an officer who is employed to do temporary work in the Exchequer Court, until a third class clerk is appointed. I beg to state that I shall not be able to meet the expenses of the office during the present fiscal year without an additional sum of $1,500, and even then being very careful. I might also add that part of these expenses paid out of my contingencies, such as reporting evidence and copying, are recouped to the Government in the form of law stamps, and form part of the revenue when I get paid by the parties. I might mention that some of these accounts are outstanding for six months or over, but I generally get paid them on taxation for costs. Part of the amount will be recouped to meet the contingencies which are, according to me, most judicious and reasonable.

Retiring allowance to Constable

Martin Murphy $752 55

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Police Constable Murphy, who is 63 years of age, resigned from the Dominion Police Force on November last, after fifteen years' service, having been appointed on November 8th, 1877. He was rendered incapable of further duty by reason of injuries received from a fall while on duty, and the vote is required to recoup the police appropriation for 1892-93, from which the amount has been paid. This was an item which could not be foreseen, and it was paid under the ordinary circumstances, namely, a month's pay for each year's service up to ten years, and a half a month's pay for each succeeding year.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 3rd, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 74) to make further provisions respecting grants of land to members of the militia force on active service in the North-west—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Patterson, Huron.)

Bill (No. 75) to amend the law relating to holidays—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 76) to correct a clerical error in the Bank Act—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 77) to further amend the Act to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine River water power.—(Mr. Mills, Annapolis.)

Bill (No. 78) respecting the British America Assurance Company.—(Mr. Cockburn.)

REPORT.

Annual report of the Commissioner of the North-west Mounted Police for 1892.—(Mr. Ives.)

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, Sir, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a rather curious letter which I find in the Montreal "Gazette" of this date over the signature of an hon. member of the other House. I am not going to inflict the whole of it on the House; I will just call attention to one charge which is made against me there. The hon. gentleman declares:

All the refineries in Canada, says Sir Richard Cartwright, according to the report of his speech in the Montreal "Herald," employ only 223 men.

Now, Sir, as the hon. gentleman who made that statement had, in common with all the other members of the upper House, the most ample opportunity of getting access to our "Hansard," he might have taken the trouble to read there what I did say. What I did say was not that they employed 223, but that they employed 723 to manufacture a product of about $10,000,000 worth, and I said that I was referring to our census returns for 1881, the only ones I had giving the information in detail, which census returns I hold in my hand. In 1881 the value of the total product of the sugar refineries was $9,627,000, tolerably close to $10,000,000, and the number of hands employed is stated to be 723. Now, the census returns for 1881 may be utterly incorrect; that is the affair of hon. gentlemen opposite; but that is what I stated, and not what our worthy friend the Senator imagines, on the strength of a newspaper report, that I did state. Now, I do not care one straw what Mr. Senator Drummond or any other gentleman concerned in that business may care about this—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask for order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think I am in order in stating this.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I move that the House adjourn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The adjournment of the House is moved, and before that motion is put I desire to say that I regard the conduct of the hon. Senator, who has access to our "Hansard," and who without taking the trouble to read what is said in this House, indicts a letter to the newspapers complaining grievously of a statement which the slightest research on his part would have shown him was not made by me, is not calculated to increase the respect that we ought to have for members of the upper House.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF VAUDREUIL.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to inquire if the returning officer has been appointed for the county of Vaudreuil?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He has not.

Mr. LAURIER. When will he be appointed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Early next week.

CIVIL SERVANTS IN MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. LAURIER. I wish to call the hon. First Minister's attention to this paragraph which I have read in the newspapers:

An Order in Council has been passed prohibiting employees of the Post Office Department from seeking election to any municipal position in future.

Can the hon. gentleman inform us if such an Order in Council has been passed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is an Order in Council on that subject relating to one of the departments, I think the Post Office Department. Whether it applies to all the employees or not I am not certain, but the attention required of employees in becoming candidates for municipal office would, in the opinion of the head of the department, involve the occupation of a portion of their time which is required for the public service.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no observation to offer as to the policy. It may be all right. I do not express approval or disapproval of it at this moment. But as it is a matter of some importance, perhaps the hon. gentleman would bring down the Order.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 23) respecting witnesses and evidence.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The committee last year passed the clause not making the witnesses compellable, but simply making them competent. I propose to call attention to any changes that have been made in the preparation of the Bill this year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the change is in the right direction and will support it.

Mr. DICKEY. I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the proviso. It seems to me that the privilege of the husband or the wife, as the case may be, is the privilege of the other party. It should not only be that the husband is not compelled to state confidential communications which passed between him and his wife, but should not be allowed to do so. The privilege is not that of the witness, but of the person who makes the communication in good faith, under the secrecy of marital relations.

Mr. TISDALE. Before we even get that far, I would like to understand the state of the Imperial measure at present.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They merely introduced the Bill from time to time. Three Bills have passed the House of Lords, but have not yet been enacted.

Mr. LISTER. Why is it that since last session the hon. gentleman has made up his mind that the husband or the wife should be a compellable witness?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have always held the view that a witness should not only be competent, but compellable. Any person competent to be a witness ought to be compellable. The only reason why we admit them is to ascertain the truth, and on that ground they should be compellable. I have taken the liberty, therefore, of departing from the Bill as drafted by the committee which had charge of the subject, not because in any respect I am wanting in deference to their views, but in order that the whole question might be opened again, especially as there was a strong difference of opinion among the members of the committee.

Mr. LISTER. Does not the hon. gentleman think that when he is making the accused a witness for himself the accused stands in a different position from that of any other witness? It ought to be a matter of discretion, as far as he is concerned, whether he goes into the witness box or not. I understand the reason for making every person not a party to a trial a competent as well as a compellable witness; but there are grave reasons why a person charged with an offence should not be a compellable witness. To force a man, charged with an offence, to give evidence, is to compel him to manufacture an excuse, in the hope that the statement he makes may acquit him of the charge. In other words, we force him to become guilty of perjury. If innocent, he will go into the box himself. I am not aware that in England or any British colony there is any such law as this in existence. I have always favoured the statute enabling a person accused of crime to be a witness, for the reason that the evidence he may give will tend, at all events, whether entirely true or not, to throw light on the subject under investigation, and such a law has been adopted in many states of the Union. In the States, where it has become law, the accused is made a competent witness. It is his privilege to go into the box or remain out, and if he does not become a witness the law provides that that shall not be referred to by the counsel or judge, or taken into account by the jury. No reference is allowed to be made to the fact that the prisoner did not take advantage of the law which permits him to be a witness. I think we are going too far in this connection altogether. We are forcing a man, if guilty, to commit perjury, in the hope that he may be acquitted. If innocent, he will go in of his own accord.

Mr. TISDALE. I would be inclined, from my experience, to consent to a compromise by making this law applicable to all offences punishable only by fine, in the first instance. In Ontario, for some years, the law as to a number of petty offences was construed to establish that the parties to the offence were not only competent but compellable witnesses; but that construction was set aside on appeal. That reading of the law, however, worked well in this minor class of offences. I agree with the Minister of Justice that the sole object of evidence is to elicit the truth; but, at the same time, in the case of serious crimes, there is much to be said in favour of the contention of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), that by compelling the accused to be a witness we compel him, if guilty, to perjure himself. I am free to say that I am halting between the two opinions, and would advise our going part of the way by allowing our courts to have some experience of this change in the case of smaller offences before going the whole distance. I would suggest that we should make the clause apply simply to witnesses in the case of offences punishable, in the first instance, by fine only.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think we ought not to make the accused a compellable witness in any case, whether the offence be light or serious. I think we are going a long way, longer than, in my judgment, we ought to go, in making the party a competent witness. There are some things to be said in favour of his competency, but there is a good deal to be said against it. But I can see nothing to be said in making one charged with a crime a compellable witness. I would mention this fact with regard to the lighter offences, to which my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Tisdale) referred. These offences are very often committed by boys associated together, and not realizing the discreditable character of their act until it is done. Their minds are not matured, their judgments are not yet properly formed, and often the escape of such a boy—and many a magistrate of good sense will permit such to escape—gives him an opportunity to conduct himself with propriety for the rest of his life. One of the most serious shocks that he receives is the full realization of the character of the act he has committed. Take a boy of that sort, who has, from association and excitement, done some wrongful act, and compel him to give testimony; why his sense of manliness will compel him to disclose the facts as they are, thus assuring his conviction upon his own testimony. But the one who is far more unscrupulous, who possesses, in his mental constitution, the incipient characteristics of crime, would escape upon his own testimony. And so I think, even in respect of the minor offences, the law is better as it is than it would be if such a person were made a compellable witness. Take the case of those charged with more serious offences. You put such a person in the witness box, and, if he testifies against himself, his testimony will be accepted, but, if he testifies in his own favour, it will make no impression upon the jury in the face of the crime with which he is charged, where it is a serious offence and the punishment is very great, and there is a very strong and powerful motive for regarding the statement of what is not true as a less serious evil than the possible consequences of this conviction. I think, therefore, on every ground from which the matter may be viewed, it is important that this rule should not be adopted, and that in no instance should the person charged with the crime be a compellable witness.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Chairman, I have had some considerable experience in the practice of criminal law, and I know that it is a very important law which we are now discussing. There are two principles upon which the criminal evidence may proceed. In one country, when a crime has been committed, the law says: "A crime has been committed and you are suspected, but we will not ask you any questions." In other countries, where such a crime has been committed, the law says: "You are suspected, and we will put questions to you." Now, which is the best way to reach the truth and find the guilty party? That is the question before us. I do not see why we, in this country, should not try what England is now trying to establish—the right of saying to the man suspected: "You shall answer our questions; at nine o'clock there was a fire, where were you?" It is all very well to say that a man may be excited and so on when submitted to an examination, but if he was not the guilty party, he will have the chance to show where he was at the time the crime was committed. In France they have followed that rule for a long time, and it has given such satisfaction that, in England, the best criminal authorities want to adopt the same rule in their country. But they find themselves stopped by a wall, and that wall is the old idea, the old prejudice against any change. I say let us benefit by the example of those who have better laws of evidence, let us benefit by the experience of other people. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) says that we should adopt only one-half of the measure, and that we can learn by experience whether it is a good measure or not. The answer is that this Parliament will exist next year and the year following and so on, and, if the law works badly after we have adopted it, we can change it. But if we want to try, as an experiment here, a system which has been found good in other countries, let us take the measure as a whole, and try it manfully and truly. I believe it is in the interest of justice that a change should be made. If a person is guilty, why should we give him a chance to escape? If he is not guilty, let us give him a chance to establish it by his own evidence. I want the laws of the country to be in favour of the society as well as of the individual. I want justice to be done and the criminals found out and punished. I think if a man has committed a crime he is not worthy of being protected by a statute which prevents the officers from asking questions of such a nature as to establish his culpability. Under these circumstances, I believe we might, with wisdom, adopt this law which has been long in force in other parts of the world.

Mr. LISTER. Where?

Mr. AMYOT. In France, for many years past.

Mr. LISTER. No.

Mr. AMYOT. Those who say "no" do not know the criminal system of France.

Mr. LISTER. The party is not sworn.

Mr. AMYOT. Do not swear the accused. I would prefer he should not be sworn. I speak of the principle of questioning the accused party. If the majority of this House insists upon the party being sworn, we must accept it. But if the proposal is made that he should not be sworn, I would vote for the amendment. I believe that the suspected party should be subjected to question as to his whereabouts, his actions, and the surrounding circumstances of the crime. I believe that is a correct principle, and my humble experience leads me to believe that it could be applied with advantage.

Mr. LANGELIER. I cannot bring myself to believe that the Government will insist upon this clause, compelling a person charged with a crime to be a witness against himself. The hon. gentleman from Bellechase (Mr. Amyot) has just spoken of the system that exists in France. The system that exists in France is not at all the one which is proposed to be introduced by this Bill. Even in France the accused is not compelled to be a witness against himself, but he may be interrogated. I have seen that system practised in France, and it is one of the worst features of the criminal system of that country, and those who are best acquainted with it protest most strongly against it. Let me give a case which came under my notice when I was living in France, as a student. A poor woman was charged with murdering her child. She was questioned by the presiding judge, according to the system which is allowed by the French law, but not under oath. She might have declined to answer. But the poor woman was ignorant, and she was very weak, and very timid. The result was that she answered at once that she had killed the child. Five years afterwards, it was proven that the child had been killed by a servant girl, and that the mother had nothing to do with the crime. They released her, of course, and they asked her: Why did you admit that you had killed your child when you were innocent? Her answer was: I did not understand. I was frightened by the judge when he commenced to interrogate me, and I thought I had better admit at once that I had killed the child. This is not a single instance. The same thing may happen on many occasions. It would be the re-establishment of the tribunal of the inquisition. Nobody denies that in France the system of interrogating the accused was a very unjust remnant of the old institution of the Spanish and the French inquisitions, which themselves were one of the worst remnants of the criminal system of Rome. This Bill proposes to introduce into Canada the system of interrogating the accused by the judge, which is now condemned by every criminalist of renown in France. Indeed, the hon. gentleman proposes to introduce something here that is worse than what has existed in France, and is now condemned by every criminalist of repute in France. The result would be that if the accused is weak and disposed to yield easily he will be condemned, whether guilty or not, on his own testimony: he will admit that he is guilty. If a very hardened criminal comes before the judge, he will perjure himself. I fear this proposition would lead to the greatest amount of perjury that would ever be seen in this country. I think this portion of the Bill should be withdrawn. Furthermore, I see a contradiction in the two clauses. It is a most extraordinary thing to say, in the clause we are now dealing with, that you may compel the accused to be a witness against himself; and in the next clause, where a man is not accused, to say he cannot be compelled to incriminate himself. To compel a man, when he is under a charge, to criminate himself, and, when he is not accused, to say that he cannot be compelled to criminate himself, is, to my mind, a contradiction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)— I regret to say that I differ in toto from several of my hon.

friends who have addressed the committee. I cannot fail to remember that this is not the first time this question has been debated in this House. I gathered from the discussion which took place here some years ago that a large proportion of the legal talent of the House was in support of this necessary amendment in the law of criminal evidence. Now, my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) said that he had great respect for age and tradition, and he rather liked to hang on to them as long as possible. Well, the hon. gentleman is sufficiently well versed in the law of the land to know that age and traditions, with regard to criminal prosecutions, are not such as should form the basis of our legislation to-day. That part of the English law which is most reprehensible and the least to be followed, is the old law with reference to criminal prosecutions. We have gone on getting clear of that year after year. It has been a slow process to overcome the conservatism which eminently marks the legal profession above all others. But the object which we should have in view, the elucidation of the truth, has at last prevailed in England, and it remains to a British colony to hear objections raised which have been raised and successfully answered in the English House of Commons. One would suppose that if tradition, and the arguments which could be adduced from tradition, were to govern anywhere, they would prevail in England. What has been the fact? The most brilliant common-sense lawyer in the age, as he was termed, the late Lord Bramwell, introduced his Bill several times into the House of Lords, and, if my memory serves me right, carried it through the House of Lords time and again, although it has not yet passed the House of Commons. On what grounds did he, above all others, recommend it? There was not a gentleman standing in the House of Lords who had as much experience in the trial of criminal cases as Lord Bramwell; and he gave it as his opinion, after many years of experience on the bench, that this was one of the most important amendments and one of the most desirable that could be introduced. Now, my hon. friend behind me says, if you introduce this law making the accused a compellable witness, you will open the door to a great deal of perjury. My hon. friend knows well that that argument was advanced against every change that has been made in the law of evidence from the first. Why, some of us are old enough, almost, to remember when an interested party could not give evidence in a civil cause, when he was the only man who knew anything about the case at all. Well, Sir, after many years of revolt against the conservatism which exists in the profession, common sense triumphed, and that absurd restriction was removed. To-day a plaintiff, or defendant even, if he is the most in-interested party, can go into a court of justice and give evidence in amounts involving ten, twenty, or a hundred thousand dollars, and nobody disputes his right to give evidence in so far as he may be interested. It is a fair question for a jury or judge to say what weight should be given to his testimony. So that branch of the law in civil cases has been entirely altered. So when the English law relating to breaches of promise of marriage was introduced some years ago there was a provision that the parties to the suit should not testify; but it was found to work so badly that that restriction was removed, and the parties to a breach of promise case allowed to give evidence. Then the English law relating to divorce was introduced, and that contained, in accordance with ancient tradition, a provision that the parties to the divorce suit could not give evidence. A few years' practice served to show how ridiculous that was, and it was also removed. Now, I want to point out to the hon. gentleman that if he watches the trend of English criminal legislation in reference to evidence, he will see that all the later legislation is in the direction of this Bill. Take the English Explosives Act passed a few years ago. That contained provisions of this very character, that it should be competent for a person charged under the English Explosives Act to go into court and give evidence. Some of my hon. friends are attacking the whole clause, and question whether we should make the accused either a competent or compellable witness; others restrict their opinion as to whether the accused should be a compellable witness. I am prepared to advocate both. Under the English Explosives Act the accused is a competent witness, which I think is in the interest of justice. I suppose many hon. gentlemen in this House know that this principle prevails in prosecutions in other cases which are brought in criminal courts. Take the case of rape, where a woman goes into the witness box and charges a man with that crime. She gives her version of the story, while the only man in the world who ought to be in a position to state the facts, is incompetent to testify, and a clapper is put upon his mouth, and he is told to hold his tongue whilst his life and everything valuable to him is being sworn away.

An hon. MEMBER. Make him a competent witness.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When Mr. Plimsoll introduced his Act a few years ago about load-lines, it provided for prosecutions being brought against parties and introduced this same principle. In the Canada Temperance Act, you make a party a competent witness, but you fail to make him a compellable one; or rather, you made him a competent and compellable one, but you did not put in a provision, which is in this Act, that the party should not be excused from answering any question, whether tending to criminate or not, and the result was that that clause became in that Act a dead letter. The judges ruled that although he was a competent and compellable witness, he was to be excused from answering any questions tending to criminate himself. The result was that the whole thing failed. But I approve of this Bill, because it not only makes him a competent and compellable witness, but it goes further and provides that the clause shall not be ineffective, in the sense that a man shall not be able to escape from answering a question, although it may tend to criminate him. Take cases of assault. This Parliament, with almost unanimous consent, has provided that a man who is tried for an assault, shall be as competent a witness as the prosecutor who puts him into the box; and he ought to be. I think it is a monstrous thing to say that the man, above all others, who knows the facts, should have his mouth closed and should not be able to give evidence. What do you do next? You say that if a crime is committed in the presence of the man's wife, the woman shall not be allowed to go into the box and be compelled to tell the truth. It is in the interest of justice, however, that crime should be punished, and that such parties should give evidence. No fear need be entertained that undue weight would be attached to their testimony. If such a witness did not tell the truth, the court and the jury would be present and would hear the evidence, and it would be sifted. But the trend of modern legislation has always been in this direction. I submit that if the House of Lords, after full discussion by a majority of eminent jurists, such as Lord Cranborne, affirmed the principle of this Bill, we should not occupy the position that we are more conservative than the House of Lords, and that we fear danger from such legislation when those experienced statesmen and jurists tell us that such apprehensions are unfounded. This is the position taken by the House of Lords time and again. I am not quite sure whether such a principle was adopted by the House of Commons, but I think such was the case. I remember when the late member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) introduced a Bill embodying this principle, which passed its second reading and was referred to a committee, and I am, therefore, surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite should now take such strong grounds against this Bill. So far as regards the propriety of making such persons competent witnesses, there was no dissenting voice. History has shown that the parties who know most about the occurrences should be admitted as competent and compellable witnesses. The only danger is that such a change in the law might promote perjury, but that objection has been answered by our experience in regard to civil matters and quasi-criminal matters, which shows that it is not desirable, from the fear of perjury taking place, to prevent those who best know the facts from testifying. This is in the interest of the accused himself. It is not legislation against the accused, but in the interest of the accused, and in the interest of the only class of accused persons with whom we should have sympathy, namely, accused parties who are innocent. You place such a party in the box and you allow the prosecutor to say what he likes, and at the same time you shut the mouth of the accused and declare that you will convict him without allowing him to tell his own story. They have made such witnesses competent all over the United States, and the result of experience there has been that the change has worked in the interest of justice. I am fully in accord with this proposed change. It does not extend too far, and it is fairly well surrounded with prudent provisions to prevent injustice being done, and while an accused is compelled to answer questions, no proceedings can be instituted against him for any statement made by him. I hold that the wife of an accused party, who knows all about the facts, should of course be competent to testify. Such a proceeding is consistent with common sense, and it is in harmony with the experience I have had in criminal courts.

Mr. CURRAN. The argument of the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier), I think, goes against the principle of examining the accused at all, either as a competent or compellable witness. In so far as the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is concerned, his idea, I think, cannot be maintained for one instant: that if it be a good thing to make a witness competent and compellable in small matters, it would be a bad thing to make him both competent and compellable in matters of great importance. I entertained for many years the opinion that has been expressed here to-day by the hon. member for Quebec. No doubt, from the training I had received and the experience I had acquired in the defence of parties brought before the criminal courts, I was against the introduction of that part of the law which made witnesses competent. But I cannot see why we should not go the whole length, since we are disposed to go the length of making a witness a competent witness, because if any accused person should refuse to go into the box and give evidence in his own behalf, when charged in a court of justice, it would be impossible, the jury and the general public being aware that he is competent to give evidence in his own behalf, that his omission should not prejudice his case, whether a man abstain from going into the witness box from nervousness or fear that he would be unable to stand the test of cross-examination. We know there are a great many people, very honest and straightforward, who are very poor witnesses indeed, and who especially under the effect of the charges that have been preferred against them, are often worse witnesses than they would be under ordinary circumstances, if they were giving testimony on behalf of or against somebody else. As you have already determined to make these witnesses competent, they should be made compellable. Let us either take this step or do away with what we resolved to do, after the long discussion that took place year after year, when the minority finally gave in to the views of the majority, the overwhelming majority of legal gentlemen, speaking from their experience and reading, expressing the opinion that they should make such witnesses competent. If a man, being competent to give evidence, should refrain from doing so, whatever cause might prevent him entering the box, it would do him more harm than if he entered it. A judge might not comment on the fact, but the jury would be prejudiced against, perhaps, an innocent man. It has been stated that it is contrary to the principle of the law in the province of Quebec. But if there is any law in which changes have been made with respect to the giving of testimony, it is in our old French law. During the time I have been at the bar myself, there have been a number of changes in regard to the competency of witnesses to give testimony. We have eliminated from our law many prohibitions which existed thirty or forty years ago, and experience has taught us that, whatever may have been the cause that induced such legislation in days gone by, we have done right in making the changes we have made in our civil law with respect to the competency of persons to give testimony. It is very true, that the objections here made have a great deal of weight in the minds of many, especially the objection that such a change would be liable to cause many persons to perjure themselves, when forced into the witness box. But the same practice prevails in civil matters. We never find a person brought up to give evidence against himself in civil matters who will absolutely agree with the other party. There is always a difference and a marked difference, but not such a difference as that the court and jury may not be enlightened by what is brought before them. Again, the hon. member for Quebec said he remembers cases, and there are several of them in France, where, because the parties were examined, as they are examined there, they have given answers which they did not intend to give. We need not go to France for that. I have seen persons plead guilty at a preliminary examination, who did not know the consequences of the expressions they were uttering. They did not know they were charged with a serious offence, and they meant to plead guilty to some minor offence. I hardly consider that what the hon. gentleman has said in that respect, is any answer to the argument made by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). As I said in opening my remarks, I am confident of this: That we should either allow the law to remain as it is, or if we make the accused competent witnesses, or we should go the full length, that, being competent, they should be compellable.

Mr. LISTER. The speech of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) was a strong argument in favour of making a prisoner a competent witness in a criminal case. My hon. friend spoke in pathetic terms of the unfortunate position of a man, or his wife, who, perhaps, was the only one who knew all the circumstances, being prevented from entering the witness box. But my hon. friend will remember that there is no attempt on my part to prevent a prisoner from going into the witness box if he thinks proper. We all agree that that principle is correct, and we all agree that his wife should have the right to testify if she thinks proper. What we complain of is: That we abandon, so to speak, the tradition of a thousand years, and that we remove, at one stroke, all the tenderness, and care, and thoughtfulness, that the law throws around a man to be tried. No other English-speaking colony in the world has passed such a law as this, which says to the prisoner: Guilty or innocent, we can compel you to go into the witness box and testify. If this law is passed, the temptation to commit perjury is so great that there will be an epidemic of perjury in this country which has never been seen before, not excepting the days when the Scott Act was in force. Such a law as this was never previously introduced into this House. The law that was introduced during the past ten years, session after session, was a law making it permissible for the accused to testify on his own behalf. No person, that I ever heard, ever argued that a person accused should be compelled to go into the witness box; but it was contended that he should have the option and right to do so. If you compel him to testify, you are placing a criminal law upon the Statute-book that does not exist in England, or in any one of her colonies; and when my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) says you are following the English law, I think, perhaps, he is unconsciously making a mistake. Section 4 would indicate that it comes from 16 and 17 Vic., chap. 83, but I would point out to the House that only the latter part of section 4 is taken from section 16 and 17 Vic.; that is, that a woman shall not be compelled to disclose a communication made to her husband, or by her husband to her. This law now proposed is a novel one, and is untried. We who have given attention to the practice of law know that the rule has ever been in England that a man is assumed to be innocent until he is proven to be guilty. The law throws around him that protection which this Bill proposes to remove. Another rule is, that a man shall not be bound or compelled to incriminate himself, which applies to all witnesses now, but we say that we shall make a distinction, and that we shall say to a witness: You shall not be bound to incriminate yourself, but you must incriminate yourself or else you must commit perjury. Is that a fair position in which to place the accused? In the United States they have a law making an accused person a competent witness for himself; it was his privilege to go into the witness box or not. I have some acquaintance with legal gentlemen on the other side of the line, and I have yet to hear that that law has not worked remarkably well, at all events in the state of Michigan. As I said before, for the purpose of protecting and keeping the old rule, as far as possible, in force, neither counsel nor judge is allowed to refer to the fact that the accused has not gone into the witness box to testify. But my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Curran) would lead us to believe that the mere fact of the accused not going into the witness box is sufficient to justify a jury in inferring that a man was guilty, because he had not sworn he was innocent. I think the House should not take this step. I think we should first say that we will give a man the right to testify in his own behalf, and we will remove what is a relic of barbarism, namely, that a man should not be allowed to tell his own story. We should first say that we will give him a right to testify, but we should not force him to convict himself, or commit the great crime of perjury. I believe that making the accused a competent witness, without compelling him to testify, would accomplish the object of law-reformers for the last fifty years. Try that principle before you take the bold step of forcing a person, accused of crime, to testify against himself.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. the Solicitor-General, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), hardly understood my proposition, or neither of them would have advanced the arguments which they did. They stated that it was not good logic to apply this law to a smaller offence, if it were not applied to a more serious one. They omitted to consider that my proposition was simply an application of the present law in civil cases to criminal cases. Our present law makes every man in a civil suit competent and compellable as a witness, and my proposition was to make this law applicable to offences punishable by a money fine. I am advancing nothing new in that. It is the application of the principle that our present civil law recognizes. My proposition was to make offences, punishable in the first instance by fines, come within this Act.

Mr. CURRAN. Why stop there?

Mr. TISDALE. I will tell you. I say that such a rule would not put the prisoner on the horns of a dilemma between convicting himself or committing perjury. My proposition is simply to carry out the principle which our legislation has already recognized, that is, that in cases involving money matters the parties interested shall be competent and compellable.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have you not gone further than that in cases of offences against females ?

Mr. TISDALE. We may have gone further in some cases ; but I am speaking of this Act, and it is not illogical for me to say that we should make our law consistent by providing that in a case which is only a matter of pounds, shillings and pence, that is, where the offence is punishable simply by a fine, the law should be applicable just as in civil cases. Coming to the other branch of the subject, I quite agree with the hon. member for Queen's, that the trend of modern legislation with regard to evidence has been in the direction in which the Bill goes ; but I think we should have great regard for the ancient traditions to which I have referred. We are asked to do what no legislative body, British or foreign, under free institutions, has yet done. Not a single state in the Union has gone so far. In the state of New York, I think to the present day the prisoner is simply allowed to make a statement, not under oath. It is optional with him to do it or not, and the court cannot question him in regard to the statement he chooses to make. It is wholly a matter of privilege, in recognition of the old British rule on which our criminal institutions are founded, that a man is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. Therefore, I think we should pause before we go the length proposed, and my proposition is simply to make the law consistent by including all cases which are simply matters of dollars and cents, and not go beyond what the actual experience of judges and magistrates shows to be safe. I admit that my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has the best of the argument ; logically, it is almost unanswerable, when he says that the tribunal should be the best judge of everybody's capacity to tell the truth ; but experience teaches us that we should never lose sight of those old principles which have been evolved in British courts of justice, and not change them too rapidly. Therefore, while I am quite prepared to go the length of making these persons competent witnesses, I would not go the length of making them compellable.

Mr. MULOCK. There are two distinct principles involved in this clause. One is as to the admissibility of the evidence of the accused himself ; the other is as to the extent to which the wife or the husband of the accused may be compellable or competent to give evidence. With regard to the latter, it seems as if the proviso contemplated throwing some safeguard around the husband or the wife ; but I hardly think it reaches the end aimed at. We will assume that the husband is the accused. It says that the wife shall not be compellable to give evidence of admissions made by her husband to her during coverture ; but if she takes advantage of the privilege when a question is put to her, the practical effect is to produce an impression of guilt. Therefore, the saving clause is a dead letter. When she is asked if her husband has made certain admissions to her, and she says : " I claim the privilege of the Act," what effect is that going to have on the jury ? You must either prejudice the case or else compel her to abandon the privilege. So that I think we are face to face with the main question, whether under any circumstances the wife should testify on admissions made to her during coverture. I am opposed to that feature of the Bill. I think we make a mistake in interfering in the slightest degree in the communications between husband and wife, or in the trust and confidence that they repose in each other. It is a radical departure, and I think that feature of this Bill ought to be omitted. Referring to the previous section 3, which has been declared carried, if the object of it is to make an accused person competent and a compellable witness in the case in which he is being tried, the clause does not, I think, meet the case. According to the section he is only competent in a case of actual crime. If that means a case in which he has been found guilty, he is not a witness.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is not the object. We are merely putting into this Bill the existing law on that point, that interest in the proceedings or previous crime, for instance a conviction of perjury, will not affect the competency of a witness. It is the old principle that interest or crime does not disqualify, which is reaffirmed by this Bill, in order that this Bill may contain all our statute law on the subject of evidence. I think the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is mistaken as to this not having been adopted in any English-speaking colony or the United States, because I find in the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1892, that in any case proceeding before a justice of the peace, mayor, or police magistrate, the defendant or the wife or husband of the defendant may be compelled to give evidence.

Mr. LISTER. That relates only to minor offences.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They were all the subjects within the jurisdiction of the Legislature. I do not see the logic in saying that for minor offences there shall be one law and for graver offences there shall be another. It would be a great anomaly to say that the defendant, in case of assault, should be competent, but that in a case in which he is defending his life he shall not be allowed to give evidence in his own behalf.

Mr. MULOCK. What good is the evidence of a person on trial for life ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That depends entirely on the way in which he gives his evidence, on the way it is supported by other evidence and on the way it is supported by circumstances. I admit that if we take, as jurors sometimes do, one piece of evidence to be as good as another, the law will be futile, and so will any law on the subject of evidence. I admit it requires greater direction and discretion the moment we open wider the door to the admission of any kind of testimony, but the evidence of a person accused of a capital offence may be conclusive, as indicating how the crime was committed by another than himself, or how it was homicide by misadventure or in self-defence. His evidence may be so supported by circumstances, or so connected with other testimony, or so consistent with the testimony of the prosecution, as to lead absolutely to the conviction in the mind of the tribunal that he is innocent. Or if it be simply a bald assertion of his innocence or a denial of the other witnesses, it may be absolutely worthless; but we will give him the benefit of it, whether it weighs much or little, and we will also give the administration of justice the benefit. So that when it comes to the question whether he is to be compellable or not in graver offences, surely, in the investigation of graver offences, the needs of justice are greater than in trivial offences, and the argument stronger. As to the proviso being different in this respect, that the testimony of husband or wife ought to be inadmissible, as regards statements made during the marital relation, I would suggest that an hon. gentleman should draft an amendment, and test the sense of the committee on that point before we take a vote on the main clause, because the main question is with regard to the witness being compellable.

Mr. LISTER. Suppose the Crown does not call a witness and the witness does not offer himself, does the hon. gentleman think that ought to be a subject of comment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In that case comment would not amount to very much, because there would be an obvious answer. When the counsel for the Crown comments on the fact that the accused did not go into the box, the answer would be: why did you not put him in? I know that in some of the Bills introduced on this subject, comment is not allowed on the omission of the accused to avail himself of his right to give evidence. But I do not see that any one need be so very much afraid of the comments of counsel. The jurors are not often persuaded by what one counsel argues or infers, and his arguments and inferences are subject to revision by the judge. If it is a fact that, owing to the particular circumstances of the case, an inference can be fairly drawn, I do not see why the jurors should not be reminded of it.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not know that I have very much to say on the general question, except that I feel this is a very important matter, introducing a very radical change in the system of criminal evidence. I do not think that we ought to do it too hastily or upon mere theory. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) that any interest would be served by making a witness competent only and not compellable.

It seems to me that all the temptation to commit perjury is put upon him when you allow him to go into the box and testify in his own behalf. If he is going to commit perjury at all, the opportunity of supporting his own case will give him all the temptation possible. With regard to his being compellable, I can scarcely imagine a case where the Crown officer would take such an extreme position as to call in the prisoner in the hope of getting anything out of him leading to conviction. Practically, it seems to me that the matter will remain as it is. If the Crown can make a case out of the prisoner's mouth when he becomes a witness on his own behalf, it will rely on that, but will not call in the prisoner as his witness. I sympathize with the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) in his view with regard to husband and wife. That seems to me a more radical provision than the other. It is of extreme importance that the family should be preserved in every respect. I think it is of importance equal to that of the detection of crime that absolute faith should remain in the sacredness of domestic confidence. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) that it would not be wise for us to allow the wife or the husband to go upon the witness stand at all with regard to the crime of the other. This introduces another element altogether, it introduces another principle. If this clause is adopted we are disturbing the relation which is at the very foundation of society; we are introducing an element of restraint and unrest there. Even if a woman has married a criminal, they have their family around them, and, so far as their domestic life is concerned, it should not be overshadowed by the man's crime. I think the House should pause before it makes a husband or wife a compellable or even a competent witness with regard to accusations against the other.

Mr. TISDALE. I move that section 4 be amended to read as follows:—

Every person charged with an offence shall be a competent and compellable witness, whether the person so charged is so charged solely or jointly with any other person.

And so on. That removes the reference to husband and wife from the clause.

Mr. McLEOD. For my part I had a strong opinion before this debate and I confess that that opinion is unchanged. I do not believe in making a person charged with a crime a compellable witness. I think we have gone far enough even when we make him a competent witness. I listened to the address of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) and, if his view is correct, it is useless to make the accused a compellable witness. I hold that it is the duty of the Crown to make out a case against the prisoner before he is convicted, and if the prisoner desires to become a witness, this Act should give him that permission. This is in accord with the general legislation of other countries, and I think we ought not go beyond. I think it would be wise to follow the section approved by the committee last year:

(a.) A person so charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act, without his consent;

(b.) The wife or husband of the person charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act, without the consent of the person so charged, save that where a man is charged under any of the provisions of the Criminal Code of 1892, specified in Schedule 8 of this Act, his wife may be called as a witness without his consent.

I think that covers the question with reference to the wife, and as to the general section, I think that "compellable" should be struck out.

Mr. FRASER. I think, with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey), we ought to be very careful about invading the sacredness of the domestic relation. The effort to compel the wife or husband to give the facts would not bring anything like as much good to the community as it would evil to the household. As the hon. gentleman says, the household is the foundation of all society, and it is useless to talk about protecting society if the household, which is its foundation, is not protected. But I agree with the Minister of Justice (Sir John Thompson) that parties themselves should be not only competent but compellable. From having taken part in a fair number of criminal cases I am led to this conclusion. I have known as many innocent parties suffer as guilty parties escape under the present system. You will often find it impossible to detect crime by the present mode of administering the law, and you will find it possible, under the present system, to have innocent parties found guilty. There can be no harm to an honest man in permitting him to go into the box and give his testimony and in getting all the testimony that he can give. Very often, as every criminal lawyer knows, small circumstances decide the case—the position of the man at a particular time and many other things, and often a few words of explanation from the person accused of crime would explain the whole matter.

Mr. LISTER. Would not that be covered if he was made a competent witness?

Mr. FRASER. It might be up to that point, but there are many circumstances in his favour which are interpreted as against him when he does not give his evidence as would be accepted against him when he does give his evidence. You want both; you want him to be competent and you want him to be compellable, in order that the public may find out whether he is the guilty party or not. He is also guarded by his own counsel. There is very little fear of his counsel producing him if he is a criminal, or one who by his evidence will convict himself. But the public, I think, have certain rights also, and, while I agree with one of the hon. members, who stated that the Crown would not be likely to call him, unless they could gain by it, still the power the Crown would have of compelling him to give evidence would lead the accused, through his counsel, or even without a counsel, to plead guilty when otherwise he would raise a defence. Everything considered, I believe, and I came to the conclusion years ago, that this should be the law. No injustice could be done to honest men, and great injustice may be done to the public without this protection.

Mr. AMYOT. Question.

Mr. TISDALE. I want to make my amendment understood. I want to strike out of the section such words as will leave it to provide that neither husband nor wife can be either competent or compellable in criminal cases against each other.

Mr. AMYOT. We understand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not in favour of that, for one.

Mr. AMYOT. We understand that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose I may state my reasons against it. This is one of the most important provisions we have ever been asked to vote on in Parliament, and I think we may well take time to discuss and understand it. I admit the force of the argument of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey). I think there is a good deal in it. But we must remember that, in the interest of the accused party, it may be desirable and necessary that he should be allowed the benefit of his wife's testimony. Under this clause, though she may be the one witness competent to prove his innocence, you will not allow her to testify. Is that fair or reasonable? If you make the man himself competent and compellable, why not extend the same right and responsibility to his wife?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The proposition in amendment made by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) goes farther than the objection raised by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey). The hon. gentleman proposes merely that conversations between husband and wife shall be privileged, but the amendment makes both husband and wife incompetent to testify for or against each other. Why? Because there is the marriage tie and the interest and affection. But why should we make this law when the accused himself is competent? If the accused, for instance, is in danger of being hanged he has more interest than his wife, and, if the question of interest is to weigh, there is more reason for excluding his testimony than for excluding hers. But let us consider how many cases there are. My hon. friend from Queen's mentioned one of them, the case of a wife proving an alibi. There may be many others, in which mitigating circumstances are to be proved to save a man's life and exonerating circumstances, as well. A man is accused, for instance, of murder, and the defence is, that a criminal assault was being committed upon his wife, and he interfered to save her life or honour; and yet she is not allowed to testify in this case. The husband goes into the box himself, although he has a greater interest, because his life is in jeopardy, but he is not allowed to corroborate his statement by the person whose life or honour he was interfering to protect. So in the case where the object is to reduce the charge to one of manslaughter. He may be competent to prove a violent assault, which provoked a murderous attack from which the victim dies. In all these circumstances, it is false philosophy to say that we respect family relations so much that we would rather allow an innocent man to suffer death than allow family secrets to be disclosed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I can understand how you can take an innocent party and compel him to be a witness, but how are you going to compel the guilty party to testify? Do you propose to say that if he absolutely refuses to give testimony, he is to be held guilty? Are you going to adopt the old rule that prevailed at one time, where a party might refuse to plead? How is the law to be enforced? You put a man on trial for his life. If he is convicted, that means death, or it may be fourteen years in the penitentiary, and he may come to the conclusion that he is not likely to be convicted if he refuses to testify. Now, how do you propose to deal with that question in such a case? It seems to me that you are bound to consider the difficulties in the way, in undertaking to make such a rule, as well as to see what the rule would amount to, if it were to be applied in every case. I am unable myself to see how such a rule is to be enforced, unless you are to make the punishment for violation of the rule even greater than the punishment that is attached to the offence of which he is accused.

Mr. LISTER. The Minister of Justice has supposed a case where an assault was committed upon a woman, and her husband kills the assailant in defence of her honour, and perhaps, her life. He says he ought to be a witness for the purpose of proving the offence and that he committed it in defence of his wife. But we know, as a matter of fact, that domestic relations are not always of the best character. Suppose a wife, instead of being a witness to exonerate her husband, should become a witness for the purpose of securing his conviction. There are two sides to this question.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The family relations, under these circumstances, are not worth protecting.

Mr. LISTER. There might be great motives for getting rid of family relations under these circumstances.

Mr. TISDALE moved that clause 4 be struck off and replaced by the following:—

Every person charged with an offence shall be a competent and compellable witness, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MULOCK. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Norfolk went further than I proposed it should go. All that I suggested was, that the communications and disclosures made between husband and wife should be privileged communications. Therefore, I move to strike out the word "compellable" and substitute the word "competent." The effect of this will be, that neither husband or wife will be a competent witness about disclosures made by either to the other.

Mr. TISDALE. I move in amendment to the amendment: "provided, however, that no husband or wife shall be compellable to give evidence against the other."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That does not quite answer the same purpose. My hon. friend wants to provide that if the wife is willing to become a witness, she shall not be competent to disclose what her husband said. But that amendment only says she shall not be compelled to give evidence. She may want to give evidence, but she may not want to be examined about private conversations.

Mr. TISDALE. I submit this proposition to the committee because they have decided against a broader one, that she shall not be compellable. Perhaps, we can put it in one amendment—neither to disclose communications, nor to give evidence even of facts. My previous amendment was, that they could not be called to testify against each other; my second proposition is, that they shall not be compelled. That will answer the objections of the Minister of Justice to my previous amendment, that while they are both competent, they shall not either of them be compellable.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a distinction between what a man does and what a man says. All that I am proposing now, is to place no restraint upon the right of a husband and wife, and the freedom of a husband and wife to communicate with each other, and to prevent the admission that one makes to another being taken as evidence. The proviso purports to protect the husband or wife, as the case may be, but practically it amounts to no protection. The proviso says they shall not be compellable. That concedes the principle I aim at; but practically it does not, because, when a woman is in the witness box and a question is put to her as to what her husband has said, she may claim the privilege of the proviso, and claim it in the presence of the court and jury. This is tantamount to producing an impression of guilt, although it is possible there may be explanations, and that if she went on to tell the whole story she might produce a different impression. She is compelled by circumstance, she is put in a false position by the act itself at the trial. I say you are pretending to give her protection that you are practically denying her. You are making it unsafe for husband and wife to talk to each other. I, therefore, move to strike out the word "compellable" in the 17th and 19th lines, and to substitute therefor the word "competent."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. TISDALE moved that the following words be added to section 4:—

Provided no wife or husband of the accused shall be called as a witness against the accused, without the consent of such accused.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 21.

Mr. LISTER moved that the words "and compellable" in the 15th line be struck out.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 27.

On section 5.

Mr. DICKEY. I understand this clause applies to all criminal proceedings and all witnesses in such proceedings. So there would be a different rule prevailing with regard to cross-examination in criminal and civil proceedings. If a prisoner were to call in his defence a witness who was guilty of violation of the Scott Act, the prosecuting counsel might ask him if he had not sold liquor, and he might be compelled to admit that he had; or in the case of other witnesses, they might be compelled to admit that they were guilty of crimes that had never been proved against them, and which they never had the opportunity of defending. Such a person, although he might have been guilty of a violation of the law such as I have indicated, might be competent to give valuable testimony. It appears to me that this is an entirely new feature of the law, and I do not at present see why the change should be carried out.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The change proposed is necessary to make the law of evidence conformable to the previous section. Although we have provided that a man shall be competent to be called in his own behalf, he is nevertheless, unless we pass a section like this, entitled to protection against questions which would tend to criminate him. The next point raised by my hon. friend is as to whether in cross-examination such a person should be asked questions which might criminate him. This provision does not change the law of evidence as regards relevancy.

Mr. DICKEY. Does not the Minister of Justice think that all purposes would be served by a provision being inserted that a witness under such circumstances should not claim any privilege in regard to criminating himself? The character of a witness is relevant, and it is possible to discredit, if this section is allowed to stand, a witness out of his own mouth by proving that he has been guilty of an offence which is unknown to any one except himself. It seems to me that you will, without any good end that I can see, subject every man who comes into a witness box in a criminal suit, to all sorts of questions with regard to any possible violation of law that he may have committed. I think it would be relevant to the character of the witness which the other side adduced, and therefore there cannot be any objection to it on the ground of relevancy. I think it would be better to confine it to a witness who was called, or who offers himself in his own behalf.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman, as I understand, appreciates the necessity for the clause.

Mr. DICKEY. Quite so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And the only point is whether in cross-examination you should be allowed to go into the history of the witness, and examine him on matters irrelevant to the issue. Supposing a man was called, and counsel, for motives which were not commendatory, chose to ask him questions on matters foreign to the issue, but which tend to damage his character, it is questionable under this clause whether he should have the privilege to answer.

Mr. TISDALE. My hon. friend (Mr. Dickey) has no objection to the clause as it stands in regard to the parties to the suit. The point he makes, and which is worthy of consideration, although I cannot say I agree with him now, is, that persons who are called as witnesses can be cross-examined in regard to wholly irrelevant matters, the distinction being that counsel are bound by their answers, whereas, of course, in case of parties to the suit, they are not bound to the same extent.

Mr. FRASER. There is a good deal in what the member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) said. The clause shows that the questions may be of a varied character, covering almost any crime a witness may have been guilty of. The clause might not be a very great hardship when a competent judge presided, because I can see he would not permit other than relative questions.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But it says "no persons shall be excused."

Mr. FRASER. Even in view of that I am sure a competent judge would decide against irrelevant evidence.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I do not see that this clause alters the nature of a question that may be put to a witness. At present the witness may shelter himself from answering, on the ground that he may incriminate himself, and this clause merely prevents that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. At present, as my hon. friend has just said, a question may be put to a witness as to whether he stole a horse or not, and he is not obliged to answer. This clause goes the length in the interest of justice, of compelling him to answer in order to see what kind of a witness he is, and whether his testimony is worthy of credence; but it saves him from the consequences of answering, because it says that the admission shall not be given in evidence afterwards.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The only change made is, that a person is compelled to give evidence that would incriminate himself, but he cannot be incriminated by so doing. Amongst writers on the subject on evidence, it is a question whether there ought to be such liberty in cross-examination with the view of ascertaining the credibility of a witness. I think that in a great many cases—I do not say among men of eminence at the bar it is so—but in a great many cases a person is cross-examined with regard to acts in his past life, not with a view of getting the evidence or testing his credibility, but with a view of wounding his sensibilities because he has come into court as a witness. It always seemed to me that there was more mischief than advantage from such latitude being allowed in cross-examination. This clause, although it protects the party from its admission, rather extends the existing rule than limits it.

Mr. DICKEY. I think there would be reluctance on the part of a witness to come into court, who might not be of good character, but whose evidence on a certain point might be credible, if this clause were adopted. I propose to amend the clause by striking out the proviso. That carries out the preceding clause, but it does not affect the other witnesses who are called in criminal cases.

Mr. TISDALE. That will not remedy the present abuses which exist, and they are great. At present a man may refuse to answer and cannot be compelled if he says that the question may tend to incriminate him. That is one of the most important questions in the law of evidence that we have, and I believe that it should be amended so that witnesses shall not hide themselves behind a subterfuge of that kind. The amendment is so broad that it will only tend to perpetuate the present state of things in this regard.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no more controverted question in the law of evidence, I suppose, than the one which the hon. gentleman has just raised. There is a great deal of difference of opinion on the question. My own experience disposes me to coincide with the view expressed by my hon. friend who has moved the amendment, that many witnesses whose characters for years have been irreproachable have been subjected to cruel torture in cross-examination. I understood that this clause was not intended to alter the general law of evidence, but that it is inserted for the purpose of making effective the provisions of sections 3 and 4. That being the case, I am disposed to favour the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FRASER. Even if the amendment is adopted, I do not see why the proviso should be left out.

Mr. DICKEY. I am satisfied with the proviso.

Mr. MULLOCK. I hardly think the clause is open to the criticism which has just been made by the hon. member for Queen's. He says that a witness may be subjected to exquisite torture by reference to his past life.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was speaking with reference to cross-examination.

Mr. MULLOCK. But the section says that the witness shall not be excused from answering any question simply because the answer may leave him open to a criminal or civil prosecution. If a witness has committed a crime of which he has not yet paid the penalty to society, I do not think he should be relieved of answering simply because it might result in putting him in that position. I think that is all the more reason why he should be compelled to answer.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. It is not an uncommon thing to find a witness in a criminal proceeding protecting himself from answering a question by stating that the answer would tend to criminate him. For example, a witness is asked a certain question which has nothing to do with the offence which is being tried. The question may be a fishing question, or it may be put with the object of discrediting the witness, and the witness says, "I refuse to answer on the ground that the answer will criminate me. I, for my part, would not object to his having that protection in regard to matters other than the offence which is being tried. But if he were asked, for instance: "Did you not know that this man was going to commit this crime before he committed it?" I do not think he should be protected from answering that on the same ground. I think he should be compelled to answer, and the section might be amended in that respect. But that is as far as we should go. To allow a witness to be asked questions about all the offences of which he might have been guilty from his childhood up, and to make use of his answers as a foundation for indictments against him, would, I think, be going too far.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was fully the intention of the draughtsmen and the committee to make the section go beyond the scope which my hon. friend has just suggested. When one realizes the extent of the protection which a witness now enjoys, I think one is driven to the conclusion that it is too great. How often have we seen a witness claim immunity from answering a question on the ground that the answer might tend to criminate him; and he is not bound to tell why it may tend to criminate him. If he is asked what he was doing at a certain hour of the night, he may say that the answer would tend to criminate him. How often have we seen persons believed to be accessories to a crime giving their testimony very adroitly, and upon cross-examination parrying questions with the answer that if they answered it they would tend to criminate them; and so their carefully prepared story is guarded from cross-examination. It seems to me that the protection afforded in the proviso, that the evidence given shall not be available in any criminal proceeding thereafter taken against the witness, we give him as much protection as he is entitled to.

Mr. McLEOD. I think that this section goes too far. Its object, of course, is to make sections 3 and 4 effective, but the accused should not be bound to suffer examination on every crime he may have committed, or may have been supposed to commit during his life.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would be very willing to support the amendment which practically confines the operation of this section to the person who will give evidence under the preceding section. It leaves the law as it stands with respect to other witnesses to-day, and merely gives effect to the provision we have already asserted that the person charged with the offence or the wife or husband may be competent to give evidence. In that sense I am prepared to support the amendment, that no person shall be excused from answering any question material to the issue being tried.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment now before the House is as follows:—

No person giving evidence under the preceding section, shall be excused from answering any question material to the issue upon the ground, &c.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. McINERNEY. Section 5 provides that no evidence so given shall be used against such person in any criminal proceeding. Should not the person be also relieved in case of any civil proceeding?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I take it for granted that we cannot bar a civil action, that we have not jurisdiction for that. We can only deal with the evidence given in a criminal case and with the use of that evidence in any criminal proceeding. It is upon that principle that we do not undertake to protect him in any civil proceeding.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Supposing a man claims that the answer to a question will have a direct tendency to degrade his character? It has not been decided affirmatively or the other way that he can refuse to answer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that has been decided negatively.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think so. It is purely in the clouds yet. I do not think there has been any express decision one way or the other. The books treat it as a point in question yet.

On section 6,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As I understand this section, the object of it is a very good one. But who is to decide in what way the witness shall make his evidence intelligible?

Mr. MULOCK. The court would supply an interpreter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) By inherent power?

Mr. MULOCK. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The clause seems to me defective. The witness seems to be made the judge as to the manner in which he shall give his testimony.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The persons who receive the evidence are to decide. If it is not intelligible it does not reach their understanding. This is the way it is expressed by Stephen, who proposed that it should be the law, and some of the Ontario judges have called attention to the necessity for it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The intention is excellent, but I was in doubt about the construction.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are deaf mutes who can write and no doubt they would be allowed to write their evidence. There are some who are both blind and deaf, and I suppose some form of questions could be devised to bring out their evidence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand. As the law of England now stands it does not understand evidence given by signs. You introduce a very desirable amendment, providing that the witness who is not able to speak shall be allowed to make himself intelligible in any way he can. But how will you secure that end without in some way giving the court power to carry it out?

On section 7,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the thirty-sixth line the words "now forms part of Canada" should be amended so as to read, "now forms, or may hereafter form, part of Canada." I move that that amendment be made.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 10,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This clause is taken from the Revised Statutes of Ontario, and I wish to call attention to some parts of it. It makes any record or proceeding before any justice of the peace in any province in Canada, evidence in any other part of Canada. I do not know but that this provision might be a very serious thing in a criminal case. I do not object to the record of any court, but it is questionable whether a proceeding before a justice of the peace simply should be evidence when signed by the justice of the peace.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see that this does not make it evidence. It only points to the way in which it can be proved.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No; it does not make it evident in itself, but it dispenses with any necessity of proof that the person is a justice of the peace, or that it is his signature attached to it. We know that in courts of record where they have seals, the very affixing of seals is considered to be sufficient evidence that the document is an authorized one. I call attention to the fact that in some parts of the Dominion, some justices of the peace are, to say the least of it, uneducated men, and I am not quite sure that they are exactly of that class that would entitle a memorandum signed by them to be received in criminal cases—because we must remember that is what this is. In criminal cases it is proposed to dispense with the necessity of proof that the person really holds the position he purports holding, and that it is his signature.

It being six o'clock, the committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill No. 23) respecting witnesses and evidence.

(In the Committee.)

On section 16,

Mr. MULOCK. I find that this is not a literal transcript of the corresponding clause in the Revised Statutes. There a copy of the "Canada Gazette" is simply made prima facie evidence, whereas this makes it absolute evidence.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the effect is the same; but I have no objection to leaving it as it is in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MULOCK. The fact that it varies is sure to be argued as a reason that it means something else.

On section 19,

Mr. LISTER. I think the section ought to fix the time of the notice. In the province of Ontario the usual time is ten days, and if copies of documents are to be used as evidence the other side should be apprised of the fact and given sufficient time to ascertain whether the copies to be used are copies of genuine documents or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the limit in most of the provinces is ten days. It was left to the judge to fix the time, in order to allow some latitude in the event of the documents having to be sent long distances.

Mr. MULOCK. The very reason the Minister states renders it unwise to fix any limit. For instance, the trial might be in British Columbia, and the documents wanted might be in Ottawa.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will provide that the time shall be not less than ten days.

On section 21,

Mr. AMYOT. I would like to make that clause clear. I would suggest this amendment:

Evidence of the service of any warrant, summons or other document may be made by a return of the same in writing under oath, either of office or taken before a justice of the peace.

This is the law at present in Quebec in civil matters.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would suggest that the clause be altered in this way to meet the wish of the hon. gentleman:

In all proceedings over which the Parliament of Canada has legislative authority the laws of evidence in force in the province in which proceedings are taken, include the laws of proof of service of any warrant, summons, subpoena or other document, &c.

Mr. AMYOT. That amendment will meet the difficulty.

On section 23,

Mr. LISTER. This is changing the law considerably. By allowing the person to take oath or make an affirmation at his option, he will do the latter, and there are many people who would not make a false statement under oath but who would not hesitate to do so in an affirmation. Unless the party has conscientious scruples to taking an oath, I think he should be compelled to do so. Otherwise you might as well not make the oath necessary at all.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. You desire to provide for an objection on conscientious grounds?

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that clause 25 be amended so as to read:

If a person called or desiring to give evidence objects on grounds of conscientious scruples to take the oath or is objected to as incompetent to take the oath, &c.

Motion agreed to.

On section 24,

Mr. LISTER. As to that clause, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the objection to clause 23 holds here also. If a man refuses to be sworn he makes himself liable to contempt or punishment by the court. I do not think he ought to be relieved from the duty he owes of taking an oath by simply saying, I will make an affirmation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. You want the same words repeated here.

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved to insert the words "on grounds of conscientious scruples."

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to add a clause that this Act shall come into force on the 1st July, 1893, so as to give plenty of time for it to be understood. I move that the clause be added.

Motion agreed to.

On schedule A,

Mr. MULLOCK. I was going to suggest to the Minister that it would be advisable to add to the declaration. While the law says that a declaration has the force of an affidavit and that any one guilty of making a false declaration is liable for perjury, the declarants do not appear to know that. Thus declarations are made with great laxity because there is nothing to warn the declarant that he is really taking oath, and I believe it would be advisable to add some words like these, I, A. B., do solemnly declare that," &c., "and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing this to be true, and knowing that this declaration is of the same force and effect as if made under oath." This would call his attention to his responsibility.

Motion agreed to; and Bill, as amended, reported.

SUPPLY—CONSTITUTION OF THE CABINET.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before you leave the Chair, I desire to bring before the notice of this House a matter which, I think, deserves to be considered and discussed by the House. We have had of late a great deal of discussion on the matter of tariff reform, and we have had a great deal of interest manifested over the discussion of that question. The question which I propose is an important one; it has reference to a reform in the Cabinet. I do not know but there is room for a reform there, and probably it is about as much needed as is tariff reform. I think, Mr. Speaker, you will agree with me that we have the largest Cabinet at the present time we ever had in Canada—I refer to numbers. I think we have three or four more in the Cabinet now than we ever had, and it is on that subject I propose to take up the attention of the House for a short time. You will remember, Sir, that in 1887 a Bill was introduced into this House, proposing to abolish the Department of Inland Revenue and the Customs Department, and to appoint a Minister of Trade and Commerce. The abolition of the two offices removed the members from the Cabinet so soon as that Bill was brought into force by the Governor in Council. I propose to inquire for a moment into the causes that lead to the introduction of that Bill, and also the Bill giving the Government power to appoint a Solicitor-General. I think, Sir, that on inquiring into these matters it will be found that it was not from a pressing demand from the country; it was not by reason of petitions that were sent in from the people; it was not by reason of any pressure arising from the tax-payers of this country, that these offices were made or contemplated. If you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, for a moment I will draw your attention to the fact that a short time before the year 1887, one Cabinet Minister suddenly resigned his seat in the Cabinet one evening, and he was restored the next evening. The resignation was withdrawn. You will also remember that another Cabinet Minister sought to put a pressure upon the Government so that he might more readily get his hands into the treasury of this country, and you will remember that it was after this occurred that these positions were created. Sometimes you hear that the end justifies the means. It is possible that the political exigencies that arose in connection with these matters at that time caused the then Premier of Canada, and the present Premier of Canada, who inroduced the Bill relating to the Solicitor-General, to introduce these Bills, and to leave them in a quiescent state until an emergency arose, so that they might be able to keep in harmony and subjection the subordinate members of the party and Cabinet. It does appear that that was the reason for the introduction of this Bill. The First Minister could state, if he saw fit, whether that was the reason that compelled him at that time to introduce a Bill empowering him, when the Governor in Council saw fit, to give force and effect to the Bill by appointing a Solicitor-General in that department. While proceeding in this inquiry you are almost forced to believe that the reasons that led to this legislation were political reasons. Neither the constitution, the circumstances nor the conditions of the country demanded that you should have a Solicitor-General, that you should have a Controller of Inland Revenue, that you should have a Controller of Customs, that you should have a Minister of Trade and Commerce. The public interest did not demand it; but in order to keep in harmony these discordant elements, this was to hang over their heads like the sword of Damocles to keep them in subjection if possible. Any one who will read the letters of the late Prime Minister to Mr. McGreevy, in the year 1884, will learn the difficulties that the Premier had in controlling his followers, and the difficulties that threatened to submerge the Government. These difficulties did not appear to arise on public issues or public questions. The Premier indicated the causes of the difficulty, and they were not of a public character. These things led up to the creation of these offices, led up to the creation of this large Cabinet, larger in numbers than any Cabinet that we have ever had in the Dominion of Canada. Now, Sir, if you will look for a moment at the large increase of the expenditure for civil government you will be surprised that at a time like the present, when commerce is depressed, when agricultural products are low, when our markets are limited, when our ordinary debt has increased, when our ordinary expenditure has increased, and when the expenditure in connection with civil government has grown at such an alarming pace—it was a time like this, of all others since Confederation the most unfortunate, that the Government chose to revive these Acts, and appoint heads to the departments that was constituted by the proclamation. It is a matter of great astonishment to myself, that the Government should be so neglectful in obeying the wishes of the people and should so disregard their wishes as to add an alarming amount to the cost of civil government by the creation of these offices, unnecessary and uncalled for by any public requirements, demanded exclusively by reason of political exigencies. In 1868 we expended for civil government $594,441; in 1884, $1,084,417; in 1890, $1,308,846. That is the money required in order to maintain the several departments of the state. What addition will be made to the expenditure by reason of the creation of these new offices, it is difficult to determine. I am not in a position, nor is the House in a position, I presume, to know what additional cost will be involved in consequence of these additional appointments. The holders of these offices will have their staffs, including secretaries; and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, although he has no department, is to have a deputy-head and also first-class clerks and other clerks in the department, although he really has no department to govern. I cannot understand the reason why the First Minister was unable to resist the importunities of supporters and pressure from without, and allow so many to get in. Why did he not have the same amount of firmness that other Ministers have possessed, and resist the encroachments of those who were behind him and who were thrusting themselves in every conceivable way upon him, which efforts resulted in the issue of the proclamation causing these additions to the Cabinet at a time the least propitious of any time in this country since Confederation? I admit, that if times were flourishing, if the census returns showed that our country was growing in population, this action might be condoned; but under present circumstances, with the results manifested by the census returns, with the heavy expenditure for civil government, I am surprised that the First Minister was not able to resist those encroachments and preserve the Cabinet, so far as it was numerically constituted under his predecessor. Undoubtedly, the people were very much astonished when the proclamation was issued and they heard of the alarming increase in the members of the Government. In fact, they did not know but that before long every man on the Government side of the House would be in the Cabinet, or at least hold some Government position. The people were very much interested in this question. Many of the people in the west did not believe the reports were true. The First Minister went to Toronto, and all his Cabinet went with him. It was said that he went there in order to reply to a speech made by the leader of the Opposition, and the First Minister took all his Cabinet with him in order to reply effectually to that speech. This wonderful combination met in Toronto. We have a cartoon in room No. 16, showing the combination. The cartoon represents the Cabinet in its proper light, with the dissolving shades and colours. There is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, he who was once the rightful heir to the succession of King William, and whose colours were very pronounced and very orange; but in the cartoon they have lost their lustre. Probably, owing to the fact that they have lost their lustre, he has been sent to grass in order to see if he can get some colour again. Then the Controller was brought in to fill this vacuum, which so much needed to be filled. The colours that adorn him are more pronounced and of a livelier hue. I do not know how long they are going to remain a striking hue. Then, in regard to the First Minister, the green colour in his case is wholly fading; he does not preserve the rich, deep colour he possessed when he first came in, but his Solicitor-General has it to perfection. There is no vegetation in his own country so green. In that cartoon you see the happy combination forming the Cabinet, and there are the end men, too. How well they seem to be adapted to carry on in peace and harmony the great material interests of this country. Another important matter is the reconciliation of faction, and I presume the Premier found it important, if he was going, not only to be at the head of the Government, but remain there. Look at the manner in which the trade affairs of the country are to be managed by this Government. Here we have the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has not a voice in the affairs of this House; in fact, he has no voice in anything, so far as we know; he has no duties arranged to perform, and, no doubt, he will be willing for this condition to remain so long as his salary is continued. The Controller of Customs is not in the Cabinet, neither is the Controller of Inland Revenue. They have no voice in deciding the great trade question. It must be patent to every member of the Government, and to every man out of the Government, that this is an anomalous state of affairs, and in the interests of the country our trade matters should not be allowed to remain in this condition. Does it not appear that the former Government's position in regard to trade matters was a more logical one than it is under the present arrangement? I think it must appear clear to every one that the general interests of this country are in a very peculiar position. The attention of business people of all classes should be drawn to the manner in which this Government is now formed. Just imagine that there is not behind the First Minister a single Cabinet officer in the ranks who is a business man. The great lumbering interest he has none to represent, the great mining interest he has none to represent, the great agricultural interest he has none to represent, the great commercial interest he has none to represent, the great shipping interest, there is none to represent. All these interests, vital to the people of Canada are ignored in the formation of this Cabinet. Certainly among seventeen members of a Ministry there should be a place found for a representative of these large classes. It does not require that a lawyer should preside over every department. A few are not lawyers, it is true, but it is a singular thing that there are no men with business instincts qualified to fill any department of State. Every department is filled with lawyers or professional men in some capacity or other, and scarcely is a business man to be found in the Cabinet. That is a serious matter for the people of this country to consider. ANother thing is, that those who preside over the important departments of trade, in order that they should not understand what the Government are doing, were left outside the door. They could go and sit on the stool outside the door while the Government were discussing tariff changes, but the Government would not allow them in, I understand, to take part in their deliberations. Now, Sir, in examining the number of Cabinet Ministers to be found in other countries, it will strike everybody that this addition to the number of Ministers in Canada was an unwarranted abuse of power; an abuse of the prerogative which the Government should not have attempted at this particular time in our history. There are more Ministers in Canada than are to be found in almost any other country in the world, no matter what the population may be. In order to satisfy the House on this question, I have prepared a list from the best sources of information that I can find and I believe it will be found correct. The Argentine Republic, with a population of over 4,000,000, has five Cabinet Ministers; Austro-Hungary, with a population of over 41,000,000, has nine Cabinet Ministers; Belgium, with a population of 6,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Brazil, with a population of 14,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Chili, with a population of over 2,000,000, has six Cabinet Ministers; Denmark, with a population of over 2,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Ecuador, with a population of nearly 2,000,000, has four Cabinet Ministers; France, with a population of 38,000,000, has ten Cabinet Ministers; the German Empire, with a population of 49,000,000, has twelve Cabinet Ministers; Greece, with a population of over 2,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Italy, with a population of over 30,000,000, has eleven Cabinet Ministers; Mexico, with a population of over 11,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Persia, with a population of 9,000,000, has nineteen Cabinet Ministers. It will be noticed, Mr. Speaker, that our Government have closely imitated Persia, which is under the Mahommedan Koran, as there the Shah has eight Ministers without portfolio. That is one means by which they cheer those in Persia, who have no portfolio, and who are outside the door. They are told that they can find relief in the Koran. Peru, with a population of 3,000,000, has five Cabinet Ministers; the Netherlands, with a population of 4,500,000, has eight Cabinet Ministers; Portugal, with a population of nearly 5,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Roumania, with a population of 5,500,000, has nine Cabinet Ministers; Servia, with a population of over 2,000,000, has eight Cabinet Ministers; Siam, with a population of 6,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Spain, with a population of 17,500,000, has only nine Cabinet Ministers; Sweden, with a population of nearly 5,000,000, has ten Cabinet Ministers; Switzerland, with a population of nearly 3,000,000, has seven Cabinet Ministers; Turkey, with a population of 39,000,000, has only six Cabinet Ministers; the United States, with a population of 62,000,000, has only eight Cabinet Ministers; China, with a population of 402,000,000, has only six Cabinet Ministers; Japan, with a population of over 40,000,000, has only twelve Cabinet Ministers; Russia, with a population of 113,000,000, has only twelve Cabinet Ministers; the United Kingdom, with a population of over 37,000,000, has seventeen Cabinet Ministers; Ceylon, with a population of over 3,000,000, has five Cabinet Ministers; India, with a population of 220,000,000, has ten Cabinet Ministers; but Canada, with a population of 4,829,411, has fourteen Cabinet Ministers, and three stipendiaries or accessories; in all, seventeen.

Mr. AMYOT. What is the total?

Mr. LANDERKIN. The gentleman from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) wants to find out what the total is. I will give it to him; but I hope the hon. gentleman won't bolt until I tell him. Here it is. We have eight Provincial Governors and the Governor-General; nine Governors in all. We have nine Parliaments, consisting of nine representative bodies and five Senates; fifty-four Cabinet Ministers and over 700 legislators, of whom the member from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) is one. That is about the total in Canada. We pay $121,000 a year for Governors, exclusive of the cost of housing them, and $202 a year for Cabinet Ministers.

An hon. MEMBER. $202,000?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Oh, yes, $202,000 a year, for Cabinet Ministers, they would not be satisfied with $202. We pay in all $1,195,037 for legislators and their belongings. If Great Britain in proportion to her population had as many legislators as we have in Canada, 5,000 statesmen would have to be provided for at every meeting of Parliament. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree with me that this question was of sufficient importance to be brought before Parliament. The Cabinet have a little to do with the destiny of this country. Thank heaven, it is only a little. They cannot make times any better, but they can make times a little worse; that is about what a Cabinet can do. They say they cannot increase our prosperity. When they were in Opposition they could do nearly all these things; but as soon as they got into power they found that it was impossible for any Government to do anything to relieve the depression that prevailed in the country. Before they got into power they could increase the price of wheat, the price of eggs and the price of barley.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Raise the hen and set her.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, but as soon as they got in prices went down, and they said there was no use of talking, everybody knew that a Government could not do anything like that. They could not raise the prices, but they were bound to keep in force the policy that kept them down. This is a question that deserves the serious consideration of this House. It is a matter of great moment to this House and this country. If political exigencies are to be the causes for increases in the Cabinet, we ought to know it. If the great interests of the country are to be neglected in order that people may be forced into the Cabinet, though we had too many before this Government was formed, we ought to know it. It was one of the mistakes of Confederation that we had so many, and it is a greater mistake now to say that if one man has a certain colour of necktie, or another man has a certain badge, he is entitled to a seat in the Cabinet, no matter what his qualifications may be, and no matter how great industrial interests of this country may be neglected, while gentlemen who are qualified to make the Cabinet a business Cabinet, which would be alive to the commercial and agricultural interests of this country are passed over because they have not got the necessary pass-word.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire, nor do I feel able to answer the hon. member, but I want to reply to the personal attack that he has made upon me. He said that he hoped that I would not bolt before the end of his speech. He thought it would be for me a thunderbolt. He may be mistaken. I consider parties as a partnership. At a certain moment in 1885 I was dissatisfied for some reasons with my party. Those reasons may have disappeared, and they have disappeared.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That war is over.

Mr. AMYOT. Hold on; if the hon. member finds it too hot, we will send for some cold water for him. I joined the partnership which was fighting the battle which I believed in; but when I found that there were in the partnership a great many men who travelled over the country like donkey shows, when I found them trying to discover crimes committed by their opponents, without any policy of their own, and when I found that their brothers of the province of Quebec were driving my province to ruin, while the objections I had to my old party had gone, I left that partnership and returned to my old friends. There are some honourable and respectable men in the hon. gentleman's party—some serious men, but there are a great many who spend their time trying to invent all sorts of new crimes, of stories to injure the reputation of other men, instead of looking seriously after the interests of the country, actuated only by spite against the adverse party. The hon. gentleman speaks of China with 300,000,000 people led by twenty men. Does he think that any intelligent man in the country will believe that twenty men would be able to govern successfully 300,000,000? He speaks of countries at the equator. Does he know how those countries, and countries such as China and Japan, are ruled? Does he want to bring their political constitutions here? He has spent about an hour of the time of the parliament, costing, perhaps, $1,000, for what benefit? Simply to act as if we were in a circus, where a man, with bonnet on his head, and wonderful with his fists and legs, gives an exhibition. Well, Mr Speaker, there will be no bolt nor thunderbolt in his speech. The hon. gentleman has attacked me here. But whenever I am attacked, I hope God will give me force to express my sentiments. He may attack me in the press or in my county, but I hope I shall be able to give him an answer; and when the time comes to make a comparison between the two parties, I will undertake the work. But one of the reasons I left the party of the hon. gentleman was because there were too many like him in it.

THE CENSUS RETURNS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take any part in the fray which has been so gallantly maintained by the martial gentleman behind me and my medical friend. But before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the House to the instructions to the census commissioners which were lately laid on the Table. So far as I am able to discover in looking over them, I can see no reason whatever for the allegation made some time ago that any compact had been entered into with the manufacturers of Canada which would preclude us from having information as to the character of the several industrial establishments in the different towns and cities, the names of the proprietors or the number of hands they employ. As regards the capital employed, that is a mere matter of public policy. Although I can see no reason myself why it should not be given, it may be alleged that some persons would object to see that disclosed. But as for refusing the information as to the character of certain industrial establishments and the names of their proprietors, I can only say that I can discover nothing whatever in the manual of the third census of Canada, or the various forms of oaths which have been administered to our officers, at all to warrant the Government in refusing that information. I trust, therefore, and I think it will be found conducive to the expedition of public business, that no further obstacle shall be put in the way of the members of this House obtaining the information to which they are entitled in that regard. I may add that if there be one thing more than another which would be calculated to throw just suspicion on the accuracy of these same census returns, it would be persistence in that denial. I am not on the present occasion going to make any formal motion on the subject or occupy the time of the House further; but I trust that when this question comes up again, as it very shortly will, the members of the Government will reconsider the refusal they made a few days ago, and will put the House, as the House has a right to be, in full possession of all the details which we have demanded.

Mr. AMYOT.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the Finance Minister can tell the House now to what extent he thinks he would be justified in giving details of the census. A few days ago the matter was under discussion, and some of the organs of the party opposite had ventured to advise the Government upon the matter, and, if they decide to follow such advice, they will give a portion, at least, of the details asked for. For example, how can there be any public interest why the country should not know the gross number of industries, the gross number of persons employed, the gross amounts of capital involved, the gross output, and the gross amount of wages? There is no use in making motions on the subject, if the Government have shut their foot down against giving any such information at all.

Mr. FOSTER. When information was asked the other day as to the names of manufacturers in certain towns, I read to the House the information which was sent to me from the department, prepared by the deputy of the department. The answer which was sent to me was as follows:—

The information in the census schedules was obtained by sworn enumerators, on the understanding that nothing but general statistical records should be published. No names or particulars can therefore be communicated.

Now, as I was not the Minister of that department, and not personally conversant with the modus operandi in any way, I took that as the sense of the instructions and of the law from which the instructions were founded, and so gave it to the House. Afterwards the question was asked as to whether the law would carry out to the full that principle, and it seems to be certain that there is nothing in the law to prevent certain portions of that information asked for from being given. In accordance with that answer, I did not give the names and was justified, from that information, in not doing so. Afterwards, when the question was discussed, the House will remember that I gave no reasons for not giving the names, because I did not know the reasons that existed in the department, and I could not find any for myself. I said, however, that I would look into the question and have the instructions brought down, and I did that, and I think I ought to read, in justice to the deputy of the department, a memo. which he sent me, and which shows, at least, that the custom of the department has been entirely in that way, in connection with the censuses which have been hitherto taken. He says:

Before taking the first decennial census of the Dominion in 1871 the instructions, principles and systems of census taking in other countries, were made a subject of very special study in the department. The practice of other countries in relation to the privacy of the informations obtained was specially considered, and the policy was settled, in so far as it could be by the department, that all personal particulars obtained by the enumerators must be held to be absolutely confidential, as a condition precedent to being able to obtain such information.

In a printed circular signed by the then Minister the following statement was published :

"That the information given by individuals to enumerators will never be, in any way, or in any circumstances, divulged. The enumerators and all census officers act under oath; and they are strictly bound to secrecy.

"That the aggregate results only will be made known."

This understanding, which has since been uniformly acted on, was communicated to everybody connected with census taking and published as widely as possible through the newspapers, through clergymen, and by all other available means, as the basis on which alone the information necessary for the census could be obtained. The oaths of the employees bound them to the observance of these instructions.

Applications to the department for personal details of information from the census schedules have been continuous and numerous. But the uniform answer given was that no personal information nor any other than statistical results could be furnished.

As respects giving the names of manufacturers in any particular town or village the parties themselves might not probably consider such to be any disadvantage, but on the contrary an advertisement. The same remark applies to other informations which have been asked to be furnished from the census schedules, but always declined on the ground that if discretion as respects giving any personal information contained in them is admitted, then that which it is the object of the census to elicit cannot be at all obtained.

A verification of facts in relation to the manufacturers in any village or town, could be made by other means than the publishing of the names.

The office has always held that the names in a schedule were personal information.

It will be found that the letter of the instructions scarcely goes so far as to prevent the names of persons from being given. There was this view to be considered. Although no written instructions were given, the census enumerators and commissioners have found that people are sensitive in giving information, which might, in any manner, become known to competitors in their business, or be used by prying persons to find out their affairs, and they have to be assured that the strictest privacy consistent with the tabulation of the general results will be the rule with reference to their business. And the enumerators are sworn not to divulge the information but simply to give it to their superior officers, so that it may be carried back to the department and there tabulated as to general results. Something more than that was given, in that the people were personally assured that, under instructions of the department, and under the principle upon which all censuses have been taken in Canada, the details of their business will in no respect be given; that is, that the names of persons and the particular details of their business will not be communicated to any one who asks for it. That is the rule in the United States, and in all those places where censuses are taken, the gross results only are given without the names. Our own plan is the same as theirs, perhaps a little wider, and the general results only are tabulated and names not given. Now, I believe it is true that before the last census was taken the instructions were not laid on the Table; they were not asked for. But it is also true that in 1871 all the papers were published—the instructions and the forms used—as an appendix to the report of the Minister of Agriculture for 1870, which was laid before Parliament. It would appear, therefore, that there is nothing in the instructions, either verbal or written, which would preclude the giving of the names of persons who own and carry on industrial establishments, and I can see no reason—and I think it would be difficult to find a valid reason—why the names of persons who carry on these establishments should be withheld. When we go further than that to details of the business which a person carries on under his own name, I think we approach ground where there is very good reason why it should be withheld. Great difficulty has been experienced in the case of persons carrying on a single industry. I mean one which in the tabulations is not united with any others carrying on a similar industry, so that by referring to the tabulations the details of his business can be learned, which would not be the case where the figures respecting several industries form items in the total. In these cases it was found that several were very loath to give the details asked for because they were by themselves and the figures would give information as to the details of their single business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that the hon. gentleman, having looked into the matter, is willing to give the names and descriptions?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I see no objection.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The number of employees?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is very important, because the instructions, it seems to me, are calculated to lead to just such a course as I mentioned a few evenings ago. An industrial establishment is thus defined:

An industrial establishment is a place where one or several persons are employed in manufacturing, altering, making up or changing from one shape into another, materials for sale, use or consumption, quite irrespective of the amount of capital employed or of the products turned out.

And so a merchant tailor and the women or girls who sew for him at their homes are reported as separate manufacturing establishments. These women employ nobody; they are employed. And so we have in such a case five or six times as many persons who are reported as manufacturers as are actually engaged in the business. I believe also, Sir, that it will be found, if the facts can be ascertained, that the houses in which these people live are returned as capital invested in manufacturing enterprises, and that this course was adopted generally in 1891 for the first time, and so you have, I have no doubt, millions and tens of millions, perhaps hundreds of millions, reported as invested in manufacturing enterprises that are nothing of the sort.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I ought to correct my hon. friend, if he means to say that a different method was followed as to the enumeration of these industries in 1891 from that followed in previous decennial periods. He is mistaken, if he says so; the same system was carried out and on the same basis.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. I say this instruction was calculated to produce that sort of return. I do not know whether it is the first time it has been used or not, but I believe that the course which I have mentioned was adopted in 1891 almost universally for the first time.

Mr. FOSTER. I think you are mistaken.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What could be more preposterous or what can render the statistics less valuable than the fact that a merchant tailor who employs perhaps twenty parties to sew for him, fifteen of them work in their own houses, should not be reported as one establishment, but as sixteen establishments, each woman working at her own house being reported as a separate manufacturing establishment, and the assessed value of the house as capital invested in manufacturing business.

Mr. LISTER. Were the enumerators paid 15 cents for every industry they discovered?

Mr. FOSTER. A schedule of payment was arranged. I have not the paper which shows what it was, but it was laid upon the Table, whatever it was.

Mr. LISTER. Were the enumerators paid by the day?

Mr. FOSTER. The enumerators were paid, I think, by the number of people they took, and, as to the enumeration of industries, I think they had an allowance based upon the number of industries, but whether it was so much for every separate industry, or so much for every certain number, I cannot now say.

Mr. LISTER. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that no matter what the census of 1881 may be, this census is altogether misleading and erroneous. I stated the other night, and I repeat it, that, according to the census returns, there are 117 manufacturing establishments in the town of Sarnia. I have no hesitation at all in asserting that there is no such number in that town. Now, one of the enumerators of the hon. gentleman has written to the newspaper stating how it was in the county of Essex. I refer to enumerator White. He says:

The method adopted by the Government in gathering its facts as to the condition of the Canadian industries, was faulty. They were gathered more for the purpose of bolstering up the National Policy than to show Canadians their true condition. They paid a bonus to assist fraud. For every industry discovered the census enumerators were paid a bonus of fifteen cents. Consequently there was no trouble to find flourishing industries in Canada. Every saw-filer, milliner, dressmaker, watch tinker, lock mender, &c., was considered as having an industrial establishment—for census purposes. In one township, which could be named, the enumerators made nearly every farm house an industrial establishment, because the farmers' wives and daughters knitted socks or made straw braid. Each had a number of employees, had a considerable amount of capital invested, and the product was amazingly valuable. Being the commissioner for that census district, I wrote to Ottawa, pointing out the character of the return, and asked if it was satisfactory to the Government, which, I believed, wanted to ascertain the bottom tracts with regard to Canadian industrial establishments. The gentleman to whom the Governor-General referred to as being so able and painstaking, Mr. George Johnson, promptly replied that the returns were all right. I have inquired in other places and find that almost every place where a man or a woman worked, was set down as an industrial establishment. Such is the character of the figures upon which the Governor-General and the Premier rely to prove that there is a vastly greater number of people employed in industrial establishments to-day, than there were ten years ago. It is an audacious fraud.

Now, that is a letter written by Mr. White, of the county of Essex, a gentleman well known in that section of the county, a reliable man and an old citizen of that place, born there. He gives to the country, by this letter, a statement of how the enumeration was made in the county of Essex. I believe, Sir, if the returns are brought down, it will be found, as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) stated, that wherever a person was working by the piece for a tailor, milliner or any other industry in that way, doing work at his or her own residence that person was returned as an industrial establishment and the assessed value of the residence as capital invested in manufacturing. If such is the case, and I have no hesitation at all in saying that I believe it is the case as regards the town from which I come, then the census of 1891 was made purposely to bolster up the so-called National Policy, and it does not give the slightest idea of the real condition of the industrial establishments of this country, either as to the amount invested, or as to the wages paid, or as to the individuals who are engaged in the industries of this country. I am aware that the statistician, Mr. Johnson, says that so far as the county of Essex is concerned, he erased from the returns made by that enumerator, the names of the farmers' wives who are said to have been carrying on the industry of making straw-hats and knitting socks. But we have the statement made by this enumerator that he stated the fact to Mr. Johnson, and Mr. Johnson replied to him that the manner of his enumeration was right. If such is the case, then the census is wrong, and this Parliament of the country has the right to know whether this is a real record of the condition of affairs in this country, or whether it is a record made for the purpose of giving the country a false impression as to the condition of things. The Minister states now, as I understand him, that he has no objection to bringing down to the House the names of the parties carrying on these industries, and the character of the industry which they carry on. I do not think myself that it would be proper for the Government to give the amount of capital invested, or that they should give other information that a person engaged in business would not like to have made public. But I cannot see, and I never could see, that there was any objection to giving the names of the individual and the character of the business in which he was engaged. If the Minister does that, I will be content, so far as I am concerned, and I think that is all he can fairly be asked for.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand from the Minister that when he gives the names of the several parties employed in the different industries that we have moved for, he will, also, in the same return, give the number of hands employed by these respective parties? Will that be part of the information brought down?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has been misled by a statement published by one of the enumerators. It may be possible that that enumerator, for the purpose of earning his 15 cents, as he avows, put in a great many establishments as industries which were not industries as described in the schedule. That appears to be a fact, and the fraud which he attempted to commit, and which he avows in that communication, was promptly corrected in the computation of the census, and schedule after schedule was thrown out when the returns were finally compiled.

Mr. LISTER. I think I stated when I spoke that Mr. Johnson had given the explanation that these names had not been stricken from the list; but the statement made by this enumerator is that he informed Mr. Johnson as to the character of the enumeration, and that Mr. Johnson replied that it was all right.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is contradicted by Mr. Johnson.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is evident that the system of collecting statistics in the county referred to by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has been followed out in other constituencies as well. I fancy that the system has been the same in all the counties, in all the towns and cities, because I find in the town I come from, or the town that is adjacent to my constituency, the number of industrial establishments is placed at 61. Now, I am familiar with all the industrial establishments in that town, and know of what I speak, and I am perfectly confident that there are not to be found in that town to-day more than 20, at the outside, of establishments that can properly be classed as industrial, so that the enumerators there have increased the number from 20 to 61. I may say that in 1881, according to the census returns, the number of establishments was given as 48. Now, any one who knows anything at all about that town knows that the National Policy has done nothing, at all events, for the town of Dundas. We find there now half the number of industrial establishments which we had in 1881. That fact cannot be gainsaid by anybody who knows anything about the history of the town. Therefore, I must come to the conclusion that the system which has been referred to by others who have spoken on this subject has been carried out in all the constituencies, and that the instruction to the parties who took the census must have been of this character, or these enumerators would not have all followed the same course. I think the information asked for is such as this House ought to be in possession of, that we may be able to ascertain whether any reliability at all is to be placed upon the returns made by these enumerators. So far as I know personally, I do not think they can be relied upon as being at all accurate or correct in any particular whatever.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand the Minister of Finance to say that question had been asked from the statistician himself with reference to the names of the parties in the different towns, and that under the idea that they were not at liberty to divulge them, this information, at all events, had been declined. Did I understand the Minister correctly?

Mr. FOSTER. That is what Mr. Lowe says in his memorandum.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, as I understand the Minister, now he takes the view that it is not necessary to withhold that; but he is willing to give the information.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I want to ask: Will the secrecy be observed now in the department upon a personal request, or will members be at liberty to ask now, preferring their request, which the Minister of Finance said the department was at liberty to give, and that it was not necessary to go through the form of moving in the House?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be better that information with reference to the census of that character should be asked for in the House.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I thought it would take time.

Mr. FOSTER. When the census itself is fully published, the details of the census are given, and that would answer for every person. That would seem to be the more regular way. But if a member wishes for any information he can move for it in the House, and it will be brought down just as in reference to every other department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I did not understand from the Minister that when the census was published the details and names of individuals would be in any published statement.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will it be given in answer to questions, as was requested of the Minister the other day, or would a formal return have to be moved for? If so, it would be difficult to get the information this session.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is a motion which does not involve too much work.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Dominion Steamers—To meet unforeseen expenses in connection with repairs for steamers "Lansdowne," "Newfield" and "Quadra".....$30,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How did these unforeseen expenses occur?

Mr. FOSTER. They are mainly due to an accident to the "Quadra," which went ashore at Queen Charlotte Islands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was there a court-martial held?

Mr. FOSTER. There was an inquiry held.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the result?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the commander was exonerated from blame.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the cause of the disaster?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The statement I have received from the department is to this effect: In the spring of 1892, decayed timber being found in the "Lansdowne," it was decided that she required immediate repairs. These repairs, together with putting in a new pump, cost $6,515. In September, 1892, the "Newfield" was driven on shore in a gale of wind; the cost of repairs was $16,500. The "Quadra" when in Behring Sea ran on an unknown rock. The cost of taking her off the reef and docking her was $8,170.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that large amounts have been spent in providing supplies for the crews and in coaling vessels. No less than $1,080 were spent for coal for the "Lansdowne," $1,304 for the "Newfield" and $5,923 for the "Quadra." What length of time were these vessels severally engaged?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman at this moment. In regard to the supplies, I may say that they are furnished, so far as possible by tender. If the hon. gentleman desires particular information, I can bring down the details.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman will notice that in the case of the "Druid" and "Lansdowne" there has been expended for provisions $3,451. We cannot judge whether this is a fair expense, unless we know the number of days the vessel was on service. I also observe an item of $544 for cleaning vessels. What were the crew doing meanwhile? I observe further that for the "Lansdowne" there was paid $128 for wharfage at St. John. How did the Government come to pay that amount?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If this information is required, I can bring it down to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman furnish all this information on the main Estimates?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; I will try and get the information.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We want fairly full information; where these steamers were repaired, the name of the party who had the contract, was it done by contract or day's work and other details. It might be that the steamer has not been repaired at the proper quarters.

Further amount required for Fishery Protection Service$ 9,000

Mr. COSTIGAN. The memorandum from the Deputy-Minister in this case says that the above amount is to meet the balance of expenditure in connection with the fishery protection steamers and vessels to 30th June, 1893, including repairs to the steamer "Acadian," estimate at $2,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is a great pity that the memorandum does not give the information in full; in fact it is no information at all. We are told where $2,000 has been spent, but there is no explanation of the other $7,000. The departmental memorandum should be very much more accurate than that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Particularly when the Minister is absent, the Deputy-Minister ought certainly to be here and in a position to supply the acting Minister with the requisite information. We do not expect that the Secretary of State should be familiar with the details of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If there is any member of the Cabinet who ought to be familiar with the department it is the Minister of Finance, who was once at its head. The custom that the Deputy-Minister should be here when these items are under consideration ought not to be departed from unless the Minister is very conversant with the affairs himself.

Mr. COSTIGAN. So far as the regular Estimates are concerned, I knew the deputy would be here, and I would have asked him to be here to-night, if I thought the explanations would not be satisfactory to the House.

I can obtain all the information required on the main Estimates.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The departmental report gives a very fair account of the condition of these vessels, and I would gather from it that they were not in need of these extensive repairs?

Fishery Intelligence Bureau $422.50

Mr. COSTIGAN. The above sum is required for reporting to the Intelligence Bureau the movements of the fishing fleet during the season.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is the system pursued?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Not only are the movements of the fleet reported, but the movements of the fish are sent from one point to another. It is very useful and valuable service.

Mr. BOWERS. I remember last year seeing accounts in the daily papers about where the fish would be and where bait could be obtained. I think it is a very useful service and I would like it should be extended, so that we might have the benefit of it at the extremity of Digby County.

To pay Mr. Isaac Newton for loss sustained in defending a suit brought against him by an American company $379.26

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the circumstances?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Isaac Newton was granted a license to fish in Dart Harbour, Grand Manan. An American company, who own the harbour, contended that they owned the fisheries, as well, and brought an action against Newton, which he defended and won. Under the circumstances, the Government is asked to pay the actual costs of the suit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If he won the case, how is it that the Government have to pay the costs?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It will be found that he was not able to collect them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I should like to know whether we paid the costs on both sides?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Oh, no.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We only pay such costs as this man had to pay.

Mr. McMULLEN. What firm of lawyers were engaged in the case?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know. If the hon. gentleman wishes, I will get the names.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was the bill of costs taxed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have no doubt it was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman know the name of the American company?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not. I will get the name and also the names of the lawyers engaged in the case.

International Fisheries Commission, United States and Canada. $1,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is this?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I understand that a commission has been appointed to try and arrange with the United States authorities for some common regulations, and perhaps legislation with regard to certain fisheries.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Under the arrangement made last year with the United States, it was proposed to take mutual measures for the protection of fish life, for the propagation of fish and for close seasons in contiguous waters; and the proposition which the United States made, subsequent to the acceptance of our proposal, was that, instead of signing a convention containing these particulars, a joint inquiry should be first made by an expert appointed by each country. Mr. Wakeham was appointed by us, and Professor Mendenhall by the Washington authorities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are they doing?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are holding their first meeting in Washington, where they are going to inquire into the whole subject—for instance, the possibility of restricting purse-seining and into the question of mutual regulations for close seasons on the rivers and lakes along the boundary line.

To pay J. Johnston for services in connection with the preparation of Maps for Report of Commissioner of North-west Mounted Police $85

Mr. McMULLEN. Under what circumstances did it become necessary for this gentleman to be engaged in this way?

Mr. IVES. He is the geographer of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is his salary there?

Mr. IVES. He is a chief clerk.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is one of the items I think which should be objected to. It is another instance of men getting a respectable salary being paid extra simply because they are asked to do something out of the usual routine. No ordinary business man would entertain a claim of that kind. Here are civil servants respectably paid and by no means overworked, who, when asked to do some little thing for some other department or out of their usual routine, demand additional pay. This thing has gone altogether too far, and it is an outrage that we should have some 400 or 500 civil servants here, who, not content with the pay they receive, are always on the alert for an excuse to make some extra claim.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Was the work performed during the ordinary office hours?

Mr. IVES. My hon. friend will see that in the first place, this map is very useful and important, inasmuch as it indicates, among other things, the North-west Mounted Police stations and all that. Of course, if we employed a competent man not in the department to do this work we would have to pay him a very large sum, and, by getting the work done in this way, we save money. Whether it was done by Mr. Johnson in his regular office hours, I cannot say; but, no doubt he had permission of the head of the department, and I presume it was done after office hours.

Mr. McMULLEN. Whether it was done after office hours or not, I still hold that we ought not to be called upon to pass such items as this for extra work, especially knowing, as we do, that the men have very often spare hours, during office hours, when they are not employed.

To repair lock-gate valves and painting locks Nos. 2 and 3, Lachine Canal.....$ 1,450

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there a staff of men employed along the canal and paid by the day or is the work done by contract?

Mr. HAGGART. All this work is done by contract, and sometimes we have to contract for the labour. Everything possible is done by contract. Even when we do it ourselves, we advertise for tenders for the supply of men and horses.

Rideau Canal—To provide five electric lights at Ottawa.....$375

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not that a heavy rate, $75 per light? I should suppose that where light is supplied by water-power we ought to get it for less.

Mr. HAGGART. This is the lowest we can get it for, and we only use it for nine months in the year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems rather an extravagant rate, and I do not suppose you want it for more than nine months.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; it is a matter of precaution more than anything else. There have been some very serious accidents, and some drownings, through the want of light around the basin, and the department thought it their duty to put up lights.

Mr. McMULLEN. What power has each light?

Mr. HAGGART. They are arc lights.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is about $1 a night?

Mr. HAGGART. About 75 cents.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is very high. In the west we could get such lights for very much less than that.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a low price, from 20 to 25 cents a night for a light. They charge the city of Ottawa, I think, 30 cents a night.

Beauharnois Canal—To pay salaries of two electricians and one ferry-man $1,346

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The electricians seem to be cheaper than the light. What are the particulars of this?

Mr. HAGGART. One is paid $50 a month, or $600 a year, and the other $40 a month.

Chambly Canal—To pay salaries and contingencies. $1,650

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the details of this?

Mr. HAGGART. One assistant electrician at $45 a month, one carbon and battery man $40 a month, and one lamp lighter at St. John's, at 25 cents per day. St. John's Light Company an increase of $50 and a few contingencies, stationery supplies, binding and so on, electric supplies and sundries.

Miscellaneous—To pay a gratuity of two months' salary to the widow of H. H. Killaly, engineer in charge of Rapide Plat Canal. $416.66

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection at all to this item, but I would like to inquire if Mr. Killaly was a contributor to the superannuation fund.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think he was. He was resident engineer on the upper part of the Lachine Canal from 1876 to 1885, when he was appointed resident engineer on the Rapide Plat Canal and the western half of the Cornwall Canal, which position he held until his death in 1882. I think it is the custom of the department to pay these gratuities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not objecting at all to the vote; I think it has always been done in such cases, but I was inquiring merely if Mr. Killaly had contributed to the superannuation fund.

Mr. HAGGART. I think not; he was not a permanent employee of the Government.

Government of the North-west Territories—Amount required for the working expenses of well-boring machines, piping, &c..... $2,500

Mr. DALY. This amount is required to supply boring machines in a portion of the North-west Territories near a station called Langenburg, on the Manitoba and North-western Railway, where there is a large German settlement. Unfortunately, they have not been able to get water, though they have made many efforts, and the matter was represented to the department by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories and the chairman of the committee, Mr. Haultain, and they had not sufficient money in their estimate to provide this sum. When the matter was first represented to the department I sent up Mr. Carstens, the German interpreter, and he made investigation. He found that the people were really suffering for the want of water, and they told him that unless they could have assistance they would have to leave the territories. Consequently we found it a matter of absolute necessity to provide the machinery and piping to secure for these people the water they required for their animals and for domestic purposes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What depth will you have to go?

Mr. DALY. We cannot tell.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are you sure to get the water?

Mr. DALY. Yes; we are sure to get it. I was going to say that they have got water by digging, but not in sufficient quantity to supply their cattle.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it not a little unfortunate that settlements should be allowed to be formed of foreign immigrants, as I understand this is mostly, in a section where water can be obtained only by these means?

Mr. DALY. It is a most extraordinary thing. This is one of the most beautiful countries in the North-west Territories. There is wood and prairie and one would think that the place would make a perfect home for settlers. But there is that one thing wanted. If you were to go to that locality you would choose it out of thousands and thousands of acres, but, strange to say, there is this want of water.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any reports as to the general results of these borings? I do not object to a reasonable amount being expended in making borings, either to procure water or test generally the formation in various parts of the North-west, but I would like to know if any formal report has been made to the Government showing what has been done, a report which would give us the results achieved by these experiments in comparatively small compass.

Mr. DALY. The only real experiment tried is at Deloraine. The hon. gentleman will recollect that matter was before the House on a previous occasion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was rather expensive.

Mr. DALY. We have not had the result expected. We have sunk 1,850 feet. It will be impossible to report this session, but I hope to report at an early date next session, though the result has not been what we expected. This is in a different section of the country from the one referred to in this item. The result at Deloraine has not been satisfactory, because they did not commence in the right way. The pipe they commenced with was too small and they have had many difficulties to contend with. I hope at an early day next session to lay before the House a statement showing the results of the experiments made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is an artesian well, is it?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. In what locality is this money to be spent in the North-west?

Mr. DALY. This $2,500 is to be spent at or near Landenburg, on the Manitoba and North-western Railway. It is exclusively for that purpose. It is in the North-west Territories.

Further amount required to meet expenses connected with the Lieutenant Governor's office $3,700

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This does appear to me to be a very great piece of extravagance. We have spent an awful amount for this Lieutenant-Governor's accommodation in past years, and very full explanation ought to be given to the committee before this vote is passed.

Mr. DALY. The item of $2,700 is made up as follows: Travelling expenses, $1,500; caretaker and messenger at Government House, $1,500.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Travelling expenses are provided for elsewhere.

Mr. DALY. Light and fuel at Government House, $700. The explanation furnished to me is as follows: Reference is requested to the memorandum accompanying this item in the Estimates for 1893-94. The vote for 1892-93 was $500. There has been paid against this item the expense of a trip to Ottawa, in September last, when His Honour went down at the request of the Minister of the Interior to confer with the Government on North-west matters immediately after the prorogation of the Legislative Assembly. The Secretary of the Lieutenant-Governor also visited Ottawa last spring at the request of the Minister of the Interior, when the North-west estimates were under consideration by the Government during the session of Parliament. The expenses of these trips amounted to $523.88. Further travelling expenses were incurred on official business by His Honour and secretary for which there is a charge of $561. It is submitted that the necessary travelling expenses for the remainder of the year must, in all probability, be not less than for the first half of the year, and therefore a supplementary vote of $1,500 is required to complete the service of the current year. The expense is fully explained in the memoranda accompanying the item in the Estimates of 1893-94. It appears that the estimate for caretaker and messenger at Government House was made for the first year of the occupation of Government House by the Lieutenant-Governor at Regina, and it was wholly experimental as to the cost of fuel and the cost of taking care of the building. The amount was not properly ascertained, and the expense has actually exceeded the amount provided by the main Estimates by the sum required here.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears from the Auditor-General's Report last year that the cost of the trip of the Lieutenant-Governor was $357.43. He drew altogether last year for travelling expenses, $2,262.14. Now, it appears to me to be an extravagant expense. I do not believe that this committee should consent to keep a Lieutenant-Governor dancing around from post to post at the expense of this country. If he was wanted in Ottawa, that might be pardonable. I cannot understand how the sum of $357 could have been spent by the Lieutenant-Governor on his trip from the North-west to Ottawa. We cannot object to have him travel in a manner befitting his position, but I do not think it is at all necessary that he should have spent this sum on his trip from Regina to Ottawa and back again. As the Minister has said he came down at the request of the Minister of the Interior, could the hon. gentleman say whether he travelled in a special car, or how was it that he paid such a large amount on this trip? He will find the item in the Auditor-General's Report, D-165.

Mr. DALY. I cannot say whether His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor travelled in a special car. All I can say is that the expense was incurred, and the vouchers have been sent into the Auditor-General, and the item is exactly as it appears in the report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it is perfectly disgraceful that this country should pay for the travelling expenses of Lieutenant-Governors. I would like to know why he has to travel. I can understand that a Premier might have to travel to Ottawa once or twice a year. But he is Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west, and he has his Council and his Premier there, and all he has to do is to carry on automatically as it were, the Government of the country under the direction and by the advice of his Council. These pleasure trips which he takes to Banff and to Winnipeg, and to Ottawa, paid for at the expense of the country, are unpardonable, and I do not think this House should sanction them. Suppose the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick wants to take a trip to Boston or to come up to Ottawa. He can travel if he likes, and if he gets leave of absence; but was it ever heard before that this Parliament was to pay his travelling expenses? I do not see on what principle we are to pay them. What business has he to bring him here? If he was required to come here on North-west business, and was summoned to Ottawa at the request of the Government, well, and good. But here he takes trips to Banff Springs, to Edmonton, and to Winnipeg. The Lieutenant-Governor's private secretary also travels, and we pay for him. He does not live where the Governor lives. He is a law student in Winnipeg, and this country has to pay him six or seven hundred dollars a year under the miserable subterfuge that he is private secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor, when it is well known that he is not. It is well known that he is a young man living in Winnipeg, learning his profession, and is now a practising barrister there, and yet he is receiving $600 or $700 a year nominally as the Lieutenant-Governor's secretary. So far as I have been able to understand the expenses connected with the Government House of the North-west, they are reprehensibly extravagant. There is no excuse for them whatever. We are laying down a principle here now which, of course, all subsequent Lieutenant-Governors will adopt. They will say: Why, the House of Commons has sanctioned the expense of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west in making these trips whenever he chooses to go, here and there, travelling about in style at great expense. The thing has been done before, and if Lieutenant-Governors of the North-west can do that the Lieutenant-Governors of all the provinces can do the same thing. I cannot see for the life of me why he should come here at all. I can understand that the Premier, or the chief official in that North-west government, may have to consult with the Government of the day, but what has the Lieutenant-Governor got to do with coming here? He has got to do just what he is advised to do, to stay at headquarters, as others have got to do. But when he goes away, taking pleasure trips, he ought to pay for them out of his own pocket. But this coming down to the Parliament of Canada and asking us to supplement the princely salary paid to him for his pleasure trips is unpardonable. In addition we have paid to the Government House an amount for furnishing it—and which will come up for discussion soon—that is enormous. I want to know why he should come here at all at the public expense, or why he should leave his headquarters at all. The thing is ridiculous.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Would the Minister of the Interior inform us of the name of the private secretary of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west?

Mr. DALY. I cannot recollect his Christian name, but he is a son of the Lieutenant-Governor. Royal is his name.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We are paying a sum to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories for his private secretary, and this young man, as I understand, is not employed as secretary at all. He is living in Winnipeg and studying law there. This is a worse case than we had from the Railway Department some years ago, when it was shown that an officer of the department had a son attending a medical college at Toronto, while, at the same time, he was receiving $600 per year from this country. In this case, we are paying a salary to the son of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, although that young man does not act as secretary, but is either studying or practising law in Winnipeg. I consider this is a fraud on the country, and I do not think Parliament should be called on to vote money for any such purpose.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister give the House the contents of the communication sent to the Lieutenant-Governor asking him to come down, or the reasons why he was required to come here?

Mr. DALY. I cannot give the contents of the communication, but hon. gentlemen will remember there was an embroglio at that period in the history of the territories, and it apparently was necessary, or my predecessor thought so, that the Lieutenant-Governor should be invited to come here for the purpose of consulting with him respecting the condition of affairs. He was summoned, and came to Ottawa. I think it was really necessary that he should come here. The hon. member for Queen's considers it highly reprehensible that the Lieutenant-Governor should travel over the territories and not remain in Regina; but he apparently forgets that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories does not occupy a position exactly similar to a Lieutenant-Governor of one of the older provinces.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think he does.

Mr. DALY. I could not conceive of a Lieutenant-Governor wanting to leave Halifax and go to Boston. I would rather stay in Halifax for years than go to Boston, for the advantages of the former are entirely superior.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish the hon. gentleman would convert the Nova Scotians to that view.

Mr. DALY. We have been doing so. The Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories occupies a peculiar position, one entirely different from that occupied by any other Lieutenant-Governor. He is the executive officer representing the Dominion Government. He is responsible for the expenditure, and it is necessary that he should visit different portions in order to obtain information with respect to the proper conduct of affairs in the Territories. The people there do not possess responsible government in the full sense of the term, and it is necessary that the Lieutenant-Governor should be in touch with the people. I am not here for the purpose of excusing these visits made by him, because I consider they were performed in the best interest of the people of the country, and it is absolutely necessary, when we consider the fact that for many years the population of the Territories was changing, and that emigrants from different portions of Europe are coming in, and they should look forward to a visit from the official representative, as is the Lieutenant-Governor of the Government of Canada. Mr. Dewdney, who preceded Mr. Royal, visited different portions of the country, and these visits to the different settlements were looked forward to by the settlers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not object to the expenditure incurred by the Lieutenant-Governor when he visited Ottawa at the invitation of the Government. It is quite sufficient if he came here at the request of the Government, and I shall not cavil as to his expenditure. I, however, call attention to the fact that expenditures incurred under the old system of the Government under Mr. Dewdney are no longer desirable, and cannot be made now. The North-west has responsible government in all particulars. Nearly every freedom and responsibility enjoyed by the people of other provinces are now enjoyed by the Territories under the North-west Act. The Lieutenant-Governor's duties are defined, and are similar to those of the Lieutenant-Governors of the older provinces. He has a council and a chief officer—I do not know whether he is called a premier or not. We vote the money, and the Council of the North-west and the Government of the North-west are responsible for its expenditure, and not the Lieutenant-Governor. It is absurd to say that the Lieutenant-Governor can usurp special functions: the Premier is responsible for the expenditure, and the Lieutenant-Governor is not. It was all very well for Mr. Dewdney to travel up and down the territories, for he concentrated the power of the Government largely in himself. All that, however, has changed. We have the North-west Territories Act, which defines the rights of the Lieutenant-Governor, and he has no more right to travel through the country, in state, than has the Governor of Ontario and Nova Scotia. The item to which I object is that of $1,500 for travelling expenses. I am discussing the principle that is established, for I feel that if Parliament passed this vote for Mr. Royal, a similar vote will have to be passed for all Lieutenant-Governors. I observe that he visited Banff, made two or three trips to Edmonton, one trip to Winnipeg, and came down to Ottawa. The Lieutenant-Governor should have made those trips at his own expense. I object to the principle involved in such payment as being a wrong and dangerous principle. I notice such expenses are increasing every year, and if they are passed by this House in silence, they will still further increase. The Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba does not travel through the country, and while the Lieutenant-Governors of some of the other provinces travel, they do not ask the Dominion Government to pay their expenses.

