Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman has asked the House to read a Bill for the first time that is misleading the House. That is a thing that ought not to be done. If there are mistakes in the Bill, the Minister who has charge of the measure ought to have brought them under the attention of the House. He ought not to permit a Bill to be read the first time without pointing out the mistakes of that sort that exist in the measure. But I point out that the Bill which hon. gentlemen put upon the Statute-book before, is a Bill which undertakes to shift from the shoulders of the Government, or the Ministers, to a Deputy-Minister, a certain amount of responsibility that ought ever to remain with the Minister himself who is the head of the department. Then, look at the provisions of this Bill with regard to the appointment of this officer whom the leader of the Opposition has designated a mere police officer, an officer whose business it is to visit the various departments, and to determine whether they are efficiently conducted, whether the parties employed in those departments efficiently discharge their duty. Why, Sir, whoever undertakes this work must have the knowledge possessed by the deputy-head of every department of Government in this country. The man who is best able to determine whether a department is properly constituted, whether it is properly organized, is the responsible Minister of the Crown to whom Parliament has intrusted the functions of a Minister. He ought to have discretionary power, his power ought to continue discretionary, but for the exercise of that power he ought to be responsible to Parliament. If he discharges his duty, he is best qualified to say whether a department requires to be differently constituted or not. If his deputy properly discharges his duties, he knows whether every person employed under him is engaged in the performance of the work which his appointment requires that he should perform, and if he fails in that, if he fails to keep the Minister informed as to the efficiency and competency of the men under him, he is neglecting his duty, and the sooner the Minister assumes the responsibility of getting rid of him and appointing another party in his place, the better it will be for the service. When I look at the provisions of this section it would seem to indicate that there is some party who wishes a larger salary than the Government can at present pay him, some party who may be a disgruntled Deputy-Minister, for aught I know, and who, in addition to the discharge of his duties as such, is to have imposed upon him those police duties for which this Bill provides, and who is to receive this additional sum for the performance of these additional duties. I do not know whether that is so or not. The Minister can inform the House whether that be true.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman should know if he has read the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman had properly explained his Bill, we would have been informed. But we do not know what ought to be in the Bill that is not here. But this much we do know, that it is an attempt to shift upon the shoulders of men who are supposed to be obedient servants of the Administration, the duty of saying what changes shall be made, and what appointments shall be made in the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell):

No clerkship or office of packer, messenger or sorter shall be created by Order in Council, except upon the report of the deputy-head setting forth the necessity therefor, accompanied by a report.

Why should that be so?

Mr. FOSTER. It is the law now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say so, and I said so already, but it ought not to be the law. The hon. gentleman would come down to the House and say that if an objectionable recommendation has been made it was his Deputy-Minister who made it.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been that way ever since we had a Civil Service.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, Sir; we do not want to interpose between the responsibility of Ministers to this House in the discharge of their duties as Ministers, any one deputy or otherwise, who apparently limit the power that a Minister should possess, but who really carry out the Minister's behests. Why should we say that a deputy should make such a recommendation?

Mr. FOSTER. For the very reason that the deputy knows the work of the office.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the Minister's business to know the work of the office.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister did not know when you were in office.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is speaking beyond his knowledge. The Minister, if he does his duty, knows as well as the deputy; it is impossible that it can be otherwise. The theory of our Government is not that the Deputy-Minister is responsible, but that the Minister is responsible, and if the Minister is responsible we ought not to impose limitations upon the discretionary authority of the Minister. Let the hon. gentleman look at the English organization as set out by Mr. Todd. Does he find any such limitation there upon the authorities of Ministers? There is but one limitation, and that is with regard to appointments to office. Limitations have been imposed by the Act providing for competitive examination of parties who are to be appointed. Sir, every provision of this Act is objectionable on the lines I have mentioned. In section 7, subsection 3, we read:

No officer, clerk or employee shall be considered deserving of such increase unless he has received 75 per cent of the maximum number of points obtainable for attendance and conduct.

Here is a Minister who ought to have power, who ought to have imposed upon him the responsibility of dismissing a man who fails to come to his office, to remain there, and to discharge the duties that devolve upon him. But instead of that, you propose to treat him as a pupil at school, to mark his attendance, and to say whether he comes early or late, whether he is regular or irregular, whether he discharges his duty or does not; you give him a certain number of marks, and if he does not get 75 per cent he can get no promotion and no additional salary. I want to know whether there is not an exhibition of imbecility about an arrangement of that sort, that is sufficient to paralyze the efficiency of any Government? There can be no doubt about that. All these limitations that we are undertaking to impose by statute are limitations thoroughly inconsistent with the principles of parliamentary government and of ministerial responsibility. Let hon. gentlemen have the wide discretionary power that ought to belong to Ministers, and let them be held by this House to a strict responsibility for the efficiency or the inefficiency of the officers that are in their service. Every clause of this Bill is a clause that, if acted upon, if carried out, imposes obstacles in the way of an efficient Administration, and will seriously interfere with everything like a proper and efficient discharge of the public duties of public officers. It is because I hold those views, and hold them very strongly, not only with regard to this measure, but the one which we are undertaking to amend by it, that I support the motion of my hon. friend beside me. The law is bad enough as it is, and we should move in the opposite direction instead of undertaking to impose further restrictions, which are delusive and illusive, because they can never be carried out. The Government is master of the situation, and the Government in pretending to tie their own hands are simply using the deputies, using those whose reports are required, to cover a responsibility which under our system ought to devolve on them, and as a matter of fact actually does devolve on them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. COSTIGAN. I would ask the House to accord me the opportunity of offering a few further remarks on this question. I simply made the proposition to the House that, in view of the changes it will be necessary to make in this Bill, not to ask for the second reading with a view to proceeding with the Bill immediately, not to ask the House to go into committee, but to take advantage of the present opportunity, with the consent of hon. members, to take this step and obtain the second reading of the Bill, so as to afford me an opportunity of informing the House as to the several changes I would ask hon. members to sanction, which changes I would have printed and laid before the hon. members for their consideration, when, with these printed changes in their hands, they could consider the whole Bill, not the objectionable points which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has discussed now. I do not want a discussion now—I did not expect a discussion to arise to-day on this Bill. Look at the position in which the leader of the Opposition wishes to place me. If any hon. gentleman objected to the second reading being moved to-day, I simply say I would not ask for the second reading. If the House will give me the second reading, "pro forma," I will take the opportunity to state the amendments which I will have printed and laid before the House, and I will give the fullest information before we take another step in the consideration of this Bill. If the hon. gentleman had stated that he did not wish the second reading to be moved until full information had been given to the House, I would not have moved it. But the hon. gentleman took a very different course, and I am sorry he adopted it. If the hon. gentleman had said that he did not wish the second reading to be moved, until the proposed amendments had been printed, I should then have said that I regarded his objection as a proper one and I would not ask for the second reading. But the hon. gentleman simply took the ground that the motion for second reading having been moved, he was in a position to move the six months' hoist. That is not the way I would treat the hon. gentleman. That is what I complain of.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not see the hon. gentleman has any cause for complaint. I treated the motion moved by the hon. gentleman according to the well-known parliamentary rules. The hon. gentleman moved the second reading of the Bill, and stated, at the same time, that he wanted to make certain explanations and amendments. I have no objection to the adoption of that course.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the House consented?

Mr. LAURIER. The moment the hon. gentleman moved the second reading, it was apparent that he persisted in upholding the principle of the Bill. Is it not evident that, since the hon. gentleman asked the House to agree to the second reading, he persisted in the principle of the Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. LAURIER. I object to the principle of the Bill, and, whether the hon. gentleman takes the second reading to-day or not, I object to it, and I shall continue to object to it. If the hon. gentleman wants to introduce a new Bill, let him withdraw the present one; but, if he persists in upholding the principle of this Bill, I persist in my amendment.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The Government would act wisely if they withdrew the Bill altogether. The Bill is objectionable on principle, it is impossible in practice, and it is a Bill that will degrade and humiliate the Civil Service. It will be impossible for any man retaining his self-respect to remain in the service, or for any such man to enter it, if the provisions of the Bill are carried into effect. It is not only open to the objections taken by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), which are most serious objections, but it is unquestionably a method by which Ministers will endeavour to escape the responsibility due to this House and the country. It is part of a system by which we are gradually endeavouring, in all sorts of ways, to escape the ministerial responsibility. It is not only apparent in this measure, but in a great many others. There is not a member of the Civil Service who does not object to the Bill. There is no Bill brought in this session or any previous session, open to the number of objections to which this Bill is liable. I object to the principle of it, and to every detail of it, and so far the explanations of the Secretary of State do not appear to make the Bill a particle better than it is now. If the Government are wise, they will withdraw the Bill altogether, and endeavour to bring, another session, if they must bring down such a measure, a Bill that will not be liable to such numerous and insuperable objections as can be presented against the present one. It is not only objectionable in detail, but objectionable in principle, and I cannot believe that members of this House who have taken the trouble to read it and consider its effect on the service, can possibly support it. I am very certain I do not stand alone on this side of the House in objecting to this Bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the House will allow me, I will withdraw the motion for the second reading.

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can move the second reading another time when the amendments are prepared.

Mr. LAURIER. When you choose to do so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I move that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will to-morrow ever come?

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—THE CARON COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to call the attention of the House to the evidence which has been laid before the House, and which was taken by the Royal Commission appointed last session to make inquiries in regard to certain charges relating to the Postmaster-General. It will be remembered, Sir, that this inquiry was taken out of my hands altogether. My charges were voted down, and other charges, not the same, were substituted for them by the Government, and, therefore, I had naturally supposed that when the evidence was laid before the House, the Government would have been in a position to bring something before the House upon the subject, or to make some recommendation to the House as to how this evidence of their own commission should be dealt with. But as the Government have made no move in the matter, or have delayed doing so up to this late period of the session, I feel, having read the evidence over very carefully, that I should bring it to the attention of the House. I see, Sir, as I dare say many other members of the House have also observed, that the authorities of the Printing Bureau have undertaken to put a heading to this blue-book. They head it all through, in the evidence and in the exhibits, as in a law case, "Edgar versus Caron." Well, Sir, I think that if they required a heading of that kind, considering that my charges were taken out of my hands and that Mr. Mackenzie Bowell made other charges which were referred, the heading would have been much more properly, "Bowell versus Caron." However, ever since

I have been in this House, and in public life, I have endeavoured, in all my political battles, as strongly as I know how, to separate political differences from my personal relations, and I was very sorry that the printers had thought it necessary to make a sort of a personal charge of this case. I think the most I would have consented to have inserted as a heading would be "the member for West Ontario against the Postmaster-General," and so I think we will take it to be. Now, I do not wish to trouble the House with any personal discussion as to whether I was right or wrong in not appearing before this Royal Commission to assist in the prosecution of charges which were not mine. Those members of the House who desire to inform themselves of my views, can do so by referring to the blue-book which is before us, and which contains a couple of letters from me to the commissioners, setting forth my views on that subject. However, I would like to say this, that whether I was right or wrong in declining to appear before that commission, I had, in that course, the unanimous support of the independent press of Canada, as far as I have been able to read their utterances. I was thoroughly and absolutely backed up by the Montreal "Star," the Hamilton "Herald," the Ottawa "Evening Journal," the Newmarket "Era," the Toronto "Evening News," the "Week," the Toronto "Telegram," the Toronto "Mail," and the Montreal "Witness." I have here quotations from all of them thoroughly endorsing my position in that matter. However, that is a personal affair with which I do not desire to encumber the consideration of this important case. I wish also to frankly admit, in reading over the evidence taken and the proceedings of the Royal Commission, I think no fault can be found with the rulings of the commissioners themselves. But I am sorry that I cannot say as much with regard to the counsel for the Crown. I could point out, and possibly I may incidentally refer to, many cases where they stopped short, and did not follow inquiries which would have led, evidently, to many more disclosures, but, of course, they had a hard road to travel. They were counsel employed by the Ministers to prosecute another Minister, and that their position was a very delicate and painful one, I must admit. So, I suppose, we must make some allowance for them, but I have been told by an eyewitness of the proceedings of that commission, that there were mysterious secret whisperings going on at the trial between the counsel for the prosecution and the counsel for the defence; and I have been often told that the junior counsel for the prosecution was careful to obtain copies of portions of the evidence, which he thought was exculpating the defendant, and to press upon the newspaper men that they should publish those parts of the evidence which he thought would tell in favour of Sir Adolphe Carou. I am glad now that I did not place myself in the tender mercies of those gentlemen as counsel, when they generously offered to act for me in the matter. The charge was made against me more than once, not by the Postmaster-General himself, but by some of his rather unwise friends, that I was afraid to make these charges, which I made against him, openly and outside the shelter of my privilege as a member of this House. Well, I felt that it was my duty to first lay before this House any charges of a public character that I had to make against a member of this Government. It was within my right, and I think it was my bounden duty to do so. If I had gone outside this Parliament and talked at large about charges against the Government, I would have been at once met with the answer that I was afraid to bring them up face to face with the Minister on the floor of this House. So I brought them up first fairly and squarely here, but when I was told that I was sheltering myself behind my parliamentary privileges, I did not lose a great deal of time in withdrawing from that shelter completely. Hon. members will see in this blue-book a copy of my letter, of the 13th of September, addressed to the commissioners, in which I reiterated positively every word of the charges I made in this House, and which I caused to be published, over my own signature, in a number of the leading newspapers of Canada. That certainly was withdrawing from all shelter that I have as a member of this House. And then, that there might be no mistake about that matter whatever, some time ago, when I had the pleasure of meeting, on the public platform in North Hastings, the leader of the Government in the Senate, Mr. Mackenzie Bowell, I repeated every single word of my charges on the public platform, and challenged him on behalf of his colleague, to bring me into any court in Canada and give me an opportunity to prove them, and I would show him whether I could do so or not, so that he would say nothing more about my being a coward and sheltering myself behind my privileges in Parliament. I propose now to address myself to the evidence contained in this blue-book, and to show what is proved by it. I propose also to verify every statement which I shall make to this House by referring to the page of the evidence, so that hon. gentlemen on both sides may have ample opportunity of verifying the accuracy of my statements. I shall not seek either to twist the evidence to suit any charge, but shall seek to ascertain what fair and indisputable conclusions should be drawn from the evidence, as I find it here between the covers of this book, and to that evidence I propose to ask the consideration of this House. Now, Sir, I will first call attention to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, and the Construction Company in connection with the railway, which was called the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, Lumbering and Trading Company. But as that is a lumbering name to use very often, I will only refer to it as the Construction Company, and I will ask your attention while I show you the relations which those companies held towards the Dominion Government in the way of subsidies, and towards Sir Adolphe Caron. Because I think, Mr. Speaker, when considering evidence of this nature upon charges of this kind I am within parliamentary rules, when I refer to the Postmaster-General by his private name. If I am not right, Sir, I will not do so. Now, then, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company was the originator of an important railway scheme. But the Construction Company was the contracting company that undertook to build the road. Page 90 of the evidence shows that. The relationship between the railway company proper and the Constructing Company is shown in exhibit "J S 3." at page 516 of the exhibit, and the relations were briefly these: The contracting company undertook to build the road and also agreed to do it for the consideration of the transfer to them, the Construction Company, of all the subsidies of all kinds, municipal, provincial and Dominion, which were then to be obtained. That contract was entered into on 30th April, 1878. So at that time the Construction Company, you will observe, became the contractor for the railway, became entitled to receive every dollar of Dominion subsidies for the construction of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway. That is a very important point to bear in mind. Now, Sir, what was Sir Adolphe Caron's relationship to the Construction Company? Why, Sir, he became a shareholder of that company in 1879, and his stock of $2,500 in that company—which is, I think, in error, once or twice in the evidence put down as $25,000; it was only $2,500—represented the interest, he says, of his firm, the firm of Andrews, Caron & Andrews, in that stock. Be that as it may, he was interested in it, and he was a shareholder, and the stock stood in his name, and, moreover, he also became, in 1879, a director of that company. I refer to pages 98 and 221 of the evidence. Now, at that time he undoubtedly was a shareholder and a director in a construction company absolutely and entirely interested in the whole Dominion subsidy. He was a private member of this House at that time, and he became a Minister in November, 1880. When he became a Minister, the railway or the Railway Construction Company had received no grant of Dominion subsidy. But, not very long after that, they did receive considerable amounts of railway subsidies. Now, after the entry of Sir Adolphe Caron into the Government, in 1880, and before the 10th July, 1883, when there was a change in the Construction Company, they had received public grants, at least votes, from the Dominion of Canada to these amounts: In 1882, a subsidy of $384,000, and in 1883, a subsidy of $80,000; in all, $464,000 of subsidy. Remember that all that time Sir Adolphe Caron was a shareholder and a director in this company. Now, a change occurred in the position of the Construction Company on 10th July, 1883, and it was this: They had been building the railway, and they sublet or assigned the work which they had undertaken, to Mr. H. J. Beemer. And the contract which the Construction Company entered into with Mr. Beemer appears in exhibit "J S 2" at page 442. And what was his obligation? He was, under that contract, to build the railway to Lake St. John. And what did the Construction Company propose to give him for that? The Construction Company proposed to transfer to him, and did transfer to him, as you will see at page 444, all unpaid subsidies, "now or hereafter acquired. So Mr. H. J. Beemer became the assignee and recipient of the Dominion Government subsidies already voted or to be acquired after the date of his contract. Then, the company also agreed, under that contract, to use every effort to procure for Mr. Beemer additional Government subsidies. And, Sir, I might as well mention here to the House, that, not only was Sir Adolphe Caron at that time a director of the Construction Company—when the Construction Company made the contract with Mr. Beemer—but that Sir Adolphe Caron was present at both the meetings of the directors at which the contract with Mr. Beemer was considered, and at which it was ordered to be executed, as will be seen at pages 552 and 553 of the exhibits. And, Sir, that was part of the conditions of this contract. But there was a very extraordinary provision in this contract, inuring entirely to the benefit, the future benefit, the prospective benefit of the Construction Company and its shareholders. I will draw attention particularly to this clause. There was a recital in clause 5, that the company's outlay in time, labour and money is put down by mutual consent at $450,000; by mutual consent of the Construction Company, of which Sir Adolphe Caron was a director, and Mr. Beemer, contractor, the outlay was put down at $450,000, which Mr. Beemer agreed to pay back to the Construction Company out of the bonds and subsidies. There is the position. In addition to that, he agreed to pay Sir Adolphe Caron and his fellow directors and shareholders of the Construction Company, $11,000 per annum for office expenses. Now, Sir, when I tell you that the whole subscribed stock—not the paid-up stock; we do not know how much was paid up; there is no evidence of it—the whole subscribed stock of this Construction Company, at the outside figure, was $94,250, as will be seen at page 98 of the evidence, then you will see that this bargain, made on 10th July, 1883, with Mr. Beemer, the contractor, was to give them more than 450 per cent upon their entire subscribed capital. I think that was better than some of the cotton combines. Of course, in 1880, the Minister removed from Quebec to Ottawa and has been living here since. He was able, however, to he in Quebec, as I have told you, at two meetings of the directors, when this important contract with Mr. Beemer was being entered into. He says himself, at page 222, that he knew nothing of what was going on in this matter; that he only occasionally went down to Quebec and dropped in at the meetings to shake hands with his friends. Well, he took a very fortunate opportunity of shaking hands at those two meetings, when Mr. Beemer's contract was being put through; that is all I can say. However, there was another branch of the business, that was done in Ottawa, the most important branch of the business for them. They had put Beemer to work on the road; they had agreed to get subsidies for him from Ottawa, and they were to get $450,000 out of the road, when it was finished, or out of the bonds of the road, if it could be finished with subsidies, and, therefore, the biggest part of their business had to be done at Ottawa, and had to be done in the Dominion Government, in recommending subsidies to this House. Was not Sir Adolphe Caron here during all that time? Was he not in the Government? And what do they say about that? The secretary of the company, Mr. Scott, at page 105, says:

The company did apply for subsidies very frequently. Some they got, and some not.

But he says, also, at page 1055, that he received "loyal assistance from Sir Adolphe Caron." "Loyal assistance"—that is where the loyalty comes in. Sir Adolphe Caron claims, at page 222, that, of course, he took an interest in this road, as a representative of that district, and also as a Quebecker; he naturally took an interest in this matter. But Mr. Scott, the secretary, at page 106, also says that "Sir Adolphe Caron was fully informed of all our proceedings with reference to subsidies." Of course he was. He was in the very position to do them good. Mr. Scott also says, at page 112 of this book, that "our only chance to get $450,000 was to have the road finished." Of course we know that the road could not be finished without subsidies, and was not finished without subsidies. Well, that $450,000 is still unpaid, has never been paid by Mr. Beemer yet, but subsidies have been granted from time to time until the votes upon the Statute-book since Sir Adolphe Caron went into that Ministry, have reached an aggregate of over a million of dollars. $850,000 has actually been paid of Dominion money to that road alone, and a million dollars has been voted. Instead of resigning his directorship when he became a Minister, instead of assigning his interest in the shares, he continued to hold both positions for twelve years, as a Minister, voting a million dollars of subsidies to himself. I would like to know whether the members of this House, if they had known that, would have voted money into a Minister's pocket in that style?

Mr. EDGAR.

They would not have dared to do it. Still, that was the actual position, as shown by the evidence in this book. Why, Sir, I consider that he was really a partner in a firm of contractors, drawing, year after year, these subsidies which he voted and used his influence to get, in the Government. I say that that position, for a Minister of the Crown, is indecent and unprecedented. I am glad to say, and is deserving of the censure of this House. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is another feature of this business that I have not presented. I propose dealing as briefly as I possibly can with Sir Adolphe Caron's relationship with the late Senator Ross, and his position with reference to the Dominion subsidies voted by this Parliament. We all know that general elections were held at the end of February, 1887. The evidence shows us that there was a general election fund raised for those elections in 1887. We are told that by Mr. Thomas McGreevy, in his evidence at pages 161, 162 and 163; and we are also informed of it by Sir Adolphe Caron in his evidence at pages 224 and 228. Sir Adolphe Caron tells us that this election fund was in the charge of three gentlemen, Sir Hector Langevin, the member for Three Rivers, at that time a Minister of the Crown, Sir Adolphe Caron, a member of the Government, and Mr. Thomas McGreevy, then a member of Parliament. Sir Adolphe Caron explains, himself, in his evidence, pages 223 and 224, that he had charge of the campaign in the district of Quebec. Now, what was a natural thing for him to do? Why, he applied for money to carry on his elections there and to build up this great election fund which was distributed by this distinguished triumvirate whom I have mentioned, although I may say that Mr. McGreevy differs a little from Sir Adolphe Caron in that particular, because he says that he was a mere machine, giving out the money without being consulted, upon the order of these other two gentlemen. However, it is between them. Now, Sir Adolphe Caron applied to Mr. J. G. Ross for funds for the campaign—legal and legitimate expenses, of course. He took care to say so, and it must have been so because he said so; and how could it have been for anything else? Now, Sir, what were the ostensible reasons for his applying to Mr. Ross? Let us look at the reasons he gives himself first. I will tell you, Sir, what he said. He applied to Mr. Ross, he said—at page 223 he tells us about it—on account of Mr. Ross being a strong personal and political friend; and also because Mr. Ross, being a strong believer in the National Policy, had consequently previously contributed on several occasions. I think we suspected before that very strong believers in the National Policy were in the habit of contributing election funds in several elections. That, I think, has been suggested, but it has been denied very often. However, now we have it on the authority of a Minister of the Crown, that Mr. Ross.

being a strong believer in the National Policy, had previously contributed on several occasions. The amounts, of course, which he contributed on those occasions, I suppose from motives of delicacy, Sir Adolphe Caron forebore to mention—he did not particularize. He was being examined in his own behalf; he was not called by the commission, but volunteered these explanations and was being examined by his own lawyers when he made this statement. However, the amount of Mr. Ross's previous contributions were not stated, but Sir Adolphe Caron did say that they had never been so large before as they were in 1887, on the occasion I am coming to speak of. These were his ostensible reasons for applying to Mr. Ross. But I think this little blue-book can give us much better reasons, much more solid and substantial reasons he had for applying to Mr. Ross for assistance on that occasion. One reason was this. Mr. Ross was, at that time, the president of this Construction Company, which we have seen had a claim then subsisting of $450,000 against Mr. Beemer, its recovery being dependent on obtaining the subsidies from Ottawa. And, more than that. Mr. Ross, out of the $94,000 of stock held himself $25,000 and his brother, John Ross, had held another $25,000 of it. So that, in that family, the two brothers held more than half of the entire stock of the Construction Company. That appears at pages 104 and 98 in the evidence. Now, Sir, Mr. Ross said in his evidence, at page 112, that the only chance to get this money back for the Construction Company was to have the road finished. And what was Mr. Ross's personal, private and individual interest in that sum of $450,000? It amounted to this: His share, he being owner of $25,000 of stock, would have been $118,000, and his brother's share would have been as much more. It may be that this sum of $450,000 was not going all to be profit for the Construction Company. They, by consent, stated it at that figure as the amount of their previous outlay when they entered into contract with Mr. Beemer, for time, labour and money. There are no particulars given of that outlay in the evidence by the secretary of the company who appeared before the committee. We know that the total subscribed stock was only $94,000, and how they could have made an outlay of $450,000, even if the stock were all paid up, I can scarcely see. Probably they had subsidies from the city of Quebec and some other subsidies and stock subscriptions which they expended to the extent of $450,000. But admit for the moment that they had expended $450,000 of hard money of their own when they entered into this contract with Mr. Beemer, and admit that they were that much out of pocket, they expected to get $450,000 of good money back from Mr. Beemer to recoup them, if they had spent it, or put profits in their pockets if they had not spent it, I do not care a straw which it was.

It was as good a thing for them to get a dollar back they had lost as to make a dollar of pure gain. So that of the sum of $450,000 Mr. Ross's share of $118,000, and his brother's share of the same amount, was the interest which he held in that company and which Sir Adolphe Caron knew well, because he was personally at the meeting when the contract was proved to have passed. There is one reason why he went to Mr. Ross for a subscription. This was the only way Mr. Ross could get that money back possibly, because Mr. Beemer was not a rich man, and he did not pretend to be, and the road could not have been built without these subsidies; the only possible interest Mr. Ross had was to get all the subsidies out of the Dominion he possibly could, and he was deeply concerned in bribing those who were connected with granting the subsidies. There is no pretense that Sir Adolphe Caron did not know that Mr. Ross was president of the company. He admits that he did, at page 227. And now what other good reason had Sir Adolphe Caron for going to Mr. Ross? He had a personal and a private and a prior direct interest in those Dominion subsidies beyond what he had as a shareholder and president of the Construction Company; and Sir Adolphe Caron knew what I am going to tell you, Mr. Speaker. He has told us he did, in his own evidence. Mr. Beemer was not a man of capital. He was a railway builder, and he could not do his own financing, and so he went to the firm of Ross & Co.—and J. G. Ross, at page 223 and 134, is shown to be the only member of that firm—Mr. Beemer went to him to do his financing for him for the construction of this railway. Mr. Beemer tells us this, at pages 133 and 134. These are his own words:

That embodied "financing," which I did through Messrs. Ross & Co. by transferring the subsidies to him. Mr. Ross advanced me on my progress estimates, and ran his chances of getting the subsidies.

There is another personal interest which Mr. Ross had in these subsidies as transferee of them to Mr. Beemer. That he was interested to a large extent is shown in this way. Perhaps you will say, Mr. Beemer was able to pay him off and that the subsidies would be a small matter to him as security; but that is not the case. Mr. Scott, the secretary of the railway company, was examined and at page 114 of the evidence he stated: That Mr. Beemer owed Mr. Ross, over and above and beyond the subsidies he had got from him, $220,000 on these advances; so that Mr. Beemer had not a straw's worth of interest in these subsidies practically. Beemer was $220,000 behind in his arrangement with Ross, in addition to the subsidies, and Mr. Ross, in that personal respect, was enormously and directly interested, and, as the secretary of the company said: He ran his chances on the subsidies. Now, Sir Adolphe Caron, in his own evidence, at page 227, says, that he must have known that Beemer was getting these advances from Mr. Ross. I had not the honour of knowing Mr. Ross, but if he was a sentimental man, Mr. Beemer points out that this railway was Mr. Ross's pet scheme, that without him it could not be accomplished, and so he may have had some sentimental idea of getting the road finished, which could only be done, however, by the subsidies. To show that Sir Adolphe Caron's judgment in soliciting Mr. Ross for a "douceur" of this kind was justified, you have only to look at the evidence, and you will see in Sir Adolphe Caron's own evidence, at page 223, that on the first application he made to Mr. Ross, Mr. Ross promptly promised to give him $25,000 without hesitation; and you will find more than this, according to Sir Adolphe Caron's own evidence, that he accepted this $25,000 from Mr. Ross as Ross's personal contribution, and that Ross never hinted to him, never even suggested to him, that it was anything else than his own personal contribution. Therefore I say that we are bound to hold Sir Adolphe Caron strictly responsible for demanding and for receiving this amount from Mr. Ross with the fullest possible knowledge of Mr. Ross's position both as to the Construction Company, and as Mr. Beemer's financier in his relations to the Dominion subsidies. Well, Sir, let us see if this contribution so handsomely given by Mr. Ross was altogether fruitless. Was it thrown away? No, Sir. That blue-book shows us the contrary. That blue-book shows that no doubt Sir Adolphe Caron was able to use this argument with his colleagues, that Mr. Ross had come down with a princely gift at a time, when, as Sir Adolphe says, they had a hard fight in Quebec, and Sir Adolphe was able to tell his colleagues, that Mr. Ross, who had done thus handsomely, was president of the Construction Company which was largely interested in the subsidies, and that he was the financier for the contractor, and was assignee of all the subsidies. And, Sir, that appeal must have been irresistible to a Government such as Canada has been blessed with for some years past. At any rate I turned up the schedules to see what was the tangible result of this gift. Remember this little "douceur" was handed over in February, 1887, and at the session which was soon after held in that year, there was a subsidy granted—well, not exactly $25,000, but just a little over $28,000—just to correct some mistake that had been made. Then, in 1888 there was a subsidy of $96,000 also passed, and in 1889 a subsidy of $64,000. All these, you will remember, were transferred by Mr. Beemer in advance to Mr. Ross, and were paid out by the Government, as the records of the department show, to Mr. Ross's order in the different banks. Then, in 1890, there was another subsidy passed for $68,000, and even in 1891, a subsidy of $5,250, or altogether, subsidies amounting to $262,450 voted to that railway for Mr. Mr. EDGAR.

Ross's absolute benefit, after that subscription of his. So we see, that the gift was not fruitless; it was not bread cast upon the waters. Why, Sir, it bore fruit in great abundance. Twenty-five thousand dollars produced more than ten-fold; it produced more than $262,450. Now, Sir, it would be doing an injury to Mr. Ross probably, if I refrained from drawing attention to the fact, that this does not appear to have been the limit of his generosity. I cannot exactly say how much more he gave, but in a letter which I wrote to the commissioners, I gave a list of witnesses that should be called, and a list of documents which I thought it would be well to produce, and would have produced if I had been going on with the inquiry. They take great credit for having called all these witnesses, and I must admit that any evidence they have in this book such as I have told you, came out of the witnesses whose names I sent them. But, Sir, I gave them a list of documents that I recommended them to produce, and they did not produce them at all. They did not order them to be produced. They only ordered the documents to be produced which bore Sir Adolphe Caron's signature which were in Mr. Thomas McGreevy's hands and which related to this general election fund. I contend, Sir, that if the counsel had been doing their duty, when Sir Adolphe Caron swore that he was jointly responsible with the member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) in all the expenditure of that fund, and when Mr. McGreevy swore that it was Sir Adolphe Caron and Sir Hector Langevin who were responsible; then, in order to show the connection of Sir Adolphe Caron with this election fund they should have called for all these documents. They did not, however. But, Sir, just to show you how important it would have been to have called for those documents, although not as exact legal evidence, I will just read you one of them. I do not think anybody will dispute its authenticity, because there is a gentleman in the House who, I am sure, will acknowledge his signature in a moment. This is a photograph copy of a letter marked "private":

MY DEAR MCGREEVY,—Mr. Valin has come. He says that he wants more help for his legal expenses. Do what you think proper and necessary, and send him for any more to Senator Ross. This county is a very hard one.

Yours truly,
HECTOR L. LANGEVIN.

Quebec, 17th February, 1887.

Received, $500.—P. D. VALIN.

I merely introduce this, not to call it legal evidence in the case, but to show how careful we must be not to charge Senator Ross with not having given more than $25,000 on that occasion, seeing what enormous subsidies he and his railroad got following that election.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to say a word on this. As this does not form part of the evidence that has been brought before the House, but is outside of the record altogether, I think the hon. gentleman might have left it out, and attacked me at another time, if he thought proper. But about this, I would explain at once what was meant when I said that Mr. Valin, if he required more than could be given for his legal expenses, should apply to Mr. Ross. It was this—and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman did not know what answer there was in regard to that. Mr. Valin was in partnership with Mr. Ross in ship-building and in owning ships which navigated outside of Canada on the Atlantic and elsewhere, and therefore this went at once to show that Mr. Valin, if he wanted money, should go to the man with whom he was in partnership, and not come to me or to any other person to ask for money that could not be given him.

Mr. EDGAR. I hope I have not hurt the hon. gentleman's feelings by producing that letter. I would not have produced it unless it had relation to Mr. Ross and Mr. Ross's contributions for the elections of 1887. I have here a small bundle of photographs of the hon. gentleman's signature, which I could produce if he desired to see them or if we were going outside of the record. But I do not produce them to-day, though I may do so on another occasion. I only brought this forward because I thought it was entirely apropos of the occasion. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Valin and his partner had means of their own for his election; but he will observe in that receipt that the general fund gave Mr. Valin $500 anyway, and he was referred to Mr. Ross for more. The general fund, which amounted, as I could show by papers in my desk, to nearly $100,000, was not to be drawn on for more than $500 for Mr. Valin; but he was to go outside for more. That shows the hard stress and the great fight which they must have had in that election, when the general fund was not sufficient. Now, although Mr. Ross appeared to Sir Adolphe Caron to be the donor of that $25,000—in fact, he always thought so, he says, until the other day at the inquiry—it is a very extraordinary and very interesting thing for the House to ascertain how Mr. Ross managed to recoup himself for that $25,000 in addition to getting it out of the Dominion subsidies. Why, Sir, he charged it directly to Mr. Beemer, whose ability to pay his obligations to Mr. Ross was, of course, so much reduced. Now, I do not claim that Sir Adolphe Caron got it from Mr. Beemer. Far be it from me to suggest anything of the kind, because Mr. Beemer has denied it, and Sir Adolphe Caron has also denied it. Sir Adolphe Caron has admitted that he got it from Mr. Ross, and I am sure that is quite enough for the purposes of this inquiry. I think, however, that the dealings of Mr. Beemer with this particular $25,000 throw an interesting side-light upon the whole Ross-Caron transaction, and show the tone of the contractors—their ideas with reference to their obligations to assist Governments who have subsidies to give. Now, this is Mr. Beemer's story. He says that Mr. Ross sent for him and told him, just previous to the elections of 1887, that the friends in Quebec wanted some contributions to the election fund, and Beemer gave his note for $25,000 to Ross, which Ross discounted, and which Beemer ultimately after a good many renewals, paid. Now, Beemer says, at page 156, that Ross asked it because the members of the fund were asking him for assistance. He is careful to say that Mr. Ross did not tell him that Sir Adolphe Caron wanted it, and Mr. Beemer does not remember Sir Adolphe Caron ever talking about it: he is very clear about that. But in his cash account, at page 556 of the exhibits, you will see some extraordinary entries, which he says he made himself. For instance, the first item is: "28th June, 1887; extraordinary account; paid Ross & Co.'s note, on account G. E. F., dated 3rd February, 1887, A. P. C., $5,000." Then he gives another one: "On account of note of 18th February, for $5,000; on account of G. E. F. and A. P. C." Then there is a sum of money, $5,000, "G. E. F." and then $5,000 on account of "G. E. F., A. P. C.," and so he goes on to the fifth one for $2,500 on account of "G. E. F." and then there is another one. I do not think that the Finance Minister was down in that part of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no bank account anywhere.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Beemer most positively told us that the "A. P. C." had nothing to do with any contribution between the parties, so that even if "G. E. F." did mean the Finance Minister, instead of the General Election Fund, as Mr. Beemer explained, it would not implicate him in any way whatever, because "A. P. C." does not implicate Sir Adolphe Caron. Mr. Beemer explained that "A. P. C." and "G. E. F.," meant Sir Adolphe Caron and General Election Fund, but that he simply did that to divide the accounts, as, he says, Sir Adolphe Caron was head and front of the Quebec district. Fancy a man being the head and front of a district and getting into such a scrape as that. See how dangerous it is to be the wire-puller of a province. Of course, when Senator Ross told him that the members of the fund required this subscription, and that their friends in Quebec at another time required that subscription. I wonder was it necessary for Mr. Ross to tell Mr. Beemer any more about Sir Adolphe Caron, or if it was necessary for Sir Adolphe Caron to tell Mr. Beemer who wanted it. It just shows, however, the masterly position which Mr. Ross occupied in the whole affair, when, as Mr. Beemer says, although Mr. Ross simply told him to give the notes and he would get them discounted, and although there was no arrangement made as to who would pay, Beemer paid them without a word of protest. He says so at page 187. That shows he was absolutely in the power of Mr. Ross, and that Mr. Ross was the man who was entitled to everything that Mr. Beemer had—to the subsidies at any rate that he had—and that Mr. Beemer was a mere tool in the matter. No doubt Sir Adolphe Caron went to the right man. No doubt when he went to Senator Ross, he went to the master and not the man. However, Senator Ross knew his man, too, when he approached Mr. Beemer in that way, because Mr. Beemer tells us very frankly, at page 132, that he was not a politician, that he was not even a British subject, that he was doing business on a commercial basis—promissory notes and so on. And he says he did not interfere with politics. Of course not. But he also adds, “I must say this, that I did not think a change of Government would be beneficial.” I do not suppose he would. Things have been going on so delightfully in the way of subsidies that I think he was about right, and that a change of Government would not be beneficial to him. And, remember, he gave $30,000 altogether. This $25,000 is not the only amount shown in this cash account of Mr. Beemer. I will draw attention to the additional sums. There was an extraordinary account in 1890, in which he paid $1,000 on the Merchants Bank and another $1,000 on the same bank, both of which he identified “re A. P. C.” in 1890, and he explained later on that these sums went to a by-election in Montmorency in which Mr. Desjardins was running. But Mr. “A. P. C.” in some accidental way got mixed up with that too. A further extraordinary account shows three items of $1,000, which, he says, would seem to have been paid to the Chicnic Hardware Company in 1892. Those were for subscriptions which he made for the elections of 1891, and Mr. Beemer tells us that Chicnic, one of the firm, was the treasurer of the fund in 1891. Mr. McGreevy having ceased to occupy that dignified position, Mr. Chicnic took his place, and the head and front of the Quebec district, of course, had charge of everything there, and I think it a very extraordinary thing, as I read that evidence, that some questions were not propounded by the counsel for the prosecution, following up the gifts of that $2,000 and $3,000 by Mr. Beemer, to see whether the head and front of the Quebec district had not something to do with it, which was the inquiry before the Royal Commission. However, they thought it was not their duty to proceed so far as that. Now, Mr. Beemer, after giving $30,000 altogether, explained that he believed the Conservative Government was a good Government. Of course, he had no prejudices, he was not a British subject, he was only doing business on a commercial basis, and he approached the subject with an absolutely unbiassed mind, and he says: “I like their policy of advancement—$1,000,000 advancement to the Lake St. John Railway—and I believe it worth sustaining in my humble way”—$30,000 being the modest and humble way he proposed to sustain the policy of the Government, whose advanced ideas he liked. Then he gives his reason for not having subscribed in 1882. He is very frank, and I like his style of giving evidence. At page 154, he is asked if he had subscribed to the general election fund in 1882, and what was his answer? “My contract, said he, did not commence here until 1883. Why should I?” That settled the whole question. The advancement evidently was on the contract. The idea of asking him to contribute—a man who did business on a commercial basis—when he had not a contract. The idea was preposterous. The whole business about the marking of these initials, “A. P. C.” in 1887 and 1890, and all through, up to that time, is very puzzling. Sir Adolphe Caron, according to the evidence, did not actually and personally come into communication with Mr. Beemer, and, therefore, he must have hypnotized Mr. Beemer, for how otherwise could Mr. Beemer have put those initials on the account? The invisible influence of the great head of Quebec must have permeated the whole district and forced Mr. Beemer to put these initials in his cash-book. Well, now, I think it is too bad, after all, for Mr. Beemer to have done so, when Sir Adolphe Caron was so utterly innocent of any connection with Mr. Beemer or these funds. I think it was cruel, when Sir Adolphe Caron had never even asked him to contribute a cent at any time of his existence: I think it was very unfair of Mr. Beemer to have done anything of the kind. Let us look at some of the circumstances attendant upon this gift of $25,000 by Mr. Ross to Sir Adolphe Caron. Was this an open, fair transaction, or was it a secret, concealed transaction? Why, Sir, if they had not wanted to hide it from the world we would not have found that Mr. Ross concealed even from Mr. Beemer the fact that he was going to give this money to Sir Adolphe Caron. We would not have found, as the fact was, that Mr. Ross concealed this from his confidential clerk, Mr. Geggie, as Mr. Geggie swears at page 177. And, Sir, if it had been an open, honest transaction we would have found an entry in Mr. Ross's books showing where the money went, that it went to Sir Adolphe Caron or to an election fund. But, Sir, there was no entry of the kind. The clerk from whom the truth was concealed did make an entry on his own account, as he says at page 189. And what was that entry, Sir? It was to charge all this $25,000 up to subsidy account, No. 2, Lake St. John. He charged it straight into the subsidy account, like a man: but afterwards, when Mr. Beemer was made by Mr. Ross to pay these notes, of course it had to be taken out of that account and settled by cash by Mr. Beemer. But I am talking now of the concealment at the time and of the surroundings of it. Why, Sir, did Mr. Ross, who was dealing in very large sums of money, not sign his cheque? Did he give his cheque for this amount? No, Sir. He had the money, as Sir Adolphe Caron tells us, in bank bills. And, Sir, he placed this swag in the pure hands of the Minister of Militia, the Privy Councillor, the K.C.M.G., who could not trust anybody in Quebec to get that money, but had to take it in his own hands, those filthy bills, probably twos and ones, to suit the capacity of the electors—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, no; they wanted fives.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps fives. And what did he do with it? He carried it himself, as he says, and placed it in the immaculate hands of Mr. Thomas McGreevy. This is what Sir Adolphe Caron says himself, at page 224:

Q. You say you got these different sums of money, amounting in all to $25,000 from the Hon. Mr. Ross himself?—A. I did.

Q. Personally?—A. Personally.

Q. In what form?—A. In bank bills.

Q. And you took it in that form to Mr. McGreevy?—A. Yes; I drove from his office to Mr. McGreevy's. The amount never left my hands until it was deposited into the hands of Mr. McGreevy.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it took five trips to do this. He had to make five special visits to Mr. Ross to get his bank bills from him, and five special trips to Mr. McGreevy. How dignified were these secret trips of the Minister of Militia, conveying this reptile fund from Mr. Ross in bills to Mr. Thos. McGreevy up Mountain Hill. Five separate trips! What a beautiful sight it must have been! They did not dare to use cheques. They were evidently conscious of guilt the whole three of them, Mr. Ross, who gave these bills, Sir Adolphe Caron, who carried the swag in bills, and Mr. McGreevy, who received it in bills, and, I believe, distributed the same. Now, Sir, who disbursed this money which had been got under these extraordinary circumstances by a Minister of the Crown? It was disbursed on an elaborate system. Mr. McGreevy had the money in his hands in bills, and he says, at page 162, that he paid it out in bills. He never gave a cheque. Oh, no; he knew better! Mr. Ross would not give a cheque; Sir Adolphe Caron would not give a cheque, and would not receive one; Mr. Thos. McGreevy would not give a cheque, and would not receive one. They had to pay all in bills to cover up their tracks. Mr. McGreevy says he paid out no money except on order. Now these sums were controlled in Mr. McGreevy's hands by Sir Adolphe Caron and Sir Hector Langevin. Sir Adolphe Caron swears there was a triumvirate and not only two. He says, at page 228: No amount was ever given out "until we three agreed." Therefore I say Sir Adolphe Caron was responsible for the whole sum, and what I contended a moment before was that the counsel for the Crown should, under these circumstances, have insisted upon the production of all the vouchers from Mr. McGreevy in connection with that fund and should have found out where the money came from and what Sir Adolphe Caron had to do with it. Now, Sir, I observed among the orders produced with the name of Sir Adolphe Caron that some of them bear no date; but that makes no difference, Sir, because I will show you they must have been all for the election of 1887. For this reason: Mr. McGreevy swears at page 161 that he only acted as treasurer in the general elections of 1882 and 1887. And he also swears that Sir Adolphe Caron had nothing to do with the election of 1882. Therefore, the only election with which Sir Adolphe Caron and Mr. McGreevy had to do jointly in this way was the election of 1887, and therefore the orders which Mr. McGreevy produced, and which he swears, though they were not dated, belonged to 1887. Now, Sir, I would like to inquire for a moment how the head and front of the Quebec district treated his own county. I find, at page 167, he gave $500; at page 168, he gave $150; on the same page, $2,000; again on the same page, $200 more, and, on the same page, $400 more; on page 171, $500; on page 174, $200; on page 167, $150. I find that on page 69 there is a mistake in the transcribed evidence and in the printed evidence, for an order, No. 9, which is put down there, on page 168, for $100, is really $1,000. It was also stated as $1,000 in the Votes and Proceedings of 10th June, to which I referred the Royal Commissioners in my letter; and I also have here a photograph of the document itself: "Received from the Hon. T. McGreevy, $1,000 for legal expenses, county of Quebec. Adolphe P. Caron." So that, if it is not $100, it is another $1,000. But, if it is $100, the sum will only be increased by $300. If it is not, here is another $1,000, over Sir Adolphe Caron's signature, and I will be glad to send the photograph to him or to anybody who wishes to see it. Therefore, we find his orders on Mr. McGreevy, apart from some others, of which I have photographs here, and which were not produced by Mr. McGreevy, amounting to $5,100—$5,100 in Quebec county out of the general fund—I suppose, for expenses; but we will see about that. Now, I have no doubt that a Minister of the Crown would get something out of his own pocket, not out of Mr. Ross's pocket, or out of the general election fund; he would give something. I dare say, out of his own pocket for his own election expenses. However, supposing he did not; supposing he only gave this $5,100. Now, the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 8, section 118, provide that election payments are to be made only through agents; and they also provide that any person who makes them otherwise, is guilty of a misdemeanour. Now, not one of all these payments appear on their face to be made through an agent. What did the agent, whose name does not appear in any of these orders, return as the total amount of election expenses in that campaign in the county of Quebec? Mr. A. J. Turcotte was Sir Adolphe Caron's agent on that occasion, and he returned and published the election expenses in this way: "Personal expenses of candidate, $58; expenses of his agent, $846.46." Very particular about cents, you will observe, Mr. Speaker. In all, $904.46. Well, Sir, we have his own orders on the general fund for that election, for legitimate purposes, he is careful to say, of course, of $5,100, leaving a good deal more than $4,000 paid out by him, with his own hand, for his own election, besides some that we do not know about; and for that the Minister of the Crown is liable, in face of the Statutes, which he has sworn to uphold, to be tried for a misdemeanour. Is that fitting conduct for a Minister of the Crown—over-riding the law, not even appearing to obey the law? But we know perfectly well that was the reason which influenced him in giving the money received from Mr. Ross, in bills to Mr. McGreevy, and Mr. McGreevy paying it out in bills; so that we have no trace or track of it. If we had not these documents, and if these documents had not been before the Commission, being brought there by Mr. McGreevy, we would never have heard a word of these legitimate expenses at the election by that Minister. So much for the Lake St. John Railway and the connection of Sir Adolphe Caron with the subsidies, and the Construction Company, and Mr. Ross, and Mr. Beemer. There was another subject of inquiry, that relating to the Temiscouata Railway Company. I want to say, at the start, that Sir Adolphe Caron's connection with that, I will not say was not so intimate, but has not been proved by that Blue-book to be so intimate, as it was with the other railway which I have already discussed; and, therefore, I shall not give a great deal of time to that subject. Sir Adolphe Caron had some connection with it, and I shall refer to a number of little incidents which are proved in the Blue-book relating to the Temiscouata Railway, which throw a great deal of light upon the idea of railway contractors and the recipients of subsidies, as to what they ought to do about election times. Now, Mr. J. J. Macdonald became contractor to complete this railway in 1886, and he received, of Dominion subsidies that have been voted for it, $498,000. He also received some provincial subsidies, and he also received, under his contract, which is exhibit "A R M 1," at page 582, a municipal subsidy of $25,000 from Fraserville. Those were all received by him and put into the same pot. Well, he made an agreement with Mr. A. R. Macdonald, who was connected with the old company. Mr. A. R. Macdonald swears, at page 191, that Mr. J. J. Macdonald told him that he had used $25,000, the amount of the Fraserville subsidy, for political purposes. Now, J. J.

Mr. EDGAR.

Macdonald gave us some explanation about that. It took him a long time to decide whether he would answer, but ultimately he decided to answer. Unfortunately, the agreement connected with that was not to be found. It was supposed to be in England; therefore, we have to take the verbal evidence given by these gentlemen of its contents. Mr. J. J. Macdonald swears, in substance, to the agreement at page 208 of the evidence. He said, referring to the discussion with A. R. Macdonald:

I said we had to help our friends during the progress of the work. I proposed that that amount should be left for that purpose, and if there was anything left after we got through, that he could have it.

This evidence is restated by Mr. Macdonald three or four times, at pages 207, 208 and 209. He was asked what subscriptions he had given for the elections of 1887, and he said he had given two or three small amounts, and one large one. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that in this contract which J. J. Macdonald received from the Temiscouata Railway, he not only received the existing subsidies, but he took a power of attorney to collect and receive all Dominion subsidies to be hereafter granted, and with that object in view, possibly, he may have subscribed, as he says, in 1887, one amount of seven or eight thousand dollars, he could not say which. Now, it would be very interesting indeed if the counsel for the prosecution had inquired where this $7,000 or $8,000 went; but they apparently did not think it wise to press for information on that point. We know that Sir Adolphe Caron himself in his evidence, at page 227, says he did not get any money from J. J. Macdonald, but he suggested that if J. J. Macdonald gave anything he must have given his contribution to the general fund. Of course, we know who were the controllers of the general fund, and therefore I think it is most extraordinary that counsel did not get a little more information as to where that $7,000 or $8,000 went. As to the smaller amount, Mr. J. J. Macdonald was not even asked about it. However, when Mr. Macdonald was pressed to say whether Sir Adolphe Caron had asked him for any election contributions, he said that in 1890, at the general election, Sir Adolphe Caron did ask him to assist. He said after this, and when he had said he would assist, that a party drew on him for $2,000. Now, Sir, we are not told, no interest is taken in inquiring as to who this party was. No questions were asked on that point. How careful, lenient and polite the counsel for the prosecution were for the feelings of the Minister, how zealous they were to carry out the inquiry under the commission, when they did not even ask where the money went for which Sir Adolphe Caron had asked. But, of course, Mr. Macdonald said it was quite natural for him to assist at elections. And why? He gives his reason: Because he was "a loyal Conservative right through." We have had a good many reasons given by different gentlemen for contributing; some were doing business on a commercial basis and receiving subsidies, and so supported the Government; others were strong believers in the National Policy, but this gentleman gave as his reason that he was a loyal Conservative right through, and of course he gave money to elections. According to his own statement, and according to A. R. Macdonald's statement, he expended for political purposes during the progress of the work, $25,000. He told us also that he paid $2,000. Were these different amounts, or were the $8,000 and the $2,000 included in the $25,000? We don't know. At all events $25,000 at least were paid by him for political purposes during the progress of the work. Sir Adolphe Caron said that if Mr. J. J. Macdonald gave anything it went into the general fund. We must assume that it went into the general fund. There was Sir Adolphe Caron's connection with it, as well as his demand on Mr. Macdonald for a contribution, which resulted in a party drawing on him for $2,000. Twenty-five thousand dollars appears to be the regular round figure for railway people to pay who are expecting subsidies. Was this little contribution from Mr. Macdonald although not given directly into the hands of the Minister, as Mr. Ross's amount was altogether fruitless, and did it not produce some results? Why, of course it did, because in 1888 the Government voted $100,000 to the Edmundston branch, in 1890 they voted a further sum of $51,200, and even last session—1892—against some protest made by me in this House, they voted $21,600, so that Mr. Macdonald did not go away empty-handed. And that shows the general idea which he and other contractors, recipients of subsidies, had respecting their duties towards the general election fund. I think I have shown very clearly and from the hard facts established by this evidence that Sir Adolphe Caron was deeply interested as a shareholder and as a director in the construction company, and that he was voting enormous subsidies from year to year for the benefit of that company. That was bad enough for a member of Parliament; and I say it was disgraceful for a Minister of the Crown. Then I have shown beyond peradventure that this Minister of the Crown was extorting and accepting the huge sum of $25,000 from Mr. Ross, who was more interested than any one living man in getting the subsidies for the Lake St. John Railway, and that I hold to be a direct bribe from him to the Minister, asked for and accepted. It must have been in that shape and form, although the words may not have been said—the act was there, the result followed, the subsidies were received in return for that gift to the extent of more than a quarter of a million dollars. Again, I have shown a close connection with the sum of $25,000 or $30,000 which J. J. Macdonald, the applicant for subsidies to the Temiscouata Railway, gave for election purposes during the progress of the work. Then I have shown, which is as bad as any part of this horrible history, the Minister's direct and personal dealing with the distribution of this reptile fund, and taking advantage of it to break the law in his own constituency by violating the statute which provided that expenses should go to agents; and I could show, if the vouchers I had suggested had been called for, that in nearly every constituency in the Quebec district the law was broken in the same respect. But that is not the subject for the consideration of the House to-day. There are a number of these things and other things which may hereafter be brought before the attention of the House, but, as I said, I will confine myself entirely to the covers of this blue-book to-night. Now, Sir, I ask the House calmly and dispassionately whether this Minister is not deserving of censure. If the evidence shows it, I want to know then why was he made a new adviser of the Crown in January last, when this evidence shows what I have pointed out to the House by page and paragraph, line upon line. I say, Sir, that the Royal Commission submitted the evidence contained in this blue-book to the Government on the 24th November last as appears by the report in this blue-book, so that the Government knew then, all that we know to-day. I say besides, that the inquiry was public, and the prosecuting counsel was directly under the control of the Minister of Justice, who in January last called Sir Adolphe Caron back into the councils of the country at a time, when Sir Adolphe Caron was as much out of the Cabinet as I am out of it to-day. I say, Sir, that while the Premier is undoubtedly chiefly responsible for this action; every single one of his colleagues, by accepting office with Sir Adolphe Caron, with the evidence before the Minister, in the hands of the Secretary of State, assumed and hold to-day the same responsibility for the acts of the Postmaster-General. However, let the Ministers take their course. Parliament has something to say in this matter. Parliament has its own responsibility to Canada, and we individual members have each our own responsibility to our constituents. Let me ask you honestly now as fellow-members: Will it be conducive to the fair fame of Canada, if we approve of the Postmaster-General's conduct. Imagine the scorn of the people of England when they hear that the Parliament of Canada has approved of such things, and the contemptuous pity with which they will speak of the colonial Parliament that will whitewash such a Minister. The members of the House all know that I am speaking the truth. They all know that what I say is true, and no matter how they will vote, I am sure that when they read that evidence they must be satisfied that my words are correct and true. I believe that when the public read that evidence, they will also know that my conclusions are correct. Surely, Sir, we are not to ask alone what are the opinions of the voters in the Liberal constituencies of this Dominion. Surely we are not to ask them alone to join in condemning wholesale bribery by a Minister. If it is nothing more than wholesale bribery it is that at least. I say, Sir, God help Canada if the Conservative electors do not take that view of it too. Twenty years ago the Conservatives in this House took a view of that kind and turned the Government out, and the electors of the country took that view of a certain transaction at the same time, and turned the Government out. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that in this inquiry, with which my name has been connected for a year or so, I have received encouragement from many and many a staunch Conservative who never gave assistance to the Reform party. I have been told by many and many of them that they would not assume the responsibility for such conduct as the public press had shown to be the conduct of the Postmaster-General, and as this blue-book absolutely proves to-day. And, Sir, I have no doubt that there are many and many scores and thousands of Conservatives in the Dominion who take that view of the case, and who will sustain that view by their votes. At any rate, if this House whitewashes such a Minister, I am satisfied that the day will come, when on the very first occasion when the people of Canada shall have an opportunity of pronouncing upon this action, they will reverse the verdict of this House, if it should prove to be a whitewashing verdict. Now, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Borden :

That all the words after "that" in the said motion be omitted, and the following inserted instead thereof :—

"That Mr. Speaker do not leave the Chair, but that it be declared that in the opinion of this House, the evidence taken by the Royal Commission appointed last session to inquire into certain charges made against the Hon. Sir A. P. Caron, K.C.M.G., M.P., which was reported to the Government on the 24th November last, and is now laid before us established facts which should have prevented the subsequent appointment of Sir A. P. Caron to be an adviser of the Crown, and also renders it highly improper that he should continue to hold such office."

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a very great deal of attention to the remarks that have just fallen from the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar), and I must say, that the course of his speech very much maligned the introductory sentences by which he opened his discourse. He told us that he was going to deal with the subject in an impartial spirit, and that he was going to confine himself to what was within the two covers of the book which has been laid upon the Table, and which contains the evidence that was adduced before the Royal Commission appointed by the Government in obedience to the Order of the House. After having made that declaration, he commenced by telling us, that although he could not complain, and did not complain of the conduct of the commissioners, who had given great scope—and he might very well say so indeed—to the examination which was conducted before them, yet, he could not say so much with reference to the learned gentlemen who had been appointed to conduct that prosecution, and he felt it was within his power to show, and that he intended to show before he resumed his seat, that they had fallen far short of their duty indeed, and that they had not carried on this investigation in a manner to bring out all the facts and circumstances within their reach, if they had sought for them. As a member of the Bar of Quebec, and as a confrère of both of these gentlemen who conducted the inquiry, I regret exceedingly that any such aspersion should have been made upon the character of either one or the other. Mr. Archibald, a Queen's counsel, and the leading counsel in that investigation, holds a first-class position at the Bar of Quebec. He is an honourable man, he is a man who stands high in his profession, he is a professor of law in the McGill University, and he has the confidence of some of the most prominent members in this House for whom he has acted as counsel, amongst these, I think, I may mention my hon. friend from Montreal West (Sir Donald A. Smith). He has acquired a proud position at the bar, and, whether speaking of him or of my learned friend, the junior counsel, Mr. Bisailon, who was the partner of the present chief justice of the province of Quebec, Sir Alexandre Lacoste, I feel that the hon. gentleman has done them a gross injustice—an injustice which I resent here in their name and in the name of the bar of the province from which I come. Now, Mr. Speaker, he has given, as one evidence that these gentlemen did not perform their duty, that they did not go still further into the question of the Fraserville subsidy. Why, Sir, let any lawyer read this blue-book and see how that evidence was brought in ; for the hon. judges did not merely allow questions with regard to Dominion subsidies, which alone were implicated in this investigation, but they allowed the inquiry to extend to provincial subsidies, and the very subsidy there spoken of was a municipal subsidy, which they had no power to investigate at all. After the door was opened, not only with regard to subsidies given by the Dominion, but with regard to every subscription for election purposes, the hon. commissioners were determined that nothing should be left uninvestigated ; and the fact that the learned gentlemen who represented the Crown brought out such evidence shows that they were in earnest in the investigation which they were charged to carry on. My hon. friend said that he was going to be exceedingly impartial in this matter, that he did not intend to go outside of the cover of the blue-book in addressing the House to-night. But, to show how utterly impartial he was, to show how he treated it as a question of law, he entertained us with something about the cotton combines, which, of course, have a great deal to do with the subject now before the House. He told us that he was not going to go outside of the record; and yet, one of the very first things he did was to produce a letter written by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), which was not published in the blue-book at all, not having been admitted in the investigation, which shows that there was nothing in the covers of the book which would justify him in the conclusion at which he attempted to arrive. He told us that he was going to be perfectly fair and candid, that he was not going to attempt, for one moment, to bias the judgment of the hon. members of this House; but, in dealing with this evidence, he stigmatized the conduct of a man who had put in his book an entry regarding money which he had paid, holding that the entry indicated what the payment of that money was for; and in the next breath he denounced the gentleman in whose book there was no entry. There was an entry—it was disgraceful; there was no entry—it was equally disgraceful. It did not make any difference to the hon. gentleman; he was bound to find from first to last that this was a disgraceful business; and, no matter how contradictory his statements might be, he was perfectly willing to make them in order to arrive at the conclusion to which he wished to lead this House. He tells us that the Prime Minister should not have called the hon. gentleman to his councils. Well, at the time of the formation of his Government, in the beginning of this year, that evidence had been taken. That evidence had been produced in the Department of Justice; and the Minister of Justice, no doubt, having read it then, came to the conclusion, which I am satisfied the majority of this House will come to and which every man in this country will come to who will take the trouble to read the evidence, that the charges made by the hon. gentleman were not proved in any particular, but were, on the contrary, disproved from beginning to end. Now, Mr. Speaker, we had a few remarks also with regard to what took place in this House in connection with this investigation. But we must not forget that if the hon. gentleman complains now that he has not had everything his own way in this matter, at the close of last session, he told us that he himself had chosen his tribunal—that he was going to take the public press as the tribunal where this evidence was to be brought forward, and that he was going to convict the hon. Postmaster-General of the crimes of which he had charged him—not upon the floor of Parliament, not in the court-house, but in the columns of the public press. A few days afterwards he launched forth all the evidence that he had, because if he had had more, naturally he would have published it; and I may say that, although he published certain receipts for moneys paid in connection with election expenses, there was not one solitary tittle of evidence given to show that Dominion subsidies had been corruptly applied to pay election expenses.

Mr. EDGAR.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRAN. The hon. member for Queen's (P.E.I.) says "hear, hear." I intend to go through this case as well as I can—not as well as it should be done, because I am not able to do it; but I intend to go through this case and to deal with it in an impartial spirit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRAN. My hon. friend says "hear, hear," again. He does not believe it. No doubt it is hard for him to believe it, after the solemn promises that were made by the gentleman who sits beside him, and who, only a few moments ago, transgressed in such a manner. But I tell him that I will try to be more careful than the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar); and what I do say I shall not say by inference; what I do attempt to prove I shall not prove by torturing the evidence. What I shall endeavour to prove will be by quotations from the evidence itself, leaving this House and this country to judge whether I shall have made out a case or not. It may take a little time, and I have to request the kind forbearance of hon. gentlemen while I go over the evidence. But this case is one of very great importance. It is one involving the honour and the political existence of a Minister of the Crown, an old parliamentarian, one who has very many friends throughout this country. But even if he had not a single friend in this country, I think there is this to be said, that in dealing with the honour of one of our fellow members, we are not here as persecutors, we are not here as oppressors, we are not here to blacken, if blacken we could, by torturing evidence, or endeavouring to wring from it a meaning which it does not convey. I think we ought in this House to endeavour to maintain, as far as we can, the honour and the good name of those who are sent here as representatives of the people; and I regret to say that, in my estimation, fair play has not been given my hon. colleague by the hon. gentleman who has opened this case to-night. Why is the hon. gentleman so savage over this case? Why does he feel it incumbent upon him to make an attack upon the counsel who were engaged in the case? I will tell this House why it is perfectly evident. Because these gentlemen have shown up his insincerity; because they have shown up how thoroughly insincere he was in this matter. Not only did they first of all notify him that they were going on with this investigation, but they wrote him asking him for his aid and assistance, and stating they were ready to act under his instructions. It is in vain then for him to tell us that there was no use in his placing himself under their tender mercies. He need not come here to-night and tell us what he has heard from an eye-witness. He should have been there himself and seen that the counsel performed their duties, and had they not done so he could have stood up here and denounced them for having failed to carry out the orders of this Government. But they went still further. When the hon. gentleman addressed his letter to the commissioners, later on, these gentlemen pointed out to him that his complaints were utterly groundless. Their letters were published in the public press, and confounded the hon. gentleman. I will not weary this House by reading those letters; but they are contained in this blue-book, and from the beginning to the end it will be seen that these gentlemen pointed out to him how utterly baseless were his complaints, how thoroughly the charges had been ventilated, and how they were still ready, even at the very last moment, to receive his suggestion. They told him that they had examined every witness he had asked them to call, and were ready to examine other witnesses should he name any. They left the door open for him at the last moment to come in and take part in the proceedings; they adjourned the court again in order that he might come in, but he declined. They showed him that the charges made were not confined to his own—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who is responsible for the extra charges?

Mr. CURRAN. I do not think the hon. gentleman was responsible; but the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was, and my hon. friend who made the first speech to-night was responsible. The hon. gentleman asks me why were more charges put in. It was because, when those charges were laid before the House, the hon. gentleman undertook to tell us what they meant. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said:

These charges point to a member of this House in his official capacity as a member of this Administration, rather than to his conduct as a member of this House. What, in effect, are the charges here made? They point to the fact that the Crown was advised to appropriate large sums of money for particular purposes, and that these moneys were diverted from these public purposes and placed in the hands of a Minister of the Crown for the purpose of corrupting the electorate in certain portions of the Dominion of Canada.

Then the hon. gentleman went on to say:

That it was further stated by the said Mr. Mills: 'There is a statement made here that this hon. gentleman, the Postmaster-General, is the Minister of the Crown who advised these subsidies being appropriated to aid these companies. There is a charge that he obtained a portion of the subsidy so voted, or its equivalent, from these companies, and used it for his own purposes in his own election, and in the elections in twenty-three constituencies in this Dominion. That charge is specific and clear enough. It is also stated that after some of these moneys were received by him this same gentleman advised the Crown to grant other subsidies to other parties, and that from these other subsidies, moneys were also obtained."

If he advised the Crown to make these appropriations, and had an understanding with one of the railway companies participating in them that these moneys, or a portion of them, should go to him, we ought to know it; we are entitled to know it.

Then the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) grew eloquent and told us that the Postmaster-General and others were guilty of a terrible conspiracy. He said:

What in the name of wonder is it that my hon. friend beside me has charged the Postmaster-General with? He has charged him in no vague language, but in terms, with being guilty of the most corrupt conspiracy, for the purpose of destroying the electoral liberties of the people of Canada, of which any adviser of the Crown can be found guilty.

And the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Edgar) said:

Those railways which are involved in this charge were aided by the Dominion and Provincial Governments, and what I complain of is the appropriation of Dominion subsidies to the Postmaster-General.

The Minister of Marine drew a nice point when he said that I did not, as I should have done, charge his colleague with public robbery. Well, I did not put it in those words but in words which I certainly intended to mean robbing the public. If it is not public robbery for a member to take moneys out of public subsidies, I would like to know what is.

So I think if I get a chance to go on and prove these charges there will be what is, under the law, a most abominable conspiracy.

All these things were incorporated in the charges. They had been uttered in speeches explanatory of the charges; they were made for the purpose of influencing the public mind of this country. The charges made by the hon. gentleman in his formal indictment were vague and definite; but the hon. gentlemen who sat on either side of my hon. friend undertook to enlighten the public, and throughout the length and breadth of Canada these words were carried to show what these charges meant.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is reading an extract from my speech. I wish to call attention to the fact that that speech points to the 10th charge made by Mr. Edgar, which was eliminated from the charges referred to the committee.

Mr. CURRAN. It applies to the whole of the charges. It says: what do those charges mean? and not, what does No. 10 mean? The hon. gentleman asks what those charges mean, and he goes into them all, and we incorporated those words. However, that is not worth discussing now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why refer to it?

Mr. CURRAN. Because the hon. gentleman asked the question. The hon. gentleman may smile; but he is not smiling in his heart. He knows very well that he and his friends made a mistake, and that having made those foolish speeches they had to answer for them. They put the load on the shoulders of their friends, and consequently he and they are responsible for what they stated in their speeches here. The hon. gentleman, after having refused to take part in this investigation, thought better of it in one way, and he wrote a postscript to his letter. He told the commissioners that he wanted to have a certain number of witnesses called. He said :

Although I have been refused the investigation I demanded, and while I declined to take any part in this reference for the reasons stated, yet I take this occasion to make public a list of witnesses whom I would have called had I been given the opportunity to prove my charges, namely :—

1. Sir Adolphe Caron, whom I would have also called upon to produce for inspection his bank books, cheque books and books of account, during the period from 1882 to 1891.

2. The Secretary of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Construction Company, and the production by him of all contracts, sub-contracts, and agreements in connection with the construction of or financing for the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway ; also the minute books, and books of account of the company, and any books showing the receipt or transfer of any Dominion subsidies.

3. The Secretary of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, and the production of books showing dates of the receipt and payment or disposal of Dominion subsidies.

4. The Secretary of the Témiscouata Railway Company, and the production of books showing the dates of the receipt and payment or disposal of Dominion subsidies.

5. The Hon. Thomas McGreevy, whom I would also have required to produce all books, bank books, cheque books, cheque stubs, receipts, letters, orders, papers and vouchers relating to the receipt and to the payments of election expenditures while he acted as political treasurer of the Conservative party in the district of Quebec.

6. J. J. Macdonald, whom I would also have required to produce all agreements, correspondence and papers of all kinds relating to the purchase by him of his interest in the Témiscouata Railway, and all vouchers, notes or cheques connected with, and books containing entries relating to the payment by him of the consideration therefor, and all vouchers, notes or cheques connected with, or books containing entries relating to the payment of moneys to aid in the election of Sir Adolphe Caron or other members or supporters of the Government of which he was a member since the said J. J. Macdonald acquired an interest in said railway and became beneficially interested in the Dominion subsidies to said railway.

7. J. Israël Tarte, whom I would also require to produce all agreements, correspondence, papers, vouchers, or documents of any kind relating to the sale to J. J. Macdonald of an interest in the Témiscouata Railway, or to the payment of the consideration therefor, or to contributions by any person beneficially interested in the subsidies to said railway for election purposes, to aid in the election to the House of Commons of Sir Adolphe Caron or other members or supporters of the Government of which he was a member.

8. Dr. Grandbois, M.P., whom I would also require to produce all agreements, correspondence, papers, vouchers or documents of any kind relating to the sale to J. J. Macdonald of an interest in the Témiscouata Railway, or to the payment of the consideration therefor, or to contributions by any person beneficially interested in the subsidies to said railway for election purposes to aid in the election to the House of Commons of Sir Adolphe Caron or other members or supporters of the Government of which he was a member.

9. A. R. Macdonald, whom I would also require to produce all agreements, correspondence, papers, vouchers or documents of any kind relating to the sale to J. J. Macdonald of an interest in the Témiscouata Railway, or to the payment of the consideration therefor, or to contributions by any persons beneficially interested in the subsidies to said railway for election purposes to aid in the election to the House of Commons of Sir Adolphe Caron or other members or supporters of the Government of which he was a member.

10. The representatives of the estate of the late Hon. J. G. Ross, of Quebec, and the production of all agreements, vouchers, papers, correspondence connected with the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, or the construction thereof, or the financing therefor, and also all notes or vouchers, books containing entries, relating to payments to or for Sir Adolphe Caron while the late J. G. Ross was connected with the construction of, or financing for, the said railway or beneficially interested in the Dominion subsidies thereto.

11. H. J. Beemer, and the production by him of all contracts, agreements, books, papers or correspondence relating to the construction of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, or the financing therefor, and all notes, cheques, cheque stubs, vouchers, bank pass-books, books of account or any other papers, letters or documents relating to or containing entries relating to the payments of money to Sir Adolphe Caron or relating to contributions for election purposes to aid in the election to the House of Commons of Sir Adolphe Caron, or other members or supporters of the Government of which he was a member.

12. The manager of the Quebec Bank at Quebec, and the production of all books showing the discount and deposit and general accounts of Sir Adolphe Caron and Thomas McGreevy, during the period from 1882 to 1891, while subsidies were being granted for the construction of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, and the Témiscouata Railway.

13. The Manager of the Banque du Peuple at Quebec, and the production of all books showing the discount and deposit and general accounts of Sir Adolphe Caron and Thomas McGreevy, during the period from 1882 to 1891, while subsidies were being granted for the construction of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, and the Témiscouata Railway.

14. In the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of 10th June, 1892, in a Notice of Motion given by Sir Richard Cartwright, are to be found copies of letters, receipts and other documents which seem to have a direct and essential relevancy to the charges which I made in the House of Commons. In case of failure to secure the production of the originals from Mr. Thomas McGreevy, I would have called upon Mr. John Alexander, of the Engraving Bureau, 16 Adelaide Street, West, Toronto, to produce and prove the photographic facsimiles thereof which he had executed.

J. D. E.

Every one of those witnesses was called, and some other witnesses were called as well, because the evidence tended to show that perhaps other gentlemen might be able to reveal something. I take this occasion to repeat that this commission, although confined to the subsidies given by this Dominion, went beyond that. They went into provincial subsidies and municipal subsidies, and any impartial man going through that evidence must come to the conclusion that, instead of attempting to screen the Postmaster-General in that investigation, neither the lawyers for the prosecution nor the commissioners showed the slightest disposition to do so, but, on the contrary, felt it to be their duty to make a most thorough and searching investigation into every description of electioneering expenses. The charges, as the hon. gentleman has said, arose out of the subsidies granted to two railway companies, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company and the Témiscouata Railway Company. In the charges of the hon. member for West Ontario, he commenced by stating :

1. That during each of the years 1882 to 1891 inclusive, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company received by way of bonus from the Dominion of Canada, subsidies amounting in the aggregate to upwards of $1,000,000, which subsidies were voted by Parliament on the recommendation of the Ministers of the Crown.

This is the first statement—that they received within this period by way of bonus, cash, upwards of $1,000,000. Now, the proof has shown, and it is admitted by the hon. gentleman himself, that the actual subsidies of this Parliament to that railway amounted to exactly $844,000, or $156,000 less than the hon. gentleman alleged. But what is $156,000 to a gentleman of his charging capacity? Now, there was the first mistake. He went on to say so again to-night, but when it comes to a statement of the figures, as produced, these are the actual sums that were paid by this Dominion. He says :

Arrangements were entered into——

I am reading from his own charges now——

—by the said railway company whereby the expenditure of said subsidies was made by a construction company through or in conjunction with one H.J. Beemer, a contractor—and the said Beemer, and those who assisted him in financing for the said railway works, received the benefit of the said subsidies.

3. During the whole of the said period from 1882 to 1891, the Hon. Sir Adolphe P. Caron was, and still is, a member of the House of Commons of Canada, a member of the Canadian Government and one of Her Majesty's Privy Councillors for Canada.

4. That the said Sir Adolphe P. Caron was, during the whole, or the greater part of the said period, one of the members of the said Construction Company, and thus had means of knowledge of, and did know of the dealings with the said subsidies and their destination after they were paid over by the Government to the said railway company.

Now, it may be necessary here to state something concerning this railway company, from its inception. It is just as well to admit at once that from 1882 to 1891—we all know it—the hon. gentleman who is accused was a member of this Parliament, and of the Government of Canada, one of its Privy Councillors. And we might as well come also to the charge which is the most important one, which would be the most damaging if it were true, and upon which hon. gentlemen to-night have harped at very great length, and with very great injustice. I refer to the charge about Sir Adolphe Caron being a member of this Construction Company. One would imagine, from the statements made by the hon. gentleman, that Sir Adolphe Caron was really and truly, in his own right, a member of this Construction Company, and that he was a very prominent man in it. Now, what are the facts? Sir Adolphe Caron was there representing the firm of Andrew, Caron & Andrews, to the extent of $2,500. That was the whole sum and substance of that firm's interest in this Construction Company. And the fact that he was there for a short time—and I will show that it was for a very short time, indeed, in a few moments—was the basis of this great outcry that has been raised. On page 98 of Mr. Scott's evidence, we find these words :

Q. Have you got any books here which will show who were the members of the Construction Company?—A. Yes, these books here will show.

Q. Will you open them at a point to show that, and mention the names of the shareholders, with the amount of stock held by each of the shareholders?—A. Yes, they are as follows:—John Ross, $25,000; James G. Ross, $25,000; William Withall, $25,000; James Connolly, $1,250; J. B. Renaud, $5,000; William Ogden, $2,500; Sir A. P. Caron, $2,500.

By Mr. Justice Tait :

Q. From what period was Sir A. P. Caron a shareholder?—A. From the first; he is still a shareholder; the account was opened in 1879.

Q. He was a shareholder from the beginning of the company?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Archibald :

Q. Name the other shareholders?—A. E. Beaudet, $3,000; Honourable I. Thibaudeau, $2,500; Honourable P. Garneau, $2,000; Prudent Vallée, $500.

By Mr. Justice Tait :

Q. I suppose all these parties were shareholders in the railway company?—A. No, sir; they were not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the Construction Company?

Mr. CURRAN. They were shareholders in the Construction Company, and not in the railway company. Sir Adolphe Caron entered the Government in November, 1880, and I quote again from the evidence of Mr. Scott, at page 105 of the blue-book :

Q. I asked you, Mr. Scott, to look up the minute books of the Construction Company, of the meetings, both of the shareholders and directors, to see at what meetings Sir A. P. Caron was present. Have you done so?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you got the list of those attendances?—A. I have, I can read them, they are as follows: He was present on the 14th July, 1879, at a meeting of directors; on the 6th August, 1879, meeting of directors; on 25th August, 1879, and the 16th September, 1879.

Counsel for Sir A. P. Caron objects to the attendance at meetings before 1882.

Objection reserved.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that here was the counsel objecting to anything before 1882, and that objection was overruled.

A. He was present on the 27th October, 1879, 15th November, 1879, on the 19th December, 1879, on the 20th December, 1879, 31st December, 1879, 6th Feb., 1880, 5th July, 1880, 7th July, 1880, 14th July, 1880, 16th July, 1880, 28th September, 1880, 30th Sept., 1880, on the 1st August, 1882, and at shareholders' meetings on the 9th and 10th July, 1883.

Q. Anything in 1881?—A. No, he was present on the 16th July, 1886, at a director's meeting.

Q. After 1883, he was only at two meetings of directors, and two meetings of shareholders?—A. Yes.

Now, all this shows the number of times the hon. gentleman—who had left Quebec and had come to reside in Ottawa—attended those meetings, and, after his removal, he attended by mere accident. So that, although he was there, though he was a member of the Construction Company, the sworn testimony of Mr. Scott goes to establish that he had no interest in it, took no part in it, that he knew nothing about the transactions, and that, upon these occasions when he was present, he went there to shake hands with his friends, being on a visit to Quebec during the summer months, but took no part in, and knew nothing of their proceedings. Mr. Scott goes on to speak in his evidence, on page 108, as to the political complexion of the company. One would suppose, from the speech of the hon. gentleman to-night, that this was a Conservative conspiracy, that the whole Conservative party, from top to bottom, were in it, and that nobody else could put his nose there. What do we find in the evidence :

Q. If I mistake not, I believe that you were chiefly interested in organizing that Construction Company?—A. Yes, mainly so.

Q. You had been for a great many years in the service of John Ross & Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. A brother of James Gibb Ross?—A. Yes.

Q. You organized the Construction Company in 1878?—A. Yes.

Q. And you induced people to go into that Construction Company simply because you were satisfied that the Lake St. John Railway Company never could build the road as it then stood?—A. Yes.

Q. You took into that Construction Company Mr. James Ross, Mr. William Withall, Hon. Pierre Garneau, Hon. I. Thibaudeau, Mr. James Connolly and Sir A. P. Caron?—A. Yes.

Q. Were these men chiefly of much financial means?—A. Oh, yes, the best men in town.

Q. Practically the best men of the town and out of it too?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Thibaudeau, Mr. Garneau and Mr. Connolly were men of large financial means?—A. Yes.

Q. Sir A. P. Caron at that time was member for Quebec County?—A. Yes.

Q. And the county of Quebec was largely interested in the construction of that road?—A. Yes.

Q. It ran through the county to a large extent?—A. Yes.

Q. Sir A. P. Caron was also at that time a member of the firm of Andrews, Caron & Andrews?—A. Yes.

Q. The firm of Andrews, Caron & Andrews had been solicitors for the Quebec and Gosford Railway for many years?—A. Yes.

Q. And took a lively interest in the progress of the road?—A. Very great interest; yes.

Q. All these gentlemen who went into that road put their money into it, did they not?—A. Yes.

Q. Sir A. P. Caron put in $2,500 as representing the firm of Andrews, Caron & Andrews?—A. Yes.

Q. He has not got much of that back, has he?—A. Not a cent.

Q. The other gentlemen who went into it—Messrs. Ross, Withall, Thibaudeau, Garneau—all put their money in also?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us how much more the Construction Company put into the road?—A. The Construction Company put in about $450,000.

Now, I will stop here for a moment to answer the assertion made by the hon. gentleman who brought this charge. He told us that there was nothing to show that this $450,000 went into the road at all, that it was a mere matter of agreement between the parties. I want to direct attention to the fact that Mr. Scott swears that the Construction Company actually expended about $450,000. He goes on :

Q. And that has been the profit which they derived from their connection with it; they are out of pocket $450,000?—A. That is about it.

Q. Tell us what the political complexion of the board of directors was—was it uniform, or was it varied in its colours?—A. We always had two colours.

Q. Mr. Thibaudeau and Mr. Connolly were both very strong Liberals and both ran as candidates for the Liberal party in the county of Quebec?—A. Yes.

Mr. Scott proceeds to tell us, on pages 112 and 113, about the action of the present Postmaster-General after he had entered the Government :

Q. Now, let us come to Sir A. P. Caron's connection with the Construction Company. As a matter of fact, who subscribed that $2,500 worth of stock that was paid into that company in his name?—A. His firm did.

Q. What was the firm?—A. Andrews, Caron & Andrews.

Q. They subscribed and paid for the stock, and Sir A. P. Caron was there to represent their interests in the company?—A. Exactly.

Q. You have given us the dates of Sir A. P. Caron's attendances at the meeting of the board up to 1886, and I notice that from 1882 to 1886, he was present at only three meetings of the directors?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, will you tell us how many meetings there must have been from 1882 to 1891, on the average; you have one several times a month, do you?—A. Probably thirty or forty meetings each year.

Q. From 1882 to 1886, what part did Sir A. P. Caron take in the management of the affairs of the company during that time, so far as he was concerned?—A. He took no part at all.

Let me draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to these facts that are sworn to. Here is an hon. gentleman who has stood up in this House, and for an hour to-night has endeavoured to impress Parliament with the idea that the Postmaster-General knew all about this company, that he was cognizant of its every move and every step, that he was at their back in Ottawa whenever they needed money, that he was, from beginning to end, the moving spirit of this organization. They held thirty or forty meetings a year, from 1882 to 1891, and, during all that time, Sir Adolphe Caron was present at only three meetings. Mr. Scott goes on to say :

Q. Did he practically know anything of the business of the company or of its operation?—A. No, he could not, because he was not here.

Q. Did he take any part in the administration of the company during that time?—A. No.

Q. His attendance at those board meetings were simply what?—A. Accidentally, in most cases.

Q. And I suppose his stay at the meetings would not be very prolonged, as a rule?—A. When he did come in, he would shake hands and go out again.

Q. Still you put him down as being present?—A. Yes.

Q. His fees were large during that time as director?—A. He had one fee but he sent it back again. He would not take it.

Q. Now, you have spoken of the assistance which Sir A. P. Caron gave you at Ottawa; at the time demands were made for aid for the railway; Sir A. P. Caron was member of Parliament for the county of Quebec, and a Federal Minister from this district from 1882 to 1891?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware that the Lake St. John Railway Company found Sir A. P. Caron willing to help when they had anything to be done at Ottawa?—A. What do you mean?

Q. Did you apply to him because he was a member of your company, or because of the position he occupied as member in this district, to get his assistance at Ottawa to put your affairs through?—A. He was the member representing the county through which the railway ran.

Q. And therefore you felt you were justified in calling upon him, to give you any help that you could get to obtain these subsidies?—A. Just so.

Q. During the time that this work was in process of construction you occasionally had meetings of the members of Parliament from this district and all that sort of thing?—A. Yes.

Q. Meetings of ministers and priests and bishops to help you with their influence?—A. We got all the influence we could.

Q. You did not pay very much attention to the religion or the politics of the people you asked for help, did you?—A. No.

Q. You had members of Parliament of both political parties?—A. Both sides.

Q. In fact every one around Quebec wanted to get the road built, no matter what was their political complexion?—A. Every one helped pretty well.

Now, I think that, in view of this evidence, sworn to by Mr. Scott, I have pretty well disposed of the charge made to-night that Sir Adolphe Caron was the main mover in this Construction Company, that he was responsible for all its acts and all its management. I think we have established beyond the shadow of a doubt that he had nothing at all to do with it, and that the charge made under that head must, therefore, necessarily fall to the ground. He did not use his position as a Minister in any way derogatory to the honour and dignity of the position which he held in the Government, and the charges made under that head are utterly baseless. He did what every member of Parliament, and every Minister is obliged to do in connection with his constituency—take a legitimate interest in the affairs of his county, in the affairs of the district for which he was Minister. I defy any man, who will read that testimony from beginning to end with a desire to arrive at a fair and honest conclusion, to pronounce any other verdict than that he did not go beyond the position which he should have assumed, and that his acts were justified in every particular in that respect. We now come to the charges with reference to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company:

Mr. CURRAN.

That during the said period and while the said railway was being constructed in part by means of said subsidies, the said Sir A. P. Caron corruptly received large sums of money out of the said subsidies, and from money raised upon the credit of the same, and from parties beneficially interested in the same.

That during the said period out of said subsidies, and out of moneys raised upon the credit of the same, and from parties beneficially interested in the same, large sums of money were from time to time corruptly paid and contributed, at the request and with the knowledge of said Sir A. P. Caron, for election purposes, and to aid in the election to the House of Commons of the said Sir A. P. Caron, and other members and supporters of the Government of which he was a member, and that after some of such last-mentioned corrupt payments and contributions were made, further and other subsidies were granted and paid to the said railway company by the Government of which Sir A. P. Caron was a member.

It may be well here to say a few words about the railway company itself. The complaint was repeated by the hon. member when speaking about his charges that the exclusion of the words "persons beneficially interested" deprived him of the opportunity of making his proof, but the evidence goes to show, and there is no other proof than that adduced—because everything connected with the railway, its construction, advance of subsidies and their application has been brought out—and the only person interested throughout was Mr. J. G. Ross, because he was connected with Mr. Beemer, who was acting under contract with the Construction Company to build the road, and the Government were paying the subsidies as the road was built, on the certificate of the engineer in charge. The history of this matter was this. There was, first, the Quebec and Gosford Railway, which built a wooden railway for a distance of ten miles, towards which they received $48,000 as a subsidy from the province of Quebec. The Construction Company already referred to, which had the corporate name of the Quebec and Lake St. John Lumbering and Trading Company, was incorporated in 1878 by provincial letters patent. It constructed forty-eight miles of road, including the ten miles built by the Gosford company. Then the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway was organized, and the Construction Company undertook to build the railway. Then the Dominion Government made the contract with the Lake St. John Railway Company. There were forty-eight miles of road then built by the Construction Company. I have already shown by the sworn evidence of Mr. Scott that $450,000 had been expended on the road. Then they entered into the contract with Mr. Beemer, known throughout the country as one of the most prominent contractors, on 10th July, 1883, to build the balance of the road from Lake Simon to Lake St. John, a distance of 135 miles. The Construction Company transferred to Mr. Beemer all the subsidies, Dominion, provincial and municipal, and they promised their aid towards obtaining more subsidies if they could be secured. It has been made to appear as a terrible scandal, that these gentlemen in making a contract with a public contractor to build a road on which they had expended themselves $450,000, and felt they could not go further, should have transferred to the contractor who was to build the road all subsidies, Dominion, provincial and municipal, and promised to do the best they could to obtain further subsidies. Afterwards there was a branch projected to Chicoutimi, which made the whole contract cover a distance of 190 miles. But over and above the amount which Mr. Beemer was to receive as subsidies for the building of the road, there was a sum of $20,000 allowed per mile in bonds; he was to get bonds for $20,000 per mile, or £750,000 sterling. He was to recoup the Construction Company for the $450,000 which they had expended on those forty-two miles of road out of the proceeds of these bonds and not out of the subsidies as alleged by the member for West Ontario. A great deal has been said about this scandalous transaction; but the House and the country should know what was the actual cost of the road, the amount put into the work, and so I again refer to the evidence of Mr. Scott, at page 113, where he shows that the sum of $4,572,000 in cash was actually spent upon the construction of the road. He was asked as follows:—

Q. Will you give us figures which show the amount of money they spent or put into the construction of this road?—A. Yes, in round figures, the amount of money that has been put into this road, has been $4,572,000.00.

Q. That is money that has actually gone into the brick, stone, mortar and clay on this road?—A. It is the actual cash in the road.

Q. To purchase the road?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, where did the money come from?—A. $844,000.00 from the Dominion subsidy, $1,507,000.00 from the Province, $450,000.00 from the Construction Company, $100,000.00 from the original Gosford shareholders, and $1,000,000.00 from the English bondholders.

$220,000 more were advanced by Mr. J. G. Ross to Mr. Beemer, and over and above the subsidies there was the balance of bonds, and there was along with that sum $83,000 of Mr. Beemer's own money in excess of what he had received in subsidies and in bonds from every other source. Mr. Beemer has explained that he had made considerable money out of contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that he put into the railway. The charge that the subsidies of the Dominion, or any other subsidies, or any part of them were diverted from railway construction purposes to election purposes is proved to my mind to be utterly groundless. Every cent of that money went into the railway, and every dollar of these subsidies had to be earned before the engineer gave his certificate. The engineer's certificate that each ten miles of railway had been built had to be forwarded to Ottawa, according to the requirements of the law, and not one dollar of the Dominion subsidy went out until it had been earned. Mr. Beemer, we are told, had this transaction with Mr. Ross. It is considered a most extraordinary occurrence that a man carrying on such an extensive work had to finance. Certainly Mr. Beemer had to do some financing. He had to obtain money, and Mr. Ross was his friend, and so he went to him and said: I will transfer to you the subsidies as earned, if you will advance me the money in the meantime. And Mr. Ross advanced the money, and paid himself out of the subsidies as earned and paid over. What does this witness Scott say? At page 115 of the evidence I find the following:

Q. Now, by what means are these payments made by the Federal Government; on what documentary evidence of the work done did the Federal Government make the advances?—A. They inspected every ten miles.

Q. When you say "they," who do you mean?—A. The engineer, Mr. Ridout.

Q. And on this report, the Government paid the money to the party to whom the subsidy had been transferred in ten-mile sections?—A. Yes.

Q. So that there was no money paid by the Federal Government out of these subsidies until after such time as the letter of the law had been complied with, in so far as the inspection was concerned?—A. No, and it was very difficult to get it then.

Q. Why do you say that?—A. They were very hard to please.

Q. You mean to say they were very particular that the work had been done and the money earned?—A. Oh, yes, the most trivial things were set up as a reason for delay. If we neglected to do the most trivial work it was not paid.

And yet we had the hon. gentleman standing here to-night for an hour and a half talking about these subsidies having been paid into the pocket of Beemer or into the pocket of Ross, the same as if the Postmaster-General, or any other member of the Government, had actually put his hand into the till, stolen the money and handed it over, as he called it, as swag to one of his confederates outside. Yet we have the proof that not one dollar of these subsidies was advanced to Beemer, or to anybody else, until every cent of it had been earned. Continuing his examination, we find the following:—

Q. To your knowledge was any application made by the company supported by Sir A. P. Caron to obtain any of these subsidies by reason of any corrupt payment, or any bargain, or any promise of any corrupt payment?—A. Not at all.

Q. Was any suggestion made at any time of anything of that sort?—A. No, never.

Q. Were your demands for subsidies generally supported by the people of this district and the people of the county of Chicoutimi?—A. Yes.

Q. Were your applications made in the regular way by correspondence with the department?—A. Yes, invariably.

Q. Nothing done outside but what appears by the official correspondence to obtain these subsidies?—A. Except personal solicitation.

Q. That personal solicitation, was it largely by petitions?—A. Yes.

Q. Deputations of public men from the district who called on the Minister of Railways at Ottawa to get this?—A. Yes.

Q. There was nothing done outside of that?—A. No.

Q. That you know of your own certain knowledge?—A. Yes.

Q. While I understand that your company has been very flush, yet you have not always had a great deal of money to throw away for elections of that sort, I presume, Mr. Scott?—A. No.

Q. Now, Mr. Scott, I want to trace this money, as far as it is possible to trace it, from the Federal exchequer into the road-bed, and I want you to give us the documents which are necessary to do that—the progress estimates, the transfers and everything else?—A. I will give you all the progress estimates that I can find.

Q. Have you got them with you?—A. They will be here in a few minutes; I have sent for them; they are all in the same form as the one you have got.

Q. You have said that there were £200,000 worth of bonds sold; who sold those bonds?—A. They were sold by Cotts & Son, of London.

Q. The proceeds of the sale were handed over to whom?—A. The proceeds of the sale were put in trust.

Q. For the benefit of?—A. For the benefit of the bondholders. That is, for the completion and equipment of the road.

Q. You said this morning that the proceeds of the sale, the amount realized upon the sale, was applied to the completion of the road. Now, what works were done by this money?—A. Here is a list; the annual report of the company; which shows the amount of expenditure of that trust fund, and which will be found on page 6 of report of the annual meeting of shareholders on the 12th May, 1892.

Q. All the payments made by the Government to the parties in exhibit J S 3, were made, I presume, on the estimates of the Government engineer?—A. Yes, on the report of inspection of the Government engineer.

Q. He also furnished to the Government the progress estimates of the work done?—A. No.

Q. The Government engineer simply came on the road and made an inspection and ascertained whether or not the work had been done in accordance with the conditions of the subsidy contract?—A. Yes, he had access, of course, to any documents that he wished, to ascertain for himself what we had done.

Q. You said that reports were made by him after careful and actual inspection?—A. I say that in this statement of moneys received from the Dominion Government, several payments appear to have been made to Ross & Company, and these payments were made to Ross & Company to recoup them for advances made to Beemer to enable him to do the work, that is, for advances on the progress estimates.

I want this part of the evidence particularly noted:

Q. That is to say that Ross did not make the advances to Beemer until such time as Beemer handed to him the progress estimates prepared by the company's engineer and certified by the directors of the Construction Company?—A. Yes, and certified as such.

There was another point to which the hon. gentleman referred, with regard to what he called the extraordinary subsidy that had been granted, and granted through the interference of the Postmaster-General. The evidence on that point is as follows:—

Q. I see here that the second item in the statement of subsidies, exhibit (J S 16) says, "Short mileage

Mr. CURRAN.

25 miles $80,000.00"?—A. I explained that in my evidence yesterday. The first vote of the subsidy that was given stated the mileage from St. Raymond to Lake St. John to be 120 miles. That was an error on the part of the Railway Department at Ottawa; the mileage was estimated afterwards to be 145 miles, and it was corrected the following session.

Q. So that that was simply a clerical error?—A. Yes, it was; Sir Charles Tupper was then Minister of Railways. We pointed that out to him and he had it corrected next session.

Q. You discovered the error soon after the first act was passed?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that 46 Vic. so passed for the purpose of correcting that?—A. Yes.

Q. What about this additional subsidy of $96,000 for the 32 miles from the Canadian Pacific Railway Junction; how did that come to be an additional subsidy?—A. That portion of the road had been built, but there was something to do on it and some equipment to be put on it, and we applied to the Government for a subsidy for it and they gave it to us.

Q. Was that additional subsidy covering the same ground as subsidies by 45 Vic.?—A. Oh, no, that ground had never been covered before.

Q. That was a subsidy for a portion of the line which had never been subsidized by the Federal Government?—A. Exactly.

Q. How did you come to get that subsidy, do you remember having done anything?—A. Nothing special, except that we applied for it very frequently.

Q. Did you do anything better than that?—A. In what way?

Q. Did you have any person look over the road and see for themselves—any one of the officers or Ministers at Ottawa?—A. Yes, Sir John Macdonald went over that portion of the road.

Q. And who else?—A. Sir Charles Tupper.

Q. What position did he occupy at that time?—A. He was Minister of Railways.

Q. So that you brought the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways at the time, down, and they went over the road, and saw for themselves the necessity there was for this subsidy?—A. Yes.

Q. And it was after that, that the subsidy was granted?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you give anything to either of them?—A. We gave them a lunch.

Q. That is the extent of the corrupt process you applied?—A. Yes.

Q. I wish to have it right; that portion of the road never received a dollar before, and it received this $3,200 a mile from the Federal Government when the work had been gone over by the then Minister of Railways and the Prime Minister?—A. Yes.

Mr. Beemer, in his evidence, repudiates any corrupt bargain, or even the suggestion of such, with the Postmaster-General, in regard to the subsidies. He says, at page 129 of the evidence:

Q. I presume you are well acquainted with Sir A. P. Caron?—A. Very well acquainted.

Q. You knew he was a director of the company with whom you contracted?—A. I think I did.

Q. Did you discuss the matter with him?—A. Never.

Q. Never discussed it with him?—A. Never discussed the question of the contract, or the wherefores of the work at all. In a general way, I might have spoken to him about the contract, but I never talked to him about any question of details of the contract.

Q. Never any question of subsidies?—A. Never, except when we went to Ottawa to ask for subsidies; we always went to Sir A. P. Caron, as the representative of the Quebec District, and to Sir Hector Langevin. Generally we went to Sir Hector Langevin and then to Sir A. P. Caron, because we did not pass over Sir Hector Langevin.

Q. But all your discussions with the gentlemen was upon the capabilities of the country for supporting millions of inhabitants?—A. Yes, and the benefit it would be to the province at large and to Quebec city.

Q. And no question, you say, was ever raised between you as to the necessity of acting, further than the general question of the necessity of more subsidies, between you and Sir A. P. Caron?—A. No, sir.

Now, refer also to page 130, where you will find this very important evidence :

Q. Will you explain as closely as you can what was the nature of the discussion between you and Sir A. P. Caron about that subsidy in 1886?—A. I cannot, I never had any private conversation with him.

Q. Did you say that you discussed that matter with him?—A. I have, but I have discussed it with others as well.

Q. But with him?—A. Not with him personally.

I will refer on the same point, to page 131 :

Q. You were aware at the time that Sir A. P. Caron was a member of the board of directors?—A. I did not look upon that in any degree of importance at all.