Mr. DALY. Will the hon. gentleman be satisfied if I inform him that the vote for travelling expenses for the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west is, in the main Estimates, only $500.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is His Honour here now at the request of the Government?

Mr. DALY. He was here at the request of the Government.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. As the Minister has informed us that it is necessary for the Lieutenant-Governor to visit the different settlements, His Honour must have made many reports to the Government. Has the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west reported to the Government here?

Mr. DALY. I regret that my report has not yet been laid on the Table, but when it is presented hon. gentlemen will be satisfied that the Lieutenant-Governor does report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand the hon. gentleman to say that this $1,500 is to pay for travelling expenses already incurred.

Mr. DALY. Already incurred, or will be incurred up to the end of the present fiscal year. There is no precedent in that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You have taken a vote of $500 in the main Estimates for travelling expenses, and you are now asking $1,500, which amounts to $2,000 a year for travelling. If hon. gentlemen are prepared to vote that in silence, I am not for one. I protest against the Lieutenant-Governor incurring travelling expenses and charging them to this Government. I know that the North-west Territories have a Council and that the money must be spent under advice of this Council. I am aware that the Lieutenant-Governor dismissed one Council and installed another, but he soon had to recall his old advisers. I think he must have misunderstood the principles of the power he exercises there, but I will not discuss that now. In my opinion, he holds no other position than that of a Lieutenant-Governor in a regularly constituted province, so far as his duties and responsibilities are concerned. He has a gentleman under whose advice he acts and under whose advice he must act, and he can only spend money under the advice of his Premier. He cannot spend one dollar of the money we vote here, without the advice of his Council. I will undertake to say, from the little experience I have had in this House, that if we vote the money now for these travelling expenses, we will establish a precedent that we will not get out of in a hurry.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman forgets, as I tried to explain, that the Lieutenant-Governor does not occupy the same position as the Lieutenant-Governor of any other province. Prior to the time when there was a dissolution of the House which the hon. gentleman refers to, the money voted by this Parliament was placed to the credit of the Lieutenant-Governor and Mr. Haultain, and payments were made by joint cheque of these two gentlemen. You will see, from this one fact, that he does not occupy the same position as another Lieutenant-Governor does. No other Lieutenant-Governor has the money voted by this Parliament, placed to his joint account with the leader of the Council. There is no responsible Government in the North-west Territories, the same as we have in the older provinces. The Lieutenant-Governor is a Federal officer and he is responsible to me, as Minister of the Interior. He is simply an officer of my Department, and every dollar that this Parliament votes, the Auditor-General requires him to be responsible to this Parliament for, and to sign these cheques and to provide the necessary vouchers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With all due respect, I do not think the hon. gentleman has described the position of the Lieutenant-Governor accurately with respect to his powers under the Act or with respect to the Council, whose advice he is bound to act on. The amended North-west Territories Act, which we passed in 1891, provides, amongst other things, that the Legislative Assembly shall have exclusive power to pass ordinances for:

The expenditure of Territorial funds, and such balances of any portions of any moneys appropriated by Parliament for the Territories as the Lieutenant-Governor is authorized to expend by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly or any committee thereof.

So that the money is voted by us and is spent by the authority of the Legislative Assembly. Under the advice of the Executive Council of that Assembly the Governor has to act, just as the Governors of the other provinces have to act on the advice of their Executive Council. It is perfectly true, as a matter of book-keeping, that this Parliament, which votes the money, and the Auditor-General, who looks after the expenditure, requires the certificate of the Lieutenant-Governor, in addition to the certificate of the local Auditor, that the money has been spent as it has been appropriated; but I will hazard this assertion, and I am sure the Minister of the Interior will agree with me, that the Lieutenant-Governor, as such, has no more power than I have to expend one dollar of the money which we vote. He has got to expend that money as it is voted by the Legislative Assembly, on the advice of the Legislative Assembly or a committee thereof. If he usurps or claims to exercise a power beyond that, he is acting in controvension of this statute. I enter my solemn protest against the Lieutenant-Governor of that territory seeking to expend moneys obtained from this Parliament, the expenditure of which is not authorized and not allowed to any other Lieutenant-Governor. The idea of his travelling around at the public expense and asking this Parliament to vote him money! Once we establish the principle, we will have to go on year after year and carry it out. I submit that it is perfectly plain under the law, that the expenditure of every dollar of money that we vote can only be made when it is authorized and as and how it is authorized on the advice of the Legislative Assembly of the North-west Territories. He has no more right to spend this $1,500 than any Lieutenant-Governor in any other province. I shall test the House at a future stage upon this, if the Minister persists in asking us to vote it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The view which the hon. gentleman takes of the Lieutenant-Governor's constitutional position is not quite correct, I think, as he will learn when I explain how the moneys are disposed of. The hon. gentleman is basing his view of the Lieutenant-Governor's powers on the powers of his Council and the wording of the statute. He will see that the provision in that statute does not extend to all the moneys which are voted by this Parliament to the North-west Territories; but only extends to such sums of money as Parliament places at the disposal of the North-west Assembly or a committee thereof. Practically, as describing the present state of affairs, the hon. gentleman is correct, because we are arranging to vote the money in such a way as to place it at the disposal of the North-west Assembly itself, so that the council shall be practically a responsible executive so far as that money is concerned; and for that reason, the Minister proposes to change the status of the Lieutenant-Governor as regards his travelling expenses and allowances and so forth. The point of difference between my hon. friend and myself as to the condition of things hitherto, arises from the way in which the money has been voted. The money has been placed at the disposal of the Governor-General of Canada in Council and not at the disposal of the North-west Assembly. When the Supply Act is passed, the practice has been for the money under each department to be placed at the disposal of that department, and neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the North-west Assembly have had the disposition of the money so far, excepting perhaps, a small lump sum. But generally speaking, the money voted here was placed at the disposal of the Department of the Interior, and the Governor of the North-west Territories was simply authorized by the head of the Department of the Interior to expend it for this work or that work according to the appropriations. The North-west Assembly has at its disposal, and always has had, the territorial revenue, consisting chiefly of license fees, fees for permits, ferry fees, fines and forfeitures, and things of that kind, amounting not to very much, though latterly, I think to about $30,000, in consequence of the license fees having been somewhat increased. These funds are expended by him on the advice of his council; but his obligation to expend federal moneys on the advice of his council depends on the way in which the money is voted by this Parliament. Since the last Supply Act, it has been our object, as far as possible, to place the expenditure of the money at the disposal of the North-west Assembly, for two or three reasons. In the first place, it enlarges to some extent the powers and autonomy of the territorial government, making it more in the line of a responsible government, and in the second place, it relieves the Lieutenant-Governor of the duty of supervising these expenditures personally, as he has hitherto done under the instructions of the Minister of the Interior; and further than that, it has the advantage of making the expenditure more elastic for territorial purposes than if it had to be itemized for the information of this House before being voted. That has been the wish of the Assembly, and it seemed a very reasonable wish, and one that would simplify the expenditure of the money; and the position occupied by the Lieutenant-Governor down to a very recent period has been, and it is our policy that it will be, very much in that line.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Substantially what the hon. gentleman says is the same as I have attempted to state to the committee. I understand that by the statute we have relegated to the Legislative Assembly of the North-west Territories exclusive powers to make regulations for the expenditure, first, of the Territorial funds, and, secondly, of a portion of the moneys appropriated by Parliament for the Territories, and the Lieutenant-Governor is authorised to expend it by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly. We have heretofore indicated the purposes for which those funds should be expended, and within that indication the North-west Assembly provide for the expenditure.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is, since last year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I perfectly understand that, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it is wise to give the North-west Assembly more power over the expenditure of money, this Parliament voting it in a lump sum instead of attempting to exercise functions which can be better exercised by the Assembly. There is no doubt that from year to year we shall have to give that Assembly larger powers. That is all right, but it does not touch the point we are discussing at all, namely, what right that Lieutenant-Governor has to incur large expenditures of the public money of Canada for travelling about the country.

Mr. FLINT. I was certainly under the impression, when the North-west Territories Bill was last before the House, that the responsibility of discussing these items would, for the future disappear from this House. It was urged that it was very desirable that all matters of a local character should be attended to by the Local Assembly, though the funds were supplied from the treasury of the Dominion; and I was surprised to find that that idea had not yet been carried into effect, and that this committee has still the responsibility of deciding upon an enormous variety of local services as to which it is impossible we can inform ourselves and as to which we must take the statement of the Minister of the Interior that they are all correct. I gather from the observations of the Minister of Justice, however, that henceforward this responsibility will probably not rest upon this committee, and I am certain that it would be a great relief to those who are in the habit of taking part in these discussions, if that should be the case. I agree with the observations made by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island in regard to the Governor of the North-west Territories making those extensive demands on the Dominion in the way of travelling expenses, and I join with him in a protest against them, in the hope that in the future they will not be taken as a precedent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the Minister at liberty to state what particular business the Governor was summoned down upon this time? It is the second time within the year.

Mr. DALY. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman's question just now, but I will do so on the main Estimates.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state to the committee what the balance of this vote is for? $1,500 is appropriated to defray the Lieutenant-Governor's travelling expenses in addition to the normal vote of $500 in the main Estimates.

Mr. DALY. I regret that I have not the explanation of the other items here. They should have accompanied the brief that I have, but they are not here. There will be an item similar to this for fuel and care-taking of Government House, in the main Estimates, and I will undertake to make the statement then. As I explained to the hon. gentleman before, last year was the first year the Lieutenant-Governor occupied Government House, and he could not really ascertain at that time what the cost of providing fuel for the establishment would be. Since then the actual expenditure has been made and the vouchers have been produced, and the $700 for light and fuel was actually expended for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I hope the hon. gentleman will be in a position at the same time to make a statement with respect to the expenditure for furnishing Government House.

Mr. DALY. That is not in my department. The hon. gentleman has asked that of Mr. FLINT.

the Minister of Public Works, who promised to furnish it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Minister of Public Works is not in his place, and I will take the opportunity, when the Estimates come up, of asking for an explanation with regard to the total cost of the furniture for Government House in the North-west Territories.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman include in the $196,000 the amount voted for the indemnity of members of the North-west Assembly?

Mr. DALY. That is included.

Mr. DEVLIN. How many sessions of that Legislature were held last year?

Mr. DALY. Two.

Mr. DEVLIN. I understand there were three.

Mr. DALY. I do not think the three would come within the twelve months.

Mr. DEVLIN. I was told that three were held, and that each session was very short and very little work was done. The members drew their $500 for each session, which would make $1,500 within the year.

Mr. DALY. They drew their indemnity. There is nothing in the Act against their drawing it. If my hon. friend were out on the western prairie, and he had the same ideas there that these gentlemen have of the freedom of the Legislature, the sessions might be longer.

Mr. DEVLIN. It would be well perhaps to remedy the Act so as to prevent the multiplication of sessions, otherwise these gentlemen might hold seven or eight in the year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The three sessions were for two years.

Mr. DALY. They have had an intimation to that effect.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not want to run the thing too fine; but if the statement of my hon. friend is correct, that there were three sessions held within twelve months, for which the members got $500 each, I consider that rather steep, in view of the fact that we have sometimes to sit here six months, away from our homes, and only get $1,000.

Mr. DALY. I do not think they were held with any idea of drawing the indemnity. There are very few of the members to whom the $500 is so important a consideration. The hon. gentleman is conversant with what has been reported in the press, and he knows the peculiar circumstances under which these sessions were held. This matter of extra sessions was discussed, and they have had an intimation that it is not expected this will occur again.

Mr. DEVLIN. How much do they spend altogether?

Mr. DALY. I think their Estimates last year amounted to $191,000.

Mr. DEVLIN. It takes them three sessions to decide how to spend that.

Mr. DALY. If the hon. gentleman has read the papers he will see that in having these extra sessions the members were not actuated by mercenary motives, and he is hardly fair in attributing such motives to them.

Mr. McMULLEN. Any one who has followed the proceedings up there cannot fail to be persuaded that Governor Royal is largely responsible for the extra sessions. He interfered considerably in the exercise of the duties of these representatives, and has been dancing down here to Ottawa and back in consequence of this continuous quarrel between them and him. He is possibly here now in connection with these difficulties. I do not wish to saddle the Minister of the Interior with the responsibility of his expenditure, but I believe we are establishing a precedent, if we pass this item, that will be made the basis of a continuance of this kind of thing. I have come to the conclusion, after being in this Chamber for eight or ten years, that Manitoba and the North-west Territories think the resources of this Dominion are inexhaustible, and that they ought to get all the money they can out of us, and I do not think we ought to encourage expenditure in this way, to meet the travelling expenses of the Lieutenant-Governor going up and down to Banff Springs and coming to Ottawa two or three times a year. If it is necessary that the Lieutenant-Governor should come here or go to Banff the money should be voted in the shape of an additional sum, given to the North-west Council, out of which they should pay the Lieutenant-Governor if they chose. We are placing the Lieutenant-Governor beyond the reach of the representatives of the North-west who are directly responsible to the people, and who ought to have the expenditure of the money in connection with the Governor's travelling expenses. This puts him in the position of being able to go up and down to Banff Springs and to come to Ottawa when he chooses, independent of his constitutional advisers.

Mr. LISTER. Does the $191,000 cover the Governor's salary as well as all other expenses connected with the territorial Legislature?

Mr. DALY. No; that sum is voted in a lump. It is not itemized; but in the main Estimates the hon. gentleman will see how it is divided.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am a little anxious to know the cause of Governor Royal's business here at present.

Mr. FOSTER. You might address to him a personal inquiry.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No; the Minister has told us that Governor Royal is responsible to him, and it must be something very important that brings him here, because I am persuaded that the head of the Interior Department is able to carry on an official correspondence with credit to himself, and I am also confident that any correspondence from Governor Royal would be no discredit to that gentleman. I therefore think that the business must be of a very delicate nature, when it could not be transacted through official correspondence. Are the subjects to be discussed so delicate that it would not do to put them on paper, which might be asked for and submitted to the House? I might say on behalf of Governor Royal that while exception may be taken to these trips, if the Government have requested him to come they must bear the onus.

Mr. DALY. Did the hon. gentleman understand me to say that he was summoned here?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes.

Mr. DALY. I did not intend to convey that meaning; but said I would give to the hon. gentleman, when the main Estimates came up, the reasons for the Governor's coming here. I do not know that there are any matters between me and him that could not be conducted by correspondence; but there are other reasons, no doubt, and I will be able to give a satisfactory explanation to the hon. gentleman when the item comes up on the main Estimates. I may say that Governor Royal was not summoned by me.

Mr. FLINT. I venture the suggestion that this House ought to have a formal statement of the character of the difficulties between the Lieutenant-Governor and his Council in the North-west Assembly, in order that the House may understand officially the nature of the duties and the manner in which it is proposed they should be settled. Either the Lieutenant-Governor is responsible to that Assembly or his advisers are responsible to the Assembly, or the responsibility rests here through the Minister of the Interior. I do not think this House ought to be obliged to rely upon information gathered from the press or from private sources as to these difficulties; but Parliament ought to be taken fully into the confidence of the Government so that we may legislate in connection with the North-west Territories, and in regard to any amendments that may hereafter be suggested to the North-west Territories constitution, with a full knowledge of the facts and the idea that the Minister of Justice and the Government have as to the best method of settling difficulties and preventing their recurrence.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not aware of any difficulties between the Lieutenant-Governor and the committee. The committee, as I explained at the time the change of committee was made, is simply a committee of finance. They failed, I believe, to secure a majority of the Chamber, and retired; and at a by-election which subsequently took place, they regained the majority and resumed office, and I am not aware at this moment any difficulties whatever between His Honour and the committee.

Mr. FLINT. Then I presume the responsibility of the committee was fully recognized, both by the Lieutenant-Governor and by this Government, in matters of finance?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In matters of finance—yes.

Mr. LISTER. There was a difficulty between the Governor and his Council, there can be no doubt of that, if we may put any trust in the public press of the country—an unseemly difficulty—one side claiming the right to expend public moneys without the consent of his Council, and even against their will, and the other side denying that authority. The whole system of the Government of the North-west appears to me to be not in accordance with our modern ideas of Government. It reminds one to a great extent of the old days of the family compact. The people, while they have a sort of representative government have not had conferred upon them the real powers of a body of that kind. I think the Government should recognize at once that the time has come when the North-west Territories should have confided to them the exclusive right of legislation locally the same as other provinces of the Dominion. If the population is not sufficient to justify the raising of sufficient revenue to govern the country under a Provincial Government a larger subsidy could be granted to the territories for some years. But it does seem to me to be a comedy, in a sense, to call that a Legislature, to call the responsible advisers of His Excellency a mere committee and to have the powers of government so divided between His Honour and the members of this committee. The system should be one thing or the other. It is a hermaphrodite institution as it is now. If the people of the North-west are sufficiently intelligent to entitle them to representative institutions, those institutions should be granted them at once. Let the territories govern themselves and the unseemly difficulties between the Governor and his Council and Legislature will disappear. Throwing upon them the responsibilities of the Government, the machine will work as smoothly as in any other province. Take all the North-west together, and there is a very considerable population, more, I venture to say, than Manitoba had when it was granted responsible government. I can see no reason why the territories of the North-west should be continued in the position in which they now are as to their legislative power. So far as Governor Royal is concerned, he has made many visits to the older provinces, and whether those were made at the request of the chief of the department over whom my hon. friend presides I am unable to say, but there is one thing certain, that these trips have been very expensive and numerous. I do not suppose that coming down to the city of Ottawa and going back to Regina is a very expensive trip, but we have here a very considerable amount granted to this gentleman for travelling expenses. It may be that this allowance is looked upon by him as we talk about the Governor-General's expenses here, as supplementing a salary which may not be sufficient for the position he occupies. I do not think Governor Royal has a right to come down at the expense of the Government unless his presence is required by the chief of the Department of the Interior. If my hon. friend can say that on every occasion when he has come down and his expenses have been charged to this country he has come at the request of the Government, then of course his expenses ought to be paid. But if he is summering it, making a trip down for the good of his health and the amount is charged to the country, then it is fair his charge should be criticised if not entirely rejected and he allowed to travel at his own expense. But the hon. gentleman has told us that he will give us full details, so I shall say nothing further at this time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would ask the hon. Minister, when he is bringing down the details, to furnish us with a memorandum of the date of the opening and closing of each session of the Legislature.

Mr. LISTER. That question of the Legislature is a very important one. No doubt people up there are wealthy and the representatives do not meet to get the $500 allowance. But possibly that may not be an absolutely accurate statement, still I do not think there is any necessity for the Legislature meeting three times in fifteen months, when in the provinces the Legislatures meet only once a year, while the opinion of many people is that once in two years would be sufficient for the requirements of the country.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec.
Grant to assist the following overdrawn accounts under the authority of an Order in Council, dated September,
1892:—Indian Land Management
Fund; province of Quebec
Indian Fund; Indian School Fund..... $19,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do these come to be overdrawn?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does not the hon. gentleman think it is about time to go to bed?

Mr. FOSTER. Finish these Estimates. We can't get at them for another fortnight. Preferential trade will be on next week, and some of these services are starving.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman asked me for an explanation of that item of $19,000. The hon. members from South Oxford and Queen's will recollect the discussion in the House last year in reference to the Land Management Fund. The matter was taken up by the hon. member for Bothwell. This fund, together with the Quebec Fund and the Indian Poor Fund, it was alleged, had been expended for purposes other than were contemplated by the law, and the consequence was that large over drafts were made upon these funds, which amount to $1,250,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you speaking now of the three funds, or of the Indian Fund ?

Mr. DALY. The three funds combined. It was alleged that they had been used for purposes other than those originally contemplated. The consequence was, that there was a deficit, and the attention of the Government was called to it about two years ago. The matter being of consequence, it was referred to a sub-committee of the Privy Council, and all the figures were gone into and investigated by the Deputy-Minister of Finance and the Deputy Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs. A report was made by the sub-committee to Council, and the conclusion arrived at was, that there was a liability upon the part of the Government for this fund, that it would have to be repaired and that the best way out of the difficulty was to pay it by annual instalments, the first instalment being $19,000 for the year 1892-93. The interest that the Government had been paying on this fund of $1,250,000, was at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. It was recommended by the sub-committee that the rate of interest should be reduced to 3½ per cent; and, although we are voting this $19,000 and it looks as if that was the amount we were contributing towards the reduction of that fund this year, the interest on the $1,250,000, is deducted from this amount; that is, we will not be expending the whole $19,000; we are expending that amount less the difference between 4 per cent on the $1,250,000 and the 3½ per cent. Then, next year we will vote a smaller amount, and so on from year to year, until we repay back to this Land Management Fund, the Quebec Fund and the Indian Poor Fund all the moneys that have been used in times past for purposes other than those originally contemplated.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the total amount of that ?

Mr. DALY. I would rather give you that on the main Estimates. It is the same item exactly.

Mr. LISTER. Was there any deficiency in the Ontario Indian Fund ?

Mr. DALY. No. The Land Management Fund had reference to Ontario, as well as to the other provinces. The sum of $1,250,000 is made up of all the provinces.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to that, but before the main Estimate comes before us, we ought to have the results of this investigation laid on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. The Order in Council takes it all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand that on the Trust Fund of the Indians in the hands of the Government, the interest has been reduced from 4 per cent to 3½ per cent during the present year ?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When did it commence ?

Mr. DALY. That was a suggestion made by the sub-committee of the Privy Council. Without looking at the Order in Council, my recollection is that it commences on the 1st of July next.

To provide for the payment to Mr. W. A. Mott of the amount of his account for legal services in connection with prosecutions for sale of liquor to Indians, of Restigouche, Que., these Indians having no funds of their own... $100

Mr. FAUVEL. Will the Minister kindly explain that item ?

Mr. DALY. The only explanation I can give the hon. gentleman is that given in the item itself. These Indians have no funds of their own.

Mr. FAUVEL. Could not the Government have recouped themselves for this expense from the parties who sold the liquor ?

Mr. DALY. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. This appears to be a large sum for prosecution in connection with selling liquor. I cannot understand how this bill was adjusted. Was it a taxed account ? Who is this Mr. Mott ? Is he the law partner of the hon. member sitting with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. McAlister) ?

Mr. DALY. There was an appeal in this matter, and, of course, the costs amounted to considerably more than the ordinary prosecution. The explanation can be given by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister).

Mr. McALISTER. As Mr. Mott is my partner, it may seem that I have some interest in that item. When I was up here in 1891, a year ago last summer, the Indian agent at New Richmond, Mr. Poirier, I think, entered an action against some parties in the town of Campbellton for selling liquor to Indians, and he employed Mr. Mott. A fine was imposed, and they appealed. On some technicality the fines were set aside, and consequently no money was collected from the parties fined. Mr. Mott went to Fredericton when the case was up on appeal and argued it. The Court of Appeal was divided, three to two, and the verdict was set aside; consequently, no fines were collected. But I have no interest in the matter, directly or indirectly. In fact, the first knowledge I had of it, was seeing this item in the Estimates.

Mr. DALY. I may say, in addition, that the amount was allowed and fixed by the Department of Justice, after Mr. Mott's bill was taxed.

To pay moiety of the cost of erecting a bridge over the Goulais River in the Batchewana district..... $2,261 41

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us a little information?

Mr. DALY. This bridge is in Algona, and the other half of the cost is to be paid by the Ontario Government. That is in accordance with an arrangement entered into with the Ontario Government as far back as 1878. The old bridge was rotten, and had to be repaired, and this arrangement was entered into by which the Dominion Government paid one-half the costs and the Ontario Government the other half.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

REPORT.

Report of the Secretary of State, for the year ending the 31st December, 1892.—(Mr. Costigan.)

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— REPLY TO ADDRESS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I acknowledge with thanks the Address you have loyally adopted in reply to the Speech with which I opened the session, and I rely with confidence on the assurance that the important measures submitted to you will receive your careful consideration.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 3rd March, 1893.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WELDON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the House to an article which appeared in the "Daily Transcript," published in New Brunswick, John T. Hawke, being editor and proprietor, of Thursday, the 2nd of March, entitled, "How Dr. Weldon was elected." I would not have referred to this article, knowing the paper so well as I do, were it not that the "Ottawa Citizen," a most respectable paper, saw fit, this morning, to call attention thereto in its editorial columns. I desire to say that this article, which appears in the editorial columns of that paper, and the word "contributed" appears at the head of it, contains a series of statements of facts, and, I think, some innuendoes and suggestions, and I desire to say that if any statement therein, or any insinuation drawn from that article, or any innuendo contained in it, imputes to me that I knew or favoured or connived at bribery, before my election in 1887, during the same or after, or before my election in 1891, during the same or after, that such statement, such innuendoes, such suggestions, are absolutely false. It might be said by my friends here, why take up the time of the House to make this denial since, if that article is untrue and defamatory, you have your civil remedy? My answer to that proper question is that against this very paper, last year, which had made a false charge against me, I did bring an action, and had the case tried by a jury of seven, of whom five were Liberals, and got my verdict, but I have not yet got my money. I think, therefore, my civil remedy as against Mr. Hawke would be of very little service.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before you pass to the Orders of the Day, I wish to call attention to a matter of some importance, to which the attention of the leader of the Government was called in the early part of the session, and that is the appointment of the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick. Attention was called to that matter at an early period of the session, and I do not think any definite answer was given by the Government as to whether the appointment was to be made at an early day from that time. I think it was generally conceded that it was impolitic that the 'status quo,' as it then existed, should be continued, and I would like to ask the Government whether any appointment has been made to that office or any appointment is to be made before the Premier leaves for England? If we have not a satisfactory answer that it is to be made, I shall deem it my duty, owing to the gravity of the situation, in my opinion, to call the attention of the House to it in a more formal manner; and, in the meantime, I will ask the hon. gentleman whether the vacancy has been filled in a constitutional manner, or whether the present incumbent is to be allowed to continue in the office as he has been for some time past?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No appointment has been made, and I did not intend that it should be inferred from what I said, when the matter was mentioned in the House last, that we intended immediately to make the appointment. I am not able to say that the appointment will be made before I leave, if I should have to leave, because that must necessarily be within the next three days.

RETURNING OFFICER FOR VAUDREUIL.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a question of less moment, but of some importance also, the appointment of a returning officer for Vaudreuil.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would rather not answer that to-day if the hon. gentleman will consent.

Mr. LAURIER. Is this question of such moment that the Government cannot come to a decision early?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I will let the hon. gentleman know a little later in the week.

Mr. LAURIER. I would expect an answer to-morrow.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 41), to incorporate the Eastern Trust Company.—(Mr. Stairs.)

Bill (No. 46) to incorporate the Ocean Fidelity Guarantee Company.—(Mr. Sproule.)

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 53) respecting the Alberta Railway and Coal Company.—(Mr. Davis.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 70) respecting the Nakusp and Slocan Railway Company.—(Mr. Mara.)

Bill (No. 71) respecting the Drummond County Railway Company.—(Mr. Cleveland.)

Bill (No. 77) further to amend the Act to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine River water power.—(Mr. Mills, Annapolis.)

Bill (No. 78) respecting the British America Assurance Company.—(Mr. Cockburn.)

DETECTIVE SKEFFINGTON.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. Choquette) asked, 1. Have the Government received complaints as to the conduct of Detective Skeffington, employed on the Intercolonial Railway, or otherwise? 2. Has his dismissal been asked by Mr. Stevenson, traffic manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, for cause; or by any other leading official of the said railway? 3. If so, what course do the Government intend to take in the matter?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say the Government have received no complaints as to the conduct of Detective Skeffington, either from Mr. Stevenson, traffic manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, or any other leading official of that road.

I. C. R.—TENDERS FOR FENCING.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. Choquette) asked, 1. What are the names of the persons who tendered for the construction of fencing on the Intercolonial, in 1893, between Campbellton and Levis? 2. What are the prices asked by the party or parties to whom the contracts were awarded, and what are the names of the said parties?

Mr. HAGGART. The following are the names of the persons who tendered for the construction of fencing on the Intercolonial Railway in 1893, between Campbellton and Levis:—J. Calhoun, Sumner & Co., Edward Crossman, H. Boulay, C. Armstrong, C. A. Blondeau. In reply to the second question, the names and figures are: Ed. Crossman, from Campbellton to Ste. Flavie, 46 cents per rod for 5-barb wire and woven wire; Sumner & Co., Rimouski to Rivière du Loup, 46 cents per rod, 5-barb wire and woven wire; Sumner & Co., Rivière du Loup to Levis, 46 cents per rod, 5-barb wire and woven wire.

W. A. SHEPARD.

Mr. BRODEUR asked, Is Mr. W. A. Shepard in the employment of the Government as immigration agent, or otherwise? If so, since when, and at what salary?

Mr. DALY. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that Mr. W. A. Shepard is not in the employment of the Government, but was for some years paid the sum of $200 per annum for distributing through his employment agencies in the United States immigration pamphlets published by the Government of Canada.

INSPECTION OF ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANIES.

Mr. COCKBURN asked, Is it the intention of the Government to redeem the promise made in the early part of this session by the Controller of Inland Revenue, to introduce a Bill for the inspection of electric light companies, similar to that now in force regarding gas companies?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). In answer to the hon. member, I beg to say that it is not the intention of the Government to introduce a Bill for the inspection of electric light companies, as was intimated, but not promised in some remarks made in the early part of the session.

NEWFOUNDLAND—LICENSE FEES.

Mr. KAULBACH asked, Has the Government of Canada taken any action, by process of law, or otherwise, to obtain a refund of the license fee improperly exacted by the Government of Newfoundland from Canadian fishermen during the season of 1890 and 1891? If so, what has been the results?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Government has instituted suits through the Department of Justice to recover the license fees exacted by the Government of Newfoundland on Canadian vessels during the season of 1890.

THE MODUS VIVENDI.

Mr. KAULBACH asked, Is it the intention of the Government of Canada to extend the modus vivendi between Great Britain and the United States, as respects the granting of privileges to American fishermen to use our Canadian fisheries on the Atlantic coast? If so, for what period?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to state that under the provisions of the Statute 55-56 Vic., chap. 3, "An Act respecting Fishing Vessels of the United States," an Order in Council was passed 17th January, 1893, authorizing the issue of modus vivendi licenses during the season of 1893.

SAULT STE. MARIE CANAL—TOLLS.

Mr. LISTER asked, Is it the intention of the Government to recoup the owners of Canadian shipping the amounts paid as tolls at the Sault Ste. Marie canal?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that that matter is under the consideration of the Government.

SUPERVISOR OF CULLERS AT THREE RIVERS.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, Who is the Deputy Supervisor of Cullers at Three Rivers? How many commissioned cullers are employed in connection with the office at Three Rivers? What is the salary of the Deputy Supervisor, and what were the total receipts and expenditure of that office during the past three years?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The Deputy Supervisor of Cullers at Three Rivers is T. Malone, jr. He is also a commissioned culler. T. Malone, sr., was appointed a commissioned culler for Three Rivers last year. The receipts for 1889-90 were $94.21; expenditure, $871.25; for the year 1890-91, receipts none; expenditure, $844.50; for the year 1891-92, receipts, $122.32; expenditure, $1,172.18.

Mr. Wood (Brockville).

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has the attention of the Government been called to the following evidence in the Report of the Civil Service Commission at page 484:—

4503. Taking the first permanent clerk in the secretary branch, are you aware that your predecessor reported the necessity of his appointment on account of the absence of a law clerk in the department?—I am not aware of it.

4504. What duties does he perform?—He does not do any work now.

4505. Does he get his pay?—Yes.

4506. At what time does he get down in the morning?—I think at 10 o'clock.

4507. Does he sign the attendance book?—No.

4509. He came to you at $1,800 a year?—Yes.

4510. When he left the other department he had only $1,400?—Yes. I think the Order in Council said he was to be promoted to the maximum of the class on being exchanged.

4511. On account of the special qualifications he could bring to the department and the absence of a law clerk?—I do not know anything at all, except what I have heard confidentially as to his translation to the department. I was law clerk at the time.

4512. You were secretary at the time?—No, I was law clerk at the time, and I remained there. Mr. Baillaigé was so good to me that I remained there until I was appointed secretary, and when I was promoted I found another man to take my place, who is there now and does the work.

Who is the clerk referred to? Is he still in that department? Is he still out of work? Does he still draw his pay, and if so, how much per year?

Mr. OUIMET. In reply to the first question the answer is, yes. The name of the clerk referred to is J. P. Macpherson; he is still in the department. To the question: Is he still out of work? the answer is, no. His salary is $1,800 a year, and he is drawing it.

MAIL CONTRACT, NEW RICHMOND AND GRAND CASCAPEDIA.

Mr. FAUVEL asked, What is the amount paid the contractor for carrying the mails between New Richmond and Grand Cascapedia post offices, in the county of Bonaventure? How many tenders were received by the Post Office Department for this service? Was the contract given to the lowest tenderer? If not, why not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to state that the amount paid for this service is $80. This contract was a renewal of the previous one on the same terms and conditions, consequently the notices inviting tenders were withdrawn and the tenders not considered.

EXCISE DUTY ON TOBACCO.

Mr. BRODEUR asked, 1. What was the amount paid during the past fiscal year for the collection of excise duty on tobacco?

2. What was the amount paid during that year for the stamps required on tobacco ?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). 1. The work of the excise staff being interchangeable as between the supervision of distilleries, breweries, malt houses, bonded factories and tobacco factories, it is quite impossible to determine the proportion chargeable against each class of duties specifically. The whole cost of excise work may be placed at say 4¼ to 5 per cent of the accruing revenue. 2. The cost of stamps used upon tobacco and cigars actually excised during the year can only be obtained by an examination of the monthly return of every manufacturer under license. An officer has been detailed to prepare a statement in this way, but the labour involved will require a delay of two or three days in giving a definite reply. Meantime it may be stated that the amount actually expended upon stamps last year was as shown on page 47 of the annual report for 1891-92, $37,067.61. This included an account of some $17,000 for a large stock of stamps taken over from the British North America Bank Note Company at the expiration of their contract, as it was not known to whom the next contract would be awarded. The average cost of stamping tobaccos and cigars, may, however, be approximately ascertained by taking the aggregate expenditure for stamps during the preceding five years (excepting the $17,000 above referred to) and the aggregate revenues from tobacco and cigars, excise and customs, and dividing one into the other. These figures give the following result:—

STATEMENT showing the amount of Revenue and Expenditure on account of Tobacco and Cigars for the last five years ended 30th June, 1892, and the percentage represented by the cost of Stamps for each year.

Year.	Excise revenue.		Customs revenue.		Total revenue.		Expenditure for stamps.
	$	cts.	$	cts.	$	cts.	$	cts.
1887-88	2,294,608	51	233,833	25	2,528,441	76	21,660	57
1888-89	2,403,693	57	282,686	90	2,686,380	47	25,053	15
1889-90	2,499,831	91	295,599	39	2,795,431	30	22,674	26
1890-91	2,542,166	97	326,735	65	2,868,902	62	25,895	87
1891-92	3,076,170	50	270,427	65	3,346,598	15	20,067	61
	12,817,471	46	1,409,282	84	14,225,754	30	115,351	46

By these figures it will be seen that the cost of stamps has averaged four-fifths of one per cent upon the revenue collected during that term.

QUEBEC JUDICIARY.

Mr. BRODEUR asked, 1. Have the Government appointed a judge of the Superior Court, at Montreal, to succeed Mr. Justice Wurtele? 2. If not, why have the Government not as yet made the said appointment; and is it their intention to do so at an early date? 3. Are the Government aware that the Provincial Legislature has just provided for the appointment of two circuit court judges at Montreal? 4. If so, is it the intention of the Government to make the said appointment this year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No judge has been appointed in succession to Mr. Justice Wurtele. The Government would prefer to have a conference with the Government at Quebec before making any further judicial appointments, as the judicial system is in course of revision in that province, and the Attorney-General at Quebec has indicated that he will take an early opportunity of seeing myself, or some other member of the Government, in connection with this matter. The Government are not aware that the Provincial Legislature has just provided for the appointment of two circuit court judges.

FRENCH CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether the Government have had cognizance of the numerous articles by Mr. L. Z. Joncas, M.P. for Gaspé, published by L'Événement, Quebec, in reference to the unequal distribution of patronage of all kinds, as between the English and French elements in this country? If so, is it their purpose to put an end to a state of things so unjust to the French element?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If any such inequality should at any time be found to exist in the service, the Government will remedy it.

COTTON AND OTHER INDUSTRIES.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, 1. What was the capital invested in the cotton industries? (a) How much in land? (b) How much in buildings? (c) How much in machinery and tools? (d) How much in working capital? 2. The number of hands employed? 3. The amount of wages paid? 4. The same in regard to the wool cloth industries? 5. The same in regard to the foundries and machine works? 6 The same in regard to the rolling mills; and also (a) The value of the raw material? (b) The value of the output?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. Capital invested in cotton industries, $13,208,121; divided as follows:—(a) land, $376,980; (b) buildings, $2,884,348; (c) machinery, &c., $6,468,719; (d) working capital, $3,478,074; total, $13,208,121. 2. Number of hands employed, 8,502. 3. Amount of wages paid, $2,102,603. 4. Woollen returns by census (1891)—Capital invested in woollen industries, $9,365,158, divided as follows:—(a) land, $637,450; (b) buildings, $1,532,077; (c) machinery, &c., $3,088,683; (d) working capital, $4,106,948; total, $9,365,158—number of hands employed, 7,470; amount of wages paid, $1,941,483. 5. Foundries and machine shops, returns by census (1891)—Capital invested, $14,396,503; divided as follows:—(a) land, $1,714,356; (b) buildings, $2,427,735; (c) machinery $2,613,432; (d) working capital, $7,640,980; total, $14,396,503—number of hands employed, 12,604; amount of wages paid, $5,122,257. 6. Rolling mills, returns by census (1891)—Capital invested in woollen industries, $9,365,158; (a) land, $78,500; (b) buildings, $78,000; (c) machinery and tools, $265,000; (d) working capital, $595,000; total, $1,016,500—number of hands employed, 831; amount of wages paid, $335,000; raw material used, $575,000; value of output, $1,750,000.

DEPUTY-MINISTER OF INTERIOR.

Mr. FAUVEL asked, Has the Government passed an Order in Council reinstating Mr. Burgess as Deputy-Minister of the Interior? If so, when was the Order passed?

Mr. DALY. No such Order has been passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 23) respecting Witnesses and Evidence.—(Sir John Thompson.)

SUPPLY—SEPARATE SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) The question I am about to consider is of such importance, I do not feel justified in trying immediately to convey my views in the English language, on account of my imperfect knowledge of that language. However, after making in the French language the observations I have to make, I will ask the House to allow me to say a few words in the English language. But before proceeding further, I beg leave to offer a personal explanation. I was not in my seat the other day when the Prime Minister called the attention of the House to the telegram published in a newspaper, in which

Mr. McCARTHY.

I was made to say I would take care that the First Minister did not skip to England before compelling him to express his views on the Manitoba school question before Parliament. We all know the hon. the First Minister is bound to go to Europe for the fulfilment of an important public mission, with respect to which we ought, all of us, to wish him a full measure of success. I certainly did not use such language. I merely said I would give him an opportunity, as it was my duty to do in the public interest, to explain his position before he would start for Europe. Mr. Speaker, the question I am now considering is of such consequence as to escape the notice of no one. I pray that in considering it, I may be able to rise head, shoulders and heart above all national and religious prejudices. We are all citizens of the same country. We are all British subjects; we have all the same title to the protection of the laws; we have all the same interest in the maintenance of the law and in a fair construction of our constitutional charter. Whether we are Catholics or Protestants, we are all equal before the law, and before the throne of our sovereign. These elementary truths and these elementary principles regarding the liberty of the subject do not seem to have been understood for a certain time, or at least if they had been understood, it appears as if they had not been applied with equal justice to all. One who was not conversant with our political history would not suspect that after numerous changes—which had not brought to us peace and harmony—in 1867 we had made a compact that was a compromise by which we thought we had settled all our religious and national dissensions. One would not have supposed either that as far back as 1863 the separate school question had been settled so far as the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada were concerned, and that in 1867, this settlement which took place was not only confirmed, but extended to the other provinces where there were minorities to protect. It is interesting now to read anew the numerous promises made by the authors of the Federal compact and of which we had a right to expect the full realization. I might be allowed, in the first place, to refer to a man for whom I have had the greatest admiration, and who was for a long time the leader of the French Conservative party in the province of Quebec; I refer to Sir George Etienne Cartier. What did he say:

Now, when we were united together, if union were attained, we would form a political nationality with which neither national origin, nor the religion of any individual would interfere. It was lamented by some that we had had this diversity of races, and hopes were expressed that this distinctive feature would cease. The idea of unity of races was utopian—it was not possible. Distinction of this kind would always exist. Dissimilarity, in fact, appeared to be the order of the physical world and of the moral world, as well as in the political world, but with regard to the objections based on this fact, to the effect that a great nation could not be formed because Lower Canada was in great part French and Catholic, and Upper Canada was British and Protestant, and the lower provinces were mixed, it was futile and worthless in the extreme. Look, for instance, at the United Kingdom, inhabited as it was by three great races. (Hear, hear.) Had the diversity of races impeded the glory, the progress, the wealth of England?

And further on :

In our own federation, we have Catholics and Protestants, Englishmen, Frenchmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen ; and each of them, by his efforts and his successes, will add to the prosperity and glory of our new Confederation. We are of different races, not to fight each other, but in order to jointly work for our own well-being. We cannot cause by law the different races to disappear, but I am persuaded the Anglo-Canadians and the French-Canadians will realize their position with respect to one another. Placed alongside, like large families, their contact will cause a sound spirit of emulation. The diversity of races will contribute, believe me, to the common prosperity. The difficulty, it would be said, would be to deal fairly by the minority. In Upper Canada the Catholics would find themselves in a minority, in Lower Canada the Protestants would be in a minority, while the lower provinces were divided. Under such circumstances, would any one pretend that either local or general Governments would sanction any injustice? What would be the consequence, even supposing any such things were attempted by one of the local Governments? It would be censured everywhere. Whether it came from Upper Canada or from Lower Canada, any attempt to deprive the minority of their rights would be at once thwarted.

These words, which were then to be prophetic, are very important to read anew now, and I call to them the special attention of the French members of the Cabinet who represent us here presently. But there was another man who, at that time, held a very prominent position in the country, and represented the English minority in the province of Quebec, Sir A. T. Galt. What did he say himself :

Let us trust, that this machinery, however faulty it may be, will yet under Providence open up for this country a happy career ; while at the same time the House must not forget that it will for ever remove the great and crying evil and dissensions which have existed in Canada for the last ten years, and which threatened to plunge the country into the most disastrous and lamentable state of discord and confusion. Is not this last consideration sufficient by itself to induce the House to favour of the measure?

There was another man who held a special, but very powerful position at that time. I refer to Mr. George Brown, who has been, as we all know, a long and strenuous opponent of the separate school system. He had made a fight that holds a great place in the history of the country by his appeals to passions and prejudices. For a long time, the French and Catholic minority had to face his repeated attacks. What was Mr. Brown saying ?

But I am told that when acquiescing to this principle of putting local matters under the control of local Governments, an exception was made as regards common schools. Now, the section that gave rise to this complaint reads thus :

“ Education shall be left to the local Governments, excepting the rights and privileges which minorities, Catholic or Protestant, in both Canadas, shall enjoy with respect to their separate schools, at the time of union.”

Notwithstanding these promises of harmony and peace, notwithstanding these solemn pledges we are again face to face with a crisis that might become as violent and dangerous as that of thirty years ago. Who is responsible for the deplorable state of affairs we now see ? Who is responsible for the present crisis ? To the eyes of one who inspires himself by what is written in a certain press which is presumed to represent the views of our English fellow-countrymen, to the eyes of those who only read these papers, the minority would be guilty of the crisis to which I refer. We, French-Canadians, we, Catholics of the Dominion, were represented by the Toronto “ Mail ” and the Winnipeg “ Tribune ” as preparing to invade Canada, no more nor less ; as determined to impose to the Protestants the clerical domination which, they say, exists in the province of Quebec : as preparing to impose to that gallant province of the west the Jesuitical system to which they say we are submitted in the province of Quebec. I am happy the electors of the county of L'Islet should have given me a mandate, so that I could come here and protest against the imputations to which my race is subjected. No, we are not a people subjected to any regime likely to make us unworthy of being free citizens, living under a free constitution. We are not the slaves of the clergy and we do not wish to impose to our English compatriots a regime which we would not bear ourselves at home. We love liberty as much as any other race. I would add that in the province of Quebec there is a strong push towards true liberty, stronger perhaps than in any other province of our country. Those who represent us as a set of men without will, as men without any other will than that of the priest, the beadle, or the bell-ringer of the parish, know nothing about us, that I can assert to you, Mr. Speaker. The newspapers, the names of which I have just mentioned, and some others, had recourse to these tactics in order to prejudice the public sentiment against us, against all that is French and Catholic, and when we reproach them with this deplorable course, they answer that it is in the writings of our press they find the vindication of their attacks. These writings which they oppose to us as the starting point of these unfair and slanderous attacks are from writers without any responsibility and mandate whatever, who never were entitled to voice public sentiment in our province. Those papers who are unfriendly to us published the most unlikely things on our account. And no one protested ; there was not a single English newspaper to be found that thought it its duty not only to defend us, but even to put before its public an expression of our views. I am willing to admit, Mr. Speaker, that there are in our province, as elsewhere, retrogressive elements. But I should like to know where is the province in the Dominion, where is the country where there are no such elements? I should like also to know if we are the only people who had to contend occasionally against attempts at religious domination? I remember, when I was proceeding hand-in-hand with my hon. friends opposite, we had occasionally to oppose the interference of the Protestant clergy. In our province, there were members of the clergy who possibly went astray. Those of the members of our clergy who were in that case have ignored the spirit that now prevails in the church. I would ask to those who are not blinded by fanaticism whether it is not true that Catholics and Protestants alike are one in proclaiming that the head of the Catholic world presently is one of the most liberal-minded statesmen of the day? If, therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are free English citizens, if we understand our institutions as I am happy to proclaim it here, I say you have no right to trample down a race that is well worth another. If we are so unjustly accused, some public men amongst us who hold a prominent position in the Government of the country are perhaps responsible for it. For instance, I read a speech delivered by the hon. the Minister of Public Works in the county of Terrebonne. He spoke then—and I hope he will avail himself of this opportunity to disown this language—not as a man responsible to this Parliament, but as a man ready to throw away his responsibility and to follow preferably the direction of the bishops on this school question. Here is the language he used in this instance, according to a newspaper that is used to telling the truth, especially when reporting Ministers' speeches. I read in the "Minerve" of the 10th January, 1893:

With a Prime Minister like Sir John Thompson this question (referring to the school question) is in good hands. Sir John is known for his talents, for his spirit of fair-play, and his broad views, and he will do. I am sure, anything that is possible to give justice to every one, according to his right. Moreover, what is the use of such an agitation as the Liberals are trying to raise on this question? Have we not to guide us in this matter, in which religion is specially interested, our bishops, and the leaders of the church?

I contend that a Minister responsible to a parliament composed of free men, of Protestants and Catholics, has no right to use such a language. This language is well apt to stir up and accumulate against us the already too numerous prejudices we had to contend with. But after all, it may be that the hon. the Minister of Public Works was only having recourse to a political manoeuvre, for I know him well enough to be aware that in his inner soul, he is a liberal-minded man. However, the more the hon. gentleman thought what he said, the more guilty he was in saying it. I wish to protest, in the strongest possible terms, against the false imputations hurled against us. I wish also to protest against the part we are made to play; I wish to protest against the ideas attributed to me particularly. I have read in the "Mail," for I am a constant reader of that paper, words to the following effect: Mr. Tarte, after getting assured of the support of the priests in the county of L'Islet, has taken the lead in the school question. The Winnipeg "Tribune" also stated:

There must be an equality of rights amongst all the members of the Confederation; and when the time of action comes on this question any attempt of encroachment will be met by a strong resistance from Parliament.

So far as I am personally concerned, I can inform you, Mr. Speaker, in all truth as well as in all justice for the members of the clergy of the county of L'Islet who voted against me, that during the last election, I tried to get their respect, but that I could not get their sympathies. All the priests who went to the polls to vote registered their votes against me. I think there were two or three who were not unfriendly to me; but, in compliance, as to that, to orders received from Rome and to orders received from their bishops, they abstained from voting. I am not, therefore, coming here to represent, with respect to that question, the wishes, less still the orders of the priests of the county of L'Islet, nor the orders of the bishops. I, here, as a political man, responsible to this House, assert the right of all races to the preservation of the constitutional charter; and I think I am voicing the feeling of right-thinking people, whatever their religious belief may be, when I state that in the present circumstances, we ought to be united in asserting these rights, once for all. I have stated, moreover, from the inception of this question in the political arena, that it was not a religious question, but that it was above all a constitutional question, a question of justice to the French element. I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, what the Dominion Parliament would do, should the Quebec Legislature, where the majority is Catholic, abolish one of these days the separate school system which it now enjoys? I ask for an answer from those who will address the House after me during this debate. But the answer is already at hand. Should ever the Quebec Legislature forget itself to the extent of suffering itself to be led to such a fault, Parliament would not hesitate for a single moment; it would not call on the Crown to interfere; it would invoke the constitutional charter; or rather, it would not be compelled to go that far; for if such a law was passed at Quebec it would immediately be vetoed. We are on the same footing as all the other races; but I regret to say so—and I state it openly—we are not treated like the other races. In fact, is there a clearer law than that of 1870 with respect to the French language in the first instance, and then with respect to the schools? Section 23rd of the Act of 1870, reads thus:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the House of the Legislature and both those languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person, or in any pleading or process, in or issuing from any Court of Canada established under the British North America Act, 1867, or in or from all or any of the courts of the province. The Acts of the Legislature shall be printed and published in both those languages.

And the Act concerning schools was just as clear. However, the Legislature of the province of Manitoba passed the laws of which we are complaining, and they were not vetoed. The Minister of Justice made a special report in reference to the law concerning the French language, in which he said: We will not disallow this law, but will leave it to those for whom it is a cause of complaint the task of carrying the case before the courts of justice. The hon. Minister, who is well informed in parliamentary law, could not find in the political history of the world such an instance, such a precedent. The Government are the guardians of the laws and they failed in their duty when not causing them to be respected. Unfortunately, their policy was modelled since on the one they adopted then. They began by failing in their duty, but the elections of 1891 were near at hand; they well knew they were not fairly treating the Catholic minority; they wished at the same time not to lose the important vote of the Catholics—we are nearly 2,000,000 of Catholics in this country. Without the Catholic vote, no Government could keep in power. On the other hand, the Government were anxious not to lose the Protestant vote. They had, therefore, recourse to the clever tactics of the to-morrows. Then began that series of negotiations without any precedent in our parliamentary history. The Hon. Mr. Chapleau, Secretary of State, was entrusted with the task of conferring with Archbishop Taché—then sick in the Grey Nuns' Hospital, at Montreal. With the authorization of the First Minister for the time being, he went and saw Archbishop Taché in Montreal and represented to him the difficulties of the political situation of the Ministry. Archbishop Taché said to him: But if we wait, if we yield, I will, perhaps, be again the victim of duperies like those of which I was already the victim in the past. I was told—I do not assert it positively, for the hon. Minister is in his seat and he will contradict me if I am not speaking the truth—I was told that the hon. Minister of Public Works also shared in these negotiations. At all events, they were conducted by the hon. Secretary of State at that time. Private and formal pledges were then given. But Archbishop Taché would not rely on these private engagements, formal as they were. He wanted the Government to pledge themselves as Government. It was represented to him that elections were at hand, and that he must know there was in the Conservative party an element hard to control and one which required to be kept fair with, more than they do now—I refer to the hon.

member for North Simcoe and those who follow him. There were still hopes that he would be brought back to the fold; and, as a matter of fact, the doors were twice opened to him. The Government, through those who conducted the negotiations, pledged themselves to make public formal promises that would solemnly confirm the private pledges then given.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) If the hon. member will allow me to interrupt him, I would ask him to kindly make clearer the language he used, by saying whether I was the party he wished to point out when he referred to the Minister of Public Works as having shared in the negotiations.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) When I referred to the Minister of Public Works, I intended to mention the hon. member, who was not a Minister at that time.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) Well, then, I must tell him I had nothing whatever to do with the supposed negotiations which he says took place between Mr. Chapleau and Archbishop Taché; and I must add that the hon. member for L'Islet very likely speaks without any authorization whatever from Mr. Chapleau. If Mr. Chapleau negotiated, as he says, with His Grace Archbishop Taché, Mr. Chapleau being under oath bound to keep secrets what should have taken place in these negotiations, I do not think he reported to the member for L'Islet what happened between them.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) I will have you observe, Mr. Speaker, I asserted nothing positively; I said I had been informed of what I have just stated. But I am ready to give credit to the hon. Minister for his denial. So far as Mr. Chapleau is concerned, I can assure you he did no piece of indiscretion with me. And in order to make the hon. Minister easy, I will state to him that I obtained my information from other sources.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) In justice to Mr. Chapleau, the hon. member ought to state from what source he obtained these informations.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) These interruptions, Mr. Speaker, only result in throwing light on the discussion. I assert that the report dated 21st March, of the hon. Minister of Justice, which became the report of the Governor-General in Council, was the signal and confirmation of the private pledges then given and made public by this document. The hon. the Minister of Public Works has just mentioned the name of Mr. Chapleau. It is well not to forget that Mr. Chapleau was since made Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec, and that when he renounced to public life as Minister he delivered a speech that contains important statements, amongst others those in connection with the question now brought up. In bidding adieu to the electors of Terrebonne, he made use of a language that has a great import in this debate, language that he also made use of in Hochelaga, in the presence of the hon. Minister of Public Works, on the occasion of the putting in nomination of Mr. Lachapelle. Here are his words, which I quote from a report published in "La Presse":

I do not know, and I cannot tell you what the Government will do to settle this question, which is more annoying than difficult; but I can say that we are anxious to follow that fruitful and excellent policy of conciliation and good-will which has given to our country progress, success, tranquillity and order. If the Government does not meet in Parliament with that spirit of tolerance which the Church admits nowadays under every form, to which Christianity adapted it; if the old provinces who have organized Confederation refuse to draw their inspiration from the source which gave them their existence; if on behalf of "equal rights" equality and liberty of conscience are refused to those who claim it, it will then be just as well to call all things in question again and to begin anew the discussion of the terms of Union. We shall be unable to produce a great nation out of the heterogenous elements of our provinces, without guaranteeing to the minorities all their rights, privileges and immunities, without which these minorities would never have accepted the compact which constitutes the Confederation.

Here is the political will of one of the old members of the Government who made the promises I referred to, of the Government who are now backing down and who ought to consider as an honour to fulfil them to the letter. But, Mr. Speaker, Archbishop Taché hardly restrained himself about making his views known as to the pledges then given. He wrote in the papers. He sent important documents to the Governor-General in Council. Moreover, he must have addressed himself to the hon. the Minister of Public Works, to the representatives of the French element in the Cabinet, and I think I am not mistaken in stating he did so. Now, in his writings and in these documents, Archbishop Taché did not restrain himself in speaking out his mind. And what did he say in a letter I now hold in my hand? On the 20th August, 1892, he wrote, amongst other things, as follows:—

You ask me my views as to the remedy to be applied to our evils. I have none to suggest to you, for the very simple reason that I am under the painful conviction that my opinion will not weigh for much in the political balances in which our destiny is weighed. I can, nevertheless, tell you that I have heard of the idea of having an explanatory law which would establish, in a clear and positive manner, that the intention of the Legislature in passing the Manitoba Act, was to guarantee to us our separate schools. About that intention I have not the shadow of a doubt. It is for that reason that, even after the decision of the Privy Council, I say that the constitution is shamefully violated, and that if a remedy is not applied to the evil, the Federal power will have one more neglect, one more shame to its credit. The object was to give us a share of the lands set apart for the schools of Manitoba. The lands were to be administered by the Federal power, and when those lands were reserved for school purposes we had our separate schools; and evidently the intention of the Legislature could not have been to deprive the Catholics of their legitimate share in that public domain. If the two million

Mr. TARTE.

Catholics in Canada are of no account, well and good; but as we count for something, I suppose this idea of giving us the benefit of the lands administered at Ottawa, had entered the thought of some one. As to the instruction to be given to the newspapers, I would resume it in two words, energy and perseverance. This cannot mean disintegration of the Dominion, annexation to the United States, civil war or anything like that; it would mean, in my estimation, that we should take every constitutional means in our power to resist a tyranny which will go on increasing by success. Sir John Thompson has pledged himself officially and publically; others have done the same thing privately but solemnly. Let all do their duty. Let the press and the population sustain them. We will then be strong, but we shall become weak in the end if our newspapers cry out loudly, and if those cries, as has happened in other cases, end by a servile submission to the will of our adversaries.

I assert here that Mr. Chapleau is the man who, on behalf of the Administration of which he was a member, went and solemnly made these promises. I leave the last words I have read to the meditations of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière).

Mr. LaRIVIERE. (Translation.) Would the hon. gentleman give the name of the party who received that letter from Archbishop Taché?

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) I would not object to giving it privately to the hon. gentleman, but I would not like to put it before the House, for the letter was sent to a man who is not in active public life. I would not like to give the name without being authorized by him.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) And when the member for Provencher will have the name, will he be entitled to give it to those who will ask him for it?

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) In that case, it would be just as well to give it to the House; the moment it will be everybody's secret, it will be equally that of my hon. friend from Bellechase (Mr. Amyot). The hon. member for the city of Three Rivers held at that time a prominent position in the country. He was the official leader of the French race. In this momentous question his responsibility is great. I do not put him in the case with a desire to be disagreeable to him, surely not, but I mention his name, in order that if I was misled, if no promises were made, no understanding arrived at as to this school question, we might at least know it. The Archbishop of St. Boniface, who took the initiative in this important matter, asserts positively that promises were made. I am aware that the Hon. Mr. Chapleau went and conferred with him in Montreal. If all these circumstances have no meaning, upon what shall we rely? What is the meaning of the report made by the hon. the Minister of Justice and which is that of the Governor-General in Council? I contend the Government admitted fully and formally the right of the Catholic minority to remedial legislation should not the judicial proceedings then pending be decided according to the views of the minority. I know they object to us, that the Privy Council decided the question and that there is no more recourse. The hon. the Minister of Justice is one of the best informed men of the country as to constitutional law; he is a superior man in point of constitutional matters. We have all admired and frequently cheered the eloquent speeches he has delivered in the past, the weighty opinions with which he endowed our legislation. In making this report with all the care he could bring to it, he intended saying something. The courts of the province of Manitoba had just decided that the Catholic minority was not affected by Mr. Greenway's legislation. I will observe that the French version of the report of the Minister of Justice states: "Appeal was 'confirmed' and the case is now pending before the 'Superior' Court." The true sentence should be: "Appeal was taken and the case is now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada." But let us see what is stated in the report of the hon. the Minister of Justice:

Proceedings in appeal were taken and the case is now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada where, in all likelihood, it will be heard in the course of next month. If the appeal should be successful, these Acts will be annulled by judicial decision, and the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba will receive protection and redress. The Acts purporting to be repealed will remain in operation, and those whose views have been represented by a majority in the Legislature cannot but recognize that the matter has been disposed of with due regard to the constitutional rights of the province. If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained, the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsections 2 and 3 of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act," quoted in the early part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the "British North America Act" with relation to the other provinces. Those subsections contain in effect the provisions which have been made as to all the provinces, and are obviously those under which the Constitution intended that the Government of the Dominion should proceed, if it should at any time become necessary that the Federal powers should be resorted to for the protection of a Protestant or Roman Catholic minority, against any Act or decision of the Legislature of the provincial or any provincial authority affecting "any right or privilege" of the said minority in connection with public education.

Respectfully submitted.

Nothing can be plainer than these words. The Government formally pledged themselves not to be bound by the judicial decisions that might be rendered. Their action merely consisted in saying to the Catholic minority: There are now legal proceedings pending; we call upon you, in the interest of peace and harmony, which we all of us ought to desire, we call upon you to wait till final decisions are rendered. If they should be against you, if the courts decide that under the law you cannot obtain redress, then the Governor in Council, the Queen, whose authorized representatives we are, will interfere. One must not mingle together, as they seem to have done too long on the other side of the House, the judicial branch and the governmental branch. Courts of justice have duties to perform, and the Government have their own. They are the guardians of the rights of all, especially of the minorities. And, in this case, if the report of the Minister of Justice was not an immense fraud, if he did not intend to deliberately deceive—and I decline to believe that—there must be a sanction, and what is this sanction? This I would inquire from the hon. Minister of Justice: Does he believe that the Catholic minority would have accepted an arrangement under which the Government would have said: We pledge ourselves, and pledge yourselves, you Catholic minority, to abide by the decision of the courts? No, never. The Ministers must not forget that besides them there are some amongst us who know how things happened. The hon. the Minister of Justice knows that Archbishop Taché was told: If the courts should decide against you the Government will interfere. The decision of the Privy Council applied to a litigation in which we took no part. My Catholic colleagues of the province of Quebec and myself, who have an immense interest in this matter, took no part whatever in this Barrett suit. Our petitions were there, they were not taken into consideration. And why? Because, as usual, the Government was inspired by the desire to cause no commotion. We, therefore, had to wait. The courts of justice decided legal questions; and on what points? On a law passed by the Canadian Parliament, the Privy Council decided against us, and let it be said by the way, it looks as if the case had been very imperfectly argued. The Privy Council decided that the rights of the minority were not sufficiently determined in the constitutional law passed by the House of Commons of Canada. They stated these rights were not sufficiently clear for their Lordships to legally maintain them. Can it be true, Mr. Speaker, that because the Parliament of Canada were unable to find a correct term to define the rights of the minority, this minority would have to be crushed and trampled under foot? Can it be true that the Crown in Canada has gone that far, that it should avail itself of a clause improperly drawn up to disregard and overlook the rights of the minority? I do not believe it, I decline to believe it still. I have done, for the time being, Mr. Speaker, with the report of the hon. the Minister of Justice, to which he should stick. My testimony will perhaps not be worth much in his appreciation, but my friends who are around me are aware that if there is a man for whom more than another I have the greatest respect, he is that man. His great learning, his uprightness, his high character always were the object of my admiration. Well, it will be one of my disappointments, one of the deceptions of my political life, should I see him untrue to the promises on which the Catholics had relied, on which the representatives of the minority had equally relied. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to recall in as few words as possible the causes that led to the legislation of 1870, so far as Manitoba is concerned. The Hudson Bay Company, the House will remember, had sold without consulting the people their rights to the territory that now forms that province, to the Imperial Government, who subsequently transferred them to the Dominion Government for £300,000 sterling. It is important to state here that at that time the majority in the territories of Manitoba was composed of Catholics. The census taken in 1871 gave 6,247 Catholics against 5,716 Protestants. The people, so to say, irrespective of their origin or religious belief, stated they were dissatisfied with the negotiations that had been conducted, and the French population, who had very special interests to safeguard, united to resist, even by force, to the coming in of Lieutenant-Governor McDougall. Archbishop Taché, of St. Boniface, was away in mission to Rome attending the ecumenical council which was then being held. The Canadian authorities, very uneasy about the turn things were taking, entered in communication with Archbishop Taché and induced him to come immediately and give his assistance, so desirable and so much desired by every one. Sir John A. Macdonald, as soon as Archbishop Taché arrived, sent him a letter of which I make the following quotation. This letter was published in the official documents; it is under date 16th January, 1870 :

In case a delegation is appointed to proceed to Ottawa, you can assure them they will be kindly received and their suggestions fully considered; their expenses coming here and returning and while staying in Ottawa will be defrayed by us.

When at Red River, Archbishop Taché had much difficulty in persuading the people and the Provincial Government, who had assumed power during his absence of the good faith of the Canadian authorities. They complained they had been often deceived by the Dominion Government—and, history in hand, we might say they were right in showing distrust as they did. Finally, an understanding was arrived at, and those delegates were appointed to settle the difficulty that had arisen. Messrs. Black, Scott and Ritchot came to Ottawa, and after lengthy negotiations they came to an understanding. A bill or list of rights prepared by the delegates was submitted by them to the Government, who accepted it. Of this bill of rights, I will read section 7, which is as follows :—

That the schools be separate, and public moneys for schools be distributed among the different denominations, in proportion to their respective population, according to the system of the province of Quebec.

As I stated, the majority was then composed of Catholics and it is therefore for the protection of the Protestant minority that these reasons were taken. With these facts in view, with the laws in view that were passed by the Manitoba Legislature, under which a separate school system was established, a system that lasted 20 years, I should ask how it is that public men should put in doubt the existence of the rights of the minority? It is to my mind a real mystery to see that with such plain facts in view, they should think of applying to the courts, to ascertain what? To ascertain that of which we were the witnesses during 20 years. If the school legislation of 1871 in the province of Manitoba was not consistent with the letter and spirit of the constitution of that province, it ought to have been disallowed by the Federal authorities, and, however, they did nothing of the kind. If this little province of Manitoba, which we created financially and otherwise, is to prevail over the Parliament of Canada, if it can pass unjust laws which this Parliament has no power to remedy, how is it that the legislation of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario should be subject to the Federal disallowance, as are the other provinces? Should that be the case, Manitoba would be the only province that should prevail over the Canadian Parliament and as to which we could exercise no control here. I regret to state that the Ministers are responsible for what is now going on. Had they taken a stand worthy of true statesmen, had they said, constitution in hand: Here is a province that wants to prevail over the Parliament of Canada: we will see to it, as it is our duty to do it, by the exercise of the authority with which we are invested by the law: should the Government have taken that position, the excitement would immediately have died out. Unfortunately, they did nothing of the kind. And why, Mr. Speaker? Because the minority was not the only one that applied to the Ministers. A certain element was causing threats to be heard. They thought they could quiet the Catholic and French minority by a policy of procrastination. They thought the French-Canadians would keep silent and that with governmental patronage they could easily bring them into line again. They thought the French-Canadians would bow down and would allow their rights to be violated without raising their voice, that they would give in cunctis more and always. They thought the French-Canadians would not apply to Parliament in order to attain redress for their grievances and the justice to which they have a right. They thought they would not dare to make a long fight. As to that, I am sure, they were mistaken. I am somewhat aware of the feeling in the province of Quebec, and when I refer to the province of Quebec, I not only refer to the French province of Quebec. We will make an appeal, not only to the French-Canadians, but also to the liberal-minded men of the other provinces. We will ask them whether, because we are the minority, we have not rights equal to theirs? One would think that this school question never was settled anywhere. Why! it was settled thirty years ago. It was one of the bases of the Federal compact. Am I to be told that if it had not been formally settled, the Federal compact would have taken place? Where is the public man who would dare to say that if the separate school system had not been settled, the union would have been completed? But they always oppose us, the judgment of the Privy Council. I am quite willing to bow to the legal knowledge of their Lordships of the Privy Council; but the province of Manitoba was not willing, for its part, to bow so low. For, prior to the judgment of the Privy Council being rendered, the House will remember that the newspapers of that province, that the Ministers of that province openly stated they would take it into account if it should be against them. That is of recent history. We will certainly not show ourselves bad citizens, as a number of them were determined to do. We wish to respect, to the fullest extent possible, that learned decision; but we say it does not apply to the case. We state, however, that the Government had pledged themselves if this decision should be against us, to interfere governmentally, so to speak. But, however, the judgment of the Privy Council does not apply to subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act. I had hoped, until lately, that the Minister of Justice would hasten to do justice—I will not say he had not the courage—but he had not the political authority to do it. This subsection reads thus:

Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law at the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant and Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

The Government determined to do something. After pledging themselves to interfere governmentally, they decided to constitute themselves a court of justice. I leave it to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) whose writings in the "Canadian Magazine" we have all read with interest—to settle his judicial accounts with his faithful and loyal friend the Minister of Justice. But we, who are not clever men in the construction of the judicial decisions of their English Lordships, we think we somewhat know at least what our rights are under the constitutional charter of the country. I say, therefore, that even were the judgment of the Privy Council right in law—and we might for a moment take it as such—the governmental interference would remain under the subsection I have just quoted. It is useless to further press the question of law. But I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what is the actual meaning of the persistency with which they decline to interfere. What is the true situation? We are a French minority, who endeavoured to remain loyal to the British institutions and who defended them, when necessary, with as much energy and courage than any other race. However, we feel indeed—and I voice the feelings of my colleagues by openly stating it here—we feel indeed that, without having deserved it, we are led to destruction. The French language was abolished in a province we had opened to civilization. What wrong were we doing with that French language, which, in spite of all, I believe to be the finest in the world? What wrong were we doing, unless it should be perhaps an expenditure of some few thousand dollars for the distribution of the official literature to the French inhabitants of the province and for allowing them to plead before the courts of justice in their native language? They could address the legislature in the language that was familiar to them, and they abolished it. The Parliament of Canada was not moved by that gross encroachment. Where is the political man who will contend that the Manitoba Legislature had a right to abolish the French language? The Manitoba Legislature, to use a word uttered by Mr. Gladstone in relation to Home Rule, had been incapacitated. Nevertheless, the Government did not interfere, and after the abolition of the language, during the same session, the abolition of the schools. They prevent us from speaking the French language in the Legislature and they do not want it to be taught in the schools. In a word they say to us: We are two against one; we abolish your language, not because you have no rights, but because we are stronger than you. After Manitoba came the Territories. I will be told that the French population there are not numerous. It is true, Mr. Speaker, but the less numerous a population, the more sacred ought to be their rights. And I say to the Government of the province of Manitoba, as I say to the Government whose members I see at this moment before me: You are not acting as British statesmen; you are breaking traditions that ought to be dear to you above all things. Mr. Speaker, while I pity in their failings the statesmen of my country, I owe it to my duty to mention to them an example, which, I hope, will cause them to cogitate and will give them the courage of which, so far, they seem to have been wanting. In 1890, there was a talk about depriving part of the population of the Island of Malta of the right they had to speak their own language, the Italian language. And what took place in that case? Mr. Gladstone, leader of the Opposition in England, in an address before the Liberal Club, of London, used the following language:—

But, in the meantime, there has been raised a most curious group of questions in connection with Malta. And do not let us suppose that because Malta is a small country the questions arising there are on that account unimportant. I am not speaking of political or military dangers in regard to the British possession of Malta, which danger I do not believe, but I am speaking, gentlemen, of my desire—and I am certain that it is a desire that all share—that where, through the course of circumstances, we are led to an occupation of an island, the natives of which are not precisely united with ourselves in uniformity of religion or in the bonds of races, if we are to hold that island by the power of England, we are under an obligation that it shall be held with every consideration for the wants and the wishes of the inhabitants, and with the most earnest desire to win and to retain their affection. I am sorry to say that from the very limited information given us in the shape of a little parliamentary paper giving us an account of a certain embassy of Sir Lintorn Simmons to Rome—a very great novelty in British history—there are a number of questions raised on which I cannot pretend—I have not proper information—to lay before you definite conclusions, or to supply you with complete information; but I would point out to you that those are topics of the utmost importance, and which will demand a vigilant observation and watchfulness in the future; and though the year is probably too far gone for very effective discussion of these Maltese questions at the present moment, yet, in the coming session, in all likelihood, they will call for a good deal of attention, and may give rise to free utterances or important judgments in the House of Commons. Now, one of the points is this: There appears to be a purpose promoted by British authority in Malta for something like the disestablishment of the Italian language. There appears to be a desire—I will not say the evidence is demonstrative, but still in the manner in which the question is brought forward, there seems to be a desire to a great extent to substitute the British for the Italian language in Malta. Well, I am opposed to any such substitution. I think—and my mind goes back to the case of Wales—that there is nothing in the world that the Welsh would so vividly resent as any officious attempt to change the language of their country, and, gentlemen, they are perfectly right. The union between a nation and its language, the union between a small people like Wales and its language, is a due, and affectionate union; it is bound up with all its traditions; and when we went into Malta we engaged to respect their traditions, and attempt no policy, I do not care where it began. I believe it began in some former time, but we have evidence before us now, which induces me to say that in my opinion the Maltese have been sacredly promised the preservation of their language and institutions, and are entitled to claim, amongst the very first elements of that promise, that we shall pay due respects to the customs established among them and inherited from their forefathers, which are bound up with all their ideas, and which, above all, they wish to retain.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if our political men had the respect for vested rights which Mr. Gladstone urges them to have by these words, we would not be exposed to be deprived of the rights that were solemnly guaranteed to us. The speech of Mr. Gladstone which I have just quoted was delivered on the 20th July, 1890. A few days afterwards, on the 16th August, Mr. Balfour, speaking in the House of Commons and replying very specially to the words I have just quoted, repelled with some passion, so to say, the imputation hurled at the British Administration, that of wanting to commit an injustice prejudicial to a weak minority. This language, which I quote below, I offer it to the cogitations of those who make such false charges against us:

I have to tell you on my part that whether the accusation be made by way of categorical charge or whether it be made by way of obscure insinuation, it is absolutely and totally without foundation. (Cheers.) The idea that this Government or any Government should sacrifice the rights of any minority in any part of Her Majesty's Dominions, and above all should sacrifice the rights of a Protestant majority (cheers), is surely so utterly absurd, so contradictory, so alien to what is known of the character of every one of Her Majesty's present advisers, that it is not necessary for me now, to traverse the accusation of which it is hard to say, whether is more monstrous or more ridiculous.

But, Mr. Speaker, are we committing ourselves to such injustice in that province of Quebec which is so much slandered; in that province given to the command of the clergy; in that province so much imbued with religious bigotry, are we acting as the majority of the province of Manitoba are acting towards the Catholic minority? Mr. Speaker, the population of the province of Quebec numbers now 1,488,535 inhabitants; of this number there are 1,291,709 Catholics and 196,826 Protestants. The Protestant population, therefore, represent only thirteen and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, while the Catholic population form eighty-six and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of the whole population; that is to say, the same proportion in which both elements stand in the province of Manitoba. Well, of the grants for educational purposes, the Protestant minority now receive nearly thirty per cent, while they are only entitled to thirteen and a-half per cent. And we have not, so far, protested. We persevere without the least hesitation in this liberal policy towards the Protestant minority while our coreligionists are ill-treated in Manitoba. The grants made to High Schools (Catholic and Protestant), including what Normal Schools receive, amount to \$123,344. Of this the Catholics are given \$89,433 and the Protestants \$33,911; that is to say, the Catholics who are entitled to 86 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent or to over $\frac{3}{4}$ of the total grant, only receive 72 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, or less than $\frac{3}{4}$; while the Protestants who in reality are only entitled to less than a seventh, receive 27 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, or more than a fourth. In proportion to the population, the Catholics ought to receive \$106,253 and the Protestants \$17,091, a difference of \$16,820 in favour of the Protestants. As regards "common schools" the apportionment of the grant by the Department of Public Instruction is made in proportion to the population, and the commissioners or trustees in each municipality distribute the amounts they receive in proportion to the number of children from seven to fourteen years old there are in each district. 255,627 pupils follow the schools of the province of Quebec; it is 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of the whole population. There are 5,291 schools of all kinds, which is a school for each 256 inhabitants, and in the province of Ontario, where the population numbers 1,923,228 inhabitants, there are in all 5,316 schools, that is to say, a school for each 361 inhabitants. Mr. Speaker, we hear the political men say, and we read in the newspapers which are the principal mouth-pieces of the English population, that we wish to build up here a great people. The history of the world in hand, I would like to be shown a single nationality that ever rose to any extent of power and prosperity by inspiring itself with a spirit of hatred and discord. We are now discussing one of the most momentous questions public men in our country had ever to discuss for the last forty years. After a solemn compact, after arrangements were accepted by the majority guaranteeing the rights of the minority, without any notice being given, without any regard for the negotiations which took place, these guarantees are thrown aside which protected the rights of the minority. And they would have us believe that Parliament is powerless to do justice to those who suffer! If the British Crown in Canada should wish to perpetuate its domination by crushing down a minority,—and I am happy to still believe that that is not the case—I hope, and expect that the disinterested public men, foreign to the passions of the moment, to the narrow dissensions, will know how to do their duty. We might say to those who intend to tyrannize over the minority, that our people are behind us, as you might have yours behind you to support you. The day when the rights of the minority will be no more guaranteed by the laws, the day when public sentiment will be no more in favour of the preservation of these guarantees, will be an ill-fated day for Canada, it will be a day of immense disappointment to those who believe we can build up a great empire on this land of America. The bishops are made parties in this discussion and some people hide themselves behind them and take shelter under their authority. I am one of those who believe, Mr. Speaker, that the least the names of the bishops will be mixed with politics, the better it will be.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Archbishop Taché amongst others.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) Archbishop Taché took the initiative with respect to this school question and the direction he gave to it is not, it must be admitted, the best thing he did for his fame. I am not used to flattering, but, on the contrary, I am used to speaking out my whole mind. He interposed, not as bishop, but as a simple citizen, at least I hope so; for, as bishop, were his episcopal prestige to bear the responsibility of the deceptions we have experienced, he would much suffer by it in the eyes of history. Archbishop Taché, like the other bishops to-day, are not sufficiently equipped—I regret to say so—are not politically equipped to a sufficient extent, to negotiate with the men now in power. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) interrupted me; I am going to recall to his mind an incident he knows as well as I do. At the time of the investigation, in connection with the amnesty, in 1874, Archbishop Taché came and swore before a committee of this House that Sir John A. Macdonald and the hon. Sir Hector Langevin, then Minister of Public Works, had made formal promises to him. Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Hector Langevin went before the same committee and swore they had never made any promises. Archbishop Taché, I state it again, should not have allowed himself to be caught by the fallacious promises made to him. But we are told: "You should not speak of Archbishop Taché." Archbishop Taché wrote letters, he wrote pamphlets on the situation. And the hon. member for Provencher will especially remember one of those letters in which he was told that, on this very question, he was wanting in the duties he had to perform.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. (Translation.) I challenge the hon. member to prove that I ever received such a letter from Archbishop Taché.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) I refer to a letter published in his own paper. Does the hon. member deny the authenticity of the hon. member deny the authenticity of the

Mr. LaRIVIERE. (Translation.) No; I am not denying the authenticity of the letter published in the newspaper "Le Manitoba" in relation to local affairs, but I say it has no reference whatever to what is going on here.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) I cannot read this letter which the Archbishop wrote, because I have not got it here; but I pledge myself to have it read before this House before this discussion is over. In that letter, Archbishop Taché charges him, no more nor less, with having deserted the cause of the Catholics. Since you are using this bishop as a bulwark, let us settle accounts. I say the Government deceived Archbishop Taché. I say the hon. member for Provencher never complied, I do not say with the orders, but with the wishes of Archbishop Taché. I have here dreadful letters against him.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Read, read!

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) Let the hon. member for Bellechasse allow me to say what I have to say; he should not play beforehand the part of the devil's slave. This incident settled, I come back to the responsibility they wish the bishops to bear. The Government had solemnly pledged themselves to protect the French and Catholic minority. The French members of the Cabinet, especially, brought to bear upon the bishops the influence of their exalted position, so as to bring them to consent to delays. The courts decided against this minority, whose natural protectors they are, but whose interests they neglect. And they now say: But it is the bishops who are responsible; we follow the advice of the bishops. Mr. Speaker, this is not the truth. The Ministry have no right to use the language used by the hon. the Minister of Public Works. How could the bishops approve of the attitude of the present Government when it implies a perfect renunciation of our rights, when it is an attitude of deceit and dupery, and after the strong language often used by Archbishop Taché, and which he caused his colleagues to use? On page 2 of the official documents is a petition signed by all the bishops, except Bishop Cleary, who, it appears, declined to sign it. He seems to have said: If I should sign I would go to the end: if I should sign it means that we would have to throw the Government down, should they not comply with our demand. I do not give this information positively. I give it for what it is worth.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. (Translation.) There is a fact I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman. I understood that Bishop Cleary declined to sign the document because the question of the French language was part of it, and he did not like to favour the thing.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) So Bishop Cleary would not sign the petition of his colleagues because he was adverse to the French language?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. (Translation.) It is the information I have. You give your information for what it is worth: I give mine likewise.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) Well, if that is the case, I regret that Bishop Cleary, who is an educated man, should not know the language of Bossuet, who, as bishop, was surely his equal. In this petition, signed by the bishops, under the significant date of the 16th March, 1891, I read the following:

That these laws are contrary to the assurances given, on behalf of Her Majesty, to the population of Manitoba, at the time of the negotiations which led to that province entering into the Dominion.

I would ask whether it is possible that bishops taking such an attitude, and using such strong language could now approve of the course of the Government which is but giving the lie to the assurances given to the population of Manitoba? But here is another language used by Archbishop Taché, and on this occasion I see that he received the powerful support of the hon. Senator Girard, and of my hon. friend the member for Provencher. In his letter sent to the Governor-General in Council, under date of 7th April, 1890, he said, inter alia:

Previous to and at the time of the Union there existed by practice, in the territory that now forms the province of Manitoba, a system of denominational schools. The preservation of this system was made part of the conditions of the Union through clause 7 of the bill of rights, upon which was based the negotiation of the said Union.

And at page 70 of the official documents, we further find the following. Archbishop Taché, writing to the Governor-General in Council, on the 12th April, 1890, states:

I started after receiving these instructions, and I arrived at St. Boniface on the 7th March, 1870. I communicated to the dissatisfied people the assurances I had received, and I showed them the documents above quoted. That had much to do in dispelling apprehensions and restoring confidence. The deputation, which had been delayed, was finally decided upon, and the delegates appointed several weeks previously received again their commission. They went to Ottawa, opened negotiations with the Federal authorities, and these negotiations had such a result that, on the 3rd May, 1870, Sir John Young cabled to Lord Granville: "Negotiations with delegates satisfactorily closed." The negotiations provided that religious or separate schools would be guaranteed to the minority of the new province of Manitoba, and the French language was so formally acknowledged that it was decided it would be officially used both in the Parliament and in the courts of Manitoba.

He concluded his letter with these words:

I consider the laws just passed by the Manitoba Legislature for the purpose of abolishing the Catholic schools and the official use of the French language as an unwarranted violation of the promises made previous to and in order to obtain the coming of the province into the Dominion.

Archbishop Taché then expected that the Federal Government would not allow these laws to be put in force, for he added:

I consider that these laws deal a fatal blow to the very constitution of the province. They are prejudicial to some of the interests that are most dear to a portion of the loyal subjects of Her Majesty. If they are allowed to be put in force, they will be a cause of irritation, they will destroy the harmony that now exists in the country and leave the population under the painful and dangerous impression that they were cruelly deceived, and that, because they are a minority, they are left without protection, and that in spite of the promises made twenty years ago by the immediate representative of Her Majesty: "Justice will be done at all events."

Archbishop Taché again signed, another time, a document sent to the Governor-General in Council. This document was signed by himself and by Messrs. Jos. Messier, of St. Boniface; F. A. Bernier, now senator; Mr. Girard, at that time senator; Mr. A. A. LaRivière, M.P.; M. L. A. Prudhomme, James A. Prendergast, Roger Marion and 4257 other persons. In this document, these gentlemen, some of whom appear now to be satisfied, the member for Provencher amongst others, stated:

Never, since that legislation until the last session of the Legislative Assembly, was any attempt made to encroach upon the rights of the Roman Catholics confirmed as above mentioned; but, during this last session, statutes were passed (33 Vic., chap. 37 and 38) which resulted in utterly depriving the Roman Catholics of their separation in point of education; in blending their schools with those of the Protestant denominations; and in compelling all the members of the community, whether Roman Catholics or Protestants, to share by means of taxes in the maintaining of so-called public schools, which in reality are but the continuation of Protestant schools.

In the face of all these past protestations, I ask how the bishops could now declare themselves satisfied? They are slandered, I fear. What is the policy of the administration? We were told the Ministers would sit as a judicial committee. After this deliberation, what result have they come to? Did they act? Now, they thus sat to ascertain that they could not act as a judicial committee, but that it was necessary to refer the matter for judgment to the courts.

The Government, who sat as a judicial committee and must have profusely examined the question, ought now to be ready to make an honest and clear statement. Now, I ask them through the hon. the Minister of Justice, who will address the House following when the Supreme Court will have after me, to state the course they intend fol- rendered judgment. Are the Government ready to act should the courts give them the right to interfere? That is what we wish to know: that is what we must know. But, Mr. Speaker, they will not make such a state- ment. The Government have but one policy, that of putting off till next day, of resorting to delays, of seeking to escape the ministerial responsibility. It is a censurable and criminal manoeuvre not only from the point of view of the minority who are now suffering, but also from the point of view of the general interests and the most dear to the country. In another occasion the Government allowed public sentiment to go a dangerous way, they did not give the direction they should have given to that sentiment, and the Ministers perceived too late they had increased the mischief by not taking a well defined and firm position.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) The Riel affair that was.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) I protest against the idea of making the bishops res- ponsible for the failings of the men in power. Through their want of political experience, they are not in a position to negotiate on a par with the Ministers. We have come to this pass, Mr. Speaker, that we are asking our- selves what they intend to do with us. In all the mouth-pieces of the English public senti- ment we are denounced as dangerous men, as a servile set enslaved to the clergy, and, I regret to say it, there is not to be found in the whole English press of the country—the "Globe" included—there is not to be found one single newspaper willing, not to take our defence, but even to put our case as it is be- fore its readers. I throw aside party ties and I call upon the Government to preserve the rights confessedly granted to the minority by the constitutional charter, which must be sacred to all, to state the Legislature of the province of Manitoba abolished without any right the separate school system that was guaranteed to the minority by the constitu- tional law. Is it not a fact that should Mani- toba have had a right to act as it did, Onta- rio has just as sure a right to abolish its separate schools?

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I think hon. gentlemen of the House might keep order while a speech is being delivered in French. I am sitting very close to the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), yet it is with difficulty that I can hear what he is saying, because of the want of order. We have rights in this House. We have a right to speak French here, and even if hon. gentlemen cannot understand it, at least they ought to give those who do understand an opportunity to hear what is said.

Mr. TARTE. I have been listening to debates for fifteen years, and I know that hon. gentlemen talk among themselves while speeches are being delivered. I do not feel that I have been treated with any discourtesy, and I do not complain.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman's friends have been constantly complaining, and I think I have only done my duty in calling attention to the matter.

Mr. McNEILL. It is difficult for hon. members to listen attentively to what they do not understand.

Mr. TARTE. Difficult as it may be, after the words that have just been uttered, I am not sorry that I made up my mind to speak in my native language. I have a right to speak French here. I have decided to do so, and I do not regret it. We have rights here that are worthy of being pre- served, and I intend to maintain them strong- ly. I know it does not please every one, but I know also, that there are many able men in the world for whom French is a very interesting language indeed.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) As stated by Archbishop Taché, the rights guaranteed to the minority, should things continue that way, will be destroyed one after the other in the near future. It is our duty to defend them and to take every possible means offered to us by the law and constitution to preserve them inviolate. We are represented as being adverse to reforms and improvements, we are charged with being retrograde. I oppose these charges, as I already stated, with all possible energy. Our only wish is that a principle of equal justice to all be applied; that the compacts, the agreements made be respected by both parties. The Confedera- tion was a compromise between the majority and the minority and the compromise must not be broken without our being consulted. In point of education we also wish for some reforms, and if you think we are opposed to improvements in these matters as well as in others, you are greatly mistaken. In the very province of Quebec we are making great endeavours to obtain and promote re- forms. But I will ask you, the Protestant majority, if you think you have a right to enforce reforms upon us, the Catholic mi- nority? If you want to deal the cards anew, allow me to use that word, let us deal them; but you will not deal them alone. I want to be in the game. I think it would be better, in the interest of all, to take into good ac- count the fact that we are a minority willing to respect the rights of others, but also will- ing that its rights should be respected. I very often read in the "Mail" that the French-Canadian countryman is a man void of intelligence. Mr. Speaker, the editors of the "Mail," as well as some members of this House, ought indeed to learn the French language and do me the pleasure of coming and spending some few weeks in the county of L'Islet. I would show them a class of men who have not many superiors. I have travelled; I have seen England and France. I know England well. Well! I say without fear the French-Canadian farmer or artisan is a man who has got a right to look up, as much so as any European farmer or artisan. No doubt we have improvements to make. We do not deny that. We wish to follow the path of progress; but we do not want to be led with a rein. And I think the majority, however powerful it may be, could never come to that. We want but our rights, but we want them all. The French language has been abolished in Manitoba; I call upon the Minister of Justice to state to us, in a few moments, whether the Government of that province had the right to do that. Separate schools were abolished; they had no right to abolish them. And they screen themselves behind mean legal subtleties, so as not to do justice to us! Well, Mr. Speaker, we have still the public sentiment to which we already appealed in the past. Indeed, when Sir John A. Macdonald fought against a majority in the province of Ontario in order that justice be done to my race and to the Catholic minority, he immortalized himself: he acquired some claims to the great fame that will survive him; I ask his successors that they should remain worthy of him. I ask them what they are now doing with the traditions of the Conservative party. Some of us are taunted with having left the ranks of the Conservative party. Mr. Speaker, there is not a question of principle as to which that party did not recant these last years. They wanted us to follow men, instead of being faithful to principles, we declined to make such a sacrifice; and, thank God, if our efforts were not always crowned with success, history will proclaim that we acted like men of conviction and courage. Before quite crushing us down, they will have yet much work to do. We will go before the people with this question. I would be willing to go to-morrow in the province of Ontario, before any English audience, and inquire from the old friends of Sir John A. Macdonald, to the Tories who are represented here, but who did not keep the traditions of the old leader they followed so long, whether they wish that Confederation should last. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is a member of the Imperial Federation League of which I was myself a member—and I am not ashamed of it, for I am a loyal subject of the Queen, for I understood that Federation to mean the preservation of the great Empire over which the sun never sets. The hon. gentleman wishes to preserve the integrity of the Empire—and yet he wants to make outcasts of a third of our people. It is a peculiar way to build up the British power on this continent. Let us well be understood. Mr. Speaker, we are willing, in Manitoba as elsewhere to acquiesce in reforms; but we want our consent to be asked for. Let no one come and charge us with a desire to perpetuate abuses. There are among the English members of this House friends of mine who understand what I mean. I again state that we have no desire to perpetuate any abuse, but we merely ask not to be taken by the throat. It is not asking too much. If Confederation is to be maintained, if we are to form a people, it can only be maintained and we can only be a people, by having respect for one another. I asserted, in another circumstance that there was such discontent in my province that should there be a plebiscite to-day, one would be surprised at the number of people who would declare for annexation. My assertion was discussed in the press of the country. I wish to repeat it, not as a threat, but in order that there should be no disappointments later on. My compatriots who number a million in the United States are not treated there with the feeling of contempt we are shown here. They have become American subjects, at least quite a number of them. They respect the laws and they are respected by the American people who gave them such a liberal hospitality. They respect the laws and the laws protect them. Here we respect the laws and we are deprived of our rights by the courts of justice. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Government to restore order and equilibrium in the country; but let it not be thought that the agitation will be dropped, on the contrary we are now laying its foundations. We will fight to the end for the preservation of our rights. Mark it, nothing is stronger than men fighting in defence of their rights. Do not forget, moreover, that the British Crown bears that proud motto, "Dieu et mon droit." With these words, we can proudly look up and claim in this country justice and liberty from those who know what justice and liberty are. Mr. Speaker, there is not a day passes but we are slandered, we are made the objects of most undeserved reproaches, we are charged with resisting the Privy Council. Yet, I have often read in the "Mail" that the province of Manitoba, that loyal province after the manner of our opponents would not acquiesce to a policy of interference and that we ought, so they say, to give in. We are entitled to the respect of those who surround us; we have a right to require that anywhere in Canada the constitution be respected, and we ask you to see that that constitution be not torn, put into pieces and isolated with impunity. We are abused, and yet what have we done? When have we encroached on the rights of your people? In our province of Quebec, for which they have such contempt, how many English Protestant members do we return, where we could return men of our race. I wish to make no threats by referring to this matter; no, for my only object is to state a fact. In many counties, we are represented by Protestants, while we could return Catholics. We simply do that for the preservation of the peace in this country we wish to see happy, wealthy and prosperous. Why should not our tolerance be followed elsewhere? It must not be thought that these evidences of patience, of tolerance ought always and in every case to come from the same side. On this continent of America, it will be well never to forget it, there is much space where we could find protection and where our rights would not be assailed. I am, and I state it openly, in favour of the integrity of the Empire, I wish that not a single portion of that great Empire should be detached from it. I am loyal to the Queen, but above all I profess to be loyal to the rights of my race. I am loyal to the valuable liberties guaranteed to my compatriots, who are slandered by all the English-Canadian press, of which not a paper, I state it again, "Globe" first and "Empire" last, would put our case before the people who read them. All the great English press made it a study to slander us systematically. When we see the Government making themselves the accomplices of our detractors, the time has come indeed for us to look up, to close our ranks, to stand side by side and to begin again, if necessary, the fights so gallantly stood, in days of yore, by our ancestors. Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time the French language was abolished in violation of our rights. In the early days after the conquest, an attempt was made to deprive us of the right of using our own language, but the latter was soon restored. We then made a gallant fight for our rights and when we were refused justice here, we were heard at Westminster. We met there men who took our defence and succeeded in bringing about the triumph of our cause. Should justice not be done to us now, why should not we go again to the foot of the Throne and have our just claims heard? There is no reason that could prevent us from making that pilgrimage which our fathers courageously undertook and which led them to the conquest of the political and other liberties that are so dear to us. I would ask the French Ministers: What have you done with the inheritance which was left to you? I do not see the hon. the Minister of Public Works in his seat, but the Postmaster-General is here, I would ask him what he has done for the protection of our fellow-countrymen? I would ask the French Ministers what they have done with the rights of our compatriots of the west? In this discussion, our attention ought to be fixed on a question of justice and on nothing else. Let them not try and screen themselves behind trifling pretexts. What was done in the province of Manitoba affects the vital principles of our race. What have these Ministers done with the inheritance that was left to them, what have they done for its protection since their accession to power? The French language was abolished in Manitoba; they are seeking to abolish it now in the North-west Territories. The Catholic schools were abolished and instead of taking a firm stand, worthy of true statesmen, they refer the question to the courts of justice. I understood, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. the Minister of Public Works and the hon. the Minister of Agriculture went into the Government, they had pledged themselves, to the groups who support them, to require justice from the Government. They have done nothing, they will bear before the province of Quebec the heavy responsibility of their weakness and their failure! If they think there is time yet to come to the assistance of those who suffer persecution, we offer them our help, we hold out our hands to them, with disinterestedness. If they should be willing to act like men and fulfil their duty, I can assure them they would have the assistance of my friends on this side of the House, at least of my friends, the members of the province of Quebec. I am not making this statement without being sure my words are sanctioned. As for us, it is not a question of party, it is a question of principle, a question of justice. Our race has rights equal to those of the other races and we want these rights to be acknowledged and respected. I move:

That all the words after "That" in the main motion be erased, and the following substituted: - "That this House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question, and in assuming to be possessed of the judicial functions conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to the law, and, if now acquiesced in, would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility."

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. In rising to speak on this question, I do not intend to follow my hon. friend through all the stages of his remarks, but I may have, perhaps, to recall to this House the history of the question, as that history is more or less connected with the motion now before us. You all remember, especially the oldest members of this House, what took place before Confederation, during the existence of the Parliament of United Canada. You all remember the great fights which then took place on the floor, not only of this House, but of the House that sat alternately in Kingston and Quebec. In those days, the two provinces composing then the united provinces of Canada, the province of Upper and the province of Lower Canada, were battling for supremacy, and at the time of the Union, one of them, the province of Quebec, was much the larger in population. But by the Act of Union both were put on the same footing as regards representation on the floor of the Legislative Assembly. Later on, when the province of Upper Canada increased in population, the question of representation by population was agitated. That question and the question of separate schools were the questions which, in fact, brought about the Confederation of the provinces now composing the Dominion. It was thought at the time that, in order to do away with those adverse questions, a union of all the provinces was most desirable, and this gave rise to the idea of calling together all the provinces then forming British North America. When this union took place, this very question which we have been discussing to-night, the question of education, was one of the most delicate that had to be dealt with; and in reading over the British North America Act, it is easily seen that the understanding arrived at in 1862, or thereabouts, with regard to education, was maintained. The spirit of the constitution was certainly, and is certainly in favour of establishing, wherever it was not in existence, and of maintaining wherever it did exist, the system of separate schools. So much was that the case, that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where separate schools were in existence under the law, they were specifically mentioned and maintained, and a general clause was embodied in the British North America Act, providing that in each province where a system of separate schools existed before the Union, or was thereafter established, such system should be maintained, and that whenever the local authorities or Legislatures or Governments would do anything at all prejudicially affecting the minority, an appeal would lie to the Federal Government or Parliament. That is the essence and spirit of our constitution. Later on, after the union of the fore-named provinces, other provinces were taken in, and at that time the province of Manitoba, being a part and parcel of the North-west Territories, which had been acquired in the meantime, was organized. At the time of that organization, as has been said by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), a deputation was sent down here to Ottawa by the local authorities in Manitoba for the time being. This deputation came here; a bill of rights was presented to the Federal Government, and it was upon that bill of rights that the Manitoba Act was framed. In that bill of rights, a copy of which I placed before this House some two years ago, the question of education, as well as the question of language, was provided for, and the Manitoba Act generally was in accordance with the provisions of the bill of rights. In the Local Legislature this question of education, based on a similar system to that in existence in Ontario and Quebec, was so well understood that immediately that Legislature was assembled, at its very first session an Education Act was passed which declared that there should be a system of separate schools. That law remained in existence, amended from time to time, but remaining the same in principle, until 1890.

when it was repealed at the instigation of the present Government of Manitoba. Before proceeding further upon that point I will remind this House of a little part of the history of our Local Legislature, which I had the honour, some years ago, to bring before the attention of the members then present. We had in Manitoba, as there is to-day in Quebec and in some of the lower provinces, two Houses, a Legislative Assembly and a Legislative Council. It was thought, during the Mackenzie regime, by some of the members here and by Mr. Mackenzie himself, that the Upper House might be abolished. I know it has always been one of the principles of members now on the left side of the Speaker to do away with Upper Houses. With their democratic views these gentlemen do not appreciate the value of Upper Houses. Therefore, when the province was trying to get better terms—in fact, the province was in need of better terms, and was then applying for them—one of the conditions upon which these better terms were granted was that the Upper House should be abolished. Upon the return of the delegation that had been sent to Ottawa to negotiate these better terms, a meeting of the House was called, and a proposition was made to abolish our Legislative Council. I must remind you, as has been already stated by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), that at the time of our entering Confederation, the French and Roman Catholic population of Manitoba was in the large majority, and therefore, anything provided in the Manitoba Act for the protection of minorities was in reality for the protection of the English-speaking and Protestant minority. In the Legislative Council four members were Roman Catholic and only three Protestants, that being in proportion to the population at the time. The Roman Catholics formed only one-half the number of members of the Lower House. Therefore, the only guarantee the Roman Catholics had for the maintenance of the immunities they possessed was that they had a majority in the Legislative Council. When this proposition came to abolish the Legislative Council, which was their only safeguard, a debate took place; and there, Sir, the most solemn pledges were given by the Protestant members of the House that never should the Catholic or the French population of Manitoba have cause to regret voting away the Legislative Council. I have here, Sir, the remarks made by some of the members at the time. Here are the remarks of one English-speaking and Protestant member:

There were some questions of settlement which made calls upon the hearts of the French people and he would assure them that notwithstanding the movement of the member for Kildonan—

Who was opposed to the French at the time.—the English members would not recklessly deal with these if the French representatives were sufficiently patriotic to support the measure before the House. They would recognize their generosity and not forget it.

Another member, Mr. Cornish, who was at one time Mayor of the city of London, Ont., and late Mayor of the city of Winnipeg, stated that never would the French or Roman Catholic people have to regret the vote to abolish the only safeguard they had at the time—to control the legislation of Manitoba. Well, Sir, it was only about ten years afterwards when—I will not say a leader of a party, I will not say a demagogue, because it was only by reason of deceiving promises that that man could get into power—all these pledges were disregarded. We had peace before that; we never had trouble between the two sections of the people; but when the Greenway Government was inaugurated differences arose. And I regret to say that the Liberal press of Quebec, because Mr. Greenway happened to be a so-called Liberal in politics, rejoiced when this man came into power. They rejoiced; they praised him; they lauded him to the skies; and to-day what do they do? They blame the Government of the Dominion for not crushing this man; and, Mr. Speaker, what kind of legislation did they pass? I will never blame a man for holding opinions that may differ from my own. I believe in separate schools; but I cannot blame another member of this House, or even the lowest citizen, for having an opinion that may be opposed to mine. I respect his opinion as I want my own to be respected. At the same time, Sir, there is a way of carrying out a principle; but, Sir, that way is not robbery. The Manitoba School Act of 1890 was nothing else but a piece of robbery. We had in Manitoba before, as I said, an Act that was giving satisfaction to everybody. Under that Act there was a board of education composed of two sections, one Roman Catholic, the other Protestant. That board formed a body by itself, and its president was none less than the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Rupert's Land of the English Church. There sat at that board clergymen of all denominations, not excepting Roman Catholics. In fact, His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface was simply a private member of that board, under the presidency of the Right Rev. Bishop of Rupert's Land. I have had the honour myself of being a member of that board, and I can state that nothing in the least unpleasant ever happened before that board. Everything was discussed openly and frankly, and we never had any trouble in administering the public schools of Manitoba. Well, Sir, there were Roman Catholic school districts and Protestant school districts. The former were separate schools in a sense, but they were in reality public schools. The Act was a public Act. We had Roman Catholic school trustees and Protestant school trustees. Each section of the board of education had control of the schools under its management. Now, what was the result of the legislation of which we complain to-day? The result was that the Roman Catholic section of the board of education was suppressed. The members of the Protestant board of education were appointed a sort of advisory board. All the Roman Catholic school districts were wiped out; all the Roman Catholic trustees were dismissed; the funds that belonged to the Roman Catholic section of the board of education, some $14,000, were taken away from them and handed over to the other section. All the properties belonging to the Roman Catholics, the houses they had built with their own money, the books and other things they had bought with their own money—because never in the province of Manitoba was a cent taken from the Protestants to contribute to the Roman Catholics, or vice versa; the Act never called for that—those properties, grounds, school-houses, books, maps, everything were, under the provisions of that Act, to be taken away from the Roman Catholics and handed over to the Protestant school trustees, who, by the Act, became the trustees for the public schools. The programme of teaching has never been changed an iota. What was the programme of the Protestant schools before is still the programme of the public schools to-day. They have to take everything from us; they may have their own schools as well as our own. Sir, do you think that after being treated in such a way, we do not deserve praise for the admirable patience we have shown? Do you think that after being robbed, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, we should not expect a little more sympathy than has been shown us so far? It is no wonder that I should agree with my hon. friend from L'Islet, to a certain extent, in the statement of what has taken place, but not in the remedy he suggests. I will not go again over the legal view of the case, but it may, perhaps, be well for me to call attention to one point that seems to me to have been overlooked by the hon. gentleman who spoke before me. When this trouble began the first action that was taken in regard to this question of the schools and the dual language, was taken by the Catholic section of the board of education, who sent to the Governor in Council a memorial calling attention to the fact of the passing of the act of the Local Legislature, and praying the Government to exercise their power of veto over that legislation. My hon. friend from L'Islet seems to attach some blame to His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface for interfering with this matter. I may say by way of explanation that whatever has been done in Manitoba by the National Congress, or by private individuals, was done by their own free will, and not under clerical or other influence whatever. We have our opinions about the school question and the dual language, although my hon. friend from L'Islet in one part of his speech seemed to blame us for having joined with His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface.

Mr. TARTE. I never blamed you.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I understood the hon. member to say that His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface had taken the initiative in this question, and that it is not what he has done the best—"ce n'est pas ce qu'il a fait de mieux." Well, I was going to say that after that legislation was enacted a meeting of all the Roman Catholics of Manitoba was called at St. Boniface, on 24th of June, 1899. Delegates were invited from each of the parishes. At that meeting a national congress was organized, and as an outcome thereof an executive committee has ever since been in existence in Manitoba, and that executive committee is composed entirely of laymen, acting entirely independent of any other influence. The last petition that was sent, entitled "A Petition from the National Congress," comes from that organization. Therefore, when we are accused of acting under the direction of the hierarchy, as the Winnipeg "Tribune" often asserts, the accusation is false, because we are not acting under any such influence. We understand this question, and as fathers of families, we have a deep interest in the welfare of our children, and in a proper education being given to them. The first action that was expected from the Government was naturally a disallowance. But while we desire this disallowance, it is a fact, as has been stated by my hon. friend from L'Islet, that the local government of Manitoba openly stated that if the acts were disallowed the Local Legislature would be called together and the same legislation would be re-enacted.

Mr. TARTE. Disallowed again.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. As the hon. gentleman says, it might be disallowed again. Then it might be re-enacted again.