Q. Do you say you do not think he would have any more influence than anybody else?—A. I did not say that, but I look mainly to the board. I knew he would do whatever he could.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRAN. Certainly. Why not?

Q. Whether for the benefit of the country or not?—A. For the benefit of the country and for the road too. I have always found him act in that way, throwing aside his own personal affairs to benefit the country at large.

Q. Had you any private conversation concerning this matter with Sir A. P. Caron, that is concerning the subsidies?—A. I do not remember that I ever had; that is what we might call private conversation.

Q. I mean to say conversation between you and Sir A. P. Caron, whether it is private or not private?—A. I may have seen Sir A. P. Caron when he was alone, I cannot say as to that. I do not remember all these meetings.

Q. Do you remember ever going to Sir A. P. Caron to solicit his influence in getting subsidies when you were in company with anybody else?—A. It must only have been in dealing with some general result which was decided on by the board and Mr. Scott, simply action in concert with the directors and the board of the company—never on my own private account at all.

Q. Never on your own private account?—A. No, not in regard to the Lake St. John road.

Q. Never to promote, as far as you know how, the granting of further subsidies?—A. Except such as were endorsed by the company, and such as were first inaugurated by Mr. Scott.

Q. Such as were deemed necessary by the company?—A. Yes.

Q. And by yourself as the contractor?—A. Yes, and such as had been previously discussed by the company. Mr. Scott was always in advance with his demands, he is a very good secretary.

Q. I notice that a good many petitions were made?—A. Yes, Mr. Scott made them all, I never made any petitions.

Q. Did you not furnish him with materials on which to base the petitions?—A. No, he did not want any one to do that.

Q. Was Mr. Scott ever over the road?—A. Oh, yes; I do not know that he went over the location more than I did; the first time I went to the end of it was on a locomotive.

Q. Now, I have asked you, Mr. Beemer, whether you had ever personally seen Sir A. P. Caron in reference to these matters, and in regard to the subsidies and so on. Did you ever request anybody to see Sir A. P. Caron and to make any representations to him on your behalf, concerning these subsidies?—A. I do not remember, I may have done so, but while I do not remember it, I may possibly have asked some other Minister to say something in regard to these subsidies to the Minister of Railways; but I do not think I ever asked them to see Sir A. P. Caron, because I knew that Sir A. P. Caron would do everything in his power that was reasonable to get the assistance for the road, that was asked for by the company. I felt he would always do that, because he has always shown the utmost endeavour to do anything of that kind; he has always been ready to work for the interest of the country.

Q. What I mean, is, did you ever charge any mutual friend of the Minister, perhaps a member of the Board of Directors of the Construction Company, to see Sir A. P. Caron?—A. I do not think so.

Q. I wish you would give a little more positive answer to that question?—A. Well, I gave you the best answer I have at my command; you don't want me to tell you something I am not sure about.

Q. Did you ever urge any reason outside of the needs of the road and the fair demands of the district for the granting of subsidies to the road?—A. No, sir; emphatically no.

Now, we have had discussed here to-day the question of these $25,000 of notes that were given by Mr. Beemer to Mr. Ross. That question is one of the utmost simplicity, as it is presented in the evidence. The testimony of Sir A. P. Caron—the testimony of Mr. Beemer, and the testimony of all those concerned in this transaction, shows that Senator Ross was an old friend of Sir Adolphe Caron. He had known him from his childhood; he had been a friend of his father and his family years before; he had been a Conservative all his life. He had been twice a candidate of the Conservative party; being a wealthy man deeply interested in the country and in its policy he had contributed large sums of money at various times, as a friend of the political party to which he belonged, to aid that party in the elections. Having been met in the city of Montreal by Sir Adolphe Caron he was asked there if he would not subscribe to the election, and he consented to give a subscription of $25,000, which, he being several times a millionaire, was indeed not a very large one. Then Sir Adolphe Caron left him for the time being. Now, a great howl has been set up about this, and the attempt has been made to show that this money came out of the subsidies and was part and parcel of those subsidies ; while the sworn evidence shows that the subsidies went straight to the railway. But I go further, and say—and I say it without fear of contradiction—that, in view of the evidence given as to the amount of money put into the railway, in view of the evidence showing that every dollar of the subsidies went into the railway, that $220,000 of Jas. G. Ross's money had gone into it as the balance of a loan to Mr. Beemer, that according to Mr. Beemer's own testimony, $83,000 of his own money had gone into it, over and above all those federal, provincial and municipal subsidies—I say, that if the money had gone straight as a donation from Henry J. Beemer himself, there would be no ground for condemning Sir Adolphe Caron in the matter. There is the most positive and conclusive evidence that he did not suspect the money to come from Beemer ; but I have no hesitation in asserting, from the evidence, that every dollar of the Dominion subsidy, and hundreds of thousands of dollars over and above that amount, went into the road, and, even if the charges as made originally by the hon. member for West Ontario were put in the most severe crucial form, there is no evidence to show that Sir Adolphe Caron was in any way guilty of the charges made against him. Now, he had no communication with Mr. Beemer at all. He saw Ross in Montreal ; and I will just direct your attention to page 223, where you will find the sworn evidence of Sir Adolphe Caron himself. Fault has been found with him because he appeared before the commission—because he went there without having been summoned. He was nobody's witness ; he volunteered his evidence ; and some observations were made as to that. But what criticism would have been directed against him if he had refrained from going before that Commission, and offering his evidence ? Here is what he said :

Q. Now, in February or March, a general election took place for the House of Commons of Canada?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you apply to Mr. Ross, on the occasion of that election, for a subscription to the election fund?—A. I did.

Q. And what took place?—A. I had in 1887 more particularly charge of the district of Quebec. I called on Mr. Ross, as I have already stated I had already done very frequently ; I laid before him what I considered to be the position of the party in the district of Quebec. I pointed to him the importance of the fight which we had to meet, and I told him that I had come to him to ask him to help in providing the funds which I considered to be necessary for the legal and legitimate expenses of the campaign.

Q. What was the result?—A. We discussed the question together, and the result of it was that he told me he would give me $25,000.

Q. What did he do?—A. The conversation took place one day, and the following day I had occasion to require some funds for the campaign, and I called on Mr. Ross. I got from him personally an amount which I would not be absolutely precise about, but it was between $5,000 and $10,000 on the first day.

MR. CURRAN.

From his office I drove up to the office of the Honourable Thomas McGreevy, a witness examined in this investigation. He was one of a committee composed of three—the Honourable Sir Hector Langevin and myself being two of the three and Mr. McGreevy being the third, and the treasurer for the purposes of that campaign. I took the money, which I had received from Mr. Ross, and handed it over personally to Mr. McGreevy, who received it from me. He gave me a receipt for the amount, and in a period of time extending, probably, over seven or eight days—or ten days possibly—I drew it out at different periods. The different amounts up to the $25,000 which had been promised by Mr. Ross through me, and these different amounts I placed in the hands of Mr. McGreevy, as I had done the first instalment, and got receipts from him. The amounts were distributed after a discussion between the three members of that committee, Sir Hector Langevin, myself and Mr. McGreevy. They were distributed for what we considered to be legitimate and indispensable expenses of the various counties which we were looking after in the district of Quebec.

Q. You say you got these different sums of money, amounting in all to $25,000, from the Honourable Mr. Ross himself?—A. I did.

Q. Personally?—A. Personally.

Q. In what form?—A. In bank bills.

Q. And you took it in that form to Mr. McGreevy?—A. Yes ; I drove from his office to Mr. McGreevy's. The amount never left my hands until it was deposited into the hands of Mr. McGreevy.

Q. Were you ever informed that this money was to be reimbursed to Mr. Ross by any person?—A. I never was. He never mentioned it, and I had no reason to imagine that it was not his personal contribution. I knew nothing at all about anything connected with that amount until the time that I heard the evidence that was adduced here.

Q. He never led you to believe it, or stated it to you?—A. Never, directly or indirectly.

Q. He never informed you otherwise than that this was his personal contribution to this fund?—A. No, he never did, never in any way.

Q. Was anything discussed at that interview at all between you and him about this being given on any other account than simply as his personal, individual subscription to the election?—A. Never. He never led me to believe, directly or indirectly, by anything that he said or did, that it was not his personal contribution.

Q. Had you any reason to believe differently up to the time the evidence was given here?—A. Never. I never had any reason to think that it was other than his private subscription. In fact, in the House of Commons, I denied having knowledge of anything else except what I stated here.

Q. Had you any conversation with H. J. Beemer with reference to this subscription of $25,000?—A. Never, directly or indirectly.

Q. Did you ever make application to him for it?—A. I never did.

Q. Did he ever tell you he had to pay it?—A. He never mentioned a word of it to me, and I never spoke to him about it. The only conversations which took place were between Mr. Ross and myself. I knew nothing more about it.

Q. You are aware since the evidence was given here of certain entries which appear in a certain account in one of the books kept by Mr. H. J. Beemer, with reference to the payment of this subscription of $25,000. You are aware that certain entries are in evidence of that kind?—A. I am aware of what was stated here, but I know nothing else about it.

Q. Were you ever aware, up to the time you heard that evidence given, that there were any such entries in any books of Mr. Beemer's?—A. No; I never had any reason to believe it.

Q. Were you ever aware that there were any notes given by Mr. Beemer or anybody else to reimburse Mr. Ross for that subscription?—A. I certainly never knew anything about it until I heard it here. I do not even know now that notes were given except from what I have heard.

Q. Did you ever, Sir Adolphe Caron, in the elections of 1882, 1887, or 1891, apply to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, or to the company called the Construction Company, or to Horace J. Beemer, for any subscriptions to any of these general elections?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever receive any such subscriptions from any of these parties?—A. I never did.

Now, Mr. Beemer confirms that statement in every particular. He gave the notes to Mr. Ross at his request. Why did he do so? Because Mr. Ross had obliged him with the money, by advancing to him moneys at various times, having advanced as much as $900,000 at one time. I refer to page 146 of Beemer's evidence, in order to get a confirmation of the Postmaster-General's evidence:

Q. Now, did any other man than Mr. Ross, being a member of either of these companies, ask you to subscribe?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Ross asked you alone to subscribe?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he, at the time that he asked you to subscribe, tell you that it would be to the advantage of the railway with regard to the subsidies?—A. No, sir, he simply said to me what I have related to you in answer to your question previously.

Q. Did Mr. Ross on either occasion tell you that Sir A. P. Caron expected you to subscribe?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. Right positively sure.

Q. Now, Mr. Beemer, you, I suppose, have urged upon Sir A. P. Caron the necessity of granting your railway further subsidies?—A. I think I have talked with him in regard to it sometimes.

Q. Now, did you on any of these occasions point out to him that you had been rather liberal for election purposes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the amount of your subscription to election funds ever talked of between you and Sir A. P. Caron?—A. I do not remember anything of that kind.

Q. There was no person as a go-between between you and Sir A. P. Caron?—A. No, sir. I never used them; I always do my business direct. Whatever I have to do I do myself. The company, of course, did their part, and I tried to do mine.

Q. Mr. Beemer, how were these notes paid for the election purposes?—A. They were paid by cheques.

Q. I suppose you have those cheques by which you paid the notes?—A. I think so.

Q. Have you asked Mr. Wurtele to bring them up?—A. I did ask him to bring them up. I beg your pardon, I misunderstood your question. You asked me if I had asked him and I said I did; I meant to say that I would ask him. I have already asked him to bring up the notes but I will ask him for the cheques also.

Q. So far as regards the entries in your books concerning this matter, I suppose that Mr. Wurtele knows about that better than you do?—A. I presume so.

Q. Mr. Beemer, you have stated that when you gave these notes you did not expect to pay them when you did pay them. Did you protest?—A. I did not think anything about it. I mean that I did not know that I was going to pay them or what portion I was going to pay.

Q. When they became due did you express your surprise to Mr. Ross?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You just paid them?—A. I did.

He gives his reasons why he paid these moneys without complaining. If you proceed to page 149 you find Mr. Justice Tait intervening. He asked:

Q. Did you ever, in speaking to Sir A. P. Caron with reference to subsidies you were anxious to obtain from the Dominion Government, promise, in any way, directly or indirectly, that you would contribute towards his election, or the election of supporters of the Government, or offer any political consideration whatever, to influence him in aiding you or the company in getting subsidies, or do you know of such thing having been done by anybody else?—A. No, sir.

This was in answer to the question of the presiding judge, and the evidence right straight through is exactly in the same line. I will give another quotation from page 151. After referring to these general matters he is asked:

Q. And you were at that time anxious and willing to help the Government then in power?—A. Yes, I was in sympathy with the policy of the Government as far as that was concerned, but non-political.

Q. Therefore, when I find in this account, exhibit HJB 2, entries in the following letter GEF and APC, these entries are not to be represented or to be construed so as to mean that this money was given by you to Sir A. P. Caron?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Nor to mean that to your knowledge the money went to Sir A. P. Caron?—A. No, sir.

Q. This is simply a book-keeping entry by which you charge the money to the general election fund, to which the money really went; and, Sir A. P. Caron being Minister for the district, you put his initials there?—A. Yes, I put his initials there.

Q. Now, the note for $3,000 sent to the Chicoutimi Hardware Company, went for the general election fund also, did it?—A. I think so, it is my understanding.

Q. Whether Sir A. P. Caron saw that note or not, you do not know?—A. I do not know.

Q. You had different other sources of revenue at the time that these moneys were paid than what you had from the subsidies you were receiving from the Federal Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had at that time mills working?—A. Well, yes, in repeating the number of enterprises I had, I left out one of the most important, and that was the bringing of the Q.M. & O. Railway into Montreal under Government contract. It was afterwards sold to the C. P. Railway. I made a lot of money out of the building of that masonry entrance at Montreal.

Q. How much of your own private means, independently altogether of moneys you received from the subsidies, or moneys you received from the Construction Company, or moneys you received from Mr. Ross, did you put into the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, and had you in it at the time this transaction went on?—A. Well, the books will show that at that period, or just previous to that, I am credited with some $83,000.

I consider that is a very important matter. Every banker, every man who could be thought of as knowing anything about these transactions, the brother of the late Mr. Ross, Mr. Ross himself, were examined. Everything that could be brought forward that might in any way, directly or indirectly, connect Sir Adolphe Caron with any corrupt transaction, was brought out, but no proof could be adduced to show what the hon. gentleman expected would have been proved out of the mouths of these witnesses. Now, I contend that, under all these circumstances, with the evidence that I have laid before this hon. House—and I could have given quotation after quotation from the sworn testimony—that we have utterly destroyed the contentions of the hon. gentleman with regard to Sir Adolphe Caron, as a member of this Construction Company, as being interested in its movements and watching and guarding its movements—we have disproved all that. We have disproved that one dollar of Dominion subsidy granted to this Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, ever went into any election fund or any corrupt fund of any kind. We have shown that the money went into the railway, that it was there, that the money was never paid over until it had been earned, ten miles by ten miles, and that, over and above all these sums of money paid by the Government, Mr. Ross and Mr. Beemer and others have sunk hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of these Dominion, provincial and municipal subsidies. As for the Témiscouata Railway charges, I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should stand before this House and try to torture the evidence into anything like a proof of the charges that were made here. He has utterly failed to show from the evidence in the blue-book, that the subsidies granted by the Government did not go into the railway, were not applied to its construction, from the first dollar to the last. The men whose names he supplied himself to the prosecuting gentlemen in this charge, went there and held up their hands and thanked God that every dollar of this subsidy money had gone to the railway. Now, we have had the examination of Mr. J. J. Macdonald and Mr. A. R. Macdonald. We have the same charges made in connection with the Lake St. John Railway, made also in connection with the Témiscouata Railway, and the only persons pecuniarily interested were Mr. J. J. Macdonald and his partner, Mr. Boswell. Now, I challenge any hon. gentleman to take that testimony, as it has been given, and show that it establishes these charges. Mr. J. J. Macdonald and Mr. Boswell had taken up the building of this railway. Mr. Macdonald was a well-known citizen, only recently deceased, a man of honour and of first-class character. He and his partner were the body and soul of the whole transaction. He organized the whole thing, and for a time remained outside, in order to see if some other contractor would not take up and carry on this work. He got the contract because he and his partner were the only ones who would carry it out, and they got their contract for Dominion, provincial and municipal subsidies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Paid up—

Mr. CURRAN. I have said, and I say it candidly, these gentlemen were the body and soul of the whole business, and I think no imputation will be cast on the late J. J. Macdonald's character or memory by my hon. friend, from anything that came up in connection with these questions. There is nothing to show that Mr. J. J. Macdonald, or anybody else in connection with this transaction, did not act in the most honourable way. I do not know anything about the transactions of the contractors of this company. I do not care anything about that. What I have to deal with, and what I am dealing with, is the subsidies granted to the railways by this Dominion Parliament. Did any portion of those subsidies go for election purposes? Did Sir Adolphe Caron receive any of that money, or did he not know that the money was going for election purposes? And I challenge any man who will read the testimony from beginning to end, and wishing to speak impartially, fairly and with common justice, to say that there is the first tittle of evidence to indicate that the Postmaster-General had any connection with the transaction, from beginning to end. They tried to connect him in a general way. At page 187, I find the following from A. R. Macdonald's testimony:—

Q. Now, Mr. Macdonald, you said that you had no dealings with Sir A. P. Caron in this matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not in the interest of the railway?—A. No, sir.

Q. To your knowledge, did the Témiscouata subscribe any amount for the election of Sir A. P. Caron or any other supporters of the Dominion Government in this district?—A. I am positive that the company never did such a thing, at least when I was president.

Q. Are you ready to swear that any of the past members or directors did not subscribe anything?—A. Well, they will answer for themselves about that.

Q. But you do not know, yourself?—A. No.

Q. Are you aware that the company, directly or indirectly, has been asked, while you were the manager of it, to contribute for election purposes in 1887?—A. I am not.

Q. Was there to your knowledge any understanding between the company or any of its members and the contractors, that they would be obliged or invited to subscribe for election purposes in the event of obtaining any of the federal subsidies?—A. There was no such thing.

Q. There was no conversation between you, or to your knowledge, with any of the contractors to that effect?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are positive of that?—A. I am.

Now, I think that is pretty clear testimony from the president of the company who was so prominently identified with this enterprise. If members of the House will apply themselves to the study of this evidence for a short time, they will find that a dispute arose, not with regard to any Dominion subsidy, not with regard to any provincial subsidy, but with regard to the Fraserville municipal subsidy, which Mr. J. J. Macdonald alleged he had reserved for election purposes. He said that Sir Adolphe Caron had nothing to do with it; he most emphatically swore that he had nothing to do with it. He stated that there was a difference between him and Mr. A. R. Macdonald with regard to this amount, Mr. A. R. Macdonald being desirous of holding this sum for himself and applying it to his own purposes, and Mr. J. J. Macdonald stating that he had made a different arrangement, but an arrangement that Sir Adolphe Caron had nothing to do with, that he did not know anything about, and could not possibly know about, because it was a private affair of his own. Having sworn that Sir Adolphe Caron had nothing to do with it, he declined to answer questions about it, but they overruled his objection and decided that he must answer. They said: You must answer, whether it has to do with the matter or not; we will decide later; but you must give your testimony. And he did give his testimony on that point. In that connection, I will read one or two quotations. Mr. J. J. Macdonald having been examined, the other Macdonald is brought up, and he says:

Q. Mr. Macdonald, you have already been examined on this commission?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. J. J. Macdonald was examined yesterday, and referred to a certain agreement between you and himself, in addition to the contract between the Témiscouata Company and the contractors, which you have already filed in this case. Will you explain the nature of this agreement?—A. Well, it is a private agreement. Am I obliged to state what it is? It has nothing to do with Sir Adolphe Caron or this investigation.

Q. Was there any political interest in this agreement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you explain what is the nature of this agreement?—A. It related to the construction of the Témiscouata Railway.

Q. Was Sir Adolphe Caron aware of any of the conditions of this agreement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there in this agreement any political interest for Sir Adolphe Caron or any members supporting the Government of which he was a member?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you tell me, Mr. Macdonald, whether at the time of the contract between the Témiscouata Company and Messrs. Macdonald & Boswell it was stipulated that any sum of money or valuable consideration should be given by Messrs. Macdonald & Boswell to promote the election of Sir Adolphe Caron or any other members, supporters of the Government of which he was a member?—A. No, sir.

Q. There was no mention of it at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the negotiations for the contract made chiefly by you with Mr. J. Macdonald?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you say whether, when this contract was passed, it was understood in any way by you and Messrs. Macdonald & Boswell that any of the considerations mentioned in this contract should go for political purposes to promote the election of Sir Adolphe Caron or any other members supporting the Government of which he was a member?—A. No.

Q. There was no mention of it?—A. No.

Q. There was no discussion about that when the contract was passed?—A. No, sir, no such thing was mentioned.

Q. Have you any explanation to offer, Mr. Macdonald, in reference to that private agreement with Mr. J. J. Macdonald that you have mentioned?—A. I see by the newspapers that Mr. J. J. Macdonald said that I wanted to get the whole amount of the $25,000 from the Fraserville municipality. I must say that I do not know what he has done with it. He said he used it for political purposes. I must say that I do not know if he kept it or used it, as I would never get any statement of account from him. I just mentioned this because I supposed there was no necessity for him to say what he did. He was not asked for that and that is the reason I mention this.

So that we have a dispute between those two gentlemen as to what was done. We have nothing to do with that dispute. This Fraser-ville municipal subsidy was altogether beyond the scope of this inquiry, and I think the hon. gentleman who alluded to it, did not act fairly, more especially when he contrived to make an attack upon the counsel conducting the case. He brought up this irrelevant evidence, although in the eyes of the public it might be interesting as an election matter. He cast reflections upon the counsel in the case, and blamed them because they did not go still further and probe into this matter which in no way was connected with the subject of this inquiry. Now, we have the testimony of my hon. friend, Mr. Grandbois, the member for Témiscouata, who was supposed to be able to give testimony in this matter; and he positively and emphatically swears that so far as the Postmaster-General was concerned, to his personal knowledge, there was no ground whatsoever for the charge. We have further the evidence of another hon. gentleman who was expected, no doubt, to give testimony of great importance in this case, I refer to the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte). That hon. gentleman was examined in connection with these subsidies. He knows all about the Témiscouata Railway. He was connected with it from the beginning, he wrote the matter up in the press, and came to Ottawa to interview the Ministers, and did everything possible to promote it. He says:

Q. To your knowledge, did Macdonald & Boswell, out of the subsidies, or out of the credit of the subsidies, give any money for electoral purposes?—A. Never; not to my knowledge. Thank God, the subsidies granted went to build the railway.

Sir, I think that ought to satisfy hon. gentlemen, that ought to convince them so compietely that they will never again raise their diminished heads in connection with these charges. Here is a witness, brought in at the suggestion of the member for West Ontario; he is sworn and gives evidence; and not satisfied with stating in an ordinary way that these moneys were not misapplied, not satisfied with telling the court, and the country, and especially this Parliament, before whom he knew all this evidence must be brought, that the money had all gone into the railway, that the Dominion subsidy had not been diverted from its legitimate purpose, he, like a true and pious man, raised his hands to Heaven and thanked God that the subsidies went to build the railway. Now, I do not think I need to go any further into this testimony so far as the Témiscouata charge is concerned. When the hon. gentleman opened his speech and said he was going to deal with the matter impartially, I thought the first thing he would do was to tell us that in connection with this Témiscouata Railway charge, the case has absolutely failed for want of evidence. There is not the first tittle of evidence to justify a demand being made upon this House for a condemnation of the Postmaster-General. Although I have dealt with this subject very imperfectly, and feel that I should apologize to this hon. House for the tediousness of my remarks, still I am satisfied that I have said enough to convince the country that these charges are without foundation. I desired to quote the exact words of the witnesses in order to put the House in possession of the facts so far as time would permit, and I am satisfied that I have convinced hon. gentlemen here that the charges introduced with such a flourish of trumpets last session, that have been sent to a tribunal which the hon. gentleman himself admits did its duty, although he most unjustly charged the counsel for the prosecution with not having done theirs—I say I am satisfied that the impartial judgment of this House will be that the charges have fallen to the ground for want of evidence. I believe both the House and the country now breathe more freely when it is established by sworn testimony of every witness that was examined, that not a dollar of the Dominion subsidies voted to either of these railways, was diverted from its legitimate purpose. It has been proved by sworn testimony that every dollar of the Dominion subsidies granted to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, and to the Témiscouata Railway, was earned, ten miles by ten miles, before it was paid out, and it was paid only upon the certificates of the engineers that the work had been properly done. It has been proved that upon many occasions the payment was stopped and the money retained in the hands of the Government for the most trivial reasons, showing that the Government of Canada, in dealing with both these roads, proved themselves worthy of the position they occupied. They performed their duty well, they were strict in their observance of the spirit and the letter of the law which was to guide them, and I am satisfied that this motion brought in by my hon. friend from West Ontario, will be rejected by this House by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to; and debate adjourned.

Mr. HAGGART moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 23rd March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DENISON moved:

That the time for presenting reports of the Private Bills Committee be extended to Tuesday next, the 28th instant, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TISDALE moved:

That, owing to the advanced period of the session, private Bills reported to the House yesterday and today from committees on private Bills be placed on the Orders of the Day immediately after routine proceedings for consideration of the Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the ninth report of this committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is a most unusual proceeding.

Mr. LAURIER. I must tell my hon. friend that I very strongly object to this motion, and cannot, unless there be very exceptional circumstances, agree to it. Private legislation is governed by certain rules of procedure, and any departure from those rules may take some parties by surprise who are interested in this legislation. Moreover, the rules of the House ought to be followed unless there is some very strong reason to the contrary, and no such reason has been given. I remember only one instance, when Sir John Macdonald on one occasion had a Bill passed through its three readings at the one sitting.

That was a case of a charter of a bank which was just about to expire, or something of that kind. In such a case, the rules of the House may be deviated from, but when such a case is not made out, we should follow our rules.

Motion negatived.

I ask leave to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this is for 1881 only.

Mr. CHARLTON. I don't see any "dress-maker-1" in those returns.

Mr. FOSTER. They have grown up since.

Mr. FLINT. Might I ask the Finance Minister if he will answer the other half of the question later--in reference to 1891?

Mr. FOSTER. I give my hon. friend all I have. He must take it as I get it--by instalments.

WHITBY, ONT., INDUSTRIES.

Mr. EDGAR asked, 1. What was the nature or description of each of the seventy manufacturing industries existing in the town of Whitby, according to the census of 1891? QUEBEC DRILL HALL REPAIRS.

Mr. FREMONT asked. Whether the contract awarded for repairs to the drill hall at Quebec, in September and October last, was so awarded after tenders had been called for? If so, what are the names of the parties who tendered, and the price asked by each of them? What is the name of the contractor to whom the contract was awarded, and the amount and date of said contract? On what date was the said contractor paid, and for what amount did he give a receipt?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Work upon the repairs of the drill hall at Quebec was let out to a contractor but not by tender, the character of the work was such that it could not well be specified, consisting of repairs and pointing the walls. The contractor did it by day work, and he got his remuneration, over and above the day work, by a payment of 20 per cent upon the total amount. The total amount paid out, for which he gave a receipt, was $496.83, and that amount was paid to him upon the certificate of the Clerk of Works, Mr. Matthieu, that the work had been satisfactorily done. The money was paid on the 12th of October last.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. HAGGART moved that to-morrow the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved,—That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the Railway Companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—

To the Great Eastern Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from the east end of the line subsidized by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, at St. Grégoire, towards the Chaudière Junction Station on the Intercolonial Railway, in the province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

Mr. FOSTER.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for 32 miles of their railway, from a point at or near the town of Iberville to St. Hyacinthe, and thence towards Sorel, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, for a railway from St. John's to Ste. Rosalie, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $102,400.

To the Ontario, Belmont and Ottawa Railway Company, for 10 miles of their railway, divided into two sections: first, from the Belmont Iron Mines to Marmora Village; second, from Marmora Village to the junction with the Ontario Central Railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $32,000.

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from Coe Hill or Gilmore to Bancroft, viz L'Amable, or as near thereto as practicable, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from Lake St. John towards Chicoutimi, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $81,040.

To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, for 50 miles of their railway, from the Victoria Branch of the Midland Railway to the village of Bancroft, in the county of Hastings, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, and again granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $145,000.

To the Beauharnois Junction Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from St. Martin towards St. Anicet, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, not exceeding in the whole $3,500.

To the St. Stephen and Milltown Railway Company, for 3½ miles of their railway, from the town of St. Stephen to the town of Milltown, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $11,200.

To the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from the East Bank of the River St. Charles, to or near Cape Tourmente, in the province of Quebec, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $30,400.

To the Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway Company, for 62 miles of their railway, from Hull Station toward Le Désert, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $89,248.

To the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from the village of Tara, or some point between Tara and Hepworth, to the town of Owen Sound, in the province of Ontario, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, not exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, for 80 miles of their railway, from Lunenburg, on the east coast of Nova Scotia, westward to a point in the district of New Germany, together with a spur about ½ mile long to Bridgewater Railway Wharf, and from a point 3¾ miles from Lunenburg and running to Middleton on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Acts 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, and 51 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $4,500.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 18 miles of their railway, from a point at or near New Glasgow or St. Lin, to or near to Montcalm, in the province of Quebec, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 54-55 Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole $25,600.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from at or near Montcalm to the Canadian Pacific Railway between Joliette and St. Félix de Valois, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Montfort Colonization Railway Company, for 21 miles of their 3 feet gauge railway from La-Grève, St. Jérôme, or a point at or near St. Sauveur, on the line of the Montreal and Western Railway, to Montfort and westward, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $67,200.

To the Maskinongé and Nipissing Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Maskinongé or Louiseville, towards the parish of St. Michel des Saints, on the River Mattawa, in the province of Quebec, and for fifteen miles of their railway from the north end of the fifteen miles afore referred to, towards the parish of St. Michel des Saints on the River Mattawa, in the province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidies granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, and 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

To the Parry Sound Colonization Railway Company, for 40 miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sundridge, or some other point on the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, in the province of Ontario, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $97,600.

2. Resolved.—That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized,—except the subsidy to the Ontario, Belmont and Ottawa Railway Company, which shall be paid as follows: On the completion of the first section an instalment proportionate to the value of the said section in comparison with that of the ten miles hereby subsidized, to be established as aforesaid, and the balance of the said subsidy on the completion of the second section.

3. Resolved.—That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

Motion agreed to.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that he has not yet laid on the Table the papers with regard to the French Treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. They have not been placed in my hands yet, I am sorry to say.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry to say the hon. gentleman is not responsible for what goes on in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have to speak to the Senate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to inquire of the Minister of Finance when he expects to place the Supplementary Estimates, if there are any, for 1893-94, in our hands? It is desirable we should have them at an early day.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope to have them down not later than Saturday, if we come to the conclusion to meet on Saturday. If my hon. friend has no objection, I think we might meet from three to six o'clock.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no objections at all.

SUPPLY—THE CARON COMMISSION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: That the Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply; and the motion of Mr. Edgar in amendment thereto.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The circumstances under which my hon. friend the Solicitor-General addressed the House last night, were of a somewhat disheartening kind. The hon. gentleman, with his warm Irish temperament, is most eloquent when he is in the midst of a congenial assembly. The hon. gentleman endeavoured last night to deliver what was intended to be a rather impassioned address to cold and empty benches. Speaking personally for myself, I sympathized with that hon. gentleman very much in the want of appreciation which seems to have been shown him while he was making his maiden effort as Solicitor-General, by the colleagues who usually cheer his utterances. For some cause, those who have been accustomed heretofore to hang upon his utterances, were conspicuous by their absence, and if he had not fixed his glittering eye upon the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), I doubt if an hon. gentleman on that side of the House would have listened to him at all. On this side of the House we were more kind, and the hon. gentleman had an audience here which certainly, if he did not convince, did him the courtesy of listening to his arguments. Notwithstanding these discouraging circumstances, the hon. gentleman gallantly struggled with that brief of his for the space of nearly two hours and a half. I think he had a little suspicion in his mind that the strength of his argument would depend somewhat upon the quantity of evidence he read. The hon. gentleman deluged us with page after page of the evidence in the blue-book, and notwithstanding the closest attention that I paid to him from beginning to end, I failed to appreciate the relevancy of nine-tenths of what he read in so far as it affected the resolution which my hon. friend proposed.

Mr. CURRAN. I am sorry for you.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman may be sorry for me, but his sorrow does not half equal the depth of my sorrow for him, and the sorrow is shared all round. However, let us see what the hon. gentleman undertook to establish, and how far he met the resolution of my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar). Now, it is important to understand that my hon. friend from West Ontario did not say in his resolution that the evidence given before this Caron Commission had established all the charges he made against Sir Adolphe Caron; he simply submitted to the House that the evidence which was returned to this House contains in itself

And establishes facts which should have prevented the subsequent appointment of Sir A. P. Caron to be an adviser of the Crown, and also render it highly improper that he should continue to hold such office.

So that it is not a question so much as to whether the identical charges preferred in the first instance by the member for West Ontario, but afterwards seriously altered and fathered by Senator Bowell and adopted by this House—I say it is not a question whether those charges have been proved, but the question is whether the facts contained in this blue-book establish sufficient to justify the House in voting a censure upon the Government for asking Sir Adolphe Caron to take a seat in the Government, and for continuing him in that position. Now, what is the position taken by the Solicitor-General? He addressed himself to some few statements that he alleged had been made by the member for West Ontario which were not completely proved. He contended in the first place that no evidence was given to show that any subsidies voted to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway were diverted from that road. He said the evidence was conclusive that all the subsidies had been voted and were received by the proper party connected with that road, and were spent on the road. He also contended that so far as this $25,000 was concerned which was paid to Sir A. P. Caron by the late Mr. Ross, that it was Mr. Ross's private contribution, given from his own purse, the result of his personal and political friendship towards Sir Adolphe Caron and the National Policy Government, of which Mr. Ross was a supporter. Those were the points made by the hon. gentleman, and I intend to examine them. In doing so, however, I do not propose to occupy the time of the House by reading any dozen pages of this blue-book, not two pages of the book, because it is all contained in the admissions made by Sir A. P. Caron, and the evidence given by the contractor of the road and his two colleagues. Before I come to these two crucial points, allow me to say one word to the hon. gentleman on the remarks he made about the challenge which was extended to Mr. Edgar by the counsel for the Crown. The hon. gentleman knows that when the member for West Ontario preferred his charges in this House last session, they were altered and emasculated by the Government of which he is a minor member, and when the emasculated charges came down here, the hon. member for West Ontario properly refused to father them. The hon. member for West Ontario then told the House: You have altered those charges, and you make me charge that Sir Adolphe Caron received this money from the company, or from the contractor. The hon. gentleman said: I will not father the charge; I know he did not do so; I know Sir Adolphe Caron can deny it and can prove his denial, and, therefore, the Government are attempting to put a charge in my mouth that I never did make, and I do not make now, a charge that I knew was untrue at the time it was made. My hon. friend said: I will not make that charge; and he washed his hands of it. But the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) insisted that the new charge thus preferred, with all the important words on which my hon. friend (Mr. Edgar) relied, stricken out, was referred to the Royal Commission. We had that emasculated charge referred to the commission, and we have its report involving an expenditure of nearly $6,000 to the country; and we are now asked not to vote that the evidence proves the truth of the charge that Mr. Edgar originally made, because it would be monstrous to imagine that the evidence could do so; but that the evidence contained sufficient to show that Sir Adolphe Caron's conduct was such that he should never have been asked to enter the Ministry last January, and that his continuance in the Ministry, with these damaging facts before the House, is inconsistent with the dignity and independence of Parliament. The hon. gentleman says, however: Oh, but Mr. Edgar had an invitation from counsel, if he wanted to put in evidence, to come and do so. That statement was very easily made, but the hon. gentleman, in common honesty, should have told the House that the letter was written to Mr. Edgar after the commission had finished its sittings and all the evidence had been taken. Let that go for what it is worth, and I do not think it amounts to much, because the hon. member for West Ontario had already told the Government that he would not father the charge; but, in so far as the offer of counsel was concerned, if counsel had written a letter before any evidence was taken, and had told Mr. Edgar, that no matter what the exact terms of the charge were, he would be permitted to go into any evidence to prove the truth of his case, it might have put a different face on the matter. The hon. gentleman made another discovery. He said the charge made by Mr. Edgar is seriously incorrect, because he stated that $1,000,000 were paid by the Dominion Government to this railway, whereas, says the hon. gentleman, in tones of triumph, only $844,000 were paid, and, therefore, my hon. friend is astray $156,000. Sir, that does not contain the exact truth in regard to this matter. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the official statement of the railway statistics of Canada, lately laid on the Table of this House, he will find, on page 48, in a statement of aid granted to railways by the Dominion of Canada, that the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway is entered as having received $1,003,495. The hon. gentleman is welcome to the book, and he may correct my statement, if he can. I will tell him where he got his figures. Up to last June, of the amount voted by Parliament to the road, only $844,000 were actually paid over.

Mr. CURRAN. That was what I said.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there were thousands of dollars in process of being paid over, and that have been paid over since the hon. gentleman made that statement, as can be seen by any one who will look at the book, $13,000 being paid over and other amounts being paid when earned, according to the conditions of the subsidy. So the statement made by my hon. friend is substantially true, that Parliament has voted, in aid, and that the credit of the country is pledged to pay the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, not less than $1,003,495. Then, the hon. gentleman said that, neither directly nor indirectly, was any money paid to Sir Adolphe Caron politically, nor were any of those subsidies diverted from their original purposes. I think that is what the hon. gentleman charged, and what he claimed to have proved, that every dollar went into the actual road-bed; and he read some evidence to show that such was the fact. Did the hon. gentleman imagine he was talking to a lot of ignorant jurymen; did he imagine that any human being supposed that the identical sums of money, $20,000 or $30,000, which were voted by the Government of Canada and were paid out by the Treasury Department, on account of the subsidy, were ear-marked, that the identical bills were transferred? Not at all. Who cares whether the identical notes, or notes for similar amounts were taken from the company or those largely and chiefly interested in obtaining the subsidies, and paid over to Sir Adolphe Caron. Does it make any difference? We will see, when we come to analyze the evidence, that the charges made by my hon. friend, that those who were chiefly and mainly, if not altogether, interested in the receipt of the subsidies from the Government, took of their money $25,000 to pay Sir Adolphe, and they hoped to get, and, I think, it will be shown they did get, that money refunded to them from the Dominion of Canada. It is nonsense to say that the identical money or notes did not go into the hands of Sir Adolphe Caron, but other notes of similar amounts passed. We want to see, substantially and practically, whether out of the moneys, whether the original subsidies or other moneys equivalent to the subsidies, the persons who were interested in obtaining those subsidies, paid out money to Sir Adolphe. But the hon. gentleman says: If money was paid, it was paid by Mr. Ross and was a personal contribution of his own from his own private means, and was given because of the friendship, political and personal, he entertained for Sir Adolphe Caron and Sir Adolphe Caron's late lamented father. Sir, the hon. gentleman, before he sat down, himself proved that was not true. I will take the opportunity to ask the hon. gentleman if I am incorrect when I come to that crucial branch of the case. If I satisfy the House that the money was not paid by Mr. Ross from his personal feeling towards Sir Adolphe Caron, that it was not paid on account of his political friendship for Sir Adolphe or his political friendship for the Government as such, but if I satisfy the hon. gentleman and the House that it was paid out of moneys belonging to Mr. Ross' foreman and out of moneys which the company were receiving in subsidies from the Government, then I think the hon. gentleman will have to withdraw what he said. I do not think I will do any injustice when I say that those are the points the hon. gentleman made, and he supported them by very voluminous extracts from the testimony contained in this book. Let us see what the facts are. I will rapidly recapitulate them. We differ as to whether Sir Adolphe Caron was morally right or wrong as to what he did; but let us get at the facts first, about which there is no difference of opinion. I will aver to the House that, in the recital of the facts I am about to make, there is no difference of opinion on either side; what conclusion you may draw from them may be open to argument, but let us get at the facts. Is it a fact that before Sir Adolphe Caron entered this Government he was a shareholder in the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway? That is admitted. Is it a fact that he was a director of the company? Is it correct that he paid $2,500 into the company? My hon. friend (Mr. Edgar) reminds me that we must draw a distinction between the legalized company to which the subsidies were voted and the Construction Company, formed to carry out the building of the road. Sir Adolphe was not a member or a shareholder of the original railway company which was a myth, the actual company which received the subsidies being the Quebec and Lake St. John Lumbering and Trading Company, which, for the purpose of this argument, we have agreed to call the Construction Company. The other company does not appear; it is a mere myth, and it is with the Construction Company that we have to deal. That is the company of which Sir Adolphe Caron was a shareholder and director. He had paid in $2,500 either of his own private money or money of himself and his partners, and he was largely interested in that company. Up to the time he entered the Government, while it is alleged that the Construction Company had expended large sums towards the building of the road, it appears the company had not received one dollar in subsidies from this Government. As a matter of fact, we need not dispute about a few hundred dollars one way or the other, but this Government has voted, since Sir Adolphe Caron became a member of it, over $1,000,000 in subsidies towards the construction of the road, and the company has received over $850,000 in hard, cold cash. In 1883, about a year after Sir Adolphe entered the Government as Minister of Militia, this Construction Company assigned its work of construction to one Beemer. That is important. It is admitted on all sides. It is a fact every one must bear in mind, if they want to draw a proper conclusion. When they assigned that contract to Beemer in 1883, it is important to know what were the terms of it, and how far Sir Adolphe Caron was cognizant of these terms, because we must remember that, at that time, Sir Adolphe was a member of the Government from whom this company hoped to obtain subsidies. As a matter of fact, the substantial terms of the contract were these: That Beemer, to whom their work was assigned, was to get all the subsidies that the company then had, or which should be thereafter granted to it, and, in addition to that, it was explicitly provided, in the 29th clause, that the Construction Company, —of which the late James G. Ross was president, and one of the largest shareholders, and of which Sir A. P. Caron was a member and director, while, at the same time, a member of the Government, should use every diligence and effort in their power to procure additional Government or municipal subscriptions or subsidies for the benefit of the contractor, and do all and every thing to that end in as energetic a manner as though the company were building the road, and more especially to endeavour to procure the following:—The extension of the Dominion subsidy of $2,300 per mile for the first thirty miles of the road, as well as provincial subsidies, which I need not refer to now. At that time Sir Adolphe Caron was a member of the Government, and I think I am correct in saying that before this agreement was mentioned, the Government had voted $384,000 and $80,000; and these amounts were assigned over to Beemer with a further undertaking by Sir Adolphe Caron, as a member of the Construction Company, that he would undertake to use every diligence and effort in his power to procure additional Government aid. That was the position in which that matter stood. Now, we must ascertain exactly what the actual relations were between Beemer and the Construction Company and Sir Adolphe Caron. The Construction Company submitted also that they had put $450,000 of their own money into this road. Sir Adolphe Caron was a shareholder in that $450,000. Sir Adolphe Caron hoped to get that money refunded to him and so did James G. Ross, no doubt, who had an enormous interest in the $450,000; and it was provided that the $450,000 was to be returned to these men by Beemer. How was he to return the money? Where was he to get it? He was to get a provincial subsidy from Quebec and Dominion subsidies from this Government, and he was to build the road, and out of the road, when he had it built by these subsidies, and had it bonded, he was to refund this $450,000 to the company. And who were to be the beneficiaries when that money was paid over? Sir Adolphe Caron was one, and Mr. James G. Ross was another; for Mr. Ross and his brother were to receive one-half of that sum, and Sir Adolphe Caron was to receive a sum proportionate to the amount of his stock in the road. This is one of the few extracts that I will trouble the House with, and if hon. gentlemen will turn to page 112, in Mr. Scott's testimony, they will find this evidence given:

Q. And up to that time you state that there had been expended by this Construction Company $450,000?—A. About that.

Q. Which they had no hope of being able to get back in the condition in which the road was then?—A. Not unless the road was finished.

Q. And until such time as the road was finished $450,000 were absolutely lost, as far as they were concerned; you say that from the practical knowledge you have of the whole enterprise?—A. It would be difficult to say that it was absolutely lost, but the chances were that way.

Q. There were very few chances of getting the money back, as far as your practical experience goes?—A. I would not think so.

Q. So that the only chance there was of the Construction Company getting the $450,000 or any portion of it back, in your opinion, depended on the completion of the road to Lake St. John?—A. Yes.

Now, then, the House will see that, at the time Sir Adolphe Caron and his colleagues in that Construction Company were assigning this road to Beemer, they stipulated that Beemer should pay them the $450,000, and that they should use their strongest influence to obtain for Beemer further Dominion subsidies in addition to those he was already getting, and it is proved in evidence that the only hope they had of getting that money paid back to them was by having the road completed, and there was no possible way of completing the road except by the obtaining of Dominion subsidies. I am putting this apart altogether from the $25,000 paid by Mr. Ross. Hon. gentlemen can see that Sir Adolphe Caron was occupying a position which I question any hon. gentleman in this country would like to assume. A shareholder in the Construction Company, with his money invested in it, having a vested interest in the $450,000, and also a member of the Government, he knew that his only hope of getting his money back was to obtain subsidies from this Government so that the road might be built and bonded. He occupied these two inconsistent positions. A recipient of the subsidy, on the one hand, and a voter of the subsidy on the other. I take the ground here that a member of the Government who is charged on his honour and his oath, only to vote money out of the public Treasury in the public interest, occupies an invidious position—I was going to say a position which was not honourable—if, while he remains a member of the Government he votes moneys towards a public work in which he has a large pecuniary interest, which never could be recouped to him unless out of those subsidies, or in consequence of them. The hon. the Solicitor-General saw the force of that. He saw it was almost irresistible and he tried to weaken it, and how did he try to weaken it? He said: It is perfectly plain that Sir Adolphe Caron in this matter was a mere dummy, and that after he became a member of the Government he did not attend the meetings of the directors at all. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman was partially correct in that, because Sir Adolphe Caron did not attend many meetings, but let us see what he did do. He attended those meetings of the directors of the Construction Company, of which he was one, at which the arrangement was made with regard to Beemer; and the agreement which was made between the Construction Company and Beemer providing for the giving of these subsidies, and providing for the return of this $450,000 to Sir Adolphe and his friends, was canvassed, read and agreed to at the two meetings which Sir Adolphe attended. I will ask hon. gentlemen who are following this matter, if they have a desire to get at the facts, to turn to pages 452 and 453 of the exhibits put in evidence before that commission. We find there that there was an extended meeting of the directors lasting for two days, in which this most important transaction the transfer to Beemer, and the obligations incurred respectively by Beemer and the Construction Company, were canvassed from beginning to end, in which this very agreement containing these clauses that I am speaking of was read over, passed, and agreed to by those several directors; and I tell my hon. friend the Solicitor-General that Sir Adolphe Caron was present at both of those meetings and was one of those who carried the adoption of that agreement with Beemer. What does that prove? It proves that however irregular Sir Adolphe's attendance may have been at other times, at this particular crucial moment, when it was necessary to make this transfer to Beemer, Sir Adolphe was present, had the agreement read clause by clause, agreed to it, and knew the responsibility and liability that he was undertaking as a member of the Construction Company and a member of the Government. Sir, I ask hon. gentlemen to pause here for a moment to ask themselves, is it consistent with the dignity of one of Her Majesty's Privy Counsellors that, being a largely-interested shareholder and a director of that company, he should go from the Privy Council office at Ottawa down to a directors' meeting at Quebec, enter into a secret agreement to transfer from his Construction Company to Beemer the work of building that road, pledge himself, as a member of that Construction Company and a member of the Government, diligently to apply himself to getting further subsidies for the company, and then provide that that very company should refund to himself and his colleagues the $450,000 which they had already invested? Why, Sir, to my mind the thing is absolutely inconsistent with any ideas of public honour. I know that our ideas of public honour in this country do not square with those held in the mother land; but I think there is yet some respect entertained by many of the hon. members of this House for those traditions of the mother land which have kept her public men pure and unsullied on both sides of politics. Sir, no such charge ever was or ever could be preferred against a member of a British Government; and if it were preferred, I venture to say that the very first action taken would be the resignation of the gentleman against whom it was preferred until his skirts were cleared and his hands shown to be clean. What have we in this country? We have a man charged with a political offence of a very glaring kind, retaining his position in the Government of the day while so charged, and at a subsequent stage being actually asked to enter in a new Government which was being constructed at a time when the new Premier had before him evidence which showed that the charge had been proven. Now, I want to ask the hon. Solicitor-General to whom the subsidies were practically paid. Sir Adolphe Caron and his Construction Company assigned those subsidies to Beemer. What is the next act in the drama? Beemer assigns the subsidies to James G. Ross, the president of the company. Is that true?

Mr. CURRAN. That is true, after they were earned, not before.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will give the hon. gentleman evidence to show beyond peradventure that the subsidies which had been transferred to Beemer were afterwards assigned by Beemer to James G. Ross; and, so far as this evidence shows, Beemer was a mere foreman of James G. Ross, producing his progress estimates from month to month and receiving payment upon them; and his clerk said that Mr. Ross was taking his chances of getting his pay out of the subsidies. I will prove that up to the hilt. I will call as the first proof, Mr. James G. Scott, his confidential clerk. What does he say at page 97:

Q. I perceive that only the first of those subsidies appears to have been paid (as entered upon the statement which is produced) to Mr. Beemer, for the amount of $24,355.55?—A. Yes.

That, mark you, is the first and only subsidy which was paid direct to Beemer. Now, this follows:—

Q. What is the item of $7,644.45 which appears to be here?—A. That was some duty which we owed to the Customs Department at Ottawa.

Q. Was it owed by the Construction Company or the Lake St. John Railway Company?—A. The Construction Company.

Q. All of the rest of the subsidies appear to have been paid to Ross & Company?—A. Yes.

Q. How was that?—A. Because Ross & Company advanced Beemer money; the amount of the estimates as they were earned by the Engineer monthly.

Q. What evidence has the Construction Company got to justify them in paying these moneys to Ross & Company; what writing have you?—A. We have a transfer of these subsidies by Beemer.

With the exception of one, as I said, every one of the subsidies was paid direct to Ross.

Mr. CURRAN. After they had been earned by Mr. Beemer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.):

Q. Will you please produce it?—A. There were several transfers made from time to time. I will produce them later.

Q. Who are Ross & Company?—Well, the late James G. Ross was in it.

Q. Was he sole member of the firm?—A. I think so.

Ross & Co., you will recollect, was James G. Ross alone, and James G. Ross was the assignee of the subsidies, and the man who paid the $25,000 to Sir Adolphe Caron. But it is asked, did Sir Adolphe Caron know of all that? Undoubtedly. Sir Adolphe Caron was thoroughly cognizant of the relationships, pecuniary and otherwise, which existed between Beemer and Ross. What were those relationships? Beemer had no money; he could not pay out enough money by the month to keep the work going on, and he assigned the subsidies to Ross as security for the payments which Ross made month by month upon his progress estimates, and then Ross drew the subsidies from the Dominion Government. Now, hon. gentlemen want to know whether Sir Adolphe Caron was cognizant of all these facts. Turn to his own admissions at page 227:

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Q. Sir Adolphe Caron, when you applied to the Honourable James G. Ross for a subscription, you knew he was the president of the Lake St. John Railway Construction Company?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Did you know that at the time Mr. H. J. Beemer was obtaining advances from Mr. Ross?—A. I must have known it. I should imagine I knew at the time. I cannot precisely say the nature of the agreement or understanding.

Q. Of course, you knew that Mr. Beemer was actually constructing the road?—A. I knew that.

Q. Under a contract with the Construction Company?—A. Yes; I knew that.

I have already proved that he was present when the agreement was entered into—that he knew all about it; and, as he says himself, he must have known that Beemer was obtaining advances from Ross to construct the road. Now, what have you got? You have the fact that the subsidies were voted to the Construction Company, that the company assigned them to Beemer, that Beemer assigned them to Ross, and that these facts were known to Sir Adolphe Caron; and when he wanted money to carry on the elections, to whom would he go? To Beemer? To the Construction Company? No; that was only another name for himself and James G. Ross. To the man who was getting the subsidies which he voted. What did he do? Now, mark, Sir Adolphe Caron went to this gentleman to obtain moneys to carry on the election. That gentleman was Mr. Ross, the president of the Construction Company. He was the financier and the transferee of the Dominion subsidies. He had invested, including his brother's money, which was said to be his own, jointly with Sir Adolphe Caron, about one-half of that $450,000, which he could only be repaid by obtaining the subsidies voted to finish the road, and then bonding it. He was, besides, Mr. Beemer's creditor—and this is a most important point—at that very time, to the extent of $220,000. Hon. gentlemen will find that proved by Mr. Scott at page 114, so that there was one man more interested than all the rest of the world in obtaining subsidies from the Government for the construction of that road, one man into whose pockets those subsidies must naturally gravitate. Why? Because the contractor who was building the road owed him $220,000, and because the road was bonded to pay him the $240,000, due to him and his brother by this company, so that he had more interest than anybody else in obtaining subsidies from this Government. Sir Adolphe Caron, viewed in the light of subsequent events, had more interest in having these subsidies voted than anybody else. Why? Because he could not carry the elections without money, and could not get money except from those who received it from the Government. I now come to the third phase of my indictment, and I want to point out to the Solicitor-General that the assumption on which he justified the Postmaster-General cannot be maintained for a moment. I ask the hon. gentleman to follow up the evidence for one moment, and give me the answer. Was this a private subscription of Mr. Ross or was it not? It was not, and I will prove that it was not. As my hon. friend to my left reminds me, even if it were, that would not alter the matter very much, but I want to show that it was not. If the House will look at Mr. Beemer's testimony, on pages 133 and 134, they will see the circumstances under which this money was given. Now, the Solicitor-General advanced the argument that this was a private sum paid by Mr. Ross out of his own pocket, because of his personal friendship for Sir Adolphe Caron and Sir Adolphe Caron's father, and because of his great admiration of the Government. Now, what does he say here? I will ask the hon. gentleman to read the statement of Mr. Beemer, given on pages 132 and 133. Mr. Beemer was a foreigner; he was not even a British subject; he had no interest in our political squabbles, as he calls them; he knew nothing about our politics. He was a foreigner who came here to make money. He had no politics, but he was the assignee of the work which the Construction Company had to do. He was the man who received his monthly dole from Mr. Ross to carry on the work. He was, in point of fact, Mr. Ross's foreman—nothing more or less. I will not read what he says about being a politician and so on, but at the foot of page 133, he gave the following evidence:—

Q. Well, Mr. Beemer, you have stated that you expected to receive at the time you passed your contract, out of the subsidies thus voted, $1,961,000, and subsequently you did receive these subsidies, did you?

A. I suppose they did; I never received any subsidies direct, I always received the proceeds of my estimates; you see these subsidies were given on one assumption in the contract. Then a different mode of operations was carried out eventually; first it was decided that I should take the road, and work the road, but that was never done; that was changed, and the result was that, not being able to sell the bonds, we had to adopt a different course of procedure, and had to get money as best we could; that embodied financing, which I did through Messrs. Ross & Company, by transferring the subsidies to him. Mr. Ross advanced me on my progress estimates and ran his chances of getting the subsidies.

That was a quotation I should have made with reference to my argument a moment ago. I am now going to read Mr. Beemer's evidence with reference to the interview which Mr. Ross had with him, to show that Mr. Ross did not pay this as a personal, private contribution of his own:

Q. Please look at the statement, exhibit H J B 1, and explain what you mean by the letters "G.E.F.?"

A. I mean general election fund.

Q. And what by the letters "A.P.C.?"

A. Simply to identify the account myself. It was in the way of identifying the account, and only as I understood Sir A. P. Caron was the representative of this district; not that these moneys went into his hands at all, but that he was the head and front of the Quebec district.

Q. But the letters "A.P.C." refer to Sir A. P. Caron?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you explain how these moneys were furnished; there are some notes talked about in that document there; will you explain what that means?

A. I believe these notes were my notes given; they were notes, whether they were my own or the Honourable Mr. Ross's notes, discounted by him.

Q. Discounted by Mr. Ross?

A. Yes, sir. The understanding was that we were to give our notes and he was to furnish the money that was required. Previous to the election of 1887, Mr. Ross sent for me to come over to the St. Lawrence Hall to see him. I went over there and he broached the subject in hand and stated that the friends in Quebec wanted some contribution to the election fund, and asked me what I would do.

Does this look like Mr. Ross giving a private, personal subscription?

I stated I could not do anything, for I had not the money. He said "well, we will take our notes and I will discount them," which was done; $15,000 given at that time.

Q. $15,000 in notes?

A. $15,000 in notes given at that time; there for $5,000 and two afterwards in Quebec, making $25,000. I do not know where the money went or anything about it. I did not realize at the time that I was even to pay that money. There was nothing said about it.

So that this money was obtained by Mr. Beemer giving to Mr. Ross notes for $25,000. Mr. Beemer says he did not know what Mr. Ross did with the money, but we know, because Sir Adolphe Caron, in his statement, says that he himself received the $25,000 in bank bills from the hand of Mr. Ross. Mind you, Sir, this large amount of money was not paid, as it would be in ordinary transactions, to which there is nothing wrong attached, by cheques on a bank, but the money was actually drawn out by Mr. Ross and paid over in bills by him to Sir Adolphe Caron. Sir Adolphe Caron's account of it is really worth referring to. What does he say?

Q. Now, in February or March, a general election took place for the House of Commons of Canada?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you apply to Mr. Ross, on the occasion of that election, for a subscription to the election fund?

A. I did.

Q. And what took place?

A. I had in 1887 more particularly charge of the district of Quebec. I called on Mr. Ross, as I have already stated I had already done very frequently; I laid before him what I considered to be the position of the party in the district of Quebec. I pointed to him the importance of the fight which we had to meet, and I told him that I had come to him to ask him to help in providing the funds which I considered to be necessary for the legal and legitimate expenses of the campaign.

Q. What was the result?

A. We discussed the question together, and the result of it was that he told me he would give me $25,000.

Then, in the next paragraph he goes on to tell how, in a few days thereafter, he went back and got the $25,000 in bank notes and carried them with his own hands—and he seems to think this a very important business—and the money never left his hands until he had transferred it to Mr. McGreevy. These are the facts admitted by Sir Adolphe Caron and by the book-keeper of Mr. Ross and Mr. Beemer himself. So the money was paid and Mr. Beemer says he did not think at the time that Mr. Ross would make him take up these notes, but it seems that afterwards Mr. Beemer did take them up. What becomes of the story then that this was a voluntary subscription by Mr. Ross. It was nothing of the kind. It was money which Mr. Ross was taking good care to get out of the railway. He took care that this foreman should sign a note for it, and, as a matter of fact, the accountant of the road believed it to be payable out of the road and charged it, as he says, to No. 2 account that it should be reimbursed out of these subsidies. Afterwards it was taken out and it was paid by Mr. Beemer some years after by notes of hand from time to time. What does that show? Is there a doubt that the money was paid? Is there a doubt of the person from whom the money was obtained? Is there a doubt as to the source from which the money was intended to come? Then follows that which shows what was the real meaning of the parties at the time; then follows the carrying out of the contract on Sir Adolphe's part as to the refunding of the money. The money was taken and the money spent. And how was the money spent? In corrupting the electors. My hon. friend (Mr. Edgar) showed that while Sir Adolphe Caron returned $900 as his legal and legitimate expenses, he states that he spent $5,000 out of this very money, so that over $4,000 was corruptly spent according to his own showing. And what did the Government of which he was a member do? They voted, at the very next session, $28,800 to this railway. What for? If hon. gentlemen will turn to the evidence they will find that it was discovered there was a mistake made in the mileage and that they had nine extra miles, and on this account they were voted $28,800. And that was so thin that a row got up between the engineers of the Government and the contractors as to whether this was 'bona fide' or not, and, to this day, the Government have not paid the subsidy of four of those miles. If we are not allowed to draw all legitimate and fair inferences—but I say we are bound to draw such inferences in this court as a judge would draw in a trial before a jury—you cannot have everything proved in black and white in a matter of this kind. You cannot have witnesses come forward and say: I did this, I did it from a corrupt motive—this was a corrupt act, and that—

Mr. MULLOCK. There are witnesses dead.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And some witnesses are dead, as my hon. friend says. But you have got the facts, and, if the irresistible inferences are to be drawn, if the fair, honest inferences are to be drawn from them, they show a corrupt act on the part of a Minister of the Crown, a corrupt compact made between him and contractors receiving money, and in this court we ought not to be afraid to draw such inferences. In addition to the $28,000, this company have received $262,450 since the money was given. Why, Sir, the gentleman could well afford to give $25,000. He could afford to give it; he had everything at stake, and so had Sir Adolphe Caron. Sir Adolphe himself says in the evidence: I pointed out to Mr. Ross the importance of the fight. Of course it was important from a personal stand-point, and from the amount of money they had at stake, which could only be recouped by the granting of subsidies by the Dominion Government. I have shown that Mr. Beemer was not a politician, that he had nothing to do with politics. I have shown that Mr. Ross did not give this because he was a friend of the Caron family, as the Solicitor-General contended. I have shown where the money came from, and I think the irresistible inference is that it was understood between these parties that it should be refunded to them out of the Government exchequer. And so the case is proved up to the hilt, unless you repudiate the facts in the sworn testimony. So, what are you going to do about it? Sir Adolphe Caron remains a member of the Government, though he took $25,000 from a contractor who was expecting favours from him as a member of the Government, and he acted up to his word like a man and repaid the money twice over. There is a member of this House whom none of us can look upon without a feeling of sympathy of a certain kind. He was mixed up in the obtaining of money from Government contractors. He received the money, not in his own hands, but he was instrumental in the transfer of it and it was thought he knew something about it. This money was taken from a contractor in the province of Quebec, in the city of Quebec, and handed over to the same general election fund to which this $25,000 was paid, placed in the same hands and paid out on the same orders and for the same corrupt purposes. And, Sir, his conduct was brought before the House and a majority of the House, of which I am happy to say I was not one, voted that:

The charges against Sir Hector Langevin, as already intimated, having been as above set forth, the Committee would observe that in course of the investigation an effort was made to connect him with the wrong-doing of others who have been reported against as directly connected with fraudulent conduct.

Your Committee, therefore, report that the evidence does not justify them in concluding that the Minister knew of the conspiracy before mentioned, or that he willingly lent himself to its objects.

The House reported in his favour, but still the hon. gentleman was compelled by the force of public opinion in his own party and by an influence outside that has been superior in one sense to certain powers of the House, to resign, to leave his office and his emoluments, to forego the hope of promotion and the hope he had of becoming the leader of his party, and to retire, if not in disgrace, at least covered with suspicion. The hon. gentleman retired. He never saw a dollar of the money, in the opinion of the majority of the House. But what about this hon. gentleman? He received the money in his own hands, in crisp bank bills. He went straight with the money to Thomas McGreevy, the treasurer, and disbursed it afterwards in corruption in the several counties. He tells us how he did it; there is no mistake about the facts. He falsified his own election returns. He, as a member of the Government, repaid the man who had paid him the money, five and ten times over the amount he received. And we are asked to say to-day that this conduct is conduct the House of Commons will approve, that the House of Commons of Canada, having in charge and keeping the honour and integrity of the electorate of Canada are prepared to say that members of the Government, having large interests in public contracts, being members of construction companies themselves, may, as members of the Government, vote themselves, as contractors, large sums of public money, take that money and spend it in political corruption and still remain the trusted advisers of the Crown, their conduct ratified and approved by a majority of the people's representatives. It may be so; I wait to see if it will be so. Perhaps there may be influences, as I have said, above those in this House of Commons which compelled the hon. gentleman who once led the House, and now sits on the cross-benches, to retire. Is it possible that these influences may have to be invoked again? Is it possible that there is a power which may compel those who have been guilty of this conduct, to do what the House of Commons refuses to ask them to do? Sir, I appeal to hon. members of this House, so far as their votes and voices can do it, to wash their hands of this turpitude. The time has come when Canada must declare that if there have been politicians who have proved themselves false to their trust; if there have been politicians who have steeped their arms, metaphorically, in the Treasury up to the elbows, and abstracted public moneys for corrupt purposes, and debauched the Dominion electorate, these politicians should no longer enjoy the confidence, and the esteem, and the privilege of the people's representatives. If it be so, we will emerge from this contest, in which heretofore our name has been tarnished so badly, with some degree of personal honour. If it be otherwise, we must share with those men the obloquy, the reproach, and the odium which attach to them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, if it is possible, after such a speech as you have heard from my hon. friend, that no colleague of the Postmaster-General has a word to say on his behalf, all I can say is that in view of such unchivalrous action on their part, I feel that I would be false to the bonds of knighthood if I did not say a word in his defence. Sir, I have always liked the Postmaster-General. He may have been on some occasions a naughty boy, but, at least, he has shown himself a plucky one. I entirely approve of one part of his conduct, at any rate; I entirely approve of the action of that hon. gentleman in practically stating to his colleagues: If I go, you all go; I have borne the heat and burden of the day, it is to me that you owe your political existence, and if I have transgressed the eleventh commandment and have been found out, for all that you shall not throw me overboard. Sir, I must say that for once in my life, I differ somewhat from my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) and my hon. friend who sits beside me (Mr. Davies). I do not deny the truth of one statement they have made. I must admit that, as my hon. friend declared, these statements have been proved up to the hilt; I must admit that there does not appear to be a shadow of doubt that the present Government owes its existence, as its immediate predecessors did, to having organized, skilfully and successfully, a colossal system of corruption, that the Treasury has been looted, that the Treasury has been plundered, that the Treasury has been despoiled for the purpose of debauching the electorate of Canada; and that it matters very little for the purposes of this argument, whether it has been done directly, or by the roundabout fashion of conspiring with manufacturers in the Red Parlour, or by obtaining percentages of railway subsidies, or by sweating contracts, or by any other of the many modes that are known to us to exist. But my hon. friend, before he sat down, put one most significant question—what are we going to do about it? Now, my own advice to my hon. friend is this: Let us recognize the situation, let us accept the facts, let us, as a majority of this House has declared, and as, I have no doubt, the majority of this House will again declare, practically, let us recognize the facts that, to-day in Canada, in the year 1893, the accepted mode of carrying on the Government of Canada is by deliberate and organized corruption. Now, that being so, what is the course he asks us to adopt? Sir, I have a proposition to make to this House, which I hope the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) as well as the leader of the Government, will see it within his power to accept. Sir, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, as everybody knows, are loyal, loyal beyond all compare. They are nothing if they are not loyal. They are, as the French proverb goes, more loyal than Her Majesty itself. If they propose, or any one of them proposes, to levy war against the Crown, they do it from motives of the very highest loyalty. This being the case, I appeal to the loyalty of these hon. gentlemen. They desire, as they have told us, above all things, to be true to British principle, to follow British precedent. Now, I have noticed on several occasions that those hon.

gentlemen are so apt to discern treason that they will absolutely scent treason in statements made on this side of the House, which statements have already been made by members of the British Parliament who afterwards—and indeed I believe were at the time they made them—sworn advisers of the Crown. These gentlemen, I may say, are “Britannicis Britanniores.” These gentlemen can do no act without parading their loyalty. Do they pass an Act to disfranchise a large number of Her Majesty’s subjects? Do they pass an Act to lay prohibitory duties on goods which we import from Great Britain? Sir, it is impossible, as this House well knows, for these hon. gentlemen to perform these great acts without commemorating them to the loyal tune of “God Save the Queen.” They are always waving the old flag; they are all for the old flag and an appropriation; and it is my sad and sober conviction that if you take away the appropriation, the old flag, so far as they are concerned, will wave only half-mast high. But, under all circumstances, these gentlemen feel themselves obliged to adhere to British principle and British precedent. Now, I am going to give them an opportunity to show their heartfelt devotion to British principle. If there be one British principle that is better established than another, it is that in the eyes of British law, all men are entitled to equal rights. It is the pride and the glory of the British law, that peer and peasant have alike equal privileges in all courts of justice, that every man, be he a member of the Dominion Penitentiary, or a member of the Dominion Privy Council, if accused, shall have equal rights and equal justice. Now, we have established a precedent here of very great importance: we are, as my hon. friend has truly said, sitting as a high court of justice in this Parliament, and my proposition is, as I have said, that we recognize the fact, that we crystallize that magnificent precedent which we established last session in regard to the motion then made by my hon. friend. I propose that we amend our criminal code, and that we provide, in the future, to administer equal justice to all classes of Her Majesty’s subjects; I propose that we wipe away from ourselves the reproach that there is one law for a member of this House and another law for an accused person not being a member of this House. What I have to propose to the Solicitor-General in the absence of the Minister of Justice, whom I would greatly like to see here to-day, is that we remedy that defect in our criminal code at the earliest possible moment. I have ventured, under correction, to draw up a short Act which, I think, will meet the case, which will afford a happy means of reconciling my hon. friend beside me and my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), with my hon. friend the Solicitor-General. With your permission I will read the Bill:

An Act for the Purer and More Equal Administration of Justice to all Classes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

R

Whereas, it appears from the Journals of the House of Commons of Canada, that one James D. Edgar, member thereof for the West Riding of Ontario, did, on or about the 6th day of April, 1892, prefer certain charges against the Hon. Sir Adolphe P. Caron, Postmaster-General, also a member of the said House; and whereas the said House did, on the 4th day of May, 1892, order and direct that the said Sir Adolphe Caron and his colleagues should be permitted to substitute certain other charges prepared by themselves, for the original charges preferred by the said James D. Edgar; and whereas it further appears, from the said Journals, that the said James D. Edgar proposed to cause the aforesaid charges to be investigated before a committee of the said House, on which committee both the political parties whereof the said House is composed, would be represented, and that the said House did, on the said day of May in 1892, further order that the said substituted charges should not be investigated by a committee of the said House, but that they should be referred to certain judges to be thereafter selected by the said Sir Adolphe Caron and his colleagues:

And whereas it is expedient that the rules and procedures of the other courts of justice in this Dominion should be assimilated to those established by the High Court of Parliament, and that an equal and uniform justice be administered to all classes of Her Majesty’s subjects in this Dominion: Now, therefore:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1st. This Act may be cited as “An Act for the Uniform Administration of Justice.”

2nd. From and after the passing of this Act, whensoever any person (not hereinafter excepted) shall be accused of any offence in any court of justice, the said person so accused shall have the right to appoint the judges by and before whom he is to be tried, with or without a jury, in the discretion of the accused.

3rdly. That the said accused party shall be furnished with a copy of the charges intended to be preferred against him, a reasonable time in advance of the day of trial, and shall be at liberty to alter, amend, transmute and vary the same, as to him shall seem best.

4thly. That it shall henceforward be a good and sufficient defence, in answer to any charge of felony or other criminal offence for the person so accused to allege that he did not commit some other crime, or felony; e.g.: in the case of any person accused of committing murder, it shall henceforward be a good defence to plead that the said party did not commit adultery—or, if accused of horse-stealing, to plead that he did not commit forgery—or, if accused of burglary, to plead that he is not guilty of coining false money—and generally, it shall be held sufficient, in any case, for the party accused of any particular offence, to show that he did not commit some other and different offence.

5thly. That henceforward any person who brings a charge against any other person, but who fails to secure a conviction under sections 3 and 4 of this Act, shall, 'ipso facto,' be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be subject to fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the party so accused.

I know ours is a law founded largely on precedents. I am aware that, while we were establishing this precedent, another, though perhaps an inferior tribunal, was establishing a somewhat different precedent. I refer, not to the famous case of Edgar vs. Caron, but to the equally famous case though conducted on different lines, of Angers vs. Mercier. I am desirous, in the Act, to prevent a conflict of precedents, and, therefore, section 6 will read:

6thly. No member of any Liberal Administration, Local or other, shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act.

7thly. God save the Queen.

Mr. FOSTER. When do you propose the second reading?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I entertain the hope that, before I have done, I will lay such excellent reasons before the leader of the House that my hon. friend, the Solicitor-General for the Dominion, will be instructed, if my hon. friend accepts my proposition, to take charge of this as a Government measure. So my hon. friend can fix a day for the second reading. I want to call the attention of the House not merely to the vindication of British principle which underlies this Bill, not merely to the affirmation of the great truth that the procedure in this High Court of Justice should be as similar as possible to the procedure in other courts of justice, but to point out other very important though secondary considerations which have led me to submit this suggestion. This Government is, as everybody knows, an economical Government. It will not pay as much as one dollar into the treasury without paying another dollar or even two or three others into the pocket of some well-deserving citizen or other. It is most anxious to be economical; the Minister of Finance has assured us of that innumerable times. Consider what an opportunity for economy we have here. I stake my reputation as a legislator that if this Bill becomes law you will almost immediately be able wholly and entirely to dispense with all those expensive penitentiaries that now adorn the face of Canada. Think what a saving would be there. Moreover, what a saving there would be in the labours of the judiciary. I will venture to say that if you pass this Bill you will be able to dispense with half our judges, who will have very little criminal work to do, and thus save not merely their salaries, but also their pensions, which will be a source of unfeigned pleasure to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). Then, for a secondary consideration, think of the hard labour heretofore performed in our legislative halls. Think of the freedom from scandals, from recrimination, from mud-throwing, from a recurrence of those unfortunate scenes which in times past have gone far, I fear, to leave a stain on the fair name of Canada. We will elevate the tone of Parliament; but more than that. Sir, it is well known that one of the greatest problems to which the Government have been for some time addressing themselves is the difficulty, not so much of bringing immigrants here as of retaining immigrants. Pass this Bill, and apply it to strangers who seek our land, and you will encourage a truly selected immigration. You will make of Canada, as was made of certain cities under the Israelite regime, a true city of refuge, to which every man who is distressed or oppressed or at variance with the oppressive laws of other lands may come with perfect certainty that he cannot be extradited. They will come with money in their pockets. These men, if you get them here, will be safe to stay, and they may even supply pointers to a good many members of the Government. More than that. As my hon. friend opposite has been wrestling, rather under difficulties, with the census statistics for a long time, I want to call his attention to another matter of great importance to Canada. Our reputation has suffered, there is no doubt about it, more or less, from all these unfortunate scandals. Now, I want the hon. gentleman to consider this: make this Bill law, and you may depend upon it that there will be the greatest possible improvement thenceforth and for ever in the moral statistics of Canada. I will undertake to say that Canada will be able to show a smaller percentage of convicted criminals, if this Bill becomes law, than any other country in the civilized world. And only consider what additional importance would be given to the census or those numerous tables which the hon. gentleman is so fond of bringing down, if he could show as regards moral statistics so absolutely a clean sheet as would result from the action of this measure. I have never seen so short a Bill for which so much could be said. There is but one flaw—I must admit there is one flaw which I see myself in the Bill. I confess that on ordinary principles of justice I felt when I drafted this measure that I was doing an injustice to two worthy members, or former members of this House. I felt that if this Bill became law, undoubtedly it would be fair to introduce a clause in it under which our late colleague, J. G. Rykert and the hon. member for Three Rivers, might have an opportunity of once more revindicating themselves and regaining the positions of light and leading they so well deserve to hold in the Conservative ranks. But I am free to say, although I did not see my way to complicate matters by introducing retroactive provisions in the Bill, that when it gets its second reading I will be disposed, if amendments are placed in my hands, to consider with an open mind any proposition to extend the provisions of this Act to the member for Three Rivers and J. G. Rykert. I must say that it does appear to me that the claims of justice, do certainly demand of us that if we are going to administer this justice to the Postmaster-General, a like measure of justice should be administered to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin). Why should we make dead meat of him, and allow the other fowl to fly rejoicing to the four winds of Heaven? Now, Sir, my proposition in brief is this: Let us face the situation; let us admit the necessity of carrying on the Queen's Government in Canada by the well understood constitutional methods discovered and practised by the hon. Postmaster-General; let the Government agree to give this measure precedence on their Order Paper, and I dare say my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) will willingly withdraw his motion.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, after the understanding that has been arrived at, I have no desire or intention to take up the time of the House by any lengthy argument or reasons, with reference to the very important amendment that has been placed in your hands. But, Sir, I desire just an opportunity of briefly stating why it is that under the evidence that has been adduced, and the papers that have been submitted to us, I feel compelled to vote in support of the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar). The circumstances which these papers disclose are, as I understand, briefly these: That this railway company had in the first place made a contract with the Construction Company for the building of the road, that that contract provided that the Construction Company were to have all the bonds of the road and all the subsidies which had been then obtained, and all the subsidies which might from time to time thereafter be granted by the Dominion Government, or by the Local Government, or by municipalities. Subsequently the Construction Company transferred the contract—so to speak, though not exactly in terms—to Mr. Beemer, and Mr. Beemer undertook to do the building of the road, and he was to receive in consideration for the building of the road all the bonds and all the subsidies then voted, and all the subsidies which might thereafter be voted. The House will see that this contractor, Mr. Beemer, undertook to do this work for the bonds which the company was authorized to issue, namely $20,000 a mile, and for the subsidies which had then been granted; and whether any subsidies were granted subsequent to that made no difference in his obligation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

because he was required and bound to build the road. The company undertook on their part, and the Construction Company afterwards undertook on their part, to use every influence with this Government in order to induce the Government to grant additional subsidies, but whether those additional subsidies were or were not granted, nevertheless contractor Beemer was bound by this contract to build the road. It is only proper to say that the hon. Postmaster-General was a shareholder in the Construction Company, though not to a very large amount, and I for my part do not believe that any personal interest the Postmaster-General had in this matter, influenced him in the slightest degree in the course which he afterwards took in the promoting of the granting of these subsidies. It is only right for me to say that I have not the slightest doubt in my mind that the personal interest of that hon. gentleman had the least bearing on his conduct either as a member or Minister, with reference to these subsidies. The fact does remain, however, that the company had reserved to themselves $450,000 for money expended, for time that had been put in, and by the agreement between them and the contractors, they had reserved to themselves this sum, out of whatever should come to Mr. Beemer, under the contract which I have briefly outlined. There was, therefore, a pecuniary interest, and a substantial interest on the part of the Construction Company, of which the Postmaster-General was a member, in the granting of the subsidies so as to enable Beemer to carry out the agreement he had entered into and to restore to the company, from one source or another, this sum of $450,000. Now, Sir, what do we find? We find that immediately before the election of 1887 subsidies were granted by this House. They were granted apparently to the railway company. They were granted, so far as I can see, in ignorance of the fact that this Construction Company existed, or that the Construction Company had anything at all to do with carrying on of this work. The subsidies were applied for from time to time in the name of the railway company, and not in the name of the Construction Company, and, after the election of 1887, further subsidies were granted from time to time. The figures have been given by hon. gentlemen and I need not repeat them. Now, at this time, the Postmaster-General approaches, as he tells us, the late Hon. Mr. Ross, and he obtains the sum of $25,000 from him or from Mr. Beemer. I am not at all satisfied that there has not been some confusion in the evidence, and that two sums were not obtained. It is impossible to reconcile the statements we have here, and to suppose that there was but one sum of $25,000 obtained at that period. It is perfectly plain that Mr. Ross did not contribute this $25,000; it is perfectly plain that the way that sum was obtained was by Mr. Ross discounting for Mr. Beemer Mr. Beemer's five promissory notes for the $25,000. The net sum, that is the amount less the discount, of which he handed over, and as Mr. Geggie, his clerk, tells us, not to the Postmaster-General but to Mr. Beemer himself. It is the only paragraph I will trouble the House to read because it appears to me a matter of very great importance to which I do not think attention has yet been directed. Mr. Geggie, Mr. Ross's confidential clerk, tells us on page 179 of the evidence :

My knowledge regarding these notes is this : Mr. Ross gave me the notes and said, "I have agreed to discount these notes for Beemer, and when he comes you can give him the money." Mr. Beemer came over, or he sent over, I cannot remember which now, but the cheques were given at different times, and I understood then that it was simply a discount that we were making for Beemer.

Now, that account does not square with Mr. Beemer's account. Mr. Beemer says that Mr. Ross asked him to contribute to the election fund, that he offered to discount his notes in order that that sum might be obtained, and that he (Beemer) did not know who the money was given to or anything more about it. But, Sir, it is a most extraordinary circumstance that Mr. Beemer, who tells us that he did not know to whom the money was given, actually marked—as hon. gentlemen will see if they look at the second part of the evidence, page 567—marked on the notes when he retired them, these words :

The 28th June, 1887, extraordinary account, paid Ross & Company note on account "G. E. F.," date 3rd February, 1887, A. P. C.

Asked what these letters meant, he said that "G.E.F." meant General Election Fund, and that "A.P.C." meant the Postmaster-General. We find that while Mr. Beemer tells us he did not know to whom the money was given, that he did not know more than that it was to be contributed for election purposes, yet Mr. Beemer marked down on the cheques which he gave to retire these notes, or rather he marked down on three of them, the initials of the hon. the Postmaster-General. Couple that with the statement of Mr. Geggie, the book-keeper, who swears that the money was discounted by Mr. Ross for Mr. Beemer, and paid either to Mr. Beemer or his clerk ; and I am unable to understand or accept the statement that the $25,000 with which Mr. Beemer was charged was the same $25,000 of which the hon. Postmaster-General has given us an account in his evidence. But whether it be so or not, the position is this : Here was Beemer, a contractor, who had agreed to do this work whether he got a single dollar more or not, who had agreed to build the Lake St. John Railway for the $20,000 a mile, the bonds issued, and the subsidies already obtained. Here was Mr. Ross, who was his financier, interested largely in these subsidies, so as to enable him to carry the work through, and to enable him afterwards to restore the $450,000 to those gentlemen who were interested in the Construction Company, the hon. Postmaster-General being one. Under these circumstances—at a time when the House was voting the money, when more money was expected, and when these gentlemen were to use their influence, the Senator in one Chamber, and the hon. Postmaster-General in the other, to induce the Government to grant this money—we find the Postmaster-General obtaining $25,000 from that source for the purpose of promoting his own election and the election of his party in the district of Quebec. Sir, I do not pretend to be any better than my fellow-members. I do not pretend to say that, in the course of our political life we have not been guilty of acts in contravention of the election law. But we have this fact now brought under the notice of this House, after a commission has been solemnly appointed to take the evidence and report to this House ; and having it placed upon the Table, is it possible that we can refuse to take notice of it, while the hon. gentleman accused holds the high and distinguished position which the hon. Postmaster-General holds as a Minister of the Crown ? For my part, Sir, I shall vote for the amendment without discussing the matter on any other ground.

Mr. OUMET. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say very much on this question. I wish only to draw the attention of the House to the change of ground brought about by this resolution since the beginning of the discussion, and especially since last year, when the question was first brought forward. The House will see, from the arguments advanced by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), and also from the arguments advanced by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that the questions now before the House are two-fold. The first is, whether the conduct of the hon. Postmaster-General in being a member and director of the Construction Company of the Lake St. John Railway was improper, and ought to have prevented the Premier, when he formed his Cabinet, from calling the hon. Postmaster-General to office. Was the conduct of the hon. Postmaster-General improper, illegal, unlawful or criminal ? An act cannot be a criminal one, it cannot be an illegal one, it cannot be an unlawful one, when there is nothing in the law to prevent it. The same argument may be applied to a member of Parliament as well as to a member of the Government. Is it proper for a man to occupy a position in a joint stock company, as a shareholder or director, who has anything to do with the Government, and who hopes or expects any subsidies to be granted to his company ? Is there anything in the law to prevent it ? Sir, there is nothing that will prevent that, either at common law or in the Independence of Parliament Act, which controls the conduct of members of this House on such matters. Therefore, there was nothing improper in the hon. Postmaster-General being a member of that company. Besides, I may add, not only was it not improper, but members of the Government and members of this Parliament are very often placed under the necessity of forming part of companies, railway companies or otherwise, formed for the purpose of benefiting their own county, or the section of country which they specially represent. When the hon. Postmaster-General was asked to form part of that company he was a member of the House, it is true enough, but he was not a member of the Government; and when the House takes notice of the admission made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that he, for one, has no doubt that the hon. Postmaster-General never did anything to benefit himself personally, this ought to dispose of that part of the accusation in toto. If there is an hon. member of this House who is ready to rise in his seat and say that the hon. Postmaster-General has put into his pocket a single cent of that money coming from the subsidies, then it will be time enough to discuss the matter, as a question of evidence, and see if the conduct of the hon. Postmaster-General was illegal or improper, or of such a nature as to oblige the Prime Minister to take notice of it; because the question now before the House is this: Whether Sir John Thompson, the Premier of this country, was right or wrong, and whether he is to be censured or not, for having done what he has done, that is, for having taken the hon. Postmaster-General into his Cabinet. This vote involves a vote of censure against our Premier personally; it is not a vote of censure against the leader of the House, or against any other member of this Government here; it is a vote of censure against Sir John Thompson, personally, for having done what the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) is pleased to call an improper thing, and what the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is pleased to call an outrage on the constitution of this country. It is the most open and the most formal censure against the conduct of the Premier of this country; and, Sir, it will strike every supporter of our Premier in this House that this motion was placed before this House only after he had gone away, and when he could not defend himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OUIMET. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a second question: Was the money obtained corruptly by Sir Adolphe Caron from the late Mr. Ross? As to that, there is not a tittle of evidence that will lead any hon. member of this House to say that Sir Adolphe Caron went to the late Mr. Ross and made any bargain with him, or solicited him to furnish that money, and promised him that he would be recouped in one way or another. Not only that, but there is not a tittle of evidence to show that Sir Adolphe Caron knew, at any time, that that money was to be recouped to the late Mr. Ross by Mr. Beemer; and I say more, even if he had known that Mr. Beemer would be called upon afterwards to repay it, this would not constitute an evil or corrupt intent which would make the act illegal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. OUIMET. I say that until you prove that there was an understanding between the Postmaster-General, the St. John Railway, the late Mr. Ross, who was president for some time of the company, and Mr. Beemer, the contractor, or any other person who might have acted as a go-between—you have no case against the Postmaster-General. If there were any evidence of that, I would say that my hon. friend from West Ontario had proved his charges, but there is nothing of that kind proved. The hon. member for Simcoe found, from the evidence of Mr. Geggie, the accountant of Mr. Ross, that the $25,000 were the proceeds of the $5,000 notes which were given by Mr. Beemer to Mr. Ross to be discounted at the bank. Well, these notes were discounted at various dates, and the hon. gentleman's contention is rebutted by the very fact that the $25,000 were, according to the evidence of Mr. McGreevy, handed to him in bills, for which he gave his receipt. How could it be the discount of the notes? All the evidence points to the fact that the money was got from the bank by Mr. Ross, or from his safe, or elsewhere, independent altogether of the notes, and handed to the Postmaster-General, who afterwards brought it to Mr. McGreevy to form part of the General Election Fund.

Mr. EDGAR. There were five different notes.

Mr. OUIMET. The same argument applies to the $5,000 note. When that was discounted, it did not represent $5,000 in money. The hon. gentleman knows that and so do a good many of us.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman will look at page 177, he will find that I am right. There were different cheques, the first for $5,000, the second for $4,750, the third for $5,250, the next for $5,000, and the fifth for $4,406.49, the difference between that and the $5,000 being the discount. The total is $25,000, less the discount.

Mr. OUIMET. You have the evidence of that witness.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand these are the cheques produced.

Mr. OUIMET. And you have the evidence of Mr. McGreevy.

Mr. McCARTHY. But these cheques are produced.

Mr. OUIMET. That does not matter, because the $25,000 may have been handed by Mr. Ross to the Postmaster-General, and handed by him, as they were immediately afterwards, to Mr. McGreevy, and then the notes sent to the bank and placed there to the credit of Mr. Ross or of Mr. Beemer for the amount of the discount. But the evidence remains all the same that the $25,000 were handed by Mr. Ross from his own private funds to the Postmaster-General, who handed it to Mr. McGreevy in bills intact, forming the sum of $25,000 altogether. Now, I shall only add this that there is no evidence that the Postmaster-General knew, at the time he got the money from Mr. Ross, that it was to be charged to Mr. Beemer. It may be, in the opinion of a good many people, improper that the law concerning the independence of members of this House should allow any member to hold the position of shareholder or director of a joint-stock company, which has anything to do with the Government. That is a fair proposition to discuss? I know that a good many members on this side or the other side may be influenced by this very consideration, that they do not think it is proper for a member of this House to belong to any company whose interests are intimately connected with politics in the shape of Government subsidies. But is that a reason why the Postmaster-General should be censured, or why the Premier of the Dominion should be censured? There was nothing done contrary to law, though there may be a certain opinion that what was done should not have been done. In concluding my impromptu argument, let me ask the House not to be caught by the argument of my hon. friend from South Ontario. How changed he is from what he was last year? How much he has shifted his ground?

Mr. EDGAR. You members shifted it for me, and I take you on your own ground.

Mr. OUIMET. We have granted to the hon. gentleman more than he ever wanted. I know that he did not intend to go any further than charging the Postmaster-General of having acted as a director of the company while a member of the Government, seeking to convey to the House the impression that the relations of my hon. colleague with the company and the Government were corrupt. I know that was what he intended. He was aware that he could not prove any conspiracy as charged by his friends on the floor of the House, and he would not go so far as to charge the Postmaster-General of having done an unlawful and corrupt act. The question to-day is whether or not it is proper for the Postmaster-General to hold the position of director of a company and also of a member of the Government which gives subsidies to that company. Is it proved that Sir Adolphe has benefited to the extent of one cent by these moneys? It has been admitted by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that he has not. My hon. colleague and his two partners had an interest of $2,500 out of $450,000! Is it then to be said that a member of this House would allow himself to be influenced by a consideration of that kind? And I hope that, after the speech of the hon. member for North Simcoe, the House will be convinced that the First Minister of this Government does not deserve censure for having taken into his Cabinet the Postmaster-General.

Mr. IVES. I rise simply for the purpose of giving notice of an amendment which I intend to move in the House when the House goes into committee on the proposed Bill of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I propose this as an amendment: "Inasmuch as the Liberal party of Canada have always claimed extraordinary purity in the conduct of elections, therefore be it enacted that after no general election shall the judges of the country have power to unseat for bribery or corruption more than fifty per cent of Liberal candidates elected."

House divided on amendment (Mr. Edgar):

Harbours and Rivers -- Nova Scotia—Digby—New Pier at Raquette	$19,000
---	----------

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I would call your attention, also the attention of the Minister of Public Works, to this grant for Digby Pier. In 1890 a grant was placed in the Estimates of $40,000 towards building a pier on the north side of the Raquette. The proposed work was to be 780 feet long, 50 feet wide on top and to extend into 16 feet of water at low tide. The contract was let to the late John Nicholson, and all its exposed faces were to be constructed of squared timber, birch being used for the lower portion to within 18 feet of the cap. The pier was intended to meet the requirements of both railways and steam-boats and to be provided with all modern requirements. But the contract was never finished, as the contractor surmised that he had taken it at too low a figure, and put it off, and by the figures given in the Auditor-General's Report and the Minister of Public Works show that the Government has undoubtedly taken over a great deal of the timber purchased, and is allowing the same to rot and spoil by the action of the weather, as it has been exposed for the last two years at the head of the Raquette. The end of the old pier, for a length of 200 feet, was destroyed some years ago, and has since been rebuilt. The worms eat up the logs very rapidly, and piers built at Digby and adjoining waters should always be constructed of hard wood. Instead of this I presume that the Government have purchased the soft wood and allowed the hard wood to be taken to St. John to fill contracts made there by the Connollys. I would ask the Minister of Public Works if I am right.

Mr. OUIMET. We purchased part of it, that is we accepted part in settlement of accounts we had with the estate of Mr. Nicholson.

Mr. BOWERS. Did the Government purchase any hard wood for this work?

Mr. OUIMET. Very little.

Mr. BOWERS. I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that soft wood is not fit for this pier, that hard wood only is fit for piers in Digby and adjoining waters. By the report of the engineer made for the fiscal year 1889, the inside end was very old and much decayed, and although it was placed after this in fairly good condition, he said that owing to the piles being eaten by worms that it was liable to damage by storm at any time. I find that in the report of the Minister of Public Works for 1890 and 1891, that $2,388.02 was expended on the new pier, and $111.56 on the old pier, and in 1891 and 1892 there was expended on the new pier $9,804.78, and on the old pier $29.76. Now, I should conclude by this, that the money expended on the new pier, was laid out in the purchase of logs. I hope the hon. gentleman will have the contract let early this year, so that the logs that have been purchased, will not be allowed to spoil. The hon. gentleman will remember that this pier at Digby is a place of call for the steam-ships of the Bay of Fundy Steam-ship Company, and also for vessels sailing to United States ports, and from this port is yearly exported a large quantity of salt and fresh fish and other products. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, whether it is intended to repair the old pier, or whether he is going to have a new pier, with a solid abutment, put down on the north side of the old one?

Mr. OUIMET. Our intention is to renew the pier entirely and to make it as good as new. I understand from my engineer, that we have purchased all the hard wood that is necessary for the cribwork, that is to say, that part of the cribwork which is exposed to worms. As to the other part, the piling, for instance, soft wood is considered to be more suitable and is cheaper, and hemlock is the wood that we shall use. I may tell the hon. gentleman, that the wood that has been purchased from the late contractor, was selected from a large quantity that was brought in there, and, I think, from the report, that it will be of the best quality.

Mr. BOWERS. The hon. gentleman says that soft wood is better than hard wood for piling.

Mr. OUIMET. Soft wood for piling and hardwood for cribwork.

Mr. BOWERS. The hon. gentleman would change his opinion, if he could see the way that soft wood has been eaten away by worms. I think that hard wood is better for all purposes than soft wood. Hardwood will last ten or fifteen years, and soft wood only a few years.

Mr. EDWARDS. So far as the use of wood under water is concerned, any wood at all will last for all time; but, above water, there is a great difference in the durability of woods, and hemlock is one of the most useless woods above water that you can find, and one that lasts the shortest time. Hemlock is perfectly useless for piers or piles, unless it is protected by water.

Mr. BOWERS. The hon. gentleman from Russell (Mr. Edwards) knows very little about the action of salt water upon wood, when he says that any kind of wood will last under water. The teredo worms eat wood under water so rapidly that no kind of wood will last very long. It may last in fresh water, but not in salt water.

Mr. EDWARDS. That does not alter the fact, that above water, at least, hemlock is perfectly useless for the works I have mentioned. As to the action of salt water on wood, I know nothing at all about it, as I do not happen to be a salt water man.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I cannot agree with the last speaker. According to my experience, I would prefer hemlock above water, even at twice the price of hard wood.

Mr. BOWERS. I would remind the hon. gentleman, that even above water hemlock is soon destroyed by the action of frost, which enters the pores of the wood and, when the latter thaws causes the wood to split and disintegrate. It is a loose, open-grained wood. You must remember, also, that at Digby the tide rises from twenty to twenty-five feet, and the action of worms under water destroys soft woods very rapidly.

Mr. FRASER. If the wood is creosoted, although it will cost a little more at first, it will last a great deal longer. They did that with the bridge crossing at Bear River, with very satisfactory results. I think the wood will last four or five times as long. I am satisfied that hemlock above the tide will rot in six or seven years; underneath it will probably last longer. Hemlock may be used to advantage inside the cribwork, where no water gets in.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the hon. Minister intend to commence the work this spring?

Mr. OUIMET. The specifications are now being printed, and tenders will be asked for in a very few days.

It being six o'clock, the committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Nyanza Wharf $1,800

Mr. McMULLEN. How does it occur that this item has been revoted during three years?

Mr. OUIMET. A great many difficulties have been encountered with respect to obtaining the right of way, and only during the last few weeks the Government have obtained the land to make a road to the wharf.

Pictou Island Wharfs $1,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much has been spent, and how much is proposed to spend on these wharfs?

Mr. OUIMET. This is a revote, and $1,500 will be sufficient to complete.

Bayfield new Wharf $19,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman give some explanation of this item?

Mr. OUIMET. This work is under contract. Of the $19,000, $3,500 is a revote. The total cost of the wharf will be $25,000. Bayfield is situated in Antigonish county on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and is one of the principal harbours in Nova Scotia. There is considerable shipping there, and the port is largely frequented by the fishing fleet. The wharf will be 442 feet long, with an "L," and it will extend into nine feet of water at low tide. This work will be completed during the present year.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the original estimate of cost?

Mr. OUIMET. The estimate of the engineer was $25,000. After receiving tenders, the departmental officers came to the conclusion that the cost would be $25,500. This wharf will take the place of an old wharf which was destroyed by storms.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long has elapsed since the old wharf was destroyed?

Mr. OUIMET. Two years. Of sea-going ships, eleven entered and thirteen sailed last year, and of steamers, sixteen left the port. It is a harbour of refuge and a shelter for a large fleet of fishing vessels.

Bayfield Breakwater $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. This is another case of a revote during three years. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the reason.

Mr. OUIMET. The breakwater is part of the work, and it was useless to repair it until the wharf was under construction. Now that the wharf is being built, the breakwater, which is to protect the harbour, is being constructed.

Cape Sable Island Breakwater... $1,400

Mr. OUIMET. We experienced the same difficulty here with regard to the right of way for a roadway, but now that matter is settled and we are going to build a wharf. It is an evidence that we do not hasten to spend the money Parliament has voted us until we have taken measures to secure that the work is done in the best possible way.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the hon. gentleman hurries the voting of the money shortly before an election takes place, but he is in no hurry expending it after the election is over.

Mr. OUIMET. If I did not give the hon. gentleman a very good reason for not building the wharf, I might be open to that charge.

Mr. McMULLEN. This was voted three years ago, before an election, when it was thought well to get a lot of these things on a string to dangle before the electors, and to tell them if they are good boys and vote right they would get a wharf. Of course, now that the election is over, they are not in a hurry to spend the money.

D'Escousse Wharf..... $4,280

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that this vote is growing from year to year. What is the reason of it?

Mr. OUIMET. The reason is that, as a rule, we do not ask for more money than we can expend. The hon. gentleman will, perhaps, notice that when we fail to get enough in one year to carry out the work, we always wait until the full amount is voted to complete the work, but in the meantime we go on with the work, and build it in the shortest possible time. I think that policy is the best.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would suggest a better policy to my hon. friend. It would be better not to ask the House to vote any money until there is some idea of the ultimate cost of the work.

Mr. OUIMET. In almost every case we have an estimate made of the cost of the work, but sometimes it is thought advisable to, as it were, consult the House as to the expenditure. Since I have occupied the position I do not think I have ever been open to the charge of not giving correct estimates of the final cost, when I propose to enter into any work of importance.

Mr. McMULLEN. I trust the hon. gentleman will carry out the principle he has announced now.

Ingonish (south)—Pier to complete..... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What amount of money has been expended on this work up to the present date, or are there any contracts given out?

Mr. OUIMET. No contract has been given out. I am informed that some timber has been bought. We have spent, up to the 31st December, $158. for the purchase of the land necessary for the roadway leading to the wharf.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Am I to understand that no public money otherwise than this $158 has been expended?

Mr. OUIMET. Up to the 31st December, from the statement before me. The first vote was taken two years ago, and some timber was purchased, but we could not utilize it because we had not the right of way. There was some difficulty as to the title, and, as we are very particular to have perfect titles, we did not go on with the work until we had a title as perfect as possible.

Mr. FRASER. Surely the Government would not get the timber until they knew where they are going to put it. The first thing, before building a house, would be for a man to know where he has real estate on which to erect it. Could the Minister tell me under what circumstances the timber was bought before the Government had the right of way?

Mr. OUIMET. In this case we were in the position of a great many young girls. We were promised the right of way, but after some time the promise was broken. Then we had to go to law and have an expropriation.

Mr. FRASER. Was not the timber got in the meantime in order to get the promise of certain votes?

Mr. OUIMET. Well, I do not know. I suppose not.

Mr. FRASER. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman will say that. But this is a matter that he should look after. The timber was got without any reference at all to the question whether it was going to be used or not. There was no contract, but somebody was asked to get timber, and it was got, and it has been lying there rotting for two years; and now, it is said, there was some little difficulty about the right of way. I should have supposed that a wise Government would see to that before they got the timber.

Mr. OUIMET. We are growing wiser.

Mr. FRASER. I am glad of that. I hope it will not occur again.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a great deal of room for more wisdom. I presume that about that time there was an election to be held, that a promise to build this particular pier had been made before, and that when the people found that the Government had not implemented that promise they were not disposed to accept another; and, in order to persuade the electors that they were going to carry it out this time, they got the timber and had it laid on the ground, and it has been left there to rot for two years. And now the Minister wants to get this vote in order to humbug the people a little longer; or is he going to implement the promise this time?

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) I have been pressing for this work for two or three years, and I have found a good deal of fault with the department for not going on with it; but now that the land is expropriated, it seems in a fair way of being proceeded with. At first there was a free site granted, but the engineer found that it would cost about $1,600 more to build the wharf on that site than on the site which has been chosen, and which will better accommodate the public. I am very glad that the work is going to be pushed on as soon as navigation opens. I think the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) should withdraw the remark he made about getting votes. He has been down in that locality, and he knows much better than to insinuate that, though he does not say it openly.

Mr. FRASER. No; I will not withdraw that statement. I wish to insist on it, and the statement of the Minister of Public Works has satisfied me now on that point, if I had any doubts about it. The lame excuse he sets up proves it, although he was not the prime mover. I venture to say that the timber, which has been lying there for two years, will be almost worthless. I do not say for a moment that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McDonald) knew anything at all about it—certainly not. Everybody who knows him knows that he would not do anything, either with his own money or with anybody else's, to get votes.

Pier..... $2,700

Mr. BOWERS. I would ask whether this work will be proceeded with immediately? I notice that receipts from the pier have fallen off from $120 or $130 down to $16 last year. I called attention last year to the fact that this wharf was falling to pieces, and urged the Minister to have it repaired. I believe he expended about $300 on it last year. It is a very important work, and I hope he will see that this money will be expended this year.

Mr. OUIMET. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the work will be done during the summer.

Mr. BOWERS. I would also call the attention of the hon. Minister to the breakwater at a short distance from that pier. The end of it needs a little repairing; probably $15 or $25 would be sufficient to save it from further loss. As we are on the subject of breakwaters for Nova Scotia, and I may not have another chance to speak about them, I would call the hon. Minister's attention to Church Point breakwater. I would ask him if he thinks, in the light of the representations that have been made in regard to it, that any money will be expended on that wharf during this summer. The engineer, in his report upon it made in 1891, says:

Church Point, Digby county, is one of the most important shipping places on St. Mary's Bay.

It is nine miles south from Weymouth, and almost directly opposite Petite Passage, Digby Neck.

This work was begun many years ago, and the pier has been extended from time to time, as the gravel collects in large quantities on the back of the work, and finally overlaps its outer end, and forms a bar which prevents vessels reaching or leaving the dock or sheltered area.

Several methods have been tried to remedy this evil, but extending the work seemed the only way of reaching a satisfactory result. The work, however, at last became so long that an extension was made at right angles instead of continuing the work in a northerly direction. This worked admirably for some four years, and an immense amount of gravel collected behind it, but it finally also overlapped the outer end, and it was necessary to again extend the work in a northerly direction. The gravel has lately got past this last piece of work, and has caused much trouble during the last year or so.

The river face of the older portions of the work, having become very much decayed, and in places falling down into the dock, the department during the last fiscal year expended the sum of $1,500 in repairing it, and in removing the highest part of the gravel bar, so that vessels could utilize the pier.

The wharf was not extended in the proper direction. Instead of being carried out at right angles, it should be made to slant towards the south-west, so that the gravel will be thrown up behind it. If it is carried out at right angles the gravel washes around the end, which is of great detriment to the place. On this subject I will read a letter which I have received from Mr. John B. Beliveau:

CHURCH POINT, 24th February, 1893.

E. C. BOWERS, M.P.

DEAR SIR,—We shall send you in a few days a petition from Church Point asking for a grant to build an L to our breakwater, so as to prevent the gravel from destroying the usefulness of the wharf. It would cost about $2,000 and will last twenty or twenty-five years. I have had to sell the brig Venus and the schooner Fury, as I was detained so many times in coming into and leaving the wharf on account of the gravel. Every gale of wind it heaves around the end and closes up the channel. Louis A. Melançon's three-masted schooner grounded on this gravel a short time ago and injured her copper and keel to the extent of $1,200. We have a good college here, and it is a large shipping port, and the only accessible one in the winter months for a long section of this coast. It would require to be about 100 feet long, 20 feet wide and 25 feet high, and built solid, that is, filled with ballast, so as to stand the enormous waves that break on our shore. It would be a good fishing station, and some of our fishermen, who are now forced to go to the States, would embark in this industry and stay at home. Try and press the great necessity of this work being done on the Government. If not, we will have to close up business and clear out.

I am, yours very truly,

JOHN B. BELIVEAU.

Last week I also received a letter from Louis Melancon himself, as follows :

In February last my schooner returned from the West Indies in ballast, and while trying to come in to wharf, caught on gravel bed outside of wharf, and the next tide, a south-west gale and heavy sea threw her on bar where she rolled and pounded heavily for two or three tides. I got her to the wharf after a great expense, and have her now on the slip repairing. She is very much damaged and will cost a large sum of money to repair, besides the detention and loss I will have in selling my cargo, as lumber will be lower by the time she returns to West Indies. Now, I think the Government is responsible for my loss, and I would like to have your opinion on this matter. This gravel bar outside of wharf, is some distance from wharf by water coming from pond and passing through gate, which is done every time the wharf fills with gravel. The water clears the gravel for a time, but carries it a distance and forms a bar, where my vessel caught. I have always paid wharfage, both top and side, and have also done considerable help in clearing gravel, and if an ell had been built when we asked for it, I would not now have this loss. My opinion is that the Government should be made to pay the loss.

Then he goes on to say :

Another thing I would ask you. How is it that at Meteghan River the top wharfage on lumber is 5 cents per thousand, and here I am obliged to pay 10 cents. We always paid 5 cents here until lately. We have a new wharfinger who makes us pay 10 cents.

Mr. OUMET. I could not give an answer to the hon. gentleman because after the wharfs are built they are transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the question would have to be answered by that department.

Mr. BOWERS. With regard to the wharfs in Digby county, I have taken the trouble to make a list of them, which I wish to submit for the information of the Minister and those of my constituents who pay wharfage at these breakwaters :

WHARFAGE IN DIGBY COUNTY.

Mr. BOWERS.

The county of Digby pays about 25 per cent of the amount collected in Nova Scotia, and about one-eighth of the total collected in the whole Dominion, the total in the whole Dominion being $8,145.65. Now, with regard to the other breakwaters in Nova Scotia, I would call the Minister's attention to the fact that Cape Cove breakwater requires small repairs, amounting to $75 or $100, which expenditure would save a larger outlay in some future time. The Salmon River breakwater I have called attention to for many years, and I hope this year something will be put in the Supplementary Estimates to repair that work. Centreville requires small repairs, from $50 to $100, to save larger future outlay. I also presented a large petition from Rossway about three or four weeks ago, asking for three or four hundred dollars towards building a breakwater at this place. If the Government will expend that amount on this breakwater the people there are prepared to put it under Government control and find all the logs and material necessary. This, besides being a great help to the hardworking people of Rossway, will, I am sure, be a good investment for the Government as there will be a large export trade in wood and produce while the outlay will be small. Beliveau's Cove also requires repairs to the wharf there, which is in very bad repair. No wharfage has been collected there, for what reason I do not know. The hon. gentleman who preceded me, as representative of the county, lives or does business there, and although moneys seem to be spent in some parts of the county, this port in some way is neglected.

McNair's Cove Pier--Repairs.... $3,700

Mr. FRASER. What work has been done at that pier ?

Mr. OUMET. Work has been done to the amount of $51,074.

Mr. FRASER. Is the present appropriation for an addition or for repairs ?

Mr. OUMET. It is only for heavy repairs and dredging.

Mr. FRASER. What kind of work was the last work done there ? Was there not a very large outlay to repair it not more than a year or two ago ?

Mr. OUMET. That is not an extraordinary case. In many of these works heavy damage is caused by the sea within a very short period of time.

Mr. FRASER. Who was the inspector ?

Mr. OUMET. It was L. McEachran. He has had charge since 25th July, 1892.

Mr. FRASER. Who was there before ?

Mr. OUMET. I cannot say, but will let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. FRASER. I would like to make some remarks on this, but wish to know who was the inspector before doing so.

Mr. OUMET. There will be Supplementary Estimates down for Nova Scotia, and the hon. gentleman can bring the matter up then.

Repairs to Piers and Breakwaters,
P. E. I. $6,000

Mr. PERRY. If that $6,000 includes repairs expected to be made and required to be made at Souris, Rustico, Malpeque and Tignish, these four important harbours, the amount spent upon each must be too small. It will take four or five times as much as this to repair these harbours.

Mr. OUMET. It is not intended to include these. There will be a special estimate for Souris and for some other works in Prince Edward Island. I will give the list of those it is intended to repair: Annandale, Clifton (New London), Georgetown, Hurd's Point, Keir's Shore, Lewis Point, Miminigash, Pinette, Pownal, Souris, Stephen's Pier, Victoria (Crapaud), Vernon River.

Mr. PERRY. Some of these are very small. Looking over the report of the Public Works Department it appears to me it does not give the information we ought to get. It states when the work was commenced, and, in some cases, what amount of money has been spent; but it does not state the actual condition of the work. I have to ask for information from the Minister of Public Works, and half the time he has not the information. I do not know what business we have with engineers, if they do not give us this information. It ought to be part of their business to inform this House of the actual condition of these works. The hon. Minister has spoken of Miminigash. I see there is an item here for $2,950, and for 1893-94, $1,000, a total of $3,950. I presume this will make a good work if the money is properly expended. I would like to know if the hon. Minister is aware that there is a great deal of fault-finding by some of the people, including some supporters of his own Government, who say that the inspector is not a competent inspector. I am informed that at a public meeting at Miminigash his appointment was condemned, and the people even went so far as to make an effigy which they called by some name and burnt. I do not say that it is a fact; but, Sir, I give as my authority the names of William Callaghan, Michael McElroy and James Farmer and others, rabid Conservatives, who never gave poor me or any Liberal candidate a vote. There must be some great wrong when the people went so far as to burn this effigy, and when it comes to this it is time the Minister should be made aware of the facts. I am aware this gentleman was not appointed on account of his great capacity as an inspector, but because he had run two elections, one for the Local Assembly and one for the council. I know that when he ran the last election he was promised an inspectorship, and, to carry out their promise, they had to appoint him regardless of whether he was competent or not. When such a man as William Callaghan an officer in Her Majesty's Customs, the owner of a large property there expresses his dissatisfaction, it is time to investigate. I hope no mistakes will be made and that the Minister will inquire whether this person is incompetent, whether he is guilty of the charges laid at his door by this great meeting at Miminigash. Now, there is a breakwater at Malpeque. I see nothing here for that breakwater. It is well known that the harbour of Malpeque is in a bad condition. I think it has been stated in the House before that last fall a vessel going out, a vessel worth several thousands of dollars, with a cargo for some port in Europe, got aground in the middle of the harbour. The pilot was aboard, but this sand had gathered there unknown to him or to anybody else. I do not know whether the department is taking steps to clear out that sand. There is a work going on at the Brae. The people had taxed themselves $500 or $600, which had been supplemented by the Government with $1,000, for which I felt very thankful, being representative of that place. But when the Government could afford to spend $1,000, they could surely afford to spend $500 or $600 more and complete the work. If it were the commencement of a new work, there might be some argument against it, but it is necessary to spend this further sum in order that the people may get any good of what has been already voted. I hope this item will be covered in the Supplementary Estimates. I want to know if the Minister has received application from the inhabitants of Campbellton, township 4, Prince county, to complete a small breakwater. Campbellton is a central place, and there is no harbour. Of course, you will understand the trouble that fishermen have in hauling their boats on shore at night and launching them in the morning. Now, these men have taxed themselves $700 or $800, they have got a lot of fine timber on hand, which I think is not like the Nova Scotia timber, and the worms will not eat it. I ask the Government to supplement that sum by a certain amount of money to enable them to carry out this work. I see nothing in the report of the Commissioner of Public Works with respect to Summerside. We know that a few years ago an important survey was made at Summerside harbour, and a report was made of the work which will be required to make that harbour more beneficial to the public than it is. We have heard nothing of that. It appears to me the Government are sleeping soundly on that question, although they must know the great importance of that harbour to the people of Prince county. It is the outlet in summer for the whole of Prince county, and a portion of Queen's county. We know that a breakwater built at Summerside would protect the harbour and give the needed facilities for navigation. Now, with respect to the Rustico pier, or any other public work in Queen's county, or King's county, I am not going to say anything. Those counties are represented by gentlemen who have large interests in those places, more particularly the gentlemen who represent King's county, and they are able to speak for themselves. But I must draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that Tignish breakwater wants repairs. The sand is rapidly accumulating there, and in a short time the harbour may be useless altogether. It is a harbour of great importance for the north side of the Island. I also want to inform him that Cascumpec harbour needs to be looked after. I would also like to know whether an inquiry has been made into the charges that have been made against the inspector at Miminigash. I know the gentleman as a politician, and I believe he is a gentleman of ability. I hope the Government will look after that matter also.

Mr. YEO. I am sorry to see so small an appropriation for breakwaters in Prince Edward Island, particularly in Prince county. My hon. colleague has drawn the attention of the Minister to several important breakwaters and piers that I hope will be attended to. I would particularly draw the Minister's attention to Brae. This work there has been begun, and unless a new contract is let, the work already done will be almost useless. I trust the Supplementary Estimates will contain a vote for this work. I would also draw the Minister's attention to the pier at West Point. It has been spoken of before; but it may have escaped his recollection. It is a work of great importance to the people living in the neighbourhood of West Point, who have petitioned for it time and again. I think there is no possible reason why a sum of money should not be granted to erect a pier at this place. My hon. colleague has also spoken of Campbellton. I understand the people of that locality have subscribed about $600 to commence a pier, and if I am correctly informed, they have petitioned the Department of Public Works for a sum to aid them in extending the work. I hope that their petition will receive favourable consideration by the Department of Public Works. While I am speaking of breakwaters, I will also draw the Minister's attention to the breakwater at Malpeque. I do not know that it needs any repairs in particular, but it is being sanded up. It is a breakwater of great importance, as a great deal of shipping is done there, but during the last two seasons it has become sanded up and is almost useless. I trust these two or three very important works will be attended to by the department, and that when the Supplementary Estimates are brought down it will be found the Minister has decided to improve them.

Nine Mile Creek—Repairs to Pier. $800

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there any hope that the hon. gentleman will do anything for Queen's county in the supplementaries?

Mr. PERRY.

Mr. OUIMET. There is some hope.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that in the arrangement of these appropriations, the strictest impartiality can hardly be said to be observed by the Government. I understand that my hon. friend who represents Queen's county (Mr. Davies), a county having a shore front on the Straits of Northumberland and another on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and necessarily requiring a large appropriation in the public interest, has the magnificent sum of $800. That is a greater slight than if he had not received a cent. I cannot divest myself of the impression that the Government, in the distribution of its amounts for harbours, piers, etc., is governed rather by a desire to promote political interests than by a desire to promote public interest. So glaring an instance of partiality as that in the case of Queen's county, I think calls for a remedy. The Government should at least show some degree of sense of fair-play in the appropriations they make. As my hon. friend from Queen's is somewhat modest, I rise to solicit in his behalf a fair degree of consideration for the people inhabiting the riding he represents, not because they are represented by so able a gentleman as he is, but because they are Canadians, and have a right to look to the Government for that and such share of appropriations and attention as they are entitled to as citizens.

Mr. FRASER. I must speak for myself. My county has a continuous shore district of 200 miles, and for the last twelve years we have received nothing at all. Although the county is represented by one of the best dispositioned men in the world, a man charming in his manner, so far as his action towards the present Government is concerned, still, there is not a single dollar for that county. I have had promises, and I hope the Supplementary Estimates will contain a fulfilment of those promises. Here we have 200 miles of coast, from the boundary of the county of Halifax, round to Canso, up the bay, and back again to Antigonish, with a number of harbours, and one particular case to which I called the Minister's attention, where fishermen are kept out for two days, sometimes with their boats, and where the Government made an expenditure some fifteen years ago. These fishermen largely vote against me, but I trust the Government will make an expenditure at that point, when by an outlay of $1,000 upon a work which the Government have themselves built, but allowed to fall into decay, the fishermen would be able to enter and leave the harbour. This is a case, in regard to which I appeal to the Minister and to the House. I do not want any credit for appealing to the Government to have this work carried out, and if it is done, I will give the Government the credit for doing the right thing. The Government should themselves make investigation after cases are brought to their notice. It would be a curious commentary on the methods pursued if a statement were brought down showing the counties in Nova Scotia in which money has been spent on public works during the past fifteen years, and also the representatives of the counties at that time, and I venture to say that hon. members would be surprised at the result. When a strong case like the present one is presented, the Government should abandon their usual rule of only helping their friends, and make the grant asked. If the statements I have made are not borne out by any engineer, following up the petition presented by the fishermen, I will not ask that the grant be made, but if the statement contained in the petition, and the claim I am now making, are well founded, the Government should, even if only for the sake of a change, grant the small sum necessary for this work in this county, notwithstanding the fact that it sends a Government opponent here. I hope the Government will attend to this work at White Head.

Mr. YEO. I desire to ask the Minister whether we may expect a grant for works at Brae and at West Point.

Mr. OUIMET. So far as Brae is concerned, it is one of the places on the list where repairs will be made out of the general vote. As to West Point, a new structure is required, and it is a question whether the Government will be able to appropriate the necessary amount this year.

Negro Point Breakwater, St.
John Harbour, $5,000

Mr. BOWERS. Was any work done at that point last year?

Mr. OUIMET. Two thousand one hundred and ninety-four dollars appear to have been spent there last year. This is a large breakwater built to protect the harbour of St. John. It is of the greatest importance to the harbour that money should be expended there.

Mr. BOWERS. I have noticed in going in and out of the harbour that some portions of the breakwater appear to be out of repair. It does not appear to have been properly built in the first place, and the repairs do not appear to have been successfully carried out since. A large amount has been expended on the breakwater, but it does not appear to have been built by any one who had any idea of building breakwaters.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman is striking at the wrong man. The construction of the breakwater was commenced in 1874, and it was placed there by the hon. gentleman's political friends. I am glad the hon. gentleman's opinion coincides a good deal with the opinion of my chief engineer, who says the work was so badly built that repairs are both very difficult and very costly.

Mr. BOWERS. Was it finished and accepted under the regime of the Mackenzie Government?

Mr. OUIMET. The expenditure commenced on 1st July, 1874, and from that date to January, 1890, there has been expended on that breakwater $435,000.

River St. John $10,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What improvements are being made in the River St. John and its tributaries?

Mr. OUIMET. This amount has been for some time voted every year for dredging and keeping the channel open from the mouth of the river to Fredericton and Woodstock, and also one of the tributaries of the Tobique River to Grand Falls.

Mr. COLTER. When this item was under discussion last year, I called the Minister's attention to the fact that the item was in the Estimates for several years, and only a small amount spent for each year. If my memory serves me aright, and I think it does, the hon. Minister told me that he would send an engineer there last summer. Has he done so, and has there been a report from that engineer?

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Allison made a survey there, and he is now preparing his report, and as soon as it is ready I will communicate it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. COLTER. Has the Minister any idea as to whether or not it is feasible to so improve the navigation of the River St. John that boats can run between Fredericton and Woodstock? I can assure the Minister that it is very important to the people of the Upper St. John. We have only a line of railway from the upper part of the county to carry the produce of that county out, and I am assured by shippers that the rates on that railway have been exorbitant and are increasing every year. If the navigation of the river could be so improved that boats could run, even for a short season, it would be a great relief to the people. I am told by a shipper that it costs more to send a car load from Woodstock to St. John, about 150 miles, than it does from Montreal to St. John. Could the Minister inform me if the report of the engineer will be brought down in time for the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. OUIMET. I am informed that it appears from the report that the channel may be kept up to five feet deep through part of the season. During the greater part of the season, in the spring and well into the summer, there could be a channel of three feet.

Mr. COLTER. If that could be done I think that would be about all that could be required. The present boat plying between Fredericton and Woodstock draws from three and a half to four feet, and there is considerable talk about putting on a boat that will only draw two feet of water. If that could be done, I think navigation would be assured.

General Repairs—Harbours and Rivers, Maritime Provinces... $10,000

Mr. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister whether it is his intention to spend any portion of this vote for the repair of the breakwater at Chipman's Brook, on the Bay of Fundy shore? I have already called the Minister's attention to the fact that during a storm in November last, a portion of that breakwater was carried away, and that unless it was repaired very soon the whole structure would be in danger. About fifteen years ago the Dominion Government expended about $3,000 in extending that breakwater and building a piece on the outer end of it. That structure remains perfect, but a portion of the breakwater between the shore and it has been carried away, rendering, I am informed, the whole pier useless. This is a very good harbour and is much used by fishermen during the season. The Dominion has spent some $4,000 or $5,000 on it. It is a work which was taken over by the Dominion from the Local Government. I would again urge upon the Minister—I have already done so by letter and by private conversation—the importance of investigating this matter, and of expending a portion of this, or some other grant to repair the work during the present season.

Mr. OUIMET. Chipman's Brook is on the list of places requiring expenditure of money for repairs. In fact, I have a very large list. The works demanded and recommended by the engineers amount to $32,500.

Mr. BORDEN. To be done with $10,000?

Mr. OUIMET. We are not going to do impossibilities. We will do all we can, and we will try to do justice to all.

Mr. FORBES. Is it proposed to make any improvements on the Melway River?

Mr. OUIMET. We have no report as to that.

Mr. FORBES. Alas! alas!

Tadousac Pier, P.Q. $2,500

Mr. LAURIER. I have seen a grant for that pier for, at least, without exaggeration, ten years. Is it ever to be finished?

Mr. OUIMET. I hope it will be finished this year. As the hon. gentleman knows, it is a very important point for navigation.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not complain at all, only I wish it would be completed some time.

L'Etang du Nord—Repairs.... $1,500

Mr. LAURIER. This is another pier that has been under repair for a great number of years.

Mr. COLTER.

Mr. OUIMET. That place is very much exposed to the sweep of the sea. It is on the Magdalen Islands. The whole of the breakwater built two years ago was carried away. We expect that the amount now voted will be sufficient to provide accommodation to the fishermen there.

Isle Verte Pier... .. $1,000

Mr. LAURIER. Is this for repairs?

Mr. OUIMET. This will be applied to the completion of the pier.

Mr. LAURIER. Is the work done by contract or by day's labour?

Mr. OUIMET. Day's labour.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that there was a law-suit about the lumber used?

Mr. OUIMET. Not at that place.

Laprairie—Works in connection with Ice Piers..... $2,500

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this an expenditure of the same character as that on the post office at Laprairie?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. LAURIER. How much has been expended on these ice piers?

Mr. OUIMET. The ice piers and the wharfs for purposes of protection are of the same description. $34,000 has been expended up to date, and $6,500 more will be required after this year to complete.

River Ottawa—Improvement of channel at Mille Isles..... $1,000

Mr. LAURIER. What kind of improvements are you going to make?

Mr. OUIMET. This is to make a channel from three to four feet deep between the railway bridge at Ste. Rose and St. Eustache.

Roberval Pier, Lake St. John.. $5,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of this work, how much has been expended on it, and how much will be required to complete?

Mr. OUIMET. Lake St. John is a very large lake. I should think there were about fifteen parishes around it, and Roberval is the principal outlet, being one of the important stations on the Lake St. John Railway. In fact, it has been for many years the terminus of the railway, and there is a large trade done on the lake in passengers and also in lumber and other freight. This is to build a wharf for the accommodation of all those different parishes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this the first appropriation?

Mr. OUIMET. It is the first appropriation, and I hope it will be sufficient to complete the wharf. This amount is to complete that wharf which has been under way for many years. In fact, it is beginning to deteriorate before being completed, and I think it is high time we should finish that work, which has already cost $20,000.

Mr. LANGELIER. There is a great waste of money going on there. Have the Government decided to make that wharf at Cape aux Corbeaux accessible to steamers plying between Quebec and Chicoutimi, or are they going to complete the pier commenced a great many years ago in front of the village of Baie St. Paul? Steamer captains have told me that their vessels could never touch that wharf, and that it is perfectly useless. There is a ledge of rocks at a certain distance between the wharf and the main channel, which prevents steamers going there. If the Government will not prolong the wharf so as to make it accessible, any money spent on it will be wasted. Have the Government decided to prolong the wharf so as to make it accessible to river steamers?

Mr. OUMET. $11,000 will complete an addition to the present wharf of 175 feet towards the south in an inclined direction.

Mr. LANGELIER. From the information I have got from captains of steamers, there is a regular chain of rocks at some distance from the present wharf, which prevents the steamers touching it. If it was only boulders they could be removed easily, but to remove the ledge of rock would be a very expensive business. One of the captains told me it would cost infinitely less to complete the pier, which is built opposite the village of Baie St. Paul, much nearer that important place, than to prolong this wharf. Have the Government made an estimate of the cost of lengthening the wharf sufficiently to attain the object they have in view? The present wharf to which steam-boats go is 5,240 feet from the shore, so that you would have to build out that distance to extend the old one, which would cost a very large amount of money. At the present place you reach deep water 850 feet. I am told that after passing the present wharf there is very deep water for a certain distance, and then there is that chain of rocks which will have to be removed, or else you will have to prolong the wharf beyond the chain of rocks. Those I spoke to last summer told me it would cost infinitely less to complete that pier. I asked why the Government did not do that in the first instance instead of building this new wharf, and I was told that Mr. Cimon had a hotel on the hill opposite the wharf, and he got the wharf built thinking it would be accessible to steamers and give value to his property. But it was found that the steamers could not get to the wharf without running great risk, and it was practically useless. True, you have to go a long distance to reach the shore. At present passengers are landed alongside the pier, where it is very difficult to moor a steamer.

From the pier they are put on board a schooner which goes a certain distance, then they are put into scows, and then they are transferred into carts to reach the shore. Although the distance is very long it would be very inexpensive to build a wharf. You would not require a solid wharf the whole way, as piles could be laid and the wharf built over them without any danger from the ice, which has no strength there. I was told by steam-boat captains that it would not cost one-half the money to build the pier. The hon. gentleman knows there is no comparison, as regards cost, between building a solid wharf in deep water and a crib-wharf only partially filled, or a wharf on piles driven into the same. I was told that such a wharf would be perfectly effective in that place.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a promise he made me last year with regard to certain damages caused by the dam at Yamaska, and which he appears to have altogether forgotten. Last year when we were in Committee of Supply I put this question to the hon. gentleman:

My hon. friend is aware that during the construction of these works on the Yamaska River the lands in the commune of Yamaska were flooded, and the owners of the commune have been petitioning the Government to have an investigation into the extent of their damages, and to be compensated for the same. I have good reason to believe, in fact I am informed on good authority, that an investigation had been promised by the predecessor of my hon. friend in the administration of the department. So far nothing has been done. Can I hope that the hon. gentleman will do what was promised? The only thing that is asked for at this moment is that an engineer should be sent, so as to have the complaint investigated, and to see whether or not damages have been suffered on account of the dam.

Mr. OUMET. I shall order an investigation to be made.

The hon. gentleman has forgotten that promise he made last year, because he has not carried it out.

Mr. OUMET. I promised that an inquiry should be made and it has been made. I never promised that any money should be paid unless it was reported that the damages claimed existed. The report shows that there has been no damage caused by the construction of the dam. If the hon. gentleman desires it, I will bring down the report.

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly. Would the hon. gentleman tell me what condition this dam is in? Is it in good condition, or is it out of repair?

Mr. OUMET. It is in good repair.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that some years ago it suffered from an inundation. Was it repaired?

Mr. OUMET. Yes; the repairs were begun two years ago, and finished during last summer.

Mr. LAURIER. Who is the engineer who made the report?

Mr. OUMET. Mr. Berlinguet.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the hon. Minister promises to bring down the report?

Mr. OUMET. Yes.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) As regards this dam at Yamaska, I invite the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works to the fact that, on the eve of the late elections, in 1891, or later on, an engineer had been sent by the Public Works Department to estimate the losses; this statement could be corroborated by the hon. member for Yamaska (Mr. Mignault) if he was in his seat.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) A survey or examination was made on the spot during the course of the summer, at the request of my hon. friend.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that in 1891, previous to the elections, an engineer had been sent by the department to make an inquiry. Why did he not go on with this inquiry? Beyond a doubt, the farmers whose lands are on the banks of the Yamaska river have suffered further losses, inflicted on them by the building of this dam. They have suffered damages to the extent of $25,000, and the Government have done nothing to compensate them for their losses, although the owners of the commune had kept petitioning the Government to have an investigation into the extent of their damages and to be indemnified for the same. There must be in the Public Works Department several petitions to that effect.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) I have just stated to the hon. member for Richelieu that an inquiry has been made, in the course of last summer, by a Government engineer, who reported that no losses had been inflicted on them by the building of the dam. I have the engineer's report, stating that the dam is in good repair.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I understand that no appropriation has been made to finish the breakwater opposite the church of Ste. Anne of Sorel. This breakwater was commenced, I think, a few years ago; it is some twenty-five or thirty feet distant from the beach. The hon. Minister had promised, last year, if my memory serves me right, to make an appropriation of $1,000 towards the completion of these works. I should like to ask him to inform me whether this breakwater is soon going to be finished?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) I would remind the hon. member that the work in question is not a breakwater, but merely an ice-breaker, for the purpose of affording protection to the church and the village, at the breaking up of the ice in spring. This ice-breaker is an isolated block, having no connection with the bank of the river. The citizens of Ste. Anne wanted to make a wharf with it, or, rather, they wanted the Government to build a bridge connecting the main land with the isolated block. In the course of last year, as there remained a balance on the appropriation of $600, I had the offer made to the citizens of Ste. Anne to give them an allocation of $600, on condition they undertook to construct the wharf. I fancy they had been somewhat spoiled up to that time, and they thought it was not enough, and that the Government ought to do all the work. Now, as I do not look upon such a work as a work in the public interest, except in so far as the ice-breaker is concerned, which is built with a view to protect the citizens against the damages which may be inflicted on them by the River St. Lawrence—and as they had declined to accept my offer—the matter is still at a stand.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I consider the hon. Minister's remarks are quite unfair towards the people of Ste. Anne, and chiefly towards his friends in that locality.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Of course.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I do not look upon the matter in the same light as the hon. Minister. I say these remarks are unfair, for the hon. Minister ought to know that the population, for the most part, is made up of fishermen, who are, through the Government policy, prevented from earning their living; he ought to know, further, that these people are not wealthy, being small farmers with parcels of land and forced to pasture their cattle on the neighbouring islands. The parish has received many Government grants, but I consider that if this breakwater has not been finished it is not owing to the fact that the inhabitants of Ste. Anne have declined to accept the Government grant, but rather on account of a certain amount of rivalry existing among the Government's friends in the parish; if my information is correct, such is the reason to which may be ascribed the state of affairs prevailing at present. At all events, whatever may be the grounds for this delay in the carrying on of the works, I should like to know whether an extension of the ice-breaker up to the beach may be hoped for? The hon. Minister is quite aware that the Catholic population of the province of Quebec is much given to pilgrimages; pilgrims resort not only to Ste. Anne de Beaupré and Ste. Anne de Varennes, but also to Ste. Anne de Sorel. Pilgrims resorting to Ste. Anne de Sorel find no quay to land on. The hon. Minister of Public Works has been repeatedly urged by the parish priest of Ste. Anne to finish those works. Under these circumstances, I consider I am entitled to require from the Minister an explicit answer as to whether the quay or ice-breaker will soon be finished.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The ice-breaker is completed.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) Is the extension of the same up to the shore under contemplation ?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Well, it depends a good deal as to whether it may be built through the intercession of Ste. Anne or not ; but no appropriation for any such work is provided by the Estimates of the present year.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I should like to know when this work will be done ?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Should the hon. gentleman be able to tell us whether or not we shall be in power next year, I might then give him an answer.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I should wish to call the attention of the Minister, in connection with the ice-breaker at Ste. Anne, to a fact which has come within my knowledge : The construction of this work was commenced, I think, in 1890 ; the carting of the stone was done by sailors from the parish of Ste. Anne. The hon. Minister, who has done me the favour of paying a visit to my constituency during the last electoral contest is quite aware that there were certain claims of his friends in connection with this ice-breaker still pending, and so well established that, on the eve of the polling day at my election, he was obliged to pay the following instalments : $207 to Mr. Napoléon Mongeau ; $165 to Mr. Dolphis Millette, and $75 to Mr. Maurice Mongeau.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The accounts, then, have been settled.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) These were only instalments. Now, on the 23rd February, I inquired from the hon. Minister whether any accounts had been sent to the Government in connection with these claims. He answered negatively as to this ; but that on the 10th January, a cheque had been given for $162, payable to the order of Dolphis Millette, for stone delivered at the dam at Yamaska. Now, I may remark that the 10th January was a Sunday ; voting took place on Monday, the 11th. Mark well that the stone delivered by Millette was not for the locks at Yamaska, but for the ice-breaker at Ste. Anne. There are still due five or six hundred dollars for carting of stone towards the construction of this work. Now, during the electoral contest, the leaders of the Conservative party of the parish of Ste. Anne almost held the pistol at my opponent's throat, in connection with the settlement of these accounts. They were pacified at the time by being paid the small amounts just mentioned. The department went further : $162 were paid to Dolphis Millette, and there must be still left a certain number of claims unpaid.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) There are no demands before the department in relation to this stone. The department has paid all the accounts passed by the residing engineer, Mr. Berlinguet, upon delivery. This stone was not for the ice-breaker of Ste. Anne, but for the construction of the dam at Yamaska. Now, the hon. member makes quite an uproar about this incident ; he is perfectly aware, however, of the circumstances under which he has been returned to this House. He is indebted for the seat he now occupies, not to the Liberals, but to our friends.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) He is a Tory, then ?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Yes ; he did not run as a Liberal, and he may hear in this connection from one of his friends a rather amusing story. So soon as they began talking of politics in presence of the hon. member, he would draw near to the speaker and whisper in his ear : Enough of politics, now, a word in my favour. That is to say, the hon. member ran as an independent candidate ; and it was on such a ground that some of our friends, led by high authorities in the ranks of the Conservative party, felt warranted in voting for him and having him selected.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) We are all independent.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Yes, independent after the style of "La Sentinelle." Independent, and exerting themselves to bring back the Liberal party into power. Now, when one is elected through the Conservative vote, with the help of the Conservative party, and further, when one has succeeded, as in the instance mentioned, in bringing forward at the decisive hour claims which would undoubtedly have been settled in the proper time and place, as no doubt they have been ; holding that the Government were failing in their duty by not settling the same when, with the help of such like grievances, one has succeeded in having his candidature endorsed by false friends of the Conservative party ; then, I say, it ill-becomes one to cry aloud that one represents the grand liberal ideas, the ideas which have been bequeathed and handed down to us by the great Papi-neau. It ill-becomes one, I say, to boast of being—I shall not say the presumptive heir—but the direct heir to the great patriot of 1837.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Quite an excellent member, in short.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Not an excellent member, but a good fellow. But to 1893 will succeed 1894 and 1895, and in due time we will square up accounts.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I beg to thank the hon. Minister for the encomium pronounced, but I must deny the statement that when running as an independent candidate, I sailed under false colours. I squarely opposed the Government's fiscal policy and protection; I nailed to the fore-mast the flag unfurling the reciprocity programme of the hon. leader of the Opposition. It is a matter of fact, the battle was fought on that single issue, that is to say, protection and unlimited reciprocity. I ran as an independent candidate, pledging myself to fight the Government in their general policy; reserving, however, my liberty of action, ready to support the Government when they were in the right, and oppose them when they were in the wrong. One would fancy the hon. Minister meant to frighten me, when threatening to come down into Richelieu in 1894 or 1895. He came down in 1892 in that county, not from a desire, I fancy, to further my candidature or my return to this House, but I venture to trust he will come down again to tell the Sorel workmen that if willing to work, they may still eat their three meals a day. Let him take up that election cry again, and he is sure to be defeated. At all events, having disposed of this matter, I would beg now the hon. Minister to tell me how it came to pass that on Sunday, the 10th January, 1892, on the eve of the polling day, during the electoral contest from which I came out victorious, the Government paid to Mr. Dolphis Millette a sum of $162.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) There is no report on the matter in the department, and as this occurred previous to my taking the control of the department, I never had any personal cognizance of the fact.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) The hon. Minister is not in earnest surely when he asserts that there is no report to be found in the department; such deeds are not registered in the records of the department.

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) The hon. the Minister of Public Works has just stated, in reply to a question put to him by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that an investigation had been made into the damages inflicted on the owners of the commune of Yamaska. I do not recollect that an investigation has been made into the matter. At all events, the president of the trustees of the commune of Yamaska has not been notified as to the holding of such an investigation, as he called at my office but a few days ago to inquire when it was going to be held. He also asked me whether the question had come up in this House. I am quite surprised now at hearing the hon. the Minister of Public Works state that an inquiry has been made in connection with these losses. I would like to ask the hon. Minister when such an inquiry was held?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The hon. member is utterly mistaken as to the meaning of the word just made use of by me. The word inquiry does not convey the same meaning in English as it does in French. I may say that it was only an examination which was made by the department engineer. This examination was made from a technical stand-point, with a view to determine whether possibly the lands could suffer any damage from the fact that the level of the water rose owing to the construction of a dam on the Yamaska river. A report was sent to the department, and it appears from the same that no losses were suffered.

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) The hon. Minister is wrong. There was no inquiry petitioned for as to whether any losses had been inflicted on the owners of the lands on the banks of the river which had been flooded; the inquiry petitioned for was not for that purpose at all, but as to whether any losses had been inflicted on the commune of Yamaska. These lands, quite distant from the dam, have been flooded by the waters which flowed away through a small channel existing above the dam. These lands were flooded for several months, and at last, two years ago, a dam having been constructed at the entrance of this small channel, the flooding was thereby effectually prevented. I would like the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) to tell me why no compensation was granted to the trustees of the Commune of Yamaska, when private parties had been indemnified. The fact is the latter were Conservatives, and so far as I know, they have been largely compensated for any losses inflicted on them.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The hon. member seems to have no more accurate information on the matter than his neighbour, the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau). My engineer states that not a cent has been paid for damages.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Oh, I beg your pardon, the hon. Minister himself is no better informed; for, within my recollection, a report has been submitted, granting compensation to a certain number of persons, namely, among others, Messrs. Cardin and Tenancourt.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) I understand that this money has been paid to owners of lands bought by the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. No.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Let us wait for the report; it is the surest way.

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) I avail myself of the opportunity offered me to beg of the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) that, whether, in case he should send some one to investigate into the matter and procure accurate information on the same, this party be directed to notify the trustees of the Commune of Yamaska of the examination about to take place, with a view to enabling them to show which are the lands that have suffered from the flooding and as to how the flooding originated and took place. The flooded lands for which certain parties were compensated are situated above the dam, and, beyond the least doubt, did not belong to the Government. I am as well posted upon the matter as the engineer sent on the spot, having spent 30 years of my life in that locality. Mr. Chairman, I reiterate my demand to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet), to the effect that the party commissioned to inquire or to investigate into the matter, be directed to notify to that effect the interested parties—I mean to say the trustees of the commune of Yamaska.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) The hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet), will join issue with me when stating that the examination which has been made was far from being satisfactory to the interested parties of Yamaska. From the statement of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, it would appear that it was ascertained by the engineer sent to investigate on the spot that the grievances of the owners of the lands situated on the banks of the Yamaska river were unfounded, as no losses had been incurred. Such is not the case. The dam which has been constructed obstructs the passage of the water. Now, as the level of the ground of the commune is lower than that of the river, the examination or survey of the engineer, instead of bearing on the lands of the owners of lands on the banks of the river, should have been directed to the losses incurred by the commune. A channel, situate above the bar, constructed on the Yamaska river, gave issue to the water of this river on the lands of the commune; and about three years ago, a dam had been constructed at the entrance of this channel. I gather from all this that the survey in question is far from satisfactory, and I hope that another survey will be made in presence of the interested parties.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The survey was commenced in 1888, the very year when the losses occurred, and has been prosecuted yearly for two or three years.

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) In 1870, if my memory serves me right, somebody was sent, I do not recollect the name of the party,—it was Mr. Berlinguet, I think—to begin a survey, in order to ascertain the best steps to be taken for the prevention of the flooding. Mr. Berlinguet, the Government engineer for this district, sent, in February, 1871, a telegram to the chairman of the trustees of the commune of Yamaska, informing him that he would proceed thither within a few days, to investigate into the grievances, but I think he never came down and no investigation has ever been made by him. I consider that no inquiry has been held at that time.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) There will be, I presume, other Supplementary Estimates for public works in the province of Quebec, the hon. the Minister of Public Works may avail himself of the opportunity to give all the information asked for by the hon. member.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I would now call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) to another matter. He has, no doubt, just like myself, taken cognizance of the representations made to his department as regards the deepening of the entrance of the Richelieu River, at the place where this river empties itself into the St. Lawrence. Every one knows that there is at that place a point, which is the prolongation of the parish of Saint Joseph, and projects into the entrance of the Richelieu, rendering navigation at that spot extremely dangerous. Representations have been made to the Department of Public Works for the deepening of the entrance of the river, in order to do away with these obstructions. Has the department taken the necessary steps to carry out the work of deepening the river?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The question would have been more appropriate if put when the items for dredging were submitted to the committee. I, however, have no objection to answer now the query of the hon. member. The representations mentioned by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau) have been made to the department, for the purpose of deepening the bed of the Richelieu River at its mouth. These works are but an insignificant portion of the immense amount of necessary works of all description to improve the navigation of the St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec, and the department does not yet see its way to approach this question so as to examine it in its ensemble.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) I would offer the following suggestion to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet): It is a well known fact that the ice on the Richelieu breaks eight or even fifteen days earlier than the ice on the St. Lawrence. Now, as the Government fleet is at Sorel, and has nothing to do during the last days of April, though the men are ready to set to work so soon as navigation is open, the Government dredges being on the spot might be made use of during the fifteen days for deepening the river. I gather from reliable sources that fifteen days would be quite sufficient to carry out the works and do away with the obstructions which render navigation dangerous at that point. Such, at least, is the information I have gathered on the matter.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) That is, indeed, an excellent suggestion.

Toronto Harbour—Works at eastern entrance, &c., the City of Toronto having contributed $100,000..... $75,000

Mr. COATSWORTH. I would like to call the hon. Minister's attention to the necessity of amending that so as to read "eastern and western entrance."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister might, at the same time, give us a sketch of what is being done there, and what position are these works in. A very large amount of money is being expended and he is aware that a great deal of exception is taken by residents of Toronto to the way the work has been done.

Mr. OUIMET. I know that some discussion has taken place in the newspaper apropos of these works, but I am also aware as the hon. gentleman must be, that the accusations made against the contractor had to be withdrawn by the paper that made them. I may say that the department is not open to any blame as regards these works. The contract was given after tenders were asked; the work has been carried on and has been done in the best manner. The work done at the eastern entrance consists of two breakwaters or parallel piers, between which there is a space of about 400 feet. This gives to the harbour of Toronto a very good and a very safe entrance, and, when the work is completed, I think the harbour of Toronto will be in first class condition. The work is well done. It is of great usefulness, and I hope will soon be completed, and that it will be of permanent benefit to the harbour and city of Toronto. I move that the words "and western" be added after the word "eastern," making it read "eastern and western entrance."

Amendment agreed to.

Ontario - General repairs and improvements to harbour and river works, also to bridges...	$5,000
---	---------

Mr. McMILLAN. Before this item passes, I would like to ask if any portion of this amount is to be spent at Bayfield. The Minister promised me last year when the dredging of harbours and rivers was under consideration, that the dredge would be sent to Bayfield to clean out the river, and enable the fishermen to enter with their boats. That was not done. He said the improvements to the pier could not be made then, but I understood they would be proceeded with this year. I would like to ask if any portion of this sum is to be spent at Bayfield, or if there is to be an item in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. OUIMET. We have been unable to send the dredge to Bayfield during the past year, not because of any ill-feeling against the hon. gentleman, but because dredges have been occupied elsewhere. I hope that some of the first work done will be that demanded by the hon. gentleman. Our fleet has been fully employed, and will go to work again early in the spring.

Mr. ALLAN. I wish to ask the Minister, whether it is his intention to bring down further Supplementary Estimates in connection with wharfs and harbours? The town of Leamington, in the county of Essex, has for a long time been asking for harbour improvements. The question comes up at almost every election. The Government have promised to make that town a grant for a breakwater or a wharf. I would like to know what the Minister's intentions are with respect to that?

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman now. This is the first time my attention has been drawn to that place, but I will take a note of it.

Mr. ALLAN. I called at the office of the Minister and brought this matter before him, and he stated that local parties had been down and presented their views to the Government. It is an important place and has far more right to consideration than some other places that are getting grants. I would like to know whether this matter is merely to be kept hanging over the heads of the people for election purposes, or whether the Government really intend to do something? The matter has been brought to the attention of the Government in such a way that the Minister can tell us something about his intention. A survey has been made in reference to this proposed grant at Leamington.

Mr. OUIMET. A survey has been made, and it is estimated that $21,000 will be required to do the works that are necessary.

Mr. ALLAN. What does the Government intend to do?

Mr. OUIMET. At present, we do not see that we have money for that purpose.

Dredging—New Dredging Plant. $50,800

Mr. FORBES. What is that new dredging plant for?

Mr. OUIMET. It is to build an elevated dredge for the ship channel. One of the items is the rebuilding of an old dredge, No. 9, for the ship channel. The balance is as follows: New boilers for dredge "Prince Edward"; two new scows for dredge "Charles Mackenzie"; one special separator and steel trap for the "Canada"; reconstruction of the tug "Trudeau"; new hull and repairing and placing machinery in the new hull of the same; two new scows for Manitoba dredging; new boiler for the boat "Simpson." Then, repairs to the "Canada" for the St. Lawrence, and the scows in the Maritime provinces; repairs to the dredge "New Dominion."

Mr. FORBES. I presume the Minister's remarks are confined entirely to that item of $50,800?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. FORBES. I see in that statement you go from British Columbia down to the Maritime provinces, and all those three Maritime provinces get is a new scow, out of that $50,800. I must enter my protest against that treatment. We have always had a special dredge for the shore of Nova Scotia, running as far as the northern shore of Cape Breton, and as far south and west as Yarmouth and the Bay of Fundy. Three or four years ago, that dredge was lost and destroyed, and about the same time a dredge on Lake Superior was also lost. The Government immediately asked for a subsidy to replace the dredge on the lake. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries promised me in Parliament, and the Minister of Public Works also promised me, that the following year—that would be last year—Parliament would be asked for a sum to replace the dredge for the Maritime provinces. Now, I regret to learn that the Minister, although I drew his attention to it a few weeks ago, has declined to put a sum in the Estimates for a dredge for Nova Scotia. There are places in that province which absolutely require dredging in the interest of general navigation, altogether apart from any local interest. Counties which have no railway facilities, such as Shelburne and Queen's, have actually not a sufficient entrance to their harbours for the regular steamers which call there for freight and passengers. In the harbour of Liverpool it is impossible for a large or loaded steamer to cross the bar at low tide, although she only draws seven feet and a half of water. This forms a serious impediment to trade. I do not think it is fair to the Maritime provinces that of this large expenditure only a scow will go there. If I were asking for a new dredge, the request might be declined by the Minister, but I merely ask that the department will replace a dredge which belongs to that portion of the Dominion, and which has done fairly good work hitherto. I have already presented petitions for dredging in this locality. The harbour of Liverpool also requires attention, because the bar has not been dredged for ten or twelve years, and the low water on the bar causes trade to be handicapped. I trust the Minister will arrange that this dredging will be done, and if necessary insert an item in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will any portion of the sum voted for Quebec and Ontario be applied to removing obstructions to the navigation in the River Sydenham?

Mr. OUMET. The navigable part of River Sydenham will be attended to.

Telegraph Lines $1,500

Mr. MULOCK. I think this is an item that requires some explanation.

Mr. OUMET. We have a telegraph line running from Bale St. Paul to Pointe aux Esquimaux, and $1,500 are required to keep the line in repair. It is necessary to keep the road in good order, because there is no other way by which the repairers can reach the line, and this amount covers all the expenditure connected with its maintenance.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the mileage?

Mr. OUMET. Four or five hundred miles.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this an annual grant?

Mr. OUMET. Yes, and the same amount has been voted for some years.

National Art Gallery..... $1,000

Mr. LAURIER. How is this money applied?

Mr. OUMET. It is to buy pictures. We do not go very far in that direction or pay very large amounts. I do not think we will have a Louvre to offer to visitors for many years to come, but we are doing what we can. Pictures of well-recognized worth by Canadian artists or others are brought, when possible. No doubt the vote is a niggardly one, but we are doing pretty well with the amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What pictures have been bought during the last year?

Mr. OUMET. I think we have only bought one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So practically we do not vote anything for the purpose of purchasing pictures. We have some very nice pictures at the room, and if we desire to form a national gallery, we should from time to time appropriate a reasonable sum for the purpose of purchasing pictures. We have some very good Canadian artists whose works are not to be despised, and although I am not given to encouraging extravagance in any department, still I would be glad to assist the Government in voting a reasonable sum every year for purchasing one or two of the best Canadian pictures. It is not creditable to the country to have a room called a National Gallery without any pictures being added to the collection year after year. We have under any circumstances to pay the expense of keeping up the room, which amounts to nearly $1,000 a year. Very many visitors call in to examine works of art in the gallery. I regret exceedingly that these works of art are not added to year after year. We have half a dozen, at least, very good painters in the Dominion of Canada, and when exhibitions are held, the paintings which take the highest prizes should be looked after by some person representing the Government, and a reasonable price paid for them. I do not think it is desirable that the best pictures painted by Canadian artists should pass out of the country entirely, or into private galleries. I think the gallery should be recognized as a national one, and that can only be done by appropriating a reasonable sum each year. Is there any officer of the Government whose duty it is to look after paintings, and under what department is it?

Mr. OUMET. It seems to be in my department, but I must say that I have not given it very great attention. I know that Mr. Watts, who is an architect in the department, takes a great interest in the gallery, and he advises as to the purchase of these pictures. I will be very glad to repeat to my colleagues what has been said by hon. gentlemen, and I really think that it would be worth while to have at least a couple of thousand dollars placed at the disposal of the department, under efficient officers, assisted by some outside persons, who are connoisseurs of art, for the purchase of these pictures.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that by far the best method would be, if you would devote, say, $2,000 a year as a prize to be paid for the best work of art produced. I think this would be the best encouragement to Canadian art.

Mr. OUMET. We have heard so much lately about ministerial responsibility, that I should not care to undertake that.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is not correct in that. When he does anything right we are only too glad to support him.

Mr. FRASER. Nobody would expect that the Ministers would act in a judicial capacity on pictures, and for myself, I would not care to accept this judicial authority in that respect. We have been lavish in our expenditures in other directions hitherto Canada has seen fit to expend tens of thousands of dollars in railways, canals and other things, and thousands of dollars more than ought to, have gone into the pockets of private parties. If we are ever to be a nationality, we must lay the foundation in art, as well as in other matters, and it is time we should pay a little attention to it. I agree with the hint thrown out by the leader of the Opposition. It is well known that some of the best pictures painted in Canada go to Europe. We have very fine paintings of scenery here, which might be purchased, nor would I object to portraits of persons, provided always that they were calculated to show the best art in the country. At any rate I think we should add to the collection, because, when a person goes to the gallery once, there is nothing new to attract him there a second time. The expenditure of $1,000 a year is now almost worthless. Large amounts have been spent by the English Government in bringing out the genius of their artists and that has been one of the best expenditures made. Our rich citizens buy pictures costing $30,000 or $40,000. We cannot afford that, but I think that a country which grants all these handsome subsidies, by which these gentlemen are enabled to obtain these pictures, ought not to be forgotten herself. I will be ready to vote any reasonable amount to lay the foundation of a National Art Gallery in this country.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. FLINT. I do not wish to throw cold water on the generous feeling of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House which prompts them to advocate the expenditure of a large sum of money for the establishment of an art gallery under the auspices of the Government. At the same time I think I will be within the sympathy of a large number of hon. members, if I intimate to the Government that I think they would find themselves getting into very deep water if they undertake to give Governmental assistance to anything like an art gallery, without having their minds somewhat enlarged as to the expense they will be necessarily under. $1,000 or $2,000 or $10,000 a year would be simply sunk without any benefit accruing in the attempt to establish a gallery under the auspices of the Government in Ottawa. The amount required for such an object is, I think, much beyond the means at the disposal of this Government, and the condition of the country is not such as to permit it. If the capital of the country was also the commercial metropolis, and the Government had at its service a large volunteer staff of artists, and ladies and gentlemen artistically inclined, together with a great popular support for works of artistic merit, they might possibly enter into such an undertaking. The establishment of anything like an art gallery could not be undertaken for less than $200,000 or $300,000, and then it would be very much inferior to those that exist in the old world, and in some cities on this side of the Atlantic. I think the least the Government ought to do before asking the House for any appropriation beyond that which they receive each year, would be, in the first place, to appoint a competent commission, consisting of persons having a thorough knowledge of art, to advise them, before they ask the House to appropriate one cent for any such expenditure. Unless we are prepared to do something, which I believe the finances of this country will not permit us to do, it would be better for us to go on as at present. My idea is that with a small sum something should be done towards promoting the fundamentals of an art education rather than by purchasing those finished works. An appropriation of $1,000 or $2,000 to promote the study of the primary principles of art might possibly be of some advantage. But the subject is a very wide one—one which concerns not merely the Capital, but the whole Dominion. I believe that, if an art gallery is to be established under the auspices of the Dominion, it should be established in Montreal, and that the assistance of wealthy volunteers should be enlisted in the work. In that way we might possibly, after a long period of time, and after persistent endeavours, accomplish something worthy of a great country. I do not join my friends in the suggestion that, at any rate, without a great deal of consideration and without the assistance of persons specially qualified to pronounce on this question, the Government should hasten into petty appropriations of $1,000, or $2,000, or $3,000 for works of this kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not of the opinion that it is necessary, in order to promote the development of art, that we should incur so large an expenditure as my hon. friend has just suggested. I think, however, that we could afford to make a larger appropriation than one that is barely sufficient to keep open the room where the few pictures which have been collected are now to be seen. When the hon. Minister made the statement that we appropriated $1,000 a year towards the establishment of a picture gallery, of which sum about $800 went to pay the caretaker in charge of the room, I could not help thinking that we were acting upon the same principle as the people in London who undertook to take care of Jinx's baby, who secured subscriptions amounting to $5,000 or $6,000 to support the youngster, and then spent a considerably larger sum than we are voting in advertising a meeting at Exeter Hall and in employing a treasurer, a collector and other assistants. I think we could afford to appropriate a larger sum, out of which we might purchase each year one or more of the best Canadian pictures, besides adding to our gallery by obtaining, as has been done elsewhere, copies of a few of the best pictures in the art galleries in Europe. A very fair collection of such copies were gathered a quarter of a century ago by Dr. Ryerson from galleries in Vienna, London and Paris. My hon. friend suggests that they are not of the very highest orders. Still, they are better than no collection at all, and they are of some value as being suggestive to Canadian artists. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has suggested that a sum of money might be offered as a prize for the best picture. I think the suggestion is a very good one, and I think the Minister, after having heard the discussion that has taken place this evening, may venture to ask for a larger appropriation.

Mr. DALY. I simply rise to say that I endorse the remarks made by the hon. leader of the Opposition and those made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. I do not think art has received that encouragement in Canada to which it is entitled. We know that the Ontario Society of Artists has been struggling for a number of years and has succeeded in carrying on its work by means of private subscriptions and prizes offered by persons interested in art. I think the idea suggested by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that we should offer one or two prizes for the best picture, to be selected by judges appointed at the annual meetings of the different academies in Montreal and in Toronto, is a good one. I do not agree with the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) that the expenditure of a large sum of money would be necessary. Our National Art Gallery, I understand, is simply the nucleus of what in time will form a gallery, not only for the edification of those who visit it to look at the pictures, but as a means of instruction to rising artists. I want to say to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works that I will back him up in any effort he makes to obtain the assent of his colleagues to a further grant in this direction.

Mr. MULOCK. Some hon. gentlemen have dwelt on the question of subject. Some have declared that it would be very difficult to determine what works should be selected. The hon. Minister of Public Works, for example, states that he would decline to take the responsibility. Some hon. gentlemen have suggested that Canadian subjects should be selected. I am by no means a nativist myself. There are many matters connected with the history of our forefathers, which have been reduced to canvas, and which would be most instructive in many ways in an art gallery. For example, I would suggest that some of the members of the Cabinet who are well versed in the history of the old land and the struggles that have brought us to our present position—for example, the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Controller of Customs—should be chosen as a committee. I have not the slightest doubt that, not being limited as to the subject, they would be able in time to select some pictures that would be suggestive of the past, and would perhaps be instrumental in keeping alive some of the fires that have not gone out yet.

Monument to the late Sir John

A. Macdonald..... $9,000

Mr. LAURIER. This is a revote. I see. $1,000 has been expended—in what manner?

Mr. OUMET. We have been getting photographs, and copies, in French and English, of the life of the late Sir John Macdonald, to be distributed among the artists who propose to compete for the best model of the monument to be erected. The one who will present the best model will be given the work. This $1,000 has not all been expended yet, but it will be expended before the 1st of July next. The balance $9,000, will be used to pay for the work.

Mr. LAURIER. When are the artists to send in their models?

Mr. OUMET. I cannot say exactly. I do not think there has been any advertising yet. We are just attending to the preliminaries. We will advertise in Canada, the United States, England, France and Italy.

Rideau Hall—Repairs, &c. . . . $15,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What amount was spent on repairs during the past year?

Mr. OUMET. We spent $11,394.52 in 1891-92, and during the current year, up to 30th November, we spent $8,393.90.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is there such a large increase this year?

Mr. OUIMET. That is owing to the installation of a new Governor, which always entails additional expense, just as a change of domicile does. Some new furniture, of course, will be required and a good many things will have to be renewed. We had an inventory made in May, 1890, and will have another one made before the present incumbent leaves, so as to guard against things being taken away by employees or others.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was proved at the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. OUIMET. Precautions will be taken to prevent that.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the expenditure of the department, if we can call it such, connected with the office of Governor-General. A short time ago, the House voted a return which I have in my hand. I have summarized the figures, and would like to show what this institution has cost us since its establishment in 1868. The annual salary paid to the Governor-General is $48,663.63; and I will venture to say that when the country agreed to do that, which I think is a very large salary, it did not contemplate the growth of the expenditure by special allowances to that officer such as have grown up. I am not charging this Administration with being to blame, because every Administration since the establishment of the institution has followed in the same direction, and there is nothing to the credit even of the Mackenzie Government in that regard. The salary of the Governor-General during that period amounts to a total of $1,216,660.05. During the same period there was allowed to him for travelling expenses the sum of $145,903.45. The average annual expenditure or allowance, for in some cases there was a fixed sum allowed to him and in other cases the bills were paid, has been $5,826.13 for travelling expenses per year. Then there is the Governor-General's office, as it is called, with a certain staff—some of whom accompanied him, I understand, when he came to the country, and some being permanent officials appointed here—but in every case they are paid for by the country, and the salaries of these officials, during the period in question, amounts to $270,353.14, or an average expenditure on this account of $10,514. There is an item in this return entitled "contingencies in connection with the Governor-General's office," amounting to the sum of $217,426.60, or an average expenditure for contingencies in connection with that office of $8,697.04. Now adding up these items, we find we have expended in connection with the salary of the Governor-General, travelling expenses of the Governor-General and salaries of his office and contingencies of his office the sum of $1,850,346.24.

Mr. REID. Since what year?

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. MULOCK. Since Confederation.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. MULOCK. Who says "Oh"? That is a very intelligent criticism. The average expenditure during this period has amounted to $74,010.80. Then take the expenditure on Rideau Hall. For a short time the country paid rental, which amounted to $7,854. Then, it appears, the Government purchased a certain property, now known as Rideau Hall, for $82,000. Hon. gentlemen will bear in mind that this rookery, as it is often called, was purchased for $82,000, and I fancy it is in no better condition than when it was purchased. Now, let us see what it has cost to maintain this institution since that date. According to the official returns, there have been expended upon Rideau Hall, for additions, alterations, repairs and maintenance (keeping up the old and original glory of the place) sums amounting to $547,143.45.

Mr. REID. For how many years?

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman seems to forget that I am speaking of the period since Confederation. I suppose he is aware of what period is covered by that. There has also been expended upon furniture of Rideau Hall sums amounting to $118,853.01. So the average yearly expenditure for furniture during this period has been $4,754.12. We have paid for furnishing Rideau Hall nearly $5,000 a year. Then there is another item in the public accounts in connection with Rideau Hall—gardens and grounds; and there has been expended under that head a total sum of $94,349.86, or an average for each year of the period of $3,773.96.

Mr. REID. For how many years?

Mr. MULOCK. I will give that gentleman a little attention if he does not give me his, and perhaps he will regret his irrelevant interruption.

Mr. FOSTER. You ought to have sympathy with him.

Mr. MULOCK. He had better not be too demonstrative or he will provoke something. There has been expended in the same period for fuel and light for Rideau Hall $151,371.10, or an average for each year of $6,050.84. In all there has been expended on Rideau Hall in purchase money, repairs, alterations, furniture, gardens, fuel and light, $1,001,571.52, or an average expenditure of $40,058.82 a year. The average expenditure on the Governor-General's department for the same period is $114,069.62. Adding together the two sums so expended we find that there has been an actual cash outlay by the country in the maintenance of this office of $2,851,917. Looking at it as to what this costs the country, I think it is fair, in order to bring the matter up to the present time, to see how much the country has lost by this annual average expenditure.

Mr. REID. Does the hon. gentleman object to a Governor-General?

Mr. MULOCK. I am discussing the cost of the institution at the present time, and I say, Mr. Chairman, it is fair to assume that this expenditure has cost us an annual rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. If you add 4 per cent simple interest to this expenditure during the period in question, you find that this office has cost us no less than $4,225,069. The hon. gentleman asks me if I object to a Governor-General. I am not now carving out a constitution for the country; but I do object to the office of the Governor-General being made so expensive and burdensome as to render that office unpopular.

Mr. REID. Then you are an annexationist?

Mr. MULOCK. I am a British subject, and I propose to live and die a British subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Die quick.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Finance will also get a little attention if he does not observe order. I say, Mr. Chairman, this country cannot afford the burden of this office as at present conducted.

Mr. REID. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he objects to a Governor-General? I would like to have that question decided. You say you wish to abolish the office?

Mr. MULOCK. I am not aware that I said that. The hon. gentleman's imagination is carrying him away. I think I am the best friend of the office if I try to prevent abuse growing up about it and rendering the office itself unpopular. The best way to popularize the office is to see that it does not become burdensome upon the people, and that it meets the needs of the people. I object to the enormous cost of it. I doubt if the country ever expected this expense would grow to the present proportions, and I submit to the committee that it is our duty either to confine the expenditure of a personal character to the salary fixed by the Confederation Act, or, if we are going to allow perquisites, to reduce the salary. I do not think we should ever have made an increase on the original statutory allowance of £10,000 sterling to do so. I think it is wholly contrary to what was understood at the time the people of Canada consented to a clause like that going into the Imperial Act. I myself want to see the House now return to an economical view of the case before we have a new Governor-General enter upon the office. The present Governor-General is retiring, and a new one will be here before Parliament meets again. At the earliest moment in the session I invited the attention of the House to the subject, and took a vote of the committee on one item, but was not sustained by the committee. I now present to the committee figures in connection with the subject, and ask them to deal with the matter in settling the appropriation. The incoming Governor-General has not yet been appointed, and therefore it cannot be said that would be in the slightest degree acting unfairly with him; therefore, I say, while we are in this state, and the decks are clear, let us have a distinct understanding as to what shall be the cost of this office during the incumbency of the new Governor-General. If we proceed in that way before he is appointed, he knows full well what to expect. There will be no embarrassment on the part of this House in dealing with the appropriation, and the office itself will continue to be a popular one. I would say further, that I have not been able to find out what advantage there is to the country from having to choose a Governor-General from abroad. I believe that we can have that office as well filled by a Canadian as by an Imperial officer. We have been filling the offices of Lieutenant-Governors from time to time, and there has rarely been a case of complaint. The most extreme party men have been sent to the various provinces to fill the office of Lieutenant-Governor, and have been called upon to discharge those delicate duties in connection with Cabinets not of their own political thinking, and I am not aware that there has been any serious difficulty discovered up to this moment, with an odd exception. But there is no system that is perfect. I would like to know what advantage Canada has received from the millions of dollars expended in connection with the office of Governor-General? What are the duties of the Governor-General of Canada? He can do nothing; if he does anything he acts unconstitutionally. I think we may look forward to the time when our Governor-General will be chosen from amongst the Canadian people. I feel perfectly satisfied that the interests of the Empire in Canada will be quite as safe in the hands of a loyal Canadian, as in the hands of an Imperial officer, because, in fact, they have to come to Canada now to get the true loyalty. I am afraid it has received a black eye at the hands of the Administration the other night; but perhaps it will recover. But I think the appointment of a Governor-General from our own midst will in no way endanger British connection; that a Canadian officer would be quite as intelligent, and quite as able to have regard to Imperial interests, as one who comes from abroad. Moreover, I think a person chosen from among the people of Canada would be in all likelihood better able to understand the requirements of the country, and altogether better fitted to fill the office and discharge the duties devolving upon him. I submit that Canada has not received value for the millions of dollars she has expended in connection with this office. In view of the enormous expenditure in connection with conducting the affairs of Canada, I submit that we should apply the pruning knife wherever it reasonably can be applied, and this is one point where it can be applied without, in the slightest degree, impairing the public interests; but on the contrary, as I believe, promoting economy and popularizing the system that now obtains. I make these remarks without suggesting any changes at all except a change that will postpone to the remote future, probably, the feature that I have referred to, namely, the selection of a Governor-General from our own midst rather than having one sent to us from abroad. I say it is quite as competent for the Imperial authorities to make that selection from one of our own citizens as from the citizens of Great Britain herself.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do think this is the proper time to discuss the whole question of the expenses connected with Rideau Hall, and I fully endorse the remarks of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). I think that at this juncture, when we are about parting with a Governor-General who has discharged the duties of that office for several years, and are now likely to receive from Great Britain a new incumbent, it is right that we should define what shall be the expenses connected with that edifice in future. I do not think we should be called upon to continue the enormous and ridiculous expenses that have been outlined by my hon. friend. This country cannot afford to continue this extravagance, as exhibited by the figures he has submitted. Before we are called upon to install a new incumbent to the office, we should closely and carefully outline what shall be the expenses connected with the refurnishing, and with all the different supplies that are provided by this country for that very expensive establishment, known as Rideau Hall. Now, we have been in the habit of granting to a Governor-General $5,000 a year for travelling expenses, and $8,000 for fire and light. In my humble opinion, it is not at all necessary that we should pay for the fire and light of Rideau Hall. We provide a house for the Governor-General to live in, and we supply the necessary furniture, which, I think, is all that should be expected of this Dominion. He should provide for himself all the other necessaries, in the way of fire and light, in the way of gardeners and other servants that are employed about the Hall. Any person who will take up the list of employees that we supply to that establishment, must come to the conclusion that a very large number of them are really unnecessary. We had an investigation before the Public Accounts Committee some years ago, of which I happened to be a member, and the person in charge testified before the committee that a number of men were sent to him to find employment and he was driven to his wits' end to find them anything to do. He set them at gathering leaves and removing stone and all that kind of things from one place to another, in order, if possible, to keep them employed in any shape or form. He inquired from the Minister of Public Works, why he was overloaded with men of that stamp, and the reply he received was, that they had to find employment for those sent there. It was quite clear that it is a source of unnecessary expense connected with the management of that establishment. I contend that if we supply the House with furniture, the Governor-General should be led to understand that additional expenses, connected with maintenance, should be paid out of the salary he receives, of $50,000 a year. We do not want Governors-General to come here and live entirely at the expense of the Dominion, outside of the salary of $50,000 a year. We have reason to believe, and I have heard it on good authority, that the incumbent of the office previous to the present occupant, left Canada with a cheque in his pocket for $200,000, the balance which he had been able to save during his five-years term as Governor-General.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. If that is a fact, and I have no doubt in regard to it, it is absurd that the people should be called on to pay such an enormous sum.

Mr. REID. Does the hon. gentleman want the Governor-General to board out on Sussex street?

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is evidently not himself to-night. This is not a question to be dealt with in a jocular manner, for it is a matter of positive seriousness. This is the proper time to deal with the whole question, and I contend that the evidences of recklessness and extravagance connected with the expenditure at Rideau Hall, from Confederation to the present time, as produced before the committee to-night, are proofs beyond question that now is the time we should deal with this whole subject and settle whether the people are going to be called on to pay such enormous sums, year after year, for the support of this institution, as they have been in years past. Some change should be made, and the Government are shouldering a serious responsibility, if they allow the future incumbent to come to Canada under the impression that the extravagance which has characterized the management of Rideau Hall in the past, will be continued for the term during which he will discharge the duties of Governor-General. There should be some change made and some understanding should be arrived at, so that the people will not be called upon to bear these heavy burdens.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My hon. friend has referred to the extravagances in connection with Government House. It is but fair to say, that as regards the investigation before the Public Accounts Committee, and also from what I have learned in this House, that the occupant of Government House is not responsible for any of that extravagance, either the present Governor or his predecessor. I know there was very gross and culpable extravagance in regard to expenditure connected with Rideau Hall, some years ago. That expenditure was investigated before the Public Accounts Committee; but, in common justice, it should be stated that the extravagance consisted entirely of expenditures incurred by the Public Works Department, political extravagances. It is not fair or right to hold the Governor-General responsible, or any of his subordinates, those who are under his direct control, for any such extravagance. I remember very well it was stated that sometimes without his knowledge, and several times against his will, employees were sent down by the Public Works Department, in large numbers, to paint and repaint the walls and conservatories, thereby incurring expenditures which were not required, and for which the Governor-General did not ask, and in regard to which he was somewhat annoyed at their being made, but, of course, he could not help it. If we have gentlemen filling positions in the Public Works Department, who find it necessary, for political purposes, to employ 100 or 200 men at election times, for the purposes of obtaining votes, it is not fair to charge the occupant of Rideau Hall with that expenditure. Let us condemn our political opponents, when they go wrong. If they spend money improperly, let Parliament condemn the Government and their officers, but let us deal fairly with those who were not responsible, in any sense or way, for this extravagance.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true. I am glad my hon. friend drew the line of criticism from the occupant of Rideau Hall to the management of it. But when my hon. friend is going to hold hon. gentlemen opposite responsible for this extravagance, he should turn and take a retrospective glance at the actions of hon. gentlemen on his own side of the House, during their Administration. If the hon. gentleman takes a view of history, he will find—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was not here then.

Mr. FOSTER,—that matters have been gradually improving. They have been moving in the direction of reduced expenditure.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They were very bad during 1887, 1888 and 1889.

Mr. FOSTER. They were very bad from 1874 to 1878. I happened to see the report which the hon. gentleman holds, and I jotted down two or three comparisons which will prove interesting to members of the House. The travelling expenses of Rideau Hall commenced in 1874. From 1874 to 1878 $51,741 were spent for travelling expenses alone.

an average, in these five years, of $10,350 annually. From 1879 to 1892 there were spent $114,000 for travelling expenses during those fourteen years, an average of $8,000 annually as against $10,350 yearly during the preceding five years. From 1885 to 1892, taking a more modern period, the amount expended was $40,000, an average of $5,000 annually. That shows the real benefit we obtained from granting a stated sum for travelling expenses, $5,000 per year. In the first period, 1874 to 1878, the travelling expenses were $10,350 a year; in the period from 1879 to 1882 it was $8,000 annually, and since 1885 the arrangement has been the payment of a sum of $5,000, and the payment has been kept at that sum for travelling expenses. Suppose you take contingencies. From 1874 to 1878, $51,000 were expended, or an average of $10,300 annually; from 1885 to 1892, the amount was $53,000 or an average of $6,600, being a saving, as compared with the preceding periods of $4,000 a year. The amount expended for repairs and maintenance, from 1874 to 1878, was $149,000, an average of $29,200; from 1888 to 1892 it was $66,000, or an average of $13,200. For furniture the amount from 1874 to 1878 was $27,000 or $5,400 a year; from 1888 to 1892 it was $16,000, or an annual average of $3,200. On gardens the expenditure from 1874 to 1878 was $16,000, or $3,200 annually; from 1888 to 1892 it was $23,000 or $4,600 annually. There has been a comparative increase in the cost of the gardens annually, owing, I suppose, to the greater aesthetic taste of the present Public Works Department during the latter period, as compared with the former, due entirely to the progress of the country. Fuel and light involved an expenditure, from 1874 to 1878, of $37,000, or an average of $7,400; from 1888 to 1892 the amount was $40,000, or $8,000 annually. So that, in all respects, with the exception of gardens and fuel and light, there has been a great paring down and saving in the expenditure as compared with those of preceding years. In those two items there has been a slight increase; but all this goes to show that Rideau Hall with its expenditure and all that is incident to it is somewhat difficult to manage, and whatever party is in power they will find the expenditure will be pretty large. But I think the comparative view of it will show that there has not been a greater expenditure during late years than in former years, and that, in some particulars, it has not been so large. However, what I rose chiefly to say was that I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) that if there are extravagances at Rideau Hall, it is, in no case the fault of the incumbent. We have the expenditure in our own hands; at the same time so long as we have our Governor-General, and I hope we shall have one for a long period, and I think such will be the case, we must expect that he cannot be boarded out on Sussex street.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have no right whatever to be guided by the expenses that have been incurred in 1878. A number of members on this side of the House were not in Parliament from 1874 to 1878, and we have no right to be held responsible. All that we have to do is to criticize the present expenditure. There possibly may have been some expenditure during these years that should not have taken place, but at that time the prospects of the country were brighter than they are to-day. We should cut our cloth according to our measure, and the necessity of economizing in the public expenditure is brought more forcibly before our eyes as members of Parliament at present than it was in the years 1874 to 1878. I find, from the Auditor-General's Report, that we have some very ridiculous charges. Mr. Hutchinson, the clerk of works, gets $90 a month. We have a watchman who put in 365 days in the year, and gets $549. We have half a dozen carpenters and repairers and plasterers, and we pay a fireman for 365 days at $1.50 a day. I would like to know why it is that we should employ a fireman?

Mr. REID. Do you expect the Governor-General to shovel the coal himself?

Mr. McMULLEN. If he was as well heated as my hon. friend he would not require a fireman. Then we pay a carter for the whole year round. I wonder what that carter is doing? We supply 784 pieces of ice at 6½ cents apiece. We pay A. Ferguson, of Ottawa, legal expenses, $75. I wonder what in the world Ferguson does in the Governor-General's residence that he draws $75 for legal expenses. Then we have the care of the grounds for twelve months, $2,490. We have also petty disbursements, $40.30, repairs to pianos, $178.44, and we have any amount of Brussels carpets supplied, no less than nine different items. I contend that this shows of itself a positive evidence of extravagance in the management of Rideau Hall. It is a white elephant on our hands, and I think we had better try and make some change in the direction of economy.

Mr. MULLOCK. I was in hopes that, after having pointed out the cost of this institution, the Government would have relieved me of the necessity of making a proposition, but since they are not inclined to do so, I move that the item of $8,000 for fuel and light be struck out. I stated, at the commencement of my remarks, and I state so again, that I had not the desire to make any political capital out of the matter. I had looked through the accounts and I stated that there was nothing to the credit of the previous Administration with regard to the management of that department. I think that the Minister of Finance has not given a complete summary of the average expenditures. I have not myself analysed the return in all its details, but I think that there are many increases. However, it was his business, I suppose, to select only the items that were favourable to his contention, and it would be mine, if I choose to become an advocate in defence of previous Administrations, to see what I could find that would be an argument in their favour. But I am not dealing with it in that spirit. The country has to pay the bill, and in dealing with the future it will not help us at all to find fault with other Administrations in the past. I submit that the expenditure at the present time of $114,000 a year in connection with the office of Governor-General, is in excess of the needs of the office, and is more than the people of Canada should be called upon to pay. I say that, with all respect for the office, and I yield to no person in my respect for it, and, saying that, and believing that, and since no person representing the Government is prepared to deal with the matter, I move that the item of $8,000 for fuel and light be struck out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is an item of $15,000 for Rideau Hall. You will have to move that it be reduced by $8,000.

Mr. OUMET. There is a special allowance for fuel and light of $8,000, and that was adopted. This item is for repairs and maintenance of buildings, &c.

Mr. MULLOCK. Could the hon. gentleman say what part of that $15,000 is for labour on grounds and conservatories and so on?

Mr. OUMET. It is pretty hard to say, because the labourers also take care of the grounds. I have tried to reduce that expenditure as much as possible, but found it impossible to make more reductions.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that the care of the grounds last year cost $2,340. I think the Governor-General should take care of his own grounds, and make his own flower beds and flower gardens. I move that this sum be reduced by $3,000.

Mr. REID. It is pretty small for the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to expect the Governor-General to take care of his own grounds. I think that the fact of the hon. gentleman objecting to a Governor-General shows that he is disloyal to Canada.

Pictou Post Office— to complete. . $14,000

Mr. McMULLEN. The Government was to give some information with regard to the necessity of this vote. We have a public building in Pictou as a post office and a custom-house, and we want to know why it is thought necessary to construct another. Is it because the Minister of Marine and Fisheries happens to represent that particular county?

Mr. OUMET. We have a custom-house there now. It is situated, I understand, near the harbour, and it includes, besides the custom-house officials, the office of weights and measures, the excise office, and a kind of marine department, and it is fully occupied. The post office will be nearer the centre of the town, and the lot that has been bought is a corner lot, having sixty-eight feet frontage on Water street, the principal business street, by 158 feet on Clarence street. The present post office, I understand, is in a rented building, and it has been thought necessary, for the accommodation of the people, to provide a new post office.

Mr. FRASER. Well, the explanation is rather meagre. I do not think that it is necessary to make this expenditure in the town of Pictou, where the population is not as large as it used to be. I want to call the Minister's attention to the fact that a public building has been erected in New Glasgow, in the same county, at a cost of $40,000 or $50,000, the present public building in Pictou cost between $20,000 and $30,000 and if the proposed building is constructed, it will probably make $100,000 expended in public buildings in that county. The population of the whole county of Pictou is only double that of the county of Guysborough, and never a dollar has been expended there for a public building at all. I am a native of the county of Pictou, and live there, and I would like to see as many buildings as possible erected in it, consistent with the justice to other counties; but I do not think this is necessary. I would like to ask what the lot cost?

Mr. OUMET. $4,500.

Mr. FRASER. I venture to say there is no lot in the town of Pictou of that size that is worth the money. From whom was the lot bought?

Mr. OUMET. I have not the name.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask us to pass this vote until we know the name of the person from whom the lot was bought.

Mr. FRASER. Land, in the town of New Glasgow, is worth a good deal more than in the town of Pictou, and a larger lot, just opposite the public building there, has been purchased for about the same money. Will this $10,000 be sufficient to complete the building?

Mr. OUMET. It is put down to cost, with the site included, $23,000.

Mr. FRASER. The population of the town of Pictou is less than 3,000. According to the last census, it is now a village, although it used to be a town, and its population is decreasing.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the postal revenue there?

Mr. OUMET. $5,257.

Mr. FRASER. I want to enter my protest against this expenditure in the county of Pictou, while not one dollar has been expended for any kind of building in the county I represent, and other counties in Nova Scotia are in the same position.

Mr. McDUGALD (Pictou). I desire to say that the public building erected in the town of Pictou was erected in 1874 by the Mackenzie Administration. There is no post office in Pictou, except a building rented for the purpose. The first vote was in 1872, the expenditure was completed in 1876, and this is the report which was submitted by the Mackenzie Administration. It is dated 30th June, 1873:

A site having been determined on for this building, namely, the steam-boat landing forming the town terminus of the Pictou Extension Railway, now forming part of the Intercolonial Railway, plans were at once prepared, submitted and approved. On tenders being asked, it was found that the cost would far exceed the appropriation, the plans, therefore, had to be altered and reduced, and yet the amount of appropriation was exceeded. The amount was, in the first instance, too small to build a custom-house of the size required to accommodate the staff, and the question submitted to the department is whether the building is to be of less dimensions or the amount of appropriation extended.

Then, as to the revenue. The revenue at that time, when this report was made, of the post office at Pictou, was $3,607. The revenue last year was $5,257, an increase of nearly 50 per cent. I think, under the circumstances, the House would be justified in voting the appropriation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to quote, in reply to my hon. friend, some places in Ontario which have not yet received public post offices. Take the town of Woodstock, which has a postal revenue of $14,964, and which has no post office. Is it dealing fairly with a town like that to build a post office in a little place like Pictou, in addition to a public building which has cost $75,000? It is nothing short of a scandal. I could cite many other places in Ontario where the postal receipts are very much in excess of $5,200, and yet which have no post office. Not only that, but the population of the town of Pictou has been falling off, while these other places are increasing.

Mr. FORBES. The Minister of Public Works must have made some mistake about the cost of that land. Surely land in Pictou is not worth as much as the most desirable locations in Halifax. In South Park street, Halifax, land has been sold, within the last twelve months, at $40 per front foot, while this land in Pictou is costing $70 per front foot. I am informed there is ample room in the present public building for the post office. There are only 2,999 people in the town, and it lost 404 people since ten years ago, while the little town of Liverpool has a population of 2,465, and has gained 115 people during the last ten years, and yet the Government will not even spend $1,200 or $1,500 a year to give the latter town the necessary custom-house and post office.

Mr. McDUGALD (Pictou). I would like to read the statement made by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in 1891. The following is the debate which took place :—

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend from Pictou tried to show that it was under the Government of Mr. Mackenzie that the building in Pictou was erected.

Mr. TUPPER. So it was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was not, you are entirely in error : the vote was taken for that building in 1872.

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Mackenzie built it in 1874.

On the same occasion the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) used these words :

Mr. MILLS. I am told that in the town of Pictou there is a very large public building and that the inhabitants of that town have under serious consideration the propriety of abandoning their own houses and moving into that public building to live.

This building is quite large enough to contain the inhabitants, and the hon. gentleman can furnish them with fuel and light probably without any cost to the parties.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the hon. gentleman is treating this committee as it has a right to be treated by him. We are here as business men to discuss whether we should spend $30,000 or $40,000 in the erection of a building in the town of Pictou. If the building there now is ample for all requirements, what does it matter whether it was built under the Mackenzie or any other regime. It was built out of public money, and what we want to know is whether it is large enough for all requirements. The population of that town has gone down steadily. The building there, however, which is a large, handsome and commodious structure is, in my humble judgment, large enough to provide sufficient accommodation for the Customs, Weights and Measures and Post Office Department of such a small town. It is a little more than a village now, between 2,000 and 3,000 people, and the population is steadily decreasing, notwithstanding the fact that you run a railway there. In Charlottetown, a place of 13,000 people, we have all these offices in the one building, and it is very convenient to have them so. The Minister of Public Works ought to be able to inform the House about the accommodation existing in the town of Pictou now. And I do not think that on either side of the House there is a disposition to squander public money just at present. For my part I would like to know who this lot is to be bought from. You talk about accommodation. I only live a short distance from Pictou, and pass through it very often on my way to and from my home. The building is nearly in the centre of the town, in a good place on Water street, and in a good lot with plenty of room about it. The town is only a small town. Talk about this being in the centre, why it is only five minutes walk from one end of the town to the other. The present public building is large enough to accommodate the people of the place I should say. If not, I would like to have some report from some person in authority, pointing out that the building is already filled up, and that more room is required. I do not like to have the hon. gentleman answer that this building was put up under Mr. Mackenzie's Government or anything of that kind. The building was put up with public money. I understand the hon. gentleman to say the item can stand until we can get the information as to whom this lot is to be purchased from.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. Minister will not find another instance in all Canada in which it is proposed to erect two separate public buildings for one town of the size of Pictou, which has about 700 families, more or less. If there is any other place in which such an extravagance has been committed I would be glad to have the hon. gentleman name it. It does appear to me, as my hon. friend has said, about as imprudent a proposition as has ever been made, and it never would have been made had it not been for the fact that the town happens to be represented by a Minister and a colleague of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OUMET. I will give the information I have :

The present custom-house has four rooms on ground floor and six rooms over. The four rooms on ground floor are occupied by customs, inland revenue and shipping officials. Four rooms on upper floor are used by inland revenue, and one is used sometimes by quarantine officer, leaving only one room that might be available for other purposes. The arrangement of building would be unsuitable for post office. The position of custom-house is too far from the business part of the town. The present post office is a third of a mile from custom-house.

Here is a telegram from the post office inspector at Halifax about this building :

HALIFAX, N.S., 17th March, 1893.

Deputy-Postmaster-General.

Owing to large accumulation of Prince Edward Island mails at times and increased volume of business because of opening of short line railway, present accommodation inadequate at Pictou and building inadequate.

CHARLES J. MACDONALD.

I would like to add that $77,648 was the amount of money orders issued ; the Customs duties collected amount to $86,000 ; the excise to $14,311 ; weights and measures, $762. The value of exports was $114,332, and the imports, $438,484.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why we export more than that from one factory in our town.

Mr. FRASER. I do not know where the hon. gentleman gets his statement. I find the statement of customs duties in the returns of Trade and Navigation given at $20,000 for Pictou, and $65,000 for New Glasgow; and one room in the public building at New Glasgow served for all that business. The public building in New Glasgow is not much larger than the one in Pictou, and the lower part is used for the post office and the upper floor is used, one room for the collector of customs, and he collects three times as much revenue as the collector in Pictou. And the Dominion Savings Bank is in the same building. I cannot understand how these four rooms are required in the public building of Pictou for customs collection.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). Hon. gentlemen should remember that Pictou is the centre port of the district, and that the business of the district has to be done at Pictou. I know very well that a larger revenue is collected at New Glasgow, but it is only a sub-port. To supplement the statement of the Minister of Public Works I desire to call attention to this report written by Mr. Mackenzie and presented to the House. This referred to the appropriation for this building in Pictou at the time when it was proposed.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the date of that report?

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). The 30th of June, 1873, presented by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Mackenzie was not in office then.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). It was presented in 1874.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. junior member from Pictou (Mr. McDougald) knows that in 1873 Pictou was a thriving town and promised to grow more and more every year. Since that time New Glasgow has sprung up at some distance. We all regret the fact, but it is the fact, that Pictou is a decaying town. You have spent an enormous amount of public money building a new railway into it, but it has done no good. You cannot revive it. The hon. gentleman talks about a paltry $20,000 collected and of the necessity for more room. What is the size of these rooms? To talk about four rooms for the accommodation of a couple of customs officers collecting $20,000 is perfectly ridiculous. The upstairs part of the building can be utilized for customs and inland revenue, as is done in Charlottetown, with the post office and savings bank down stairs. It is simply too bad to have this $30,000 spent in this way.

Mr. FORBES. The junior member for Pictou claims that Pictou is entitled to have this large expenditure because the public building there does not give sufficient room and is unfavourably located. For the interest on the money he could hire five letter-carriers for the town of Pictou at the highest salary paid to the most efficient letter-carriers and could have a free delivery of mails to the citizens, and he would still have the capital left. If he took simply $5,000 he could hire two letter-carriers and have his post office at the head of the steam-boat wharf if he wanted to, with better accommodation for the people of Pictou county.

An hon. MEMBER. And open the mails on the wharf?

Mr. FORBES. Yes. And he could carry on the distribution from there and lay the mails on the people's breakfast tables and on their luncheon tables and on their dinner tables if he chose. As a Nova Scotian I do not depreciate the expenditure of public moneys, if done in a business like way. But much more good could be got out of this sum than under the system pursued by the present Government. In the county of Pictou alone, I understand, over $100,000 is being expended for public buildings. Now, it is nonsense for the junior member for Pictou to try and justify this transaction on the grounds he has given. We all know that a public building is there, it was put up by the Mackenzie Administration, and was intended to meet all the requirements. There can be no reason that I can see why this additional expense should be made at the present time. It cannot be justified from the amounts of customs revenue and postal revenue. I can name half a dozen towns in Nova Scotia whose exports are far in excess of those of the town of Pictou; we have shipping ports returning a revenue two or three times as large, and with no better public buildings. I do not mean factiously to oppose any necessary expenditure of public money, but I think it should be done with proper care, and only when there is a public need for it. Under the circumstances, I would suggest to the Minister to let this item stand.

Mr. OUMET. The hon. member for Guysboro' stated that the receipts from customs were only $20,000. The figures I have in my book, taken from the Auditor-General's Report, at page F-12—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) For the county of Pictou. Turn to the Trade and Navigation Report, page 531, and you will find $20,567.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would the Minister of Public Works give us an idea of the cost of those two railways that were built to Pictou? The village has fallen away in population, and still it must have these two railways. It does seem extraordinary that the Government are obliged to cower down to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the High Commissioner, and build a post office where a post office is not needed. Are they afraid to go against their masters? Is it necessary for the existence of the Government to build a public building where none is required, to build railways where none are required? A blight seems to be on the whole place ever since they began to debauch people with the people's money. The place has gone down, the population has diminished, and still you propose to build another building where it is not needed. It is indeed, it is one of the most outrageous things that has ever been put into the Estimates.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We want to get the name of the party. Is it the Arnison Estate, or is there any man living there now of that name?

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). I do not know that the lot has been bought yet. It is offered by the Arnison estate. The estate is represented by Mr. Harris.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is evidently better posted than the Minister of Public Works. The lot is not yet bought at all. Now is the time to stop. If it is proposed to pay $4,500 for this lot, which is evidently far in excess of its value, we had better not purchase it. We had better advise the people of Pictou to put up with their present accommodation. It is evident that their present building is quite sufficient for the accommodation of the town of Pictou. I think the Minister had better drop the item, and reconsider the whole question of the construction of another public building there.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Would it not be desirable in the public interest to have a further examination and report upon the accommodation which the present building can be made to afford? I suppose no one wants to go to this large expenditure if the existing building is sufficient, and I believe it is.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble, I suppose, is not with the present building, but with the position of the building, as being inconvenient for the public.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You can walk from the present building into almost any part of the business portion of the town, within two and a half minutes. I do not know where you could place the building in a better position. It is right at the head of the wharf, alongside the railway station, and I am sure you can walk in three minutes into almost any shop in Pictou. In Charlottetown, where $150,000 is collected in Customs, there is only one large room for all the offices, and a private room for the chief man.

Mr. LAURIER. I would not be disposed, under ordinary circumstances, to examine into such an item too critically. But we have adopted a rule some years ago with regard to these public buildings, and if we apply that rule to this item, it cannot be defended upon any ground whatever. Here is a town of 3,000 souls, affording a customs revenue of $20,000, a postal revenue of $5,000, and an inland revenue of $700. Now, this town is already supplied with a public building. Are you to lay down the precedent to-day—because this will be construed as a precedent—that a town of this size, and returning this revenue, which has already a public building quite sufficient for its purposes, is to be supplied with a second building? No reason whatever has been given to justify the proposition, and I say that in face of the country to which the Government is responsible, and to which Parliament is responsible, this item cannot be justified.

Mr. MULLOCK. Surely the Minister of Public Works is not going back on his pledge given only a couple of meetings ago, when he defended a couple of old propositions, simply on the ground that they began before he took office. He told the committee that under other circumstances he would not have recommended them, and in fact promised that he would be himself a good boy. Here we find that the scheme has not yet been entered upon, there has been no land purchased. When the Minister invited our attention to the matter at an earlier stage, he gave me the impression that the land was purchased. Might I ask him, Does he agree with the member for Pictou that the land has not yet been purchased?

Mr. OUMET. I read from my book that the amount put down for the site was $4,300. I did not say whether the site had been bought or not.

Mr. MULLOCK. Then if the land is not purchased, and everything is in the future, we are free to go on or not. Therefore, if the Minister wishes the House and the country to rely upon his pledge, here is an opportunity for him to make it good.

Mr. OUMET. It is not my promise. The vote was taken for the first time three years ago.

Mr. MULLOCK. Nothing has been done.

Mr. OUMET. The House has decided it.

Mr. MULLOCK. The House is seized of the matter now. Nothing has been taken out of the people's pocket so far, although it is now proposed to make a raid. Will the Minister give the committee a statement showing the space in the public building at Pictou, the areas of the various rooms.

Mr. OUMET. I cannot give them.

Mr. MULLOCK. Then it is quite impossible to decide whether the present building is adequate or not.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). The late Mr. Mackenzie said it was not, and that was twenty years ago.

Mr. FRASER. The statement Mr. Mackenzie made was that the size of the building for the various purposes contemplated was not sufficient.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). That is the size now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The revenue has decreased very much.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The statement of Mr. Mackenzie was not a statement that there was not sufficient accommodation for postal purposes. It had reference to the building in which customs were being collected, to the old building that was used as a custom-house, which, he said, was not adequate, and that a new building would be erected.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This building was not in existence, when the statement was made.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). It was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Mackenzie was asking a vote for it.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). It was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken; he is speaking of the old building.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). I read from a report, preparatory to constructing the building.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The appropriation was for the construction of a building for customs, not for the construction of a post office.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This was for accommodating both customs and post office.

Mr. KENNY. I do not pretend to have a very intimate knowledge of this matter, but a statement was made by Mr. Mackenzie, in regard to this building, in which it was stated that there was not room for a customs-house.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In which building?

Mr. KENNY. In the present post office.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was not built.

Mr. KENNY. If there had been room in that building for a post office, a practical man like Mr. Mackenzie would have put the post office there. Mr. Mackenzie stated that there was not room in the building even for the custom-house. It was not a proposed building to which he was referring. I understand this is simply a revote, and the objection is taken to it on the ground that the title has not yet passed, although all the other arrangements have been completed. The hon. member for Guysborough may know in regard to this matter.

Mr. FRASER. I understood the junior member for Pictou to say that the department had an offer from the Arnison estate.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). The title has not passed.

Mr. MULLOCK. Is the present site reasonably convenient for public purposes?

Mr. KENNY. I do not know enough of Pictou to venture an opinion on the subject.

Mr. FORBES. Let the matter stand over until the French treaty is confirmed, because the Ministry may resign in the meantime.

Mr. MULLOCK. Will the junior member for Pictou state whether the present site is inconvenient for the public?

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). It will not be acceptable and is not suitable for the purpose for which it is required.

Mr. MULLOCK. In what respect is it inconvenient? It has been stated that it is within two or three minutes' walk of the leading business places of Pictou. Is that correct?

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). The lot is not in a convenient place and is not suitable for a post office.

Mr. MULLOCK. The hon. member for Queen's has stated that the present building is within three minutes' walk of the business part of Pictou. Is that statement correct?

Mr. McDOUGALD. Why do you doubt it?

Mr. MULLOCK. I ask the junior member for Pictou, whether he concurs with the hon. member for Queen's on that point?

Mr. FLINT. The committee has not the information before it to enable it to pass judgment on this question. If there is not sufficient room in the present building, are there no means by which, at a very moderate expense, additional accommodation could be had for post office service? In Yarmouth, which is more than twice the size of Pictou, and which is a growing town, the public offices are accommodated in one building. The revenue of Yarmouth is $125,000, while the revenue collected at Pictou is $27,000. If full information was given to the committee, hon. members would be reluctant to vote an additional sum for the building in Pictou, which has a population less than 3,000. I quite understand that at election times the charge will be made that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have acted unfairly in opposing this grant. Of course we know very well that if we had an overflowing treasury nothing would give hon. gentlemen on this side of the House greater pleasure than to second members of the Government in making handsome appropriations for buildings from one end of the Dominion to the other. But when we look at the condition of affairs, and compare the circumstances of this town with large communities scattered all over the Dominion, collecting five times as much revenue, we have their requests for public buildings persistently refused by the Government, mainly upon the ground that they do not return supporters of the Government here; then we are right in insisting upon exact justice being meted out, and that some intelligent principle should be adopted in this matter. We are really the friends of the Government in advising them not to make these grants on political grounds. I think the vote in the present instance indefensible, and I think the town of Pictou would be well satisfied with some small addition to the present building for necessary post office accommodation.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A good deal has been said about the time that this appropriation was first made. I find that in 1872-73 an item of $12,000 was put in the Estimates; but in 1873-74 it was reduced to $10,000, and Mr. Mackenzie was simply carrying out what was done when he came into power.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to put it to the leader of the House, whether he thinks that this is fairly carrying out the proposition upon which we agreed three years ago: that expenditure should be made only in these places where the revenue warranted it. My friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) states that the present public building in this town is adequate, not only for a custom-house and inland revenue office, but also for a post office as well. Why then should there be this large expenditure which will entail other annual charges? Hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, as well as gentlemen on this side of the House, profess to be anxious to adopt a policy of economy. How can you economize if you make large expenditures on public buildings that necessarily entail large additional annual charges to keep them in repair, and to light and heat them? I am perfectly sure there are scores of places in the province of Ontario, and I dare say in the other provinces, where there is a greater necessity for expenditure on public buildings than there is at Pictou. It does seem to me that the Government would be acting, not only in the public interest but in their own interest, if they were not to press this appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has directed some of his remarks to me with reference to this matter. One thing that may be remembered with reference to this vote is, that it does not appear for the first time in these Estimates. The first vote was made three years ago, and a promise was held out to the people that a post office would be erected. That is, say what you like about it, a tacit pledge, and it is something that the Government feels bound to carry out as far as the Government consistently can. I have no doubt about it, that although the town is not a large one, that the position of the custom-house is not convenient for a post office. The people have had their post office in a different place, and one which suits them better. Taking these two things into consideration, and the fact that the vote asked for is not large, the whole expenditure would not be more than $20,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Minister of Public Works says $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. $20,000 is the amount voted, and I think the Minister is prepared to finish the building for that.