Mr. TARTE. And disallowed again.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Yes; and it might be necessary to engage the hon. member for L'Islet to attend to this disallowance matter. At the same time our school affairs and public affairs would have been thrown into a state of chaos without there being any remedy to apply. It was all very well for the hon. gentleman to speak of making a bold defence, of showing a feather in one's cap, but when we are in a minority, as we are in the province of Manitoba, we are not always inclined to press the fighting side of the case. Without giving away our rights, without renouncing what we claim to be our rights, we left the matter in the hands of the Government. We sent in a petition, asking the Government to do what the law prescribes, and asking that they consider our petition as an appeal, as is provided by the British North America Act. It has been thrown out at us that the Privy Council in England has decided adversely to one of our claims, namely, the claim under the Manitoba Act that we had schools in existence by law and by practice, at least by practice, in the province of Manitoba. That was the case put before the Privy Council, and the Privy Council, after a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, and I may say a right one too, had been rendered otherwise, decided that the words "by practice" did not protect the schools that were in existence in the province of Manitoba prior to Confederation. The Roman Catholic schools, the English Church schools, the Presbyterian schools that existed years and years were not recognized. Well, Sir, we have left at our disposal the British North America Act. That Act is broader than the Manitoba Act itself, it applies to all the provinces, and we have a perfect right to look upon it as part and parcel of our constitution. That Act says, "In any province where a system of separate schools existed before the entry of that province into Confederation, or was thereafter established, that system shall come within the provisions of appeal, if the minority has some reason to complain of unfair treatment by the majority." That point was not settled by the Privy Council; it was not brought before the Privy Council. We have had schools established in Manitoba since the province has been in existence. I have told you, Mr. Speaker, that in 1871 a Separate School Act was passed, which was amended from time to time and re-enacted and continued until 1890, when it was set aside as I have stated. So that during nineteen years we had in Manitoba separate schools established by law, that is to say since our entrance into Confederation. Therefore, under the British North America Act we are fully protected, and as that same clause provides for an appeal to be made to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, that appeal has been made and is now before the Government for consideration. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that though all these proceedings are taking place, that though we are looking for redress, yet nothing whatever has been done after consultation with us. We have been driven through all these proceedings, and should the legal part or side of the question be decided adversely to our case, we shall then make our claim under its political side, and we shall continue making that claim until we get justice. The hon. member for L'Islet has stated that this is not in his mind a party question. No, it is not in my mind either a party question. It is a question that concerns the whole of this House, it is a question that should be considered by this House in a calm and just manner, and I know when the time comes for the House to deal with it finally—if the House should have to do so—it will be so considered. But if the hon. gentleman was in earnest in stating that he does not consider this to be a party question, he would not bring it before this House in a party spirit, as he has done to-day. If it is not a party question, why did he not bring forward a direct and straightforward motion? Why did he not in his motion announce his principle? What is the motion now before the House? It is nothing else than a mountain in labour bringing forth a mouse. I was expecting to hear after all the hon. gentleman had said in favour of those poor Manitobans, after posing as their champion, as he has done, after thundering in both languages for so long a time, a motion that would have expressed something. No; but I know what his object is. He wants to make political capital out of this question. He wants the report to be circulated in his province: I am your champion, I dared to bring this question forward and tell the House the facts. But at the same time he wants to have a following; and there are a certain number of hon. gentlemen sitting to the left of you, Mr. Speaker, who would not vote for his motion if he embodied in it the real principles he professes to hold. He has accused the members sitting on the Treasury benches of being too careful in telling the House what they are going to do, while he himself comes forward with a motion that means nothing. The members of the Government have their oath of office to respect, they have the responsibilities of their position to guard, and they must obtain permission of His Excellency before they can come here and announce a policy, in fact they have to be in possession of the question before they can decide on it, while the hon. member for L'Islet has no responsibility except with regard to a few votes he obtained in L'Islet. Is it usual when a case is brought before a court to commence by accusing the judges, before they have rendered judgment and even before the case is pleaded? and yet that is what is being done to-day. The Government have decided that they will consult the Supreme Court as to whether they have the right to hear the appeal, and that is being made now. Why do they take that action? Just because the Hon. Edward Blake two or three years ago submitted a motion, which was adopted by this House, setting forth that all such questions where constitutional points are involved, should be referred to the Supreme Court, before either the Government or this House should be called upon to decide as to their merits. That is exactly what the Government are doing to-day. The suggestion came from the Opposition side of the House, and it had the support of the whole House. Every one present voted or acquiesced in that suggestion made by Mr. Blake, and right or wrong it is the law to-day. I may say that I am submitting to the inevitable. If the Government had not followed this course, I suppose their action would be attacked before the same court. They want to find out beforehand whether they will be supported if they interfere in this case: at least if they hear the appeal now before them. I let the Government choose their own course, and, unlike the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) I shall only blame them when I am satisfied that they have done wrong. We can afford to wait. We have said that we are going to fight this case in a constitutional way, by constitutional means, and we shall abide by our decision in that respect. I am exceedingly sorry to have heard the remarks of my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) about the clergy interfering in politics, about the letter of the archbishop, about matters that are of a private nature, and should not be spoken of in this House. I have lots of private letters myself, my pockets are full of them, but I shall not commit the indiscretion of reading private letters here, which would be a flat contradiction to some remarks made by the hon. member with reference to bishops and archbishops. We have been expecting this debate for the past three weeks, and certain papers were full of the programme that the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) had traced out for himself. I took up "La Patrie," of the 1st of March, and I found the following in it:—

Yesterday a journalist from Ottawa had an interview with Mr. I. Tarte, member for L'Islet, to ask him when he would open fire, in relation to the Manitoba school question. "On Monday" answered Mr. Tarte "I have resolved to bring this question up in debate before Sir John Thompson has a chance to go away to Paris. I want to force the Premier to define the position of the Government in this matter. Sir John is bound by his report of 1891, which contains certain things that the public do not seem to know. I have facts to reveal to the House and they will have to answer me. There are not only promises made by the Minister of Justice in his report, but there are other promises made by the Prime Minister privately. You will have some fun before this question is settled."

These are the concluding words: You will have some fun before this question is settled. And this man dares to come before this House to bring up such an important question after stating that we should have some fun before it was settled. I have listened to the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) during five or six hours that he spoke, and I have yet to see what fun we have had. If fun there was, he has kept it to himself. I have a high opinion for the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) as a writer, but I think he lacks what is necessary for a ship going through the seas; he wants a rudder, I believe. This hon. gentleman has belonged to all the political parties, past, present, and, I may say, future, in this Dominion of Canada. And, after having acquired some experience, and after securing little inner secrets right and left, he comes to this House once every two sessions and tells us lots of stories. At one time he came here with a long requisition against a venerated member of this House with the object of ruining his reputation, and he said: I come here as a Conservative, and I come to make this denunciation because I want to make my party purer, by driving away from its ranks some that are not worthy of being there; and the result was that he himself was the first man to be out of the Conservative party.

Mr. TARTE. That is a strong argument.

Mr. LARIVIERE. Just as strong as some of those you have adduced in this case.

Mr. MONET. It is a funny argument.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I suppose you do not appreciate it very much. I shall conclude my remarks with a little piece of history. It has no connection with my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). It is a Fenian document. Every one knows that in former days there was such an institution as the Fenians existing across the boundary, and there were a few of them in this country, but very few. In 1871, I was on my way to Fort Garry, as Winnipeg was then called, and, on my way up, going through Minnesota and Dakota, I came across what was called a Fenian army, which had gone up that way in order to take possession of the Red River Valley, and to organize a Fenian Republic there. I just happen to have in my hand a document that has never been published before and which is nothing less than the constitution of the Fenian Republic that was to be started in Manitoba, after possession would have been taken by that army, commanded by General O'Neil, and General Donnelly, and some other generals. In fact, I must tell you that there were in that army a great many more officers than privates. I have the original of this constitution in my possession; it is dated the 15th day of December, 1871, and was signed by these great officers. It has reference to the organization of a Government. My object in reading this is to call your attention, or at least to attract your curiosity, to the existence of such an organization which threatened to take away part of our splendid Dominion of Canada, and also to tell the House that in those days when there was no connection between east and west, when there was no possibility, perhaps, of bringing up and putting in the field an army, within a given space of time, had it not been for the French Half-breeds of Manitoba—and the Roman Catholics of Manitoba were then in a great majority—had it not been for those Half-breeds who ran to the front to defend the boundary, and to repel that invasion, though I do not believe it would have been successful, we do not know what troubles we would have had, and what expenses would have been brought upon this Dominion in order to subdue that invasion. I do not call it an insurrection, because nobody in the province sided with it or accorded in the views of those engaged in it. This historical document is as follows:—

Whereas the people of Rupert's Land, known as Rupert's Land and North-western Territory, through their agent Wm. B. O'Donoghue, have invited the assistance and co-operation of the friends of liberty in America to aid them in regaining their independence of which they have been deprived, by the false representation of the English and Canadian Governments and:

Mr. LARIVIERE.

Whereas Wm. B. O'Donoghue, John O'Neill, Thomas Curley, Felix O'Byrne, John J. Donnelly, and others, have in answer to the call of the said people of Rupert's Land, and organized an expedition having for its object to assist in the deliverance of the people of Rupert's Land, and from English or Canadian rule and the establishment of a Republican form of government instead, and:

Whereas, we the oversaid Wm. B. O'Donoghue, John O'Neill, Thomas Curley, Felix O'Byrne, John J. Donnelly, and others, are now preparing to set the aforesaid expedition in motion and feel that for the purpose of effectually carrying out the object of such expedition a temporary government is necessary.

Now therefore, we the aforesaid Wm. B. O'Donoghue, John O'Neill, Thomas Curley, Felix O'Byrne and John J. Donnelly, in the name and in behalf of the people of Rupert's Land and the emigrants who now take part or may hereafter take part in the said expedition, do hereby agree each for himself and for those whom he represents to be governed by the following compact which shall have all the force and power of a government de facto until such time as the condition of the struggle about to be commenced will admit of the people exercising their free will in the selection of a permanent government for the country aforesaid.

ARTICLE I.

The governing body shall consist of a President, and Council of ten members, five of whom shall be selected from amongst the emigrants and five from amongst the people of Rupert's Land.

ARTICLE II.

The President shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of chief executive officer of the government.

He shall have power to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Council such civil officers of the government as in his judgment, are necessary to assist him in the execution of the laws, collection of revenues, etc. The President shall have power to remove all civil officers for cause. The President shall have power to commission the officers of the Army and Navy upon the recommendation of the Military Council. The President shall have power to appoint the Council of which he shall be a member ex officio and shall preside at all its meetings. The President shall have power to fill all vacancies which occur in the Council by and with the advice and consent of that body.

ARTICLE III.

The vice-president shall upon denomination of the president be elected by the Council from amongst its number, and in case of the death, impeachment or inability of the President to act shall perform the duties and exercise the powers of the President.

ARTICLE IV.

The Council shall elect a Secretary, Serjeant-at-Arms and such other officers as shall be deemed necessary.

The Council shall have power to raise revenue, levy taxes, and exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of a legislative body.

The members of the Council shall hold office during the time this compact shall remain in effect unless removed by impeachment and conviction of high crimes and misdemeanours.

Whenever, in the judgment of the Council it is desirable to add to its number, the Council shall have power to declare vacancies equal to the addition which shall be deemed necessary, which vacancies shall be filled in the manner described in Article III, section IV.

The Council shall remain in perpetual session, but may be called together at any time by the President.

The Council shall have power to try all persons, who may be charged with crimes against the authority of the Government.

The Council shall have power to pass sentence upon all the persons convicted by that body of crime against the Government.

The Council shall have power to try all cases of impeachment and remove from office all persons convicted of high crimes and misdemeanours.

The Council when sitting as a court shall have power to elect its chairman.

ARTICLE V.

The President, Vice-President and members of the Council may be impeached and upon conviction of high crimes and misdemeanours shall be removed from office.

ARTICLE VI.

A complaint, in writing, of three members of the Council shall be deemed sufficient to impeach the President, Vice-President or any member of the Council and the complaint in writing of any citizen shall be sufficient cause to bring another citizen before the Bar of the House for trial.

ARTICLE VII.

The President and Vice-President shall hold office during the time this compact shall remain in force or until their successors shall have been chosen.

ARTICLE VIII.

A General-in-Chief, with the rank of Major-General shall be immediately appointed by the President and he shall have command of the Army and Navy of Rupert's Land, etc.

ARTICLE IX.

The President shall immediately appoint Brigadier-Generals who shall be assigned to duty by the General-in-Chief.

ARTICLE X.

The General-in-Chief and the three officers next in rank to him shall constitute a Military Council, which shall have full powers to decide and carry into effect all military plans and movements, and to which shall be referred all matters of a purely military nature.

The President shall be a member of this Council ex officio and shall preside at all its meetings when he is present.

The Military Council shall elect a recorder whose duty it will be to keep a record of all the business transacted by that body.

ARTICLE XI.

Officers of the Army and Navy shall not be dismissed from the service except by the sentence of a general court-martial.

ARTICLE XII.

The army regulations of the United States shall be and are hereby adopted for the Government of the army of Rupert's Land, and so far as the same may be applicable thereto.

ARTICLE XIII.

Cushing's Manual shall be and is hereby adopted as authority upon all subjects of debate in the Council.

ARTICLE XIV.

William Bernard O'Donoghue is hereby declared President to fill the office created by this compact.

ARTICLE XV.

This compact cannot be altered or amended without the unanimous consent of all the persons thereto.

ARTICLE XVI.

The undersigned parties to this compact hereby agree, each with the other jointly and severally, to carry out to the full extent of their ability the object set forth in the foregoing agreement, and to hereby firmly bind themselves not to withdraw from the said compact until it shall terminate by limitation or mutual consent.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and affixed our seals the fifteenth day of September, Anno Domini, eighteen hundred and seventy-one—1871.

I shall not detain the House any longer on this question raised by the hon. member for L'Islet. I must say, that, under the circumstances, I think that his championship in the interests of those he pretends to defend is uncalled for, and therefore I am compelled to oppose it, because I do not think this question ought to have been brought up as a party question, but should have been left to be dealt with on its merits, on its well-defined principles, by all members of the House, as, in their best judgment, it should be dealt with, so as to render justice wherever justice should be rendered.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think that my hon. friend who has just taken his seat should have complained that the hon. member for L'Islet had disappointed us. He chided the hon. member for L'Islet with having promised us a good deal of fun and surprise, and while it may be possible that the fun was wanting, the surprise was given in a manner I never saw before paralleled in this House, by the extreme and striking contrast between the speech of five hours' length and the resolution which followed. It was perfectly obvious to every one that the speech was dictated by one person and the resolution drawn by another, and that the two minds had never agreed on any part of the policy. The hon. gentleman insisted, at considerable length, that his compatriots in Manitoba had been unjustly treated with regard to their language. The resolution which he has submitted to the House contains not one word upon that subject. The hon. gentleman made the most forcible part of his argument and the most forcible part of his attack, on the ground that the Acts of 1890 ought to have been disallowed. Upon that subject he spoke about an hour, but I look in vain in the four corners of his resolution to find the subject of disallowance mentioned at all. He entreated the House not to come to a vote upon the Manitoba question until the Government should candidly declare what it intends to do, should the courts of the country decide that the Government have power to do anything, and yet the hon. gentleman himself is the only one so far who has asked a vote or proposed to put a resolution to the House. The hon. gentleman above all things declared that he approached this subject not in a party spirit, and entreated the House to come to its decision in a calm and judicial manner, and the only point of his resolution is a censure upon the Government for having treated it in a judicial spirit. In stating, as briefly as I can, the policy which the Government has to propose with regard to this question, I am conscious that I shall have to trespass upon the forbearance of the House, because to many of us it is not a new subject, and it is a tedious one, involving many details which some of us are very familiar with, and which others, perhaps, care very little about. The question arises, in the first place, under the ninety-third section of the British North America Act, which defines the provincial powers with regard to the subject of education. We have been so frequently told within the last few months that the vital question involved in the consideration of this subject is the rights of the provinces, we have been so repeatedly told in every quarter of the country that there exists in the policy of the Government a scheme for throttling a province, for depriving a province of its rights, for trespassing upon the undoubted powers of a province, that I must, at the risk of repeating what is very familiar, ask the House to listen, for a moment, to what the definition of provincial powers with regard to the subject of education is. The popular impression sought to be intensified by the controversy which has taken place in regard to this question, is that the subject of education is exclusively one of provincial concern. But taking the British North America Act—and I will consider by and by what the difference between that Act and the Manitoba Act is with regard to education—taking, for convenience, the British North America Act, first, I find that by the ninety-third section, while the powers with regard to education are given the provinces, there are most important limitations by which this whole controversy is to be decided. The first of those limitations is that :

Nothing in any law which a province may pass shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any persons have by law in the province at the Union.

I take it that the principle is well settled now and well agreed upon by both parties in this country, as well as by lawyers and tribunals of justice, that that provision, that qualification, nullifies any Act of a provincial legislature which conflicts with it, and that the legislature of a province, while, to a great extent, its powers are exclusive with regard to education, steps beyond its power and enacts a void enactment when it enacts a law which prejudicially affects any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, which any class of persons had by law in any province at the time of the Union. Then there is a special provision with regard to the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and there is then this provision, on which the appeal has come to us:

Where in any province a system of Separate or Dissident Schools exist by law at the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant and Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

And the final subsection in that section is that :

In case any such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor-General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor-General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section and of any decision of the Governor-General in Council under this section.

Now, the province of Manitoba commenced existence in 1870, and the first question which arises in connection with the rights of the minority in that province depends for its solution on the condition of education in that province at that time. It was apparent to everybody then, inasmuch as the residents in that country had no fixed system of law, certainly no system of educational law, that there was no system of separate or dissentient schools existing by law at the Union, or, in other words, at the formation of the province. In consequence of that, this Parliament, in passing the Manitoba Act, in framing it for the Imperial Parliament to pass, provided that the same privilege should be given where separate schools existed by law or by practice at the time of the Union. So we had it distinctly provided by the constitution of Manitoba in 1870, that if a system of separate or dissentient schools existed either by law or by practice at the time of that Union it would be beyond the power of the Provincial Legislature to impair the rights of the class of persons who controlled those schools or enjoyed them. Now, Sir, in 1871, the year following the organization of the provinces, a public schools system was adopted for the province, including within its provisions not only what is generally known as a system of public schools, but providing liberally and fully for a system of separate schools within that province, and for twenty years that statute, with various modifications tending to its more efficient execution, existed on the Statute-book of that country and was carried on and operated continuously. By the two statutes of 1890, which are complained of, that system of both public and separate schools which had existed for over twenty years was cut up root and branch, and a number of persons connected with the minority in that province immediately petitioned the Governor in Council for redress under the provisions of the subsection which I have cited. There were something like eight or ten petitions presented, and every one claimed this position of things—that the right which the Roman Catholic minority held at the time of the creation of the province had been invaded, and that for that reason the statute was ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature and void. They all stood upon that principle, but they asked for various kinds of remedies. One of these petitions, the one which came from the Separate School Board or the Roman Catholic School Board I think it was called, asked that in consequence of that grievance the Acts should be disallowed. Every one of the others asked, not that the Act should be disallowed, but that we should give redress by hearing an appeal under the provisions of subsection 3, of section 93, of the British North America Act, of the corresponding provisions of the Manitoba Act. Now, Sir, these petitions came before His Excellency in Council, and the next step in the history of these proceedings was the report which was made in 1891, by myself, and approved in the month of April. Now the position which the report took, and which the Government took, with regard to the prayer for disallowance was this: that, inasmuch as the contention made in these petitions, and on which the prayer for disallowance was based, was that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority in a system of separate, dissentient schools existing at the time of the formation of the province, had been interfered with, the Act was ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature and null and void, it was our duty, or the duty of some one we will say for the present, to ascertain whether the Acts of 1890, of which disallowance was sought, did interfere with the system of separate and dissentient schools existing by law or by practice at the time of the Union. The principle had been well settled in this Legislature time and again that no statute regarding education passed by a province ought to be destroyed by disallowance. On the contrary, if it were ultra vires of the Legislature, that fact ought to be ascertained and established by judicial decision. I shall refer in a few moments to the precedents by which that was well laid down and well established. But it was obviously, from start to finish, a principle which would commend itself to the common sense of any Government and any Legislature. Why should we, by the exercise of the strong hand of disallowance, destroy a provincial statute on the ground that it was null and void, and thus invoke an immediate conflict with the Provincial Legislature upon a subject and for a reason which could be dealt with by a tribunal in which the people of the province would have confidence, when they might not have confidence in the executive of the country, actuated, as it might appear to be, by political motives or religious sympathy? We therefore said, as regards the prayer for disallowance on the ground of the Act being “ultra vires”—and no other ground, I repeat, was put forward in any of the petitions—that that was a fact which ought to be decided by the courts of the country. Sir, we were in this position, that, inasmuch as the Manitoba Act differed from the British North America Act in allowing these rights to be proved and established by practice before the Union, we had questions of fact involved in the inquiry as well as questions of law. And, for the purpose of getting these questions before the courts for decision, a suit was brought by a citizen in the city of Winnipeg, who claimed that he ought not to be subjected to taxation under the Acts of 1890, because they were “ultra vires” of the Legislature as having interfered with the system of separate and dissentient schools existing at the time of the Union. Now, Sir, that suit went on from time to time, and was decided in the year 1892. I desire to call the attention of this House to the precedents by which our course in that respect was justified. I have seen it stated that we were guilty of some wrong-doing in thus sustaining a suit for the purpose of trying a question of that kind. I deny that we were guilty of any wrong-doing in that particular. We were endeavouring to ascertain the exact rights of the minority, as existing at the time of the Union. We were endeavouring to ascertain just what those rights were in respect of which our protection was being claimed. In 1890 our policy was stated in this House, it was stated in debate here that this suit was being carried on for the purpose of having that question determined. In 1891, in the month of May, I was asked a question by Mr. Watson, then the member for Marquette, as to this litigation, and I answered the question in my place in the House. In May, 1892, the question was asked what sum we had paid out in connection with the litigation, and the House was then informed what the sum was; and so from step to step the House was well informed of the policy of the Government, what we were doing and how we were trying to arrive at a judicial determination of those questions. I mention that, by the way, to show that this is not a question which has developed lately or on which the information has been given to the House recently. The facts were made known to the House from session to session, every session during which the litigation was pending. Now, Sir, to come to another point with regard to the precedents which were established upon that subject, I desire to call the attention of the House to what was done with regard to the New Brunswick school case. A complaint came from the province of New Brunswick to the effect that the repeal of a parish school Act, which had existed years before the Union, had prejudicially affected the rights of the minority with regard to education, and that the repealing Act was, therefore, ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature. That question came before this House; it came on a motion favouring the disallowance of the repealing Act; and I assert at the beginning of my comments upon that precedent, that this House deliberately laid down the principle that the question ought not to be settled by the power of disallowance, but it ought to be determined by a judicial decision of the courts, obtained at the instance of the Government from the highest tribunal of the Empire. A resolution was offered by my hon. friend the present Secretary of State; and he stated the case of his fellow-countrymen and his co-religionists on that occasion, and asked this House to adopt the resolution favouring the disallowance of that Act before the time for disallowance had expired. It is important to observe the grounds for the opinion of the leading men of both parties upon the policy that ought to be pursued in such cases; and I shall take for the present, the statements which were uttered by the leading statesman of the province of Quebec, from which the hon. member for L'Islet comes, a man of venerated name, and of the highest position in this country, Sir George Cartier. The view which he put forward then, representing, surely, as fully as the hon. member for L'Islet does, the people of that great province of Quebec, was this:

No doubt the mover was actuated by the best possible motives, but if all the wording of the address were correct, even the fate of the Catholic minority of Quebec would have to be decided by the Dominion Parliament. The clauses of the Act of Confederation had been drawn up after the most mature deliberation, and with every regard to the delicacy of the question. The address tended to place the rights of the Catholics of the Dominion in the hands of a Protestant majority. Was that right? Was that wise? The Protestants of Lower Canada had no cause for complaint, and never would have so long as the Catholic majority were actuated by their present liberal sentiments; but if the motion was right with regard to the Catholic majority of New Brunswick, the Protestant minority of Lower Canada might come and say "repeal the last education law passed in Quebec."

The report goes on to say:

The proposition involved in the motion for the address was not correct. He went on to say that the law was unjust and caused great uneasiness among the Catholics of Canada, and might produce great mischief, and therefore they prayed for the disallowance of the bill. If this was affirmed, the principle must be extended to other provinces, and as a Catholic of Lower Canada, he could not assent to it."

Again, he quoted the clause giving jurisdiction of matters of education to the Local Legislature:

He had pressed this at the time of Confederation, because he wanted the power to be enjoyed by Quebec. There were conditions that no right enjoyed at Confederation should be interfered with, and that the privileges enjoyed by the Catholics in Ontario should be extended to the Protestants of Quebec; and that any system of separate schools should be maintained. In case of infraction of the latter condition, there was an appeal to the Governor in Council, and this was because it would not have been right to submit the Catholic minority of Quebec to the Protestant majority of the Dominion Parliament; whereas an appeal to the Governor in Council must be settled in the spirit of justice with regard to the interests of both parties.

I commend especially the closing words of that paragraph of Sir George Cartier's speech to those gentlemen who are in sympathy with the motion condemning the Government for having undertaken to assume judicial functions with regard to this question, a passage in which that statesman declared that this was not a question to be decided by the force of numbers, but was to be settled in a spirit of justice with regard to the interests of both parties. Now, Sir, I propose to show you that that view was concurred in fully by gentlemen of the other political party. The Hon. Mr. Blake is reported thus:

He quoted provisions giving Parliament the right to make remedial laws when necessary, and this, he maintained, could be done, although twelve months had elapsed.

Finally, the last amendment which was moved, and which was carried in this House, was a resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, by which it was decided that this question, instead of being disposed of by the rough and ready method of disallowance, was to be left to the courts, and in the first place the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown was to be obtained, and, if possible, the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council:

This House regrets that the School Act recently passed in New Brunswick is unsatisfactory to a portion of the inhabitants of that province, and hopes that it may be so modified during the next session of the Legislature of New Brunswick as to remove any just grounds of discontent that now exists; and this House deems it expedient that the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in England, and if possible, the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, should be obtained as to the right of the New Brunswick Legislature to make such change in the school law as to deprive the Roman Catholics of the privileges they enjoyed at the time of the Union in respect to religious education in the common schools, with the view of ascertaining whether the case comes within the terms of the 4th subsection of the 93rd clause of the British North America Act of 1867, which authorizes the Parliament of Canada to enact remedial laws for the due execution of the provision respecting education in said Act.

Now, Sir, I need hardly remind the members who were in the House at that period, what the result of that application to the law officers was. There was no provision then by which the Government could have the case carried to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Her Majesty's Government did not think that it should be referred there, but they obtained the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in England, and that opinion was to the effect that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority, although, perhaps, their schools had been sustained by public grants from time to time before the Union, had not been established by law at the time of the Union, and therefore, were not within the saving terms of the section which made an Act interfering with those rights "ultra vires" of the Legislature. Then there was a case in 1877 coming from the province of Prince Edward Island, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and the conclusion at which they arrived with regard to that subject was precisely to the same effect, that the Act complained of by the Roman Catholic minority of the province, was not to be interfered with by disallowance. That case was obviously parallel to the New Brunswick case as to the want of sanction of law, for the privileges which Roman Catholics enjoyed at the time of the Union, and therefore the repealing Act was declared to be "intra vires" of the Provincial Legislature, and not to be interfered with. The complaint of the Roman Catholic minority of Prince Edward Island was as strong as the complaint from the province of Manitoba. Now, coming down to the terms of our report on the petitions, and the terms of that report have been criticised to-night by the hon. member for L'Islet in most extraordinary and unwarranted language—I shall ask the House to consider what the terms of that report are. There were the two sets of petitions to be reported upon, the petition that asked for disallowance on the ground that the rights of the minority existing by law or practice at the time of Union had been invaded; and the much more numerous set which declared that even though the Acts were not "ultra vires," on account of its invading the rights existing at the time of Union, they were subject to an appeal to the Governor in Council on the ground that they invaded rights which Roman Catholics had acquired under the Educational Act of 1871, in that province. We said in answer to those petitions, and the substance and effect of the report which has been so strongly commented on by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) was this: Cease the application for disallowance as regards those statutes of 1890 as being "ultra vires;" that question ought to be left to the courts and when the courts have decided on that question, if they have decided that the Acts are "intra vires" of the Legislature and therefore valid and effectual, the time will have come for His Excellency to take up the other set of petitions and consider whether any, and if so what remedy shall be given to the minority of that province, by way of appeal asserted under subsection 43 of the British North America Act. That was precisely what the report said. That is precisely the tenor, the effect, the language of the report itself, and the section which the hon. member for L'Islet has read as the basis of a most extraordinary charge against the Government, a charge which he stated in coarser language a little while ago, but which was strong enough to-night, is simply this:

If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsection 2 and 3 of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act," quoted in the early part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the "British North America Act," in relation to the other provinces.

I defy any fair-minded man to read that report and arrive at any other conclusion than this, that His Excellency was informed that those petitions were of two classes; one claiming disallowance, and one of them asserting, in claiming disallowance, that the Acts were "ultra vires." My report said: "Lay them aside until this litigation is determined. There is no occasion for disallowance in the meantime, because, if the Acts are "ultra vires," they do not need to be disallowed; if they are "intra vires," they should not be disallowed. Lay aside, until the conclusion of that litigation the petitions which ask that remedial legislation shall be given, because the first question to be ascertained is whether these Acts have any force at all. If they have no force, no remedial legislation is necessary and no appeal should be carried forward; when we ascertain that these statutes of 1890, which are complained of, are legal and operative, it will be time enough then to consider that set of petitions which claim remedial legislation and redress." And yet the hon. gentleman has declared in this House that we have there most solemnly promised to give remedial legislation, and the hon. gentleman has at some time, I think, gone so far as to assert that we have induced the representative of the Crown to make a pledge which has not been redeemed and which places us in the position of having violated the Royal word. I repeat that by no fair construction whatever can any man assert that the report contains any promise whatever for remedial legislation or pledges the Crown to any action on those petitions whatever. It may well be, and I do not want to assert the contrary, or have the contrary implied from what I am saying now, that there is a strong claim for remedial legislation; but I say that the report was silent on that question, except to intimate to His Excellency that the time had not come for taking it up. While dealing with that report, both as to the way we treated that question and as to the question of administration, I desire to make some observations as to what the hon. member for L'Islet has said to-day with respect to negotiations with a prelate in Manitoba. In the first place, I wish to repeat the hon. gentleman's expression, because I am pretty confident I have it right, but I wish to be perfectly sure. He said that Sir John Macdonald would have disallowed the law if Archbishop Taché had insisted on that course. I have the best reason for knowing, and I do know, that there is not a fragment of foundation for that statement, and that after the precedents which had been established in the case of New Brunswick and followed in the case of Prince Edward Island, and after the discussion which had taken place in this House in 1890, to which I shall have to call the attention of the House more particularly in a few moments, there was no member of this Government who would have agreed to the disallowance of these education statutes, there was no member of the Government, who, under any circumstances, would have followed any other policy than that of asserting what the legal rights of the province were and what the duties of His Excellency and his Council were with respect to the appeal that had been asserted. The hon. member has stated that Mr. Chapleau, who is no longer our colleague, was sent to Archbishop Taché, delegated to go there to promise him remedial legislation. I deny that Mr. Chapleau or any other minister or any other agent or any living person was sent or delegated or authorized by the Government of Canada to go on any such mission. I deny that any such promise was made by the Government, and that any person whatever was authorized to make any such promise. The hon. gentleman has stated that Archbishop Taché was deceived. The hon. gentleman has stated that Archbishop Taché was unwilling to accept Mr. Chapleau's assurance, and the elections being urgent and it being necessary to secure the good will of that prelate, His Grace insisted on some official promise, and therefore my report was penned, making this so-called official promise. I have pointed out just now that it makes nothing of the kind; but a significant circumstance against the hon. gentleman's theory is this, that the report was not penned until weeks after the general election was over and not submitted to His Excellency until April, 1891. We who were colleagues of Mr. Chapleau and must have known of any such proposition, must have known of it in order to be bound by it, have heard to-night that assertion for the first time, although it has been insinuated in various quarters before. I deny that in any respect Archbishop Taché was deceived. I admit that His Grace would have been personally gratified if we could have seen our way clear to the disallowance of those statutes which he considers exceedingly oppressive to his people; but His Grace knew just as well as we did, the folly of exercising disallowance in such a case. He knew, just as well as we knew, that not only, as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. LaRivière) has said, would the Local Legislature have re-enacted the disallowed statute, but they would have made an appeal to the people of the province on the ground that their autonomy had been violated. They would have raised an agitation deeper and stronger than that which has existed unfortunately for the last year or two. They would have appealed with every probability of success to the people of that province in that struggle to sustain the Education Acts of 1890. There would have been no legal decision to back us, to create respect in the minds of the people of the province for the action of the Federal executive. And in the meantime what would have become of the Roman Catholic schools of the province? His Grace was wise enough and possessed sufficient experience to know that the power of disallowance, while looking like a strong and ready remedy would be weak and inoperative as regards giving any effective redress for the grievances under which His Grace and his people were suffering. I say, therefore, that, from first to last, there is no foundation whatever for the statement that His Grace was deceived, that His Grace was misled, that His Grace was used for political purposes. I gave the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) credit for sincerity in his assertion, which sounded strangely to me, that his report contained an absolute promise of remedial legislation, or was so understood by the minority in the province of Manitoba, because he told us afterwards the reason which prompted that interpretation of the report. He had heard the story: That we had promised the Archbishop of St. Boniface that if he did not press for disallowance we would carry on the suit to have the Act nullified; that if we failed in that we would give him remedial legislation; and that His Grace, not satisfied with that, had demanded an official promise; and the hon. member thought he saw here, what he otherwise would not have dreamed of seeing, between the lines or in the words of that report, a distinct promise that a certain course would be taken after the decision on the validity of the statute. As I said a few minutes ago, we adopted the policy of testing the validity of these two Acts of 1890, and, as I have stated, we were following then the precedent which was established in regard to New Brunswick. Some hon. member may ask me whether the decision in the case of New Brunswick was not enough, and why should we again move to litigate with regard to the same question as to Manitoba? The reason is, because the rights of the minority in the two provinces rested on different statutes. If they had had the same statute in New Brunswick as they had in Manitoba, the minority might have prevailed, but the New Brunswick minority had to show that their rights had been established by law, and the Manitoban minority only had to show that their rights had been established by law, and the Manitoban minority had only to show that those rights existed in practice. There was a mixed question of law, and fact, and the question was submitted, as everybody knows, to the courts of the country with varying success, until it came here, and the Supreme Court of Canada pronounced against the validity of these Acts, and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council reversed that decision and declared these Acts to be "intra vires." I wish to call the attention of the House to the state of the Supreme Court Acts of that time. We have now an amended provision in this Act, by which a question of law relating to education, involving questions of fact also, shall be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada for determination, and that court may take evidence upon the question of fact, as well as hear arguments upon the question of law. At the time of which I speak, the Supreme Court Act was not so framed, and, therefore, the litigation had to begin at the beginning, begin before a judge of first instance in the province of Manitoba in order that evidence might be taken to establish what rights the Roman Catholic minority of the province enjoyed by practice at the time of the Union. The course that was pursued in that case, Mr. Speaker, was not different from that which was pursued in the case of New Brunswick; and, again, in this respect, that in the New Brunswick case, by a vote of this House, the House provided the expenses for carrying on that litigation. It has been said that, in recommending that course to be pursued with regard to the claims of the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba, my course was inconsistent with that which I pursued in another case. I wish to dwell on that for a moment or two, for although it has not been mentioned by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), I am quite conscious that this question is not a question upon which the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) expresses the only view in opposition to the Government. I believe that other views will find expression before the termination of this debate, and it would have gratified me very much indeed if I could have heard these views expressed before I addressed the House, feeling, as I am sure, that they will essentially differ from those of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), although, perhaps, in accordance with the resolution which my hon. friend moved, it would have been perhaps, not reasonable for me to expect that that would be possible. Three or four years ago a citizen of this country approached His Excellency by petition, claiming that an Act which had excited a great deal of feeling in this country, known as the Jesuits Estates Act, of the province of Quebec, should be referred to the courts for determination as regards its validity. That application was declined, and declined on my advice, and when I state the ground on which it was so declined, I will state the distinction between that case and the present one. It was declined on the ground that we should only avail ourselves of that provision of the Supreme Court Act which entitled us to ask the opinion and instruction of the court when some duty in relation to the challenged Act devolved upon His Excellency or upon His Excellency's officers. It was held that it was not for His Excellency to submit an academic question to the court, as regards the validity of an Act with which His Excellency had no particular concern, but that if His Excellency had a duty to discharge, or if his officers required instruction, it would be a proper function to submit the case for adjudication. In that case, the time for disallowance had expired, but announcement had been made that the Act would not be disallowed, and the proposition of Mr. Graham, the petitioner, was, simply that for the purpose of gratifying curiosity, or for the purpose of satisfying doubts in the public mind, the Act should be sent to the courts for adjudication. The words in which the whole ground is put on which that application of his was refused, appear in this passage of my report:

As to this the following considerations are respectfully submitted: The provision which confers that power on Your Excellency was undoubtedly intended to enable the Governor-General to obtain an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada in relation to some orders which his Government might be called on to make, or in relation to some action which his officers might be called on to adopt. For the guidance of Your Excellency or of your officers the provision may be a valuable one, but used as a means of solving legal problems in which the Government of Canada has no direct concern, however much they may interest or excite the public mind, as the petitioner seems to propose, or used to compel an adjudication on private rights and interests, it would be perverted, the undersigned humbly submits, into an arbitrary and inquisitorial power, anticipating and interfering with the ordinary course of justice.

What was the difference between that and this Manitoba case? Simply this: that we have two sets of petitions here claiming that His Excellency should hear the appeal, and should give remedial legislation to the minority, and it was necessary before he should come to the hearing of that appeal, or be advised as to the rights of the petitioners to have remedial legislation, that he should know whether these Acts were valid or invalid; whether they required remedial legislation, or whether the statutes against which the minority appealed were simply worthless paper. But at another phase in that discussion with regard to the Jesuit Estates Act, we did approach a period when an appeal was about to be asserted, and when the necessity of adjudication by His Excellency in Council would have come. Late in the day, long after the time for disallowance had expired, the president of the Protestant School Board of the province of Quebec, asserted the appeal to His Excellency under this very subsection. I have no hesitation in saying that if the appellants had come forward, as we invited them to do, a case would have been stated at their instance, if they so desired, for the opinion of the courts of the country. We named a day on which they and their counsel should be heard; they asked that that appointment should be postponed to a later day; their request was complied with; and, in the meantime, they made application to the executive of the province of Quebec, got their redress there and abandoned the appeal here. So far, I claim, there was nothing that was inconsistent with the action of the Federal Government of that period in the course we adopted in referring the validity of the Manitoba School Acts of 1890 to the courts for decision. I am sorry to find, Sir, that in some minds there is likewise an impression that our action in thus promoting litigation in order to obtain a decision of that question involved a want of impartiality on the part of us who were eventually to decide the question. I submit that that impression must disappear on a second glance at the subject. We had no other method at that time, in consequence of the state of the Supreme Court Act, than to promote litigation, before, as I said, a judge of first instance, to have the evidence taken, and to have the case eventually carried to the highest court of appeal in the Empire; and we were far from being influenced by any desire to assail the province or its legislation. We had simply the duty devolving upon us of getting a legal determination of the constitutional rights of the educational minority in that province. Now, Sir, the case, as is well known, resulted in a complete decision of that question by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But the question which went to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the litigation from first to last, was upon the subject of the validity of the statutes complained of. The question as to the rights which the minority of the province might have in an application by way of appeal to the Governor-General for redress, had nothing to do with the questions which were decided there, and the litigation had nothing to do with it. There are strong expressions in the judgment itself. There are strong expressions, for example, that no right or privilege of the Roman Catholic minority was affected by the legislation of 1890; but the judges are careful to show, by the whole language of their report, that those expressions refer to rights existing at the time of the Union; and indeed it was unnecessary for them to make that plain—although they have made it so—because they could decide upon nothing else, and their decision would have been obiter in so far as it extended to any other question than the one before them. The impression exists, and has been assiduously cultivated in the public mind, that the words of the decision of the Privy Council are so sweeping that it denies that any rights acquired even after the Union were invaded; but I repeat that not only nothing of the kind is to be gathered from the judgment itself, but that it would be absolutely perverting the judgment to say that the Judicial Committee decided on a question which was not before them, and on which they had heard no argument and no evidence. The language which the decision contains is this:

The result of the controversy is of serious moment to the province of Manitoba, and a matter apparently of deep interest throughout the Dominion. But in its legal aspect the question lies in a very narrow compass. The duty of this board is simply to determine as a matter of law whether, according to the true construction of the Manitoba Act, 1870, having regard to the state of things which existed in Manitoba at the time of the Union, the provincial legislature has or has not exceeded its powers in passing the Public Schools Act, 1890.

Again, Sir, in order to show clearly what the question was that was before them, and that it did not extend to any inquiry as to the rights of the minority by reason of the legislation of 1871, establishing separate schools in that province, but was confined to the question as to the existence of rights at the time of the Union, the decision goes on to say:

Such being the main provisions of the Public Schools Act, 1890, their lordships have to determine whether that Act prejudicially affects any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons had by law or practice in the province at the union. Notwithstanding the Public Schools Act, 1890, Roman Catholics and members of every other religious body in Manitoba are free to establish schools throughout the province; they are free to maintain their schools by school fees or voluntary subscriptions; they are free to conduct their schools according to their own religious tenets without molestation or interference. No child is compelled to attend a public school. No special advantage other than the advantage of a free education in schools conducted under public management is held out to those who do attend. But then it is said that it is impossible for Roman Catholics, or for members of the Church of England (if their views are correctly represented by the Bishop of Rupert's Land, who has given evidence in Logan's case) to send their children to public schools where the education is not superintended and directed by the authorities of their church, and that therefore Roman Catholics and members of the Church of England who are taxed for public schools, and at the same time feel themselves compelled to support their own schools, are in a less favourable position than those who can take advantage of the free education provided by the Act of 1890. That may be so. But what right or privilege is violated or prejudicially affected by the law? It is not the law that is in fault; it is owing to religious convictions, which everybody must respect, and to the teaching of their church that the Roman Catholics and members of the Church of England find themselves unable to partake of advantages which the law offers to law alike.

And then further down:

They (their Lordships) doubt whether it is permissible to refer to the course of legislation between 1871 and 1890, as a means of throwing light on the previous practice or on the construction of the saving clause in the Manitoba Act.

There the principle is most distinctly laid down that even for the purpose of throwing light on the state of affairs which existed at the time of the Union, it was not competent to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to consider what the legislation in 1871 and downwards was. But when that decision was pronounced the Roman Catholic minority came to His Excellency in Council and said: That question of "ultra vires" has been disposed of; that request of ours for disallowance or redress on the ground that the Acts were "ultra vires" is disposed of, and the time indicated by your report has come for considering the appeal which we asserted in 1890, and which we reassert now. And it was under these circumstances that the policy of the Government was framed which is under trial in this House to-night. Now, it is necessary for me, in order to justify that policy, to call the attention of the House to the question which arises with regard to the remedial legislation which is claimed by that appeal. In the first place, I have read to the House what the terms of the British North America Act are which give the appeal. The terms of the statute of Manitoba are different—considerably different in the words which seem to affect this question of right acquired after the Union by the Roman Catholic minority, and I propose to call the attention of the House to them for the purpose of convincing the House, if I shall be able to do so, that there are still grave questions of law affecting the second branch of the inquiry, and questions which require judicial determination just as much as the first set. Now, Sir, the language of the Manitoba Act and the language of the British North America Act are different in this material respect: that the British North America Act, applicable, of course, to all the other provinces, contains this provision, that:

Where, in any province, a system of separate and dissentient schools exists by law at the time of the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority, affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

The words which are there, if they are applicable to Manitoba, according to the contention of the minority, completely suit their case, because they say that the expression "or is thereafter established by the Legislature" preserves the system which they established under the Act of 1871, giving separate schools, and that, therefore, they have the right to assert their appeal to have that system subsequently established by law protected, even though the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council determined that they had no redress by reason of rights which existed at the time of the Union. We find, however, that the terms of the Manitoba Act are as follows:—

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice at the time of the Union.

The Manitoba Act does not contain the provision in favour of an appeal where a system of separate or dissentient schools has been thereafter established—that is, after the Union. Now, one important question which arises at the threshold, therefore, of the appeal, is whether the appellants are able to avail themselves of the terms of the British North America Act, when they have provisions in the Manitoba Act of a different character relating to the same subject. There is a general enactment in the Manitoba Act, that, except where provision is otherwise made, the terms of the British North America Act should extend to that province. I do not mean to say that the terms of the British North America Act do not extend, but it is warmly contended that no provision exists, with regard to Manitoba, for the protection of the system of separate or dissentient schools, created by the Legislature after the Union. That is a most important question, one fully open to argument, and a question upon which, I may say, the judges who heard the case of Barrett differed in opinion. Then, again, it was urged before us by counsel for the appellants, that they did not need to avail themselves of the terms of the British North America Act preserving any system of separate schools created after the Union, because the terms of their own Act, notwithstanding the omission of these words, are wide enough to cover the case. Well, then there were developed in the course of the argument before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council other important questions as well. One of them was that the system of separate schools, which was established by the Act of 1871 in Manitoba, was not a system of separate or dissentient schools within the terms of that section of the British North America Act. Another question, and one I dare say we shall hear contended for, one which has been abundantly contended for in the press, is the statement, in which I am not able to agree, for the reasons I have given, that the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council covers the case and prevents an appeal, just as it establishes the validity of the Acts of 1890 of the province of Manitoba. Then there is the question as to the power of His Excellency to grant the orders which are asked for by the petitioners. They ask for remedial legislation, but they ask for remedial legislation by their later petitions in a specific form. They ask that the province of Manitoba shall be ordered to re-enact certain enactments, they ask certain exemptions, and make various specific applications, as to our power to grant which there may well be question, and there certainly would be argument. Now then, let me ask the House to consider what the obvious duty and the plain common-sense way of proceeding was, as regards these questions. We had to face then, of course, as regards the public, as we have to face now, the suspicion on the part of some, that we are trying to get round the decision of the Privy Council in some way. We have to face, on the other hand, the suspicion, the contention raised by our opponents, that we are endeavouring to get time by promoting litigation and leading the appellants a dance through the courts. But we had it perfectly apparent to us, that if we were to deal sincerely and honestly with this question, these legal points must be determined before any action could be taken, as regards remedial legislation; if it was to be taken. Because let no man in this House hide from himself the fact that these legal questions will inevitably come before the courts, whether they are sent there by the Government or not, and if we were to do as the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) wishes us to do, if we were to make the order for remedial legislation, and invite this House to pass a statute upon that subject, every word of that statute, every act, every proceeding, every word of our order, every taxation, every right, every appointment under it, would be liable to be challenged on the ground that these legal questions lying at the root had been disregarded by us, or improperly determined by us, and that we had no jurisdiction in the premises at all. What condition should we then have put this country in, if, in dealing with this difficult and delicate Manitoba question, we had made such remedial orders; had asked this House to pass remedial legislation, and, after all that had been done, it was found we had simply bungled our work. The province would laugh at us and defy us and disregard our authority, and it would be established definitely by the courts that all we had tried to do to relieve the grievances of the minority in Manitoba was a mere nullity? We would simply have thrown the province into confusion and made hostility between the two classes greater than it was before. Those who are in favour of remedial legislation fear the result of another appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and who say to us, if not in the language used to-night, in language used elsewhere and implied here to-night: "You are sending us before an unfriendly court, which ruled against us once already"—these must remember that that is the tribunal which eventually must decide, whether it decides first or last, and it is a question of policy, prudence and principle, whether we shall not have this question settled and out of our way, or whether we shall promote confusion and disaster and disgrace to ourselves by endeavouring to interfere in matters over which perhaps, it will be found we have no control. One set of persons, therefore, contend, as did my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) this afternoon and evening, that it was our duty, without inquiry, without precaution, without having got these legal questions out of the way, to have given remedial legislation, while on the other hand, another section opposed to our policy contend, with greater vehemence still, that our duty was to have dismissed the appeal at the outset and taken no action whatever in regard to it. I would ask if we could reasonably be expected to adopt that course of throwing out the petition, without any determination as to whether the petitioners had wrongs to be redressed or not? Would it be reasonable that we should throw out the petition simply of our own motion, when, by the terms of the sections with regard to education which I have read, if the minorities in the provinces have rights, we are constituted the guardians and trustees of those rights, and are bound not to regard simply the wish and the desire of the majority," and are protectors, not of the majority, but of the minority. Sir, it was our absolute duty, in our judgment, to obtain a judicial determination of the questions in the interest of both parties, and especially in the interest of peace and good government in the province of Manitoba. I desire now, at the risk of wearying the House a little, to call attention to what was done here upon that subject in the year 1890. The existence of this very Manitoba difficulty, this very stage of it, was brought to the notice of the House by the Hon. Mr. Blake, and he moved a resolution which, in 1891, after he had left, was embodied in a statute, enabling us to refer such questions as this to the determination of the court. Let me read a few of the remarks of Mr. Blake with regard to that subject, because they are as cogent and as pertinent to this very case as if they were uttered upon this floor this very night. I read this first passage to show that Mr. Blake had in his mind this very difficulty in regard to Manitoba, and that he put it forward as one of the reasons for adopting the resolution which he had moved:

I would say that recent current and impending events have combined to convince me that it is important in the public interest that this proposition should receive attention during this session.

In another place he says:

Yet, Sir, no legislature or executive can, any more than any private individual, act at all without considering, and in a sense deciding for itself the legality of its acts, and so in some sort entering upon the judicial department, but not upon the domain of the judicial power, because our opinion that our acts are valid does not make them so, their validity depends upon the decision of the judicial authority and upon that alone.

I commend that to the consideration of those gentlemen on both sides of this question who undertake to say we have usurped judicial power—an unwarrantable conclusion, as I shall ask the House to declare, on the report upon which that criticism is founded, one that was not sanctioned in 1890, when Mr. Blake used almost the same language contained in the report that in coming to a judgment upon this question we were to a certain extent "entering upon the judicial department, but not upon the domain of the judicial power." The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) in the latter part of his speech, challenged the propriety of our course and the consistency of it, when he declared that in one part of the report we were declaring that our functions were judicial and at the same time, instead of exercising judicial functions we were referring the question to the judges. That is precisely what Mr. Blake explained when he declared that we were entering upon the judicial department, but not upon the domain of judicial power. That is a distinction which the critics of that part of the report have not considered and which

I think they will do well to consider if they desire to do justice to the Government in this matter, instead of making a party advantage out of it, which I am sure many of them do not desire to do. Mr. Blake went on to say :

There can be no doubt that the absolute union of these departments—that is of the executive, the legislative and the judicial—

Is neither more or less than absolute despotism.

He is calling attention to the functions which would be exercised by a Government and Parliament deciding upon legal questions affecting the rights of others without a judicial determination of them, and he says that to do so would be absolute despotism. He goes on :

United in one hand, I care not whether it be the hand of an autocrat or the hand of a council, the power of legislation, the power of interpretation, and the power of administration, and you make the most absolute despot that is conceivable. The separation therefore, the degree to which without over weakening or over complicating the action of the machine, you can separate them, marks the degree to which, in this aspect of a constitutional system, you have attained perfection.

He goes on to say :

The first of the two cases to which I allude is that in which the proposal comes before the Executive, to disallow an Act of a Provincial Legislature on the ground that that Act is ultra vires. If it be so, the Act is void ; and I think I may say, that it is now generally agreed that void Acts should not be disallowed, but should be left to the courts. It is yet, and I think with sound reason, contended, that cases of great general inconvenience or involving difficulty, delay, or the impossibility of a resort to law, may justify the policy of disallowance, even in cases in which the Act is ultra vires, and therefore void. In that view there would arise two questions, the question of policy, and the question of legality, because, the question of legality leaves untouched the question of policy. If the Act be void, shall it be disallowed or no ? The other case to which my motion alludes, is that of the educational appeal, which arises under section 93 of the Constitutional Act, and under the analogous provision of the Manitoba Constitutional Act. Under these clauses a limited power to make educational laws is granted to a province, provided, amongst other things, that nothing therein contained shall prejudicially affect any right, or privilege, with respect to denominational schools which any of the provinces had by law, or, in the case of Manitoba, by practice at the Union. There is another class of restrictions, which I do not in terms touch here, but to which, in cases in which an appeal is raised upon them, my observations would equally apply. This limitation upon the power of a province is made more effectual by a special provision giving an appeal to the Executive from any Act or decision of the Provincial Legislature or authorities affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority in relation to education, and when also in case of the non-execution by the province of the decision of the Executive, this Parliament may make remedial laws for the purpose of affecting that decision. Those members who have long been here will well remember the New Brunswick school case, which was agitated for many years, and in the course of which agitation I hoped that some political aspects of that and of analogous questions were finally settled—settled, at all events, for the party with which I acted, and for the humble individual who is now addressing you. I regard it as settled, for myself at any rate, first of all, that as a question of policy—there shall be no disallowance of educational legislation, for the reason that, in the opinion of this Parliament, some other or different policy than that which the province has thought fit to adopt would be better. I hold it to be settled, in the second place, that no Address to the Crown shall be passed by this Parliament asking for a change of the Constitutional Act as affecting any province, against the will of that province in this particular ; and I hold it to be settled, perhaps obviously, from these two propositions, that the only questions which can practically arise within our domain are such questions as may be raised under section 93 and the analogous section of the Manitoba Act by way of appeal. The events which took place in connection with the New Brunswick school case afford, at all events to myself, a strong proof of the expediency of what I now propose. Let me enforce the three or four propositions I have stated by a brief reference to the votes upon that occasion. In part those votes were taken when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, in part they were taken when the Liberal Party were in power, the first stage in the transaction occurred when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and in May, 1872, I voted with the majority of the House against a motion to regret that the New Brunswick school law had not been disallowed by the Government, to which I was opposed, although I was and so expressed myself, of the opinion that some of the changes which had been made by that Provincial law were harsh changes. At the same time, I seconded a motion, which fortunately also prevailed.

Then he cites the resolution of Mr. Mackenzie :

That this House desirous to express, deems it expedient that the opinion of the law officers in England, and if possible of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, should be obtained as to the right of the New Brunswick Legislature to make such changes in the school law as deprived Roman Catholics of the privileges which they enjoyed at the Union, in respect of religious education in the common schools, with a view of ascertaining whether the case comes within the terms of subsection 4 of section 93 of of the British North America Act of 1867, which authorized the Parliament of Canada to enact remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions respecting education in the said Act.

He goes on to say :

At that time I need hardly remind the House, there was no Supreme Court in existence. The advice of the law officers was obtained, and it was, as it had been before, and I am afraid, if I may judge by a notice on the paper, it has been since, not perhaps very satisfactory ; and there was no approach apparently to the Judicial Committee. In the end we had to get up a suit some way or other, about some assessment or other, in order to obtain, by a clumsy and expensive process, a judicial decision, not reached for some years afterwards, of the question involved and stated in the motion which I have just read.

He said later on :

That the legislation which was the subject of agitation was in some particulars harsh, and might better have been otherwise. Now, sir, in the exercise of this power of disallowance by the Government, political questions will arise, or at any rate they may arise. Questions of policy may present themselves, that is questions of expediency, of convenience, of the public interest, of the spirit of constitution or of the form of legislation. All these are clearly, exclusively for the executive and legislative departments of the Government. They are for the political department, but it is equally clear that when in order to determine your course you must find whether a particular Act is ultra or intra vires, you are engaging in a legal and a judicial function.

I ask the House again to observe that expression, which is almost the one adopted in this report, and the one censured by the resolution now on the Table of the House. Mr. Blake declared that in exercising that jurisdiction as to the Act being "ultra vires" or "intra vires," we were engaging in a legal and judicial function.

What do you do—you proceed to interpret the Constitutional Act and to declare its meaning; you proceed to interpret the Provincial Act under consideration and to declare its meaning; you proceed to compare the two statutes so interpreted and declared, and you proceed, finally to conclude whether the law conflicts with, or transcends the powers which are conferred upon the Legislature which passed it. Nothing that can be stated partakes more exclusively of the character of a legal operation than that which I have just now described. Again, when you deal with the appellate clauses, as, for example, in the case of Manitoba, the very case which is now in a sense pending, as to whether recent legislation be within the limits of the rights of the Provincial Legislature, and whether any relief is due under the appellate clause to those who claim, you have a legal question, or rather, in this case, a mixed question of law and of fact, which circumstance it was that induced me to interject the word "fact" in my motion, conscious as I was that it was only on the rarest occasions that any references of that description would be necessary. It seemed to me that, in this particular instance, I was pressed with an example which may arise. Now, what is the process to be gone through with in order to reach a conclusion? The first is that very question of fact, or mixed question of law and fact. You have to find whether any class of the population had by law or practice any right, at the time of the Union; and, if so, what right or privilege had they with respect to denominational schools. Secondly, if so, you have to find whether that law or privilege has been affected, and how it has been affected, by the legislation complained of; and thirdly, if so, you have to find what legislative action is required to redress the wrong. The first two questions at any rate are legal and not political at all. I aver that in the decision of all legal questions, it is important that the political executive should not, more than can be avoided, arrogate to itself judicial powers; and that when, in the discharge of its political duties, it is called upon to deal with legal questions, it ought to have that power surrounded by such solemnity and importance as may be thought expedient. It should, I say, have the power to call in aid the judicial department in order to arrive at a correct solution. The decision that an Act is ultra vires, and its consequent disallowance by the Executive is peculiar in practice to ourselves. It does not exist in the great example of the Republic to the south of us at all.

Not to weary the House too much, I forbear to read from that report a great deal more in the same line, establishing in the first place that, in dealing with questions of this character—and hon. gentlemen will see, if they read that speech, by many other passages which I have marked, that the argument of Mr Blake is quite as applicable to what should be done with regard to an appeal as with regard to questions of "ultra vires" or "intra vires," and that, not only is his principle applicable to the second class of questions, as well as to the first, but his express language and argument apply more to the solution of questions arising with regard to the determination of the rights of minorities asserted on appeal, than to the mere decision of whether the statute is "ultra vires" or "intra vires." Sir, that resolution was accepted by the leader of the House, Sir John A. Macdonald, in the spirit in which it was put forward by Mr. Blake, and Sir John took pains to declare that, while the terms of that resolution, taken alone, might seem to be ambiguous, he accepted it in the sense in which it was put forward in the lucid argument by which Mr. Blake had supported it in the House; and he expressed the hope, that in subsequently framing a statute we would be guided by the argument which Mr. Blake had advanced, as well as by the words of his resolution. Well, that resolution passed this House unanimously, and I humbly submit that, after the passage of the resolution, we had the mandate of this Parliament in dealing with any question that might arise by way of appeal as to an educational statute being "ultra vires," or as to a claim for remedial legislation; we had the mandate of the House that all such questions, so far as they involved disputes as to law or fact, should be sent to the courts for determination; and it is because we have obeyed that mandate of this House, obtained at the instance of the leader of the Opposition at that time, acquiesced in by the leader of the Government, that we are assailed by the terms of this resolution to-night, terms which conflict with the expression used by Mr. Blake in his speech, and with the speech by which Sir John A. Macdonald declared that he adhered to this principle. I submit that, not only may we claim that we have the mandate of this House, but we may claim to have the mandate of the whole Parliament on this subject, for in the following session we amended the Supreme Court Act in this way, adopting the very language of Mr. Blake's resolution. We placed thus among the subjects which the court should investigate and have power to determine:

Important questions of law or fact touching provincial legislation, or the appellate jurisdiction as to educational matters vested in the Governor in Council by the British North America Act, 1867, or by any other Act or law, or touching the constitutionality of any legislation of the Parliament of Canada, or touching any other matter with reference to which he sees fit to exercise his power, may be referred by the Governor in Council to the Supreme Court for hearing or consideration, and the court shall thereupon hear and consider the same.

So that, by the very text of that statute, His Excellency is given power to refer, not only questions connected with the constitutionality of these Acts of 1890, which are complained of, but all questions of law or fact which arise with regard to an appeal under section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867, or any other Act or law of a like character. Then, there is a provision inserted for the first time, that :

The court shall certify to the Governor in Council for his information, its opinion on questions so referred, with the reasons therefor, which shall be given in like manner as in the case of a judgment upon an appeal to the said court.

And there is a provision which enables the decision of the court in any such case to be treated as a final judgment, so that there may be an appeal from the Supreme Court to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. I claim that the machinery which we have used here, of sending this question to the courts, was adopted for the purpose by this Act, because Mr. Blake avowed that he put it forward to meet this very educational question, which had arisen in the province of Manitoba; and yet, Sir, the assault which has been made upon us to-night, is for having followed the very terms of that resolution carried in this House, and of a statute of this Parliament passed no longer ago than 1891. There has been a great deal said about an expression which is used in the report, and about which, I humbly conceive, there has been either a complete misapprehension or a great deal of hypercriticism, and the misapprehension or hypercriticism finds its way into the language of this amendment, which reads :

That, Mr. Speaker, do not now leave the chair, but that the House resolves its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question, and in assuming to be possessed of judicial functions conflicting with their duty as the constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to law, and, if now acquiesced in, will be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

I might fairly call the attention of the House at some length to the origin and source of this particular provision in our Constitution providing for an appeal to the Governor-General in Council. I will do so very briefly, because, if I were to dwell on it, the public, at all events, if not this House, might suppose that we were making a technical defence with regard to those words which are contained in the report and which are censured in this resolution, whereas our defence is not in that line at all. But, in passing, I may refer to the fact, that in constitutions of recent years there is no analogous provision, that I have been able to find, constituting the Governor-General in Council a tribunal of appeal from a provincial authority, with power to make decisions, and placing power and jurisdiction in the Federal Parliament to carry out any decision which may be disobeyed by the provincial authorities. But in early times, in times which preceded the period when responsible government assumed full strength, that was well known in all the provinces of Canada at least, for in nearly all was there a judicial power vested in the Governor in Council; the Council formed a court of appeal with respect to many subjects; and it had power to issue writs of error. As late as 1873, a statute of Prince Edward Island recognized—it was subsequently ascertained that it was passed under a mistaken assumption of the law—the existence of jurisdiction in the Governor in Council as a legal tribunal. At one time, of course, Parliaments themselves were courts of law. Subsequently, the executive authority exercised that jurisdiction, and latterly the two jurisdictions have grown apart as people became conscious of the principle which Mr. Blake has explained so well in the speech which I have just quoted, conscious that a union in one hand of the executive, the legislative and the judicial authority, constituted the greatest despotism that any country could possess, while the separation of these functions was the best guarantee of constitutional freedom. However, that is only by the way. What I wish to call attention to is the extraordinary manner in which our report has been misinterpreted, the report of the sub-committee with respect to this question. This was our observation :

With respect to the functions that devolve upon Your Excellency's advisers, with regard to this appeal the application came before Your Excellency's advisers in a manner different from the applications which are ordinarily made under the constitution to Your Excellency in Council.

Surely the functions which devolve on His Excellency under this clause of the constitution are not only peculiar to this constitution, not only exceedingly difficult and delicate to exercise, but they are different from any other functions given to the executive by the terms of the British North America Act. In the opinion of His Excellency's advisers the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of political character or involving political action on the part of His advisers. That has been put forward, and is put forward in this resolution, as showing that we are endeavouring to free from political responsibility the executive who should be responsible in regard to what advice we may give. It means nothing of the kind; it would be nonsense if it conveyed anything of that kind. I will show the House what interpretation it does fairly bear, and what interpretation was intended by those who framed it. The report reads :

It is to be dealt with by Your Excellency in Council regardless of the personal views which Your Excellency's advisers may hold with regard to denominational schools and without the political action of any of the members of Your Excellency's Council being considered as pledged by the fact of the appeal being entertained and heard. If the contention of the petitioners be correct, that such an appeal can be sustained, the inquiry will be rather of a judicial than of a political character. The sub-committee have so treated it in hearing counsel, and in permitting their only meeting to be open to the public.

Out of that has come all this criticism that we are claiming to be possessed of judicial functions, conflicting with our duties as constitutional advisers of the Crown, that this is an assumption wholly unknown to law, and if now acquiesced in will entirely subvert the principle of ministerial responsibility. The expression that our functions with respect to this appeal are judicial rather than political, is not said of our functions with respect to the whole appeal; but the report states that at this stage, and in regard to simply hearing the appeal our functions are judicial rather than political. That assertion is based on these grounds: That a special duty is devolved on His Excellency's advisers by that section of the British North America Act, different altogether from the functions which are exercised otherwise, and we use an expression, the expression judicial, which almost every paragraph of Mr. Blake's speech of 1890 applies to those who sitting in the executive have to deal with questions of that kind. The same expression was used, or a similar one, in the House to-night, when we were asked to come to the consideration of the subject, not in a party spirit, but in a spirit of judicial fairness. Time and time again in considering questions involving the rights of members or the rights of persons who have stood at our bar or who were to be affected by our decision, I have heard the leaders of both sides declare that the investigation ought not to be approached with political and party spirit, as the House was exercising judicial functions in dealing with the questions before it, and in committees of the House the term is used when people are summoned and interrogated, and personal rights are to be affected by the decision. The functions which devolve under that clause of the constitution on the executive are judicial rather than political in this sense; not by any means, however, let me promise, in the sense that we are free from responsibility for any act or word, not by any means in the sense that we are judges, not by any means in the sense that we are a court of justice, but in the sense which applies to men who are dealing not with matters in which they can exercise a personal preference and a personal choice, or in which they can be guided by the sense of what is best for the party, or by the sense of what is best for other interests of the country, or by a sense even of what is best for the country as a whole, but in ascertaining the rights of others, not what is best for the majority but as to the rights of the minority. We are required by the terms of the British North America Act to give a decision; that decision is to be communicated to the province; if the province disregard our decision, this House has jurisdiction to make an enactment to enforce that decision. I am using the very words of the Act, and was it straining a point to use the metaphor which refers to the judicial rather than the political authority with respect to all these questions? Why, Sir, a politician advising His Excellency in ordinary matters is bound to give his personal predilections weight; is bound to give his personal and private opinions for the benefit of his colleagues and for the benefit of His Excellency. He is bound to do what is best for the interests of the country as a whole. He is bound to consult the welfare of the majority, if the interests of the majority and the minority cannot be reconciled; but with regard to the questions which come up in this appeal, that course of action has to be reversed, and while, as I admit, we are perfectly responsible for everything we have done and will be perfectly responsible for everything which we will do, we have to be guided in some degree, at least, by the judicial rather than by the political sense in ascertaining what the rights were of those who appeal, and how they should be dealt with, because those rights are entrusted to our safe keeping by the constitution. Now then, let me inquire for a moment whether this is anything unusual. I have already referred the House to expressions which are used when we come to deal with rights, with property, with the rights of individual members of this House, and with the rights of constituencies. Every time such questions come up the House is invited, and properly invited, to come to the determination of these questions in a judicial spirit, and to deal with them judicially, whether we always succeed in doing so or not. When this question with regard to the separate schools of Manitoba came before the council, everybody knows that there sat there men strongly in favour of separate schools, and every one knows that there sat there men opposed to separate schools. Was the private and personal opinion as to whether there should be separate schools or not, to govern members of the executive thus sitting? Would those who are opposed to separate schools have done right in leaving their seats in council and walking out, on the ground that separate schools were against their conscience? No, Sir; they had the duty devolving upon them, at least to hear the appeal, and that duty was not a political duty; but it took to a very great extent of the character of a judicial duty, and so they have heard the appeal in so far as it has progressed now. Surely it was not out of place at least to use the metaphor which refers to the judicial authority for the purpose of explaining to the public that we were not sitting there in the exercise of our ordinary duties; but sitting there in discharge of a peculiar duty, in respect to which the rights of other people were dependent upon our action. That Sir, is the only foundation for the extraordinary motion with which the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) concluded a speech upon different matters altogether; a motion which declares that we have assumed judicial functions, and that that is entirely inconsistent with ministerial responsibilities. Sir, I do not hesitate to affirm as my belief and as true constitutional doctrine, that for everything a Minister does he is responsible to Parliament as well as to the people. If a Minister is called upon to decide a case between two parties just as we were called upon here to decide a case between two classes of the community; if he has to decide upon the rights of property of a man who is before the Council, just as we had here to decide upon a claim to the school property and the school moneys of Catholic sections and of Protestant sections, the Minister is responsible to the House for every step he takes and all he can claim is the forbearance and charitable judgment of the House, in view of the delicate functions he is obliged to perform in that regard. That is the only claim we make here. We claim, not the charity, but the fair consideration of the House in view of the difficult and delicate functions we had to discharge on a question irritating large bodies of the people, and entering to some extent into their religious privileges, their religious beliefs, and their religious practices. Now, let me call the attention of the House to some classes of questions, which we are now told are not of a judicial character at all, and as to which it is said that to recognize them as in any sense judicial would be subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility. I will take one illustration; but there are many. We have duties devolving upon us by Act of Parliament as members of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and although we sit there as Ministers, we sit discharging precisely the functions which are exercised in other places by judges, and which are judicial rather than political. We had to deal with a case in that Committee some four or five years ago, in which the rights of a province seemed to be involved. A railway constructed under the authority of the Manitoba Government claimed the right to cross a railway constructed by the Federal Government, and the constitutional question was raised as to their right to force a connection with a railway which was under the authority of this Parliament by the terms of our statute. We did, with regard to that, just what we are doing here with regard to the Manitoba educational question. It was then the Manitoba Railway question now it is the Manitoba Educational question, and what we did was to submit to His Excellency that he should lay before the court a case upon which the rights of all parties concerned should be decided before we made any rule, or before we made any decision. We might have pursued the course recommended by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). We might have made an order for the crossing; we might have put bodies of armed men in motion for the purpose of effecting the crossing; we might have left the crossing difficulty to be decided afterwards; but every man, when the dispute was over, admitted that we took the safer course; that we avoided confusion and perhaps bloodshed; at any rate, that we avoided confusion and heart-burnings. We submitted the question of the rights of the parties to the courts first, and acted on the decision which we procured from the courts. I admit, Sir, that with regard even to that question that we were subject to ministerial responsibility, and that it was the perfect right of any member of this House, while that case was in progress, to move a resolution declaring that we should not submit it to the courts, or declaring, after it came from the courts, that we should have evaded the instructions of the courts, or acted on the authority which the courts said we had. Therefore, on behalf of my colleagues and myself, I disclaim in the strongest manner any attempt to evade ministerial responsibility, and I again assert that the criticism which is contained in this resolution and which is made elsewhere, is a criticism which carves words and splits hairs, and that the metaphor which we did use, and which related to a judicial rather than a political subject, was fully justified by the language used in this House in 1890, when the principle on which we were acting was adopted. There occurred to my memory this moment an observation which was used in this House a few days ago, with regard to the office of Lieutenant-Governor. A leading member of the House, challenging the propriety of our action with regard to the tenure of office of a Lieutenant-Governor in one of the provinces, said that it detracted from the independence of his office, and that it was important that that independence of the office should be observed because the Lieutenant-Governor was a quasi-judicial officer acting as between parties. The expression was perhaps an appropriate one, in that case; but not half as appropriate as was the allusion to the judicial authority and the judicial function in this report of the sub-committee. In passing now, Mr. Speaker, as I think I may, from the terms of this report of the sub-committee, I wish to make one observation in regard to the allusion which the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) made to one of our late colleagues. He referred to his having gone into retreat, and making an analogy, I suppose in his own mind, between his retirement from the political scene—to the demise which is to come to us all—the hon. member declared that Mr. Chapleau had made his last will, in a speech at Hochelaga some weeks before his retirement from the Government. I beg to say in answer to the playful allusion of the hon. member for L'Islet, that that last will is no good because we have a later one, the name of Mr. Chapleau is appended to this very report which is made the subject of censure by the hon. member for L'Islet. For the purpose of asking the forbearance of the House as to our treatment of this question—not the forbearance of the House exactly, but the fair and impartial judgment of the House, as distinguished from the bias which we sometimes feel in regard to matters in which the fate of the Government is involved. I want to ask the House to consider the gravity and delicacy of the position in which we are placed. I mean in which this country is placed; I mean in which this Parliament is placed, as well as in which the executive is placed with regard to this religious and educational question in the province of Manitoba. Let us look for a few moments at a country with a somewhat analogous constitution alongside of us; let us inquire how long the wonderful union between the states in the United States of America would have lasted if the statesmen of that country, the governors and presidents of that country, had acted on the impulsive notions of the hon. member for L'Islet, and had torn up State Acts and Federal Acts by the power of veto. That subject has been well investigated, and the great author who has treated of "The American Commonwealth" has made some observations upon the feature of the constitution which gives to the judiciary such control over legislation as to questions of "ultra vires" and "intra vires." Speaking of the apparent difficulty of working such a system, in which the judiciary surmounts for certain purposes the executive, he says:

It is nevertheless true that there is no part of the American system which reflects more credit on its authors or has worked better in practice. It has had the advantage of relegating questions not only intricate and delegate, but peculiarly liable to excite political passions, to the cool, dry atmosphere of judicial determination. The relations of the central federal power to the states, and the amount of authority which Congress and the President are respectively intitled to exercise, have been the most permanently grave questions in American history, with which nearly every other political problem has become entangled. If they had been left to be settled by Congress, itself an interested party, or by any dealing between Congress and the state legislatures, the dangers of a conflict would have been extreme, and instead of one civil war there might have been several. But the universal respect felt for the Constitution, a respect which grows the longer it stands, has disposed men to defer to any decision which seems honestly and logically to unfold the meaning of its terms. In obeying such a decision they are obeying, not the judges, but the people who enacted the constitution. To have foreseen that the power of interpreting the Federal Constitution and statutes, and determining whether or no State Constitutions and statutes transgress federal provisions, would be sufficient to prevent struggles between the National Government and the State Governments, required great insight and great faith in the soundness and power of a principle. While the constitution was being framed the suggestion was made, and for a time seemed likely to be adopted, that a veto on the Acts of State Legislatures should be conferred upon the Federal Congress. Discussion revealed the objections to such a plan. Its introduction would have offended the sentiment of the States, always jealous of their autonomy; its exercise would have provoked collisions with them. The disallowance of a State statute, even if it did really offend against the Federal constitution, would have seemed a political move, to be resented by a political counter move. And the veto would often have been pronounced before it could have been ascertained exactly how the State statute would work, sometimes, perhaps, pronounced in cases where the statute was neither pernicious in itself nor opposed to the Federal constitution. But by the action of the courts the self-love of the States is not wounded, and the decision annulling their laws is nothing but a tribute to the superior authority of that supreme enactment to which they were themselves parties, and which they may themselves desire to see enforced against another State on some not remote occasion.

Precisely the same is the case, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the province of Manitoba. To have disallowed, after the decisions of this Parliament on the cases of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, would have created a feeling of great uneasiness throughout this country. Why, Sir, the very dread that her educational powers are intended to be assailed out of religious sympathy on the part of some of us, or from political hostility to the Government and Legislature of the day in Manitoba by some of us—the very suspicion that we intended to interfere with her rights caused an outcry in Manitoba, and all the Dominion has been filled with the cries of her alarm. When the questions which surround her case have been decided by the courts, there will be no suspicion on the part of that province that either from religious or political antipathy or sympathy her legislation has been interfered with or her rights invaded; and when the hon. member for L'Islet challenges me, as he surely had no right to challenge me, to state in advance what the policy of the Government would be if such and so should happen, I tell him that the answer I can give him now and the answer I shall be able to give him, if that event should happen, would be this, that the province of Manitoba is a constitutional province, and that whether it be in the hands of legislators opposed to us or in the hands of legislators in sympathy with us, we have every reason to believe and to rest assured that she will obey the dictates of the highest tribunals in this Empire as to what the constitution is, regardless of consequences, regardless even of the displeasure of the majority if the decision should be against the majority; and that, so far as the disposal of this appeal is concerned at any rate, the minority must bow to that decision, and the Federal executive will advise His Excellency accordingly.

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the night it seems hardly fitting that I should rise to occupy the time of the House; but on a question which affects my province so deeply as this one does I feel it my duty to say a few words. I have listened with great attention to what has been said by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) and I have tried to follow him as closely as possible.

Unfortunately my very imperfect knowledge of the French language rendered the early part of his speech rather unintelligible to me; but I take for granted that when he spoke in English he gave the substance of what he had already said in his own language, and if that is the case, I may say that, although I followed him as closely as possible, I did not hear a single argument advanced which would justify me in voting for his amendment. I say this deliberately, and, notwithstanding the fact that to a certain extent I sympathize with my hon. friend, I sympathize with him in his feeling of indignation at the way in which the Roman Catholic inhabitants of the province of Manitoba were treated with regard to the separate schools. I sympathize with him because I know that whatever we may think as to the advisability of maintaining the system of separate schools or establishing a system of national schools in Manitoba, the manner in which the separate school system was abolished was barbarous, brutal and butcherly. I believe, as has been explained by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), that the proceedings taken by the Local Government of Manitoba to enforce and carry out the School Act were such as to give the impression that it was their intention to add insult to injury, and to outrage in every way in their power the feelings of the Roman Catholic minority of the province from which I come. I also sympathize with my hon. friend in wishing that the Government of Canada had seen fit to deal with this question on their own responsibility, and not again refer it to the courts. But here the sympathy between us ends; and when we come to the question of the manner in which this important matter ought to have been dealt with by the Government of Canada, our views are as wide as the poles asunder. For, while he regrets that the Government did not disallow or veto the provincial legislation of 1890 or 1891, within the year within which the power of disallowance may be exercised, and while he now says that the Government of Canada should come to this House and ask for remedial legislation, which would have for effect the removing of the injury under which he believes the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba to be suffering, I consider that any interference with provincial legislation by the exercise of the power of disallowance would be a usurpation of the rights of the province to which I belong, and so far am I from wishing that anything in the shape of remedial legislation should take place, that my wish is that the Government should declare openly to this House and the country that the matter, having been referred to the courts for decision, and having been carried from the courts of Manitoba to the Supreme Court of the Dominion and from the Supreme Court of the Dominion to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the highest court of appeal to which British colonists can go, and that court having decided that the Provincial Legislature acted within its rights in passing the Act in question, that judgment should be considered final and binding and this local School Act upheld. As I have already said, I agree with my hon. friend in wishing that the Government should take a firm stand in this matter, and decide it without reference to the courts; but after listening to the speech of my hon. friend the First Minister, the very able speech which he has just delivered, I am almost afraid that the very fact of my hon. friend from L'Islet and myself being ready to jump to a hasty conclusion and form an off-hand judgment on a matter of this importance, is simply a sign that neither of us is cut out for a Cabinet Minister. And I am not inclined to cavil at, much less censure, the course of the Government for taking every step they are allowed by our constitution to determine what their legal rights are, and also what are the rights of the minority, under the British North America Act and the Manitoba Act, for this is a question which excites interest, not only in Manitoba, but from one end of Canada to the other—yes, from Cape Breton to Vancouver—and it is moreover a question particularly calculated to stir the passions of which the human mind is capable. Let us view the situation for a moment, and you will find that it bears me out in what I say. You will see on the one side a body of men in this House and in the country whose views are very similar to those expressed by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), and who consider the Manitoba School Act an insult to their church, an injury to their co-religionists in the province of Manitoba, and a breach of the agreement, express or implied, which was entered into at the time provincial rights were given to Manitoba, and even of the understanding under which the province of Quebec, then Lower Canada, entered into Confederation. These gentlemen naturally enough are determined to leave no stone unturned to have this injury redressed, this insult wiped out, by means of remedial legislation in this House, which shall in some way render null and void this most objectional Act from their stand-point. On the other hand, you see a body of men in this House, and a vast number in the country, who are opposed to any interference with provincial legislation, and who are equally determined as the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) and his friends. These gentlemen, although acting together, standing shoulder to shoulder, to resist any attack upon this Manitoba School Act, may be very properly divided into two classes. One who are opposed to interference, because they believe that this Act, having been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to be "intra vires" of the Provincial Legislature, cannot be interfered with without a breach of the Constitution and a gross interference with provincial rights. Another class care comparatively little whether provincial rights are interfered with or not, but approve of the system of national and are opposed to the system of separate schools, and do not desire to see the national schools now established in Manitoba interfered with in any way. I may say there is perhaps a third class, composed of men like myself, who are opposed to interference on both grounds; and for myself, I can only say that so strongly do I feel on this question, that I am ready to oppose to the best of my ability any attempt to interfere with the Manitoba School Act, or similar legislation from any other province. And if necessary, strong party man as I am, I am ready to carry my proposition so far, for the time being, as to throw party ties to the winds and vote want of confidence in the Government I was elected to support, and of whose general policy I most heartily approve. I do not know that there is very much more for me to say after the very able speech we have heard from the head of the Government, and which, I think, effectually disposed of the claim of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), that the Government is attempting to shirk its responsibility to the House and the country by claiming to exercise purely judicial functions. I think the First Minister's explanation on that point is clear and decided, and there are few men in this House or country who, after hearing or reading that speech, will not understand perfectly the position the Government have taken and feel it is one which is justified by the circumstances of the case. We know that the Government cannot shirk the responsibility as advisers of His Excellency the Governor-General, which they are bound to shoulder. In this case, however, there is no attempt to do anything of that kind. In this case, there are legal points to be tested—points as to what rights the Roman Catholics of Manitoba have under the Manitoba Act and the ninety-third section of the the British North America Act, and it has to be decided whether, under the Manitoba Act, there is a right of appeal to the Governor-General in Council for remedial legislation. It has also to be decided whether Manitoba can in any way take advantage of the British North America Act, or whether the provisions relating to educational matters in the Manitoba Act cut out that province from the older Act by which the other provinces are governed. That is a question which has to be decided, and I am certain after having heard the First Minister, that no reasonable man can fail to feel, whatever his opinion may be as to the right or wrong of the Manitoba School Act, that the Government have acted in an impartial manner in referring this matter to the courts. I am sorry that, as I sympathize with my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) to a certain extent, I cannot vote for his amendment. But I do not wish him to be too much disappointed at that. I hope he will keep up his courage and try again, and I can promise him now that, if it is decided that the Roman Catholic minority in the province of Manitoba have the right to appeal to the Governor in Council for remedial legislation, and if the Governor in Council decides to grant that remedial legislation, if he, the hon. member for L'Islet, will then move a vote of censure upon the Government, I will be very glad to second it.

Mr. McCARTHY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons, the accompanying papers relating to the Conference held at Washington in February, 1892, between the delegates of the Canadian Government and the Secretary of State of the United States upon the several subjects therein mentioned.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 7th March, 1893.

SUPPLY—SEPARATE SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply; and the motion of Mr. Tarte in amendment thereto.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, in rising to continue the discussion which was commenced yesterday on the subject of the Manitoba school law, it will not be necessary for me to detail at any very great length or to recapitulate the history in connection with the measure which was so very fully given to the House last night by the hon. First Minister in his very able and full statement of the subject. I, however, have just to ask the House to recollect the dates in connection with the Bill and with the history of separate school legislation in the province of Manitoba. The Manitoba Act, as we all know, was passed more than twenty years ago and by it the constitution which that province enjoys was conferred upon it and a certain enactment was made with regard to the subject of education. That enactment, as was pointed out, is not in the same terms as the corresponding law to be found in the British North America Act, but, for some reason or another which I do not know and certainly am not able to offer any explanation about, the terms, or limitations rather, with regard to education which apply to other provinces of the Dominion do not apply to the province of Manitoba. It is true that after that constitution was conferred and very early indeed in the history of the province, a Separate School Bill was passed, the population at that time being pretty evenly divided, though by no means a large population, between the two classes speaking generally, that is to say, between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. And, in carrying out in the power which the Provincial Legislature had, that Legislature passed a Separate School law which, subject to changes and modifications, remained in force until the year 1890, when the Separate School law was repealed and the Public Schools Act was passed, thus giving rise to a good deal of discussion and controversy, not merely in Manitoba, but in all parts of the Dominion. The Act that I now speak of and as to which this motion refers was passed in 1890. It was sent very shortly afterwards and reached Ottawa somewhere in the month of April in the same year. The period for the disallowance of that Act, therefore, expired in the month of April, 1891. Very promptly after the Act came here, almost contemporaneously, petitions were sent and applications made, one for the disallowance of the Act, from the Roman Catholic School Board, which had been, in point of fact, dispensed with by the new Act, and others from various parties in the province, members of the Local Legislature and others, who claimed that the Act was in contravention of the powers of the province and ought to be dealt with by the Governor-General in Council, but not stating specifically whether it was to be dealt with by power of disallowance or by other power supposed to be conferred upon the Government in the special case of matters relating to education. No action appears to have been taken upon these until the 21st March, in the following year. When I say no action appears to have been taken, I mean no action appears to have been taken by the Governor-General in Council or by the Government, with reference to the prayer of these petitions, either as to disallowance or as to the other action sought for, namely, the change of the law, if it could be changed, under the power of appeal. But we know that early in the year 1890 proceedings were taken in the province of Manitoba in the name of one Barrett for the purpose of invoking the opinion of the courts as to whether the Act which had been passed was or was not within the power of the Legislature, and whether, in point of fact, it was to govern for time to come. That proceeding was instituted, as I say, somewhere in the year 1890, I believe in September of that year. Now, it may not be known to all the members of this House, in point of fact, it may not be known to many of them, that the litigation was not merely paid for by the Government of this country—that we do know—but that the litigation was, in point of fact, promoted, instituted and carried on nominally in the name of this man Barrett, who was competent, of course, as being a citizen of Winnipeg, to invoke the opinion of the court as to the legality of the by-law that was passed by the city of Winnipeg; but in reality by the Government of this Dominion, as was frankly enough stated by the First Minister in his speech to us last night. It is not unimportant to bear that in mind when we come to consider the attitude which the Government has now assumed. It is not at all, as it appears to me, unnecessary for us to be very careful in considering the wish of the Government now to take the position of a judicial body, when we know that this same Government was the Government which promoted the litigation against the constitutionality of the Act of the province. It can hardly be expected in reason that the province that is now summoned to the bar of justice to answer for its legislation, can have very great confidence in the justice of the decision that may be come to by this judicial body, if it is a judicial body, when it is known to all the members of the Government and of the legislative body of that province, that it was this Government who not merely, as I say, paid for the litigation against the validity of the Act of the province, but, in point of fact, promoted that litigation, stirred it up, carried it on, retained counsel, and naturally became more or less interested in the success of the proceeding which had thus been instituted. Well, when the question had to be dealt with by the Government within the year's time, the report was made which has been referred to very fully, the report of the 21st March; and for my part I have no reason to find fault with that report in so far as it did not disallow the Act of the province. I have no sympathy at all with the hon. gentleman who moved this amendment, who, as I understand his argument, thinks that the Provincial Act ought to have been disallowed. On the contrary, I am exceedingly glad indeed to hear the clear, emphatic and definite statement proceeding from the First Minister that the Government never thought of disallowing it, because it was a matter beyond the reach of ministerial responsibility, so to speak, and in view of the precedent of the New Brunswick school law, which occupied the attention of this Parliament for several years from 1872 onwards, the decision with regard to which had been accepted by the late Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald, who was then at the head of the Government, and was fully accepted by the present Prime Minister, that the Act respecting education in that province ought not to be disallowed. If I offer any criticism at all with regard to that report, it is to point out that the report does not, in very definite and clear language, lay that rule down. We have it stated on the floor of Parliament, but we do not find it so stated in the report. Therefore I do not at all wonder that gentlemen who take the view of my hon. friend who moved this amendment, may feel a little disappointed at the course of events. I think one reading that report would naturally conclude that while the Government refused to disallow, while the Government, rather, did not disallow, and allowed the time to elapse within which the Government here had authority to disallow, they held out hopes that if the Act in the end should turn out to be a constitutional Act, an Act within the power of the province to pass remedial legislation in some form or another, which would in effect carry out the desire of those who objected to the Act, would be given effect to by the Government here under the other clause of the Manitoba Act. I say, therefore, that I do not wonder that the view was taken—though I quite agree with the Minister of Justice that it is not to be found within the four corners of the document; it is certainly not expressly promised; and reading the document through, reading the argument of the Minister of Justice upon the subject in which he points out that the questions were twofold (because the third was eliminated), one being the question of fact as to whether the minority had, prior to the Union, any special privilege, and the other being one of law, as to whether that privilege, if it existed, had been violated by the Public School Act of 1890—I say that reading the argument, and reading the conclusion, I am not at all surprised that those who desired to see this law nullified, have been disappointed at the course of events. On the legal controversy, the document goes on to say:

Should it result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained, the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsections 2 and 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, quoted in the earlier part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the British North America Act in relation to other provinces. Those subsections contain in effect the provisions which have been made as to all the provinces and are obviously those under which the constitution intended that the Government of the Dominion should proceed if it should at any time become necessary that the Federal power should be resorted to for the protection of a Protestant or Roman Catholic minority against any act of decision of the Legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of any such minority in relation to education.

So that all I would say about it is, that I regret that the Minister did not in this report state as emphatically as he did upon the floor of the House, that the Act could not be disallowed and would not be disallowed, as being one of those dealing with the subject of education, leaving the other portion of the report of the Minister thought fit to draw it, in the terms in which I have just read it to the House. I think that observation is justified, when one refers back to the terms of the report of Sir John A. Macdonald with reference to the New Brunswick School Law. That report was made on the 22nd January, 1872, and in that report Sir John Macdonald said:

Now, the Provincial Legislatures have exclusive powers to make laws in relation to education, subject to the provisions of the 93rd clause of the British North America Act. Those provisions apply exclusively to denominational, separate or dissentient schools; they do not in any way affect or lessen the power of such Provincial Legislatures to pass laws respecting the general educational system of the province. The Act complained of is an Act relating to common schools, and the Acts repealed by it apply to parish, grammar, superior and common schools. No reference is made in them to separate, dissentient or denominational schools, and the undersigned does not, on examination, find that any statute of the province exists establishing such special schools. It may be that the Act in question may operate unfavourably on the Catholics or on other religious denominations, and if so it is for such religious bodies to appeal to the Provincial Legislature which has the sole power to grant redress.

Now, these were the terms in which, in 1872, Sir John A. Macdonald dealt with an application similar in character, made with reference to the school law of New Brunswick, and all I say is, that I regret that the report with reference to this school law of Manitoba was not equally explicit and emphatic in its terms; but we have it now, at all events, on the floor of Parliament, and we have it from both sides of the House, I take it—at all events, Mr. Blake, who spoke in 1890 on the subject, speaking for himself and, he believed, for the bulk of his fellow-members of his own political persuasion, stated it for himself and on their behalf; and we have it now on this side of the House from the First Minister, on behalf of the Government, that legislation with respect to education is not to be vetoed or disallowed. We now come to the next proceeding, and I desire to make good my statement with respect to the manner in which the litigation was promoted by the Government of the Dominion. A question arose as to the retainer given to Sir Horace Davey, who, being an eminent counsel, was retained no less than three times with respect to the Manitoba school matter. He was retained in the first place by the Dominion, in the second place by the province of Manitoba, and in the third place by the city of Winnipeg; and when he was called on to accept a brief, the point arose to which retainer he was bound to accept. Was it to be the brief of the Dominion, the brief of the province, or the brief of the city of Winnipeg. In England questions of this kind are settled by the Attorney-General, and they are settled after a good deal of formality; and we have it here that this question was settled after a statement of the facts of the case on behalf of both parties, and I propose now to read to the House the letter of Mr. Justice Sedgewick, then Deputy-Minister of Justice, who states the facts within his own knowledge—in point of fact, he was the actor with respect to the institution of this litigation. He wrote this letter, on 4th January, 1892, to the solicitors in London, Messrs. Bompas, Bischoff & Co., who were acting for Mr. Barrett:

OTTAWA, 4th January, 1892.

SIRS,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th ultimo, and to state as therein requested the facts in reference to the Dominion Government's connection with the case of the City of Winnipeg vs. Barrett.

Shortly after the passing of the Manitoba School Act, the Canadian Government was petitioned from many quarters for its disallowance, and remonstrances coming to the Government from His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, who exercises his ecclesiastical jurisdiction over Manitoba and the North-west Territories, the late Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, as well as Sir John Thompson, gave assurances that the Dominion Government would under take the expense of any litigation necessary to have the constitutionality of the Act tested in the courts, and I was personally authorized by both Ministers to do everything that was necessary with that end in view. On the 10th September, 1890, I proceeded to Winnipeg and placed myself in consultation with Messrs. Ewart & Brophy, who were the solicitors of Archbishop Taché, with a view of coming to a conclusion as to the most feasible way of commencing our attack. We thereupon determined upon the course which was subsequently followed. Mr. Barrett, the plaintiff in the action, being a nominal plaintiff, and I undertaking verbally that all expenses in the matter would be borne by the Government. Mr. Barrett was asked to allow his name to be used as a nominal plaintiff, I guaranteeing him all possible indemnity. Upon my return to Ottawa on November 4th, 1890, I confirmed in writing my instructions in the matter, a copy of which letter to Messrs. Ewart & Brophy being herewith inclosed.

I may further state that the Dominion Government have already paid Messrs. Ewart & Brophy's costs as well as a fee of $600 to Hon. S. H. Blake, who argued the case before the Supreme Court of Canada.

I do not know that I can give you a fuller statement than the foregoing. There can be no doubt of the fact that Mr. Barrett, in so far as he had anything to do with the institution of the proceedings, was the agent of the Dominion Government, and not an independent litigant on his own account.

I may add that Messrs. Ewart & Brophy have rendered their account as solicitors and counsel to the Dominion Government only.

I have the honour to be, sirs,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) R. SEDGEWICK,
Deputy Min. of Justice.

I think that fully bears out the statement I made, that this litigation was actually instituted and promoted, not by any person on his own account, but by an agent, as he was called, of the Dominion Government. We come now to the proceeding which finally led to the decision of the Privy Council, and that determination, as the House knows, was reached about the last day of July last year. It was then finally determined that the decision of the courts of the province of Manitoba, which were in favour of the law and of its constitutionality, was right, and that the decision of the Supreme Court, although unanimous, was erroneous, and the law was held to be constitutional. Shortly after that the proceedings were renewed, in pursuance of the promise that was held out by the Minister of Justice in his report of March 21st. That report certainly did state most distinctly that if at the end it should be found that the law was intra vires and constitutional, then would be the time for His Excellency's advisers to consider the petitions which had been preferred under the provisions of the Manitoba Act; and accordingly various petitions were presented during the last year, and ultimately one was presented on which the investigation took place. Let me state briefly the history of these proceedings. I think I am right, Sir, that, until the month of November last, no person ever dreamt that clause 93 of the British North America Act had an application at all to the province of Manitoba. It never was suggested in the early papers, it never was spoken of until in the end of October by a petition sent in by Mr. Ewart, as counsel for the petitioners, it was suggested that that clause of the British North America Act had some bearing, or might have some bearing upon the Manitoba Act, and the Manitoba school question under that Act. It was upon this last petition that the report of the sub-committee, to whom the matter had been referred by Council, containing as it did all the papers that had been referred to in the former reports, was arrived at. There was, therefore, a sitting some time in September or October, I am not quite sure, but the date is here, at which the parties were invited to attend and endeavour to point out or assist the sub-committee in pointing out the form in which this appeal should be made. This meeting was attended on behalf of the petitioners by Mr. Ewart; it was not attended, I think, at this stage by any representative of the Government of Manitoba, and that Government had not, I think, received any notice.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am corrected as to that, and it seems that the Government of Manitoba had at that time notice, but they were not represented.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I beg your pardon; I am not sure that they had notice.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is my recollection of the facts, that they had not notice. Later on there was a sub-committee meeting, at which these questions were to be considered. Among the questions which the sub-committee regarded as preliminary are the following:—

1. Whether this appeal is such an appeal as is contemplated by subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act or by subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act.

2. Whether the grounds set forth in the petitions are such as may be the subject of appeal under either of the subsections above referred to.

3. Whether the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in any way bears on the application for redress based on the contention that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority which accrued to them after the Union have been interfered with by the two statutes of 1890 before referred to.

4. Whether subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba.

5. Whether Your Excellency in Council has power to grant such orders as are asked for by the petitioner, assuming the material facts to be as stated in the petition.

6. Whether the Acts of Manitoba passed before the session of 1890 conferred on the minority a "right or privilege with respect to education," within the meaning of subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, or established "a system of separate or dissentient schools," within the meaning of subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act, and if so, whether the two Acts of 1890, complained of, affect "the right or privilege" of the minority in such a manner as to warrant the present appeal.

These were the questions which the sub-committee recommended should be submitted for consideration, and an appointment was made to hear argument as to the form or substance of these questions. It may be well now to call attention to the prayer of the petition. It may be well to see what it is the petitioners are desiring to do, now that the constitutionality of the Act has been fully established. That will be found in the return which has been brought down, and without troubling the House to read it all, I will read the fourth prayer of the petition. It is as follows:—

4. That it may be declared that to Your Excellency the Governor-General in Council it seems requisite that the provisions of the statutes in force in the province of Manitoba prior to the passage of the said Acts should be re-enacted, in so far, at least, as may be necessary to secure to the Roman Catholics in the said province the right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support these schools in the manner provided for by the said statutes, to secure to them their proportionate share of any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education, and to relieve such members of the Roman Catholic Church as contribute to such Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools; or that the said Acts of 1890 should be so modified or amended as to effect such purposes.

The House will see from this that what is now sought is to accomplish by another means the destruction of the Public School Act of the province of Manitoba. The first educational Act of Manitoba was a Separate School Act, and the Act of 1890 did away with separate schools, and established a public school system. That Act of 1890 was held to be intra vires, to be within the powers of the Legislature of that province. No public schools have been in existence now since 1890. This petition, and the hearing which is now pending upon this petition, is for the purpose of destroying or of nullifying in another way the School Act which was passed in 1890. So that, although the province has been held to have power to pass that law, although it is a matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of the province to pass—subject, of course, to the restrictions which I will deal with later on—it is now sought in this way to destroy the effect of that enactment and to compel the province to enact such modifications and changes as would, in point of fact, restore the school system, as amended, based on the Act of 1871, and so to do away with the Public School Act of 1890. It is well to bear that in mind. It is well to understand exactly what it is that is pending before the Government of this country, because, without clearly keeping that before us, we may be misled by statements and we may think it a matter of very trifling moment or importance as to whether or not, under the powers of the statute, anything really serious is meant or intended. Now, it will be clearly seen upon one of these petitions, and more especially upon the last petition to which I have made reference, that two hearings have already taken place, not any hearing yet upon the merits, it is true, but one as to the form in which the question should be discussed, and the second as to the form of the questions which ought to be considered. The last thing that has been done—and that brings to a close the narration which I thought it necessary to make before I offered a few observations on the policy or line of conduct of the Government—the last Minute that we have is brought down here in a supplementary return. It says :

The Committee of the Privy Council, having considered the arguments advanced by Mr. Ewart on behalf of the petitioners in Manitoba who have requested redress from Your Excellency with respect to certain statutes of that province relating to education, are of opinion that the important questions of law which were suggested in the report of the sub-committee to whom said petitioners were referred should be authoritatively settled before the appeal which has been asserted by said petitions be further proceeded with.

Well, I am not concerned here in the least in any desire to see these Acts destroyed or annulled ; but I cannot help, in passing, to make this remark : That it does appear very extraordinary, and must appear so to those who take an opposite view and who think that these Acts should be destroyed in one form or another, that although in 1891 it seemed quite plain to the Minister of Justice that the time would come for the consideration of these questions as to the constitutionality of the Act so passed, it does seem strange, that here in 1893 we have a report that the Government do not yet know whether they have power to take these petitions into consideration or not. As I say, I am not anxious to see or to assist in the destruction of the legislation of the province, but one cannot help feeling that those who relied upon whatever promises were given one way or the other—and in regard to that promise which, perhaps, has not seen the light of day—should seem disappointed at the course now taken. That there was some secret communication, I think was abundantly plain. In point of fact, we know from the letter of Mr. Sedgewick, that promises were made to the archbishop that the expenses of the litigation should be borne by this Dominion. Now, I do not find any record of any bargain or agreement of that kind, but in pursuance of that, although there is no Minute or Order or report of any kind brought down bearing on it, the litigation was promoted and the suit was carried on really by the Dominion Government, in the name of this man Barrett. I want, in the first place, to make it perfectly plain and clear, that I do not go with my hon. friend who moved this resolution (Mr. Tarte), in censuring, or desiring in any way to censure the Government for not vetoing the School Act of 1890. I want it to be perfectly clear, that my only quarrel and fault, if I have any, and it is but of a very trifling nature, is, that the report did not specifically state and make it abundantly clear for all time to come, that the school legislation of the province was perfectly free from the exercise of the veto power. Neither do I quarrel with the rights of the parties to petition. That certainly is a right which under the statute, and more especially under the report of the Minister of Justice in 1891, the present Prime Minister, they had a perfect privilege to exercise. No person can find fault with the minority in Manitoba for having exercised their power and their right to petition. Under the statute conferring a Constitution on the province of Manitoba, and under the British North America Act, if they thought that could have any application to their case, no person, I say, can blame them. But what I do find fault with, and what I do complain of, and what enables me to support the first part of this resolution, is, that the Government, with a full knowledge of all the facts of this case, knowing the facts, because they were ascertained in the trial of the cause, knowing the law, because there are a series of Acts with reference to education passed by the province of Manitoba, and there is also an Act of this Parliament, confirmed afterwards by an Imperial enactment ; knowing all these facts, there being nothing to be discovered and nothing to be brought out, I say that Government ought, in my humble judgment, to have refused to entertain this appeal, and they ought to have at once determined upon the constitutionality of the Act of Manitoba, confirmed, as it had been, by the highest tribunal in the Empire. The law giving to the provinces, and giving to this province, exclusive jurisdiction over the subject-matter of education, and the School Act having been in force from the period of its passage in 1890 up to the present time, the Government, instead of practically allowing the institution and the carrying on of this appeal, ought to have declined to grant the relief. Now, is there any reason why they should not have done so ? I am not going at the moment to deal with the question of the judicial functions of the Government. But assuming, as I hope to be able to show, that this matter must be dealt with as a matter of policy, as a political matter, and not as a judicial matter, that it must be dealt with, as all other matters are, by the Government, of this Dominion, subject to the responsibility of Ministers of Parliament, I want to know why this question could not have been as well settled in the month of September last, when this petition was presented ? I want to know why the Government, instead of encouraging this litigation, instead of promoting this feud in the province, instead of keeping alive this unfortunate contention about the right of the minority in the province of Manitoba, should not at once and for all time have said: We cannot, under these circumstances, interfere, and we will not interfere? Now, taking that view, although I should have preferred that it had been expressed on the face of the resolution, and that the vote which I propose to give in support of the resolution, had not been left open to any doubt, I cannot help saying that I agree with this portion of the resolution:

That this House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question.

But I want it to be understood that I do so, not because the Act was not disallowed, but because, after all the litigation, after all the difficulty which the province has had in maintaining its rights against the power of the Dominion, this Government—and, Sir, I want to say here, speaking on my full responsibility as a member of this House—that I think it was not a seemly act on their part—undertook to assail the constitutionality of an Act of a province. I do not know, Sir, on what principle that can be justified. We have enough to do to maintain the constitutionality of our own Acts; and I do not know on what principle the Government of this country can turn around on a province and fee counsel and promote litigation in order to have a provincial law declared beyond the powers of that province. I say I object to that; and although it has been said to me that I have sat in this House and voted moneys for that purpose, that is not strictly correct. This case differs from the precedents, and it shows how dangerous those precedents are. We know, with regard to the New Brunswick school law, that great sympathy for the minority in that province was expressed in this House by members on both sides. It was called a harsh law. Hon. gentlemen who come from New Brunswick, and who know the working of that law, are in a better position to tell whether it is a harsh law or not than I am. But, so far as I know anything of the working of that law, I believe that it is not a proper term to apply to it.

Mr. WELDON. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. And I am glad to hear, by the applause which I meet with from a member from New Brunswick, that that is really the case. But, Sir, we were anxious, as we always are here, to shove the responsibility from our own shoulders and to place it somewhere else, and, while this Parliament said: We will not interfere with the New Brunswick school law, which we recognize as a matter peculiarly of local concern and peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the province to deal with, we will ask the province to reconsider its harsh law; and a resolution to that effect was carried. Not satisfied with that, on another occasion, a subsequent one, I believe, we even went so far as to appeal to the Colonial Office in Downing Street to intervene on behalf of the minority in New Brunswick, and to ask the Legislature to repeal the obnoxious law. Then, not satisfied with that, a sum of money was placed in our Estimates to bear the expense of the minority in the matter. And from this precedent the Government have sought, without express authority—there was express authority in that case—to carry on this litigation; and they, of course, announced, as it had to be announced when the vote was taken, that money had been spent in that way, and, as it were, asked the approval of Parliament of the act of so spending it. I am glad to have had this opportunity of making that statement, and I trust that I am right in the conclusion that that kind of thing will not occur again. If a law is really so oppressive, surely the people whom it oppresses can take means to test its constitutionality. If the law is not worth contesting in court, it cannot be so very bad after all, and we are only stirring up and keeping up feuds and contentions by furnishing the sinews of war, as in this case, under the pretense that the Government wants to know what its responsibility is. Well, Sir, there was no great difficulty in ascertaining that. The Government knew, from the New Brunswick precedent, that there was no possibility, as the hon. the First Minister stated last night, of disallowing this law. If there was not, I fail to see what the Government wanted to know about it. What difference did it make to the Government whether the law was 'intra vires' or 'ultra vires'—whether it ought to remain on the Statute-book or not? If the Government desired to act under the power of appeal which has been invoked, they could just as well have done so before the case went to the Privy Council as afterwards. If the minority could call on the Governor in Council, under the power of that appeal, to give redress to the minority, it appears to me that that redress might as well have been given then as three or four years afterwards, when the new system in Manitoba was in full operation, and when all the properties that had belonged to the minority had passed out of their hands and become the property of the majority. Can you imagine a remedial law of this Parliament that could restore the school law of 1871? Can you imagine the confusion that it would create? All that could have been avoided, if the question had been acted upon within the year, though I agree that there is no limit of time applying to this constitutional provision. Then, looking for a moment at the substance of the measure, why should the Government of this Dominion have encouraged and undertaken this appeal? Remember, I do not object to the parties appealing; but when the appeal came, if the facts and the law were known—as the facts were known, and the law was there to be read—it was just as easy to determine then whether the appeal should be allowed as at a later date. But what is the question to be determined? Why, Sir, it is the vexed question of separate schools. It is the question whether the province of Manitoba with a population of 150,000 or 160,000, of whom not more than 20,000 are Roman Catholics, is to have imposed upon it, against its will, a separate school system. That is the question. We do not impose it, we cannot impose it on the province of Prince Edward Island; we do not impose it, we cannot impose it on the province of New Brunswick, or on the province of Nova Scotia, or on the province of British Columbia. Why should this Government, as a matter of policy, who are, after all, merely a committee of this House to carry out the behests of the majority of the representatives of the people—why should they entertain for one moment—because it is not a new matter—the question of the propriety of insisting against the will of a province that it must have separate schools—because that is the substance of the prayer of this petition. Now, that is a matter of policy; it is a matter which has been debated in this country for years and years; it is a matter on which, I venture to say, more, perhaps, than on any other, the people of this country have made up their minds. Take, if you like, the province of Ontario, and I venture to say that the great majority, three-fourths of the people there, are against the separate school system, and, if they had the power, would do away with it to-morrow. And, in the other provinces where there is no limitation upon the powers of the people in the matters of education, we have the best evidence that the people do not want the separate school system, for in none of them has it been established, and in the province of New Brunswick a system has been put in force which completely negatives the view that the people of that province desired separate schools. Then is it not a curious thing—and what is the explanation of it?—that while the representatives here from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and all the other provinces, including the province from which I have the honour to come, are against separate schools, we seek to impose them on this province of Manitoba, and encourage an appeal, and, if I do not misunderstand the language used last night, if we have the power we are going to enforce separate schools on that province against its will. So that, as a matter of policy, as a matter which, after all, must be decided on principles such as I have vaguely endeavoured to set forth, it is, in my humble judgment, a poor policy, an unfortunate policy, that the Government should entertain for one moment the question here—I am not dealing now with the judicial functions which I will have to speak of later—as to the propriety of enforcing separate schools upon that province. Now, I dare say the great majority of this House will agree in these views. But yet, because the representation of that province here is not very large, and because the province does not appear, by its representatives in this House to be very urgent against this imposition—because of these reasons the rest of us do not feel that we have any great concern to interfere. It makes a great difference, of course, whose ox is gored, and we are not particular, seeing it is merely the province of Manitoba that is to have separate schools, although from any one of the provinces from which the majority of members come in this House, there would be a great outcry if the majority of this House attempted to interfere with the schools of that province and insisted on separate schools being forced on it. Passing from that branch of the question, let me come to the other, which is, perhaps, of equal, if not greater importance. We have had here put forward by the Government in a very formal shape, a view of their duty under this School Act, which, to me, certainly appears extraordinary, which is unprecedented, and which, I venture to say, is not constitutional. We find it stated, in the 93rd section of the British North America Act, that :

Mr. McCARTHY.

An appeal shall lie to the Governor in Council from any Act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

The word "appeal" in that clause, and the word "decision" in the subsequent clause, are the terms upon which, as I understand it, the First Minister has arrived at the conclusion that the matter is to be treated, not as an ordinary matter coming before the Cabinet or before the Privy Council, but, to say the least of it, in a quasi judicial sense. I entirely and absolutely dissent from that view. I think nothing more dangerous, nothing more subversive of the principles of our constitution, could be tolerated than that the Cabinet of the Dominion should assume to act, in this or any other matter, as a judicial body. The Privy Council are the advisers of His Excellency, the executive authority rests with the Crown and its representatives here, but under our law it is widely, and has been for years, dating back perhaps to centuries, held that for every act of the Executive, his advisers must be responsible. Now, we have the advisers of His Excellency assuming, not on the floor of this House certainly that they are not responsible, but assuming to act as judges, assuming to act in a judicial capacity; and I venture to say that, if they are acting in a judicial capacity, no more unjust conclusion could be drawn than that they should be held responsible for what they may do in that capacity. What does the report say :

The application comes before Your Excellency in a manner differing from applications which are ordinarily made under the constitution to Your Excellency in Council. In the opinion of the sub-committee, the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of a political character or involving political action on the part of Your Excellency's advisers. ¶ It is to be dealt with by Your Excellency in Council regardless of the personal views which Your Excellency's advisers may hold with regard to denominational schools, and without the political views of any of the members of Your Excellency's Council being considered as pledged by the fact of the appeal being entertained and heard. If the contention of the petitioners be correct, that such an appeal can be sustained, the inquiry will be rather of a judicial than of a political character.

Now, the First Minister said last night that to speak of this motion as advising the usurping of judicial functions was hypercritical and not warranted by a fair reading of the passage. But I am at a loss to understand or follow that line of thought. Surely there is a difference, and a marked difference, drawn by this report, between the ordinary actions of the Privy Council and its particular action which they are called upon to take under the Manitoba School Act; and the difference consists in this, that whereas in the one case there is undoubted ministerial responsibility, whereas in the one case there is an act in a political capacity—and we know what that means—there is, in the other, under this Manitoba clause, the contention that the Government are not to act in their political character, that the members of the Administration are not to be pledged by the advice that they give, and that the inquiry is to be judicial rather than political. Well, I do not understand the meaning of terms, I do not understand the English language, if there is not a marked distinction drawn between the ordinary acts of the Government and the particular line which they are to take in carrying out the behests of the minority. I think that a careful reading—and I endeavoured to listen as attentively as I could to the very able speech of the First Minister last night in justifying his course—will bear out the conclusion I draw. The Minister spoke, for instance, of the necessity of deciding this matter on grounds of right and wrong, which would actuate a court of law, and not on grounds of public policy. Now, it may be just as well to draw the distinction, if I can, between what is political and what is judicial, because when we come clearly to ascertain the distinction between a political act and a judicial act, it will be perfectly manifest that the Government are, perhaps, proposing to consider this appeal, if in the end they do consider it at all, from a judicial and not from a political point of view. Mr. Blake, speaking of this subject in the speech to which so much reference was made last night, used this language, and I think I may adopt it with reference to the political question :

When it is a question of expediency, of convenience, of the public interest, of the spirit of the constitution, all these are clearly, exclusively for the Executive and Legislature, that is for the political department of the Government.

On the other hand what is a judicial act? I do not deny,—we all know, that almost no act of the Government can be carried on without the consideration of the law or without, I suppose, in most cases reference being made to the Department of Justice to ascertain what the law is. In that sense advice is given. But I would not speak of that as being a judicial act but simply acting according to the law as it was understood by the advisers of the Crown. But when we speak of the judicial act, we mean the right to have a question determined and tried irrespective altogether of mere expediency, irrespective altogether of what would be best for the majority or the minority or any other section of the people, but upon strict legal grounds of right and wrong. And if I grasp properly the reasoning of the hon. First Minister last night, that was in substance the view put before the House, that the Government were to be the guardian of the rights of the minority, the Government were to decide if the minority's rights were invaded. For himself, he thought they had grievances at all events, and there ought to be in some way or shape a remedy for these grievances. I may state now, that I desire to dissociate the conclusion which may be arrived at from the abstract constitutional question as to whether the Government is right in taking this course. What is it the Government proposes to do? Plainly do they propose by their ruling to endow their committee with judicial functions? Sir, they propose to restore the Star Chamber and to establish its work in Canada. The Star Chamber was King's Council, which arrogated to itself judicial functions and decided and disposed of matters on judicial grounds. Let me see, Sir, if I can prove that by an extract or two from Professor Dicey's work on the Privy Council. Speaking of the Star Chamber he says this :

The Court of Star Chamber is, as may be seen from the records, the council meeting in the Starred Chamber, that is, in all probability in a room the ceiling of which was adorned with stars.

We did hear of the historic scene which took place in our Council chamber, so it was spoken of by the organ of the Government, in which my friend the President of the Council (Mr. Ives) presided, and all the members of the Privy Council were present, the Solicitor-General sitting as an assessor. This argument was heard in the Council Chamber—and it will be remembered that the Star Chamber got its name because its meetings were held in one of the Council rooms, "the ceiling of which was adorned with stars." A little later Professor Dicey says :

But soon afterwards its powers merged in the general authority of the Council of Star Chamber. That this should have happened is less strange than it at first appears. All the business of the council was transacted through committees, which were, as occasion required, differently modelled.

And here we have a further analogy, because this business was inaugurated by a committee just as the Star Chamber inaugurated its business. They assigned part of their own judicial duties to a committee. The distinction may not hold in the next paragraph which I propose to read :

The part taken by the King was no empty formality. On one occasion James presided for five days, seated on a chair high above the rest, and terminated the case by pronouncing a sentence, of which, if the annalist is to be believed, the wisdom surpassed that of any judgment before uttered from an English tribunal.

I think that may be applicable to this report. It may, perhaps, compare favourably with the utterance of any English tribunal and in that respect only is there an analogy between the passage and the matter I am dealing with. On page 117 Professor Dicey says :

The Council stands forth as at the same moment powerless and powerful. In its dealings with the Crown it is utterly weak, for it has lost every element of independence. In its dealings with the people it is irresistibly strong, for it combines every element of authority. The ablest administrators of the day are its members.

My hon. friends can take that to themselves and I read it with great pleasure as embodying—

Mr. FOSTER. You do not make the application.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend the Finance Minister says I do not make the application; he has hardly given me time. On page 121 we find :

Government by Parliament and Government by the Star Chamber were incompatible, though, perhaps, no one perceived them to be so, at the time of James's accession.

Let me read another extract which seems to be a little more applicable :

Ten years after this examination took place the long Parliament met. Its first measure was to pass the Act 16, Car. I., cap. 10. This statute abolished the Star Chamber and did away with those judicial powers which the policy of a century and a half had grouped around the Council. With the jurisdiction of the Star Chamber vanished the power of these tribunals which, under the names of Councils of the North, of the West, had initiated the tyranny and increased the influence of the Privy Council.

And finally, with reference to this Star Chamber, which I hope is not to be made permanent in our midst :

Among institutions at once powerful, hateful, and full of interest, the Court of Star Chamber occupies no mean position.

I think I have proved what I said, that the Star Chamber was the Council arrogating to itself judicial functions, and I think we have restored here in Canada for the first time in many years, the Star Chamber abolished by the long Parliament just before the days of Cromwell. If that is a correct view of the position of the Government at that time, I want to go a step further and see what the consequences are. Is this a court exercising judicial functions or not? If it is, Sir, undoubtedly it ought to be prohibited. Undoubtedly the province of Manitoba cannot be expected to submit to the judicial decision of my hon. friend the First Minister, whose deputy started Mr. Barrett to litigate, paid the costs of the litigation and continued its interest in the case until the day of its termination. I would like to know if it is possible that any judge of the land could occupy the position which the hon. First Minister says he occupies—trying this matter judicially, when he has been an active promoter of the litigation against the province from its first step.

Mr. MULOCK. The plaintiff, in fact.

Mr. McCARTHY. The plaintiff, in fact, as my hon. friend from North York says. Now, is that possible? If so, the Queen's Bench ought to have some proceeding to remove these proceedings. The Queen's Bench, I suppose, cannot dissolve the Cabinet, but the Court of Queen's Bench exercises jurisdiction over every other court, no matter how high, even the Privy Council itself. So the Queen's Bench ought to remove these proceedings from the present Cabinet. But, I think, under all the circumstances, the contention can hardly be borne out. When you reason it out, you see the absurdity of their claiming judicial functions. Now, on the other hand, what is to be said of the meaning of the Act of Parliament, because if that Act of Parliament has conferred judicial functions, although we may not be very well satisfied with it, we must, of course, bow to the law. We are a law-abiding people, and if, under the terms of that enactment, the Cabinet of this country does exercise judicial functions and has a right to consider matters of education, we must bow to the law. But is that the proper reading of the Act? I would like to ask the House to allow me to read the view of the Attorney-General of England upon that word "appeal," when stating his argument before the Privy Council last July. A good deal of discussion took place before the Judicial Committee as to the meaning of this subsection 2, and so much impressed were the Judicial Committee at first—and I want to correct a mistake made by Mr. Ewart with reference to that before I close—so much impressed were the Judicial Committee with the terms of this section, that they called upon the Attorney-General to answer the argument which they had induced Sir Horace Davey to make against the power of the court to deal with the matter at all. The Attorney-General, in the course of his argument, used these words :

This is why I thought, unintentionally, my learned friend had overlooked the distinction between the language of subsection 1 and subsection 2. The word "appeal" is misleading. It is an appeal in the nature of asking for other legislation, asking the Dominion Parliament or the Dominion Government to do something which the Legislature of the province have not done.

That, I think, is the proper definition. It is not an appeal, it is a request to the Dominion Parliament, by the machinery which is here provided, to pass an Act, in a proper case, which the Local Legislature has not done, not an appeal at all, the word "appeal" raising, of course, at once the suggestion of the idea in the mind of a lawyer, possibly, that there is an appeal in the ordinary sense. But we must remember that the Government sit here under the terms of the British North America Act, to which, for a moment, on this subject, I would refer. Section 11 says :

There shall be a council to aid and advise in the government of Canada, to be styled the Queen's Privy Council for Canada ; and all the persons who are to be members of that Council shall be from time to time chosen and summoned by the Governor-General and sworn in as Privy Councillors, and members thereof may from time to time be removed by the Governor-General.

That provides for the appointment and removal of Privy Councillors. Again, section 13 enacts as follows :—

The provisions of this Act referring to the Governor-General in Council shall be construed as referring to the Governor-General acting by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

Now, that is a general enactment in the British North America Act. Then we come to this particular clause, which says :

An appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act—

And so on. Interpreted by section 13, it means :

The provisions of this Act, referring to the Governor-General in Council, shall be construed as referring to the Governor-General acting by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council in Canada.

No exception is made, no different words are used in this case from any other. The enactment is to be construed with reference to the section to which I have just drawn attention. Then, what are the laws that we are to pass ? We have power to pass laws :

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Let me go back for a moment to trace the machinery, assuming there is an appeal. The minority make an application to the Governor in Council ; they ask, on the best case they are able to present, that the Governor in Council shall pass a remedial order, or shall direct the passage of remedial legislation. That order, of course, does not change matters, the law still remains unaffected. The province may or may not obey it. If the province does not obey the direction of the Privy Council—and after all, the Privy Council is merely a representative body of this House—if that order is not obeyed, then Parliament here has power in that particular case, and for that particular purpose, and, so far as may be necessary, to carry out that view, to pass the remedial legislation which the Cabinet or the committee of Parliament has already thought ought to be passed in a case of that kind. Why should that, therefore, be dealt with as a judicial power ? Why should that be dealt with unlike any other power ? When the New Brunswick Act came up for disallowance, the question of intra vires and ultra vires had to be considered, and when that question was passed upon, then the question of policy had to be considered ; and when a Bill is allowed here under this Act, the same questions arise. First, there is the question as to whether there is a power to act ; next, there is the question as to whether it is right, politically speaking—I mean politically speaking in the wider sense—whether it is right and proper that the Act should be passed, or that the order should be passed, and it comes back, first and last, to being an ordinary exercise of the powers of the Executive, and the authority should be exercised just in that way. Now, I have a word to say with regard to the general question of that Act. I mentioned in the early part of my observations that it never occurred, until the month of November last, or October, to any one to suggest that the British North America Act had anything at all to do with the provincial constitution. It was after this petition had been presented, after the petition had been acted upon, that Mr. Ewart asked leave to present a supplementary petition, in which, for the first time, the contention is made that a clause of the British North America Act has some application and some bearing on this question. Now, I venture to say that it is a most extraordinary circumstance that this School Act should have run the gauntlet of all the courts of Manitoba, should have gone through the Supreme Court here, and gone to the Privy Council, and that no person ever suggested that the British North America Act had any application to it at all. I was concerned in the argument of the case in London—I had nothing to do with it before—and it never occurred to any of the lawyers who were engaged in the case pro and con, that any other Act had anything to do with it, or that any enactment had to be considered, except the one relating to the province, namely, section 22. When we come to read it, is there a shadow of doubt about it ? It is a legal question, it is true, but it is so simple that there is not a layman in the House who, when he reads the statute, can have any doubt at all about it. What does it say :

In and for the province, the said Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject to and according to the following provisions.

Then follow provisions 1, 2 and 3. Now, if you incorporate any portion of the British North America Act, or of the section relating to education, which is section 93, why you are making another law ; you are not expounding the law, because you are saying that "in and for the province said Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education subject to the following provisions," and "to the provisions of the 93rd section of the British North America Act as well." It is perfectly clear, it seems to me, so clear that I do not wonder that no person ever suggested the point until last November, when Mr. Ewart raised it for the first time. The Act says that the power shall rest with the province exclusively to make laws with regard to education, subject to the following provisions, 1, 2 and 3, and how you can read into that law other provisions which are to be found in another statute, limiting, or controlling, or affecting, or regulating in any way the authority of the Legislature, passes my comprehension. But that is the contention, that is one of the questions that is to be submitted to the Supreme Court. Now, on the other question, I admit there is some difficulty. It is very curiously worded ; it is worded so strangely that I doubt very much if it means anything at all. The Privy Council have already determined that clause 1 is meaningless. Clause 1 says :

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege in respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the time of Union.

It never was contended that they had any "by law." Now the Privy Council has decided that they had not any privilege "by practice," and so the whole first section falls for lack of something to act on. We come now to clause 3, which reads :

An appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any Act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

What does that mean ? Coming after the first section, Mr. Blake evidently thought, in the long speech which he made, and from which the Minister of Justice read extracts to the House last night, that it had reference to the first clause. I think the First Minister, quite unintentionally, no doubt, misread Mr. Blake's argument with respect to empowering the courts to pronounce on this question. Certainly Mr. Blake did say that he was induced to move in this matter—and remember he spoke on 29th April, 1890, within one month after the school law had been passed—on account of difficulties that he saw were cropping up by reason of the school law, and he pointed out, what is no doubt perfectly correct and clear, and what was afterwards made manifest by the First Minister in his report, that in this particular case a question of fact would have to be dealt with, and therefore he said that while such a case was not likely often to occur, it was likely to occur with respect to this Act. What Mr. Blake was dealing with was the very question which the Privy Council determined.

There was a contest as to whether the Act was ultra vires or intra vires. That contest turned on the question whether or not a minority, or the class of persons who were complaining, had any right or privilege by practice. It was known they had no right or privilege by law ; but the question whether they had one by practice was one which could only be determined in the ordinary way in which questions of fact are tried. So Mr. Blake, dealing with this question, provided in the resolution which he moved, and which was accepted unanimously by the House :

That it is expedient to provide means whereby on solemn occasions touching the exercise of the power of disallowance or of the appellate power as to educational legislation, important questions of law or fact may be referred by the Executive to a high judicial tribunal for hearing and consideration, in such mode that the authorities and parties interested may be represented, and that a reasoned opinion may be obtained for the information of the Executive.

He proceeded to explain at considerable length what he intended to provide by that. He said :

I regard it as settled, for myself at any rate, first of all, that, as a question of policy, there shall be no disallowance of educational legislation for the mere reason that, in the opinion of this Parliament, some other or different policy than that which the Government has thought fit to adopt would be a better policy. Are we proposing to do in a roundabout way what we all agreed should not be done directly ? Far better would it have been if this Parliament or Government had disallowed the Act within the year than in four years afterwards to be trying in a circuitous method to destroy its effect, and virtually to repeal it ; because you do repeal it. If you enact, in the words of the petition, that there are to be separate schools, that the minority are to have a portion of the school grant—if you decree that, you do indirectly, or rather you do pretty directly, only in a roundabout way, what we have settled for years past, ever since the New Brunswick School Act came under discussion, that we would not interfere with it at all. Mr. Blake deals with the resolution which the First Minister read to the House last night, and finally he says :

Now, Sir, in the exercise of this policy of disallowance by the Government, political questions will, or at any rate may, probably always arise. Questions of policy may present themselves, that is questions of expediency, of convenience, of the public interest, of the spirit of the constitution or of the form of legislation. All these are clearly exclusively for the executive and legislative, that is, for the political department of the Government. But it is equally clear, that when in order to determine your course you must find whether a particular Act is ultra or intra vires you are discharging a legal and a judicial function. What do you do ? You proceed to interpret the Constitutional Act, and to declare its meaning ; you proceed to interpret the Provincial Act under consideration and to declare its meaning ; you proceed to compare the two statutes so interpreted and declared ; and you proceed, finally, to conclude whether or not the law conflicts with, or transcends the powers which are conferred upon the legislature which passed it.

If I might be permitted to criticise so great a master of the language as Mr. Blake is, I would venture to say that that is not performing a judicial function. I venture to think that it is forming a legal conclusion, which the law officers of England are constantly forming for the advice of the Government, and sometimes for the advice of colonial Governments, and which the Minister of Justice does as the adviser of the Government of which he is a member. It is not a judicial decision; but it is the expression of opinions on which the Crown has to act, in the absence of any other method, of determining what is the law with respect to any particular case. Mr. Blake proceeds to say:

Nothing that can be conceived partakes more exclusively of the character of a legal and judicial operation than what I have just now described.

No doubt it is legal; whether it is judicial or not, is another matter. He continued:

Again, when you act on the appellate educational clauses; as, for example, in the case of Manitoba, the very case which is now in a sense pending as to whether recent legislation be within the limits of the rights of the Provincial Legislature,—

I desire to call attention to this language.

—and whether any relief is due under the appellate clause to those who claim it, you have a legal question, or rather in this case a mixed question of law and of fact, which circumstance it was that induced me to insert the word “fact” in my motion, conscious as I was that it was only on the rarest occasion that any references of that description would be necessary. Yet it seems to me that, in this particular instance, I was constrained to provide for an emergency which may arise. Now, what is the process to be gone through in order to reach a conclusion? The first involves that very question of fact, or rather a mixed question of law and fact.

The very language of the report of the Minister of Justice:

You have to find whether any class of the population had by law or practice at the time of the Union any, and if so, what right or privilege with respect to denominational schools. Secondly, if so, you have to find whether that right or privilege has been affected, and how it has been affected, by the legislation complained of; and, thirdly, if so, you have to find what legislative action is required to redress the wrong.

The first two questions, at any rate, are legal and not at all political. That is, first, whether the fact exists, which we now know does not exist, that is whether they had any right or privilege; and, second, which is an important question, whether the law had contravened any right which any class of the people had at the time of the Union. This has been determined by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Mr. Blake further said:

Now, I aver that in the decision of all legal questions it is important that the political executive should not, more than can be avoided, arrogate to itself judicial powers; and that when, in the discharge of its political duties, it is called upon to deal with legal question, it ought to have the power in cases of solemnity and importance, where it may be thought expedient so to do, to call in aid the judicial department in order to arrive at a correct solution.

Nobody objects to that, no person can object to that. I may just state here that if I did not object to the policy of dealing with this question at all, I would not very much object to the Government fortifying their position in the way indicated in order to make sure of the ground they stand on. But if the Government are not going to interfere—and I believe, with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), that the majority of this House will not sanction any interference—I would like to know for what purpose we put the academic question? What is the object; what is the meaning of it? If, in the end, there is to be no interference, what is the object of all this? Can we not settle it now, just as well as two years hence, when all this litigation is over, when this case has gone to the Supreme Court, and then from the Supreme Court to the Privy Council, and when the Privy Council determined that the Government have some powers or some rights and have construed the statute for them, what better off will we be then? What more can be known then than is known to-day, with reference to the propriety, the policy, the expediency and the convenience of acting upon these powers, and of setting aside the legislation of the province? Surely now is the time to consider the question. Surely now is the time to determine whether the powers of the Government will be acted upon. If the Government will frankly say to the House that they have determined—and the Minister of Justice came very near it last night, not quite, perhaps, but near it—if the hon. Minister of Justice will frankly say, that if he has the power, he proposes to pass a remedial order, then we will know where we stand. If, on the other hand, the remedial order is not to be passed, whether there is power or not, I do not know that we ought to invite litigation between these parties in order to determine a purely academic question. Now, I do not propose to trouble the House by reading any more of Mr. Blake's speech. Probably members who take an interest in this matter will consult it for themselves. A good deal of it was read last night, and I have read an extract or two from it myself, but I venture to say, that what Mr. Blake was dealing with and what he was thinking of, was not the question that the hon. the First Minister now proposes to submit to the Supreme Court. Such questions, I believe, never entered into his mind at all. He was thinking of the question of the disallowance of the Act; the question as to what position the Executive would be in when called upon to determine whether there ought to be such disallowance, and he referred to the fact as to whether there was a privilege on the part of any class of persons in the province. It was a question of fact, and would have to be determined before the question of law was raised. That was what Mr.

Blake was dealing with. At the same time I do not pretend to say that the statute passed in the subsequent session, in obedience, or in deference to that resolution, is not quite wide enough to admit of these conclusions. But whether the occasion is sufficiently solemn within the view of Mr. Blake is quite another matter, and I will not quibble about that. I desire to take my stand firmly, and I ask the House to consider whether an ounce of prevention now is not better than a pound of cure in the future. Let the matter be stopped now at once, if it is to be stopped. If not, taking the view of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), in his very admirable address last night, what follows? Suppose the House now sanctions the Government submitting this question to the courts, what would follow? Take the concluding observations of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), who says:

I will vote against any Government which attempts to interfere with the rights of my province.

Well, he sanctions, in the meantime, the action of the Government in inviting this litigation, calling upon his province to appear at the bar of justice, calling upon it to litigate this question in the Supreme Court, and calling upon it to assist in the determination as to whether these questions ought or ought not to be dealt with by the Government. I ask the House to say that this is the time to intervene and to stop it. Mr. Speaker, I think I have made good the position which I proposed to make good at the beginning, namely: That this is a political question, and that it is not a legal question in that sense. That no question of this kind can be determined without calling upon my hon. friend the First Minister to advise as to the legal course, I am free to admit; but after all said and done, when the report from the Department of Justice comes down, the Council have to determine upon the policy and expediency of the question, as a political act, and they have to take the full responsibility for that political act, and to be responsible to this House and to the country for it.

An hon. MEMBER. So they do.

Mr. McCARTHY. Some hon. member says, "So they do." I will point out that they have not done so. I will point out that the gentlemen who went back to their constituents for re-election last fall, pursued exactly the opposite course, and that they sheltered themselves under this quasi-judicial tribunal; their position as judges, and not as Ministers of the Crown, and when my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly) was asked, what he would do for his province, his answer was, that he was a judge. I am going to see whether I am right in that contention or not. I see my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works here. The hon. gentleman, in his capacity as Minister of the Crown, proceeded to address a body of electors at a by-election, and he was naturally asked as to the question of the day, the Manitoba school question. In one province, I think, if I know the feelings of the people, they are as fixed and as determined as they ever were, that there should be no interference with the Manitoba School Act, and in another province they seem to be very anxious that there should be interference.

Mr. OUIMET. We stand at both ends of the stick.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. And so it was, of course, a very ingenious contrivance of the Minister of Public Works—though I am not at liberty to suggest that was the object of it—to slide over for at least three months, when this burning question was consuming the public mind, by being able to say: We are judges, we are not Ministers, we are not responsible, we are judges, and we have no opinion on this matter, one way or the other. Now, is that hypercritical? Is that hair-splitting? Let me see whether the language of the Minister of Public Works justifies what I have said in that regard. I will now read from a report of the nomination proceedings for the county of Soulanges, at Coteau Landing, where the Minister of Public Works was present:

Mr. Ouimet, who spoke next, announced that Sir John was now the First Minister of Canada.

At which statement, very naturally, there was very great applause.

The Conservative party, Mr. Ouimet declared, was the first in the country to consent to a Catholic chief.

Again there was applause.

The Conservative party was the party of progress and liberty.

He then referred to the trade question, which I will omit for the present, and I will pass on to what he said about the Manitoba school question. He said on that question:

That the Government did not come to any decision on the question, and he declined to make any declaration as he would be one of the judges in the case.

Now, I do not think I can be accused of hair-splitting, when we have the Minister telling the people here: I cannot tell you anything about the matter, because I am one of the judges in the case. Again:

But he added, the Government's past policy was a guarantee of the future.

Mr. OUIMET. I might be a judge.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend looks forward to be a judge, but I object to his anticipating that at present. He continued to say:

The interests of the Catholics would not be sacrificed if the constitution could prevent it, and if the rights which were sought were protected by the constitution, the Government would endeavour to act in such a manner as to render justice to all, without hurting the susceptibility of any class.

Now, that is considerably the policy of this Government in more matters than one.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is a good policy.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is a capital policy, but I am afraid that they are getting between the devil and the deep sea here.

Mr. BERGIN. Why, that is exactly your position. There is where you are at this moment.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am afraid that my hon. friend must characterize himself in that way, for I am sitting as close to him as I can. I will go across the deep sea next, and see what my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition said on this subject:

Mr. Laurier, who was warmly received, expressed disappointment at Mr. Ouimet's speech.

Well, I do not think he ought to have done that.

He expected that Mr. Ouimet would have made an explicit statement on behalf of the Government. But to his surprise he had simply indulged in generalities. His declaration on the Manitoba school question was far from satisfactory, and would give little hope to the minority of Manitoba.

Now, you see the curious impression that prevailed. Reading what the hon. Minister of Public Works said, I came to the conclusion that the Government had determined to give relief to the minority if the constitution would allow it. That is what he stated in terms: If the constitution permits it, if there is power under the Manitoba Act, or under the corresponding sections of the British North America Act, the minority will have their grievance redressed. But the language used was so vague that the hon. leader of the Opposition thought it unsatisfactory; and we can all see that it would have been much more proper if the hon. Minister of Public Works had been frank with the people, and had stated exactly what the Government intended to do. Then, the hon. leader of the Opposition goes on to say:

He warned his hearers not to place too much confidence in Mr. Ouimet's promises, as the Government had failed to do its duty in the Riel matter, and might do so again. Mr. Laurier did not indicate his line of policy on the Manitoba school question.

Well, I am in hopes that my hon. friend who leads the Opposition may do so before this debate closes. I hope that he will not imitate this side of the House, but that he will get down to practical issues, and not content himself with mere bald generalities. But the whole history of this meeting at Coteau Landing is not yet told. I now summon, as a witness, the hon. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bergeron). He came to town that evening. He was present at the nomination at Coteau Landing. He gave a dramatic description of the speeches, and I think he ought to be summoned by the House to repeat it—I know I shall fail to do justice to it:

Mr. McCARTHY.

Mr. Bergeron gave a dramatic description of their speeches this evening in the rotunda of the Russell. Mr. Ouimet spoke of the Manitoba school question. He said that he was in the position of a judge, and could say nothing about how the question would be decided. He could only say that the Ministers would deal with the question as patriots should. Mr. Laurier then told Mr. Ouimet that the question was one of Government policy, and demanded that Mr. Ouimet state how it was to be dealt with. "I am only one of fourteen Ministers," said Mr. Ouimet, "and I hear that we are to have three younger brothers, making seventeen in all.

I believe the younger members of the family have since arrived.

"If I could speak it would only be as one out of seventeen. Mr. Laurier has been a minister himself and knows that. But with him to-day the case is different. He is, sole and alone, the leader of the Opposition. Let him declare his policy on the Manitoba school question."

That is shifting the burden of proof with a vengeance.

Mr. Laurier did not reply to this, but when he met Mr. Ouimet at the railway station, after the meeting, said to him: "I must congratulate you on your skill in walking upon razors." Mr. Ouimet replied: "Well, we both did pretty well. Neither of us said anything."

Mr. BERGERON. I may tell my hon. friend that I was not at the nomination at Coteau Landing at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not surprised at that dramatic rendering of what took place, for it rather indicates that the hon. gentleman was drawing very largely on his imagination, though he was not very far from the truth after all. Now, I just pause here for one moment to point out that the hon. Minister told us so boldly here last night that this Government were responsible for all that they had done in connection with this question—that whether it was a local question or a political question, the Government assumed full responsibility for it; and yet one of the leading members of the Administration goes to Coteau Landing during an election, when the people had a right to know, and declines that responsibility, and congratulates himself that he has not said anything at all on the subject. Now, my hon. friend here who is in the Cabinet as the special representative of the interests of Manitoba, and who certainly must know what a burning question this is in his province,—

Mr. DALY. Yes, and who made it so?

Mr. McCARTHY. I will answer that just in a moment, when I conclude the present sentence—I have no objection to taking any responsibility that rests upon me in connection with it.

Mr. DALY. Neither have I.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman knows that it is such a burning question as to have induced the hon. member who spoke here last night, strong party man as he is, to say that he would vote against any Government that attempted to interfere with the school law of the province of Manitoba in any shape or form. My hon. friend, when he reached Winnipeg on his way back for re-election, was interviewed, with this result:

Do you anticipate a contest?—No.

Well, they may try and make the school question a bone of contention?—That was sufficiently threshed out at the last election and during my campaign I placed myself on record concerning that question.

Have you anything to say concerning it now?—My mouth is of necessity closed, for I am in exactly the same position as a judge before whom a case is being tried: and appeal from the Roman Catholics is, as it were, 'sub judice,' and I am one of the judges, for I have taken Mr. Dewdney's place on the Sub-Committee of the Executive Council to whom Archbishop Tache's appeal was referred. Under these circumstances it should be obvious that I can say nothing.

Mr. BERGIN. Of course he had not heard the evidence.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why, there was no evidence to be heard.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; the evidence had been heard in the case.

Mr. BERGIN. The argument had not been heard at that time, nor the evidence either.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend knows that the matter of fact had been determined, that is, that the minority and no other class of persons had any claim or privilege as to schools prior to the union.

Mr. BERGIN. That is your interpretation.

Mr. McCARTHY. Now, I have shown that this is more than a joke. I think I have shown that during the last three or four months, before the meeting of the House, where Ministers or their followers said anything, those who were particularly interested in the question said that they could not speak upon it, because it was not to be dealt with as a political subject, but was to be dealt with by the Government as a judicial body. Therefore I support with great heartiness the latter part of the resolution, because, in my judgment, it describes with perfect fairness and appropriateness the conduct of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question. I would have preferred that the first part of the resolution expressing disapproval at the action of the Government, had been put upon the ground that I have stated. I do not disapprove of the course of the Government in not disallowing the Act, but because they have interfered after the constitutionality of the Act was determined. But, coming to a later part of the resolution, which reads:

And in assuming to be possessed of judicial functions conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to the law, and, if now acquiesced in, would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

Every word of that is true. The Government have assumed judicial functions. This is wholly unknown to the law, and, if acquiesced in now, we cannot blame ourselves hereafter if the Government also assumes judicial functions in other matters, and claim that they are not to be responsible to Parliament, because that irresponsibility necessarily follows. Take the position of the Minister of Interior (Mr. Daly). He is not allowed to consider this matter from the point of view of the interests of his province, he is not allowed to consider this question from the stand-point of the public weal at all, but is bound to go to the consideration of it merely with reference to the rights of the minority who are appealing, it is said, for justice. I am speaking of the people as a whole. I am speaking of the Dominion as a whole. We are all interested in this question. We are interested in its being settled with and done with. But how is it to be disposed of, if my hon. friend here is to take the position, which he does take, of being a judge? and how, in common fairness and decency to him, is he to be censured by his constituency, or any other public body, for an Act which his conscience compels him to do in a judicial capacity. That cannot be. Therefore the difference between acting in the capacity I speak of, and in the capacity of a responsible Government, is so plain and manifest that I do not think there is any serious doubt as to what the proper course of this House should be. The British constitution has very clearly marked and defined the distinction between these various departments which are necessary to the proper carrying on the Government. Reading from Mr. Bagehot's book, page 2, I find he says:

First, it is laid down as a principle of English polity, that in it the legislative, the executive, and the judicial powers, are divided; that each is intrusted to a different person or set of persons, that no one of these can at all interfere with the work of the other.

Now, that is the general principle underlying the British constitution, that the executive, the legislative and the judicial powers are distinct and separate. And my hon. friend the Minister of Justice read from Mr. Blake, last night, a sentence which I venture again to trouble the House with. It is the sentence in which Mr. Blake speaks of the union of the powers as constituting a despotism. He says:

Now, Sir, the general opinion that the executive, the legislative and the judicial departments of the Government ought to be, so far as practicable, separate and apart, is one held by many of the most eminent constitutional authorities as the fundamental principle.

There can be no doubt that the absolute union of these departments is neither more nor less than absolute despotism. Unite in one hand, I care not whether it be the hand of an autocrat or the hand of a council, the power of legislation, the power of interpretation, and the power of administration, and you make the most absolute despot that is conceivable.

Now, we have here the power of the executive, and to that the Government are now adding the judicial power. They have not yet quite accomplished the third attribute of the Government, and therefore they cannot be said to occupy the position of the most perfect despot, which Mr. Blake pictures, but they are going on in that direction, and I think it is wise and prudent that we should intervene and interpose the view of this Parliament, that the judicial power shall not be arrogated by the political executive of this country. I have only one further observation to make. It is asked, what practical difference does it make? I hear in the lobbies it is whispered that the Government are not going to interfere with the Manitoba Act. I hear it stated that this reference to the Supreme Court, this asking of these questions, this delaying the matter in this way, from day to day and from year to year, is merely to escape from the difficulty; and is what is called politics. I hear, on the other hand, other gentlemen say that they are quite confident the Government are going to interfere. I should certainly judge, and I give the First Minister credit for sincerity, that if the Government have the power to interfere, so far as the First Minister's authority goes, they propose to interfere. From what he said last night, it is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion. Reading between the lines—he did not exactly put it in words—but reading between the lines, he did speak of the grievances the minority had to complain of, he did speak of the power which is vested in the Council to redress those grievances, and he did say it would be unfortunate if that power was exercised in a bungling way, so that afterwards there would be reason to regret that the exercise of that power had ever been attempted. That indicated, on his part, a strong feeling that the minority ought to be protected, and ought to have remedial legislation; but I submit that it is a practical question with us here and now. I do submit that now is the time for us to determine whether or not we shall have this interference of the Government, and I do ask the House to come to a conclusion, one way or the other, on this question as to whether this interference will be tolerated, because such interference can only lead to trouble between the Dominion and one of its greatest provinces. In that province of Manitoba we have had frequent disallowance, as it is; we have stretched the authority of the veto power to its utmost limit. That province is a long way from the centre of Government, and I do not hesitate to say that it would at this moment, be a dangerous attempt, and that the irritating influence of this proceeding are calculated to do very great mischief indeed. The province is put in the position of a legislative body which has committed some wrong. The province is called upon to come here and answer for that wrong. The province was called upon to come here; and, in a sullen mood, it declined to appear. It declined to recognize the central power, it declined to pay any attention to these ex parte proceedings—ex parte, not by reason of not having full notice, but because the province will not submit, in any event, to the intervention and control, in matters of legislation, of this Parliament or the executive of this Parliament. Under these circumstances, is it wise or right that the strained relations existing between what I believe to be a great province, which ere long will be one of the greatest in the Dominion—a province on which we are spending all our energy in order to fill up a province into which we are promised, under the influence of the new Minister of the Interior, representing it, that additional energy will be infused in order to promote its welfare—is it for the sake of avoiding the ministerial responsibility which would follow the dealing frankly with the people of this country, and saying whether or not the Government are prepared to at once refuse to interfere with what could not be interfered with elsewhere,—is it for that sake, that the welfare of this great portion of the Dominion, and, in that sense, the welfare of the Dominion itself, is to be jeopardized? I trust and hope that the better sense of this House will, on this occasion and when the opportunity is offered, bear in mind the great responsibility which rests on every member of the House, and will not treat this as a mere matter of detail, as a matter of no consequence, as a mere matter which ought not to influence, in the slightest degree, the feelings of any gentleman who has a seat here, but, on the contrary, will bear in mind that, upon the vote they may cast on this occasion, may, to a very great extent, depend the welfare of the Dominion at large.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend following the hon. gentleman who has just sat down through the different portions of his argument, though I must say that, in his way of thinking, he has made a very important and a very weighty speech. But I think that, as a representative, perhaps the oldest representative here except one, I should express my views about this question which has been raised by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) who has just taken his seat, has stated that we cannot impose separate schools on Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. Well, that is not a new thing, because when the conference took place in London for the Confederation of these provinces, the question arose there whether we should not give all these three provinces the same system of separate schools as we had, and as we still have, in the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec. And we were unanimous in saying that we were not there to make laws for the different provinces, but to take the laws of the different provinces and apply them in the affairs to which they had been applied by their different Legislatures. And, therefore, though the pressure was very great and the reasons given in certain cases very strong, we could not do it, we did not do it, and the Confederation took place with a clause in the British North America Act which reads as follows. It is the third subsection of the ninety-third clause :

Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union,—

Which was the case in Ontario and Quebec.

—or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province,—

That was to apply to the three provinces that were federated with Ontario and Quebec.

—an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision—

And so on. So that, Mr. Speaker, by this section we provided not only for the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which kept their separate schools as they had established them previous to Confederation, but also for the three provinces should they wish to have a system of separate schools afterwards. Should they decide to establish a system of separate schools, those separate schools were to be in the same position as similar schools in Ontario and Quebec, and the system could not be changed or altered except at the will of the people interested in such schools. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman says this, he may not know what I stated about the conference at London, but what I state is exactly the fact. Now, the hon. gentleman in all his argument has stated, or it was understood, that our object is to impose separate schools upon Manitoba. I, for one, have no such intention, and I do not think others have. If the province has established separate schools, or if the province had, by law or practice, separate schools previous to the Act of 1870, the Manitoba Act, then the separate schools should be maintained and should exist, as it was the free will of the people that they should be there. But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman considers that in that province there is only one section of the people who have rights—the majority, the Protestant majority, who are opposed to separate schools—and that we who favour separate schools should not be considered by this House or by the Government. The Act of 1870, the Manitoba Act, provides specially for a case of this kind. It says :

In and for the province, the said Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions.—

The three sections which follow have been read several times and I do not intend to read them more than is necessary for my argument. It should be noted that it is clearly provided that—

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the Union.

The hon. gentleman says there was no law, therefore the words "by law" should not apply, and that they are mere surplusage. But he says the question of practice is another thing and that it has been decided against finally by the Privy Council in England. Therefore he goes on and speaks of the appeal under the next subsection and says that evidently these things are there as a dead letter. He did not use those words, but that is the meaning of his argument; therefore, the laws passed in 1871, 1873 and 1875 are not to be considered. The hon. gentleman says that the reference in the law of 1870 to rights under the law must refer to laws passed previous to that Act. And he goes further and says (I think I took down his words) "until November last it never occurred to any one that subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act could apply to Manitoba." Under the British North America Act there were the four provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island coming in afterwards. The hon. gentleman might, perhaps, have quoted, when speaking of the Manitoba Act, the second section of that Act, which says :

On, from and after the said day on which the order of the Queen in Council shall take effect as aforesaid, the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, shall, except those parts thereof which are in terms made, or by reasonable intendment, may be held to be specially applicable to or only to affect one or more, but not the whole of the provinces now composing the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by this Act, be applicable to the province of Manitoba, in the same way, and to the like extent as they apply to the several provinces of Canada, and as if the province of Manitoba had been one of the provinces originally united by the said Act.

Well, this is certainly a strong reason, which I have no doubt, convinced the sub-committee of the Privy Council when they sent their report to the Council, which was adopted on the 29th December, 1892, and in which they say that among the questions which the sub-committee regarded as preliminary was the following :—

Whether subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba.

Well, that clause certainly is a strong reason why the Ministers who had this matter under their consideration, should have taken this into their consideration at that time, and should have made the report they did, that is to say, that they desired to know whether that third subsection of the 93rd section of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba. The hon. gentleman who preceded me has given strength to that opinion, when he said just now, after discussing the two first subsections of the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act: Oh, well that is the same as blank paper, it is useless, it is of no effect. Well, if it is of no effect, it does not apply even to the law or practice that existed in the province at the time of the Union; and then "a fortiori" the third section of the 93rd section of the British North America Act should apply when we read the second section of the Manitoba Act, which says :

On, from and after the said day on which the order of the Queen in Council—

That is to say, to put the Act in force—

—shall take effect as aforesaid, the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, shall, except those parts thereof which are in terms made, or by reasonable intendment, may be held to be specially applicable to or only to affect one or more, but not the whole of the provinces now composing the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by this Act, be applicable to the province of Manitoba.

Well, that cannot be varied by the Manitoba Act, when the hon. gentleman says himself that it is of no effect ; therefore, in the Manitoba Act this question of schools was not provided for as intended by the British North America Act, and this second section of the Manitoba Act itself. But, Mr. Speaker, the Act of 1870 was passed and accepted by the people, and afterwards the Legislature passed three other Acts in 1871, 1873 and 1875. The first Act was "An Act to Establish a System of Education in the Province of Manitoba," and was passed on the 3rd May, 1871. That Act constituted a Board of Education, under which they appointed a superintendent and secretary, and the Act superintended the meetings of the board, the quorum, the calling of the meetings, the chairman, duties of the board, appointment of the superintendent, &c. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint not less than ten or more than fourteen persons to be a Board of Education, of whom one-half shall be Protestants and the other half Catholics.

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint one of the Protestant members of the board to be superintendent of Protestant schools, and one of the Catholic members to be superintendent of Catholic schools, and the two superintendents shall be joint secretaries of the board.

Well, later on, in 1873, on the 8th March, they amended the Act to establish a system of education in that province. It is provided under these amendments that the duty of the board of education shall be to alter and subdivide, with the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, any school district established by this Act. It is the duty of each section of the board to have under its control and management the schools of the section, the examination or licensing of teachers, the selection of books, maps and globes :

Provided always, that in the case of books having reference to religion and morals, such selection by the Catholic section of the board shall be subject to the approval of the competent religious authorities.

Well, two years afterwards, on the 14th May, 1875, the Act was amended again, and the hon. gentleman will see how that was done :

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Within six months after the passing of this Act the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall appoint, to form and constitute the Board of Education for the province of Manitoba, not exceeding twenty-one persons, twelve of whom shall be Protestants and nine Roman Catholics, who shall hold office for three years, being, however, eligible for reappointment, or if a lesser number be appointed, the same relative proportion of Protestants and Catholics shall be observed, and until such appointment shall take place, the members of the present Board of Education shall continue in office, and any vacancy occurring in such council from any cause, shall from time to time be filled by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

The council was to be composed of two committees, one Protestant and one Roman Catholic. Then the Legislative appropriation was to be divided between them :

The number of such children in the Protestant and Catholic districts respectively being aggregated as regard each of said faiths.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that system of education was in force in 1871, modified in 1873, and completed in 1875. That was after the Manitoba Act had been passed, and this legislation was enacted under that Act. In 1883 Parliament passed what is called the Dominion Lands Act. Section 23 of the Revised Statutes is as follows :—

Sections 11 and 29 in every surveyed township throughout the extent of the Dominion lands, are hereby set apart as an endowment for purposes of education, and shall be designated school lands ; and they are hereby withdrawn from the operation of the clauses of this Act, which relate to the sale of Dominion lands and to homestead rights therein ; and no right to purchase or to obtain homestead entry shall be recognized in connection with the said sections, or any part of them.

Section 24 is as follows :—

The schools lands shall be administered under the direction of the Governor in Council.

Subsection 3 of section 25 says :

All moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands shall be invested in securities of Canada, to form a school fund, and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, shall be paid annually to the Government of the province or territory within which such lands are situated, towards the support of public schools therein ; and moneys so paid shall be distributed for that purpose by the Government of such province or territory in such manner as it deems expedient.

The Government which proposed that law was the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, of which I was a member. At that time, 1883, the three Acts I have mentioned as giving the system of separate schools to Manitoba were in force and were the laws of that province. We had there separate schools, and the common schools or Protestant schools, were there established by law. We gave those lands, not for the benefit of one set of schools, but for the schools of the whole province. What happened under these two Acts of 1890 ? Was it that the separate schools were to have no interest in those lands ? The interest received from those lands was not to go to the separate schools, nor was it to go to the common schools alone. That was not the intention of the Government or Parliament. I know that the Government would never have committed an injury on a large portion of the population of Manitoba by handing over the lands to only one section of the community. The reason why we did not give the capital to the province, but only the interest, was because we feared that the people would expend that capital when the province possessed a small population, and when the wants of the larger population in later days were felt, the money would have been expended that should have gone to support the schools of the province. And, therefore, we kept the capital, and gave the interest for school purposes. But let it be remembered that the interest was not to be given only to one section, but was to be devoted for the purposes of all the schools, the separate schools as well as the common schools. The hon. gentleman stated that the Government has said they were judges, and therefore that it was a judicial decision they were to give. I do not know what is the meaning of that word in the mouth of some Ministers when stated verbally or in writing; but I know that it was a regular practice with members of Sir John Macdonald's Government, when a question was put to them on any subject as to the decision of the Council respecting it, to say that they could not speak of it as they were judges and were bound under their oath to be silent. The word judge is not limited to a judge on the bench; but in the case of the Government, were men who were judges in all matters that came before us. No doubt that is the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite. During the twenty-five years I was a Minister of the Crown that was the manner we answered questions of that kind, not only in regard to the school question, but in regard to other important questions. The hon. gentleman says that the Ministers are acting as judges, and they are required to give a judicial decision. Why? Because by the Order in Council, 29th December, 1892, they had decided to refer a number of legal questions to the judges of the Supreme Court. The hon. gentleman admits that members of the Government may and should consult the Minister of Justice, and he has asked several questions in regard to the law in this regard. I believe that the advice of the Minister of Justice—I speak generally and not of this Minister of Justice only—would not be so satisfactory to a province such as Manitoba, as would be an opinion given by the judges of the Supreme Court. That was no reason for saying that because those judges were to be consulted, the decision should be in one or other direction. When the opinion is received by the Minister of Justice, the political action on the part of the Government begins, and it is for them then to decide whether the complaint made by the minority has any substantial foundation and whether remedial measures should be applied or not. If it should be decided that subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba, it gave another complexion to the case. It presented the case in a different way, and the Government would be called upon to decide whether the system of education that has been given and accepted by Manitoba, by its own Legislature in 1871, 1873 and 1875, is such a system of education as is provided for by the third subsection of section 93 of the British North America Act. I do not intend to detain the House longer, because I am aware that several hon. gentlemen intend to speak on this question, and I do not wish to follow the hon. gentleman all through his very able speech. I trust the House will afford me a few minutes to enable me to point out the singularity in comparing this resolution of the hon. member from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), with the end of an article entitled "The Manitoba Public School Law, by Dalton McCarthy, Q.C., M.P.," who, I suppose, is the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. McCARTHY. I suppose so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Comparing the resolution, as I said, with the end of that article published in the "Canadian Magazine," we find that the article states as follows:—

Manitoba has had but scant courtesy and but little consideration at the hands of the Government of Canada. Her railway legislation was vetoed so persistently that her people were driven to the verge of rebellion.

The hon. gentleman stated that in his address this afternoon.

These acts, if unwise and harsh, were at least within the lines of the Constitution. But the attacks now launched against her exclusive right to manage her educational system is fraught with perilous consequences to the Dominion; and for the initial steps that the Government at Ottawa have taken to accomplish that end it should be held to strict account, or Parliament will lamentably fail in its duty; and the pretence that the Cabinet acts as a judicial tribunal and not as political advisers of the Crown should meet with the contempt and condemnation it invites at the hands of the representatives of the people.

Now let me read the resolution of the hon. member (Mr. Tarte), and we will find a somewhat wonderful similarity between it and the extract from this article, written by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy):

This House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question, and in assuming to be possessed of the judicial functions conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to the law, and, if now acquiesced in, would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

The resolution is not only the same idea as the concluding words of the article, but it is couched in nearly the same terms, and it appears to me that the motion would have been a great deal better in the hands of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) than in the hands of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr.

Tarte). One would think that before making their speeches, and before this question came up, they had put their heads together, and that one hon. member said to the other: Well, if you take my motion I will support it, and you can make your speech. I do not say that such was done; but it looks a little like it. At all events, the resolution would have been a great deal better in the hands of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who has supported it in such a strong speech. It is remarkable how the two hon. gentlemen have arranged to make both ends meet. The one is for separate schools, and condemns the Government very strongly because they have not vetoed the Bill as he thinks they should do, while the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. McCarthy) is strongly against separate schools; but he finds reasons for condemning the Government and supporting the latter part of the resolution of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). That is somewhat strange. I suppose that the first part of the resolution was intended for the hon. gentleman for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), and the last portion intended for the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I thank the House for hearing me, and I will resume my seat to allow the question to be discussed by other hon. gentlemen.

After Recess.

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no idea that I shall be able to add very much, if anything, to the exceedingly able, exhaustive, and admirable effort of the Prime Minister delivered last night, when he dealt with this question in a manner which I think must carry conviction to the minds of those who heard him, as well as those who have read his remarks throughout the country to-day. We have had, however, some statements made by speakers on both sides of the House to which I think it my duty to refer. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has stated that he takes exception to the position which the Government have assumed on this question, not only in the present circumstances, but from the very initiation of the proceedings. We have that hon. gentleman, not only taking that exception in this House, but we have him as an essayist in the "Canadian Magazine," speaking, no doubt, on behalf of those whom he believes he represents in this country, holding up the conduct of the First Minister as something that would reflect no discredit on a Richelieu or a Machiavelli, and something that revives the best days of the schoolmen. And while we have that hon. gentleman telling us that the conduct of the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the Government is worthy of every execration, as doing injustice to the Protestant majority of Manitoba, and as destroying the rights of that province, we have, on the other hand, the gentleman from whom he has just received in this House the baptism of political regeneration, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), telling us that the conduct of the Government is not at all what the hon. gentleman who is going to vote with him on his amendment has described it, but that it is an outrage on the Catholic minority in Manitoba, for which the Catholics throughout the length and breadth of this land should stand up and denounce the Government. We were told by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) last night, that it had been stated that this House and the country were to have a good deal of fun in the course of this debate, and he stated that the promise had not been fulfilled. Well, my hon. friend should not have spoken too soon. The spectacle which was presented to this House to-day was certainly humorous, if it was disappointing to the admirers of the hon. member for North Simcoe. The spectacle that has been presented by these two gentlemen, one administering fire and brimstone to the people of the province of Quebec, and the other giving all his fire and his violence and his denunciatory language to the other section of the community—the spectacle of these two gentlemen sailing in the same boat, under two flags, if you will, but, at all events, both armed with the same pattern of knife under their long cloaks, with which to stab the Prime Minister in the back, was a spectacle which must have afforded some fun to those people who think that politics make strange bedfellows and cause extremes to meet. They must have had some fun at the spectacle displayed by the hon. member for L'Islet when leading to the altar his new convert to receive his political baptism. But, Mr. Speaker, before I proceed to deal with some of the observations of the hon. member for North Simcoe, whom I am sorry not to see in his place to-night, I have one or two observations to make with regard to the speech of the mover of this resolution. As has been said, and there is probably where the fun comes in, the tail did not exactly suit the dog in this matter. After the long speech which the hon. gentleman made, there was something humorously disappointing in the amendment which he proposed. For the purpose of discrediting the Conservative party in this country and making them appear unfriendly to the race to which he belongs and to the creed to which we both belong, he went where? Why, he went back to ante-Confederation days, and quoted the speeches on Confederation, in order to find out what was the intention of the Legislature and the public men of those days with regard to this question of schools in Manitoba, instead of going to the Manitoba Act itself, and he endeavoured to show that it was the intention of this Parliament to grant separate schools to Manitoba. I say that he should have referred to the debates that took place on the Manitoba Act itself; but he did not do that, because it would not have justified his position. It would have shown that the people whom he has associated himself with were opposed to granting that right to the minority of the province of Manitoba, and that they supported a motion which was made in this House to eliminate from the Manitoba Act the clauses referring to education. Mr. Speaker, it is of some interest to look back at that period. When we remember what was going on, what interest was centred, not merely on this question, but on a variety of other questions; when we remember, not merely the political rancour, but the personal rancour that existed among the public men of that day, who fought out their battles on the floor of this House; when we remember the disputes between Mr. McDougall and Mr. Howe, we know that these things naturally absorbed a great deal of attention, but at the same time they do not prevent us from seeing what position those who were the principal actors in those scenes took on this question, and what was the intention of this Parliament at that time. Why, Sir, the Hon. Mr. McDougall, well known as a leading light in the Liberal party, spoke on more than one occasion. He said:

He should also propose to strike out the 20th clause relating to the separate schools. They had better see what provisions the Local Parliament might make with regard to this question, after which the Governor-General might exercise the veto power. He opposed the clause as inapplicable to the country and as suggestive of a state of things which it should be preferable not to suppose to exist.

Well, that is very good reading for those who contend for separate schools, but it is not very good reading for those who go about proclaiming that the Liberal party is liberal in something else besides name. On the public hustings and in places where they are not bound by their utterances, they are all liberality in words; but when it comes to acts, the true sympathies of their hearts are manifested, and in this instance they did not belie their record. Mr. Thomas Ferguson replied to Mr. McDougall at that time, in such sense as to show what was the intention of the Legislature. He said:

As for the hon. member for North Lanark, the whole country knew his political reputation was irretrievably ruined, that while he was in the Government he was willing to do anything that might be necessary to keep him there, and had become the biggest Tory of the whole of them. (Laughter.) Why, the hon. gentleman spoke of separate schools as if they were something horrible to contemplate; but if his memory served him aright, the hon. gentleman while in the Government had voted for separate schools in this country.

The hon. gentleman spoke of separate schools as something horrible to contemplate, and, if his memory served him right, the hon. gentleman, while in the Government, had voted for separate schools in this country, thereby carrying out the same idea as to what was the intention of the Legislature at the time. This debate went on, and a few days afterwards Mr. McDougall made another speech on the subject, when this matter came up again in the course of discussion on the Manitoba Act. He said:

The effect of the clause, if not struck out, would be to fix laws which the Local Legislature could not alter in future, and that it would be better to leave the matter to local authorities to decide, as in the other provinces. He quite agreed with his hon. friend in giving the same powers to this province as the others, and it was for that reason that he desired to strike out the clause.

Hon. Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER referred to the manner in which the Red River country had been settled, and grants of land which had been made to the clergy for the purposes of education.

Mr. MACKENZIE was prepared to leave the matter to be settled exclusively by the Local Legislature. The British North America Act gave all the protection necessary for minorities; and local authorities understood their own local wants better than the General Legislature. It was his earnest desire to avoid introducing into the new province these detrimental discussions which had operated so unhappily on their own country, and therefore hoped the amendment would be carried.

This was the amendment which was moved by the Hon. Mr. Oliver, who moved that the education clause be struck out altogether. I think, leaving altogether aside the tendencies of the different political parties of that time, that we have a pretty clear idea from the debate as to what the intention of Parliament then was. And we had, in the decision of the Privy Council in England, an illustration of how very badly they carried out what they intended to do. However, before leaving this branch of the subject, I will say, that surely no man in this or any other country will hold the present Prime Minister or his governmental colleagues responsible for the legislation enacted at that particular date. What we are bound to do, is to stand by the constitution, as it was interpreted by the highest court of the land, and give to each class of persons their civil rights under the constitution. We are bound to abide by that constitution and nothing else. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), in his observations this afternoon, made several points. First of all, he said that the appeal should be thrown out, as the question had been finally settled by the judgment of the Privy Council, and was beyond all further interference. He laid down the doctrine, that although the Government was bound to receive the petition of their Lordships, and those who sided with them, it was the duty of the Government, without further ceremony, to throw that petition out the very moment it was received. He said, secondly, that it was a most remarkable thing—and he reasserted this statement over and over again—that the question of the application of section 93 of the Manitoba Act never had been raised, and not only never had been raised, but never had been thought of, until last November, when it was raised upon a petition presented by Mr Ewart to the Government. He said it had not been raised in the first court, nor in the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba. It had not been raised before the Supreme Court of Canada, and neither had it been raised before the Privy Council. Now, my idea is, that we can be able to show, by testimony which the hon. gentleman will not controvert, that, whilst the constitutionality of the Act, so far as the ultra vires question is concerned, was settled by the Privy Council, that alone was settled. I shall be able to show, that on the second point he was wrong, and manifestly wrong; and I think he showed this himself this afternoon, when he attempted to prove from the words of Mr. Blake, that Mr. Blake did not intend to convey the meaning which was given those words by the Minister of Justice last night. I think he showed that when he felt compelled to take issue with that greater master of English, Mr. Blake himself, and sought to make an argument out of the mouth of that hon. gentleman, and then had to quarrel with his own quotation. He said that this Government was shirking their responsibility, that they were endeavouring to put upon other shoulders the burden which rested on their own, and which they should not hesitate to assume. Finally, he wound up with an appeal on behalf of poor Manitoba, on account of the treatment that province had received from the Dominion Government. But he forgot that he himself had supported the Government of Sir John Macdonald during all that time. However, it is my intention to deal with the subject as briefly as the importance of the subject will allow, and to confine myself as much as possible to the legal aspect of the case and the pros and cons which naturally present themselves, and which have been presented by such able advocates as the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and by writers in the press in Quebec and Ontario and elsewhere, all holding different views and maintaining those views with great ability; and I shall ask the House, if the Government, in view of those contentions and all those difficulties which have been presented, have not taken a wise course in asking the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada; and I am confident, that after I shall have read the few remarks and quotations I have before me, I shall, at all events, have in doing so thrown a little more light on this subject and enabled hon. members to take a wider and more extensive view than they otherwise might do, if they were not placed in possession of those quotations. What was the question that was brought up in the court in Manitoba? It was simply a question by a Mr. Barrett, by which he claimed that two by-laws of the city of Winnipeg were null and void. And the reason why he claimed that these by-laws were null and void—the two being virtually one, because one was merely amending the other to make it workable—is stated in the following words, which covered the whole of his complaint from beginning to end:—

Because the effect of the by-law is that one rate is levied upon all Protestant and Roman Catholic ratepayers in order to raise the amount mentioned in said by-law, and the effect is to diminish the tax upon Protestant ratepayers and to increase the tax upon Catholic ratepayers.

That is the question as put in the complaint of Mr. Barrett, when he prayed for a rule from the court. Mr. Justice Killam summed up the contention in these words:

The contention of the applicant is that the old law is still in force, and that the amounts of these estimates should have been levied separately upon Protestant and Roman Catholic ratepayers. The argument for this view is based upon a claim that the Public Schools Act of 1890 is "ultra vires" of the Provincial Legislature, and that the repeal of the former statutes was intended to operate only for the purpose of substituting the one system for the other, and should be deemed inoperative. It is sufficient, however, for present purposes to consider whether it was "intra vires" of the Legislature to establish such a system of schools as is provided by the new Act, and to authorize the raising of money for their support by a general assessment upon the property of all, irrespective of religious belief, and without providing for the support of separate schools for any class.

Now, that was the claim as laid before the court by Mr. Barrett and the statement by Mr. Justice Killam. It is entirely needless for me, after the speeches that have been delivered here narrating the whole facts, to enter into any lengthy statement with regard to the petitions that were sent in. But the Minister of Justice reported upon the Manitoba legislation, and advised His Excellency to reply as follows to these petitions. After setting forth the facts and the ground of complaint, judgment having been rendered, he said:

The Court has practically decided, with one dissentient opinion, that the Acts now under review do not "prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools" which Roman Catholics had by "practice at the time of the Union," or in brief, that the non-existence, at that time, of a system of public schools and the consequent exemption from taxation for the support of public schools and the consequent freedom to establish and support separate and "denominational" schools did not constitute a "right or privilege" "by practice" which these Acts took away.

An appeal has been asserted and the case is now before the Supreme Court of Canada, where it will, in all probability, be heard in the course of next month.

If the appeal should be successful these Acts will be annulled by judicial decision, the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba will receive protection and redress. The Acts purporting to be repealed will remain in operation, and those whose views have been represented by a majority of the Legislature cannot but recognize that the matter has been disposed of with due regard to the constitutional rights of the province.

If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained, the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsection (2) and (3) of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act" quoted in the early part of this report and which are analogous to the provisions made by the "British North America Act," in relation to the other provinces.

And just here I will say that it must be gratifying that, despite the natural feeling and desire that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) might have to agree with the mover of this resolution, when he said that in the statement made by the Minister of Justice that there was a strong promise or a promise of any kind, he says he is not surprised that those gentlemen who feel disappointed with the Minister of Justice should say and claim that there is such a promise contained in these words, but that he himself is obliged to admit that there is no such promise and no words that can be held to give such a promise. The Minister of Justice goes on :

Those subsections contain in effect the provisions which have been made as to all the provinces and are obviously those under which the constitution intended that the Government of the Dominion should proceed if it should at any time become necessary that the Federal powers should be resorted to for the protection of a Protestant or Roman Catholic minority against any Act or decision of the Legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority, affecting "any right or privilege" of any such minority "in relation to education."

And in all these different clauses the words are put between inverted commas, showing exactly where the application is in regard to particular cases. Now, the decision of the Privy Council sustained the view taken by the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba. The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court was overruled. The decision of the Privy Council in England was to the effect that the Manitoba Schools Act was "intra vires," and that the province had not exceeded its power in passing that Act. I shall just read the heading of the holding, as it is given here :

According to the true construction of the Constitutional Act of Manitoba, 1870, 33 Vict., chap. 3 (Dominion Statute), having regard to the state of things which existed in Manitoba at the date thereof, the legislature of that province did not exceed its powers in passing the Public School Act, 1890.

Section 22 of the Act of 1870 authorizes the Provincial Legislature exclusively to make laws in relation to education so as not to "prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have, by law or practice in the province at the Union."

Held, that the Act of 1890, which abolished the denominational system of public education established by law since the Union, but which did not compel the attendance of any child at a public school, or confer any advantage in respect of attendance other than that of free education, and at the same time left each denomination free to establish, maintain, and conduct its own schools, did not contravene the above proviso ; and that accordingly certain by-laws of a municipal corporation which authorized assessments under the Act were valid.

Now, in the face of that judgment, delivered by the highest court in the country, a sub-committee of the Privy Council was appointed, and that sub-committee was composed of the following persons:—Sir John Thompson, Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. J.

A. Chapleau and Hon. T. M. Daly. The sub-committee reported as follows:—

The sub-committee are of opinion that the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is conclusive as to the rights with regard to denominational schools which the Roman Catholics had at the time of the Union, and as to the bearing thereon of the statutes complained of, and Your Excellency is not, therefore, in the opinion of the sub-committee, properly called upon to hear an appeal based on those grounds. That judgment is as binding on Your Excellency as it is on any of the parties to the litigation, and, therefore, if redress is sought on account of the state of affairs existing in the province at the time of the Union, it must be sought elsewhere and by other means than by way of appeal under the sections of the British North America Act and of the Manitoba Act, which are relied on by the petitioners as sustaining this appeal.

That is to say, that despite all these statements which have been attributed to the Hon. Mr. Chapleau, now Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec, as to his going about from post to pillar, stating this, that and the other thing, that he signed, with his own hand, that solemn declaration to the Governor-General, telling him that he was bound by the decision of the Privy Council in England just as the humblest citizen in any part of the Empire would be bound by it. The four gentlemen who made that report concurred in it, and it was concurred in by the whole Cabinet, and every man with the most elementary knowledge of the principles that govern us, knows just as well as those gentlemen, that every citizen in this country is bound by it ; Governments are bound by it as well as governors and legislators, and the people at large. Then they go on to say :

The two Acts of 1890 which are complained of, must, according to the opinion of the sub-committee, be regarded as within the powers of the Legislature of Manitoba ; but it remains to be considered whether the report should be entertained and heard, as an appeal against the statutes which were alleged to have encroached on rights and privileges with regard to denominational schools, which were acquired by any class of persons, not at the time of the Union, but "after the Union."

Therefore, the decision rendered in the case rested upon the status of Catholics at the time of Union, or prior to the Union, and it could not go beyond that in any shape or form. Now, I come to answer, at this juncture, the statement of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that the case put before the Privy Council, the case lodged and carried there by Mr. Barrett, covered the whole question ; it covered simply what was set forth and specified in the complaint read to this House a few moments ago. In the Privy Council, during the argument, a question was raised by those who appeared on behalf of the Catholic minority, and they argued that sections 178 and 179 of the Manitoba School Law were confiscatory. Those sections read as follows:—

178. In cases where, before the coming into force of this Act, Catholic school districts have been established, covering the same territory as any Protestant school district, and such Protestant school district has incurred indebtedness, the Department of Education shall cause an inquiry to be made as to the amount of the indebtedness of such Protestant school district and the amount of its assets. Such of the assets as consist of property shall be valued on the basis of their actual value at the time of the coming into force of this Act. In case the amount of the indebtedness exceeds the amount of the assets, then all the property assessed in the year 1889, to supporters of such Catholic school districts, shall be exempt from any taxation for the purpose of paying the principal and interest of an amount of the indebtedness of such school district equal to the difference between its indebtedness and assets. Such exemption shall continue only so long as such property is owned by the person to whom the same was assessed as owner in the year 1889.

179. In cases where, before the coming into force of this Act, Catholic school districts have been established as in the next preceding section mentioned, such Catholic school districts shall, upon the coming into force of this Act, cease to exist, and all the assets of such Catholic school districts shall belong to, and all the liabilities thereof be paid by the public school district. In case the liabilities of any such Catholic school district exceed its assets then the difference shall be deducted from the amount to be allowed as an exemption, as provided in the next preceding section. In case the assets of any such Catholic school district exceeds its liabilities, the difference shall be added to the amount to be allowed as an exemption, as provided in the next preceding section.

Well, we all know what the effect of such legislation is, it is at least expropriation; we all know how religiously legislators have guarded the interests of property, how special statutes have been passed in order to operate expropriation, and how the private property of citizens or a corporation is jealously guarded by the law. Well, we had this enactment, made, apparently, without prior legislation or anything of that kind, to authorize the putting into effect of any such legislation, and the counsel for the Catholic minority, before their Lordships, set up an argument that the school law should be set aside because these particular sections, made in so sweeping a manner, were "ultra vires": that there was no law to authorize them; that no law authorized the province of Manitoba to stretch out its hand and say: "We take the property of Mr. A. and we hand it over to Mr. B. unceremoniously, and simply by our own free will and motion." This argument was apparently having some effect, when a gentleman on the other side arose and said:

I desire in the first place to point out that the clauses which have been referred to as confiscating clauses, do not fairly bear the meaning which the learned Attorney General has given them.

The learned Attorney-General, speaking for the Catholic minority, merely used words that had been used by one of the judges in the Supreme Court, and was carrying out the idea which had been emitted there. Continuing his argument he said:

I refer to clause 178 and 179, which transfer, it is true, the then existing Roman Catholic schools and all their property to the public schools. I think they can be justified on public grounds and as just and fair in view of the whole scheme of legislation. But it is not sufficient to point out that Barrett has no right to complain; he had no interest in any school which has been confiscated, if they were confiscated; he has no right to come and complain of anything more than the imposition of the tax. It is the bye-law of the municipality which he applied to quash and it is the bye-law which has in effect been quashed by a judgment of the Supreme Court. Now it might well be, though I do not concede that it is so, that sections 178 and 179 in transferring the property of the Roman Catholics were in contravention and in prejudice of their particular rights in respect of schools. But who is to complain of that? Not Mr. Barrett: his complaint, and the only complaint, is that he objects to a bye-law which imposes a tax upon him, because under the taxing clause of the Act it is ultra vires, and as to that alone.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) who stood up here to-day and stated that the whole question had been decided, that this judgment of the Supreme Court had wiped out everything, is the very gentleman who contended for quite a different thing before the Privy Council in England, and I have just given his own argument and his own words, taken from the verbatim report of his speech on that occasion. Now, the judgment I submit was as to the meaning of the words, "by practice." The decision arrived at was that the Legislature had not exceeded its authority in passing a general Act of Education. That has been decided for all time to come. Neither this Government nor any other power in the Dominion can interfere with the Public School Act of Manitoba. Some persons contend there is no room for any appeal now, as did the hon. gentleman who spoke last, but whose speech was in a different sense from that which he delivered before the Privy Council. Mr. Ewart's argument shows how very complicated the question really is. He has abandoned his claim that there should be an attempt made to interfere with the judgment of the Privy Council. In his factum, which is one of very great ability, he allows that question to go as having been settled once for all. The sub-committee of our own Privy Council, to which I have referred, closed their report to His Excellency as follows:—

Among the questions which the sub-committee regard as preliminary are the following:—

(1.) Whether this appeal is such an appeal as is contemplated by subsection 3, of section 93, of the British North America Act or by subsection 2, of section 22 of the Manitoba Act.

(2.) Whether the grounds set forth in the petitions are such as may be the subject of appeal under either of the subsections above referred to.

(3.) Whether the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in any way bears on the application for redress based on the contention that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority which accrued to them after the Union have been interfered with by the two Statutes of 1890 before referred to.

(4.) Whether subsection 3, of section 93, of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba.

(5.) Whether Your Excellency in Council has power to grant such orders, as are asked for by the petitioner, assuming the material facts to be as stated in the petition.

(6.) Whether the Acts of Manitoba passed before the Session of 1890, conferred on the minority a "right or privilege with respect to Education," within the meaning of subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, or established "a system of separate or dissentient schools," within the meaning of subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act, and if so, whether the two Acts of 1890, complained of, affect "the right or privilege" of the minority in such a manner as to warrant the present appeal.

Mr. Ewart contending that there is a right of appeal replies to the oft-repeated argument. The whole question has been divided by the Privy Council as follows:—

It has been said, that inasmuch as the English Privy Council has passed upon this matter, that is, and ought to be the end of it. It seems to me, however, that that is only the end of the matter so far as one of the subsections of section 22 of the Manitoba Act is concerned, and that the other two subsections have not been proceeded upon at all, but present an alternative course, or rather a course for an alternative case, with reference to education in that province. The first subsection of section 22 of the Act in question plainly, to my mind, deals with ultra vires cases. The second and third subsections deal with intra vires cases.

I wish to give a few points with reference to this which seem to me to make it not only obvious but perfectly conclusive. If the appeal which has just been decided adversely to the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba had been determined the other way, if it had been held that the Act was ultra vires then, I fancy it is quite clear there would have been no appeal. Why? Because the Act having been held to be ultra vires, there is really no Act at all; because there is nothing to appeal from. Then if it be said that having been held to be intra vires, there is no appeal—there is no appeal at all. There can be no appeal in ultra vires cases, because clearly there is nothing to appeal from. And if there is no appeal when the Act is intra vires, then these sections mean nothing, and there is no appeal at all.

There is this further, that in case of an appeal being entertained by the Governor, Parliament may be called upon to pass remedial legislation. Now, suppose for a moment that the Act has been declared ultra vires, and that we appealed, could we have asked Parliament to make remedial law? Parliament would simply have said there is no statute, therefore, there is nothing to remedy. A remedial law clearly can only be passed in case the law is intra vires.

This is apparently strong ground, and it may be well to dispose of the pretension of Mr. Ewart before taking up other views—

That there is this distinction between subsections 1 and 2, seems to me also to be borne out by a comparison which will show that the conditions requisite for an appeal, are in every respect different from those under which an Act will be ultra vires.

Let us take in the first place the terms "prejudicially affect," in the first subsection, and "affecting any right or privilege" in the second subsection. To make the Act ultra vires, it must "prejudicially affect" some right or privilege of some class of persons. That is, in order that the Act should be ultra vires it ought to prejudice some right. In the second subsection, however, it is not necessary that we should demonstrate that such Act has "prejudicially affected us" in order to give a right of appeal. It may have helped us, but not helped us in the same measure in which it has helped others. Or while being on the whole beneficial it may contain some unfair provision. If it prejudicially affected us, then it would be ultra vires, but if it only "affected" us, then it would be a case in which the legislation would not be ultra vires, but simply one for appeal to the Governor in Council. Lord Watson of the British Privy Council pointed out this distinction in the recent argument.

But according to the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) this afternoon, for he used the same words, practically, he said it had been held by the Privy Council in England, that the words of the section by practice had been heard to mean nothing at all, that it offered the minority no protection, that they were in the same position as if no such provision had existed, and in the hon. gentleman's opinion very probably the other section meant nothing more. Mr. Ewart went on to discuss another branch of the subject, and he said:

Let us next compare the words "any class of persons" in the first subsection, with the words "Protestant or Roman Catholic Minority" in the second subsection, and we shall see at once that it was intended to deal with different things in the different subsections. To make a law ultra vires it is sufficient that it prejudicially affects the rights of "any class or of any persons," which by the judgment of the full Court of Manitoba has been held to include Episcopalians; and if it includes Episcopalians, there is no doubt it would include Presbyterians. But under the second subsection, the Presbyterians and Episcopalians, could not complain except as a part of a Protestant minority. Episcopalians might complain that an Act was ultra vires, and so take proceedings, as they did, under the first subsection, but inasmuch as the Protestants are not in a minority in the province, they could not appeal under the second subsection.

The third parallelism between these two subsections, or rather the lack of it, is to be found in the words "at the Union" in the one and "right or privilege," without any limitation, in the second subsection. It is quite sufficient to make a law ultra vires that it should interfere with some right which any class of persons had at the time at the Union, but under the second subsection you will observe that the rights to be interfered with are not limited to those which existed at the Union, but merely those which affect "any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education," whenever it exists, or however it may arise. I see it argued that that right or privilege must have existed at the time of the Union. I find no such statement in the second subsection. On the contrary, I find that the words "at the Union," which appear in the first subsection are omitted from the second; and by a well-known canon of construction, we must give some effect to the difference in the language.

Mr. Ewart went on to say:

Another contrast between these two subsections is to be found in the use of the words "with respect to denominational schools," the first subsection and the words "in relation to education," in the second subsection. The second is very much wider than the first. To render the Act ultra vires, it must affect some right or privilege with reference to schools, with reference to the system or to their management or control or something of that kind, but under the wider clause while the Act may not be ultra vires, because it does not affect the schools, yet inasmuch as some detail relative to education is affected a case will be presented for appeal to the Governor-General in Council. It may be a question relating merely to text books or to religious exercises or a thousand and one of the administrative details in reference to education which might not properly come within the term "denominational schools." This is a distinction which the Privy Council in England recognized, a distinction which not only was greatly debated before them, but found favour with them.

My last quotation from Mr. Ewart is as follows :—

It has been said that the second subsection of the Manitoba Act, is less wide than subsection 3 of clause 93 of the British North America Act, of part of which it is a copy. If the 3rd subsection of clause 93 of the British North America Act applied to Manitoba (and perhaps it does) unquestionably there would be the right of appeal; but it is said our second subsection is more limited. The 3rd subsection of clause 93 of the British North America Act provides that "where, in any province, a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law, at the Union, or is thereafter established by the Legislature" an appeal shall lie. Our statute is general, and does not limit the appeal to either of these two cases. It commences, "An appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council." This is much wider than the British North America Act. That Act limits the appeal to two cases, one in which there was a separate system prior to the Union, and the other to a separate system after the Union. I repeat that ours is the wider clause for it is not limited in any way. With us an appeal would lie, although no separate system was in force, either before or after the Union. Supposing the first few lines had been left out of the British North America Act and it had simply said "An appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council," &c., then I fancy there would have been an appeal from the province of New Brunswick. New Brunswick had not a separate school system previous to the Union and has not established one since, therefore there is no appeal under the British North America Act; but if the limiting words were taken away from that section clearly there would be an appeal. So I say there is no limitation in the case of appeals under the Manitoba Act although there is under the British North America Act. If the section in the Manitoba Act varies from the British North America Act, I say it is varied by being made wider, we need not care whether the British North America Act applies to us or not.

This presses us to the consideration: Does subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act apply? One of the contentions which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) made this afternoon, was that until the month of November last, after the case had gone through, as he said, every one of the courts, after it had been tried in the first instance in Manitoba, after it had been heard in the Supreme Court, and after it had been argued before the Privy Council only then, he said, was this question raised. He said that it was a brand new question that it never had been heard before November, and he was astonished that any such contention had been made. Let me deal with that for a moment. There is a great deal of difference of opinion on the subject, as to whether this subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba. I have read to the House the contentions of Mr. Ewart, and these contentions are worthy of consideration. He argues out his point with a great deal of ability and skill, and the judges all through agreed that the Manitoba Act, is even wider in its scope than the British North America Act. But, Mr. Speaker, would you believe, that this question which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) says was never thought of, or never dreamed of until the month of November, was actually pronounced upon by Judge Killam in the very first judgment rendered in Manitoba. Not only that, but it was argued throughout in every court, and the hon. gentleman himself must have heard the matter discussed before the Privy Council. Surely he must have forgotten that he took part in the discussion. Here is what Judge Killam said:

And here, I must say with reference to an argument that the third subsection of the 93rd section of the original Act is one applicable to the whole of the provinces of the Dominion, and therefore, by the terms of the second section of the Manitoba Act, to be read in the latter Act, in addition to the 22nd section of the latter, that this 22nd section gives power to the Legislature to make laws in relation to education, subject and according to certain provisions, and that if the reading into the Act of any portion of the original 93rd section would involve either an extension or a limitation of the powers of the Provincial Legislature beyond those fixed by the terms of this 22nd section, there would be an inconsistency with the Manitoba Act, which is excluded by the express terms of its second section. The course of the legislation and the meaning of the first statute, are of the greatest importance in interpreting the second, but I cannot consider any portion of the 93rd section of the former to be incorporated into the second Act.

The hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) said that this question was never brought up before last November, and that was one of the mainstays of his argument this afternoon, but here we have actually a judgment on it by the court of first instance in Manitoba. We have the statement per contra of the judges of the Privy Council on this very point that was decided by Mr. Justice Killam, and to show this I will read from the judgment delivered by their lordships in that court aforesaid. On page 452 of the Law Reports of the House of Lords:

Subsections 1, 2 and 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, 1870, differ but slightly from the corresponding subsections of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867. The only important difference is that in the Manitoba Act, in subsection 1, the words "by law" are followed by the words "or practice" which do not occur in the corresponding passage in the British North America Act, 1867.

Therefore, we have the Lords of the Privy Council stating that the smallest possible difference exists between the British North America Act and the Manitoba Act, that one law is equal to the other in value, that the slightness of difference does not affect either one or the other, one giving as much power as the other to the Governor-General in Council, and that the only distinction that exists between these two statutes is, that the words "by law" in the British North America Act are followed by the words "or prac“tice” in the corresponding section of the Manitoba Act. Have we the right to pretend as against Judge Killam that the British North America Act does apply in its educational section and clause to the province of Manitoba. That is a disputed question. It is one which is well worthy of consideration, and one which, no doubt, the Privy Council felt it very difficult to decide. But, Sir, Lord Watson was strongly of the opinion that section 3 of the British North America Act did apply to Manitoba. Sir Horace Davey argued for Manitoba in this connection :

I have not troubled your Lordships with that argument. I think it is quite clear, saying so only as Counsel of course, or that it is reasonably clear that the provisions of the 22nd section do over-ride and prevent the application of the provisions of the 93rd section of the British North America Act. I should think that is reasonably clear. It does not matter very much.

Here was an argument before the Privy Council on this subject, and views are expressed on it which are worthy of consideration ; but what will be thought of my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy), who wakes up here to-day and tells us that this point was never dreamt of until the month of November last. Sir Horace Davey concluded his argument by saying it did not matter very much ; but now it seems to matter a great deal. We have a very serious question on hand in it, and it is one of the subjects which the Government are entitled to refer to the Supreme Court. It is right that they should ask the Supreme Court with this question before them, if they have the power to entertain any such appeal as is now made by the minority of Manitoba. Now, with reference to another point in the argument before the Privy Council, in which my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) took part. Lord Watson said :

I think there is some considerable question. I do not think that is a clear point at all that section 3 does not apply.

Mr. McCARTHY—I was treating it for the moment as clear because all the judges below have taken that view.

The hon. gentleman was mistaken there, because Judge Dubuc did not take that view for one. He continued :

Mr. McCARTHY—The assumption, of course, in support of it not applying is that the rest of 93 has been applied in its own language, not of course, my lord, in express terms.

Lord SHAND—It is very difficult to run the two sections into each other in regard to Manitoba.

Lord WATSON—If they were to do what they have not done, there might be a question for establishing separate schools.

Mr. McCARTHY—With great deference, it has always been thought that section 2 was to be in substitution for subsection 3, and it is contended on the other side that the appeal is more on section 2 than it is on section 3.

Lord SHAND—I understand in the case where separate schools were introduced, the person subscribing to those schools got rid of the Public School Act.

Mr. McCARTHY—Just so, and then became liable to a separate school rate. He could not, however, free himself from contribution to the educational fund, but he subscribed to one fund instead of another.

Lord WATSON—Section 3 is really included in section 3 of the Manitoba Act.

Mr. McCARTHY—Sections 3 and 4 are the identical sections. Your Lordship will find that on page 4 of the record in parallel columns.

Lord WATSON—Assuming that they had done what they had powers to—the constitution of Manitoba, I mean—if they were establishing separate and dissentient schools, a system of separate or dissentient schools, then their acts with regard to these schools might come under section 3.

Mr. McCARTHY—That is what I was venturing to contend would not be done.

And this is the subject that was never touched until last November. Now, Lord Watson again says :

The important words we have to consider are “or practice” in the Act of Manitoba. I think it comes to a very narrow point. I think they bear that the intention of that was to adopt the clause of the Act of 1867, which, as it stood, was inapplicable to Manitoba, to the necessities and requirements of Manitoba, to give them the benefit of the same legislation. I am clearly of opinion that the Act of 1867 was, as far as possible, intended, as regards all civil rights, including educational matters, to place all the provinces of the Dominion as nearly as possible on the same footing as circumstances permitted. As I said before, I am not indicating an opinion. The language may tie you down, but I think it was intended to establish that uniformity, and I think it will be necessary to consider the suggestion whether it was the intention of the Legislature with regard to denominational schools in Manitoba, to handicap them in a way that they are not handicapped elsewhere.

Now, in the face of all these different contentions, is it not wise and proper for the Government to obtain the very best counsel that can be obtained ? Is it not an act of prudence and an act of statesmanship ? This House by a solemn resolution stated what should be done under such circumstances, and every member of this House who was here in 1890 was responsible for the passing of that resolution, and every one who was here in the second session, when that resolution was incorporated in the Supreme Court Act, also became responsible for it ; and to tell us now that the Government should turn their back on all that and ignore the solemn mandate of this House and the legislation that is upon our statute-books—why, it is simply an absurdity which I am surprised that any man who values his reputation should for one single instant contend for before an intelligent public. Now, with reference to the right of appeal, we have the strongest arguments in the mouth of the counsel for the province of Manitoba before the Privy Council. In his argument there Sir Horace Davey said :

Now here the exclusive right to make laws in relation to education is vested in the Provincial Legislature, but there are certain restrictions imposed on the Provincial Legislature. Then an appeal is given to the Governor-General in Council to say where or how far any Act of the Provincial Legislature which is expressly mentioned in the Manitoba Act, getting rid of the ambiguity in the General Act—the former Act—how far any Act in the Provincial Legislature of Manitoba does or does not infringe the rights reserved and the privileges of the Roman Catholic or Protestant minority as the case may be. Well, if that is so, it is obvious that this being a right or privilege which is reserved by the Act itself to the Roman Catholic minority, and in case it is infringed an appeal being given—the Act has provided within its own four corners a remedy for an infringement of the right or privilege which it has created by the Act itself, and therefore, it would seem that this Act of Parliament, being an Act relating to education, is an Act which prima facie falls within the jurisdiction of the Manitoba Legislature, but then the question whether it has complied with these provisos and restrictions which are imposed upon the right to legislate arises, and that is the question which the statute which imposed those provisos and restrictions has given an appeal to the Governor-General.

Lord Watson, speaking on the point, said :

The first part of the subsection seems to imply the function of the Governor-General to watch the progress of legislation on educational subjects.

Sir HORACE DAVEY—Yes, that is so.

Lord WATSON—It may be to suggest to them that they shall amend their law if he thinks that law does not comply with the general feeling.

Sir HORACE DAVEY—The Legislature might comply with the requisite decision or award of the Governor-General, but if they do not, then I submit.

Lord SHAND—There would be no mandamus if the Governor-General were to hold that this is an Act which does affect the Roman Catholic minority.

Sir HORACE DAVEY—Then they appeal on it.

Lord SHAND—I do not see there is any appeal—it would be final on this matter.

Sir HORACE DAVEY—The Provincial Legislature would then have to repeal the Act.

Lord SHAND—Would not deliverance of judgment by the Governor-General be a repeal of the Act?

Sir HORACE DAVEY—I do not suppose your Lordship's decision would repeal the Act, it remains in the Statute-book.

Lord SHAND—Yes, it would be a bad Act.

Lord MACNAGHTEN—Does the Dominion Parliament have to comply—suppose the Governor-General directed remedial legislation are the Dominion Council bound to comply with it?

Sir HORACE DAVEY—I do not know, my Lord.

Lord WATSON—The Governor-General has power to set in motion. There is an end of it.

Lord MORRIS—Are they bound to do it?

Sir HORACE DAVEY—We are getting within the apices of constitutional laws. I do not see any obligation, of course there is no obligation, on a legislature to pass a particular Act or not.

Lord MORRIS—They would not if the opinion of the majority was different from the decision that the Governor-General came to, of course they would not pass an Act. What would happen then.

Sir HORACE DAVEY—It is easy of course to put an illustration, but supposing your Lordships came to the conclusion either that this Legislation was beyond the powers of the Manitoba Legislature and wanted amending to bring it within its power, and the Governor-General came to the conclusion in Council that it was within their powers, then it is easy to suggest the difficulty in which people would be placed. Of course your Lordships decision is only a decision in the particular circumstances that that particular by-law is bad. That is all your Lordships decision will be and then an expression of opinion from your Lordships is usually considered as sufficient, but it would remain that your Lordships had declared the by-law bad, because the Public Schools Act exceeded the jurisdiction of Parliament, and the Governor-General may have determined that the bye-law is good, because in his opinion it does not exceed the powers. It appears to me that there are good grounds or at any rate very serious grounds to be considered for saying that under this particular section the intention was to invest in the Governor-General and the Dominion Parliament the protection of the rights of the minority, which were intended to be given by means of the section, and that the Act in question, being within the general description of Acts, which are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature, has provided the means in this particular case, for confirming the Act to an Educational Act, and making it subject to the restrictions and provisions in question, and that, therefore, on general principles, there is no appeal. There can be no appeal and the Act must be considered a good Act until the particular tribunal provided by the Act, namely, the Governor-General, has pronounced upon its unconstitutionality. I have stated the point to your Lordships, and I confess, if I am at liberty to express my own opinion, that it seems a point deserving of grave consideration.

Thus, those gentlemen, at the argument, speaking for Manitoba, contended that there was no power in the Privy Council to deal with this matter at all, but that it was entirely in the hands of the Governor-General in Council. The hon. gentleman went on to say :

The Governor-General has taken the view of subsections 2 and 3, which I submit to your Lordships, is the right view, namely, that he has the right of entertaining the appeal and considering the application upon the merits, and that when the application has been considered by him upon the merits, it will be for the Dominion Parliament to decide whether they will give effect to any alteration.

Lord MORRIS.—That is, that although the action of the Provincial Legislature might be legal, still it might be so oppressive that the Governor would redress it.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL—Yes, I contend that subsections 2 and 3 do not depend on ultra vires at all. Subsections 2 and 3 depend upon the Protestant or Catholic minority being able to make a case before the Governor-General on petition that other legislation is required.

Lord WATSON—Observations rather suggest themselves to my mind in this matter in your favour, and they are these: section 22 of the Manitoba Act of 1870 does not merely stand upon a Dominion Act, but it stands upon an Imperial Statute.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL—It was a Dominion Act, assented to.

Lord WATSON—It has the same effect as an Act of the British Legislature. Then when you come to subsection 3, the Governor-General has made a determination, and suppose he induces the Parliament of Canada to make a remedial law in that direction, that remedial law is to be for the due execution of the provisions of this section. The Dominion Parliament can only come in to make remedial laws for the due execution of this very section; would it not be open to challenge.

Mr. CURRAN.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL—Quite possibly open to challenge; but my point is that if I can show it is ultra vires for this purpose, I am entitled to assume that there is nothing to make valid an ultra vires Provincial Act of Parliament.

Lord WATSON—The right to determine whether the province has exceeded its powers or not is one thing; but undoubtedly what is contemplated here is not cases of excess of power by the Provincial Legislature, but cases where, acting within their power, they have not done what the minority thought justice

Now, I have done making those quotations from the arguments before, and the expressions of judges in the Privy Council, and we come to the consideration as to whether, in view of all these different and conflicting authorities, the Government have not adopted a wise course. What is their position? They have to face those who say that the Privy Council of the United Kingdom has decided distinctly that the Governor-General of Canada has no longer any power. They have, in the second place, to meet those who say that he has the power, and that the only point actually decided is the point raised of "ultra vires." Then we have Mr. Ewart telling us that we should go further still. He says:

The main question then is, has the Governor-General in Council any right to interfere? If he has, and a remedial order is made, Parliament will make a remedial law, and the courts will then say whether that law is good or not. If there was no right to interfere the law will be held ultra vires. It will only be good if the constitution permits its passage.

Thus we are met with the opinion of a gentleman, who, with all his ability, to use a homely phrase, puts the cart before the horse, by telling us that we ought not to ascertain first, whether we are right or not, but should without hesitation adopt remedial measures and ask Parliament to pass them, and then let the courts decide whether this Parliament had passed laws it had no right to pass. Supposing the courts should say to us: You have been wasting your time, and the money of the public in passing legislation you had no right to pass, what a humiliating and unjustifiable position the Government of Canada would be in. Is that not another and a clinching reason why the course adopted by the Government should be approved? Why, even the counsel of the minority admits that if we pass this legislation now, without waiting to find out our authority, we may be tripped up and find that we have exceeded our rights; and I think that the minority who have acted with so much discretion in the past, will not ask this Parliament and Government to pass legislation which they themselves say may be upset by the courts of justice at a later period, as being outside our power to enact in any manner or form. Well, the Government have decided to bring this matter before the Supreme Court of Canada. I think that course will be approved by the vast majority of the people. We have been told that the country is in an intense state of excitement over this question. We are told that the province of Manitoba is boiling over with excitement, and that the province of Quebec is in the same condition. True, I know that in the province of Quebec there are persons who are endeavouring, with all their might, to work up an agitation, but the people of that province have been burnt already, and, like burnt children, they dread the fire. It is not so very long ago since an agitation was set on foot from one end of that province to the other, and the people led to believe that they had been trampled upon. It is not so very long ago since the word which fell so often from the lips of the mover of the resolution last night "ecrase" was echoed and re-echoed throughout every district in that province. It is not so very long ago since the people were told that one of their compatriots had been basely murdered, and on the strength of that cry and that agitation the Liberal party gained office. They climbed into power by means of the gallows tree, but no sooner had they achieved their end than they turned their backs upon that tender victim, whose woes they had so graphically and eloquently depicted. No sooner were they safely seated on the Treasury benches than they forgot him and his family, and did not think it worth their while to do the first act towards vindicating those principles, which, they said, were so vital to the privileges and glories of the French-Canadian race. They became too intent in the work of plundering the Provincial Treasury to think of the man, or the family of the man whose downfall had been the source of their success; and, at last, an indignant people drove them ignominiously from power. I say, therefore, that the fiery appeals now made will be made in vain, because these same people have made similar appeals in the past, and because they have shown themselves to be miserable traffickers in everything holy and sacred, and so disgusted everybody that they can never hope to regain the people's confidence. There is no excitement in the province of Quebec, but there is legitimate anxiety on the part of the people to see that justice be done to every section of the community, and I will merely say this, in reply to attacks on the Minister of Justice, that, in this matter, long before there was any question of this position being taken, in discussing the question of the interpretation of the statutes, the very self-same doctrine was laid down by him in a remarkable debate, where in reply to the argument of Mr. Blake, as will be found in "Hansard," of 1890, vol. 2, page 3,159, the Minister of Justice said:

We have passed such amendments oftentimes to make a law clear, oftentimes to remove doubts which the decision of an inferior and oftentimes incompetent tribunal has attached to a statute. In such a case we have the remedy which the hon. gentleman has suggested, of declaring that the original meaning of the Act was otherwise. This is a pretty bold step for Parliament to take, and a step it very rarely takes, of declaring the meaning of a law the meaning of which has come into controversy, because in so doing the Parliament assumes to a certain extent judicial functions, and declares that which is usually left to the courts to declare.

That is to say he took the position then that he takes now. And this position assumed then by the Minister of Justice, when he was far removed from the present question, shows what has been the fixed and predominating idea as to where the proper interpretation of statutes should be sought. Now, we have had quite a long discussion as to the meaning of the words uttered by the Hon. Edward Blake in the course of the debate upon the famous resolution of 1890. I think the speech in question must recommend itself to every right thinking man in this community. On page 4084 he moved as follows:—

To leave out all the words after "That" and insert the following:—"It is expedient to provide means whereby, on solemn occasions touching the exercise of the power of disallowance, or of the appellate power as to educational legislation, important questions of law or fact may be referred by the executive to a high judicial tribunal for hearing and consideration, in such mode that the authorities and parties interested may be represented and that a reasoned opinion may be obtained for the information of the Executive."

He goes on, after discussing his proposition, generally:

The other class to which my motion alludes is that of the educational appeal, which arises under section 93 of the Constitutional Act, and under the analogous provision of the Manitoba Constitutional Act. Under these clauses a limited power to make educational laws is granted to a province, provided, amongst other things, that nothing therein contained shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any of the provinces had by law, or, in the case of Manitoba, by practice, at the Union. There is another class of restrictions which I do not in terms touch here, but to which, in cases in which an appeal is raised upon them, my observations would equally apply. This limitation upon the power of a province is made more effectual by a special provision giving an appeal to the Dominion Executive from any Act or decision of the Provincial Legislature or authorities affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority in relation to education; and whereby also, in case of the non-execution by the province of the decision of the Executive, this Parliament may make remedial laws for the purpose of effectuating that decision.

He says, speaking of his own policy, that no Address to the Crown shall be passed by this Parliament asking for a change of the Constitutional Act as affecting any province, at any rate against the will of that province in this particular:

"And I hold it to be settled, thirdly, indeed, it follows obviously from these two propositions, that the only questions which can practically arise within our domain are such as may be raised by way of appeal, under section 93, and the analogous section of the Manitoba Act.

At another point he continues:

Now, Sir, in the exercise of this power of disallowance by the Government, political questions will, or at any rate, may probably always arise. Questions of policy may present themselves, that is questions of expediency, of convenience, of the public interest, of the spirit of the constitution, or of the form of legislation. All these are clearly exclusively for the executive and legislative, that is for the political departments of the Government. But it is equally clear, that when in order to determine your course you must find whether a particular act is ultra or intra vires. you are discharging a legal and judicial function. What do you do? You proceed to interpret the Constitutional Act, and to declare its meaning; you proceed to interpret the Provincial Act under consideration, and to declare its meaning; you proceed to compare the two statutes so interpreted and declared; and you proceed, finally, to conclude whether or not the law conflicts with, or transcends the powers which are conferred upon the Legislature which passed it. Nothing that can be conceived partakes more exclusively of the character of a legal and judicial operation than what I have just now described. Again, when you act upon the appellate educational clauses; as, for example, in the case of Manitoba, the very case which is now in a sense pending, as to whether recent legislation be within the limits of the rights of the Provincial Legislature, and whether any relief is due under the appellate clause to those who claim it, you have a legal question, or rather, in this case, a mixed question of law and of fact; which circumstance it was induced me to insert the word "fact" in my motion, conscious I was that it was only on the rarest occasions that any references of that description would be necessary. Yet it seemed to me that, in this particular instance, I was constrained to provide for an emergency which may arise.

Therefore he made this speech I have quoted with the special object of meeting this Manitoba school question which he said then was looming up in the distance. He says, in winding up his arguments:

My own opinion is, that whenever, in opposition to the continued view of a Provincial Executive and Legislature, it is contemplated by the Dominion Executive to disallow a Provincial Act because it is ultra vires, there ought to be a reference; and also that there ought to be a reference in certain cases where the condition of public opinion renders expedient a solution of legal problems, dissociated from those elements of passion and expediency which are, rightly or wrongly, too often attributed to the action of political bodies. And again, I for my part would recommend such a reference in all cases of educational appeal—cases which necessarily evoke the feelings to which I have alluded, and to one of which, I am frank to say, my present action is only due.

But, Sir, besides the great positive gain of obtaining the best guidance, there are other, and, in my opinion, not unimportant gains besides. Ours is a popular Government; and when burning questions arise inflaming the public mind, when agitation is rife as to the political action of the Executive or the Legislature—which action is to be based on legal questions, obviously beyond the grasp of the people at large;—when the people are on such questions provided by cries of creed and race, then I maintain that a great public good is attainable by the submission of such legal questions to legal tribunals, with all the customary securities for a sound judgment; and whose decisions—passionless and dignified, accepted by each of us as binding in our own affairs involving fortune, freedom, honour, life itself—are most likely to be accepted by us all in questions of public concern.

And, Sir, how was this question treated; how was it accepted by this House, or rather by the last Parliament, which included many of the present members? The Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, leader of the Government, said, and this is the answer I give to my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) when he talks about shirking responsibility on the part of the Government:

When I first read the hon. gentleman's resolution hastily, it occurred to me, as I dare say it occurred to many hon. gentlemen who hear me now, that it was an advance towards the American system, and proposed to transfer the responsibility of the Ministry of the day to a judicial tribunal; but on scanning the resolution in its carefully prepared terms, that impression was dissipated, and I saw that the principal object of the resolution, as I read it, is that the questions submitted by the executive to the judicial tribunal should be enforced, sustained and presented to Parliament, to the public and to the Crown by the fact of this legal decision having been given.

The executive is not relieved from any responsibility because of my answer being given by the tribunal. If the executive were to be relieved from any such responsibility, I should consider that a fatal blot in the proposition of my hon. friend. I believe in responsible government. I believe in the responsibility of the executive. But the answer of the tribunal will be simply for the information of the Government. The Government may dissent from that decision, and it may be their duty to do so if they differ from the conclusion to which the court has come. There is another point in regard to which the court must be guarded in the measure which will be introduced—not this session but, I hope, next session—based on this resolution, and that is, that the answer, whatever it may be, should be considered in the nature of a judgment so far as to allow of an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Now, we had this statement, this formal, solemn statement made before this House and this country by the late Sir John Macdonald in connection with this matter, and we have the assertion made by the Minister of Justice last night in his place in this House that, though this reference had been made and this opinion obtained the Government of the day did not propose to shirk its responsibility. They have judicial or quasi-judicial duties to perform, and I am not going to haggle with the hon. member, as to the words he may use to attempt to draw the line where law ends and facts begin or where policy touches upon judicial right. There is hardly a question settled that does not involve these considerations. But whatever they may involve, whatever the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada or, if it should be carried to the Privy Council, whatever the decision there, if they act upon it they act upon it with their full responsibility to the people directly for their act. They do not and they cannot shirk that responsibility. They have no desire to do so, and, Mr. Speaker, the whole sum and substance of this debate so far, the whole of the explanation made here to-day reveals simply this that a combination has been made, a partnership has been formed, the lion and the lamb are lying down together. I do not know which is the lion or which is the lamb exactly. The hon. gentleman from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has spoken of the Government being between the devil and the deep sea. I do not know in this case who is the devil or who the guardian of the ocean wave. But there is one thing perfectly certain—the Government have adopted the course which commends itself to the good, sound common sense of those who have a right to be considered the guiding spirits of the people. We are asked, what was the use of obtaining this decision if there is not going to be remedial legislation? The Prime Minister of to-day did not wait to come before this House to give his answer. He took the earliest opportunity at the meeting in the city of Toronto, and he laid down there the doctrine which he and his colleagues are prepared to stand or fall by. That is to say, that the constitution of this country, the rights of the majority and the rights of the minority, the rights of the provinces and the rights of the people, whatever rights there are within the four corners of our constitution, this Government is prepared to give to whomsoever they are due. We are prepared to stand by the constitution. That is the answer we give to hon. gentlemen opposite, that is the information we give to this country, and we give it in good faith, fearlessly, knowing that the people of Canada like men to stand up frankly and speak out without hedging. But hon. gentlemen opposite who have no responsibility at all, say that it is not their place to indicate a policy. They would ask the sworn Minister of the Crown, in face of a crowd, to state what his Government were going to do, knowing at the moment that the man was sworn first of all to give his advice to the Governor-General. But those who are under no responsibility never stood out until to-day when we saw the hon. member for L'Islet and the hon. member for Simcoe sailing in the same boat, both animated by the same desire that animates all those hon. gentlemen opposite from the province of Quebec, who cheered so lustily their beloved friend from Simcoe to-day, and who are agreed only upon one aim—anything to beat Sir John Thompson and destroy his Government.

Mr. DEVLIN. I will begin with one of the last points made by the hon. gentleman and attend to it. He found fault because we introduced into this discussion subjects which had been debated a long time ago. He found fault, also, with the hon. Mr. Mercier, because that gentleman had spoken strongly, had felt strongly, against the execution of one of his countrymen, Louis Riel. I would like to ask the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) if he did not feel strongly on the same subject; if he did not speak strongly upon the same subject; if he did not himself, before he had become a deputy judge, when he was yet in private life, make a representation to the Government that Louis Riel must not be hanged?

Mr. CURRAN. Never.

Mr. DEVLIN. I will read the hon. gentleman's words. In a letter addressed about that time to the "Catholic Record," he said :

It is well known that the Quebec Conservative members urged the Government, with all might, to spare the life of Riel, if possible. I was one of those who did so.