Mr. MULLOCK. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that he had not the same regard for an old vote a short time ago. He will remember having moved to strike out the revote for Cobourg harbour in 1891.

Mr. FOSTER. Cobourg harbour was built.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

Mr. MULLOCK. But Cobourg harbour had to be dredged, and I remember the hon. gentleman moving to strike out the item.

Mr. FORBES. I know of two similar cases. One for improving the harbour at Liverpool, and one for a post office at Kentville.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not wish to revive a discussion which took place a short time ago, but really after the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance the Government can possibly have no excuse whatever for refusing to restore to the Estimates the vote which was made for post office in the town of Kentville in 1886, and which was allowed to lapse. The leader of the House has stated here that from the fact that this vote has been in the Estimates since 1889, the faith of Parliament was pledged to the people of Pictou, that the building should be constructed. Now, I want to understand from the leader of the House upon what principle he proposes to carry out the pledge of Parliament to the county of Pictou and to refuse the pledge of Parliament made in precisely the same way to the town of Kentville. I would like him to state this, so that we may understand at once where he finds the distinction between these two places.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has answered himself. Once an item drops out of the Estimates it is very difficult to get it back again. This item has not been allowed to drop out, and the contention on this side is that we should keep it here, because once it goes it will be difficult to get it back again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is to say, once you have broken your word, it is broken.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is a case where I think we should draw the line and give effect to the resolution introduced in the previous session by the hon. member for Bothwell. This town is not entitled to the building proposed, when there are so many other places in the Dominion much more entitled to public buildings, and when such large amounts of money have already been expended in the county of Pictou in building railways, harbour improvements and public buildings. I think we should drop the item.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS—PRECEDENCE.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That when the House adjourns on Friday next, it stand adjourned until Saturday following at 3 o'clock, and that Government orders have precedence on that day.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 24th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 112) respecting the inspection of petroleum.—(Mr. Wood, Brockville.)

LAND IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. FOSTER (for Mr. Daly) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 113) to consolidate and amend the Act respecting land in the Territories.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman please explain?

Mr. FOSTER. I move that in the absence of my colleague simply to get ahead one stage. It is a Bill, I think, which he does not intend to press through this session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

House resumed consideration of Bill (No. 43) to amend the Criminal Code of 1892.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the third reading of the Bill is proceeded with, I desire to call the attention of the Solicitor-General and the House to clause 729 of the Criminal Code, which is as follows:—

The taking of the verdict of the jury, or other proceedings of the court shall not be invalid by reason of its happening on Sunday.

Now, this is subversive of our usual practice in judicial matters, that process shall not be served on Sunday, that a trial shall not be held on Sunday and that legal proceedings shall not be taken on Sunday. This would permit the rendering of a verdict, the filling of a court-house with spectators, an ovation, if necessary, to a person acquitted, and is quite inconsistent in very many ways besides these I have indicated with the usual law and custom and practice in the Dominion of Canada; and I move that this section be repealed, so that no provision shall be allowed in the Criminal Act to permit the rendering of a verdict on Sunday.

Mr. CURRAN. With reference to this section, I desire to say that it was fully considered by the joint committee of both Houses before being adopted by Parliament. The hon. gentleman seems to consider that it is the intention to some extent to hold court on Sunday. Now, any one who is acquainted with the proceedings in law courts must be aware of this fact, that a case may be on a point of being finished as the week closes. The only meaning to be attached to the clause is that the jury might render their verdict say at half-past twelve or one o'clock on Sunday morning and not be locked up all day Sunday and thus entail loss and trouble and great inconvenience. I do not think the conscience of any person in the Dominion of Canada will be shocked because the law makes it competent to take a verdict shortly after midnight on Sunday morning. That is the only meaning that can be attached to this section, and I do not think the objections entered by my hon. friend apply, nor do the other objections, which, he says, are still more numerous, but which he has not specified. I think the sense of the House will be that the law should not be disturbed, as it now stands.

Mr. LAURIER. I may say to the Solicitor-General that the views that have been expressed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) have the concurrence of one of the most eminent judges of the land. The objection is not so much because of the propriety that may result, but of the excessive propriety which sometimes may be the result. Suppose, for instance, there is a case of a political nature before the court, and the jury has been locked up for one or two days. In the meantime a crowd of perhaps thousands of people may be standing about the court-house waiting for a verdict. After the jury have been locked up for some time, they send word that they will be ready to give their verdict at ten o'clock on Sunday morning. At that hour a great crowd of people will, perhaps, be assembled about the court-house, waiting for the verdict, and whatever the verdict be, whether an acquittal or a conviction, it is sure to be received by a great many excited persons with demonstrations, which might easily lead to a disturbance. This is not my own view, but it is that of a very eminent authority, recognized by all as one of the most eminent judges in the land. These views are pregnant with meaning, and I believe, also, with common sense. First of all, I think it is an objectionable proposition that the court-house should be liable to be opened on Sunday. There may be some inconvenience to the jury in being detained for a longer time, who may be anxious to get away and resume their occupations. That is one consideration; but, at all events, there is another consideration, that the public at large would be much inconvenienced and liable to disturbance from the fact of the court-house being opened, and the verdict being given on Sunday; and these circumstances would lead to the desecration of that day.

Mr. CURRAN. As for myself I agree entirely with the remarks of the leader of the Opposition. We are all of the same mind with regard to the sanctity of the Lord's Day. I think, however, the objections that have been raised are not likely to be realized as regards trials of a political nature or otherwise. The only idea, I think, that actuated the joint committee of both Houses when they passed this section of the code, was that of securing the greater good to the greater number. However, after consulting the leader of the House, as no great inconvenience can result one way or the other, the Government will allow this motion, as amended, to be carried, if it be the desire of the majority.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before that motion is carried, I think it would be well for the committee to consider what they are doing. Every one knows that under the law as it now stands, a jury which is once empannelled on a charge of felony, cannot be discharged until a verdict is reached. Now, we have to consider that everything ought to be done to allow the jury full time to deliberate and come to a final conclusion. It frequently happens that a jury is sent up to their room on Saturday evening at six or seven o'clock. This section is simply a permissive section, it can only operate in rare and exceptional cases, and may not operate at all unless with the sanction of the presiding judge. You insist by this proposition to repeal the section that the jury must either come to a hasty verdict and render it before twelve o'clock, or they shall be locked up for twenty-four hours longer. You may say that is a matter of inconvenience to the jury, which may happen but rarely, that the jury will seldom be called upon to ask that this section shall be brought into operation. If the jury is sent up by seven o'clock, by one or two o'clock on Sunday morning they might agree upon a verdict, but the judge is not bound to open the court on Sunday. I presume, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, most judges would not open a court on Sunday, at any rate during divine service. But if the jury had agreed to a verdict by one o'clock, the judge might open the court then and receive the verdict, or even early on Sunday morning. You must remember that as the law now stands the judge is not bound to open the court. The section merely says that the verdict shall not be invalid by reason of its being received on Sunday morning. I think, when you come to balance the advantages on both sides, the rare occasions on which this will ever be exercised, the infinitesimal chances there are of the public peace being endangered or being interfered with, and, on the other hand, the desire of those who want to see Sunday properly observed, I think you will find that the advantages are in favour of leaving the section as it is. I am as strongly in favour of Sunday observance as any man in this House; I do not want to see the Sabbath interfered with in any way at all; at the same time, I plead for common sense, and, in a matter of this kind, where the jury is empannelled and sent up at eight o'clock, you compel them either to bring in a verdict before twelve and refuse to give them time for deliberation, or they are told that they shall be imprisoned for twenty-four hours longer. It seems to me the matter is not all on one side. I know judges can suggest possibilities that there may be an election trial, and the jury may bring in a verdict on Sunday, but the judge is not bound, if there is a great deal of excitement, to open the court at all.

Mr. CURRAN. He won't do it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He won't do it if the public interests are going to be endangered. But in the thousand and one cases where no political interests are involved, where a serious murder trial, perhaps, is given in charge of a jury, and they want a few hours more to deliberate, you are forcing them either to come to a hasty conclusion, or be locked up for twenty-four hours.

Mr. McMULLEN. The remarks of the hon. member for Queen's would apply if the clause stopped at taking the verdict of the jury. That is not the clause at all. The clause is touching the verdict of the jury, or other proceedings of the court. If the clause was what was outlined by the hon. gentleman, no person would raise any particular objection; but taking other proceedings on Sunday is a circumstance that is objectionable, and I cannot understand how it escaped the eye of the committee of this House and of the Senate. While I admit that there are few judges who would desire to hold court on Sunday, still that portion of the clause permits them to do so, if they please, and while our judges are very respectable men, still there might be cases in which they might be disposed, in order to promote the personal convenience of individuals attending the court, to sit on Sunday, if they had not disposed of the business on Saturday. I am willing that the clause should remain so far as regards cases of jurors being empannelled on Saturday, that it should be within the power of the judge to accept the verdict on Sunday, if he considered it necessary to do so. But to leave the judge power to conduct the proceedings of the court on Sunday is a provision to which I decidedly object.

Mr. CHARLTON. I object to any judicial proceeding whatever being conducted on the Lord's Day, whether it is the proceedings of the court or the receiving of a jury's verdict.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose there were twelve fathers of families on the jury who desired to attend divine service on Sunday. Do you mean that you would absolutely prevent them from attending worship at their churches?

Mr. CHARLTON. The case suggested by my hon. friend may occur, or it may not. A jury receiving a case on Saturday night consider it with the view before them that they might arrive at a verdict without infringing the sanctity of the Sabbath. Even if the difficulty and hardship were as pointed out by my hon. friend, and even if the twelve men arrived at a verdict in the early hour of Sunday morning and were compelled to remain in the jury room all day, it would be better to subject them to that inconvenience than to be guilty of an action that was a public desecration of a day which the Christian public respect. You have to draw the line somewhere, and you must either respect the sanctity of the Sabbath or you must take down the bars. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says we may give discretion to the judges, and assume that this proceeding will not be followed in all cases. We may give permission to this extent at this time; but it must be remembered that judges who may not have very much regard for the Sabbath may take advantage of this provision and take other judicial proceedings than those contemplated. There is no safe course except that of sailing up to the line. If we lay down the rule that juries can render decisions and judicial proceedings can be continued on the Lord's Day, the worst consequences will follow. We cannot surrender the principle of Sabbath observance, even if it works inconvenience to individuals. I do not think the arguments in favour of a modification of the principle, that there should be no judicial proceedings conducted on the Lord's Day, are sound and effective. If we are going to have the Lord's Day respected, and if our courts are to abstain from judicial proceedings on that day, it is necessary to do so entirely.

Mr. TISDALE. I quite agree with the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that if there is any doubt in regard to this clause, that if it imposes anything more than necessary proceedings, such as receiving and dealing with the verdicts of juries, it should be amended. But as I read the word "proceedings," it is inserted with a view to indicating such proceeding as may be necessary to receive and deal with the verdicts on that day. I am in favour of Sabbath observance, and on this very ground oppose the change he suggests. I look upon the question, however, from a somewhat different stand-point from the hon. member for North Norfolk. I look upon the law as it stands in this Bill as being in accordance with the broad principles of Christianity and the better observance of the Sabbath, and I hold that to shut up twelve men in a room and compel them to be separated from their families during the Lord's Day, because they are unable to agree upon a verdict before midnight on Saturday night, would be a greater breach of the proper advance of the Sabbath than if they were able to submit a decision to a judge on Sunday, who would be able to consider under all the circumstances of the particular case, whether he would receive it on that day. I may say further that I consider it a reflection on the judges of Ontario to suggest any improper use to be made of this provision. I have yet to learn that in my province there is one judge on the bench, either in the Superior courts or county courts, who the people of Ontario would believe would fail to carry out such a law in a Christian spirit and in a Christian manner. I wish to emphasize what the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) said, that it is unfair and an undue interference with the conscience to compel men who are in the jury-box to agree by a certain hour, failing which, by even one minute, they must remain shut up twenty-four hours. I desire to look at this question from a Christian stand-point, and from the stand-point of jurors. I protest against the observance of the Sabbath as defined by the hon. member for North Norfolk, and contend that the proper observance of the Sabbath as provided by the great book and divine law, under which we believe in the Sabbath at all, is one under which some allowance is made for works of necessity, and its observance is a duty which a man owes to the well-being of society and for the perpetuation of divine and sacred truth. Any other view is contrary to the advanced sentiment of Christianity in any free country, and it is contrary to the Christian view of the Sabbath in these days. I protest on these lines in the hon. gentleman's amendment to what is a reasonable proposition under the circumstances.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The hon. gentleman seems to forget that works of charity and necessity are allowed to be performed on the Sabbath. Even under the Jewish dispensation, it was permitted to rescue a poor man's ox or his ass. That being the case, I cannot see why an unfortunate jurymen should not be discharged after he had rendered his verdict.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not regard the proposed amendment in any other light than in one of common sense. I heartily concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). The proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk is to repeal the section, which reads: "The taking of the verdict of the jury or other proceeding of the court shall not become invalid by reason of its happening on Sunday." That does not contemplate the originating of any proceeding of a legal nature on the Sabbath. The whole spirit of that clause is the concluding of a proceeding which began before the Sabbath.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does it not permit the continuance of proceedings?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes; and finishing them, I grant; but it would not justify any judge, and, in fact, it would be a scandal, in continuing the proceedings any length. In my opinion this section is very necessary, even from the extreme stand-point of Sabbath observance as viewed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). We need not be so very much better than the people in England. A similar provision was enacted in England in 1880. Speaking for myself, I think it would be most inconvenient to deprive the courts of the opportunity to close their proceedings a few hours, or a few minutes even, after the Sabbath had commenced. To keep men in custody all over the Sabbath until Monday morning, when the verdict arrived at within one hour or so after Sunday commenced, might be submitted to the courts, is, to my mind, ridiculous; and while I fully believe in the proper observance of the Sabbath, I do not believe in carrying it to such an extreme limit as does the hon. member for North Norfolk.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see any violation of the Lord's Day in the law as it stands now. It seems to me that the provision of the law is reasonable. The law does not intend that a court shall continue to sit and carry on the conduct of a case on Sunday. However, if a jury, trying a case on Saturday are sent out for purposes of deliberation, and do not succeed in coming to a conclusion until after twelve o'clock on Saturday night, they are to be at liberty to come into the court after twelve o'clock and state the conclusion at which they have arrived. I fail to see any difference between a jury being allowed to come into court, and a jury being locked up and compelled to continue their deliberations, so far as regards the observance of the Sabbath. It seems to me you are violating the Sabbath in that sense in the one case as much as in the other. But, Sir, I supposed our legislation with regard to Sunday was purely police legislation. I never supposed for one moment that Parliament assumed that it could compel a community to keep the Lord's Day as the Lord himself intended that it should be kept. I do not know how that is to be accomplished by an Act of Parliament. I suppose that the keeping of the Lord's Day is an individual act on the part of every one, and that our legislation went only to the extent of compelling people to conduct themselves decently and with proper decorum on the Lord's Day, and not to offend against the moral sense of their fellow-members of the community. I remember very well that it was said, that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, and that it was lawful to take a beast out of the ditch on a Sunday, and I supposed it was lawful, if a person was sick, to send for a doctor on Sunday. I want to know whether it would not be as much relief to a man's wife or his children, to have it announced that he is not guilty of an offence of which he is charged, after 12 o'clock on Saturday night, as to have a doctor come and say that the sick man's case is not a hopeless one? Is there not as much mental anxiety connected with one case as with the other? It does seem to me that in this we are acting strictly in conformity with Christian principles, and we are doing no violation to the Sabbath day in the sense in which one understands that day shall be kept, in permitting a jury that has retired,—when it has so happened, they have not agreed when the clock points to 12,—to come back to court and to say, that they have come to a conclusion in the case over which they have been deliberating. Why, Sir, we might in time to come, consider the question as to the hour at which the Lord's Day is to begin. I know that throughout the whole history of the Jewish community the day commences in the evening at 6 o'clock, and not at 12 o'clock. We have assumed, and I think rationally enough, that it is no great difference as to the particular hour at which the day shall begin, so long as we adopt a uniform time, and it does seem to me that we are doing no violation to any Christian principle, nor are we doing any violation to the best interests of the community, to permit a jury who have been deliberating on Saturday, and have not succeeded in agreeing before 12 o'clock that night, to come in and say: That the party on whose case they have been deliberating is not guilty of the crime of which he is charged, and to permit the party to go free from jail, and the jury-men to return to their homes, and to worship in the ordinary way; instead of compelling them to be locked up as prisoners for 24 hours.

Mr. CURRAN. I am very glad that this discussion has occurred. I think my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition did not express himself as being particularly favourable to the repeal of this law. As I understand, he merely stated what views had been urged against the change.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRAN. The question is one for the determination of this committee as a whole. At the time this law was discussed by the joint committee, there was no ground urged more strongly than that put by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) to-day, with reference to the fact that a jury, knowing they were going to be locked up until Monday morning, might come to a conclusion so as to do a grave injustice to a prisoner, when, if they had an hour more to consider it, the issue might be decided favourably to him. If they wanted to get rid of the case, and go home before 12 o'clock at night, as they naturally would, the prisoner might suffer very grave injustice. In my own experience not very long ago, the jury not wishing to be locked up all night on a week day, came to what I believe was a hasty conclusion, and, because they wanted to go home, convicted a man who, in my opinion, should not have been found guilty. We certainly might have a grave injustice perpetrated, if this law is not allowed to remain. The other proceedings of the court may be perhaps the pronouncing of judgment and rendering proceedings. I would ask, would it be right that the judge should be prevented from pronouncing judgment and returning to his home, should he be on circuit? It is not a matter of any desecration of the Sabbath that I can see, and in view of all that has been said, I sincerely trust that we shall make as few amendments to this code as possible.

Mr. LAURIER. It should be abolished altogether.

Mr. CURRAN. Indeed. The hon. gentleman did not say so when it was passed.

Mr. LAURIER. I said so last year.

Mr. CURRAN. I am under the impression that my hon. friend, no more than myself, has had much time to look into it since it was passed.

Mr. MULOCK. Nor while it was passing.

Mr. CURRAN. I claim to have followed the committee day after day. My hon. friend did so for a week or two and then he abandoned us.

Mr. MULOCK. Because I found you were not open to reason.

Mr. CURRAN. At all events, I think the sense of this committee ought to be, to allow the clause to remain as it is.

Mr. MULOCK. The Solicitor-General says that if this law is repealed it is going to injure the liberty of the subject and to open the door to grave abuses. He might remember that the clause we are talking of repealing has not come into force yet, and that these grave abuses are therefore happening all along. The law has been such as it is now ever since British justice has been administered, and even in that country known to my hon. friend where there is always a packed jury and a prejudiced judge to send prisoners to British dungeons. Since we have had British justice this has been the law, and it is the law to-day; and the serious consequences that are going to happen without this provision have not happened up to the present moment. Now, if this is going to be the law, Sunday will be added to week days at every assize court where a felony is to be tried. If the matter is to be left to the discretion of the presiding judge for the time being, the judge will say: The Legislature decided so and so; I read the words of wisdom of the Solicitor-General and the hon. member for South Norfolk, and they told us that twelve jurymen were not to be deprived of their liberties on the Sabbath day, and the law was changed, and the mandate given to the jury to exercise their rights. So the judge will exercise his option, and will summon the court on Sunday. What will follow? There are always a number of court followers who frequent courts: the officials, the witnesses, the jury, the press, the whole public, will be in attendance on that day. Now, up to this moment no evil has arisen warranting this departure. The hon. Solicitor-General says that this Act has been well considered in committee. It is quite true that I did not attend that committee for a week or two; but I am not aware that my attendance would have been of any great value had I continued to attend to the end. But I told the committee that I withdrew because I found that there was no disposition on the part of the committee to give that fair consideration to various clauses which I thought they ought to receive. What has happened since has, I think, justified my withdrawal, because a great many clauses had to be materially modified or dropped when the Bill came to the House. I am not aware that this one received any attention. It was towards the close of the Bill, and I doubt if there was a word of discussion upon it in the Committee of the whole House. So that now for the first time this clause is being considered; and inasmuch as there has been no public demand for it, I think we had better consider it as never having passed; and if grievances should arise at any time under the existing law, it will be time enough for us to deal with them when they do arise.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 24; nays, 57.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg to move that the section be amended by striking out all the words from the word "or" in the first line to the word "court" in the second line, inclusive. The clause will then read as follows:—

The taking of the verdict shall not be invalid by reason of its happening on Sunday.

I think we should amend the clause so as to make it clear that the proceedings of the court cannot be proceeded with on Sunday. By this amendment we shall enable the jury to render their verdict and be dismissed, but no other proceedings be taken. I think we should preserve the sacredness of the Lord's Day at least to this extent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the clause can be amended in that direction. Suppose a verdict were brought in at ten minutes past twelve on Saturday night acquitting a man who had been in prison for six months. Surely the hon. gentleman would allow the judge to act upon the verdict and discharge that man from custody. I take it that the meaning of the section is that proceedings may not originate on Sunday, but the verdict may be recorded, and the proceedings consequent upon the verdict may take place.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that the amendment should carry if we wish to bar the door against indiscriminate proceedings of a court. As the section stands, there is nothing to prevent a judge proceeding with a trial on the Lord's Day. There is nothing to prevent proceedings being instituted on that day. Therefore, I hold that the striking out of these words is necessary. The whole clause should be dropped, but, to minimize the evil, I think we should permit nothing more than the recording of the verdict of the jury. Even if a man should have to remain in custody for a few hours longer, that would be a smaller evil than the evil of disregarding the Lord's Day. It has been said that the state has nothing to do with the Lord's Day, that it cannot make men religious. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) takes that ground. But the state is not warranted in perpetrating any irreligious act itself. It is under the same divine law as the individual is, and it must not violate divine law. There is an old adage in the Scriptures which says: "By me kings reign and princes decree justice;" and Paul says that the powers that be are ordained of God.

An hon. MEMBER. Amen.

Mr. CHARLTON. Some one says "Amen." The Bible is always a subject of ridicule in this House, I know, but whether it is or not, I repeat that the state has no right to violate divine law. I repeat that the state has no right by its Act to desecrate the Sabbath, that this 729th clause of the Criminal Act is such a desecration of the Sabbath that it is inconsistent with the character of a Christian nation, that the motion to expunge that clause should receive the support of every member of this House, and that it is a disgrace to this House that this clause should be allowed to remain in the Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. And it has been pointed out that we have all along in our civil and criminal jurisprudence, since the Dominion has existed, done without that clause, and have never felt the necessity for it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, we have.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is no necessity for it. There is no demand for it, it is put in without proper demand, and now that the matter is brought to the attention of the House, this clause should be dropped, so that this Dominion shall not, as a Dominion, violate God's law and discredit the Sabbath. It is a very sad commentary on the state of religious sentiment in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, hon. members may laugh and jeer, but we profess to be a Christian nation. The United Kingdom has had Sabbath observance laws on the Statute-books for more than a thousand years; and there is not a colony, I believe, which has sprung from the loins of the mother country except the Dominion, which would not treat respectfully a proposition to observe God's laws. It has not been treated respectfully in this House to-day or during this session, and I say that clause ought to be withdrawn, and if you will not drop the whole of it, at least drop that portion which will permit proceedings on the Lord's day.

Amendment negatived, and Bill reported.

Mr. CURRAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think there is a rule that when a Bill is amended in committee, it should not receive its final reading at the same sitting.

Mr. CURRAN. There has been no amendment at this sitting. At the suggestion of the hon. gentleman opposite we left the third reading over until to-day.

Mr. McMULLEN. We want it left over until Monday.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule of the House is that every Bill shall receive its three several readings on different days previous to its being passed, but that on extreme occasions it may be read twice or thrice, or advanced two or more stages in the one day. It is for the House to say whether the Bill shall be read the third time now or not.

Mr. LAURIER. I can see no objection to the Bill being read a third time to-day.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 99) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman explain what is the reason of this Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. There are debentures now running which will mature in 1894, to the amount of about $321,000, and which are bearing 6½ per cent interest. It is simply to give the commissioners power to borrow money to meet those debentures.

Mr. LAURIER. Have they not got the power under the Act?

Mr. FOSTER. They have not.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

WORLD'S FAIR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the House resolve itself into committee to consider a resolution declaring it expedient to provide for the payment to two commissioners to represent Canada at the World's Columbian Exposition, to be held at Chicago in 1893, of such sums for their services as are determined by the Governor in Council.

Mr. LAURIER. I would expect some explanation from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. In the carrying on of the exposition at Chicago, two things must be considered. There is the management of it from a business point of view, and then there is the representation at that exposition of almost all countries of the world by distinguished personages, named as commissioners; and at present it will be impossible for the Government to appoint a member of the House of Commons or the Senate as honorary commissioner. It is proposed to take away that disability, and allow the Government to appoint a member of the Senate or House of Commons to represent it in the capacity of representative of the Dominion.

Mr. LAURIER. You have already got commissioners who are in charge of organizing the exposition?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. It is proposed now to appoint two honorary commissioners?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. I would see no objection to appointing honorary commissioners, but does not the hon. gentleman believe that it is a misnomer or contradiction in terms to appoint "honorary" commissioners and give them emolument?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not in the Bill or resolution call them "honorary." I used that term in explanation. They are not so much to carry on the business as they are—

Mr. MÜLOCK. To draw the pay.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman does not like the term, but he adheres to the idea.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman who is leading the House. According to the resolution which I find on page 254 of the Votes and Proceedings, it is declared:

That it is expedient to provide for the payment to two commissioners to represent Canada at the World's Columbian Exposition, to be held at Chicago in 1893, of such sums for their services as are determined by the Governor in Council.

Is that the whole resolution?

Mr. FOSTER. It is all given on the Order Paper.

Mr. McCARTHY. That does not seem to authorize the payment of members of this House or members of the Senate as commissioners. It provides that the Governor in Council may appoint commissioners, and fix their salaries, but it does not do away with the Independence of Parliament Act, and I hope it is not intended that it should. I certainly should be very strongly opposed to any attempt to weaken the Independence of Parliament Act and to put more placemen in the House than we have already. We have a great number as it is, a large increase on the former number, with the addition of Controllers and others, and it is contrary to the best interests of Parliament, I think, to have gentlemen sitting here who are in the pay of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Gentlemen will not be sitting here who are in the pay of the Government. The exposition commences on the 1st of May and ends in October, and if a gentleman from the Senate or a gentleman from the House of Commons is appointed to represent the Government and do the honours of the exposition, he will not be exercising those duties whilst the House is in session.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, as my hon. friend intimates, if you take the extreme view, you may say it might influence the action of a member in the Upper House or in the Lower House. I think, however, under the circumstances and for the purpose for which it is required, it is carrying it to rather an extraordinary length to suppose that it would unduly influence any member of this House or any member of the Senate. These commissioners appointed to represent Canada will be at some expense. They are not to be paid salaries, but the expenses they incur in Chicago will be paid. The payment is not in the way of salary; it is an indemnity.

Mr. McCARTHY. But it says "for their services."

Mr. TISDALE. It is precisely what we did in the province of Ontario, and nobody thought of objecting to it. Mr. Awrey was appointed, and an excellent commissioner he has made, too.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But they passed an Act.

Mr. TISDALE. Yes, but the principle is exactly the same. I thought it was a right thing for the Ontario Legislature and Government to do, and I have yet to learn that any objection has been raised. It was the case of a political opponent, but I favoured it at the time and I still see no reason to object to it. Surely our party politics have not got so bad that hon. members of this House or of the other are not to be trusted in a matter of this kind. This is an honorary position, and surely a member of Parliament can be appointed to it without leaving him open to the suspicion of being influenced. The appointment gives him a certain position. That is about all, as a rule, I believe, the ordinary member of Parliament does get for coming to Parliament. I thought this proceeding in the case of the Ontario commission was a perfectly proper one, and I do not see why it should be objected to here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think, Sir, that nothing could be more objectionable than to undertake to give a member of either House a salary for the discharge of any duty other than that as a Minister of the Crown. We have drawn the line here, as it is drawn in the United Kingdom, in this matter. Those in the service of the Crown are divided into two classes: permanent officers, who are non-political, and political officers, who advise the Crown and have seats in one House or the other. The hon. gentleman seems to see no violation of the principle of the Independence of Parliament Act in conferring this office and bestowing the salary incident to it, upon a member of this House. I think, Sir, you might as well abolish the Independence of Parliament Act altogether. If you appoint persons to represent the Canadian Government at the Chicago Exposition, they should not be members of this House, they should not be persons who can be influenced by the amount of salary they receive in connection with the office. If the appointments are to be made, if they are thought to be necessary, let the persons to fill them be chosen from the four and three-quarter millions of population outside of this House. The whole brains and capacity of the country are not confined to the two hundred odd men who sit here, or to the seventy-five who sit in the other Chamber. There are men competent for the discharge of these duties, who are not members of either one House or the other, and so the Government have a large number from whom to make their selection. There is no necessity to come to this House and ask Parliament to bestow upon the Government power to set the Independence of Parliament Act at defiance. That is what the proposition means. Then, Sir, there is a further objection to this, and that is, that the hon. gentleman asks that the amount these commissioners are to receive for their services shall be determined by the Governor in Council. Here the Governor in Council may undertake to conciliate a party who is discontented. They may undertake to secure the support of one whose independence is such that they cannot depend upon his support, and the amount of remuneration would in a large degree be governed by the question of conciliation. If the hon. gentleman will make his selection from the 4,800,000 people who have no seats here, a larger discretion might be allowed than when he asks to make a selection from among the members of Parliament. But, Sir, I think the choice of a member of Parliament as a salaried officer for any such purpose, is an improper proceeding. It is a violation of the principles involved in the independence of Parliament, and there is danger, if you once permit the barrier to be broken down which is drawn at the point I have mentioned, the point which separates the permanent, non-political officials that are in the service of the Crown, from those that are political and who are the advisers of the Crown. That being so, it seems to me, Sir, the Minister should not come down and ask from this House an appropriation to be bestowed upon a member of this House or upon a member of the Senate. This whole subject was carefully considered when the last Independence of Parliament Act was before the House; and the conclusion arrived at was the same as the conclusion arrived at in England long ago, that a member of Parliament ought not to be taken for any such purpose. There are cases in the political history of the United Kingdom where parties have been appointed on commissions, but they have received no salary. In some instances they have paid to them the actual expenses which they incurred; nothing beyond that has been given or received. We know that a few years ago a member of this House was appointed as commissioner to the West Indies. It was understood that because he was a member of this House he would receive no compensation beyond the actual disbursements that were incident to his appointment; but after his return, and after he had ceased to be a member of this House, a large sum was paid him as an ordinary officer in the service of the Government. I think that is a most improper proceeding, and the House should take care that it should not be repeated. It is important that the members of the House should be free from improper influences, that they should not be converted into place-men instead of being representatives of the people; and to that end it is important that they should not only be free from actual dependence upon the Government, but they should be free in the public estimation from any suspicion of that sort. No such suspicion should be attached to them. Surely the Government have a sufficiently large field to choose from; they can surely find parties competent to act as commissioners if they desire them, without invading either the Senate Chamber or this House for that purpose. If they feel that it is necessary that a member of this House should be taken, before he is appointed to that office, let him tender his resignation, or let him remain subject to the provisions of the Independence of Parliament Act; so that when he accepts the position he shall cease to be a member of this House. I think the rule is a proper one, it is a rule that is in the public interest, which we ought strictly to observe, and which we ought not to permit the Government to violate whenever the occasion arises, as in this case, and the case of the Jamaica Exhibition. Sir, it was said at the Centennial Exhibition parties were paid. Who was paid? Why, parties who were not members of the House. Mr. Perreault was not a member of Parliament. The Minister of Agriculture represented the Government there, but he received no compensation, he received his salary as a Minister of the Crown; I refer to the Hon. Mr. Letellier. He acted on behalf of the Administration to a limited extent, but he was not a paid officer in any other sense than that he was a member of the Government and a Minister of the Crown. Now, this proposition is to give compensation to a party who would not receive compensation otherwise. As I understand the Minister, he proposes to invade Parliament for the purpose of making choice of a party, and he asks that discretion should be left to the Governor in Council to make the salary such as he may see proper. I am opposed to a member of the House being taken for such a purpose, because the room for choice outside the House is ample. I am opposed to the violation of the Independence of Parliament Act in proposing to ask compensation for a member so taken.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The pith of the hon. gentleman's remarks is that he objects to any member of this House being appointed to any position such as it has been hinted a member of this House might be appointed to fill. All the rest of his remarks relate entirely to the spirit of the Act known as the Independence of Parliament Act. Nobody, I am sure, objects to that. But I never supposed it was contemplated by that Act that the services of a member of this House could not be utilized, however important might be the mission or however necessary in the best interests of the country it might be that a member of the House should be selected. Suppose that it is found necessary to represent Canada in some foreign country upon a mission of importance, and the individual whom of all others it would be most wise and judicious to choose to represent us, happened to be a member of this House. Was it ever supposed or contemplated by the Independence of Parliament Act that it would be wrong for us to pass an Act excepting that particular individual and his mission from the operation of the Act? If so, I am greatly mistaken. With regard to the objection made by the hon. member for Simcoe, it appears to be fairly well taken; and I have this suggestion to make. It has frequently happened that a resolution was laid before this House which we had to amend in committee. We can easily amend this resolution in committee to meet the objection raised by the member for Simcoe.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman must see that he has not attempted to answer the argument of my hon. friend from Bothwell. He suggests a possible case in which a member of Parliament, from his peculiar education and qualifications, is better fitted than anybody else to attend to some official duty; and that it would not be inconsistent with the general spirit of the Act referred to, under these special circumstances, that Parliament should be asked to make this case an exception. Has the hon. gentleman told this House who the individual is that possesses these special qualifications which should induce Parliament to alter the Independence of Parliament Act? We have not been informed by the Government that there is any such individual here who possesses special qualifications for this honourable position, qualifications which cannot be found elsewhere. The hon. gentleman sees it will be time enough to discuss that when the suggestion is made. At present it is not made. But the danger lies in a Government existing at a time when there is a great deal of disquiet and unrest in the country, with defections from their ranks from day to day, with a great many gentlemen who have searchings of heart on some most important questions of the day, and are not thoroughly satisfied. The danger lies in the principle of allowing such a Government to placate and please from time to time some supporters who may not be quite satisfied, by giving them positions to which is attached very large pay. I say it is striking directly at the principle of the Independence of Parliament Act. The principle of the Independence of Parliament Act is that when men accept high and responsible positions of trust in this House, they should hold themselves independent of the patronage and pay of the Government. Parliament has provided, and well provided, and its wisdom has been justified by experience, that gentlemen sitting in this House as representatives of the people shall not accept pay at the hands of the Government of the day, without vacating their seats. But this resolution is still more offensive from the way in which it is introduced. Not only is some member of Parliament to be qualified to accept this pay, but that pay is to be fixed, not by the House, not by Parliament, but by the Governor in Council; this Parliament and this committee is to delegate its powers to the Governor in Council, and they are to pay just such a sum of money as they may, in their wisdom, see fit. I say it is not right that we should throw off from ourselves responsibilities which properly attach to us, and delegate to others the power of fixing what this remuneration shall be. If you are going to appoint an honorary commissioner, let the House decide the amount which the fee shall not exceed; let the House retain control of the matter and not delegate the control to Council, which is at the present time too much the rule. I have always opposed the delegation of powers to Council which this House should exercise, and the proposition of the hon. gentleman, in my opinion, involves a direct violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, and the suggestion made by the Controller of Inland Revenue does not improve the case because he does not venture to name any gentleman who possesses these extraordinary qualifications for the position. The hon. gentleman has said that there is a member of Parliament attached to the Government without portfolio who may be appointed, the hon. member who represents London (Mr. Carling). The semi-official press also mentions the name of that hon. gentleman. Does the Controller of Inland Revenue wish the House to accept his statement that that hon. gentleman who for years distinguished himself by the luminous manner in which he explained to the House the duties he had to discharge as head of the Department of Agriculture, and he alone is qualified to represent Canada? Does the hon. gentleman suggest that his qualifications have been proved in this House so clearly that hon. members will at once accept his appointment? If he possesses these wonderful administrative powers, why did hon. gentlemen turn him out of office? Why does he sit here to-day like a ghost of his former self, wandering about from one place to another without any ostensible duties to perform? The position in Chicago! Is it a solace for his wounded feelings?

Mr. HAZEN. It seems to me that the important question is as regards the salary that the representative of Canada shall receive. I for my part cannot see any objection, if there is any member of this House or member of the Senate who is thought by the Government to possess special qualifications for the discharge of the duties of Canadian representative at Chicago, to his being appointed, provided he discharges those duties without remuneration. If his expenses only are paid, I can see no objection to his appointment. In fact I can see that it might be desirable, in consideration of the high and important office to be filled, that some hon. gentleman who has the confidence of the people of a certain section of the country at all events should go there, because he would, in a certain sense, occupy a representative position; but it does seem to me that it would be altogether improper for the Government to appoint as commissioner to Chicago a member of this House or a member of the Senate and pay him for the services he may perform. I think that would be open to serious objections. It might very reasonably be said in that case that he was influenced in supporting the Government during this session and during other sessions by the fact that he was receiving pay for the position, or anticipating that he would secure the position. It would be a dangerous and improper course to take; but if the commissioner were paid only his legitimate and proper expenses there could be no objection to the appointment of a member of the House or the Senate. What the Government has in view I do not know, and as they have not yet made any appointment I think it was very bad taste indeed for the member for Queen's (P.E.I.) to reflect, as he has done, upon the hon. member for London.

Mr. FOSTER. There appears to be a more serious view taken of this matter than I think it warrants. The objections are two-fold. The objection made on the other side of the House can be easily met, as my hon. friend has stated. There is no idea, no concealed or other design, to appoint any member of Parliament, be he of this House or of the Upper House in order to give any person a salary. The only object is that there should be freedom of choice allowed as regards the appointment of any member of this House or of the Senate; so that we may, if we think it best in the interest of Canada, have our choice unlimited in that respect. The person who goes to the exposition will proceed there as the representative of Canada in an official capacity. He would, of course, be subject to expenses and outlay which we would not expect him to pay out of his own pocket, and it is far better for the Government to come to the House and obtain authority from the House for the payment of those expenses, than either to have their choice curtailed or to pay the expenses in some way that was not strictly straightforward. I have no objection to placing a limit if hon. gentlemen opposite desire it. The Governor in Council has not money to expend lavishly, and does not propose to expend large amounts, but it is proposed simply to pay the expenses which any one representing Canada would necessarily involve. This is no violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. It would be a violation of that Act if we were to appoint a member of this House or the Senate without coming to Parliament and asking its authority; but the moment we do so, and obtain the authority, that becomes an Act of itself, and surely it would never be conceived that any Act we pass here is a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act as regards any one of the members of this House. This Act does bind outside of Parliament certainly, but if Parliament has sanctioned such an appointment after authority, then the Independence of Parliament Act has not been violated.

Mr. MILLS (Bethwell). Suppose you were to apply this argument to every office, what would be the result?

Mr. FOSTER. That is an extreme view to take; it is not proposed to apply it to every office. This is a matter which occurs seldom; it is an exposition in which Canada has to be represented and at which her representative will meet with the representatives of other countries. It is not proposed to extend the principle. Even other countries entertaining equally as strong an idea of maintaining its parliamentary purity as we entertain, have already acted in this way. I do not think I am incorrect in believing that when Mr. Chamberlain visited Washington as a negotiator for the British Government of the Washington treaty, he was at that time a member of the British House of Commons.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was he paid for his services?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. But you stated you were going to pay a salary in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. We do not propose to pay a salary. If the hon. gentleman will look at the financial returns of the British House of Commons, he will find that Mr. Chamberlain did expend a very large amount of money as he necessarily must have done, in the interest of the country. He did not receive a salary, nor do we propose to pay the gentleman we appoint. I sent it to the law officer of Parliament to draw it up. It may be that some change should be made in the resolution, and we will do that in committee. I am inclined to think that the Ontario Government has already appointed as its commissioner a member of the Legislature, and I think Sir George Baden Powell was also a commissioner and a member of Parliament.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not paid a salary.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to make it clear that it is not the intention of the Government to pay a salary, but to pay expenses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Finance has announced a very strong precedent; that is the action of the Ontario Legislature as recommended to them by the Administration of Sir Oliver Mowat in connection with this same exposition. The representative of the province of Ontario is Mr. Awrey, a very good one, and I have no fault to find with him. He is a member of the Ontario Legislature, and if I mistake not, by a vote of that House he will receive $3,000 for his services in connection with the exhibition.

Mr. LAURIER. That is different from the proposition here.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it is very much the same.

Mr. LAURIER. You do not particularize here the person who is to be appointed; but you give power to the Government to do it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; but the principle is just the same. I understand that the contention of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is that it is a dangerous practice to appoint a member of this House and to pay him out of the public funds. I have called the attention of the hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that the Ontario case is exactly in point; that they have appointed a member of the Legislature to perform public services on the part of the province, these services to be paid for out of the treasury of the province of Ontario. My hon. friend will see that the cases are on the same footing.

Mr. LAURIER. Paid for his services?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I believe so.

Mr. MULLOCK. I am glad to find that the Minister of Finance has receded from the position he took when he introduced the resolution.

Mr. DALY. Not at all.

Mr. MULLOCK. The Minister of the Interior says "Not at all;" but I listened to the Minister of Finance, and he first intimated that these two commissioners might be members of the House or of the Senate, and should be paid, not merely expenses, but for their services—I think he used the word salaries. However, he has repented since, and I congratulate him.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not necessary.

Mr. MULLOCK. It may not be a source of pleasure to him; but I congratulate the country that he is so apt at taking instructions. I have made an examination of the list of members of this House, and I think I am perfectly within the mark when I say that at this very time there is a large number of the members, not occupying seats on the Treasury benches, but supporters of the Administration, who are practically carrying appointments around in their pockets. These gentlemen are standing up day after day and apparently giving their judicial opinions and votes upon all matters of importance; but they are not unbiassed. The Independence of Parliament Act was meant for a purpose, and it is quite clear that no man should be biassed by personal considerations in the discharge of his representative duties. This demoralization of public opinion in this House is most detrimental to the best interests of this country. If, for example, there are, as I think there are, twenty-five members supporting the Administration, who have the hope of positions at the hands of the Government in the near future, think of the influence of these twenty-five scattered throughout the remaining 120 of their colleagues; not 120 even, for we must take out of that number the thirteen members of the Cabinet and the Speaker and Deputy-Speaker, so that there are probably forty members on the Government side who at this moment are not in a position to be independent.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh.

Mr. MULLOCK. The hon. the Deputy-Speaker smiles. But if it were not offensive to do so I could give the names of them all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. MULLOCK. You know the names well, and when the next election comes round we will see twenty-five at least of the gentlemen who are now supporting the Administration quietly withdrawing to comfortable berths provided by the Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. As in 1878.

Mr. MULLOCK. I dare say it happened before, and I dare say the case cited by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) is an apt precedent. But I decline to be bound by any bad precedent. If the Ontario Parliament chooses to go against the true spirit of representative government, then I decline to be bound by such a precedent. If the previous Liberal Administration disregarded the spirit of the law, surely it is our duty to improve upon old records, and let us be better, if possible, than those who preceded us. I say that, if it is proposed by this resolution to afford remuneration to any supporter of the Administration, it is vicious in principle and it is a direct violation of the constitution. I remember very well, when the present High Commissioner was a member of the House and was appointed to that high office. I only wish that the member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) had been a member at that time, and he would not then have voted in favour of legislation vindicating the commissioner from the consequence of his violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. The High Commissioner, when he sat in this House, had the patent of his office in his pocket, and he sat on the Treasury benches as well. I myself think that it is time to interfere with this growing evil of having placemen in the House supporting the Government, with their appointments in their pockets. One remedy for this is, that there should be legislation providing that no member of this House should be eligible for appointment to any office of emolument under the Crown, until at least a certain time had elapsed between his being a member of the House and his receiving such an appointment.

Mr. TISDALE. May I be allowed, by way of explanation, to read the Ontario Act with reference to the appointment of their commissioner to the World's Fair. It says :

Notwithstanding anything contained in the Act respecting the Legislative Assembly it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to appoint any member of the Legislative Assembly as commissioner to represent the province of Ontario at the World's Fair or Columbian Exposition to be holden at the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, in the year 1893, and to direct the payment to the said commissioner for his services of such reasonable sum as may be determined by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council out of any moneys which may be voted by the Legislative Assembly for that purpose, and the said commissioner shall not by reason of such appointment or remuneration or the acceptance thereof, void his election or vacate or forfeit his seat, or incur any of the penalties imposed by the said Act for sitting and voting thereafter as a member of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does that make it right?

Mr. SPROULE. Mowat thinks it does.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I move that after the words "two commissioners," the following be inserted: "who may be members of this Parliament."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Are both to be members of this Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. It may be.

Mr. LANDERKIN. One from each side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. That might be taken into consideration.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. LAURIER. Are you going to leave the word "services" there?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I cannot see any objection to the word "services."

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) read us a lecture about the disposal of patronage; but the hon. gentleman had better read that to Mr. Mowat, in the province of Ontario. But what is the use of this House professing one thing and actually doing another? It makes no difference whether the word "services" or the word "indemnity" is used. The intention of this House is to pay the men.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, let us not pass the resolution at all. The hon. gentleman should object to it altogether.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do object to the resolution. I object to the very word the hon. gentleman wants retained. I do not object to any reasonable allowance being made to these gentlemen considering the position they are to occupy; I am not going to cavil at the amendment; but I say that the Government should not do violence to the meaning of the word "allowance," and, under it, make payment for services.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I object to the word "allowance." I say that the proper course is for the Government to intimate to the House what they propose to grant these men, and I understand that my hon. friend is willing to do that.

Mr. OUIMET. I think it is better to use the expression "indemnity for services and expenses." Not that the Government has any intention of paying these gentlemen for their services. It is only intended to pay their expenses liberally, and we wish to provide that no question shall be raised afterwards in regard to these members being disqualified owing to the fact of their having received a few dollars over their actual expenses. Suppose we allowed them $10 a day, and some people outside of the House raised the question that they had expended only $8 a day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OUIMET. Well, the object is simply to remove this special case from the operation of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we are all fairly well agreed so far as we have gone. The amount to be paid will have to be left to the Government, which is responsible to the House. I would suggest this form of words: "such sum for their expenses as shall be determined by the Governor in Council."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That would be proper enough. Members of Parliament in England have often been members of commissions, as Mr. Gladstone was on the Ionian Commission, Sir Stafford Northcote on the Joint High Commission, and Mr. Chamberlain on the commission that negotiated the treaty of 1887; but they were never paid for their services.

Mr. RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There will be no disposition to carp at any reasonable expenditure that is made.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to offer an amendment to the resolution, to add the following words:—

And further, that it is expedient that such payment shall be provided for under the express condition that the Canadian Department of the said exhibition shall be closed on Sundays.

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order. It is on a distinct matter entirely.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are we to be told that this is one of the laws of the Medes and Persians that cannot be changed? Is it not a function of this House to vary the conditions of a resolution which it passes? Can it not, in the public interest, do anything it pleases in regard to this matter?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Although I do not support the motion, I would be very sorry to see it ruled out of order. If this House votes a certain sum of money, I do not see why it cannot attach any reasonable condition to the vote.

Mr. CHARLTON. In the United States Congress there was a condition exactly of this kind, that the exhibition should not be open on the Lord's Day, attached to an appropriation made by Congress for the exhibition.

Mr. LAURIER. It is well understood that riders are always objectionable. I would vote against this motion if it were pressed to a vote, but it seems to me that it is not out of order. When we are voting money, we may attach any condition to the vote.

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER. The motion is not at all relevant to this resolution. The object of the resolution is to enable the Government to pay the expenses of certain members of Parliament at the exhibition. The closing of the Canadian exhibit on Sunday is a different matter entirely.

Mr. CHARLTON. This House is at perfect liberty to decide whether it considers it proper or desirable to send a commissioner if the exhibition is opened on the Lord's Day. It is perfectly pertinent to the resolution. There is a very large proportion of the population of this country, I believe a majority, who hold that the Canadian exhibit should be closed on the Lord's Day, and I say that any money grant made in connection with that exhibition should be made on the condition that the honour of this country shall be preserved.

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER. Moreover, there is already on the Order Paper a motion in the very same sense as the hon. gentleman's present motion.

Mr. CHARLTON. That motion does not apply to money, but is the assertion of an abstract principle, while this resolution voting money is a practical application of the principle. There is a motion on the Order Paper which has been regulated by the Government to the limbo of obscurity, where it will not be reached again; but even if it were to be reached to-morrow, I hold that it does not debar a member of this House, on a resolution proposing to take action, moving to attach a reasonable condition to that resolution.

Mr. MULOCK. One of the very conditions of this vote is that this expense shall be incurred provided that the commissioners go to Chicago. The whole vote is a condition. So that if you attach one condition, you may attach another.

Mr. DEPUTY-SPEAKER. I declare the amendment out of order.

Resolution, as amended, agreed to, and reported.

THE INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 100) further to amend the Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MULOCK. I think the Finance Minister should explain this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that a number of insurance societies and kindred companies have, in their special Acts of incorporation, such a clause in order to prevent any one person too largely controlling the stock and business of the company. The Canadian Life Insurance Company had a Bill before the Banking and Commerce Committee this year, to which an amendment was moved in the same sense; and after some consultation, it was thought better to make a general clause of this kind applicable to all insurance companies. To this amendment the insurance companies, so far as I am informed, are favourable, and it has been introduced with the object of doing away with the necessity for a special clause in company charters.

Mr. MULOCK. It is unfortunate that a measure of this importance should be introduced and pressed to a second reading within a little over a week from the time it received publicity. This Bill was only introduced eight days ago, and it affects institutions doing business over the whole Dominion. I therefore think the Government would be wise in not pressing it to a final reading this session. There is no urgent necessity for it. I disapprove of the House interfering with the rights of persons except for the most justifiable reasons. I am in favour of every measure calculated to render insurance companies more secure, but I do not think that this Bill accomplishes anything in that direction. It says that no shareholder shall own more than a third of the votes of a company, and shall not control more than one-third. Well, in most cases there are other difficulties in the way of passing measures of this kind. It is a very rare thing for a shareholder to own more than a third of the stock of an insurance company. And it may be that the shareholders have acquired certain rights under the Act of Parliament, which would now be interfered with, without any notice being given them. This Bill has only been before the public for a week, so that we can not know what arguments might be advanced against it, and it is a vicious practice to rush through legislation without giving, previously, every publicity to it. For instance, this morning a gentleman came here representing large railway interests, who said that only by accident he heard yesterday that in another Chamber a most important piece of railway legislation had been introduced two days ago, and was to receive the third reading to-morrow, and be proposed for the consent of this House on Monday, and yet no publicity has been given that measure. The railway companies do not know of it except in an accidental way, such as I have just mentioned. Well, here is another measure affecting shareholders, about which they know nothing, and to-morrow we may have a measure affecting policy-holders. I was going to suggest to the Minister of Finance that if he wants to strengthen the position of the policy-holders, which is a very commendable object, there are other ways in which that may be done. I am not satisfied with our insurance law. We have insurance companies—I refer to life companies entirely—on very little capital doing business amounting to, perhaps, $60,000,000. Their liabilities will mature in the remote future, but sooner or later they will mature, and I think there is a limit to the power of any one company successfully managing business. My own opinion is that the department ought to consider whether there ought not to be an outside limit as to the volume of business that any one insurance company should be allowed to do. A life insurance company has a large amount of money coming in every year, which it finds difficult to invest, and we see them making improvident and unwise investments of these funds which should be available for the future to protect the beneficiaries. For example, would the interests of the assured—and they are really the class about which we are concerned—be promoted by their funds being permanently withdrawn and invested in bricks and mortar, which are not going to be reasonably productive?

Mr. McCARTHY. Is the hon. gentleman in order?

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps not strictly in order. I say I take advantage of this occasion to call the attention of the Government to the state of the insurance law; because I think there is no one subject that more demands the attention of Parliament than this. There are policies in force in Canada to the amount of, perhaps, $150,000,000, possibly more. That is an enormous interest in our trust, and here we are commencing to tinker with the law without notice to the public. True, this is a question affecting the rights of shareholders. But next year, probably, the department will, at the last moment, send down some other Bill dealing with some other feature of the insurance law. For these reasons I think the Government should not press this Bill to a third reading now, even though one or two companies have expressed approval of it. If the Minister of Finance says that the insurance companies of Canada generally are in favour of it, that is another matter. But until he can do so, I do not think he ought to press the Bill.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the House should be in such a hurry to interfere with vested rights of shareholders in insurance or any other companies, without a good deal stronger reasons than we have heard to-day for doing so. I would like to know from the Finance Minister whether any general meeting of shareholders of any insurance company has considered this Bill and asked the Government to pass it. Possibly there may have been a directors' meeting, but those present might not represent one tithe of the stock or any of the policy-holders. If so, what right has Parliament, by violence, to deprive them of what may be of very considerable value in their property? I can conceive of a case where a man might have paid for stock in an insurance company at the market price, with a very natural desire to have a certain influence or weight, and even to get a majority. To say that, without the shareholders being consulted, they should be deprived of that right which attached to the stock when they bought it, that that vested right should be taken absolutely from them by the force of this law, is not right, unless some very general assent or some very grave public reason is shown to the House for the adoption of such an amendment. Why, Sir, under this law, though no person could control a public company, because he could cast only one-third of the vote, two persons could control it by joining and working together. And, if there is great weakness in one man controlling a company, there is probably nearly as much in two controlling it, and, if there is an evil to be feared in this respect at all, some much better-considered proposal than this should be laid before the House. I do not think the House should be asked to pass this Bill. I think this should be allowed to stand over as a notice to the people, for another session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know exactly what the hon. gentleman's proposition is; but, judging from the wording of the Act, I suppose the evil the Minister of Finance wants to guard against is the evil which does sometimes exist of one or two parties getting control of the majority of the shares, and then absolutely dictating the policy of the company without the least regard to the interests of the minority. Am I right in supposing that to be the evil to be guarded against?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the idea.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not prepared to say that that is not a worthy object. But I think it would be well, in a matter of this importance, that we should not pass this Bill hurriedly. I have a suggestion to make to the Minister and to the House, which might be worthy of consideration. I have had brought before my notice, as every gentleman must have had, this very evil to which I have referred, that is, the evil of a clique of men getting control of a majority of the votes and deliberately trampling on the interests of the minority. Now, Sir, it is possible to avoid that to a very great extent by the simple expedient of providing that the minority shall be entitled to a proportionate representation on the board, much as we elect committees of this House. As everybody knows, our practice (and a very proper practice) is that when a committee is named every man has his separate vote and, though the majority have, as is quite right, the majority of votes on the committee, the minority are always represented. I present the suggestion for consideration. There is a good deal to be said pro and con, but my own belief as regards these same joint stock companies is that a great safeguard would be given to the public if it were provided that boards of directors should be elected in the same way as we elect our committees. A good many things are done by a board of directors who only represent a majority which would never be done were the minority represented as well.

Mr. DENISON. It appears to me that the Bill is clearly in the interests of the policy-holders. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) seemed to be anxious particularly about the shareholders. But we must not forget that in all these insurance companies the proportion of interest of shareholders to policy-holders is almost infinitesimal. I know some cases where the policy-holders are interested to the extent of millions, while the interest of the shareholders is only a few hundred thousand. It is clearly the duty of this House to protect if possible the interests of this large mass of policy-holders. As was pointed out by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), it is possible that one man may gain control of a whole vast corporation through holding a small majority of the stock. Now, with that power in his hands the temptation is great for him to exercise it; the temptation is great for him to take hold of the company and turn it entirely to his own use. It is equally possible, as pointed out by the hon. member for South Oxford, that two or three individuals might do the same thing. It appears to me that the Government should press this Bill to a conclusion.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is unquestionably a very important matter. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down that it is highly desirable we should by legislation endeavour to reach the case of men disposed to monopolize and turn to their own use and benefit the assets of an insurance company. All people in this country are not in a position to judge as to the financial stability of any particular company, and they are largely dependent upon the legislation that these companies receive within this Chamber. Now, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it is an exceedingly important matter; but I would suggest that if we are going to provide legislation to meet the case it is unquestionably desirable that the insurance companies should have an opportunity of presenting to a committee of this House their side of the case regarding the provisions of this Act before it becomes law. If we go on hastily and pass this short Act, the probabilities are that very decided objections may be taken to its provisions after all; and next year we may have to commence again and alter its shape and enact other provisions. I think something in the shape of a model Act for the incorporation of life insurance companies should be passed, with which all Acts should be required to comply. I think it would be better to have something of that kind, instead of giving special legislation to each company, that would reach cases such as have been outlined by the member for South Oxford. But, in my humble opinion, there is not time, if the Government intend to prorogue at the time indicated, to give sufficient consideration to this Act, and also to permit the insurance companies, by their boards or managers, to be represented, and to give the examination which ought to be given to so important a measure. It does not appear that any deputation from any insurance company has waited upon the Finance Minister urging the passing of this legislation, and it ought not to be passed until it has been fully considered by the companies who are unquestionably interested in the passing of such a law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would just say to the Minister of Finance, that, when the Insurance Act was originally passed, the course pursued by the then House was to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, which sat, after full notice to the various insurance bodies throughout the country. If the same plan was pursued here, I think it would tend to secure careful and well-considered legislation.

Mr. COCKBURN. I was about rising to propose a course similar to that which has been suggested by the hon. member for South Oxford. I remember when we had the Banking Act before us, and the benefit that accrued to that Act from its consideration by those who had devoted a great deal of attention to the subjects of banking. I am averse at all times to interfering with the ordinary current of business, with the ordinary rules which have been established. I cannot but think that it would be wise, if we let this amendment to the Insurance Act lie over until next session. The diversity of opinion which has been expressed to-day by members of the House, shows the wisdom of that course. The hon. member for South Oxford, who is conversant with financial subjects, has proposed that representation should be given to the minority. It looks fair enough, but, practically, he must be aware that, if any gentleman in any insurance company owns one-third or one-half of the stock, and he is not allowed to have his full vote on that stock, he will simply evade the law by passing over temporarily so much of his stock as may be necessary, to some of his friends, who will vote in accordance with him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would the hon. gentleman permit me? Under the proposition I make, every man would have the full power of voting on his stock. If he had nine-tenths of the stock, he would be able to name nine-tenths of the directors, but he could not name the whole, even if he had nine-tenths of the stock.

Mr. COCKBURN. But this proposal is to limit him, apart altogether from the stock; the proposal is to limit him to one-third or one-fifth of the whole. Practically, we would find it impossible to do that, because, if a person actually possessed that stock, actually had that responsibility in the company, and you were to limit him to one-fifth, whereas, perhaps, he would have three-fifths, he would be careful to take his other two-fifths and divide it among his friends, whose votes he would have, if the occasion required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt.

Mr. COCKBURN. You cannot alter that by this proposition. I think, therefore, it might be wise to leave this subject over for twelve months and let the various insurance companies consider the question. As has been remarked by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), we have only had eight or nine days to consider this matter. I myself had not read the Bill until a moment ago. If we pass this amendment at once, there might be a great deal of objection to it hereafter. It may be that some persons do obtain a controlling influence in a company, and, while that is a matter to be guarded against, I cannot agree with the hon. member for North York, that limits should be put to the insurance companies. I would put them under the same rules as any other company, that is to say, that a man or company may do just as much business as they are able to do. You will find that the larger the business done by these companies, the better are they managed. We have seen that in some of our best life insurance companies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I agree, to a great extent, with what the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) has just stated. The insurance companies have special Acts, private Acts. They come here with private Bills, and those Bills become private Acts. When we have to amend a private Act, or when a private concern promotes a Bill, we require, by the rules of the House, that certain delays must be given. The other day we tried to curtail the delay, in one or two cases, and the House objected, on the ground that we might be changing entirely the rights of a corporation, who should have a right to be heard. Other parties also may have claims to lay before Parliament and desire to be notified in good time. Although this Bill is a public Bill, it will affect all private Acts under which insurance companies are now working, but this House knows nothing about that. A number of these companies are at a distance and have not been notified, because this Bill was introduced on 16th March, only eight days ago. Even suppose the Bill was printed the next day, that gives us such a short time that really these companies cannot become acquainted with the provisions of the Bill. Now, I want to make a remark about the proposition dealing with the number of shares. Suppose there are 600 shares. By the first provision of this Bill, no individual can have more than 120 shares to vote upon. Well, if the shareholders present at any meeting represent 300 shares, no shareholder will be able to vote on more than 100 shares; that will be a third. Now, you want to avoid one shareholder getting control of the company. As the hon. member for Toronto stated just now, it is a very easy thing for any shareholder, or friend of his, to transfer his shares to others, so that one individual may be able to control them. Suppose one shareholder has sixty shares, and another has 100; between the two they may be able to control the election, or the proceedings of a meeting. This Bill will not have the effect you expect from it. Under these circumstances, I think it would be wise to postpone the measure, so that, during the recess, the companies may become acquainted with its provisions; and next session, probably, we will have a measure that can be discussed and adopted by Parliament to the benefit of all concerned.

Mr. HAZEN. It is doubtful to my mind, whether this measure will be a remedy for the evil complained of. This Bill provides that no one shareholder shall have votes representing more than one-fifth of the stock. Suppose the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), or any of his friends, held four-fifths of the stock, this provision would limit his voting power to one-fifth of his holding. But it would be an easy matter to avoid that restriction, because on the morning of the meeting he might assign one-fifth to his son-in-law and one-fifth to another friend, and so on, and those gentlemen would all go to the meeting and vote, and vote as he wished. In dealing with this difficulty it is to be regretted that this Bill does not provide a remedy. I do not express any opinion as to whether the matter is one that requires remedy, but if it requires to be removed, it certainly cannot be removed by the measure now before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I recognize the truth of the fact that the man who controls the majority of the shares not only will control, but has a right to control a majority of the directors. The point for which I contend, and it is a point worth considering, is, whether we could recognize another principle, namely, that if, for example, I own one-tenth of the stock I would have a right to be represented by one-tenth part of the board, and supposing there were ten directors, I would have a right to be represented by one.

Mr. COCKBURN. Yes.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not quite agree that this Bill will be inoperative, as the hon. member for Centre Toronto and the hon. member for Three Rivers appear to think. Undoubtedly you can avoid almost any law, but if you have a positive enactment that a person shall not directly or indirectly record more than a certain number of votes, and that person does indirectly attempt to do so, certainly the provision of the law can be enforced as regards the election of directors.

Mr. COCKBURN. This is done at every meeting by persons who have large holdings. They make over shares, and have them duly transferred for the time being to different persons before the annual meeting, and within a month or so afterwards the shares are again transferred. At the next annual election they are transferred again.

Mr. McCARTHY. The point is this: is it important in the interest of insurance companies, by which enormous sums are held and sums in which not the shareholders but the policy-holders are interested, enormous sums held by companies not perhaps due now, but due in time to come, that we should do something to prevent the possibility of any one man gaining control over the assets of the company? I know this matter has caused some anxiety among the people, and no doubt that is the reason why this Bill has been introduced. If it be a fact that we ought to safely guard and protect the interest of the policy-holders in these large companies, many of them having but very little capital—and I think if you take the insurance companies within the Dominion of Canada it will be found that their capital is proportionately very small, while their liabilities are enormous—the question arises whether we should not adopt some measures to protect the policy-holders. If that be the case, what course should we adopt? There is very much to be said in favour of the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); but I do not think that would meet the whole difficulty. In the meantime is there any great objection to our enacting that no one shareholder shall influence the election of directors by controlling more than one-fifth of the stock? Of course such a proposition undoubtedly to some extent interferes with the rights of property; but we are constantly interfering with the rights of property in matters of public interest. The question is whether in a matter of such importance, and when there is the liability of great wrong being done to individuals, we should not waive that principle, and declare that it is not desirable that the assets of an insurance company should come under the control of one man, no matter how trustworthy he may be.

Mr. COCKBURN. How will you prevent it?

Mr. McCARTHY. The Bill proposes a remedy. If the stockholder passes over his stock in the morning to another individual who is able to vote on it at the general meeting, he does indirectly what the statute declares shall not be done, and the election of directors under such circumstances would certainly be set aside by the courts on proper application being made. The law could not be evaded in that way.

Mr. COCKBURN. It will be done.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman can suggest a better remedy let him submit it to the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The provisions of the Bill are drawn so as to appear to aim at some particular individual. If the Bill laid down a general plan, one would suppose it was a measure intended to cover a general grievance; but when it is provided that a person, no matter what amount of stock he holds, shall not represent more than one-fifth you are adopting precautions in regard to one individual that you are not adopting in regard to two or three. Why should not one individual be able to do what two or three persons are able to do under the same circumstances? It seems to me the only proper way of dealing with this question is that suggested by the hon. member for South Oxford, and declare that while an individual may hold a majority of stock and control the entire stock, stockholders should be represented in proportion to the amount of stock they hold.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Bill covers several questions which are of very great importance to policy-holders and to those largely interested in insurance companies. It has been urged that a company's interests are likely to become seriously affected because one person might hold a majority of the stock. What I desire to point out is, that the majority of the successful financial institutions of this country, both insurance and otherwise, are those that have been under the control of very few persons. This is undoubtedly true here, that the successful concerns are those who have few shareholders and where two or three individuals have controlled the company. It is said that no one person should represent over one-fifth of the stock. But I can quite understand the creation of a combination of small holders who would have very little to sacrifice, and who by this combination might wreck the company. This amendment is an interference with vested rights. In many cases stocks have risen to high values from the very fact that they have been held by few individuals and been perfectly under their control, and in this way they have been able to control them so that the stock has not been manipulated by speculators or interested parties. If this amendment should be adopted, a person will not have a right to represent his interest, and I desire to point out to the House that this would undoubtedly injuriously affect companies, persons with small or with large interests, persons who have taken and invested all their capital in one company, and whose sole object is to see that the company is successful. I would point out to the hon. member for Simcoe that this Bill will not effectively prevent control being retained by one or two individuals. The Act declares that a person shall not secure control of a majority of the votes at the annual meeting; but if any holder desired to act against the interests of the company or those involved, he will not hesitate to transfer the stock to other friends, who will vote according to his dictation, and afterwards retransfer the stock. On the other hand, if he is a man who has the interest of a company at heart, and has perhaps his all invested in it, he for one will only be too glad to have the advice and assistance of the minority of the stockholders and directors of a company in which he may be so largely interested. I say that the Government should take this into their serious consideration, and they ought to refer this Bill to the Banking and Commerce Committee, so that it may be dealt with as all important changes in this law are dealt with and should be dealt with. We ought to have an opportunity of hearing from those who are largely interested in these companies. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not any representations have been received by the stockholders or policy-holders of insurance companies, asking for legislation of this description?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; representations have been received from some of the insurance companies with reference to this very matter, and some of the largest of them have passed resolutions favouring the provisions of this Act.

Mr. EDGAR. From the shareholders?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember now whether from the shareholders or directors.

Mr. MULOCK. Have you heard from the policy-holders?

Mr. FOSTER. It would be a difficult operation to hear from them. If this Bill is a benefit to any one it is to the policy-holders.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I question that. The Minister ought to give us the names of some of the companies who have so petitioned, because many of us are interested in stocks of insurance companies. I never remembered hearing of any meeting of the directors or shareholders of insurance companies where resolutions were passed favouring this legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the resolutions with me, but I will bring them down before the Bill is passed to its third reading. I think, after the discussion, we might pass the Bill through committee now, and then it can remain for some time for the consideration of the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why do you not refer it to the Banking and Commerce Committee?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I question very much whether this legislation is in the interest of the policy-holders. If the principle is good, then we had better destroy stock companies altogether and say that they shall be mutual companies. Every man with any experience knows, that the companies which have been wrecked in Canada, the United States and England, have been mutual companies, where there were a large number of stockholders or policy-holders, and where schemers could go around and get by proxies, or otherwise, the control of the company. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) has had experience in insurance matters, and he will know that, especially in the United States, what I have stated is the case. In my humble judgment this is a Bill which should be carefully and seriously considered, both by the Government and by the House. The men who wreck companies of this kind do not put their money into them, but by representations, or by bonuses given for the use of the proxies, they were enabled to put themselves in a position to make money and to ruin the company. I believe that the Minister should not press this Bill on the House without giving us some information. I think he should state to us if the stockholders or policy-holders or directors of any leading company have passed resolutions in favour of this legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember for one, that the Canada Life has passed such a resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The stockholders of the Canada Life ?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the directors of the Canada Life have passed a resolution asking for this.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is one company of very great importance in which I am interested myself.

Mr. FOSTER. They asked for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am interested in that company and I never noticed any resolution of that kind. Be that as it may, the Minister will see that it is a matter of great importance for us to consider whether or not this is legislating on a right principle.

Mr. FOSTER. A large insurance company like that will be good judges.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They might have had some special reason.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose they had.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In these mutual companies where every one has a say ; we all know that they are the easiest wrecked. This Bill affects vested rights. As the hon. member from Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), one of the most experienced men in connection with private legislation in the House, has stated, men have invested their money on the strength of an Act guaranteed by this House, and all at once, without any notice or due consideration, we are asked to vote away the rights under which they invested their money. I hope the House will insist on this Bill being referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, so that we may have an opportunity of discussing an important matter of this kind, and of hearing experts express their views in regard to it. As far as I am concerned, I believe that this legislation is moving in the wrong direction, and as far as I am concerned I am opposed to the principle of it. I am sure that hon. gentlemen who take an interest in these matters will agree with me that the successful institutions are those in which the stock is held by a few. I think I have shown clearly that in the case where a man is desirous to advance the interests of an institution, it is just as well that he should hold the majority of the stock. If an institution has to deal with a schemer, the provision now proposed will not affect him at all. I again trust that the Minister will refer the Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. EDGAR. The Minister of Finance has at last told us of one company whose board of directors has suggested this legislation. Now the board of directors may or may not represent the feelings of a shareholders' meeting, which ought to be specially called to consider this subject. If a board of directors had undertaken on its own option to ask for legislation, depriving the shareholders of certain vested rights, they have taken a most extraordinary course. This House will not empower any board to issue bonds or debentures or do anything that will interfere with vested rights of shareholders, without having first called a meeting of shareholders by due public notice, and requiring generally a two-thirds majority of the shareholders to agree to denude themselves of their privileges, powers and priorities. When a measure of this kind is proposed, it is much more reasonable that the shareholders should have something to say about it. The member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) was good enough to say that I did not consider about the rights of the policy-holders at all. The Minister of Finance has mentioned the name of the Canada Life Company. I am sorry to say that I possess none of the stock of that company ; but I hold a couple of life policies, of $10,000 each, in that company, and I would like to know, as a policy-holder, how far our rights are to be affected. Anything that will affect the stability of the company or unsettle its stock, will disturb its market value and will, perhaps, indirectly affect the interests of the policy-holders. It would be much more sensible, in the interest of the policy-holders, to pass a general law, giving them the right of representation on the board of directors. There are insurance companies in Canada in which that is the case. I am sure that the hon. member for West Toronto will agree with me, that a provision of that kind would be much more in the interest of the policy-holders than is the provision before us ; but, of course, that could not be done without the most ample notice to all the companies and to all parties concerned. We have not been told by the hon. Minister of Finance how many companies this legislation will affect, or how many companies have it now ; but there must be a large number of companies throughout the country that will be affected by it. It is proposed by this Bill absolutely to deprive stockholders of their rights. I do not think it should be passed without the most due and ample notice. This is not a question of public policy. No evils have been shown to exist, calling for such legislation, and, therefore, I think this Bill should at least be held over to another session. It is an improper measure, and I shall feel disposed to oppose it at all stages, until I know what those interested in the subject will say about it. To wait until the third reading is not a fair way to have the matter discussed. I think the Bill should be allowed to remain in the committee until it is properly threshed out.

Mr. DENISON. The last speaker, and the one who preceded him, appear to be looking after the interests of the shareholders, rather than the interests of the policy-holders. As most of us know, the stock of the Canada Life is about $100,000, paid up, while the policy-holders hold policies in the company about $60,000,000, and I should think that the invested capital of the Canada Life must be $15,000,000 or $20,000,000. Therefore, one can easily see that the policy-holders have a greater interest in the company than the stockholders. If the Bill is not passed, it is quite possible that the stock of the company, or the majority of it, may fall into the hands of one man. In that case, one man would control the company; he could put in a board of directors who would do exactly what he wished—declare larger dividends and bleed the policy-holders right and left. It is said that the interests of the stockholders must be looked after; but we must also look after the interests of the policy-holders, whose interests are twenty-fold greater than those of the stockholders. It appears to me that the arguments advanced by the hon. members opposite, are fallacious and more in the interests of the shareholders than those of the policy-holders.

Mr. MULOCK. The more one thinks of this proposition, the more it suggests caution. The Minister of Finance proposes to hand over the management of the life insurance companies to a minority of the shareholders. That is what it amounts to. He proposes that, if one man gets a majority of the stock, the minority shall rule. I am not prepared to pass an opinion upon that proposition, without the advice of those interested. We are intrusted with the interests of the policy-holders, and it is in their interests, principally, that I am now halting. I am, unfortunately, not in the position of being a shareholder in any life insurance company; I never had a share; but I feel interested, for the sake of the policy-holders; and, late as it is, I think it is due to them that they should be heard on this question. It is proposed that Parliament shall declare a grievance that does not exist; and if a company should be wrecked in consequence of a minority of the stockholders using the power here granted, the policy-holders would have a good claim upon Parliament for compensation, because of its unfair and unwise interference with the insurance law. Will the Minister tell us why this measure was not introduced in ample time to permit us to consult with the policy-holders? They represent $150,000,000, if they represent a dollar, of claims to mature in the future. How comes it that not one of the policy-holders has been consulted on this subject? Is this a species of legislation which the public have a right to expect from Parliament? Is this a Government of the people? Are the people going to have no voice in the making of their laws?

Mr. EDGAR.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just what they have.

Mr. MULOCK. We have a young Minister of Finance, who has suddenly jumped into the position of leader of the House, and he endeavours to rush a Bill through the House which a more matured Premier would halt before taking up. There he sits, smiling, while a grave interest like this is before the House, saying that he will not allow the country to know anything about it. He is clothed, for the moment, in some brief authority, and he proposes to make use of it while it lasts. If he has no regard for himself and his own political influence, perhaps he would be good enough to have some regard for those whose interests are temporarily in his hands.

Committee rose and reported progress.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

TORONTO, HAMILTON AND BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 83) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.—(Mr. Coatsworth.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DENISON. I wish to bring to the attention of the Government a matter in connection with the road between Toronto and Hamilton. The city and the Government have recently come to an arrangement and purchased a piece of ground for the right of way. The road now in question cut right through the right of way and destroyed its usefulness. I would like to ask the Solicitor-General if any arrangement has been made to protect the interests of the Government and the city?

Mr. CURRAN. I do not know of any arrangement having been made. My attention was drawn this afternoon by the acting Minister of Justice to the subject. The Railway Act provides in section 99 that no company shall take possession of, use or occupy any lands vested in Her Majesty, without the consent of the Governor in Council. Now, this property, to which my hon. friend refers, is held under an ordinary lease, I am informed, and the proviso in the law which follows, is:

But with such consent, any such company may, upon such terms as the Governor in Council prescribes, take and appropriate, for the use of its railway and works, but not alienate, so much of the lands of the Crown lying on the route of the railway as have not been granted or sold, and as is necessary for such railway.

Vested in Her Majesty would thus appear to mean belonging to the Crown. The words "lands of the Crown" indicate that the question is this. Does an ordinary lease vest in Her Majesty the land so leased? In my opinion, it does not, and I have looked up the authorities upon the subject. The Railway Act would, therefore, have to be overridden in order to achieve what my hon. friend wishes, that is to say, to divert the line of railway from the land in question, which is used as a rifle range. As the matter stands, I do not think it is in the power of the Crown to object.

Mr. DENISON. I might mention to the committee that the range is somewhere about 1,000 yards in length lying between the lake and a road. About a quarter of a mile north of the road is the Grand Trunk Railway, formerly the Great Western. No new railway can get any extra business by running south of the Grand Trunk Railway, or through the range. The only object possible to be gained by carrying the line through there would be some advantage of route in crossing Etobicoke Creek, but that must be of minor importance, as the Great Western carried their line a quarter of a mile north of the range, and if they got over the Etobicoke River satisfactorily, there is no reason why the new road should not. It ought to be in the interests of the new road to follow directly along the southern boundary of the Grand Trunk, because they would then avoid claims for damages sustained by the farmers, which would be made if they carried the road south of the Lake Shore road, thus cutting their farms in two parts. I would suggest that we might add something like this to the Bill: That the portion of the said railway lying between Port Credit and Mimico should be carried north of the rifle range leased to the Government.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I must oppose that for several reasons. In the first place, this Bill has no reference whatever to right of way. Its object was to confirm two by-laws which have been passed by Hamilton and Brantford for the extension of time for beginning the operations of the road, and to give power to extend the road down to Lake Erie. Therefore, I say that the present Bill has no connection whatever with the right of way between Hamilton and Toronto, and I hope my hon. friend will not press his motion at this stage, because it certainly—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. It cannot be pressed. No notice was given of it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. If the hon. gentleman cannot press it, there is an end of the matter. I know my hon. friend only received notice of this to-day, so he is not responsible for notice not being given. I think it is too late for such a proposal.

Mr. DENISON. Well, Mr. Chairman, there should be some way to effect the object desired. Here is a Government interest being assailed, and I think this House to be, in some way, able to protect itself as represented by the Government.

Mr. COATSWORTH. No Government interest would be assailed. The question of right of way between Hamilton and Toronto has never come up. This Bill has nothing to do with this question. The Bill has been fought out in committee two or three times, and not a word was said about this question of right of way. The sole object was to extend the time for confirming these by-laws. In regard to the right of way, I may say, in answer to my hon. friend, that if this is Government land, we cannot expropriate it, there is no question about that; but if it is not Government land, I do not see why the city of Toronto should be placed beyond the reach of expropriation any more than any other proprietor.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Notice has not been given of this amendment, and it cannot be entertained by the committee without unanimous consent.

Mr. DENISON. We might get the unanimous consent of the House. I might mention that a letter was received from the city solicitor of Toronto, and he has put us in possession of these facts. If the railway should run through this land, it would seriously interfere with the use of the range, if not spoil its usefulness altogether. If we could now have a clause put in this Bill it would be better than to fight it out afterwards in some other way.

Mr. EDGAR. No doubt the hon. gentleman regards this as a very important matter. If he could succeed in carrying a motion to have the committee to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again, he would have an opportunity to give notice before the Bill came up for further consideration.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I do not think that is fair, and I will not consent to it.

Mr. DENISON. I will ask that the third reading be stayed.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. That can be done.
Bill reported.

Mr. COATSWORTH moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DENISON. I would ask the House to allow the Bill to stand in order that I may have time to give notice.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I think at this late hour of the session, when no amendments were made in committee, the Bill ought to be read now.

Bill allowed to stand.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 52) to incorporate the Calgary Street Railway Company.—(Mr. Davis.)

Bill (No. 70) respecting the Nakusp and Slocan Railway Company.—(Mr. Mara.)

Bill (No. 71) respecting the Drummond County Railway Company.—(Mr. Cleveland.)

Bill (No. 96) to consolidate and amend certain Acts relating to the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Mills, Annapolis.)

Bill (No 106) respecting the Ladies of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.—(Mr. Mills, Annapolis.)

J. FREDERICK DORAN RELIEF BILL.

Mr. DICKEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 107) for the relief of James Frederick Doran.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to know from the law officers of the Crown whether they have read the evidence in this case, and whether they think it is of such a character as to justify the House in passing this Bill. I have read the evidence very carefully and I have come to the conclusion that it is a doubtful case indeed. There is no doubt whatever that the parties were married, and that the woman has been ostensibly married to another man since. That part of the case is very plain, but it appears to me there is no evidence of the absence of collusion or consent on the part of the husband, but on the contrary the inference which may be drawn from the evidence is that there has been collusion on his part. The evidence is of a most unsatisfactory kind, and I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that it is a Bill this House ought to pass. The parties were married in Winnipeg, Man., and lived together for a little while. The husband then moved to Montreal, and afterwards to St. Paul, Minnesota, and wrote for his wife who declined to go, saying her mother would not let her. It appeared she never joined him afterwards, and he never heard from her after the time he wrote to her from St. Paul. He was a man of some expectations from his grandfather, and these expectations were not realized as quickly as were expected. He afterwards met his wife in a Pullman car travelling with another man, but did not speak to her, and he again met her at a ball in the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, and he made no attempt to reproach her and exhibited no uneasiness or annoyance at the new relationship into which she had entered and appeared to be perfectly satisfied with it. I am not at all satisfied that there has been evidence of the absence of collusion which we ought to demand before we grant Bills of divorce of this kind. On the contrary, I am satisfied that if there was not active connivance there was at least passive connivance on the part of the man. If the House determines that whenever the offence which we alone grant divorce for has been committed by either parties, that we will grant divorce irrespective of whether there has been connivance on the part of the petitioner or not, then well and good. This is one of the cases of continual recurrence which convinces me more and more of the absolute necessity of some judicial tribunal being established by this Parliament to take evidence and pass upon it in these cases. I venture to say that there are very few members in this House who will contend that they are in a position to give a judicial vote here to-night, because of having studied this evidence. In the absence of any proof of want of connivance I cannot bring myself to vote for the Bill.

Mr. CURRAN. I may state that I have read the evidence in this case very carefully, and that in so far as the petitioner is concerned, it seems to my mind that after being married to his wife for a short time, he allowed her to go her way. He was simply told that the family of his wife did not wish that she should have anything more to do with him. He took no pains to secure her consent to come back and live with him. He met her on more than one occasion, apart from that which my hon. friend has referred to when he travelled with her in the same Pullman car to New York when she was with another man, to whom she was subsequently married in Paris. I have not the slightest doubt that he took no pains whatever to patch up any little difficulty that might have existed, or assert his rights in any manner or form. Under these circumstances the evidence is very unsatisfactory. Of course this woman is now married again, having gone through the form of marriage in Paris where she is living, and the House has merely to decide whether in the absence of any satisfactory evidence that there was not an understanding between these parties to separate, this divorce should be granted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have read over the evidence also, and I must say I differ from the view taken by the hon. the Solicitor-General and my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). In the first place, the parties were duly married in Winnipeg and they lived together for three weeks. Her mother came from Winnipeg to Montreal, and, with her husband's consent, took her away to the eastern provinces. She went away on a visit. The husband had no intimation whatever that she had no intention of returning. She did return to Montreal, but she would not have anything to do with her husband, and her mother objected to her having anything more to do with her husband, until he was able to provide for her. According to the evidence, she afterwards stopped two days in Montreal and then accompanied her mother to Winnipeg. No doubt he went to the train and saw them off; but he did not anticipate an absolute separation. The only intimation he had was that her mother would not allow her to live with him until he was able to provide for her. He followed his wife to Winnipeg, but when there he could not obtain work. He afterwards secured employment in St. Paul, and wrote to his wife to come to him. She never answered his letters. He wrote and received no reply, and the first thing he knew after that was that she went off with another man.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He received two replies from her.

Mr. McMULLEN. He wrote two or three times, but he obtained no reply. Nothing further passed until it was found that this woman was in the company of and had intercourse improperly with another man. It may be said that the husband did not make proper efforts to induce her to return—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The plaintiff met his wife in Montreal at the Windsor Hotel in 1886, and did not even speak to her, did not even attempt to speak to her. There was nothing charged against her then.

Mr. McMULLEN. Under the influence of her mother, she had positively refused to have anything more to do with her husband; and she went away with her mother, leaving the husband under the impression that nothing further would occur.

Mr. CURRAN. What steps did he take—did he submit to this state of affairs?

Mr. McMULLEN. No. He was so anxious to secure a re-union, that he followed his wife to Winnipeg for the purpose of bringing about a reconciliation.

Bill read the second time, on a division.

SECOND READINGS—ON DIVISION.

Bill (No. 108) for the relief of Annette Marian Goff—(from the Senate)—(Mr. Dickey).

Bill (No. 105) for the relief of John Francis Schwaller—(from the Senate)—(Mr. Dickey).

HARBOUR AND RIVER POLICE.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 97) to amend the Act respecting the Harbour and River Police of the province of Quebec.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Will the hon. gentleman give a brief explanation of the Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object of the Bill is to amend section 2 of the present Act regarding the harbour and river police of the province of Quebec. Section 2 provides that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, establish a force in Montreal and Quebec to be termed the harbour and river police, and may, from time to time, appoint one or more superintendents as may be defined by the Governor in Council. By the first section power is given to appoint harbour and river police. Section 7 levies a tax and provision is made for the levying of a fee on every vessel entering the ports of Quebec and Montreal, amounting to three cents per ton register for the purposes of this Act. It is now intended to do away with the police; but the Governor in Council having at any time dispensed with the services of the police, has no power to relieve the vessels of the dues imposed under section 7. The amendment proposed is simply to provide that no such tonnage dues shall be levied on vessels when no police are employed. While they are employed, vessels shall be liable, but when not employed, vessels shall not be liable.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Has any time been fixed within which the harbour and river police shall cease to exist?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I understand the policy of the Government is that the police force shall not be continued after 31st June.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 103) further to amend the Act respecting Public Officers. He said: The object of the Bill is to remove doubts that have arisen in regard to the construction of the first section of the present Act so far as the issue of commissions is concerned. That section provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations declaring what officers or classes of officers in the Civil Service shall receive commissions. Some officers have taken the ground that not being in the Civil Service they are not liable for the fees chargeable for these commissions; and this Bill provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations declaring and determining what persons, dignitaries, officers or classes of officers in the public service of the Dominion shall receive commissions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Is the object to increase the number of officers who are to receive commissions?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Oh, no.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Will the officers entitled to receive commissions be obliged to take these commissions and pay the fees?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, I think not.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House resolved itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 2887) to authorize the granting of subsidies to certain railway companies and to the construction of the railways therein mentioned.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I have not looked at these resolutions very critically, but I understand that they are all renewals.

Mr. HAGGART. They are all renewals. I will explain each of them as they come.

Mr. McMULLEN. Some of them are very old renewals, extending back as far as ten years ago, and this is the second or the third time that they have been renewed. The question is whether it is wise to continue to renew subsidies to lines on which virtually nothing has been done, and hold out temptations to those sections of the country to embark in the construction of railways that are evidently not needed. I think a great many of these subsidies have been made for the purpose of influencing the constituencies, and now they should be dropped. In adding up these grants, I find that $500,000 or $600,000 is granted to the province of Quebec, about $300,000 to the province of Ontario, and a very small sum to the Maritime provinces.

To the Great Eastern Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from the east end of the line subsidized by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, at St Grégoire, towards the Chaudière Junction Station on the Intercolonial Railway, in the province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This road is designed to run from Montreal to connect with the Intercolonial Railway to Chaudière Junction. It is said that it will have very light grades, and that it will be shorter by 40 miles than any existing road between Montreal and Lévis. Two of the sections of this road are being constructed under the Subsidy Act, namely, from Yamaska to St. Francis river, 6½ miles, and from Nicolet bridge to St. Grégoire, 6 miles, and the work of the construction of the Nicolet bridge is far advanced. From St. Francis to Nicolet bridge, the balance of the section subsidized, a distance of about 20 miles, some grading has been done.

Mr. FORBES. When was that subsidy first granted?

Mr. HAGGART. It was first subsidized by 50 and 51 Victoria, and then there was another subsidy, 52 Victoria, chapter 3.

Mr. LAURIER. Nothing, as far as I am aware, has been done recently.

Mr. HAGGART. The only work I have information of that has been done is that I have first mentioned.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not seem to me a sufficient reason for asking this House to vote this subsidy again, to state that a subsidy was already granted some five or six years ago, and that a small portion of the work has been done. We ought to know why more work has not been done, and why it is that this company, to which this charter was granted, has not been able to comply with the conditions on which the original grant was made. Otherwise there would be no object in limiting the time or imposing any conditions, and it would follow logically and naturally that because a subsidy was once granted the railway company has a vested right, and can have that subsidy renewed, whether it complies with the conditions or not.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot inform the hon. gentleman why it has not been done. All I know is that the road has been graded a portion of the 20 miles.

Mr. LAURIER. Who are the promoters of the road?

Mr. HAGGART. A Mr. Ball is primarily interested and is the president of the road.

Mr. LAURIER. My information is that the company is purely a bogus one. That may be the reason nothing has been done.

Mr. OUMET. I would be very sorry that the name of Mr. Ball should be connected with anything the hon. gentleman calls bogus. He is a most respectable man of large means, and has the best reputation and position as a business man.

Mr. LAURIER. I grant all that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why has he not gone on with the road?

Mr. OUMET. No doubt because he could not secure all the capital necessary for the undertaking; but he has done all he could.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Ball is everything he is said by my hon. friend to be. He is a very respectable man, and I have always understood that he put the cloak of his respectability around this company. In my information, no capital has been subscribed and no money has been put into the enterprise. During the last ten years the company have not built 20 miles of railway.

Mr. OUMET. The hon. gentleman knows that no railway can be built with the subsidy alone, and every time a road is built, with the assistance of that subsidy, it is because there is good reason for its existence. This is one of those roads that deserve to be encouraged. It will certainly be of great advantage to the province of Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. I have nothing to say against the road. I believe it is one that ought to be constructed; but I question very much if it will be, so long as it is in the hands of the present company. The history of the past is not at all a guarantee that the company will do better in the future.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has Armstrong anything to do with the road?

Mr. OUMET. I do not think so; he had at one time.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When did he cease connection with it?

Mr. OUMET. I cannot say exactly. I understood from Mr. Ball that there was nothing in common between him and Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much has been subscribed, and how much cash paid?

Mr. OUMET. I cannot say.

Mr. LAURIER. Is Mr. Vanasse connected with the company?

Mr. OUMET. I do not know.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is exceedingly foolish to go on renewing subsidies to bogus companies. The Minister is not in a position to say whether any stock has been subscribed or any money paid in. Can he give us any information as to the financial position of the company now?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As a matter of general principle, it is well known that some years ago this House voted these railway subsidies right and left on the recommendation of a Minister of the Crown, and with very little information granted to them, and perhaps very little exacted from the Minister. It was the policy of the Government then to grant almost generally these railway bonuses or subsidies. Now I think it is fair that when bonuses have ceased to be utilized, and the company comes back to ask for a renewal of the subsidy, the House ought to be placed in full information as to the status of the company and the circumstances under which the grant lapsed. If we are to go it blind and give what we are asked without comment, well and good, but if we are to act as business men disposing of millions of dollars of public money, we are entitled to some little information, so that we may be able to give some reason for our vote when we return to our constituents.

Mr. HAGGART. The full information was in the railway statistics, which will be down in a day or two. I am sorry they are not here now.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, let it stand a day or two.

Mr. HAGGART. I think full information in reference to this road will be in last year's statistics—all the information the department has.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Minister ought to have at his command, to present to the House, all the information necessary with respect to this road. He asks the House to vote $64,000, and he should be able to give the reasons why. As the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says, it is hardly right to ask the House to vote the people's money without knowledge of why it is done and without some justification, on the part of the Ministry, in asking it.

Mr. HAGGART. The amount will not be paid until the work is completely done. And I want to say that it is not a great deal of benefit to a railway company to receive a bonus from this House. The requirements of the Government, as to the construction of the road, the standard required for the superstructure, the drains and so on, are such that it is not much advantage to a railway to receive a subsidy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That means that we ought to have a general Statute, saying that any railway may have a subsidy, if it cares to take it on the conditions imposed. I do not think the House is quite prepared for that yet. I should imagine that after the subsidy lapsed, the promoters must have petitioned the Government for the renewal of it, and that that petition would contain the facts on which they based their claim for a renewal, and these facts should be communicated to the House. They have satisfied the Government that they were in such a position as would justify the Government in recommending the vote. The House should now be placed in possession of the facts.

Mr. IVES. I happen to know that there is some heavy bridging on this line, particularly at the crossing of the Nicolet River, and great difficulty has been found, as I have been informed, in financing to construct these very expensive bridges. I believe the one across the Nicolet will cost over $100,000. I happen to know that men of standing and position have put some money into the construction of this road.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much?

Mr. IVES. I think, in the neighbourhood of $50,000. And it would be a hardship to these people, if, suddenly, Parliament were to withdraw this grant, upon the strength of which, more or less, they have put their money into the scheme. I think it would be only right to give them a reasonable time to complete arrangements for the construction of the road, if it is possible for them to do so.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much time is a "reasonable" time?

Mr. IVES. These resolutions generally give them two years. I have no interest in the road; it is not in my district. But I know what I do about it because I have taken some interest in a road in the same neighbourhood, and I know that they have exceedingly expensive bridging and that they have had great difficulty on that account in making financial arrangements. I know that Mr. Ball and other gentlemen have involved themselves to a certain extent and have put money into the scheme, and it would mean a very serious loss to these people, if the subsidy were withdrawn at the present moment. I think it is reasonable that they should have another two years to save their money by the completion of the enterprise, because, if the subsidy were withdrawn, this road, which my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Laurier) says is a worthy enterprise, could not be completed. These people have been induced to put their money into the scheme. Mr. Armstrong's name has been mentioned. They were induced by Mr. Armstrong to put their money into the scheme, and, if this assistance were withdrawn, they would lose their money. Mr. Armstrong is now out of it, and these people are trying to make financial arrangements to complete the scheme, and I think it would be a hardship if the House were not to give them another opportunity to make their financial arrangements.

Mr. LAURIER. That may be quite true. We do not say that the subsidy ought to be withdrawn, but we do say that, before you ask Parliament to vote money, you ought to put Parliament in possession of the necessary information. My hon. friend has the advantage of us in this respect. He has information about the road, but we have not. The hon. Minister of Railways says we shall have it in a day or two. But this is the moment when the information should be here. If he cannot give us the information, let the matter stand until he is ready. This is so reasonable that I cannot see why it is not acceded to at once.

Mr. McCARTHY. This is an application to grant a subsidy. We do not know whether a contract has been made, or what application was made for the subsidy, or what the grounds of it were. The Minister of Railways asks us to vote this $64,000 and states that some small part of the work is done. I am opposed to the continuation of the granting of these railway subsidies, and I think we ought to critically examine every application made for a subsidy. Where there has been a considerable expenditure, or where there is reasonable excuse for delay, for my part, I think we ought not to be too strict; but if nothing has been done, or if nothing substantial has been done, or if there is no good ground for the loss of the chance to earn the former subsidy, I do not see why the subsidy should be renewed.

Mr. HAGGART. The House will remember that we passed a Bill to amalgamate this company with several others. Evidently they have a grand scheme of railway communication from Gaspé to Parry Sound up to Parry Sound. There was a Bill to amalgamate the Parry Sound Railway, this railway and two or three others for the purpose of making communication between Georgian Bay and Gaspé.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was the Canada Atlantic part of that scheme?

Mr. HAGGART. This is one of the roads and then there is another road contemplated in the connection between the Lake St. John crossing the Ottawa River and running to Parry Sound Inlet, and the Bill I speak of contemplates the purchase of a part of the Intercolonial Railway and the using of that celebrated road the Baie des Chaleurs.

Mr. IVES.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is that link to run across the northern part of the province of Quebec, direct for Parry Sound?

Mr. OUMET. They go by way of Rimouski.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If this great, magnificent scheme is one which meets the approval of the Government they must have had a great many facts before them before they decided to support it. I do not think there has ever been a disposition to refuse a railway grant to a bona fide scheme to build a road where the country will be benefited. But there is a growing disposition on the part of the House, and this debate shows it, to refuse aid to companies which are merely established for the purpose of speculating upon the Government grant. I do not think the House should be asked to vote this subsidy without full information on the subject.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. Minister of Railways say if there has been municipal aid granted towards the construction of this road, or has any provincial aid been given?

Mr. HAGGART. I think there has been provincial aid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. gentleman say how much?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot say. I can send out and get the details in last year's book showing the provincial, municipal and Dominion aid granted.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has anything been done since last year?

Mr. HAGGART. Nothing has been given, I believe by the province of Quebec or by the municipalities since last year's statistics were published.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister states that about $50,000 has been expended. What proportion of this has been contributed by rural municipalities or the towns on the line?

Mr. IVES. I referred to the money which individuals put into the scheme.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us something of the financial condition of the company?

To the United Counties Railway Company, for 32 miles of their railway, from a point at or near the Town of Iberville to St. Hyacinthe, and thence towards Sorel, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, for a railway from St. John's to Ste. Rosalie, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $102,400.

Mr. HAGGART. The change proposed is this: By 55-56 Vic., chap. 5, the subsidy asked is described as granted for a railway from St. John's to Ste. Rosalie. It is now proposed to change it for a railway from Iberville to St. Hyacinthe, and in this way the heavy bridges required over the Richelieu and Yamaska rivers will be avoided.

Mr. LAURIER. I know a good deal of the work has been done.

Mr. HAGGART I have so far paid no portion of the subsidy; but 20 miles have been built.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for 32 miles of their railway, from a point at or near the Town of Iberville to St. Hyacinthe, and thence towards Sorel, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, for a railway from St. John's to Ste. Rosalie, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, not exceeding in the whole $102,4000.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that last year, when this subsidy was granted, my hon. friend the member for St. Hyacinthe, and the hon. Secretary of State for the time being (Hon. Mr. Chapleau), both claimed that the United Counties Railway Company was entitled to the subsidy of $3,200 per mile, although it had already an equal subsidy from the Local Government of Quebec, on account of the company having to build two heavy bridges, one over the Richelieu river and the other over the Yamaska river at St. Hyacinthe. I was not contradicted when I stated that this road was among the easiest to build, inasmuch as the cost of construction ought not to amount to much, owing to the nature of the country it went through, but they alleged the great cost of the building of these two bridges so as to reach the county of Drummond Railway, at Ste. Rosalie, in the county of Bagot. I cannot see how it is that, this year, they come and state, by this resolution, that this company is given leave not to connect with the Drummond Railway, and is therefore not compelled to build these two bridges. Both the termini were changed so as to avoid the building of these two bridges, which, last year, were used as a ground to make good the granting of so large a subsidy to this United Counties Company. But that is not all, Mr. Chairman. The company, not satisfied with these two subsidies, did all it could to get money from one of the parishes run through by this railway. This same company, during last summer, applied to the citizens of the parish of St. Damase, and brought pressure to bear upon these citizen-ratepayers, in order to extort from them a grant of $3,000, under the pretense that it was to build a station in that parish. This very same company, either directly or by its agents, said to the ratepayers: Should the parish decline to grant a bonus of $3,000 to this railway, it will have no station. So this company was not satisfied with the enormous subsidies it had obtained from this Parliament and the Quebec Legislature; it wanted still $3,000 from the ratepayers of St. Damase to erect a station in that parish. I will not further point out to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet), as well as to the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), that the contractor for this railway played the tyrant, by every possible means, over the parishioners of St. Damase, because they had declined to grant this bonus of $3,000. Thus they placed the farm crossings and the ditch crossings on each side of the track in places altogether inconvenient to the owners of these farms, and far from complying with the just and legitimate demands of these farm-owners, they put these crossings in places which they knew would not be convenient to them, and that against their expressed will, to their injury and inconvenience, and in order to take vengeance upon them for their refusal to grant the bonus of $3,000. I hope this large subsidy will not be paid until the Government ascertain that the company has fulfilled its obligations, not only in the parish of St. Damase, but also along the whole length of this railway. I hope the Government will see that due measures shall be taken in order that the farmers whose farms are run through by this railway should not be compelled to tax themselves with sacrifices, and to appear before them in order to get justice from the company. Before this money is paid to the company, I also hope that the Government engineer who will inspect the works will be instructed to give notice to the citizens of St. Damase, who might have laid their complaints before the Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) in connection with the carrying on of these works, and that this engineer will hear the owners of the farms run through by this railway as to the claims they might have against the company. I further hope that the Government will compel the latter to fulfil all its obligations.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, it is true that last year, as you remember, no doubt, I seconded the request made to the Government for a subsidy to the United Counties Railway Company. In the resolution moved last year no particular company was mentioned; it was merely stated that a subsidy of so much would be granted to the company who would build a railway from St. Jean d'Iberville to Ste. Rosalie, in the county of Bagot, through the city of St. Hyacinthe. The then Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau), who, of course, supported the granting of this subsidy, had stated that the company who would build that railway would also have to build two heavy bridges, one over the Richelieu river and the other over the Yamaska river, so as to connect that railway with the railway system ending at Ste. Rosalie. I thought it my duty to support the granting of this subsidy, as I am still happy to do it now, and that, in the interest of the county of St. Hyacinthe, which I have the honour to represent. I must state, as I did last session, that I never asked for any subsidy to that company, and that, moreover, I ceased having any interest in that company, either directly or indirectly, prior to the granting of any subsidy by the Government. Before coming to the point, I wish to briefly consider. I will say a word as to the troubles that happened in the parish of St. Damase. This is no time for giving the history or a recital of the causes that brought about these difficulties in St. Damase, but I beg to state that if the hon. member for Bagot should be willing to take the House into his confidence, it would learn that he is the promoter of these troubles. He would state to us how many nights and hours he spent in raising the citizens of the parish of St. Damase against the United Counties Company. I said to the citizens of St. Damase, and I repeat it here, that I had nothing to do with the United Counties Company, that I was expecting nothing from them in the way of benefits or advantages whatever, that I had no benefit nor advantage whatever to expect either from the builders or contractors, or from any of the members of that company. These difficulties, at least the greater portion of them, have been settled. I know that some farmers rightly complained that farm crossings had not been placed where the owners wished them to be. I mentioned this to the contractor, who is at the same time the president of the company, Mr. Maze, and on my representing it to him, he told me it had been done without his knowing it. Here is how he explains it: the contractor had let the contract for the construction of the fences on each side of the track to other contractors. He claims that the points where the crossings were to be put were shown on the plan of the road, but the sub-contractors, to avoid putting a few posts, changed the points of these crossings and placed them elsewhere. After being informed of it, Mr. Maze promised to remedy it and having the crossings set where they originally should have been. The hon. member for Bagot referred to undue pressure having been brought to bear on the people of St. Damase to induce them to vote for a bonus to the United Counties Company. It is true that a by-law granting a bonus of $3,000 to the company was submitted to the electors, ratepayers of St. Damase, but this bonus was requested for the following reasons: In the first place, to help the company in the building of a station at a cost of $1,500; in the second place, the company was bound to lay a siding 1,100 feet long. Moreover, they were to erect buildings intended to receive the freight and goods shipped by express, and there were other conditions mentioned in the by-law. The majority of the ratepayers of St. Damase thought it their duty to vote against this by-law. Those who opposed it said to the voters that the company would build a station in any case, that they were bound to build one in every parish run through by their road. They succeeded through this argument. They used this further plea; they said to the parishioners of St. Damase: You have nothing to fear; those who are all-powerful with the Governments in Ottawa and Quebec will compel the company to build that station. I do not know,

Mr. BERNIER.

Mr. Chairman, whether these powerful men are those who prove to be adverse to this railway. If by such means they can get favours, if they can compel the Government to cause advantages to be given to the ratepayers of St. Damase, I will be very happy, as much and even more so, than the hon. member for Bagot. I never had any knowledge whatever of this undue pressure which he referred to. And then, I can assure him, that undue influence never had any hold upon the people of St. Damase. They voted with freedom, the majority declared against the by-law, and in the meantime had the hon. member for Bagot gone as far as St. Hyacinthe he would have ascertained that not a single citizen of that city, not a single prominent man, except Mr. Maze, who spent a moment in the parish of St. Damase, interfered to induce the citizens of that parish to vote for the by-law. The fact is, that I myself stated publicly to the electors, at the church door that if they were willing to vote against the by-law, they were at ease to do it. But I added that were the road put into the hands of another company, it might happen what happened at St. Hugues, where the people were compelled to assess themselves in order to have a station. If the company has not yet built a station there, it is because it was too late in the season, but I can assure the hon. member for Bagot, on the faith of the president of the company, that should he join in an excursion trip to St. Damase, in the month of June next, he will see there a fine station built at the company's cost. As I said in my early remarks, the subsidy voted last year was voted in favour of a company who were to build a railway from St. Jean d'Iberville to Ste. Rosalie. I do not know whether the hon. member for Bagot is responsible for the change made by the resolution now before the committee, but I beg to say that it appears to me he is not anxious that this railway should reach his county.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Provided a less subsidy be granted to this company.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) As regards the subsidies, I have already stated that it was the company who asked for them. This company was formed in 1883. Its Act of incorporation was renewed in 1886 and in 1889, and they were to build a road exactly as stated in the resolution now before us, that is, from Iberville through St. Hyacinthe, St. Barnabé, St. Jude, in the county of St. Hyacinthe, St. Louis and St. Aimé, in the county of Richelieu. The resolution of last year did not apply specially to this company, but applied to any company who would build the road. It is true that, in the course of the debate, the then hon. Secretary of State and myself referred to the United Counties Railway Company. I am even free to state that I understood this last company were to get this subsidy if they should build the road. As pointed out by the hon. Minister of Public Works, the change asked for is justified by the fact that it is this company who built that part of the road, that is the eighteen miles built last year from St. Hyacinthe to near Ste. Angèle; the Government had an understanding with the company or its president, to the effect that they would give to this company the subsidies now asked for. I beg to state further that the eighteen miles of the road already built were inspected by the officer of the Quebec Government charged with that duty, and by the inspector of the Federal Government railways, and were found satisfactory. I will not say that the hon. member for Bagot is not in accord with these gentlemen; I have not seen their reports; but, from the information I had, the building of the railway was found satisfactory, and, if I am well informed, the Quebec Government paid, if not all, at least the greater portion of the subsidy. As for the Federal Government, the contractor received no advance from them on account of the subsidy. With respect to the difficulties which the hon. member for Bagot says he found out in the parish of St. Damase, in connection with the tyranny played over those who sold lands to the company, I think this information is not correct, that, on the contrary, the company did all that they were bound to do to give satisfaction to those who were bound under the law to give them a right of way. There was not a single case of compulsory expropriation in the parish of St. Damase. The only expropriation there was took place within the limits of the city of St. Hyacinthe; and my hon. friend knows the party who requested the expropriation. I would extend these remarks were it not that the usefulness of this railway is admitted, but I think this is out of the question for the moment. The ratepayers of the parish of St. Michel de Rougement, on the concession of Grande Caroline, paid a rather large sum to get this railway to run through the concession called Petite Caroline. They did it voluntarily. The contractor consented, at the request of the inhabitants, to run the line through the concession called Petite Caroline, where there was no dwelling, just to accommodate and gratify them. Without any pressure, without any tyranny on the part of the company, the ratepayers of Grande Caroline paid voluntarily a sum of $800 or $900; and the contractor generally paid $75 an acre. Therefore, the information of my hon. friend in this respect is again incorrect. I also find by these resolutions that the subsidy voted will apply to the section from Iberville to St. Hyacinthe and thence extending to Sorel. As I stated a moment ago, this is altogether according to the Act of incorporation of the United Counties Railway Company. The contractor, who is president of the company, is just trying, according to my information, to come to an understanding with the municipalities of the county of Richelieu, so that he might, as early as next summer, build the remaining portions of the road. And, but for contingencies which he cannot foresee, the whole road from St. Athanase to Sorel, will be completed and put into working order.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe has at last granted that, last year, the pretext alleged for so large a subsidy was that there were two bridges to be built; which, in the estimation of the then hon. Secretary of State and of the hon. member himself, would involve an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars. The agents of the company, which to-day is released from the obligation of building these two bridges, and which probably never intended building them—without my hon. friend from St. Hyacinthe offering much opposition to it—the agents, I say, came down to St. Damase and strongly urged the municipal council of that parish to pass a by-law, which, when submitted for ratification to the electors, was voted down. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe said that whenever it pleases me to take the train and pay a visit to the parish of St. Damase I will find, on coming down from the train, a station built by the company; but granting that, Mr. Maze could well afford to defray the cost of building this station. It does not follow that he did it out of pure devotion to the public interest, for roads are built with a view to ensuring railway communication with villages and parishes situated along the line. I could not do my hon. friend the injury of comparing the railway he is interested in, to the uncivilized Indian who turns off from the thickly settled centres of population. It was, therefore, in the company's interest that a station should be built in the parish of St. Damase. Now, not satisfied with the grant of subsidy of more than sufficient to secure the building of the road, the company sent their agents canvassing among the citizens of that parish, and spared no entreaties nor threats to extort from them a sum of $3,000. The citizens of St. Damase did, in fact, apply to me, asking me whether it was fair to require so heavy a sum from them. I told them that the company had been granted cash subsidies quite sufficient to ensure the building of the road; and, further, that to try as they did to screw out of the parish such a sum was a melancholy exhibition, discreditable to the company. It is a fortunate occurrence for the citizens of St. Damase that through a salutary fear of the electorate, the member for St. Hyacinthe thought it his duty to oblige Mr. Maze to build a station. But I should state that my hon. friend did not protect his electors against the attempts of Mr. Maze at extorting money from them; he rather gave it to them to understand that it was very doubtful whether they should ever get a station should they decline paying the sum required of them. The hon. gentleman stated from his seat that the subsidies are to be paid only on the completion of the work, to be established by the report of the Government engineer, and that such report is all that is required. I for one think that too much precautions cannot be taken. The hon. member also stated that the parish of St. Damase was about being given a station, although the citizens had declined granting a bonus looked upon as necessary to enable the company to build the station. I gather from this statement that the citizens were right in declining to grant such a bonus. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe has also conceded that the citizens of his riding complained of the farm crossings not having been located in the right places, and that Mr. Maze had pledged his word to remedy this. If, through his exertions, justice is meted out to those who suffered from the doings of this company, so much the better. By the resolution before us, the location of the line is changed so as to do away with the obligations the company were under of building two bridges for which they wanted such a large subsidy. I consider it is unbecoming to grant the company such advantages. I consider it my duty to warn the Government that too much precaution cannot be taken prior to paying to the company this cash subsidy; and that it is their duty to see that all the obligations are fulfilled. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe has been lavish of promises; he stated that the company intended prosecuting the works on the road as rapidly as possible, and that, next summer probably, the railway would be built up to Sorel. I would rejoice at this result with the interested parties, but I am afraid of history repeating itself again with this section of the road, as with the bridges which will never be erected by the company. I am afraid of witnessing the company coming again, next session, before the Parliament, and stating their readiness to construct that section of their road on the condition of their being subsidized to the tune of $3,200 per mile, with an equal subsidy from the Quebec Government. After which the company will, I presume, do as in the past, asking subsidies from all the municipalities on the line, threatening to withhold from them such and such accommodation; and finally they will succeed in screwing out of them hundreds of dollars, as, for instance, at St. Michel de Rougemont, where a certain number of citizens had to pay $900 to obtain from the company that the line be located in the most convenient locality. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the road being largely subsidized, in addition to the Government paying enormous sums to assist the company in carrying out their operations; in addition to the municipalities contributing their share of sacrifices, the citizens will be called upon, in order to secure the best location for the road, to contribute some eight or nine hundred dollars towards assisting the company. I trust that, should the company be granted subsidies by the Government, the latter will take the necessary precautions and see to it that no undue influence be exercised to screw out of the citizens additional grants, through various threats, as, for instance, being deprived of the advantage of a station, or again locating the farm crossings so as to afford the least accommodation possible to the owners of these lands, and, finally, forcing them to contribute certain sums to avoid these drawbacks. I hope the Government will take the necessary steps to prevent the recurrence of such doings as happened at St. Michel de Rougemont. I hold that when Parliament votes subsidies in assistance of a railway it should be expressly stipulated, in the case of roads traversing a colonized or settled territory, that the company which is granted such subsidies shall be bound to build all necessary stations, in such localities as may give better accommodation to the people. Such a course would not offer the least difficulty, as our villages are so well known. The citizens who grant such large subsidies to these works ought certainly to be entitled to some protection. The subsidies granted to the United Counties Railway Company are large enough to secure to the citizens of the county the protection they are entitled to at the hands of the member for St. Hyacinthe. On the contrary, he seems to have come to an understanding with the builder of the road to allow them to renew the extortions practised elsewhere. From the hon. member's very confession, the citizens of St. Hugues were obliged to build a station and to expend therefor $400; quite different from the $3,000 the ratepayers of St. Damase were asked to pay. The South-eastern Company soon after became insolvent, and the road was operated by some parties interested in the company. To have a station, the citizens were obliged to assess themselves and pay a sum of $400. The hon. member should acknowledge that the South-eastern Railway Company had not been granted subsidies to the amount of $6,500 per mile like the United Counties Railway. In addition to that, the company by whom this road was built had large bridges to construct. The cost of railway construction at that period was much greater than last year. Rails, for instance, cost much more at that time than at the present time; last year steel rails sold at $21 per ton, whilst in 1875 iron rails were sold at $35 per ton. With such differences in prices no comparison can be instituted between the two roads. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe admitted, last year, that this pretended obligation on the part of the company to build the two bridges in question was put forth with the express view to obtain subsidies. How is it possible, somebody would say, for the company to dispense with these subsidies when you oblige them to build two bridges involving considerable cost? And now that the location of the line is changed the building of the bridges is no longer mentioned; the same subsidy, however, is kept both from Ottawa and Quebec. Not satisfied with this, the company, through their agents or representatives, have done their best to extort from the ratepayers of the St. Damase the sum of $3,000. An attempt was made at this latter place to repeat what had been done at St. Michel de Rougemont, when the ratepayers had been forced to pay in order to obtain a change of location. Were the road to pass through a locality offering every disadvantage to the land owners, the latter would consider themselves most happy to make a small outlay with a view to protect their properties. But being given the fact that the company have had their road newly laid out, I do not see why this new location of the road could not be carried out without it being necessary to extort money under false pretenses. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe stated that should the extension of the road to the county of Bagot not take place, it will be owing to the member for the latter county who did not evince any sympathy for the enterprise. My course has been confined strictly to follow attentively the doings of the company and to denounce them when judged necessary. The company have obtained grants under false pretenses. Last year, in order to justify the grant of so large subsidies, it has been stated on the floor of this House that the company were about building two large bridges. I had my own suspicions at the time about these bridges being ever built and I was so induced to oppose the grant to the company of a subsidy of $3,200 per mile. To-day I have full evidence as to the truth of my suspicions, that the company never intended building these bridges. That which I could not state positively last year owing to the absence of evidence, is fully confirmed to-day by the legislation now before us. But to-day the position is well and clearly defined, and the resolution now before the House shows conclusively that never did the United Counties Railway Company intend to build the bridges; and still it was the very consideration relied upon and alleged to justify the grant of the subsidy. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe perseveres in his defence of the company and he looks around for palliatives of his course of extortion of subsidies under false pretenses. I hope the Government will pay attention neither to the hon. member nor to Mr. Maze, but will persevere in its determination to give full and complete justice to the parishioners of St. Damase. I may tell the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier), that I entertain no feelings of animosity towards him. I do not care to know whether he possesses, directly or indirectly, any interests in the road. He protests with all his might against the imputation that he might possibly have any interest in the road, and he endeavours, by all means within his power, to convince his hearers that he is quite disinterested. He ought to recollect the proverb: "Who excuses, accuses himself." This may also account for the opinion of some of his electors, who find the course followed by the hon. member quite extraordinary. Mr. Chairman, the company are about giving the contract for the erection of a station in the parish of St. Damase; but they have been prevented from extorting from citizens of this parish the sum of $3,000; and I may say to my hon. friend of St. Hyacinthe, that if, through my influence, I have been instrumental in bringing about this good result, I congratulate myself upon the fact that I have succeeded in inspiring my hon. friend with this salutary fear of his electors whom Mr. Maze attempted to take advantage of.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation). I have not the intention to take up the time of the House, but my hon. friend from Bagot has been exceedingly unhappy in his remarks. He talked of nothing else but extortion, obtaining money under false pretenses, bribery at elections, etc. High-sounding words often made use of in election times, should be avoided as unparliamentary. I may tell the hon. Ministers who know the docility of the hon. member for Bagot that they need not be frightened beyond measure at his menaces and high-sounding words, for, so soon as the present measure will be passed, the hon. member will hasten to fall in the ranks again. I, nevertheless, would call the attention of the committee to the persistency with which the hon. member opposes any subsidy to this railway. For several years he has voted for subsidies granted to various railway companies in the North-west, Manitoba, in the provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, without raising the smallest objection; but, when the province of Quebec is to be dealt with, when a railway by which the majority of his electors will be benefited, is before the House, he finds nothing but pretenses to oppose it. I may tell the hon. member for Bagot, that, if, instead of spending his time in sowing dissension, he had inquired from the inhabitants of St. Damase, he would have learned that in all my public or private utterances I advised them to vote to the best of their judgment, that I was quite indifferent in the matter; but that I wished to incur no blame, in case the road were handed over to another company, who would ask for a larger subsidy or would refuse to build a station, as it had happened elsewhere. Neither at St. Hyacinthe, nor elsewhere, do I enjoy the reputation of being in favour of extortion. And it is not within my knowledge or my recollection, that extortion has been practised or attempted against the ratepayers of St. Damase. But should there have been extortion or obtaining of money under false pretenses, the hon. member ought to address himself to the men who have profited by it. As for myself, I have had nothing whatsoever to do with the granting of the subsidy. The hon. member for Bagot dares again style himself the protector of the parish of St. Damase, which he tried to annex to the county of Rouville at the time of the redistribution of seats, in order to drown them in a Liberal riding. He talks of the fear of the electorate. I would like to ask him—if allowed to—why he caused to be annexed to the county of Rouville, the parish of St. Pie, where he had a minority of 160, in order to annex to the county of Bagot the parish of St. Marcel, where he hopes to take a majority of from sixty to seventy? The hon. member speaks of extortion. He ought to recollect that, such as laid out by the company, the road was to pass through the concession called "La Grande Caroline." The owners of the lands said to Mr. Maze: If you consent to lay out the road through the "Petite Caroline," we are willing to pay the costs of the land. And this is what the hon. member calls extortion! He ought to recollect that, when a road was to be built through his riding, the parish of St. Pie was taxed to the amount of $25,000! Was the hon. member then heard to protest? Was any extortion threatened also at that time? Will he be bold enough to tell us what kind of road had been built? Wheel-barrow road, of three feet gauge?

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Just like yours.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) As ours. Go and see the United Counties Railway,—a road of ordinary gauge—and well built. The engineers of both Governments have so pronounced upon it. I have conceded that there were certain connections to be done, certain grievances to redress. I gave the reasons why the crossings had not been located in the right place. The hon. member finds that the electors of St. Damase have been martyred. For the use of these people who are not acquainted with the place, they have plotted in their imagination a revolution. I may say that the electors voted quite freely, without any undue means or false representations being used; no thief came up from the United States; no case of corrupt practices has been signalized, and the result, far from being controverted, has been taken as the expression of a free opinion with a great majority of electors. Now, as regards the building of the road up to Sorel, the hon. member for Bagot says the work will not be prosecuted.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) I did not say so; but that I should not be surprised if it were not continued. I am no more astonished at this than at the famous bridge not being built.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) The hon. member will admit that it is easier to build a road on land than on a river. I have good ground to hope that the road will be built up to Sorel, for I am of opinion that the company have a right of receiving a subsidy for the whole road mentioned in the charter. The hon. member said there was no station at St. Damase. Quite true. He ought to know there is none at St. Hyacinthe; and for the information of the hon. member, I may say that the president of the company is about asking the city of St. Hyacinthe a bonus to construct a station in the city. The hon. member contends that the subsidy was sufficient to build all the stations. If he will take the trouble of referring to the statistics of railways he will find, I think, that the financial firm which advanced the funds have expended in the neighbourhood of $8,000 per mile for the building of the road. The hon. member thinks I am wrong when I say I have no interest in the road, and in saying so, I incriminate myself. I thought it my duty to state before this House what the hon. member dare not say here. I am aware that in the city of St. Hyacinthe, the very same persons who scattered accusations through the parish of St. Damase, have made affirmations which they dare not repeat here, had they a seat. I know that in certain quarters, assertions have been made, which reached the ear of the Ministers in relation to the subsidies granted the company. I will refrain from pressing this point further, and I am not the only one accused; but persons occupying more exalted positions than myself, near the Queen, have equally been accused. And in spite of the opposition of the hon. member for Bagot, the present resolution, I hope, will be adopted. In conclusion, I beg to apologize to the House for having detained it so long on a subject which, having been discussed last year, should not have called for such a long debate to-day.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I rise to protest against the manner in which the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe thought fit to distort my arguments. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier) stated that I am opposed to the grant of a subsidy to this railway. I say, again, Mr. Speaker, I am not hostile to subsidies. I am rather inclined to favour reasonable subsidies, but I say that, considering the work to be done, the subsidies granted are too large. Last year, Mr. Chairman, I brought into the discussion statistics which no one could challenge, data I had been supplied with by an engineer who is looked upon as an authority in the matter of railway construction. No reply has been offered to the arguments based on this data, and let it be remembered that the engineer who had supplied me with these figures had taken as a basis a recently acquired experience. The hon. member from St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier), feeling he is unable to reply to my arguments, thought it his duty to make an allusion to the Redistribution Bill, accusing me of an attempt to get rid of the parishes of St. Damase and St. Pie. Let me tell him that those changes were made, not at my demand, but at the request of his chief and of the Ministers. It is through a compromise made by both parties that the parish of St. Pie has been thrown into the county of Rouville. At all events, this Redistribution Bill matter has nothing whatsoever to do with the subsidy question. I am not hostile to the undertaking, but I want justice to be meted out to the ratepayers. However, as the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier) has hinted at redistribution, I will just say a few words on the matter, with a view to bringing to the recollection of the hon. leader of the Opposition the fact that he did not reply to the argument produced last year in favour of the Government measure, namely, that, owing to an unfair distribution of the representation, he happened to reckon in the House ten followers more than he is entitled to. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier), having no valuable arguments to produce, uses arguments irrelevant to the question, such as the Redistribution Bill, his election, which have no bearing on the resolutions now before the committee. I am accused of being hostile to this railway project, which I deny. Never have I been opposed to a reasonable grant in aid to this road. Let the ratepayers be given the just treatment they are entitled to. This company receives a subsidy from the Quebec Government and the citizens of that province will be called upon to pay their quota of taxation for this subsidy which is not necessary for the company to carry on the work. The tax-payers of St. Damase and others will have to pay their share of these taxes. Should the company persist in sticking to the provincial grant they ought to renounce the federal subsidy. I contend that with a grant of $3,200 per mile, adding thereto a portion of the capital, the company has sufficient means to build a railway which meets with no obstacle worth mentioning on the line, with hardly a bridge 100 feet long to build. It has been given to understand that the road would be built up to Sorel, in the course of next summer. I hardly believe in the realization of such a hope; and, next session, should the road not be built up to Sorel, it will be ascribed to the want of a subsidy. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier) has misrepresented my views when he contended that I objected to the building of this road on the ground that it favoured the city of St. Hyacinthe. Never, in my life, have I evinced the least hostility to the progress and welfare of this city; and, whenever I could give them a lift I have done so with heart and soul. I consider the United Counties Railway Company should waive their claim to the subsidy granted by the Quebec Government, and stick to that of the Federal Government. A last word, Mr. Chairman. I would ask the hon. member from St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier) to spare himself, in the future, the trouble of distorting and disfiguring my arguments; he may also dispense with mentioning my controverted election trial, and such questions as are irrelevant to the question. It is not by resorting to such tactics that he will justify his demand in favour of the company he has taken under his protection, and whose defender he has constituted himself before this House.

To the Ontario, Belmont and Ottawa Railway Company, for 10 miles of their railway, divided into two sections: first, from the Belmont iron mines to Marmora Village; second, from Marmora Village to the junction with the Ontario Central Railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $32,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why are two sections necessary?

Mr. HAGGART. The object is to reach the Belmont iron mines at the earliest possible moment, and it can be accomplished by making two sections of the road.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it a broad-gauge road?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from Coe Hill or Gilmore to Bancroft, via L'Amable, or as near thereto as practicable, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I propose to change the description from Coe Hill or Gilmore to Bancroft to this description, "or some point between Coe Hill and Gilmore to Bancroft."

Mr. McMULLEN. Is Bancroft named after the individual who was connected with the graving dock at Kingston?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) will be able to trace out Bancroft, which he found difficult in times past.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from Lake St. John towards Chicoutimi, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $81,040.

Mr. HAGGART. This is for 30 miles of the Chicoutimi branch of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company. The first 23 miles are almost completed, and considerable work has been done on the other 8 miles. The total subsidy granted is $90,000, of which $30,060 have been paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this a broad-gauge line?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, for 50 miles of their railway from the Victoria Branch of the Midland Railway to the village of Bancroft, in the county of Hastings the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, and again granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $145,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What portion of the road has been finished ?

Mr. HAGGART. Ten miles of the road have almost been completed, and a considerable amount of work has been done on another ten miles. $15,000 of the subsidy has been paid. The hon. gentleman will get full information in the Railway Statistics. They show the location of the whole railway.

To the Beauharnois Junction Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from St. Martin towards St. Anicet, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, not exceeding in the whole $3,500.

Mr. HAGGART. This road runs from St. Martin towards St. Anicet, through the county of Beauharnois, a distance of about thirty miles. The road is now completed and in operation, being worked by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The original subsidy amounted to $96,000. It is all earned and paid except $35,000, which lapsed before the road was finally completed. Part of the present resolution is a revoke.

To the St. Stephen and Milltown Railway Company, for 3½ miles of their railway, from the town of St. Stephen to the town of Milltown, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $11,200.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this three miles a spur from the main line of the road, or is it part of the main line ?

Mr. HAGGART. This road is situated near the western boundary of New Brunswick, near St. Stephen. It is merely a revoke of the subsidy already granted.

Mr. HAZEN. Milltown is a suburb of the town of St. Stephen, situated on the River St. Croix, in the county of Charlotte, on the border between New Brunswick and the state of Maine. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs into St. Stephen. There is a large cotton mill at Milltown, and extensive lumber interests, and this road would, I presume, extend from St. Stephen up to Milltown. It will practically be a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was it necessary to make this grant in order to secure the building of that extension ?

Mr. HAZEN. Evidently, the road has not been completed with the grant.

To the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from the east bank of the River St. Charles to or near Cape Tourmente, in the province of Quebec, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $30,400.

Mr. LAURIER. How much of this road has been completed ?

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. The road starts from the city of Quebec and runs down along the north bank of the River St. Lawrence to Cape Tormentine. The subsidy granted by 52 Victoria, was $96,000. The first twenty miles of the road is about completed, and the work is in progress on the last ten miles. The company have earned and been paid $65,600, leaving a balance of $30,400 now sought to be revoked. The subsidy was $3,200 per mile.

To the Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway Company, for 62 miles of their railway, from Hull station towards Le Désert, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $89,248.

Mr. HAGGART. This road starts at Hull, and runs up towards Le Désert. The subsidy voted by 52 Victoria was for sixty-two miles. The road passes through a rough, heavy country, but good progress has been made with the work. The company have earned and been paid $230,752. About half of the road is under traffic, and fifty miles about completed, leaving twelve miles to complete.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the subsidy per mile ?

Mr. HAGGART. I think $5,000,

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the distance to Le Désert ?

Mr. HAGGART. Sixty-two miles. Fifty miles of it is completed, and the remaining twelve miles are in progress.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is not intended at present to extend it beyond sixty-two miles ?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

To the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from the village of Tara, or some point between Tara and Hepworth, to the town of Owen Sound, in the province of Ontario, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is work upon this in progress ?

Mr. HAGGART. Nothing has been done upon this road. It runs through the county of Grey, in the province of Ontario, to Owen Sound.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the prospect as to the construction of it ?

Mr. MASSON. By-laws have been passed by municipalities granting $98,000. The cause of the delay in commencing the construction was that the town of Owen Sound and the other municipalities that passed these by-laws, insisted on having a clause that the Grand Trunk, which has control of the rest of the Georgian Bay line, should operate this road and make it part of their system. Owing to the unfortunate position the Grand Trunk took in reference to their branches a few years ago, that company has refused from time to time to come into that arrangement. The by-laws were extended a few months ago with the view of presenting the matter before the Grand Trunk meeting in April next. It is hoped that at that meeting they will adopt the recommendation of their manager and take hold and build the road. This subsidy and the municipal grants have hardly built fifteen miles of the road. Surveys have been made. Many years ago the line was laid out from Tara; and a branch was made from Tara to Hepworth.

To the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, for 80 miles of their railway, from Lunenburg, on the east coast of Nova Scotia, westward to a point in the district of New Germany, together with a spur about $\frac{3}{4}$ mile long to Bridgewater railway wharf, and from a point $33\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Lunenburg and running to Middleton, on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Acts 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, and 51 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole \$4,500.

Mr. FORBES. May I ask who is it that is making application for that subsidy?

Mr. HAGGART. The Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, I suppose.

Mr. FORBES. Is the Minister sure of that?

Mr. HAGGART. I think that is the company. They petitioned for more than this; they say more than this is due them; but this is all the department will give. I wish to amend the clause so as to add the words, "upon the paid subsidy," after "the Windsor and Annapolis Railway."

Mr. FORBES. What line is that?

Mr. HAGGART. This road is built and in operation. It is a first class railway as regards construction and rolling stock.

Mr. FORBES. Is the Minister aware that that road has passed out of the hands of the company?

Mr. HAGGART. No; I do not think it has passed out of the hands of the company. I heard that it was in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. FORBES. The Minister is not fully informed on the subject, then. Has any protest ever been filed on behalf of other claimants for this subsidy with the department, or has any caveat been lodged against the payment of this sum to the company?

Mr. HAGGART. Other claims have been made for the subsidy. I think no caveats have been issued.

Mr. FORBES. The Minister will allow me to tell him that the road was originally subsidized for this company under another name, which was changed to the Nova Scotia Central. They mortgaged it for $1,000,000, and issued their bonds and raised a portion of the money on the strength of those bonds. They subsequently failed to go on with the work to a satisfactory conclusion, and some of the inhabitants of the county of Lunenburg, including two capitalists, stepped in and got an assignment of these bonds. They approached a bank and raised the necessary capital to build the road. Then the original company failed to redeem these bonds, default was made in the interest, a sale took place under the mortgage, and under foreclosure powers, the road passed out of the hands of this company entirely, and became the property of another company, a company not having anything whatever to do with the present applicants for this balance of subsidy. Those bonds were tendered in payment of the road. The road passed out of their hands by order of the court, title was given, the deed was made, and everything in connection with the road was passed over to these subsequent purchasers, representing the bank who held the bonds, and had advanced money for the completion of the road. Up to that time, probably, the company had a right to make a claim for the subsidies. About that time, as the Minister himself has said, a claim was made that the subsidies be paid to these purchasers, these third parties, the owners of the road. The Minister will see, therefore, that the company has no right whatever to a single cent of this subsidy. I find on page 45 of the Report of the Railway Department:

By the Subsidy Act of 1887, 50-51 Vic., ch. 24, the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company were subsidized for 34 miles of their railway, to an extent not exceeding \$108,800. Under an Order in Council of the 16th September, 1887, the company were admitted to contract on the 17th of October, 1887, the works to be executed being a line of railway from Lunenburg, on the east coast of Nova Scotia, westward, to a point in the district of New Germany, together with a spur, about $\frac{3}{4}$ mile long, to Bridgewater railway wharf, the whole to be completed by the 31st of December, 1889.

By the Act 51 Vic., ch. 3 (1888), the grant of a further subsidy, not exceeding \$147,200, was authorized for 46 miles of the company's railway, and under an Order in Council of the 9th October, 1888, a contract, dated the 15th October, 1888, was executed covering a line of railway $39\frac{1}{2}$ miles, starting from a point $33\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Lunenburg, and running to Middleton, on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway; the work to be completed by the 31st of December, 1890.

During the past fiscal year, July 1, 1890, to July 1, 1892, payments were made to the extent of \$8,300, bringing the total payments to this company up to the sum of \$230,700 at date, 31st December, 1892, covering the distance from Lunenburg to Middleton and the spur to Bridgewater, a total of $73\frac{1}{2}$ miles.

Now, I would like to ask the Minister how it is that that subsidy of $8,300 was paid after notification to the department that there were other claimants than the company entitled to this subsidy, and whether the Minister himself or any member of the Government is aware where those subsidies went?

Mr. HAGGART. In what year was the payment made?

Mr. FORBES. Just a few weeks after the general election of 1891.

Mr. HAGGART. I never heard of it at all.

Mr. FORBES. Your own blue-books say it was made.

Mr. HAGGART. It must have been before I entered the department. All I can say is that if the parties are not entitled to it, they will not get the money. The money will be paid on the advice of the Minister of Justice to the parties who are entitled to it.

Mr. FORBES. An error has been made in the past, and I want to caution the Minister about the future payment. Will the Minister ask his deputy when that payment was made? It is on page 45 in Roman figures.

Mr. HAGGART. We do not pay subsidies in my department at all. We give a certificate to the Finance Department or the Auditor-General that the work has been completed according to contract, and the Finance Department pays the amount on the advice of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. FORBES. I want to know what date the payment was made.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not got it.

Mr. FORBES. I am informed by those who own the road and are entitled to the subsidy that they never got a dollar of it.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It has been decided in the Justice Department that the parties who now have control of the road are not entitled to the subsidy. I was employed as attorney by the parties who now have control of the road, to apply to the Minister of Justice to get the subsidy paid to them, and it was decided by the Justice Department that they were not entitled to the subsidy under the lien they had upon the road, and under that lien the road was sold; and under that lien by which they got their title they had no right to the subsidy that was remaining unpaid. After having got that information from the Justice Department I so informed my clients Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who gets the money?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It goes to the Central Nova Scotia Railway Company, the original builders.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who gave the lien?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Yes, but the lien did not cover the subsidies that were remaining unpaid. The matter is in law yet, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. FORBES. I am aware that the member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) is familiar with these things, and he probably could tell where these subsidies have gone. The hon. member knows as well as the Minister that this road was actually built by Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer, who advanced the money for it.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Wade & Eisenhauer never advanced a dollar; they advanced some credit.

Mr. FORBES. Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer borrowed from the banks, but they did not advance from their own pockets all the capital necessary. The lien was given upon this road for their benefit, as the bonds were held as collateral for advances to them and they advanced the money.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). The lien was not given to them.

Mr. FORBES. The lien was put upon the road by the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). That is correct.

Mr. FORBES. It is only quibbling for the hon. gentleman to raise that point. A trust company in New York held the lien, but the money was advanced by Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer upon the strength of the bonds for which this lien was given. The mortgage was made to the trust company in New York, and the bonds were put in the safe of the Halifax Banking Company, of Halifax. Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer discounted their notes with these bonds as collateral. The money was paid to Wade & Eisenhauer, and they checked it out to pay the labourers on the road. The subsidies were really assigned to these men, and the company was bound to give them the subsidies, but the latter subsidy never reached the parties who advanced the money to build this road.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). The hon. gentleman had better learn something about the road.

Mr. FORBES. I do not want to find fault with the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, but I want the railway policy of Nova Scotia kept clear of all shady transactions, such as I believe has cast a certain reflection upon the construction of this road. And there is no one knows more about where the subsidies have gone to than the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills).

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I know all about it.

Mr. FORBES. I am told by Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer and by the Halifax Banking Company as well, that upon the strength of getting the subsidies from the Government, the bank made these advances and Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer undertook to become security. Part of the subsidies paid by the Government during the construction went to the bank to relieve Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer's security. After the road was about completed, the company made default in its bonds, and therefore, it became necessary for Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer to look for their money. They only held the bonds of the road as collateral, and the Nova Scotia

Railway Company did not pay up the loan. The bank called upon Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer; they, in their turn, called upon the company to pay the money they had advanced. It was repudiated by the company, and they, Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer, in their turn, called upon the trust company in New York to foreclose the mortgage. This was done at the request of Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer. The road was sold and bought in by them at sheriff's sale under this mortgage. The company protested and took an appeal to the Nova Scotia Supreme Court and then to Ottawa. They lost their case, and the Supreme Court of Canada has decided that the road, together with all the securities had passed to the purchasers, Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer. After that date this subsidy of $8,300 was paid to the company and neither Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer nor the bank ever got a dollar of it. I understand from the Minister that the same company is making another application for this subsidy of $4,500 with which we are dealing, and I also understood him to say that Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer had filed their protest against payment of this subsidy to any person but themselves or the bank. I trust, with these facts before the Government, with regard to this subsidy, that they will be on their guard. The Minister has said that he will not pay out a dollar without the authority of the Minister of Justice, and I want further inquiry made by the Government into this matter. Perhaps the Minister of Justice, acting under the advice of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) together with such advice as the Minister of Railways gives, which he in turn gets from the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills), will not inquire further into the facts concerning the subsidies for this road. The money which is being voted to-night does not belong to the applicants for it. That is a fair and square statement, and I believe that the documents in the department will prove it. This subsidy of $4,500 should go to Wade & Eisenhauer or to the Halifax Banking Company. I would ask the Minister if he is granting this money upon the petition of the railway company that he should stay the payment of it, or else let the vote stand over until he makes further inquiry.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I can only say that I do not wish any one to have the impression that these nasty little insinuations that have been made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes) have any foundation in fact whatever. They are nothing but dirty little insinuations.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Well, I will take back the word "dirty" and I will say first-class insinuations, well worthy of the party from whom they emanated.

Mr. LAURIER. Order.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Well, I will say that everything is first-class that comes from the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes).

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has no right to use any such language. It is utterly unparliamentary; and I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, that no such insinuations should be made.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). What shall I take back?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman had better take back everything about insinuations.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Suppose I say he did not insinuate anything?

Mr. FORBES. I made a bold and clear statement.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). The bold statements, which I said before were insinuations, are utterly unproved. If there was anything shady it was not on the part of the railway company. The company have acted in a square, "bona fide" manner with reference to the country and with reference to the reception of these subsidies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). Who are the receivers?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Mr. Wade is the receiver at the present time.

Mr. FORBES. He was your client.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). He was my client. I billed him with his bill and he refused to pay it, and I intend to sue for it. He sent me a telegram at one time and asked me if I was at liberty to be employed by him on the Nova Scotia Central Railway matter. I replied that I was. Then he wrote to me to see whether this subsidy was to be paid to his firm or to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company. I got the very best information I could, and laid their claim before the proper authorities, and it was understood that they were not entitled to it, but that the subsidy should be paid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, of which Mr. Wade was duly informed, and he was called upon to pay his bill, which he did not pay, and which I intend to sue him for. The way the matter stands now, and has been decided, is this: The Nova Scotia Central Railway Company is entitled to this balance, and the department has been advised of that, and that is the reason why this resolution is on the order paper. This road is regarded as the best built subsidized road in the Dominion. Where only wooden bridges were asked for, iron bridges have been built; where culverts were made, they were made with granite and fillings-in; there is no trestle work on the road at all. And, so far as shady transactions are concerned, there are none, because the money has been well expending, as you can find by referring to the reports of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman I may briefly state that this is simply the balance of a subsidy that has been earned. The department certifies to the performance of the work before the money is paid. If any one has a better claim than the railway company, it has to pass through the Auditor-General's department, and the Auditor-General advises the Finance Department to whom the money should be paid.

Mr. LAURIER. The Auditor-General cannot have anything to do with this.

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly. Not a single account is paid to any parties unless he sees that they are entitled to it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Auditor-General has simply to see that those to whom the House votes the money get it. Did I gather from my hon. friend from Annapolis that he is the solicitor of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Yes; I am now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman seems to have been the solicitor for both sides. Some people think that it is not in accordance with professional etiquette to hold briefs for both sides.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Not at the same time.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will not discuss it with the hon. gentleman; but I would not consider that I had a claim against a client if I had taken a brief on the other side. As a matter of pure professional etiquette, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, whether he thinks it right to speak of a shady transaction when he speaks of a client upon information that he must have received in confidence.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I say that if there were any shady transactions they must have been before I was employed.

Mr. FORBES. With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Annapolis, I treat them with the scorn they deserve, remembering the sources from which they emanate. With regard to this subsidy, it has been earned, for the railway is one of the best built in Canada. It was built on the credit of Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer for the railway company. The company became insolvent, and now they come back and ask that this balance of the subsidy be paid to them. It is not the whole balance, according to the blue-book of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the contention of the railway company, but the contention of the department is that it is the whole.

Mr. FORBES. As the hon. member for Queen's (P.E.I.) has well said, the Auditor-General's duty is only to see that the money is paid to the parties authorized by Parliament to receive it.

Mr. HAGGART. I think his duty is further, to pay the money to the parties entitled to it according to law.

Mr. FORBES. According to the law of Parliament. The hon. Minister should not evade the point in that way.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not intentionally evading it.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister knows that if Parliament directs the payment of the subsidy to any particular person or company it must go to that person or company, and the Finance Department has nothing to do but to pay it. If the hon. gentleman looks at the reports of the Supreme Court of Canada, he will know that the Nova Scotia Central Railway, together with all its claims to this subsidy, has passed out of the control of the company, and has gone into the hands of Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer; and they are entitled to every dollar of this subsidy, and it should be paid to them. The hon. member for Annapolis is now in the employ of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, after having discharged his old clients, Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer. There are two sides to that question, and I leave it to the hon. gentleman and those gentlemen to settle between themselves. But I want to point out that one of the subsidies was paid about election time, some time between the 1st of July, 1890, and the 1st of July, 1891. I say that that subsidy never reached the parties who were entitled to it, who advanced the money to build the railway, and, I believe, on the statement of the Minister of Railways, that the same parties are applying for this subsidy who got the former subsidy, and who are not entitled to it. I do not deprecate the payment of the subsidy, if it is fairly earned; but all I want to do is to keep these railway subsidies clear from any improper transactions. I want the people of Nova Scotia to feel when they make a contract with the Government, that it will be carried out by the Government in good faith, and that the Government will pay the subsidy to the parties who are entitled to it. The history of this railway is a history of negligence on the part of the department. A great deal of the money has been lost, purely for want of caution and care. The road could have been built for one-third less per mile than it cost. Now, if we can show that the reason of this—

Mr. FOSTER. We paid nothing more than the subsidy.

Mr. FORBES. It has not reached the parties who are entitled to it. That is not the point. Perhaps the subsidy is not half large enough. If it be necessary in the interests of the province the subsidy should be increased, but I want the subsidies to go to the persons entitled to them. The hon.

member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) has spoken warmly. If he could speak out his mind freely, he could assist the Minister of Railways in showing to whom these subsidies should go.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It has been stated that these subsidies, or the Dominion subsidy never reached the parties to whom they should go, and that the road has cost much more than it should have cost. It is true the road has cost more than it should, but it never got properly straightened out until the Dominion Government got hold of it. It never got into good working order until the subsidy was granted by this Parliament. When that was granted, the construction immediately commenced, and the road was put through with all speed, and the work was done in a most thorough and substantial manner. I know that this was done and that is the report of the engineers in the department. For fifteen or sixteen years, under the Nova Scotia Government, it dragged along with one man, one wheelbarrow, one spade, one ox, and one horse, doing the work and hundreds of thousands of dollars wasted. When the present company applied to this Government and got the subsidy, the road commenced to go ahead, and good solid work was put in, a substantial road was built, and the public got good return for their money. It is a matter of law entirely who gets the balance of the subsidy. It is the bank that advanced the money, and the subsidies were paid to the bank in order to cut down the liabilities of the Nova Scotia Central Railway. Wade & Eisenhauer backed the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company besides having these subsidies lodged in the Halifax Banking Company. Then, as has been said, Wade & Eisenhauer did not foreclose that mortgage, for it was the Trust Company of New York who held the mortgage. They foreclosed it, and that mortgage did not include these subsidies, as I am told by those who investigated into and had the deciding of this matter. And that lien, not including these subsidies, then the present receivers had not a legal title to the subsidies, but the subsidies, or whatever remains of them—I do not know the exact sum—go to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company.

Mr. LAURIER. An insolvent company.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). No; they are not insolvent. They have got a lien upon their road. They are endeavouring to sell their bonds, and just as soon as the company attempts to sell their bonds, then the receiver, or somebody else, attacks these bonds and they cannot sell them, and the thing has been in abeyance for three or four years, the one party trying to get ahead of the other with reference to the sale of the bonds. It is a mere matter of law as to who gets the balance of the subsidy. It has been decided that the receivers, Wade & Eisenhauer, do not get it.

Mr. FORBES. By whom?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). By the Department of Justice.

Mr. FORBES. When?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Some months ago. The Minister of Justice met Mr. Wade himself in Halifax and gave him his decision upon the matter, and it was upon that decision that I gave up working for Wade & Eisenhauer with reference to it. And now it is just simply a mere matter of law. If the law says that Wade & Eisenhauer are entitled to this subsidy, they will get it. If the law says the Nova Scotia Central should have it, then they will get it. The subsidy has been earned.

Mr. LAURIER. It has been earned and must be paid, but the resolution asks Parliament to pay it to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, which is insolvent. The hon. gentleman disputes that statement, but the very fact that the road is in the hands of a receiver shows it is insolvent. Why is it in the hands of a receiver? Because it could not pay its liabilities. Simple justice requires, under such circumstances, that the money should be paid to the credit of the company and not to the company itself. Otherwise a cheque will be issued by the department in favour of the company which is insolvent, and the creditors who ought to be recouped for what they advanced will be defrauded. The hon. gentleman says there is a question of law. There may be; but from the statement which he has made, I do not really know to whom the money should be paid, whether to Wade & Eisenhauer or to somebody else. At all events, one thing is certain, the money should not be paid to this company, which is insolvent and has no right to receive it. Therefore we should not pass this item until the Minister of Justice brings the documents to show to whom the money should be paid. But one thing is certain, the money cannot be paid to this company but to the creditors.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) said that six months ago the Minister of Justice told him that Wade & Eisenhauer were not entitled to this. But at that time a suit was pending as to the right of the mortgagee to foreclose, and the bonds were, I think, "in escrow" for the Halifax Banking Company. Subsequently it was decided that the foreclosure must proceed, and the title passed to Wade & Eisenhauer. Therefore, I think, the decision of the Minister of Justice should be taken as it would be given under the facts existing to-day and not those existing six months ago.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) has made some strictures which, I think, were unfair, unmerited and ungenerous, with reference to the gentlemen who have control of this railway, Messrs.

Wade & Eisenhauer. He stated that if there were any dark doings in connection with this road, they were due to these gentlemen. Later on he told us that this road would never have been built had it not been for the Dominion Government, that it was in a languishing condition up to the time the Dominion subsidy was granted. Will the hon. gentleman say that the Dominion subsidy built that road?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). If it were not for the Dominion subsidy that road would not be built to-day. That I am sure of.

Mr. BORDEN. If it had not been for the subsidy of the provincial Government, which was very much larger than the Dominion subsidies, and if it had not been for Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer, who took their financial existence in their hands to build this road, it would never have been built. The hon. gentleman makes nice distinctions between what he calls "pledging their credit" and "finding the money." He took exception to the statement made by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Forbes), that Messrs. Wade and Eisenhauer found a large portion of the money with which this road was built. He said that it was not so; but that they had pledged their credit for it. What is the difference? These gentlemen are liable to-day to a banking company for a considerable portion of that money. I believe that something like $500,000 was advanced by these gentlemen towards the construction of this road. It was well known that this was a difficult and expensive road to build, and it could not have been built, even by the large subsidy given by the Provincial Government and the ordinary subsidy given by this Government, unless these were supplemented by this large sum which Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer provided for this company. When they did that, they took, as they believed, certain security. I believe the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) himself will not deny that on at least one occasion, perhaps more, he was employed by Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer, and succeeded at different times—

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). No; never.

Mr. BORDEN—in getting from this Government certain portions of the subsidy which were paid over to the credit of Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer or paid to the Halifax Banking Co—

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Never.

Mr. BORDEN. Very well, then; he got certain portions of the money paid into the Halifax Banking Company.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I never was employed by Wade & Eisenhauer, with the exception of the time I tell you.

Mr. BORDEN. On one occasion, then, the hon. gentleman was employed by Wade & Eisenhauer. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he never was instrumental in procuring from the Dominion Government, from the Dominion Treasury, any payment of any portion of this subsidy to Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer or to Mr. Wade or Mr. Eisenhauer?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). There never was a dollar paid to Mr. Wade or Mr. Eisenhauer.

Mr. BORDEN. Or to the Halifax Banking Company? That is the same thing exactly, because Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer were pledging their credit to the Halifax Banking Company.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). The money was paid to the Halifax Banking Company.

Mr. BORDEN. Which had previously advanced on the credit of Wade & Eisenhauer.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). They would never have got their credit but that the subsidy was to be given.

Mr. BORDEN. Exactly; the hon. gentleman admits the point. That is the very point I am trying to make. They took every security they could take, and which they had a right to have. They completed this road out of their own money; advanced half a million of money, and now it is proposed to divert this subsidy away from these men and give it to a company which has ceased to exist as a company, which is, in fact, insolvent. I say this is a most extraordinary proceeding; I cannot understand it, and it seems to me the course pursued by my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) is an extraordinary one. He says that up to a certain point he was working for Wade & Eisenhauer; but when he discovered the view of the matter taken by the Department of Justice then he thought it would be wiser to become attorney for the people who were likely to get the money. This is the position the hon. gentleman occupies, and a most extraordinary position it seems to me for a professional gentleman to admit that he occupies with reference to parties engaged in law on opposite sides.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I can say this: I think Mr. Eisenhauer went into this enterprise with good motives to get that road built. I am quite sure he did. I think he would do his best to get out of the matter to-day with just the amount that his credit is pledged for.

Mr. BORDEN. That is all he wants.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). However, he has been led on a little further than he thought he was going in the first place, I think. So far as my employment by Mr. Wade is concerned, after the foreclosure was made, he telegraphed me to meet him at the station. I met him, and he asked me if I was at liberty to be employed by him in reference to the subsidy, to obtain the balance of the subsidy for him. I told him I was. This was the fact. I then did everything I could. I put their case fairly before the parties who had this matter in hand to get it for them. It was decided that they were not entitled to this money, and I asked Mr. Wade for further instructions. I got no further instructions. I sent in my bill to Mr. Wade; he did not pay it, and I dropped him.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And took a retainer on the other side.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I have not taken a retainer on the other side.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood the hon. gentleman to say he had.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I said I had been acting for the Nova Scotia Central.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And so the hon. gentleman has had a retainer on both sides.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Not in the same case; they are two different employments entirely. So far as that is concerned, I know the duties of a professional man just as well as any hon. member of this House, and my character as a professional man is before the public in Annapolis, and as I am ready to have it criticised at any time, notwithstanding anything that may be said in this House, or anywhere else, with reference to it. I do not care one snap of my finger where this money goes. I consider it a proper thing that it should be voted, because it is money earned. It has lapsed, and it should be brought back, so that it can be got by the proper parties, whoever they are.

Mr. LAURIER. Who are they?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It has been decided they are the Nova Scotia Central Company.

Mr. LAURIER. Why do you pay it to them?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I don't have anything to do with paying it.

Mr. LAURIER. When I say "you," I mean the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I don't know; the Government can answer for that themselves. The Minister of Justice has decided, or his department has decided—I know that of my own knowledge—that, so far as this lien is concerned, and so far as the title that Messrs Wade & Eisenhauer have upon this road, it does not cover the balance of this subsidy. That is all I know about it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would not attempt to give any opinion upon the question, one way or the other, not having the facts before me. But the money appears to be due by the Dominion of Canada to some one. The question is, to whom it shall be paid. It appears plain that the company we are paying it to, is an insolvent company, that they originally built this road on advances made by the Halifax Banking Company, which advances were guaranteed by Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer, that they gave bonds to cover the payment of these moneys, and that the trustees sold the road under the trust deed, and that it is now in the hands of a third party. I would imagine that the road, the franchise rights, would pass to the assignee. Of course, I would not give an opinion upon that, not having seen the papers. But I would suppose that, at least, in view of the contradictory statements made here, the hon. Minister would bring down the opinion of the Department of Justice, and the facts upon which it is based. And if the Department of Justice has decided, on a properly submitted case, that this Nova Scotia Central Company is entitled to the money, and not the assignee of the road, who received it on the sale under the bonds, we will have to pay it. But it would certainly be a very curious thing if the Nova Scotia Central Company, owing this money, as they do, to the parties who advanced it, are to get the money, and the parties who advanced it are to lose it. That would seem to be a moral wrong. "Prima facie" it would seem morally wrong, and I hope the hon. gentleman will settle the matter by agreeing to let this stand and bring down the opinion of the Minister of Justice, with the case on which the opinion was given; because the hon. gentleman knows that no one can accept a casual statement which the Minister is reported to have made in a Halifax hotel. No doubt, the hon. gentleman sincerely believes that the Minister made some remark, that some decision had been given in favour of one party or the other. But we cannot accept these hearsay statements. There must be an official statement given by the Department of Justice, to justify the Government in paying this money to a bankrupt company.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps I am entirely wrong in my opinion, but I will give it for what it is worth. The contract was made with the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company. Under that contract we are bound to pay them a balance of $4,500; if not legally, we are morally bound, because they performed their part of the contract. It may be true, as the hon. gentleman said, that the company's interests have been sold out and passed to another party. It is true, that that party may not be able to enjoin the Government to pay them the amount which is voted to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company; but surely, if any other party has a claim upon the money, or if the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company have a claim upon the money, they cannot be enjoined from receiving it. Then, it is simply a question for the Minister of Justice to decide. It may be, as the hon. gentleman says, that it can only be given to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company; but if the receiver has a right to the money, surely he can enjoin the railway company from receiving it from the Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I give no opinion upon that point. It is plain that the exchequer here can be enjoined from paying it.

Mr. HAGGART. But if the Nova Scotia Railway Company have no right to receive the money, they can be enjoined from receiving it. Therefore, it is simply a legal question for the Justice Department to say whether the Nova Scotia Railway Company, not being enjoined from receiving the money, are entitled to it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has stated that the Justice Department has given an opinion. I want that opinion, and I think we are entitled to it.

Mr. HAGGART. I will bring it down in a day or two. The hon. gentleman must remember that I have not stated that the Justice Department gave any opinion at all. My department says that the duty is simply mechanical, that, after finding out that the work has been completed, they send a statement over to the Finance Department, and, when the Finance Department have consulted the Justice Department, and are satisfied that the money should be paid, it is paid. As I am bringing down a couple of other resolutions in a day or two, I have no objections to let this matter stand.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 18 miles of their Railway, from a point at or near New Glasgow or St. Lin, to or near to Montcalm, in the province of Quebec, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 54-55 Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole $25,600.

Mr. LAURIER. How much of this has been completed ?

Mr. HAGGART. This section of the road runs from New Glasgow towards Quebec, 18 miles. The first 10 miles is completed, and the subsidy, amounting to $3,200 a mile, has been paid. The whole subsidy granted is $57,600, leaving the balance now asked for $25,600.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from at or near Montcalm to the Canadian Pacific Railway between Joliette and St. Felix de Valois, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This is another section of the same road. It is run from Montcalm, connecting with the Joliette branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. No work has been done. It is purely a revote of the subsidy granted by 53 Victoria.

To the Montfort Colonization Railway Company, for 21 miles of their 3 feet gauge railway from Lachute, Jérôme, or a point at or near St. Sauveur, on the line of the Montreal and Western Railway, to Montfort and westward, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $67,200.

Mr. HAGGART. This road runs through a very difficult country, and is purely a colonization road. I was unable to enter into a contract with them, because, as I stated last session in reply to an hon. gentleman who asked me, all these grants can be given only to roads that are built on the ordinary gauge of the country. This is for the purpose of enabling me to enter into a contract with them for the three-foot gauge.

Mr. McMULLEN. Any person who has had any experience with narrow-gauge railways, will admit that they have been failures. If this road is to be of any use in the way of an extensive carrying trade, it will be necessary to widen the gauge.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McMULLEN. We had an experience in our section of country with narrow-gauge roads, and in every case they were nothing short of a nuisance. They all had to be widened to four feet and a half gauge.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that amount paid to narrow gauge roads ?

Mr. HAGGART. We have paid that amount to narrow gauge roads where they are purely colonization roads.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would the Minister say what are the gauges and alignments of this road ?

Mr. HAGGART. When they entered into the contract they are limited to certain gradients and a certain curvature. Sometimes the contour of the country does not permit them to come within the cast-iron contract. We have to have a special report from the head engineer of the department, showing reason why it is impossible, without great expense, to construct them in that manner ; and sometimes the contract is altered by Order in Council. They have filed a location survey. I understand from the chief engineer that the gradients are very heavy indeed, some being as high as 100 feet or over to the mile.

To the Maskinonge and Nipissing Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Maskinonge or Louisville towards the parish of St. Michel des Saints, on the River Mattawa, in the province of Quebec, and for 15 miles of their railway from the north end of the 15 miles afore referred to towards the parish of St. Michel des Saints, on the River Mattawa, in the province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidies granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, and 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Nothing has been done on this road. It is simply a revote of the original subsidy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have you any reasonable ground for believing that this will be built ?

Mr. HAGGART. They seem to have an idea that the road will be built. They give all the verbal assurance that can be given.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who is the promoter of the road ?

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Parker, who has an establishment back in the country. The other people connected with it are all local men, who are interested in the lumber trade and colonization in the district.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is any company formed and stock subscribed and paid up, so as to afford the basis for entertaining the hope that the road will be built?

Mr. OUIMET. It is not surprising that the road has not yet been built because a Government bonus of $3,200 per mile would not go very far in building a road in that difficult country.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the road serve a valuable tract of country when built?

Mr. OUIMET. It will be a valuable district when opened up, but it is difficult to reach; it lies towards the Laurentian Mountains.

To the Parry Sound Colonization Railway Company, for 40 miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sundridge, or some other point on the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, in the province of Ontario, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole $97,600.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. gentleman explain this proposed subsidy?

Mr. HAGGART. This road extends from the Northern Pacific Junction Railway to Parry Sound. A contract has been entered into. Ten miles are almost completed and ten other miles are far advanced towards completion. $30,400 have been earned and paid, leaving a balance of $97,600 to be devoted.

Mr. CHARLTON. By what company will it be operated?

Mr. HAGGART. I think Mr. Booth has obtained control, and it will become part and parcel of the Parry Sound Railway. I have now the particulars regarding the Great Eastern Railway. The Great Eastern is a railway from Dundas, in the county of Huntington, to Lévis, the length under construction being sixty miles. There is a branch from St. Lambert's to Rouse's Point, thirteen miles, and other branches, which are described in the railway statistics.

Mr. LAURIER. That explanation cannot apply to this road. This road runs from Sorel east, and all the information the hon. gentleman has given is respecting a line west of Sorel.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the information in the department. Municipal bonuses were given to the Great Eastern.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand it, the Great Eastern runs east from Sorel.

Mr. HAGGART. This road runs from Montreal to Sorel.

Mr. OUIMET. The control of the whole line now rests in the hands of Mr. Leduc and his associates.

Mr. LAURIER. The road now owned by Mr. Leduc and others is the Montreal and Sorel, running from Montreal to Sorel. The road for which a subsidy is now demanded is a road supposed to run from Sorel east towards Quebec, crossing Yamaska, Nicolet and other counties. None of the information supplied by the Minister applies to that road, but only to the Montreal and Sorel.

Mr. OUIMET. Yes; but the same men have control of the other road for the purpose of having a through line from St. Lambert to Point Lévis.

Mr. LAURIER. What does it matter whether the same gentlemen have control of the road or not? We are asking information with respect to this particular company, and as to what work has been done.

Mr. OUIMET. A description of the road has already been given to the House. I understand the point the hon. gentleman wants to ascertain is whether this road is controlled by men who are able to build the road and not by men of straw, that is to say, men who would do justice to that part of the country, which the leader of the Opposition has stated to be a rich farming country, deserving of railway accommodation.

Mr. LAURIER. But Mr. Leduc and his associates do not own this part of the road.

Mr. OUIMET. He, with Mr. Ball, Mr. Shaughnessy and others, control it.

Mr. LAURIER. There is absolute confusion in the explanation given. What we wanted to know was the names of the promoters of the company. We have been given the names of the owners of the Sorel road, and I would like to ask what they have to do with the present application? What work has been done on this road?

Mr. HAGGART. I have given the details.

Mr. LAURIER. The second explanation did not agree with the first.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a misunderstanding.

Mr. LAURIER. The only work which has been done by this company is some work between the Richelieu and the Yamaska rivers, and between the Yamaska and the Nicolet rivers. What I want to know is what are the names of the promoters of this company? and now we are told that Mr. Leduc and Mr. Tourville and Mr. Fortier, all men of great financial ability, are in possession of the Montreal and Sorel Railway. What in the name of common sense has that got to do with it?

Mr. OUIMET. I said that these gentlemen in possession of the Montreal and Sorel Railway also have a controlling interest in this company which is to build that line from Sorel to Point Lévis, and the Montreal and Sorel and this other road are to be joined together and form a through line from Montreal or from St. Lambert to Point Lévis. That is what I want to explain.

Mr. LAURIER. When I asked him who are the promoters, the hon. gentleman said Mr. Ball, and now he names Messrs. Tourville, Leduc and Fortier. Who asked for this subsidy? Is it Messrs. Tourville and Leduc of the Montreal and Sorel Company or is it the Great Eastern Company?

Mr. OUMET. It is the Great Eastern Company. Nobody can apply for the renewal of a grant except those who applied for it first. As the hon. gentleman knows, a company may change every year or every six months, depending as it does on the parties who have a controlling interest in it. I say now, this is to be a through line, controlled by men of large means and ultimately, I think, it will be a much more useful road than if it were controlled by the old company, of which Mr. Armstrong was the director, and who perhaps has had to release his interest in it. The people who control the whole scheme are men of means and capital, who will certainly make a success of the enterprise.

Mr. LAURIER. It is because companies are constantly changed that it is very important for us to know who are the parties who compose the company when a subsidy is applied for. I told the hon. gentleman when he applied for the subsidy this afternoon that the company, as far as my information goes, was a bogus one. The hon. gentleman told me Mr. Ball was in it. Well, Mr. Ball is a responsible man; but my information is, and I still believe it, that Mr. Ball has clothed with his own respectability a bogus company. Now, at the eleventh hour, the Minister tells us that it is no longer Mr. Ball, and no longer the Great Eastern Company, but Mr. Leduc and Mr. Tourville who at present control the Montreal and Sorel, who are interested in this road. If Messrs. Tourville, Leduc and Fortier are really the applicants for this subsidy it places a very different phase upon the application; but if it is the old company who apply I object in toto to granting this subsidy. If, on the other hand, the applicants are responsible men, well and good, but let us have the information. I am not satisfied with a mere verbal statement at the eleventh hour, and which is in contradiction of what was said before. Let us have the application and the names of the applicants and then we will deal intelligently with the question.

Mr. OUMET. I suppose the hon. gentleman will be satisfied if I tell him that we will give him the information when the resolution comes again before the House. I would just point out that bogus companies cannot build the road for a subsidy of $3,200 a mile. This subsidy will be utterly useless in the hands of any one who has not the means to supply the necessary capital which will be about $14,000 per mile, and if you include the building of bridges, I should say that sum would not be sufficient to build the first-class road demanded by these resolutions. There may be names in this company to whom the hon. gentleman would object, but, after all, what have we got to do with that, when he has stated himself that the country through which this road is going to pass, is a country that can support a road and which deserves subsidies from the Government. I really do not see the great interest the hon. gentleman has, beyond the expectation that this road will be built as soon as possible by men who will have the money to build it. If there is a man amongst the shareholders of the company to whom the hon. gentleman objects, I do not think that the committee should take that as a real objection to the granting of a subsidy. If men have come in as stated, like Messrs. Tourville, Fortier and Leduc, it is with the intention of making the enterprise a success.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says it is immaterial whether we give the subsidy to a bogus company or not. I say it is very material, and the very history of this company shows it. This is a most deserving road, I admit. It will open a large and fine section of country which has no railway communication at present, but here is this old company possessed of the subsidy year after year since 1885, and in that six years that bogus company has built about ten miles of railway, but have not even laid the rails upon it. The hon. gentleman told us to-day that we are going to continue to give subsidies to that bogus company. I say it would be an outrage to do so, because that company stands in the way of having this railway completed. Let a good sound company come before Parliament for a subsidy which would guarantee that the road would be opened; but do not let us give any more subsidies to this bogus company. The hon. gentleman has not reflected, when he says that it is immaterial whether we give the subsidy to a bogus company or not. If the Minister satisfies me that this subsidy is applied for by such substantial men as Messrs. Fortier, Leduc and Tourville, I, for my part, have no objection to granting it, but unless he satisfies me of that I shall oppose it as far as I can.

Mr. HAGGART. I have given all the information I possibly could to the hon. gentleman about this railway. I have given him the distance built, the amount under construction, the line they leased, and the subsidies from the Quebec Government and the municipalities.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. He stated that the parishes of St. Antoine and St. Denis are giving subsidies. They have not given a cent to this road, because they are not upon the line of this railway. The information of the hon. gentleman is in regard to the Montreal and Sorel line, and they are quite different.

Mr. HAGGART. The information I have given to the hon. gentleman is in regard to the Great Eastern, as stated in the Railway Statistics. The Great Eastern is under construction 60 miles. Between Yamaska and St. Francis, 6½ miles have been built, and 6 in the other direction. They have leased the Montreal and Sorel Railway, 45 miles. I may state to the hon. gentleman that the information that is given in these statistics as to the amount of subsidies given by the different municipalities to the Great Eastern Railway are furnished to the department upon sworn statements, as I am informed by my deputy. I can give the hon. gentleman, if he desires, the names of the directors.

Mr. LAURIER. Who are they ?

Mr. HAGGART. They are filed in the department. In every instance we require the applicants to give the names of the directors, and I think also the amount of stock and bonds subscribed and the names of the subscribers. I know nothing about the directors, whether they are men of means or not. The application was made by the Great Eastern Railway Company for the renewal. I will let the resolution stand, and I will furnish the hon. gentleman with all the information we have.

Committee rose and reported progress.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS — PRECEDENCE.

Mr. FOSTER moved :

That Government Orders shall have precedence on Monday next after questions put by members, and that one hour shall be given to private bills after routine proceedings on that day.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose that motion is made on the expectation that we shall close by Easter ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of my hon. friend to the importance of taking up at an early day the Bill to amend the law respecting the Electoral Franchise, because the time for the annual revision of the lists is approaching, and if the law is to be amended, it is most important that parties throughout the country should be informed at once of the changes that are to take place in the law.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give my hon. friend the information to-morrow, or at the latest on Monday.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 12 midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 25th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NORTH AMERICAN CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. MASSON moved that owing to the advanced period of the session Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the North American Canal Company, be placed on the Orders of this day for consideration in Committee of the Whole, immediately after routine proceedings.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why should this be done ? I understood the leader of the House fixed an hour on Monday for private Bills.

Mr. MASSON. It is only with the object of getting it before the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is well not to violate the rule.

Motion withdrawn.

LEGISLATION FOR THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DAVIN. I move the suspension of Rule 31. I want permission of the House to present two small Bills. At this stage of the session it will save two days. I have good reason for wishing to have them printed. I had intended to bring them forward early in the session, but owing to certain circumstances I did not do so. One is a Bill to repeal chap. 52 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, an "Act respecting homestead exemptions in the North-west Territories." Another is an "Act to amend the Act entitled the Territories Real Property Act." I may say that these Acts refer to the one subject, a subject of great importance, and no harm will be done if Government legislation goes on the same lines. It may be of some advantage to have them printed. I have given a great deal of thought to this subject, and if the Bills commend themselves to the Government the Government can adopt them and incorporate them in their legislation, or place them on the Government Orders as the case may be.

Motion agreed to, and Bills read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 115) to further amend the Act respecting Joint Stock Companies to construct works to facilitate the transmission of timber down rivers and streams.—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 114) respecting the Speaker of the Senate.—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 116) to repeal the Homestead Exemption Act.—(Mr. Davin.)

Bill (No. 117) to amend the Territories Real Property Act.—(Mr. Davin.)

Bill (No. 120) further to amend the Revised Statutes respecting Canned Goods.—(Mr. Wood, Brockville.)

Bill (No. 121) to amend the North-west Territories Act.—(Mr. Daly.)

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 118) to amend the Act respecting the Royal Military College. He said: It is to legalize the appointment of additional professors who have been employed for some years, but not strictly in accordance with the original Act.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a very late period in the session to introduce such a Bill.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I will send my hon. friend in advance a copy of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House do, on Monday next, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved,—That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—

To the Jacques Cartier Union Railway Company, for extending and completing their railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, a subsidy of $20,000.

To the Oshawa Railway Company, for a line of railway as follows:—From Port Oshawa to a point at or near Edmonson's mill site, near Mill street, in the town of Oshawa, (this portion being known as the "Lake" section of the said railway); thence to a point at or near the town hall, in the town of Oshawa, and thence to the Oshawa station of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, (this portion being known as the "Town" or "Northern" section of the said railway)—the amount remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 54-55 Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole $22,400.

2. Resolved,—That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized,—except the subsidy to the Oshawa Railway Company, which shall be paid as follows: $12,400 on the completion of the "Town" or "Northern" section, and the balance of the said subsidy, being $10,000, on the completion of the "Lake" section of the said railway.

3. Resolved,—That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connected with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

Motion agreed to.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman informed the House that to-day he would give us information about some more correspondence concerning the treaty with France.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg leave to lay on the Table of the House additional correspondence. I do not think this correspondence is very important. The hon. gentleman can look at it. I think it would be well not to order it printed until he sees whether it is necessary.

Mr. LAURIER. As we are sitting on Saturday, it means that prorogation cannot be very distant; therefore we are entitled to know from the Government whether they intend to ratify the treaty with France.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my hon. friend to defer that question until Monday. If he will ask the question on Monday, I think I will be able to tell him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You want to sleep and pray over it.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). That would be a desecration of the Sabbath.

FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman last evening, in answer to a question from me, told us that he would give us some information to-day as to what he intended to do with the amendments to the Franchise Act.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the Bill on the Paper in relation to the Franchise, I may say that after considering the matter, and seeing the end of the session so near, the Government has decided not to go on with the Bill this year.

Mr. LAURIER. Matters are to stand as they are?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. It is intended to introduce a short Act to do away with the necessity of revising the list.

SUPPLY—TWO CENT POSTAGE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair, I wish to make a few remarks upon a question of which I gave notice in the early part of the session, that notice having been dropped from the Order Paper, namely, the propriety of reducing the rate of letter postage from three to two cents. I wish to lay before the Government some of the reasons which I think would warrant them in adopting this reform. It will be a change very greatly in the public interest, a very popular change with the public. If we examine into the circumstances of countries who have taken this step and compare them with our own, we will be able to arrive at the conclusion that the change would involve only a temporary increase of the deficit, and would result not only in the restoration very speedily of the revenues to the old standard, but would result immediately in benefit to the public of Canada to a very great extent. If we examine into the statistics following the British reduction of postage in 1840 to one penny, it will be seen that the result was vastly to stimulate correspondence. Under it the number of letters passing through the British Post Office in 1840 was 75,908,000. That number increased seven-fold in seventeen years, the number rising, in 1857, to 504,421,000. In 1892 the number increased to 1,767,500,000, or twenty-three-fold, from 1840. In addition to that number of letters, there were 241,500,000 postal cards, 495,000,000 books, and 162,000,000 newspapers. If the business of the British Post Office was so greatly stimulated by the reduction of the letter postage that the number of letters increased twenty-three-fold, while the population of the country increased less than 100 per cent, if the operation of that reduction was, as it is shown to have been, to increase the number of letters posted to each individual in the United Kingdom from 34 in 1881 to 46 in 1892, I think we may be warranted in saying that the result of the British experience in this matter would certainly warrant us in giving favourable consideration to a proposition to reduce the domestic rate of postage in Canada. But we have the experience of a country nearer at hand whose circumstances are more nearly identical with our own, and whose experience would prove a better criterion by which to conduct our postal affairs than that of Great Britain. I refer to the United States. In 1883 the rate of postage in the United States was reduced from 3 to 2 cents. In 1885 the weight of letter postage was increased from $\frac{1}{2}$ an ounce to 1 ounce. Another change made in the United States was in the direction of greatly increased free delivery. The revenue for 1883 was \$45,508,000. That was the year of the change. In the following year the revenue was \$43,325,000, a reduction of \$2,283,000, or 5 per cent. The reduction shown in the second year, which was the first full year of the reduction, brought the revenue down to \$42,560,000, or a decrease, as compared with the last year under the 3 cent postage, of \$2,948,000, or $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. In 1887, four years after this change was made, the revenue was \$48,837,000, or an increase of 7 $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent over the revenue under the 3 cents rate. Last year the revenue of the Post Office Department, instead of being \$48,000,000 odd, was \$70,930,000, an increase of \$25,420,000, or 56 per cent increase in the gross revenue of the Post Office Department, this increase being the result of a decrease of 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent in the rate of postage, and an increase of 100 per cent in the weight of letters chargeable with single rate. The increase for the nine years previous to 1883, when the reduction took place, was as follows: Revenue for 1874, \$26,471,000; 1883, \$45,508,000. This increase, \$19,037,000, or 70 per cent, occurred in nine years without change or break in rates. The increase during the subsequent nine years amounted to \$25,422,000, or 56 per cent, with 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent increase of weight liable to single rate. The revenue in 1874 was \$26,471,000; expenditure, \$32,126,000, or a deficiency of \$5,655,000, the percentage of deficiency on revenue being 21 per cent. The revenue in 1883 was \$45,508,000; expenditure, \$43,282,000, showing a surplus of \$2,226,000, the percentage of surplus over revenue being 5 per cent. The revenue in 1892 was \$70,390,000; expenditure, \$76,980,000, showing a deficiency of \$6,050,000, the percentage of deficiency on revenue being 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, as against 21 per cent in 1874. This deficiency is largely explained by the great improvements that have taken place since 1883. Letter delivery in cities and towns has increased as follows: 1883, free delivery offices, 154; 1892, 568, increase 414, or 268 per cent. In 1883 the carrier force numbered 3,680 men; in 1892, 10,737 men, the increase being 7,057 men, or 192 per cent. In 1883 the expense of free delivery was \$3,173,000; in 1892, it was \$9,966,000, an increase of \$6,493,000, or 200 per cent. The railway post office car statistics were as follows: 1883, expenditure \$1,599,000; 1892, \$2,930,000, being an increase of \$1,331,000, or 83 per cent.

The railway post office clerks show an increase of 66 per cent, the number in 1883 being 3,855, as compared with 6,417 in 1892. The railway post office clerks' expenses were, in 1883, $3,688,000, as against $6,319,000 in 1892, an increase of 71 per cent. The Postmaster-General of the United States, Mr. Wanamaker, refers in his report to the efficiency of the staff, and says that the army of post office clerks, 6,000 or 7,000 in number, equal in discipline the best army in the world. The aggregate increase in free delivery, railway postal cars and railway postal clerks' expenses, was as follows:—1883, expenditure, $8,460,000; 1892, $19,215,000, an increase of $10,755,000, or 127 per cent. The cost of the department in 1874 was $32,126,000; in 1883, $43,282,000, an increase of $11,156,000, or 35 per cent. In 1883 the expenditure was $43,282,000; in 1892 it was $76,980,000, an increase of $33,698,000, or 78 per cent. To state these facts in summary form, I may say there was 33½ per cent reduction in the rate of postage of 1883, and 100 per cent increase in weight liable to single rate in 1885, and there was 5 per cent surplus in 1883 and 8½ per cent deficiency in 1892. There was 78 per cent, or $33,698,000 increase in expenses since 1883, against 35 per cent, or $11,156,000, for the nine previous years. I have already drawn attention to the fact, that a very large increase has taken place in the number of free delivery offices, the number being increased from 158 to 546. It is now proposed to introduce the system of free delivery into villages, and even into country districts in the United States. The estimated receipts of the department for 1893 are $78,742,000, and the estimated deficiency, $1,552,000. While that deficiency exists, the people are getting their letter postage for $35,000,000, in round numbers, less than they would have had to pay for it under the 3 cent rate of 1883. The estimated receipts for 1894 are $85,120,000, and it is estimated that there will be a surplus in the same year of $872,000. It is then proposed to take into consideration the propriety of adopting a 1 cent postal rate for the United States; and, whether it is adopted then or not, it is certain that in the very near future there will be a 1 cent rate, with village and country free delivery.

Now, I would ask whether this experience of the United States would not richly warrant us in reducing our postal rate from 3 cents to 2 cents? Last year our expenditure was $3,316,000, and our revenue, $2,652,745, a deficiency of $663,375. Now, on the basis of the American experience of 5½ per cent deficiency in the first year of the reduced postage, 6½ per cent deficiency in the second year, and 7½ increase in the fourth year, I wish to point out the probable effect on our revenue of a change in the rate from 3 cents to 2 cents. In the second year there would be an increased deficiency in the postal revenue of

Mr. CHARLTON.

$172,400, but in the fourth year we would recover and would have a reduction in our deficiency of $193,600. While we would secure the reduction in the postage rate at the cost of $172,400 in two years, on the basis of the American experience, we would at the outset give to the public of this country an advantage amounting to nearly $1,000,000, in a lower rate of postage. We would obviate another difficulty. There is another feature of the proposed reduction in the rate that would still further reduce the deficiency, and that is the fact, that vast numbers of Canadian letters are posted in the United States. This is done all along the border. A very large proportion of the business correspondence of Windsor is posted in Detroit, simply because there is a saving of 33½ per cent effected by doing so. The same is the case anywhere along the border between the two countries; and I am told that, besides this, a very considerable proportion of the business correspondence of Montreal and Toronto is sent to be posted in the United States. I imagine that we have very little idea of the shrinkage of the Canadian postal revenue, resulting from this practice. This would be obviated, if the lower rate were adopted. We would have our letters posted at home, and that loss, whatever it may be, would be saved to the revenue of the Post Office Department. But, leaving that matter out of consideration altogether, I repeat that judging by the experience of the United States, though we would have an increase in our deficiency in the second year of $172,400, in the fourth year we would have $193,600 more revenue. There is no doubt that this change would be a boon to the people of Canada—one that would meet with universal favour; and even admitting that the charge upon the revenue would be increased, as it would temporarily, the advantage to the public would be so infinitely greater than the increased charge upon the revenue, that we ought to make the change without delay. We naturally feel a little pride in keeping abreast of our neighbours. The fact of the United States having the 2-cent rate while we have the 3-cent rate, does not flatter my pride as a Canadian, however others may regard it. We are carrying at 2 cents all the letters from the United States delivered in Canada, and we are charging 3 cents on all the letters sent from this country to the United States.

Now, if the Government are afraid of incurring the inconsiderable expense involved in changing the rate of postage from 3 cents to 2 cents, I think I could set them on a plan by which they could save money. If they would repeal that useless and objectionable Franchise Act it would pay the deficiency in a year. We have spent a great deal of money in useless railway subsidies, for the express purpose of securing political influence a great deal more money than would give the people of Canada this great boon. We take more money out of sweating contractors for election funds, ten times more, than would be necessary to give the people this boon. In these ways, by honest and economical administration, by lopping off abuses that exist, we could give the people of Canada the letter rate of 2 cents; and we have the experience of the United States showing that the revenue would speedily recover the loss resulting from the change and in the end yield a surplus. In the United States, in 1883, the postage rate was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents, and since that time the revenue has increased, in round numbers, $25,500,000. If the result has been so satisfactory that the Americans are now discussing the propriety of again reducing the rate 50 per cent and putting it at 1 cent instead of 2 cents, I think their experience warrants us in taking the same step at once, and it is only lack of courage and public spirit on the part of the Government that prevents them doing so. Therefore I beg to move:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof: "this House is of the opinion that the domestic, and the American rate of postage may with due regard to the public interest, be reduced to two cents per letter of one ounce, or less, in weight."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, the question which the hon. gentleman has just brought to the notice of the House is one of great importance; and when I became Postmaster-General I considered it my duty to look into it with the view of ascertaining, from what had been done in other countries, what might possibly be done in Canada in the direction of reducing the postal rate upon letters in Canada and letters sent from Canada to other countries. I must, however, call the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact, which I do not think he will dispute. I claim that, proportionately to our population, Canada has more and better postal facilities than any country in the world. I claim that we have, in proportion to our population, a larger number of post offices than they have in the United States, and I claim, further, that in localities where, in the States, they have postal service but once a week, we have, in similar localities here postal service twice or three times a week. The hon. gentleman knows that we cannot compare a people of 75,000,000 letter writers with a population of 5,000,000 such as we have in Canada. In the United Kingdom the change was not made upon the ground that the previous postage rates were too high, but it was really and practically a readjustment from a departmental stand-point of the postage; and it was considered, under that rearrangement, that the postage should be reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents. With regard to the United States, I can tell the hon. gentleman that when the change was made there, the postal revenue was far in excess of the expenditure, the surplus amounting to $2,091,992, and great pressure was brought to bear upon the Government to reduce the postage, on the ground that the people should benefit by the surplus revenue. What was the result of that reduction? Immediately after the rate was lowered from 3 cents to 2 cents, there was an enormous deficit in the revenue. The result was quite different from what had been anticipated, and instead of equalizing the revenue and expenditure, it left the department with a deficiency for nine months of $3,079,000. The next year there was still another deficit, the excessive expenditure being $6,756,000; and there has been an excess of expenditure over revenue ever since the change took place. It will be seen, from the statistics which are submitted to the House, that the circumstances under which the reduction took place in the United Kingdom and those under which the reduction took place in the United States were quite different. In England the reduction took place as a matter of arrangement from a departmental stand-point; in the United States it took place from the fact that the revenue was far in excess of the expenditure. When we come to Canada I find, from information collected in the Post Office Department, that our revenue would suffer a loss per annum of about $750,000 if we were to reduce the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the hon. gentleman make any allowance for increase in business?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes. No doubt the increase of business would reduce the deficit; but in the United States, where there has been a large increase in business, the result is quite different from what was anticipated by those who went in most earnestly for this reform.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is different in this respect, that it is more favourable than was anticipated.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. More than was anticipated by the hon. gentleman, perhaps. But I can assure him that that reduction resulted in a deficit of $6,000,000 a year, compared with a surplus before the reduction. If that is a favourable result, the hon. gentleman is more easily satisfied than I am. Instead of revenue coming into their public coffers, the United States found themselves facing a deficit of $6,000,000 a year. Now, there is only one way in which that deficit of $750,000, which the change in our postage would bring about, could be reduced or minimized. Suppose Parliament decided to reduce the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents, the only way of reducing the deficit would be by reimposing postage upon the newspapers and printed matter, and I must confess I know of no reason, from a departmental stand-point, why this should not be done. I believe that the state is put to enormous expense in carrying this printed matter all over the country without postage. Not only do we lose the postage, but it becomes necessary for the department to increase the room on railway cars and carriages which carry this bulky matter. Every regulation of the department has been framed by men who have vast experience in postal matters, such as my deputy, Lieutenant-Colonel White, but it is impossible, with the best possible regulations, to prevent a large quantity of printed matter being carried through the post office, which really is not entitled to be carried as newspapers. I see no possibility of framing regulations such as would prevent this fraud taking place. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that along the border between the United States and Canada, a lot of letters are transferred from one place to another which are not paid for. I must call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that, under the postal convention existing between the United States and Canada, provision has been made for that. It is provided that :

Where mail matter is posted in either country in order to avoid payment of the rate of postage paying in the other country, the country to which such correspondence is mailed may charge an additional rate. That regulation has been carried out and acted upon in every case which has come under the notice of the officials, and it has been treated in the same manner by both countries. Now, Sir, however anxious I may be to reduce the postage rate and give every possible facility for the exchange of written communication between the people of Canada at the most moderate possible price, I claim that when it is established, as I have satisfied myself it is, that there would be a loss of about $780,000 a year to the Dominion treasury, it would be a most imprudent step, from the stand-point of the monetary interests of Canada, to make this reduction. Under these circumstances, I fear we shall have to wait until a change of circumstances, which may, and, I think, will come, enables the department to suggest and carry out this reform.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I feel disposed to believe that if the reform I find in this motion were carried into effect, it would result in materially increasing the revenue from the postal service. I see that in England, where they have the penny postage service, they have a very large surplus. Of course conditions there are more favourable than here. I will just read to the House the condition of the revenue and expenditure, showing the surpluses they have had in England for several years past :

	Gross Revenues.	Working Expenses.	Surplus Revenue.
1887.....	£8,471,198	£5,580,141	£2,591,057
1888.....	8,705,237	5,933,820	2,771,517
1889.....	9,102,776	6,062,902	3,039,874
1890.....	9,474,774	6,286,263	3,208,511
1891.....	9,851,078	6,687,089	3,163,989

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

These figures might encourage us to establish the reduced rate of postage here. Another matter, which I think deserves attention, is the registration fee of 5 cents. I think this fee should be abolished. It is not in the public interest, and it does not guarantee any greater safety to the letter. This enormous fee should be diminished ; it would be a benefit to the public, and I believe the revenue would be improved.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the indulgence of the House to reply to one or two points in the address of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman had better adhere to the rule. Something may be said by the hon. gentleman which would be likely to provoke a reply.

Mr. CHARLTON. I supposed I was entitled to a reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I may say that I am in favour of the motion of the hon. gentleman, if the revenue of the country can at all sustain his proposition, and the hon. gentleman's statistics of the experience of the United States seems to point in that direction. I think the principal point upon which we proceed in the matter of postal accommodation is to try to make the postal service as nearly as we can self-sustaining, because it is not a tax in the sense in which any other imposition upon the community is a tax. The charge for postage is the payment for service which the Government render to the public. The Government undertake the duty of carriers with regard to a specific matter, and for the service they perform in the interests of those who send letters by mail a certain charge is made. Now, the position taken by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is that this charge is at such a figure that it prevents many from using the Post Office Department for the purpose of communicating with friends on business or private matters to the extent they would if the postal rate was more moderate than it now is. I would be sorry myself, Sir, to vote for a reduction that would have the effect of preventing the reduction, to any very considerable degree, of general taxation ; because if we were obliged to make a choice between a reduction of postage for service actually rendered to the parties and a reduction of taxes which are a burden upon the community, I think you should choose a reduction of the taxes. But, as I understand the figures given by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), they go to show that the increase in the business of the postal department in the United States is very much larger than the increase of population or the increase of wealth during the same time. If that is so, then it goes to show that there can be no very great risk in reducing the postal charges. But if the reduction should impose a permanent deficit on the earnings of the postal department compared with the services rendered, then I quite admit that it is a reduction that we ought not to make. But, so far as I can judge, from the information given us by the Postmaster-General, and the information given us by the hon. member for North Norfolk, I think we are safe in supporting the proposition.

Motion negatived on a division.

MILITARY PENSIONS.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I wish to make a few remarks in regard to a matter on which I feel confident of securing the endorsement of the hon. members present, because it is a subject which must appeal strongly to their sense of justice—I refer to the necessity that exists for the Government to devise some scheme to give the permanent corps of the militia adequate pensions. I am sorry this matter has not fallen into more able hands than mine, but I will try to place the matter favourably before the House, and rely more on the strength of my case than on any argumentative ability I may show, to obtain a favourable verdict at the hands of hon. members on behalf of the men for whom I plead. As we all know, the policy of this Government, and of all Governments, and it is also the wish of the people, has been, and is still, against maintaining a standing army, as they do in most other countries; but they are perfectly willing to rely on the protection and assistance of the militia force of Canada. This being the case, it was deemed necessary by the proper authorities that a certain number of men should be duly enrolled who should be properly trained and drilled in all the duties of a soldier, so that they might be capable of instructing the ordinary militia of the country; in fact, be able to turn the raw recruits that enlist in the militia of Canada into effective soldiers. In 1871, when most of the Imperial troops were withdrawn from Canada, two batteries of garrison artillery were formed, named A and B Batteries, comprising 100 men each, I believe, which were stationed, respectively, in Quebec and Kingston. Since then it has been found necessary to establish several more companies and batteries in different parts of the country, until now the whole permanent force of Canada comprises a thousand men, whose duties are to train and teach the militia men of the city and rural corps, and also to act with them in case any trouble should arise, either within our own borders, or from without. These thousand men are the permanent corps of Canada, and it is of them that I wish to speak to-day. The distinction between the permanent corps and the ordinary active militia of Canada must not be lost sight of. An ordinary active militiaman who is enlisted in a city corps, is obliged, by Act of Parliament, to put in twelve full drills of three hours each during the year. He does this, as a rule, in the evenings, and also on Saturday afternoons; so that the hon. gentlemen can see that his connection with the militia force is very little detriment to him and interferes but little with his usual profession or occupation. The men enlisted in the rural corps, as a rule, are called out for twelve continuous days of drill, once in a year, and, therefore, are taken away for only a short time from their ordinary occupations. As a matter of fact, the majority of these men put in far more drills than they are obliged to do by law, but that number of drills they must put in. Now, the permanent corps are situated quite differently. They are on duty, day in and day out, for the whole year. They live in barracks; they pass all their time in making themselves efficient and in training the officers and men of the ordinary militia force. They are, to all intents and purposes, regular soldiers, just as much so as the men who enlist in the English, French or German armies. It is their profession. It is impossible for them to follow any other employment in which to make money for themselves and their families; and so they are totally dependent upon the pay they receive from the Government. This being the case, will any hon. gentleman here, deny their just claim to be treated as fairly and as liberally as other men of the same position in this or any other country? Of course, we must take into consideration, also, the financial ability of Canada. Now, let us look for a moment and see how the officers of these corps are paid, in comparison with officers in other similar positions. I have here a table showing the approximate pay of officers in the English army, the United States army, the North-west Mounted Police of Canada, and the permanent corps of Canada. I find that a lieutenant-colonel, after he has served for twelve years in the British army, gets pay amounting to $133.25 per month, and may retire on a pension of $101.25 per month. In the United States army, a lieutenant-colonel, after twelve years' service, gets $225 per month, and can retire on $120 a month. The Commissioner of the North-west Mounted Police, a position of about the same rank as a lieutenant-colonel, gets $216.80 a month, and can retire on a pension of $52 a month; whereas, a lieutenant-colonel in the permanent corps only gets $120 a month, and gets no retiring pension at all. A major in the English army, after twelve years' service, gets $117 a month and a retiring gratuity of $5,832. A major in the United States army gets $250 a month, and can retire on $187.50. An Assistant Commissioner in the North-west mounted police gets $133.33 per month, and can retire on a pension of $32 per month; whereas a major in the permanent corps of Canada only gets $105 per month without any pension whatever. A captain in the British army, after twelve years' service, gets $84.60 per month, and can retire on a gratuity of $5,832. A captain in the United States army gets $180 per month, and can retire on $150 per month. A superintendent of the North-west mounted police gets $116.66 per month, and can retire on $28 per month; whereas a captain in the permanent corps only gets $105 per month without any pension. After twenty years' service, a lieutenant-colonel in the English army gets $133.25, and can retire on a pension of $121.50. In the United States army he gets $333.33 per month, and a retiring pension of $250 per month. A commissioner of the North-west mounted police receives $216.80 per month, and a retiring allowance of $86.64; whereas a lieutenant-colonel in the permanent corps in Canada only gets $120 per month, and no pension, just the same pay as when he has served only five years. A major in the English army, after twenty years' service, gets $117 per month, and a pension of $81. In the United States a major gets $291.67 per month, and a pension of $213.75. An assistant commissioner of the North-west mounted police gets $133.33 per month, with a retiring pension of $53.32; whereas a major of the permanent corps gets $105 per month and no pension. Now, I have shown the pay that officers in the different ranks get in those different services. I may state that the figures I have given are based on infantry pay. In the English service, and in the American service, the engineers, cavalry and artillery are paid on a far higher scale; but in our permanent corps, the pay is exactly the same for those arms of the service as it is for the infantry, which is, to say the least of it, a little hard. Now, let us look at the district staff. I find that an assistant adjutant-general of Imperial troops stationed, say, at Halifax, or some other foreign station, is paid at the rate of $3,500 per annum, besides having a pension according to the length of service and the rank he holds; whereas the pay of one of our deputy-adjutants-general is $1,700 per annum, and no pension. That is $3,500 and a pension, against $1,700 and no pension for the same service. A brigade-major in the Imperial service is paid $3,000 a year, with a pension, according to his rank and service; our brigade-majors are paid $1,200 a year, and no pension, or $3,000 a year and pension, against $1,200 a year and no pension. A staff paymaster in the Imperial service is paid $2,230, with a pension, according to his rank and service; and a district paymaster in our own service gets the magnificent sum of $600 per annum, for which he has to give bonds for $20,000, himself in $10,000, and two sureties in $5,000 each. He is also supposed to be superintendent of stores, for which in many cases he is paid nothing extra. Besides the pay that I have quoted, these officers receive certain allowances, which, however, amount to very little, such as fuel and light in barracks; but as these allowances are based on the English allowances, it makes no difference whatever in the comparison between the two services.

Mr. Prior.