It is quite possible the hon. member may not have sympathized altogether with the views entertained by Mr. Mercier in regard to this matter; but the fact remains that he was one of those who protested against that execution, and according to his own words, which I have just read, asked the Government to spare his life. Sir, the same opinion was entertained by many others in this country, that it was a wrong thing at that time to bring about the execution. But I will not dwell upon this subject. The hon. gentleman found it very strange indeed that to-day the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) should have as his associate in supporting the motion the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). He forgot that while both the hon. gentlemen are making charges against the Government, the one makes the charge because the Government humbugged the Protestant people of Ontario; and the other makes the charge because the Government deceived and humbugged the Catholic people of the province of Quebec. Let me ask this hon. gentleman, what about his own associates? What has he been doing for years back in order to keep his party in power, if not appealing to a certain vote in the province of Quebec? Let me ask him, who finds it strange that these two gentlemen will vote together upon this question. If he turned to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) did he find him a strange associate? Does he find it against his conscience, as a prominent and distinguished Irish Catholic, to serve under the late Grand Master of the Orangemen of the Dominion, the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Does he find it against his conscience, does he find it hard to have as his new-born brother, the present Grand Master of the Orangemen of the Dominion of Canada? We can imagine what a happy family they are. Now, I am not going to defend the hon. member for North Simcoe, he does not require that I should defend him; and I have no doubt that if he found I was defending him, he would feel pretty much the same as O'Connell once felt when the London "Times" praised him, he thought it was time to examine his conscience. I was just speaking of the associates of the hon. gentleman. Did he forget the fact that one of his dearest associates— one upon whose support he relies the most now that he is at the door of the Cabinet— did he forget that that hon. gentleman, only yesterday, expressed, in a sense well understood by the House, his utter contempt for the language of a very great portion of the people who elected the Solicitor-General to this House? The hon. member for North

Mr. DEVLIN.

Bruce (Mr. McNeill) rose and said that it was hard for hon. gentlemen to listen to a language they could not understand, thus striving to throw contempt upon the French language. What an associate for the hon. member, and delighted he is to have him, too. Did he forget that during the past twenty years the hon. member for Simcoe was the trusted lieutenant of the very party of which he to-day is a member, that he was not only a lieutenant, but he was higher in the grade, he was president of the Conservative Association of the province of Quebec, and that his commission from his leader, no doubt, was to appeal to a certain section of the province of Ontario, while the late Minister of Public Works, the present member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) had for his mission to appeal to the people of the province of Quebec on different lines? What have we to do in this crisis? asks the Solicitor-General. And he answers: We have to stand by the Constitution. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me suppose that the Liberal party at this moment were in power, that the leader of the Opposition, under such circumstances, were the leader of the Government, and were to say: Let us stand by the Constitution. Would there be in this House, or for that matter, outside this House, one who would worry more strongly the leader of the Opposition than the same hon. member for Montreal Centre? What the people want to know is whether the hon. gentleman is going to stand by the rights of the minority in Manitoba, by those who are oppressed? You could not find on any platform in the province of Quebec a more violent agitator than the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), yet notwithstanding that fact, during the hour and a half during which he addressed this House he omitted to tell hon. members in what direction his sympathies incline. I should like to ask him if his sympathies are with the hon. member for Simcoe, or are they against the views held by that hon. gentleman? The hon. member for Montreal Centre says he is a judge. Let an election take place to-morrow and he will cease to be a judge, and he will again champion the cause with which he was allied before. I followed the hon. gentleman's speech closely, and apart from the attack he made on the late Premier of the province of Quebec and his Government, and the allegation that those gentlemen had trafficked in sacred things, I do not find, to tell the truth, much in the hon. gentleman's speech that requires an answer. In regard to his allegation that those hon. gentlemen trafficked in sacred things, I should like to ask him in what sacred things they trafficked. He further said that an indignant people arose in their might and drove them from power. What a wonderful memory my friend possesses. He appears to forget the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Agriculture, and occupies a seat in the Senate. What was the reason which placed him there, if not to reward him for an act, which hon. gentlemen opposite, when the act happened to be against themselves, had condemned. It was not an indignant people that drove Mr. Mercier from power; it was an autocrat in the city of Quebec who drove him and his colleagues from office. I take more than ordinary interest in the Manitoba schools question because of my personal convictions on the subject, and because I have sympathy with the views entertained by a large majority of the people whom I represent. The first speech I delivered in this House some few years ago was in support of the views that I am advocating to-day. I held that the Catholics of Manitoba were entitled to their schools and I endeavoured to establish a case in their favour on that occasion. The whole question is a simple one in one sense of the term. The Catholics of Manitoba had, previous to the province entering Confederation, schools by practice, just as the Protestants of the province had their schools. When the new province entered Confederation the people were given the assurance by the Government that all their civil and religious rights would be protected and respected. The Government, in a letter which was read here yesterday by the hon. member for L'Islet, gave the assurance to Archbishop Taché that all such liberties would be respected. A good deal has been said to-day on the subject of the New Brunswick School law, and it was said there was an analogy between the two cases. I hold in my hand a letter written by Mr. James Fisher, addressed to the people of Russell county, in Manitoba, which embodies excellent remarks on the New Brunswick case in 1872. He said:

I have already made casual reference to the action of Mr. Costigan in Parliament, in seeking to have the Act of 1871 disallowed. He made his motion in that direction in the Commons, in May, 1872, Sir John Macdonald being then in power. After several amendments had been moved and voted down, Mr. Colby, a leading Protestant Conservative representing a Quebec county, and now a member of the Dominion Government, moved an amendment in these words:

"That this House regrets that the School Act recently passed in New Brunswick is unsatisfactory to a portion of the inhabitants of that province and hopes that it may be so modified at the next session of the Legislature of New Brunswick as to remove any just grounds of discontent that now exist."

This amendment was on the 29th May, 1872, carried by the decisive majority of 117 to 52, the leaders on both sides, if I mistake not, supporting it. I may explain that while in New Brunswick before the passing of the Act complained of, there were no denominational schools established by law, yet the educational authorities had been allowed to pass regulations which practically enabled Catholics to have denominational exercises in the public schools in the Catholic districts. Mr. Edward Blake in the course of the debate on the question used this language:

"Although the system of denominational schools was not actually established by law, still denominational teaching in the public schools was practically acknowledged, and he (Mr. Blake) deeply regretted the course pursued by the Legislature of New Brunswick in inserting in the new School Act a clause providing that every school under that Act shall be non-sectarian. He understood that there were large sections of New Brunswick where the people were exclusively Roman Catholics, and the elasticity of the old law allowed these communities to conduct their schools according to their own views. The change in the law as it operated upon the Roman Catholics was a harsh change and was not necessary to satisfy the scruples of Protestants."

The House of Commons by a vote of more than two to one declared its assent to these views of Mr. Blake. In other words, the Commons of Canada protested in the strongest terms against the action of the Legislature of New Brunswick in depriving Roman Catholics of privileges that they had practically enjoyed in the past, although they had no legal sanction for them. It was enough for the Parliament of the Dominion to know that for many years the minority had "in practice" at least, enjoyed these advantages, to move its members to protest thus earnestly against their being taken away.

But this was not the end of it. The matter came up once more in 1875, the Liberals being then in power. Mr. Costigan moved at this time, not for disallowance, but that the Queen be memorialized to amend the British North America Act so as to provide that the Catholics of New Brunswick should have the same rights in respect to separate schools as were enjoyed by the Catholics of Ontario and the Protestants of Quebec. To this motion an amendment was proposed by Mr. Cauchon, seconded by Mr. Blake, as follows:—

"That on the 29th May, 1872, the House of Commons adopted the following resolution [setting out the one already quoted]. That this House regrets that the hope expressed in said resolution has not been realized, and that an humble address be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, embodying this resolution, and praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to use her influence with the Legislature of New Brunswick to procure such a modification of the said Act as shall remove such grounds of discontent."

This amendment was carried by the solid vote of 114 to 73. More than half of the minority voted against it, not because of want of sympathy with the complaints of the Roman Catholics of New Brunswick, but because it did not go far enough to meet such complaints. Mr. Costigan himself, as well as all the French Conservatives, voted against the amendment.

We complain of the manner in which the Government has been dealing with this question, and we are condemned for our action; but here is a gentleman who assails the Government of that day in the strongest possible manner; and to-day he has not a word to say, nor his colleague, the representative of Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), a word to say for those who have been denied and who have been deprived of those rights. At the last general election, it is well known that in the province of Quebec this was the question "par excellence" before the people. We were told by the supporters of the Government on every platform in the province that if the disallowance did not occur, at least justice would be meted out to the Catholics of the province of Manitoba, and that remedial legislation would be introduced. Nearly three years have passed since then, and we find that we are only at the beginning of the question. It is said that previous to the last general election the Hon. Mr. Chapleau visited Monseigneur Taché in Montreal and made promises to him in the name of the Government. The hon. the Prime Minister denied that the other night, and he said that that hon. gentleman was not authorized by the Government, was not delegated by the Government, was not sent as a missionary by the Government in the name of the Government to Monseigneur Taché to make any special pledges in connection with this question; but, Sir, the question remains: Was he delegated by the late Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald, to Monseigneur Taché? Is it not just possible that when Mr. Chapleau had that interview with Monseigneur Taché—an interview in which certainly promises were made in regard to remedial legislation—is it not just possible that Mr. Chapleau was sent by the late Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald, and that Monseigneur Taché considered him as one authorized, and as one qualified in every way to give assurances on the part of the Government? At all events the Archbishop of Manitoba then accepted these assurances. Yesterday the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), whom I regret not to see in his seat to-night, spoke at considerable length, and in the latter portion of his speech he referred to a former Fenian movement. What special connection that had with the question before the House I cannot see, unless he felt desirous perhaps to in some way or another wound the feelings of the Irish Catholics in his province. He claimed in the course of his speech that Mr. Greenway was returned to power by means of bigotry, and he went on to say that Mr. Greenway was a Liberal, and had all the sympathy of the Liberals of the province of Quebec. I cannot speak for all the Liberals of the province of Quebec; but I know that this same charge was made in the county of Pontiac, last May, by Mr. Desjardins, who was then member of this House for L'Islet. He stated that the Liberals of the province of Quebec, and myself in particular, were in sympathy with Mr. Greenway, and when I pointed out to him that every time this question came up before Parliament I had spoken in support of the rights of the minorities, while he was silent and evidently afraid to express his views on it, he retorted that when he returned to the House this present session, that the people would find him a strong advocate and champion of the rights of Manitoba Catholics. Mr. Desjardins has since been called elsewhere for his reward. Now the same statement is repeated by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), and if all that is said be true he has already his commission and his reward in his pocket. I can tell that hon. gentleman that it was not only in this House that I expressed strong dissent from Mr. Greenway's views on this question, but that in the month of October last I had the pleasure of delivering an address in the city of Winnipeg, and there, Liberal as I am, not only did I express my dissent from the action of Mr. Greenway, but I condemned that action in as strong terms, indeed in much stronger terms, than ever the member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) used in respect to it. His attack last night—because it was a covert attack, and a sneer at the Irish people of the province of Manitoba, as well as of the Irish people of the Dominion generally—was perhaps intended to obtain the sympathy of the Controller of Customs. Perhaps it was done in order to get that hon. gentleman on his right side; but I do not think that that attack will in any way elevate him in the esteem of the Irish Catholics, who feel upon this very question of Catholic schools at least as warmly and at least as deeply as ever the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) did. Let it be borne in mind that the Irish Catholics in that province are numerous; that they take a deep interest in this question, and that they are, I will not say as strong, but much stronger advocates and much more sincere advocates of this very question than ever the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) was. In reply to the charge made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), that we were using this question merely as a matter of agitation, I have this to say: When the Mackenzie Government was in power is it not a fact that the present Secretary of State almost hounded out of public life—I will not say almost, because he did succeed in doing so—the hon. gentleman who was during that regime Speaker of this House, because of the attitude he had taken in regard to the New Brunswick school question? And what was the attitude of Mr. Speaker Anglin and of the Liberals who were then in power? It was simply that they followed out a course which to-day would receive the approval of the present Government; and, Sir, there was not in the province of New Brunswick, there was not in the province of Quebec, there was not in any province of the Dominion a stronger agitator than this same Secretary of State, who made this very question his stock-in-trade during five years of that time. But of course in 1882 he entered the Government. He became a Minister. That question was set aside at once, and from 1882 up to this date I have never heard him make one reference in regard to that subject, and, Sir, from 1890 up to this moment, when the Manitoba school question has been before this Parliament and the people of the country he has been silent; yes, Sir, as silent as it is possible for man to be. It is true he did make a reference to the subject at a speech delivered a few months ago at a banquet in St. John, and that reference was: that he was not going to divulge the policy of the Government. We are now told that the Government has no policy on this question as yet, that they have got to get their instructions from the Supreme Court before they will formulate a policy; but nevertheless the hon. gentleman stated at that time that he was not going to make known the policy of the Government. How wonderfully changed he is from the champion of other days. He is not going to tell us what he thinks. How wonderfully changed from the champion of 1871, of 1872 and of 1875, who stood up in this House and nobly—I am not ashamed to say it—and nobly and boldly championed the rights of his co-religionists in the province of Manitoba. He was the champion of every Catholic cause in those days, because in those days he was not in the Government; but to-day, when he enjoys the sweets of office, mum is the word—he is not going to divulge the policy of the Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Do not be too sure that I am going to be long mum.

Mr. DEVLIN. Well, I am glad that the hon. gentleman is going to cut his silence short. It is about time for him to explain his attitude on this question. The country has been looking to the hon. gentleman, who was a champion in the days gone by, to come out again and champion the cause which he espoused, and by means of which he was carried into prominence and into public office. He says: Do not be too sure that he will be long mum. Does he mean to inspire anybody on this side with fear? It is with hope. Let us hope that he will come back to the course that he adopted long years ago, and followed out as strongly as any man ever did. Why, Sir, he was not only the champion of Catholic schools in the province of New Brunswick, but he had that question up in almost every province in the Dominion. Well, to-day when this matter is before the House will he stand up and tell us that the Catholics of Manitoba have his sympathy in this matter? Will he stand up in this House and tell us that the champion of former days will again take the crown and place it on his noble brow and say that the Catholics of Manitoba shall be properly championed, and that the schools of which they have been deprived shall be restored to them? Will he stand up in this House and say that sooner than see them deprived of those rights which are granted to them by the constitution of the country, which had been promised and assured to them, he will leave this Government? Not much. I can understand why he has not given perhaps as much attention to this subject as he might do. He has been engaged, no doubt, with the question of the Lieutenant-Governorship of New Brunswick; a question which he has to settle. But this school question is much more important, and is dear to the hearts of the Catholics of Manitoba. It is a matter which is not only engaging the attention of the Catholics of Manitoba, but is engaging the attention and the anxiety of nearly 2,000,000 of Catholics in this Dominion. We were asked this afternoon by the hon. member for North Simcoe what right have the Government to force upon the people of Manitoba separate schools. I could retort by asking him what right have the Protestants of Manitoba to force upon the Catholics of Manitoba schools in which they do not believe, and to which in conscience they cannot send their children. Sir, we are told that the schools are non-sectarian—that they are not religious schools. I hold that they have no system of public schools in the province of Manitoba. I hold that they have simply a continuation of the Protestant schools; nothing else; and I can prove it very easily. I even go further, and say that in the province of Manitoba the very school buildings are at times used as Protestant chapels, and that the Catholics are required to contribute their taxes in support of those buildings. In this country, in which it is supposed there is no established church, the Catholics are obliged to contribute their taxes for the maintenance of buildings which are nothing short of Protestant chapels. A complaint was sent a short time ago to the Attorney-General of Manitoba in regard to this very matter—that in certain districts the school buildings were used simply as places of worship for the Protestants, and this was his reply:

Sir,—Your letter of the 6th instant to the Chief Clerk of the Department of Education, complaining that certain trustees of school districts allow their school houses to be used for religious services, has been referred to this Department. The control of the school houses is completely in the hands of the trustees. In the case you refer to I think you had better make your complaint to the trustees in question.

Now, that seems very reasonable, indeed, to refer the matter to the trustees themselves, but let us understand what trustees they might have to deal with. I do not say that all the trustees in Manitoba are alike, but I know that there must be, in that province, trustees who are not very favourable to the Catholics, for there is certainly a very strong and bitter feeling prevailing there. Why, it was only the other day that an Orange lodge in Manitoba, no doubt under the control of the Controller of Customs, the bosom friend and associate of the hon. Secretary of State, and the hon. member for Montreal Centre, passed this resolution:

That this Grand Lodge heartily sympathise with their Protestant brethren in Ireland on account of the threatened Home Rule affliction about to be imposed upon them by British or rather un-British statesmen; that we strongly protest against subjecting our fellow Protestants to the tyrannical and unscrupulous rule of Irish priesthood.

Let us imagine, for an instant, Catholics going to men of this persuasion who happen to be their trustees, and protesting against the school house being used for such purposes. Why, Sir, we might as well expect a fair decision from them, as we might expect from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, backed up as he is by the Controller of Customs, a fair decision in so far as the Catholic school question of Manitoba is concerned. I have said that these schools are not public schools, that they are simply Protestant schools; and I say that it is a rule that Protestant instruction must be given in those schools. It was only a few weeks ago, on the 13th of January, that the following motion passed almost unanimously in the Anglican Synod then sitting in Winnipeg:—

Resolved, that while the synod would gladly see a larger measure of religious teaching in our schools than at present prevails, it trusts that every effort will be made, both by educational authorities and by the Christian public generally to render the existing regulations on the subject as widely operative and efficient as possible.

That, whatever changes in the school policy of this province may in future be required for a satisfactory solution of the educational problems with which, as a province, we have to deal, this synod stands pledged to resist to the utmost any attempt to secularize our public schools.

It would be quite possible, Mr. Speaker, to adduce other evidence, strong evidence, too, but I think that is sufficient to show that religious training and religious instruction is given in these very schools, and we Catholics are pronounced bigots, and are charged with intolerance, because, forsooth, we cannot see fit to contribute to the support, and to sanction the existence of these schools. I, for one, protest against this state of things. I, for one, in the name of, and having the same convictions as the 2,000,000 of Catholics in this country, protest against any such intolerance as this, that the Catholics in this Dominion shall be forced to contribute to the support of Protestant schools. The hon. member for North Simcoe to-day, although speaking very strongly, forgot to tell us that he himself, a short time ago, admitted the principle of separate schools. I do not know what object he has in speaking so severely against them to-day, when, a short time ago, he spoke in favour of the principles of separate schools; but, before giving what he said on the subject, let me give the views of some of the strongest advocates of what they are pleased to term, national schools, but which are not national schools in fact, but merely Protestant schools. The Rev. Dr. Gavin, in opposing the proposition to abolish separate schools, at the Equal Rights convention, of 1889, said:

Their Protestant brethren in Quebec had also in some sense the system of separate schools—

—In some sense—they have that system in the largest sense—and they must take extreme care they did not take—ground that would be injurious to their brethren in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Lee, of Sherbrooke, speaking at the same convention, said:

If separate schools were taken from the Roman Catholics in Ontario, the majority in Quebec would demand that the Protestant schools be taken from the minority in that province. He did not think the convention could demand the abolition of separate schools in this province and ask that they be retained in Quebec.

And Dr. Davidson said:

It is easy for you to say do away with separate schools—easy for you in your strong Protestant province of Ontario.

—The same thing could be said of Manitoba—

But as you are strong be merciful, and remember your weaker brethren in the province of Quebec. While we may blot out the 238 separate schools occupied by Roman Catholics in Ontario, you also desire to blot out the 980 separate schools occupied by Protestants in the province of Quebec.

And, further on, at the meeting of the synod of the Church of England, the Bishop of Rupert's Land said:

I would infinitely prefer that the Roman Catholic church should continue to have separate schools under satisfactory conditions for the state, to our schools being without religious instruction.

It is evident, then, from these quotations, that the sentiment against purely national and non-religious schools is strong. Now, Sir, even Mr. Hughes, I think a brother of the hon. gentleman sitting in this House, is in favour, if I mistake not, of separate schools too. He said, if the report in the "Mail" of his speech at the convention is correct:

So long as separate schools existed legally it would be impossible to interfere with them, but the citizens should demand that until a man objects, he should be ranked as a supporter of the public schools.

Mr. Dalton McCarthy's views were given in 1889. He said:

He endorsed all the things set forth in the platform of this association, especially that the separate school law was to be placed beyond question of doubt.

He was then a strong supporter of the separate school law. He continued:

The Roman Catholics had a right to separate schools, and he would not, for the present, raise his voice against that right guaranteed to them by the Constitution.

Strange to say, these were the views held by this gentleman then, and they were strong views, backed by leading divines both in the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. Now, I am prepared to admit that all the mischief in connection with this school question in the province of Manitoba is due to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). He went to Manitoba some years ago, and delivered a speech in Portage la Prairie. He was then, if I mistake not, the president of the Conservative Association of the province of Ontario, and consequently in strong sympathy with his party. Sir, we need not only consider that, but, years ago, the hon. gentleman gave utterance to still stronger language than he has used to-day. He was a leading light in the party opposite, and, for such utterances, and for having endeavoured to promote strife, he was not read out of the Conservative party. Speaking of the French Canadians, he said :

Do not we find the French to-day in the province of Quebec more French than they were when they were conquered by Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham? Do they mix with us, assimilate with us, inter-marry with us, read our literature or learn our laws? No; everything with them is conducted on a French model and while we may admire members of that race as individuals, yet as members of the body politic I say, they are the great danger to our confederacy.

That was the view he entertained of the French-Canadians, when he was a leader in the Conservative ranks, and, if I mistake not, in 1886 or 1887, during the campaign of that year, this speech was given out as campaign literature in the Conservative interest. I say to the hon. gentleman that you have no more right to impose a state school than you have to impose a state church. There is not an hon. gentleman in this House who would ask Catholics to support a Protestant church. They would think such a demand unworthy of them, and I hold, in this matter of religious education, for education is intimately connected with our faith, we are bound to hold to that belief. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to-day said, why not settle this matter at once? That was our prayer in 1890. We came to the Government and asked them to settle this question, and have asked them repeatedly to do so ever since. Petition after petition was sent asking them to settle this question, and upon no good ground could these petitions be refused. Denominational schools, which gave rise to such a strong protest in Winnipeg, exist even in England and Scotland and in Ireland. The hon. member for Winnipeg said last night that the Act of Mr. Greenway was barbarous, cruel and oppressive. Now, how does he propose meting out justice, how does he propose to punish Mr. Greenway? He proposes to punish him in this way, by asking us to approve of everything Mr. Greenway did in connection with this matter, and warns the Government against interfering. I know perfectly well that there is a very strong feeling in the province of Manitoba on this question. I visited that province in the month of October and saw what was being done there. The so-called national schools, which are erected at the public expense, are certainly magnificent buildings. Both Catholics and Protestants contribute to their support. But are these schools frequented by Catholics at all? No. The Catholics also have their own schools, under the control of various committees and the Christian Brothers, and these schools are to-day acknowledged to be at least equal to the public schools. Now, as I have said, we had a perfect right to put this matter before the House. We do not believe in coercive legislation, and that is the kind of legislation which has been enacted in Manitoba. The Legislature of Manitoba has gone beyond—there can be no doubt about it—the limits which were promised to Archbishop Taché in 1870, and the province of Manitoba has rendered it not only difficult but extremely unpleasant for Catholics to emigrate there and remain in that province. We asked the Minister of Public Works, who is also a champion, like the Secretary of State, to carry out the promise which he made that he would see that his colleagues in the Cabinet would show themselves patriots if the rights of Catholics in Manitoba were not respected. These are the gentlemen who were the champions in days gone by, who declared that no matter who would undertake to assail the rights of Roman Catholics in Manitoba or any other province they would find themselves met, not only by denunciations, but by the fiercest opposition that honest men could give. We have a right to ask them, who are not judges in this matter, but politicians, to see that the political constitution of the country shall be respected, and that the men who live in Manitoba to-day shall not, simply because they are Roman Catholics, be trampled upon, but shall receive the same measure of justice meted out to those of every other denomination. The French-Canadians are entitled to this respect, not only for their schools, but for their language which was abolished; they have a right to have restored to them those privileges which were promised to them and which were guaranteed to them and in respect to which they received such strong assurances

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have only a few words to say upon this question, Mr. Speaker. From the first I did not intend to make any long speech on the question; I did not think it was necessary. The only question, in my mind, was whether, as one who had given some evidence, perhaps, of equal value, and of as long standing as that of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat of devotion to the cause of the minority, I should exercise my right to express my strong disapproval of and my strong protest against the motion moved by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) on this question. I have no objection that the hon. member for L'Islet should play second fiddle to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I have no objection to the hon. member for L'Islet joining hands with the member for North Simcoe in making any attack upon the Government of the day. We all understand, or ought to understand, what political tactics mean and what members of Parliament are entitled to resort to in a warfare of a legitimate character. But I protest against the member for L'Islet making use of a subject and a principle that ought to be dear to him and is dear to the people of his own province, to drag that principle in the mire in order to make the compact he has made in bringing this motion before the House. He made a speech, but he did not speak to this resolution. His remarks were not followed by the resolution which might have been expected of him. I was glad to listen to the speech of the hon. gentleman. On many phases of the question he uttered sentiments that awakened sympathy in the hearts of many gentlemen, in fact, of every fair-minded man in the country. On some points I disagreed with him. He spoke of the rights of minorities in his own province and in the province of Manitoba; and he did more. He indicated that the usefulness of the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition was gone, and that in the future it would be the hon. member for L'Islet to whom the minorities throughout this broad Dominion would look as leader in this question and as champion of their rights. And how is he going to fight this question out? He was going to appeal in the great province of Ontario to the old Tory party, to the Protestants of that province and appeal to their sense of justice and fair-play. But what is the meaning of his appeal? Where is the platform he has laid down and the policy he has foreshadowed on this subject? He expresses regret, and asks us to join in that expression, that the Government has followed the course it has followed in this matter. Does he say or does he ask this House to say that the Government ought to be condemned because they have not disallowed the Act or because they have not proposed any remedial legislation from his point of view? Not at all. His friend, the member for North Simcoe would not go that. It has been stated already, and very few in this House will doubt the accuracy of that. But we can understand it is such a resolution. The hon. member for North Simcoe has been most cruel to my hon. friend from L'Islet, because he has torn the mask from that resolution to-day. What does he say? Not one word about the speech of the hon. gentleman, not even the poor compliment of making a reference to the very clever speech of the hon. member for L'Islet, but his reference is to the resolution. He says it is not such a resolution as he would have moved. But we can understand it is such a resolution as he can accept in the hope of the support of the hon. gentleman from L'Islet and his new friends behind him. It is not such a resolution as fully gives expression to the views of the hon. member for North Simcoe, but it is a skeleton that is accepted by both. I can see the hon. member for North Simcoe with that skeleton, dressing it up to suit the tastes of those who accept the views the hon. gentleman wishes to express. But I would like to see my hon. friend from L'Islet go back to the county of L'Islet, or any of the other counties for which he undertakes to speak here to-night, and dress up that skeleton and make it acceptable there. No, Sir, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) well said that this agitation of the hon. member for L'Islet had brought forth a mouse. Even that poor little animal does not belong to the hon. member for L'Islet, it is the mouse of the hon. member for North Simcoe. We are asked—who are supposed to entertain feelings of sympathy with the minority in any part of this country on that or any other question—to pin ourselves by our votes to that resolution. I do not propose to do it. The hon. gentleman also made, perhaps, not an intentional misrepresentation, but he went rather in the line my young friend representing the county of Ottawa (Mr. Devlin) followed up so well to-night. He opened up by leaving the impression from what he read of the speech of the hon. George Brown when this question was under discussion—when he and the Liberal party with whom he was, the hon. gentleman says he is now, associated, or who are now supporting him in this motion—that Mr. Brown's sympathies had been and were at that time with the principle of separate schools. That is true of that particular time, but not before, nor was it very prominent afterwards. The Bill of 1863 that gave separate schools to the province of Ontario was the Bill of the Conservative party, opposed and fought over every battlefield through the province of Ontario by the Liberal party, and by none more strongly than by the gentleman whose speech was quoted by the hon. member for L'Islet. And if he had quoted a few words further he would have found that justice had been done, so far as the question of separate schools were concerned, by the Hon. George Brown. He felt that it was a compromise, and gave his reasons for accepting it. After giving his reason, which the hon. gentleman read, Mr. Brown went further, and said:

I admit that from my point of view that is a blot on the scheme before the House.—

The scheme of Confederation was then before the House.

—It is confessedly one of the concessions from our side that have to be made to secure this great measure of reform. But surely, I for one have not the slightest hesitation in accepting it as a necessary condition of the scheme of Union, and doubly acceptable must it be in the eyes of gentlemen opposite, who were the authors of the Bill of 1863.

There is a clear admission, there is the settlement of that disputed fact which has often been discussed in Ontario. The Conservatives recognized the justice of the case of the minority of Ontario, and they settled it in 1863. The friends of Confederation provided for a guarantee in the Confederation Act for the minority of Ontario as well as the minority of Quebec. However, I am not going to go over the grounds that have been so well covered already; but I wish to say that this motion now before the House deserves no consideration on the ground of its sympathy with the minority of Manitoba. I have been asked by the hon. member for Ottawa county (Mr. Devlin), who just addressed the House, whether I was going to remain silent, as I had been silent since 1882; and he said that before 1882 I was the champion of Catholic rights when a private member, that I rode into office on that question, and that since I entered office I was silent and could not be heard from. Well, I am sorry to lose even the good opinion of my young friend from the county of Ottawa. I had entertained the hope that though he started off with a certain spirit of antagonism on his arrival here, he had thought better of it since, and was disposed to treat me more fairly. But to-night he did not treat me fairly; he imputed motives to me that he would not like to accept himself. To-night he treated me as one who was influenced entirely by personal interests, and intimated that I played the part of a demagogue. It is foreign to my nature to do so. I have convictions strong enough, and courage enough with my convictions, to act upon them, and I have too much pride in myself to stoop to play the part of a demagogue. The hon. gentleman also put another question. He wanted to know if I was now going to say a word to save the rights of the minority of Manitoba. How does he want me to save their rights? Is it by throwing their destiny into hands of hon. gentlemen with whom I find him associating now? I might make the mistake, if experience had not already taught me how dangerous it is to trust them. The hon. gentleman has forced me to go a little outside of the question, to give him my reasons why I do not place much trust in the gentlemen alongside him, and around him, upon this question. He accused me of having hounded the Hon. Mr. Anglin from my province on this very question, while I was playing the part of an agitator. I never hounded Mr. Anglin or any other man. I never came in contact with him, to have a dispute with him, except twice in my life. I did meet him in his own county, where I knew he would be elected by 600 of a majority, in order to contradict a statement and repudiate a charge of cowardice that had been made against me. That was not playing the part of a demagogue; it was the part of a man who was determined to face his enemies under any circumstances. I came in contact with him another time when he charged me in the House making use of an argument similar to the argument the hon. gentleman had used to-night—not personal to myself, but to my hon. friend the Solicitor-General. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa county made certain allusions to our association with gentlemen occupying positions in the Cabinet. He wondered how the Solicitor-General could be associated with the Controller of Customs, or with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He must also wonder how the Secretary of State could be in the same company, I suppose. Well, Sir, in this country, I hope that while there may be individual exceptions, and while there may be localities where narrow and contracted views are entertained—I hope and believe that people generally feel that the country is wide enough and there is room enough for us all to live in; that in the business transactions of every-day life we do not stop to inquire whether a man is a Protestant or a Catholic, whether he is an Orangeman or a Freemason, or anything else. We look upon it as a matter of course that men holding different religious views may be in the same Cabinet. One of the reasons why I quarrelled—if you can call it a quarrel—with the hon. gentleman whom he named, and whom I would not now refer to if I had not been attacked, was akin to the very fact which the hon. gentleman now reproaches me with. He attacked me once some years ago in the House because I went into the county of East Hastings to say a word for an hon. member who was then running an election, who was on the same side of politics as myself, and who had shown his sympathy with me upon this very question, which has always so deeply interested my young friend from the county of Ottawa. I was charged with inconsistency in saying a word for an Orangeman. But I pointed out to the hon. gentleman at that time, to the amusement of the House, that he should not consider that inconsistent, because if he did he was equally inconsistent himself when he ran with King Coram, the head of the Orangemen, and went into an Orange hall at Piserinco and stood on the same platform with him. Now, there was nothing wrong in that; but if a Liberal Irishman can go and stand on a platform in an Orange hall, and under the banners and the paraphernalia of an Orange lodge, and appeal to their support, why should not I go and give my help to my friend, Mr. White, in East Hastings? So there is not so much in that argument as the hon. gentleman thinks. Now, I come back to give my reasons why I think the hon. gentleman should not expect me to place too much reliance upon the professions of his party on the school question. He went over the ground very carefully, and traced the history of what he was pleased to term my agitation on this question, and he brought it up to the time when I made my last motion in this House. But to make the story complete, I must mention that it was no part of a demagogue I was playing when, in 1873, I proposed a motion on that question, not such a skeleton as is this resolution here, but a fair and square test of the question, also indicating a remedy. I pressed it against the wishes of my political friends, regardless whom it hurt. A vote was taken upon it in 1873, and it was a vote for disallowance of the amendments that were passed in the meantime. Under the school law of 1872, in those sections where the Catholics were in a majority they still could free themselves from taxation, because the power of taxation rested with the ratepayers. While this question was pending, an Act was passed, making the legislation more oppressive; and in 1873 I came back again to Parliament. The Conservative Government were then in power. I know that, with very few exceptions, the Liberal party voted with me on that question. They voted on it clearly and distinctly, and Mr. Anglin could not tell me before the vote took place how many members would support our motion, while I could tell him how many votes in support of it from this side of the House. Not a vote was given from that side of the House, until a majority was shown against the Government, then we had the whole Liberal party with us, and we carried by thirty-five majority for disallowance. Sir John Macdonald resigned that year. The Liberal Government came into office. We expected, then, of course, that they would carry out the principle for which they had voted, and which they had been the means of having adopted. I thought the assurance given to Bishop Sweeney when he was here would be carried out, namely, that "We, the Liberals, can do nothing now but express sympathy, but if we were in power the whole matter would be settled in ten minutes." Well, those hon. gentlemen were then in power. Subsequently, I was asked to move in this matter. I was not silent; I declared I would do so. It appears to have made a difference with some hon. gentlemen who were then sitting on this side of the House, but it made no difference to me. Some hon. gentlemen, however, attacked me then as a demagogue, as a member who was endeavouring to embarrass the Liberal Government. I pursued my course as before. I can give the hon. gentleman some more history. The English-speaking members at that time called me into their rooms to consult me in regard to the motion I had on the paper. They congratulated me in the name of the Catholics of the Dominion for the action I had taken. They pledged themselves to me to vote against every amendment that might be moved as an obstacle to prevent my motion being submitted to the House, and they decided that it was their bounden duty to stand by my motion and carry it through. The debate continued during one or two days, and Thursday was fixed by the leader of the Government, Mr. Mackenzie, as the day on which a vote would be taken on the question. Thursday came. Mr. Anglin was Speaker of the House, and he could not afford any help to me. Mr. Renaud had been defeated, and I stood alone for my province. But the final fight came. We had a speech, I remember it well, from a gentleman who is not now in the House, and he made such a strong appeal that it had an effect on the Government of the day—he was a Protestant member, who has since passed away, by name, Mr. Gordon, but I forget the constituency he represented, a Liberal, and he was determined to support the motion as he had supported it when in Opposition. At that hour I could have carried the motion by twenty-one or twenty-five majority. The Government saw the position in which they were placed. Mr. Mackenzie moved the adjournment. I knew what that motion meant. The adjournment was followed next morning by a caucus, and without any explanation, those members who had pledged me their support told me they could support me no longer. I was called a demagogue for introducing that motion, and it was voted down in favour of an amendment which threw our case out of Parliament. And yet the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Devlin) says I used this question to get into office, and that I am silent now. I am not silent on this question. At the same time, I have no desire to take up these matters and make it unpleasant for my friends on the other side of the House. I fear no man living on this question. I can face any demagogue who ever would dare to raise this question up before my face, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to do so. So much in regard to the history of the New Brunswick school question. The hon. gentleman asked me if I had sympathy with the people of the North-west. I sympathize with them very deeply. My sympathy will, perhaps, go further, and prove more beneficial and efficacious than that of the mover of and the supporters of this resolution. If this resolution were carried, I can see difficulties in the way of the hon. member for L'Islet. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) will get out of the difficulty very well; he will dress his skeleton to suit himself. Do those hon. gentlemen expect they will ever be questioned by their electors? Suppose the electors should ask the hon. member for Simcoe: How did you happen to defeat the Government on this question? His reply would be: Well, of course, I allowed the hon. member for L'Islet to make his speech, but, as regards the resolution itself, it was moulded to suit my views. Of course, the first part simply says:

That this House desires to express its dissatisfaction at the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba School question.

If the resolution stopped there it could easily be seen that there was very little inconsistency. They ventured a little further and said:

And in assuming to be possessed of judicial functions.

That, of course, is in harmony with the article written in the "Canadian Review," which the Solicitor-General quoted tonight. The resolution was perhaps cunningly framed, but I do not think it was framed in such a way as to be complimentary to the intelligence of this House. For my part, I have no hesitation in saying that the resolution will be condemned by every man who has the slightest sympathy with the cause of the minority in the province of Manitoba. It may be justified by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), when he tells his constituents that he was obliged to water it down in order to catch the hon. member for L'Islet and his friends, but the hon. member for L'Islet can never justify his action, and I question whether the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Devlin) will be able to defend his vote on the resolution which he intends to record to-night.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman did not reply to the charge I made. I asked him particularly in regard to the Manitoba school question.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. Before discussing the motion before the Chair, I wish to repudiate in the most formal terms the assertion made by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), and repeated by the Secretary of State, that the hon. member for North Simcoe had anything whatever to do with drawing the resolutions submitted from this side of the House. The motion had never been exhibited to the hon. member for Simcoe, he did not know anything about it until it was placed in the hands of Mr. Speaker and read by the hon. member for L'Islet in his place. It was known in this House that the hon. member for Simcoe had a motion of his own to propose, and it was a race between the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) as to priority. Not only was this known in the House but all over the country, and it was referred to in three-quarters of the papers supporting the Government, and even in one of to-day's papers I find the following paragraph referring to the race between the hon. member for Simcoe and the hon. member for L'Islet :

It was five minutes to four when the Orders of the Day were reached. Mr. Dalton McCarthy and Mr. Tarte each had his eye fixed on Mr. Speaker, who calmly contemplating the lofty ceiling of the chamber and the moment the assistant clerk called "No. 21, House again in Committee of Supply," both the member from L'Islet and the member for North Simcoe started to rise. The member for L'Islet is the most active and sprang to his feet with the agility of a cat and called out "Mr. Speaker," before the member for North Simcoe had quite got into an erect position. He sank back calmly while Mr. Tarte held the floor and began rattling away in French, keeping up his speech until ten minutes to six when he started to repeat his speech in English, but Mr. Speaker thought it useless to commence a second speech at that hour so he called it six o'clock and left the Chair.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe, that we will never hear it any more pretended that the motion which is now in your hands has been prepared by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), with the assistance of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). It is a motion which had its origin in the facts which are known to the House from the papers which have been brought down by the Government. It is an original motion of my hon. friend, and in a few moments when I have dealt with some of the observations of the hon. Secretary of State, I will give the reasons why I am going to support it. The hon. Secretary of State has referred to a certain question which is perfectly well known to me, not as a member of this House, but as a member for the press. When the New Brunswick School question was discussed in this House, I was the chief editor of the chief Catholic newspaper in the province of Quebec, "Le Nouveau Monde," which was published in the city of Montreal, and whose director was the Grand Vicar of the Bishop of Montreal, Mr. Lamarche. I was the political editor, and he was the director of the paper under the control of the Bishop of Montreal. The people of the province of Quebec at that time sympathized with the Catholics of New Brunswick, who had been deprived of their rights. When the school law was passed by the New Brunswick Legislature there was a great agitation in the province of Quebec, and we, the French and Catholics, stood up for the rights of the minority in the province of New Brunswick, as we are prepared to do now for the rights of the minority in Manitoba. The New Brunswick question was brought before the House by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan), now the Secretary of State, and in 1872 he moved a resolution asking for disallowance of the Act. There were several amendments and sub-amendments to the motion, and finally the question was referred to the law officers of the Crown to obtain their opinion, and also to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to obtain its opinion, if possible. The session was prorogued, and the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in England was asked upon the question: whether the Catholics of the province of New Brunswick had any rights, under the law, to denominational schools. The opinion of the law officers of the Crown was that they had not. The session of 1873 opened, the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had not been obtained, and the question of disallowance again came before the House, and the present hon. Secretary of State moved the disallowance of the Bill. This motion was carried in the House by a very large majority against the Government. The House of Commons, including almost the whole Liberal party, declared that it was necessary, that it was good policy, that the Government should disallow the Act passed by the province of New Brunswick. The Government would not yield, but what were they doing in the meantime? They were communicating with the Catholic Bishops of Canada who were assembled at Quebec, and the Government obtained from the Bishops an order not to proceed further in the question, because they did not intend to push the Government any more in reference to it. And, Sir, the Hon. Mr. Masson, who later became a member of the Conservative Government, came to the Hon. Mr. Dorian, and told him, with tears in his eyes, that he could not push the Government any further in the matter. And at the same time I, as editor of the "Nouveau Monde," received a message from the Rev. Mr. Lamarche, the director of the paper, saying: "Stop agitating the question, because the Bishops will not press the Government further." To-day the hon. Secretary of State pretends to express surprise, because some weeks or some months after, the Bishops of the whole country had desisted from resistance, and had decided not to push the Government further, because there was a change of Government and there was to be a change of policy. There is no justice in such a contention as that. I say that after the action taken by the Bishops in 1873, they had no right, neither in 1874 nor in 1875, when the Liberal Government was in power, to demand from the Liberal Government what they would not exact from the Conservative Government.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I desire to crave from this House its indulgence if I offer in my own vernacular tongue some remarks in explanation of the vote I am about to give. Owing to the somewhat lengthy nature of these observations, I feel I could not do full justice to the subject in trusting to my imperfect knowledge of the English language. The contention of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. La-Rivière), yesterday evening, as re-echoed in the speech of the hon. the Solicitor-General (Mr. Curran), this afternoon, was that we, on this side of the House, lack sincerity in the motion brought forward by the hon. member for L'Islet, and which is now under consideration. Our position is well and clearly defined, as I will endeavour to show in a few words. We hold, first, that the Catholics of the province of Manitoba have certain rights which have been outrageously infringed upon; secondly, that it was the bounden duty of the Government, on the receipt of the Greenway Acts, to quash and disallow them. That this power of disallowance may be exercised within the twelve months is admitted beyond dispute, nor can it be questioned, as this power is conferred by the Constitution on the Government of the Dominion. In the third place, we contend that the time for disallowance having once expired, it was the duty of the Government to enact such remedial laws as were calculated to redress the grievances complained of by the Catholics of Manitoba, instead of resorting to various shifts and subterfuges, now as in the past, to avoid dealing with the just claims of the latter. I say the Government are open to censure and condemnation by this House and by the country for the policy of deception they have pursued up to this day. I, for one, am ready to assume my own share of responsibility and to give my support to any Government whose first article shall be the redress of the wrongs inflicted upon Manitoba; on the same ground, I would pledge myself to support no Government whose programme would be to withhold from the Catholics of Manitoba the just treatment they are entitled to and which they are denied to-day. On the other hand, should the hon. the Minister of Justice pledge himself to adopt such remedial legislation as might be calculated to redress the grievances complained of, in accordance with his report of the 21st March, 1891. I am ready, with a large number of my friends, from this side of the House, to lend him a loyal support, thus making up the loss of a few votes among his own friends, brought about by this honest course of action. Now, I beg to submit to this House and to the country a review of the history of the whole question. The better to understand the actual state of affairs, as well as the guilt of the Government, it will be necessary to go as far back as the origin of the rights so shamefully betrayed. Through the course of this historical review of the question, will necessarily occur many quotations, which, I venture to hope, will not tax too much the attention of the House. It is very material to the debate that the facts of the case should be grounded on good authorities. Prior to its being erected into a province, the territory of Manitoba formed a portion of Rupert's Land and justice was administered by the Hudson Bay Company through a governor and a council composed of leading citizens of the country. An almost boundless freedom prevailed everywhere, as the Hudson Bay Company only interfered with the citizen to the extent necessary to protect its commercial interests. The population included some thousand French and English half-breeds, a few hundred Indians, Catholic and Protestant, half civilized through religious agency. But whilst the political organization was still embryonic, not so with the religious organization, which was in full swing, having a bishop, and a clergy, nuns, convents, colleges and an hospital. They also had their primary schools wherein their children imbibed the rudiments of knowledge; the whole, under the control of the bishop. The means necessary for the support of these schools were supplied either by voluntary contributions from Catholics, or by monthly school fees or out of the funds of the church. The Protestants enjoyed an almost exactly similar organization, with bishop, ministers, churches, colleges, hospitals. Their schools were supported on the same principle as the Catholic schools. These schools were fully controlled by Protestants, just as Catholic schools were under the exclusive control of Catholics and entirely supported by them. There were to be found neither school laws, nor public schools properly so-called, nor grants or state subsidies in behalf of the schools. Let us hear the evidence given by Bishop Taché in the case of Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg, as taken from the Sessional Papers of 1891 (No. 63, pages 4 and 5):

1. That I have been a resident continuously of this country since 1845, a priest in the Roman Catholic Church, and as bishop thereof since the year 1850, and now am the Archbishop and Metropolitan of the said church, and I am personally aware of the truth of the matters herein alleged.

2. Prior to the passage of the Act of the Dominion of Canada passed in the 3rd year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, chapter 3, known as the "Manitoba Act," and prior to the Order in Council issued in pursuance thereof, there existed in the territory now constituting the province of Manitoba a number of effective schools for children.

3. These schools were denominational schools, some of them, being regulated and controlled by the Roman Catholic Church, and others by various Protestant denominations.

4. The means necessary for the support of the Roman Catholic schools were supplied to some extent by school fees paid by some of the parents of the children who attended the schools and the rest was paid out of the funds of the church, contributed by its members.

5. During the period referred to, Roman Catholics had no interest in or control over the schools of the Protestant denominations and the members of the Protestant denominations had no interest in or control over the schools of Roman Catholics. There were no public schools in the sense of State schools. The members of the Roman Catholic supported the schools of their own church for the benefit of Roman Catholic children and were not under the obligation to, and did not contribute to the support of any other schools.

6. In the matter of education therefore, during the period referred to, Roman Catholics were as a matter of custom and practice separate from the rest of the community, and their schools were all conducted according to the distinctive views and beliefs of Roman Catholics as herein set forth.

Two Protestant witnesses, one of whom, Mr. Polson, has been a resident of Winnipeg ever since 1840, and the other, Mr. John Sutherland, since 1837, bear witness to the same fact. In each of their affidavits it is stated in identical terms :

2. That schools which existed prior to the province of Manitoba entering Confederation were purely private schools and were not in any way subject to public control nor did they in any way receive public support.

3. No school taxes were collected by any authority prior to the province of Manitoba entering Confederation and there were no means by which any person could be forced by law to support any of said private schools. I think the only public revenue of any kind then collected was the customs duty, usually four per cent.

The utmost harmony had never ceased to prevail among the various elements constituting the local population, and was still prevailing in 1869, when the Canadian Government, after purchasing from the Hudson's Bay Company their rights to the territories, attempted to take possession of the country without any more regard for the rights of the people than if they had been part and parcel of the territory purchased from the Hudson Bay Company. In 1869, the Canadian Government, on the conclusion of their negotiations with the Hudson Bay Company, but prior to the annexation by the Imperial Government of Rupert's Land and the North-west Territories to Canada, caused to be adopted by Parliament a most extraordinary legislation for the civil government of the new country. Both executive and legislative powers were centred in the hands of a Lieutenant-Governor and a council appointed by the Federal Government and acting under instructions from the latter. The Government enacted a statute, intitled "An Act for the temporary government of Rupert's Land and the North-western Territory when united with Canada," which altogether ignored, the very existence of a population, which had not been consulted as to their wants and their desires. Neither the bishops nor the influential men of the territories had been asked their mind about the new constitution, the main provisions of which read as follows :—

(2.) It shall be lawful for the Governor, by any order or orders to be by him from time to time made, with the advice of the Council (and subject to such conditions and restrictions as to him shall seem meet) to authorize and empower such officer as he may from time to time appoint as Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, to make provision for the administration of justice therein, and generally to make, ordain and establish laws, institutions and ordinances, as may be necessary for the peace, order and good government of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein.

(3.) The Lieutenant-Governor shall administer the government under instructions from time to time given him by Order in Council.

4. The Governor may, with the advice of the Privy Council constitute, and appoint, by warrant under his sign manual a Council of not exceeding fifteen, nor less than seven persons to aid the Lieutenant Governor in the administration of affairs, with such powers as may be from time to time conferred upon them by Order in Council.

This was sheer spoliation of all the political, civil and religious rights of the population ; it was tantamount to depriving the inhabitants of their title of British subjects ; it was a virtual abolition of the laws, customs usages and institutions of the country ; it created a despotism so much the more dangerous that it would be wielded by strangers to the country. This extraordinary legislation was assented to on the 22nd June, 1869. It rapidly spread throughout the North-west, and aroused a feeling of terror which is easily understood. The new legislation, as you may see, levelled to the ground all local institutions and entrusted to a stranger, surrounded with strangers, unknown and very likely hostile to the people, with the care of legislating and creating institutions in behalf of a people the very desires, customs, needs and circumstances of whom they were utterly ignorant of. The people feared, on very just ground, lest their national and religious rights should be destroyed ; and lest the full liberty they had hitherto enjoyed should give place to the intolerable tyranny of a strange yoke. These apprehensions developed into a certainty when the news reached them of the appointment of the Hon. William McDougall as Lieutenant-Governor, a man known for his bigotry, who had never missed an occasion of ventilating his antipathy and hatred for the institutions of the province of Quebec, and who, on this ground, had become perfectly obnoxious to the French Catholic element of the country. The new potentate, accompanied by an armed force, was making ready for taking possession of the country, prior even to its being admitted into the Dominion of Canada. From that very moment the half-breeds resolved upon a very determined opposition, not through a spirit of rebellion, but with a view of safeguarding their rights and securing from Canada the official recognition of said rights. In a letter dated the 2nd November, 1869, addressed to Mr. D. Smith, one of the officers of the Hudson Bay Company, Governor McTavish gives the following evidence as to the grounds which actuated the half-breeds in their resistance :

There has been, during the autumn, considerable agitation among the Canadian half-breed population here regarding the government to be established here. They seem to have been fully, if not correctly, informed of how the government was to be composed, and they seemed to think that, from what was told, their interests would be overlooked and their religion interfered with.

I need not enter into further details as to the subsequent events. Let it suffice to say that Mr. McDougall was stopped at the frontier ; that the Half-breeds, after having respected the Hudson Bay Government, were forced by circumstances to form a provisional government ; that in February, 1870, a convention of delegates from all the French and English parishes met at Winnipeg to draw up the list of the rights the people of Red River required to be guaranteed previous to their entering into the Confederation ; that at such convention three delegates, Messrs. Ritchot, Black and Scott were authorized to negotiate with the Canadian Government, the Bill of Rights being the basis of negotiations ; that the Imperial Government forced the Canadian Government to enter into negotiations with the Half-breeds and to grant them the required guarantees as to their rights and privileges. Bishop Taché, who owes to his high ecclesiastical position and his long protracted residence in the North-west Territories, the paramount influence he enjoys among the people, left Rome at the instance of the Dominion Government and was entrusted with the difficult mission of pacifying the country, a task which he undertook with the most solemn pledges which His Lordship thus revives in the memorial addressed to Lord Stanley, Governor-General of Canada, on the 12th April, 1890 :

"I was in Rome at the time, and at the request of the Canadian authorities, I left the Ecumenical Council to come and help the pacification of the country. On my way home I spent a few days in Ottawa. I had the honour of several interviews with Sir John Young, then Governor-General, and with his ministers. I was repeatedly assured that the rights of the people of Red River would be fully guarded under the new regime ; that both Imperial and Federal authorities would never permit the new-comers in the country to encroach on the liberties of the old settlers ; that on the banks of the Red River, as well as on the banks of the St. Lawrence, the people would be at liberty to use their mother tongue, to practice their religion and to have their children brought up according to their views.

Equipped with these pledges, Bishop Taché proceeded to Winnipeg, held interviews with the leaders of the insurrection who were finally prevailed upon to send delegates, as requested to do by the Federal authorities, who should proceed to Ottawa in order to debate the terms of admission of the territories into the Confederation. The delegates chosen were Messrs. Ritchot, Black and Scott, who left for Ottawa with credentials from the President of the Provisional Government of Assiniboia, and a Bill of the rights they were to secure from the Government in behalf of the people. This list, which included nineteen articles, was almost identically similar to that agreed upon in November, 1869, and submitted to Mr. McDougall. It included, among others, the following articles :

17. That the schools be separate, and that the public money for schools be distributed among the different religious denominations in proportion to their respective populations, according to the system of the province of Quebec.

16. That both the English and French languages be common in the legislature and in the courts ; and that all public documents as well as acts of the legislature be published in both languages.

17. That the Lieutenant-Governor to be appointed for the provinces of the North-west be familiar with both the English and French languages.

18. That the Judge of the Supreme Court speak the English and French languages.

The whole list of rights was examined and discussed article by article, and here is what took place during the official negotiations when the articles concerning the separate schools and the French language were taken up for consideration, such as related by His Grace Archbishop Taché, in his letter of the 22nd December, 1889 :

The question of separate schools, as demanded in the seventh article of the List of Rights, was taken into consideration ; the delegates were promised that they would not only have the benefit of the provisions of the "British North America Act," but they might rest assured and might assure the people of the Red River that separate schools would be guaranteed to them.

The recognition of the use of the French language as an official language was conceded as expressed in the 16th article of the List of Rights, with the promise that attention would be paid to the demands of the 17th and 18th articles, as fact it has been done, if not completely, at least enough to satisfy the interested parties.

The Government and the delegates having finally agreed, the stipulations of the treaty were incorporated into the Manitoba Act of 1870, which was brought up before the House as a treaty and to which, consequently, no amendment was offered. The following are the provisions of the Manitoba Act respecting the national and religious rights of the French half-breeds :

Article 22.—In and for the province, the said Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions :—

(1.) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the union.

(2.) An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any Act or decision of the Legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority, affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

(3.) In case any such provincial law as from time to time seems to the Governor-General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor-General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then, and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor-General in Council under this section.

Article 23.—Either the French or the English language may be used by any person in the Debates of the Houses of the Legislature, and both those languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process, in or issuing from any court of Canada established under the British North America Act, 1867, or in any or from all or any of the courts of the province. The Acts of the Legislature shall be printed and published in both those languages.

With a view to give effect to the pledge given the delegates that the Catholics of Manitoba would profit by the provisions of the British North America Act relating to separate schools, the Constitutional Act was made to apply to this province by the 2nd article of the Manitoba Act, as follows :

(2.) The provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, shall except those parts thereof which are in terms made, or, by reasonable intendment, may be held to be specially applicable, or only to affect one or more, but not the whole of the provinces now composing the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by this Act, be applicable to the province of Manitoba, in the same way, and to the like extent as they apply to the several provinces of Canada, and as if the province of Manitoba had been one of the provinces originally united by the said Act.

Now, the Constitutional Act includes under section 93, subsection 3, the following provision :

3. Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law at the union, or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

The Manitoba Act, consequently, was framed with a view to securing to the French element the full control of their schools. This view of the question is endorsed by the Hon. W. McDougall, who was chiefly instrumental in bringing about the settlement of this question; at the date of the 1st August, 1892, speaking of the judgment of the Privy Council which had just then been rendered, this gentleman said :

We certainly intended that the Catholics of Manitoba, or whichever denomination might be in a minority, should have the right to establish and maintain their own schools. You see the words "or practice" were inserted in the Manitoba Act, so that the difficulty which arose in New Brunswick, where separate schools actually existed but were not recognized by the law, should not be repeated in Manitoba. And then the right of appeal to the Federal Parliament was given to make assurance doubly sure.

This Act was assented to in May, 1870. It was spread broadcast throughout the province. Political agitation subsided, order was restored, because the people had been granted the guarantees they had petitioned for. When Governor Archibald repaired to Winnipeg, he found all the doors opened, and the warmest welcome from the hearts of all the inhabitants, and without any struggle, became the idol of the people. From the above well established historical facts, I gather : 1st. That the Half-breeds took up arms in 1869 and 1870 to secure the guarantee of their religious and national rights, that is to say, the right to the use of their own language, to the practice of their religion and the maintenance of their separate schools. 2nd. That Canada has entered officially into negotiations with them, and has granted them the guarantees asked for, not only for the present but also for the future, pledging the honour of the Crown to the effect that "both Imperial and Federal authorities would never permit the newcomers in the country to encroach on the liberties of the old settlers." 3rd. That the Canadian Government would not have entered into possession of these territories had not these pledges been given; in fact, were the "sine qua non" condition of the Union. 4th. That it is the bounden duty of the Imperial Government to see to it that these pledges, accepted in all good faith, be never violated. The new Lieutenant-Governor Archibald, who was well aware of all the Government's negotiations and pledges, set resolutely to work and to organize the new province. He sought the advice of the most influential citizens of Manitoba, caused writs to be issued for the elections, constituted the legislature and called together the Parliament. The new Parliament set the important task of laying the corner stone of a new social organization in accordance with the principles which had presided to the creation of the province, and of establishing the institutions best calculated to promote the happiness and the welfare of the people. Educational laws, viewed in this light, undoubtedly hold the first rank. In 1871, the Local Government brought up in the House a measure establishing a system of education and schools subsidized by the state, on the plan of the system introduced into the province of Quebec in 1869 by the Hon. Mr. Chauveau, the then Prime Minister of our province. This system consisted in the appointment of a board of public instructors, composed of an equal number of Catholics and Protestants, and divided into two sections, designated under the name of Catholic section and Protestant section, having respectively a superintendent of Catholic schools and a superintendent of Protestant schools. The province was divided into twelve Catholic districts and twelve Protestant districts, the ratepayers of which were to choose three Catholic school trustees in each Catholic district and three Protestant school trustees in each Protestant district. The moneys received from the Catholic rate-payers were directly and exclusively applied to the benefit of the Catholic schools, and the moneys collected from the Protestant rate-payers were exclusively applied to the benefit of the Protestant schools. The money voted by the Legislative Assembly for educational purposes was divided in proportion to the school population of each district. Under no circumstances could a Protestant ratepayer be held to contribute to the support of the Catholic schools, nor a Catholic ratepayer to the support of Protestant schools. To make a long story short, the two religions were on a footing of perfect equality and given the full and exclusive control of their respective schools. There may have been later on, a few modifications as to the minor points of the system, but, on the whole, the principles remained untouched till the year 1890. It may be said that the promises made in 1870 have been fulfilled and honoured up to that fatal date of 1890, with which I have now to deal. I beg to be allowed to register here as a most important statement of the question, the results of the census of 1870, carried on under the auspices of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald in 1871, the total population was found to number 11,960 souls, thus subdivided :

Catholics.....	6,240
Protestants.....	5,720
Catholic majority.....	520

Although they were in a minority, the Protestants were allowed an equal share with Catholics in the distribution of the school grant, as well as in the number of school districts established under the statute. I now come, Mr. Speaker, to an epoch of civil omen in the history of our country; I have to deal with a brutal and tyrannical deed; I have to relate how the Catholic minority of Manitoba has been the object of a violent aggression from the Protestant majority. Justice, law, good faith, honour of the Crown solemnly pledged notwithstanding, the new comers did encroach on the liberties of the old settlers. Without any ground, without even the excuse of a single abuse or of the least inconvenience, the majority of the legislature of Manitoba have enacted a law by which the social edifice built up in 1870 is uprooted, all the Catholic schools are closed, and their property confiscated, separate school organization is swept away, and the full control of the schools is given over to the Provincial Governments. The Board of Public Instruction is abolished, and along with it disappear the two sections and the two superintendents. The separate school boards, respectively formed of Catholics and Protestants, give way to common school trustees; the moneys from the taxes paid by the Catholic and Protestant ratepayers are no longer applied to the maintenance of Catholic and Protestant schools, respectively, but is engulfed in the common school fund. Religious teaching is proscribed from the schools which, heretofore denominational are, in the words of Archbishop Taché, in reality but a continuation of the Protestant schools. With a single stroke of the pen, the majority nullifies the results of the Half-breed uprising, the negotiations of the treaty concluded in 1870, and of the Manitoba Act. It gives the lie to the royal word, wrests violently from an important element of the population their most sacred rights, and robs them of the results and fruits of twenty years' labours and sacrifices. And the proof is found in the following clause of the Public School Act :—

179. In cases where, before the coming into force of this Act, Catholic school districts have been established as in the next preceding section mentioned, such Catholic school districts shall, upon the coming into force of this Act, cease to exist, and all the assets of such Catholic school districts shall belong to, and all liabilities thereof be paid by, the public school district.

History seldom offers examples of similar deeds of violence perpetrated by a majority on a minority. One should have to reach as far back as the religious wars of the Middle Ages to find a parallel. Vainly did the minority protest and appeal to justice, to good faith, to honour to public interest endangered by the struggles such action would give rise to. The majority remained unmoved, and the great wrong was perpetrated. Still, all was not apparently lost beyond redemption. Had not the Constitution set up, above aggressive provincial majorities in a more serene sphere, a higher power? Had not the Federal power been equipped by the Constitution with the proper means necessary to ensure protection to the rights of minorities? Could it be suspected for one moment that the sacredness of the pact of 1870 would not be respected even by its very promoters? Certainly not, answer with a common consent the Catholics of Manitoba. Let us apply for a remedy to the Federal Government to whose guardianship evolves the duty of protecting the rights of minorities; let us apply for redress to the Government who have pledged their word that they would never allow the new comers to molest us. In virtue of the British North America Act the Government have the power of disallowing, without exception, any legislation enacted by provincial legislatures, within the twelve months following the receipt of copy of said laws by the Secretary of State. If ever there was enacted an iniquitous law, calculated to trouble public peace, to sow into the minds of the people the seeds of discontent, and to shake Confederation to its very foundations, it was beyond doubt this law doing away with the separate schools. And if ever a Government were warranted in using their power of disallowance it was surely in the case of such a patent injustice. It was under this belief that the Catholics sent up petition upon petition to the Governor-General in Council. The law abolishing the separate schools had been assented to on the 31st March 1890. On the 1st April, the members of the Catholic Committee of the Board of Public Instruction, headed by M. M. Taché, sent up a petition to the Federal Government, concluding as follows:—

The Catholic section of the Board of Education in and for the province of Manitoba, most respectfully and earnestly pray His Excellency the Governor-General in Council that said last mentioned Act be disallowed to all intents and purposes, and your petitioners will ever pray.

On the 26th April, Messrs. Girard, Senator, and LaRivière, M.P., added the following postscript to the above petition:

The undersigned, respectively members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, fully endorse the contents of the present memorial, and earnestly join in the prayer therein contained.

On the 12th April, Archbishop Taché wrote to the Governor-General to bring to his consideration the solemn undertakings of his predecessor, and urged him to interfere in the matter of a legislation which he thus characterises:

I consider the laws just enacted by the Legislature of Manitoba to abolish the Catholic schools and the official use of the French language as an unwarranted violation of the promises made before, and to secure the entry of this country into Confederation.

I consider such laws as a death-blow to the very constitution of this province. They are detrimental to some of the dearest interests of a portion of Her Majesty's most loyal subjects. If allowed to be put in force, they will be a cause of irritation, destroy the harmony which exists in the country and leave the people under the painful and dangerous impression that they have been cruelly deceived, and because a minority they are left without protection, and that against the promises made twenty years ago by the then immediate representative of Her Majesty: "Right shall be done in all cases."

I, therefore, most respectfully and most earnestly pray that Your Excellency, as the representative of our most beloved Queen, should take such steps that, in your wisdom, would seem the best remedy against the evils that the above-mentioned and recently enacted laws are preparing in this part of Her Majesty's domain.

One month later, another episcopal voice was heard, from the province of Quebec this time; it was the voice of a man who had the undoubted right to plead in favour of the victims of those unjust laws. Nobody ignores, Mr. Speaker, the important mission work carried on by Bishop Lafèche in the North-west Territories and Manitoba. During the space of fifteen or twenty years of a labourious life he has evangelized the Indian tribes of the Territories. On the 12th May, Bishop Lafèche wrote to the hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau), a letter in which he urged him to interfere, in the most pressing terms:

SIR.—The unjust law which the Manitoba Government have caused to be adopted against the Catholic and French-speaking population of that province, abolishing separate schools and the official use of the French language went into force on the 1st May instant. The protests of the minority, so unworthily treated by this infamous law, have been laid before the Dominion Government in order to secure it disallowance and the protection guaranteed them under the Constitution. I trust the Government, of which you are a leading member, will lend a favourable ear to this appeal to its authority, and protect the rights of that minority by disallowing this Act, which has been characterized as persecution by Protestants themselves. The manliness with which you repelled a similar attempt in the North-west Territories, inspires me with confidence that you will not fail to take a firm stand in this case also. The Federal compact was evoked to maintain the abolition of separate schools in New Brunswick a few years ago, and nevertheless, the Catholic Ministers, who were then members of the Dominion Government, declared to the Bishops, that they were prepared to resign on that question, and it was only through respect for the autonomy of the provinces that that iniquitous law was then tolerated.

His Lordship winds up his letter by an appeal which has remained unanswered:

I am confident, therefore, that the Ministers charged with the care of our religious and national interests in the Dominion Government, will to-day exhibit the same firmness as their predecessors, and that they will succeed in convincing their colleagues that if they desire to maintain a good understanding between the divers races, and insure peace and stability of Confederation, they must do justice to the minority in Manitoba, and protect them against the iniquitous persecution inflicted on them by the majority at the instigation of a few fanatics.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman skips an important portion of the letter.

Mr. BEAUSOLIEL. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman will quote as much as he pleases when his turn comes.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Let him, at least, say so.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) This portion of the letter which the hon. gentleman refers to, bears on the New Brunswick school question, which has nothing to do with the Manitoba school law.

In my humble opinion, this is a far more serious matter than the Riel question, inasmuch as it involves a direct violation of sentiments dearest to the heart of man, his love for his native tongue and his religion.

Trusting that no Catholic French Canadian member of the Government will in the face of the country, take the responsibility of supporting a law so evidently unjust and hostile to our nationality.

I remain, etc.,
L. F., Bishop of Three Rivers.

We have just heard, Mr. Speaker, an eloquent, authorized and patriotic voice, rising up from our own midst, from the province of Quebec, and beseeching the French representatives in the Federal Government to do their duty and disallow the laws enacted by the Manitoba Legislature, such prayer being grounded on the two feelings the most deeply rooted up in the human heart: one's faith and language. In the month of June, 1890, a convention of delegates representing all the Catholic centres of Manitoba met at St. Boniface, under the presidency of Senator Girard. They drew up a protest against the wicked laws which deprived the minority of their schools and of the use of their language. They then adopted a petition to be sent up to the Federal Government, concluding as follows:—

Therefore, your petitioners most respectfully and most earnestly pray that it may please Your Excellency in Council to disallow the said Act and adopt any other measure, or grant any such redress as may seem fit to Your Excellency in Council.

We have consequently four petitions, instead of one petition, as stated yesterday evening by the hon. the Minister of Justice. In the province of Quebec as in Manitoba the public voice was loud in claiming the disallowance not of the obnoxious legislation of the Greenway-Martin Cabinet. Why did not the Federal Government interfere, and wherefore did they not disallow this legislation? Their power of disallowance is established beyond a doubt and is not questioned. What was the point in question? A deed of unwarrantable aggression, an open violation of the treaty of 1870, and of the spirit, if not strictly of the letter of the Manitoba Act, had been perpetrated, and the consequence was that the public mind and peace were disturbed. The Government had but one course open to them; it was their duty to insure the respect due to the constitution and to protect the rights of the minorities. Could there ever be a clearer and more evident case for the Government to interfere. But, far from interfering, hardly did the Government acknowledge receipt of the very urging petitions which poured in, literally covered with signatures of bishops, priests, senators, members of the Commons, members of the Local Legislatures, and by thousands of Catholics. What happened from the 4th April, 1890, date of the first petition, to the 16th March, 1891, when the Government apparently determined upon a course of action? I am sorry to be under the necessity of stating such a fact; but I have no hesitation in saying, Sir, that from that very moment, the Government had decided not to interfere in any way; that they only sought to find out the means through some intrigue, to conjure up the storm ready to burst down upon their heads, should an immediate reply be given. Sir John A. Macdonald had decided that general elections should take place about the beginning of 1891. The general elections were, at any cost, to be safely gone through, previous to giving a definite answer. Should the Conservative party be successful, the whole matter would be amicably settled; but, in case of reverse, it was good policy to let the Liberal party face the storm that would be raised by this much vexed question. There is a gap of some ten or eleven months between the presentation of the petitions and the solution given and agreed upon in March, 1891. What took place during that lapse of time? Official papers are silent; but it is well known that incredible attempts were made to prevail upon Archbishop Taché and the other bishops to give up their claim for disallowance, under the pretense that such a measure would stir up a dangerous agitation, and to accept that, the case be referred to the tribunals before which, it was alleged, the Catholics were sure to obtain redress and justice. As the delay for disallowance is one year, Archbishop Taché determined upon resorting to law, and running the chances of a law-suit. In the month of October, 1891, a case—a test case—was brought up before the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench, to have the school law declared unconstitutional. The case is known as the case of Barrett vs. The City of Winnipeg. On the 24th November, judgment was rendered by two judges (Killam and Taylor) against one judge (Dubuc), dismissing the application to quash the by-laws of the city, and holding the law to be constitutional and valid. It is well known that after this first failure in the courts, the bishops applied again to the Government for disallowance of the law. They had experienced how dangerous it is to rely on the glorious uncertainty of the law. The Government, on the other side, insisted upon the case being appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. Archbishop Taché replied:

We shall, perhaps, have judgment given in our favour in the Supreme Court; we venture to hope so; but should, unfortunately, we not carry the cause, the delay for disallowance being expired, the evil would be without remedy.

It was then that the Government gave it to be understood that the evil would not be without redemption, on the ground that an appeal always lies to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision of the Local Government which would prejudicially affect the rights and privileges of the minority as to educational matters. The Government pledged themselves to interfere, in case of a failure, and Archbishop Taché exacted that this pledge should be inserted in an official paper since made public, and that all the charges of the trial should be borne by the Government. These points being settled, Archbishop Taché no longer insisted upon the petitions asking for disallowance being taken into consideration. The proof of these negotiations is to be found in a letter from Archbishop Taché, quoted by the hon. member for L'Islet, in which His Grace says: "Sir John Thompson has pledged himself officially and publicly to give us redress and others have given private pledges none the less solemn." The proof is equally to be found in the immediate carrying out of the programme previously agreed upon. The elections went off, but without any hostile interference being offered by the bishops; the Government were upheld by a small majority of twenty-five votes. Now, mark well what occurred: In the case of Barrett vs. the city of Winnipeg, judgment had been pronounced, on the 24th November, 1890, against the Catholics, and the matter was lying dormant since that time. The elections took place on the 5th March, 1891. On the 7th March, 1891, two days after the elections, the case of Barrett was entered in appeal to the Supreme Court. On the 16th March, Archbishop Taché sent in a new petition signed by all the bishops of the country, praying for, no longer the disallowance of the Greenway laws, but a remedial legislation. The conclusions of this petition read as follows:

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray Your Excellency in Council to afford a remedy to the pernicious legislation above mentioned, and that in the most efficacious and just way.

On the 21st March, the hon. the Minister of Justice reported on the last petition, as well as on the Greenway legislation, in which report, after analysing the Acts and recording the fact that the case having been brought up before the tribunals of the province, the court had decided in favour of the constitutionality of the Acts and that an appeal from that judgment had been asserted, headed:

If the appeal should be successful these Acts will be annulled by judicial decision; the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba will receive protection and redress. The acts purporting to be repealed will remain in operation, and those whose views have been represented by a majority of the legislature cannot but recognize that the matter has been disposed of with due regard to the constitutional rights of the province.

If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained, the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsections 2 and 3 and section 22 of the "Manitoba Act," quoted in the early part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the "British North America Act" in relation to the other provinces.

Those subsections contain in effect the provisions which have been made as to all the provinces, and are obviously those under which the constitution intended that the Government of the Dominion should proceed, if it should at any time become necessary that the Federal powers should be resorted to for the protection of a Protestant or Roman Catholic minority against any act or decision of the legislature of the province or of any provincial authority, affecting any "right or privilege" of any such minority "in relation to education."

Respectfully submitted.

JNO. S. D. THOMPSON,
Minister of Justice.

The delay for disallowance soon expired, and the only sure and efficacious means of redress at the disposal of Catholics was lost without redemption. There remained to the Catholics another sheet-anchor which was soon to be swept away. The judgment of the court in the case of Barrett vs. the city of Winnipeg reversed by the Supreme Court of Canada, was confirmed by the Privy Council of England. The consequence is that we are under a necessity of bowing to the legal fact that the Catholics, at the time of the creation of the province of Manitoba, had no rights which the Protestant majority may be bound to respect. The Catholic population were thunderstruck by the judgment of the Privy Council of England. But, could not the appeal and the interference solemnly promised by the hon. Minister of Justice be resorted to by Catholics? Undoubtedly, said to themselves the Catholics of Manitoba, and we shall insist upon immediate action being taken. On the 20th September, 1892, the executive committee of the national convention, including the leading citizens of the province, the Hon. Mr. Bernier, senator, and the hon. member for Prevencher (Mr. LaRivière), taking the initiative, addressed a petition to the Federal Government, bringing to their remembrance the pledges given to Manitoba. The memorial winds up as follows:

That at a recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England having sustained the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba, upholding the validity of the Acts aforesaid, your petitioners most respectfully represent that as intimated in said report of the hon. the Minister of Justice, the time has now come for your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsections 2 and 3 of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act."

That your petitioners, notwithstanding such decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England, still believe that their rights and privileges in relation to education have been prejudicially affected by said Acts of the Provincial Legislature.

Therefore, your petitioners most respectfully and most earnestly pray that it may please your Excellency in Council to take into consideration the petitions above referred to, and to grant the conclusions of said petitions and the relief and protection sought for by the same.

On the 31st October, 1892, Archbishop Taché and many other Catholics signed a petition asking for federal interference and detailing the rights they wished to see redressed, as follows:

4. That it may be declared that to your Excellency the Governor-General in Council, it seems requisite that the provisions of the statutes in force in the province of Manitoba prior to the passage of the said Acts should be re-enacted in so far at least as may be necessary to secure to the Roman Catholics in the said province the right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support these schools in the manner provided for by the said statutes, to secure to them their proportionate share of any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education, and to relieve such members of the Roman Catholic Church as contribute to such Roman Catholic schools for all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools; or that the said Acts of 1890 should be so modified or amended as to affect such purposes.

Here is a demand in due form of law, drawn up in as explicit a form as possible. At last are the Government going to comply with the demands of the Catholics? Have we reached the last act of the play? No man in his senses would believe it and say: 'finita la comedia.' This country is blessed with a Government composed of a group of men boasting of the most incongruous ideas, without any principles in common, bound together by no other link than selfish interest, who cordially hate each other and continually spy into each other's actions. Sitting near devoted Catholics are to be found fanatical Orangemen who never condescend to meet half-way or make any concession. The hon. Prime Minister himself no longer knows which way to turn. Anxious not to fall out with his colleagues, no longer able to control them, he looks for some new scheme and some artifice which may enable him to keep his position without apparently buying it at the expense of the sacrifice of the most sacred and evident rights of his co-religionists. He seems at last to have discovered the much coveted subterfuge; but behold in what a fix, in what an inextricable position he finds himself. In March, 1891, he told the Catholics: Go to law. The Government will bear all the expenses of the lawsuit and you will carry the cause. Should you lose, appeal to the Government in virtue of subsections 2 and 3 of the Manitoba Act, and of subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act which are evidently those established by the Constitution for your protection—in which case we will come to your rescue. The Catholics have sued and lost. They now petition the Government for redress under the recited sections of the Constitutional Act and of the Manitoba Act. But quite a change has come on. That which was obvious in 1891, lacks evidence in 1893. That which was clear at that time is now obscure. The Government have many doubts which must be cleared up. Have the Catholics acquired rights or privileges in virtue of the educational laws passed by the Legislature in 1871, when the separate school system was established? Does subsection 3 of section 93 of the Constitutional Act apply to Manitoba? Are the Government invested with the right of hearing in appeal the Catholics and of coming to their rescue? So many questions as clear and limpid for the then Minister of Justice in the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, as they are obscure and insoluble for the now Prime Minister, ex-Minister of Justice. I would be charged with exaggeration, should not I quote in full the recommendations of a sub-committee of the Privy Council composed of Sir John Thompson and the Hon. Messrs. Bowell, Chapleau and Daly. The following are the conclusions of a report of this sub-committee approved of by the Privy Council and which has been laid before the House and distributed only a few days ago. Among the questions which the sub-committee regard as preliminary are the following:—

(1.) Whether this appeal is such an appeal as is contemplated by subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act or by subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act.

(2.) Whether the grounds set forth in the petitions are such as may be the subject of appeal under either of the subsections above referred to.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL.

(3.) Whether the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in any way bears on the application for redress based on the contention that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority which accrued to them after the Union have been interfered with by the two Statutes of 1890, before referred to.

(4.) Whether subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act applies to Manitoba.

(5.) Whether Your Excellency in Council has power to grant such orders as are asked for by the petitioner assuming the material facts to be as stated in the petition.

(6.) Whether the Acts of Manitoba passed before the Session of 1890, conferred on the minority a "right or privilege with respect to education," within the meaning of subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, or established "a system of separate or dissentient schools," within the meaning of subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act, and if so, whether the two Acts of 1890, complained of, affect "the right or privilege" of the minority in such a manner as to warrant the present appeal.

Other questions of a like character may be suggested at the hearing and it may be desirable that arguments should be heard upon such preliminary points before any hearing shall take place on the merits of the appeal.

Accordingly, the sub-committee recommend that a date be fixed at which the petitioners or their counsel may be heard with regard to the appeal, and that the Government of Manitoba be invited to be represented at the hearing. But, willing as they are to hear the parties, the Ministers do not wish to pledge themselves to do right to the petitioners. What though they should be obliged to yield to evidence, and to acknowledge the existence of the right of appeal, and that the Catholics' complaint is well grounded? Here is another sample from this marvellous report of the sub-committee:

The application comes before Your Excellency in a manner differing from applications which are ordinarily made, under the Constitution, to Your Excellency in Council. In the opinion of the sub-committee, the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of a political character or involving political action on the part of Your Excellency's advisers. It is to be dealt with by Your Excellency in Council, regardless of the personal views which Your Excellency's advisers may hold with regard to denominational schools and without the political action of any of the members of Your Excellency's Council being considered as pledged by the fact of the appeal being entertained and heard. If the contention of the petitioners be correct that such an appeal can be sustained, the inquiry will be rather of a judicial than of a political character. The sub-committee have so treated it in hearing counsel, and in permitting their only meeting to be open to the public.

Who would ever imagine that the same man has penned the report of March, 1891, and that of the sub-committee of December, 1892. For it is quite evident, for all that, the hon. the Minister of Justice is the author of both reports. But let us proceed with the narrative of facts. On the 28th December the Executive Council approved of the plan of the sub-committee, had it sanctioned by the Governor-General, and fixed the date as the 21st January for hearing the counsel of the Catholics and those representing the Manitoba Government, on the famous questions suggested by the committee. As the session was to be opened on the 26th January, it was becoming that the Ministers should feign to settle the much vexed question. But the Government found out that they were going at too fast a rate, or else they were not competent judges. Shuddering at the responsibility assumed and at the necessity of declaring whether they were to interfere and redress the grievances of Manitoba, the Government retreated again, and fabricated a new subterfuge to cast on other shoulders the responsibility which was their own. On the 22nd February the Government, without any apparent cause, practically annul their decision of the 29th December, refuse to hear the appeal of the Catholics, and decide :

That the important questions of law which were suggested in the report of the sub-committee to whom said petitions were referred, should be authoritatively settled before the appeal which has been asserted by said petitions be further proceeded with.

Accordingly, order is given to prepare a factum, in the preparation of which the counsel for the Catholics and that for the Government of Manitoba should be invited to concur. Why this new falling back? Why this new change of tactics? The Act 54-55 Vic., chap. 25, provides for this reference, some one will say. Exactly so. But the sub-committee were perfectly aware of the existence of this law; the Privy Council did not either ignore it in the month of December, when they decided that the whole Cabinet should judge whether an appeal shall lie or not. I say the reason is this: The Government wish to temporize, to wear out the patience of Catholics, and, like Pontius Pilate, to wash their hands of the political crime about to be perpetrated. How far we are now from the splendid, magnificent promises of 1891! and what a disappointment the speech of the hon. the Prime Minister, yesterday evening, has proved for the House and for the country! I for one, Mr. Speaker, whilst I did not venture to hope that an energetic stand would be taken by the Government on the matter, still I did not expect that restrictions, subterfuges and shifts would be resorted to. Mr. Speaker, from a thorough search and study of all the facts and documents relating to this vexed question, I have reached the following conclusions: 1. That, as far back as 1890, the Federal Government had come to the decision of not interfering to redress the grievances of the Catholic minority of Manitoba. 2. That the Government have prevailed upon that minority not to resort to the only efficacious means of redress within their reach—the disallowance. 3. That the Government have reached this result through a promise of interference in virtue of the clauses which were declared obviously to apply to the actual case, while such promise was but a deceit, the Government having never intended to fulfil it. 4. That the actual reference is sheer mockery, a means of procrastination, and of throwing on the shoulders of others the responsibility which is their own. 5. That the Government are in justice, honour and law bound to give a hearing to the minority, to do right to them, and restore to them the rights they have been unjustly deprived of—that is to say, to restore to them the control of their schools, their portion of the Government school grant, and the exemption from contributing to the support of Protestant schools. 6. That the Government are perfectly resolved not to interfere, not to grant an appeal, not to do right to the minority—which is evidenced by the caution the Ministers have taken to reserve their political liberty of action, should it happen to be found out that the appeal exists. 7. Whatever may be the opinion of the judges of the Supreme Court, let them pronounce unanimously or not in favour of the rights of appeal. One sure thing is, that will not be any interference, because with the present combination which governs us, there is no possible understanding on that ground. There are, in the Cabinet, men who would feel happy to do right, and to leave their name in history connected with a great act of reparation. But there is no single Minister ready to give up his portfolio and to immolate himself on the altar of duty. Not, so, however, with the hostile element in the Ministry. These will resist to the bitter end, under the pretense that they are not able nor willing nor desirous of wounding the just susceptibilities of the Protestant majority. Mr Speaker, they calumniate, they slander the Protestant majority. There are to be found, truly enough, certain elements essentially hostile to whatever bears the name of French Catholic. These are fairly represented in the Cabinet. But it is none the less true that the great body of the Protestant people love to give British fair-play; and that they are rather inclined to lend their help to the weak against the great, to the oppressed against the oppressor. I want no further proof of this than in the utterances of a man who has never been suspected of favouritism to Catholics, the Hon. William McDougall. On the day following the decision of the Privy Council of England, he thus unbosomed himself, on the 1st August, 1892, to an editor of the "Free Press," Ottawa:

What the Federal Parliament or Government will do I have no idea. If the Catholics of Manitoba refuse to accept the Greenway Act, and still maintain their own schools, they ought not to be taxed for the support of public schools.

I think public opinion even in Manitoba would justify the Federal Parliament in exercising its constitutional power to grant "remedial laws" to the extent of relieving separate school supporters of taxation for other schools.

Did not the Liberal party, as a whole, under the leadership of that great patriot and distinguished statesman, Sir Oliver Mowat, uphold and defend in 1890 the Ontario separate schools? And did they not secure a valuable triumph on the Conservative opposition led in the paths of fanaticism by Mr. Meredith? Is there then no other end in view for a party but power, honour, patronage and money? A political party like a nation, lives on principles of justice and honour. A policy of expedients is short lived and leads to abysses. In this school question, the Government have resorted to nothing but artifices, intrigues, subterfuges and false pretenses. Their diplomacy triumphs over justice, right and honour. But this triumph will be of short duration. When the last act of this comic play is over, two millions of Catholics scattered throughout the Dominion will have at last their eyes opened. When the last deceitful gleams of hope which is still held out to them will have vanished away, then their anger will be terrible. We shall then enter into a period of agitation, the issue of which it is impossible to forecast. The secret history of the last ten months, from April, 1890, to March, 1891, shall one day be written, once the supreme sacrifice is over. They who will have fallen a victim to the intrigues of the Government, shall feel the necessity of vindicating their conduct, and of casting on the right parties frightful responsibilities. Unhappily, it will be too late; an irreparable wrong will have been done. It is dangerous to let the idea implant itself in the minds of the people that the Constitution is but a deceit and a fraud that it safeguards no right, and that in spite of its most obvious provisions force excels right, that the majority may with impunity tyrannize over the minority, not only in its material interests, but also in the most sacred rights of their conscience. Confederation could not long outlive such blows. Listen to the utterances of one of the leading members of this House, one of the members of the Government, when, on the 21st October, 1892, speaking with the full authority of a Crown Minister, the Hon. Mr. Chapleau thus addressed the electors of the county of Hochelaga:

I cannot say what the Government will do in order to settle this question, which is more irritating than difficult, but this is what I can tell you: We desire to follow up those splendid traditions of conciliation and cordial understanding which have given to our country such a great measure of success, progress and tranquillity. Now, if the Government is not met in Parliament with that spirit of tolerance which the church of to-day recognizes in all forms of christianity; if the old provinces which created the Confederation refuse to be inspired from those healthy sources which gave them existence and stability; if, in the name of equal rights, equal justice and liberty of conscience are refused to those who claim it, then it would be better to discuss the terms of Union anew, for a great nation cannot be created with the heterogeneous elements of our provinces, unless the rights, privileges and immunities are guaranteed to the minorities, and without which they would never have accepted the part which constituted the Canadian Confederation.

Such is, Mr. Speaker, the fatal issue which the country is led to by the Government: such the catastrophe towards which we are inevitably driven, unless this House and the country, and the electors consulted on the matter, once for all make up their minds that, in this Confederation of ours, equal rights must be secured to the best elements of the two greatest nations which ever lived. By this means shall we succeed in establishing the great nationality we all dream of, but which the Government seek to destroy, through their unjust policy towards the Catholics.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, if it were not that this question is a very important one and one that excites so much interest in the country, I would hesitate to rise at this late hour of the night. However, I will reassure the hon. gentlemen present by saying, that I have only a very few remarks to offer. I have no intention of discussing the question from the constitutional point of view. I have listened with great interest to all the speeches which have been delivered on this question. I have been very much pleased that the question has been discussed in so calm and deliberate a manner. Now, Sir, I propose, for a very few moments, to consider the amendment offered by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). I have read this amendment very carefully, and it seems to me to be very plausibly drawn. I was going to say, that, in my opinion, it is almost an unfair amendment. I say an unfair amendment, because men who have diametrically opposite opinions on this question, can vote for it. It is not an amendment that expresses any opinion on the main question at issue, at all. Now, Sir, what does this amendment express? I find that it says:

This House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question.

That is the first sentence of the amendment—expressing disapproval of the action of the Government. Now, I ask myself, why shall we express disapproval? From the amendment itself I could hardly tell. But, Sir, I listened carefully to the speech of the hon. member for L'Islet, and I found that the first reason why he wished to express disapproval of the action of the Government was because the Government did not disallow the Manitoba School Act. I think all who listened to his remarks will agree with me in that: he thought the Government should at once, when this measure was passed, have disallowed it. He considers it a very bad measure. He considers it a measure which oppresses a great many of the people in Manitoba, his co-religionists. Well, Sir, that was one reason; and the second reason is, because the Government did not at once, after the measure was pronounced "intra vires," pass remedial legislation. That, I suppose, is his real grievance. I do not know that he could object very much to the Government for not having disallowed the measure, but having allowed it to go to the courts. I do not think any of us could object to that. But after this measure has been passed upon by the highest court of the Empire, and pronounced within the competence of the Manitoba Legislature, then the hon. member for L'Islet thinks the Government should at once pass legislation to override this law and to restore separate schools in Manitoba. Now, Sir, I have thought a great deal about this amendment. I was a little surprised to find the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) supporting it. On some questions of this kind I have voted with him in the past; I have no doubt I shall vote with him again; but when I saw him associated in this matter with the hon. member for L'Islet, it caused me to hesitate and ask myself the reason of this association. Well, Sir, I could come to only one conclusion, when I saw the hon. member for North Simcoe, who, I may say, had been denounced by those with whom he will now vote, supporting an amendment moved by the hon. member for L'Islet, an amendment very indefinite, an amendment which he himself said he wished was stronger. I was a little surprised, and it caused me to look at this amendment more carefully. I have thought of it a good deal, as I have said; I have listened carefully to the speeches, and I have asked myself: Can I support this amendment? Well, Sir, the views of my constituents are, I suppose known to a good many members of this House. Rightly or wrongly—they think, rightly—they hold very strong views on what are known as equal rights. Mine is the only constituency in Ontario that sends an equal righter to the Ontario Legislature. Now, Sir, if I voted in a certain way on questions of this kind, I know that I should not represent my constituents properly. This is one of the questions on which I am bound to represent them properly. But, in thinking this matter over, I have asked myself: Can I support this amendment? Well, Sir, if the amendment had been moved in some other connection, if it had been moved, perhaps, by the hon. member for North Simcoe himself, and supported by him in the speech he delivered to-day, then I might have hesitated still more; but when the amendment has been moved, as it has been, by the hon. member for L'Islet, and when he tells us distinctly in his speech, that his reason for moving this amendment, expressing disapproval of the Government, is, first, because the Government did not disallow this School Act, and, secondly, because they did not pass remedial legislation, I have no hesitation whatever in voting against it. And, Sir, I am satisfied that, in doing this, I am representing my constituents properly and as they would wish me to represent them. Sir, what is the object of this amendment? I think it has only one object in view. I do not think the object of this amendment is to procure justice, as the hon. member for L'Islet would call it, for the minority in Manitoba. Why, Sir, I know that that is not the object of the hon. member for North Simcoe. What is the object, then, when we find the amendment supported by men of such opposite views? It is not for me to judge of a man's motives; still, sometimes we cannot help doing this; and it does look to me as if in this case there is one object, and one only, that is, to embarrass the Government. Now, Sir, there are questions on which I might not support the Government; but, as I have stated, I have very good reasons in this case for doing so. Now, I find that the amendment says, that we must disapprove of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question. What has been the action of the Government on the question? First, with reference to disallowance, did they disallow this Act? I suppose, if they had disallowed it, the hon. member for L'Islet would not have moved this amendment, but the hon. member for North Simcoe might have done so. But, Sir, did they disallow this Act? We heard the plain and clear statement made by the hon. First Minister last night on this question, that not only did they not disallow this Act, but they had no intention at any time of disallowing it. The idea of disallowance was not entertained for a moment. Sir, in that respect, I am perfectly satisfied with their conduct, and, instead of blaming them or disapproving of their conduct, I heartily approve of it. Then, with reference to remedial legislation, what have they done? What are they condemned for doing? I find that they are condemned for:

Assuming to be possessed of judicial functions conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to the law, and, if acquiesced in, would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

Well, I do not know that I exactly understand that long sentence. I suppose it would take a pretty good lawyer to tell us exactly what it means. I do not pretend to know what it means; but, after all, it does not frighten me at all. I am not frightened very much at the Government having assumed in this matter to be possessed of judicial functions. I am not frightened because a committee of the Privy Council heard petitions which were sent in by the minority in Manitoba on this question. Considering these petitions, considering the arguments offered why these petitions should be considered and why relief should be given, I am not at all alarmed because they did this, and because they did more, and, after considering this matter, decided to hand over this question to the Supreme Court for its opinion. Sir, I think they did perfectly right. For myself I am quite satisfied with what they have done; and if the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) is not satisfied, I do not think it is because the Government assumed judicial functions. In fact, I think the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) said he would not have blamed them so very much for assuming judicial functions, if their policy had been different, but what he did blame them for was their policy. I do not think the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) would have blamed them for assuming judicial functions, if their policy had been different. If their policy had been what he desired it to be, we would have heard nothing about their assuming judicial functions from him. If the Government had assumed judicial functions, and, after receiving and considering the petitions had decided that relief should be granted, and had recommended Parliament to pass an Act granting relief, we would not have had this amendment from the hon. member for L'Islet at all. On the other hand, if the Government had assumed judicial functions, in every sense of the word, and, after considering the petitions, had said there is no necessity for relief at all, the hon. member for North Simcoe would not vote for the amendment now before us. So that, after all, when these hon. gentlemen blame the Government for assuming judicial functions, they are only looking for something to blame the Government for on this question. The amendment says at the end :

Which assumption is wholly unknown to the law, and, if now acquiesced in, would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

I am not alarmed at that at all. I do not think the Government, if they wanted to get away from their responsibility, could do so. It is impossible for them to escape it, and no one knows that better than they. They cannot help being responsible to the members of this House for their conduct, and they are responsible further to the people for their conduct. In what way can they escape that responsibility? It would be no excuse, if they were doing something wrong, which this Parliament and the country disapproved of, for them to say, we were acting in a judicial capacity. I know that excuse would not satisfy my constituents, and I am sure it would not satisfy any other portion of the people. I do not believe that the Government have any intention of taking refuge in any such manner. Now, what is my attitude on this question? I am satisfied that the action of the Government was fair; but I am bound to say that if the Government should propose remedial legislation, I shall oppose them on that question, not only because my constituents feel that way, but because I feel that way myself. I am not going to argue that question, but think it is sufficient that I should state my position. I have no religious bigotry. As you all know I am a Protestant, but when I meet a man I never ask him whether he is a Catholic or a Protestant. That never enters my mind at all. If he is a gentleman, I am glad to meet him and associate with him. I have no religious bigotry, but at the same time I want to say that, while we have separate schools in Ontario, I know very little about them, and I think we would be just as well without them. I am not going to raise any cry about separate schools, but that is my feeling on that question, and I will tell you why. In the town where I live, the population of which is about 5,000, we have no separate schools. My children go to school with the other school children. Catholic and Protestant children go to the same school, I know of no difference, my children know of none, and you cannot tell the Catholics from the Protestants. I think that is a good thing, and I wish I could persuade my Catholic fellow-citizens in this country to agree with me. It is a good thing for us to have our boys and girls to grow up together in the one school. I do not suppose I can persuade my Roman Catholic fellow-citizens to adopt my view, but I believe they will in time see its advantage. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Mr. Devlin) said the public schools were not really public, but were Protestant schools. In that respect, I take issue with him entirely. I know that some people think there is not enough religion in our public schools.

Mr. DEVLIN. When I said the public schools were Protestant schools I referred to Manitoba.

Mr. CRAIG. I accept the correction. I am not acquainted with the schools there, and am speaking of Ontario just now, and, so far as the Ontario public schools are concerned, they are not Protestant schools in that sense of the word that any religion is taught in them at all. They are schools for secular education, I may say, entirely. We hear a good deal about the minority being oppressed. If the public schools in Manitoba are Protestant schools, I hope they will change that, but I am sure they are not.

Mr. TARTE. They are.

Mr. CRAIG. I hardly think they are.

Mr. TARTE. They are.

Mr. CRAIG. If they are, they ought to be secular schools.

Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRAIG. That is my idea of secular education. I hold that the state owes a secular education to all the children in the state, under our Constitution, but I hold, at the same time, that the state does not owe a religious education. Let that be given at home. We hear some parents talk about wanting their children to have religious education in the schools and they never get any at home. Let that education be given at church or at home. I may refer here to a matter which no doubt you are all acquainted with, and that is the question of separate schools in the United States. There are no separate schools there, but there has been a great agitation on that question. There are parochial schools there supported by the Catholic people themselves. Now, there has been a great deal of feeling on that question, just as much as in this country, yet what does the Pope say concerning it. He says that where Catholics can sustain a good parochial school, let their children go there; but where they cannot, let the children go to the public schools, and he says let no parent be deprived of the sacraments or condemned in any way because their children go to the public schools. I agree with the Pope in this respect, and think that is good sound doctrine. I say the state owes a secular education, but not religious education. That is my view, and I know all will not agree with me on that point. I take the ground that if a state gives a secular education, of which the Catholics as well as Protestants take advantage, the minority are not oppressed at all. I do not intend to take up the time of the House any longer. I think I have made myself clearly understood, and will only add this, that while it may be a dream in my mind, I look forward to the time when all the children will go to school together, when this religious bigotry shall have disappeared from our midst, and we shall recognize each other, not as Catholics or Protestants, but as citizens of one country.

Mr. AMYOT moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That the Order for the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster for the House to go into Committee of Supply and the motion of Mr. Tarte in amendment thereto have precedence after questions to be put by members at the next sitting of this House this day.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT.

Annual Report of the Department of Indian Affairs, for the year ended 31st December, 1892.—(Mr. Daly.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 8th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 82) for the relief of Martha Ballantyne—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Gibson.)

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BERGIN moved that the first and second reports of the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing be concurred in.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The first report, I think, involves a question of money matters.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would ask my hon. friend to let that stand that it may be considered in connection with the Estimates.

Mr. BERGIN. I would ask leave to strike out of my motion the reference to the first report. I move that the second report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. TISDALE moved:

That as the time for presenting reports from Committees on Private Bills expires to-morrow, the same be extended until Thursday, the 23rd day of March inst.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the First Minister to what seems to me a very vicious practice, that is, that while we have regular rules of the House with regard to private legislation these rules are constantly violated. The frequency of the violation of these rules would indicate that perhaps the rules ought to be revised. I do not intend during this session to offer objection to the practice; but I would suggest that next session we ought to adopt other rules for private legislation and adhere to them more regularly.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is quite evident that there is no utility in the rule if we persistently violate it, and I think we ought to relax somewhat the stringency of the rule and then stand by it.

Motion agreed to.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 92) to repeal certain sections of the Merchant Shipping Act relating to load-lines, so far as they affect ships registered in Canada. He said: I think the best explanation I can give will be to read the Bill that I propose to introduce. It says:

WHEREAS by section five hundred and forty-seven of the Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom known as The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, it is enacted that the legislative authority of any British possession shall have power by any Act or ordinance confirmed by Her Majesty in Council to repeal, wholly or in part, any provisions of the said Act relating to ships registered in such possession; and whereas by the Act of the said Parliament known as The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876—which, as is provided by section two thereof, is to be construed as one with The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and the Acts amending the same—certain provisions are made in sections twenty-six, twenty-seven and twenty-eight thereof with respect to the marking of load-lines upon British ships; and whereas by sections one and two of the Act of the said Parliament known as The Merchant Shipping Act, 1890, the provisions of the said sections twenty-six and twenty-seven are amended in certain particulars: and whereas it is not desirable that the said sections twenty-six and twenty-seven, as so amended, or the regulations which have been or may be made by the Board of Trade thereunder, or the provisions of the said section twenty-eight, should apply to ships registered in Canada.

For these reasons the Bill is to repeal these sections, subject to the approval of Her Majesty, of course.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS—PRECEDENCE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I want to ask the permission of the House—which I admit must be unanimous—to move now the motion of which notice has been given, namely:

That Government Orders have precedence over all other business on Thursdays, including Thursday next, after Questions put by Members.

It looks to taking to-morrow and subsequent Thursdays as days for Government business. In the ordinary course, if we had adhered to the Orders of the Day, the Government notice of motion to this effect would not be reached to-day; therefore I ask the consent of the House to take it out of its usual course on the Order Paper and to make the motion now, for the reason that if we waited till it came up to-morrow it would create some confusion, as hon. members would like to know beforehand, perhaps, whether to-morrow will be taken by the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to this motion, but I wish to call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that, last week, the days devoted to private business were taken by the Government, and, this week again, both those days are taken from us. There are sixty-three notices of motion on the Order Paper, and twenty-one public Bills and orders, a large amount of business, it strikes me, and the Government are rather exacting in asking for Thursday of this week. I will suggest to the First Minister that it would only be fair to allow private members to take to-morrow, and then the Government might take Thursdays after this week.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry to have to differ with my hon. friend. I agree with the hon. the First Minister in his proposition, but I am sure that the Government will give my hon. friend an opportunity to move those motions which stand in his name. I have not heard any complaints from other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, although I have taken special pains to ascertain the sense of the House on this side. I am sure the Government will readily agree to endeavour to give my hon. friend the opportunity he desires.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will still have every Wednesday of the session for private members, after dinner.

Mr. CHARLTON. We will still have Monday.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mondays are only available for notices of motion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think no private member can hope to pass very much legislation at this period of the session. It may be necessary, perhaps, for some of them to explain their views upon certain public questions. I think the House has every desire now, on both sides, for a conclusion of the proceedings at a reasonably early date, and would favour the forwarding of public business even to the exclusion of business of a private character, which, in the opinion of many hon. gentlemen, no doubt, is important. I hope no hon. member will place any obstacle in the way of the advancement of public business.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not wish to place any obstacle; but the Government are taking Thursdays this session two weeks earlier than usual.

Mr. FOSTER. We are fully two weeks ahead this year.

Motion agreed to.

POSTMASTER AT ST. THOMAS.

Mr. LISTER asked, Is the office of postmaster in St. Thomas vacant? Has a petition been received by the Government asking that the appointment be made in said office, and does such petition ask that no appointment to such office shall be made which involves the opening of the electoral district of East Elgin?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To both the questions, the answer is, yes.

MAIL SERVICE ON THE CORNWALLIS VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. BORDEN asked, Has the mail service been begun on the Cornwallis Valley Branch Railway? Who are employed to carry the mails between the railway stations and the respective post offices, and what is the remuneration in each case? Were public tenders invited in each case? Have contracts been made, and for what length of time? If public tenders were not invited, was any one authorized to negotiate with the parties employed? If so, who?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. Yes. 2. Between Lower Canard, Canard, Church Street, Port Williams, and the railway station, J. L. Bishop is contractor. Rate of pay, $225 per annum. Between Saxony Street and Canard Siding, Charles Harris is contractor. Rate of pay, $40 per annum. Between Canuing and railway station, J. B. Hennigar, is contractor. Rate of pay, $75. Between Kingsport and railway station, A. G. McDonald is contractor. Rate of pay, $60 per annum. Between Sheffield Mills and railway station, William Harris is contractor. Rate of pay, $60 per annum. Between Centreville and railway station. R. S. Thorpe is contractor. Rate of pay, $50 per annum. 3. No. 4. Contractors have not been made. In each case the service is performed under temporary agreement. 4. Yes, the Post Office Inspector.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE BANK OF MONTREAL.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to direct the attention of the Finance Minister to a return which was laid on the Table yesterday, regarding papers and correspondence with the Bank of Montreal and the financial agents. Apparently one paper has been omitted from them. I presume from a statement made in the House by the Finance Minister, that a formal memorandum of some kind was exchanged with the Bank of Montreal, touching the amount and extent of their advances. He will recollect I called attention to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would the hon. gentleman lay that paper on the Table, if there is one?

Mr. FOSTER. I would remind my hon. friend that that is not the subject of a memorandum; it was simply a verbal understanding between the bank and myself, as it was also in reference to the old agents, although the old agents, in answering my letter, mentioned that they had offered to put a million pounds at the credit of the Government. But I did not think it was best to have it form part of a memorandum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Don't you think it ought to be in writing, so important an arrangement as that?

JUDGESHIP OF PRINCE COUNTY, P.E.I.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the Premier whether he is in a position to state if the vacancy in the judgeship of Prince county has been filled?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The appointment has not gone through, but I think within the next two days it will be made, in view of the urgency of judicial business.

SUPPLY—SEPARATE SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA.

House resumed adjourned debate on proposed motion of Mr. Foster: That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply; and the motion of Mr. Tarte in amendment thereto.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker, at this advanced stage of the debate, it is not to be expected that much that is new can be said. I will try, however, to follow the principal features in the speeches and the proposals which have been made, and to set forth my humble way of thinking. I will read the following motion:—

Be it resolved, that the Government has failed in its duty; first, in not disallowing the statute passed by the Legislature of Manitoba abolishing French as one of the official languages; second, in not disallowing the statute of the same province abolishing the separate schools in the province of Manitoba; third, in not granting remedial laws, as it was in duty bound to do, immediately after the final decision of the courts declaring intra vires the said Manitoba statute abolishing the said separate schools.

You, Mr. Speaker, understand both the English and French languages. You have heard the elaborate speech or rather speeches of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). You have heard the hon. member affirm high principles, you have heard him relate facts and history, and the natural conclusion of his speech would have been, you will admit, with me, the motion I have read. His speech should have concluded by blaming the Government for not having disallowed the Bill of the Manitoba Legislature which abolished the French language. That should have been one of the features of his motion. Then his motion should have blamed the Government for not having disallowed the two Acts passed by the Manitoba Legislature abolishing the separate schools, and his motion should also have blamed the Government for not having immediately come to the rescue of the separate schools of Manitoba. That was the motion we expected, that was the child promised by the hon. gentleman. That was the dear, white little child, like an angel that was to come to lead the people. At the same time the motion should have expressed the aim of the new party which the hon. gentleman leads, of that new and strong party destined to sweep over the country and chase away fanaticism and bigotry and cause peace and liberty to reign over all. But instead of that motion, we find the following:—

This House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question, and in assuming to be possessed of judicial functions, conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to the law, and, if now acquiesced in, would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

There has been a substitution; this is not the child that was promised. The hon. gentleman gave a description of his child, including its colour, but when he laid it on the Table of the House we found it was not a white little angel, but a little monster, no more and no less from his point of view. Where is the cause of the substitution to be found, and who is the father of the child? We must find him. That little child was to come to take a large inheritance, to govern this great country; but the child brought forward to occupy this inheritance is a false child. We must find the father—how can we find him? When I heard the motion read, I said to myself: Have I not already seen something possessing the same shape, having a family resemblance?

Then the thought struck me that some hon. gentleman had been kind enough to send me a book or a pamphlet entitled the "Canadian Magazine," a very nice book and very well written, which contained an article written by Dalton McCarthy, Q.C., M.P., and I thought that perhaps I might find some features of resemblance in that article to the present motion, and I read the article again. On the first page I found these words :

For here we have an Act of the Provincial Legislature which has been passed with the approval of a great majority of the people interested—the inhabitants of Manitoba—after it had run the gauntlet of the law courts of the Dominion, and of the highest legal tribunal of the Empire, assailed by a procedure unknown to the law, and before unheard of.

Then I looked at the motion, and I found the words, "wholly unknown to the law." These were the very same terms, the very same words. There was the beginning of paternity I thought. Later on, I found this sentence :

To examine by what authority a new and hitherto unknown legal tribunal has unexpectedly manifested itself—and to consider with all the gravity and earnestness that such an inquiry demands, whether the role that the Privy Council is now engaged in playing is permitted by the Manitoba constitution, the British North America Act, or by any other law known to the British constitutional system.

Here were the words, "unknown legal tribunal." There was another feature of resemblance. Then, at page 8, I found these sentences :

These Acts, if unwise and harsh, were at least within the lines of the constitution. But the attack now launched against her exclusive right to manage her educational system, is fraught with perilous consequences to the Dominion.

The motion read : "Would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility." There was the same idea embodied in the article as appeared in the motion, and an assumption that the initiative was to be taken by the Government. Again, I read :

For the initial steps that the Government at Ottawa have taken to accomplish that end, it should be held to strict account, or Parliament will lamentably fail in its duty; and the pretense that the Cabinet acts as a judicial tribunal and not as political advisers of the Crown, should meet with the contempt and condemnation it invites at the hands of the representatives of the people.

In the motion, I found the words :

And in assuming to be possessed of judicial functions conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown.

When the features are alike and there is a general resemblance we arrive at a conclusion as to the parentage; and, although we were not present in the chamber where the motion was written, we can discern that the ideas of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) are embodied in the motion, and that they are entirely opposed to the views of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). The hon. member for L'Islet told the Government: You have not done enough for the separate schools, you should do more to aid them. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) said to the Government: You have no right to give the slightest aid to the schools. What does the motion say? It declares that the Government are blamable because they had no right to assume judicial functions, in regard to the school question. Judging by the speech of the hon. member for L'Islet, is he to be presumed to be the father?

Mr. TARTE. I am the father.

Mr. AMYOT. My hon. friend claims the paternity of that little monster and I will tell him why the presumption is against his pretension. If my hon. friend believes that by interrupting he will disturb me he is quite mistaken. I intend to say what I have to say and the more he interrupts me the more I will be severe.

Mr. BRODEUR. You are looking for the paternity of the child.

Mr. AMYOT. I am searching out the paternity of that little monster. I say it is entirely in conformity with the ideas contained in the speech of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and it is essentially opposed to the idea of my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). That hon. gentleman said in his speech that he wanted the Government to come to the rescue of the separate schools, but his motion tells the Government that they should not interfere any further, that they should come to a stop in the matter at once. Those were the very views expressed by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). It is no fault of mine that the motion should be drawn in its present form. If the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has not written it, has not prepared it for the Table of the House, he has, at all events, written and prepared it in the article which he wrote during the present month, and the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has evidently fed himself upon that book, and that is where the alliance comes in between the two. Now, what is the object of that motion? I picture the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in the great city of Toronto, surrounded by Orangemen let us say, and receiving their acclamations for his course in this matter. He says to them, pointing to this motion: Look, gentlemen, at that new child brought up under my care. If I was not the father of it, I was, at least, the godfather, and look how I protected the rights of the majority in Manitoba. Look how I prevented that infernal Government from coming to the rescue of the Catholics and giving them protection. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) will come down to Lower Canada and will take another course and say, wrapped up in Mr. Tarte's speech: You owe me gratitude because I supported separate schools. That is very skilful, but would it not be more honourable and would it not be better for the cause advocated by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), that he had brought down a motion stating really what he wants, and carrying with it responsibility on the part of every one who would vote for it? Why did he not state in his motion that it was the duty of the Government to come to the rescue of the separate schools in Manitoba, and, then, if the Government were overthrown, they would have been bound to act according to the motion. But as the motion stands now it carries no responsibility with it. On the contrary, if the present Government were overthrown and a new Government, led by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), or by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), came into power, they would say: We cannot do anything in this matter, because our motion said that we could not do anything. My hon. friend from L'Islet poses before the country as a protector of the Manitoba separate schools, but his very motion aims to prevent the Government doing anything in favour of the schools. And how about there being no reference at all to the French language? It entirely disappears from the motion. Who is the most opposed to the French language in this House, if not the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who has devoted his talents and energy in opposing the French language, and in persuading the population of Ontario and Manitoba that if French were spoken in Canada it would result in doing away with the British Crown on the continent of North America? It is rather a remarkable coincidence when we find the member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) agreeing on this motion, that all reference to the French language is omitted. My hon. friend from L'Islet, with his ability and energy, which I admit, has taken the best possible opportunity to bring this matter before the House. He has spoken in favour of the language of that bishop which was to be compared very favourably with the language of a bishop of a Protestant religion, an allusion which I did not like. He has taken charge of the French language in this House, but when the time comes to practically bring the question before the House, the words "French language" disappear from his motion, and so the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) jumps up and supports the motion because there is no reference to the French language in it. That game is too plain and it can deceive nobody. Generally, when a member speaks in the House in favour of a proposition, he supports it by a motion in the same sense, but the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has not done that. Since the beginning of my political career, I have never seen a member advancing some proposition in his speech, and by his motion expressing a contrary view and sacrificing the interests he advocated. I say to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that I am surprised that a man of his talents and spirit of enterprise should shield his motion behind a speech of the member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). This attempt to catch votes by means of subterfuge will deceive neither the House nor the country. With the forbearance of the House, I shall now say a few words in reference to the veto. I ask myself: Why was not the law disallowed? Every one of the friends of the French language and of the French schools, would at first sight have been glad if the Manitoba School Law had been disallowed at once. But, Mr. Speaker, we all want to form a great nation on this continent. Some excited heads or hearts want annexation, some Imperial federation, but the mass of the calm-headed people, Liberals and Conservatives, led by the real and true chief of the Opposition, who I see before me, as well as those led by the Premier of this country, all desire to form one great people, composed of divers elements it is true, but having all the same aim and wishing all the same common prosperity and common liberty. Under these circumstances, was it better to disallow the Manitoba School Act, or to let it be declared unconstitutional by the courts? To disallow a law is to go against the principle of autonomy. We are all in favour of autonomy. Some years ago we members from the province of Quebec were glad that the principle of autonomy was applied to the question of the Jesuits' estates. We were glad to be protected by that rampart. We are free and masters in our province, as the people of all the other provinces are. That is the principle of autonomy. It is true, in matters of education, we push the principle of autonomy further than we do in most other cases. The principle of autonomy in matters of education means the liberty of each father of a family to bring up his children in the way he pleases, without the interference of the state, and it is only with his consent that you may aggregate the children together under the roof of a school house. But shall we for a single exception risk the whole system of autonomy? Now, every one was of the opinion that the law was clearly unconstitutional, and I will in a moment explain why. Everybody was sure that the law would be declared unconstitutional; the Government was sure; the Opposition was sure; we, the people, were all sure that the law would be declared unconstitutional. Was it not better to have a final decision, not due to the passion of party, nor to partisan influence or interest, but by the highest tribunal of the Empire, than to have disallowance by a Government? I think it was. That new aggregation of the people known as Confederation, I will compare to a boat, from which we have been thrown overboard suddenly, in spite of the arrangements. Is it better for us, the minority, to swim against the stream, or to land and wait our chance of going back in the boat? I think it is safer to wait on the land, because a time will come when the people in the boat will want the people on shore to help them, and then peace will come again. Of course, we shall suffer in the meantime; but the Catholic church is in the habit of suffering. She was not born in the midst of flowers. She has been fighting her way with calm, without passion, during the centuries, and she is not afraid of the few enemies that live to-day and that will pass on to-morrow. The truth will remain, and the people will continue to worship their God in the way they please. They will not feel themselves obliged to worship their God in the way that pleases the hon. member for North Simcoe. Mr. Speaker, the law was not disallowed, and it was, I may say, the unanimous consent of the population. I will take the liberty of quoting the words written on the 4th instant, by an hon. Senator from Manitoba, the Hon. Mr. Bernier, in regard to the veto:

Because, after all, we may ask you all, where were you for the three years after the fight began? Where were those who are indicated to you to-day as our saviours? We asked for the disallowance in 1890. Where are the petitions supporting our demand? Who presented them?

He is perfectly right. Who has ever presented a petition from the inhabitants to the Government asking for a veto? Then, he says:

Is there a party that thought itself strong enough to obtain or to take the responsibility for that disallowance when the question could be constitutionally decided? The law in virtue of which our case is going to be submitted to the Supreme Court is the offspring of a suggestion of the Hon. Mr. Blake, one of the respected leaders of the Liberal party. That law was passed with the approbation of the whole House, and precisely in view of the question of the Manitoba schools. And to-day when this accusation of treason is thrown at us, simply because we do not cross to the Opposition benches, are we not allowed to ask what we could expect from that move? What promises have we? What guarantees are given us that our case would be settled according to our views, if the men in power to-day were forced to hand over to some others the reins of the Government? We are still to hear, on that point, any positive declaration from the Opposition through its chiefs.

Mr. Speaker, the Government, like the rest of the country, expected that the courts would declare the law unconstitutional. In Manitoba—I will not attribute it to any cause, everybody may judge for himself—the court was divided; but here in Ottawa, far from the scene where passions were raging, the court unanimously held that the law was unconstitutional. The case went to the Privy Council. I will take the liberty of quoting one or two sentences of the honourable Lords of the Privy Council. I will not repeat the law, as it has been read over and over again. The question was whether by law or by practice at the time of the union the Manitobans had the right to separate schools. Their Lordships declared first that by law they had none. That is true, I believe. Then they asked themselves:

Mr. AMYOT.

What was the state of things when Manitoba was admitted into the union? On this point there is no dispute. The practice which prevailed in Manitoba before the union is also a matter on which all parties are agreed.

That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that the parties before the Privy Council, both the plaintiffs and the defendants, admitted the state of things so far as the practice was concerned, and what was that state of things?

The statement on the subject by Archbishop Taché, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of St. Boniface, who has given evidence in Barrett's case, has been accepted as accurate and complete. "There existed," he says, "in the territory now constituting the province of Manitoba, a number of effective schools for children. These schools were denominational schools, some of them being regulated and controlled by the Roman Catholic Church, and others by various Protestant denominations."

The means necessary for the support of the Roman Catholic schools were supplied to some extent by school fees paid by some of the parents of the children who attend the schools, and the rest was paid out of the funds of the church, contributed by its members.

During the period referred to, Roman Catholics had no interest in or control over the schools of the Protestant denominations, and the members of the Protestant denominations had no interest in or control over the schools of the Roman Catholics.

There were no public schools in the sense of State schools.

The members of the Roman Catholic Church supported the schools of their own church for the benefit of Roman Catholic children, and were not under obligation to, and did not contribute to the support of any other schools.

Under those circumstances, their Lordships said:

Such being the main provisions of the Public Schools Act, 1890, their Lordships have to determine whether that Act prejudicially affects any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons had by law or practice in the province at the Union.

So that their Lordships declared that, by practice, denominational schools existed, the Catholic schools being maintained by Catholics and the non-Catholic schools by Protestants. That was the state of things existing, "de facto," in 1870, and that it is admitted by their Lordships. But then, their Lordships, after admitting this, declared that the Manitoba Government had the right to take away the school-houses, the furniture, the books, the maps and everything from the Catholic denominational schools and transfer them over, not only to the public schools, but to schools where the children will be taught to despise the Catholic church. They have decided that the by-laws under which that is done are not contrary to the practice. Have we not a right to be astounded and to say that it must have been a cloudy and a foggy day in the great city of London when their Lordships came to that decision? Who could have foreseen such a decision? Can we hold the Government responsible for it? Can we say to the Government: You should have foreseen that the Privy Council, after admitting that the practice gave us denominational schools, would take them away from us. Nobody could have foreseen such a judgment, and I, for one, will not hold the Government responsible. I will say, however, that the highest tribunal of the Empire has pronounced, and I accept their judgment as the law and will abide by it. It has been decided, according to my views, against common sense, but it has been decided, and I do submit. Before leaving that question, it will be as well to draw the attention of this House to another part of the judgment, which is most important for the future, because, if we accept one part we must accept the other. We must take the judgment as a whole. The court of the Privy Council is the infallible court. In other countries there are kings who are infallible, and some religious men who are infallible, but in our country, the highest court of justice is infallible. It must be looked upon as such. Well, then, what do they go on to say :

Notwithstanding the Public Schools Act, 1890, Roman Catholics and members of every other religious body in Manitoba are free to establish schools throughout the province: they are free to maintain their schools by school fees or voluntary subscriptions: they are free to conduct their schools according to their own religious tenets, without molestation or interference. No child is compelled to attend a public school. No special advantage other than the advantage of a free education in schools conducted under public management is held out to those who do attend.

I draw the attention of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), whom I regret not to see in his seat, to that. He fights very hard against Roman Catholic schools, but there is the judgment of the highest tribunal of the Empire which says we are at liberty to maintain them as long as and in the way we please, and that we will never be compelled to send our children to other schools than those we choose. So that it remains a matter of money, purely and simply, and we may be sure of one thing, that, wherever a public school will not be given to us, we will have sufficient heart to make sacrifices and send our children elsewhere. The hon. gentleman will not be able, in spite of his efforts, to compel us to send our children to schools where they will be taught to despise and abandon the religion of their parents. We are in a free country, and while great advantages are taken from us, and great sacrifices imposed upon us, while we are forced to subscribe to schools, not common schools, but schools against our religion, we will not sacrifice the interests we have at heart and of which we have been given charge by Divine Providence. Now, in view of that decision of the Privy Council, what is the actual question actually at issue? The sub-committee of the Government, after having heard the interested parties, found themselves in presence of legal difficulties. It is true that, last night, those difficulties were finally judged by the hon. member for Berthier, who laughed at them, and said they were not difficulties at all, but that the Government are embarrassed for nothing and should know the law better. I am not of his opinion, in spite of the respect I have for his legal attainments. The Government had doubts as to remedial legislation, but the godfather of the resolution is not troubled with doubt. He declares that the Government have no right to interfere. The seconder of the resolution pretends that the Government have such clear rights that they ought not to doubt for a moment. At all events the Government have proposed to refer to a tribunal the question of their right to interfere in any way, and to what extent. Are the Government wise in taking that course? In 1890 Mr. Blake made a magnificent speech, one of those speeches which are the admiration of England to-day, and he suggested that the question should be referred to a judicial tribunal. Sir John Macdonald accepted it, and the two Houses concurred, and, to-day, the Government says: We will apply that mode that has been advocated in advance by the best heads of the country. As you know, before the Privy Council only one question was discussed, the question of practice. The question was: Did the separate schools exist by practice before 1870? I will not take up the time of the House by a long discussion, but I will take the admissions of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) himself. In the article published over his name, on the first page, he says :

It will be remembered that the legality or constitutionality of the Act was impugned on this ground, that although, generally speaking, the Legislature of the province is endowed with power "exclusively" to "make laws in relation to education," it had violated the limitation imposed on its general authority in that by the Public School Act the right or privileges with respect to denominational schools which the Roman Catholics "had by practice" (it was not contended that any class of persons have any right or privilege "by law") in the province at the time of the union, had been prejudicially affected.

He puts between parentheses this, and I draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to it. "(It was not contended that any class of persons had any right or privilege 'by law'.)" So the question of the effect of the Confederation Act was not brought before the Privy Council at all. In another place, page 5, the hon. gentleman says :

So far it will be observed, the only law under which redress was thought of, or the authority of which was invoked, was the Manitoba Act.

So there remained the question of the general Confederation Act. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Confederation Act applies to Manitoba. You find in the beginning of the Manitoba Act of 1870, as quoted, I think, by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), a clause which specially says that the Confederation Act shall apply to Manitoba, except when otherwise provided. If you look at the preamble of the Confederation Act what do you find :

Whereas it is expedient that provision be made for the eventual admission into the Union of other parts of British North America.

So this Confederation Act applies not only to Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but it applies to every part of British North America which might thereafter become part of the Union. Then, starting from that principle, you take section 93 and subsection 3, and apply it to Manitoba, and you say: Whereas Manitoba, since its entry into Confederation, has passed laws establishing denominational schools, these laws now existing under the constitution cannot be done away with, without the consent of the minority there. Well, that is the question to be discussed: I know that if I were before a tribunal, opposed by men of the talents of those who antagonize my views, it would be hard for me, perhaps, to cause my ideas to prevail. But I contend still that the right exists. That is to be decided before the court. But suppose the Government should act upon the principle, and the courts should say later on: You were wrong, that clause does not apply; the special clause in the Manitoba Act does away with the reference to other provinces in the Confederation Act. In what position should we be then? It is wise, it is manly, it is far-seeing, to go before the tribunal at the start. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) on the one hand, says: You should not go, and the hon. member for L'Islet, on the other hand, says: You should act immediately. Both are wrong, I think. The Government does the only thing possible under the circumstances, and follows the idea suggested by Mr. Blake, and seconded in the following year by Sir John Macdonald. But the hon. member for North Simcoe, who is in sympathy with the motion, contends that this action does away with ministerial responsibility. I think that there again he is wrong. If we will look at the discussion which took place when the Hon. Mr. Blake introduced his resolution on the 29th of April, 1890, he will see that Sir John Macdonald contended that ministerial responsibility still continued. Sir John said:

The Executive is not relieved from any responsibility because of my answer being given by the tribunal. If the Executive were to be relieved from any such responsibility, I should consider that a fatal blot in the proposition of my hon. friend. I believe in responsible government. I believe in the responsibility of the Executive. But the answer of the tribunal will be simply for the information of the Government. The Government may dissent from that decision, and it may be their duty to do so if they differ from the conclusion to which the court has come.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for North Simcoe is not right in stating that this action takes away ministerial responsibility. But I will speak of that more fully in a moment. I am in favour of the course of the Government for another reason. It may surprise my hon. friends, but I believe in that reason, and I am not afraid to state it. It will give time: the Government will have more time to decide. Time is a great master; we often have laughed at the word "to-morrow," but there is a great deal of wisdom in "to-morrow." Those whose eagerness carries them through an affair in a rush, frequently end head first in the sand. Those who look before them and take time to consider are wiser, and generally reach a better conclusion. I believe, in these questions of religion and language which are apt to provoke fanaticism, passion and excitement, it is good to go slowly. We will see in a moment what might be gained by taking time. This does not minimize the other reasons I have for approving the Government's policy. I would blame the Government if they were going at once to the rescue of the schools without knowing whether or not they have a right to do so. Which of us, having a case to conduct before the courts, would refuse the hon. member for North Simcoe as our counsel or advocate? None. But he is of opinion that the Government have no right to appeal to the court, and if they were to accept that view, the Government could not act at all. The hon. member for North Simcoe gives us strong reasons in support of his view. But others do not share his opinion. A special Act has been passed based on special resolutions adopted by the whole House, providing for the very course the Government has taken. More than that, and in view of that, a special law has been passed based upon those special resolutions adopted by the whole House, providing for the very course the Government has adopted. If the Government did not adopt that course, I would say to them: You are wrong; I would blame them. The hon. member for North Simcoe opposes this course. He is afraid that, after all, something might come from it. I would like to speak to him, but he is not here. He was here at the beginning of my speech, but I suppose my language does not please him. I hope he will read it in the "Hansard." He says: Why impose separate schools upon Manitoba in spite of the people of that province? Well, Mr. Speaker, if a man buys a house and moves into it, owing the money for it, and the creditor comes to him and says, Will you kindly pay me, and he answers: Why pay you when I am so well settled in my house? Why impose separate schools? That is not the question. Why take away from the minority of Manitoba the schools which they have enjoyed, and which have been pledged to them? Is there anything like honour in the majority of Manitoba? Does that sentiment exist there? I am sure it does, and it would prevail were it not disturbed by the inflammatory speeches of the hon. member for North Simcoe and the Greenways and the Martins. What is the bargain? It is a mutual agreement to do something, and it binds both parties. Both parties are agreed that separate schools should exist there. Why impose separate schools? he says. Rather he should say: Why, in spite of the honour of the population, in spite of the honour, I may say, of the Crown, why take away those schools? By what right? The right of the majority? Do not go on that way, because you will never succeed in establishing a great and flourishing people on the banks of the St. Lawrence. You have got a solemn written document. Never would that people have joined Confederation without that condition, and we, the people of Canada, are bound to come to their rescue; we are bound to get the bargain executed, and the law respected, and if we do not do it we are not worthy of the British Empire, we are not worthy of being called an enlightened, an intelligent and honest people. It is a regular robbery, and it is a theft in the name of law, by virtue of might. A law imposed by force is not binding on the conscience. Sir, the hon. member for Simcoe knows that, and he should help us to pacify feelings, instead of throwing oil on the fire. Let him take the responsibility of his words, and of his action. He will see after a few years, when the people of Canada will have become acquainted with these questions, that he has made a mistake. He will gather a few votes and a few cheers to-day, but justice is a sentiment which exists in all hearts, and as long as justice is not done, that sentiment will push the people on towards the execution of law, and finally justice is sure to triumph. Now, the hon. member for Simcoe has read from Mr. Blake's speech, and he has taken the liberty of criticising him. Between the two men, I hesitate not; I take the Hon. Mr. Blake as being a gentleman worthy of leading a great party, because he rightly understands and appreciates the rights of minorities. I leave to the Opposition the task of answering that part of the remarks of the member for Simcoe, because they are much more able to do so than I am. The hon. member says that Mr. Blake only spoke about disallowance, that is, as to whether a Bill was ultra vires or not. On this point I want to contradict the hon. member for Simcoe in the most absolute manner. I want to say to him that he deceived this House, not only with respect to facts which have taken place outside the House, but even with respect to the book which he had in his hand. If the House will kindly refer to the "Hansard" of 1890, page 4089, they will find that Mr. Blake spoke as follows, among other things:—

My own opinion is, that whenever, in opposition to the continued view of a Provincial Executive and Legislature, it is contemplated by the Dominion Executive to disallow a provincial Act because it is ultra vires, there ought to be a reference.

The hon. member for North Simcoe says that Mr. Blake spoke only of that. Immediately afterwards Mr. Blake says:

And also that there ought to be a reference in certain cases where the condition of public opinion renders expedient a solution of legal problems, dissociated from those elements of passion and expediency which are, rightly or wrongly, too often attributed to the action of political bodies. And again, I, for my part would recommend such a reference in all cases of educational appeal—cases which necessarily evoke the feelings to which I have alluded, and to one of which, I am frank to say, my present motion is mainly due.

Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose we heard Mr. Blake speaking in this House at this moment, what would we hear him say?

For my part, I would recommend such a reference in all cases of educational appeal.

Now, I ask my hon. friends on the left: Have you any respect for the Hon. Mr. Blake? Have you any confidence in him? He tells you in this "Hansard," revised by himself:

I would recommend such a reference in all cases of educational appeal.

Will you refuse to hear his voice? My voice is nothing to you, the voice of the Government is nothing to you; but surely you will listen to Mr. Blake's voice, that great friend of minorities, who has left his country to go to the mother country to help a minority. He tells you that a tribunal should be called upon to decide all constitutional questions concerning schools; will you refuse to hear him, and will you now condemn the Government for doing just what Mr. Blake recommended? I hope you will not do Mr. Blake such an injustice. Now, the member for North Simcoe says: The Government has gone to court without any other precedent than the New Brunswick case. There, again, the hon. member for Simcoe was wrong, because there is a special law providing for that. I need not read it, it has been quoted, it is a standing order of this House that whenever this question occurs, that Government has a right to carry it before the tribunals. Now, as to the question of responsibility, I will only say that I consider that any act performed by the Government, or by a member of the Government, in his capacity as Minister, involves the responsibility of the whole Government. Suppose a Minister goes to church on Sunday and hears a sermon, forms an opinion, comes back, and causes his opinion to prevail in the Cabinet. He is not responsible for having gone to church, but for the act of the Ministry ensuing. A Minister is not able to do an act, to write a sentence, without being responsible. The Minister of Justice said that the Ministers were acting judicially in a certain matter. He is responsible for saying so. If the Ministers of the Cabinet, or a committee of the Cabinet, act as judges in a matter, and come to the conclusion that they will not decide certain questions from a partisan stand-point or in the interest of the party, but will act as judges, they are responsible for their action. And when they have decided, they are responsible for the decision they give. The Ministers are constantly responsible. I cannot conceive that there is one moment of the day or night when the Ministers are not responsible. If they like to say that they will decide a question according to the rules of a game, such as billiards, they are responsible for that decision. The Minister of Public Works has been accused with having said, that in matters of education he would follow the advice of the bishop. He is responsible for his statement and for the way in which he acts on the subject of education. Let me say to the Minister of Public Works, that if the ideas of his bishop agree with the ideas of the Cabinet, I am very glad, and I shall go on supporting the hon. gentleman so long as he has my confidence. That is ministerial responsibility, and so long as any act of a Ministry is approved by the majority of the House, that Government rules the country. That position seems to me to be very clear. I, however, fail to understand that there is anything of a Star Chamber character in such a position. When the Government decide that they will refer a certain question to the courts, they do not shield themselves from responsibility. They openly refer the matter to the court; they are responsible for sending it there, and when the judgment comes from the court, they are responsible for the action they take in regard to it. If to-day we voted non-confidence in the Government for sending this question to the courts, they would fall. But there is no Star Chamber, nothing hidden in regard to this action. The Star-Chamber is rather, I think, the place where the motion was prepared. Of course, we shall never know it; but there was a Star Chamber at that time. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Devlin), last night, challenged the sincerity of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). I am very sorry he did so; we should never asperse the motives of our adversaries, but we should respect them. I know the hon. member for Ottawa is a very sincere man; he is a patriot and possesses talent, and he has a large future before him; and, therefore, he should respect the motives of his opponents and believe there may be some sincerity in other members, as well as in himself. As to the hon. gentleman's attack on the Secretary of State, I deplore it, and it would be better if he did not display all his ardour in fighting his own compatriots. There seems to be a certain desire among the young members of his race to cast accusations and reproaches at the old leaders, those who made the old fights. I hope he will not continue in that course. The hon. gentleman should try to protect, instead of attack, his compatriots. Last night, the question of the New Brunswick schools, which struggle was led by the Secretary of State, was brought before the House. I do not intend to enter into that question; I do not think it is time to write ancient history yet. But I say this, and I think I am correct as a matter of fact, that the bishops treated equally both political parties. In 1873 they had asked the Conservative party not to go on with the question, because there was a reference pending. In 1874 they made the same request to the Liberal party. In 1875, after the answer had come from London, the question was brought up by the Secretary of State, and he asked the support of those who had pledged their support before, members of the Liberal party, who were then in power; but that support was refused. I do not desire to go into the history of that question, for we have enough to deal with in our present trouble. The hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), last night, presented a very elaborate statement of facts. That part of his statement which was based on written documents, seemed to be correct; but the quotations were not complete, and so we cannot accept his history as entire. The hon. gentleman spoke of the role played by the bishops, but I will come to that question in a moment, when I refer to the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). That hon. gentleman objects to the proposition of the Government. We have seen the terms of that proposition, and we understand the surrounding circumstances. But this is a question that concerns a whole province, and I ask the hon. member for L'Islet, in whose name he brings this question before the House? Where is his mandate? Has he obtained the authority of those parents residing in Manitoba who are directly interested? Is there one single father of a family in Manitoba who has written to the hon. member for L'Islet?

Mr. TARTE. Dozens of them.

Mr. AMYOT—asking him to bring this question before Parliament?

Mr. TARTE. Dozens of them.

Mr. AMYOT. Is there one priest, one bishop?

Mr. TARTE. Yes; again I say so.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman should bring forward his mandates, in order that we may know with whom we have to do.

Mr. TARTE. I can bring them.

Mr. AMYOT. Secret letters, private letters which he may have in his pocket, and which do not see the open light of day, are not very strong evidence. In dealing with this subject, which concerns a whole province, we must consult each other, and not suppose that the whole brains of the world are in one forehead. There may be other brains than those in the hon. gentleman's head. Somebody else may have the right to hold an opinion on this question. We are many French members in this House. We are many Catholic members in this House, and is it not a presumptuous thing on the part of my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), without consulting anybody, and without regard to circumstances, to bring this question before the House, and to bring it in such a manner as to be the death of his pretensions? I am entitled to ask him, in whose name does he come, with what authority, and whoever gave him a right to take a position upon this question which may perhaps compromise it forever? There is an incorporated church in Manitoba, and surely that church has some interest; there are some Protestants in Manitoba, and surely they have a right to be consulted, there are thousands of French-speaking people there, and surely they have a right to be heard. Without even having before us the printed decision of the Privy Council, we are asked to decide upon this point, and it is forced upon us by a man of talent, if you will, but by one who has no authority to bind us to anything. My hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), when speaking to his motion, thought fit to refer to our bishops. We have a cardinal and about eight bishops, but the hon. member said (using the French word) that they were not sufficiently equipped to meet the Ministers of the day. I protest, Mr. Speaker, against that language. We have not been in the habit of dragging our bishops that way before Parliament. I protest against that want of respect and deference to our bishops. We should leave our bishops alone. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) means by the word "équipé" that they have not enough brains to come here to meet the Ministers. It is too bad that the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) is not consulted by Rome about the choice of our bishops. It is too bad, indeed, that he is not called upon every morning and every night to give them advice, and to help the Holy Ghost. What shall become of the bishops when the hon. member disappears? Where will our bishops be, when, according to him, not one of them has brains enough to understand politics, and to meet the Ministers of the Crown? If the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) were not living our bishops would be nowhere. According to him they have no talent, no knowledge, no capacity of any kind. But he is there to guide them, and he is obliged to take his rod and come to this Parliament, before the Protestants, and give them strokes. I protest against that. I say that our bishops are men most learned, most intelligent, and most devoted to their country. They are wise. They do not want to fight with bayonets. They want constitutional resistance in case of grievance, and they appeal to the good sense and to the spirit of justice of the English population. They believe more in that for final success than in the open war which my hon. friend from L'Islet wants. I believe they are right. Can you find in the whole continent of North America a man more learned than the Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec? Can the hon. gentleman find purer-minded men than Bishop Begin and Bishop Lebrecque? Can he find a more liberal-minded man than Bishop Racine? And what about Archbishop Fabre and Bishop Lafleche and all the others, better men than whom do not live on the face of the earth? Yet the hon. gentleman brings these bishops before Parliament, and he says that they are not fit to meet the Ministers. I protest against that. It is an unnecessary insult. We may discuss these questions which he calls essentially and exclusively political without bringing in our bishops. We do not want to mix them up in politics. It is not right for the hon. gentleman to expose his bishops to hatred, or contempt, or discussion here. But, who can escape the wrath of my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte)? He says that there are twelve or thirteen curés in his county, that ten of them voted against him, and that there were two or three in his favour, but they did not vote, in conformity with the orders from their bishops and from Rome. I tell the hon. gentleman that he ought to apologize to these priests. There is no order in the Catholic church, either from the bishops or from Rome, preventing them from voting. I tell him that he has committed an error and a blunder. He has insulted these men, accused them wrongly before Parliament, and he ought to apologize.

Mr. TARTE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me?

Mr. AMYOT. I will.

Mr. TARTE. I have said, Sir, and it is true, that an order from Rome has come, forbidding the Roman Catholic clergy interfere in politics, and I say more that that, that there have been pastoral letters sent to every member of the Roman Catholic clergy advising them even not to vote at elections. I say still further, that at the last retreat in Quebec His Eminence, the Cardinal himself, advised all his priests there not to vote. I might say, while I am on my feet, that my hon. friend is quite wrong when he said I meant to insult our Catholic bishops.

Mr. AMYOT. I have here the words of the hon. gentleman, and I drew his attention to them when he spoke, but he insisted. He said in French, I translate :

All the curés that went to the poll to vote registered their votes against me.

That has nothing to do with speaking in the church, but it is a question of going to the poll and putting the ballot papers in the box.

I believe there were two or three who were not entirely opposed to me, but in conformity with the orders received from Rome and the orders received from the bishops they abstained from voting.

I say that this accusation from the member for L'Islet is based upon false statements of the facts. I say that there is no order in our church preventing the curés from voting. I say that the bishops advise our curés to vote whenever they believe that the questions at issue are important. Under these circumstances my hon. friend owes an apology for that accusation, and if he does not make it, let him take the consequences.

Mr. TARTE. I said the truth, and I say it again.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman spoke the other day. What I say is very clear and simple. The hon. gentleman had his day of pleasure the other day, and he was applauded very much because he was speaking against our priests.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. AMYOT. Take it as it is. He was amusing his party—no, I will not say his party; but he was amusing some of his friends around him, because they have a spite against those priests, who were not for them. He said: Those priests, against the law of their church, against Rome, in spite of what they were told by their bishops, voted and voted against me; they have committed a crime in religion in so voting. Then the hon. gentleman was applauded—it was very nice. But I tell him, speaking as authoritatively as he can: You are wrong; find one decision of the church, or one letter of any bishop preventing the curés from voting. There is no such thing. Then, your accusation being wrong, you owe the bishops and priests an apology, and if you do not make that apology, you will have to bear the consequences.

Mr. TARTE. I have said what is perfectly true, and I say it again.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman has repeated in English:

There were no doubt two or three priests who were not hostile to me; but in deference to the wishes, I might say without being unfair, to the order of their bishop, they abstained from voting.

It is not exactly the same as in French; but still the idea is there. He wanted to make this accusation, that if the priests had not disobeyed the orders of Rome and of their bishops he would have had ten more of a majority. Well, I say that this accusation is not based upon the facts; and as it comes from a man of my religion against those priests, I say to him that he should make an apology immediately. A gentleman who makes a mistake is bound to apologize. It is because those curés are not here that he does not apologize. It is not fair to attack them when they are not here. If they were here he would not dare to say that they got an order from the bishops to vote against him; but he says it here because he has the protection of his party, and because a length of time will elapse before he meets those priests. Well, I think it was my duty to protest against this accusation, and I do it because I have hope that in the future such attacks against absentees will not be renewed. I differ a little from my hon. friend on the point that he affirmed very often, that the Manitoba school question is exclusively a constitutional question. In so far as this Parliament is concerned, it is certainly an exclusively constitutional question. But each of us brings his own idea and his own education to decide the question on its merits; so that it becomes to every one of us a politico-religious question. If it is only a constitutional question, how does the hon. gentleman bring in so often the name of Archbishop Taché? This is another indecency, against which I protest as a Catholic, and I am not afraid nor ashamed of affirming myself as such. I object, out of the respect I owe to our religious chiefs, to the habit of constantly bringing into the discussions before this House the names of our bishops and our priests. We should be able to discuss these questions on their merits, and leave our bishops and priests alone. We need not be constantly dragging their names before this Parliament. What idea do we give to the Protestant community when they see us always hanging to the robes of our priests and bishops? Why not let them alone, and discuss these questions with our compatriots without the admixture of the religious element? It is quite indecent. It is not necessary for the debate, it is not for the honour of my religion and I protest against it. I protest also against bringing into this debate private letters, of which we do not know whether they were written, or under what circumstances, whether in a state of health or illness, for what purpose, or to whom they were addressed. We do not know by whom they were written or the history of those letters. For my part, so long as the letter is not placed on the Table of the House, I deny its existence. So long as I do not know by whom it was signed or to whom it was addressed, and so long as I have not an opportunity of reading it all through, as in a court of justice, I will deny its existence. I ask any lawyer in this House, is it not true that in a court of justice, when you want to quote a document, you quote the whole of it and file it, or at least you communicate it to your adversary? Here is a gentleman who has his pocket filled with secrets. He goes to one party and gets a secret, and then he goes to another party and gets another secret, and he is always filled up with secrets. Occasionally he draws out one of those secrets, and reads it, and it has a terrible effect. Perhaps the bishops have allowed him to approach them, and he comes back with secrets from the bishops. Everywhere he gets secrets. Let this new party, which he intends to lead, beware not to give him too many secrets. He will spend his life collecting secrets, and then disclosing them. I would not have said that, but I was full of indignation when I saw that the hon. gentleman wanted to make a case before this Parliament, based upon a private letter of a bishop, when he durst not say to whom the letter was addressed, so that we might have information from that party as to the circumstances under which it was written, and what it meant. I am sorry to be rather severe on that point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not want the permission of anybody to go on. I know what I have to say, and I will go on. The Hon. Mr. Chapleau was approached, too; I suppose there were secrets to be got from him. There were secrets received from the present Minister of Public Works. Happily the Minister was here, and those secrets vanished at once. Whenever we find a witness to those secrets they vanish. Now, my learned friend spoke of continuing the fight. He said we began it and we will go through with it, and he reminded us of the words of the "Mail," which wanted to smash Confederation to its original fragments. I will tell him this, and all those who think like him, that breaking Confederation is a thing we cannot do alone. And even suppose we could do it, would it be fair to the minority of Manitoba? Would it be fair to the minority of Ontario? Would it be fair to the minority of the North-west? Why, the hon. gentleman who comes into this world with a sacred mission to protect the French language and the Catholic religion, says, out of spite: Very well, since I cannot succeed, you, the Catholics and French of Manitoba, may do as you can, we will go away; we are well in the province of Quebec, we are masters there, we are the majority who rule there, we have the strength and money and everything, arrange as you can, we could not succeed in our pretensions and will leave you. Is that honourable, is that a continuation of the fight?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not think so. The hon. gentleman spoke to me about Riel. He said: You remember the Riel question. We began the Riel movement together, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) and myself. He came to Bienville with me; he went on the Champ de Mars, and there he set to work. To overthrow the Government rely upon me, he said, it is not for nothing that I occupy the seat of Parent, the great editor of the "Canadien." He came to Ottawa shortly after that, and when back to Quebec, said: We must save the Ministers. But, I said, the object of the National party is specially for them to be punished. He wanted, however, to save them. If he puts the same persistence into his fight on this Manitoba school question, as he did in the Riel matter, we need not be afraid of his smashing Confederation into pieces. I ask the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), what does he offer better than what we have?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Justice.

Mr. AMYOT. Justice is a thing unknown to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr.

Choquette). I ask, where is the remedy the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) proposes? He must have some remedy. I suppose he does not presume that we will overthrow the Government of our friends and our fiscal policy for nothing? Has he got something better than what we have to offer? If he has, it is certainly not in his motion. His motion says that the Government cannot do anything. What does he propose? Does he take us for men who do not understand the actual position? We have got a Government in which we have confidence, and he says to that Government: You cannot do anything for Manitoba. And then, in his speech, he says: We blame you because you do nothing; and he wants us to take that position. I say that a gentleman of his standing should, when he comes before the country agitating such a question, have some definite proposition to offer, but if he came with the motion that I read in the beginning of my speech, he would not carry, perhaps, ten votes in the House. That is the reason he and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) arranged together to carry some votes, in order to try and overturn the Government, but without benefiting Manitoba. Manitoba is only a pretext, and nothing else. I do not want to make this a party affair, but I am bound to ask this: Who was it that passed that law? It was Mr. Greenway and Mr. Martin. That cannot be denied. Who can undo it? Mr. Greenway and Mr. Martin. Who did they ask lately to join their Cabinet? It was one of the men of the Opposition, who used to sit at the left of the Speaker. Surely they cannot throw upon our party the responsibility. It seems to me as if the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) meant this. The Grits of Manitoba will spend their time in doing harm, and the Conservatives of Ottawa will spend their time undoing that or they will fall. That is a very extraordinary proposition. How can they make our party responsible for that legislation?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Which party?

Mr. AMYOT. Happily not the National party, for that is dead and buried. That was a fine party, but it was led into mud and corruption and dishonour by its chief. My hon. friend knows that, and whenever the time comes before this House or elsewhere to speak at length on that question, I will meet him or anybody else. I have never been a Liberal, I have been a Nationalist, and have been faithful to that party, but I am not bound to spend the rest of my life next to a coffin. Now, I will ask the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) if he is very sure that there is not a way of bringing this question to a better solution? I will draw his attention and that of this House to what is now going on in the United States. I will show this House that at present the Catholic church is entering into a new phase with reference to the question of schools. Bishop Ireland, a most distinguished prelate, had conceived the idea that there was a way between the Catholics and Protestants of agreeing on common schools for both, so that the children of each might be educated in one school. But there was a terrible cry raised in the States. The cry of scandal was raised. His Holiness the Pope sent Monsignor Satolli, who looked into the matter, and seemed to think that Monsignor Ireland was right, and propositions were submitted by Mgr. Satolli to the conference of American bishops at New York. I will read two or three if the House will bear with me. He says, in the second paragraph :

When there is no Catholic school in the place, or when the one that exists is not sufficient to give to the young people a suitable education in conformity with their condition, the public schools may be used in conscience, provided the danger of perversion be overcome by prudent means and convenient precaution, but the decision in this matter must be left to the conscience and wisdom of the ordinaire.

That is going to be the state of things in the United States. They are going to agree there on the guarantee that the education shall be neutral, and shall not be against any creed. I will now read paragraph 5 :

We specially order that no person, bishop or priest, take the liberty which the Sovereign pontiff strictly forbids through the Sacred Congregation to order away by threats, either in fact or otherwise, as not worthy of the Sacraments, the people who would like to send their children to public schools. This order extends "a fortiori" to the children.

So the Pope forbids every one to prevent a man from sending his child to the public school. Now, I will read paragraph 9. I am sorry I have not it in English :

We must not blame, either in public or in private, the Catholic parents who send their sons and daughters to the private schools or to the public schools, academies established to give superior education and conducted by members of religious orders or by people in whom we have confidence. If the parents have sufficient care to provide the religious education, we must leave them the power of procuring otherwise the education suitable for their children.

Mr. Speaker, this indicates that we may come to some understanding, perhaps, with Manitoba. Time will tell. We do not give up any of our rights. I could not give up any rights; they are not mine alone. I think a gross wrong has been practised by Manitoba, and I protest, and will continue to protest, as long as that wrong is not remedied. But let us all join to promote calm consideration of the question, and to bring back harmony in this country. Let us all pull together in the same direction and with good-will to make the country united, prosperous and happy. I do not see the hon. member for L'Islet in his seat; another has escaped.

Mr. O'BRIEN. You have frightened him away.

Mr. AMYOT.

Mr. AMYOT. I close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the amendment is a sacrifice of the French language. It denies the right of the Government to interfere, and so it gives up for the future any chance of having our separate schools in Manitoba, if we have only the remedies recognized by the hon. gentleman. I say we are wrong in our discussions here to always drag in the Catholic clergy. We should avoid it. I say the amendment is not prudent; it is calculated to foment hatred, fanaticism and passion. I say we are wrong when we disclose private communications, and I say that the hon. member for L'Islet, in order to catch a few votes for his motion has made an alliance with the hon. member for North Simcoe, which alliance they dare not admit before the public. And in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that I will vote against the motion, because it is against the interests of the minority in Manitoba, and that any one who will read the question, as presented in the motion, will see that its effect is against the interests of the Manitoba schools and against the French language. For my part, I would rather wait until the wisdom of the old men of the country of every creed and nationality shall have an opportunity to extinguish the fires set by the hon. member for North Simcoe, and increased by Greenway and Martin, rather than follow the political action of my hon. friend from L'Islet, by which he sacrifices the very interests of which he has assumed charge.

Mr. WELDON. I wish to take a few minutes to give a reason for the vote I purpose giving on the amendment of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). That hon. member and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and the hon. member for the county of Ottawa (Mr. Devlin), have asked members of the House to express their disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question, and also to condemn the Government for having assumed judicial functions when they should not, thereby escaping their proper ministerial responsibility. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for L'Islet. I am not prepared to disapprove the course of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question thus far. The reasons given by the hon. member who moved the amendment were several. He asked this House and the members thereof to express their disapproval of the Government—why? First, that the Government did not disallow the Manitoba school legislation. I am in favour of the Government's policy in that regard; I approve of their not disallowing the Bill, and in that matter I cannot agree with the hon. member for L'Islet. I think the Government did wisely in following the example set in the New Brunswick school case twenty-one years ago. The second reason given by the hon.

member is that the Government should have speedily given remedial legislation. I differ again from the hon. member as to the duty of the Government in this difficult and delicate matter, and do not hold that they should have acted "speedily." I think I am speaking the mind of every student in this House, whose duty it is most fully and frequently to inquire into the true meaning of the British North America Act, that, of all the clauses from the first to the last, there is not one that, for the twenty-seven years in which that Act has been in force, has so puzzled them to know what it does mean, and what it does not mean, and what power this Government and this Parliament have in connection with it, as section 93 of the British North America Act, or the cognate section of the Manitoba Act. I do not know from section 1 to section 146 a single section of the British North America Act that presents so many difficulties to students of constitutional law. And, therefore, so far from blaming the Government for not acting speedily, I highly approve of their course in calling to their help all the assistance they could get, in taking care to have a clear and authoritative interpretation of the constitution before committing themselves to any practical action. The third reason was put forth by the hon. member for North Simcoe, that the Government was to blame in promoting an attack upon the law of Manitoba. He stated in a very unfair way what the Government have done in this matter. If the Government did designedly make an attempt to coerce a province, to instigate an attack upon the statutes of any province for the purpose of destroying those statutes, then to be sure they are blameworthy. But so far, we have no evidence that that is what has taken place. If section 93 of the constitution, and section 22 of the Manitoba Act, are, as I acknowledge they are, exceptionally obscure, exceptionally difficult, and furthermore, if this whole question of separate schools in a country seven-twelfths of whom are Protestants and five-twelfths of whom are Catholics, is a question of great delicacy, which requires the most careful handling, then the Government were justified in proceeding with great caution. I do not know that there is from first to last in our history, any question which has required a more careful and delicate handling. The older members of this House know something of the religious quarrels which have taken place in the eastern provinces. In the province of Nova Scotia, about thirty-five years ago, there was open feud between the two parties which developed into the form of a feud between Protestants and Catholics. Who that knows anything of those difficulties, wants to see the baleful fires of religious strife lighted again in this country? "They jest at scars who never felt a wound." In my own province we have had bitter and acrimonious feelings stirred up on these questions, which all moderate men and good citizens have regretted. I think every reasonable man on both sides of the House must, above all other things, desire that this question be not blown into a flame again. Therefore, I say if the Government have spent money in putting this question before the courts, the money is well spent. If they have gone slowly, if they have seen on the horizon a threatening cloud charged with electricity, which would do damage if it were drawn into practical politics, then I say they have done wisely, they have done well, to spend money and move slowly and cautiously to avert anything like religious discord or religious war in this country. The hon. member for Simcoe says that he does not challenge the right of the Catholic minority in Manitoba to make an appeal to the Government in Council, but he does challenge the right of the Government to answer the appeal. How in the world are these two positions to be held at one and the same time? When the constitution provides that in questions like this an appeal shall lie with the Governor-General in Council, how can you say that, while the appellants have a right to appeal, the tribunal to which the appeal is made has no correlative duty to hear and decide such appeal? Is that a fair reading of a constitutional statute? I do not think that upon reflection the hon. member for North Simcoe himself will take the responsibility of adhering to that position. The Government had but one duty. It was happily stated by the Prime Minister at a banquet at Toronto, that one pole star should guide them in dealing with Manitoba's laws, that was, to stand by the Constitution. I do not know what star could more safely guide any responsible body of Ministers in dealing with a question of admittedly great complexity, obscurity and extreme delicacy. I pass, then, from the first part of the resolution to the second part. The pith and sting of this motion is in the second part, when he asks the House to condemn His Excellency's advisers because they have announced a new doctrine. The hon. gentleman says that they shield themselves behind the immunity of judges; that they can claim the right of silence that belongs to a judge, and escape thereby the responsibility, with its attendant punishment, that hangs over His Excellency's political advisers. The hon. member for Simcoe pressed that point with great vigour last night, and in a speech of very great force and ability, insisted that this is new doctrine. Mr. Speaker, with all the respect and deep regard which I have always entertained for the abilities of that hon. member, I say that this is no new doctrine in this country. It is no new doctrine in the mother country. The hon. member stated, in a tone and manner hardly befitting the gravity of the subject, that the doctrine had received its death blow in England, when the Long Parliament, in 1641, cut down the Star Chamber root and branch. He did not carry his statement far enough. If the hon. member's allusion to the destruction of the Star Chamber meant anything, it meant this: That when the Act which destroyed the Star Chamber was put upon the Statute-book of England, the King's Council in England had lost its judicial power, that is, its right to sit as a court of justice. That is the hon. gentleman's position, and that position I deny. That statement I strongly controvert, and I say from that day to this, without a breakdown to this present reign of Queen Victoria, there has been no time in which the Privy Council of England has not possessed some considerable measure of judicial authority. The authority upon which the hon. member rested his Star Chamber argument was that of Professor Dicey. I will read from this book to show that after the abolition of the Star Chamber, the old Privy Council still possessed a measure of judicial authority. On page 144 Dicey says of the Act which abolished the Star Chamber:

The Act 16 Car. I, cap. 10, had taken away the council's extraordinary judicial powers; yet some regular judicial authority is still retained. It exercised the right of arresting and examining accused persons, whom it afterwards sent to the regular law courts. It constituted a court of appeal from the colonial and the ecclesiastical tribunals.

An authority which is much more full and emphatic on the same point is that of Lord Chancellor Selborne, who points out, in his book on the Privy Council, at page 20, that in the very first year after the restoration of Charles II., measures were taken to organize a sub-committee of the King in Council, which was to hear and determine appeals from the Island of Jersey, and the colonies then under the jurisdiction of the Crown. He showed that seven years later, in 1667, a new tribunal was carved out of the Government, larger than the last; the old tribunal consisted of five leading lawyers, and the new one of fourteen, with jurisdiction to hear appeals from Jersey, the Channel Islands, and all the outlying parts of the Empire. He points out again, at page 21, that another change was made, and that the Privy Council, for the purposes of, in part, of performing judicial work, resolved itself into four committees, one for foreign affairs, one for trade and plantations, which latter was a court of justice, pure and simple, making a report to the Queen, who gave judgment on their report. There was a body carved out of the Privy Council, not by statute, not having statutory jurisdiction, not having statutory authority, but created by Order in Council, as Lord Selborne points out, sitting as a court of justice. He says:

Fourteen councillors were nominated upon the committee for Trade and Plantations, of whom any three were to be a quorum. That committee was to have cognizance of all matters concerning His Majesty's Foreign Plantations and the Channel Islands, and also such matters as might properly belong to the cognizance of the council board relating to Scotland or Ireland.

I will not weary the House by tracing the development of this judicial power of the Government. It is enough to say that, down to a recent day, the Committee for Trade and Plantations was a committee to whom appeals went from the courts in the old American colonies before the revolution, and from the other dependencies of the Empire. It is only in the reign of William IV. that the so-called Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was formally constituted into a court with regular procedure, by a statute. So that when the hon. member for North Simcoe stated, not, perhaps, in so many words, but by implication, that the judicial power had died out of the English Government by the abolition of the Star Chamber, he was making a statement which is in open conflict with the high authority of Professor Dicey, of Lord Selborne, and of Mr. Renton, in his book, "Appeal to Privy Council, 1888," who speaks to the same effect, and of Professor Horne, whose book is one of great authority, and who also speaks to the same effect. There is one other authority, that of Mr. Bagehot, from which I will quote, and I hope I am not doing the hon. member for Simcoe any injustice in reading this section. I am sorry the hon. member is not in his place to correct me if I have misapprehended his argument, when he yesterday read this sentence from Bagehot as sustaining his doctrine, an authority than which, I admit, there is none higher that I know of. The hon. gentleman quoted the strong words from Bagehot to show that in England there is complete separation between the judicial and executive functions of the Government. Here is the sentence the hon. member for Simcoe read:

It is laid down as a principle of English polity that in it the legislative, the executive and the judicial powers, are quite divided—that each is entrusted to a separate person or set of persons—that no one of these can at all interfere with the work of the other.

I understood when I heard those words read that that was the deliberate opinion of that great constitutional lawyer. I was surprised when I heard it, because his work is one with which I had some familiarity. This morning, when I had the first opportunity of obtaining the book, I found that the sentence before that one read as follows:—

There are two descriptions of the English Constitution which have exercised immense influence, but which are erroneous.

We all enjoyed very much the humorous description which the hon. member for Simcoe gave of his brother members of the House, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of the Interior. But, laying humour aside—and I believe we had it from yourself, Mr. Speaker, that a part of this was history, and a part of this was fiction—taking a more serious view of the charge, I say that if it be true that the Privy Council in the mother country is a court of justice, if the British North America Act says, as it does, that our Constitution is similar in principle to that of the mother country, and when the Constitution Act gives an appeal to the Governor in Council we may well conclude that the Imperial Act knew it was giving appellant power to a body with judicial authority. Her Majesty's Ministers, therefore, were not only within their rights, but acting with common prudence when they refused to talk of the matter which was being deliberated on in Council? We know, as a matter of fact, that our Privy Council does discharge judicial duties. We need not talk about a Star Chamber. There are many Government decisions given, respecting which you may use the word judicial or quasi-judicial, or to use the words of the report, they that savour rather of the judicial than the political. We need not, however, be too nice about our terms. If the matter referring to the Manitoba schools were under the consideration of the Governor in Council, the Ministers were quite within their right in being guarded and careful as to their statements. I venture to express the opinion that if they had spoken differently and had disclosed the secrets of Council, both of those hon. gentlemen would have been blame-worthy. I began by saying, and I close by repeating the statement that the constitutional clauses dealing with this Manitoba School Bill are, in the highest degree, perplexing and difficult. It is not necessary for me to go on and expound them. I do not think any hon. gentleman is called on to go on and explain the legal view and weary the House by setting forth his own view. I will, however, with the indulgence of the House, call attention to those sections dealing with the province of Manitoba. Some persons say that the rights of Manitoba in this matter are governed by the British North America Act, and some say they are governed by the Manitoba Act. Some others say that the appellant can rely on both. They have so far relied on the Manitoba Act, which gives them a larger scope in testing the legality of the school law, because, under the Manitoba Act, clause 1 of section 22, they could attack the Manitoba school as being either against the law, or against the established practice at the date of the Union. When they were called upon to settle this question as to whether it was intra vires or ultra vires, they could throw themselves on the Manitoba Act, and they would clearly be within their rights in doing so. We next come to the second provision in section 22 of the Manitoba Act, which deals with an appeal to the Governor in Council, and it is said they can rely on that, or that if they choose to they can go back to the cognate section of the British North America Act. I do not know that it is necessary for me to give an opinion on this point. My own opinion, however, is, that it makes very little difference which of the two they rely on. If I read the Manitoba Act correctly, clause 2, which deals with the appeal to the Governor-General in Council, is a wider clause than the cognate clause in the British North America Act, although many lawyers hold a contrary opinion. But on that very point the British North America Act gives the right to appeal, and grounds it on two conditions; first, where separate schools existed by law at the time of Union; and second, where such is hereafter established by the Legislature. What happened, when the remaining part of the section in the Imperial statute of 1867 is reproduced in the Imperial statute of 1871, for it is within the knowledge of the House that the Canada Act of 1870 was ratified by an Imperial statute of the next year, and so, for all intents and purposes, it becomes an Imperial Act as of 1870. The Imperial Parliament having made a declaration in 1870, and in 1867, and having reproduced in the Act of 1870 part of the words of the Act of 1867, the common rules of construction will tell us, that the parts not reproduced were deliberately omitted, and, if so, the power in the Act of 1871 is wider than that in the Act of 1867, for the appeal in the Act of 1867 was grounded on two conditions, while the appeal in the Act of 1871 was grounded on nothing, or, in other words, there were all possible grounds for the appeal to rest on. I hold, therefore, it is a matter of perfect indifference, in dealing with this phase of the subject, the right of appeal to the Governor in Council, whether it was the Manitoba Act or the British North America Act which gave the wider right of appeal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the hon. gentleman to argue that the clauses relating to education are complete in the Act of 1871, or whether the clauses in the British North America Act are also applicable to Manitoba?

Mr. WELDON. From my point of view, it makes no difference, dealing with the question of the appeal to the Canadian Privy Council, and setting aside the question of the Act being ultra vires. In my judgment, clause 2 of the Manitoba Act is wider than clause 3 of the British North America Act—I refer to the cognate clause—because clause 3 of the British North America Act grounds the right of appeal on two sets of facts, and in the corresponding clause in the Manitoba Act nothing is set forth as the grounds, and, therefore, everything may be held to be the ground.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know whether the hon. gentleman's legal opinion is, that there is any room for doubt that the clauses relating to education were confined to the Manitoba Act of 1870, or whether, in his opinion, the clause in the British North America Act was supplementary or complementary or an addition to the Act of 1870; because, if it is not so, what possible appeal could lie, in view of the judgment of the Privy Council?

Mr. WELDON. This question is academic, from the point of view of the present discussion in this House. If we were dealing with the question as to whether it is "ultra vires," this question would be vital, but we have left behind the question as to whether it is "ultra vires," and the question is now as to an appeal to the Governor in Council. I am, therefore, not bound to express an opinion, because it is not customary to give an opinion on a question that is not vital. When we come to clause 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, there is a difficulty. In reading the first three lines of clause 3, every lawyer in the House who tries to construe them, will agree with me, that they are there by accident. They are a mechanical transposition of lines that appear in clause 4 of section 93 of the British North America Act, and which look back to clause 2 and are not capable of being constructed. Seeing that clause 2 of section 93 of the British North America Act was not reproduced in the provision of the section 22 of the Manitoba Act. I express that opinion after having given the matter due consideration. In my reading of the clause, I prefer to omit the first three lines and make clause 3 begin with the word "in," on the third line. Then there does not seem to be any very great difficulty. Of course, opinions differ on this point. Some persons think the question raised by the hon. member is a very difficult one. If such is the fact, there is more necessity for calling in the help of the court, in accordance with the policy of the Blake Act of 1891. The intention was, on these questions that arouse religious feeling, and where men cannot reason as in a white light, but have their minds perturbed by passion and feeling, that the Legislature should call the statute to its help in all difficulties quasi-judicial. Without saying more, Mr. Speaker, and for these reasons, I cannot vote for the amendment of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte).

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has taken all force out of his argument by the last few words of his address. He pointed to the difficulty of considering matters of this kind impartially in such a body as the Cabinet composed of advisers to His Excellency. He pointed out that Mr. Blake sought by his resolution, and this House had provided by the subsequent legislation founded on it, to remove from the political arena all questions that might give rise to religious excitement or feeling. He pointed out that Mr. Blake wished, that the Government wished, and that Parliament wished to attain that end by referring all legal questions to the Supreme Court, but he did not go on to tell the whole story. He did not give us the conclusion from that beginning, and that conclusion is: That legal questions requiring judicial consideration, shall be left entirely to the Supreme Court, and that the Cabinet, as such, should not attempt to decide upon questions of a judicial or legal nature. The hon. gentleman also told us that the Privy Council of England had never lost its judicial attributes, and that they were in full force in this reign of Queen Victoria. Technically, and as a mere question of phraseology the hon. member is correct, that appeals are nominally made to Her Majesty in Council, from the colonial courts, as well as from the courts of the United Kingdom, yet let me ask: to what portion of Her Majesty's Privy Council are these appeals made? Does an appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada to Her Majesty in Council, go before Mr. Gladstone and his Cabinet? Not at all. I am astonished that a gentleman so learned in the law, that he has received the title of Doctor of Laws, should make such an egregious mistake as to refer to appeals to the Privy Council in England, as if it were something analogous to an appeal to the Governor in Council here. It must have been a mistake on the part of the hon. gentleman, because I cannot think that if he reflected on it for a moment, he would impose such an utterly misleading, incorrect, and absurd argument upon the House. He must have forgotten that the Committee of the Privy Council which hears appeals from the colonies, is composed of the Law Lords, and that none of the political members of the Cabinet, who are also members of the Privy Council, have anything to do with hearing these appeals. If the analogy were worth anything, the practice would have to be that Mr. Gladstone and his political colleagues had the right to hear appeals from Canada. To pretend that would be absurd, and, therefore, the argument which the hon. gentleman based upon the use of the name "Privy Council" (for that is all it amounts to) in connection with these appeals falls to the ground. It is not the Privy Council in England which hears the appeals, but a small committee of it, composed of those learned in the law who have previously occupied high judicial positions. The hon. gentleman stated that our Privy Council does discharge judicial functions, but he failed to prove it. Certain individual members of our Privy Council discharge functions which might be considered to some extent of a quasi-judicial character; such as the Minister of Agriculture hearing cases of patents, and the duties of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, but these are all functions conferred on them by statute, and they do not arise out of the prerogative, from the fact that these gentlemen belong to the Privy Council. I am sorry the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) is not now in his seat, because I wanted to seek information from him with regard to one statement he made. I understood him to say, that the Imperial Act of 1871 included clause 3 of the British North America Act which had been left out in our Manitoba Act of 1870.

and he argued from that, that the same broad right of appeal which existed under the British North America Act existed under the Manitoba Act. The hon. the Premier did not agree with that view in his address. He said that there was no provision in the Manitoba Act for an appeal of this kind, that if it came in at all it must come in under section 3 of the British North America Act, interpreted as applied to Manitoba, notwithstanding the fact that Manitoba had a supplementary Act of her own. After recess, I should like to hear the explanation of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) on that point.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

SUPPLY—SEPARATE SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. CASEY. When you left the Chair, Sir, I was referring to the fact that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) had quoted from the Imperial statutes, ratifying the Manitoba Act, as passed by this House, and I was under the impression, from what he said, that the general provisions embodied in section 33 has been re-enacted in that Imperial statute, as far as concerned Manitoba. I was sorry he was not in his place at the time, but met the hon. gentleman since, and understand from him that he did not make that statement, and so I have nothing further to say on that point. With regard to the general question before us, I must endorse most heartily one sentiment which fell from the lips of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). In speaking of the spirit with which we should approach this question, he laid down the very sound doctrine that we should do so in such a manner as not to awaken any religious prejudice or excite some of those feelings which, unfortunately, have already been awakened. I will pay the hon. gentleman the compliment of saying that he carried out that principle in his speech, and I shall try to follow his example. I cannot, however, say that that principle has been followed by all who have spoken on the subject. I do not know that it was followed either by the mover of the resolution itself or by his principal supporter on the other side of the House (Mr. McCarthy) or by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) who spoke a little while ago. There was a little smack of religious feeling in all, and of racial animosity in the case of the latter gentleman, who showed an inclination to hit out in all directions, like the Irishman, wherever he saw a head convenient to hit at. He travelled from the religious belief of Roman Catholics, from their prejudices or principles, whichever you choose to call them, in relation to having their children attend public schools, to the formation of the National party and the undertaker's shop, where he sat beside a coffin and waited for somebody to bury it. All that is no part of the issue before the House, and I shall refrain in great degree from criticising the speeches made on either side of this question, for the reason that we are not called upon to vote on these speeches. I wish to confine myself as far as possible to the resolution which is before the House; to point out what that resolution means, in its plainest interpretation, and to state my own opinion as clearly as possible as to whether that resolution should be adopted or not. We have had a great deal of argument something in this line: Hon. gentlemen on that side have said, We rather agree with the wording of this resolution, but the speech of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), who introduced it, was of such a nature that we cannot possibly vote for the resolution. Others have said in effect, as my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) did, that they had not so much fault to find with the wording of the resolution, but that they could not vote for it because the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) approved it. Now, that is all wide at the mark. No doubt the resolution lends itself to that mode of treatment. It is quite possible for anybody to say: I support this resolution for a very different reason from that of hon. gentlemen on the other side, or: I oppose this resolution because some hon. gentlemen on the other side has found a meaning in it which I do not like, and therefore, as he thinks, it means something I do not approve of, I cannot support it. Now, though this may seem at first sight a powerful argument to gentlemen who laid it before the House, I am satisfied that, when they come to see this resolution in cold print after the session is over, and have to defend their vote in regard to it on some public platform, they will find out that the public will not consider the speeches which have been made on either side; that, in fact, the greater part of the public will not have read the speeches; but that the public at large will be well informed as to the wording of the motion itself and as to the actual meaning of the words therein set before the House to be voted upon. And I hope, therefore, we shall confine ourselves henceforth as far as possible to discussing the meaning of the resolution moved by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) without considering what reasons induced him to move it or what reasons induced the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to support it. We have to say "yes" or "no" to a certain form of words meaning a certain thing, and we have to say so, not in the ultra-judicial spirit which the Prime Minister assumes for himself and his colleagues sitting in council, and yet in a spirit of as great impartiality as we can assume for the occasion. Again, Mr. Speaker, there is another line of the argument to which I object. There has been a great deal of argument as to whether the Manitoba School Act abolishing the separate schools should ever have been passed or not. Now, Sir, that is not the question before the House at all. This debate is not concerned in the slightest degree with the justice, the constitutionality or the equity of the Manitoba School Act. It is not the School Act which is on trial at all; it is not the Manitoba Government which is on trial, nor the Legislature of Manitoba; it is the Government here at Ottawa, who have taken a certain course in regard to this question, and who are attacked by this resolution for the course which they have taken. It may be that the Manitoba School Act is just what it should have been, that it is just and constitutional and equitable. It may be, on the other hand, that it is oppressive and unjust, and a violation of the Constitution. But whatever be its nature, Mr. Speaker, that nature has nothing to do with the question now before the House. We are asked to condemn this Government, not for the defects of the Manitoba School Act, but because of the course which they themselves, as a Government, have taken in regard to it, and I, for one, cannot refrain from expressing my agreement with that first clause in the motion of my hon. friend from L'Islet, which expresses a general condemnation of the Government for their action in this regard. I do not condemn the Government because they refused to veto that School Act. I do not condemn them because they made a reference of the legal point in connection with the matter to the Supreme Court, nor do I condemn them, on the other hand, for the reason urged by my hon. friend from North Simcoe, that they should have told the petitioners in this case that there was no possible relief for them under any circumstances. In this I differ entirely from my hon. friend from North Simcoe. I think the Government would have done an injustice had they told the petitioners: There is no chance at all for you: we will not look into the case and see if you have a right of appeal. I think it would have been highly improper for them to do so. We must remember that, though there is a large majority in Manitoba in favour of non-sectarian schools, there is still a minority, be it large or small, it matters not, a minority who think they have claims under the constitution to be heard in opposition to the School Act, and to obtain remedial legislation from this House if the Government see fit to sustain their claims. It makes no difference whether the minority be large or small, their rights are equally great. The rights of a minority of 1,000 are as great as those of a minority of 20,000, at which figure, I think, the hon. member for North Simcoe put the Catholic minority in Manitoba. I think it but right to say to these people: Come and discuss with us the question whether you have the right to appeal or not. I can approve the course of the Government so far. I can approve the course of the Government also, when they found they could not decide for themselves the legal question whether they should interfere or not, in appealing to the Supreme Court. I think any one who approved the resolution of 1890 moved by Mr. Blake and the Bill of 1891 putting it in statutory form must approve the reference of the legal point at issue to the Supreme Court. But, Sir, things that are done rightly may be done at the wrong time; things in themselves right may be done too late. I think the Government have been extremely dilatory in postponing the settlement of this constitutional question until three years have passed, until agitation, unrest and perhaps suffering has been caused to some people from the doubtful position of the law and the legal struggles that have gone on in regard to it. I think they showed a policy of postponement, of evasion, of shuffling off the question from time to time. I must condemn that sort of conduct. My hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) said there is a great deal of wisdom in "to-morrow." The Government seem to have been of the same opinion. They have been going on from to-morrow till to-morrow, in the hope that this question will at last take some such shape that they would not have to give any decision upon it, that they could shuffle off the whole question on the courts, and that the courts would finally say. Well, you have no room to act under the circumstances. I think that as soon as it was evident that the petitioners from Manitoba not only attacked the constitutionality of this law, but claimed relief in another shape, even if the law were constitutional, the Government should have set themselves to work at the earliest moment possible to obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court on the subject, it might all have been decided a year ago, at least. An Act providing for a reference to the Supreme Court was passed in 1891, and it was only on the 22nd of last month that a case was ordered to be prepared for the Supreme Court. The case is not even yet before the Supreme Court, I suppose, because it was only ordered to be prepared on the 22nd of February last, and I do not suppose it can have come before the judges even yet. I condemn them, then, for being dilatory, for being evasive, for being shuffling in that respect, in dealing with the question. I must condemn them, again, because they instituted, and afterwards sustained, litigation against an Act of the Provincial Government of Manitoba, tending to shear that Government of powers conferred upon it by the Constitution of the province. If the Act were "ultra vires," I think with my hon. friend from North Simcoe, it might have been left, as other Acts are left, to the parties interested who instituted the suit and carried it through. It is quite certain that the Catholic interest in that province is not so weak in itself nor so friendless in other parts of the Dominion, that there would have been any difficulty in procuring the necessary funds to bring a test case before the courts as to the constitutionality of the Act. I think the Government might have left that part of it alone, and devoted themselves to settling the other great constitutional question which concerned themselves, as to whether they had a right to hear an appeal in the matter, even if the Act itself were "intra vires." I can find no sort of precedent for the action of the Government in promoting this litigation, unless the case arising out of the settlement of what used to be called the disputed territory of Ontario, might be taken as a precedent. In that case, after a long litigation, it was decided that certain lands which were long in dispute, did belong to the province of Ontario. This Government, however, claimed that the timber and minerals on those lands did not belong to Ontario, but belonged to this Government, and proceeded to give licenses to cut timber upon the lands. The St. Catharines Milling Company, amongst others, went largely into the business, and cut a large amount of timber and took it away, in part. Litigation began, and the Dominion sustained the case of the St. Catharines Milling Company against the Government of Ontario; and my friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) will be able to tell us probably how many thousand dollars were spent by the Government in sustaining that litigation. I think it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $70,000 or $80,000; the hon. member for Simcoe must know very well what the amount was. In that case the Dominion claimed to possess property owned by the province; and, although it was attacking claims, which were afterwards found to be rights, of the Ontario Government, it was doing so in an ordinary way, just as one person might bring a suit against another to settle their respective rights to a certain piece of land. I cannot say that I can find much fault with the payment of the law costs in that case by the Dominion Government, because they had a right to have their claims to that land investigated at public expense. But this case is altogether different. Here the Dominion is not a claimant at all. It is not a question of whether the Dominion or the Manitoba Government have a right to pass a certain law; it is a question as to whether the Manitoba Government had a right to pass it. The Dominion was not a party in the case. The Dominion made itself a party in the case, and spent a lot of money in trying to break up that autonomy which all the provinces claim. I condemn the Government, therefore, on that ground also; and for that reason still more than for the first, I agree with the first part of the resolution before the House. Then, there is no doubt at all that whatever words were used, whatever pledges were made, whether officially or non-officially, by Mr. Chapleau or anybody else, to the hierarchy of the Catholic Church, or to anybody else interested, there is no doubt that at the time of the elections in 1891, the impression had somehow been created amongst our friends in Quebec that the Government were ready, if this law appeared to be "intra vires," to do something or other to relieve their friends in the province of Manitoba. There is no doubt that impression was somehow created; the Government took advantage of it, and no doubt gained a great many votes thereby. We must charge them, therefore, with constructive deceit in this matter, if not with an outspoken misstatement of the truth. There is no doubt they created the impression, they profited by the impression, and they never had the courage to say what their intentions were upon the subject. Now, Sir, I think these are quite sufficient reasons for pronouncing a general condemnation upon the Government. But we are asked to pronounce, also, a special condemnation upon the Government because they propose to assume judicial attributes in dealing with this question, ultimately. The sub-committee of the Cabinet, first authorized to hear Mr. Ewart on behalf of the Catholic petitioners of Manitoba, reported that it was doubtful whether they could go further at present, than to advise that the question of whether an appeal could lie or not should first be referred to the Supreme Court. In reference to that point I must quote what was stated by the sub-committee. It has been quoted before, but it is almost impossible for me to say what I want to, without quoting it again:

The application comes before Your Excellency in a manner differing from applications which are ordinarily made, under the constitution, to Your Excellency in Council. In the opinion of the sub-committee, the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of a political character or involving political action on the part of Your Excellency's advisers. It is to be dealt with by Your Excellency in Council, regardless of the personal views which Your Excellency's advisers may hold with regard to denominational schools, and without the political action of any of the members of Your Excellency's Council being considered as pledged by the fact of the appeal being entertained and heard.

Now, here are the words to which I wish to call particular attention:

If the contention of the petitioners be correct, that such an appeal can be sustained, the inquiry will be rather of a judicial than of a political character. The sub-committee have so treated it in hearing counsel, and in permitting their only meeting to be open to the public. It is apparent, that several other questions will arise, in addition to those which were discussed by counsel at that meeting, and the sub-committee advises that a date be fixed, at which the petitioners, or their counsel, may be heard with regard to the appeal, according to their first request.

Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Premier, speaking on this matter on Monday, only quoted the first part of the clause of the report. The hon. gentleman quoted the portion which stated that the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of a political character, but he did not quote the rest of the paragraph to the effect that if an appeal were allowed, the appeal would still be of a judicial nature. He led the House to understand that it was the intention of the sub-committee that only preliminary inquiries as to whether the appeal should be allowed or not were to be conducted judicially, and he said that after that stage it became a question of policy. That was not, however, the language of the report. This is a point on which I am wholly and entirely with the resolution before the House and in full sympathy with the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The hon. Premier quoted from Mr. Blake's speech in support of his resolution in 1890, and he seemed to be of the opinion that Mr. Blake's remarks strengthened his position. Again, I must re-read what has been quoted already:

Now, Sir, the general notion that the executive, the legislative and the judicial departments of Government ought to be so far as practicable separate and apart is one held by many of the most eminent constitutionalists as a fundamental principle. There can be no doubt that the absolute union of these departments is neither more nor less than absolute despotism. Unite in one hand, I care not whether it be the hand of an autocrat or the hand of a council, the power of legislation, the power of adjudication and the power of administration, and you make the most absolute despotism: that is conceivable.

The hon. Premier read those words as justifying a reference of a part of this case to the Supreme Court. It is almost impossible to imagine that he could not see the sophistry of applying Mr. Blake's remarks in justification of his own course. So far as a reference to the Supreme Court is concerned, the whole drift of Mr. Blake's speech and his resolution would justify that course. But what did Mr. Blake propose to refer? Simply all that required the decision of judicial minds and impartial judges. After that, what remains? Nothing but a question of policy. After the Supreme Court has decided that this Government has a right to hear an appeal in regard to this Act, what is there requiring a judge to decide? What remains is purely and simply a question of policy. The Supreme Court says, you have the right to enact remedial legislation if you choose. The Government are called on, not as a court to decide any questions of facts or law, but they are called on as advisers of His Excellency to say what should be done under the circumstances, what it is politic to do, what in equity should be done, what it is morally right to do under the circumstances. That is not a question of law, it is a question for the consideration of Ministers as a Cabinet and not as a court. The hon. Premier tried to do away with the impression that the Government wish to shield itself behind a quasi-judicial decision, by asserting that they were responsible to the House for whatever they did in the matter, whether they sat judicially or as a Cabinet. In one sense that is true. It is certain that if this House was satisfied that the Government had decided contrary to law and justice, the opinion would be expressed, and the Government would be held responsible to the House. But that is not the kind of responsibility we want. We want to hold them responsible, not for their opinions, but for their acts, just as if they proposed any change in the tariff or any other law affecting the welfare of the people. We should be able to assail them, not as judges who have made a mistake in the law, but as servants of the Crown and servants of this Parliament, and as having done an act which neither Parliament nor the country wish to be done. The hon. Premier attempted to make it clear that he would be at the same time responsible and irresponsible, but his effort was too weak to impress the House. In regard to the policy as to whether if the Government have the power the Manitoba School Act should be nullified by remedial legislation or not, the Government are as well able to pronounce upon that question now as they will be after they have received the report of the Supreme Court in regard to it. They know as well now as they will a year hence, whether it would be right and proper to nullify that legislation. They are only waiting to hear whether they have the right to do so before they pronounce an opinion whether they will take that action or not. They do not need to hear any statement of fact or argument of counsel; it is a mere question of justice and morality as to whether the Act should be nullified or not. I am not going to give my opinion as to whether it should be or not, but the Government are in a position to give that opinion, and they can be fairly called upon to give it. The Secretary of State (Mr. Costigan) was challenged last night by the hon. member for Ottawa county (Mr. Devlin) to state whether he thought the Act should be nullified or not. The challenge was just and fair, because there is nothing that can come before the Supreme Court upon the legal question that can affect the other question, namely, if the power exists to pass remedial legislation, should it be exercised? It is perfectly fair to ask the Government to state now, as well as later, where they stand on this question. But the Government feel it necessary to skulk behind some shadow of judicial authority in order to find some reason for postponement, and in the hope that the decision need never be announced publicly. No doubt they have made up their minds what to do, but they hope that Providence will spare them telling the public about it. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) made a statement to the effect that no policy was involved in the motion before the House, that it merely said that this House was unable to do anything under the circumstances, no matter what the rights of the Catholic minority in Manitoba might be. He repeated that several times, and I am astonished that my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) did not contradict it. But any one who looks at the resolution can see for himself that it does not say anything of the kind. It does not say that nothing can be done, but it attacks the Government for having done nothing, and there is a very great difference between the two propositions. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) thinks the Government are to blame because nothing has been done, and the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) thinks the same thing, although, of course, from a different standpoint from that of my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). Again, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) approved of the course of the Government in this matter on the ground that if a man goes rashly in one direction he may come to grief. There is a great deal of truth in that and I have no doubt my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has found it so. He went forward rashly in one direction on one occasion, and then the opposite direction on another occasion, and, I believe, he does not find himself exactly comfortable in the political position in which he has placed himself. I leave him to the kind attentions of those who have been his political colleagues in the past, and that includes gentlemen on both sides of the House, because he has been the political colleague of both. In conclusion, I express the hope, with the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that this question shall be discussed henceforth, as it has not been altogether in the earlier stages of the debate, with that delicacy, with that dignity, and with that regard to religious feelings, and even prejudices, if we choose to look upon them as prejudices, which will remedy, if possible, the agitation which has unfortunately existed in the country already.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, there is a most suggestive lesson in the manner in which the Government and their supporters have received the amendment which has been placed in your hands by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). They oppose that amendment, and they attack it, but no reason or no ground for their opposition and their attack is to be found within the four corners of the amendment. The ground of their opposition arises from a fact which is ulterior to the motion itself. The whole ground of their opposition is, that the motion moved by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) received the support of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I need not tell the House, for everybody knows it, that between the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) there is nothing in common, except this one thing: The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) is a courageous man, and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is a courageous man. The member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has convictions and the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has convictions, and although their convictions are as wide apart as the antipodes, both have the courage of being true, each one to his own, and it is for this reason that each on this occasion is able from his own stand-point to assail this Government, which has neither courage nor convictions. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), believes that in this matter the Catholic minority of Manitoba ought to be protected in its ancient privilege. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) believes, on the contrary, that the legislative independence of Manitoba ought to be maintained inviolate. This is the question which the Government has to solve, and this is the question as to which, after three years or more, we have not been able to get an answer from them. That is the reason why the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), who holds convictions on the one side, and the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who holds convictions on the other side, are able upon this occasion to arraign this Government for their arrant cowardice. Sir, I say "arrant cowardice," and the expression is not at all too strong. You have heard the defence of the Government and their supporters, you have heard the speeches delivered by the members of the Government and their supporters, and if you read them over again, I defy any one to find in any of these speeches a single expression given as to the policy which the Government intend to pursue on this question. It may be worth while to review this discussion. The gentleman who opened the debate on the part of the Government was the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRiviere), and if there is a man in this House, coming, as he does, from the province of Manitoba, representing the Catholic minority in that province; if there is a man who should have an opinion to express upon this occasion, that man is the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. La-Riviere) whom I regret not to see in his place at this moment. But the hon. gentleman was neither fish nor flesh, and he spoke only to say that he had nothing to say. Next came in chronological order the Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman certainly made a very able speech, but, Sir, the one point which made the ability of his speech so apparent was, that after having spoken for two hours he was able to escape without having told the House what his policy was. The First Minister certainly made a most skilful speech, skilful to the point of disingenuousness. The hon. gentleman hinted—he did not say—and the hint was taken as authority for an assertion by many of his supporters: he hinted that the motion now before the House was drawn by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). Well, Sir, it is childish, it is almost beneath my dignity, to have to repeat here that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) had absolutely nothing to do with the drawing of this amendment. Then, the hon. the First Minister, referring to the statement made by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), as to certain negotiations which were supposed to have taken place between this Government and His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, said, that the assertion was unfounded that Mr. Chapleau had been instructed by this Government, or had been empowered by this Government to negotiate with His Grace the Archbishop. Sir, I am quite ready to admit that Mr. Chapleau never was empowered by an instrument under the Great Seal of this Dominion, duly recorded in the Department of State, to negotiate with the Archbishop of St. Boniface; but I yet await the denegation that Mr. Chapleau, in the name of his colleagues, had several interviews with His Grace of St. Boniface, and that every one of these interviews was reported to the Prime Minister, and, I believe, even to the Minister of Justice. I might point out, in the speech of the hon. Prime Minister, references to several other statements of my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) which were, I will not say, positively contradicted by him, but which were, to some extent contradicted—a happy medium between negation and affirmation. But I will pass these over, and come to the conclusion of the hon. gentleman's speech; and I regret that he is not now in his seat, because I could tell him that the concluding portion of his speech was spoken in language calculated to convey a false impression to the minds of the people of this country. The hon. gentleman concluded with some noble words with which I altogether agree. He stated that whatever should be the decision of the Supreme Court on the questions now referred to that tribunal, he was sure that the Government of Manitoba, whether it was in the hands of friends or of foes of the present Administration, would loyally submit to that decision. Sir, in that statement there was a false impression conveyed to the people, and the false impression was this, that the decision of this question finally rested with the courts and not with the Government. Sir, I am quite sure, indeed, that whatever that decision might be, the Government of Manitoba, whether in the hands of friends or of foes, would loyally abide by it. But everybody knows, and the hon. gentleman ought to have said so to the House, that whatever may be the decision of the Supreme Court upon this question, there will be nothing in it for the Government of Manitoba to submit to. Why, Sir, it is notorious that the question upon which the Supreme Court has now to decide is whether or not the Government have the power to interfere with the legislation of Manitoba. Suppose, then, that the Supreme Court decides in the negative; suppose it decides that this Government has not the power to interfere with the legislation of Manitoba? Then, Sir, of course there will be nothing that the Government of Manitoba will be called upon to submit to. Suppose, on the other hand, that the decision of the court is that this Government has power to interfere with the legislation of Manitoba? Then, still there would be nothing that the Government of Manitoba would have to submit to. But then the responsibility would rest with the Government of coming to a decision on the question of interfering or not interfering with the legislation of Manitoba. And so, Sir, I say it was a false impression to convey to the people of this country that the decision of this question would finally rest with the Supreme Court, whereas, in one contingency, it must rest with this Government. Next, we heard from the Solicitor-General, who made a very long and laboured speech. He attempted to crush the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) under the weight of a mass of quotations which might have been very good in themselves, but which, in my estimation, had not the slightest relevancy to the question. But whether his quotations were or were not relevant to the question, the hon. gentleman concluded without telling us a word as to what was his own opinion upon the final merits of this question. Then, Sir, we had the hon. Secretary of State. That hon. gentleman, who is an old war-horse, warmed up at the recollection of the battles which he had fought in former times for separate schools in New Brunswick, but he grew cold the moment he came to the question of separate schools in Manitoba—so cold, indeed, that not a word passed his frozen lips on that question. Then, next in order we had my hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Craig). My hon. friend looked upon the motion in your hands, Mr. Speaker, most minutely. He examined it most critically, word for word, syllable by syllable; and, after having examined it from top to bottom, from bottom to top, from right to left, and from left to right, he concluded that he could find nothing in it which he could support. The motion blames the Government for their conduct in this matter, but the hon. gentleman finds nothing at all to blame the Government for. On the contrary, he approves everything the Government have done. He approves especially the reference the Government have now made of this question to the Supreme Court. Then my hon. friend grew a little bolder; he warned the Government. Mind you, said he, you must not touch the legislation of Manitoba; you are not to interfere with the legislative independence of Manitoba. Well, does not my hon. friend perceive that the moment he comes to that conclusion, he passes the severest condemnation possible upon the conduct of the Government? Why, Sir, what is the question that is referred to the Supreme Court? The hon. gentleman tells us that he approves of that reference. If he approves the reference to the Supreme Court, does he forget that that reference is to decide whether or not the Government have the power to interfere with the legislation of Manitoba? If, in his opinion, the Government should not interfere with the legislation of Manitoba, why, in the name of common sense, should there be a reference to the Supreme Court at all? Not only should there not be a reference to the Supreme Court under such circumstances, but I say that the reference to the Supreme Court under such circumstances is most dangerous, because, if the Supreme Court should decide that the Government have the power to interfere with the legislation of Manitoba, and the Government should not obey the legal mandate which they themselves had sought, there would be a powerful and a rightful agitation in some parts of the country against the Government. Then, Sir, we had my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). Well, Sir, whatever the faults of my hon. friend may be, no one, up to this moment, ever accused him of wanting in pluck. But for the first time in my life I have seen my hon. friend from Bellechasse sadly deficient in pluck to-day. He spoke for two hours and more, but he would not tell, after all, what his opinion was upon the question now at issue—whether the Catholic minority ought to be protected, or whether the legislative independence of Manitoba ought to be maintained inviolate. And last, we had my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon). My hon. friend did not exactly apply himself to the question; but he gave us a doctrine which, in my estimation, was most extraordinary. Why, Sir, if I understood his speech aright, he said this: that we had all been labouring under a delusion, when we had supposed that the Star Chamber had been abolished by the English Parliament—he told us that there was still a vestige of the Star Chamber remaining in the Government of England, and remaining for the good of the Government and the people at large. Sir, in the whole conduct of this Government with regard to this question, there has been shifting, most miserable shifting, to avoid coming to a decision. The question, after all, is a simple one. In 1890 the Legislature of Manitoba passed a law which the Roman Catholic minority deemed oppressive; that minority appealed to the Government against that law; their prayer has to be denied or has to be granted; this is the simple issue; and yet, Sir, one year, two years, three years have elapsed, and during those three years the Government have never dared yet to come to a decisive action—nay, to express a simple opinion. And, Sir, what is the reason? The reason is well known. The reason is not new; it is as old as the constitution itself. The reason is, that upon this occasion, as upon similar occasions, there is not in this Government the courage equal to the duty of the hour. The reason is, that upon this occasion, as upon many similar occasions, the hon. gentlemen, though they are now seventeen in number, do not find in themselves the manhood to deal with a difficult question. The question is a difficult one—I admit that it is surrounded with difficulties—because it is surrounded with passions, passions religious and national. The hon. gentleman from Winnipeg, the other day, stated, and stated truly, that this question is no longer a provincial one. It has passed beyond the limits of Manitoba; it has reached Ontario and it has reached Quebec. Already you hear the grumbling voice of Ontario, that the Legislature of Manitoba is not to be interfered with; and, on the other hand, you hear the threatening voice of Quebec, that the Roman Catholic minority is to be protected in all its rights. And between these contending passions of Protestants in Ontario and Catholics in Quebec, the Government dare not take action. Hesitating, halting, vacillating, they are tossed to and fro, afraid to act, afraid even to speak. Catholics, Protestants, Quebec, Ontario—Sir, I am not afraid of the passions of Catholics or Protestants; I am not afraid of the passions of Ontario or Quebec, if only the language of reason is spoken and heard. But, Sir, if this Government never speak the voice of reason; if this Government ever fail to appeal to the common sense and the large heart and sound judgment of the people; if by expedients and makeshifts they allow passion and bitterness to grow and swell the heart, the day will come when passion will break out in uncontrollable outburst, and when the voice of reason will be as powerless as if it were addressed to the surging waves of the ocean. Catholics, Protestants, Ontario, Quebec—these are, after all, the dread phantoms which have hitherto prevented the Government from acting. Sir, there is a nobler and higher ground. It may not be possible to solve this question without offending, to a large extent, extreme Protestants or extreme Catholics; but if the Government had been up to the duty of the hour, if they had striven to screw their courage to the sticking point, they would have solved the question long ago, without shifting or equivocating, and would have then appealed to the strong patriotism and common sense of the people, appealed to all those, whether Protestants or Catholics, who take pride in the name of Canadian, who believe in the harmonious development of Canada; for, Sir, there is the supreme consideration—the supreme inspiration, Canada—Canada as a whole, Canada, our country, Canada—before which all other considerations must yield. Now, I affirm this at the outset. As I read the Constitution of this country, as I read the British North America Act and the Manitoba Act, I say that there is within the provisions of the Constitution, an appeal given to the minority in Manitoba—nay, given to the minority in all the provinces—to this Government whenever they feel oppressed by local legislation in the matter of education. It has been stated that this doctrine, which I now enunciate, is not compatible with the doctrine of provincial rights, of which the party to which I belong has always been the champion. Sir, I am to-day as firm a believer as I ever was in the doctrine of provincial rights. I take as much pride as ever I did in belonging to the great party which in the past carried that doctrine to a successful issue, an issue, indeed, so successful that we rank among the advocates of that doctrine to-day the most prominent of the men who opposed it in the past. And when the historian of the future shall refer to the first twenty years of Confederation, the brightest page he will have to record will be the page in which he will trace the efforts of the Liberal party to maintain inviolate and intact the liberties and independence of the Local Legislatures. And I am proud to say that among the names which shall be revered in the hearts of their countrymen, as the names of those who stood foremost in the fight, will be the names of Edward Blake and Oliver Mowat. The principle for which these men contended was that this Government has not the power to annul and set aside legislation or interfere with any Act passed by a Local Legislature within the purview of its own powers. It is that principle which impelled us to resist, as we did, the dismissal of Lieutenant-Governor Lefebvier for an act which was within the purview of his powers, and which, right or wrong, had been confirmed and approved by the people of the province of Quebec. This was the reason which made us resist and condemn the action of this Government, when they recklessly upset the legislation of Ontario in the matter known as the Streams Bill. It was the same principle which made us resist, as we did, the action of this Government, when they actually ruthlessly set aside the legislation of Manitoba in the matter of railway competition. And the crowning triumph of all, I am sure, was to hear, the other day, the Prime Minister quote with approval from the book of Professor Bryce on the American Commonwealth, the statement that the wisest provision in the Constitution of the United States was the one declaring that the central power had not the right to interfere with state legislation, but that all questions of conflicting powers between the states and the central Government were to be determined by judicial authority. I am sure the First Minister must have had in his mind then, and regretted with bitter sorrow, the occasions when he interfered with the independence of the Local Legislatures. I agree with the Prime Minister in this view, that it would have been wiser for the Fathers of Confederation to have adopted the American principle of absolute local independence. But such, after all, is not the principle which has been adopted. On the contrary, the principle of our Constitution is this: that while in all other matters the powers of the Local Legislature are almost independent, in the matter of education, a supervisory power has been given to this Government, in so far as separate schools are concerned. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), to-day, commenting upon section 93, stated, and stated very truly, that section 93, subsection 3 especially, is most abnormal and extraordinary. It has been read more than once, let us read it again:

Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law at the Union, or is thereafter established by the Legislature of a province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

This is, I admit, a most extraordinary provision. Here it is stated that whenever, at the time of the Union, a system of separate schools exists in any province, an appeal shall be given to the minority to the central Government from any action of the Legislature which entitles them to ask redress. Not only that, but it is stated that though there may not be at the time of the Union a system of separate schools, if, after the Union a system of separate schools is established, then an appeal shall lie from the minority to the central Government, if the minority feel that they are being oppressed. If the Legislature establishes a system of separate schools, their legislative independence is inviolate, the Government will not have the right to interfere; but, if afterwards the Legislature attempt to interfere with this creature of their own power, immediately their action becomes revisable by this Government, and subject to interference. Now, Sir, it would be well to inquire what was the origin of this section. It is a most puzzling one. No one hitherto in this debate or for many years past, so far as my memory goes, has attempted to inquire and find out what was the origin of this clause. I contend, and I will now endeavour by giving the history of this clause to support my contention, that the clause was introduced into the Confederation Act by Mr. Galt, now Sir A. T. Galt, who at that time was Finance Minister in the Government of Sir John Macdonald, and the representative of the Protestant minority of Quebec in that Government, and that it was introduced in the Act for the special protection of the Protestant minority of Quebec. Sir, I shall endeavour to make that clear, and I am sure I shall succeed; but I must ask the indulgence of the House, because it will be my duty to quote many long extracts from public documents. When the coalition Government was formed in 1864, to carry out the project of Confederation, the Protestant minority of Quebec had been for many years in the enjoyment of their separate schools; and I am proud to say here, as a Liberal, that this privilege was granted to them, not by the Legislature of United Canada, but by the Legislature of Lower Canada, at the time when Mr. Papineau held sovereign sway therein; and I am proud also to be able to say, and to be able to prove by ample testimony, that the privilege which had been granted by the French-Canadian majority in the old Lower Canada Legislature to the Protestants had always been most liberally maintained. In the debate on Confederation in 1865, Mr. Rose, subsequently Sir John Rose, used the following language:—

Now, we, the English Protestant minority of Lower Canada, cannot forget that whatever right of separate education we have, was accorded to us in the most unrestricted way before the Union of the provinces, when we were in a minority and entirely in the hands of the French population. We cannot forget that in no way was there any attempt to prevent us educating our children in the manner we saw fit and deemed best; and I would be untrue to what is just if I forgot to state that the distribution of State funds for educational purposes was made in such a way as to cause no complaint on the part of the minority.

After the Union in 1841, the Protestant minority felt still more secure in the enjoyment of their schools, because in the Parliament of United Canada, the majority was of their own creed and race, and when the project for Confederation was under consideration the Protestant minority in Quebec felt some alarm at the prospect that they should be placed in the matter of education under the control of a majority, which in the past had proved liberal, it was true, but which would have the power of being the reverse of liberal. Therefore they were anxious, before the system of Confederation came into operation, to perfect their school laws so as to place them beyond the power of the Local Legislature of Quebec. The resolutions which were adopted by the conference at Quebec, and which were the basis of Confederation, contained a special article with regard to education. This was article 45, subsection 6. It placed under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures:

Education—saving the rights and privileges which the Protestant or Catholic minority in both Canadas may possess as to their denominational schools at the time when the Union goes into operation.

Sir, it is quite clear that after the Union would come into effect the Protestant minority of Lower Canada would be secured in all the privileges which they had at that time in matters of education. Now, there were two things as to which the Protestant minority wanted to be secure: First, as to the proper distribution of Government moneys, in matters of education, and second, a Protestant board of education to manage their separate schools. Mr. Galt, who was then, as I said a moment ago, a member of the Government of Sir John Macdonald, the coalition Government, spoke on this question in the month of October, 1864, in an address to his constituents in the city of Sherbrooke. This is the language he made use of. I take this from the Montreal "Gazette" of 28th October, 1864:

He would now endeavour to speak somewhat fully as to one of the most important questions, perhaps the most important—that could be confined to the Legislature—the question of education. This was a question in which, in Lower Canada, they must all feel the greatest interest, and in respect to which more misapprehension might be supposed to exist in the minds, at any rate of the Protestant population, than in regard to anything else connected with the whole scheme of federation. It must be clear that a measure would not be favourably entertained by the minority of Lower Canada which would place the education of their children and the provision for their schools, wholly in the hands of a majority of a different faith. It was clear that in confiding the general subject of education to the Local Legislatures it was absolutely necessary it should be accompanied with such restrictions as would prevent injustice in any respect from being done to the minority.

Now, this applied to Lower Canada, but it also applied, and with equal force, to Upper Canada and the other provinces; for in Lower Canada there was a Protestant minority, and in the other provinces a Roman Catholic minority. The same privileges belong to the one of right here, as belonged to the other of right elsewhere. There could be no greater injustice to a population than to compel them to have their children educated in a manner contrary to their own religious belief.

Now, Sir, I call the attention of the House to this language of Mr. Galt: "There could be no greater injustice to a population than to compel them to have their children educated in a manner contrary to their own religious belief." He continued:

It had been stipulated that the question was to be made subject to the rights and privileges which the minorities might have as to their separate and denominational schools. There had been grave difficulties surrounding the separate school question in Upper Canada, but they were all settled now, and with regard to the separate school system of Lower Canada, it was the determination of the Government to bring down a measure for the amendment of the school laws before the Confederation was allowed to go into force.

He made this statement because, as the clause was worded in the printed resolution, it would appear that the school law, as it at present existed, was to be continued. Attention had, however, been drawn in the Confederation to the fact that the school law, as it existed in Lower Canada, required amendment, but no action was taken there as to its alteration, because he hardly felt himself competent to draw up the amendments required; and it was far better that the mind of the British population of Lower Canada should be brought to bear on the subject, and that the Government might hear what they had to say, so that all the amendments required in the law might be made in a Bill to be submitted to Parliament.

Now, Sir, you see that the intention of the Government of that time, as expressed by Mr. Galt, was, before the scheme of Confederation came into operation, to perfect the school laws with regard to separate schools, so that the Protestant minority would be placed beyond the caprice or ill-will of the Local Legislature. In the session which followed, the session of 1865, in which the project of Confederation was debated, it had been accepted that this pledge given by Mr. Galt would be redeemed; that a Bill would be introduced to protect the Protestant minority. Such was not the case, however. Mr. Holton, who, as you know, was at that time one of the most prominent members of the Liberal party in Lower Canada, and certainly one of the most liberal men that ever sat in this Parliament, whose name, I am sure, will ever be dear to Liberals of all classes in this country—Mr. Holton, in the session of 1865, drew the attention of the Government to the fact that the promised amendments to the school law had not been brought down yet. On the 3rd February, 1865, Mr. Holton spoke on this question in these words:

Then another question which he had proposed to put had reference to the educational system of Lower Canada. The Minister of Finance, in a speech at Sherbrooke, had promised that the Government would introduce a Bill to amend the school laws of Lower Canada. The hon. gentleman must be aware that this was a question on which there was a great deal of feeling in this section of the province amongst the English-speaking, or Protestant, class of the population. He did not like to introduce anything of a religious character into discussions of this House, but in debating the great changes which it was proposed to effect in our system of government the effect of them upon that class to which he referred must be considered. Among that class there was no phase or feature of these threatened changes which excited so much alarm as this very question. Well, the Minister of Finance had said, with great solemnity, as having the authority of his colleagues for it, that this session the Government would bring down amendments to the school laws of Lower Canada, which they proposed enacting into law before a change of Government should take place, and which would become a permanent settlement of that question.

That was the whole gist of the question then. The Government proposed to amend the school law and make a permanent settlement of that question:

The question he then desired to put was whether they intended to submit these amendments before they asked the House to pass finally upon the other scheme of Confederation, and, if so, to state when the House might look for that measure, as it would undoubtedly exercise very considerable influence upon the discussion of Confederation scheme, and probably in the last resort from several members from Lower Canada. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. LAURIER.

I have stated here the reasons which impelled Mr. Holton to press upon the Government of the day this very question of education. Now, let me call attention to the answer which was given to Mr. Holton by the then Prime Minister, Mr. John A. Macdonald:

As to the school question, it had been announced by Hon. Mr. Galt, at Sherbrooke, that before Confederation took place, this Parliament would be asked to consider a measure which he hoped would be satisfactory to all classes of the community. There was a good deal of apprehension in Lower Canada on the part of the minority there, as to the possible effect of Confederation on their rights on the subject of education, and it was the intention of the Government, if Parliament approved the scheme of Confederation, to lay before the House this session, certain amendments to the school law, to operate as a sort of guarantee against any infringement by the majority of the rights of the minority in this matter.

So here you see again in this statement of Mr. John A. Macdonald, the same idea still prevailing, that the school law was to be amended so as to give a guarantee to the Protestant minority of Lower Canada that the moment the scheme of Confederation came into force, the Protestant minority would be secured in all the rights which they claimed, and that it would not be in the power of the Roman Catholic and French majority to deprive them of any of those rights. The session passed, however, without this proposed law being introduced; but in the following session of 1866, the last session of the old Parliament of Canada, a Bill was introduced by the Government, and this Bill was placed in the hands of the then Solicitor-General, the present member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin). I have it in my hand; it is too long to quote it in its entirety to the House; but the whole Bill showed that the policy which the Government had then in view was in effect to secure to the Protestant minority of Quebec what I stated a moment ago, a fair share of the public moneys for education, and a Protestant Board of Education to manage their own schools. Section 2 of the Bill reads as follows:—

The superior education will comprise the universities and the classical and industrial colleges or seminaries, and the provincial aid thereto as well as that for academies shall be annually divided between the Roman Catholic and Protestant institutions in proportion to the respective Roman Catholic and Protestant population according to the then last census.

Then section 92 enacted as follows, with regard to the Protestant Board of Education:—

12. Whenever four of the Protestant members of the Council of Public Instruction for Lower Canada shall be of opinion that the management of the Protestant schools should be distinct and separate from that of the Catholic schools, they may make known that opinion under their respective signatures to the Governor through the provincial secretary.

13. Within three months after the receipt of said opinion by the Governor, an Order in Council shall be passed dividing the management of the schools in Lower Canada, and giving to the Protestant Deputy Superintendent of Education the management of the Protestant schools, in the same manner as they now are under the management of the Superintendent of Education.

Now, as you see, the promise of the Government made by Mr. Galt had been redeemed: the Government had introduced a Bill to secure at once to the Protestant minority in Lower Canada the management of their own schools. Then a most singular occurrence took place. Immediately after this Bill had been introduced, another Bill, similar in every particular, was introduced by the then member of the county of Russell (Mr. Robert Bell) for the province of Upper Canada. His Bill was an exact copy of the Bill presented by the Solicitor-General, the present member for Three Rivers, merely substituting the words "Upper Canada" for the words "Lower Canada." Then an occurrence took place which was still more singular. The representation from Upper Canada was opposed to a man to the Bill introduced by Mr. Bell. The Government could have carried it with the votes of the representation from Lower Canada; but the members for Lower Canada, who were ready to vote for the Bill giving protection to the Protestant minority of Lower Canada, would not do so unless the same thing was done for the Catholics of Upper Canada by adopting Mr. Bell's Bill. So that the Government would have had to carry the Bill of Lower Canada with the majority of Upper Canada, and the Bill of Upper Canada with the majority of Lower Canada. Well, Mr. John A. Macdonald refrained from that course, he would not attempt it, and the consequence was that he withdrew the Bill, which was meant to secure to the Protestant minority of Lower Canada the rights and privileges which were contained in that Bill; and the further consequence was that Mr. Galt resigned as a member of the Government. The whole matter came up for discussion in the session of 1866, on August 7. Mr. John A. Macdonald explained the whole transaction which I have just summarized, and this is the language which he used:

They were fully convinced of the liberality of sentiment of the Lower Canada majority; there was no doubt as to the course of that majority upon the Bill; they were quite willing to concede to their Lower Canada fellow-subjects of British origin the privilege which it was designed to give them. But a similar Bill has been introduced by the member for Russell for Upper Canada giving to the Catholic majority of Upper Canada precisely the same privileges. The Government found beyond doubt that there would have been a very large majority from Upper Canada against that Bill. All the members from Upper Canada but himself, were prepared to vote against it. The Government had also found that there was a strong feeling, and a very natural feeling, among the Catholic majority of Lower Canada, that their co-religionists in the west ought to enjoy the same privileges as they were willing to give the Lower Canada minority, and therefore made a difficulty in the way of carrying the Government Bill, which by itself would have passed with a large majority. Had this Bill been pushed, also, the singular spectacle of a Bill for Upper Canada being carried by Lower Canada, and a Bill for Lower Canada by Upper Canada votes would have been presented. This would have been a most unfortunate occurrence. They were not like ordinary Bills; if passed they would have been a fundamental part of the constitution of the country. It was not desirable, therefore, in the present position of affairs, that such a result should have been produced. * * * * * The minority in each section would have to throw themselves on the justice and generosity of the majority. * * * * * The hon. Minister of Finance, who had taken a very particular interest in this Bill, had felt it to be his duty to tender his resignation when his colleagues had come to the conclusion to drop the Bill, and his resignation was now in the hands of His Excellency. His hon. friend had been in an especial manner the guardian of the rights of the Lower Canada minority.

Now, Sir, I call the attention of the House to the concluding sentence in the speech of Sir John Macdonald:

The minority in each section would have to throw themselves on the justice and generosity of the majority.

The Protestant minority of Quebec would not be satisfied with that, but continued the agitation in order to obtain something more substantial than the generosity of their fellow-countrymen in the Legislature. The agitation was carried on, and it was carried on to a successful issue. In October the ministerial press announced that the Government had just appointed delegates to proceed to England to supervise the legislation which was to carry out the scheme of Confederation. It was announced that Mr. Galt, who in the August previous had resigned because he could not carry that Bill which he wanted for the Protestant minority of Quebec, had been asked to be one of the delegates, and had accepted. Naturally it was surmised that if Mr. Galt had accepted and had become a delegate he must have received from the Government of Canada some assurance that the proposition which he wanted to have brought into the Confederation scheme would be carried out. And this surmise was right, because on October 24 of that year, 1866, the Montreal "Gazette," which then as now was the organ of the Government, contained the following article:—

We have much pleasure in announcing that during the recent protracted sittings of the Cabinet at Ottawa, the subject of the position of the Lower Canada Education question was very fully considered. The Ministry were, we understand, desirous that Mr. Galt should be appointed as a delegate to represent the interests of the British population; but that gentleman felt that he could not accept unless he was assured as to the views of the Government on the points that so seriously concern his countrymen and co-religionists, and which so deeply rouse their feelings. We are informed that the Ministry entirely satisfied Mr. Galt of their determination to give practical effect to the pledges given in Parliament, and the gentleman has in consequence accepted the appointment of delegate for the express purpose of watching over these important interests as well as of lending his aid to the consummation of the measure of Confederation.

We feel that our Protestant friends may rest assured that the man who resigned the honours and emoluments of office on this question will not, as a delegate, be found wanting to his trust as their representative. And we hail with great satisfaction the approaching settlement of a question which might have been fraught with so much danger to the kindly and cordial relations which have of late so happily subsisted between the people of different races and creeds in Canada.