I think I hear some hon. gentlemen say: "Well, they should get along on that." But those hon. gentlemen should reflect upon the peculiar position in which an officer in one of these permanent corps is placed. In the first place, he must live as a gentleman. He must dress well, be neat and tidy at all times, in order to give an example to the men who are under him. Then he is obliged to do a certain amount of entertaining. As we all know, there is a continual stream of callers upon officers in barracks, and it is impossible to let them go away without offering them some sort of civility, the expense of which is drawn out of the officer's pocket. Then again, he is supposed to be present at all official ceremonies in the neighbourhood, and he is put to a certain expense in that way. He is also, if he is an energetic officer, always anxious that his men should be foremost in all manly sports, such as rifle shooting, cricket and football; and in order to enable his men to make a good appearance, he is often obliged to put his hands into his own pocket. Last of all, there is the item of the uniform, which is a very serious one. When I state that a uniform for a lieutenant-colonel, say, in the artillery, costs between $500 and $600, you will readily see that it is a most serious item for a man who is on small pay. Moreover, I have always observed that officers in these permanent corps seem to run on the same rule as curates, the smaller the pay the larger the family they have. Under these circumstances the uniform is a most serious item in the housekeeping. How different are the cases of a man in the Civil Service, or an ordinary business man? These have no uniform to buy, and unless they wish, they need not spend one cent in entertaining the public, or even their own friends. Now, let us see how the non-commissioned officers and men fare in a permanent corps. The men enlist for three years, and as soon as they are enlisted they are provided with a uniform and a complete outfit of clothes and boots. They have their rations provided them, of course, and they live in barracks. They get the large sum of 40 cents a day as pay. They also get from 2 to 7 cents a day as good conduct allowance, which, taken in connection with their daily pay, amounts, we will say, on the average, to about 43 cents per day. If a man behaves well and gets promoted to be a corporal, he gets some 70 cents a day; a sergeant, 80 cents a day; a staff-sergeant, $1 a day; and a sergeant-major, $1.25. It is not quite so bad for non-commissioned officers, although they have a lot of things to buy; but take men on 47 cents a day, and that is all the money they have to buy tobacco and sometimes a glass of beer, and any light articles of clothing they want, and it is readily seen that they have no chance to put by anything for a rainy day, or even to pay insurance on their lives. Now, let us take the North-west Mounted Police, a force that was brought into existence four years later than the permanent corps of which I have been speaking. The officers of the North-west Mounted Police are on the superannuation list the same as the Civil Service. They are paid in proportion much more than the officers of the permanent corps, and therefore they can afford to pay into the superannuation fund. But the constables in that force are far better off than the men in the permanent corps. In that force a constable, if he behaves himself well, and stops with the colours for twenty years, is entitled, on retiring, to a pension of $102.20 per annum. If he remains twenty-four years he gets a pension of $132.56, and after thirty years he gets a pension of $188.85. It is not very much, but still it is something to men of that class. So we see that there is a strong inducement for good men to remain in the service, if only for the pension. In this connection I may state that anybody who is at all conversant with a military organization, knows perfectly well—and I am sure that the military gentlemen who now hear me will back me up in the statement—that good, reliable non-commissioned officers, are the backbone and mainstay of any military organization. You cannot do without them. You may have poor men in the ranks, but you cannot do without good non-commissioned officers. As matters stand now in the permanent corps, it is found almost impossible to retain a good non-commissioned officer, as they have nothing whatever to look forward to. Take, for example, a young man joining at the age of twenty-two or twenty-three. After five or six years service, he may be promoted as sergeant. He is well up in everything that goes to make a soldier, and is simply invaluable to his regimental officers and to his company. But what outlook has that man got? He is in the prime of life, but the longer he remains in the force the more and more unfit he becomes for taking up and pursuing successfully any of the civilian occupations. That is equally true of officers as well as of the men, for the very nature of their occupation totally unfits them in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred to take up the ordinary routine of a civilian's life and make a livelihood for themselves and families. If these men saw a pension in future for them, even a very small one, they would be willing to stay in the service as long as they were physically and mentally fit to be there. They would make a splendid lot of non-commissioned officers, men of mature years who would command the respect of the men under them, and would be, in every way, qualified for the positions they held. The mere knowledge of a pension in the future would keep many men right who now go to the dogs when they join the ranks. This is one of the strongest arguments I can bring before the House, this keeping of good non-commissioned officers in the force, and it is one of the strongest arguments that can be brought forward in favour of a pension scheme for this organization. As it is now this man is no lung ahead of him. He is totally unfit to fight his way in the world if he leaves the ranks. I know that in some of the corps the officers find it almost impossible to get good "non-coms" to take such positions as canteen-sergeants and pay-sergeants. The officers themselves are responsible for the money that these men handle, and unless you have a first-class man to take those positions, the officers almost invariably have themselves to meet certain losses incurred by those men. Now, Sir, a soldier in our days is in a very different position from a soldier of twenty-five years ago. In those days a young man of position who had got plenty of muscle and money could take his place in front of his men with an old non-commissioned officer behind him who would whisper the word of command in his ear, and push him into his place at every turn. But now-a-days when we have these breech-loading guns, with all their scientific paraphernalia, almost as hard to understand as an electrical engine, an officer must work and drill and study from morning till night, if he intends to keep up to his work, and be fit for the position he holds. This is also the case with the men—a much higher grade of intelligence is now required, and I think every inducement should be held out by the Government to enlist the best class of men possible. This House has approved of pensions being granted to members of the North-west mounted police, and what is the result? The result is that we have in the North-west to-day, if not the very finest, one of the finest bodies of men to be found anywhere in the world. The Civil Service are granted superannuation allowances, and this is one reason why the ranks of the service are filled. The United States Government give pensions, and very liberal ones, to their soldiers, although they do not grant any to the Civil Service. England and every other civilized country grants pensions, and therefore I feel the greater confidence in making an appeal for pensions to be granted in this country. Let us look at the Military College at Kingston, a college of which we are all proud. The Imperial Government grant a certain number of commissions in Her Majesty's army to graduates of that college. Take two young fellows as examples of graduates of that college. One takes a commission in the Imperial army and the other joins a regiment in his native land. The graduate who goes to England is sent to different parts of the world and obtains promotion more or less rapidly, and knows that when the time comes he will be able to retire on a comfortable pension for the rest of his life. How different is the other case. Although he possesses equal ability, promotion comes to him very slowly, and all the time he is haunted by the idea that after serving the best years of his life he may be thrown out of employment any moment, and he may not have a dollar on which to sustain himself the rest of his life. I ask the Government if they do not think this is a stain on our national honour. Let us treat our militia force as liberally as we can. If the permanent corps are not worth maintaining, let us do away with them; if they are, let them be granted some pension in their later years of service. It is the fashion for a great many people to pool-pool the militia. I have heard that time and again, but those are the very men who, if any trouble arises, take precious good care to keep in the background while other men are turning out to fight. Rudyard Kipling says:

Oh makin' mock o' uniforms that guard you while you sleep,

Is cheaper than them uniforms, an' they're starvation cheap;

An' hustlin' drunken sodgers when they're going large a bit,

Is five times better b'usiness than paradin' in full kit. Then it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy ow's yer soul?"

But it's "Thin red line of 'eroes," when the drums begin to roll.

We aren't no thin red 'eroes, nor we aren't no blackguards too,

But single men in barricks, most remarkable like you;

An' if sometimes our conduct isn't all your fancy paints, Why, single men in barricks don't grow into plaster saints.

While it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' Tommy fall be'ind;

But it's "Please to walk in front, Sir" when there's trouble in the wind.

I do not pretend to say on what lines a pension scheme should be drawn up by the Government. When the first batteries were formed Sir George Cartier told several of the officers they could not do wrong in joining the force because the Government were bound to look after them. Since then they were led to believe that pensions would be granted them, and if rumour be true, not long ago a pension scheme was drawn up in the Militia Department; but the plan was never made public. But be that as it may, the hon. Minister of Militia and the General Officer commanding the forces could, if they would devote an hour or two to the subject, draw up a scheme that would be fair and equitable to all concerned. I hope they will do so without further delay. Before, however, such a scheme is put into force, I trust it will be generally understood that all the appointments to and promotions in the permanent corps will be made upon a strictly military basis. Let us eliminate politics altogether, and let "merit" be the only word by which they can obtain admission. In no other way can the service be brought up to a proper state of efficiency. Let the Government pension off some of the older officers, officers connected with the headquarters and district staffs and the permanent corps, men who have served their country faithfully and assiduously for a life-time. Let other officers in this way secure promotion, who, if they had been employed in any other service, would have secured promotion long ago, and let the vacancies be filled by graduates from the Royal Military College, or young officers connected with the active militia who have shown by examinations that they are qualified to take these positions. If that course is adopted, the country will see a wonderful advance in the efficiency of these militia corps. In conclusion, I desire to appeal to the Government and this House not to allow such a gross injustice to be continued in regard to a body of men who, if any trouble should arise, are the head and front of the militia force of Canada. The cost of such a scheme is comparatively small, and would be amply repaid by the increased efficiency of the force, and the money would be spent on men who, if ever, unfortunately, their services are required for the defence of our homes and country, will give a splendid account of themselves, worthy to be read side by side with the annals of the glorious deeds performed in the past by the grand old regiments of England. I had intended to move a resolution, had I not been prevented by the hon. member for North Norfolk's amendment, which was as follows:—

Mr. PRIOR.

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that a scheme should be devised by the Government whereby the permanent corps of the Canadian militia, the headquarters and district staffs, should, after a certain number of years' service, become entitled to receive from the Government pensions, so as to place them on a similar footing with similar organizations in other countries and with the Civil Service of Canada.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In the absence of my hon. colleague the Minister of Militia, I may be permitted to say a few words in regard to the question which has been submitted in a manner so very interesting to those who have listened to my hon. friend. I am quite sure if the Minister of Militia were in his place he would agree with me in expressing to my hon. friend his gratification at the manner in which he has presented the motion which he has just read to the House. The hon. gentleman's statement fairly bristled with information and statistics. When it was my privilege to preside over the Department of Militia, I was particularly interested in the subject that is now receiving the attention of hon. members. From the experience that I had acquired in the department, and from the opportunities which I had of studying the manner in which a measure of the kind spoken of by the hon. gentleman would affect the efficiency of the service, I felt at that time, as I feel to-day—and I am expressing my own personal views merely—that nothing could be done by the Government or the Parliament of Canada which would more increase the efficiency of the force than granting to those who are really the instructors of the whole force of Canada, as our permanent corps are supposed to be, pensions which would remunerate the men who had served their country in that capacity for the continued sacrifices which they had made in the profession they had adopted. Now, Sir, the ground has been so fully covered by my hon. friend, whose experience in the matter of which he has spoken is probably as great as that of any other member of the Canadian force, that it would be useless for me to go into details. But, Sir, so important did I consider the question from the stand-point of the efficiency of the service, that when I was Minister of Militia I felt it my duty to prepare a Bill, which I should have liked to submit to the House, providing for pensions for the different members of the permanent corps, and I may say without betraying any secret that the basis upon which that Bill was formulated was the Imperial list of pensions. While taking the Imperial pensions as a starting point, in framing the Bill I reduced considerably the rate of pensions which I should have liked to propose to be given to the Canadian force. Now, Sir, under the system which obtains in Canada to-day, in the absence of Imperial forces, we have no other means of training the militia force of Canada than the permanent schools, which are practically schools of instruction for the different branches of the service. In the old days, when the old garrisons of England were to be seen in all the fortified places of Canada, the Imperial soldiers were the material used for the purpose of training our militia force, and those who, like myself, took an interest in militia matters years ago, remember well that the training to be had in the old schools under the old system was an excellent thing. But since we ceased to have the advantage of having in Canada garrisons of the Imperial army, it became a necessity to form the nucleus of a permanent force composed of trained men, who, in a moment of urgency might be used as pivot men, so that around every trained man you might train eight or ten men of the militia force, and in that way lay the foundation of a force that would be invaluable in defending Canada against any attack that might be made against her frontier. There is no other way of keeping up these permanent schools than by having connected with them men who will give up their whole time, as my hon. friend suggests, to studying the intricacies of the profession which they have adopted, and I venture the opinion that to the soldier who wishes to become efficient in his profession, it is a study of every day, almost of every moment, and the whole of his time must be given up absolutely and completely to military matters. If that be so, it is evident that the man who has given the best years of his life to that profession, serving his country in the training schools of Canada, is incapable at a given moment of going back to the ordinary pursuits of life. He is unfit for them; he has lost the habits without which a business man cannot succeed in commercial life, and he has arrived at that age when it is impossible for him to strike out afresh and carve out for himself a new career. Under these circumstances, I think it only right that Canada should provide for these men in some such way as she provides pensions for the mounted police force in the North-west. I ask hon. gentlemen how they can draw a division line between a military force of mounted police and such a military force as our permanent corps? I say there cannot be any difference in these two forces, and if it was thought right and proper that pensions should be provided for the mounted police, I fail to see how it is possible to deny that the same liberality should be extended to the men who perform a service to Canada in another direction. Although at this late period of the session my hon. friend hardly expects that this question can be taken up, I do hope—and, I repeat, I am not speaking on behalf of the Government, but am expressing my own individual opinion, as one who has been for a number of years in the Department of Militia and has had an opportunity of studying the question of how best to increase the efficiency of the service—I hope that my gallant friend will bring up this question again next year and submit it to the judgment of the House. If he does, and presents to Parliament the views which he has presented to-day and the strong reasons he has urged, I think he must succeed in obtaining for the permanent corps of Canada that measure of relief and liberality to which I think they are fairly entitled at the hands of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I had not the good fortune to hear the speech of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior); but I have no doubt that it was an elaborate presentation of the views which he has repeatedly pressed upon me privately during the present session, and to which I have listened with considerable respect, as I always do, to what he has to say. Of course, my hon. friend understands, as the House does, the economical spirit of the present Government, for we must consider the question from a financial point of view; but I shall have great pleasure in weighing the matter, and if I can see my way to making such provision for the old age of the members of the permanent corps, I will lay it before my colleagues, and, if we decide on favourable action, something will be brought down at the next session of Parliament.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Canadian Pacific Railway Construction, $2,000

Mr. HAGGART. Before, Mr. Chairman, you consider any items of railway expenditure, I may be permitted to explain, as briefly as possible, the position of the Government railways which have been under my charge for some time past. The House will remember the numerous discussions about the large expenditure over the receipts, and the many suggestions made that there should be an equilibrium restored some time or other between them. I took the management of the department in January, 1892, and found that the deficit for the fiscal year ending July previously, on the Interoceanic Railway was $767,379.17.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is for 1891 ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes ; and for the seven months ending 31st January, 1892, the net loss was $751,828.06. This was an alarming deficit, and I concluded that if things went on at that rate to the end of the year, the deficit for that year would be at least $1,000,000. I may state that I had been in the House for some time previous, but had not, before taking charge of the department, studied the question, and not being acquainted with the details, I was not able to speak authoritatively on the subject. I immediately called upon all the officers of the department, and, after consultation with them, I came to the conclusion that there could be a different state of affairs established in the management of the road. They advised me that if the Interoceanic Railway were managed by a firm hand, and if the economies recommended by them were practised, the result would be a large saving in the expenditure. I determined that this should be done, and asked the chief officers to report to me the particular plan under which these savings could be accomplished. I received their reports, and acquiesced in their suggestions, and directed that steps should be taken at once for the purpose of carrying out these economies. The first result was a reduction in the regular staff of men employed by the railway, of 300 men on the Interoceanic Railway, and twenty men on the Prince Edward Island division. I also resolved to remodel and make a reduction in the train service, which would not interfere at all with the rates charged, and afford to the different portions of the Maritime provinces the full accommodation it was necessary they should have in order to carry out all the requirements of traffic. In this way, I was enabled to make a considerable saving, the figures of which I will give later. In 1890-91, as I said before, the net loss on the railway was $767,375. In 1891-92, the net loss was $612,204.20, showing an improvement in that year of $115,170.93. I resolved that it was important to keep the road in first-class condition. Upon going over it, I found that the road bed and everything required to constitute a first-class railway they had down there. They have as good a railway track, alignments, and gradients, as any road in Canada ; and everything in connection with the railway I found to be in first-class order. In order to maintain that road in that state of efficiency, I decided there should be no reduction in the number of regular track men employed. On the other hand, on looking into the mechanical department of the road under Mr. Whitney, I found the staff was largely in excess of the requirements, and I resolved that a change should be made in the management of that particular branch. I recommended the superannuation of Mr. Whitney, and appointed in his place a man named Mr. Brown, who had been a long time superintendent of the mechanical department of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and occupied the same position in the Grand Trunk Railway, and who came to me besides with excellent references. I put him in charge of the mechanical department, and I find that all its requirements are fulfilled as well now as before, with a reduction of the staff of 300 men. The staff of the employees in that department is less by 500 than it was at the close of the calendar year of 1891, and, as I anticipated, the present staff is performing all the duties required and which were performed by a much larger staff before. That has enabled me to save in wages alone, in that department, the sum of $124,000 a year, besides a large saving in material. For when you have men in excess of the requirements, they are kept at work some way or another and material is wasted. For instance, if a locomotive comes in with perhaps a broken wheel, it may be found that a dozen other places require repairs, though they may not be absolutely needed ; and when you have a force of 300 to 350 men in excess of requirements, the engine will be patched up all round, probably, more than necessary. This requires, besides the wages of the men, an expenditure of material in excess of what would be absolutely necessary to keep the engine in repair. In other departments of the railway the number of regular men is reduced by eighty-three, resulting in a further reduction in expenditure of $32,000. Then the regular train service was remodelled. There are less trains running, and I have been enabled to make a saving by this means of $160,000 a year, and besides, I have given strict orders that no unnecessary sidings, stations and all those things, which have, perhaps, been indulged in in a lavish manner hitherto, should be constructed or should be made in as economical a manner as possible, so that the material is considerably reduced and the expenditure hitherto made in that direction is saved.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the hon. gentleman given all the savings he has made ?

Mr. HAGGART. I have given the savings in wages of the men, the reduction of the regular men and the saving in train mileage. I will give the savings in detail later on. There is another branch, the Prince Edward Island Railway. The traffic upon this railway is light, and the earnings as a consequence are very small in proportion. I went over that with my officers, and very carefully looked into it, and I find it impossible to make much saving there. The loss on this road is about $80,000 a year. There may be a saving of $30,000 a year. I expect to make a saving of at least $20,000 a year. I do not like to be too sanguine in my expectations ; but I will give the state of affairs for the last seven months, for which I have the figures, and I can give an estimate of what it will be to the end of the year. I think the result will show that in no future year will there be a greater loss than about $50,000 or $60,000 a year. I think you may expect that the receipts and expenditure up to the end of the present year will about balance, and that the loss on the two systems will be apparently equivalent to the loss of $80,000 which has hitherto been sustained on the Prince Edward Island section of the road. For the half year ending the 31st of December last, the working expenses on the Intercolonial Railway were $1,597,757.72, and the earnings $1,595,047.13, showing a small loss of $2,700.59, and, as regards the Prince Edward Island Railway, for the same period the working expenses were $130,391.43, and the earnings $92,073.90, showing a loss of $38,377.53. I may, perhaps, compare that with the corresponding six months of the year previous. The Intercolonial Railway working expenses were $2,164,715.78, and the earnings $1,582,763.60, showing a loss of $581,953.18.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Can the hon. Minister tell us how the mileage expenses of the Prince Edward Island branch compare with those of the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. They are a little higher; it costs a little more to run the road. You will see a thorough comparison made in my report, not only between it and the Intercolonial Railway, but also between it and every other road in Canada, and you will find that the mileage expenses on the Intercolonial Railway are less than on any large railway in Canada.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You are speaking of the expenses under the new system?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The expense of running the Intercolonial Railway is less per car mile than it is on the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway, and we are carrying freight and passengers on the Intercolonial Railway for what it actually costs any other railway in the country to carry them. For the corresponding six months of last year, the working expenses of the Prince Edward Island Railway were $198,433.85, and the earnings $93,774.51, showing a loss of $104,659.34. The total loss on the two branches was $686,611.52. As hon. gentlemen may notice, after I took charge of the road in January, there was a surplus in its operations between then and the end of the fiscal year. I do not expect that the surplus will be as great between January last and the end of this fiscal year as it was the year before. If it were, the receipts on the Intercolonial Railway for this fiscal year would be largely in excess of the expenditure. The loss on the Government railways for the last six months of 1891-92 was $681,611, while the loss for the corresponding period for 1892-93 was $41,028.12. I will give how the details, which I have no doubt will be interesting, showing the economies effected in the different branches of the railway service. I have not got the returns to the end of December, so I will give them up to the end of November. The mechanical department for the five months ending November, 1891, the expenditure was $919,135.96, and for the five months ending November, 1892, $761,964.62, a reduction in the five months of $157,441.31. In the traffic arrangement the expenditure for the five months ending November, 1891, was $261,204.87, and for the five months ending November, 1892, $254,228.03, a reduction of $6,976.84. In the maintenance of way and works, the expenditure for the five months ending November, 1891, was $869,465.43, and for the five months ending November, 1892, $465,617.60, a reduction of $403,847.83. In explanation of the large saving in this last department, I ought to say that a large portion of it, $129,141.29, is due to the charge for rail renewals, being less by that amount for the five months than for the five months of the year before. It is possible that the rail renewals between January and July next, the end of the fiscal year, may be far in excess of the same period last year, and the total expenditure this year may be nearly as large as last.

Mr. CHARLTON. What weight of rail are you using in your rail renewals?

Mr. HAGGART. Sixty-seven pounds. At the end of the current year I do not think there will be any loss in running the Prince Edward Island Railway; I may be too sanguine, but I think perhaps that I will be able even to make a better showing than that, and that I will be able to establish an equilibrium between receipts and expenditure. I have no doubt that if the economies which have been practised are persisted in there will be no deficit on the running of the Intercolonial Railway, certainly no deficit greater than the amount that is lost in running the Prince Edward Island Railway. This can be done, and the road still be kept in as efficient condition as it is at present, the track in as good order, the superstructure in as good order, the stations in as good order, and the rolling stock quite as efficient as at present. When I went over the road I found it was one of the best built and best equipped roads I had ever seen. I found no rolling stock in excess of the requirements of the road, and I believe that with proper economies this road can be kept in as efficient a state as it is at present without any serious loss, or with but a small loss, to the country. This has been accomplished by the parties themselves who have been in charge of the road. I have transferred the management of the road to Mr. Pottinger, under a set of instructions which I have laid on the Table of the House. I have every faith in his management of the road; I believe that it will be acceptable to the people of the Maritime provinces, and especially so to the people of the Dominion. I believe he will manage the road in an economical manner, and at the same time, attend to the reasonable wants of the people of the Maritime provinces. I think he has an excellent staff under him. I have been obliged to superannuate two gentlemen. Mr. Busby and Mr. Taylor. Both were faithful, hard working men, but they have grown old and were no longer able to perform their duties properly. They have been very faithful servants of the Intercolonial Railway. I have put in their place two younger and more active men. I think that the staff of the Intercolonial Railway now is in an excellent condition. The officials take a pride in the road, and there is an "esprit de corps" among them which augurs well for the efficient management of the road. Now, Sir, I have given a general résumé of the principal economies we have adopted, and when the items come up separately I will be glad to explain them in detail, and to answer any questions hon. gentlemen may ask.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman give us his figures again? I have got the machine department, 300 men, and $161,000; in the mechanical department, $124,000, and in the other departments, $32,000. Is that right?

Mr. HAGGART. There is the train service remodelled, that is $160,000. There is a saving in the mechanical staff of wages alone of $124,000. We have reduced the regular staff by 82 men, at a saving of $32,000; and there is a saving in the reduction of train mileage of $160,000. The books show all this in detail. The accounts are kept under three general headings, mechanical, traffic and maintenance of way and works. You will see in the railway report what each of these items consists of. I gave you in detail the reductions for the five months ending in November.

Mr. PERRY. I am sure the House and the country will be glad to know, from the statement just made by the Minister of Railways, that a great saving has been effected in the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, and that it has been done without the country sustaining any loss as to the efficiency of the road. That is very commendable, and I am much pleased that such a large saving has been effected and that the railway is not going to be a burden on this country. Economy is always commendable; in fact, we might economize all around. I am also well pleased that a saving has been effected in the working of the Prince Edward Island Railway. But I am not so well pleased with the management of that road, under the administration of the hon. gentleman. For instance, before the hon. gentleman took charge of the Prince Edward Island Railway, there was a special train leaving Summerside in the morning about six o'clock and arriving in Charlottetown at ten o'clock, and it would leave Charlottetown at three in the afternoon to return. Now, that enabled any person to visit Charlottetown and do their business and get back again in good time. But the hon. gentleman has done away with that special train, and now if people want to go to Charlottetown from Summerside they have to wait for the regular train, and very often it is four or half-past four o'clock when that train gets into Charlottetown, and as the offices are closed at four o'clock, they have to stay there the remainder of that day, the whole of the next day, and leave Charlottetown the next morning at eight o'clock, and get back to Summerside about eleven or twelve. The consequence of that is that persons who want to visit Charlottetown prefer to drive their own teams, if they have any, as they can make the journey in a shorter time than by railway. There is another thing. The special train leaves Charlottetown for Tignish at six o'clock in the morning, and it passes Emerald Junction about an hour before the Cape Tormentine train arrives there, so that passengers and the mail from Cape Traverse going to Summerside, instead of having the benefit of that train, have to remain in Summerside the whole day. Now, last summer under the present arrangement, the train that left Charlottetown for Tignish in the morning at eight o'clock did not reach Tignish, as a general rule, till twelve o'clock the same night, or two o'clock the next morning because a freight train had been taken off between Summerside and Charlottetown, and this train had to do the whole work. Just fancy a lot of these small flag stations on that road without a lock to the door, with barrels of flour and molasses and goods of all kinds exposed. If it rains the flour is spoiled. Any hon. gentleman can see at once the hardship which individuals must suffer who have to use this railway. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways complains that the Prince Edward Island Railway is not paying. Well, perhaps, it is not; but we must remember that the Prince Edward Island Railway is not the only public work in Canada that does not pay. How many canals have we in Canada that do not pay? It would take me hours to enumerate all the public works in Canada that do not pay. It was the Government of Canada itself that was anxious to take the railway off the hands of Prince Edward Island. That railway was entirely built by the people of the Island themselves, and the only thing this Government has ever done for that railway are the repairs they have made to it since. In 1873 every possible inducement was offered to the people of that island to enter Confederation, and one of the inducements was that the Government of Canada would take the railway off their hands and pay them $3,500,000. The interest at 5 per cent upon that capital would be enough to pay the expenses of running that road, if we had it in our hands to-day. One would think from the speech made by the Minister of Railways, that that railway was built by the Government of Canada, and that Canada made a present of three millions and a half to the people of Prince Edward Island, when such is not the case. I believe myself that if the road was in the hands of a company who would run it in the interest of the Island, it could be made to pay. The hon. gentleman says he went over the road. I dare say he did, but I am doubtful if he got out of his car while on the Island. I believe he ate and slept on the car, and did not come into contact with any one who could tell him of the wants and needs of the road, and the proper way to work it. He knows we had two trains between Charlottetown and Summerside, and now we have only one. The Government tell us by the census returns, that the people of Canada are progressing, but how is it in Prince Edward Island? The simple fact that he has cut off train accommodation in Prince Edward Island, gives the lie to the census returns now before the House, so far as they relate to Prince Edward Island. But the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with cutting off one train, but he closed a station at Miscouche. That is a thriving settlement inhabited mostly by French Acadians. Their treatment by the hon. gentleman reminds one of the fate of the man who, in travelling from Jerusalem to Jerico, fell among thieves. The station at Freetown, also a beautiful and thriving settlement, has been closed. The people had the accommodation of a station agent, and telegraphic communication, and all this induced several capitalists to invest their money in putting up warehouses and building stores in the vicinity of Freetown station. But now the station is closed, and there is no one to receive the freight, there is no one to receive or send telegraphic messages, and there is no railway business done. Why did the hon. gentleman close this station? Because almost every man around that station is a Liberal. It would be nearly as hard to find a Tory around Freetown station as to find a needle in a haystack. That is the reason why the people must be punished. If the hon. gentleman has any other reason, let him state it. If he was asked to build a new station and refused, I would say there was some sense in it; but here was a station built at a cost from $1,500 to $2,000, and a telegraph operator and station agent placed there. The people were induced, after many years, to invest capital in putting up buildings and going into business, but as soon as the present Minister of Railways comes into power he says, in the interest of economy, I am not going to give station accommodation to those Grits around Freetown. I do not believe he has any other reason for closing the station. He says it is in the interest of economy. Well, let us have economy all around; let us have economy in canals, let us stop expending money on canals and railways that are not paying. I would like to know how much these canals have paid for which we are asked here to vote $150,000. How much has the Tay Canal paid? What is it worth to Canada? I doubt if it is worth more than the Prince Edward Island Railway. If the hon. gentleman is sick of the railway, and does not want to work it, and afford that accommodation to which the people are entitled, let him return it to the people of the Island and they will find means of working it. The whole trade of the railway is confined to the Island, and if a continuous communication could be opened with the mainland, the road would pay well. Why did it pay in years gone by, better than it does now? Will hon. gentlemen compare the general expenditures and receipts for 1874 with those of recent years? If they will make such a comparison, they will find that we have not the same traffic now as we had then. The truth is that we are hemmed in by duties on everything that goes out of and comes in the Island. When our people ship products they are met not only with freight charges, but with heavy duties. The 1,250,000 acres of land in the Island are more fertile than an equal number of acres in any portion of the Dominion. Why, then, are the people not more prosperous? It is because we have not markets there. The Government have placed such restrictions on our trade that we have no markets. If we had a large city like Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, St. John or Halifax, it would afford a home market. But we know that, under our present arrangements, the Island does not possess any manufactories, and will not do so for a number of years, although no less than 173 boot and shoe factories appear in the Island census. But if we cannot have manufactories, we can feed the people who are employed in them. As regards the savings effected by the Minister of Railways, I am glad he has been able to effect these economies, and I shall be glad if he is able to carry out such a policy on the Island Railway, provided he affords the accommodation to which the people are entitled. At the present time, however, any one going from Summerside to Charlottetown to transact business in any of the public offices occupies the best part of three days. The train from Cape Traverse to Emerald Junction on the main line arrives one hour too late to meet the express from Charlottetown to Tignish, and a passenger must remain at Summerside before he can cross to Pointe du Chêne. If the train were started one hour sooner, it would be able to reach Summerside in time to meet the boat crossing to Pointe du Chêne, and from that point a passenger could travel to Montreal. Time is precious with the people of the Island as it is with persons in other parts of Canada. Moreover, our people desire to secure the best accommodation possible. On no railway is there a higher tariff paid than on the Island road. I desire also to point out to the Minister the desirability of running a special train from Summerside to Charlottetown, which would allow people to do business in a day and return.

Mr. McALISTER. I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to the lack of accommodation that exists in different sections of my county for want of proper facilities for loading freight. Several mill-owners who ship from three to six car-loads of lumber per week during the summer season, are obliged to haul it three or four miles to the nearest loading place, which involves larger expense as well as inconvenience. All this expense, or at least a large portion of it, would be avoided by placing short sidings in the railway track. These sidings would not only be convenient to mill-owners, but would also tend to increase the volume of trade over the road. These sidings could be put in at a very small expense, and I think the increase in trade arising therefrom would far more than compensate the Railway Department for any expense that would be incurred in putting them in. As we know, the lumber industry is one of the most important in the province of New Brunswick, and I think it is the duty of the Government to stimulate that industry as far as possible. I have made application on several occasions for these sidings and have hitherto been refused; but I hope that the hon. Minister of Railways will now take the matter into his favourable consideration and have them put in. I may say, that these sidings do not come in the same category as those the hon. Minister referred to as being unnecessary. I assure him that they are absolutely necessary. I desire to refer to another matter that has given a great deal of dissatisfaction and given cause for many complaints in my county—that is the train service. There is only one express running daily each way, between Moncton and Rivière du Loup. These trains run through the northern part of the province of New Brunswick about midnight, and only stop at regular stations, and consequently they afford no convenience at all for local travel. No complaint is made of this. There are, in addition to these, two regular trains running between Moncton and Campbellton, one being a mixed train and the other a freight train. The mixed train for the south leaves Campbellton about half-past five in the morning, and the other an hour later. Returning, the freight train gets in from Moncton about 7.30 in the evening, the other about 8.30. The result is, that people doing business in Campbellton and Dalhousie, have to leave their home at night, remain over night at Campbellton or Dalhousie, do their business the next day, remain the next night; whereas, if a regular freight train were put on, leaving Moncton in the evening, and reaching Campbellton and Dalhousie in the morning, and one going south in the evening, people could leave their homes in the morning, do their business during the day, and return the same day. The trains I have referred to, were running several years, and were only taken off a year and a half ago; and if they were replaced every cause of dissatisfaction and complaint would be removed. The extra cost of putting them on would be very little if any. Special freight trains are constantly running, and the regular freight trains would take part of the freight which is carried by the specials, so that the number of specials could be reduced. People from the north, for a distance of about sixty miles, going to Campbellton or Dalhousie to do their business, have to come down at night and spend two nights and a day, just as people have to do coming from the south. One freight train from the north in the morning would remove the difficulty experienced by people from that section. I hope that the hon. Minister of Railways will see his way clear to have these trains restored, as soon as possible, and in that way remove the great inconvenience and the great injustice that the people suffer under the present arrangement. I must congratulate the hon. Minister upon the able manner in which he has managed the railway during the short time that he has had it under his charge, and succeeding as he has in reducing so materially the deficit that so long existed. While I admit that economy is necessary in the management of the railway, as well as in everything else, yet I think that, in economizing, the rights and claims of the public should be kept prominently in view, and nothing should be done to infringe on the rights or privileges of the people. Before taking my seat, I would bear testimony to what the Minister of Railways has said regarding the manager at Moncton. I have had the pleasure of being acquainted with him for the last ten years and have had a great deal to do with him, in a business way, and in every instance I have found him upright and prompt; and, from his extensive experience in railway management, together with his ability, uprightness and promptness, I am sure his management will give every possible satisfaction.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say a few words on this question. I do not wish to detain the Committee at any great length, but this is undoubtedly a very important subject. I am glad to have heard the statement which the hon. Minister of Railways has made this afternoon. I congratulate him on the reduction of expenses that he has accomplished; but at the same time I want to bring to his notice the proof which he has given us to-day of the statements that have been made in this House from year to year that gross extravagance characterized the management of the Intercolonial Railway. Members on this side of the House have drawn the attention of the Government to the fact that the number of hands employed on the railway was altogether in excess of what was required, and we have to-day from the Minister of Railways the open and frank confession that these charges of ours were true; because he has informed us that, although the earnings of the road have not increased, save and except $17,000, this year over last year, yet he has been able to make a reduction of some 300 in the number of hands in the mechanical department. I presented a statement to this House, pointing out very clearly and distinctly where the drain was, and where the screws were loose, and the hon. Minister of Railways challenged the correctness of my statement. Now, what was my statement last year? I stated that on the Canadian Pacific Railway it cost $102 per mile for the repair of cars, while on the Intercolonial Railway it cost $460 per mile, and on the Grand Trunk Railway, which has double the passenger traffic and double the tonnage per mile of the Intercolonial Railway, it cost $425 per mile. The hon. Minister shakes his head.

Mr. HAGGART. I think your figures must be entirely incorrect.

Mr. McMULLEN. Probably when he comes down next year he will have the verification of the statement I make to-day, just as he has to-day the verification of the statement I made last year. I charged last year that there was gross extravagance in connection with the management of the mechanical department. Now, Sir, it is clear that there was gross extravagance in connection with that very portion of the service, and we have the confession of this by the Minister's statement that he has very considerably reduced the staff in the repair shops. This proves that for years we have been indulging in a course of extravagance and recklessness in the operation of the road, which hon. gentlemen have equally for years denied when we pointed it out to them. The admission of the Minister of Railways that he has been able to reduce the staff by some 300 men gives us some idea of the mismanagement of this road. The total expenses per mile of the Grand Trunk Railway are $4,113, the total expenses of operating the Canadian Pacific Railway per mile are $1,853, while the total expenses of the Intercolonial Railway are $3,211 per mile. The Grand Trunk Railway carried double the number of passengers and double the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, and yet the Intercolonial Railway cost for operation within $900 per mile what it cost to operate the Grand Trunk Railway. I believe there is yet room for considerable reduction. I think we have no less than three auditors on that line, unless the hon. gentleman has reduced the number. The principle of keeping the accounts of this road was altered some years ago. The late Mr. Mackenzie only charged to capital what really should be charged to that account, but when Sir Charles Tupper got control, he charged all the additional rolling stock to capital and not to working account. When an engine broke down, he put on a new one in its place, and charged it to capital account. I would like to know if any new engines were put on in place of those worn out. The hon. gentleman has told us that the rolling stock is far in excess of what is required, which would not have been the case had the road been properly managed. In that case, we would not have had rolling stock going into decay on sidings, as, no doubt is the case now. Can the hon. gentleman give us any idea of the number of engines put on the road this year in place of the engines which have been used up?

Mr. HAGGART. There are no charges to capital account for any engines put on this year. The only charges against capital account are what will be voted direct by this House. I am putting on two very large and powerful engines, and am asking a vote for that to be applied to capital account.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many new engines have been put on in place of those used up?

Mr. HAGGART. We did not put any on.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the Minister made any allowance in his Estimates for the wear and tear of engines in use? He claims a reduction in working expenses. Has he estimated in that calculation the wear and tear of engines?

Mr. HAGGART. My instructions are that the rolling stock shall be kept in as good order at the end of the year as in the beginning.

Mr. McMULLEN. But the rolling stock at the end of twelve months cannot be as good as it was at the beginning.

Mr. HAGGART. It may be a great deal better though no new stock put on.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman must admit that the rolling stock wears out and cannot be better after use than it was before. What is the number now under repair at Moncton?

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman will wait till the different items come up I will then have all the details.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman intimated that he had not reduced the number of track hands. What is the number per mile on the road?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it is from three to four men on each section of six or seven miles, or about half a man to each mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has there been any reduction in the staff of baggagemen about the stations?

Mr. HAGGART. There has been a reduction of about eighty men around the stations, baggagemen and others. The truckmen have not been reduced at all. We make engines down at Moncton to replace those worn out. We are constantly building new engines in the shops?

Mr. McMULLEN. How many were worn out and how many were built to replace those last year?

Mr. HAGGART. There is an average of about two per year worn out and they are replaced.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has there been any reduction made in the staff of telegraph operators, train despatchers and so on?

Mr. HAGGART. There is a reduction of one operator in the despatch office at Truro, one clerk in Moncton, etc. The list is a very long one, and I will have it copied and laid before the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. I merely wanted to find out what reductions were made in the different classes of men engaged. The hon. gentleman has told us that he dismissed eighty men employed around the stations and I would like to know what men he has dismissed from the telegraphic service.

Mr. HAGGART. In the traffic department there has been a reduction of thirty-eight, in the stores there has been a reduction of twenty-one, in the water service there has been a reduction of eleven, in the architect department there has been a reduction of ten. That is all outside of the mechanical department. In the mechanical department there has been a reduction of 290.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am glad these reductions have been made. My reason for asking with regard to the telegraphic department was that there appeared to be men employed there in excess of what was absolutely required. I hope the Minister will continue his investigation, and I congratulate him upon the reductions he has made. I believe that he deserves credit, and I hope he will succeed in bringing down the expenditure so that the country will not have to suffer an annual loss on the working of this road. I hope the day will come when the Intercolonial Railway, instead of being an annual loss, will yield the country some revenue.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I would like the hon. Minister to explain upon what principle the superannuation allowances are fixed? When Mr. Whitney was superannuated, I am informed, he was allowed twenty years service. But Mr. Whitney has been in the service since 1861, upwards of thirty years, and under the Superannuation Act, I understand, that service previous to Confederation is counted in estimating superannuation on allowances. It is said also that Mr. Taylor, who was superannuated at the same time, was allowed half his salary, which would be an allowance of twenty-five years service. I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman could give some explanation. A petition was sent to the Minister of Railways some time ago by a number of the employees at Moncton who desired to be admitted to the outside civil service. That petition has some seventeen names appended to it. Many of the signers are district superintendents, and they comprise the assistant freight agent, the assistant auditor, the assistant engineer and some of the chief clerks and others. They occupy positions of great responsibility, and, as far as I can understand, they are entitled to be admitted to the Civil Service just as well as the heads of departments and others now on the list. What has been the decision of the hon. gentleman with regard to that petition?

Mr. HAGGART. I inquired into the case of Mr. Whitney, and find that he has been allowed the full amount of superannuation to which he is entitled under the law. Although he was in the service of the Government from 1861, yet he did not contribute to the fund during all that time, and he has only been an officer, entitled under the Act of superannuation, from the time we began to count his years of service. I referred his case to the Department of Justice, because on first intimation I thought he had been done an injustice, but the Department of Justice informs me that he has been given his full superannuation allowance. I addressed a letter to the hon. gentleman yesterday in which I gave all details and all the reasons for the course I have taken.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I have not got that letter.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman ought to get it some time to-day. With regard to the application of certain employees to be admitted into the outside Civil Service and entitled to superannuation, I will bring their request before Council, but I have talked to the Finance Minister about it, and I am afraid that our superannuation fund is so loaded down at present that it will be very difficult to grant their petition.

Mr. KENNY. As we are dealing with the superannuation of the officers of the Intercolonial Railway, I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the case of Mr. Johnson, who, I think, was as long in the service of the Intercolonial Railway as Mr. Whitney. He was in charge of the mechanical department of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax. In view of the circumstances under which the committee is detained, I do not presume, at this moment to go into the general policy of the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, as at present conducted by my hon. friend; I wish simply to say that to me, personally, it would have been more gratifying if the Minister had been able to show that under his management the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway had increased, or that the number of passengers carried over it, had increased. To my mind that would have been of more consequence than the saving of a sum of money—not that I am disposed to underestimate the necessity which exists for economy. But looking at the circumstances under which the Intercolonial Railway was built, its main object being to encourage and to develop an inter-provincial trade, I must certainly say that whilst I am ready to accord every measure of praise to my hon. friend for the zeal with which he has undertaken the duties of his office—yet, to me, personally, it would have been more gratifying if he could have shown that the inter-provincial and export trade over the Intercolonial Railway had increased. I regret to see that his report shows that there has been a decrease in the quantity of freight carried over that road, and in the number of passengers. I think that one of the great difficulties which my hon. friend has had to deal with in this matter, is due largely to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway does not control the freight at points where it initiates in the West. I am told that the Intercolonial Railway has traffic arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. I know, as a matter of fact, that when shippers of grain had made contracts with steam-ship owners to ship grain by way of Halifax during the month of November last, from points west and north of Stratford, when the shippers applied for cars at those different points, both these railways replied that they would not give their cars to the Intercolonial Railway. That proves conclusively that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, through their agents, wished to divert that traffic from the Intercolonial Railway to other points. When these shippers of grain went to the Intercolonial Railway, the officials of that road, informed them that the Grand Trunk Railway Company at that moment had 400 of their cars. The shippers applied again to the Grand Trunk Railway, and repeated the statement which had been made to them by the officers of the Intercolonial Railway, and the Grand Trunk's reply was: Possibly we had those cars, we may be responsible for them, but they passed out of our jurisdiction. As a consequence of the inability of these shippers to get cars for their grain, they could not get the grain to Halifax in time for shipment in November, and they were, therefore, subjected to penalties, and the expense of storing that grain. Now, I am not disposed to blame the Intercolonial Railway for the refusal of the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway to supply cars, but I point it out as one of the difficulties which exist in the management of that railway.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 6.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 27th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADIAN LIVE STOCK INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. HAZEN moved that Bill No. 119 (from the Senate) to incorporate the Canadian Live Stock Insurance Company be read the first and second time, and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and that Rule 60 be suspended.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. LARIVIERE moved that the fourth report of the Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates be concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman had better explain the recommendations contained in the report. I observe there are some increases recommended, making quite an additional expenditure.

Mr. LARIVIERE. The only increase recommended is with respect to the salary paid to Mr. Boyce, the proof-reader and assistant to the Chief Stenographer. Mr. Boyce, who has a great deal of work to perform not only during the session but after the session in preparing the index and completing the work, has only received so far $1,000 per annum as salary. On his application, and on full examination of the case made by the committee, it is recommended that his salary be increased by $200. It is now asked that the House will allow this salary to be paid to Mr. Boyce and that the report of the committee be concurred in.

Report concurred in.

STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. TISDALE moved:

That the eleventh report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines be concurred in, and the Clerk of the House ordered to have a copy of the amended Rule 49 sent to those persons giving notice in the "Canada Gazette" of their intention to apply to Parliament for the passing of a Private Bill, together with a notification that the said Rule will be strictly adhered to for the future.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TISDALE moved:

That the resolution reported from the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines on Saturday, the 25th March last, be made a Standing Order of the House.

Motion agreed to.

CARLETON BRANCH RAILROAD.

Mr. HAGGART moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 122) to confirm the sale of the Carleton, city of St. John, Branch Railway.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman explain?

Mr. HAGGART. The Bill is simply for the purpose of confirming an agreement which provided for the amount to be paid and which was authorized by chapter 15 of the Revised Statutes of 1891.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 123) respecting the Voters' Lists of 1892.—(Mr. Foster.)

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he recollects what he told us in the House on the 13th of March, the day he first explained the French Treaty to the House. In reply to a question which I brought up he said :

We propose to discriminate neither against Great Britain, the United States, Germany, Belgium, nor, under our present intention, any other country in the world. My hon. friend wondered if France knew it. She knew it, and agreed to the treaty under that very well-known proposition.

The hon. gentleman on several subsequent occasions said that he would bring down papers which would show that. Several assortments of papers have been brought down, and I think I have looked through them pretty carefully, but I do not find anything among them which would show that France knew of this intention of the Government. I would like to know from the Minister of Finance whether we may expect any papers to be brought down that would show that ?

Mr. FOSTER. The last papers were laid on the Table on Saturday, I think.

Mr. EDGAR. I saw those and they do not explain any contention of that kind. I would like to know when the hon. gentleman will bring down any such papers ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there are any other papers to be brought down. I do not recollect just now what the words are. As I heard them from my hon. friend, probably they were a little wider than I had intended. What I meant to say was that the treaty did not give France any exclusive advantages over any other country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. Minister of Finance told us on Saturday that he would to-day make a statement in regard to the treaty. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he will do so to-day ?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition asked me if I would be able to state to-day whether we propose to ratify the treaty this session or not. I said that I thought I would be able to tell him on Monday. I can only say, as I have stated before to the House, communications are going on between ourselves and the authorities in Great Britain, but they have not come to a point at which I can make a definite statement yet. I hope to be able to, to-morrow or Wednesday, and so I would not like to say anything further than I have already said.

Mr. HAGGART.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask when we may expect the return that was ordered on the 6th February with regard to the nationality, religion, and so on, of civil servants ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. I think my hon. friend will have to be prepared not to get that this session. We have no documents in Ottawa that would show the information that he requires. The civil servants will have to be asked for the information, and, as my hon. friend will see, that will take a good deal of time. It is in course of preparation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he will be able to lay on the Table of the House the certificates of the commanders of the fishery protection service ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am informed by the department that the full information asked for will take some time, as some of it will have to be got from abroad. If the hon. gentleman finds that the delay is too long in getting the complete returns, I will be able to give him the information obtainable here either to-day or to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1894, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

OTTAWA, 27th March, 1893.

TORONTO, HAMILTON AND BUFFALO RAILWAY.

Mr. TAYLOR moved third reading of Bill (No. 83) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.

Mr. DENISON. I wish to bring before the committee an alteration I would like to have made in this Bill. One of the Toronto city members received a letter from the city solicitor of Toronto, in which he says :

Will you kindly see that the Bill is so framed as to make it impossible for the railway to go through the new rifle ranges, which you have had so much a hand in obtaining for the citizens of Toronto, as this would utterly destroy their usefulness.

I may say that the city of Toronto in the interest of the Industrial Exhibition Association purchased a farm on the Lake Shore road lying between the lake and the road, and leased it to the Dominion Government for a rifle range, in exchange for the use of about ten acres of land belonging to the Government, a portion of the Garrison Common. The Government have also granted them the right to use for exhibition purposes a large portion of the common. I may mention also that the Grand Trunk Railway, between Port Credit and Mimico, passes along about a mile from the lake and about a quarter of a mile north of the Lake Shore road. If I thought it would materially injure the railway to carry it north of the rifle ranges, I would not make this motion, but I cannot see how it can do so. I am not certain even now that the road may not be planned to run north of the ranges; but it is with the object of making it absolutely certain that the usefulness of the ranges will not be destroyed by running this railroad through the centre of them, that I wish to make the motion. I move, seconded by Mr. Tyrwhitt:

That the order for the third reading of the Bill be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House, with instructions that they have power to amend it by adding thereto the following thereto as clause 6:—

“That the portion of the said railway running between Port Credit and Mimico shall be carried north of the rifle ranges leased to the Government.”

Mr. COATSWORTH. Before that motion is put to the House, I would like to say a few words about it. It would certainly, if it should pass, be a very exceptional piece of legislation. This Bill has no reference whatever to the right of way. All that is asked by the Bill is the confirmation of certain arrangements which have been made between the city of Hamilton, the city of Brantford and this railway company, the right to extend a branch of the railway from the village of Waterford down to Lake Erie, and an extension of the time for the completion of the work. Therefore, it is not right at this stage of the Bill to introduce what is certainly a piece of exceptional legislation. In regard to the clause proposed, it seems to me to be extremely objectionable for many reasons. The facts of the case are these. Two or three years ago the city of Toronto purchased a piece of property on the lake shore for the purpose of providing the militia with a rifle range. This was done in order to get possession of a certain property in the city belonging to the Government for exhibition purposes. There is a provision in the law that if a railway company desires to pass through Government property, it has to get the consent of the Government. Therefore, I do not see that there is any possible basis for my hon. friend's motion. The fact is that it is an effort to take what is practically private property by special legislation. This property belongs to the city of Toronto, and a motion such as my hon. friend has made might just as fairly be made with reference to any farmer who lives in that district, if it were thought necessary that the railway should pass through his lands. Therefore, I submit that the motion ought not to pass. I do not know whether or not the railway company intends to project its line through this property. I am inclined to think that it does not. At the same time, I would certainly object to any such clause being added to the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. This matter was not brought before the Railway Committee at all, and I think it would be highly objectionable to allow a special provision of this kind to pass, more especially as the Bill in no ways deals with the question of right of way.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the North American Canal Company.—(Mr. Masson.)

The following Bills were reported on division and read the third time on division:

Bill (No. 107) for the relief of James Frederick Doran.—(Mr. Dickey.)

Bill (No. 108) for the relief of Annette Marion Goff.—(Mr. Dickey.)

Bill (No. 105) for the relief of John Francis Schwaller.—(Mr. Dickey.)

YARMOUTH INDUSTRIES.

Mr. FLINT asked, What is the description of each of the fifteen manufacturing industries established in the town of Yarmouth, N.S., in 1881? What were the names of the several manufacturers, and the number of hands employed in each such establishment at that time? What is the description of each of the 151 manufacturing industries in said town in the year 1891? SICK MARINERS' DUES—MONTREAL.

Mr. LEPINE asked, 1. Did not the Minister of Marine write to the secretary of the Montreal Shipping Interests, under date 1st February, "inter alia," as follows:—I * * * would request you to inform me what evidence you can place before the department that the ship-owners and agents of vessels navigating the St. Lawrence would be willing to take care of their own sick mariners, and what guarantee the Government would have that the patients would not be left in our own hands to be provided for after the vessels to which they belonged had left their loading ports. 2. Did not the Shipping Interests, in reply to this request, undertake as follows:—

MONTREAL, February 15th, 1890.

HON. CHARLES H. TUPPER,
Minister of Marine, Ottawa.

SIR,—We, the undersigned, owners or agents of steam-ships and sailing vessels trading with this port, having taken communication of certain correspondence between the Department of Marine and the Shipping Interest, beg leave to say that—

In consideration of your relieving the tonnage owned by or consigned to us from the imposition of hospital dues levied by virtue of the Act 49 Vic., chap. 76, we hereby agree and bind ourselves to afford adequate hospital care to the sick mariners belonging to each and every such vessel, and to relieve the Dominion Government from all costs or responsibility with respect to the said sick mariners; and we are ready to enter into such binding agreement in that behalf as the department may require of us.

The purpose of this undertaking is not merely to free our own vessels from this impost on their entry at a Canadian port, but it is taken as a further step in the direction of freeing the St. Lawrence route from Governmental dues and taxes of every kind, and of making Montreal a free port for ships.

We are, your obedient servants,
H. & A. ALLAN,
Allan Line.

ROBERT REFORD & Co.,
Agents for the Donaldson Line,
Thompson Line, and Ross Line.

DAVID TORRANCE & Co.,
Agents Dominion Line.

J. & R. McLEA.
DICKSON ANDERSON,
Shipowner.
ANDERSON, MCKENZIE & Co.,
Agents Furness Line.
McLEAN, KENNEDY & Co.,
Agents MacLean Line.
HENRY DOBELL & Co.
F. W. HENSHAW,
For the S. & L. COAL AND RAILWAY CO.

3. Does not section 4, subsection 6, of the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 76, give to fishing vessels the option of making voluntary payments, receiving hospital care in return; and is not a similar option denied to merchant vessels? 4. Are not Quebec vessels trading with the United States, besides being taxed 6 cents per ton per season at home and 15 cents per ton per season abroad, also required, in cases of sickness among their crew while in United States ports, to pay $1 per day per man for hospital care in the Governmental hospitals of that country? 5. Do not the United States authorities care for their own sick seamen in their Governmental hospitals free of charge and without imposing any countervailing taxation on their shipping? Do not the Dominion authorities also arrange for the care of Canadian lake seamen in hospitals at Kingston and St. Catharines without imposing a countervailing tax on Ontario tonnage? 7. Will the Government consider the propriety of putting Quebec on the same footing as Ontario, and of reimbursing the tonnage owners of the former province the amount of the reprisal taxation which has been levied on their vessels in ports of the United States during past years? 8. Is the Government not aware that (in addition to the province of Ontario and the German Empire) the ports of the Netherlands and her colonies; ports in Spain and Portugal, in the British and Spanish West Indies, in the United States of Columbia, in Central America, and elsewhere, have been proclaimed free ports, having accepted the standing offer of the United States for the mutual abolition of tonnage dues on shipping? 9. Is not the present a favourable time to enter into negotiations with the United States for the mutual abolition of tonnage taxes on shipping, and will the Government consider the advisability of doing so?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries addressed a letter to Mr. A. Watt, of Montreal, of which the above question is a correct extract. 2. A petition was received by the department of which the above is a correct copy, with the following signatures—J. G. Sidey, per D. D. Sidey; Carbray, Routh & Co.; Black Diamond Steamship Company (Limited), by Kingman, Brown & Company; J. & R. McLea; Dickson Anderson, shipowner; Anderson, McKenzie & Company, agents Furness Line Steamers, and McLean, Kennedy & Company, agents MacLean Line; H. & A. Allan, Allan Line; Robert Reford & Company, agents for the Donaldson Line, the Thompson Line and Ross Line; David Torrance & Company, agents Dominion Line; Canada Shipping Company (Limited), by J. McLennan, President. 3. Canadian fishing vessels only have the option of making voluntary payments and receiving hospital care in return. Many pay the dues under this clause as the owners of fishing vessels prefer paying the sick mariners' dues and receive hospital treatment in return. Foreign fishing vessels, including vessels of the United States, are not required to pay sick mariners' dues. Merchant vessels, under section 4 of the Sick and Disabled Mariners Act, are required to pay dues. 4. Vessels arriving in ports, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, are required to pay not less than 2 cents per ton per annum and not more than 6 cents per ton, and not less than 3 cents per ton per voyage if arriving at ports in the United States, and not more than 15 cents per annum. Sick seamen of Canadian vessels sent to marine hospitals whilst in ports of the United States are charged the sum of $1 per day per man. 5. The United States authorities maintain marine hospitals for the benefit of their sick seamen and sick seamen of foreign vessels entered at United States ports. These hospitals are maintained out of duties on foreign tonnage. It is understood no countervailing taxation is imposed on American tonnage for this purpose. It is understood that American seamen are maintained free in the hospitals, whilst foreign seamen are charged $1 per day. 6. Yes, to the extent of 90 cents per day for each seaman admitted to the marine hospitals at Kingston and St. Catharines, not to exceed $500 per annum for each hospital. 7. Ontario ports being quite differently situated from the seaports in other parts of the Dominion, the Canadian Sick Mariners Act does not apply to them. The Government does not see the propriety at present of reimbursing the tonnage owners of Quebec the amount of taxation levied in United States ports during the past years. 8. The Government has no official knowledge in regard to the statement alleged in the above question. 9. No decision has as yet been arrived at by the Government of Canada with regard to entering into negotiations with the United States for the mutual abolition of tonnage taxes on shipping.

MANUFACTURERS OF ARTIFICIAL FERTILIZERS.

Mr. RIDER asked, What was the number, according to the last census, of manufacturers exclusively engaged in the manufacture of artificial fertilizers in Canada, and where located? The value of the plant so engaged in such manufacture? The number of employees engaged therein? The quantity and value of the raw material? The quantity and value of the output?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The total number of establishments is eighteen; value of plant, $33,900; number of employees, 113; value of raw material, $162,583; value of output, $265,469.

PAYMENT OF MEMBERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that, for the present session, the deduction of eight dollars per day, mentioned in section 26 of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, shall not be made for six days in the case of members who have been absent from a sitting of the House or committee thereof during such number of days, but this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the Act relating to the Senate and House of Commons, nor in the case of any member elected since the commencement of the session shall it apply to days prior to his election.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 99) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—(Mr. Foster.)

COMMISSIONERS TO COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION—SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the resolution providing for the payment of the expenses of two commissioners to represent Canada at the World's Columbian Exhibition, to be held at Chicago in 1893, be read the second time.

Mr. CHARLTON. At this stage of the proceedings, I wish to offer an amendment to this resolution. I move that said resolution be not now read the second time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the whole House, with instructions to amend by adding the following words:—

It is further enacted that such payment is provided for only on one condition, that the Canadian Department of said Exposition shall be closed on Sundays.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am of the opinion that this motion is out of order. I do not think it is relevant to the resolution, and, therefore, it cannot be put as an amendment. In addition to that, I may say, that a motion almost identically similar to that which is now placed in my hands, stands on the Order Paper. For these reasons, I rule that this motion is out of order.

Mr. CHARLTON. If permitted, I beg leave to question the justice of your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may give his reasons.

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall refer to the rules in reference to this matter. I suppose I can appeal to the House and move an adjournment. I find in Rules 88 and 89 provisions which lead me to suppose that it is proper to move this amendment :

88. If any motion be made in the House for any public aid or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned till such further day as the House shall think fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to a committee of the whole House, before any resolution or vote of the House do pass thereupon.

89. All aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the Parliament of Canada, are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit and appoint all such Bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

Now, Sir, in the United States Congress, a provision of exactly this character was attached to a grant of money to aid this same Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and that grant was made contingent upon closing the gates of that Exposition on Sunday. If it is a parliamentary proceeding for the House of Representatives of the United States to take that course, I am unable to understand why it is not a parliamentary proceeding to take that course here. I stand on my right as a member of this House in demanding to-day that the sense of this House, at all events, should be taken as to the proposition now before you, that there shall be a condition attached to that grant, and that the condition shall be, that the honour of this country shall be preserved in the estimation of the Christian sentiment of the country, by providing that the Canadian part of the Fair shall not be opened on the Lord's Day.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is entirely mistaken as to the application of the two rules he has quoted. Rule 88 provides, as I have stated on former occasions, that no debate shall take place, and no consideration shall be given to a resolution of this kind, when first proposed to the House; but that the debate and consideration thereof shall be postponed to a future day. Rule 89 provides that the House of Commons only has the right to limit and appoint the conditions on which such grants are made, but, according to all the English authorities I have been able to find, amendments at this stage must be relevant to the question before the House. I may state that, in my opinion, it would have been competent, when the grant was submitted to pay the expenses of the Canadian Department of the Chicago Exposition, to have imposed the condition which the hon. member now wishes to impose. But this is undoubtedly an entirely different question. It is a question of the payment of salaries or expenses of two commissioners, and the effect of the amendment which the hon. member for North Norfolk has placed in my hands, would be to open a new question entirely, and that, I think, is not in accordance with parliamentary practice. I can cite precedents, if the hon. member desires me to do so, to sustain the position I have taken in regard to this matter. The practice is laid down in the books as follows :—

The Speaker then proposes the next question—that these resolutions be read a second time. The procedure at this stage with respect to amendment and debate has been explained on more than one occasion by Speakers of the English Commons. When the question is put, “said Mr. Speaker Dennison,” it is open to any hon. member to make any general observations he may think necessary. But they should be relevant to the subject-matter. With respect to amendments, Mr. Speaker Brand said on a subsequent occasion: “The established rule of debate is that the observations of hon. members should be relevant to the question put from the Chair. There is one exception to that rule, and that is, when a motion is made that this House resolves itself into Committee of Supply; upon that occasion a relevance of debate—that is, debate not relevant to the subject-matter proposed to be discussed in committee—is allowed; but I am not aware of a irrelevant matter, generally speaking, being allowed upon any other occasion.”

The writer goes on to say:

The Speaker puts the question for concurrence in the resolution, and both amendment and debate must be relevant to the same in accordance with English practice. For instance, on the question for agreeing to a resolution providing a sum of money for printing in connection with the Queen's Colleges, Ireland, Mr. Parnell was proceeding to discuss the general subject, when he was interrupted by Mr. Speaker Brand, and reminded that “on the question of a vote for stationery, it was not competent for him to enter into a general discussion on the subject of those colleges.”

I might quote one or two instances as to the relevancy of amendments. The decision of the English Speakers is as follows :—

“The relevancy of an amendment to the motion is clear and complete.” Where the resolution before the House being “That Mr. Bradlaugh be not permitted to go through the form of taking the oath prescribed by the Statutes 29 Vic., cap. 19 and 32 Vic., cap. 72—Mr. Speaker allowed the following amendment to be in order on the grounds that the relevancy to the motion before the House was clear and complete. On the Order of the Day “that the conduct of Mr. O'Donnell be taken into consideration in the course of the debate.”

Amendment proposed and seconded to leave out all the words after “that” and substitute these words: “the chairman of committee, having named Mr. O'Donnell for obstructing the business of Parliament, he being absent from the House during the greater part of the sitting during which the alleged offence was committed, and not having previously received any warning from the Chair, this House is not prepared to take notice of the language imputed to the hon. member and passes to the next Order of the day.”

Objection taken as not within the scope of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER.—This amendment does, by implication, if not directly, call in question the conduct of the chairman of committees, and in that sense, no doubt, is out of order. It is out of order, first, because it is scarcely relevant to the question before the House, and beyond that it is out of order because it raises substantially the same questions that are proposed to be raised (by two other members). I do not, therefore, put this amendment as it is now framed.

The two reasons I give for my decision are, first: That the amendment is not relevant to the resolution, and second, that there is an Order standing on the Paper in the name of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) substantially the same as the proposed amendment.

Mr. CHARLTON. I must bow, Mr. Speaker, to your ruling. The question does not admit of discussion when the judge has decided it. As there is a further vote proposed in the Supplementary Estimates for the Columbia Exposition, I give notice that I will, on the first occasion when the House is moved into Committee of Supply, move a resolution in the direction of the amendment I have placed in your hands.

Resolution read the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER introduced Bill (No. 124) respecting the appointment of commissioners to the World's Columbian Exposition.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 27) to amend the Superannuation Act.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will be well that hon. members should obtain a clear and distinct statement of the provisions of the Bill, and what the Minister of Finance proposes, in view of the expenditure which the country has been compelled to bear during the past fifteen or twenty years in connection with superannuation. I have already drawn the attention of the House to the expenditure during the last twelve years, during which the present superannuation system has been in force. The hon. Minister of Finance will, on examining the statistics I submitted find they are perfectly correct. I have shown that during those twelve years the country lost $1,700,000, giving credit to the scheme for all the deductions made from the salaries of civil servants towards that fund. I now repeat that members of the Civil Service are well paid. They obtain as full remuneration for their services as do clerks of any other class. Accordingly, superannuation is unnecessary, and they should be allowed to provide for their future requirements out of their regular salaries. They can, at the present time, insure their lives at great advantage in different companies. I understand that it is intended to ask the civil servants who enter the service after this date, for an increased deduction from their salaries towards this fund. But the feature of the superannuation system to which I take most pointed objection, and which is the greatest evil, is the manner in which it has been abused by the Government. It has not been directed towards helping old and faithful servants who have become enfeebled in the faithful discharge of their duties, and who deserve some consideration, if any of the civil servants deserve it at all, but it has been used to remove from lucrative positions, men who were quite capable of discharging their duties, men who were in the prime of life, and who had no desire or expectation of superannuation. This was done simply to make offices for others who were pressing their services upon the Government. The Superannuation Act has been so grossly abused by the Government for the last twelve years that the House should pause before they consent to the introduction of a new Act. I think that we should abolish the present Act, close up the superannuation account as rapidly as we can, and leave the civil servants to provide for themselves. I may say to the hon. gentleman that, for my part, I shall oppose every clause in this Bill from beginning to end, and in view of the loss to which the country has been put in this respect, I hold that it is not right that the consideration of this Bill should be forced upon the House at the closing hours of the session. This is a matter of serious moment. It is one of the most important Bills that have been introduced this session, and if the Bill is used the same as the Superannuation Act has been in the past, it is going to be a matter of very great importance and serious loss to the people of this country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before I discuss the Bill I would like to ask the Minister of Finance how far this proposal will provide the necessary funds without a charge on the public revenues?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend, and the House will listen to me for about ten minutes, I think I can make clear what the position and intention of the Government is with reference to this matter. In the first instance, I must premise what I say by this observation: That the Government takes it up wholly with a desire of making the superannuation system—which it does not propose to entirely abolish—less burdensome on the funds than it has been up to the present time. As I said before, the present superannuation system commenced in 1870, and, remaining up to this date, it has not been a system which has been fairly tried upon its merits, and for two reasons. One reason was: That, although when the measure was introduced it had a fair abatement from the salaries, namely, 4 per cent on salaries of $600 and over, and 2½ per cent for salaries under $600; in a fit of mistaken sympathy, the House, three years afterwards, reduced that abatement to 2 per cent on salaries of $600 and over, and 1¼ per cent for salaries of less than $600. That immediately reduced these abatements below the percentage which was necessary to carry even the best managed superannuation system. Again the system was begun with overloading it at the first end, and in this way : In 1870 we had a large number of civil servants who were then upon the list, and in the service of the country. They were landed upon this superannuation system, and the most of them paid either nothing, or at least a very small proportion, into the superannuation fund ; but they became entitled to the benefits of the superannuation fund, and have been charges upon it from that time up to the present. I desire to call the attention of the House to some figures in that respect which will show very clearly the amount of overloading of the fund, of which I have been speaking. I have in my hand a statement of persons who are to-day upon the superannuation list, who were in the service in 1870, and who have been superannuated gradually from that time up to the present, and who have paid comparatively little into the superannuation fund :

Of those who were superannuated in 1871, there are to-day eight living of an average age of 84 years, and drawing out of the fund $3,265.72 per year ; some of them paid nothing into the superannuation fund, and the others paid from eight months up to one year and six months superannuation abatement. That is, with regard to these eight persons drawing that amount of money from 1871 up to the present time out of the superannuation fund, nothing was paid by two, and but an average of one year superannuation abatement was paid by the other six.

Of those superannuated in 1872, two are still living with average age of 78 years, and drawing $1,172.52 per year out of the fund. Of these two, one paid an abatement for one year and eleven months, and the other for two years and eleven months.

Of those superannuated in 1873, there are thirteen upon the list with an average age of 79 years, drawing $4,101.88 out of the fund, and of these not one paid more than three and a half years abatement into the superannuation fund.

Of those who were superannuated in 1874, four are upon the list with average ages of 74 years, drawing $1,057.88 out of the fund per year, and of those not one paid more than four years and seven months abatement into the fund.

Of those who were superannuated in 1875, thirteen are still upon the list, with average ages of 74 years, drawing $5,442.99 per year out of the Treasury, and of those the highest abatement paid was for five years and eleven months.

Of those superannuated in 1876, eight are upon the superannuation list, with an average age of 71 years, drawing $6,163.60 per year out of the fund, and of these the highest superannuation abatement paid was for six years and five months.

Of those superannuated in 1877, thirteen are upon the list, with an average age of 74 years, drawing $5,898 per year out of the fund, and of these the highest abatement paid was for seven years and six months.

Of those superannuated in 1878, nineteen are still upon the list, with an average age of 80 years, drawing $6,887.94 per year out of the fund, the highest abatement paid being for eight years and six months.

Of those superannuated in 1879, nineteen are upon the list, with an average age of 74 years, drawing $8,963.54 out of the fund per year, and the highest abatement paid was for nine years and seven months.

Of those superannuated in 1880, fifteen are still upon the list, average age of 75 years, drawing $6,193.63 per year out of the fund, the highest abatement paid being for ten years and seven months.

Of those superannuated in 1881, twenty-one are still upon the list, at an average of 74 years, drawing $8,116.92 per year out of the fund, the highest abatement paid being for eleven years and four months.

Of those superannuated in 1882, there are upon the list twenty-two, average age of 73 years, drawing $11,665.48 yearly from the fund, the highest abatement paid being for eleven years and eleven months.

Of those superannuated in 1883, there are upon the list 33, average age 74 years, drawing $13,219.50 per year from the fund, the highest abatement paid being for thirteen years and seven months.

Of those superannuated in 1884, there are twenty upon the list, average age of 68 years, drawing $9,527.18 from the fund, the highest abatement paid being for fourteen years and five months.

Of those superannuated in 1885, there are sixteen upon the list, at average age of 67 years, drawing $7,609.10 per year from the fund, the highest abatement paid being for fifteen years and five months.

Of those superannuated in 1886, there are twenty upon the list, with an average age of 73 years, drawing $10,019.78 from the fund per year, the highest abatement paid being for sixteen years and four months.

Of those superannuated in 1887, there are twenty-six upon the list, with an average age of 70 years, drawing $10,988.40 yearly, the highest abatement paid being for seventeen years and ten months.

Of those superannuated in 1888 there are upon the list twenty-nine, the average age is 70 years, the amount drawn yearly $20,076, and the highest abatement paid eighteen years and six months.

Of those superannuated in 1889 there are upon the list thirty-five, the average age is 69 years, the amount drawn yearly $21,659, and the highest abatement paid nineteen years and two months.

Of those superannuated in 1890 there are upon the list twenty, the average age is 65 years, the amount drawn yearly $12,886, and the highest abatement paid twenty years and six months.

Of those superannuated in 1891 there are on the list thirty-nine, the average age is 67 years, the amount drawn yearly $26,878, and the highest abatement paid twenty-one years and four months.

Of those superannuated in 1892 there are on the list twelve, the average age is 68 years, the amount drawn yearly $10,047, and the highest abatement paid twenty-one years and eight months. Totaling up these figures, I find that the total number upon the establishment in 1870 who are drawing superannuation to-day is 391. Of these 387 are of the average age of 71 years, and the total yearly amount they draw is $219,842, while the total number on the list in 1892 was 502, and the total yearly amount they draw is $253,023. I have given this statement for the purpose of showing that the overloading of this superannuation fund is due almost entirely to the fact that old or elderly servants who were in the service of the country in 1870 were placed upon the superannuation list at that time, with either no payment of abatement, or a comparatively small payment into the fund, and have been a charge upon the revenue, some of them from 1870, and many of them for a number of years since. It will be seen, then, that there is cause why the superannuation system has been so burdensome; and if those who were old in the service in 1870 had not been put upon the list, and those who came in after that date and were put on had paid their abatements, there would have been a natural increment of abatements, and there would have been only the natural relative falling-in of superannuated persons to draw upon the fund. That, then, is the reason why the superannuation system has proved so burdensome. It has not been the fault of the system, but the fault of the action of Parliament—I am not going to say wrongly—in overloading the system at its commencement by putting on the list those who were made eligible for superannuation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I may say to the hon. gentleman that the Bill fixing the superannuation amount was introduced by Sir Francis Hincks when he was Minister of Finance, and he estimated 4 per cent as the amount necessary to supply the necessary annuities. The hon. gentleman is now fixing the percentage at a lower rate. Has he taken an actuarial estimate in arriving at the rate?

Mr. FOSTER. I will come to that in a few moments. The other reason was what my hon. friend just stated, that although 4 per cent and 2½ per cent respectively as abatements were considered sufficient at that time to carry the annuitants, they were reduced a few years later to 2 per cent and 1¼ respectively, and these were far below what was necessary. These are two reasons why this system has been so burdensome in its results. Now, in the present proposition there are two elements. One is to commence de novo. Some may say, why not abolish the superannuation system compounding in some way with the present beneficiaries. I think there are two reasons why the House would be slow to do that. In the first place, the present civil servants have grown up in the service on the basis of a superannuation which they had in view when they entered the service, and to which they have loyally contributed, and after they have grown comparatively old in the service, I think it would be a harsh thing for Parliament to deprive them of the benefits of this system at the present time, and I do not imagine that Parliament would seriously consider any such proposition. So that, for good or for evil, we have to carry out the system with regard to those at present employed in the service. There is, however, a silver lining to the cloud in one respect, which we cannot rejoice in, but which in the order of nature we may be permitted to contemplate. Those servants who are now the large annuitants, and who draw largely on the fund, have an average age of 71 years, and many of them go up into the nineties. In the order of nature, these will pass away rapidly from year to year, so that a few years hence will see a large proportion of the present heavy burden taken away from the fund. Therefore, I do not anticipate that in the future the disparity between the income and the outgo of the fund will be so large. It will, I think, soon begin to diminish constantly and fairly rapidly. Then with reference to those who come into the service in the future the question is whether we shall have any superannuation system. There are two sides to that question. The one side which forces itself upon my attention, and which, I think, will also force itself on the attention of the House, is this, that after all a fair superannuation system is not the least economical system—is, in my belief, the most economical. There is a sympathy with men who come into the service at an early age, and grow up in the service, and when the time approaches that they are not able to do their fair share of work, or to do their work at all, there is a lack of desire to put these men out of the service without anything, and, without a superannuation system, the tendency of that sympathy would be to keep men on drawing their salaries as long as possible, whether they could do their work fairly well or not, and, as the work has to be done, to put other men on to do the work, and so to overload the service with people who are not active servants in the best sense, and who do not do the best work. On the other hand, there is this to be taken into consideration, that you have not at all exhausted this subject when you consider the payments into the superannuation fund, and the payments out. You have also to take into account the question of the real economies effected by the superannuation of persons with high salaries and filling up their places with persons at lower salaries, or doing away with the offices altogether. I have not had a calculation made as to all the departments; but I have had some calculations made with reference to my own department, and I can fairly challenge the investigation of the House in regard to the superannuation in the Finance Department for the last ten or fifteen years. Any person who goes through it will see that the system has been established for the purpose of doing away with servants who had become unnecessary owing, not to less work but to better arrangements of the work, or to the appointment of persons younger, with less salaries, and who do the work efficiently. I will not weary the House with reading examples, but this is a side of the question we ought to take into account. Another thing which burdens the superannuation system is the taking into it of men at an advanced age, when possibly they will have but ten or twenty years of active service and then come in for the full benefits of the superannuation fund in proportion to the term of each. What the Bill proposes then is to commence de novo, without at all disturbing the present situation, so far as the civil servants now employed are concerned. It proposes to form a superannuation fund number two, into which shall go civil servants appointed after the passage of the Act. It is proposed to make the abatement what is considered a fair abatement, not so much as that proposed by Sir Francis Hincks in introducing his measure. We propose to make it $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent instead of 4, for salaries from \$600, and 3 instead of $2\frac{1}{2}$ for salaries under \$600. We propose to limit the age at which employees can go upon the superannuation list to forty-five. That is to say, no person who is appointed over forty-five years of age shall have the benefit of superannuation, and the idea of this is to encourage what we ought to encourage the getting into the service of younger men, who will be trained up to the work gradually, and will give to the country the best service they possibly can, and to discourage the taking in of men of advanced years whose term of service would be naturally short and who become more burdensome upon the superannuation list. So that one point in this Bill is that persons who are employed in the Civil Service of forty-five years of age and upwards shall not be eligible to be put on the superannuation list.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Nor charged.

Mr. FOSTER. Nor charged, certainly. Then I have had, as my hon. friend intimates, actual calculations made. I suppose my hon. friend does not wish me to read the tables but merely to give the results. The results show that, on the basis of $3\frac{1}{2}$ and 3 and on the basis of not having any persons charged in the list who enter the service at forty-five years of age or over, and on the basis that we shall not superannuate under sixty-five years of age, this system would be completely self-sustaining, on the supposition that on the funds in the hands of the Government we shall allow an interest of 6 instead of four per cent. The contribution then which, under these circumstances, the Government will give is a contribution of 2 per cent on the moneys invested in the fund, and of which the Government will have the use. Under these circumstances, if the rules be rigidly adhered to—and they will be unless other legislation takes place—with reference to the percentage of abatements and with reference to the limit of forty-five years, there will be no charge upon the country with the exception of the extra interest charged which will commence with nothing and go up gradually. The interest on the first year will be estimated as our contribution at \$180; the interest for the second year will amount to \$558, and will go on accumulating as the fund increases. It may be said, in answer to this, that you cannot always keep the age of superannuation at 65, and that some will be superannuated below sixty-five. That is true. It often becomes necessary to do so, but even under the old superannuation system, taking the whole average, the age of superannuation has been between sixty and sixty-two, so that although superannuation sometimes takes place below sixty-five, by persons becoming disabled through accident or ill health, the majority of cases will not necessarily be very large, and the contribution which the Government will have to make over and above the 2 per cent interest I have spoken of, will be a contribution sufficient to make up for the fund what is necessary to keep it equal to paying all the prospective annuitants upon it owing to superannuations which may be made below the age of sixty-five, which will amount to an insignificant sum. So that, under this system for about twenty years, there will be scarcely any demand upon the country at all, with the exception of interest which goes into the fund. After twenty years, there will be the gradual accretion of superannuants; and at any time that the Government and the House wish to do away with the superannuation system there can be no one in the Civil Service who can get up and say, you have violated the compact, you must not do away with this as far as I am concerned; for the fund will be in such a position that if at any time the Government and Parliament come to the conclusion to have no superannuation and to stop the system, there will be a fund out of which to pay to every prospective annuitant what may become due to him in the course of his life in the service.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the average age at which those who were superannuated were appointed?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very difficult thing to find out, and I do not think my tables show that. The returns on these matters have not been printed consecutively, and, in some years, have not been brought down. I asked for that to-day, and find that it would require a large amount of research and several days to get it. However, you can get a comparative idea from the table I have read.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Upon what age is that actuarial calculation based as regards parties entering the service? Is it an average age?

Mr. FOSTER. It is taken in this way. The average appointments for a number of years past are taken, and then the average of the whole and the average of their salaries and the like, and the average ages for appointments in the future are assumed to be about the same as that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has the hon. Minister the average age before him?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I have the average. I might read one or two of these tables. The average number of appointments in 1891, was 207, the total ages 69,345, the average 33.5, the average salary, $629. 1892, total number of appointments 237, average age 34, average salary $531. Taking the two together, you find 444 appointments, average age 33.9, average salary, $576, so that my hon. friend will see they very closely coincide in the two years which have been taken, and I think some other calculations were made of two or three years previous, and the average came out surprisingly close in all the years, as regards ages, and pretty close as regards salary. The average age may be put down as between thirty-three and thirty-five, and for the purposes of this actuarial calculation it has, I think, been taken at thirty-four, with the limit we propose to put upon the age for annuitants. Evidently the results will be liable to be better than in the past.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Supposing a man pays into No. 2 fund 3½ per cent? The Government has to pay in a certain other amount to the fund to the credit of that man?

Mr. FOSTER. It is paid into the general credit fund, and not put to the credit of each man.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not understand the scheme then. I understood it differently. I think you will find it is not very well expressed in the section.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it would be to the interest of the service and of the country if the hon. gentleman did not press this Bill through at this session. The subject is one which requires a very great deal of consideration. The Minister of the Crown who presented this Bill and who has given us the explanation on the policy of the Government with reference to it, has referred to the burden upon the fund caused by the superannuation of a large number of old servants who had been in the public service for a long time without contributing anything, and whose contributions under the Superannuation Act had continued for a very short time before they were superannuated. It seems to me it would not have been an unreasonable policy, nor would it be an unreasonable policy now, to make parties superannuated before they have been for a certain number of years in the service contributors to the fund in the same way as those in the service. Why should a person who has been superannuated after a contribution of a few years to the fund be allowed to retire and receive his superannuation allowance and still contribute nothing after he has been superannuated? I think that a person superannuated, who is receiving $1,200, or $1,500 or $2,000 a year, and who has contributed very little to the fund, could very well afford to contribute after he has been superannuated out of his superannuation allowance. I do not see that he would be subjected to any greater hardship than a person who, upon a small salary, has contributed after entering the public service. Under the plan I suggest those who are benefited will be called upon to bear a fair proportion of the burden. Let me suppose that a person after he has been in the service five years fails in health and is superannuated.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot be superannuated until he has been ten years in the service.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the hon. gentleman knows that many of them have been superannuated, a certain number of years being added to their term of service.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that has been done.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That has been done over and over again. It does appear to me that these parties superannuated before the Act had been, say ten years in operation, might well have been made contributors to the fund.

Mr. FOSTER. But many of those superannuated early had given 35 years of service.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I quite admit that, but I am speaking of the amount of their contributions. The burden, as the hon. gentleman knows, has been shifted upon the shoulders of the public at large, composed in great degree of parties who are as straightened in their circumstances, and who have quite as small an income as many of those who have been superannuated. There is another feature of the system which requires the serious consideration of the House, and which leads me to the conclusion that a more satisfactory system in the interest of the parties, if not in the interest of the public at large, might be devised. The hon. gentleman has given the number added to the public service as between 200 and 300 every year. The number who are superannuated are about 10 per cent of those added; so that those who die in the service must constitute in the neighbourhood of 90 per cent, and none of those composing the 90 per cent or their families, though they have contributed to the fund, and are, in effect insurers and contributors to the income of the survivors, receive anything. You find parties who have been for 30 years members of the service and contributors to the fund, ever since it has been in existence, who die in the service. Their families receive nothing. All that they have contributed goes to the advantage of those who have been superannuated. Now, I myself know parties who have remained in the service until advanced age, who have served the public faithfully, who have contributed the amount required of them to the fund, and who have died in the public service, and their families have received nothing. The families sometimes get a gratuity of two or three months salary which the deceased was receiving, and beyond that nothing was paid them. Now it does seem to me that a system more advantageous could be devised if the Government were to impose 4 per cent, as the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and to allow compound interest at that rate, and when the party is retired from the public service or when he dies in the public service, hand over to him or to his representatives the amount of money he has actually earned. The public will lose nothing, and the family of the party who dies in the service will receive the advantage; there will be perfectly fair and equal treatment of all the parties who enter the public service, whether they die in the public service, or whether they are superannuated or retire. I think that such a course would be more advantageous than the one which is hitherto in use and which the hon. Minister seeks by this Bill to some extent to approximate to a self-sustaining system. I have no doubt the hon. Minister is giving these parties a larger amount than they could receive from any other institution, by allowing them 6 per cent on the moneys they contribute. I do not specially take exception to that. I doubt whether the fund he provides will prove adequate. I think a very careful calculation was made, when Sir Francis Hincks proposed 4 per cent. The hon. gentleman has named $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent and 3 per cent on smaller salaries, but I believe these contributions will not yield as large a fund as was provided by the 4 per cent and 2 per cent, under the first proposition adopted at the time this policy was initiated. And so I think it would be advantageous if the hon. gentleman will consent, after the discussion of this measure by the House, not to press it through this session, but to give the House an opportunity of carefully considering the whole subject and to find out if some other system, fairer to those who die in the public service, could not be adopted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am sorry the rules of the House will not permit me to reply to some remarks the Finance Minister has made. I will avail myself of my privilege, when the House goes into committee on the Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would join in the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that this important matter, after it has been discussed by the House, should be left over for further consideration. I urge this upon the same ground as he has presented, first, the importance of the subject, and second, that it has not been threshed out in debate. I did not gather from the hon. gentleman, myself, that he submitted this report merely as a tentative measure. I did not gather that he had thoroughly exhausted the subject himself, or that he had reports from those competent to deal with the matter, which justified him in saying that this was the last word that could be said upon the subject. No great damage can occur from leaving the question over for another year, and there may be great good. I think it will be generally admitted, that the system for which the hon. gentleman proposes to substitute the present one, has not worked in the manner in which the public expected. In the first place, the evils of the existing system, the injustice of the present system, are not remedied at all. The present system will go on for another twenty years. The new system which is proposed, will not come into operation until twenty years have expired.

Mr. FOSTER. The new system begins immediately. Its fruits will be felt in the first twenty years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What I want to point out to the hon. gentleman is this, that the evils and injustice of the existing system will continue during those twenty years, and he has made no attempt to deal with them at all. How do the facts stand to-day? We need not concern ourselves very much with a discussion as to whether one particular Government, or one particular party, are to blame for the evil that exists. We must deal with the facts as we find them. We find in the Public Accounts, as a matter of fact, that the amount of the annual allowances to which the present superannuated civil servants are entitled, is $277,855; while the amounts they actually received, during the past year, was $253,679, the difference arising from the fact that some of them only received two, or three, or four months, as the case may be, of their annual salary, having been superannuated during the year. But let it be understood that the Civil Service pension list of the country is $277,000; whereas, as a matter of fact, the contributions made by the civil service towards the fund, are only $63,000; so that we are paying $200,000 odd more than we are receiving out of this fund. Therefore, when you put aside altogether the idea on which the fund was originally founded, on which the system was originally established, that it would in some sense or way be a self-paying system, we know now that it is not, and never will be. That cannot be justified. The hon. gentleman knows that the present system is made, not only to cover a superannuation for those who have lived to a period of life when they can work no longer with efficiency in the public service, but it is made use of for political purposes, from time to time; and we have the disheartening spectacle of men in the prime of life superannuated and placed upon the pension list—a very odious list in this new country—with salaries ranging from a few hundred dollars up to thousands. This is a scandal and a disgrace, of course, and has tended very much to make this system nauseating. Now, for my part, I think the present system contains provisions which will operate most grievously and unjustly to a large portion of the Civil Service. Take the very case my friend instanced. A man goes into the Civil Service, and after contributing to the superannuation fund for ten, twenty, thirty, or forty years, he dies; the bread winner is taken away, a little helpless family is left behind, and they do not receive a single farthing.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you propose to remedy that?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not pointing out the remedy at present, I am pointing out the injustice that exists, because many hon. gentlemen, including the hon. gentleman himself, spoke on the assumption that the present system was one which, at any rate, if it was injurious to the state, dealt out justice to the Civil Service. I say it does not. It is a most grievous and unjust system. In the first place, a man very often in the prime of life, is superannuated some times for good cause, and sometimes without good cause, and in that case he receives very much more than he ever paid in. But I say that the bread winner, who has paid in for twenty or thirty years, and dies and leaves a helpless widow and family, loses all the money he has paid in, and his family does not receive a cent. Now, that is a gross, and a grievous and a patent injustice. It ought not to exist. It ought not to be possible that two men, side by side, should enter the Civil Service and go on and pay the same amount for twenty years, that one of them should die, leaving a helpless family, and get nothing at all from the state; while the other man walks out, perhaps, in the prime of life, and receives $1,600 or $1,700 the remainder of his life. Therefore, I say the system requires a great deal of consideration. It ought to be changed, something ought to be done to remove that evil. I have not thoroughly studied the question, although I have given it some consideration. I have read the speech Mr. Blake made, I think, in 1883, in this House, when he proposed a new system of repaying to the public servant, when, at any time he went out, the sum of money which, up to that time, he had paid in, with interest upon it. That system seemed to me a good one. I also read the memorandum on superannuation which was prepared and submitted by the Civil Service Commission; and it will be seen by any hon. gentleman who takes up that memorandum, that those gentlemen do not suggest that they had exhausted the subject. They simply submit, as they say, a preliminary memorandum rather than a scheme embodying mature conclusions upon the subject. They have not come to any mature conclusions; they merely submit a memorandum of their present impressions. I do not suppose the House are prepared to legislate upon suggestions rather than conclusions arrived at after patient consideration. Now, I think myself that the present system could be very well repealed altogether. I do not think it is necessary to do an injustice to these civil servants, or to break the compact we have with them. Of course, every one knows that if the present Superannuation Act was repealed, it would necessarily involve, on the part of the state, a return to all those who have paid moneys in, of all the moneys they have paid in, with a reasonably large amount of interest, compound interest, it might be, upon those payments, so that injustice should not be done to those parties. You would then get rid, once for all, of the large number of pensioners which we have now "in prospectu." Of course, we have to pay those now superannuated during the remainder of their lives. They have paid in their money, and having been superannuated, are entitled to this pension for the rest of their lives. But with regard to the rest of the service, who are entering, as it were, on the superannuation system, you would get the element of finality; you are repaying them what they have paid in, with a reasonable amount of interest upon the payments, and then justice will be done to them as well as to the state. Now, I think myself, after considering the several propositions made, that perhaps the proposition suggested in 1883 by Mr. Blake, is the best one. There you would have repayment to the servant, on his voluntary retirement, of the amount he had paid in, with interest from the time he paid it in; you would have repayment to the servant who was compulsorily retired of the amount he had paid in up to the time of his compulsory retirement; and you would have above all, the repayment to the widow and children of the dead servant, when death called him away, of the amount he had paid in, with interest upon that. I think myself that the several interests of the state, and of the civil servant, and of those who are dependent upon the civil servant, would be better conserved by the introduction of a Bill based upon those lines, than upon the one which the hon. gentleman has introduced. I admit that in almost any scheme you introduce, there will be the possibility of injustice being done to some one or more. That cannot be avoided, you cannot have equal justice weighed out, as it were, in a pair of scales; but you must come as near to it, on the average, as is possible. I do not think this Bill does. I think it leaves the present evil system untouched. The injustice inherent in it will exist for the next twenty years, and the new system which it is sought to be introduced, which will practically go into operation twenty years from now, is not one which will meet the demands of the public, nor is it, I think, based upon even-handed justice. I think the hon. gentleman would consult the interests of the state better if, after the conversation we have had on the features of this Bill, he takes the second reading upon it, and lets it remain over till next year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not agree with the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) in regard to two of the suggestions he has made to the House. I consider this Bill is a great improvement on the present law. The question of getting rid of the present law altogether, as suggested by the hon. gentleman, involves a great injustice to the civil servants now in the employ of the Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman is proceeding on the assumption that the proposed Bill applies to existing civil servants. Instead of such being the case, it only applies to civil servants who may subsequently enter the service of the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I admit that. By the present law civil servants who have been appointed are entitled to superannuation according to the conditions of the law. They accepted their appointment, and the Government appointed them knowing that this law was in existence; it is in fact a condition of their employment. In some cases those gentlemen have vacated good positions elsewhere to enter the Government's service, and they are therefore entitled to the benefit of the law as it existed at the time of their appointment. That law is still in existence. If we were to retain that law and give the officers the amounts with interest thereon paid from year to year into the fund, it would not be doing fair-play towards them. They knew on entering the service that the law was in existence, and if they became unfit for work they could secure superannuation. If it had not existed, those officers, entering the service young, would in many cases certainly have taken out insurance policies running over ten or twenty years, at the expiration of which term they would have received the insurance money. But the superannuation system being in existence they have relied on that; and the honour of the Government and Parliament, in my opinion, will not consent to wipe out that law and throw such officers on the street. The hon. gentleman has referred to officers remaining in their positions until the last moment and dying within a short period of leaving the service, all the amounts paid into the fund being thereby lost. Such cases undoubtedly occur. That has always seemed to me to indicate a defect in the law. Something should be done for the families of such officers. The civil servant probably paid into the fund during twenty or thirty years the amount for which he was taxed, and on his death his family receive nothing. That system is undoubtedly wrong, and something should be done for those families. I do not advocate that an allowance should be given to them at all equivalent to that which the civil servant would have drawn from the fund, but something certainly should be done, such as giving an allowance equal to the salary during three, four or five years received by the civil servant, in order that his widow and children might have some means of support for a time at least. Regarding the 4 per cent imposed under the first law, and the 2 per cent now collected, I may say that that change occurred within a short period, I do not remember how many years.

Mr. FOSTER. Three years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The suggestion was made by Mr. Joly, who was then a member of the Opposition, but he took a broad view of the case without respect to party, and he contended that 4 per cent was too high and it should be reduced to 2 per cent, and instead of 2 or 2½ it should be 1¼ per cent. The result of this change was that the fund was found to be too small to meet the allowances, and we find ourselves in our present condition.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. Joly drafted the Bill for the reduction?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I did not say so. I said that Mr. Joly made the suggestion to the House, that it was supported by a large number of members, and the Government introduced a measure to carry out this suggestion, and it appeared at the time to meet with the unanimous assent of the House. In regard to the new tax of 3½ per cent and 3 per cent for officers who are to be appointed after this Bill becomes law, they being under forty-five years of age, I think the proposal is a good one, and it will replenish the fund, especially in view of the interest which the Government will pay on the amount paid in. I desire, however, to ask the Minister of Finance in regard to officers who may be appointed, whose age at the time exceeds forty-five years. Under this Bill I understand they will not pay any superannuation contribution.

Mr. FOSTER. They will pay nothing.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Suppose an officer is appointed, forty-seven years of age, to a high position such as deputy-minister of a department, and after ten years he becomes unfit to perform his duties, I understand that no provision is made for the superannuation of such an officer.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot be superannuated.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under the old system, previous to the introduction of the superannuation system, officers were in the service no less than sixty-five, seventy or seventy-five years of age, and they were permitted to remain there because there was no superannuation system in force. Although they may have proved ornaments to the department, the work was really done by second officers who were necessarily appointed. Has the Minister of Finance made any provisions for such cases?

Mr. FOSTER. No provisions. You have to place a limit somewhere and look at the balance of the advantages. The balance of advantage in favour of the country, evidently is to appoint persons before they arrive at this mature age, and the effect of this will have that tendency greater than at present. I think my hon. friend if he will look at those who are deputy-ministers, will find that nine out of ten—there may be even a larger percentage—are not those who have been appointed at an advanced age, but who have grown up in the service; so that it would be but seldom that such a case as that would happen.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under these circumstances, I think the Bill is a great improvement on the present law, and should we adopt the Bill as it is, that would not prevent the Government, during the recess, considering the other points, and, perhaps, provide for the families of those officers who die, after having been, perhaps, thirty or forty years in the service.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In my opinion, the present Bill is an improvement on the old law, but, at the same time, I think we are adopting a wrong step if we sanction it. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to state that under the provisions of this Bill there would be no charge entailed upon the country, but we know from the working of the old law, that the expense on the Treasury has been very serious, indeed. I have no doubt that when the first Superannuation Act was passed, in 1870, that it was then supposed that the amounts received from the superannuation abatements would equal the amount that would be paid out, and it was intended that it should do that, at the rate of 4 per cent abatement then established. But as this system has gone on from year to year, we found that grave abuses had cropped up, until to-day we find that the country is losing $200,000 annually. If the provisions of this present Bill, as laid down by the Finance Minister, could be rigidly adhered to, there possibly would not be so much objection to it, as there is to the present law. As I understand it, no person is eligible for superannuation who is appointed at an age over forty-five years, and he is not supposed to be superannuated under sixty-five years. Then the amount received into the fund would meet the payments out, less 2 per cent which the Government propose to pay as interest on the deposits. It would be utterly impossible to carry out these provisions. There would be a great many cases in which men must be superannuated before they reach sixty-five years of age, and, in every case where that takes place, a charge is made upon the country. Viewing this Bill in the light of our experience of the old Superannuation Act, I have no doubt that, in a few years, we will find a large expense fixed on the country. I do not think the country is prepared for this. I know that in the western part of Ontario, Conservatives and Liberals alike feel that the superannuation of civil servants ought to be dispensed with. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) a man may pay into the fund for twenty, or even forty years, and then, when death occurs, his family are cut off without receiving any return for the money so paid. This is, in my opinion a hardship. On the other hand, another man who is superannuated may retire, after ten or fifteen years, at a very large yearly allowance. I believe that a system could be devised by which this injustice would not be perpetrated. To my mind, the plan suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is a reasonable a fair and an honourable way of meeting the difficulty. If 3 or 4 per cent of the salaries of civil servants is deducted each year, and the Government were to allow some interest on this fund, then, if death occurs or if they retire because of ill-health or old age, a certain amount will be coming to them, and it will obviate any reluctance on the part of the Government in dispensing with their services if they are not able to discharge their duties. I think it would be wise for the Government to postpone action on this Bill, and to take into their serious consideration the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). This is a matter which should be considered as a business transaction, and not from a party standpoint. It is one in which the interests of the public are one side, and the interests of civil servants on the other. No matter from what side of the House it emanates, the plan which would best carry out the wishes we all have in view is certainly the one that ought to be adopted. In my belief, the scheme suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would meet the difficulties that have been raised, and ought to be accepted by both sides of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. The Bill now before the House, has, in my opinion, a good deal of merit, over the superannuation system which has obtained heretofore. It provides a larger payment into the fund, and, according to the proposal, the superannuation system is likely to pay its way without entailing much additional expense upon the country. But I think it is unfortunate that the measure does not provide, as the hon. member for Bothwell points out, for giving something to the widow, and perhaps orphans, on the death of the civil servant who has been paying into the fund. A man may be superannuated at a time of life that he can do a little work in many lines and when he is still able to earn something for his family, but if he drops off suddenly, after having paid his superannuation abatement for many years, there is no provision made for recouping to his family any part of the money he paid. The fact of his sudden death deprives him of his superannuation, and also deprives his family of what, had he lived, he might be able to earn in other walks of life after he had been superannuated. The family then become pensioners on the public and have to be provided for in some way. I think that this very condition of things was what gave rise to the necessity for a superannuation law in the first place, but although this Bill provides for the family during the life of the person superannuated, it makes no provision for his family after death, and unless there is something saved—which, in many instances, unfortunately, is not the case—they become pensioners on the public and must be provided for at the public expense or by charity. Therefore, I think, the Bill is defective in this respect. I regret to find also that it makes no provision to reduce that very large number of cases which have been growing up of late years, in which we have been paying a very large amount of money, that I think we should not pay, to superannuated officials. The system has grown up of late years of adding to the length of a man's service; in some cases one year, some two years and some a greater number of years, for the purpose of enabling him, when he leaves the service, to draw a much higher superannuation allowance than his years in office would entitle him to. That is an obnoxious principle; it is very unpopular in the country, and it ought to be remedied in some way or other. It is to be regretted that this Bill does not propose to remedy that evil. I do not know how that could be provided against, but I think it would be very easy to remedy it. It has been found very troublesome for members of Parliament to satisfy the people of the country that they are not doing more than justice to those who are in the Civil Service. In my opinion that principle should be stopped in the future. If, in this measure, it were provided to put an end to the system of adding to the number of years of service, and also to refund the abatement to the families of civil servants who die in the employment of the Government, it would be a much better measure than it is at the present time.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into committee.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you intend to go through with the Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the hon. gentleman to let the matter stand until the leader of the Opposition is here. I do not think it will delay the matter at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to say that I am very anxious to put the Bill through. If it is not a full measure such as hon. gentlemen would wish, it will, at least, correct an evil which would become almost unbearable, and it will prevent 240 or 250 more coming in, next year, under the present rate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman is determined to push the Bill through we, on this side, will assent to his going into committee.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. McMULLEN. In answer to the statement made by the hon. Finance Minister this afternoon, I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the number of cases of superannuation within the last few years. The hon. Minister says that the average age at which civil servants have been superannuated is between sixty and sixty-two. Now, I have in my hand a number of returns that have been laid on the Table of the House, showing the ages of those who have been superannuated during the last few years, and I will read some of them in order to show the House that my contention is correct with regard to the number that have been retired, and the absurdly low ages at which they have been retired. I presume that the hon. Minister has left out those who were retired by gratuity, which would largely increase the average age of those on the list.

Mr. G. Roebuck	58
Mr. D. D. Belcher	37
Mr. J. Miller	59

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What is the hon. gentleman coming to?

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister made a statement that the average age of those retired since 1882 was about sixty to sixty-two. I want to show that his calculation is not correct, because a very large number were retired at a much younger age, and he does not include those that he retired under the Act by gratuity:

Name.	Age.
Mr. John Lane	59
Mr. T. J. Walsh	53
Mr. J. E. Bullard	45
Mr. S. P. Brecknan	34
Mr. W. J. McDowell	51

My reason for submitting those figures is to show that the Act has been abused by retiring a great many men who had not reached the age of superannuation and who were removed in order to make room for others:

Name.	Age.
Mr. Story	37
Miles Montgomery	46
J. W. McDonald	26
John Henry	26
E. A. Bent	37
Wm. Phillips	58
Thos. Fry	54
James Fraser	49
James Roy

1891.

John Wynn	59
G. B. Bonn	58
J. Taché	59
Wm. White	40
A. Sommerville	49
John Gore	59
D. Morris	55
R. Lennox	58
E. Brady	33
Thos. Watters	41
Wm. Brenton	59
R. W. Baxter	55
J. Tilton	55
E. T. Buchanan	47

I shall not further detain the committee reading the names of those retired, but thought it my duty to present those names to show that undoubtedly abuses have taken place in the administration of the Act. It is impossible to note the very large number of names retired at forty, forty-five and fifty, without concluding that, in a great many cases, these men have been removed from the positions they occupied so as to provide places for others. There is no necessity whatever why a superannuation Act should be continued. As I have said previously, they are well paid for their services, and it does not require a very high class education to pass the examination. All you want is to be specially educated in a certain line. Under those circumstances, the country is entitled to the services of those men at the competitive rates they would receive in any other employment. It is not right that the country should be called upon to contribute an excess in the value of their services, and in addition give them a retiring allowance for the balance of their lives. In many cases, men who have served their country long, have died in the service, and their families got no retiring allowance; and had the money deducted from their salaries been applied in securing a life policy in some responsible insurance company, their families would have something to depend upon. In cases of that kind, the amount deducted goes into the fund, and is then paid out to others not entitled to it, who did not render the efficient and long service to the country which those who died in the service did. It operates very unjustly to those who are faithful and continuous servants in the employ of the Government, and it is only beneficial to those who are incapable of efficiently performing their duties, those whom the Government, in order to get rid of them, place upon the superannuation list. I have known of men in the service of the Government whom the Government, in order to get rid of them, have placed on the superannuation list, even adding years to their time of service to bring them under the operation of the Act, this being necessary because they had not served the ten years provided in the Act as necessary to superannuation. It is a gross injustice to those who die in the service, after having contributed for years, their representative receiving nothing at all. As I stated on a previous occasion, I do not believe that when the superannuation system was first introduced into England, civil servants had the same liberal opportunities of insuring their lives that they have to-day. The life insurance system had not then reached the perfection it has since attained. In place of debating the present Bill, I think the Finance Minister had better adopt the proposition made by Mr. Blake which was to take 2 per cent from the salary of each civil servant, placing the money at his personal credit and capitalizing it every six months at 5 per cent, the amount being kept as a guarantee of good faith and efficient service on the part of the contributor, and then, at the end of the time, when it became necessary, either through ill health or any other cause, for the person to leave the service that amount of money would be paid over to him and, in case of death, it would be paid to the family. The Finance Minister says it is not intended to admit to the benefit of the fund any who enter the service after the age of forty-five, and that none are to be superannuated until they are sixty-five. My hon. friend will find under the operation of such an Act, great difficulty in granting relief to some men who, through ill health, or some other cause are driven to the necessity of applying for superannuation. Under the present law superannuation is only permissible after ten years service, and on the certificate of the deputy-head of the department. The applicant has to give the certificate of a doctor showing that the grounds upon which he claims superannuation cover a correct statement of his case. But the cases in which the Government has pressed superannuation upon employees have been those of persons in the outside service, postmasters and others in receipt of lucrative salaries. We remember the cases of the Toronto post office, the Montreal post office and the Victoria post office. I could give cases showing that postmasters have been changed every ten years or so, not because of ill-health, but because the Government wanted their places. Some irregularity occurs and intimation is given that in order to avoid investigation the person implicated had better apply for superannuation. When the application for superannuation is made, the person who has been applying for the place is appointed. That is the reason we have on the superannuation list such an enormous number, something like 550 persons, who are drawing about $250,000 a year. Our experience under that Act should deter this committee and the House from again giving their consent to the introduction of a new scheme which will simply mean a double-headed superannuation system, because we shall have the old system which will drag its existence along while the present incumbents contribute to the fund. The Minister proposed to make a very largely increased deduction from the salaries of those who come in on this scheme, so as to make the fund self sustaining. But it will be found that the reduction of these contributions will be proposed, influence will be brought to bear by members of the Civil Service, petitions will be sent in and strong efforts will be made to reduce the amount from the salaries, and the result will be that we shall fall into the same difficulties that we have experienced in relation to the existing system and the superannuation under this scheme will become a burden upon the resources of the Dominion. This House should persistently set its face against any attempt to establish another superannuation system. We should immediately provide that those entering the service shall not be entitled to any retiring allowances under the Act, but, of course, we would have to deal fairly with those who previously entered the service and who have contributed to the fund. If the Finance Minister would apply to the present system the proposition he has made in reference to the other, that none shall be superannuated until they reach the age of sixty-five years, the amount the country would be called upon to contribute would decrease from year to year. I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that this is a matter of vital importance, that it is a matter in which this country has taken great interest. I appeal to Conservatives, as well as Reformers, to say if the farming and labouring community are not bitterly opposed to the continuation of this system. These men who have fought the battle of life with earnestness and determination and, in many cases without the success they are justly entitled to, are, in many cases, compelled to spend their age as dependents upon their families. There is nothing provided for them, while the civil servants draw large sums annually from the Dominion Treasury and live like princes. There is no feature about this system which commends it to the favourable consideration of this House. It is the duty of the Opposition at every single stage to oppose the passage of an Act of this kind, and leave the Civil Service to provide for themselves. They get ample salaries to enable them to do it, and the country will be relieved of an enormous expense and burden upon our revenue.

On section 3,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am certainly not in favour of confining this provision of the Bill to parties to be appointed in the future. The Minister who is leading the House, knows well that when the superannuation provision was made, the intention was to make those who were to benefit by the superannuation, the sole contributors to the fund. When the measure was introduced by Sir Francis Hincks into this House, he estimated that the charges then made upon the members of the Civil Service would afford an adequate fund for retiring those who were to benefit by it. Subsequently, the House made a reduction from that fund, and this reduced rate has continued down to the present time. Now, the contributions in the Civil Service are less than 40 per cent of the amount of money that is annually paid out for superannuation allowances. This is a most unsatisfactory condition, and Parliament certainly never would have agreed to that if it had been told that upwards of 60 per cent of the whole of the money given for the superannuation of civil servants was to be taken out of the public at large. Certainly that is a condition that would not have been, for one moment, entertained when the original proposition was submitted. Subsequently there was a reduction, and no one would suggest that when Parliament made that reduction there was any breach of faith with the civil servants. Every one of them was quite ready to accept the reduction which was made, and to contribute a smaller sum instead of contributing the larger sum which had been paid before. But I do not complain of that at all. The question is this: Is the amount of money which they are contributing adequate to the payment of the amount of money which they look for from the Treasury, or from the superannuation fund. I say that it is not, experience shows that it is not, and it would be, it seems to me, grossly unfair to make the new appointees contribute 4 per cent, or 3½ per cent, while you retain only 2 per cent from those who entered the public service before. We have to-day just the same right, on every principle of law, as well as every principle of morals, to increase the sum adequate to the requirements of the service, as we had to diminish the sum when we thought that the amount was larger than was absolutely necessary. I call the Minister's attention to this fact, that in twelve years a man who enters the service to-day will contribute a larger amount of money than the man who entered ten years ago: and that being so, he will be entitled, if he were to be retired from ill-health or any other cause, only to the superannuation allowance on twelve years; while the other would be entitled to the superannuation allowance on twenty-two years of public service, although he will not have contributed a dollar more to the fund. I say that is a most improper condition of things. What the hon. Minister ought to do is to deal with the service as a whole. If experience shows that an increase is necessary, let that increase be made. I tell him that there is no measure on the Statute-book in the estimation of the public at large more unpopular than the measure of superannuation. The man who works upon his farm, or at his trade, or in his profession, has to look out for himself and save for himself. You pay the civil servants very liberally, considering the requirements of the service, but you retain a certain per centage with a view to their superannuation. Well, when you do that, you ought to see that there is some approach at all events, to the superannuation fund, meeting the public requirements or demands upon the fund.

It being six o'clock, the Committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 27) to amend the Superannuation Act.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When the House rose for recess, I was expressing my opinion as to the impolicy of adopting section 3 as it stands. I see no justification whatever for making a distinction between contributions to be paid into the superannuation fund by those who may be appointed in the future and those who are in the service now. There is no compact or agreement, legal or moral, between the service as it now exists and the Government, representing the public at large, that there shall be the present percentage contributed by civil servants and that they shall be entitled to the certain superannuation allowance as at present fixed. The percentage charged was a percentage intended to be adequate to meet the charges on the fund. Experience has shown that it is altogether inadequate. Last year the parties entitled to superannuation received nearly $260,000, while the amount contributed to the fund only reached $60,000, leaving a charge of nearly $200,000 against the public revenues as a contribution towards the superannuation of those parties. I repeat that there is no obligation, moral or legal, to continue this system. It is open to Parliament to increase the superannuation so as to make it nearly more what it should be, or we can, if parties are dissatisfied, return to them their moneys contributed, with interest. While the system may be amended so as to become more fair to the public and not unjust to the civil servants by the adoption of the amendments I suggested were adopted, the system is not one that can be made satisfactory, because, if you relieve the public from the charge made in the interests of the service, the civil servants will hold the opinion that they can make better provision for themselves in other ways. A system established on the lines I suggested this afternoon, and which, some years ago, was discussed in this House, whereby provision would be made applicable to those who died in the service as well as those who were superannuated, would be in the public interest. I trust the hon. gentleman will withdraw this and other Government measures, especially in view of the generally expressed desire of the House to adjourn this week, and then let the Minister consider the matter during recess.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is scarcely reasonable on the part of the hon. gentleman to ask the Government to give up all our measures. We have not submitted many measures during the present session, and we are willing to make a fair arrangement for the "slaughter of the innocents" in order to get away this week; and it can hardly be contended that sufficient notice has not been given of this piece of legislation, for it has been on the Order Paper for over a month. I scarcely think it is fair to ask the Government, even for the purpose of getting away this week, to sacrifice all their measures, and I do not think we can do so. This, however, is not such a formidable piece of legislation that we will be unable to put it through. The hon. member agrees, in the main, with the Bill. He wishes, however, to have an additional provision whereby a civil servant may make provision for his family after death as well. By this Bill we cure one evil, the continuance, during successive years, with the present abatement, of the present expensive system, which is one becoming intolerable to the country. That much is safe certainly. But my hon. friend will be at liberty, next year, to suggest amendments to the Act in regard to other provisions. I have looked carefully into my hon. friend's proposition, as to the possibility of combining a superannuation system and annuity and allowance for the family or widow of the deceased, with a strong predisposition in favour of it. But I came to the conclusion that it is well-nigh impossible to combine the schemes. The present system is simply an insurance against disability. After a man's working days are over and before he dies, this superannuation system proposes to give him the benefits of superannuation, but no system of superannuation proposes to give a double benefit of insurance against disability and insurance against death. It is impossible to combine them in a workable or practical measure. Suppose we undertook a system of giving an annuity to each family at the time of death. If worked out, it will be found that, in order to provide for the burden imposed on the public, the abatement must be abnormally high, in order to give anything worth while to the family or widow if the person dies. Then, there is an element of uncertainty as to the annuity which would be provided if the person died in the service. You have to take away, then, all that set-off which comes from those who have paid into the fund, and who have died before superannuation is granted them. When you calculate that up on the other side, you have to make the abatement so high that it becomes impracticable, and the allowance is, at the same time, so low as to be practically of no benefit. With this superannuation scheme—and to it I shall call the attention of the House to-morrow—there is the second part of the scheme. It is a plan under which the civil servants, for a minimum amount, and one which they can afford to pay, will be able to secure, with the greatest economy, an insurance provision. It will be the simplest and cheapest insurance that can be had, because all the expenses of management will be eliminated from it. So, the civil servant will be able to insure himself against disability, and, at the same time, he will have the opportunity of making a fair arrangement, so as to secure, after death, some provision for his family, by means of a most inexpensive, and, at the same time, a safe system of insurance. So these two desirable results are met. I believe they will be met at a minimum cost to the country, and with great advantage to the service as well. At all events, we must push this matter through, in order to get from under a load that, every year, is becoming more burdensome. I may say that I commenced my investigations with a predisposition in favour of the proposal of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), to make the rise in the abatement uniform. I cannot say even now that I think there will be a great measure of injustice in that; but at the same time it was pressed upon me—and I think it is a view which may well be taken into consideration—that these men who went into the service under certain conditions, having fulfilled these conditions, have gone on looking to the permanency of the system under which they entered, and it was something of a burden and something of a hardship to come upon them in the midst of the working out of that system to increase the abatement. It was that consideration which prevailed. So I would suggest to my hon. friend, that seeing we are making a move in the direction of lightening the burdens and preventing them from being so heavy as at present that we should pass this measure. Another year we might take into consideration as to whether it would be wise to increase the abatement for any part of the service which is already under the system. Anyway, I think my hon. friend would be reasonable in at least allowing that this will prevent a large abuse in so far as incoming servants are concerned, in comparison with that which exists, and that so far as that goes it is a decided advantage. I can say that the Government had no other desire in taking this up than in striving by some practicable and humane way, and one also which would not be uneconomical, to get out from under the burden at present existing on the Treasury.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The measure bears on the face of it evidence of undue influence on the part of some parties in the Civil Service?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I called the hon. gentleman's attention to what I think is the fair way to deal, if a measure of this sort is to be placed on the Statute-book, and I do not think it is the best form with which to deal with the subject. There are nearly 100 civil servants who have contributed on an average less than ten years to the fund, and who, had they been charged the same as those in the service, no injustice would have been done them. There are here on the list eight parties who are contributors to the fund less than one year; there are two who have been contributors less than two years, and there are thirteen who are contributors less than three and a half years. No wrong would have been done these, when the system was brought into operation, if the superannuation charge had been continued against them for a period of twelve or fourteen years.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the fund would not have been burdened to the extent to which it is burdened. But there still remains this point: that there are $260,000 in round numbers paid out annually for the superannuation or the payment of the annuities for the superannuation of these parties, only $60,000 of which are contributed by the parties themselves. Now, this whole arrangement is made partly in the interests of the public to secure the efficiency of the service, but mainly in the interests of those parties themselves, and when you propose to keep from them a certain proportion of their salaries that the fund may be formed, so long as the amount you charge them with does not exceed the amount of their contribution, there is nothing of which to complain. It does seem to me that the hon. Minister is increasing difficulties, if the system is to continue, by making these charges. But as I said at an early part of the discussion, I do not think the system is a satisfactory one, or that it will ever be made satisfactory in the public interest, and that it would be better to proceed in the direction of the repeal of the measure than to undertake to amend it in this way.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the evidence of Mr. D. Matheson, Superintendent of the Post Office Savings Bank Department before the Royal Commission on the Civil Service. The commission put some questions to him on this very subject of superannuation, and his evidence was as follows:—

Have you any views with regard to the Superannuation Act?—Yes; I have something to say. If we were constructing a service de novo I would not have a Superannuation Act at all, but instead of it a system of provident accounts, each man being obliged to contribute a fixed minimum sum monthly, which would be, as it were, the profit upon his own labour. I think that every man, during the working years of his life, is entitled to a profit on his labour to provide for those years when he cannot work. That is the theory in outside business, and the same should apply to the Public Service. The present Superannuation Act is justified on the ground—and it is only too true—that the present service has not been paid at rates that will admit of the men making a provision themselves for old age, and, therefore, it must stand as regards the existing employees. One of its provisions, however, should in all fairness be modified so as to admit of the contribution of men who die in the service being repaid to their heirs.

If you could by any actuarial process now place to every man's credit the value of his payment under the present Superannuation Act, and could commence over again, you would adopt this system?—No; you could not do that with the present superannuation payments. But under the proposed plan a writer, for example, contributing $6 a month, at the end of 35 years would have at his credit $5,400 of money, the result of just placing it in the Post Office Savings Bank and compounding interest annually at the rate of 4 per cent. That sum would be the legitimate profit of his own labour during those 35 years.

That is the annuity of $72 with the accumulation of 4 per cent compound interest?—Yes; In the case of a book-keeper paying $8 a month he would have $7,069. A correspondent paying $10 a month would have $8,564. A junior chief clerk contributing $15 would have $11,853, a senior chief clerk contributing $20 would have $14,513. That is a substitute for superannuation, and, in my opinion, the proper one.

That was the very principle that was laid down by Mr. Blake in his resolution of 1885. He proposed to make these very deductions from the salaries of civil servants, and to have the sum placed to their credit, and paid to them when they retired from the service, or if they had died in the service, paid to their families. Then Mr. Matheson goes on to say:

1. That would cost the Government nothing?—Nothing; That is the man's own money.

2. And if he died in harness his family would have it?—Yes; and it is a guarantee for the man's good conduct while he is in the service.

I contend that in the face of the evidence given by Mr. Matheson, who is an important clerk in the Post Office Department, and who has certainly some considerable knowledge on this very point, it would be well that we should follow out that line. Another result of the passing of this Act in my opinion will be this: we will have a greater abuse of the old superannuation system than we have experienced in last years. Men that are now in the service under the old Superannuation Act will be superannuated by the dozen, and the Government will say: we did it in order to bring them from under the operations of the old Act, that only takes from them 2 per cent and 1¼ per cent, and we have filled their places with men who are now contributing 3½ per cent. That would be used as an argument in favour of rapidly reducing the present staff, because the Government will say to the House and the country: We are bringing into operation an Act which we have recently passed, that will make the superannuation fund self-sustaining, and the sooner we wipe out the old Act and substitute the new, the sooner we shall relieve the country of the amount it is now called upon to pay. In this way they will use the new Act as an excuse for increasing the volume of superannuations. If this Act is passed, it should be subject to the voluntary action of the civil service, leaving to a man's option, upon entering the service, whether he will be a participant in the operations of this Act or not. If a man chooses to keep his own money and make provision for himself and his family by means of a life insurance policy, he should be allowed to do so. When you make it obligatory upon every servant to contribute to the fund, you make it a forced law, without any option. Therefore, I move that after the word "appointed," in the third line, the words "and who desires to enter the service under the Act," be inserted.

Mr. CASEY. I think this should not be considered by anybody as a party question. Therefore, I hope the Government will have their ears open to suggestions from this side of the House, and I do think the suggestion of my hon. friend from Wellington is extremely appropriate and sound. It does seem to me that the only provision we ought to make for superannuation, is that of a quasi-life insurance at cheap rates for those who enter the service; and although the amendment of my hon. friend does not cover the whole ground, I think it is a step in the right direction, and I hope the Government will consider it favourably.

Mr. FOSTER. I could not accept that. It would make the superannuation no superannuation at all. The superannuation system is not worth having as a half-measure—one that would make it possible to turn out a civil servant without anything.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister's idea is, that the superannuation is of no use, unless it leaves him the liberty of turning out men when he chooses.

Amendment negatived.

On section 5,

Mr. McMULLEN. I move that the time be reduced from thirty days to fifteen days. The present Act provides that the return shall be laid on the Table within fifteen days after the opening of the session, and I do not see any need of increasing the time to thirty days.

Mr. FOSTER. All right. If the hon. gentleman will stop talking, I will make it fifteen days.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill reported.

MERCHANTS SHIPPING ACT.

Bill (No. 92) to repeal certain sections of the Merchants Shipping Act relating to load-lines, so far as they affect ships registered in Canada, was read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FLINT. Will the hon. Minister fully explain the bearing of these enactments?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think I can give any more practical explanation than is given in the preamble of the Bill. The sections to be repealed have been found inconvenient and objectionable from the point of view of Canadian shippers. The question was what remedy could be devised, and the Minister himself gave instructions to have this Bill prepared so as to take advantage of the clause in the English Act, which provides that the Legislatures in British possessions may have power to repeal sections found unsuitable to their interests, subject to the approval of Her Majesty in Council. This provides for the repeal of these three sections, subject to such approval.

Mr. FLINT. No doubt the shipping interests in Canada will agree that the movement made by the Government in this regard is a good one, because, without exception, it has been felt by them that the operation of the English load line Act was not fair to the class of ships which are built in the Dominion, and that when those ships had to go into English ports, they were heavily handicapped on that account. I believe I am expressing the opinion of the shipping interests, judging by correspondence I have received from men well acquainted with the subject, when I say that the Government ought to go a step further in the same direction and make a careful study of the other provisions of the English Acts, as regards their application to colonial built vessels. There is a strong impression among our ship-owners that the technical rules of the English Acts and of the English Board of Trade in the inspection of wooden vessels have been considerably to the disadvantage of Canadian wooden ships. Great complaints have arisen, from time to time, regarding the imposition of many expenditures in English ports, which would not be required in Canada, and which, in the opinion of our owners and shipmasters, men just as competent to judge these matters as the agents of the Boards of Trade, are unnecessary. You are aware, Mr. Chairman, that the competition in the matter of ocean freights is terribly severe. I can appeal to the knowledge of every ship-owner in the House when I say that the value of wooden ships has greatly decreased during the past eighteen months, owing to the falling off of ocean freights and the severe competition of iron and steel vessels. Consequently any regulations which, to a large degree, must be based on a reference to iron and steel built ships built in England, and not always built on the models in use in this country, do not apply to wooden vessels built in this country. This tends to depress our shipping interests. I, therefore, invite the attention of the hon. Minister to the operation of all these laws, and would ask him to place himself in communication with the shipping interests of this country, with a view to having our vessels exempted more largely than they are now from the operation of English acts which prejudicially affect our vessels. If the British Government allow this Bill to pass, as, no doubt, they will, there will be a strong pressure, by the time Parliament meets again, upon this Government to see if they cannot obtain some further relief from what we consider a severe and unwarranted application of the rules in English ports to our vessels.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INLAND WATERS SEAMEN'S ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 102) to amend the Inland Waters Seamen's Act. He said: The Bill is to amend the Act with regard to seamen on inland waters, and to make the same provision as in the British Seamen's Act for the recovery of wages and disbursements. At present no provision is made on this subject in relation to seamen on the inland waters.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on certain proposed resolutions (page 2887) to authorize the granting of subsidies to certain railway companies and the constructing of the railways therein mentioned.

To the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, for 80 miles of their railway, from Lunenburg, on the east coast of Nova Scotia, westward to a point in the District of New Germany, together with a spur about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile long to Bridgewater Railway Wharf, and from a point $33\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Lunenburg and running to Middleton on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Acts 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, and 51 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding in the whole \$1,500.

Mr. FLINT.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood the hon. Minister of Railways was to place on the Table the report of the Minister of Justice with regard to this matter.

Mr. HAGGART. I have the report here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before this is carried I would like to hear the report.

Mr. HAGGART. The first report is dated 8th January, 1892, and has reference to the payment of $4,500. It says:

Sir John Thompson is of opinion that the subsidies should be paid to the railway company and not to Mr. Wade.

F. A. GISBORNE.

This is in reply to the question from the Finance Department:

To whom should the cheque be sent, to the company or Wade?

Then there is another one from Mr. Sedgewick approved by the Minister of Justice:

I have your file relating to the payment of subsidy due to the Nova Scotia Central Railway. The power of attorney of 5th April, 1889, given to the Halifax Banking Company, having been revoked, you should not pay any more money to the bank; it should be paid direct to the company. I have gone over the matter with Sir John Thompson, and he agrees with me in this opinion. Papers returned.

Yours truly,
ROBERT SEDGEWICK.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to know from the hon. gentleman whether these opinions were given with a full knowledge of the fact that the road had been sold under the trust deed?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; the whole of the papers are here; they are very lengthy and the hon. gentleman can examine them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to lay them on the Table; we will look them over. I understand the hon. gentleman to state that the Justice Department held that the sale of the road under the trust deed did not transfer to the purchaser any right to receive subsidies previously accrued and due.

Mr. HAGGART. The subsidy, first of all, was paid to this Mr. Wade through the Halifax Bank.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That was under the power of attorney. Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not catch the drift of my question. The subsidies were first voted to the Nova Scotia Railway. They could only be paid to the company or to some person duly authorized to receive them. That is perfectly clear. The Nova Scotia Central Railway Company appear to have given a power of attorney to Mr. Wade to receive the subsidies. The company afterwards revoked their power of attorney, and, therefore, it is clear that the department is right in giving an opinion that no further subsidy could be paid under a power of attorney which had been revoked. But the point is this : In the discussion the other night it was stated by some hon. gentlemen on both sides that subsequently this road had been bought by the Nova Scotia Railway Company, a trust given to secure the bonds of the road sold under that trust deed, and it was acquired by a purchase. It would appear, therefore, prima facie, that the road and all its franchises and rights passed. The point I asked the other night was whether the Justice Department had advised that under that trust deed and the transfer which followed it, the right to receive the subsidy did not pass. Now, I did not understand from the hon. gentleman that that point had been touched at all.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, yes. The judgment of the court was sent up to the Finance Department, and was certified by the prothonotary down there, with the order of the Supreme Court, and the amended order between the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company and the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, and it was on those papers, filed in the Finance Department, that the opinion was given.

Resolution agreed to.

To the Jacques Cartier Union Railway Company, for extending and completing their railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, a subsidy of $20,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This is for the extension of the road. It gives them power to extend the road towards the Back River, having its terminus at—Sault au Recollet—I think, is the name of the place.

Mr. FRECHETTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Government and this House to the fact that the resolutions now before us include no subsidy to a railway in which I take a special interest. I find that these resolutions do not comply with the demands I have been making to the Government for several years. My friends and myself, in the county of Megantic, have repeatedly made these demands to the Government, but so far without avail. I cannot let these resolutions pass without giving utterance to my feelings of regret in finding that nothing is granted in compliance with these demands. As far back as 1887, a deputation from my county, whom I accompanied, came to Ottawa and had an interview with the Hon. Mr. Pope, then Minister of Railways, and the Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, then Prime Minister. The answer they gave to the deputation was this. They said to us : Get an Act of incorporation and subsidies from the Government of the province of Quebec, and then we will grant you the usual subsidy, that is, $3,200 per mile. We took the necessary steps and made the necessary expenditure to get this Act of incorporation and these subsidies from the Government of the province of Quebec. After we got incorporated the Quebec Government promised us a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the portion of the road that remained to be built.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) What is the name of this railway ?

Mr. FRECHETTE. (Translation.) It is the Hereford Railway, mentioned in the motion I put on the Order Paper ; it refers to the extension of the line from Lime Ridge to Lévis. As I stated, we got from the Quebec Government an Act of incorporation and the promise of a subsidy of $3,200 per mile. That done, the Federal Government had promised they would get a subsidy voted to us. We were also requested to have surveys made of the proposed line. We had these surveys made, and the report of Mr. Ramsay, the party who made them, shows the direction of this railway is perfectly feasible, and the cost of building it would not be too large. This extension of the Hereford Railway is not a new line. I think the Government are mistaken when they presume, as they do, that it is a new railway. Fifty-four miles of the Hereford Railway are already worked out, over which Pullman cars are run. From the boundary of the United States to Cookshire thirty-five miles are worked out, from Cookshire to Dudswell thirteen miles, from Dudswell to Lime Ridge six miles, in all, as I have just stated, fifty-four miles are worked out. For these reasons I think the Government are wrong in considering that it is a new railway. There remains from ninety to a hundred miles of the road to build to extend it down to Lévis, through the counties of Wolfe, Megantic and Lotbinière, and connect it at Lévis with the Government railway, the Intercolonial. When connected with the latter, the Hereford line would become a feeder of the Government railway, it would feed its traffic and thereby the public chest would reap advantages by the increase in revenue it would give to the Intercolonial. Running through the counties of Lotbinière, Megantic and Lévis, this railway would be very beneficial to those counties. Moreover, it would be a short and very useful line, since it would be from thirty to thirty-five miles shorter than the two other railways, the Quebec Central and the Grand Trunk, from Quebec to Boston. It is a well known fact, Mr. Chairman, that the travelling public always take the shortest line, and this line would be from thirty to thirty-five miles shorter than the two other railways now run. And then by the building of that section of the Hereford railway, a fertile country would be opened up. Megantic has precious mines of asbestos, copper and slate ; there are also large quantities of limestone. Then there are rich and great forests. We have the cherry tree, maple, elm, ash and spruce in great quantities. The soil is very advantageous for farming. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I think the Government should have given us subsidies before now. By the motion I put on the Order Paper, I asked for copies of all communications, memorials, &c., addressed to His Excellency the Governor in Council, to the Government of Canada or to any member thereof, since 1888, asking for the grant of a Dominion subsidy to the Hereford Railway Company, with a view to enable that company to extend its line from Lime Ridge to Lévis, through the counties of Wolfe, Mégantic, Lotbinière and Lévis and to form a junction with the Intercolonial. Mr. Chairman, on April 5th, 1892, we sent a petition and a plan of the road to the Government. The plan was signed by the company's engineer. This petition was sent to the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) and it was signed by one of the directors of the Hereford Railway, Mr. W. B. Ives, and by Messrs. C. C. Cleveland and L. I. Fréchette. We asked the Government for a subsidy in aid of this enterprise. On June 2nd, 1892, I wrote to the Hon. Sir John Abbott, then Prime Minister, asking again for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile. Here is my letter :

OTTAWA, June 2nd, 1892.

The Hon. Sir JOHN J. C. ABBOTT,
President of the Privy Council,
Ottawa.

MY DEAR PREMIER—I include herewith, as requested, the petition concerning the railway in the completion of which I take such an interest. As you may see, fifty-three miles are already completed, the whole distance between Bucher's Falls and Lévis being one hundred and forty-five miles, which leaves about ninety miles to build. I eagerly take this opportunity to tell you that this railway would shorten by from thirty to forty miles the distance between Boston and Lévis. It runs through one of the most charming valleys of the province of Quebec and along four fine lakes. The building of this line would at last give their true value to some splendid water-powers and fertile lands. Whole mines are lying dormant there, waiting for the completion of this road to be worked out.

An Act of incorporation was granted by the Local Government; surveys were made, all of which gave satisfactory results.

We have often been promised this subsidy of $3,200 per mile. In fact, since 1887, the various Ministers of Railways could not help admitting all the benefits the building of such a line would procure to the country.

Am I wrong in believing that you will consider attentively the reasons above given to you and that you will give a favourable answer to my request?

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
L. J. FRÉCHETTE.

Here is the answer I received at that time from the hon. the First Minister :

PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE,
OTTAWA, 3rd June, 1892.

DEAR MR. FRÉCHETTE,—I am much obliged to you for the very complete statement sent to me respecting your railway extension. I assure you it shall receive the most careful consideration when the question of subsidies comes up.

Yours sincerely,
J. J. C. ABBOTT.

During this session, Mr. Chairman, I again wrote to the Railway Department in relation to this subsidy. The letter is under date of
Mr. FRÉCHETTE.

February 9th, 1893. It is signed by the hon. members for Compton (Mr. Pope) and Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Cleveland).

OTTAWA, 9th February, 1893.

The Secretary,
Railways and Canals Department,
Ottawa.

SIR,—We beg to request you will lay before the Minister the papers in connection with the Hereford Railway Company, consisting of a petition from the said company to the Honorable John G. Haggart, Minister of Railways and Canals, a letter from L. I. Fréchette, member for Mégantic, to Hon. Sir John Abbott, &c., &c. The question of a subsidy to be granted came under consideration, but it was agreed to defer taking any action until this year.

We remain,

Yours truly,
(Signed) L. I. FRÉCHETTE,
C. C. CLEVELAND,
R. H. POPE.

Were the hon. member for Wolfe and Richmond (Mr. Cleveland) in his seat, I am quite sure he would bear me out in my statement, and strongly support my application for a subsidy in aid to this railway. On the 13th February, I received the following letter in reply to one I have just read :

OTTAWA, 13th February, 1893.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, requesting that the papers of record in this department in connection with the Hereford Railway Company's application for a subsidy in aid of the extension of their line of railway from Lime Ridge to deep-water terminus at Lévis, a distance of 100 miles, be again laid before the Minister for his consideration.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
JOHN H. BALDERSON,
Secretary.

L. I. FRÉCHETTE, Esq., M. P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

On the 3rd March, 1893, I wrote again to the hon. Prime Minister, Sir John Thompson, as follows :—

The Hon. Sir JOHN THOMPSON,
Prime Minister, Ottawa.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me to remind you that during the last session, Mr. C. C. Cleveland and myself had an interview with you for the purpose of soliciting a subsidy in aid of the construction of the Hereford railway. You positively promised us that our demand would be granted at the ensuing session of Parliament. On the strength of such a promise, I pledged my word to my constituents and told them that the Government were going to subsidize their road to the extent of at least some thirty or forty miles. Allow me to tell you that any subsidy to a new line is out of question here and that when petitioning for aid towards the completion of the road, I am satisfied I am not going against the Government's view.

In the hope that, in consideration of the motives which actuate my cause, I will be pardoned for troubling you,

I beg to remain, Sir,
Your devoted servant,
L. J. FRÉCHETTE.

The honourable Premier replied as follows :—

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE,
OTTAWA, 8th March, 1893.

DEAR MR. FRÉCHETTE,—In reply to your letter of the 3rd instant, I beg to say that I have not forgotten the conversation which we had during last session with reference to the subsidy of the Hereford Railway. I shall be glad to bring your request to the attention of the Minister of Railways, who, I am sure, will give it the best possible consideration.

Yours always,
JNO. S. D. THOMPSON.

Mr. Chairman, in 1891, when the subsidy question came up before the House, the Hon. Mr. Ives and myself called the attention of the Government to the fact that there had not yet been granted any subsidy to this railway, as petitioned for by us. We both gave expression to our regret that our petition had been lost sight of, and the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Bowell) replied as follows:—

I simply want to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), and the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Fréchette), that the line to which they have drawn the attention of the House has not been lost sight of by the Government, or the fact that they have strongly urged upon the Government that a subsidy should be granted during this Parliament in aid of the road. But, as I have explained to the House, the Government, for various reasons, have decided not to ask this session for any new subsidies for any new roads. At the same time, I intimated to the House that the policy of the Government had not been changed with regard to the principle of aiding roads, so far as the revenue of the country will justify it, without adding to the capital indebtedness of the country. There are many deserving lines, and the one referred to by the hon. members for Richmond and Wolfe and Mégantic is of that character that its merits will not be lost sight of.

I consider, Mr. Chairman, that the Government have positively pledged themselves, so to speak, to grant us a subsidy; nevertheless, the whole year has elapsed and still nothing has been done; and in the resolutions brought down this session there is not to be found even the remotest mention of a subsidy to our road. The ground on which such subsidy is withheld from us, namely, that it would be equivalent to a new subsidy, could not hold, had the Government acceded to our demand from the first. I understand that the Government have made it a part of their railway policy this session not to grant any new subsidies for any new roads. Had the Government granted the subsidy at an earlier date, they would certainly have been spared the trouble of stating this year that it is a new subsidy, the granting of which ought consequently to be postponed. As I do not look at it in the same light as the Government, I consider that it is unfair to withhold the grant to our road on the ground alleged. It is not a new work, as fifty-four miles of the road are already open to traffic. And although the subsidy to be voted for the extension of the line would be new, still the line cannot be looked upon as a new road. All we ask for is Government aid to finish the road. Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to place before you the following letter I received quite lately from California, in connection with the same matter:—

MENLO PARK, SAN MATEO CO.,
CALIFORNIA, 18th March, 1893.

MY DEAR MR. FRÉCHETTE,—I see by the "Gazette" that you moved in the House for "copies of all communications, memorials, etc., addressed to the Governor in Council, etc., since 1888, asking for the grant of a Dominion subsidy to the Hereford Railway Company, with a view to enable that company to extend its line from Line Ridge to Lévis, Quebec and Boston Air Line." I understood last year that the Federal Government had solemnly pledged their word to the effect that a subsidy of $3,000 per mile would be granted this year to aid in the construction of this important line; which grant would result in opening up an important section of the country in the Eastern Townships, North Weldon, South Ham, North Ham, Wolfestown, Ireland, Halifax, etc., etc. I would feel much indebted to you, should you kindly if possible, send me a printed copy of the return to be furnished by the Government at your request, and tell me whether the building of this road is to be prosecuted, this year, and when. A new impetus would be, no doubt, imparted to many industries, such as the mining, lumbering and agricultural industries, etc. I am of opinion that the promise of the Federal Government to aid this road dates back from the time of the Honourable J. H. Pope, and has been frequently renewed since. Advantage may be taken of the subsidy previously voted by the Quebec Legislature, on the completion of every 10 miles of road. An answer at your earliest opportunity will much oblige.

Yours truly,
P. N. PARTRIDGE.

Coming from a rich capitalist, a former resident of Quebec, this letter shows the interest evinced in our road even by California people. It need be no matter of surprise then, if the member of the county should also take an interest in such an enterprise. I am willing to let the matter drop for this year, but at the same time, I wish it to be well understood that I do not waive any of my claims to the promised grants in favour of this railway. I do not desire to be aggressive, as I realize the Government's position, and I am satisfied that the best tactics for one to follow, when he wishes to obtain favours from a Government, is not to indulge in recriminations and in the use of vituperative language. Refraining from any such uncalled for tactics, I shall confine myself to telling the Government that it is time justice should be done to the interested parties. I will avail myself of this opportunity to submit again my petition to the hon. the Minister of Railways and tell him that I hope, at the next session, he will not again waive the question on the grounds alleged this year. By granting the desired subsidy in aid to the Hereford Railway, he will be doing justice to the people of Mégantic, and giving those at the head of this enterprise the means with which to complete one of the finest lines for the travelling public to be found in the province of Quebec and perhaps in the whole Dominion. The Government are not asked this year to subsidize the full length of the road which is to be built, but only for a portion of it, including about thirty miles. By granting my demand, the Government will be doing an act of justice chiefly to the county of Megantic. We have not had our share of the public moneys, although fully entitled to it, as contributors to the general revenue, like the rest of the country. We have had no railway built at the public expense; nor any canals or wharfs built by the Government at a cost of some fifty or sixty thousand dollars every year, as done elsewhere, owing to the fact that there is no shipping in our county. But this is no reason for the Government to persevere in denying us our fair share of the public moneys of which we have never yet received a cent. I venture to hope my remarks will be taken by the Government into their most serious consideration and that, next year, the subsidy asked for will be voted.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman. I listened with much attention to the observations just made by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Fréchette) in connection with the Hereford Railway. It is impossible to over-estimate the importance of this road, which was so well recognized by the Government of the province of Quebec, that I think I am not committing an indiscretion in stating that, had it not been for the "coup d'état" of Governor Angers, which threw down the Mercier Ministry, a subsidy would have been granted to that railway by the Government of that province. A few years ago, a deputation comprising many prominent citizens of the county of Megantic, and in which I myself had the honour to join, waited upon the Hon. Mr. Pope, then Minister of Railways; and that gentleman had almost formally promised to grant a subsidy for the building of that road. Some time later, at the time of the election of 1890, the hon. President of the Council (Mr. Ives) went into the county of Lotbinière, during the electoral contest; he stated he was in favour of this road, he referred to the considerable interests he himself had in it, and he, in his turn, almost formally pledged himself to have a subsidy granted to it, if, at any rate, I am correctly informed. Notwithstanding all these promises, no subsidy was granted so far. I hope the Government will at last fulfil their promises and subsidize this road, the importance of which is at the least as great as that of any other road subsidized by the resolutions now before us. I will say no more on this question, for I presume the hon. member for Megantic, according to the statements he has just made, has come to an understanding with the Government, and that this line will be subsidized next year.

Mr. HAGGART. I have to compliment the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Fréchette) and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret), who spoke so admirably in favour of the scheme. The Government are aware that for some years there have been a number of parties interested in completing the road from Hereford to Lévis. From petitions submitted to the Government, they are fully aware that this railway will run through a magnificent country, as graphically described by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Fréchette), which contains large deposits of copper, lime and asbestos, and is at the same time a well-wooded and fertile district. The Government would have been glad, if possible, to have assisted the construction of the road; but hon. gentlemen must be aware that it was decided to bring down no new subsidies this session. The remarks of the hon. gentlemen and the petitions presented in favour of the undertaking, will receive careful attention at the hands of the Government, with a view to meeting the wishes of those hon. gentlemen, when new subsidies are brought down to the House.

Mr. AMYOT. I hope these remarks will apply to all railway companies that have applied for subsidies.

Mr. FOSTER. You may take them generally.

Resolutions reported.

WORKS ON RIVERS AND STREAMS.

Bill (No. 115) to amend the Act respecting Joint Stock Companies to construct works to facilitate the transmission of timber down Rivers and Streams was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The object of the Bill is to change the charge to a price per 1,000 feet, instead of by the piece of timber, because it is considered unfair that a piece of timber containing 400 or 500 cubic feet should be charged the same price as a piece of timber containing only thirty or forty feet. The prices mentioned in the Bill are comparative prices. They bear due ratio to each other on fair prices, based on calculations made by those who are acquainted with the business and interested in this matter. Section 61 replaces section 61 in the old Act, and provides for supplying information as to the quantity of timber that has passed down rivers and streams.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say, in connection with this Bill, that I think it is a move in the right direction. It makes a much-needed reform in the matter of levying timber tolls, which were formerly levied by the piece, and which was a very inequitable basis. All practical lumbermen know that a drive of logs may require fifteen or twenty logs per thousand, while in other cases a drive may require but four or five to the 1,000 feet. This led to inequality and injustice in the measurement. I believe this Bill is almost precisely similar to a change made in the Ontario law last session. The Ontario law formerly was of the same character as the law of the Dominion which is about to be amended, and the change was made from the imposition of tolls upon pieces by count, to the imposition of tolls upon lumber by so much per 1,000 feet. I think no objection can be offered to this Bill. There might perhaps be some minor changes suggested as regards the rule of measurement, but at this stage of the session, least I might delay the passage of this much-needed measure, I will not press those changes.

Bill reported from committee, read the third time and passed.

ORDERS DISCHARGED.

On the order for second reading of Bill (No. 29) to further amend the Civil Service Act, being read.

Mr. FOSTER. As there seems to be a very great desire to get the business of the House through, I move that the Order be discharged and the Bill withdrawn.

Order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

Order for House in Committee to consider the following resolution read:—

That it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act, and to provide for the appointment of a Civil Service Board consisting of three members; two at salaries of four hundred dollars per annum each, and one who shall be supervisor of the Civil Service, at a salary on appointment of not less than fifteen hundred dollars, with an annual increase of fifty dollars up to a maximum of two thousand dollars.—Mr. Costigan.

Order discharged, and resolution withdrawn.

Order for second reading of Bill (No. 65) to amend the law respecting the Electoral Franchise, read:

Order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

SUPPLY—SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Mr. FOSTER moved the House into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to address a few remarks to the House with reference to the failure to secure an expression from Parliament with regard to the question of closing the Canadian department of the Columbia Exposition upon the Lord's Day. I think Sir, that it is discreditable to this House that the motion offered in connection with this matter should have been burked, as it practically was by the adjournment of the debate on the part of the Government, at a stage of the session when the adjournment of the debate meant the carrying of that motion to the foot of the Order Paper, where there was no human possibility of its being reached again this session. It was equivalent to a direct vote for the defeat of the motion, and it lacked the honesty of fairly meeting the question and getting the decision on it that a direct vote would have had. As you well know, Sir, I endeavoured to-day to get an expression of the House upon the question; but I was ruled out of order. I presume that in the position that the matter stands now, with that motion and adjourned debate at the foot of the Order Paper, it will be impossible to dispose of it, and I suppose that motion stands there as a bar to any action whatever upon this question. I merely rise to-night to enter my protest against the action of the Government in this regard; an action deliberately taken by them, and the consequence of which they and the House were informed of at the time; an action which has prevented any direct expression of opinion by this House upon a question which a very large proportion of the people of this country deemed to have been one of much importance. A question of precisely a similar nature has received the consideration of the American Congress. A large sum of money was voted by Congress to aid the Chicago Exposition, upon the express condition that the exposition should not be opened upon Sundays. That grant was made the session before last with that condition attached. A great effort was made during the last session of Congress to secure the rescinding of that condition attached to the grant, and all the forces for and against Sabbath observance were arrayed against each other. Petitions were presented to Congress representing over 40,000,000 people in the United States in favour of the continuance of that condition imposed upon the grant. The efforts of the managers of the exposition, the efforts of the great mass of the people of Chicago, the efforts of many of the business classes, and the efforts of all the elements of society in the United States opposed to Sunday observance were used with great vigour in the attempt to induce Congress to remove the restriction and permit the opening of the exposition on the Lord's Day. Congress refused. Congress stands on record as having vindicated the principle of Sunday observance. The Canadian Parliament stands on record—a most shameful record, in my opinion—as having refused to meet the question, as having taken a course which, though parliamentary, is not manly, as having burked the question and relegated it to the foot of the Order Paper, where it cannot be reached again this session. I feel as the one having in charge a motion in accordance with the Christian sentiments and desires of the people of this country, in consonance with the action of the United States Congress and in harmony with the action of the British Government on all similar occasions, that the action of this Parliament and this Government is one that we cannot feel proud of, but, on the contrary, is one that we ought to feel ashamed of. I condemn the Government to-night for having burked action on the question, for having deliberately moved the adjournment of the debate on the last day that it was possible to deal with the question as an item of public business, for having thrown that debate over at six o'clock, and having placed the motion at the foot of the Order Paper, where it cannot be reached again, and for now placing those who are in favour of action in the direction at the disadvantage of being utterly unable to reach the question in any other way. Their hands are tied. The ruling of the Chair is invariably against bringing up this question in any other shape so long as the motion is on the Paper, standing there beyond reach, and yet serving the purpose of barring action on the question in any other form. I say that this action is one that reflects no credit on the Government. Their course has not been a high or honourable one in my estimation. They should have met the question squarely, and in a manly way. If they were in favour of Sunday opening, they should have said so by their vote. But they shirked the question, they avoided action upon it; they leave the world to suppose that the Canadian Parliament stands lower, in moral tone, than the English Parliament or the American Congress; and they refuse, as a Government, to recognize the time-honoured principle that the Sabbath should not be desecrated and that its sanctity should be maintained. I shall not attempt to make a motion. I am informed that, under the rules of the House, I cannot reach the question again this session. I might make a motion expressing my regret at the conduct of the Government, but a motion of that kind would probably be purposeless. I have risen, however, to enter my protest against the conduct of the Government in placing the advocates of this motion in the position in which they stand to-night; and, having made this protest during the last hours of the session, I suppose the matter will have to be allowed to drop. But the impression must go abroad to the world that Canada is the only Anglo-Saxon commonwealth on the face of the globe that refuses to respect the sanctity of the Sabbath, that refuses to pass a resolution similar to that passed by Congress that the great World's Exposition at Chicago should be closed on the Lord's Day.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no wish to enter into a controversy with my hon. friend, but I do not think it is right for me to sit still and allow his last words to go without a protest. He has seen fit, with a great deal of self-approbation, to lecture us and to declare that Canada is the only Anglo-Saxon country in the world where the sanctity of the Sabbath is not thought highly of. He does that simply because this House did not see eye to eye with him on a certain resolution which he wished to put before it. If the hon. gentleman has not been able to get his resolution before the House, it is simply because he did not diligently look after it himself. If he had put it upon the Order

Mr. CHARLTON.

Paper at an early enough date, and had taken it up as soon as he had a chance—

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to correct the statement of the hon. gentleman. It is unfounded. I proceeded with the motion on the first public occasion.

Mr. FOSTER. That can scarcely be, Mr. Speaker, because if he had put his motion on the Paper at first, when, I suppose, his ideas on Sunday observance were as mature as they are now, he might have reached it half-a-dozen times over.

Mr. CHARLTON. I protest against the hon. gentleman's insinuation. I put the motion on the Paper on the first occasion that I had an opportunity. His aspersion on me is without foundation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot sit still any more than the hon. Finance Minister and let his statements go unanswered. The hon. gentleman lectures the hon. member for North Norfolk, who, he says, did not put his motion on the Paper in time. It was quite in time, and the question would have been reached, and the yeas and nays upon it recorded if it had not been for the action of the Finance Minister himself. In order to evade a distinct stand upon it by himself and his followers, he had the adjournment of the debate moved. He has the face to lecture the hon. member for North Norfolk that he did not bring forward his resolution in time, when, in reality, the Minister of Finance is responsible for the question not coming before the House.

IMPORTATION OF SETTLERS' CATTLE.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to ask the Minister acting on behalf of the Department of Agriculture, with reference to the Order in Council that has been passed with regard to settlers' cattle coming in from the United States, if there is to be any restriction as to the number of cattle that these persons may bring in; because, it seems to me, from a cursory glance at the order, that under it there may be a large importation of cattle, which may be exceedingly unfair to the settlers in the North-west, and to the people of this country, who are prevented from bringing in cattle except on the payment of duty. It seems to me that there should be some restriction as to the number of cattle those people may import, and I should like to ask the Government if it is their intention to impose any such restriction.

Mr. FOSTER. In reply to my hon. friend, I would state that the idea of the order is simply to allow bona fide settlers' cattle to come in. It was not supposed that that would be infringed upon with the purpose of bringing in herds of cattle. If it is necessary to fix a limitation so as to prevent any unfairness of that kind, it will certainly be done.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the Government had better look into the matter.

THE INLAND FISHERIES.

Mr. ALLAN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I desire to call the attention of the House to some grievances of our fishermen on the western part of Lake Erie, along the Detroit and St. Clair rivers, and around Lake St. Clair. In the fishing districts named the shore lines of Canada and the United States approach very close to each other, so that the waters of the two are practically the same. On the American side there is free fishing. People there are allowed to fish when and where they please unembarrassed by state laws as to close seasons or modes of fishing, while on the Canadian side our fishermen are hampered by various regulations which have very seriously crippled them in their operations. On the American side the whole coast is dotted with the nets of their fishermen. As many as thirty nets can be seen in a row on that side, while in the fishing district fronting the whole county of Essex there are only forty-five nets all told. The result of this policy has been that while we have been putting forth every effort to preserve our fisheries, while we have been expending a very large amount of money on our hatcheries, the Americans have for many years, in fact for all time past, been reaping the greater share of the benefits. This, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of much more importance, perhaps, than many members of this House are aware. The amount involved is a very large one. The fisheries of Lake Erie are, in fact, the most important of our fresh water fisheries, and when I show, as I shall do, not only from our own Blue-books, but from American statistics, the importance of this interest, hon. members I think will be surprised at the magnitude of the figures and of the advantage the American fishermen and the American people have had over us in the management of these fisheries. As I have said, the Lake Erie fisheries are the most important of our inland fisheries, and in the western end of Lake Erie there is more fishing done than at any other part. Owing to the proximity of the two shores and the shallowness of water, the two sides of the lake, so far as fishing is concerned, are practically the same. I will read the statement of a Mr. Alpern in an American paper with reference to the fishing laws of Canada and the United States:

There has been no increase in the catching of whitefish, except owing to the greatly increased quantity of nets fished, on Lake Erie on the Canada side; in the years 1884, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90 and '91 only 1,027 tons of whitefish were caught, and a total of only 29,000 tons of all kinds of fish during those eight years. This was the result of the bad laws in force in Canada, all kinds of restrictions being made into law; and at the recommendation of S. Wilmot they have a close season. They close the season in November; they pay a license fee of $50 for each pound-net; close season for pickerel, 15th May to 15th June; sturgeon, 5th April to 15th July. Compare above catch with the fish caught during the same years on the American side of Lake Erie of at least 200,000 tons of all kinds of fish. If figured at $80 per ton it would show a value of $16,000,000, as compared with 29,000 tons of the value of $1,160,000, thus proving that the free American fishermen produced $14,740,000 more fish on Lake Erie in the eight years than the restricted Canadian fishermen in the same time.

That is taken from an American paper, and, I presume, is approximately correct, verified to a very great extent, if not altogether, by the reference in our own Blue-book. I notice that the comparison of the fish caught on respective sides in 1880 and 1885 is as follows:—

	1880	1885.
Whitefish	205,600	186,080
Herring	*3,333,800	3,531,855
Sturgeon	854,000	5,935,400
All other kinds	*11,774,400	19,354,900
Total lbs.	213,400	459,260
Total value... ..	*1,970,000	4,727,950
	735,600	1,073,160
	*11,982,900	23,734,912
	2,008,600	7,653,900
	*29,087,300	51,556,517
	48,577	242,774
	*474,880	1,109,096

* Represents United States side.

Thus we see the great disparity of the catch of fish. While we have been expending very large sums of money in Canada on our fish hatcheries, the policy of the department has been to enforce very strict regulations as to catching fish. Now, I would endorse that policy, provided there was between the two countries a similarity of law, but for us in Canada to continue protecting our fish, and giving the Americans the benefit of it, is a policy which should not be continued any longer. Another thing: our men have been hampered by the frequent changes made in regard to the modes of fishing, as to the size of the nets, etc. Just now it has been ordered that a 4½ inch net is to be used in Lake Huron. What the definite instructions are in reference to Lake Erie I have not ascertained; but the fishermen there have been very much alarmed. Last year there was a 4-inch net used. It might not seem a very serious matter to change from 4 to 4½-inch net; but it amounts almost to the loss of the total value of the net. I am informed that in some cases the Americans have changed their nets, and that a loss of $1,500 will be entailed, on some firms. Not only has this sort of thing been going on for years, but even in our own waters the Americans have practically had control of our fisheries. I will show you from the return brought down to this House that from the Rondeau westward our own fishery officers have been playing into the hands of the American fishermen and who are practically controlling the fisheries of the western part of Lake Erie. I have in my hand papers that were ordered to be brought down in connection with the inquiry into the conduct of William Prosser, overseer of fisheries for the Essex district, and I intend, in order that the public may see that not only have our fishermen been shut out of these waters practically by the Americans catching the greater quantity of fish, but lately in our own waters they have had almost entirely the control of our fisheries from the Rondeau westward. That has been the state of affairs up to within a year or so ago. What change has taken place since perhaps the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries may be able to inform the House. The report which I will read from is that of Overseer Kerr, of Hamilton, who was deputed to make inquiries as to the manner in which our fisheries were conducted. He says in his report to the department, dated December 10th, 1891 :

"The principal part of my duty is to ascertain how many nets were really fished during the month of October and the first half of November. This I had some difficulty in establishing, as it was rather late when I was ordered to the ground, and on my arrival there I found that owing to the continued stormy weather most of the twine had been raised and stored away, except the pound-nets fishing on the east side of Rondeau, which is a most sheltered spot. However, as the stakes remained I was enabled to form a pretty correct idea how matters really stood, and with various information received on the spot, I think I shall be able to give you a pretty accurate list of the actual fishermen. I shall also try and show up the tricks of Jas. Post & Co., of Sandusky, and the manner in which the above named firm is assisted by negligent fishery overseers.

The firm of Post & Co. has a large interest in the nets of this district, and, as a consequence, a strong grip and control over the fishermen, who make all sorts of efforts and resort to all kinds of dodges to fish as many nets as they can.

1. At Deal town, Isadore Laroche fishes six nets. Claims to be the only actual fisherman and sole owner. The licenses for these nets are issued in the name of R. J. Lipscombe, Insurance Agent, T. S. Arnold, Auctioneer, and David Woods. This last name presumed to be fictitious. None of the above are bona fide fishermen, and I dare say, never saw the nets. Mr. Laroche says he has been fishing for four years in this locality.

2. John Burton has license for three pounds; was informed he had stakes for eight, but found only six. When asked for explanations he said he kept moving his twine from one set to another, as became necessary according to the run of fish, but that may be true, or it may not. Anyhow, it is a dangerous practice which should not be allowed under any consideration.

3. Moody & Coulson fished three nets. Have license for two. The third net is in Mr. McLean's name, who sold out three years ago to one Lamarche, who in turn sold out to them. They claim to have applied to the overseer to have that net in their own name, but it was not done. This seems fair enough.

4. At Point Pelee there appears to be a good deal of confusion with regard to the bona fide fishermen.

Charles Fisher, an American from Sandusky, fishes three nets licensed in the name of John Mooney, Eth. Mooney, and William Haskins. None of these men fished for years as far as I could ascertain.

Mr. ALLAN.

5. Geo. Johnson, who fishes three nets, has a license for two. The other is in David Johnson's name. The latter is presumed to be a fictitious person.

6. F. Gardener fishes two nets in a string and another in Hezekiah Bickford's name, who has been dead ten years.

7. Adam Oper fishes seven nets; three in his own name, and two in John Loop's and one in Jas. Loop's name. Oper has a license for two nets, and the Loops for three. Excess in this case; two nets. Was unable to ascertain who were the licensees for the remainder.

8. W. A. Grubb fishes two nets; has license for one. The other one in the name of one Quick, who resides on Pelee Island--drove stakes for the third net.

9. The Deslauriers fish four single pound nets, which is according to their license.

10. Peter Ives fishes three nets, one of which is in Henry Loop's name. Both men hold licenses for only one net each.

11. Peter Gardener fishes one net. That it is all right.

12. David Wilkinson fishes three nets; one in his name, and the two others in Jas. & Jos. Lamarche's names, who hold licenses for one net each. The Lamarches, however have not fished since 1889.

13. Loop Bros. fish three nets; two in their name, and one in Thos. Robinson's name. This number tallies with the license.

14. Wm. Black fishes one net for which he holds a license.

15. Uriah Loop fishes three; one in his name; one in Scratch's name, and the third in Mallott's name. This agrees with the license.

16. Gavoreau & Lott have licenses for two pounds and fish two.

17. H. Bartram has license for one pound and fishes it.

18. Alex. Hackett fished three nets; has no license. Claims to be fishing in the name of Livingston who run away three years ago with another man's wife. Livingstone's name appears on the schedule for one pound. He also claims to have bought out Hillman and Johnson, who are down for two pound-nets.

19. Michael Allaire has license for one pound and fishes it.

20. John Goodchild has license for two pounds; was informed he had fished three; saw stakes for three nets. Called on him but he was away. His sons say he fished three nets, but this the old gentleman denies, claiming the third set of stakes were driven in case of storms, so that he could put up a third net without loss of time. I have proofs that he actually fished the three nets.

Remarks.

I experienced a great many difficulties in fathoming the above irregularities; ascertaining names and finding out particulars. All sorts of obstacles were thrown in my way; especially from such of the fishermen as were under Post & Co.'s control. This made it sometimes utterly impossible for me to get accurate or even reliable information in a great many cases, and I must come, therefore, to the conclusion that either Post & Co. own and control the whole fishery from Rondeau westward, or else that overseers McMichael and Prosser are in their favour doing their bidding in every respect, instead of taking the interests of the department into consideration, whose paid servants they are.

Overseer Prosser is sharp and intelligent, and would undoubtedly make a most desirable officer, were it not for certain failings which I am now going to detail.

In addition to a most serious charge of mismanagement in recommending for licenses parties who do not exist, thereby helping to place the pound-net fisheries of Lake Erie in the hands of Yankee firms,

I am also credibly informed that Mr. Prosser has been in the habit of granting permits for extra nets during the fall of the year, especially to such of the fishermen who dispose of their fish to Post & Co. Anyhow, the present investigation has convinced me that he was not the proper man for the position, and the sooner he and overseer McMichael are replaced by new blood, the better it will be for the protection of the fish, and the welfare of bonâ fide fishermen.

Pelee Island.

I would have wished very much to have continued my investigations to Pelee Island, where I am informed a similar state of affairs exists, but the late dates at which I received my instructions made it impossible for me to do so. The influence of Post & Co. is mightily felt among the fishermen on the island; more so, perhaps, than on the mainland, and, I am told, a total disregard of the law prevails there. However, I made particular inquiries from parties who were supposed to be well informed as to the pound-net fisheries on the island, as to the number fished this fall, who set it down as 24 nets in the names of the following persons:—

- 1st. Thos. McCormick. . . Eleven (11) nets.
- 2nd. Sandy Mahoney . . . Three (3) nets.
- 3rd. Pat Mulligan . . . Three (3) nets.
- 4th. David Gardener. . . One (1) net.
- 5th. Geo. Gardener. Two (2) nets.
- 6th. F. Mahoney. Four (4) nets.
- Total number. Twenty-four (24) pound-nets.

I will not guarantee this statement as correct, but should the department deem it advisable another year to instruct me with a similar mission, I will do my best to get at the root of the evil, which no doubt exists here as on the mainland.

Conclusion.

These remarks have grown to a greater length than I expected, but this was necessary to enable you to distinctly understand how matters stood.

In my humble opinion the cause of the present lawless state of affairs in this district is due to the laxity of Overseers McMichael and Prosser, and to their anxiety to please Post & Co., instead of earnestly and conscientiously taking the department's interests. For this the remedy is very simple. Both these officers should be made to do their duty, or they should be replaced by better men.

A second cause is to be found in the fact that the former close season which permitted of fishing for herring during the close season for whitefish offered every inducement to fishermen, backed as they were by wealthy and unscrupulous buyers and shippers to violate the law. These men are poor, and being in the hands, so to speak, of wealthy firms, they felt no compunction in eluding the Fisheries Act, or deceiving the officers, so long as by doing so, they could make a little money, and redeem their indebtedness. Now that the close season for whitefish and herring has been made uniform, this state of affairs has no more reason to be.

The nets should not be set before a given date, and they should be lifted before the close season begins. This would obviate all trouble, and ensure by force a strict observance of the law.

Then, the overseer, if he were a conscientious and intelligent man, would easily put a stop to the traffic which is now going on, and see that no one but the actual, bonâ fide Canadian fishermen are granted licenses. And, above all, that no more nets are fished than the licenses allow. If this is strictly adhered to by the officers in charge, there will be no danger of creating a monopoly as now exists. And, once a fishery officer allows himself to get into the power of the fishermen, or a Yankee clique, his usefulness as a servant of the department is gone.

Attached to this report is a sketch showing the exact number and position of pound-nets, with names of parties by whom fished during this current year.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) FRED KERR,
Fishery Overseer.

The Deputy-Minister,
Fisheries Department,
Ottawa.

OTTAWA, 15th December, 1891.

SIR,—Adverting to that portion of your report of 10th instant, in which you state that:—

“In addition to a most serious charge of mismanagement in recommending for licenses parties who did not exist, thereby helping to place the pound-net fisheries of Lake Erie into the hands of Yankee firms, I am also credibly informed that Wm. Prosser has been in the habit of granting permits for extra nets during the fall of the year, especially to such of the fishermen who disposed of their fish to Post & Co.” I am to request you to send here all the information in your possession in support of such a charge, so as to enable the Minister to decide whether it is sufficient to justify this department in taking further proceedings against the above named officer.

I am at the same time to impress upon you the necessity of being very particular in the charges which you bring forward on this head, as it constitutes a grave offence, involving most serious consequences.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Signed), S. P. BAUSET,
Acting Deputy-Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. FRED. KERR,
Fishery Overseer,
Hamilton, Ont.

HAMILTON, 22nd Dec. 1891.

SIR,—In answer to your letter of the 15th instant, file No. 777-91, in relation to a portion of my report of the 10th instant in reference to Wm. Prosser, Fishery Officer, granting permits for extra pound-nets during the fall of the year in Lake Erie, especially to those who disposed of their fish to Post & Co.

I therefore beg to state that, during my investigation, it accidentally came out that Mr. Prosser refused to grant the extra pound net this year as done heretofore. I then made inquiries as to this assertion, meeting with the following result:—

In the first place, in a conversation with Henry Loop, he stated in the presence of Henry Bertram and William Black, that in the year 1888 or 1889, he paid Prosser $50 for an extra net for which he only received a receipt. Black contended he had done the same with him for some years until he had quit selling the fish to Post & Co. When he paid the $50 for the extra net he only received a receipt, which I herewith forward to your department for your own information. You will please find a receipt wrote by Mr. Prosser on the back of fishery license for the year 1886, marked (13) for $50 for two nets. Black says he paid Prosser $100 that year and fished the two nets. You will also find a license marked (A) for the year 1887, paid on the 28th of April, and a receipt for $50 for an outside net paid on the 3rd October of the same year 1887. He says this was received in year of 1888 and 1889, but was unable to find the receipt.

I have no doubt that Mr. Goodchild fished three nets this year, but whether he paid Mr. Prosser $50 for the extra net I cannot say at present. I am quite certain that Grubb fished an extra net as I saw the stakes.

In fact Mr. Prosser informed me himself that he granted permits for extra nets during the fall fishing, and as I understood him to say, by permission from the department. I thought this assertion very strange and remarked, I supposed he remitted the money to the department; he said he did; if so, why cannot these fishermen produce licenses instead of receipts?

Remember I am not accusing Mr. Prosser of appropriating this money to himself. If he sent the money to the department, it will certainly show on the books whether licenses were transmitted to him or not. If the money on the receipts marked (A) and (B) are on the books, then Mr. Prosser clears himself; if otherwise, then I consider Mr. Prosser is in a very bad position. Understand, I do not rely altogether on Black's statements, as he and Prosser have been at dagger heads for some time. I think your books will tell the straightest story. I have no other information at present to transmit to your department in reference to the above.

Respectfully submitted,

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) FRED. KERR, F.O.

The Deputy-Minister,
Fisheries Department,
Ottawa.

I will now read a few extracts from Mr. Kerr's memo. for the Minister:

Adam Oper fished two-pound nets on the east side of Point Pelee, for which he holds license in his name. Adam Oper & Co. (A. Oper, J. T. Robson and Levi Girardin) fished five pound-nets for which they held license; J. Robson one pound-net, E. Mooney one pound-net, John Loop two pounds, making a total of seven pounds fished by Adam Oper and Adam Oper & Co.

In Adam Oper's case, I consider that Mr. Prosser's explanation makes things look much worse. According to his own version, Oper must have fished eleven nets, while I only heard of seven. Most of the men mentioned in regard to this charge, never fished. One in particular, John Robson, never fished a net in his life. The truth of the matter is, that the nets in question belong to Post & Co., and things have got into such a muddle that I believe Prosser himself does not understand how matters are with regard to names, &c. I consider Mr. Prosser's answer most unsatisfactory.

I will now read a report in reference to this subject, dated Hamilton, March, 1892:

HAMILTON, March, 1892.

SIR,—According to your instructions of the 5th instant, I proceeded at once to the place in question to take down evidence and to make inquiries in regard to certain charges of neglect of duty and other irregularities preferred against overseer Prosser.

I therefore beg to state that on my arrival at Kingsville on the 8th instant, I at once commenced to make the necessary inquiries and take down evidence bearing on the charges in overseer Prosser's case. I met with a great deal of difficulty on account of the terrible state of the roads, which hindered me much in procuring the evidence that I required most. However, I think I succeeded in getting enough of evidence and statements that will fully convince the department that the charges on the whole are clearly proven. I will also show that the statements made by Mr. Prosser in his defence are incorrect, according to the evidence that I have taken.

I might, however, review the various evidence and statements on each of the charges in detail, and express my opinion as I go along, so as to enable you to understand the position of things, showing where the contradictions take place, etc., as follows:

Charge 1.—I was unable to drive down to Wheatly, where Moody and Coulson reside, on account of the bad roads. However, as this was not a serious charge I thought I would let it go for what it was worth.

Charge 2.—Mr. Prosser in his defence says he had heard that Chas. Fisher was fishing more pound-nets than he had license for, that he sent word down that he must pull up the extra stakes. He continues,—I went and seen for myself and found two pound-nets fishing only.

Now we will take the sworn evidence of W. A. Grubb, who positively swears that he saw three pound nets fishing and another one lying on the shore ready to be attached to the stakes, which were already planted. This evidence is corroborated by William Deslaurier, who fished the seine-nets the year before. These nets belong to Post & Co. Deslaurier says he fished four nets in partnership with one Cline, and according to his evidence paid license fee for three pounds only. This happened in the year 1890.

Charge 3.—I admit that I was in fault in my report on this case where I had stated that Frank Gardener fished a pound-net with a license in a dead man's name. However I find it was John E. Deslaurier who held the license in Hezekiah Bickford's name, now deceased ten years. I will thus explain the circumstance:—In the first place, Overseer Prosser states in his defence that John E. Deslaurier told him to make out the license in the name of H. Bickford, who is ten years dead, as he, Deslaurier, had no transfer. The evidence of Deslaurier denies this assertion. He positively swears that Mr. Prosser was aware of his having a transfer, which was produced for my inspection. He also states that he asked Prosser to make out the license in his (Deslaurier's) name, but Prosser thought it best to make it in Bickford's name. See Evidence.

Charge 4.—The Oper Case.—This charge is a very hard one to fathom although Mr. Prosser and myself agree as to the number of nets he fished, being seven. Still, that's not the point. He does not say whether they were double headers or not, or the names of the licensees were bona fide fishermen. The evidence of John Laird and W. A. Grubb go to show that he invariably fished three double headers. Some of the names he claims who held license for these nets are not fishermen, namely, Joe Robson, John Loop, E. Mooney. For instance, Joe Robson is an invalid who is completely paralyzed for years, whom I called upon, and he denied of ever fishing a pound-net in his life. I did not attempt to take his evidence as he was not a fit subject on account of his disease, but what he told me left me quite satisfied that he never fished a net in his life.

Charge 5.—This charge, known as the Goodchild case. It is clearly proven that overseer Prosser was cognizant of these three nets fishing during the whole season, and he was standing in with Mr. Goodchild. The evidence of Mr. Tofflemier and the statement of Alex. Hackett clearly prove this. Tofflemier swears he drove stakes for two of the three pound-nets fished, while Hackett distinctly says that he was aware of the three nets fishing altogether, seeing them in person. He also considers that Mr. Prosser must have known they were there as he observed him driving there on several occasions during the summer. I was unable to find one Anthony Marontate who fished for

Mr. Goodchild, who Tofflemier told assisted in driving the third set of stakes, he being away when I called, but his evidence can be obtained if desired. I can therefore safely say the evidence produced entirely contradicts Mr. Prosser when he states in his defence that after diligent inquiries he was unable to get any proof that he, Goodchild, fished more than two nets; in fact I fail to find any proof as to his making the least inquiries in the matter. See evidence.

Charge 6.—As to this charge: Wm. Haskins swears he was not in the habit of trading in pound-net licenses, as asserted by Overseer Prosser, nor had he applied for a license for himself or any one else for years back. He also claims he is ignorant of those transfers between Haskins vs. Mooney, Haskins vs. Wriggleworth, which Mr. Prosser claims took place in the years 1885 and 1887.

General Remarks.—In conclusion, I can only say that Mr. Prosser's division is in a very confused and demoralized state, and should be remedied as soon as possible. This state of affairs has been caused by the overseer himself, in his anxiety to please and to favour Joe Post & Co., and as things now stand he has got so much in the power of the Yankee firms, his usefulness as a fishery officer is gone. You can readily perceive by the recent reports that he and Post have formed a sort of a combination and endeavour to shut out as many as possible of those men who choose to sell their fish elsewhere. We will take the cases of Wm. Black, David Wilkinson and Bates Bros: Mr. Post went as far as to threaten these men, telling Bates that for the sum of $500 or $600 he would deprive him of his fishing rights. This was done because Bates refused to sell him any more fish. I also found many fishermen afraid to give me the necessary information that I was seeking, on account of threats, &c., made by Prosser and Post of taking away their license, &c.

One old gentleman remarked, after I had taken his sworn statement, that if Prosser knew it he would settle his license for this year. There is no doubt this lawless sort of work has been carried on for years. If a fisherman makes a kick as to the price of his fish, etc., the next year his outside pound is taken away from him. This, particularly, has caused much trouble, you can readily perceive, some enjoying the privilege of fishing double-headers, while others' applications are not entertained at all by Overseer Prosser, who contended to some that the thing was not allowed.

I encountered great difficulty in procuring the sworn evidence that I have obtained, the feeling being strong against giving it for the reasons stated before, but after I properly explained the matter, I am happy to say, I quickly overcame this erroneous idea, leaving them to understand that they would receive justice and fair-play in future from your department.

I might also state for your information that I was told by Mr. Harrison, the gamekeeper of the Point Pelee Game Club, last fall, when on my tour of inspection, Mr. Prosser as soon as he learned that I was around immediately sent word to the fishermen that I was around and to look out. This assertion is corroborated by William Grubb and others. This I consider was a great oversight on Overseer Prosser's part, he being a servant of the department as he was, and assisting me in this work; but instead it appears he was spying on my movements and throwing obstacles in my way, therefore retarding my inquiries. As far as I can learn from the information received during my inquiries, I have come to the conclusion that there were four more nets fishing in excess of the licenses granted, namely, John Goodchild, one; Chas. Fisher, two; and J. Johnson, one. I was unable to find out anything with regard to shipping whitefish during close season last fall, as the fishermen keep very close on this, but, however, I believe on Pelee Island there was a great deal of illegal fishing and irregularities carried on there which should be remedied before pound net fishing commences this season.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

FRED. KERR,

Fisheries Overseer.

The Deputy-Minister,
Fisheries Department,
Ottawa.

Evidence of Wm. Haskins, Kingsville.

WM. HASKINS, sworn:—

I have not applied to Overseer Prosser for a pound-net license inside of two years, and I have never traded a license at any time. I think it was in 1885 I sold out my right to fishing station No. 16 to Joseph Post. I was compelled to, as Post held a mortgage on my twine and he closed down on me. I swear that I did not know that my name was on a license or connected with the same until I observed it on the schedule last fall. Mr. Prosser never informed me that a license for a pound-net was in my name, or did I authorize him to use my name in any shape whatever in connection therewith.

I also swear positively that I know nothing whatever as to the change in licenses stated by Overseer Prosser in the transfers of Haskins vs. Mooney, Haskins vs. Wriggleworth; if my name was used it was without my knowledge.

I applied twice for a license since 1885, but Mr. Prosser refused to grant me a license. I fish with others since but have not fished any for over two years.

Evidence of Philip Deslauriers, Fisherman, residing on Point Pelee.

Philip Deslaurier, sworn:—I have fished over 21 years on Point Pelee. In the year 1889 I had a license for one pound-net, but fished two nets. The second pound-net is what is commonly known as the outside net, or what some calls double header.

I paid Overseer Prosser one hundred dollars for the privilege of fishing the two nets. I received from Mr. Prosser one license only. It was for one net, for the first net. Did not receive a receipt or any acknowledgment for the $50 that I paid him for the extra net. In the year 1890 Mr. Prosser refused to grant me a license for even an extra shore net that I had purchased the year before, which I had fished as the outside net, putting me to the loss of $300, and I had to content myself with one, while others were allowed to fish double headers. I spoke to Mr. Prosser that it seemed strange that Adam Oper and Johnson were allowed to fish these kind of nets, while I could not get the same privilege. Mr. Prosser looked surprised to hear of such a thing, and threatened to go right down and tear up the nets, and I swear this conversation occurred in Leamington. He did not pull them. I met them afterwards and said they had a right to fish outside of the pound on the east side of the point. I saw Oper's nets this year. He had three double headers, two on the east side and one on the west. Johnson had also a double header and Frank Gardener had an outside net. I have not seen Prosser around during close season.

Evidence of Wm. Black, Kingsville.

Wm. Black sworn:—I commenced to fish at Kingsville in the year 1884. I fished two pound-nets until the year 1890. Paid license fee for two nets up to that time; was refused the second net by Overseer Prosser in the year 1891.

I swear positively that I paid Mr. Prosser the money for two nets each year that I fish them, except in the year 1890. I only received one license each year that I fished two nets. The license was for one net only. Mr. Prosser gave me receipt for the money paid for the second net. I gave Mr. Kerr the receipts for the years 1886-87. I do not remember receiving receipts for the years 1888-89. If I did I am unable to find them. I will swear that I paid Mr. Prosser $100 for the year 1888-89. I generally paid $50 in the spring and $50 in the fall, receiving a license in the spring for the one net, and the receipt in the fall for the other. I made application for the second net in the year 1890 in the usual form in the month of August. Mr. Prosser told me it would be all right. Under this arrangement I procured a new net and other fixing and went to the expense of driving the stakes, but did not receive the second license. I only fished one net last year. I fished the two nets a short time in the year 1890, but did not pay the extra fee that year. Mr. Prosser never asked me for it.

(Sgd.) W. H. BLACK.

Sworn before me, this 10th day of March, 1892, at Kingsville.

(Sgd.) FRED. KERR,
Commissioner.

Peter Gardener, Jr., Point Pelee.

Peter Gardener, sworn:—I have been fishing almost all my life. I have held license over five years. In 1888 I fished two pounds on lot No. 14, Point Pelee; I had a license for one from the department; I paid license for two nets, $50 in the spring and $50 for the outside net; the money was paid to Mr. Prosser. I received no receipt or any acknowledgment from Mr. Prosser for the outside net. I swear I paid him the money in the fall; when I gave him the money he told me to go ahead and fish, which I did. The next year I drove the stakes for the outside net, which I specially bought for the purpose. I had put the twine in, when Prosser came and ordered me to take it out, putting me to a loss of $300. He led me to believe that it would be all right, or I would not have went to the expense of buying the net.

(Sgd.) PETER GARDENER.

Sworn before me this 11th day of March, 1892.

(Sgd.) FRED. KERR,
Commissioner.

I will now read the report to Privy Council, as follows:—

CERTIFIED COPY of a Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved By His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on the 9th April, 1892.

On a Report dated 2nd April, 1892, from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, stating, with reference to further inquiries which he caused to be made during the month of November last, relative to alleged violations of the fishery laws, and other irregularities said to prevail amongst pound net fishermen on Lake Erie, from Port Burwell to Colchester, that the facts brought to his knowledge in this connection are such as to justify him in recommending the dismissal of the fishery officer implicated in such irregularities.

The Minister, after having fully considered all the facts related in the very full report made by Fishery Overseer Frederick Kerr, of Hamilton, who conducted ed this investigation, a synopsis of which is attached herewith, has no hesitation in saying that Overseer William Prosser has been guilty of gross neglect of duty and of grave irregularities in permitting certain persons to fish in the name of others, for the benefit of American firms, and that the above named officer also appears to have been in the habit of issuing licenses in the names of parties who have been dead for several years, and that he, moreover, allowed fishing during the close season, and was also in the habit of granting "permits" to fish pound-nets during the fall, without authority from the Fisheries Department, and without accounting for the fees collected thereon; the immediate effect of such conduct on the part of a sworn officer being to completely demoralize the fisheries service on this part of the coast of Lake Erie, and to place these valuable Canadian fishing grounds in the hands of American firms.

The Minister, in view of the above facts, recommends that the services of Overseer William Prosser be dispensed with, and that such further steps be taken against him for the recovery of moneys unduly collected by him, and unaccounted for, as the circumstances of the case may seem to demand.

The Committee submit the same for Your Excellency's approval.

(Signed) JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

The Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

I shall not detain the House much further, Mr. Speaker, in reading from this report. My only justification for going into so many details at this late period of the session, is that the question is a very important one to the people in Essex. It has been known for some time past that the fisheries have been under the control of Post and Company, but the evidence has never yet been placed before the public. My object in placing it upon the records of the House is not only that the House should know the particulars, but also that the public at large should have an opportunity of seeing them. Our fishermen in that part of the country have been oppressed for many years. We have only forty-five licenses in all, and most of those have practically been in the hands of American companies as is shown by this report. I will give the Government credit for having dismissed Prosser. So far so good, but I understand that Overseer McMichael is still in office. It is well known that at the other end of Lake Erie—although, perhaps, not to the same extent—the American fishermen have almost the entire control of the fisheries there, that they supply the nets to our fishermen, that they handle the greater part of our fish, and the regulations which this department has made from time to time, have been in the interests of the American fishermen to the detriment of our own people. That is the reason why I have detained the House by reading these reports. I will, if the House will permit me, continue to give further quotations from this report:

According to the evidence of Wm. Black, Peter Gardener, J. and Frank Gardener, Prosser must have collected a large amount of money for extra outside nets, giving receipts to some, and to others no acknowledgment whatever. The evidence on this point is explicit. Department knows whether money claimed to have been paid to Prosser was remitted by him or not. Attached to this report will be found a license and receipt from Prosser to F. Gardener, who paid $100 for two pound-nets in 1888. Prosser's division is in a demoralized state, which has been caused by his anxiety to favour Post & Co., and he is now so much in the power of Yankee firms that his usefulness as a fishery officer is gone. Reports show that he and Post have formed a sort of combine, and are trying to shut out such of the fishermen as chose to sell their fish elsewhere. Post threatened Black, Wilkinson and Bates Bros., telling them that he would deprive them of their fishing rights if they would not sell their fish to him (Post). Several fishermen were afraid to give information on account of threats, etc., made by Prosser and Post of taking their licenses away; one of them remarking that if Prosser knew of his giving evidence it would settle his license for that year. This work has been going on for years. If a fisherman kicks as to the price he gets for his fish, etc., next year his outside net is taken away from him. This partiality has caused much trouble. Some fishermen enjoy the privilege of fishing double headers, while the applications of others are not entertained, Prosser contending that the thing is not allowed. There was a strong feeling against the giving of evidence on account of reasons stated, but proper explanations overcame this erroneous idea, and the fishermen were led to understand that they would receive justice and fair-play in future from the department. Was told by Harrison, game keeper for Point Pelee Game Club, last fall on my tour of inspection, that so soon as Prosser knew I was around, he sent word to the fishermen telling them to look out. This assertion is corroborated by W. A. Grubb and others. This is certainly reprehensible on the part of a government officer. He should have assisted me as a servant of the department, but instead of doing so he spied my movements and threw obstacles in my way, retarding my inquiries. From information received I believe there were four nets fishing in excess of the licenses granted, viz.:—John Goodchild, 1; Chas. Fisher, 2, and J. Johnson, 1. Was unable to find out anything re shipping of whitefish during the close season last fall, as fishermen kept close, but think that on Pelee Island a great deal of illegal fishing and other irregularities are carried on which should be remedied before the beginning of pound-net fishing this season.

The following is the report of Mr. Kerr, fishery overseer:—

HAMILTON, 20th April, 1892.

S. P. BAUSET, Esq.,
Acting Deputy-Minister of Fisheries,
Ottawa.

In compliance with your directions, on the 11th instant, File No. 2661-92—requesting me to report on certain affidavits of Mr. William Prosser, relative to charges made against him; I beg to state that, after carefully reading his affidavit, and taking into consideration the evidences already transmitted to your department, I do not consider it necessary for me to again go over this case in detail, as it has been fully dealt with in my previous reports. I will, however, recapitulate each clause of Mr. Prosser's affidavit, to show the inconsistency of Mr. Prosser's and Mr. Louis Wigle's demands.

1st. Mr. Prosser swears;—That he never, in any way, either directly or indirectly, insinuated to any person or persons to whom they should sell their fish, &c., &c., or threatened to deprive them of their licenses should they not sell to Post & Co., &c.

In answer to this assertion I can only refer to the Black case. Why did not Mr. Prosser entertain this man's application for a second license, after Black gave up selling his fish to Post & Co.? Simply because Joe Post influenced him not to do it. Black states that so long as he sold his fish to Post & Co. he never had any trouble in securing licenses for two pound-nets. Prosser's action which had the effect of depriving this man of a second license, no doubt put him to a heavy loss, and no one can blame him for complaining. Look also at David Wilkinson's case, who was unable to secure a license for an outside net after he had had the temerity to sell his fish to others than Post & Co. Again, how did it happen that those that were under the control of Post & Co. were allowed to fish double-headed pounds, while those who were independent of this firm were refused?

Since this investigation was begun, I understand that Mr. Prosser has publicly threatened that some of the parties who were complaining would never get a license, if he could stop it. This threat has been repeatedly made by Joe Post. The whole sum and substance of the matter is that Mr. Prosser had placed himself so much under the power of Post & Co. that it was impossible for him to get out of their clutches. This renders him entirely unfit for the position he holds.

2nd. Mr. Prosser claims that he never granted a permit for a net to fish during the fall, or at any other time, unless he immediately notified the department of his having done so; that he remitted the full amount for the same, and that not a single permit had been granted since he was notified a year ago, &c.

I believe Mr. Prosser did not give permits for extra nets since a year ago, &c., but he allowed extra nets to be fished without the written permit. For instance, in the Goodchild case, in the cases of George Johnston and Charles Fisher, who had five nets in excess of the number mentioned in the license. All the witnesses who gave their evidence in reference to this charge are quite prepared and willing to appear before any court of justice face to face with Mr. Prosser, and repeat the evidence which they gave before me. If Tofflemeur, Hackett, Grubb and Deslauriers are called upon to repeat their evidence, I guarantee there will be no hesitation on their part. The thing is altogether too plain, especially in the Goodchild case. Mr. Prosser himself admitted that there were three sets of stakes, but not until I had told him that three nets were fishing. And how was it that Goodchild wanted to settle the matter by paying the fee, if it was not true? Mr. Prosser told me he was not in the vicinity of Mr. Goodchild's nets during the whole season when I have witnesses to prove that he was seen passing up and down on several occasions during the year. None of the witnesses in this case are in any way hostile to Mr. Prosser or to Post & Co. They would have no object in swearing falsely against him. I do not, therefore, consider it necessary to dwell further upon this case. The charge is so clear, the evidence is so conclusive, that I cannot possibly see what Mr. Prosser would gain by having the case opened up again.

3rd. That no one has ever been allowed to fish in excess of the number of nets for which he had a license, except about two years ago, and then the Department was notified in every instance paid for it, and apparently satisfied.

I need not dwell on this point. As already remarked in my previous reports, the department's books will be the strongest affidavits. If Mr. Prosser paid the money collected for the extra nets used by Mr. Black ($50.00), for the years 1886 and 1887, for which Black holds receipts, and for the years 1888 and 1889, which Black swears he paid ($50.00 for each year); Philip Deslauriers, $50.00 for the year 1889; Peter Gardener $50.00 for the year 1888 and Frank Gardener for the year 1888, these moneys will surely be entered. But, as I understand it, they are not, and Mr. Prosser has nothing to show that the money was ever paid; while a number of the fishermen hold receipts from Mr. Prosser. Mr. Prosser swears in his affidavit that this money was paid over to the department—then why does not he produce the acknowledgment generally received from department, which, according to the rule, is invariably given for such things. I apprehend that if Messrs. Wigle and Prosser press this matter too far, and have an open investigation, it will be worse for Prosser in the end, as these witnesses are ready to come forward and give evidence as they gave before.

4th. That not a single license was granted in the name of a dead man, except in the case of Hezekiah Bickford, and John Deslauriers, grand-son to the old man H. Bickford. Deslauriers requested him to send for the license as usual, in Bickford's name, which has never made any difference to any person.

This assertion is denied by John E. Deslauriers, who distinctly swears that he asked Mr. Prosser to change the name. Prosser declined, claiming that it would not make any difference. See John Deslauriers's evidence. He is ready at any time to swear the same thing again. Mr. Prosser must not forget that many licenses were issued to men who were not fishermen, and to others who never fished at all, as well as to men who were not in the country, viz.:—Harry Livingstone, Wallace Scratch, John Loop, sen., William Haskins, James Robson and others. The department is already aware, from my various reports, as well as by the evidence produced, that this was done simply for the purpose of procuring more nets for Post & Co. Mr. Prosser was perfectly cognizant of the position of these men at the time he forwarded the applications. I therefore cannot possibly see how he can clear himself of this accusation. These men are prepared to come forward at any time face to face with Mr. Prosser, and conscientiously give their evidence without fear or favour.

5th. That he always did his duty conscientiously; that he believes there has been and still is a systematic course of blackmailing against him, simply because he has done his duty, and would not allow certain persons to fish contrary to his instructions.

I do not agree with Mr. Prosser's statement regarding blackmailing, etc., etc. I am very sorry to add that I found Mr. Prosser a very deceitful man, and that his word is not to be depended upon. I must also mention that when I first met him he proved so affable and agreeable, that when I began this investigation I was strongly impressed with the idea that the charges would prove unfounded. But the irregularities were so glaring that there was no difficulty in getting at the bottom of the complaints, with the results already made known.

There is no blackmailing nor any hard feeling against him, nor any attempt to take advantage of him by the fishermen that I am aware of. True, there may be some animosity between him and Black, but Black told me he was quite satisfied with Prosser as an officer if he would only give him the same privileges as the rest of the fishermen, which was all he asked for. And all that Black stated in regard to the charges turned out to be correct.

I must say on behalf of the fishermen of this district that in all my travels I never came across a more respectable, decent, sober, and industrious lot of fellows. They are, I believe, above such a stigma as blackmailers, as Mr. Prosser designates them. All they asked was fair-play and justice from the local fishery officer, and no partiality to any one. My reports and the evidence produced showed that that has not been carried out by Mr. Prosser. Who then can blame these fishermen if they are dissatisfied at the manner in which he has been discharging his duties?

6th. That it is his desire that an investigation take place, and the Minister and all parties interested will then get justice, and the blame will be put upon those who should shoulder it.

I have not the slightest objection to Mr. Prosser's wishes being carried out; and I feel quite satisfied that all the parties who gave their evidence before me will not be slow in coming forward to testify and repeat what they said before, face to face with Mr. Prosser, although I consider this an unnecessary expense and trouble.

7th. From what he hears he believes Mr. Prosser thinks that the department has statements from fishermen here who will not repeat them in his presence.

In regard to this statement I do not believe that a single witness will go back on what he has already stated, unless it be through the influence of Post & Co., taking advantage of him in the supply of twine or something of this kind he has been in the habit of doing before.

8th. That he has done his duty and asks protection from higher authority, &c., &c.

I consider that Mr. Prosser has in no wise done his duty as he contends. Had he done so, his district would never had become so muddled as it has, being in a complete state of disorganization. This state of affairs, as I have often remarked in previous reports has been brought about by Mr. Prosser's eagerness and efforts to please Post & Co., so much so, that Post had got him completely in his power that he could not do anything in the matter of distributing licenses without first consulting him. On one of my trips last fall, he telegraphed Mr. Post to come over as I was there about licenses, &c., and I would venture to say that Mr. Post could explain and tell more as to who held licenses, fished and did not fish, than the overseer himself. Under these circumstances I claim that his usefulness as a fishery officer is gone.

In conclusion I may add that if the wishes of Mr. Louis Wigle are carried out, all the witnesses who gave their evidence before me will be on hand to substantiate their previous statements. I warned them, when taking their evidence to tell nothing that they could not confirm on some future occasion. Their answer was that they knew the responsibility they were assuming, and were prepared to stand by it. This is mentioned for the purpose of showing that no undue influence was brought to bear on them in order to get evidence necessary to sustain the charges. One man, John E. Deslauriers, was so careful that he drove 14 miles after me that I might read his affidavit over again to him, being afraid that he might have stated something that he would be unable to confirm if called upon on some future occasion. These are the witnesses whom Mr. Prosser thinks would be afraid to come forward face to face with him and repeat their evidence for fear of contradiction. And I do not think that if Mr. Wigle rightly understood the case, he would be so earnest in having an open investigation to take place, which I consider would place Mr. Prosser in a worse plight than he is at present.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) FRED KERR,

Fishery Overseer.

The fishermen in that section have been making complaints from time to time, and during the last week, numerous signed petitions have been sent to Parliament in reference to this matter. The prayer of the petition, I will read:

To the Honourable the Senate and House of Commons, Canada:

GENTLEMEN,—

The petition of the undersigned fishermen of the Province of Ontario

Humbly sheweth that the fishery regulations at present in force in this province are unreasonable and vexatious and are calculated to hamper the fishermen in their operations and do great injury to this important industry. That favouritism rules the department in the granting of licenses to fish. The present close season for different kinds of fish is unsatisfactory. For example, the close season for pickerel extends from April 15th to May 15th, that for sturgeon from April 15th to July 15th. If, while fishing with pound-nets or seines for pickerel on, say, May 20th, sturgeon is caught the fishermen are liable to have their nets seized and burned.

The weekly close season extends from 6 o'clock Saturday night till 7 o'clock Monday morning. It is a physical impossibility for lake fishermen to obey this regulation.

The attempt to artificially propagate whitefish and pickerel has, according to the opinions of our most prominent, practical and oldest fishermen, proved a total failure and the money used for that purpose squandered. There is no evidence that any of the 451 millions of whitefish fry put into our waters have come to maturity. The fish hatchery has now been in existence at Sandwich 15, years, long enough surely to demonstrate its success or failure. According to the annual report of the department for the year 1880, on the Canadian side of Lake Erie 295,000 pounds of whitefish were taken, while in 1890 only 204,322 pounds. During these years the netting had increased over 500 per cent. During these years, and previously, over 400 millions of whitefish fry had been deposited in this lake. Of other kinds of fish not attempted to be artificially propagated there were caught in Lake Erie in 1880, 902 tons, and in 1890, 4,083 tons.

That the regulations enforced in Canada have hampered Canadian fishermen, resulting in great loss to them, and consequently to the Dominion is easily demonstrated. We submit the following:—

CANADIAN SIDE LAKE ERIE.

	Persons employed.	Pound-nets	Gill Nets. Fathoms.	Seines.	White-fish.	Total Fish.
						Lbs.
1880	178	54	200	21	205,000	2,008,600
1885	346	132	6,500	32	186,080	7,653,900
			Fathoms.	Fathoms.
1886	337	126	4,238	2,385	141,643	5,109,945
1887	343	143	9,322	4,030	331,406	9,274,270
1888	460	194	13,055	3,848	389,836	8,550,253
1889	465	195	8,392	5,933	306,213	9,265,753
1890	526	197	24,400	6,675	204,322	8,369,892
1891	479	206	27,610	5,427	349,874	8,256,724
					2,113,974	58,849,337

In eight years a total of 1,057 tons of white fish.
do do 29,425 tons of all kinds of fish.

AMERICAN SIDE OF LAKE ERIE.

1880	1620	{ 758 Trap, 1,000 928 1,169 }	577,500	1,800	3,333,800	29,087,300
1885	4298
					6,865,555

(1885, set lines, 504,900 hooks used.)

1888	5,893	Increased number of nets.....	63,556,517
1881	7,198	do do (For 1891 is estimated.).....	75,800,000

It will thus be seen that the quantity caught in the eight years on the Canadian side was 29,425 tons, while on the American side the total catch for the three years ('80, '85 and '88) was 72,100 tons. The Americans, it will be seen from the tables, caught in 1888, 2,353 tons more fish than the Canadians caught in the eight years mentioned. The fishing on the Canadian side of Lake Erie is admitted to be better than on the American side, and the difference in the catch is altogether owing to the restrictions placed upon Canadian fishermen. We need not go into an estimate of the great loss suffered by the individual fishermen, as well as by the Dominion, as shown by the figures quoted.

Your petitioners humbly pray that the granting of licenses be abolished. We believe the saving that could be effected by discontinuing the fish hatcheries and fishing overseers would more than compensate for the loss of revenue from licenses.

That the present close season for all kinds of fish, except black bass and brook trout, be discontinued and one general close season substituted, to commence on Nov. 20th and continue till April 20th following. This, in the opinion of your petitioners, would be all the protection required.

What our fishermen want is either uniformity of laws or uniformity of privileges. For many years past they have been led to expect that the states of the American Union, as it is a matter within the jurisdiction of the various states, would adopt the same laws as Canada. For the last twenty or twenty-five years that has been promised to them, and I believe that now there is a commission which is about to sit at Washington that will consider this among other matters. If uniformity in the fishery laws between the two countries can be secured, then the policy of our Government is all right, but in the meantime when you consider that the Americans are reaping almost the entire advantage of our fisheries in the West, I say there is only one course to be pursued. The people in that section of the country, Liberals and Conservatives alike, are almost unanimous on this question. If the Americans are allowed to fish at all seasons of the year and without restraint in these waters, which extend a distance of about 130 miles and which are identically the same as ours for fishing purposes, our people believe that our fishermen should have equal privileges. For my part, I do not believe you will ever secure uniformity in the laws until you go to the states of Michigan and Ohio and tell them that unless they conform their laws to ours, Canada will give the same privileges to her fishermen. In my judgment that is the only way in which uniformity can be brought about. The people who have lived there all their lives deeply deplore to see our men restrained and restricted, while the Americans are reaping this rich reward. I believe that no member of the House will sympathize with this present condition of things. I know that the Conservatives to whom I have spoken on the question are all agreed on it, but the Government seem to have depended for many years past on the opinion of Mr. Wilmot, superintendent of fisheries, whose opinion is altogether contrary to the opinions of the people in that section of the country, who surely ought to know something about it. Men who have lived there all their lives feel that there must be something wrong in the law when we have only forty-five nets on the Canadian side, in the Essex district, and in eight years we have only fished 29,000 pounds on the Canadian side of Lake Erie, while in the United States they have fished over eight times that quantity. I had intended bringing this matter up on the Votes for the Fishery Department, but as it was so late in the session I have taken this opportunity to do so, trusting that Government will give the question their serious consideration. This is not a party question; nor is it one in which any person should desire to make political capital out of. Through the policy that has been pursued by the Government our fishermen have been outraged in the past, and no matter how good the intentions may have been, that policy has really been in the interests of American fishermen to the detriment of our own Canadians engaged in the same industry.

Mr. LISTER. I would ask the acting Minister of Fisheries whether it is true, as reported, that an order was issued by the department prohibiting fishing on the shore of Lake Huron, between Goderich and Sarnia, and in the River St. Clair during the coming season?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know the nature of the instructions sent to the several districts. I am aware that instructions have been sent to prohibit fishing, but the question is now being considered by the department and by the Government, in two cases—that is the fishing on the River St. Clair, and the prohibition of fishing for “poisson mou” in the province of Quebec. As the fishing season is coming on, no time will be lost by the Government in arriving at a decision as to whether their regulations will be rigidly enforced or not.

Mr. LISTER. The Government has not decided, as a matter of fact?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; but it must very soon decide.