So that when Mr. Galt left for England the Protestant population of Canada were assured that their interests would be amply protected by the delegate whom they had in the person of Mr. Galt. The Bill, which has since become the British North America Act, was introduced in the Imperial Parliament in February, 1867. That Bill was published, not the law, let it be remembered, but the Bill was published in the Montreal "Gazette" on March 1 of the same year, as any hon. gentleman can see by looking at the records of that newspaper. The Bill as introduced is the Bill word for word which is now the British North America Act. Section 43, subsection 6, of the resolutions of the Quebec conference :

Education—showing the rights and privileges which the Protestant or Catholic minority in both Canadas may possess as to their denominational schools, at the time when the Union goes into operation.

became in the Bill the complicated section No. 93 of the British North America Act. All the provisions contained in subsections 1, 2 and 3 of section 93 were introduced by Mr. Galt for the special protection of the Protestant minority of Quebec. Now, Sir, I again call attention to this, that section 93 was introduced at the instance of Mr. Galt, and I am sure I could invoke the testimony of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), who was a co-delegate, but I need not do so as I have here written evidence in an article published on the following day, March 2, by the ministerial organ, the Montreal "Gazette," and I call the attention of the House to this article. The "Gazette" wrote as follows :—

Few questions have excited a more lively interest in this country than the education of children in public schools, or, perhaps, it would be more accurate to say, the appropriation of taxation for that purpose. We need not repeat the particulars of the agitation on the subject, which commenced with the promulgation of the resolutions of the conference of Quebec, and resulted in Mr. Galt resigning his seat in the Cabinet. The short of the story is, all this led to an agreement on the part of the Canadian Government to advise Her Majesty's Ministers to insert in the Union Bill the provisions with which the public are, undoubtedly, already aware. That was the agreement to which we referred, in October last, as having been satisfactory to Mr. Galt, and on the strength of which he consented to become a delegate to London. The public may find in these provisions in the Bill the proof of the statement made by us, which some of our contemporaries, without any evidence, undertook to call in question.

Before the question of Confederation was mooted, the constant cry on the part of a portion of the Lower Canada Protestant minority was : Give us the same privileges as those enjoyed by the Upper Canada minority. Well, the Bill as it stands, in terms, provides that the minority in Lower Canada shall have precisely the same privileges as the minority in Upper Canada.

And, further, that the minorities in all the provinces shall have the right of appeal to the general Parliament.

The bill, in this form, undoubtedly, in our opinion, will become the fundamental law of the country, forming a part of its political constitution ; and that, as such, it must be accepted. It affords essential guarantees as well in immediate practice as in ultimate resort. The main thing required in immediate practice is that the moneys collected from the taxation of Protestants, shall, if required, be available for the support of separate schools. The right of appeal as an ultimate resort, will always operate the effect of affording a check. And the English-speaking Protestants of Lower Canada must not forget that their appeal will be to a preponderating majority of their own race and creed ; and it is probable that, if they get hurt, they will make their cry known. That is a characteristic of theirs. In the past, since the adoption of the principle known as the "double majority," shortly after the Union of 1841, by Mr. Baldwin and Sir L. H. Lafontaine, Lower Canada has been practically governed by the Lower Canada majority, and if Lord Carnarvon's Bill had contained no special provisions respecting the rights of minorities, our position in Lower Canada would scarcely, in point of fact, have been altered.

If we are not misinformed, Lord Carnarvon has received assurances, on high Protestant authority, that the Bill as it stands, contains sufficient guarantees for the Protestant interests of Lower Canada ; and that, in this respect, it is sufficiently satisfactory.

All the people who inhabit this country, French and English, Catholic and Protestant, must live together and continue to do so. It is in the highest public interest that they should do so in peace. And to this end it is in the highest degree important that there should be some ground of common understanding. If on the other hand we commence with a policy of distrust and jealousy, and mutual annoyance, God alone can tell, the frightful consequences to which it will be sure to lead. An eminent political writer has well set forth that religious liberty springs from the mixing together of diverse elements such as we have in Canada. Men, from living together ought to learn to respect even each others' prejudices ; and this is the very first principle of freedom. One of the most difficult of men's lessons is to learn, especially in matters of opinion based on prejudices, that their own geese are not swans.

Now, Sir, you have ample evidence that this extraordinary provision was introduced at the instance of the delegate of the Protestant minority of Lower Canada for the protection of that minority. Let me go a little further into the history of that question. Confederation came into being. The question of education again was agitated in Quebec, and the members who in the early days of Confederation represented in the Quebec Legislature the Protestant portion of the population, were eager to have introduced at once into the House the same Bill which had been introduced by Mr. Solicitor-General Langevin, in 1866, in the Old Parliament of Canada, and which for the reason I have stated had miscarried. In the session of 1869 of the Quebec Legislature, Mr. Carter, then member, if I remember aright, for Montreal Centre, moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Quebec and that of the Dominion respecting education, and in support of his motion, Mr. Carter said :

His object in moving the present Address to His Excellency on a subject so important as that to which it refers, is to ascertain in an efficient manner, whether those charged with the responsible duty of carrying out our new constitution have taken any steps towards carrying out that provision of the Confederation Act, which declares that "all the powers, privileges, and duties at the Union, by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees of the Queen's Roman Catholic subjects shall be extended to the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant and Roman Catholic subjects." At the time the Confederation Act was under consideration, it was found necessary to adopt some provision to afford to the Protestant universities in the province of Quebec some guarantee that their rights and privileges in matters of education should be protected, and no statesman was more zealous and more energetic in accomplishing this object than the Hon. Mr. Galt, whose efforts were crowned with success by the introduction of the 2nd paragraph of the 93rd clause of our Confederation Act.

Mr. Carter only spoke of the second paragraph, but it is equally certain that Mr. Galt has also the merit of having introduced the whole of that clause. Upon that motion, Mr. Dunkin, who was then treasurer in Mr. Chauveau's Government, made the following remarks :

With regard to education, he had not the slightest doubt that that question will be settled in a manner satisfactory to both Protestants and Catholics. Still it would be impossible to enact a complete code of laws on that subject until they knew the state of their finances. A great difficulty to the settlement of this question formerly was the fact that if any changes were proposed for Lower Canada similar changes were demanded for Upper Canada. That difficulty had now been removed, and there was nothing to prevent the speedy settlement of the question.

Now, Sir, for the speedy settlement of that question the Protestant minority demanded a law similar to the Bill which had been introduced by Mr. Solicitor-General Langevin. In that very session of 1869, a similar Bill was introduced and carried, and it is to be found in the Statutes of the Legislature of Quebec, 32 Vic., chapter 16. I have given you a moment ago the provisions of the Bill introduced by Mr. Langevin, with regard to its main features ; that is to say, the distribution of the public moneys and the creation of a Protestant Board of Education. In this Act of 1869 the same provisions are to be found. I cite now from section 4, with regard to the distribution of moneys :

The total aid to universities, classical colleges, industrial colleges, academies and model schools, under the provision of chapter 15 of the consolidated statutes for Lower Canada, or of any other law that may be passed concerning superior education, shall in future be distributed between the totality of the Roman Catholic and of the Protestant institutions respectively, in the relative proportion of the respective Roman Catholic and Protestant populations of the province according to the then last census.

The provisions with regard to the Protestant Board of Education are to be found in sections 1 and 2. Section 1 enacts :

Within four months after the passing of this Act the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall appoint, to form and constitute the Council of public instruction for the province of Quebec, together with the Minister of Public Instruction or Superintendent of Education for the province, as the case may be, for the time being, twenty-one persons, fourteen of whom shall be Roman Catholics and seven Protestants, and until such appointment shall take place the members of the present Council of public instruction shall continue in office.

Section 2 goes on to say :

The said Council so soon as reorganized under this Act shall resolve itself into two committees, the one consisting of the Roman Catholic and the other of the Protestant members thereof, and the matters and things which by law belong to the said Council shall be referred to the said committees respectively, in so far as they shall specially affect the interests of Roman Catholic and of Protestant education respectively, and in such manner and form as the whole shall from time to time be determined by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Public Instruction or of the Superintendent of Education. The Minister of Public Instruction or Superintendent of Education, as the case may be, for the time being shall be a member ex-officio of each committee, but shall have right of voting only in the committee of the religious faith to which he shall belong.

So that, Sir, the Legislature of Quebec unanimously carried out faithfully, and put in the law, every feature of the Act which had been introduced in 1866 in the Old Parliament of Canada for the absolute protection and guarantee of the Protestant minority of that province. I think I have made it as clear as possible that section 93 of the British North American Act was enacted for the special security of the Protestant minority of Quebec. That section, as I said a moment ago, was introduced by Mr. Galt ; but Mr. Galt, as is well known, was not only an able financier, but he was certainly one of the most remarkable and broad-minded men of his generation. Mr. Galt was too great a man to introduce that provision into the law simply for the security of his own people, the Protestant minority of Quebec, without at the same time securing like privileges to all the other minorities of the other provinces. It is manifest from the words spoken yesterday by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin)—who can speak with authority on this subject since he was one of the delegates—the intention of the delegates to London was : that these securities, these guarantees, which had been devised by Mr. Galt, it is true for the Protestant minority in Quebec, should be extended to all minorities as well. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) tells us that, in his opinion, although this section may apply to Quebec, and may apply to Ontario, and perhaps to the older provinces of the Dominion, yet it should not apply to Manitoba. Well, Sir, I hope that my hon. friend on this occasion will not take a narrow construction of the law, and I say for my part: that the law has to be construed in a generous and liberal spirit, and whatever privileges are guaranteed to one minority in a province I claim in the name of justice and fairness, for all minorities in all of the provinces. My hon. friend spoke yesterday as a lawyer, and perhaps, after all, his contention as a lawyer may be true that the Manitoba Act has limited the general Act. But it seems to me that he was successfully answered on this point yesterday by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), when that hon. gentleman called his attention to section 2 of the Manitoba Act. Section 2 of that Act enacts:

The provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, shall, except those parts thereof which are in terms made, or, by reasonable intendment, may be held to be specially applicable to, or only to affect one or more, but not the whole of the provinces now composing the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by this Act, be applicable to the province of Manitoba, in the same way, and to the like extent as they apply to the several provinces of Canada, and as if the province of Manitoba had been one of the provinces originally united by the said Act.

It seems to me that this very section has imported into the Manitoba Act the whole of section 93 of the British North America Act, and that the privileges which are there guaranteed to the Protestant minority of Quebec are ipso facto to be extended as well to the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba. Now, Sir, what was the intention of the framers of the constitution on this point? Let us set aside Manitoba for a moment. Manifestly, Sir, the intention of the framers of the constitution was that whenever a law relating to education was passed in a province which had enjoyed a system of separate schools, which law the minority deemed oppressive, that minority should have the right to come before the Dominion Government—nay, before the Dominion Parliament—and claim justice—claim to be protected from that oppression. This is the construction I put upon that provision of the constitution. In my estimation no other construction can be put upon that provision of the law. What I want to know is the meaning of these words: "An appeal shall lie to the Governor in Council?" An appeal of what? An appeal against legislation which the minority deems oppressive. And for my part, Sir, I hold it as my deliberate opinion that by the constitution of this country, the Dominion Parliament have been entrusted with powers of supervision in matters of education over the local legislatures, and that whenever a minority feels oppressed, its privilege and its right is to come before the Dominion Government and lay its case before that Government. And, Sir, if there is an appeal, it follows as a consequence that the authority to which the appeal lies has the right to interfere. But, Sir, so strong am I in my conviction of provincial rights that I am bound to say at once that this privilege of appeal should not be exercised except for very cogent reasons, and this interference should not take place either, except for very, very cogent reasons—reasons implying such an abuse of power on the part of the local legislature as no man with a heart in his bosom would submit to. Now, Sir, I can easily conceive, in view of what has taken place of late, of such an abuse of power taking place. Suppose—it is hardly supposable, but suppose—that the Legislature of Quebec were to-morrow to abolish the system of separate schools in that province. As you know, we have in Quebec no schools but religious schools—Roman Catholic schools and Protestant schools. Suppose the Legislature of Quebec were to-morrow to abolish the system of separate schools existing there, so that the Protestant population would have either to send their children to the Roman Catholic schools or bring them up in ignorance or tax themselves a second time to establish schools of their own. Sir, if, under the circumstances, an appeal were brought to this Government, is there a man in this House who would not say at once to the Government: It is your bounden duty at once to interfere and make away with this obnoxious and tyrannical legislation? But, Sir, I shall be told, perhaps, by my hon. friend from North Simcoe that such a case is not supposable at all, because if the Legislature of Quebec were to attempt to abolish the separate schools in that province, that legislation would be null and void, because the Legislature has not the power to abolish the separate schools. That I grant; but I would call my hon. friend's attention to another supposition, which is quite supposable, though I hope it will never take place, and I am sure it will not, so long as the spirit of liberality which at present exists in the province of Quebec continues. But let me suppose this case. I have quoted to you the law which now prevails in Quebec—the law demanded by the Protestant population of that province, giving them a school board of their own. I have quoted to you the law whereby in 1869 two separate boards of education were organized, a Roman Catholic board and a Protestant board. The Roman Catholic board to-day is composed of seventeen members, nine Catholic laymen and all the Roman Catholic bishops of the province. Now, suppose that to-morrow the Legislature of Quebec were to abolish the Protestant school board. Then, by the effect of that law, the management of the Protestant schools would become vested in the Roman Catholic Board of the Council of Education, that is to say, practically in the hands of the Roman Catholic bishops. If such legislation were to be enacted by the Legislature of Quebec, is there a man to say that it would not be a most infamous act of tyranny? Sir, if tomorrow such a law were enacted, the first thing that the Protestant population would do would be to come before this Government and ask this Government, in virtue of the powers vested in it by the Constitution, to abolish at once the obnoxious and tyrannical legislation. If the Protestant population were to come and represent to the Government that their schools, the Protestant schools, had been placed under the management of the Roman Catholic bishops of the province, I say that every man in this House, be he Protestant or Catholic, would at once call upon the Government to abolish the law and to pass the remedial legislation to the Protestant minority. Well, Sir, I claim that under the constitution as we have it, it is for such abuses of authority and power that this section 93 has been introduced. But I may, perhaps, be told that there is no parallel between what I have suggested and what has taken place in Manitoba. I may be told that the system of schools that has been introduced in Manitoba is not a system of Protestant schools, but a system of public schools. Sir, let me call the attention of the House to the complaint of the Roman Catholic population of Manitoba. My hon. friend from North Simcoe is aware that previous to the legislation of 1890, they had in Manitoba the same system of schools that we have in Quebec—religious schools, either Protestant or Catholic—and that in 1890 that system was abolished by law, to be replaced as it is said, by a system of public schools. Now, Sir, I will quote to the House the complaint of the Roman Catholic population of Manitoba, as it is contained in the petition sent to the Government by His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface:

To His Excellency the Governor-General in Council.

The humble petition of the undersigned, Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Church in the province of Manitoba, respectfully sheweth:

That two statutes—53 Vic., chap. 37 and 38—were passed in the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba to merge the Roman Catholic schools with those of the Protestant denominations, and to require all members of the community, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, to contribute through taxation to the support of what are therein called public schools, but which are in reality a continuation of the Protestant schools.

Sir, I heard the remark casually made yesterday in the House, that this statement was not true, and that the system of schools now prevailing in Manitoba was not a continuation of the Protestant system. I have looked over the whole blue-book, and all the correspondence brought down, and I fail to find any language there traversing that statement. It may or may not be true, but I deal with the case as I find it before the Government today. but if the statement is founded on fact which is made by His Grace Archbishop Taché, and which is repeated in all the petitions coming from the Roman Catholics of Manitoba, that, under the guise of public schools, Protestant schools are being continued, and that Roman Catholic children are forced, under that law, to attend what are, in reality, Protestant schools, I say this—and let my words be heard by friend or foe, let them be published in the press throughout the length of the land—that the strongest case has been made for interference by this Government. If that statement be true, though my life as a political man should thereby be ended for ever, what I say now I shall be prepared to repeat, and would repeat on every platform in Ontario, every platform in Manitoba, nay, every Orange lodge throughout the land, that the Catholic minority has been subjected to a most infamous tyranny. This is the case as I find it. Now, these are the facts before this Government. There was the complaint made to gentlemen on the other side, there was the complaint made by the Roman Catholics of Manitoba, that, under the guise of public schools, their children were compelled to attend Protestant schools. I appeal to every man in this House, whether he be on this side or on the other side, I appeal to Catholic and Protestant alike, if this complaint be true, whether there is a man who will stand up and say that the Roman Catholics are to be subjected to that system. Let the hon. gentleman who is going to follow me in a moment, and speak in favour of the Government, let him, if that statement be true, say whether he is in favour of the Roman Catholics being subjected to that system. I would not hesitate, if the statement is true, to go ahead and plead the case of the Catholics in Winnipeg with the Government of Mr. Greenway himself, because, if there is such an outrageous state of things prevailing in the province of Manitoba, not a moment is to be lost in coming to the rescue of the oppressed minority. These are my sentiments. That is the position upon which I stand at this moment, and that is the reason why I arraign the Government as I do. There was the fact which they should have investigated, and to which they should have addressed themselves, but instead of investigating that fact, they tried every subterfuge in their power to delay investigation, because, if they studied the question they would have to come to a decision. I charge against the Government that they have resorted to every possible subterfuge in order to avoid coming to a decision. The first thing they did was to refer the matter to the courts of law—first to the courts of Manitoba, then to the Supreme Court, and then to the Privy Council. But, I may be told, surely you will not call this a subterfuge. Yes, I do call this a subterfuge, because of the manner in which it was done. I call it a subterfuge because the Government never intended that the decision should be final. The case was referred to judicial arbitration, and it is a primary rule that judicial arbitration is final to the contending parties. The parties who go before the courts are to be bound by the award. Such is not the case in this matter. One of the parties was told it might go before the courts, and if there it failed, it could go before the Government, and the Government would hear its complaints. This was the language used by the Prime Minister, then Minister of Justice, in March, 1891 :

If the appeal should be successful these acts will be annulled by judicial decision, the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba will receive protection and redress. The acts purporting to be repealed will remain in operation, and those whose views have been represented by a majority of the Legislature cannot but recognize that the matter has been disposed of with due regard to the constitutional rights of the province.

If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsections (2) and (3) of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act," quoted in the early part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the "British North America Act," in relation to the other provinces.

As I said a moment ago, the two parties were told to go before the courts, but one was told, at the same time : If you fail, then come before us. The party to which that language was spoken was the Roman Catholic minority. Well, they went before the courts. They failed, and then they came before the Government, and instead of having their case dealt with, there was another subterfuge. This time the subterfuge was that the Government which had promised to deal with that case could no longer deal with it, because they were judges and had become a judicial tribunal. I will not enter into an argument as to this point, but cannot refrain from noticing the extraordinary doctrine laid down to-day by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). If I understood him aright, he said that the Government were endowed with judicial powers, that they could sit as a court, that this privilege still pertained to the Government of England, and he reviewed a quotation made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) yesterday. That hon. gentleman had read from Bagehot the following sentence :—

First, it is laid down as a principle of English polity, that in it the legislative, the executive and the judicial powers are divided, that each is entrusted to a different person or set of persons, that no one of these can at all interfere with the work of the other.

The hon. member for Albert said that this sentence should have been prefaced by the preceding sentence which governs it, and which is as follows :—

There are two descriptions of the English Constitution which have exercised immense influence, but which are erroneous.

According as the hon. gentleman read this sentence, it should read this way : that it is erroneous to say that the legislative, the executive and the judicial power are divided. But this is not at all the way the sentence should be read. It should be read in this way, that in England it is erroneous to say that the legislative and executive powers are divided. Bagehot only speaks of the legislative and executive powers. He speaks nowhere of the judicial power, and therefore the hon. gentleman from Albert (Mr. Weldon) misread completely the authority of Bagehot on this point. To make this more plain, I will give another quotation from Bagehot, which I find on page 78 :

The efficient secret of the English Constitution may be described as the close union, the nearly complete fusion of the executive and legislative powers. No doubt by the traditional theory, as it exists in all the books, the goodness of our Constitution consists in the entire separation of the legislative and executive authorities, but in truth its merit consists in their singular approximation.

This, Sir, is what the hon. gentleman completely failed to understand. He says that by practice and theory under British polity the executive and legislative powers are separated entirely. Bagehot says they are closely united and that the Government is simply a committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. WELDON. The word "judicial" is found in the fifth line of that paragraph.

Mr. LAURIER. It is indeed found in the fifth line. But surely, Sir, the hon. gentleman will not read a book and see in it only one word. The hon. gentleman knows that the whole chapter is devoted simply to the executive and legislative power and not at all to the judicial power.

Mr. WELDON. Oh, oh.

Mr. HAGGART. Read the following sentence.

Mr. LAURIER. No, I will not read the following sentence. I will quote the First Minister against my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon). The First Minister in his speech the other day, repudiated the theory of judicial power put forth by the hon. gentleman, and contended that all along he was acting under ministerial responsibility. Sir, the hon. gentleman's argument was this—that even if he would he could not divest himself of ministerial responsibility. Sir, I know very well that the hon. gentleman and the Government could not divest themselves of ministerial responsibility in point of law, but, in point of fact they succeeded marvellously in freeing themselves from ministerial responsibility. Take the conduct of my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Interior ; when he was questioned he shielded himself behind his position as a judge at once, and thus he avoided ministerial responsibility in fact. He could not avoid that responsibility in point of law, but in point of fact he avoided it completely. Now, Sir, let me call the attention of the House to the extraordinary language in which this new doctrine, this new subterfuge to avoid responsibility is set down by the Prime Minister. This is the report of the sub-committee, drawn up by the Prime Minister :

The application comes before Your Excellency in a manner differing from applications which are ordinarily made under the Constitution to your Excellency in Council. In the opinion of the sub-committee, the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of political character or involving political action on the part of Your Excellency's advisers. It is to be dealt with by Your Excellency in Council, regardless of the personal views which Your Excellency's advisers may hold with regard to denominational schools—

“Regardless of the personal views which Your Excellency's advisers may hold with regard to denominational schools.” How convenient that doctrine which permits the advisers of His Excellency to pocket at once their opinions and their emoluments !

—and without the political action of any of the members of Your Excellency's Council being considered as pledged by the fact of the appeal being entertained and heard. If the contention of the petitioners be correct, that such an appeal can be sustained the inquiry will be rather of a judicial than of a political character. The sub-committee have so treated it in hearing counsel, and in permitting their only meeting to be open to the public.

The sub-committee had permitted that their only meeting be open to the public. Then, Sir, the Government sat as a whole, and they sat with great dignity and solemnity as a court of justice. Sir, the country was thrilled with admiration when, on the 22nd of January, we heard of the proceedings of the new Star Chamber that we now have in Canada, as it was properly so designated by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). Let me read it again to the House :

At the Privy Council Chamber at Ottawa.

Present :—Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada.

Mr. Ewart appeared for the minority petitioners.

The President of the Council—A report—

It is now the President of the Council who speaks, the Chief Justice of the court :

—report of the sub-committee of the Council appointed to consider the petition of the minority in the province of Manitoba in reference to the school laws of that province recommended that Saturday, the 21st day of January, 1893, at the Chamber of the Privy Council at Ottawa, should be fixed for the hearing of the parties. This meeting is convened to hear argument on the points raised by the sub-committee of the Council on the appeal of the minority in the province of Manitoba on the question of schools. Mr. Ewart, are you ready ?

Mr. Ewart.—I am ready.

The President of the Council.—Do you require to have the report of the sub-committee read ?

Mr. Ewart.—I have been furnished with a copy.

The President of the Council.—Then you may proceed.

I need not, Sir, read to the House the argument of Mr. Ewart, but, while Mr. Ewart is proceeding to address the court, perhaps it may not be out of place if we review the court itself. At the end of the board was the Chief Justice, the President of the Council (Mr. Ives), a lawyer in his early days, with whom I have had the pleasure of arguing many a case, but who, for the last ten years, I am sure, has not appeared inside a court-house. Then came the Minister of Justice (Sir John Thompson), an able lawyer, as everybody admits, but who, from his connection with the case, as was pointed out by the hon. member for North Simcoe, was disqualified from sitting in the case and would have been disqualified in any court in the land, except this. Then there was the Solicitor-General (Mr. Curran), who was disqualified for the same reason. Then, Sir, came my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, who also in his early days was a lawyer, but who has since distinguished himself as a banker, a politician and a soldier. Then came my hon. friend the Minister of Interior (Mr. Daly), who, I believe, up to some time ago, not very late, was a lawyer, but who, as he said himself on a former occasion in another place, is full of vim and vigour and would introduce politics even into municipal government.

Mr. DALY. It came out right, too.

Mr. MULOCK. You got your man licked.

Mr. DALY. We carried Toronto.

Mr. LAURIER. Then came my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue (Mr. Wood, Brockville), for years a successful lawyer, but absorbed of late in the intricacies of Excise duties on whiskey, beer and tobacco. Then there was the hon. the Postmaster-General (Sir Adolphe Caron), who, at one time, dabbled in law, as did most of us, but who won the cross he wears on his breast as a warrior and not as a lawyer. Then came my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Angers), who says that if he finds the constitution in his way he can jump over the constitution. Then came my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), who has replaced by finance what he has forgotten about temperance. Then came the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Bowell), the Secretary of State (Mr. Costigan), and the Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), Mr. Carling and Mr. Smith, but as far as my knowledge goes these gentlemen have never distinguished themselves by their legal studies. Such was the court. And after Mr. Ewart had finished addressing them, again the President of the Council addressed the court and the public :

I will, said the President, read a letter that has been received from the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba.

Then he read the letter in which the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges the receipt of the invitation to his Government to be present and the letter of the Government of Manitoba stating that it would not appear before the court.

The President of the Council.—Does any one else desire to be heard ?

There being no reply, the President said : The Council will consult upon this subject and the public will please retire.

The public retired, Sir. And, as the Augurs of old, according to Cicero, never met without laughing, I can well imagine that these improvised judges, looking at each other, burst into a hearty laugh over the whole comedy. Because comedy it was, and this last reference to the Supreme Court was only a part of the programme, and while I say so, I will now give my own authority. We have had a history of the whole matter given by a gentleman who occupies a seat in this House on the other side, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). This gentleman, as we know, is a journalist, and is proprietor and editor of the Toronto "World," and there is a rumour afloat that between the "World" and the "Empire" there is rivalry as to which of them is nearer the ear of the Ministry. The "World" of 28th November last, contained a despatch from Ottawa as follows:—

Despatch from Ottawa.—Mr. W. F. Maclean, M.P., of the Toronto "World," is here.

"What about the Manitoba school question?" was asked.

"As far as I can gather, the Manitoba school question is not to be a disturbing one, notwithstanding the predictions of many newspapers and politicians to the contrary. It will not get into Parliament this session, or the next. It is purely a matter of law and the interpretation of the Constitution, and as such it will be dealt with. As far as I am aware, Sir John Thompson has undertaken the duties of Prime Minister unpledged in regard to the Manitoba school question, and he will ask none of his colleagues to commit themselves in any way on that subject. It will be settled in time in the courts and not by the politicians."

That is not all. The previous day there had been another despatch sent to the "World" from Ottawa, which read as follows:—

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.—As was said above, Sir John approaches this question entirely unpledged. It is not a question that is likely to get into politics for some time to come, but on the contrary, it will immediately get into the court and have its settlement there. Manitoba and the sympathizers of Manitoba in Ontario need have no fear of that question. The Roman Catholics have come to the Government and claimed that it should step in and grant them remedial legislation. The Government have referred them to a committee of their own members to hear their argument. That committee will arrange to have the whole question, as to whether the Government can interfere or not, submitted to the Government sitting as something like an open court.

The gentleman who wrote that despatch was evidently well informed, as subsequent events have shown:

The Roman Catholics will be asked to establish a case, if they can, showing that such interference is constitutional. The province of Manitoba will be given an equal opportunity of answering and showing that it is not. The press and the public will be admitted to the arguments. The Government will then decide on, not whether they have the powers of interference or not, but whether they will remit the question to the Supreme Court for decision or not. The question may go no further than a decision, not even to submit the question to the court. All this will be done before Parliament meets. If the Government decide to submit the question to the court for a decision as to the powers of the Government and of Parliament to interfere, that will put the question for the time out of politics, and it will not be able to even be raised in Parliament in the coming session. If the court, in the course of a year, should decide that Parliament and the Government have the right to interfere, then the question comes back to politics, and Sir John Thompson and his party must take a stand. By that time, the question will be pretty well threshed out, and you will not find the Government disposed to interfere, even if they have the right. They are not going to make trouble for themselves and their party. Sir John Thompson, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, is unpledged publicly or privately in the matter, and he is not now going to pledge himself or his party on a question that cannot come up as a political issue for years. For the present, separate schools for Manitoba are impossible, and the Roman Catholics must accept it as such. This really relieves Sir John Thompson and his party of a troublesome question and gives him a free hand.

The Liberals, and especially Mr. Laurier, will be forced by the facts to agree with this line of action. He cannot blame the Catholics for claiming the right of intervention, if the Government possess it, and he cannot blame the Government for remitting the question to the Supreme Court for a determination whether the Government, under the laws and constitution, have the right.

Sir, I would not blame the Government for referring the matter to the Supreme Court if this reference is not to be, as a former one was, a makeshift, if it is to be genuine and efficient, as it ought to be; but I blame the Government now, if the reference is made, as it was, simply as a makeshift and nothing else; I blame the Government even now for not having done sooner what they should have done. I blame them for these long delays, which only add fuel to the bitterness which now exists. Sir, we know that these constant triflings with burning questions are fraught with danger; we know that thrice already these triflings with burning questions have produced such convulsions as almost to imperil the life of Confederation. On this occasion, after procrastination, after long delays, shifting of expedients, subterfuge, at last the Government will have to pronounce a decision, the population will by that time have been excited to such a pitch that the condition will be scarcely distinguishable from open rebellion to the law; and when that decision comes, whatever it may be, great disappointment is sure to result, and an impression will prevail that a great injustice has been done to a portion of Her Majesty's subjects.

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Speaker, a good many of us would forget, and perhaps forgive, as I myself will do, the imputations and charges which have been hurled against us by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, if we thought that what he has said in the last sentences of his speech was the sincere expression of his conviction. He has said that if he was sure that the Government had not referred the question to the Supreme Court only as a makeshift, that the action of the Government was bona fide, and that the Government would act in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court, then he would refrain from blaming the Government. Well, Mr. Speaker, allow me to tell him in all sincerity that what we have done in the past is a guarantee that what we shall do in the future will be according to law and the Constitution as laid down by the tribunals of this country. Sir, the case has been so ably stated and expounded by the First Minister that it would not be reasonable, perhaps, for me to trespass on the indulgence of the House by repeating his arguments. I shall only reiterate that what we have done has been altogether according to the true spirit and letter of the Constitution and the law, in order to convince the people that we have nothing else in view, notwithstanding the agitation that has been created against us on both sides, but to act according to the Constitution and the laws, we have done our best to dispel prejudices, to teach the people that matters of religion, in questions concerning schools, they must remember that every British subject living in the Dominion of Canada has equal rights, and that, be they high or low, they must not only follow the law, but they have a right to invoke that law in order to be protected in their rights. We have followed in this matter, and I say so, although it may bring a smile on the face of my opponents, the old policy preached to us by the Grand Old Man during so many years in Canada, a policy that has made this country prosperous and happy so far, and that has allowed our party to sail safely through the great difficulties that the Liberals have placed in our way every time they had a chance to raise a religious issue, to set one province against another and to promote strife and prejudice in this country. We shall follow that same course, and I hope the country will be satisfied that, notwithstanding the union that has been effected within the last two days between the two extreme politicians in this House, the Conservative party is going to sail through this difficulty, and prove once more that the party is bound to establish here forever British institutions, British fair play, not McCarthy fair play, which is a kind of fair play that consists in strangling the claimant even before he has been heard, that sort of fair play which consists in saying to a man who comes to the foot of the throne with a grievance: You shall not be heard, you had better go home, because the majority of the people in your province are against you, and you might as well know now as later that you must renounce every right claimed by you. What were the different questions before us, and to the solution of which we have been addressing ourselves during the last year? I need not recite again the history of the legislation of the Manitoba school question: I can only say this, that it was supposed when the Manitoba Act was passed in 1870, and not only supposed, but asserted and declared in Parliament at the time, that the intention of Parliament was to give the minority separate schools. It was so declared at the time, so much so that if hon. members refer to the debate that took place, they will see that Hon. William McDougall, who was a member of the House at the time, announced while the Bill was under consideration in committee, that on the third reading he would move an amendment to strike out that clause in the Act which established separate schools. He did not do so. Why, I do not know. But at the time it was expected and believed that the Act as framed was a guarantee that separate schools would be established and continue to exist in Manitoba. In 1871 an educational law was passed in that province enacting a system of separate schools, giving to Catholics, as well as to Protestants the absolute control and administration of their respective schools. That Act was amended several times, until in 1890, when Mr. Greenway got in power, with the assistance of the Catholic minority, the Legislature enacted a law by which separate schools were abolished, by which the Catholic section of the advisory board or Board of Education was abolished. By this Act all the property of the Catholic schools was given to public schools trustees, by which everything that belonged to the Catholic schools and for which they paid out of their own money was to belong to the public schools to which the Roman Catholics could not send their children. I may say at once that I do not desire to withhold my own opinion respecting the law, and I may say for myself that I am in favour of separate schools, that is to say, I am in favour of religious schools. I believe with great many people, Protestants as well as Catholics, that the basis of the education of children must be morality, and morality must be based on religion. I am of that opinion. Others hold different opinions. They will say, for example, that the children may learn religion in Sunday schools or in church. As a matter of fact, it is not so; and half of the population if they did not learn the elements and principles of religion in schools, would never know anything about them. Is it not a fact that what has caused the founding of that great modern institution, the Salvation Army, was the fact that among the poor people, and even among some of the best people, there were a great many who had never heard about religion. Is it not according to the ideas of this age that children should be instructed in everything by which they could be made good citizens, and the best way to make them good citizens is not only to teach them the three R's, but to teach them morality and religion as well? When that law was passed in Manitoba petitions were sent to the Government; one set demanding the disallowance of the Act, on the ground that the Bill was "ultra vires," and the other set of petitions demanding that a remedy should be given to the minority whose rights were alleged to have been violated. The question of disallowance was first considered, and it was answered that according to the law passed in 1891, and according to the precedent established by different other Governments before, that it was advisable to refer the matter to a legal tribunal. That, Mr. Speaker, is the true doctrine in such matters. The question of constitutionality is a purely legal question, and as the leader of the Opposition has said, it is not fair, and it is still less advisable for the Government to decide these purely legal questions. The question was sent to the courts. I may say with the consent of the parties concerned in conformity with the principle that the law must be supreme, and the only way in which we can get people to submit to a decision adverse to their religious belief, is to have the law stated by a tribunal empowered by the Constitution of the country to state it. As I have said, I regret very much the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council declaring that at the time of the Union the Roman Catholics in Manitoba had no right to separate schools guaranteed by the law or practice. There is no doubt in my humble opinion that the intention was to establish separate schools, but this intention was not properly expressed in the Act, and it so happens that if the people were entitled to separate schools at the time of the Union, the law as it stood did not give them that guarantee. The Roman Catholics have submitted to that judgment and rightly so, and now they petition the Governor-General in Council, that inasmuch as since the time of the Union separate schools have been established, and as these separate schools have been abolished since by the legislation of 1890, they claim that their property has been taken away from them, and that, although the judgment of the Privy Council tells them they have a right to maintain their own private schools—and it is of some importance I think to mention that—yet that power to maintain their own private schools is taken away from them, because the legislation deprives them of the means of maintaining and continuing their school-houses. In my opinion the minority had a right to these schools because they had paid for them with their own money, and the Government have no right to take them away from them. It was really spoliation on the part of the Government to take these school-houses away from the Catholics. In the petition of the Catholics several questions of law are raised, and their opponents in the press and elsewhere answer that the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has settled the whole question. This is the first question raised, and upon it the Governor-General in

Council had to adjudicate. That is a question which cannot be settled without reading and studying very carefully all the proceedings that have taken place in the case of Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg, and without mastering the reasons upon which the Privy Council has rendered that decision. I say that this is a purely legal question. The second question that is disputed is the extent and the effect and the nature of the appeal which is given to the minority by the Manitoba Act. We have heard so many speeches on this question in the House that I need not say that there is a great variety of opinion, as to the extent and the effect of that appeal. I shall not discuss that question, neither shall I discuss the three legal questions which arise, as to whether subsections 3 and 4 of the 93rd section of the British North America Act are applicable to the province of Manitoba, and if they are applicable, what is the nature, extent and effect of that appeal, and what power does it give to the Governor-General in Council. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we have our own personal opinions on that question; but in a case of this kind, when prejudices and fanaticism, as I may say, have been raised and have clouded the whole question, if we laymen or fourth class lawyers, as the hon. leader of the Opposition said in the mimicking or funny part of his address, should undertake to sit as judges, and were to render a judgment, most probably he would be the first to challenge that judgment; and certainly, Mr. Speaker, the party that would lose its rights, or its pretended rights, would protest against the judgment; and then politics and politicians would step in and raise a dangerous agitation all through the country. Therefore, I say, Mr. Speaker, if there is something that gives a guarantee to the Roman Catholics of Manitoba, and to those who sympathise with them, it is the fact that this question is made a legal one, a judicial one, and not a political one. In politics the great rule is that the majority prevails, while before our courts the law is supreme, and it is interpreted without regard to the parties appealing. When the interpretation of the law is given, I should be very much mistaken, notwithstanding the appeals that have been made here by the hon. member for North Simcoe, and perhaps by people outside of this hon. House who sympathise with him, if that interpretation, as expressed by the Supreme Court, is not accepted, I will not say by every one, but by the great majority of the people of Canada, and even by the majority of the people of the province of Manitoba. We must not forget that this law, which has been characterized as infamous by the leader of the Opposition, has been enacted, not by our friends, but by the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. If this motion were to pass, the Government would have to resign, and the country would then be in the hands of the gentlemen on the opposite benches, and who would be their friends to help to give them a majority in order to carry on the Government of this country? They would be the Martins; they would be the Greenways; they would be all the fanatics of the different provinces. The Mercier regime would be resuscitated. Has he not already done enough harm to our province—to its honour, its dignity, its good fame and its financial reputation? Mr. Speaker, as I have said, the question now before the House is a question of law—a question of the interpretation of an Act. The Manitoba Act is a contract that has been entered into by the people of Manitoba and the people of this Dominion. This contract has been written down; it has been discussed; it has been sanctioned by the Governor-General; from here it has gone to England, and has been ratified there. That contract is the law between the parties, and it must for ever remain the law between them; and if that law is deficient, if it does not contain what the people of Manitoba expected, they have to submit to it all the same, and this Government are not going to impose their interpretation on that Act; they are not going to impose their view on the people of Manitoba. They are now applying for advice to the highest court of this country in regard to the interpretation of that law, and both parties will have to abide by the decision that will be rendered by the courts. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say what they like. They may prophesy as to what will be the conduct of this Government when the decision of this question is rendered by the Supreme Court, and may be by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, if the case should be carried to that high tribunal; but the Government will not deviate from the path which they have followed until to-day. They will adhere to the law; they will follow up the law to its full extent as interpreted by the tribunals of the country, and they have no fear of what will be the result. All the good citizens of this country will accept that decision and the Government will accept it and act upon it. The law must be supreme in this country, and must be meted out equally, and when we appeal to the good sense and loyalty of the people of Canada, and when we set at defiance the agitation which will be raised on both sides—on the side of the devil as well as on the side of the deep sea—it will be recognized that we are doing what is best for this country. I may say a few words in reply to one passage in the speech of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) attacking me for a speech I made at St. Jérôme. I am not responsible for what the newspapers report, and I shall tell this House the substance of what I said on that occasion. We were there with the expectation of having a contested election, and we expected to have to speak on behalf of our candidates and the Government. Unfortunately for the gentlemen on the other side, although they had brought two young lawyers, and two pretty clever lawyers from Montreal, to examine the nomination paper, one fatal error had escaped their attention. The nomination paper was not signed and was accordingly rejected. Speaking to the electors, I said to them that no doubt the legal gentlemen who had been brought from Montreal would have told the Government how to interpret the law, and how Roman Catholics were expected to behave, whether as members of the Government or of the House. They would have taught us the true doctrines of religion on every one of these questions, and you would have been amazed by the amount of knowledge they would have exposed to you. These gentlemen know everything but how to draw a nomination paper. That is the kind of gentlemen who come here to teach us our religious duties, and I added that if there were some people who had been given the mission of preaching religion and teaching Catholics their duties, it would not be those blanc-becs, but those whom the church has sent us and established among us to teach religion, the bishops of the province. I said that I was ready to listen to the teachings of the bishops, but not to the teachings of these blanc-becs. Was there anything very extraordinary in that? I do not think the hon. gentleman will find it so very easy to give a proper explanation of what he has said about the bishops in this House, but this is his own business. The leader of the Opposition has exhibited a great knowledge of the constitutional history of this country, and explained to us that the third subsection of section 93 only applied to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and the other old provinces. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) has given to us the true history of the addition of this third subsection to the 93rd section of the British North America Act. When the representatives of the four provinces were in London, there was an effort made to establish separate schools in all the provinces instead of limiting them to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. This was refused; but what was granted was that, if after the Union separate schools were established in the other provinces, the majority would not have the power to abolish them unless with the consent of the minority. And this will be protected by the same appeal. That is the reason why the section was altered so as to read: "Where, in any province, a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union, or is thereafter established." I do not intend to give an interpretation of the law, but, as I said, this question will be decided as to whether the subsection applies to the province of Manitoba or not. But, if it applies, decidedly the appeal will lie, and they will be entitled to a remedy. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition made another point, and it was the point on which he was most eloquent. He said that it was infamous for the Government and the majority in Manitoba to establish not public schools, but Protestant schools, and he said: If such is the case I will rise in my might and tell all these people that they have passed an infamous law, and I will tell all the Protestants who will not demand the repeal and abolition of this infamous system of schools, that they are not true patriots, and, as to myself, I will protest by my vote, and otherwise, against this infamous system. This is one of the facts alleged in the petition filed by the Archbishop of St. Boniface, and, if this is established before the courts, then a question of law will arise, and one which has certainly not been adjudicated upon by the Privy Council when they decided that the Legislature of Manitoba had the right to establish neutral or non-sectarian or undenominational schools. If, under the pretext of establishing neutral schools, they have established Protestant schools, it is one of the questions of fact and law to be submitted to a tribunal, so that the Governor-General may be advised as to their consequences. Now, Mr. Speaker, I said at the beginning, that the Government have always conducted themselves according to the law, and according to the precedents. I shall not cite the precedents, I shall only remind my countrymen of what was said by the great leader of the French Canadians, Sir George Etienne Cartier, when the New Brunswick school question was brought up before this hon. House. He warned them that they should abide by the law, that they should limit their claim to what was guaranteed to them by the Constitution. He warned them not to depart from that, or to leave to politics and political passions the protection of their rights. He warned them that the moment they consented to have the rights of the Roman Catholics of New Brunswick adjudicated upon according to the needs and circumstances of the political parties prevailing in the House, those rights would be in very great danger, and that, while we were fighting for the fictitious rights of others, our own rights would soon be disposed of by the majority in this House when that majority should happen to be unfriendly to us. I say that, under the circumstances, we should remind him of his warning, and not be carried away by the appeals of the leader of the Opposition. Sir George Etienne Cartier declared that the Liberals were great Catholics when it suited the needs of their party, but should they come into power, on these questions they would soon cease to be so devoted to the Roman Catholic religion and would soon give up the rights which they advocated for the time being as sacred, and what does history tell us? Not more than two years afterwards, in 1874, these gentlemen came into power. My hon. friend, the present Secretary of State (Mr. Costigan) moved his resolution calling upon the Government to carry out their promises. And what was the answer? The answer, Mr.

Mr. OUIMET.

Speaker, was that they could not go beyond the law, and that the law did not enable them to do anything for our co-religionists in the province of New Brunswick. Were they right? Were they wrong? I must say, Mr. Speaker, they were right, and I shall always remember with a great deal of pride that the first time I was a candidate for election for this hon. House, I endorsed the very position that Sir George Etienne Cartier had taken at that time, and, depending upon the good sense of the people, I was elected, and I have never had any reason to regret the position I took. But I know gentlemen opposite will say: How did you vote in 1874, on Mr. Costigan's motion? I will tell them, Mr. Speaker. I voted in favour of it; and I say that the motion made at the time by my hon. colleague was not made because he expected it would be carried, not because he depended, in any way, on the good faith of the Government, or the party then in power, but because it was important, by forcing them to a vote, to let the people of Quebec, as well as the other provinces, know how these people would swallow their promises after they had obtained what they aimed at, that is power. And we brought them to the vote. We brought them to a vote not only in 1878, but as early as 1875 on that question, by which the Conservative party, in 1872 and 1874, had been more injured in the province of Quebec than even by the Pacific Scandal, that party paid the penalty for having repudiated their doctrines and their promises of 1872. As soon as a county was open in 1874 we carried it, and the Conservatives carried county after county, because the people of Quebec had learned what confidence to place in the sincerity and good faith of the Liberal party. Later on, another question came up. In 1885 we had the celebrated Riel question. We know how that question carried Mr. Mercier into power in Quebec, we know how he was assisted by the whole Liberal party; we know all the promises they made. However, when the Liberals came into power in Quebec, they began to realize that "mon frère Riel" was after all not to be mentioned any more in respectable society, and that he whom they had held up before the people as a martyr of our race and our religion, was nothing but a renegade to both our race and our religion. We must take lessons from the past. We shall know how to deal with these questions, and we shall know that the only way by which a party can maintain itself before the people is by sincerity and good faith, by devotion to the law, devotion to the country and especially by a readiness to face any prejudice in order to follow what we think is right. On this question, I may say that, so far as I am concerned, and so far as I am acquainted with the opinion of my colleagues in the Government, we have treated it in the most conscientious manner, with the sole desire to do full justice, with the sole desire, by teaching the people the real facts of the case, to alleviate prejudices on one side, and to prepare the people on the other side to make a sacrifice of their sympathy if the law proves to be such that they will have to do so. When we have to render an account of our conduct on this question, we shall, no doubt, have to stand between the devil and the deep sea. The devil and the deep sea have conspired to bring about a false impression on this question as regards the conduct of the Government, and also to create a false judgment on the case itself. They want to profit by every prejudice that has been raised on both sides in order to raise themselves to power, even though, by so doing, they will have to stifle the prayer and reject the claims of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party has gone triumphantly through a great many difficulties, some of which I have mentioned; it has gone through a great many difficult questions of race, of nationality and of creed; but, under the conduct of our late leader we have always come through them successfully, because we could always appeal to the good sense and the justice and fairness of the population. French Canadians and English Canadians will never forget that it is only by observing principles of moderation, fairness and justice that we can hope to build up in this country a prosperous and united people, enjoying the greatest possible amount of freedom and happiness.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to correct an opinion I have heard advanced in regard to this debate, that it is a waste of time. I take a very different view. It deals with a subject on which there is a great deal of misconception in the public mind. Sir, I believe that so serious, so grave, so grievous, even, are the dangers to Canada from circumstances connected with the question now before the House, that, if it were convenient, time would be well spent to have twice the sittings that we shall devote to this question, in order that the people might be enlightened as to the real issue on which they have to make up their minds. Both outside and even inside this House the issue is clouded, I am sorry to say. Instead of coming to the discussion of this question with reason untrammelled and undarkened, some of those who discuss it do so hampered, chained and manacled with prejudices, and darkened by all sorts of theories that will not bear examination, in regard now to the Act of Parliament, now to the petitions and how they have been dealt with, and now to the policy of the Government. Sir, I have tried conscientiously to come to a conclusion as to how I ought to vote on the question now before the House. Nearly every supporter I have in my constituency, I suppose ninety-five-hundredths of those who voted for me, take a strong view in favour of what, on the face of it, would seem to the popular mind, to be advanced by this motion. I have presented petitions here, week after week, and I shall have others to present, stating what the views of those petitioners are in regard to education and other questions in the North-west, and indicating their strong opinion that the Manitoba School Act should not be interfered with. Now, Mr. Speaker, what does that mean? What it means is this: that, in the popular mind, there is an idea that the Government may, can, shall, will or would, in some way or other, strike a blow at the School Act of Manitoba. The motion we have before the House I will venture, often as it has been read before, to read again. It says:

That this House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government in dealing with the Manitoba school question.

That is the first clause. In regard to the resolution generally, let me say that we are sitting here on an affiliation case. In most affiliation cases that I have heard anything of, a child is sought to be palmed off on an unwilling father; but the converse here is the case, because you have a child, and you have a putative father anxious to claim it, but its likeness is so great to another supposed father, who does not deny the soft impeachment, the general impression of those who have to try the case, is, that the paternity, after all, does not belong to the one who desires it most. However, if the paternity of this motion of the hon. member for L'Islet is not to be laid at the door of the hon. member for Simcoe, all I have to say is that, in the language of the sacred writer, the member for North Simcoe has ploughed with the heifer of the member for L'Islet. I remember that Mr. Justice Maule, who was a man of a satirical turn of mind, when he wanted to express contempt for the learned judges sitting on either side of him, would say that he agreed with his learned brother, B, on the right, because of the reasons advanced by his learned brother, A, on the left. Sir, I am in a contrary position. I dissent from this resolution advanced by the hon. member for L'Islet, for reasons advanced by the hon. member for Simcoe, who supported the resolution. Well, Sir, to come to the first part. What does it mean? It means to one man that the Government is to be condemned because they do not disallow the Manitoba Act of 1890. It means to another man that the Government is to be condemned because of some action now going forward and supposed to menace the Act of 1890. In fact, the motion of the hon. member for L'Islet is a two-headed nightingale, and one head sings an orange tune, and the other head chants a quite opposite ditty. So, Sir, I think that the ambiguity of the first part of this resolution cannot commend itself to my approval. The second part is in these words:

In assuming to be possessed of judicial functions conflicting with their duty as constitutional advisers of the Crown, which assumption is wholly unknown to the law,—

With that I will deal later on. The motion continues :

—and if now acquiesced in would be entirely subversive of the principle of ministerial responsibility.

Permit me, Sir, to deal for one moment with the way that the learned leader of the Opposition spoke on this question this evening. He ridiculed, as did the hon. member for Simcoe, the new Star Chamber in Canada. I say this : “manus haec inimica tyrannis !” There is a hand inimical to tyrants ; and if you can show me that any Conservative Government has established a Star Chamber, or anything like a Star Chamber, as known to history, then I shall oppose and fight against that Star Chamber and fight against that Government. But the fact is, and it reveals at once the farcical character, and, if I may use such a term, the tragical character of this discussion, that an hon. member in the standing of the hon. member for Simcoe, and an hon. member like the hon. gentleman who leads with such distinction a great party in this country, should stoop to the most violent rhetorical clap-trap, in order to make a point in a serious discussion. Now, Sir, the leader of the Opposition described with gusto this committee that heard these petitions and heard Mr. Ewart. I listened to that description, which was full of fervour ; but what argument there was in it or how the description of the hearing bore on the issue before the House, or how it could enlighten the House or the country or help anybody with an open mind and ready to be convinced, to come to a conclusion on this subject, I fail utterly to see.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. members may laugh and cheer, and I could have laughed and cheered myself ; but if I had laughed, the laughter would not have been entirely at the jokes made by the leader of the Opposition. We have—and I need not read them—these sections of the Manitoba Act and sections of the British North America Act, which provide for an appeal to the Governor in Council. The hon. member for Simcoe, last night, dwelt on the fact, that in the 11th and 13th sections of the British North America Act, the words “the Governor in Council” must mean the same thing as the “Governor in Council” in the 93rd section. But he drew no inference from the fact. What inference he meant the House to draw, I am still at a loss to know ; or how the fact that they mean one and the same thing in the three clauses, that is to say, the Governor-General in Council—how that in any way helps the assault he was making on the position of the Government, I do not understand. The sections provide for an appeal to the Governor in Council, an appeal under certain conditions and under certain limitations ; and the hon. gentleman quoted the Attorney-General of England, and, no doubt, he endorses the opinion, that this appeal does not mean an appeal such as would suggest itself to a lawyer's mind, but that what it means is this : that the governmental machinery described by the words “Governor in Council,” is to be asked by this appeal to ask Parliament to do certain things. I confess to you, Mr. Speaker, that high as my opinion is of the ability of my learned friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and ready as I should be to sit at his feet and learn of him, I fail utterly to be carried with him in his reasoning in regard to the significance of that word “appeal,” and in thinking over it since, I have failed to see that the word “appeal” ever meant or could mean simply that a “request” should be made. What an absurdity it would be for the Imperial Parliament to put in an elaborate clause with three or four sections in the Act, and for this House, in the Manitoba Act, to pass a clause with three sections in it, providing that an aggrieved minority in a given province should be able to ask Parliament to pass certain legislation. Why, there is not an humble individual in any part of this Dominion of Canada that has not the right to petition the Governor in Council, to ask Parliament to pass certain legislation. I therefore conclude that more is meant by the word “appeal,” and I will give you another reason. I have in my hand a Bill for the government of Ireland, brought in to the Imperial House of Commons by Mr. Gladstone last month. The 22nd and 23rd sections of that Bill provide that where now an appeal exists to the House of Lords that it shall be to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and section 23rd goes on to say :

If it appears to the Lord-Lieutenant or a Secretary of State expedient in the public interest that steps shall be taken for the speedy determination of the question whether any Irish Act or any provision thereof is beyond the powers of the Irish Legislature, he may represent the same to Her Majesty in Council, and thereupon the said question shall be forthwith referred to and heard and determined by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, constituted as if hearing an appeal from a court in Ireland.

2. Upon the hearing of the question such persons as seem to the Judicial Committee to be interested may be allowed to appear and be heard as parties to the case, and the decision of the Judicial Committee shall be given in like manner as if it were the decision of an appeal, the nature of the report or recommendation to Her Majesty stated in open court.

3. Nothing in this Act shall prejudice any other power of Her Majesty in Council to refer any question to the Judicial Committee or the right of any person to petition Her Majesty for such reference.

The argument that I build on this is : that the word “appeal” is used there in no more emphatic way, judging from the position of the surrounding words, than it is used in the British North America Act. I confess it would be very hard for me to take the dictum of any lawyer, be he ever so eminent, who would tell me that in the British North America Act passed by the Imperial House of Commons, which is now dealing with this Home Rule Bill, in using the word "appeal," in view of the great grievances that might arise, that all they meant was that they should be able to make a request to the Governor in Council to put certain machinery in operation to ask Parliament to do certain things. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition quoted the "World" newspaper. The hon. gentleman is accustomed to deal at great length in this House on matters that cannot possibly have any effect on deciding the issue. He read a long extract; I suppose a very clever article from Ottawa by the correspondent of the "World." It was very interesting; it was very clever; but how does the opinion of the correspondent of the "World" in any way commit the Government, or how does it help the House to come to a decision on the subject with which we are at present charged? The leader of the Opposition went further, and he re-echoed what was said by the hon. member from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) last night, who stated that he did not blame the Government for referring this question to the Supreme Court. Now, the reference to the Supreme Court implies the very hearing of that appeal by the Governor in Council, which he says the Governor in Council ought to be stopped from entertaining. My hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) dwelt on the fact that the Government having paid to have this matter brought before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, was a party to the suit, so to speak, and was therefore not fit to hear the appeal, and he then said that a motion should be made in the Court of Queen's Bench to remove the appeal from the Governor in Council to a court that would be more competent and more impartial. Now, when the Manitoba Act was passed in 1890, and petitions came in here from those Catholics who thought they were aggrieved, could the Government hear those petitions then? I say that the Government could not hear these petitions until it found whether it really was in a position to take any action whatever in regard to the appeal, because if that Act was "ultra vires" of the Manitoba Legislature it fell to the ground, and there was no necessity for any action on the part of the Government. The Government, in taking steps to see whether or not the courts of the country, and ultimately the highest legal tribunal, should declare that the Act was "ultra vires" or "intra vires," took a course which, in my opinion, every sensible man should endorse. The moment the law was declared to be "intra vires," that moment the Governor in Council was in a position to hear the appeal under the British North America Act. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) rather astonished me by objecting to the conduct of the Government in this matter, and I will tell you why. He knows very well that it has become common for the Government of this country to take the very course which he condemns, and in the celebrated case of the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, I believe it was at the request of an eminent legal firm in Toronto, with which my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is not wholly unconnected, and I understand that it was at his request, too, the Government interfered. In looking at the Auditor-General's Report, I find the name of that firm, and, I think, my hon. friend's own name, down for money paid out by this Government in connection with that case. And why? Because it was desirable, in regard to the question raised between the Government of Ontario and the Government of this Dominion, that it should be settled as to their relative powers. Another case that occurs to me is the question of the appointment of Queen's Counsel. I have had some correspondence with Mr. Aemelius Irving on the subject of the Queen's Counsel appointed by the province, and I have been given to understand that it has been very much desired by Sir Oliver Mowat, that a case should be made out on that subject—that the Government should interfere there, as the Government have interfered in this case, in order to test the validity of these questions. I understand that there are also at the present moment questions affecting the fisheries, on which the Government are taking a similar course. My hon. friend from North Simcoe asked in this connection: Is it seemly that this Government of Canada should appear to assail a provincial Act? Why, Sir, here we have, in the provisions of this Government of Ireland Bill, arrangements made whereby the Secretary of State may test the question, whether an Act passed by the Irish Parliament is "ultra vires" or "intra vires." So that, in case this Bill passes and home rule becomes a "fait accompli," what will be the result? You may have an Act passed by the Irish Parliament which some minority in Ireland will be opposed to and will consider "ultra vires," and the Secretary of State and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland are empowered to test whether that Act is "ultra vires" or "intra vires." So that, when my hon. friend uses the word "assail," in regard to a provincial Act, he uses that word in a rhetorical sense. As a matter of fact, the Government are not assailing the Manitoba School Act of 1890. That Act remains still on the statute-book and is in full force, and no attempt has been made by this Government to do the least injury to it. What the Government have done, is to take steps to see what their position is in regard to the petitions presented to them by a minority of the people of Manitoba, who consider that they have grievances under certain legislation. Now, Sir, let us suppose that the Government had taken a different course. Let us suppose that, when these petitions came, the Government had said: We will not have anything to do with your petitions; we intend just to stick by that Act; we approve of that Act. Why, what would have happened? Would you not have had a state of things, not only in Manitoba, but all over the Dominion of Canada, far more grievous than anything which has been hinted at by the hon. Minister of Public Works? Would you not have had every Roman Catholic in Canada feeling that a grievous wrong had been done to the Catholics of Manitoba, in not being allowed to make that appeal which, wisely or unwisely, the British North America Act and the Manitoba Act provided for? Let us suppose, I say, that the Government had refused to deal with the matter; let us suppose that they had said: We will wash our hands entirely of this question, as my hon. friend from Simcoe wants them to do. Any man who reads the Manitoba Act and the British North America Act, must conclude that the Governor in Council had certain powers in regard to an appeal. Does not the endowment of a power in a man or a body imply a duty to exercise that power, when any occasion for exercising it arises? If, therefore, the Government advise His Excellency, saying: It is true, these two Acts provide that you and your Council are to hear certain appeals, but we will regard this as a matter of policy; we do not think it good politics or good policy to interfere or to take cognizance of these persons' petitions for an appeal. Why, Sir, what would be said of a Governor-General who would tolerate such a Government, or what would be said of a Government that would be capable of an iniquity of that kind? Now, Mr. Speaker, it so happens that at the present moment in Austria questions of this kind are coming up; but I may say that they have been settled in Austria more peaceably and quietly than they have been settled on this continent. My fellow Protestants are in a great minority in Austria. We will suppose that an Act like this were passed in Austria, and that in the northern part of the country the Protestants were in precisely the same position as the Catholics are in Manitoba, and some of them said: We are not going to rebel against the Act that has been passed, but, under the Constitution under which we live, we are authorized to appeal against it, and the Government must hear our appeal. I am not arguing that the Manitoba minority are right in their contention, that the Government ought to upset this Act of 1890. Let it turn out, on inquiry, that they are entirely wrong and that no grievance exists; I do not care about that. They think that they have a grievance and that under this Act they have an appeal. What are you going to do with them? Are you going to take no cognizance of their appeal? Suppose it were done in Austria, and the correspondents were to flash it to London or to New York or to Toronto. In the "Mail," of Toronto, or the "Times," of London, you would have articles dwelling on the tyranny of the great Imperial House and the Legislature that ruled at Vienna. I say, therefore, that the Government have done well. They have done the only thing, in fact, that they could do, in taking steps to see what their position was, whether this Act was "ultra vires" or "intra vires," and having found that it was "intra vires," then to take steps to hear the appeal. Now, Sir, my hon. friend from North Simcoe and my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition talk of delays and dilly-dallying. Suppose there have been delays; I do not see any evidence showing that there have been any unnecessary delays; but suppose there have been delays, what harm has been done? Has any harm been done to the Protestants of Manitoba who believe in this school law? Has any harm been done to the Protestants of the rest of Canada who are strong advocates of public schools? That Act is in force in Manitoba to-day, and not a hair of its head, so to speak, has been touched. Therefore, the Protestants have suffered nothing. And let me ask the hon. member for L'Islet and the hon. leader of the Opposition, have the Catholics suffered severely? Why, to hear my hon. friend talk, you would think the Catholics in Manitoba were in a dreadfully oppressed condition. Let me tell you that the Catholic schools of Manitoba to-day are conducted on very much the same plan as they were before this legislation passed; and whatever may be the result, should this legislation stand ultimately and be not interfered with in the least, you will find, from the necessities of the case, from the peculiar location of the people in Manitoba, that all the separate schools will still be Catholic schools, where the children will continue to be educated by Catholic teachers, and the only difference will be that a state inspector will inspect the schools. That, I grant you, to the mind of a pious Catholic—and I am not going to say whether I would differ with him or not—may seem a serious thing; and, if it is a serious thing to him, it is a thing for us to not cavil at, but to respect. It is for us, consistently with our own views and our own conscientious convictions, to put ourselves in their place. I must confess that when I see people ready to rush in and pronounce off hand strong opinions on the subject of education, when I see the rigid conviction of people who believe that you have solved everything, when you have one system of public schools established in the country, and when I look at the results, I am deeply pained, and my national hope even loses much of its strength, because I say no man can have observed this country as closely as I have for the last twenty years, without coming to the conclusion, that, be the reason what it may, our system of education has great defects judging by the results. There are numbers of people who think there is nothing easier than to deal with this question of education. Some of my fellow Protestants are apt to talk as though the opinions of Roman Catholic ecclesiastics were nothing but prejudice, only deserving your scorn. whereas there cannot be the least doubt in the mind of any enlightened man that what they feel is not so much prejudice, though they have prejudice as well as the rest of us, but the fear which every thoughtful man who looks on the educational field must feel that the scepticism, which is awake in the last part of the nineteenth century, may seize the mind of the child ere he has been sufficiently grounded in those principles of religion and morality on which high character must be built. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), in assailing the character of the tribunal to which this appeal is to be made, declared that it was an ex parte tribunal, not because only one side had been summoned and would be heard, but because Manitoba had refused to come before it. I confess that I think the Government of Manitoba, in refusing to come before this tribunal, behaved very badly. It is a tribunal, not created by this Government, but by a solemn act of our own Parliament, and I do not think it is to the credit of a Government in a free country to refuse to come before such a tribunal, no matter what that Government may have thought of the propriety of that tribunal sitting in any given case. They should have come before the tribunal with counsel, if for no other reason than to state the reasons why they did not intend to appear in the case. In that connection let me point out what I promised to do at an earlier stage. A violent suggestion, an unjust suggestion and an untrue suggestion—though I do not of course mean that it was meant to be mendacious—was made by my hon. friend when he characterized this as a Star Chamber. The Star Chamber had certain features, which have made it infamous in history. In the first place, it sat with closed doors, in the next place, the accused was not brought face to face with his witnesses, and in the third place, no witnesses knew another witness. Everything was done in secrecy, and the accused was condemned and punished without having been confronted with the witnesses, or having had the opportunity of cross-examining them. What is the character of this Star Chamber of ours? Its very first meeting was held with open doors, and if the Government of Manitoba had come before it, we should have had the case tried; the pros and cons stated; all would have got into the papers, and everything would have been done above board and in the light of a free community, and yet this is the assembly described by my hon. friend with so much gusto as worthy of being characterized as a Star Chamber. My hon. friend says that the Government ought to stop now, but the question is not ripe. How could the Government stop now? It cannot unless it were to do a tyrannical act. It would have done that at first if it had refused to hear the appeal. There is nothing to be done but to let these appeals take their course, and I have shown that no harm can come to Protestants or Catholics from allowing it to take its course. It goes before the Supreme Court where the leader of the Opposition does not object to see it. The Supreme Court, we will suppose, decides that the Governor-General in Council should hear the case on its merits, and the case on its merits comes before the Governor in Council. Suppose it is sent again to the Supreme Court and suppose the decision is against the contention of the minority in Manitoba? What then? There is an end of the business. But suppose the decision is in favour of the minority in Manitoba, what then? Then a mandate would be issued by the Government—they could do nothing else—to the Government of Manitoba to undo the legislation of 1890. The Government of Manitoba, I am quite certain, would refuse to obey. And what would be the result? It would come into this House. The Government could bring it into this House and this House would say whether or not the Act of 1890 could be interfered with or not. And, can any one doubt from what we know at the present moment of the complexion and temper of this House, if that question came into this House what would be the decision on the part of hon. members. At the present moment, we are dealing with what we have no jurisdiction to deal with. Suppose this motion of the hon. member were carried, what then? The Government, even if the present Government remains, could not give up its duty under the powers with which they are endowed. Suppose they left their seats and my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Laurier) crossed the floor and made up a Ministry (I believe if he did I could, speaking from one of those benches, give almost as humorous a description of that Ministry as he gave of the present one) does any man suppose that the suggestions and advice and views of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) would find more acceptance with my hon. friend or his Government than they find with my hon. friend the Prime Minister and his Government. Thus it is an idle question we are debating. But, as I said in my opening remarks, it is not an idle question from the other point of view, because I welcome anything that will tend to dispel the cloud of prejudice. I had almost said a harsher word, that hovers over this country and threatens to shed its pestilential dews upon it.

An hon. MEMBER. Time.

Mr. DAVIN. Who cries out time? Now, Sir, let me deal with another point. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is a lawyer. He says there is no appeal. My friend Mr. Ewart is a lawyer, and a good lawyer, and he says there is an appeal, and I know that that is his conscientious conviction, and I have talked with him confidentially about the matter. If, taking two lawyers in this Dominion, one declares that there is an appeal and the other that there is no appeal, is not that of itself, the fact that there is that difference of opinion, sufficient reason for referring this matter to a tribunal?

An hon. MEMBER. Time.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend will not hasten matters by crying time. I wish, for one moment to deal with the argument about Bagehot used by my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier). Of course, I feel nervous when I deal with a great constitutional question and differ with my friend the hon. leader of the Opposition. But my hon. friend read the paragraph that was misquoted, of course, inadvertently, by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) pointed out the mistake. I have it here; "great minds," and so on, you know, and we both hit on it.

There are two descriptions of the English constitution which have exercised immense influence, but which are erroneous. First, it is laid down as a principle of the English polity that in it—

This was quoted by my hon. friend from North Simcoe.

—that in it the legislative, the executive and the judicial powers are quite divided.

And Bagehot says this is erroneous. But my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) says that the hon. member for North Simcoe was quite correct, that Bagehot does not say that these views are erroneous. Bagehot was a great master of English expression, and he makes it perfectly clear to my poor mind that what he does say is that it was erroneous to say that the legislative, executive and judicial powers were quite divided. In other parts of the book he says the singular advantage, in some respects, of the British Constitution is that they have approximated. But my hon. friend says: The judicial power has nothing whatever to do with the legislative power of England. Well, Sir, here we have in this very Act, the Bill of Mr. Gladstone, an arrangement under which appeals from the courts of law in Ireland to the House of Lords are transferred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Why, Sir, the House of Lords itself sits as a judicial body. And yet my hon. friend impugns the accuracy of my hon. friend for Albert (Mr. Weldon) when he points out that Bagehot says the very opposite from what my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) had declared he said. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have occupied the time of the House thus far for the purpose of giving to this House and my constituents, and of giving to the country, so far as my poor voice can reach it, my reasons for the vote that I shall give on this question. I say, Sir, that I disapprove entirely of the kind of motion we have at present before the House. It is like one of those faces that are occasionally seen drawn by skilful men; you look at it one way and it is the face of a man, and you look at it the other way and it is the face of a woman. Turn this motion one way and it has a Jesuit aspect; turn it the other way and it is all Orange.

Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says, "hear, hear," and he is a man of facile adhesion to any party. But the adhesion is no long cohesion, so how long he will be with me I really do not know. But, Sir, I was determined, though late the hour, that I would not give a silent vote on this question, in the hope that my poor voice, to some small extent, might tend to dispel the prejudice that gathers over this question. Mr. Speaker, we talk about the difficulties—and I am going to say something about the future of Canada for a moment, and I will speak about that future as enthusiastically as I can, whatever groans may come from the undertaker's nauts among members of the Opposition. Mr. Speaker, the great difficulty we have to contend with in Canada is faction. The great difficulty is that our people are divided; they are shredded by senseless prejudice. These things are hindering the people of the country from being brought together and consolidated into a great people, such as in his enthusiastic moments the leader of the Opposition speaks of, and such as my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) spoke of. What is this debate but an evidence that prejudice is dominant and domineering in Canada? Because in the speeches, whether spoken on the one side or the other, you hear notes that are intended for no other purpose than to reach the ears of prejudice. Now, here in Canada we have, as we often say, a magnificent country with boundless resources, its physical resources unimagined, almost, and unimaginable at this stage of our progress. We have a magnificent people, French, Irish, English, Scotch, capable of making Canadians a race of the very first order. But, Sir, unfortunately this division, these prejudices, this senseless distrust of each other, is a darkening power over this Canada of ours. I would to God that, whether by means of the action of this Parliament, or by means of the action of the press, probably still more powerful, we could come at no distant day to make Catholics and Protestants, Orangemen and Irish Catholics, so to feel that when they come to think of their country, come to think of the question before this House, and come to think of supporting men to come to this House, they would not dream of asking whether a man wears this or that badge, but: Is he fit for the position, is he a true son of Canada, is he faithful to this new country, is he fit to help her on in the march of progress? Then, before whatever shrine he bowed, or whatever badge he wore on certain occasions, give him support because of his loyalty and his love and his power to serve Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). I hope the House will bear with me for a moment while I refer to a particular phase of this discussion which was started by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). He laid down in a way the record of the Conservative party on this question, and said that the Conservative party and Government were unworthy of support because of it. While he was speaking he only gave one side of the record of the Conservative party, and that was the reverse side. We heard the other side given by the leader of the House, and that altogether changed the view. He (Mr. Tarte) said that the Conservative party was guilty of many acts of omission and acts of commission; and yet, from the outline of the record of the Conservative party, as laid down by the leader of the House, it is evident that we have done everything that could be done in order to clear this case and get it in a fair way before the people of the country. Now, if the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) was honest in the position he has taken here, he should rather have supported the position of the member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), because the member for Provencher is willing to trust the Government, and, indeed, expressed his indebtedness to the Government, because they have listened to every petition that has been presented, and because they are willing that this case shall be fully exploited as a question of law. But the member for L'Islet, when dealing with records, should have gone further in that regard. He should have given us the record of the Liberal party on this question. As he is of the Reform party now, and has neglected its record, I propose for a moment to try and find out what the record of the Liberal party is on this important question. To obtain that record I may have to quote from the Toronto "Globe." My paper, the Toronto "World" has been quoted here to-night by the leader of the Opposition, and I am prepared to stand by those quotations, and to vindicate everything that was said in them. I am only sorry, however, to say that I do not think that the leader of the Opposition will be able to endorse and vindicate what his own organ, the Toronto "Globe," has said on this matter. The judgment in the Manitoba school case was given by the Privy Council at the end of July last. On August 1st, the "Globe" had a leading article on that decision from which I will read you a couple of extracts:

It seems clear that he (the leader of the Government) meant to hold out to the Catholics a hope that in the event of an adverse decision in the courts, the aid of the Federal authority would be invoked. But it is difficult to see how these provisions are applicable to the present case. The courts have, in effect, declared that the legislation has not prejudicially affected any right or privilege of the minority; and there seems, therefore, to be no scope for the application of remedial laws. The matter will no doubt be discussed in the Federal Parliament, but we are disposed to think that Manitoba may now be ranked among the provinces in which the question is settled.

That is a part of the Liberal record of the matter. Then the same article closes thus:

Bigotry and prejudice may enhance the difficulty, but they do not create it; it is inherent in every system of education, and can only be partially overcome by the exercise of the utmost patience and wisdom.

It is the Conservative party that proposes to exercise the "utmost patience and wisdom" in this matter. The next day, on August 2nd, the "Globe" had this remark:

What is to be gained by reopening the healing wound?

Who is opening the healing wound here, but the hon. member for L'Islet and the hon. leader of the Opposition?

But as we have already said, the courts have declared that the legislature has not prejudicially affected any right or privilege of the minority, and, therefore, that there is no wrong to be remedied.

And further on:

The present Ministry would hardly be willing to come down to Parliament with a proposal to reimpose the system upon Manitoba against the will of an overwhelming majority of its people, and it is morally certain that Parliament would not sanction such a proposal.

Yet the leader of the Opposition is to-night asking Parliament to sanction such a proposal:

The politicians, whether from expediency or from higher motives, are disposed, in questions which involve race and religion, to act upon the maxim quies non movet. Any member might of course precipitate a discussion by a motion, but nothing would come of it save the renewal of religious and racial passion and prejudice. On the other hand the adversaries of separate schools have no right to preach patience to the representatives of the "lost cause" in Manitoba, unless they are ready to exercise the virtue of charity and generosity.

The next day the same paper said:

The people of Manitoba are not bound by his promise.

That is, the promise of the leader of the Government.

We ask the friends of separate schools whether it would not be the part of wisdom and patriotism to abandon an agitation which cannot possibly have any other result than defeat and the renewal of sectarian strife.

Yet, to-night the leader of the Opposition is practically urging that such strife be continued. On August 4th the same paper stated:

The conflict is now ended.

And further on:

No Ministry at Ottawa would dare to go to the House with a proposition that the decision of the highest court in the Empire, and the will of Manitoba, plainly expressed in her elections, should be practically set aside. In the third place, there is not the least doubt that two-thirds of the members of the House of Commons, from considerations of political safety, if from no higher motives, would reject such a proposal if made. Let the first step be taken toward the imposition of the separate school system upon Manitoba, and there need be no fear but that the voice of the country will make itself heard.

On August 5th, the same paper states :

It is obvious that there are cases in which such a reference to the Supreme Court would be exceedingly useful. * * * * * We do not see, however, that these reasons apply in the present case * * * * * in any case the opinion of the Supreme Court will be only advisory, and will not relieve the Governor-General in Council, or in other words, the ministry, from the responsibility of making a decision ; while Parliament will be perfectly free to decline to enact the so-called remedial laws.

Then a few days later, when a statement appeared in the newspapers that perhaps the Government would consent to a scheme to divert a portion of the school lands of Manitoba towards the support of Catholic separate schools, the "Globe" said :

The Federal Ministers make a fatal mistake if they imagine that this expedient would promote peace and harmony. It would array almost the entire population of Manitoba in a solid mass against the Federal power, and if we know the temper of the people of Ontario, they would assuredly be found shoulder to shoulder with the upholders of provincial autonomy. In fact, so certain, is it where their sympathies would be that we doubt whether the most servile follower of the Government would risk his political life in an Ontario constituency by sanctioning such an arrangement.

And finally, on 15th August, the same paper said :

The cable despatches announce that the constitutionality of the Manitoba laws abolishing separate schools had been upheld ; but there was still a supposition that the judgment of the British Court, unlike that of the Queen's Bench of Manitoba, might have left some room for the operation of remedial laws. The judgment which we publish in full to-day, gives no ground for that supposition. No suggestion is made here that the ordinary tribunals of the country are not competent to deal with the whole case, or that it was intended that the provisions in question should give the Governor-General in Council a supplementary jurisdiction to obtain relief which cannot be obtained in the ordinary courts. Moreover, so far as their lordships deal with questions outside of the strict letter of law, they sustain the action of the Manitoba Legislature.

From all which quotations you may see how strangely at variance are the "Globe," which says the Roman Catholics of Manitoba have no rights, and the leader of the Opposition, who says the minority of that province are denied their rights. In speaking of the record of the Government on this question, I wish to remind the hon. member for L'Islet that this Manitoba law which deprives the Catholics of the North-west of separate schools, was carried by a Reform Government. The Greenway-Martin Government is a Reform Government, and owes more or less allegiance to the Reform party in Ottawa as well as in the North-west. If the leader of the Opposition is in earnest in trying to secure the rights of the Catholics of Manitoba, I can tell him where he can begin the work, and that is by going to the Greenway Government and urging on them to grant that relief which he has urged to-night should be conceded here. I desire to ask the hon. member for L'Islet, and those who spoke on his side of the case, where the Greenway-Martin Government got their inspiration for the provincial rights cry ? They got it in the first place from Mr. Mowat, who has been given great praise to-day for the stand he has taken in regard to provincial rights. But that, I hold, was an erroneous stand, and the evil consequences that followed are felt in this country to-day. They exploited provincial rights until the country was sick of the cry, and then they went on to Quebec and inoculated Count Mercier with the same view, which resulted in the passing of the Jesuits Estates Act, which brought on the question of provincial rights in that province, and in this Legislature. Mr. Greenway, following the example of Messrs. Mowat and Mercier, went back to his province of Manitoba and passed this law, which is objected to so strongly to-night. That is the record of the Reform party in regard to this question. They have been constantly raising this question of provincial rights ; and I venture to say here to-day that there never would have been a Manitoba School Act if there had not first been a Jesuits Estates Act passed in the Quebec Legislature. These things run in the way of compensations ; our friends in Quebec raised the cry of provincial rights in regard to the Jesuits Estates, and so we had the compensation thereof given in the form of the Manitoba Act, to which those hon. gentlemen now object. While I have much sympathy with the Roman Catholics of Manitoba, in being refused rights which they claim, I must tell them that those rights which have been invaded are not rights of conscience. They are, I must say, simply rights which affect their pockets, and that to a very small degree. Their conscience is not invaded ; it is as free to-day as ever, and if they like to establish parochial schools they are still free to send their children there, and those schools would be protected and have every privilege that the public schools possess. There is no real hardship ; at the very most, it is a hardship of money, and not a hardship of conscience. The hon. member for Bellechasse read some extracts this afternoon which will do more than anything else to settle this school question in this country. He read from the decrees of Mgr. Satolli in regard to the school question in the United States. I have heard the question as to the bearing of our Constitution on this issue discussed here to-day, and during two preceding days ; I have heard the provisions of the Constitution quoted from the many doctors who are authorities thereon, but the Satolli decrees which were published in the United States not long ago, are the decrees which, as a matter of fact, will settle this question more than the Constitution of this country. The hon. member for L'Islet paid a great tribute to His Holiness the Pope, and said he was one of the most astute statesmen of the day; I believe he is one of the ablest statesmen known to the closing years of the nineteenth century, and that eminent man sent Mgr. Satolli to this country to investigate and settle the school question, and these decrees are the result. If I may be permitted, I will read three or four of the articles in the decrees, as follows:—

I.

All care must be taken to erect Catholic schools, to enlarge and improve those already established, and to make them equal to the public schools in teaching and discipline.—Conc. Plen. Balt. III., No. 197, p. 101.

II.

When there is no Catholic school at all, or when the one that is available is little fitted for giving the children an education in keeping with their condition, then the public schools may be attended with a safe conscience, the danger of perversion being rendered remote by opportune remedial and precautionary measures; a matter that is to be left to the conscience and judgment of the Ordinaries.—Ibid, No. 198, p. 103.

III.

We enact and command that no one shall be allowed to teach in a parochial school who has not proven his fitness for the position by previous examination. No priest shall have any right to employ any teacher, male or female, in his school without a certificate of ability, or diploma from the Diocesan Board of Examiners.—Ibid, No. 203, p. 108.

IV.

Normal schools, as they are called, are to be established where they are wanting and are evidently necessary.—Ibid, No. 205, p. 110.

V.

We strictly forbid any one, whether bishop or priest, and this is the express prohibition of the Sovereign Pontiff through the sacred congregation, either by act or by threat to exclude from the Sacraments as unworthy, parents who chose to send their children to the public schools. As regards the children themselves, this enactment applies with still greater force.—Ibid, No. 198, p. 194. Conf., Tit. VI., Cap. 1., II.; Tit. VII.

X.

No reproach, either in public or in private, shall be cast upon Catholic parents who send their children to private schools or academies where a better education is given under the direction of religious or approved of and Catholic persons. If they make sufficient provision for the religious training of their children, let them be free to secure in other ways that education which the position of their family requires.

XI.

It is greatly to be desired, and will be a most happy arrangement, if the bishop agree with the civil authorities or with the members of the school board, to conduct the school with mutual attention and due consideration for their respective rights.

The fact is that the Catholics of the United States are told that they must accept the public school system of that country, and if that decree applies to Catholics in Minnesota, and if it is true that Catholics of Manitoba have no right to separate schools, as the Privy Council has laid down, then they are undergoing no greater hardships than are the Catholics of Minnesota, and they will, as a matter of course, have to accept the public schools. Those decrees, issued by that eminent statesman, if I may speak of His Holiness in those terms, also suggest ways in which the two creeds can work harmoniously together. The Government, as I have said, have a policy that should meet with the approval of the country. They simply propose to allow the minority to avail themselves of every means to state their case, and put in their petitions. The Government should command the support of the hon. member for L'Islet, and he should be in the same boat with the hon. member for Provencher. For the present, while I do not wish to say what my future course in this matter may be, I trust that the Conservative party, which is the party of conciliation in this country, which has not been the party of provincial rights, which has tried in every way to be conciliatory towards all, will, in the end, secure a decision in this matter that will meet with the approval of the Canadian people.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, at this very late stage of the debate, and at this very late hour, it is certainly not my intention to inflict a long speech upon the House. Moreover, from the stand-point from which I view this question, the discussion has already been so exhaustive, and the course taken by the Government has been so thoroughly placed before the House and before the people of Canada by the Prime Minister and by the hon. the Minister of Public Works, that I feel I could only go over the same ground, without adding any force to the arguments in favour of the decisions at which the Government has arrived, and which I consider to be the right one. Sir, the eloquent leader of the Opposition, the silver-tongued orator, in so far as eloquence is concerned, has, true to his reputation, spoken eloquently to-night. He has been historic, and he has handled the argument as an able lawyer would do, by producing very interesting facts to save the weak points of a bad case. The hon. gentleman has done me the distinguished honour of referring to me personally. In the description he has given of my colleagues and myself, he has been good enough to remind me that the decoration which I wear upon my breast had been conferred upon me for military science, more than for legal distinction. I am quite willing to admit that, during the campaign, when Her Majesty conferred upon me that decoration, the hon. gentleman did not receive any such honour, and I am also ready to admit that when the history of that period is read, it will be found that the only distinction acquired by the hon. leader of the Opposition was gained by that patriotic and constitutional proclamation of his, in which he declared that he was prepared to shoulder his musket and to go to the far Saskatchewan to fight the Government of Canada, and to fight against the Constitution of the country, while, to-day, with that patriotic soul which he possesses, he attacks us for not protecting it. The importance of this question which we are now considering is felt in the north, in the south, in the east and in the west. Its importance extends to over all this broad Dominion, and I believe that such a question should be discussed without party bitterness, and without any of those harsh feelings which, of their nature, are the result of political strife. I feel that this question should be considered as removed from the atmosphere of political opposition, and purely and simply from the stand-point of the interests of Canada. It is the object of this Government, as it should be the object of all, to form from those of different races and different creeds, and the different religions in this land a harmonious people, willing to make concessions to each other, and extending to each other the privilege of every true British subject, to follow the dictates of his conscience and to go to the church to which he belongs. We trust that, in our Dominion, we shall build up one great people, and leave the heritage of a noble and grand nation to the children who will follow us. The hon. the leader of the Opposition, in his address to-night, has not only been facetious, but he has repeated what several hon. members on his side of the House have considered to be a very important factor in this discussion. Following in the wake of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) he has ridiculed what he calls the judicial attributes which the Government conceived it its duty to assume. Well, Sir, I do not pretend to be versed in all the intricacies of these constitutional questions, but, within my experience of official life, I can say that, under the constitutional system of Canada, following the precedent of England, judicial functions come every day before those who advise Her Majesty. I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is not true that the Government performs judicial functions when it becomes the painful duty of Ministers of the Crown to advise as to the exercise of the high prerogative of mercy, which is delegated to the Governor-General by Her Majesty, and referred by him to his constitutional advisers? I ask the hon. gentleman again, when the sub-committee of Council meets to discuss matters affecting the great railway interests of Canada, whether, in that case, the advisers of the Crown are not exercising judicial functions? Taking into consideration the circumstances of Canada, considering, as we must consider, the deep feeling which has been aroused on account of difference of race and difference of creed, I ask, under such circumstances, was it not a most prudent and a most patriotic course for the Government to follow, to submit a question of the importance of the one now before the House, to the highest tribunal in the country? I ask, was it not a most prudent and most patriotic act of the Government to submit to a tribunal that could not be influenced by political bias, the question whether the Government could take the responsibility of advising His Excellency as to the course to be followed in this case? The hon. gentleman, if I understood his remarks, said that if it be true in fact, as Monseigneur Taché declares that these pretended public schools are Protestant schools, he said the strongest case has been made for interference by this Government, but I heard the remark made yesterday in this House that this statement was not true, and that the system of schools now prevailing in Manitoba is not a continuation of the Protestant system. Well, Sir, I see, in the very doubt which the hon. gentleman has expressed, as to the accuracy of that statement, one of the points that should be submitted for investigation, and it is one of the points which, no doubt, will be submitted to the tribunal, whether the Government have a right to investigate this question or not. Now, as I have stated, I believe it is of the highest importance for the future of Canada that we should, as far as possible, prevent anything interfering with the happiness of the people of this country; and I think it is of the greatest possible importance that all these questions should be removed from the arena of political strife, and should be submitted to a tribunal whose judgment once rendered will leave the Government perfectly free to act according to the Constitution of the country. Sir, one thing I am prepared to state, as I believe it will be the policy of the Government: I can say, when once the questions which are the result of the appeal have been decided by the tribunal, the Government will fearlessly take the responsibility which belongs to it, and will do its duty regardless of consequences. Now, it is a most anomalous position for the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) to occupy, to have, as his ally in this matter, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. TARTE. You had him before.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman considers the matter, from his experience of the people of Quebec, or from his experience of the Catholics all over the Dominion, nothing could have weakened his case more than to have the support of that hon. member. I say so, because I believe that statement is correct, and one which the people of our province will voice as I have voiced it to-night. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, my intention was not to make any lengthened remarks. I merely wanted to submit to the House the few points which I have submitted. But I can only say, as one who desires to see long-continued the harmony which has existed in our country, that I wish, in other sections of Canada, the example given by the people of my province were followed. Long before any constitutional rule forced the adoption of separate schools in the province of Quebec, the great majority of the people of our province conceded those schools to the English and Protestant minority. At times we felt that possibly that minority might be too exacting. Not only did we make these concessions asked for, but we went beyond anything that the Constitution or the law could expect. After years of strife in other provinces, the old province of Quebec, divided between English and French, Protestant and Catholic, remained peaceful, happy and contented, because the French Canadians felt they could not make too many concessions to teach the minority that we looked upon them in the light of brothers and wished them to have all the privileges we could possibly give them. We went still further. The Protestants appealed to that majority to have a portion of the gaols and the lunatic asylums set aside for those who belong to their creed, and their request was at once granted. I do not regret these concessions. I think we could not do too much to convince the minority that we wish to secure every right they could possibly expect from us, and had it not been for that irritating question, the separate schools, possibly we would not have adopted the system of Confederation, which was supposed to sink the divisions existing between the two larger provinces and bring into that element of strife, independent members of the Confederation, who would view the matter dispassionately. In that fight which brought about Confederation, there are some historic names, which are consigned in the pages of our political history. Men like Sir Oliver Mowat, George Brown and others, when Confederation was carried and when that bitter question was set to rest, felt that the sacrifices which both political parties had made for the purpose of acquiring that peace and happiness, which has existed ever since, were sacrifices which not only were not too great but which repaid tenfold the people, considering the troubles which had existed before. And I ask, when you come to consider the North-west, the great country of the future, is it not fitting for us to consider that this may be one of the points which will prevent people from seeking a quiet and happy home in that country, if they are led to believe that it may be the battlefield of religious strife. I say that it is of the highest importance for any Government—and I speak not now as a member of one party, but as a Canadian—to surround that case with all the protection which an impartial tribunal, removed from the political arena, can give it so as to settle once and for all the question which is agitating us now.

When that question is settled, it will be the happiest day Canada has seen for many years. It will be a day that will teach every man that the Constitution of this country is respected, and that the Government commands the respect and confidence of the people, irrespective of race or creed, because it follows the Constitution in spirit as well as in letter. I know that the people of the province of Quebec will look upon this question dispassionately. They will ask whether the Government have acted in an open, frank and constitutional manner, and I ask even the opponents of the Government, who have made to-day eloquent and long speeches, in their endeavour to attack the policy of the Government, whether the course followed by the Government has not been an open and a frank course. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk of the Star Chamber. I was sorry to see these gentlemen trying to set race against race and appealing to prejudices, but I fail to find any argument of theirs to show that the course followed by the Government was not the proper one. The Manitoba Government were notified of the day when argument would take place, and if they did not choose to be represented the responsibility is with themselves. The question was submitted to the Privy Council and discussed and most ably argued, and the public had every opportunity to be present. There were points of law to be settled, and the Government thought that the highest tribunal in the land was the proper one to which to submit this case, and I believe that public opinion will endorse the course taken by the Government.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from a province which is much interested in the question now before this House, I think I would be wanting in my duty should I not say a word in reference to the motion of my friend, the hon. member for L'Islet. I listened with much pleasure to the remarks of the hon. Minister who has just addressed the House, and I congratulate him upon the clever manner with which he avoided saying what the Government intend to do in relation to this question. After the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition, and the express statements made by him, I expected the Government to come out and state how they were to settle this important litigation. I expected the Postmaster-General would state whether the Government, of which he is a prominent member, are determined to do justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, or whether they are determined to do nothing for them. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the Government are quite unwilling to do the best thing for them; that they have decided, even before now, not to interfere in favour of our co-religionists of Manitoba, and that all what they are doing presently is for the purpose of gaining time and shirking the responsibility that is incumbent on them. I wish the position we are going to take in this case should not be likely to embarrass the Government. On the contrary, I am willing to help them in every possible way, even to the extent of voting with them on this question; but, before doing it, I beg to put a question to the hon. Minister who has just taken his seat. I understand the only reason why the Government are now unwilling to declare themselves as to whether they can interfere is because they want it to be decided by the Supreme Court whether the British North America Act can apply. The Government want, first, to inquire from the Supreme Court whether the Catholics of Manitoba can avail themselves of the section of that Act under which any minority has a right to appeal to the Government whenever rights are violated that were acquired by laws subsequent to the Union. I understand the Government intend to have it decided by that court, whether the Catholics of Manitoba have a right to invoke as a privilege the Act of 1871. Well, I beg to put a question to the hon. Postmaster-General, and to ask him this: If the Supreme Court should decide that the Catholics of Manitoba have a right to invoke the privileges conferred by the Act of 1871, will the Government be willing, after the decision by the Supreme Court, to pass a remedial legislation, or to restore the Provincial Act of 1871, or in any way to do something likely to remedy the grievances of the Manitoba Catholics?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) In answer to the question just put by the hon. member, if the Government should then fail in their duty, it will be time for the hon. gentleman to assail them.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) This answer is far from being satisfactory. Why, for two or three months they have been criticising the leader of the Opposition, saying: Let him come and state what he will do in relation to this question. Well, the hon. leader of the Opposition stated this evening what he intended doing. He said that should the statements contained in the deposition of Archbishop Taché be true, the Catholics of Manitoba are ill-treated, and that, therefore, he is willing to cause any remedial legislation to be passed that is calculated to have this injustice removed. For two months they have been getting up a cabal against the leader of the Opposition in connection with this question. It seems to me it was not incumbent upon him to be the first to state what his policy would be as to this question. Yet, he did not fear to set at defiance the fanaticism of certain people, and to state his opinion honestly, while the Government decline to state what they will do. Well, we know what the Government will do. We know what they have decided upon. They are unwilling to do justice to the Catholics of Manitoba, and even if the Supreme Court should decide in their favour, I contend, and

Mr. BRODEUR.

I have a right to assert, after the statements of the Postmaster-General, that the Catholics of Manitoba will never get justice from the present Government. As stated in the early part of my remarks, I wish to raise no prejudice against the Government; I am aware it is always an easy thing to fight by means of prejudices and by stirring the popular passions; I am unwilling to take any such means to oppose the Government. As I have just stated, I blame the Government for the position they have taken as to this question, but I would be willing, this very evening, to vote for the Government and against the motion of the hon. member for L'Islet, if they should come and, at least, state they will do justice to the Catholics if the finding of the Supreme Court should be in their favour. It sufficiently shows that I am well-affected for the Government, and wish in no way to raise prejudices against them. The hon. Postmaster-General made a brilliant speech from a literary point of view, but I think it would have been much better had he stated in what position we are and, especially, whether the Catholics of Manitoba can expect a remedy to their present situation. Mr. Speaker, were I harkening to the feelings that inspire me in this moment; were I listening to the complaints and petitions sent from Manitoba to the Government, and asking that justice be done to them, I would state immediately that the Catholics of that province were wronged. I do not want to go that far immediately, however, for we are in duty bound to judge of the questions brought up in this House, not according to our feelings, but according to our judgment, and to see whether those who ask for remedial laws have a right to such a claim. We have, therefore, to examine whether, under the circumstances, the Catholics of Manitoba were wronged, whether they have a right to complain, and, further, whether the course followed by the Government can, in connection with this matter, receive our approval. Although it is late, I think it is desirable, previous to examining this question on its merits, to briefly state all the facts that are necessary so as to judge of it well. We find it plainly stated in the British North America Act that the Local Legislatures shall have the right to make laws concerning educational matters, but, on the other hand, it is also expressly stated that nothing in any such laws shall in any way prejudicially affect any right or privilege acknowledged to and enjoyed by the minorities in each of the provinces forming the Dominion of Canada previous to their admission into the Union. It is further provided that when a minority shall have any reason to complain with respect to any law or Act of a provincial authority, or shall allege that the Acts passed by these Provincial Legislatures are applied so as to prejudicially affect the interests of such a minority in educational matters, an appeal shall lie to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council. Here is, moreover, section 93 of the British North America Act, concerning education :

93. In each province, the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions :—

(1.) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the provinces at the Union.

(2.) All the powers, &c. (applicable only to Ontario and Quebec).

(3.) Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law at the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant and Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

(4.) In case any such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor-General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor-General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section and of any decision of the Governor-General in Council under this section.

It must be observed, Mr. Speaker, that when this section was put in force, Manitoba was no part of the Dominion. The Canadian Government only took possession subsequently of the North-west Territories. We also know that serious difficulties arose when this Government undertook to take possession of these Territories, especially of that portion which now forms the province of Manitoba. We all remember that at that time these troubles came to such a pass that a civil war broke out. The inhabitants of that country took up arms in order to prevent the Federal Government from taking possession of these Territories. The Dominion Government delegated His Grace Archbishop Taché to the North-west to pacify the insurgents and induce them to submit to the Government. Archbishop Taché went there in fact and promised a full amnesty to those who had taken up arms in accordance as it were to the promises made to himself by the Dominion Government, and particularly by Sir George Cartier, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) and Sir John A. Macdonald, then Prime Minister. It was owing to these promises that delegates appointed by the insurgents were sent to Ottawa, in order to open negotiations and come to an understanding as to the terms of Union. We know what deliberations took place between these delegates and the Federal Government which resulted in the quashing of the insurrection and the admission of Manitoba into the Dominion of Canada. This brought Manitoba under the working of the British North America Act. At the time these negotiations took place, the question arose as to educational matters. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, it was one of the principal questions on which the delegates laid very particular stress. These people wanted not only an amnesty for those implicated in the rebellion and the exercise of their religious rights, but they also intended to have full liberty in point of education. We also find that the Manitoba Act passed by the Federal Parliament in 1870 contains a section that guarantees to the Catholics the exercise of the rights they enjoyed, at the time of the Union, either by law or by practice. This is clearly summed up in section 22 of the Manitoba Act, which reads as follows :

22. In and for the province, the said Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions :—

(1.) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the Union.

(2.) An appeal shall lie to the Governor in Council from any Act or decision of the Legislature of the province or of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

(3.) In case any such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor-General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor-General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section and of any decision of the Governor-General in Council under this section.

I beg, Mr. Speaker, to be allowed to show the difference there is between the provisions of the British North America Act and the Manitoba Act containing the terms of the Union of that province with the Dominion of Canada. We find that under the British North America Act the Local Legislatures had a right to pass laws in relation to education, in so far as they did not prejudicially affect the rights and privileges which the minorities enjoyed "by law" only, at the time of the Union. We find that the Manitoba Act went further and guaranteed to the minority the privileges it enjoyed, not only "by law" but also "by practice." There was a special reason for including such a provision in that Act and adding these words "by practice." Manitoba was not, previous to the Union, governed as to these matters by any positive law. Had they only included in the Act concerning that province the section that is to be found in the British North America Act, that is to say, had they guaranteed to the minorities the only privileges existing "by law," it would not have been sufficient. That provision could do for the province of Quebec where the minorities were protected by the laws that had been passed, but, as I have just stated, the province of Manitoba was not in such circumstances. They had, therefore, to remedy that by changing the provisions of the British North America Act, as far as questions of education were concerned, by adding another special provision. That is why we find in the Manitoba Act a section providing that the minority in that province should have a right to complain of any law that might affect the rights and privileges acknowledged to them, not only by law, as formally stated for the province of Quebec and Ontario, but also by practice. There is still another difference between the Manitoba Act and the British North America Act; it is with respect to the right of appeal which the Catholics are entitled to exercise. That right of appeal, according to the British North America Act, can be exercised not only in connection with the privileges they enjoyed "at the time of the Union," but also in connection with the privileges acquired subsequently to the Union. As explained yesterday by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), New Brunswick and Nova Scotia had no separate schools, like Quebec and Ontario. However, the hope was expressed that they would establish these schools and that, then, the privileges resulting from such an establishment would be inviolable.

I, Alexander Taché, of the town of St. Boniface, in the county of Selkirk and province of Manitoba, Archbishop of the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical province of St. Boniface, make oath and say:

1. That I have been a resident continuously of this county since eighteen hundred and forty-five as a priest in the Roman Catholic church, and as bishop thereof since the year eighteen hundred and fifty, and now am the archbishop and metropolitan of the said church, and I am personally aware of the truth of the matters herein alleged.

2. Prior to the passage of the Act of the Dominion of Canada passed in the thirty-third year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, chapter three, known as the Manitoba Act and prior to the Order in Council issued in pursuance thereof, there existed in the territory now constituting the province of Manitoba a number of effective schools for children.

3. These schools were denominational schools, some of them being regulated and controlled by the Roman Catholic church, and others by various Protestant denominations.

4. The means necessary for the support of the Roman Catholic schools were supplied to some extent by school fees paid by some of the parents of the children who attended the schools and the rest was paid out of the funds of the church, contributed by its members.

5. During the period referred to, Roman Catholics had no interest in or control over the schools of the Protestant denominations and the members of the Protestant denominations had no interest in or control over the schools of the Roman Catholics. There were no public schools in the sense of state schools. The members of the Roman Catholic church supported the schools of their own church for the benefit of Roman Catholic children and were not under obligation to, and did not contribute to the support of any other schools.

6. In the matter of education, therefore, during the period referred to, Roman Catholics were, as a matter of custom and practice, separate from the rest of the community, and their schools were all conducted according to the distinctive views and beliefs of Roman Catholics as herein set forth.

7. Roman Catholic schools have always formed an integral part of the work of the Roman Catholic church. That church has always considered the education of children of Roman Catholic parents as coming peculiarly within its jurisdiction. The school, in the view of the Roman Catholics, is in a large measure the "children's church," and wholly incomplete and largely abortive if religious exercises be excluded from it. The church has always insisted upon its children receiving their education in schools conducted under the supervision of the church, and upon them being trained in the doctrine and faith of the church. In education the Roman Catholic church attaches very great importance to the spiritual culture of the child, and regards all education unaccompanied by instruction in its religious aspect as possibly detrimental and not beneficial to children. With this regard the church requires that all teachers of children shall not only be members of the church, but shall be thoroughly imbued with its principles and faith; shall recognize its spiritual authority and conform to its directions. It also requires that such books be used in the schools, with regard to certain subjects, as shall combine religious instruction with those subjects, and this applies peculiarly to all history and philosophy.

I may say the above affidavit of Archbishop Taché was law in the case of Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg and, in my opinion, it should equally be law before this House, just as it has been law before Her Majesty's Privy Council, as testified to by Lord McNaghten, who remarked:

The statement of Archbishop Taché has been accepted as accurate and complete.

Consequently, through this statement of Archbishop Taché we are quite settled as to the nature of the rights enjoyed by the Catholics of Manitoba, at the time of their entrance into the Confederation. In 1874, the Provincial Government of Manitoba, in order to give effect to the stipulations agreed upon between the delegates and the Federal Government, enacted the law known as the law of 1871, by virtue of which separate schools were established as well as a Board of Education, comprising two sections; the Catholic section of the board being allowed the full and exclusive control of their schools. The Protestant section of the board was equally given the full control of their own schools. Moreover, the Catholics enjoyed the immunity from contributing to the support of Protestant schools. From 1871 to 1890, no modification has been introduced into this legislation. But in 1890, the Greenway Government enacted a legislation utterly at variance with the rights enjoyed by Catholics, prior to their admission into the Confederation. In consequence of this legislation, separate schools have been abolished as well as the Board of Education and an Advisory Board substituted instead, consisting not of Catholics and Protestants, but of persons appointed by the Government at its own good-will. The books authorized for use in those schools, even for religious exercises, were to be sanctioned by this Advisory Board. Not satisfied with depriving Catholics of their separate schools and obliging them to recognize the schools which might be established, the Government of Manitoba went so far as to declare, through those laws of 1890, that the School Commissioners were empowered to appropriate the goods belonging to the Catholic religion. I will take the liberty to give an analysis of these Acts, which have been sanctioned by the Privy Council of England :

By the 1st Act, chap. 37, the Board of Education which had existed up to that day, is swept away as are also the offices of superintendent and a Department of Education is created, consisting of an Executive Council, or a committee thereof appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and of an Advisory Board consisting of seven members, four of whom are to be appointed by the Department of Education, two, elected by the teachers of the province, and one, appointed by the University Council. Among other duties, of the Advisory Board, are the following:— (1) to examine and authorize text-books for the use of pupils and books of reference for school libraries; (2) to determine the qualifications of teachers, preceptors and inspectors for High and Public Schools; (3) to appoint examiners for the purpose of preparing examination papers; (4) to prescribe the forms of religious exercises to be used in schools.

Next comes the Act intitled: "The Public Schools Act," chapter 38. This Act repeals all the ancient laws concerning education. Amongst other sections, the following are enacted:—

Section 3. All Protestant and Catholic school districts, together with all elections and appointments to office, all agreements, contracts, assessments and rate bills, heretofore duly made in relation to Protestant or Catholic schools, and existing when this Act comes into force, shall be subject to the provisions of this Act.

Section 4. The term for which each school trustee holds office at the time this Act takes effect shall continue as if such term had been created by virtue of an election under this Act.

Section 5. All public schools shall be free schools, and every person in rural municipalities between the age of five and fifteen years, shall have the right to attend same school.

Section 6. Religious exercises in the public schools shall be conducted according to the regulations of the Advisory Board. The time for such religious exercises shall be just before the closing hour in the afternoon. In case the parent or guardian of any pupil notifies the teacher that he does not wish such pupil to attend such religious exercises, then such pupil shall be dismissed before such religious exercises take place.

Section 7. Religious exercises shall be held in a public school entirely at the option of the school trustees for the district, and, upon receiving written authority from the trustees, it shall be the duty of the teachers to hold such religious exercises.

Section 8. The public schools shall be entirely non-sectarian, and no religious exercises shall be allowed therein except as above provided.

The Act provides for the formation, alteration and union of school districts in rural municipalities, as also in cities, towns and villages, and for the election of school trustees and for the levying and collecting of a tax, by assessment, upon the taxable property within each municipality for school purposes.

Section 92 enacts that "the municipal council of every city, town and village shall levy and collect upon the taxable property within the municipality in the manner provided in this Act and in the Municipal and Assessment Acts, such sums as may be required by the public school trustees for school purposes."

Section 108, which provides for legislative grants, includes the following subsection: "(3) Any school not conducted according to all the provisions of this or any Act in force for the time being, or the regulations of the Department of Education or the Advisory Board, shall not be deemed a public school within the meaning of the law, and such school shall not participate in the legislative grant."

Under Section 141, "No teacher shall use or permit to be used, as text books, any books in a model or public school, except such as are authorized by the Advisory Board, and no portion of the legislative grant shall be paid to any school in which unauthorized books are used."

By Section 179 it is stipulated that "In cases where, before the coming into force of this Act, Catholic school districts have been established as in the next preceding section mentioned, such Catholic school districts shall, upon the coming into force of this Act, cease to exist, and all the assets of such Catholic school districts shall belong to, and all the liabilities thereof be paid by, the public school district."

Beyond the shadow of a doubt, Mr. Speaker, both these laws affected to a considerable extent the rights enjoyed by Catholics up to that time. In order to obtain redress, the Catholics of Manitoba thought it their duty to bring in a suit, and the case of Barrett against the city of Winnipeg was brought into court. I am sorry to state, however, that on these grounds, Catholics are now denied certain rights hitherto enjoyed by them, for, in my opinion, this case is far from showing in an adequate manner, and under all their aspects, the rights which Catholics could exercise, before the Union. The only point at issue in this case pronounced upon by the Privy Council, was as to whether Catholics could be assessed for the maintenance of public schools. But by these laws of 1890, the privileges enjoyed by Catholics were affected on several grounds, for instance, by their being deprived of their schools, by the abolition of the Board of Education, and by doing away at the same time with the Catholic section of this board which, alone, had the right of control over the schools of the minority; they even went to the further length of prescribing for Catholic schools text-books chosen by a committee exclusively consisting of Protestants. Now, the case of Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg raised but one single issue, that relating to the right by which Catholics enjoyed the immunity from contributing toward the support of public schools. Consequently, it is a gratuitous assumption to contend that the judgment of the Privy Council is law, and that Catholics are bound thereby to recognize the legality of the provisions of these Acts of 1890. Before the inferior court at Winnipeg the case has been decided against the Catholics. A majority of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba has also decided against the contentions put forth by Barrett. An appeal from that decision having been taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, the latter court, composed of two Protestant and two Catholic judges, reversing the judgment of the lower court below, unanimously held that the contentions of the Catholics were well grounded in law and should be upheld. Later on, the suit was carried to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England. Unfortunately, the unanimous decision of the Privy Council was adverse to the claims of the Catholics of Manitoba, and the by-law of the city of Winnipeg quashed by the courts below, was upheld and declared perfectly legal and "intra vires." I may remark, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this judgment, that in my opinion, it is in accordance neither with the letter nor the spirit of the law, nor with the views generally entertained in our country in regard to the separate schools question. This House is aware that, from the very fact that minorities have been granted separate schools in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, not only have those minorities, in all strictness, a right to those separate schools, but enjoy, at the same time, the immunity from contributing towards the support of public schools. In 1862, at the time when the question was settled by the Parliament of United Canada, it was agreed upon that the Catholics of the province of Ontario should be entitled not only to separate schools, but should also enjoy the immunity from contributing towards the maintenance of other denominational schools. The common doctrine, grounded on public law in force in this country, relating to separate schools, includes not only the right for minorities to separate schools under their full exclusive control, but also the immunity for the same minority from liability to contribute even in the smallest degree towards the support of other schools. Now, should the genuine meaning of the expression "separate schools" be once clearly defined and perfectly understood, the conclusion would be easily reached that the judgment of the Privy Council is grounded on a construction which does violence to the language of the Statute, such as interpreted in the country. In England, as well as in the United States, the minorities are given, by law, a right to their separate schools, but, at the same time, enjoy no immunity from contributing towards the support of public schools. From the above we gather that the meaning and notion ascribed to the words "separate schools" in the above countries differ widely from the notions prevalent in Canada. And I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that the judges of the Privy Council, while rendering this decision, have been led away by an erroneous construction, which cannot be supported by strict reasoning from the meaning attributed in our country to the expression "separate schools," but were rather guided by the meaning prevailing in England and the United States. In the State of Massachusetts, for instance, whether Catholics are granted the right to their separate schools, such right is only given them by law under the strict condition of maintaining their own denominational schools, without their enjoying any immunity from being assessed and paying the tax levied for the support of public schools. This is a well known fact, that a contrary state of affairs prevails in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, where the minority, either Protestant or Catholic, enjoys the immunity from contributing towards the support of the schools of the majority. It must be confessed, Mr. Speaker, that their Lordships, the members of the Privy Council, in rendering their judgment, have started from false premises. The rights and privileges in respect of denominational schools do not apply merely to those schools as such, but include also in their application the immunity from taxation towards the maintenance of public schools. Judge Patterson assents to this view as to the privilege at issue, and comments as follows upon it :—

In one form or another the members of the church supported the schools of the church. As a class of people they bore the burden. We are not concerned to inquire how the burden was distributed among the individual members, or whether each one bore some part of it. The privilege in question appertained to the class of people, and the burden was borne by the class. The bearing of the burden was essential to the enjoyment of the privilege. It is the maintenance of a school that is of value to the community or class, rather than the abstract or theoretical right to maintain it. In other words, the value of the right depends upon the practical use that can be made of it. Whatever throws an obstacle in the way of that practical use prejudicially affects the right. It is not conceivable that in any community, and notably among the settlers in a region like Manitoba, a burden of taxation for the support of public schools can be imposed on the people of any religious denomination without rendering it less easy for the same people to maintain denominational schools. The degree of interference is immaterial. If it occurs to any extent, the right to maintain the denominational school is injuriously affected.

It is perfectly obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the construction contended for by Judge Patterson is the one everywhere prevailing in Canada. The exercise of a privilege should be such as to remove all direct or indirect obstacles thrown in the way of its practical use. The enjoyment of such privilege should not be prejudicially affected, even partially. Such as contended for in the judgment of the Privy Council, the right to separate schools is construed as carrying along with it only the right of establishing such schools, and of supporting them through a private assessment levied on those forming part of the minority, and as excluding the immunity from taxation such as understood from time immemorial in this country. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I will take the liberty of giving the views of one of the fathers of the Confederation, who has been most instrumental in framing the separate school law. The Hon. Mr. McDougall, as soon as the Privy Council judgment had been known in Canada, expressed the following opinion :—

If the Catholics of Manitoba refuse to accept the Greenway Act, and still maintain their own schools, they ought not to be taxed for the support of public schools. I think public opinion even in Manitoba would justify the Federal Parliament in exercising its constitutional power to grant remedial laws.

We find that the same view is assented to by His Honour Sir William Ritchie and the Honourable Judges Fournier and Taschereau, as to the same privileges. I will quote the opinion of the Honourable Judges Fournier and Taschereau. Judge Fournier says :

At the time when Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick joined into a Confederation, there existed in each province a complete system of public schools established by law. In Ontario and Quebec, the right of minorities professing a religious belief different from that of the majority, to have their separate schools was recognized by law. Whenever they established those schools, minorities enjoyed the exemption from contributing to the support of public schools, and were entitled to a share of the legislative grant.

The authors of Confederation, in order to prevent a return of the agitation, stirred up by this position in the old provinces of Canada, between Catholics and Protestants, while recognizing the right of provinces to legislate on educational matters, wisely stipulated certain provisions intended to protect the rights and privileges of minorities, and prohibited any legislation which might invade the existing rights and privileges on the matter of education.

Judge Taschereau spoke as follows:—

It is clearly shown, as a matter of fact, from these affidavits, which constitute the only evidence in record, that, prior to the Union, by practice, the Catholics of this territory enjoyed not only the privilege of having their own schools, but also, negatively, as a corollary and an essential part of such a privilege, the immunity from contributing towards the support of any other system of education. In fact, it was the immunity enjoyed from liability to assessment for the support of schools of another denomination that constituted for them a privilege; the privilege, if restricted to the right of their own schools, would have been illusory, and could scarcely have been called a privilege; the right to voluntary schools comes under common law; it is not a privilege; and a practice under which they would have had to support their own schools and other denominational schools would have been for them a peculiar privilege. The privilege, upon the whole, would have been the privilege of others. Such, however, is the only privilege which the respondent wishes now to concede to the Catholic minority in the province. Subsection 1 which I have quoted at great length secures to the minority, Catholic or Protestant, the rights which, by practice, they had enjoyed up to that time, and subsection 2 give them the right of appeal to the Governor-General in Council from any legislation affecting any of their rights in the matter. I am of opinion that their claims (the Catholics of Manitoba) are well grounded. They have a right to their system such as is enjoyed by their co-religionists of Ontario, and on the same principle.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I contend further that the judgment of the Privy Council has no bearing on most of the questions which ought to have been submitted in order to test the validity of the Acts passed in 1890 by the Legislature of Manitoba. I hold that the Privy Council has merely decided as to the legality of the by-laws enacted by the city of Winnipeg, without investigating the validity of the Acts in themselves. I hold that the former of these Acts, the one which did away with the Board of Education, has not been pronounced upon by the Privy Council, as testified to by these words of Lord McNaghten:

The controversy which has given rise to the present litigation is no doubt beset with difficulties. The result of the controversy is of serious moment to the province of Manitoba and a matter apparently of deep interest throughout all the Dominion. But, in its legal aspect, the question lies in a narrow compass.

We have to examine the Act 38 Vic., or the Public School Act.

Therefore, the Privy Council having not pronounced on the validity of all the Acts passed by the Legislature of Manitoba, the Federal Government was not warranted in asserting that they were bound by that judgment and that it was inexpedient for them to pronounce upon the validity of the two Acts enacted in 1890, and to allow the appeal of the Catholics. In 1890, the latter had petitioned the Federal Government asking them to intervene and to disallow these Acts. Why did not the Government accede to their request? Had the Government then disallowed the Manitoba Acts, the matter would have been set at rest. Still, the hon. member for Provencher said the other evening: Had the Acts of 1890 been disallowed, the Legislature of Manitoba might have immediately re-enacted them. It is quite possible, Mr. Speaker, but it should also be borne in mind that the Federal Government might also have disallowed the law again. The Local Legislature meets but once a year whilst the Governor may meet in Council every day. Therefore, it would have been impossible for the Catholics of Manitoba to find themselves again so badly circumstanced; and, instead of seeing themselves deprived of their schools, and forced to send their children to Protestant schools, they could now, had the Government used the power of disallowance, send their children to Catholic schools. The hon. Prime Minister told us that the Government should never intervene, except in the case of Acts "ultra vires." The hon. Prime Minister, I think, is over-scrupulous in regard to this question; he has shown himself less rigorous on other questions submitted to him. When the question of disallowance, the House remembers perfectly well, came up before the Governor in Council, three other bills were also submitted at the same time for the same purpose: one, concerning the abolition of the French language, another respecting the infectious or contagious diseases of animals, and a third one concerning public corporations. What did the Government do? As to the contagious diseases of animals Act and that concerning public corporations, they were declared "ultra vires" and vetoed or disallowed by the hon. the Minister of Justice. I will read to the House the portion of his report relating thereto, such as I find in the Montreal "Gazette":

The undersigned is of opinion that for the reasons therein stated the Act under revision is ultra vires of a provincial legislature, for that reason and also for the reasons hereinafter stated, he recommends the Act be disallowed.

Meanwhile, one could read in the same newspaper a declaration of the Prime Minister to the effect that the Bill concerning the abolition of the French language was also "ultra vires," but that it was inopportune to veto or disallow it, as it could be annulled by the courts. What follows then from all this?

The Act concerning animals labouring under infectious diseases, is disallowed as "ultra vires"—quite true, these poor animals could not go and claim redress before the courts. But it is quite obvious that the Prime Minister seems to be more solicitous for animals affected with contagious diseases than for the French-speaking people of the North-west; or else under the assumption that the Act concerning the abolition of the French language is "ultra vires," it should have been vetoed by the Prime Minister just as the two other Bills had been. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Minister of Justice said in the same report, in relation to the Manitoba School Act, that the time had not yet come to take into consideration the grievances of Catholics, as the question was still pending before the courts of justice. But he continues to say:

If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained, the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress under subsections (2) and (3) of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act," quoted in the early part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the "British North America Act," in relation to other provinces.

Those subsections contain in effect the provisions which have been made as to all the provinces and are obviously those under which the Constitution intended that the Government of the Dominion should proceed, if it should at any time become necessary that the Federal powers should be resorted to for the protection of a Protestant or Roman Catholic minority against any Act or decision of the Legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority, affecting any "right or privilege" of any such minority "in relation to education."

As seen from the above extract I have just read to the House, the hon. the Minister of Justice had pledged himself to take into consideration the petitions from the Catholic minority of Manitoba applying for the redress of their grievances, under subsections 2 and 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act. The promise of the hon. the Minister of Justice (Sir John Thompson), as I have just shown, was explicit and quite positive. He declares in explicit terms: "Should the judgment of the legal courts prove adverse to the Catholic minority, we shall take into consideration the petitions presented in behalf of the same minority, under subsections 2 and 3 of section 22 of the provincial constitution of Manitoba." But now, Mr. Speaker, it is no longer so; the hon. the Minister of Justice refuses to examine these petitions, to give a hearing to the demands of the minority, to do justice to those who suffer persecution at the hands of the majority under these iniquitous laws. In 1891, he held that the Manitoba Act applied to the case, but now he contends that it does no longer apply. Addressing the Catholics, he says: "This question has been settled by the judgment of the Privy Council. You have, it is true, the right of appealing to the Government for redress when your rights are invaded, but, according to the decision of the Privy Council, the rights you enjoyed, at the Union, are not affected by the legislation complained of." Why this change of front? Why is the hon. Minister no longer able to deal with the question and give his decision without delay, as he stated himself ready to do in 1891, so soon as the legal courts should have pronounced upon the case? No, Mr. Speaker, the Government are unwilling to interfere and will not dare do so; and this undoubtedly accounts for the fact that a question which was held to be quite clear and obvious in 1891, is stated to be no longer so to-day. The Government who then recognized the minorities right to petition for the redress of their grievances, now contend that the same minority have no right to do so. In 1891, the hon. the Minister of Justice, through the report just quoted, was instrumental in preventing public opinion being stirred up to a considerable degree. Then the Government were lavish of alluring promises; to-day, they flinch, they deny having made any promises; they refuse to deal with the petitions and do justice to the oppressed. The hon. the Minister of Justice, spoke as follows, in his report of the 29th December, 1892:—

Mr. BRODEUR.

The two Acts of 1890, which are complained of, must, according to the opinion of the sub-committee, be regarded as within the powers of the Legislature of Manitoba, but it remains to be considered whether the appeal should be entertained and heard as an appeal against statutes which are alleged to have encroached on rights or privileges with regard to denominational schools which were acquired by any class of persons in Manitoba, not at the time of the Union but after the Union.

Now, the hon. the Minister of Justice said in 1891: "Wait till the legal courts have decided upon the matter, and then, should you fail before the courts, your appeal shall be heard." But now that a judgment adverse to the claims of the Catholics has been rendered, the Government turns round and says: Well! You have no longer the right to take an appeal under the Manitoba Act, but we are going to submit the question to the Supreme Court, as to whether you have a right of appeal under the Constitutional Act. I hold, Mr. Speaker, this is a case of breach of trust: the Government have forfeited their promises, and the House cannot approve of such a course. Now, I put the question: What is it the Government proposes to do? We understand from the report published some time since, that the Government have decided to submit the question to the Supreme Court, not as to whether the Catholic minority have any right to the redress of their grievances under the Manitoba Act, but as to whether they can claim redress under the clauses of the Constitutional Act. Now, I venture to say this is a most extraordinary position. In my opinion, the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir John Thompson) should have on the floor of the House, the other day, reconciled the contradiction existing between the stand taken by him in 1891 and his present attitude. In his report of 1891, he emphatically stated that the Manitoba Act, in so far as the educational question was concerned, was analogous to the British North America Act, and now, being called upon to express an opinion on the same Act, he takes quite a different view of it, in his last report, stating therein he does not know whether the Manitoba Act corresponds with the Confederation Act. And yet, as I have just remarked, the hon. Prime Minister had declared in 1891, that the clauses of the Manitoba Act were analogous to the provisions of the British North America Act. What will be the outcome of all this? Will the persecuted minority in Manitoba have dealt out to them every right to which they are entitled? Will the hon. Minister of Justice restore to the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba their invaded rights as to separate schools? In the assumption that the claims of the Catholics of Manitoba shall be sustained by the judgment of the Supreme Court, shall the Government interfere in the matter, as in duty bound? I expected, Mr. Speaker, to hear the Ministers declare the policy of the Government on the matter under discussion. I expected, above all, to hear from the French-speaking members of the Cabinet, who are the representatives of the province of Quebec, a full and authoritative statement as to the duty of the Government towards the protection of the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba. But, far from it, Mr. Speaker, we have heard no such utterances from the Ministers. The hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) and the hon. the Postmaster-General (Sir Adolphe Caron), have stated, one after the other, on the floor of the House, that they were not aware what position the Government would take on this matter should the Supreme Court uphold the claims of the Catholic minority; they have not had the courage to pledge themselves to redress the wrongs inflicted on the Catholic minority of Manitoba, should the courts assert the Federal right of interference. As already stated, I should willingly give my support to the Government, should they pledge themselves to mete out to the Catholics of Manitoba their just rights. But no, Mr. Speaker, they will take no such engagement, nor give any such pledge; they would rather be guided by men known for anti-Catholic leanings. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem at a loss to understand how it comes that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) intends voting in favour of the amendment moved by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). We, on the opposition side, declare, upon the floor of the House, how the Government should deal with this question, what course they should take on the matter under consideration, if desirous of doing their duty to their country. We are not afraid of speaking over-board, and to give expression to our views; and when the hon. member for North Simcoe chooses to cast his vote alongside with us on this amendment, the hon. gentlemen on the right feel scandalized at this. We should not concern ourselves too much with the matter, however, for we have now all reached the conviction that they have made up their minds that justice shall not be meted out to the Catholic minority of Manitoba. Let me, Mr. Speaker, frankly speak my mind to the House on the subject and say what I am in duty bound to proclaim: let justice be meted out to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, and let us vote with the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). This attitude, in my opinion, Sir, is preferable to the course taken by the French-speaking Ministers from the province of Quebec, who lack the courage to declare themselves ready to give up their seats in the Cabinet sooner than allowing the Government of the province of Manitoba persecuting the Catholic minority and invading their rights guaranteed by the Constitution. In presence of the course pursued in the past and still adhered to by these gentlemen, they have no right throwing to us across the floor of the House the taunts of siding with the hon. member for North Simcoe on the motion brought forward by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). Last night the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) was wondering how the hon. member for North Simcoe could cast his vote in favour of the amendment of my hon. friend the member for L'Islet. To say the least, I am quite at a loss to understand how the hon. gentleman can experience any scruple on the matter. Did not the hon. gentleman himself often go hand in hand with Orangemen, whenever required by party interests? On the very same educational questions we deal with now; when the rights of Catholics were at stake, did the hon. gentleman scruple to walk side by side with well-known Orangemen? He is not the man, therefore, that should throw the first stone at us. In 1874 or 1873, if I mistake not, did he not cast his vote with Orangemen on the amnesty and New Brunswick school questions? We have seen him, Sir, on certain questions, voting side by side, hand in hand, with the worst enemies of our rights and religion. And to this very same gentleman, to-day, the fact of seeing the member for North Simcoe voting with us on this question is a stumbling-block! I really wonder how a man in his circumstances should dare reproach us for our associations with any member in this House. We have heard the same reproaches from the Postmaster-General and the Minister of Public Works. These two gentlemen are also scandalized at the fact that the hon. member for Simcoe is going to cast his vote for the motion before the House. And yet, on the amnesty question, one of vital importance, I see the name of the hon. Postmaster-General and of the hon. Minister of Public Works coupled with those of prominent Orangemen, such as the

Farrows, the Douvilles, the Wallaces. Have these gentlemen any right of crying : Shame on you ! when we vote in company with the hon. member for North Simcoe ? I heard this afternoon the hon. member for Bellechasse declaring from his seat that he also was scandalized at the fact that the hon. member for North Simcoe intended voting with us. Now, in 1890, did not the hon. gentleman cast his vote along with the member for North Simcoe, in favour of the abolition of the French language in the Northwest ? Has he a right, after voting in such a direction, to qualify our course as disgraceful in voting in company with the hon. member for North Simcoe ? The hon. member for Three Rivers, has done an injustice to the hon. member for L'Islet, when assuming that the motion of the latter was but a copy of an article issued from the pen of the member for North Simcoe, published in the "Canadian Magazine." The hon. member for Three Rivers, forsooth, has read but one-half of the motion, for the other half is not found in the article written by the member for North Simcoe. This motion, as just remarked, is divided into two parts. The first portion of the resolution arraigns the Government policy in relation to the Manitoba school question, and the second blames them for assuming to act as a judicial body. Now, a last word with regard to the member for Provencher, and I have done. We felt surprised at this gentleman's strange attitude the other day when the question came up in the House. I hoped he, of all others, would stand up on the floor of this House and show how worthy of every execration was the conduct of the Government. I hoped he would stand up and say to the Government : If justice is not meted out to the Catholics of Manitoba, I will fight you to the bitter end, and do my best to defeat you. Had the hon. gentleman shown as much pluck as his colleague, the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), he would have stood up like him and courageously asserted his views and sympathies. The member for Winnipeg is ready to blame and to fight the Government should they dare lay their hands on the Manitoba School Act. Why, then, did not the member for Provencher, who, in this House, constitutes himself the champion of the Catholics of Manitoba, stand up in behalf of his compatriots with the same courage as the member for Winnipeg ? Why did he not rise from his seat and tell the House that sooner than see the Catholic minority of Manitoba denied their rights by the Government, he would fight the latter with all his might. The whole course of the hon. member for Provencher is open to suspicion to us who have been eye-witnesses to his numerous compromises and failings. The hon. member has kept on making concessions, and successively retreating from the positions taken up by him, changing his views to suit circumstances ; and should the Government, as I firmly believe, refuse to-morrow to mete out justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, the member for Provencher would be the first to bring up a motion approving of the course taken by the Ministers. This, seemingly, would be an extraordinary assumption, Mr. Speaker, were it not borne out by the facts, as I will show. From the papers laid before the House, we see that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) first petitioned the Government in view of having the school laws enacted by the Legislature of Manitoba in 1890 disallowed. The Government having declined to accede to this request, did the hon. member for Provencher blame the Ministers for the course taken by them in this matter ? Not in the least, Mr. Speaker ; he yielded and thanked them. Later on, again, when the Privy Council had decided that the school laws of Manitoba were "intra vires," we gather from the report of December, 1892, a statement made by the Government to the effect that the appeal petitioned for by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), along with other authorized representatives of the Catholic minority, could not be entertained. Now, is the hon. member going to blame the Government for not allowing the appeal ? Is he going to move a vote of censure against the Government for betraying their promises of 1891 ? No, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member submits again to the good-will of the Government and sustains them in their denial of justice to his compatriots of Manitoba. From the same papers we gather that the hon. member has also petitioned the Government, asking them to exercise their rights of interference by granting remedial laws against the encroachments complained of by the Catholic minority of his province. This petition for the redress of the wrongs inflicted on Catholics was based on constitutional grounds. The Government still refusing to grant the petition, did the hon. member for Provencher this time have the courage to censure the Government ? No, Mr. Speaker ; once more the hon. member for Provencher bowed down to the Government's decision. We have read in the newspapers that the hon. member for Provencher, from his seat in the House, was to move for the appointment of a committee to investigate this school question, and see as to the best means of meting out justice to the persecuted minority. Did he bring up a motion for the appointment of this committee ? No, Mr. Speaker ; as the Government did not approve of the scheme, the hon. member for Provencher, as usual, humbly acquiesced in the decision. The hon. member, among other statements, declared he would favour Federal interference ; that an appeal could be taken to the Federal authorities ; that the Government had, from the Constitution, the right to interfere for the relief of the Catholic minority. In the report of the 29th December, 1892, the Government state they had no such right, that the appeal must be taken to the Supreme Court, and the hon. member for Provencher, always obsequious, answers : So be it. Thus, within the space of a few months, this hon. member has altered his views not less than five times on this school question. And we should be called upon now to endorse all this, by accepting him as champion of the Catholic minority's rights in Manitoba! I say, Mr. Speaker, he is not the champion of the Catholics of his province! this man is ready to sacrifice the rights of his compatriots and we are warranted in saying to him: We place no confidence in you. As just asserted, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Provencher has stated that the Government had a right of interference, now that the courts had rendered their decisions. In order to substantiate this assertion, I will read an extract from an article published in the newspaper "Le Manitoba," the organ of the member for Provencher, and in which it is said:

Therefore the courts of justice do not constitute the only tribunal before which we may bring our suits; if so, to what purpose the clauses 2 and 3. To what purpose, then, an appeal and the means of making executory the decisions rendered on said appeal, should the courts have power to settle definitely the whole question?

Let us now pass to another consideration: the Governor-General is not a tribunal, bound as common judicial courts are, to a strict and narrow construction of the letter of the law; his functions are rather those of a special court. It is incumbent upon him to protect minorities against persecutions they might be subjected to by hostile majorities. He is bound to judge in accordance with the spirits of the law, and in conformity with the intentions of the legislator, and he should decide in accordance with justice and equity. He is the guardian of the compact entered into in 1867 for the whole Confederation, subsequently, in 1870, as regards Manitoba. Now, the principles included in this contract, having a bearing on the educational and school questions, are compendiously expressed, and the powers conferred on the legislatures cannot and should not be exercised except in conformity with these principles and in their widest sense. Whenever a legislature deviates from them, and tramples under foot the compact and the engagements entered into, this tribunal constituted ad hoc, not only has the power, but is bound to interfere. It is its bounden duty and its right, and we trust that it shall not fail to do its duty. We repeat it: the tribunal is not bound, as is often the case with judges of an ordinary court, by legal absolutism. It is not forced to submit to the narrow and often inexorable formalism of tribunals. No! it is, on the contrary, endowed with a discretionary power. By a fair interpretation, it can even make good the apparent deficiencies which a too narrow construction of the text might give rise to, according to this legal axiom: Quod sub-intelligitur de est. At last, should the construction put on our Constitution by the Privy Council be final—which we deny—and should we find ourselves at the mercy of the Local Legislature, we could then but repeat what we have previously said: the Federal Parliament is bound to give the true interpretation and to remedy the wrong wording of its own law, so as to give us the schools we have petitioned for, and which they intended and believed, in fact, to have been granted us under the Manitoba Act. Parliaments, like individuals, are bound to repair the injury done by them, even without malice or premeditation.

Thus, as seen from the above, the hon. member for Provencher said in an editorial published on the 5th October, in his newspaper: The power of the Government is discretionary; it has the power to interfere. But now that the Government has decided against his contention, the hon. member yields with humility, and far from being satisfied with disowning the rights of his compatriots, he even goes so far as to insult the men who defend those rights in this House. Does any one wish for a proof that he does not deserve to be trusted by French-Canadians? I will take the liberty of reading a letter to his address from Archbishop Taché—one of his friends—who formally declares that this man has betrayed the interests of the French-Canadians in certain circumstances:

ST. BONIFACE, 3rd October, 1892.

To the Editor of Le Manitoba.

Sir,—The last issue of your journal contains an editorial under the heading, "To our readers."

Had this editorial abstained from hinting at the "hierarchy" and to its "authority" I should certainly have refrained from casting some shades on the cheerful picture of the merits of your journal, so ably chalked out in this article; but I am sorry that you should have made it impossible for me to keep silence on two paragraphs of said editorial.

In one of these paragraphs you say: "The journal, under the enlightened direction of the hierarchy, has never flagged in the defence of its rights, and has always been faithful to its mission." Then you wind up with the following paragraph: "We have no fear of erring, our course being traced out by the authority, the prescriptions of which we shall always heartily endeavour to obey."

Without scrutinizing the motives nor the intentions, it is none the less true that these two paragraphs ascribe to me a responsibility which I have not incurred in the past and which I cannot assume for the future.

First, as to the past: allow me to tell your readers that they would labour under a strange delusion were they to believe that whatever has been written in your journal has been so "under the direction of the hierarchy." As a general rule, I have never seen the editorials of Le Manitoba previous to their appearing in print. In certain circumstances, I have no hesitation in saying that I have been consulted, that I have given my opinion, and that it has been taken into consideration. It is obvious that, in such exceptional circumstances, I have incurred a responsibility, and far from repudiating the same, I congratulate myself upon it, as does also your journal.

In many other circumstances, on the contrary, instead of inspiring itself of my ideas and conforming to my wishes, your journal has given the hospitality of its columns to ideas in direct opposition to my own convictions. In certain editorials, editorial notes, communications, certain assertions have been made which I have deeply regretted. Just as silence has been kept when I should have been so happy that it had been broken; so again the large sphere of our religious and patriotic interests, in which your journal is so proud to move, has been lessened and lowered to the level and to the insignificant proportions of petty individual interests and of personal antipathy, too often made notorious through charges and innuendos deeply to be regretted.

While our educational interests are the common topic of public conversation and attention, how is the silence too often kept by your journal about the progress and value of our educational establishments to be accounted for? Why is it that the merit of the most brilliant, eloquent and patriotic efforts of our public men in the parliamentary arena in favour of our claims and rights in educational matters, have not been publicly acknowledged by your journal? I have found these tactics too deplorable to assume any responsibility in connection with them.

Le Métis, later on Le Manitoba, founded 21 years ago, has rendered unquestionable as well as unquestioned services; its pages have often been adorned with brilliant and solid editorials; if, I am sorry to say, it has gone through epochs of well marked editorial decadency, it is that, on the ground above mentioned, valuable contributions have been systematically discarded, who, like myself, were sorry to see the natural organ of our population deviate from the mission for which it had been created, and swerve from the most noble end of its existence, by sowing and fostering in our midst the seeds of divisions as dangerous as they are deeply to be regretted. I repeat it once more, I cannot leave your readers under the belief that such a state of things is owing to a direction given by the hierarchy. We ought to be all agreed upon this point, we are too small a minority to gratify ourselves with the luxury of fostering struggles so much the more barren in good results as they are fruitful in consequences which all, I have no doubt, we desire to see removed from our population.

As to the future now. In your last paragraph of your editorial, it said: "We have no fear of erring, our course being traced out by the authority to the prescriptions of which we shall always heartily endeavour to obey."

Should this paragraph hint at ecclesiastical authority, I am sorry to tell you that I do see on what ground may be rested the assurance given. Nothing, as far I know, is altered in the organization and editorship of your journal; it may be in the future what it has been in the past; it may know or ignore my views, comply with them or turn from them as it may please it; it may pass over in silence, as in the past, what I held should have been said publicly; it may still accuse citizens whom I respect and hold in high estimation. Then, to obviate these inconveniences, I shall have, as now, but the difficult and nice expedient of contradicting, without any hope of attenuating the effect produced.

Mark well, I do not here question the greater or smaller degree of freedom or restriction with which a journal may be edited; my only contention, for the present, is that your readers may perfectly understand that I do not assume any share of responsibility or of joint and several liability either as to the future or as to the past.

I am sorry to be under the necessity of giving utterance to such remarks, but you must agree that you have driven me to it. The very fact of being the only French journal in our midst is a privilege, but it must also be borne in mind that privileges beget obligations. In a thickly settled centre, they who are in more intimate community of ideas have their respective organs; they may speak, and if needed, defend themselves, but when a journal is alone, it ought to remember that it is in honour bound to publish together any systematic exclusions, whatever good is done in the middle where it is edited, as also to attack those persons who are unable to defend themselves, is a kind of disloyalty and cowardice. However, I wish your journal full success and prosperity. I willingly bear witness to the services rendered by it. Nobody more than I desire to see it surrounded with the esteem and confidence of all our population. I repeat, nevertheless, that I cannot assume, either for the past or for the future, any responsibility in connection with what has been or may be written contrary to my wishes or my views.

Your obedient servant,

ALEX.,

Arch. of St. Boniface, O.M.I.

Mr. BRODEUR.

As seen from the above, the hon. member for Provencher is stated by his own bishop to be a traitor to the interests of his nationality, in view of promoting his own personal interests. Henceforth, he has no longer the right to style himself the champion of Catholics. Mr. Speaker, I think enough has been said to show that the Government is worthy of all blame for the course taken by them. Had the power of disallowance been resorted to, the whole matter would now be settled and we would be entering in an era of peace and security, while on the contrary, we do not know whither we are drifting; more serious troubles are perhaps in store for us, owing to the shifting policy of the Government on the matter. Therefore, I do hope, under the circumstances, the Conservative French-Canadian members from the province of Quebec, setting aside party spirit, will not allow themselves to be seduced by the allurements of power, but will join with me in censuring the Government, who are now sacrificing our dearest interests.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that hon. members who are in the Chamber at this time are about as weary as myself. I have been trying for the last two or three hours to get an opportunity to express my views on this very important question which has been under discussion for the last two days, but I have been unable, until at this moment, to get the floor. The hour being late, I must necessarily curtail the remarks I was about to make in reference to this matter. Now, Sir, in the first place, as I come from the province of Manitoba, and have a knowledge of facts in connection with this matter that possibly is not possessed by others, except those who come from that province, it might be well for me, in a few brief words, to give a history of the school question in Manitoba, and what has brought it before this Parliament to-day. We have been told by previous speakers, that in the Constitution that was given to Manitoba in 1870, it was provided that:

In and for the province of Manitoba the Legislature may exclusively make laws with relation to education, subject to the following provisions;—

Amongst other things, it was provided:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the Union.

When the Manitoba Legislature was formed in 1871, acting under the provision and authority of the Manitoba Act, the Legislature passed the Manitoba School Act. By that Act the following provision was made with regard to education in the province. I quote the first clause of the Act of 1871:

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint no less than ten or more than fourteen persons to be a Board of Education for the province of Manitoba, of whom one-half shall be Protestants and the other half Catholics.

The statute was amended and the Education Act was consolidated in the year 1881. The Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba enjoyed, under the provisions of that Act, the rights which those who framed it and put it upon the Statute-book said they ought to enjoy under the Imperial Act, or the Act of the House of 1870. The Consolidated Education Act was in force in the province of Manitoba until 1890. That is, for nineteen long years the minority in Manitoba enjoyed the right of separate schools. And, Sir, having lived in that country from 1881, a few weeks, as I find by the Statute-book after this Consolidated Education Act was assented to. I can say here, speaking as a Protestant, that, so far as I am concerned, and so far as the other Protestants of the province are concerned, we did not hear it mooted in public or in private, that a change should be made. No objection was taken to the state of education affairs of the province. We were as quiet and as peaceful as people could be. The minority were enjoying their rights, teaching their children under the regulations framed by the board. According to the provisions of the Act, a board of education was formed, half of Protestants and half of Catholics, as I have said. The chairman of the board was the Bishop of Rupert's Land, and at the board sat Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Roman Catholics. And for nineteen years these men conducted the educational affairs of the province, and not one word of controversy was spoken. No petition was addressed to the Legislature of Manitoba, no argument was used in the newspapers, and nothing was said in favour of the change. It was left to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to come to that country in 1889 and sow the seed of discord in our midst, and to the gentleman who has just made such a vigorous speech to the House, and to others who are going to support the motion of the hon. member for L'Islet. I commend their friend, the hon. member for North Simcoe. If he had not come and made a speech at Portage la Prairie, we would never have heard of this question of Manitoba schools. It is an extraordinary thing that no voice was raised among the Protestants of Manitoba attempting to show that the Catholic minority had not the right to enjoy the privileges they had enjoyed from 1871. The Government of Manitoba, in 1889, was formed, amongst others, of Mr. Thomas Greenway and Mr. Joseph Martin.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman is quite in error in supposing that I ever said a word about separate schools at Portage la Prairie. On the contrary, before I reached Manitoba, or rather when I reached Winnipeg, I read a statement, by Mr. Smart, I think, made at a meeting at Clearwater, held a day or two before, that the Government of Mr. Greenway had determined upon the policy of doing away with the separate schools. I had never spoken on the subject of the separate schools in Manitoba, either there or in the House, and at Portage la Prairie my whole address was with reference to the dual language, and not with reference to the separate schools. I am sure my hon. friend will be glad to be corrected, as he is evidently much misinformed as to the facts.

Mr. DALY. I am glad the hon. gentleman has spoken, because I have here the report of his speech, taken from the Winnipeg "Free Press," and delivered by him at Portage la Prairie. He says:

There was something for the politician to live for; we have the power to save this country from fratricidal strife, the power to make this a British country in fact as it is in name. In order to accomplish this other issues must for the moment give way. We have got to bend our energies and let it be understood in every constituency that, whether a man call himself Grit or Tory, Conservative or Reformer, his record is clear, his principles are sound and no influence at Ottawa will induce him to betray his great trust. The speaker was glad to inform the meeting that the poor, sleepy Protestant minority of Quebec were at last awake. He trusted before many weeks to address a meeting in Montreal and to realize that that minority is sound to the core on this question. There is the separate school question here and in the Northwest, and there is the French school question in Ontario; we have all the work to do in our various localities; let us do that first before we seek to traverse fields where more difficulty is to become encountered because vested rights have become solidified.

I think I have proved conclusively that the hon. gentleman did speak of separate schools at Portage la Prairie. He spoke of Mr. Smart having made a speech at Clearwater. I have no recollection of Mr. Smart ever having made a speech in connection with this question, until he addressed a Grit picnic at Wawanesa, and that was, at least, a week after the member for Simcoe had addressed a meeting at Portage la Prairie.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does my hon. friend say that Mr. Smart had not declared the policy of the Government prior to the speech I made at Portage la Prairie?

Mr. DALY. I say that Mr. Smart had not publicly discussed the separate school question until the 8th August, at Wawanesa. Well, we find that Mr. Joseph Martin, the then Attorney-General of Manitoba, attended the public meeting addressed by the hon. member for Simcoe, and was on the platform with him. We have the fact that Mr. Joseph Martin at that time was labouring under a cloud, as it were, in connection with some railway legislation to which it is unnecessary for me to refer—it is a matter of history. Mr. Martin found it necessary, in order to maintain the position that he held amongst the people of Manitoba, to square himself on that question, and after the member for Simcoe had made his address at Portage la Prairie, Mr. Martin got upon the platform and congratulated the member for Simcoe on his remarks, and declared that so far as he was concerned, he was in favour of the abolition of separate schools. Mr. Martin said :

He could not say that it had been announced by the Government, at least not very definitely, what action they proposed to take in connection with the dual language and separate school system in this province, which were subjects of an entirely similar nature with the discussion now going on with regard to the disallowance to the Act in Quebec. But he thought it had been very well known in this province for some years back what his own individual feelings were in regard to the use of two languages in the legislature.

In brief, Mr. Martin, the then Attorney-General, declared himself for the abolition of separate schools, and declared that so far as he was concerned as a member of the Government, he would like to see the School Act and the Dual Language Act wiped off the Statute-book. At that time Mr. Greenway was in British Columbia, so that statement made by Mr. Martin was made in the absence of the Premier. Mr. Greenway returned shortly afterwards to Winnipeg, and was asked by a reporter what his views were on the separate school question and Mr. Greenway repudiated the utterances of Mr. Martin upon that occasion. Sir, strange to say, that Mr. Greenway and Mr. Smart, the then Minister of Public Works, attended a meeting at Wawanesa, and it was at that meeting that the first statement, other than the one made by Mr. Martin, was made by a member of the Greenway Government in reference to the school question. The only report made at that meeting was in the Brandon "Sun" of 8th August, 1889, in which Mr. Greenway's speech covered four columns; and notwithstanding that he had been interrogated by reporters as to the statement made by the Attorney-General in reference to the question, not a single word was uttered by the Premier on that subject during the whole of the speech. Next we find the Minister of Public Works speaking in reference to that matter, and this is what he said :

It was not his intention, neither by speech nor inference, to be understood as speaking disparagingly of Roman Catholics. They were as much entitled to their rights as any other people, and he would defend them as energetically as he would those of the Protestants. In referring to the schools, he did not set himself up as an educationalist, but as the matter had come before the Government, he spoke of it in a practical way. There was, he said, very much of an anomaly in it all. While the state recognized both systems, he did not undertake to discuss or take any side in the matter as to whether this was right or wrong.

Then, later on, in concluding his speech, Mr. Smart spoke as follows :—

The Liberal party is known to be the party of reforms, and the present Government is prepared to undertake the task of giving in the matter of the conduct of the educational system equal rights to all citizens of the province, and thereby making a reform, which should be received by every fair-minded man in Manitoba with favour. I do not wish to be understood in any of my remarks on this question to advocate the abolition of the separate school system. I am not prepared to express any opinion, at present, on this question, nor do I purpose discussing the question as to whether the principle of state aid to any class of denominational schools is or is not a correct one. Sufficient it is for me now to point out under the existing laws the unfairness that exists, with a view to giving to the people the reasons for the changes which will shortly take place in the law pertaining to the carrying out of the educational institutions of the country. The whole department will be placed directly, a responsible Minister of the Crown and similar regulations as to qualifications of teachers, as to inspectors, normal schools, &c., will be made both in the case of separate schools as well as Protestant. This course will effect the saving of some thousands of dollars, which will go further to assist in reducing the taxation raised by the people of Manitoba.

Now, Sir, that is the only full and authoritative utterance on the question that was made by the Greenway Government, because it was made by the Minister of Public Works in the presence of the Premier. Although Mr. Smart declared there that it was not their intention to interfere with separate schools, we find that the Legislature of Manitoba met in due course, under the leadership of Mr. Greenway, and the Act of 1890 was placed upon the Statute-book, which swept away the separate schools which the Roman Catholics had been enjoying for 19 years. Well, going on in the history of this cause, we find that in due course that matter came to the Court of Queen's Bench, in a suit styled the city of Winnipeg against Barrett. Now, I come to the matter particularly before the House, that is, the position that the Government have taken upon this matter. The member for North Simcoe attacked this Government yesterday in his speech for having supplied, as he said, money to the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for the purpose of fighting this question in the courts. Now, he did not make it clear, nor has any one else made it clear in this discussion, that at the time this report of the Minister of Justice was made, namely, on the 21st March, 1891, the Act under which we propose now to place this matter before the Supreme Court was in existence. As a matter of fact, that Act, although passed, had not been assented to; it was not assented to until the 13th of September, 1891; so that it was impossible for the Government to have taken the course they have taken now, because there was no law upon the Statute-book which permitted them to refer that case to the Supreme Court. Now, Sir, I think it will be said by every fair-minded man, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, that the course of the Government in supplying funds to carry this case to the court was a reasonable one, was a right one, and I do not think it lies in the mouth of the member for Simcoe to dispute that position. We all recollect that in the St. Catharines Milling Company's case, in which the ownership of lands in what was called the disputed territory was in question, the hon. member for Simcoe was employed to carry that matter to the Privy Council in England, and the counsel for the St.

Catharines Milling Company was that hon. gentleman himself. Now, if it was right in the one case for the Government to supply funds to help the St. Catharines Milling Company to fight their case, and to pay heavy fees to the hon. member for Simcoe, or his firm, then I think it was equally right for the Government to take the position it did on this school question, because just as great rights were involved in the Manitoba school question as were involved in the case of the St. Catharines Milling Company.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What Dominion right was involved in the controversy about the schools? In regard to the St. Catharines Milling Company there was a Dominion right involved; but what Dominion right was involved here?

Mr. DALY. I understood the hon. gentleman to be an authority on constitutional matters. It was to ascertain the constitutional position of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba in regard to schools, whether the Acts passed by the Greenway Government did away with the Act of 1871 and its amendments, and was a good law or not, and also as to the question of appeal.

Mr. MULOCK. In the Milling Company's case the Dominion Government saved the property.

Mr. DALY. I was going on to say that I did not know any person who would cavil at the position taken by the Government in this matter, because they have taken the same action in regard to other matters. This case of the city of Winnipeg vs. Barrett was tried before the Queen's Bench at Winnipeg, and judgment was given against Barrett and in favour of the city. The case went to the Supreme Court and the decision was reversed. It went from there to the Privy Council in England. It has been stated in this House, and also by independent papers, and by the hon. member for Simcoe in the magazine article which has been quoted here, that the present position taken by the Government is for the purpose of reversing the decision of the Privy Council of England. When a man made that statement, especially having that knowledge of the case which the hon. gentleman must possess, and an editor makes that statement, having the knowledge which a newspaper editor ought to possess when he undertakes to enter upon such a discussion, it must have been malevolently and violently made, because in the report of the sub-committee it is clearly laid down as follows:—

As to the request which the petitioners make in the second paragraph of their prayer, viz.: "That it may be declared that the said Acts (53 Vic., 37 and 38) do prejudicially affect the rights and privileges with regard to denominational schools which the Roman Catholics had by law or practice in the province of Manitoba at the time of the Union," the sub-committee are of opinion that the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is conclusive as to the rights with regard to denominational schools which the Roman Catholics had at the time of the Union, and as to the bearing thereon of the statutes complained of, and Your Excellency is not, therefore, in the opinion of the sub-committee, properly called upon to hear an appeal based on those grounds. That judgment is as binding on Your Excellency as it is on any of the parties to the litigation, and, therefore, if redress is sought on account of the state of affairs existing in the province at the time of the Union, it must be sought elsewhere and by other means than by way of appeal under the sections of the British North America Act and of the Manitoba Act, which are relied on by the petitioners as sustaining this appeal.

That is as clearly stated as the English language can state it; it is an unqualified statement under the signature of the Privy Council, that the decision of the Privy Council of England is conclusive as to the rights of the Roman Catholics as regards denominational schools under the Act of 1890. That being the case, we come now to consider the position taken by the mover of the resolution. The hon. gentleman has attacked the whole course of the Government. First, he declares that we should have disallowed the Acts, and therefore he would not have given the Government money to enable the minority to fight the case before the Supreme Court and the Privy Council. I have pointed out that we were not in a position to refer the case at that time to the Supreme Court. Again, we are attacked on the ground that we have assumed judicial functions, and considerable meccrimment has been afforded here by quotations made by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and by the leader of the Opposition in regard to what I said on this matter myself. The hon. member from Simcoe quoted from an interview I had with a reporter in Winnipeg on the way to my constituents. The interview appeared in the Winnipeg "Free Press" of November 1st, and it is similar to that which the hon. gentleman had taken from the Toronto "Mail." It was as follows:—

Reporter—Well, they may try to make the school question a bone of contention.

Mr. Daly—That was sufficiently threshed out at the last election, and during my campaign I placed myself on record concerning the question.

Reporter—Have you anything to say concerning it now.

Mr. Daly—My mouth is of necessity closed, for I am exactly in the same position as a judge before whom a case is still being tried. The appeal of the Privy Councillors is, as it were, sub-judice, and I am one of the judges on the sub-committee of the Executive Council to whom Archbishop Taché's appeal was referred. Under these circumstances, it should be obvious that I can say nothing.

I should like to ask the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), who interrupts me, as an hon. member of my profession and an hon. member of this House, to intimate what position he would have taken under the circumstances? Would he when interrogated by a reporter tell him what his personal opinions were? Was I in a position to make such a statement to the reporter? At that time the matter had not come before the Privy Council, and it was impossible for me to express my opinion when I was to sit and hear the arguments as to the right to appeal. I say on my responsibility as a member of the Government and as a member of this House that I took the only position that any Minister could take. I ask hon. gentlemen on this or some other occasion to state what position they would have taken and whether they would have taken my position or not. Most assuredly they would have done so, because, if they are the men of honour I take them to be, they could not have taken any other position. I do not cavil as to what the leader of the Opposition said in regard to this matter, but I take exception to the way in which the interview has been referred to by the hon. member for Simcoe in another place. His magazine article has been quoted at length. I will quote an extract from it as follows:—

And so at the nomination at the by-election in Soulanges, where the Hon. Mr. Ouimet graphically pictured his unhappy position in the face of an excited electorate as that of one "walking on razors," he sheltered himself under the sacred character which he filled as that of a judge who was denied the privilege of speaking of a matter that was sub-judice, and when the new Minister of the Interior went back to his constituents for reelection, and some ill-informed elector who had been nurtured in the spirit of the British constitutional system and in the belief that for every act of the Government the Ministers were responsible to Parliament and the constituencies, innocently asked the Manitoba representative in the Cabinet whether he could be relied on to stand by the rights of his province, he was dumbfounded—it is doubtful whether he is yet recovered from his astonishment—when he was told that on this subject the Minister not only had not, but could not, properly have an opinion. For was not he, the Minister, to hear the question of the appeal argued as one of the sub-committee, and afterwards as one of the Council.

I ask any hon. gentleman in view of the report I have read of the interview I had with the reporter in Winnipeg, which was the interview on which the hon. gentleman based this article, if the hon. gentleman fairly stated the facts in this article. The hon. gentleman has taken the same position in the country as well as before this House. He does not desire, it appears, to treat the question fairly, but he has endeavoured to reach the classes in Ontario whose passions he knows he can arouse, whose passions he has aroused, and let it be remembered that he is responsible for the present position of this question. I am prepared in five, four or three years hence to place my record in this matter side by side with the record of the hon. gentleman. I think posterity will say that I have taken the position of a patriotic Canadian in this matter, and the position of one who is desirous to allay the strifes and bitterness of religious ill-feeling, while on the other hand, I have no doubt that the verdict of posterity will be, that the hon. member for

Mr. DALY.

North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), for some reason unknown to me, and unknown to the country as yet, has taken a position, which, if pursued to the end, as he is endeavouring to pursue it, will rend this country from one end to the other. I am glad to feel that by the vote, which I hope will be given in this House to-night on the motion of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), that that gentleman will get the same answer from the House as he got on a former occasion. I would like the electors of Canada to understand this question, and I would like the electors of North Simcoe to understand the position their member occupies here to-night. I would have liked the electors of that constituency, good men and true, to whom he so passionately appealed on a recent occasion, to see him hob-nobbing side by side with the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). I would like the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) to take some of the issues of "L'Electeur" and "Le Canadien," in which the hon. member for L'Islet has written about Orangeists, and I would like him to take the speech just delivered by the hon. member (Mr. Brodeur), and read them to his electors in North Simcoe. I hardly think the hon. gentleman would fare well if he did this. I think the House will come to the conclusion that it is an extraordinary spectacle in the history of Canada, to see the new union which has taken place here within the last few days. The position occupied by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) since I have known him in public life is that of an agitator in the province of Quebec, while the position occupied by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) since he brought in his Jesuits' Bill a few years ago, has been a similar one in Ontario. These two hon. gentlemen have united their forces now on the floor of Parliament, and we shall see how far they are going to carry out their union. I appeal to the sober senses of the people of Canada on this question. I ask them to approach this matter dispassionately, and to view it as a matter of right and justice which this Government is endeavouring to do towards the Catholic minority who appeal to them, rather than to view it as a matter of religion or creed. In one breath, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) states that we cannot refuse to hear the appeal, and in the next breath he denounces the Government for endeavouring to hear that appeal. I would like the hon. gentleman to reconcile his position in that. It is stated in the law that the minority of the province of Manitoba, if their rights are prejudicially affected, shall have the right to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of Canada. Section 22 of the Manitoba Act states that. And, let me ask, has not the same right been conceded by greater men than myself in times gone by to exist under the British North America Act. I find that when this section of the Manitoba Act was under discussion before the House of Commons in 1870, the following discussion took place in reference to it:—

Hon. Mr. Oliver moved that the education clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. Chaveau hoped the amendment would not be carried. It was desirable to protect the minority in Manitoba from the great evil of religious dissensions on education. There could be no better model to follow in that case than the Union Act which gave full protection to minorities. It was impossible to say who would form a majority there, Protestants or Catholics. If the population were to come from over the seas, then the Protestants would be in majority. If, as had been asserted, Manitoba was to be a French preserve, then the Catholics would be a majority. He did not care which, because he desired only to see the new province freed from discussions, which had done so much injury in the old province of Canada. They presented a problem to the whole world, and the question was, could two Christian bodies, almost equally balanced, be held together under the British Constitution. He believed that problem could be worked out successfully.

Hon. Mr. McDougall said the effect of the clause, if not struck out, would be to fix laws which the Local Legislature could not alter in future, and that it would be better to leave the matter to local authorities to decide, as in the other provinces. He quite agreed with his hon. friend in giving the same powers to this province as the others, and it was for that reason that he desired to strike out the clause.

Hon. George E. Cartier referred to the manner in which the Red River country had been settled, and grants of land which had been made to the clergy for the purposes of education. I want to draw the attention of the House to what was said by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, afterwards premier of the country.

Mr. Mackenzie was prepared to leave the matter to be settled exclusively by the Local Legislature. The British North America Act gave all the protection necessary for minorities; and local authorities understood their own local wants better than the General Legislature. It was his earnest desire to avoid introducing into the new province those detrimental discussions which had operated so unhappily on their own country, and therefore hoped the amendment would be carried. Consequently Mr. Mackenzie voted for the amendment.

I want to call the particular attention of the House to these words used by Mr. Mackenzie:

The British North America Act gives all the protection necessary for the minorities.

It has been contended by counsel for the petitioners in this case, that the British North America Act does give that protection. That is a question that is open to argument, and it has been discussed pro and con on both sides of this House. However that may be, the minority claim that by section 93 of the British North America Act they have an appeal to the Privy Council, in addition to the Manitoba Act. I will not weary the House at any greater length, but I desire before closing to call the attention of the House and the country to the most extraordinary positions occupied by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) on this occasion. The Toronto "Mail" has taken the identical position of the member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy) on the school question for some years past, and I wish to read an article from yesterday's "Mail" headed "Mr. Tarte's Fiasco." At that time, the "Mail" did not know, I presume, that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was supporting the motion of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). Here is what the "Mail," the paper that most strongly endorses the position taken by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says about the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), and it is so good that I will try your patience by reading it:

MR. TARTE'S FIASCO.

The Quebec attack upon the autonomy of Manitoba was commenced in Parliament yesterday. No one can say that the proceedings were not opened with a due regard for the proprieties. The French province denies to Manitoba the legislative freedom it claims for itself. It was, therefore, quite reasonable that Mr. Tarte, who is the fiery champion of Home Rule in his own arena, should lead in the assault upon western rights, and that his performance should receive the distinguished patronage of the Roman count to whom we are indebted for the Quebec resolutions and other equally vigorous denunciations of Federal interference with provincial laws.

He had not only the distinguished patronage of the Roman count, but the distinguished patronage of the member for North Simcoe as well. The "Mail" continues:

The inconsistencies of the occasion were well preserved and well balanced by those who undertook the more prominent parts. Nor was the presentation of the facts in the case less free from the absurd than the application of its principles. No doubt Mr. Tarte's rural audiences applaud to the echo when he tells them that the compact of 1867 settled the educational difficulty and gave separate schools to Manitoba forever. More loudly still may they cheer when they learn from him that the obnoxious Francophobes are causing all the trouble through their repudiation of this very just arrangement. But while such statements may pass muster at the doors of the village church they will not do in the open. Every intelligent man knows that the bargain of 1867, so far as it relates to the schools, is applicable to but two provinces, Ontario and Quebec. The attempt to force it upon New Brunswick signally failed. As it had no force as regarded provinces other than Ontario and Quebec, which joined the Union in 1867, it cannot bind the provinces which came in later. To say that those who hold this opinion are Francophobes bent upon precipitating a crisis is to misunderstand the facts. The men who are doing the wrong and are thus straining the Confederation are those who seek to force upon an unwilling province a burden which the constitution does not require it to carry. The character and quality of the burden are very imperfectly represented by Mr. Tarte when he tells us of the moderation of his compatriots and the advantages they enjoy through the clerical control of education in Quebec. Mr. Tarte should consult Bishop Grandin or Abbé Prudhomme on the subject of the application of the treaty of 1763 to the North-west before he talks of moderation. He should read some of the articles signed "J. Israel Tarte," and the speeches of ex-Lieutenant-Governor Masson and Mr. Fitzpatrick on the condition of the people of Quebec, before determining that the educational system of that province is the proper thing to plant in the west, contrary to the wishes of the settlers there. But the most curious, if not ridiculous, feature of Mr. Tarte's performance yesterday was its conclusion. His speech led direct to the demand that the Manitoba law be disallowed. Instead, however, of moving as he had argued, Mr. Tarte proposed the condemnation of the Government for sitting in a judicial disguise to hear the appeal of the separatists—only that and nothing more. Now, Mr. Tarte's resolution is a resolution in Supply. It is, therefore, not susceptible of amendment. As a result every member must say "yea" or "nay" to the simple question whether he approves of the manner in which the case is being heard; but no member can assert or vote, owing to the cunning with which the subject has been introduced, that the school law ought or ought not to have been disallowed. Mr. Tarte, who came to Parliament blustering about his programme, and announcing that there was something terrible in his intentions, has simply taken measures to prevent the House from expressing an opinion upon what really is the main issue. Possibly Mr. Tarte is afraid to test Parliament on the disallowance question.

I therefore have much pleasure in presenting to the hon. member for L'Islet the opinion of the paper that supports the hon. member for North Simcoe as to the position he has taken on this matter, and I hope that the hon. member, when he gets back to his constituents, will read to them the opinion of the Toronto "Mail" upon his fiasco. Now, Sir, in conclusion, I have simply to say this, that I approach this question possibly in a different manner from those who have previously spoken on it. As most hon. gentlemen present know, I belong to the Protestant faith, and my opinion on the subject of separate schools is on record in the discussion which took place in the province of Manitoba during the late elections, when I declared on public platforms in the presence of both parties, that I was not in favour of separate schools, but that I was opposed to the principle of separate schools. But I think I have sufficient liberality in my nature and a sufficient desire to see that justice is done to our fellow-countrymen in the minority in the province of Manitoba; and if they have rights on this question, as they claim, under the British North America Act and Manitoba Act, and those Acts provide that they shall have an appeal to the Governor in Council, they should have dealt out to them every right to which they are entitled. As a Protestant, I ask for toleration to the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba, I ask for toleration to the Protestants of Quebec by the Catholics of that province, and I ask for toleration from the Protestants of Ontario for the Catholics there; because I declare on the floor of this House that if we are to have much more of this kind of discussion, such as we have had in the last few days, if the hon. member for North Simcoe repeats much of the argument which he indulged in the other day in support of this resolution, and if he is going to make a similar move with regard to the North-west schools, we shall have this country permeated from one end to the other with literature and speeches that will shake the foundations of Confederation. In conclusion, I want to quote from the St. John's College Magazine, a Church of England magazine published in Winnipeg, the following few remarks of toleration:

In dealing with this subject, it is our intention to confine ourselves more particularly to that aspect which concerns, and which is emphasized by, the public in Manitoba, and we venture to assert that at no period of history, ancient and modern, and in no country has there been so crying a necessity for a more comprehensive view of the word "toleration" than exists at the present day in the province of Manitoba. The word almost seems to have been relegated to a column in Webster, and to have come to be ignored as a potent factor in society or politics, and worse than either of these, as a necessity in religion. In its place we find an atmosphere of egotism, a bitter spirit of antagonism, and, in some cases, an intolerable self-righteousness and bigotry.

Again, we find this want of toleration in things pertaining to religion, and here, to our shame be it said, bitterness is plainly apparent on every side. We are aware that, in a great measure, this is resultant from the public schools question, but even this cannot serve as an excuse for the lack of charity so frequently shown by one body of Christians towards another. Roman Catholics are preaching against Protestantism; Protestants, in some cases, are abusing Roman Catholics; each party apparently refusing to credit the other with the possession of the smallest degree of Christian charity, and in many cases, by so doing, the outside public is led to believe that very little charity is being shown by the self-constituted champions of either party.

I think these are words that will commend themselves to every right-minded man who desires to maintain the Confederation we are all so proud of, and I hope that in a very short time, from one end of our country to the other, such a state of affairs will exist that at no time in our future history shall we hear these matters discussed here as we have heard them discussed in this Chamber during the last few days.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the House will allow me to refer to this matter while it is fresh. If my hon. friend who has just addressed the House will refer to the Manitoba "Evening Free Press," published on Saturday, the 3rd August, which was the date I arrived in Winnipeg, he will find this announcement by the Hon. Mr. Smart, under the heading of "Separate Schools," at a meeting held at Clearwater on the 2nd of August:

The anomaly existing as to the separate school system was pointed out, and it was the Government's intention to overhaul the whole educational machine. The double-barrelled system must be abolished. The two superintendents, the two boards and two sets of inspectors must go, and a minister of education will be appointed (a present minister taking the portfolio) who would administer the education department and be responsible to the people. The change would enable ministers to greatly increase the grants towards the support of schools, and would benefit the taxpayers.

That statement was made on the 2nd of August and published on the 3rd, the day I arrived in Winnipeg. My speech was made at Portage la Prairie on the Monday or Tuesday evening following.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, after the very explicit declaration which has been made by the hon. leader of the Opposition that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was in no way responsible for the drawing up or the presentation of the amendment moved by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), it is hardly worth while to reply any further to the inuendoes made so frequently on this side of the House that those two gentlemen were acting in collusion. There are many hon. gentlemen in this House who know, as a matter of fact, that the hon. member for North Simcoe had a resolution which he intended to move on the same occasion as the resolution was moved by the hon. member for L'Islet. That, however, is a matter of comparatively small importance. It would have been much more satisfactory to many in this House on both sides if the resolution now under consideration had been one that presented the issue fairly and squarely, that left no possibility of doubt as to its meaning, that would have had no double meaning, that would not have been capable of two interpretations. But, Sir, that is not our fault. Under the rules of the House that amendment cannot be again amended, and we are obliged to vote yea or nay upon it. Of course, it might be open to the hon. member for North Simcoe to move another amendment on another occasion; but I presume that the House will not be in a temper to listen to another debate on this question. Therefore, we have to look at this resolution as we have it. It is divided into two parts. The first part is a condemnation of the Government for their action in dealing with the Manitoba school question. With that part of the resolution I heartily agree, and I intend to vote for it as being a condemnation of the Government; let there be no possible mistake about that. The reason why I support this resolution of condemnation is because I think that the Government had it in their power to put an end to this vexed question, and to have done so would have been good politics. It would have been good for the Government, good for their future standing in this House, and much better for their standing in the country, had they said to the minority in Manitoba, when the judgment of the Privy Council was given: the matter is now ended; the highest court has given its decision, that the province of Manitoba, having authority given to it by the Manitoba Act to deal with the subject of legislation, has dealt with it in a manner within their right. That would have put an end to the matter. I do not believe that the majority or, at any rate, a very large number of Roman Catholics inhabiting Manitoba, are in favour of this agitation. I believe many of them, if not the majority, would have been perfectly satisfied to accept the system of education laid down in 1890; but be that as it may, we are dealing with this subject as we now find it. Let us see what the course of the Government has been and what that course indicates as to the course they intend to pursue in the future. It has been said upon this side of the House, and I repeat the statement, that the whole course of the Government indicates a deliberate intention on their part to do away, if possible, with the system of education which the people of Manitoba, in the exercise of their undoubted rights, have thought proper to establish. Sir, I want no better evidence of that intention than the evidence given by the impassioned speech made by the Minister of the Interior. His whole speech, from beginning to end, instead of being in that judicial tone, which he has assumed to exercise on previous occasions, was an impassioned appeal on behalf of the separate school system of Manitoba. No other possible construction can be given it, and that brings to my mind a little circumstance in connection with the same hon. gentleman. I remember some time ago that hon. gentleman, in the province of Manitoba, when speaking in relation to this very subject of education—I cannot pretend to give the occasion or the date, but I remember the report in the newspaper perfectly well—the hon. gentleman, speaking on the subject of education and immigration, said: How can we expect immigrants to come into this country unless they will find here the same privilege and advantages they had at home. If those words meant anything, they meant that emigrants coming from Roman Catholic countries should find in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories a system of education similar to that which the province has thought proper to do away with. If the words meant anything, they certainly meant that. What has been the course of the Government in the past? They have been arraigned, and I think properly arraigned, for having made this attack upon the province of Manitoba, for having summoned the province before it as a party to a suit, for having assumed, in the first place, the role of a plaintiff, of a party to the suit, deliberately undertaking the whole prosecution. About that there can be no possible question. And when the hon. gentleman treated as analogous the case of the St. Catharines Milling Company, he could hardly have expected to delude the House by any such comparison. Everybody knows that in that case the Dominion had a direct money interest. But what money interest, what interest or right has this Government to go out of its way and assail the conduct of any province? I have noticed, indeed, that this Government, in dealing with provincial matters is guided very much by the political character of the government in the province. It is very much to be regretted that this should be the case. I am no friend of the Mowat Administration. I have fought against it on many an occasion, but it is perfectly certain that there has been a great amount of friction and needless irritation kept up between the two Governments, which never would have existed had not the Government been on the opposite side of politics to this; and I think I am not very far from being right in the assumption that, had this measure been brought forward by the Conservative Government of Manitoba, had not Mr. Greenway and his colleagues been at the head of that Government, we should have found very different action on the part of the present Administration. I say that the whole course of the Government indicates a deliberate intention to interfere with the existing state of things. I put this strongly, and it cannot be too strongly and forcibly put to hon. gentlemen who, like the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), say they will vote against the motion of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), and in the same breath say they will oppose the Government, irrespective of all party ties and all party considerations, if the Government ultimately interfere with the legislative action of the province of Manitoba. How can those hon. gentlemen reconcile those two positions? Here they are aiding the Government to do that, which, if it means anything at all, means giving the Government the power to do what these gentlemen say they will be first to condemn. Do hon. gentlemen think the country will be deluded by any such logic? Do they think that because this motion has been moved by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), the country is going to accept such an illogical and absurd contention, as has been put forward by those hon. gentlemen. I am not concerned with the motives of the hon. member for L'Islet. It is nothing to me what he means, and very little what he said with regard to his motion. The public will understand exactly the course pursued with regard to this motion by hon. gentlemen on both sides. They will understand that, as presented by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), this motion is accepted by him and certainly accepted by me, as a direct condemnation of the Government for their manifest and evident intention to do that which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald) says he will be the first to condemn them for doing. I well understand what the meaning of the whole thing is, but if hon. gentlemen opposite fancy that the country is going to be deluded by any such sophistry, I think they will find themselves very much mistaken. At this hour of the morning, I shall endeavour to follow the example of the last speaker, and make my remarks as brief as possible. The second, and not the least important, part of the resolution has reference to the conduct of ministers in assuming to deal with this subject in a judicial rather than a political capacity. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), an hon. gentleman whom no one in this House respects more highly than I do, both for his learning and the honesty and frankness with which he expresses his opinions, undertook to show that the Privy Council of this country has power to act in a judicial capacity, and he quoted several English authorities, taking us back to early times in the history of the British Constitution. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman through those authorities, but when he laid down the doctrine that the Privy Council had not been denuded of its power to act as a court, that it still has that power, that that power was never taken away from it, that the power exercised by the old court of the Star Chamber, which was partly done away with by the Long Parliament, still exists in the Privy Council. I think the hon. gentleman carried his argument a little too far. The author whom he quoted, "Dicey on the Privy Council," points out that while the power of the Privy Council as a Star Chamber was limited by the Act passed by the Long Parliament, it was not then entirely done away with. That power continued until the time of Charles the II, when a subsequent Act was passed still further limiting its power, and, in the reign of William IV an entire change was made and the Privy Council as it now exists was formed. Does the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) say that there is any sort of analogy between the various committees into which the Privy Council has been divided and the Privy Council as it exists in Canada? There can be no such analogy. The hon. gentleman seems to me to have forgotten—I will not say forgotten, but overlooked—the fact that the gentlemen who are sitting upon those benches are the Cabinet of this country, and the Cabinet, as such, is a thing entirely unknown to the Constitution. It is one of those extraordinary anomalies with which the British Constitution so abounds. There is no recognition in any statute or any legal authority of the Cabinet. It has grown up with the Constitution, yet has never been recognized as part of the Constitution. The logical result of the hon. gentleman's argument would be that these hon. gentlemen sitting there as Cabinet Ministers can at any time take the role of Privy Councillors and as Privy Councillors assume judicial functions and so escape the responsibility of the Cabinet Minister. The Privy Council in England, as a Privy Council, exercises no judicial function. The hon. gentleman spoke of the Committee on Plantations. That is a separate court formed for a specific purpose. We have also the judicial committee of the Privy Council. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that there is anything in the position of these gentlemen here analogous to the judicial committee of the Privy Council? Does he mean to say that these gentlemen have the power, as the Privy Council have, to sit as a court? Whence do they get that power? Is it not inherent in the Privy Council. Even if it existed at an early period it has been entirely done away with since, and the Privy Council, the "Concilium Ordinarium" of the Crown, passed through a great many mutations, and its final mutation was this, that it was divided into several bodies, and that resulted in doing exactly what the hon. gentleman contended should have been done, in entirely separating the judicial from the legislative and executive functions. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition (Mr. Laurier) pointed out that the supposed mistake on the part of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in his quotation from Bagehot, supposing the hon. gentleman had omitted these sentences, was not pertinent to the main facts. I am sure those who know the hon. member for North Simcoe will not charge him with, will not believe, that he was guilty of wilfully and intentionally suppressing a portion of the passage which would have been opposed to the argument he was making. And if they will not believe that, they will not believe that he was such a fool as to deliberately suppress a passage which any one who will look at the book could correct him for. But the fact is that what Bagehot speaks of as being erroneous is the opinion that the executive and legislative functions are separated, and in the subsequent passage he points out :

The efficient secret of the English Constitution may be described as the close union, the nearly complete fusion of the executive and legislative powers according to the traditional theory, as it exists in all the books, the goodness of our constitution consists in the entire separation of the legislative and executive authority, but in truth its merit consists in their singular approximation.

And the passage which the hon. gentleman is accused of having suppressed did not refer to the judicial functions, but to the erroneous idea that the legislative and the executive functions had been separated. So that the hon. gentleman will see that, even supposing the hon. member for North Simcoe had made a mistake in not reading these particular words, it really was not pertinent to the argument, as the opinion of Bagehot, which the hon. gentleman called to the attention of the House, was that there was not a union of the judicial with the executive and legislative functions. So far as that is concerned, the hon. gentleman was perfectly justified in the argument he made and the conclusion he arrived at. The hon. gentleman from Albert spoke a good deal about the wisdom of the Government in taking such a course as would, in his opinion, avoid lighting the baleful fires of old days and renewing the events that had taken place in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and he deprecated anything being done that would cause such a state of affairs to arise in the new provinces in the west. But if anything is being done calculated to promote agitation and keep it alive, it is not the action of the hon. member for North Simcoe or any of those who are branded as bigots—strange words these coming from hon. gentlemen who represent an ecclesiastical authority that has never been celebrated for its tolerance or yielding to the wishes of other denominations—but it is the course which the Government are pursuing and which they have pursued from the beginning of this agitation, leading those in the province of Quebec to believe—as I think they were perfectly justified in believing, as they are justified in believing now—that the object of the Government is to place the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba in such a position they can bring about the repeal of the educational establishments as now existing. These, I say, are the persons who are really to be charged with fomenting agitation. Their action is far more serious than that of the hon. member for North Simcoe. And when the hon. member who last spoke charged the hon. member for Simcoe with being the sole author of the agitation, mistaken as he was in fact, and in his date, he certainly paid a great compliment to the hon. member for Simcoe in stating that in a population where every thing was going smoothly and satisfactorily half a dozen words at the end of a speech, which was all the hon. gentleman could quote, were enough to set the whole province in a blaze and to cause an agitation which resulted in the almost unanimous acceptance of a system of education which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), party man as he is, says he would be the first to condemn the Government for interfering with. Under these circumstances, I think we are perfectly justified in the course we have taken. Now, Sir, the Minister of Justice was taken to task by the hon. leader of the Opposition for a statement which led to the assumption, the natural and reasonable assumption, that the appeal to the Supreme Court was to be an ultimate decision upon the matter. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) just now repeated that statement, and would lead the House to believe and would lead those who read the debates to believe that the appeal to the Supreme Court would bring about a decision upon the matter. Why, the hon. gentleman must suppose that people are easily deceived, that this House has paid very little attention to what has been going on, to think that hon. members will accept such a statement. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the object is a makeshift, a means of turning a difficult corner, or else it shows a deliberate intention to bring about a condition of things which some hon. members, supporters of the Government, say they will be the first to condemn. The time must come for a decision. The judgment of the Supreme Court, favourable to the minority in Manitoba, would bring the matter to a point which would make necessary political action on the part of the Government. Now it seems to me that the hon. gentleman on the occasions referred to would have been perfectly justified in saying to those who made inquiries as to what course the Government was going to adopt, that that course was not decided upon, and therefore they could give no information. But they went a great deal further than that. They did exactly what the member for North Simcoe charged them with doing, they took advantage of this assumed judicial function to escape ministerial responsibility. They were not bound to tell anybody what they were going to do. As Cabinet Ministers they went into that contest. I do not suppose the Minister of Public Works went anywhere to make a speech on the hustings in the capacity of a Privy Councillor. Why do Cabinet Ministers go to make speeches on political hustings? It is because sometimes their oratory may have a good effect upon the electors. Sometimes the presence of a Cabinet Minister has a very powerful effect at the by-elections. But a Privy Councillor has no patronage to distribute; and a Privy Councillor has no business as such in taking part in political contests. So when the hon. gentleman was asked a very natural question by those who were deeply interested in the course of the Government, he did exactly what he has been charged with doing, he took refuge from his ministerial responsibility, and shielded himself in an assumed capacity of Privy Councillor. Now, I will not further weary the House upon this subject. I trust I have said enough to make clear the grounds upon which I am supporting the resolution of the hon. member for L'Islet—not that I like the resolution, nor care in the slightest degree what the intentions or the motives of the member for L'Islet are. But this is the only opportunity which we shall have in the House of giving a vote upon this question—for this is the real issue—as to whether we think this Government ought to interfere with the province of Manitoba in the exercise of its unquestioned legislative functions in establishing a system of education. I again repeat, even at the risk of being wearisome, that it is a most illogical and absurd position for a man to take to support the Government in doing something which, if it means anything, means that they intend to do that very thing which they themselves say will condemn them to the utmost of their ability for doing.

Mr. HUGHES. In rising at this early hour in the morning to say a few words, I may state that I have waited, like the Minister of the Interior, for some days to get an opportunity of being heard on this question. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion and have tried to see where in the argument advanced by one side or the other rested on the amendment moved by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). We have heard a great deal of Star Chambers and Privy Councillors, and other straw men that were put up to be knocked down for certain purposes, possibly, as the leader of the Opposition has stated, for the purpose of exciting passions and appealing to the country for a certain effect. It is not my intention to stir up passions; it is my intention to arrive, if possible, at a line of action which, while it will justify me in opposing the amendment of the member for L'Islet, will, at the same time, harmonise with my views on the question of education. In the amendment proposed by the hon. member for L'Islet I see nothing which commends itself to me. The hon. leader of the Opposition has counselled us to keep our passions quiet; he has advised the Government to come out and state plainly, one way or the other, their line of action. I have a distinct recollection of an issue which was before the country some years since—I refer to the execution of Louis Riel in the North-west. On that occasion we found the leader of the Opposition, and those who are in alliance with him, counselling the Government of the day to pursue a certain line of action, demanding, in short, that a certain line of action should be pursued by the Government; and then, on the Government acquiescing in their demand, immediately turning round and censuring the Government in most unmeasured terms. That agitation was carried on to such an extent as almost to bring this country to the verge of civil war. How do we know to-day that if the Government were to acquiesce in the recommendation of the leader of the Opposition, immediately the leader of the Opposition and his friends would not turn round again and condemn them? I think the Government is pursuing a proper course in keeping this matter away from the arena of popular agitation in the political field, and endeavouring to have it settled by a constitutional authority, without the exercise of that power which is placed in the Cabinet—call it what you like, call it the Cabinet, call it the Privy Council, call it the Governor-General in Council—without the exercise, I say, of the powers placed at their disposal under the constitution. The hon. member for North Simcoe, in his address the other day, stated, if I understood him aright, that this appeal was unique in the history of Canadian politics. I hold in my hand an extract from a report of the present Premier, who was then Minister of Justice, which has reference to an appeal in connection with the Jesuits Estates legislation of the province of Quebec, which was before this House a few years ago. At that time, it will be remembered, the hon. member for North Simcoe and the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) took a different action from that which they are taking on the present occasion. On that occasion they were very much annoyed, their passions found vent, because the Government would not step in, because this judicial committee of the Privy Council would not step in and disallow an Act of the province of Quebec. To-day I presume they are pleased because the Government has not disallowed an Act of the province of Manitoba; but they seem displeased that the Government have heard the appeal of the minority in that province. These hon. members, both outside and inside the House, sought to create dissension throughout the Dominion over the action of the Government in refusing to disallow an Act of a province, in other words, in refusing to exercise a certain judicial function which they had under the constitution. We find that they were not content with bringing up a motion in the House, and having it voted down, but they made a pilgrimage to the city of Quebec to lay their grievance at the foot of the Throne, and to petition the Governor-General to exercise prerogative of demanding the disallowance of the Act of the province of Quebec. On that occasion it was pointed out how this matter could be approached under section 93 of the British North America Act. After this had been repeatedly pointed out to the Protestants of Quebec, they were at last induced to take action, and they presented their petition to the Privy Council. That petition was heard, and I will read you an extract from the report of the Minister of Justice on the subject :

Inasmuch, however, as the petition now being reported on, expresses a desire that the petitioners be heard, and as they may be able to show, if so heard, that there is ground for taking action on the part of Your Excellency, under the 93rd section of the British North America Act, irrespective of disallowance, the undersigned had the honour to recommend, soon after the receipt of the petition of July last, that a day be fixed for the purpose of such hearing as early as a full attendance of the members of the committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada could be had and that on such day the petition be heard by the usual Committee of Council.

The undersigned has the honour now to recommend that should Your Excellency see fit to name a day for the purpose of hearing the appeal in question by the Committee of Council aforesaid, the petitioners be so informed. Respectfully submitted,

(Signed) JNO. S. D. THOMPSON,
Minister of Justice.

Accordingly the Government accepted the recommendation of Sir John Thompson and advised that Tuesday, the 15th day of October, be named as a day for hearing the said appeal, and the Secretary of State informed the petitioners accordingly.

On 1st October, 1889, J. K. Dougall, on behalf of the Protestants of Quebec, notified the Dominion Government that the petitioners would appear by counsel chosen on the day named, and asked at what hour and at what place the Governor in Council would be pleased to receive and hear their counsel.

On 8th October, 1889, Mr. Dougall was notified that such hearing would take place in the Privy Council Chamber at half-past ten on the morning of the 15th October.

THE PROTESTANTS WITHDRAW.

On the 12th October, 1889, Mr. Davidson, counsel for Mr. Dougall and other Protestants, telegraphed the Dominion Government as follows from Montreal:—"In view of the public declaration from Mr. Mercier, addressed to the Protestant Committee of Public Instruction and affecting the grounds of the petition in appeal, would His Excellency in Council postpone the hearing of the petitioners, J. R. Dougall and others till later day. Please reply."

L. H. DAVIDSON, of Counsel for Petitioners.

REPLY.

To L. H. Davidson, Montreal.

I am authorized by the Privy Council to inform you that the postponement has been granted.

(Signed) P. PELLETIER,
Acting Under Sec. State.

Accordingly, the request of the Protestants was granted, and that was the last ever heard of the petition. The Protestants for dollars and cents, for the consideration of the interest on $60,000 for a number of months, withdrew their petition under sec. 93 of the British North America Act. Thus far at all events we have on record the action of the Government along the lines that have been pursued in regard to the appeal of the Roman Catholic church—I will not say of the Roman Catholic people, for the people do not seem to have taken any part in the matter—in Manitoba. It strikes me that the Roman Catholic church of the Dominion generally must feel highly complimented at the subdued and respectful manner, and it may be rightly so, in which their representations are received by this House. I have read in history starting away back to the Quebec Act of 1774, on down to the Constitutional Act of 1791, following down through the stormy times of 1837-38 on to the present time, and in all those agitations the people of the Dominion seem to be lost sight of. The citizens seem not to be considered but as church members of this country ; in other words, the people are treated, not as citizens of a free country, but as members of certain churches that happen to exist within its bounds. That I look upon as contrary to the true spirit of responsible government. Another mistake committed in the history of this country is in regard to the province of Quebec. We find the people of Ontario treating Quebec as French and Roman Catholic, and we find Quebec coming to this House and making appeals as French and Roman Catholic. I need not tell hon. members that these two do not go hand in hand. The French as a race has ever been distinguished as lovers of liberty. They have led in the history of Europe in all struggles for liberty, whereas Roman Catholicism has ever been distinguished for its intolerance and its claim to divine right of control. I will not at the present time enter into details to bear out these statements, as the hour is late. In regard to the question of education, we have been told that it is a matter of conscience in regard to Roman Catholic separate schools or of Protestant separate schools. For a moment let us examine the question of education. I have had the privilege of being a school teacher in my day. I do not know whether I was imbued with the necessary divine spirit to qualify as a teacher or not, but I have yet to see the reason where, in education, the question of religion should come in. As I understand it, religion is a man's duty towards God, and I will endeavour briefly to examine wherein there is any possible room for the interference of churches, be they Protestant or Roman Catholic, in the education of the youth of the country. It is frankly admitted that it is the state's right to educate the youth of the land. The youth should be educated physically, and the necessity for this is shown in our sanitary laws and regulations. It is right for the state to educate the youth intellectually, in writing, arithmetic and necessary subjects to enable the citizen intelligently to vote, and also provide him with sufficient education to assist him in earning a livelihood. It is the state's duty to educate the child morally. Here is where the question will formulate debatable grounds; but if you will examine the question you will find there is not one single moral quality inherent as such that can in any way be connected with or shown to be dependent upon any religion. The moral qualities and virtues are known to have existed in the human race long anterior to either of the religions the people of this country profess. The moral or ethical qualities, and the distinctions between right and wrong are as easily determined as the proper kinds of food, as to materials that are poisonous and not poisonous and clothing that is proper or improper. These are facts admitted on all hands; I could quote authorities at length, but I will not detain the House. These are all the subjects that the state should insist on teaching—the development of the physical, intellectual and moral qualities of manhood. Religion being of man's duty to his God, I fail to see where the House of Commons has any jurisdiction in the kingdom of Heaven. I fail to see wherein the people of the Dominion or this Parliament have anything to do with the matters that pertain between a man's conscience and his God. Morality is a man's duty towards man. The state does legislate for the violation of moral duties, and therefore the state has the right to teach those moral qualities. I throw out these few ideas in regard to this subject, and I will not detain the House further than by reviewing in brief the question now before us, the reference to the Supreme Court, the answer of the Privy Council and the appeal of the Roman Catholics in Manitoba. The appeal has been presented. The Government either could have heard that appeal and allowed or disallowed it, or it could have refused to hear the appeal, or it could have received it and referred it to the courts, as it is now doing. The latter course was the one which would create the least friction, and the one that I am satisfied will recommend itself to the judgment of every intelligent man who does not wish to arouse passions, or to carry out an ulterior object of his own. If the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decides that the Government should interfere and grant remedial legislation, then the matter will be before the country in the identical position it would have been had the Government taken action in the first place. Then we will find our friends on one side or the other, the one advocating remedial legislation, and the other opposing it. The world has advanced to such an extent during the last 50 years, and such is the spirit of the age, that I am satisfied it would seal the fate of any Government in the Dominion of Canada—even though the matter were left to be decided by the province of Quebec—for the light of liberty is growing in the province of Quebec as in every province of this Dominion—it would seal the fate of any Government who would attempt to grant remedial legislation to any church minority in the matter of schools. Not only would the older provinces not tolerate it, but I am satisfied that before Manitoba would endure any such interference, she would withdraw from the Union and disrupt Confederation. However, I feel satisfied that in the reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, there is no fear of an adverse decision to those who are anxious to abolish separate schools. I do not wish to be understood for a moment as seeking to force any Roman Catholic to attend a Protestant school. I agree with the leader of the Opposition that that would be an entirely wrong course to pursue. But, Sir, I have read the Manitoba school law, and I see from that, that there is no attempt there at all to coerce the minority of that province to take part in any religious exercise that might be repugnant to them. In other words, the present educational system of Manitoba is entirely non-sectarian.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I will not apologize for speaking at this time of the day, because I think it is becoming a fair hour for an early riser to go to work. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the speeches which have been made in this debate, amongst them the speech of the Minister of the Interior, and I do not think I should undertake to answer that, because it is only a settlement of some difference between the Minister of the Interior and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy.) The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has also wandered wide of the subject under discussion. He has spoken to us of the Jesuits' Estate Act, and told us that the Protestant minority, on account of receiving a certain financial indemnity, were satisfied in the province of Quebec. I do not think that is putting the case in a very flattering way for his co-religionists. However, I have nothing to do with the matter, and I do not think it is relevant to the issue now before the House. It has been said here that the French people were becoming rather liberal, but that the Roman Catholic church was not, and that it was distinguished for its intolerance. I repudiate that statement, but it is not worth while making a defence against it, because a defence is not needed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) has also given us his theories about teaching, and that is also far removed from the motion we are considering. The amendment of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), contains two propositions. The first is, "That this House desires to express its disapproval of the action of the Government on the Manitoba school question." In this point I think all the members on this side of the House agree. The hon. Minister of the Interior has told us that the real cause of the trouble in this matter was the action, or the speeches made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). With that we have nothing to do. The question now is: who is to settle the existing trouble, and will the remedy be applied. The law which the Catholics of the province of Manitoba are complaining of was assented to on the 31st of March, 1890. In the beginning of the next month, on the 4th of April, and at different dates in the same month, memorials and petitions were sent to the Government asking for redress. It has been stated that all these petitions asked that this law should be declared "ultra vires" of the powers of the Legislature of Manitoba; but I do not find that request in all the petitions. I find in the petition dated Winnipeg, April 14th, 1891, which is signed by persons representing the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba, that the prayer is as follows:—

Your petitioners humbly pray that Your Excellency may be pleased to take such action and grant such relief and remedy as to Your Excellency may seem fit and just, and your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

I conclude from this that it did not necessarily follow that disallowance was the only remedy sought by the petitioners. Now, Sir, what did the Government do after having received these petitions? Nothing was done until the month of September following. At that time it was thought proper to institute a case supported by the Government, in the name of one Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg, and it was decided to attack the validity of the Act complained of, by means of that suit. This suit passed through the jurisdiction of the courts of Manitoba, and after those courts had maintained the Acts, it was referred to the Supreme Court. That tribunal declared the Acts to be "ultra vires." On appeal the case was carried to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and there it had a different result. After the judgment of the Privy Council, what did the Government do? They decided to appoint a sub-committee to report as to what should be done; this sub-committee made a report; and finally, on the 22nd of February, 1893, the Government decided to refer the case once more to the Supreme Court to obtain its decision as to whether the Government had any jurisdiction to hear the appeal of these petitioners. What is the justification of the Government in the matter? The Government think that their justification is to be found in a statute passed in 54 and 55 Victoria, that is, in the session of 1891; and it is said that we have no right to complain of the course which the Government are pursuing because that statute was passed at the suggestion of the Hon. Edward Blake. Mr. Speaker, if we look at the dates, we find that the statutes of the province of Manitoba complained of were assented to on the 31st of March, 1890, whereas this reference to the Supreme Court was decided on the 22nd of February, 1893, that is, about three years after the mischief was done. Now, Sir, the Government contend that they are perfectly justified in acting in the way they are doing, but they have waited three years to do so. One of their excuses is that the first petitions which were presented to His Excellency the Governor-General only asked for the disallowance of the Acts in question. As I have already said, there were several courses open to the Government, if they had wished to do justice and deal promptly with the case. In fact, at the time these Acts passed, the remedy which they are applying did not exist. It was only on the 29th of April, 1891, that the resolutions proposed by the Hon. Mr. Blake were passed in this Parliament, and surely it will not be contended that Mr. Blake suggested that legislation for the purpose of shelving such questions as the one now before this House. It will not surely be contended that the intention of Mr. Blake was to set aside the ministerial responsibility of whatever Government would have to deal with the question. However, Sir, if the intention of the Government was to use the legislation suggested by Mr. Blake for such an occurrence as the one that has taken place, I say they ought to have passed it in the same session. The resolution proposed by Mr. Blake was accepted by Sir John Macdonald and it was agreed to by both sides of the House, and the Manitoba legislation which was passed in 1890, might have been followed by a Bill embodying these resolutions in the same session. The session was closed on the 16th of May in the same year, and if the Government had wished to take advantage of that remedy for the wrongs to which their attention had been called by the petition I have referred to, it would have been easy for them to have passed that legislation in the session of 1890. But, Sir, they did not do anything of the kind. It was only in the next session that this Act was passed, and it was only assented to on the 30th day of September, 1891. Even at that date it was not thought of applying this remedy. When the Government consented to accept the resolutions of Mr. Blake and to pass that Act, they should have immediately acted on those resolutions; then the mischief that has been caused might have been avoided, and the question might have been settled in the space of five or six months. But evidently the Government had no such intention. When the sub-committee was appointed, this legislation of 54 and 55 Victoria was not thought of. It was only on the 22nd of February last that it was thought fit to use this remedy which had been suggested by Mr. Blake. They were three years without doing anything, without attempting to bring any relief in this matter. Why, my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), who after all is not a stubborn man, but is quite willing conscientiously to alter his views when the circumstances demand it, might be induced, if this matter were detailed a little more, to vote for this resolution if the question should come back to this House a year later. I say that these arrangements provided on the suggestion of Mr. Blake are no excuse for the Government, because if they had wished to use such a remedy, they should have used it in the same year, that is, in 1890. Now, Sir, because I am not a judge, I will allow myself to give an opinion upon the question which is, I think, the main question. The Government are submitting a case to the Supreme Court to decide whether or not they have jurisdiction in this matter, whether they have a right to hear the appeal of the petitions from the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba. If we examine all the statutes bearing on this matter, it is very difficult to come to any other conclusion, and I fail to see how this ministry, embracing as it does half a dozen men learned in the law, could hold any different views. I go further. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) did not even attempt to deny that the minority had that right of appeal; but although he did not deny that the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba had a right to petition, he said their appeal should be dismissed, because, after all, as long as that law has been declared to be constitutional and "intra vires" the local legislature, it is not so bad. He distinctly admitted the right of petition, and consequently admitted the right of the Government to hear the case. If you admit that these people have the right to petition the Government, you admit that the Government whom they petition have the right to hear the case. And this was the opinion given us by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). If you examine the law, you will see that the admission of Manitoba into the Dominion was foreseen before it became an accomplished fact. I take the liberty of quoting section 146 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:—

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council on address from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada and from the Houses of the respective legislatures of the colonies or the provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, to admit those colonies or provinces, or any of them, into the Union, and on address from the Houses of Parliament of Canada to admit Rupert's Land and the North-west Territories or either of them into the Union, on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the addresses expressed and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act; and the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

It is distinctly stated in this clause of the British North America Act, that, on addresses from the Houses of Parliament, Rupert's Land and the North-west Territories, or either of them, may be admitted into the Union, on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the addresses expressed, and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act. Under that section, it was provided that sooner or later this territory of Manitoba would come into the Union and form part of this Confederation, and it was stated there that this would be done subject to the provisions of this Act. This legislation was followed by the Manitoba Act of 1870, and the statute which was then passed provides, by the first section, for the admission of a certain territory which now forms the province of Manitoba. And the second clause states this:

On, from and after the said day on which the order of the Queen in Council shall take effect as aforesaid, the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, shall, except those parts thereof which are in terms made, or, by reasonable intentment, may be held to be specially applicable to, or only to affect one or more, but not the whole of the provinces now composing the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by this Act, be applicable to the province of Manitoba in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the several provinces of Canada, and as if the province of Manitoba had been one of the provinces originally united by the said Act.

I say that by the clause I have cited, 146 of the British North America Act, it was provided that this territory, which now forms the province of Manitoba, should become a part of this Confederation, and when these was done by the statute of 1870, this provisions of the British North America Act were extended to that province. Because it was thought proper to make additional legislation and to deal with the question of education, by section 22 of the Manitoba Act, will it be said that this section 22 had the effect of superseding section 93 of the British North America Act? I might find support for my argument in the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in this very same case, and on this very same question, I must say that I am far from sharing the opinion of their Lordships, the judges who sat on this case in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. When one reads the notes of the judges of our Supreme Court of Canada, he is perfectly satisfied that these gentlemen understand the circumstances and the interests of the country, and the necessities created by the different origins and the different religions of the people, and their judgment seems to be far more in accordance with our past legislation and far more in accordance with the state of affairs which has been established in this whole Dominion for so many years past. But I say this, that I can find a support in the decision of the Committee of the Privy Council, in the case of Barrett.

and Winnipeg. I believe that they have applied the law in the most narrow and literal mode that could be imagined. They have decided that the rights and privileges which we gave the minority in Manitoba were not affected by rights existing at the time of the Union, because there were no separate schools recognized by law at the time of the Union and because the schools which they enjoyed by practice were schools that they could enjoy now and which are not prejudicially affected by the new legislation. They pretend that, under the common law, public schools might be established and that private schools, established and supported by voluntary and private contributions, and by the churches of the different denominations, could also continue to exist. I do not see, at the end of this century, in a Christian community, any earthly reason why this provision should have been made just for the sake of allowing us to support private schools by our own contributions. Nobody would imagine that it was necessary to make a law to allow the people of any denomination to support a school, to allow parents to pay their own money to engage teachers and professors to carry on a school for any denomination whatever. This is a very narrow and literal and technical application of the statute. Find me in the statutes something that repeals the 93rd section of the British North America Act, which rules our system of education in every province of this Dominion. Find me in the Manitoba Act a section which supersedes the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act. If we are to apply the law in such a literal fashion as proposed, we are bound by the decision to say that the legislation in the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act is simply additional to the 93rd section of the British North America Act. It follows in a very clear and incontrovertible way that there is no question as to the jurisdiction of the Government to hear these complaints. They want to avoid a decision upon the equity of the case; they want to avoid a conflict between Protestants and Catholics. They are threatened by some of their own friends with a vote of want of confidence. We heard the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), for instance, threatening the Government, that if they dared to interfere with the Manitoba school legislation, he would vote against them and against any government that would undertake to interfere with those laws. If this question had been settled six months after the receipt of the first petition, we should have avoided all this trouble. But, Sir, the more we delay, the more difficult the case will be to settle. The hon. member for Winnipeg is not the only man who has threatened the Government. The hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Craig), also made the same threat, that if they undertook to interfere with this legislation he would vote against them. What will be the position of the Government a few months hence, suppose they get a decision from the Supreme Court, and that the decision is favourable to the minority in Manitoba. They will be in this position that, perhaps, two-thirds of their friends will surely vote against them if they interfere with this legislation. Then they will be between their duty and their political existence. That is the position brought about by delaying the settlement of this question. Like the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly), I have waited my turn to speak, and I may say that some hon. gentlemen on this side have taken my turn. I do not wish to delay the House longer, but I would have been glad of an opportunity to discuss the legal question at some length. We cannot have any hesitation in supporting the motion proposed by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), for the reason that the Government has never shown itself willing to do its duty in this matter. The Government has shown that it did not want to deal with this question, but to put it off, and, in fact, to refuse to do justice. The hon. Solicitor-General (Mr. Curran), last night, speaking of the case of Barrett vs. the City of Winnipeg, and referring to the opinion of the judges, told us that Mr. Barrett had no case, because the rate levied on Roman Catholic schools did not affect him, he not being interested, as he did not own any share in the school-houses or in the chattels. If that is so, the Government is to blame. If they had wanted to have a complete decision, why did they not take a man qualified to be a proper plaintiff, a man whose claims would open every question which the courts were called upon to decide? The argument presented by the Solicitor-General seems to me perfectly preposterous, and the failure of the Government in this respect gives us another reason to support the motion of my hon. friend from L'Islet. Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I limit my remarks to these few words. I would have wished to deal with the legal question at greater length, but I think it would be almost a provocation if I should do so.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not rise at this hour in the morning to make a speech on this question, or to delay hon. members by standing between the House and the division we are all so anxious to reach. But I wish to say one word to explain the position I take in regard to this question. I might, perhaps, not even have inflicted these few remarks on the House, had it not been for what has fallen from my hon. friend the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien.) Some of the remarks he has made, I think, render it incumbent upon me to put myself right, at all events. I confess that, although I have a great personal regard for my hon. friend, I was very much surprised and disappointed at some of the remarks he thought fit to make in his place in this House to-night. I do think that my hon. friend should extend to others who differ from him, the same courtesy that he would fairly expect to receive himself; I do not think that he ought to attribute to those who differ from him, motives less pure than those which actuate himself. My hon. friend told us that those who supported the Government contention in this matter desired to delude the country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. McNEILL. I took down the words. If my hon. friend wishes to withdraw the expression, I shall be very glad indeed.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I did not mean to say they desired to delude the country; I said they were deluding the country.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend did not mean to say they desired to delude the country. I am quite willing to accept his statement, and very glad indeed that I have induced him to make that statement. Sir, my hon. friend, I think (unintentionally, I am sure) was most unfair to the Government in the remarks he made. He said the Government had referred this matter to the courts for the express purpose of obtaining power to interfere with the legislation of the province, and that that was the only reason conceivable for their having so referred the question. Now, Mr. Speaker, I entirely differ from that view of my hon. friend. I say that had I been in a position to deal with this question, and had I made up my mind that I would not interfere with the legislation of the province in this regard, I would, under these circumstances, have referred the matter to the courts. I think, and it is admitted by every one who has given consideration to questions of this kind, that it is of the utmost importance to obtain the decision of the courts in such cases, and to remove such questions as this as far as possible from the arena of party politics. Every one knows that a final decision of the court, could it be obtained, in reference to this question, would be far less likely to stir up bad blood in the country, to move men's passions and prejudices, than the decision of a political body like the Government. Therefore, I say that in place of the Government pronouncing upon this question in the first instance, the proper course for them to take was to refer it to the courts in case, perchance, a decision of the courts should be the final decision. If the courts decide that the Government cannot hear the appeal, that is a final decision of the matter; and if I had made up my mind, as I have already said, that I should refuse to interfere, I should endeavour to obtain the decision of the court in the hope of preventing thereby the ill-will and the excitement which would be very likely to arise in the country by my giving the decision myself. Therefore, I think that my hon. friend was utterly unfair to the Government in making the statement that they could only have referred this question for the purpose of obtaining power to interfere with the legislation of the province. For these reasons I do not share the views of those who would censure the Government in that respect. But I wish to say this (notwithstanding the remarks of my hon. friend) that holding the view I have endeavoured to express to the House, I also wish to express this other view, which, so far from being inconsistent with the view I have expressed, is, I think, wholly consistent with it, and that is, that if this Government or any other Government shall bring down a measure to interfere with the legislation of the province of Manitoba by imposing a system of separate schools upon the province against its will, I shall most assuredly record my vote against that Government if I have at the time the honour of a seat in this House.

Mr. FAUVEL. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much attention to the able exposé of the intentions of the Government, by the hon. Prime Minister, regarding this momentous and vexed question, and as I presume this is the last occasion during this session that we shall have the pleasure of seeing him in our midst, I take this opportunity, on behalf of myself and my fellow members on this side of the House, to wish him God-speed in his voyage across the Atlantic. I am much surprised at the attitude taken by the hon. member of Provencher regarding his co-religionists in the province of his adoption. I admit that I expected that he would have proved a champion for the rights of the oppressed against the oppressor, but party spirit, the exigence of a chief is paramount above any other consideration on the part of the hon. member for Provencher. Since the last three years, we have heard a great deal of this much vexed question on the Manitoba School and Dual Language Bills of Mr. Greenway's Government. Speaking from an unbiassed point of view, that of a French Huguenot Protestant, I admire the tact and ability of the hon. member for L'Islet in placing his resolutions before the House. The hon. member of L'Islet has portrayed in most glowing language, the want of faith on the part of the Government on shelving this burning question to another court outside its jurisdiction. The highest tribunal in the land is most assuredly this House—and I say, Mr. Speaker, that to this House the question should have been placed. For the past twenty years the French population of Manitoba have enjoyed the same privileges regarding their faith and schools as minorities should have in other provinces of the Dominion. Speaking in all fairness, have our French countrymen in Manitoba deserved this treatment, that they should be deprived of the same privileges that are enjoyed by the Protestant population of the province of Quebec? Speaking from a religious point of view, I protest against such unwarranted steps. I appeal to the good sense of the Protestant community, not only of the province of Quebec, but of all other sister provinces of this Dominion, that were they placed in the same position as the French population of Manitoba are to-day, would they give up their rights without a struggle? They would not. For my part I would not do so. What object is there to be gained by withholding the rights and privileges to the Catholics of Manitoba? Is it that the French language is so distasteful to the majority of the English population of Manitoba? Have not the French Catholics of the province of Quebec assisted towards populating that province, and who now by their numbers are placing a barrier to future social engagement between two races. Are we to see in the western portion of this country religious warfare fought over again? Are we to see the French Huguenot wars fought over again? Must we see the Condès, Guises and others of French historical religious warfare, drown in blood our prairie province? What encouragement will the Government give to immigrants from France and other Catholic countries to settle in that province? Must we see the solemn compact entered into by the several provinces in 1867 destroyed by an unlawful Act of an English-speaking Government of Manitoba? Will party spirit rise paramount above justice and equal rights to one and all? I am really surprised at the intolerance and bigotry displayed by the Protestant portion of this country. A more liberal spirit, as the hon. member for L'Islet stated to-day, prevails in the province of Quebec by the French Catholics in favour of the Protestant minority. I have the honour to represent a constituency in which three-fourths of the population are Catholics, and although my opponent was a Roman Catholic, I obtained the moral support of the majority of the clergy of the county. This is a lesson against intolerance to the hon. members from Ontario. The advantages of the dual language in any country are manifold. How many members on both sides of the House who would wish to be cognizant of the French language? What an advantage to a young man on commencing life to be gifted with the use of two languages. With a population of 2,000,000 of French people in this Dominion, the use of the dual language is really indispensable towards their future success in life. The hon. member for L'Islet, standing on the strength of his convictions, and having arrayed against him all the armour and strength of a strong Government, won a victory in his county, which was an honour to himself and to those who assisted him. Can the French Conservative members of this House vote conscientiously against those principles of fair-play, as stated by the resolution brought down by the hon. member for L'Islet? I am confident that they are voting against their own interests and of the population whom they represent. The only colonists who, having left their country and settled elsewhere, and have never lost their nationality, are the French. Take the province of Quebec, the Island of Bourbon as British possessions, and Louisiana in the United States, colonized by the French people, all retain the language of Louis XIV., and with glorious recollections of the "fleur de lis." And should we Protestants and English people endeavour through narrow prejudices to destroy such a nationality, shall we endeavour to deprive them of educating their children in the faith of their ancestors, shall intolerance rise rampant in the land? No; I am confident that common sense and only common sense will prevail—will give liberty to those who ask for it, and it will not be a vain word—the word "liberty." Do we appreciate to its full extent that glorious word, for which so many have fought, bled and died? In Canada I consider that it is the most glorious country for liberty. I would implore my countrymen to think well and wisely to give justice to the minorities that now demand our help, and it recalls to my mind the memorable words of William Pitt on the opening of the American War of Independence on his motion before the English House of Parliament to withdraw the English troops from Boston: "Were I an American, as I am an Englishman, and a foreign force was landed on my native shores, I would never lay down my arms, no never, never." And, Mr. Speaker, were I a French Manitoban and be compelled to forego the use of my language, I would never cave in, no, never never, never.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Tarte):

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Indians—Nova Scotia—To provide an additional amount for medical attendance..... $1,200

Committee rose and reported resolution.

Mr. FAUVEL.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 5.50 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 9th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked, What is the number of manufacturers, according to the last census in the following places : The town of Victoriaville, and the villages of Arthabaskaville, Princeville and Warwick ?

Mr. FOSTER. I may say generally with regard to this and the other questions about manufacturing industries, that the department tells me that in order to answer these questions, some special compilations have to be made. They cannot take them from the compilations already made. They have an extra force on, and are making these as quickly as possible ; so I cannot give an answer to these questions to-day. They are in the nature of Orders of the House for returns, anyway.

MR. T. J. WALSH.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether T. J. Walsh was paid a sum of money for revising a "Ready Reckoner" ? If so, how much ? Is he the same T. J. Walsh who is a superannuated officer of the Dominion, drawing an annual allowance of $1,050 per annum ? Will the Minister, when answering this question lay on the Table of the House a copy of the "Ready Reckoner" ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In reply to that question. I find that the person named here, T. J. Walsh, was an officer of the Inland Revenue and is now retired on the retired list. The subject of the "Ready Reckoner" comes to my recollection. It was prepared by that officer, some years ago, for the purpose of assisting in the reckoning of timber dues in the Cullers' Office. The officers there, and the merchants interested in the lumber trade reported that not only was it of great convenience, but it secured a reduction of work in the office, consequent upon the new system of calculating. I myself recommended the payment of $100 or $150, and that was paid to this officer some years ago while I was at the head of the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister has failed to answer a portion of my question.

Will he lay on the Table a copy of the "Ready Reckoner" ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will see that a copy of that "Ready Reckoner" is brought down.

THE VACANCY IN VAUDREUIL.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like an answer to the question I put yesterday, as to whether a returning officer has been appointed for the county of Vaudreuil ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

Mr. LAURIER. As the Prime Minister is leaving to-day for Europe, I do not find very much fault if the appointment has not yet been made, but I expect that it will be made this week, otherwise I shall be entitled to complain of a serious grievance.

Mr. FOSTER. I will bear it in mind.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FRASER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a matter that occurred in April last. I had an Order of the House granted for :

Return showing the total amount of liabilities incurred by the Dominion under any Statutes or Votes of Parliament, whether for unpaid railway subsidies, unfinished public works, or other purposes.

I find that return is not brought down. I went to the officer of the department in regard to it, and was told that the return was never brought down at all. I want it. I expected, of course, it would be here when I came back this session, and I made particular inquiries yesterday, and was told it had never been brought down. I would like to have that return ; it is a matter of some importance.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will just send me the name of the return, I will inquire where it is.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Last session I moved for a return with reference to canal contracts, railway contracts and public works contracts, towards the close of the session. The Order was made by the House, but I have not got the return yet. The return is important, and I ask the Minister if he will see that it is brought down at once. I was aware that the return, if not voluminous, would require a good deal of time to prepare, and, therefore, I did not complain that it was not brought down last year. But I desire to secure it as early as possible. I also desire to ask the Government if they are in a position to give me information respecting the telegram which appears in the Montreal "Herald," in which it is stated that the steamer "Stanley" has been badly disabled. Can the Minister of Finance state officially what is the nature of the damage, and whether the vessel can be repaired so as to be able to resume her service ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have received the information which the hon. gentleman desires. It appears that the seas being more heavy than usual, the blades of the vessel's propeller came in contact with heavy ice. She is now laid up and undergoing repairs of a temporary character. The broken blades will be supplied temporarily by blades on hand, until the new ones, now ordered from Scotland, can be obtained. The repairs will be completed as soon as possible.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the deputy any idea when the steamer will be able to resume her service ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot give any definite answer, but every possible exertion will be made to have her again placed on service at the earliest date possible.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is important that the public should know whether the steamer will resume at an early day. I shall be much obliged if the hon. gentleman will communicate with those in charge of the steamer so that he may be able to state approximately when she will be able to resume.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I shall endeavour to obtain definite information as early as possible.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will bring down at an early day the return with respect to pig iron ordered on 6th February ?

Mr. FOSTER. I will do so.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Hospital on Blood Reserve.....$800

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been the total cost of this hospital ?

Mr. DALY. A grant of $2,500 was made last session for the building, and the sum asked is required for furnishing it.