Mr. LISTER. The matter which the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Allan) has brought before the House is one of very great importance to a very large and deserving class of people. He has not magnified in the slightest degree the importance of the fishing industry on the great upper lakes of this Dominion. As the hon. gentleman who is acting as Minister of Marine and Fisheries no doubt understands, there are upon the St. Clair River and upon Lake Huron two classes of fishermen, namely, pound-net fishermen and seine-net fishermen. For the past three or four years there has been a great falling off in the catch of fish in these waters between Point Edward and Blue Point. The seine fishermen say that the cause of this falling off is the permission allowed by the Government of the use of a large number of pound-nets. They claim that these nets are placed above the rapids on Lake Huron so as to intercept the fish, and that in this way large quantities of fish, not only those fit for food, but immature fish, are taken. The result has been that for the past three or four years the seine fisheries in these waters have been very unprofitable. I sincerely trust that the acting Minister will not enforce during the present season the regulations which he has spoken of. It would be a most unfortunate thing for the fishermen there, and if he understands the true position of affairs he will agree with me that it would be a very harsh measure for the Government to adopt towards those men. The fishing industry on those waters has been in continuous existence for fifty years. The men engaged in it have grown up in it. Every dollar they have in the world is involved in the business; and the proposition of the Government, made without due notice to the fishermen, is that the men who depend on this industry for their livelihood should be prohibited entirely from fishing during the coming season. As my hon. friend knows, the time of fishing commences on the 15th of May. In preparation for their business for the present season the fishermen have laid up their ice in large quantities, they have made their nets and repaired them, they have repaired their boats and got them ready, and they have been informed by the fishery overseer up there that they are not to be allowed to fish during the coming season. This information has caused them the utmost consternation. Their living and the living of their families depend upon their being allowed to go to work, and an intimation of that kind from an officer of the department has created a feeling among them to which it is impossible to give adequate expression. A large number of these men met and adopted a petition to the department asking that for this year at all events this harsh rule should not be put in force, and that they should have timely notice of the adoption of such a rule by the department, so that they would not be put to the very large outlay which they have incurred this year in preparing for their season's fishing. Now, I trust that the Minister will not, I am sure he will not, during the present year at all events, enforce the regulation which he has intimated to us. It would bring ruin upon hundreds of men engaged in that industry. I venture to say it would be a tyrannical act for the department to take advantage of the power they have to allow these men to expend large sums of money in making preparations for the fishing season, and, after all these preparations had been completed, to come upon them at a moment's warning and tell them that they must not fish under any circumstances during the coming season. I understand perfectly well the views of the officers of the department. I understand that Mr. Wilmot, one of the officers of the department, and a worthy man, who has given this matter a great deal of study, believes that it is necessary to the re-stocking of these great lakes with fish, that there should be a cessation in fishing for one, two or three years. I have tried to point out to him that what he proposes to do would not have the effect of restoring to those lakes the fish that appear to be gradually disappearing, so long as the regulations on the other side of the line are not in accordance with our regulations, and so long as whatever regulations they have are not enforced. The hon. Minister of course knows that the states bordering upon the lakes have control of the fisheries, and that in the different states there are different regulations. In Lake Huron the fishermen use the pound-net, the gill-net and the seine-net, and it is notorious that there is no supervision at all by the state whereby the fish are preserved or are enabled to increase; and the contention of our people is that so long as that state of affairs exists it is useless for our Government to try to enforce the fishery regulations on this side. Mr. Wilmot contends that the Canadian fish never go to the other side of the lake at all, but remain on the Canadian side of the line, and that American fish are always to be found on the American side, so that no matter what rules may be passed in the United States, they do not affect the quantity of fish to be caught on the Canadian side. I take issue with him as to that. I say that the theory he raises has no foundation in fact. The winds drive the fish from one side to the other. It is notable in my section of the country that when the wind is from one quarter no fish are to be caught on that side of the lake while they are abundant on the other side, and when the wind shifts they are abundant on our own side while there are none on the other side. I have in my possession the proofs showing beyond peradventure that fish from the Canadian side are caught on the other side. This has been proved by catching the fish and marking them, and the marked fish have been caught on the American side. So that all our efforts to restore the fish product of the lakes must be futile unless we can get the Americans to agree with the Canadians upon fixed rules, and also to agree that those rules shall be rigidly carried out. Until you do that, you are depriving our fishermen of all their means of livelihood for the benefit of United States fishermen. Now, Sir, I say if there is any fishing industry upon the lakes which should be encouraged, it is that of the seine-net fishermen. They are the men who have the boats, who employ labour, and who spend large amounts in providing their outfits and so on. The pound-net fishermen are not in the same category at all. These men get their licenses, put in their pound-nets, and, as a matter of fact, employ but few hands. The fish are gathered by tugs going to the fishing grounds manned by three or four men each. The pound-nets are pulled up, the contents dumped into a fishing boat, and the fish which are too small are cast to one side and lost without any effort being made to separate the small fish from those of commercial value. They are thus utterly destroyed and lost. Within the last four or five years, large numbers of pound-net licenses have been granted on the shores of Lake Huron. I think there are about twenty licenses granted now for twenty pound-nets. These nets extend far out into the lake and intercept the fish coming down the lake, so that, as a matter of fact, the fishermen to the south catch hardly any fish after the pound-nets are put in. The licenses are taken out in the names of individuals living in Canada, who are not fishermen, and the nets belong to Americans. The licenses are paid for by these Americans, and the fish taken out by them, in an American tug, and carried to the States, without any employment being given to our labour, and the result of licensing such a large number of pound-nets has been to almost entirely ruin the seine-net fishing industry. That is the contention of our fishermen, and it seems to be borne out by the facts that, as the pound-nets have increased from year to year, the catch of the seine-net fishermen have been diminished. Now, that these same pound-nets catch an enormous quantity of fish, there can be no doubt. If an investigation be made, it will be found that these pound-net licenses belong to Americans, that the whole outfit is American, that the whole catch goes to the States, and that few if any of our own people are employed, while our own fishermen, who use the seines, who employ Canadian labour, and who expend a large amount of money, find their industry becoming of less value from year to year. But the point I wish to make to the hon. Minister is this, that he should not allow any regulation to be issued by the department prohibiting fishermen from fishing until this question has been settled. I say it would be an almost inhuman act, at this season, to prevent these men from deriving any benefit during this year from the money they have expended in the way of preparation, and thus cause all that expenditure to be lost, so that they will be compelled to seek some other employment for the maintenance of themselves and their families during the coming year. If such a policy should be adopted, the Government should give these men one or two years' notice. The Government should say that their policy is that there shall be no fishing after a period of one or two years. But to come down upon them suddenly, as did the inspector, creating a panic among these people, is harsh in the extreme. They could hardly believe, and do not believe, that the Government would act that way towards them. They have made representations by petition to the Government, and I, on their behalf, humbly repeat the statements which are contained in those petitions, and ask that the Government should not enforce so harsh a regulation as this which the Government propose to enforce. I would just say, furthermore, that, so far as the pound-net fisheries are concerned, it is impossible to keep a proper supervision. As a matter of fact, these nets are out on Sunday when they should not be, under the regulations, and these people go out at all hours in their tugs and empty the fish out of the pound-nets. The whole thing is loosened from the stakes, the large and small fish being pulled out together, causing a wanton destruction of the immature fish. There ought to be some plan devised whereby the system of fishing by pound-net fishermen will be so supervised that the small fish will not be destroyed, and only those of commercial value allowed to be taken. I desire to press upon the Minister the fact that the department is being deceived entirely, from one end of the lakes to the other, by being induced to grant licenses to people who really belong to Canada, but who do not hold the licenses or own any portion of the outfit, and are really used as a mere catpaw by the American fishermen, who are the owners of everything connected with the business. I trust the hon. Minister will reconsider this matter and do what is right towards this hard-working class of the community, and not deprive them of the means of making a livelihood for their families, without, at least, giving them ample notice.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I fully endorse all that my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Allan) has said, and also the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), with reference to our poor fishermen. If there are any people who really feel the oppression of our Ministers, it is the fishermen of the west, at the western part of Lake Erie and along the banks, etc. Along the banks of the Detroit River, there is only a short distance between the American and the Canadian side, when the fish run from one lake to the other, and our fishermen have an opportunity of making a catch, then is the time the Minister of Marine and Fisheries chokes to come down with his iron heel and say that fish cannot be taken during that season. It is unfair and unjust to our own people who have expended a very large amount in seines and boats and general outfit. When they are just ready for their season's work, the Minister forbids them to fish, while, across the water, 1,300 to 1,400 feet distant, the Americans can fish late and early without any restrictions whatever. I hope the acting Minister will see that the law is not put in force preventing our people from fishing in the Detroit River or Lake St. Clair. Well, Sir, I have the statement here, from the deputy inspector, that on the Detroit River and along the banks of Lake St. Clair, stating positively that no license shall be issued on one or the other during the present season. As my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) has said, these fishermen have made their expenditure, they have their nets and boats, and are all prepared, and it would be a very heavy loss to them if they are forced to stop fishing. In all fairness, these people who are loyal, who are honest, who work hard, should be allowed to carry on their industry, and this law, which would restrict them, should be suspended for a time. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that we have presented a very large number of petitions having upon them some of the best names in our county, asking that this law shall be suspended, and the fishermen given fair-play. That is all we ask. We feel that the Czar of Russia is not treating his subjects as harshly as this Administration has treated our people in this matter of the fishing laws, and even if he treats the Jews as harshly as it is said he does, the treatment of our fishermen by this Administration is of the same character. On the banks of Lake St. Clair, our men can stand and see forty,—yes, fifty, fishermen with their nets lying early and late, while our men have to reel their nets and lie idle. Is that fair or just? It may be true that the lakes and rivers will be depleted of fish, but if the Americans are determined to deplete the lakes and rivers, why should we not have our fair proportion of the fish that are going? It is more than seventeen years since the law was placed on the Statute-book of this country that we should have a close season on the Canadian side, but while Mr. McLelan, Sir Albert Smith and others were Ministers of Marine the law was never enforced and the people were allowed to go on until within the last three or four years. If brother Wallace is to go anywhere, we ask him to come to Essex and help us, because we require help.

An hon. MEMBER. "Active aid."

Mr. MCGREGOR. Yes, "active aid," and that at once. In 1858 a gentleman named Thomas Paxton purchased from this Government an island in the Detroit River, paying $6,000 for it, though there was no more than 100 acres of good land. He bought it for fishing purposes alone, and it was used for that purpose from 1854 till last season. Then, what does the Government do? It sends up a party to take possession of the docks, the reels, the houses and all the fishing outfit belonging to the party. These officers said: You must not fish, but we will fish. And they have carried on fishing to the detriment of the occupant and the owner. We have appealed to the Administration in every way possible. They say we can go to the Exchequer Court. That is not the place for a poor man. Law is very expensive in this country, and those hon. gentlemen who know best its expense, will be best able to judge the uselessness to a fisherman of this appeal to the Exchequer Court. While you are giving large bounties in the east, you put burdens upon the fishermen of the west. We do not ask for bounties ; we only ask to be let alone or to be treated as our neighbours across the water, not more than 1,500 feet away from us, are treated. Mr. Speaker, I prepared a few statistics with reference to the quantity of fish taken, and some statement as to the methods of fishing, which I would ask permission to read to the House :

All Canadian fishermen will soon have to move to the United States to fish. The Minister of Fisheries latest decree has been issued. That no licenses will be granted for Lake St. Clair Fisheries for 1893, and it is reported that all the fisheries on the River Thames will be closed. On the American side of Lake St. Clair about forty pound-nets and a number of seine fisheries are in operation. The result will be that the Americans reap the benefits of the Canadians fisheries being closed. On Detroit River the same result is apparent. Our splendid fisheries ruined by the orders of the Canadian Fishery Department, no fishing being permitted in November, the only month of the year that White Fish can be caught in our Noble River and the Americans within one-half mile distant from our shore, rolling the fish ashore by the thousands. Each Canadian fishermen have to desist from catching fish and the Americans reap the benefit of our restrictions. As a proof that the fish hatchery for whitefish propagation is a failure and a waste of public money, according to the annual reports of the Fisheries Department for Canada, in the years 1880, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1891 only 1,027 tons of whitefish were caught in Canada side of Lake Erie in the eight years. That in the year 1880, 205,000 lbs. of whitefish were caught in Lake Erie. That in the year 1890, 204,400 lbs. were caught. That in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River Division the quantity of whitefish caught in 1880 was 224,400 lbs. ; in 1885, 56,800 lbs. ; in 1891, 55,525 lbs., a decrease of over 400 per cent. Consider that from the Sandwich Hatchery, 451 millions of whitefish fry was deposited from 1876 to 1891 into Lake Erie and Detroit River, and you cannot come to any other conclusion, than that all the fry perish soon after being deposited into the colder waters of Lake Erie. The total catch of all kinds of fish, excluding whitefish, in Lake Erie, increased from 902 tons in the year 1880 to 4,100 tons in the year 1890. This is an increase of 400 per cent. The quantity of nets used in the year 1891 was four times greater than that of 1880. This is a clear proof that the fish hatcheries are a failure. Herring have not been artificially propagated, yet we find that according to the Annual Report of the Fishery Department of Canada for the year 1891, on page 4, on the fisheries of the Great Lakes, that in Lake Erie on the Canadian side of the Lake in the year 1880, 854,000 lbs. of herring were caught, and in 1885, 5,935,400 lbs. On the American side of the same lake in the year 1880, 11,774,400 lbs. of herring were caught, and in the year 1885, 19,354,900 lbs. This shows the increased catch of herring, as they average 60 lbs. to the hundred fish. About 24 millions of herring were caught in 1880, about 48 millions in 1885, and at the same ratio of increase about 100 millions were caught in 1890. As the suckers, mullets and sturgeon have been caught off, the herring increase, they are a nice fish when smoked. Thousands of tons are frozen each season at Sandusky, Toledo and Huron, Ohio. The great increase in the catch of herring and decrease in the catch of white fish, proves that the artificial propagation of white fish is a failure. The Fisheries Department have made a close season for sturgeon, which destroy vast quantities of the ova of whitefish, pickerel and other kinds of fish. It would be as reasonable to make a close season for suckers. They have adopted a weekly close season from 6 p. m. Saturday to 7 a. m. Monday. No lake fisherman can obey this law. It makes them liable to have their nets seized and burned and themselves fined. It is an impossibility to obey the weekly close season. Granting that the fish hatcheries are some good, why not send the few million of ova from the Newcastle and Ottawa hatchery to Sandwich hatchery, which is able to contain them all, and bring them to life without the cost of an extra dollar. This would save $7,500 annually. Consider that at Point Edward, St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair and Detroit River, Canadians cannot fish at certain seasons : when the Americans catch the fish we are deprived of taking. For fifty years previous to 1st of November, 1890, Canadians fished each season during the month of November for white fish in Detroit River, the only month of the year that they can catch whitefish in that river. Ministers of Fisheries Smith, McLellan and Foster would not enforce the close season for white fish in our river ; but Mr. Tupper, the present Minister of Fisheries, prevented Canadians fishing in 1890, 1891 and 1892, yet he licensed two Americans, a Mr. Clark and Mr. Reaume, both from Ecores, Michigan, to fish for whitefish in Detroit River in 1890 and 1891, and denied to Canadians the right to fish at the same time. Canadian fishermen desire to fish as in former years, before the license system or close seasons were adopted. The fishermen used to keep the fish in pens through which the water flowed freely from November until January, so as to obtain higher prices for the fish, which deposited into the pens their ova at spawning time. This came to life at the natural time, the fry drifted down into Lake Erie, came to maturity and replenished the Detroit River. This was much better than killing 20,000 to 30,000 mature fish annually, so as to obtain from 60,000,000 to 100,000,000 of ova for the hatcheries, all of which die and is lost to the river. This is the main reason for the decline of fish in Lake Erie and Detroit River. The following statement of fish caught in Lake Erie, and number of men employed, taken from the annual report of the Fishery Department for Canada. On the Canada side in the year 1880, $2,008,600, men employed, 178 ; 1885, $7,653,900, men employed, 346 ; 1891, $8,256,724, men employed, 497. On the American side in the year 1880, $29,087,300, men employed, 1,620 ; 1885, $51,556,517, men employed, 4,298 ; 1888, fish taken, 63,556,517 lbs. The statements for the years 1880 and 1885 are taken from the annual report of the Fishery Department for Canada, for 1891, at page 4 on Fisheries of the Great Lakes, and for the year 1888 from page 79 of S. Wilmot's Report to the Minister of Fisheries. In the annual report of the Fishery Department for Canada for 1890 will be found the statement that between Toledo, Vermillion, Port Clinton, Sandusky, Bass Islands and Huron, the increase of quantity of fish for 1888, as compared with 1885, was 12,000,000 pounds, having a market value of $300,000. The total catch of fish for the Canada side of Lake Erie, from 1876 to 1891, was less than 40,000 tons. The Americans caught about 350,000 tons in the same lake during the same length of time. At 4 cents per pound would make $24,000,000 more than the Canadians produced out of the same water. The larger quantity of fish caught was owing solely to the greater number of nets used on the American side and men employed. The Americans having no license system or restrictions are free to fish as they choose. The license system, close seasons and all other restrictions at present in force in Canada should be abolished. A general close season should be adopted for all kinds of fish, from November 20th to April 20th. This would protect whitefish and herring in spawning time. It would protect pickerel in spawning time. Salmon trout do not require any protection, as they cannot be seriously depleted. The fishermen would be free men to fish during the open season. They would obtain higher prices for fish, the fish dealers would freeze their surplus fish for winter months. For any infringement of the close season a heavy fine should be imposed, one-half to go to the informer. If the proposed changes were adopted, the increased catch of fish in Ontario would, in a short time, amount to $5,000,000 annually more than at present. The license fees heretofore charged to Ontario fishermen have been excessive; $50 for each pound net and corresponding amounts for gill net fishermen and seine fisheries. In 1891 the amount of license fees paid in Ontario were $26,611.80. Expenditure on account of fisheries were $15,540.40. Fish caught, $1,806,389. Compare the above with Nova Scotia. Bounty paid to fishermen of Nova Scotia, $90,000; for all the Maritime Provinces, $166,967.22. License fees, $5,891.65. Expenditure on account of fisheries, $17,844.19. Fishing cruizers, $83,950.16. Fish caught, $7,011,300.53. This is very unjust to the Ontario fishermen. The money paid by the United States on account of the Washington Treaty belongs to the Dominion, as all the fisheries are the property of the Dominion, not of the provinces. The only market for Ontario fish is the United States, and Canadians have to pay duty on exporting fish to the United States. Nova Scotia ships a large portion of its fish to Brazil, Spain and Italy, and is better situated for a market than Ontario. All the conservative and reform members of parliament from Ontario should see that Ontario fishermen are made free men, and the fishery restrictions removed. Many applications for licenses have been refused by the Fishery Department, and the policy of the department in the past has been to restrict the fishermen and ruin the industry, whereas a board of practical fishermen of fifteen years experience should be appointed, whose duty it should be to encourage the extension of this great industry, and if the bounty for the Maritime provinces is continued, Ontario should receive $90,000 annually the same as Nova Scotia. What benefit is it to the public to close our fisheries, to ruin our fishermen by unreasonable restrictions, to the end that the American fishermen will reap the benefits of an increased catch of fish? Hon. C. H. Tupper, in his report for 1890, stated that the lakes to the north west of Lake Winnipeg was filled with an inexhaustible quantity of whitefish, trout, pickerel and sturgeon, that 10,000 men could find employment in that district. Whitefish can be delivered at Toronto or Ottawa from said lakes at a cost of 4 cents per lb. Let us be free men. Let us fish free as in Ohio or Michigan.

We ask that either the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the acting Minister pay us a visit, that he may inform himself of our position and our difficulties. It is true that Mr. Wilmot and other gentlemen have been there, but they seem to be determined on one policy, and that alone. Now, we ask that the Minister, or the acting Minister, shall come there and look the matter over carefully, and we feel satisfied that they will deal fairly and honourably with us. In the meantime, we hope the acting Minister will allow the law to remain in abeyance, until he has looked further into it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have brought this matter under the attention of the Minister, and have presented to the House a petition signed by sixty-five fishermen engaged in fishing on the River St. Clair. This is a matter of considerable importance to them, and I agree with the observation made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), that it is perfectly useless for the Government to undertake to establish in this country a different rule from that which prevails along the border of the waters which divide Canada from the neighbouring republic. It may be that the course adopted will exhaust the fish in the lakes and in the rivers connecting those lakes; but unless there is co-operation, unless the states of Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York are prepared to adopt, along with Canada, a common regulation with respect to fisheries, we are simply imposing restraints upon our fishermen which may cause the supply to last a little longer, to the advantage of those who fish without restraint, but cannot protect the fisheries from destruction. I do not for a moment subscribe to the notion that the fish found on the Canadian side, are confined to that side and do not cross the lake or river to the American shore. I think that every fisherman who lives along the border, will tell the hon. Minister and those connected with his department, that that theory has no foundation whatever in fact. Now, it may be proper to establish a close season, to make strict regulation, if you can persuade your neighbours to adopt regulations such as you think is necessary for the protection of the fish. But until they are prepared to agree with you and to adopt the common system for their protection, it is simply useless on our part to make any effort to enforce any such regulations. We are imposing restraints and throwing obstacles in the way of those fishing on this side of the border, from maintaining themselves and their families, which are not imposed on those engaged in similar pursuits, on the other side of the line. I think there is but one course open to the Government, and that is to grant these licenses, to permit parties to continue to fish, and to impose no greater restraint upon them than is imposed on the fishermen on the other side of the line. I dare say, that the present policy will, in the course of a few years, exhaust the supply, but there is no help for it, because the whole fishery is not altogether under our control. In my opinion, the Minister would inflict a great hardship upon the fishermen, many of whom have invested whatever they have in their nets and preparations for fishing; and to prevent them engaging in this very ordinary pursuit, would be, in fact, like a regulation depriving them of all their possessions. I trust that the Minister will not undertake to carry out any such policy until our neighbours are prepared to adopt a similar line of action.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This matter is of very great importance to the people of the western part of the province of Ontario. I do not like the matter to pass without entering my protest against the recent order of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, suspending the fishing privileges for the coming year. I think, as has been stated by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), and the member for Essex (Mr. Allan), that it is a very great hardship to the fishermen in that part of the country. They have invested their little all in providing themselves with boats, seines and fishing appliances, and to be stopped at a moment's notice from pursuing the business they have followed year after year, which is the only means they have of providing for their families, is a great hardship indeed. I have already brought this matter before the attention of the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think that he ought at least to suspend that order for this year, and if it is necessary to suspend the fishing operation for another year, let him give the fishermen due notice, and they can govern themselves accordingly. Now, one word more as to the report of Mr. Kerr, that has been quoted, for South Essex. I think it is a perfect outrage that the Government should continue for one moment longer in office a fishery overseer who has been condemned by your own inspector, Mr. Kerr. This fishery overseer, McMichael, ought not to remain a single day longer in the employ of the Government. A man that has been censured, and has been proved to be guilty of malfeasance and of conniving with American fishermen against our own fishermen, ought to be discharged without a single moment's delay. Now, he has issued a license to a man named Arnold, a gentleman who never saw a seine in his life. Mr. Arnold is inspector of one of the largest insurance companies in Ontario, and it is absurd to think of a license being issued in his name. I do not think Mr. Arnold knows anything about it. Mr. Lipscombe is another gentleman to whom this man has issued a license. He is a general insurance agent and broker in the town of Blenheim, and I do not believe he ever caught a fish in his life; I do not believe that he knows that a license has been issued in his name. It is a shame that a fishery overseer should conduct himself in that way; he should be immediately discharged from that position. Now, a word as to the pound-nets. I am of the opinion of the hon. member for Lambton, that these pound-nets are a great injury and detriment to the fish in the lakes. I have here a report of the Ontario Fish and Game Commission of 1892, and I find in it the following remarks from Mr. James Nevin, Superintendent of Fisheries for the state of Wisconsin:—

The greatest evil that exists to-day in the matter of replenishing the waters of the various lakes with whitefish is the pound-nets, for the simple reason that they catch both large and small. As long as the pound-nets are allowed to remain in the waters in their present form there is no use in attempting to replenish the waters with whitefish. I have been in a trap-net boat when 2,500 pounds of small whitefish were taken out of one net, and of the 2,500 pounds there were not 50 pounds of No. 1 whitefish, and a No. 1 whitefish is a fish that will weigh one and a half pounds.

I had already brought this matter before the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and informed him that the people were complaining that the fish caught in these pound-nets were thrown overboard as waste fish, and floated upon the shores of the lake, and became a nuisance to the people along the shore. Fish are destroyed by thousands, and people complain very bitterly of the fact that pound-nets are used and small unmarketable fish are thrown overboard. If pound-nets are to be allowed, great care should be exercised in inspecting the nets to see that the meshes are sufficiently large to allow the small fish to pass through. I simply rise to confirm what has been said by my hon. friend, and to ask the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries to suspend the order issued on 20th January in regard to fishing licenses on Lake St. Clair river, Thames and Detroit rivers. We know that on Detroit river, which is only half a mile wide, the Americans fish without hindrance, while our fishermen are restricted. On the River Thames, which flows into Lake St. Clair, there are forty or fifty fishermen who make their living by fishing, and it would be cruel if the Government regulations had the effect of depriving them of their living. If it is considered desirable to suspend the operation of the present system, let notice be given to the fishermen; but it is hard to deprive them of their present privileges without notice. I hope the Minister will look into this matter at once, and give the necessary orders at once, because the time is approaching for the season to open, and unless action is taken great injury may be done to the fishermen this year.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I have received letters during the past two or three years respecting fishing on the shores of Lake Huron. I have also received petitions respecting the use of pound-nets. I have received letters this season on the subject, and I have presented a petition not only from fishermen but also from merchants, mechanics and farmers, setting forth the great hardship that would occur to the fishermen in my district, if the present regulations were rigidly enforced. I hope the acting Minister will see that they do not go into force. After they had made all the preparations for the season's fishery it would be a great hardship if the fishermen who have been brought up on Lake Huron all their lives were deprived of their calling. In Bayfield they have a double complaint. For three or four years vessels could not enter Bayfield harbour. Two years ago I was promised that the river would be dredged, and that a dredge would be sent there in the following summer, so that the fishermen would be able to enter the harbour in rough weather. I hope in the interests of the fishermen, as well as the people in the locality, the regulations will not be enforced, and the Government will look carefully into the regulations before carrying them out as regards the fishermen of Lake Huron and River St. Clair, so that they may not be allowed to suffer in comparison with the Americans. I think it will be admitted that it was a mistake for the Government to grant licenses for pound-nets to be used on the shores of Lake Huron. I hope the Minister will see that the regulations are not enforced this season, because they will inflict great hardship on fishermen who have followed this calling throughout their lives.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway—Increased accommodation at Halifax. $150,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Minister of Railways, when the House went into Committee of Supply the other day, made a statement with respect to the Intercolonial Railway, and I think it desirable that we should have a few more explanations, because I frankly say that I did not fully understand the statement he made. He was congratulating himself, and with good reason, if the prospects he held out are proved not to be baseless, on the success with which the Intercolonial Railway is administered by him. He told us that he hoped during the current year to be able to secure a balance between revenue and expenditure. Every hon. gentleman will unite with him in congratulations if that proves to be the case. We remember a few years ago that it was considered almost impossible to balance the revenue and expenditure on this road, and it will be remembered that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) submitted a proposition to vest the management of the road in a commission. The hon. member's proposal did not meet with great support on either side of the House; but there was a general disposition to believe that this railway was very extravagantly managed, and that it was impossible to make it pay. Last year, and every year, when the matter has come up for discussion, I have taken the opportunity of pointing out from the local knowledge I possess that the Intercolonial was a mere political machine. I stated to hon. members, what was well known in the Maritime provinces, that the entire road was managed for the purpose of advancing the political party in power. It was well known that Moncton, where the central offices are situated was a centre for political management, and political corruption existed there to no small extent. After the last general election every hon. member from the Maritime provinces on this side told the House that the Intercolonial Railway was used deliberately and openly, without any shame being felt about it, for the purpose of carrying Tory electors to the polls. I stated from my knowledge, which of course must be second-hand, but it was acquired from one of the parties themselves, that one of the agents gave books of passes to those engaged in carrying out their political machinations.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron).

and those passes were used to carry electors to the polls. It was known that if the election petition against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had been proceeded with that fact would have been established. I remember a year or two ago examining the chief engineer on this subject before the Public Accounts Committee, and he informed me that so far as the department was concerned no more passes were granted over the road than would be granted by a private corporation. We told the Minister that Moncton office was a mere house of refuge for politicians, that two men were employed in doing the work of one, and that no doubt with ordinary supervision and economy a reduction could be made to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Our statements were received with incredulity by hon. gentlemen opposite, as mere political statements for the purpose of making political capital, and no heed was paid to them. What are the facts to-day? The hon. Minister comes down and reports that instead of their being a deficiency this year of $767,000 as in 1891, or $612,000 as in 1892, that for the present year he hopes to make ends meet, in other words, to effect a saving of $700,000 on the running of the road. If $700,000 can be saved in one year, that fact proves conclusively that there must have been gross and unparalleled extravagance in the management of the road previously. There is no getting over that. I listened with no small degree of curiosity to ascertain how the hon. gentleman had made that saving, and I confess to him frankly that I am in ignorance now. I watched his remarks very closely. I thought perhaps I did not understand them perfectly and I took precaution of reading them as they were reported, and as far as I can make out, the hon. gentleman while assuring the House that he will be able to make expenditure and revenue balance, only tells us where the saving is to be, in so far as $316,000 is concerned. Where he is going to make the saving of the other $400,000, I do not know, but I assume that he will put the committee in possession of that information. I may say, that so far from criticizing adversely the saving which the hon. gentleman proposes to make, I frankly and candidly commend him for his efforts in the direction of economy. He says he will dispense with the services of 300 men in the mechanical department and will save $124,000; he will also dispense with the services of eighty men outside, amounting to $32,000 a year, and he says that in the train service he will save $160,000, making in round numbers a total of $316,000. If I gather from the hon. gentleman correctly, in addition to that, he was going to save in the rail service this year, although he could not promise he would do the same next year, $129,000. The total saving would be $445,000, but that will not make things meet by a long way. I will await with some curiosity the further explanations the hon. gentleman has to make in that regard. Now, Mr. Speaker, I merely want on this occasion to give some little evidence to the House that on this matter, as on all other matters on which we have made strong assertions in reference to the Administration of the Government of this country, we were speaking well within the mark, and that the knowledge we possess was accurate. The hon. gentleman last year gave four reasons why the Intercolonial Railway could not be made to pay. First, because it was a military road; second, because of the short line competition; third, that they were carrying freight at non-paying rates; and fourth, that the road was overmanned, on account of the pressure through political influence. The two first reasons are not referred to at all in his statement this year, nor do they enter into his calculations in the slightest when he tells us that he is going to make the line pay. The Royal Commission appointed a short time ago to inquire into the Civil Service of Canada, examined Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer of Railways. He was asked with reference to the Intercolonial Railway, and I want to put a few extracts from his evidence on record to show that the main cause—I was almost going to say the only cause—that the road has not paid heretofore, has been that it was managed altogether on political grounds, from political motives, and with the object of advancing the interests of a political party, and not at all in the interests of the country. At page 316 of the Civil Service Commission Report, Mr. Schreiber gives the following evidence:—

If you were the manager of this road and it belonged to a private company, could you take measures to increase the traffic or to increase your receipts, that you cannot take now? I think so, at any rate I am satisfied we could favourably effect the net results.

The balance against you last year was how much?—Including both the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, about $775,000.

Supposing the road belonged to the Canadian Pacific Railway and was one of its unprofitable branches, such as every road has, they would take means to diminish the unprofitableness to the utmost degree, and to make it as little unprofitable as they could—Yes, certainly.

Now, what is there that prevents you doing that?—Politics are a great trouble, and I can see no way of getting over it, and so long as they are Government roads, it must necessarily be so.

We cannot quite see where the politics come in?—Perhaps I should say the policy of the Government.

It is perfectly evident to any person who reads these questions and answers, that although the chief engineer was as anxious as he could be, not to show to the world that the controlling power behind this railway was politics, yet when he was placed on his oath he had frankly to say so. Politics is the trouble, politics is the curse, politics has put two or three men to do one man's work, politics has made you pay more prices for oils and material for the road than ought to have been paid, politics has kept men in power there who should have been dismissed years and years ago, politics has taught the men in power that if they bend their energies, not to advance the interests of the road, but the interests of the party, they will be supported and patronized and have their salaries increased; and politics being the curse of the road, has dragged it down until we were in danger of having a deficit of $1,000,000 on that road in 1892, and then, and not till then, were the brakes put on. They went on to examine Mr. Schreiber, and in the next page we have the following evidence with reference to these tickets I spoke of some time ago:—

3168. When a passenger gets a ticket can there be any leakage?—Yes; there can.

3169. May there not be a leakage from people being passed on the lines without getting tickets?—Certainly, and in other ways, for instance, a conductor can collect tickets and not punch them, and then issue them again and again.

3170. Does not that happen on every road?—Yes; but you can quite understand that on companies roads, if there is pretty strong proof that this is being done, prompt dismissal of the conductors follow, but in case of Government roads the difficulty is that unless you have absolute proof of the wrong-doing, it is difficult to mete out punishment.

3171. Do you think there is more leakage on the Intercolonial in this respect than on any other road?—I am not prepared to say, but the leakage is no doubt heavy.

3172. Is not that leakage caused, to a certain extent, by the want of facilities to discharge suspected men?—I have no doubt of it.

3173. Are you describing what has actually occurred?—Yes; many a time, in many years.

3174. Do you suffer much on your lines through dead-heads?—Taking the regular authorized passes, I do not think we issue so many as they do on companies roads. But I am afraid there are a great many unauthorized passes given that we know nothing about at the time, and only find out occasionally.

3475. Do you mean that conductors passed them?—Yes; conductors passed them, and not long ago we discovered that one of our superintendents had been passing a great number of people by giving them small slips of paper.

3176. If he gives a regular pass you will know it, because they are issued from numbered books are they not?—Yes; it should be known, but he did not do that, he gave them on small bits of paper, which were torn up instead of being sent to the audit office.

3177. Surely that pass can be checked?—An effort is made to check it, but it is no easy matter.

3178. Then conductors must have instructions to recognize these bits of paper?—No doubt, from the party who gives them.

3179. Might you not have some conductors who would not recognize them?—Possibly, but it is very difficult for a conductor to dishonour them, as he is under the district superintendent's orders.

3180. Would the district superintendent dismiss him for that?—No; but he could make it very unpleasant for him.

There is a delightful state of affairs detailed, just bearing out what I said in the House after last general election. The district superintendents and other leading men issued passes by the score and by the book, which they did not call regular passes, and which were not returned to the audit office. Books of slips authorizing the conductors to carry men over that road were issued, and these men were carried over the road at the public expense to vote for the political nominees of the Government. In other words, Mr. Chairman, to speak correctly and in proper English, so much public money was stolen from the people. That is the English of it. There was not an officer dismissed after the last election because he improperly granted these certificates or because he had, as I termed it, stolen the public money. I say that if it cost $10 to go between two certain points, and it is an officer's duty not to give a ticket until he has received the $10, then if he gives a ticket without receiving the money and allows his friend to travel over the road, he is a thief and he has stolen the $10, and instead of being continued as a superintendent or district superintendent of the road, he ought to be dismissed and put in the criminal dock. That is the punishment that should be meted out to these gentry. But has it been done? Has a man been dismissed on that account? No, Sir, it has not been done. Now, we go a little further, and what does the chief engineer say:

3182. Coming to another source of revenue, are there special bargains made sometimes to carry freight?—Yes.

3183. Do you carry freight at any time at a loss?—Yes; we carry grain and coal at a loss, the grain rate is lower than that of coal.

3184. Are you carrying grain at a loss, in the interest of western freight?—Yes; in the interest of securing western freight for shipment for Europe.

3185. Where is the initiative of the transaction? Is it on a through bill of lading from Manitoba? It is on a through bill of lading from various ports of Ontario, and some from Manitoba, not a great deal. We have a stated rate from which we carry on the Intercolonial, which we merely add to the rate over other roads.

3186. That is a losing rate?—Yes, it is; two-tenths of a cent per ton per mile for grain, and three-tenths of a cent for coal. Half a cent is considered to be about the cost of transportation.

3187. Have not all roads to submit to more or less of that?—Yes, but our difficulty with the through coal traffic is that coal has to be carried in a special class of cars, in which other description of freight cannot be carried in the returning cars. The consequence is that for every mile the coal is hauled the car is hauled two miles.

The chief engineer gives as one of his reasons the matter that we have discussed in this House year after year, whether it is good policy or not to carry coal at three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile, his opinion being that it is not, as the car has to be hauled two miles for every one for which the Government gets paid. Now, I come to the main point:

3192. Do politics intervene in fixing these low rates?—As a matter of policy in some cases, as I have said, outside of the interests of the railway.

Well, that was a most diplomatic answer. Of course, the only inference that could be derived from it is that politics do intervene.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

3191. Are not the whole rates fixed by Order in Council?—The maximum rates are fixed by Order in Council, but the low rates for coal and grain are quoted by special order from the Minister.

3192. Which is a special Order in Council, is it not?—No, I think in these cases the order is given through the Minister.

3193. But the Minister gets the assent of his colleagues, does he not?—I fancy so. We get the order from the Minister.

3194. The great coal mines at Springhill and at Sydney have a good deal of political influence, it is understood, and probably they bring it to bear?—I am not aware of it. They are, of course, large employers of labour.

3195. A low rate is given, in the belief that they are encouraging the development of the mines—I think it is given with the view of inducing manufacturers in the west to use Canadian coal, and also, no doubt, as you state, to develop the mines.

Now, I leave that statement, and hon. gentlemen can see for themselves, from Mr. Schreiber's very cautious, diplomatic answers, whether there is any doubt as to the existence of political influence even in settling the matter of rates. Then he goes on to state, on page 322, that there are a large number of men whose service, in his opinion, could be dispensed with, and he is asked:

3257. Is the general expenditure susceptible of a considerable reduction?—Yes, I think so.

3258. This system of members nominating such a large number of officers as you mention has its disadvantages?—It has many disadvantages. I see no great objection to a man first entering the service on the recommendation of a member, but I think it would be better if they did not interfere in promotions. We would like to get rid of that.

It is perfectly plain from the chief engineer's statement that politics from the first to the last were the cause of the large deficits on the railway, and have been the curse of the road since it has been under the management of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, Sir, we hear that there is going to be an improvement. There ought to be. This royal commission, which was brought into existence at the instance of hon. gentlemen opposite for the purpose of inquiring into the Civil Service, comment in their report to the Government on the evidence of Mr. Schreiber in these words:

To briefly notice a point brought out in the evidence of Mr. Schreiber, it appears that there are a large number of men whose services could be dispensed with; that the general expenditure is susceptible of a considerable reduction; that political influence is exercised in the nominations of the employees; that in the hands of a company the road could be made to pay expenses; that the trains stop at too many stations; that the traffic and receipts could be increased; that although the internal economy is much the same as that of other roads, yet it costs a great deal more; that the local revenue could be increased by bringing it up to the rates levied by other lines. The management also suffers from a difficulty, not experienced to so great an extent by companies, of not being able promptly to discharge inefficient or suspected servants.

I cannot make a stronger indictment against the management of that road than has been made by this commission, composed of non-political men—Mr. Hague, Judge Burbidge,

Mr. Barbeau and the Deputy-Minister of Finance. I could read more from the report in the same direction, but I do not wish to weary the House. I think I have read enough to prove beyond possibility of doubt, that the statements made year after year in this House were true and correct—that money has been recklessly spent and improperly squandered on that railway, and that instead of being run on business principles it has been run in the interests of the party; and now we have the Minister coming down and telling us that there has been such mismanagement of the railway that he is able to save $700,000 in one year. I would like him to explain more in detail how he expects to make that saving. He has accounted for $316,000, and he thinks there will be a possible saving this year of $129,000 on the rails. The other $300,000 he has not explained how he hopes to save. As he is a practical man I have no doubt he can do it, but the details would be of interest not only to the House but to the country at large.

Mr. HAZEN. I feel, Mr. Chairman, at this late hour of the night that I must ask the indulgence of the House for the remarks which I am about to make. I will endeavour to be true to the sentiment that actuated the hon. member for Queen's P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) in his remarks, and to remember that brevity is the soul of wit. My hon. friend told us that he was going to be brief. When he said so I doubted very much whether he would or not, because it is not an unusual thing for hon. members of this House to rise in their places and say that they are going to make a few brief remarks, and then entertain us for a long time. However, as the hon. member for Queen's was true to the statement made, I will endeavour to be brief also. I think no statement has been made to the Parliament of Canada at the present session that will be received by the country with more delight than the statement that was made to the House by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals on Saturday last, when he informed us that the period of deficits on the Intercolonial Railway had come to an end, and that in the future he thought we might fairly expect that the revenue and the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway would balance, and that any loss incurred would be simply on the line in the province represented by my friend who has just addressed the House. It seems to me that the statement of the hon. Minister must be satisfactory to the people of the Dominion. Year after year, under Conservative management, and under Liberal management, with the exception of a few short years after 1879, Ministers of Railways of both political parties have had to meet this House and say there was a very considerable deficit on the working of that road. therefore, I say it must be pleasing to the people to find that the Minister of Railways at present is satisfied that the period of deficits has ceased. Now, I do not wish in any way to be considered skeptical. I do not wish to throw cold water upon the statement which the Minister of Railways has made, but I desire to say that I trust the hon. gentleman is not too sanguine in his views of the situation. I do not say this for the purpose of detracting, in any respect or in the slightest degree, from the ability, the firmness and the energy with which I feel the hon. gentleman has discharged the duties of Minister of Railways since he took hold of that important portfolio. Nor do I say so for the purpose at all of throwing cold water upon the congratulations which have been showered upon his management of the road. I might also almost say from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island. But it seems to me that we should not, so early in the discussion, make up our minds that the era of deficits on the Intercolonial Railway has come to an end. We must not forget that heavy expenses have been made upon the Intercolonial Railway during the last few years in the way of betterments, that is to say, in the relaying of the road with heavy rails instead of the lighter rails, which were previously there, in the replacing of wooden by iron bridges and the construction of permanent buildings—all of which, however, I think, should have been properly charged to capital, but which, under the system of accounts of the Intercolonial Railway, were charged to income—and it seems to me that after a number of years of heavy expenditure of this kind, we might fairly expect that no further expenditure of that description—which, in the case of other railways would be charged to capital account—would be incurred, to anything like the same extent, for some time. Therefore, while I do not wish to be considered skeptical at all, and while I, as a Maritime province man and a Canadian as well, sincerely trust that the opinion of the Minister of Railways that the era of deficits has ceased on this railway may be true, I may say that perhaps I will not be disappointed if, in a few years from now, I find that extraordinary expenses have to be again incurred in the way of putting new rails on the road and erecting new buildings and bridges, and perhaps we will find that further large expenditure of this kind, which will again become necessary, will prevent the balancing of income and expenditure. But although that may be the case, I feel satisfied that this House and country are indebted to the hon. Minister for the firmness, economy, and ability, he has shown in the management of the road. Now, the impression has seemed to prevail in the western part of the Dominion that the people of the Maritime provinces were anxious that this deficit should exist, or, as it was put by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) that this road should be run as a political machine for the advantage of politicians and the Government of the day in the Maritime provinces. I desire most emphatically to repudiate any idea of that sort. I desire to say here, from my place in this House, and as a representative of one of the largest constituencies in the Maritime provinces, that the people of those provinces are quite as anxious that road should be managed so as to keep the expenditure within the income as are the people of Ontario and Quebec or further west, because I have always felt that in charging this deficit against the people of the Maritime provinces, an injustice and a wrong was being done to that section of the Dominion which I have the honour to represent. Year after year has been put forward in this House, by some of our friends representing western constituencies, the opinion that this deficit was due, in a large degree, to the fact that coal was carried from the mines of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton at too low a rate, and that this was the reason why the deficit existed. I was able on a previous occasion in this House, to point out that such was not the case, and that the cause was quite as much due to the fact that the flour and grains of the west were carried to the Maritime provinces at a low rate; and, the fact, that during the last year the amount of coal carried from the Maritime provinces to the Chaudière junction was only 40,000 tons, shows clearly how little ground there was for the impression that the deficit was in any large degree due to the low rate charged upon coal. As I pointed out, we might as fairly, in the east, have charged that the low rates on coal were for the benefit of the consumers in the western part of this Dominion. The hon. member for Queen's spoke as if this road had been run really in the interests of a political party and was merely a political machine. I desire most distinctly to repudiate that idea; and I wish to say to him that if his party should at any time come into power, and if he should be a member or a supporter of the Government, he will wish from the bottom of his heart that the Intercolonial Railway had nothing whatever to do with the Government and was entirely independent of Government control. I think I voice the opinion of the members of the Maritime provinces who support the Government, when I say that one of the greatest difficulties we have to contend with is the fact that it is constantly thrown in our teeth that the management of the Intercolonial Railway is against the interests of those provinces, that it is not conducted in their interests at all, and, further, if they happen to be Conservatives, it is thrown in their teeth that it is not operated or managed in the interests of the party to which they belong. The hon. gentleman has said that the department at Moncton was a great house of refuge for the Conservative politicians. Surely, he was not serious in making an assertion of that sort.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I made the statement in reply to the hon. Minister of Railways, who said that he had discharged 300 men from the Moncton department alone, because they were not required.

Mr. HAZEN. He did make that statement and on that the hon. gentleman illogically founded the argument that the Moncton shops and offices were a mere refuge for politicians. I will, in a few moments show how utterly illogical that statement was. I was about to say that, so far as the constituency which I have the honour to represent is concerned there are in it a number of employees in the shops and offices there, yet when the hon. Minister came to make his reductions in the number of men employed, cutting them down as close as he could, he found he could only make eight dismissals in that locality. That is a sufficient answer to the charge, at least so far as St. John is concerned, to the statement that the railway there was used as a house of refuge for politicians. I think I may fairly say that there never was a man appointed to a position on the road there for merely political reasons. From my own stand-point, I can say honestly that I never recommended a man for employment there unless there was really a vacancy which required to be filled. Coming down to Moncton, where 300 dismissals were made, my hon. friend will see that the immense amount of work done on the Intercolonial Railway in the past three or four years, owing to the great additions to rolling stock, the replacing of the lighter rails on the road by heavy rails, the replacing of wooden by iron bridges, necessitated the employment of a larger number of workmen than would otherwise have been necessary, but when that work was over, there was no longer the same need for so large a number of men, and that was the reason the hon. gentleman found he could reduce the number of employees at Moncton by 300. From a Maritime stand-point, I do not think there is a single member representing a Maritime constituency, I care not what may be his political creed, who desires that a single man should be employed on that road more than is absolutely required. We do not desire, Sir, that that deficit shall be rolled up year after year to be charged against us as if we were alone responsible for it, and, so far as Conservative members in the Maritime provinces are concerned, I desire to say they will give every assistance to the hon. Minister of Railways in any honest attempt to reduce the expenses on that road, so far as it is compatible with the interests of the road and the interests of the country. While my hon. friend was talking about this road being used as a political machine, the workshops being the refuge of political favourites, I could not help remembering that both parties had managed this Intercolonial Railway. I could not help thinking that from 1873 to 1878 we had a Liberal Administration, that Administration which, if we listen to hon. gentlemen opposite, we would regard as an economical Administration that would never allow the expenditure on that road to exceed the income. In fact, I remember in 1891 hearing the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) saying that when the Liberals got into power, if they could not secure a balance of expenditure and receipts, they would close up the road and cease to operate it. But we have had experience of Liberal management on the Intercolonial Railway, and in 1891 I took the opportunity to draw the attention of the House to the deficit from 1874 to 1878, under Liberal rule, contrasting it with the record from 1878 to 1890, under Conservative management, and for fear my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) may have forgotten the figures, I will quote them again :

Year.	Deficit.	Surplus.
1874-75	281,563 99
1875-76	243,912 87

1877-78	432,327 78
1878-79	716,083 53
1879-80	97,131 23
1880-81		542 15
1881-82		9,605 18
1882-83		10,547 83

1884-85	73,324 26
1885-86	106,042 84
1886-87	232,105 75
1887-88	363,043 16
1888-89	258,564 34
1889-90	553,392 05
Total.....	3,864,720 00	29,763 33
Less, surplus.....	29,763 33
	3,834,956 67

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Of course the hon. gentleman wants to be very fair. If he will look at the figures he will find that Mr. Mackenzie ceased to charge to capital account any expenditure in the years 1875-76, 1877-78. He charged $500,000 spent on capital account to current expenses, spreading it over three years, making an average of about $220,000 a year, which, under the present management, would be charged to capital account.

Mr. HAZEN. And what has the present management been doing? Charging to current account expenditures which I contend should have been charged to capital, amounts spent for the betterment of the road. When the light rails were taken off, and heavy rails placed upon the road, it would have been fair and right, under the system Mr. Mackenzie pursued, to charge the cost of that change to capital account. But, under this Government, it was charged to ordinary account.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This Government has increased the capital account $12,000,000.

Mr. HAZEN. When they remove a wooden bridge and replace it with an iron bridge, they charge that to ordinary account. Had they followed the system pursued by Mr. Mackenzie they would charge the difference between the cost of the iron bridge and the cost of the wooden bridge to capital account. What the hon. gentleman says may be correct, but it is equally correct as relating to the present Government, and their management, and, therefore, he makes no point against the figures I have quoted. These are the only figures I have here. I do not wish to be unfair. We know that, for the last two years, there have been large deficits on the railway. But, taking these figures, the only ones I have before me, we find that the deficits on the road, during the sixteen years covered by these figures, amount to $3,834,956.37, and, during the time the Liberal Government was in power, the deficits amounted to $2,181,116.37; and, during the eleven years when the Conservatives were in power, the net deficit was $1,653,840.30, or an average annual deficit, during the time of Liberal management, of $436,223.67, the annual average deficit, under Conservative management, being $150,349.11, or $285,874 less under Conservative management than under the management of the Government which my hon. friend holds up as a model. I frankly admit that, taking the two last years, the annual deficit, under the Conservative management, would be a little more than by the figures I have read, but even allowing for that difference, it will be seen that, under the management of the Conservative party, the deficit was not half what it was under the Liberal party.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. HAZEN. Hon. gentlemen may say "oh," but this is the fact and the figures bear out the assertion. Now that the heavy expenditures have been made, now that these expenditures that may fairly be, and, on any other road, would have been charged to capital account, have been made, I feel like having more confidence than perhaps I had at the outset in the statement made at Toronto by the Minister of Railways and Canals to the effect that the time for deficits had ceased to exist. If such is the case, no one in this House will more cordially approve of it or be more pleased with it than the Conservatives representing constituencies in the Maritime provinces. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) indulged in some comments on what he claimed to be the abuse of the pass system. I do not know who used these passes. My hon. friend said that if the election petition against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Tupper) had been brought to trial, a dreadful state of affairs would have been brought to light. That.

Sir, is such a statement as any man might make about anything. Before election petitions come to trial in this country, whether filed by Liberals or Conservatives, we find strong statements made by partizans that when the trial comes a terrible state of corruption and wrong-doing and the wrong use of Government influence and boodling will be unearthed. But we do not always find that when these petitions come to trial. Petitioners are often only too glad when the party petitioned against will admit a single case of bribery and allow the election to be voided on that ground. It is easy for the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr Davies), in the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to make assertions that, if the matter had come to trial, this would have been shown, and that would not have been shown. No one can pretend to say, in this country, that the Minister would have been unseated if that petition had gone to trial. It would have been more manly for the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies) to wait till the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was in the House before he made a charge of that sort. Sir, I think the Minister of Railways has satisfied this House that he is determined to manage the Intercolonial Railway in a prudent and business-like manner. I may say that my primary purpose in addressing the House was to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and the House to a wrong which, I think, exists in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. At the outset I desire to say that I do not do so for any political purpose. The men for whom I speak belong to both the Liberal and the Conservative parties, and I speak because I think injustice is being done to a large number of men who are giving valuable and faithful service to this country on the Intercolonial Railway. Two years ago, when this railway was up for discussion, I took occasion to say that I believed the salaries that were being paid to many of the officials employed on this railway were a disgrace to the Government of Canada. I desire, tonight, to repeat that assertion. In discussing it I can speak chiefly from a local standpoint, but, no doubt, what I say will apply to the whole road. In previous years when I complained to the Government that the officials were under-paid and were receiving almost starvation salaries, the answer was made: "You cannot expect us to increase the salaries of officials on the Intercolonial Railway while the income of the road is so much less than the expenditure." At that time that was a forcible argument to use against my contention, but it is not a forcible argument any longer, because, at present, the expenses and receipts of the road about balance each other. I wish to say again that the salaries that are being paid to the railway officials in my constituency are very much lower than the salaries that are paid to the officials in the Customs Department, the Post Office Department the Inland Revenue Department, or any other department of the Government. Not only are the salaries paid to them lower, but the railway officials do just as high a class of work as do the officials in any department of the Government that I have mentioned; they work every day, and many hours longer than do the officials in these departments. Only the other day in this House we saw hon. gentlemen on both sides denouncing the Civil Service Bill, which required the officers in the inside service at Ottawa to work an hour or two a day longer than they do at present. Yet we have the fact that there are a class of Government officials in this country, men of equal education, ability, and integrity, many of whom are working from daylight till dark, at salaries much less than those received by the inside officials of this country. I ask this House, if they consider that it is an injustice that the inside officials shall be required to work an hour longer than from ten o'clock to four o'clock, with an hour for dinner, do they not think that it is a still greater hardship that the railway employes on the Intercolonial Railway should be obliged to work from daylight to dark at a rate of pay far less per day and per month, than that received by the inside service in the city of Ottawa? Now, to show you that the statement I make is not exaggerated, I will give you a few facts. The station agent in the city of St. John, who every year handles the freight of the Intercolonial Railway and of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has the magnificent salary of $60 per month. That man handles over two hundred thousand dollars of public money every year, he is there before daylight at his post and it is eleven o'clock at night before he leaves. When the Canadian Pacific Railway came into the station at St. John, they agreed with the Government of Canada to pay $28 a month towards the salary of the agent there. Though they pay that money, the agent does not receive it; though his work is greatly enhanced in consequence of the Canadian Pacific Railway coming there, he gets not a cent additional. He still receives $60 from the Government, and the Government of Canada gets back $28 from the Canadian Pacific Railway; and all that man, who handles hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, receives from this country is the paltry sum of $32 a month. I ask the hon. members if that is not a scandal and a disgrace to this country? I ask those hon. members who grow hysterical at the inside service at Ottawa being asked to work an hour a day more, whether their sympathy would not be much better expended on those officials who are receiving, as I have said before, starvation salaries? What is true of the station agent there, is true, among others, of the men in the freight department. It is true of the salary received by the cashier of that department. It is true of the gentleman who handles the whole freight for the city of St. John, and who only receives $52 a month for his service. He has been employed there for over twenty years, and is a gentleman of the highest character for honesty and intelligence, a man who, if he had given the same work, with the same integrity and ability, to any private business, would be receiving three or four times that amount. That is not only true as regards the salaries of the officials, but the whole system needs overhauling. In the freight sheds men are getting $1.25 a day, labourers' pay, who are doing exactly the same work that other men are doing for $50 a month. Some men are getting $500 a year, men who have been many years in the service, and who are doing precisely the same amount and character of work as other men who are receiving $600 a year, and there are many other causes of complaint to which time will not now permit me to call the attention of this committee. I want to impress now upon the Minister of Railways the necessity that exists for doing something to equalize the salaries. Now that he has made the expenditure of the road balance with income he should see that fair play is done to this large number of employees on the Intercolonial Railway. I know what the hon. gentleman will say; he will say: I have placed the whole executive management of the road in the hands of Mr. Pottinger, the chief superintendent. In doing that, the Minister has acted in strict accordance with my own views, which I have expressed in this House two sessions. It is very desirable that greater power should be in the hands of the chief superintendent than has been the case in the past, and I believe that he will be in a better position to work up a local traffic and to offer inducements to merchants to patronize the Intercolonial Railway rather than other roads. Therefore, I ask, not from a political stand-point, but in the interest of fair-play, that the Minister of Railways may give his attention to this matter during the recess, and give such instructions to the chief superintendent as will cause him to remedy the grievances which I have here brought to the notice of the committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. I congratulate the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways on the valuable assistance obtained from the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), in passing these items through the House, and if they obtained the assistance of a few more after-dinner speeches, no doubt, they would be even more successful. With respect to the statement made by the hon. member for King's, that the Intercolonial had been made a refuge for political hacks, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) should have read the report of the Royal Commission in regard to the condition and the expenditure on operating the Intercolonial; and if he has not done so, he should not have ventured to deny the statement made by my hon. friend. If he will turn to page 322, he will find how the station-masters, conductors, and, in fact, all the officials are appointed. Here is some of the evidence:

3236. How are the station masters, the conductors, the brakemen and all the other officers, appointed?—In the appointment of station masters, etc., the member for the district is consulted, and his nominee, as a rule, is appointed, unless some good reason is known why he should not be.

3237. How are the district superintendents appointed?—District superintendents are appointed by the Minister.

3238. And the member for the district nominates the station masters?—The station masters and station operators, section men, section foremen, and brakemen, as a rule, are taken from the nominees of the member for the district.

3239. Do you appoint them, or the Minister?—The Minister.

3240. Have you any sort of check upon inefficient men being appointed, or do you require any qualifications?—If we consider a man really of no use, we object to him, and we ask for another name.

3241. Do you find that you have to do this often with men who are not efficient, or not as efficient as you would like?—Yes; we have a large number of men now employed whose services we think could be dispensed with.

There is proof positive that hon. members representing constituencies on the Intercolonial nominate the whole men, even the trackmen, and that men are forced on the Minister at the time of the general election. At that time no doubt he was compelled to accept men who were not required, and the evidence shows that the officers of the road from the top to the bottom are the nominees of members who live along the line, and no doubt the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) has had the privilege of nominating men to fill positions on the road. Yet the hon. gentleman says it is not so.

Mr. HAZEN. I did not say so.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman said the road was not made a refuge for political hacks.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman referred to after-dinner speeches; but I think he has made an after-restaurant speech. I said nothing of the sort suggested by the hon. gentleman. What I said was, that they did not put men into positions if there were no vacancies. If there were vacancies, I suppose the recommendations of those hon. members would be considered. As for myself, I state deliberately and clearly that I never recommended a single man, or attempted to secure for a man a position until advised by the chief superintendent that there was a vacancy to be filled.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman replied to the hon. member for King's, and said he should have hesitated before he declared that the Intercolonial was made a refuge for political hacks. The evidence of the commission shows that the road has been utilized for that purpose. Will the hon.

gentleman turn to page 322 and read the evidence? If not, he should withdraw his charge, for it there distinctly states that every official on the road was put there on the recommendation of the hon. member for the district. Is not that making the road a refuge for political hacks? The hon. member for St. John has further declared that the Intercolonial is operated in the interests of the producers in the west. Does he not know that a large portion of the surplus products that go from Ontario to the eastern provinces are not carried over the Intercolonial, but are sent by American lines to Boston and shipped from there to Halifax and St. John? It is well known that large quantities of Ontario flour are so sent. The Intercolonial has not been operated in the interests of western men, but in the interests of the coal mines of Nova Scotia and of local interests in the Maritime provinces, and further, the road has been overloaded by officials forced into the employ of the Government by men who hold positions similar to the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. McALISTER. The hon. member who has just taken his seat complains that the Intercolonial is operated solely for the benefit of the Maritime provinces, but I think it is operated largely for the benefit of western shippers. Freights from Toronto and Montreal to St. John and Halifax are lower than from the northern part of New Brunswick to the last mentioned places, so that western merchants can ship goods to the Maritime provinces upon much more favourable terms than the Maritime province merchants can ship to any part of their own provinces. If this is not operating the Intercolonial Railway for the benefit of the western men, then I do not understand what is. It is all very well for western members to denounce the management of the Intercolonial, and declare that it is operated for the benefit of people in the Maritime provinces; but the fact is that the greater portion of the benefit is derived by the western men. If the Intercolonial were cut off and western men were confined to shipments to the Maritime provinces via Boston, as the hon. member for North Wellington maintains is being done now, he would find that the trade from the west with the lower provinces would be very largely diminished.

Mr. FRASER. The question of the Intercolonial Railway is not a matter altogether of east or west, although it is largely a matter affecting the eastern portion of the Dominion. I join with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) in saying that I am not at all as sanguine of the result as is the Minister of Railways. I stated last year, and I wish to repeat the statement now, that I will not have very much to say against any Minister of Railways who shows no more than a fair deficit on operating the Intercolonial. The condition of entering Confederation so far as the lower provinces were concerned was the building and operating of that road, and while a deficit is shown yearly on the canals, the Dominion cannot object to a deficit being shown on the Intercolonial, provided it is managed as it should be. But I hope the result will not be secured by our permitting the road to run down. I do not believe the Intercolonial, with the present population of Canada, or even its population ten years hence, can be operated by reducing the deficit to less than $200,000 or $300,000. There are very good reasons for this. I am not going to enter into the question as to how the Liberal or Conservative Government acted on the matter, but I am sure that every one is aware very different methods were used during the Mackenzie Government, and that the methods used were such that on their face nothing could be said against them. So far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned I think, perhaps, a remark inadvertently made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), is correct. He said that the whole system needed overhauling, and I suggested to the hon. gentleman to get the ear of the Minister elsewhere than in Parliament to show what that overhauling should be. I submit that if he had consulted the Minister, and had poured into his willing ear all he had given to this House, perhaps it would be more efficient towards having these changes brought about, than to have it urged here as a sort of grievance that these things were not attended to. I am sure that there is no man in the lower provinces, whatever his political views are, who does not wish to put these matters in a straightforward manner. We are interested in the Intercolonial Railway, and if ever the trade of this country between east and west is to amount to anything, it must be through the efficient working of the Intercolonial Railway. I am afraid that the Intercolonial Railway will run down. If you study the history of that road, you will see that a similar attempt to this was made after 1878, and the deficit was brought down low. But what was the result? In a few years the effect of that operation was such as to cause the large deficits which we have had, and I fear that the same operation is being employed just now. Unless indeed all the departments are carried on as efficiently as before, the experience of a year or two will let the people know that the Intercolonial Railway is not what it ought to be. I agree with the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) that hitherto the Intercolonial Railway has been largely used as a political engine, and especially about election times. I also agree with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) when he said that if ever the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) got into power he would find the Intercolonial Railway was not such a pleasant thing. I admit that. It is a very pleasant thing to put men in power, but after they are in power, they do find that the making of the Intercolonial Railway to serve their purpose at election times, only causes their supporters to be more greedy for positions on the road. So far as the gentlemen about whom he spoke are concerned, I know very little about the salaries they receive, but I submit that there are salaries paid on the Intercolonial Railway which are too high. I submit that $6,000 a year for some men on the Intercolonial Railway is too much. I speak on behalf of a class of men far more deserving than the men for whom the member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) has spoken. I speak for the men who have to bear in all weathers the hardships of running the Intercolonial Railway. I speak on behalf of the engineers, the firemen and the brakemen, and all officials on the trains. These are the men who are deserving the attention of the Government, and not the men who sit day after day in well-furnished rooms in the offices and the stations. I speak for the men who have to work out on the road in cold and rain. I know of no class deserving of such sympathy and who ought to receive better remuneration than these men. A good deal has been said in this House about the civil servants, but these are the civil servants that we ought to attend to; the men who, perhaps, go out in the morning and who come home at night, mayhap, with broken limbs, or are carried home to their families dead. For these men I speak, and they are more deserving of our sympathy than all the others. I say that if the Minister continues to square the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway and to run the railway as well as it has been run, I, for one, shall say that he has done a service for Canada, but let the danger not be forgotten that I have adverted to. So far as elections are concerned, I make the statement here, and I am ready to prove it, that those books of passes were in the hands of the political agents of the Conservative party at the last election. Although the chief engineer swore that a district superintendent had issued little pieces of paper as passes, is it not an extraordinary thing that not a word has been said against that superintendent up to this date? The Government know that he committed that act, and the chief engineer knows it, and yet not a word has been said to him, while many a poor conductor who has committed a comparatively small offence has been immediately put off the road when his offence was discovered. Yet the man who received the large salary and who uses slips of paper for passes, is treated as a deserving official on the road, and retains the confidence of the Government. Now, there is one thing to which I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways. A good deal has been said during the last six months about handing the Intercolonial Railway over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and there are a number of people in this country who think that ought to be done. The management of the Minister of Railways for the past year shows that that need not be done, and it shows also of what kind was the administration of those who preceded him in the department. I do not know whether his genius is so surpassing that of his predecessors, as to enable him to accomplish all that he claims on the same lines as they did; but if the leakage of the past years was not from just as honest an operation as his, then I submit that the Government should at once take measures to see that the money was returned to the Government that was taken from them for work that was not performed. My own opinion is that the Intercolonial Railway cannot be worked without a deficit. Indeed, I feel about it just now, as a friend of mine said about the conversion of a man who was not very good in his character. When he heard of the conversion of this person he said: Well, you had better shoot him. I think, perhaps, that the Intercolonial Railway is now in that position. For my own opinion is that it cannot be operated so successfully as it has been and make its accounts square. I for one wish to say that I will not object to any reasonable deficit if the hon. Minister can show that he has conducted the business of the country in that railway, on proper lines.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) was perfectly correct in his statement in reference to the savings which I intended to make. There are $124,000 in wages alone in one department, $32,000 in another, $16,000 by train service, and, I think, about $150,000 on rail account. If the hon. gentleman remembered my statement he might have made out the difference. The difference was made up by the savings in the stores accounts. I stated that not only was there this amount of wages for 300 men, but they were actually using stores uselessly to that amount. I also stated that there would be a considerable saving by not erecting unnecessary stores and buildings, and I supplemented that by a detailed account from the books, of the savings for the five months on the different works. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not noticed that, and I may repeat it to him. For the five months ending with November, 1891, the mechanical department cost $919,135, and for the corresponding five months of 1892 $761,694, or a saving of $157,441. In the traffic department there was a small saving of $6,976, and in the maintenance of way and works a saving of $403,847. I have a total account of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway for the last eight months, showing that the total deficit during that time is only $5,000, and I expect that by the end of the year it will not be much greater than that, if the account is not balanced. At this time of the night I hope other gentlemen will excuse me replying in full to the remarks that they have made on the vote.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman propose really to expend this money this year?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the land been purchased ?

Mr. HAGGART. No. The official referee of the court is down there at present making arrangements for the expropriation.

St. Charles Branch $17,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there any hope that the damages for the St. Charles branch will ever cease ?

Mr. HAGGART. It seems not. The amount required is $17,200, there is available $20,000, and the amount of the claims is $37,200. The construction of this road has cost $822,000 and the land $900,000, $1,722,000 altogether.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And the estimate by Sir Charles Tupper before its construction was that its total cost would be $136,000

Trent Canal $73,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Just $1,000 and no more was spent last year. It does appear to me that you might as well drop this item until the writs for the next elections are out, and then you can resume the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better keep it on, because if it is dropped, there might be danger that it would not be put on again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Minister of Finance will state that he intends to hold an election in the meantime, perhaps he could spend this $17,000, otherwise it might as well be dropped. I would like to know whether he has any information to give us as to what is being done—not in regard to the canal ; I do not care in the least what is done about that ; I would like to know whether there is to be an election ?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal $1,609,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister please state what the position of this work is, and the estimated cost of expediting the construction of the canal ?

Mr. HAGGART. This amount is required to pay for the works now under contract. It is to finish the lock. I expect that it will be finished next fall, and that the gates will be put on so that it will be ready for navigation in the following spring.

Mr. DENISON. Last session I brought up the question of deepening the St. Lawrence canals, more especially the Soulanges canal, about to be constructed to a depth of 20 feet. The commissioners recommended 16 feet for the canals on the St. Lawrence instead of the depth of 14 feet, which is only now being contracted for. It seems to me that it is a great mistake to expend large sums in building a canal of only 14 feet in depth, when we have the recommendation of the canal commissioners, who went thoroughly into the matter, in favour of 16 feet depth, more particularly when we bear in mind the fact that we have a demand now for the depth of 20 feet, which demand is shown plainly by the fact that this particular year we passed an Act of Parliament granting a charter to a company to construct a canal, not of 20 feet, but of 22 feet. I rise for the purpose of asking the Minister of Railways, who promised last year to have some sort of a report here, whether he has had that made with regard to the deepening of the canal.

Mr. HAGGART. I ordered the engineers in the different portions along the line from Lake Superior down to Montreal to make an estimate of the cost of 20 feet navigation from Lake Erie down, and they estimated between $130,000,000 and $140,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are scarcely prepared to recommend that now ?

Mr. HAGGART. No ; especially when we have an offer of a company to deepen it to the depth required, and to charge no more tolls than are charged at present on the canals, and which do not more than a quarter pay the men working on them.

Mr. BORDEN. Is it the intention of the Government to renew the lease which is about to expire for the Windsor and Annapolis Railway ?

Mr. HAGGART. The lease has expired and has been renewed, and it is a lease in perpetuity.

Mr. BORDEN. Have there been any changes ?

Mr. HAGGART. No ; I do not think there are any changes of any account.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will the House take up to-morrow afternoon ?

Mr. FOSTER. Some Bills, and then Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Which Bills ?

Mr. FOSTER. There are only three or four ; we will take up the Civil Service Insurance Bill and the Speaker's Bill.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 28th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSTER. With the consent of my hon. friend opposite I move :

That the House do meet on Wednesday and Thursday of this week, at eleven o'clock in the morning.

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly.

Motion agreed to.

BRANDING OF CHEESE.

Mr. FOSTER. With the consent of the House I would like to introduce a Bill which is the outcome of a discussion we had in the House the other day in reference to the marking of cheese. The Minister of Agriculture, with Professor Robertson, looked into the matter and he has put his ideas in the form of a Bill. I would like to have it printed so that we may get it before the House. If there is time to get it through we can put it through, but if not, we can have the provisions of the Bill before us.

Mr. LAURIER. Very well.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 125) to prevent the manufacture or sale of filled or imitation cheese, and to provide for the branding of dairy products.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 119) to incorporate the Canadian Live Stock Assurance Company.—(Mr. Stairs.)

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. LACHAPPELLE. (Translation.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Government to bring down within a day the French text of the commercial treaty, signed at Paris, on the 6th February last, by the representatives of France and Canada. The grounds on which I ask the production of this document are the following:—First, because it seems to be a pretty well established fact that the English text of the treaty now before us is a more or less accurate translation; and, in the second place, it seems but fair and reasonable that we, the French-Canadian members of this House, should be enabled to read the text of the treaty in the very same language in which it has been drafted and signed—I mean in the French language. I beg, therefore, that the French text of the treaty be brought down some time to-morrow afternoon, as it is the intention, I understand, to bring up the question before the House, and we could not afford to participate in the debate should the information bearing upon this debate be withheld from us.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I understand my hon. friend, he asks for the French text of the treaty. That was laid on the Table, being printed in parallel columns with the English version. The correspondence is now being translated.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) The French text of the treaty the hon. member applies for is already before the House; it was drafted in the very city of Paris, and not here.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) And in very good French too.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways if there has not been a mistake in bringing down the answer to the order in regard to Mr. Trudeau's superannuation. The order was for correspondence and papers, and I find nothing brought down except the Order in Council. There may have been no correspondence, but I fancy there has been a report of the Treasury Board on which the Order in Council was based, and I suppose the Minister has overlooked bringing that down.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the report is embodied in the order. I will bring it down to-morrow. There was no correspondence.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House proceeded to concur in resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means.

On resolution 2,

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the Minister of Finance can tell the House now whether he has any more proposals for changing the tariff this session. I refer to such changes as may be required if the French Treaty is ratified.

Mr. FOSTER. I have none to propose to-day. That is as far as I can go.

Mr. LAURIER. Are you going to discriminate in favour of France?

Mr. FOSTER. I shall have to ask my hon. friend to allow me to answer that question another time.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 126) to amend the Act respecting the Duties of Customs.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make some remarks on this question. The hon. Minister of Finance, in his speech on the tariff, following mine of some days ago, made some personal allusions to myself and some charges with regard to my veracity in some statements which I had previously made in reference to the negotiations at Washington. In questioning my veracity, he referred to the fact in disparaging terms that I was a Presbyterian elder and a promoter of Sabbath legislation, and stated that under these professions I cloaked my attempt to deceive the people and to make false representations as to the motives and character of the operations of the Government. Now, I may say that I have the utmost contempt for thus dealing with the private character of a member of this House. I do not intend to retaliate on the hon. gentleman. If I were to do so, I dare say I might possibly find something in his record that would not be more creditable than being a Presbyterian elder; but it is not my intention to do so. I intend, however, to justify the position I took with regard to the course of the Government in their negotiations or their professed negotiations at Washington. The observations and charges made with regard to the course I took render it necessary for me to vindicate myself in this matter. Now, the hon. member has brought down a report in which he professed to give a history of the negotiations at Washington. In that report he simply reiterated and reaffirmed the statements he had previously made. I am unable to imagine what purpose was served by the bringing down of that professed report. The hon. member had repeatedly made the same statement, and it was somewhat significant—I think it was a little invidious—on the part of the hon. gentleman to bring that report down at a time when Secretary Blaine, one of the actors in that matter, was dead, and when another of the actors, Secretary Foster, had ceased to be Secretary of State, and had not only ceased to be an official and to act in an official capacity at Washington, but had left the country as well, and was at that time in Europe. I do not understand why the document should have been brought down at that time. However, it was brought down. The date of that communication was 15th February, 1892, it was laid on the Table of the House the 7th March, 1893. Now, I repeat that it was simply a reiteration of the statement frequently made by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, and it might almost seem that there would be grounds for laying the charge that the writing of this communication was an afterthought, and that it had actually been written after these statements had been frequently made and reiterated, and after these negotiations had been made. However, whatever may be the conclusion as to the good taste of the hon. gentleman in making this statement after Mr. Blaine was dead, and after Mr. Foster had ceased to be Secretary of State, the document is not conclusive evidence because it was not confirmed by the American participants in the negotiations. It was a statement made by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, and that statement happens to be in direct conflict with the statements made by Secretary Blaine and Secretary Foster and President Harrison. After a careful examination of that document, I have arrived at a conclusion, which will perhaps exonerate members of this Government and members of the United States Government from any intention to make misrepresentation, and I think I will be able to show to the House that there was a possibility of a misunderstanding, and that the Finance Minister had actually been labouring under a misapprehension in the statement he has made that the condition of the American Government was positively that there should be uniformity of tariff between the two countries. Mr. Blaine says, in his reports furnished to Congress:

The commissioners were informed that the Government of the United States would not be prepared to renew the treaty of 1854, nor to agree upon any commercial reciprocity which should be confined to natural products alone, and that, in view of the great development in the industrial interests of the United States and of the changed condition of the commercial relations of the two countries, since the treaty of 1854 was negotiated, it was regarded of essential importance that a list of manufactured goods should be included in the schedule of articles for free or other exchange under any reciprocity arrangement which might be made.

Now, the hon. gentleman will mark the language; not that there should be unrestricted reciprocity, not that there should be absolute admission into the markets of Canada of all American manufactures; but the condition laid down by Mr. Blaine was that the treaty should not be confined to reciprocity in natural products, but that there should be, in addition, a list of manufactured articles to be agreed upon between the commissioners of Canada and the authorities of the United States. The Canadian commissioners refused to recede, in the slightest degree, from the position they took. They came to Washington with the ultimatum: Give us reciprocity in natural products, or, if you will not, we will not talk the matter with you at all; we will have our way, we will make no concessions, we will engage in no diplomatic discussion to see whether we cannot arrive at an agreement; but we lay down our ultimatum, which is the reciprocity treaty of 1854, with modifications such as the hon. gentleman explained afterwards. And I will show what his explanations were. This was their ultimatum. Mr. Blaine's request that they should agree upon a list of manufactured articles—a list—not all manufactures—and that they should make propositions were not acceded to, and no attempt was made to see if there was any possibility of making a reciprocity treaty. There was room for diplomatic discussion; there was room for an honest attempt, on the part of the Canadian commissioners, to see if they could possibly secure a treaty of commerce with the United States. It was not reasonable for those gentlemen to go to Washington and lay down an ultimatum which the Americans would have to accept. And it was not reasonable to lay down an ultimatum and refuse to discuss the question. Discussion was absolutely and peremptorily closed by our commissioners, and the negotiations broken by their own act. Had my hon. friend opposite any reason to suppose, when he went to Washington, that his proposition for a treaty of reciprocity, based on the treaty of 1854, would be accepted? Had he any reason to suppose it was worth his while going there to make that proposition? Of course not. The American Government, time and again, assured this country that no such treaty would be accepted. Only a few days before the dissolution of the House of Commons, Mr. Blaine had expressly stated that no such proposition would be entertained by the American Government. This was clearly stated in his celebrated letter of 30th January. The commissioners went to Washington. Well, they were aware that the proposition they intended to make was one which would be unacceptable and inevitably refused. It was a foregone conclusion that that would be the result, and they were simply trifling with the question and the people when they went to Washington for the purpose of making such a proposition. It is worth while inquiring, Mr. Speaker, whether it would not have been possible for the Canadian commissioners to have slightly varied their conditions, and whether they should not have receded from the position they took, that they must absolutely have reciprocity in natural products alone or else accept no treaty. Was it not possible for them to have accepted Mr. Blaine's proposition, and made proposals on the lines of his suggestion that there should be a list of manufactured goods agreed upon? They might have done that without discriminating against England at all. Why, Sir, they could have agreed upon a list that would embrace coal oil, barb wire, agricultural implements, nails, spikes, cars, locomotives, common cottons, twine, carriages, clocks, certain kinds of glassware, threshers, portable steam engines, sewing machines, type-writers, machinery, edge tools, picks, spades, leather, printing presses, musical instruments, white paper, wall paper, furniture and a great variety of other manufactured goods which we import almost exclusively from the United States. They could have arranged a wide list of manufactured articles, and given, if necessary, to the American people preferential treatment in our market in these articles, and, at the same time, have not been under the necessity of discriminating against England, except, perhaps, to a very slight degree. If these commissioners had been honest in their professed desire to obtain reciprocity, if they had deigned to accept Mr. Blaine's proposal to talk the matter over and make propositions, if they had been willing to make the attempt to agree upon a list of manufactured articles, limited in extent, a list such as they likely will adopt in part before twelve months from this date, without reciprocity in view at all, they could have, in all human probability, secured access to the American market for our natural products in return for a concession which would have admitted a certain list of American goods which we do not import to any great extent from England, and which, if we give preferential treatment in our market, would not have affected England to any considerable degree. I repeat that they could have done this beyond all question, and the whole course of their operations at Washington demonstrated the truth of the assertion that they were not there to get a reciprocity treaty; that they were not honest in their professions in regard to it, because if they had been, beyond all human question they could have obtained a treaty which would have freed trade to some extent, and would to a very slight degree discriminate against England.

Now, Sir, I wish to point out, and to do it fully, my reasons for charging the Government with deception in this matter. The allegation was made in the first place by the Government that the United States had made overtures. That was the allegation upon which they went to the country. That allegation, I think I shall be able to show, was without foundation. In the next place they gave people to understand that there would be no trouble to get a treaty. That was the universal impression in the country, that was the language of the press upon the subject, that was the language of the platform upon the subject. They went to the country, I repeat, with an implied, if not a positive, promise that reciprocity with the United States would be the outcome of their negotiations, which negotiations, they claimed, had been instituted as the result of overtures made by that country. Their partisans were led to expect reciprocity; their partisans freely promised reciprocity, and that promise was founded upon statements and representations made by the Government. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House, in the first place, to a despatch which appeared in the Toronto "Mail," in January, 1891, and which was answered by a despatch appearing in the "Empire" on the following day. On the 15th of January, 1891, the Toronto "Mail" had a despatch which read as follows:—

It is reported from Ottawa, on authority which leaves little reason to doubt that the rumour is true, that the Imperial Government is urging the Dominion Ministers to unite in a proposition to arrange all matters in dispute between Canada and the United States on the basis of a wide measure of commercial reciprocity.

To that despatch the "Empire" made the following answer:—

The "Empire" is authorized to give this statement an unqualified denial. Not only is it not true, but, on the contrary, it is learned from the very best sources that the Canadian Government has recently been approached by the United States Government with a view to the development of trade relations between the two countries and that our Government has requested the advice of Her Majesty's Government on the subject.

Following this and called forth by this and similar statements which appeared in the Canadian press we have a letter from Mr. Baker, member of the United States House of Representatives, making inquiry with regard to this matter of the Secretary of State for the United States (Mr. Blaine). Mr. Baker writes, under the date of 29th January, 1891:

WASHINGTON, D.C., 29th January, 1891.

HON. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State.

MY DEAR MR. BLAINE,—It is reported in the newspapers of Canada and along the northern border of my state, where my constituents are deeply interested in the subject, that negotiations are going on between this country and Great Britain with a view of partial reciprocity with Canada, including natural products only and not manufactures, and it is stated that Sir Chas. Tupper is on his way here as commissioner to negotiate for such modification to our tariff. I would be very glad if you would enable me to answer my constituents.

Very truly yours,
CHAS. S. BAKER.

To this inquiry Mr. Blaine replies on the same day:

WASHINGTON, D.C., 29th January, 1891.

MY DEAR MR. BAKER,—I authorize you to contradict the rumours you refer to. There are no negotiations whatever on foot for a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and you may be assured that no scheme for reciprocity with the Dominion confined to natural products will be entertained by this Government. We know nothing of Sir Chas. Tupper's coming to Washington.

Very truly yours,
JAMES G. BLAINE.

Now, the members of the Canadian Ministry were in possession of this statement of Mr. Blaine before the House was dissolved on the 3rd of February. They had the fact before them that these assertions were made with regard to their ability to secure reciprocity, and I repeat that they were guilty of duplicity and made representations to the people which they knew could not be redeemed. But this evidence did not silence their reciprocity assertions. They still continued to assert that they were able to get reciprocity, that they were likely to get it, that they were about to get it. On the 3rd of February the House was dissolved and the announcement of dissolution was made in the following terms in the Government organ, the Toronto "Empire":—

The sixth Parliament of Canada is at an end. Acting on the advice of his responsible Ministers, His
Mr. CHARLTON.

Excellency the Governor-General has been pleased to dissolve the House of Commons and issue his writs for a new Parliament.

Nominations take place on Thursday, 26th February, polling on Thursday, 5th March. The writs are to be dated 4th February and made returnable on 25th April.

In view of the foregoing important statement, the question will naturally be asked, what are the reasons which have induced the Government to appeal to the country at the present time? It is understood that the Dominion Government have through Her Majesty's Government made certain proposals to the United States for negotiations looking to an extension of our commerce with that country. These proposals have been submitted to the President for his consideration, and the Canadian Government is of the opinion that if the negotiations are to result in a treaty, which must be ratified by the Parliament of Canada, it is expedient the Government should be able to deal with a Parliament fresh from the people rather than with a moribund House.

It is understood that Canada will send a delegation to Washington after 4th March, the date on which the life of the present Congress expires, for the purpose of discussing informally the questions of the extension and development of trade between the United States and Canada, and the settlement of all questions of difference between the two countries. This delegation will visit the United States capital, it is said, as the result of a friendly suggestion from Washington.

This notice that appeared on the 3rd of February, I may say, appeared simultaneously in the Montreal "Gazette." On the 4th of February the "Empire" published an official statement of the Government's proposals, and why they were made:

In view of the importance of the reasons which have induced the Government to appeal to the country at the present moment, the "Empire" is privileged to publish a copy of the despatch from His Excellency the Governor-General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, showing the nature of the Government's proposals to the United States, and indicating the earnest desire of the Administration for the development of trade between the United States and Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would inquire, if this official statement was not inspired by the Government, how came this Government organ to have an official despatch which could only have been obtained through the connivance of the Government, by the consent of the Government and by the primary action of the Government? When this question was under discussion a few days ago, the Minister of Justice said in explanation of this statement that the "Empire" had this despatch from the "Canada Gazette." The "Canada Gazette" contains no such despatch between the 13th December, the date of the despatch, and the 3rd of February, the date of the dissolution. The statement made by the Minister of Justice suggesting that the Toronto "Empire" took this despatch from the "Canada Gazette" was misleading, and must have been purposely misleading, because it does not appear there; and I ask the Minister of Finance if he will bear out to-day the statement made by the Minister of Justice on that occasion, that this despatch of the 13th December, 1890, was taken by the Toronto "Empire" from the "Canada Gazette," and was obtained in the usual course of an examination of the Government publications, or whether it was furnished by the Government to that paper for the purpose of carrying forward a scheme of deception? Here is the despatch as it appeared in the "Empire" of 4th February:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 13th December, 1890.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to send to Your Lordship to-day a telegraphic message in cipher, of which the following is the substance.

With reference to my telegram of the 10th inst., this Government is desirous to propose a joint commission, such as that of 1871, with authority to deal without limitation and to prepare a treaty respecting the following subjects:—

1. Renewal of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, with the modifications required by the altered circumstances of both countries and with the extensions deemed by the commission to be in the interests of Canada and the United States.

2. Reconsideration of the treaty of 1888, with respect to the Atlantic fisheries, with the aim of securing the free admission into the United States markets of Canadian fishery products, in return for facilities to be granted to United States fishermen to buy bait and supplies and to transship cargoes in Canada, all such privileges to be mutual.

3. Protection of mackerel and other fisheries on the Atlantic Ocean and in inland waters; also

4. Relaxation of sea-board coasting laws of the two countries.

5. Relaxation of the coasting laws of the two countries on the inland waters dividing Canada from the United States.

6. Mutual salvage and saving of wrecked vessels.

7. Arrangements for settling boundary between Canada and Alaska.

The treaty would, of course, be ad referendum.

The manner in which this proposal came to be made to the United States Government is briefly as follows:—Several weeks ago when negotiations were in progress between Newfoundland and the United States looking to a reciprocity treaty, the Canadian Government made representations that Canada should have the option of being included in any arrangements with that colony as to the fisheries or trade. This contention was based on solemn assurances given by the Newfoundland Government two or three years ago, and repeated on successive occasions, that if any special privileges were allowed to any country in regard to the purchase of supplies or bait in Newfoundland such privileges would also be granted to Canada. The Secretary of State for the United States, when he learned of the position of affairs, insisted that the negotiations should be carried on separately. He intimated, however, that he would not be unwilling to enter into negotiations with Canada, but preferred that they should be private and unofficial. The Dominion Government thereupon asked the Imperial authorities to remind Mr. Blaine that Canada had always been ready for a fair reciprocal arrangement and had made repeated offers to that effect, which, however, had been ignored or refused by the United States. It was further represented that the Dominion Government was willing, now that overtures had been made to them, to again negotiate, and that they would prefer that these negotiations should be official and under a commission from the British Government.

Now, Sir, the elections were brought on, the Ministers took the field, and let us see what their utterances were upon some occasions with regard to this matter. My charge, you will bear in mind, is that the Government were all the time holding out inducements to the country that they could obtain reciprocity; they were asserting to the country that the United States had made overtures, and the United States being anxious for a treaty, there would be no difficulty upon their part in obtaining one. On the 7th February a great mass meeting was held in Toronto. That meeting was addressed, among other speakers, by the Minister of Customs, Mr. Bowell, by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Foster, by the Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson; and Sir John Thompson, in the course of that speech, made some reference to this matter which I beg to trouble the House with, as I deem it of importance in connection with this case. He said:

A little over three months ago it transpired that negotiations were being entertained by the United States for the making of a treaty of reciprocity with the colony of Newfoundland. These negotiations have not yet ripened into a treaty, but they were proceedings on lines which were not unlike, so far as they went, the lines which Canada would be willing to pursue in any trade negotiations with that country, and not, mind you, at the dictation of the British Government, as has been untruly asserted in the press opposed to us, but on our own line; on hearing that these negotiations were progressing, we insisted upon the British Government demanding at Washington that Canada should have the option, if she pleased, of having Canada included in any treaty which might be made with the colony of Newfoundland, but we indicated at the same time that the proposed treaty with regard to Newfoundland did not seem to be upon lines so extensive as would suit the wants and interests of Canada, and that it might be better to avail ourselves at the same time of entering upon separate negotiations on behalf of Canada. (Cheers.) Well, Sir, that intimation was promptly conveyed by Her Majesty's Government to Washington, and the answer made by Mr. Blaine, the Secretary of the United States on behalf of his Government, was an overture to reciprocity. Now, these gentlemen may assert in this country that it was all moonshine and humbug about Mr. Blaine's being willing to entertain our negotiations, but it will be proved to you when the time comes that, in response to that, Mr. Blaine, whatever his sentiments may be—and I am bound for the present to give him credit for candour—as the negotiations with Newfoundland would not suit the Dominion of Canada for a trade treaty between these two countries, he was willing to make a wide treaty for reciprocity and enter upon separate negotiations with her. (Hear, hear.) That statement being made, we are bound to avail ourselves of that to extend our trade. We have never declared our unwillingness to trade with them. On the contrary, we are seeking extensions of trade in every direction. The next request from Mr. Blaine was that preparatory to negotiations being entered upon, we would propound a basis upon which the convention should eventually proceed. We did so in a document which has been published in the press, offering to consider the renewal of a reciprocity treaty of 1854, with such modifications as the altered circumstances of the two countries might call for. We asked him to reconsider the abortive treaty of 1888, which settled the fishery dispute along with trade questions, and which expressed our willingness likewise to enter into trade negotiations which would settle the Behring Sea difficulties and all questions upon the Atlantic coast with regard to fisheries, and to continue the coasting and wrecking business as well between the countries. Now,

Sir, a good deal has been said to the people of Canada about the insincerity of all this. It is stated that having made that proposition to Mr. Blaine without any prospect of its being accepted, without any prospect of its being eventually entertained, Sir John Macdonald has sprung the elections upon the people of Canada under the pretense that he is going to enter into these negotiations, while in reality the Cabinet at Washington will have none of it. Let me tell you, so far from that being true, we had the proposition that was submitted to Mr. Blaine; that the answer that Mr. Blaine made to us was that he was willing to enter upon a preliminary discussion to precede the more formal commission; he was willing to enter upon that discussion and to consider all points embraced in it, but would not be prepared to do so until after the 4th of March, when the term of the present Congress expires. In the meantime, Sir, what would our position have been if we had not appealed to the country, if we had not gone to the people of Canada? It would have been said that in the very last hour of the existence of our Parliament, we were endeavouring to make a treaty which would entirely change the business of the country, and when we went to Washington we would have been comparatively weak in the hands of the men with whom we were negotiating, because the men with whom we were negotiating would know, that instead of being there with the confidence of the country behind us, we had to ask the assent of a Parliament which had already spent its last session before the negotiations had practically commenced (Hear, hear, and cheers.) We would have the Government entering upon the most important treaty negotiations without a Parliament behind us, and what we would propose is that, if you and the people of Canada accept the policy that we put before you now, we will go to Washington with the Parliament behind us, and we will be able to treat with Mr. Blaine with the assurance that the Premier of this country has the renewed confidence of Canada. (Loud applause.)

Now, Sir, what inference was to be drawn from that speech of Sir John Thompson with reference to the reciprocity question and negotiations at Washington? Did he not plainly state that overtures were had from Mr. Blaine? Did he not plainly state that in pursuance of those overtures the Government were proposing to send their commission to Washington? Did he not plainly state that the prospects for a reciprocity treaty were so good that it was advisable for the Government to dissolve Parliament, have a new election, and call a new House fresh from the people, so that this treaty that the Government hoped to negotiate with the authorities at Washington could be laid before representatives fresh from the people, and not before a moribund House? I assert that the course of the Government, that the language of the members of the Government, that the whole of the policy pursued by the Government in regard to this question was a policy designed and calculated to lead the people of Canada to believe that they were about to obtain reciprocity, and that the promises of the Liberal party with regard to this matter need not be entertained, for while the Liberals were telling the people that they would secure reciprocity sometime in the future, if they came into power, the Government had reciprocity in their hands, and in order to have a new Parliament ready to sanction the treaty they were about to make they were holding a general election. There can be no question about that. If the impression prevailed in the country, as it assuredly did, and if this impression was not well founded, if the Government were not actually on the line of obtaining reciprocity, as the people were told and as they allowed their press and orators to assure the people, then, were the Government not pursuing an invidious and improper course in laying the case before the people, as Sir John Thompson did at Toronto, in permitting their organs and orators to talk about obtaining reciprocity and declaring that the matter was safe in their hands, when all the time the Government, although they sent commissioners to Washington to submit proposals, knew their proposals would be rejected and could not under any circumstances be accepted? They knew this from Mr. Blaine's letter of 30th January, in which he distinctly stated that propositions of that character could not for one moment be entertained by the United States Government. They knew from the whole history of the facts since 1866, when the reciprocity treaty in natural products was abrogated, that the declarations of the Americans on every occasion had been that no such treaty would be renewed, that the United States agents would never enter into negotiations for reciprocity confined to natural products, but would in any event insist on the admission into the markets of Canada of some products of their labour which they had to sell and could exchange with the people of Canada for the products of their labour here, namely, the natural products. I will be able to show that the Government in the pursuit of this plan which they adopted violated the confidence of the Washington Government, that they made known the fact and had it talked about that reciprocity negotiations were in progress, when it was distinctly understood, and an explicit pledge had been exacted by Mr. Blaine that all the proceedings should be considered private and secret, and that negotiations should not be known or alluded to until the preliminary negotiations or conferences or talks had taken place between the commissioners or agents from Canada with members of the Washington Administration, and it had been decided whether there was any possibility of effecting a treaty or whether it had been demonstrated that the negotiations would be fruitless. Did the Dominion Government observe that pledge? I have here a letter from Secretary Blaine to Sir Julian Pauncefote bearing on this matter. It will be found in the Sessional Papers of 1891, volume 24, No. 38, page 83. Mr. Blaine in that communication to Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated 1st April, says:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON,
April 1st, 1891.

MY DEAR SIR JULIAN,—I duly received the note which you did me the honour to address to me on the 20th of March. I regret that for many reasons I have been unable to make an earlier response.

For convenience sake I here quote the substantial part of your note.

The quotation appears here.

A copy of the basis of negotiation which you placed in my hands on the 22nd of December last is appended hereto.

You told me, if my memory is not in error, that you were instructed by Lord Salisbury to propose the topics to the United States for discussion, and, if possible, for agreement.

I answered that I felt sure that the President would be unwilling to appoint a commission to consider the propositions as they were stated, and, furthermore, that I should be unwilling to submit them to the President.

After some further conversation, in which you repeated that the propositions were merely the basis upon which a discussion might be instituted, I replied that in any event I had not a moment to give to the subject until after the adjournment of Congress in March, but that after that date I would be willing to respond to your request "to have a full but private conference with the British Minister, and one or more agents from Canada, and go over every point of difference, and consider every subject upon which a mutual interest could be founded.

"If an agreement is reached, all well; if not, no official mention is to be made of the effort.

"Above all things, it is important to avoid public reference to the matter.

"This the President will insist upon."

While no notes were exchanged between us I carefully minuted my modification of the paper you left with me containing Lord Salisbury's proposition, and did so immediately after you left the department. You will observe the private character which I wished to impart to the conference is recognized by you a month later in your note of 27th January, when you called the correspondence "confidential."

In view of the fact that you had come to the State Department with the proposals, and that the subject was then for the first time mentioned between us—

Not a proposition from Mr. Blaine, but Sir Julian Pauncefote had come to the State Department with the proposal, and the subject was then for the first time mentioned between them.

—and in view of the further fact that I agreed to a private conference as explained in my minute. I confess that it was a surprise to me when several weeks later during the Canadian canvass, Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper both stated before public assemblages that an informal discussion of a reciprocity treaty would take place at Washington after the 4th of March, by the initiation of the Secretary of State.

I detail these facts because I deem it important, since the matter has been for some weeks open to public remark, to have it settled that the conference was not "initiated" by me, but on the contrary that the private arrangement of which I spoke was but a modification of your proposal and in no sense an original suggestion from the Government of the United States.

With this explanation it only remains for me to say that gentlemen representing the Dominion of Canada and proposing to discuss the commercial relations of the two countries may be assured of a courteous and cordial reception in Washington by the Government of the United States.

There is the statement of Mr. Blaine, a most explicit statement, and a most damaging statement to the Canadian Government, if that statement is true. Is there any confirmation of that statement? Let us see if there is any mention made of the statement by any of the parties interested. Sir Charles Tupper, Mr. Foster, Mr. Bowell and Sir John Thompson went to Washington, and this letter from the Secretary of State of the United States to Sir Julian Pauncefote was laid before Sir Charles Tupper. And what did Sir Charles say about it? In his communication to Sir John Macdonald, 21st April, 1891, Sessional Papers, 1891, volume 24, No. 38, page 67, he says:

I told Mr. Blaine in reference to these charges, that I wished at the outset to recognize the accuracy of the statements contained in his letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote, which I had sent in reference to the initiation of the negotiations regarding the reciprocity arrangements between the two countries.

That is what Sir Charles Tupper told the Hon. Mr. Blaine: That he wished to recognize and acknowledge the accuracy of this statement made in Mr. Blaine's letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote. That was simply an acknowledgment on the part of Sir Charles Tupper, that he and that Sir John Macdonald and that every party interested in that negotiation on behalf of Canada, had been guilty of duplicity, had been guilty of a breach of confidence in placing these facts before the people of Canada, contrary to their expressed pledges, and contrary to the arrangements made with Secretary Blaine; and in addition to that, they had made false representations, because they had stated that the negotiations were initiated by the Washington authorities, when the express declaration of Mr. Blaine, which was sanctioned and confirmed by Sir Charles Tupper, was: That these negotiations had been initiated by Sir Julian Pauncefote, and that for the first time they had been referred to, when he called upon Mr. Blaine in reference to the matter.

Now, let us see, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any other evidence upon this point. I have here a Minute of Council, passed on 18th December, 1890, which will be found in Sessional Papers for 1891, vol. 24, No. 38, page 13:

REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on the 18th December, 1890.

The Committee of the Privy Council having learned that the Honourable the Secretary of State for the United States had expressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington his readiness to negotiate for a reciprocity treaty on a wide basis, and particularly for the protection of the mackerel fisheries, and for the fisheries on inland waters, and had subsequently stated to Her Majesty's Minister his great desire to conclude a reciprocity treaty, they desire to take the opportunity afforded by these intimations from Mr. Blaine of suggesting the expediency of taking early steps to adjust the various matters that have arisen and now exist affecting the relations of Canada with the United States, or rather the relations between the Government of the United States and that of the United Kingdom on questions affecting Canada.

The most obvious means of carrying this object into effect, would be the appointment of a Joint Commission as in 1871.

The Committee of Council desire to suggest that such commission should be authorized to deal with all such questions without limitation as to range of discussion, and to prepare a treaty or convention as to such of those matters as they may come to an agreement upon.

The principal subjects for discussion would appear to be:—

1. The renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, subject to such modifications as the altered circumstances of both countries require, and to such extensions as the commission may deem to be in the interest of the United States and Canada.

2. The reconsideration of the treaty of 1888 respecting the Atlantic fisheries, with the view of effecting the free admission of Canadian fishery products into the markets of the United States in exchange for facilities for United States fishermen to purchase bait and supplies, and transship cargoes in Canada. All such privileges to be mutual.

3. The protection of the mackerel and other fisheries on the Atlantic Ocean and on the inland waters.

4. The relaxation of the coasting laws of both countries on the sea-board.

5. The relaxation of the coasting laws of both countries on inland waters between the United States and Canada.

6. The mutual salvage and saving of wrecked vessels.

7. Arrangements for the delimitation of boundary between Alaska and Canada.

Such treaty to be, of course, ad referendum.

The Committee respectfully submit this minute for His Excellency's sanction.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk, Privy Council.

To the Honourable

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir, here is a formal Minute, which repeats the assertion which Mr. Blaine denies, namely, that the Washington authorities had stated to Her Majesty's Minister their great desire to conclude a reciprocity treaty with Canada, while the truth was, that Sir Julian Pauncefote, under the direction of his Government, prompted by representations from Ottawa, had himself gone to the Hon. J. G. Blaine and had initiated the proceedings, by proposing to open negotiations for reciprocity, and Mr. Blaine had told him then and there that it was useless to submit a proposal for a reciprocity treaty on the basis of the treaty of 1854, that, in fact, he would not submit such a proposal to the President at all, but that a private conference could be held to see if some common basis for agreement as to their views might be arrived at; and that statement made by Mr. Blaine, which is directly contrary to the affirmation of this Minute in Council and to the statement made by the Ministers upon the hustings, was afterwards confirmed by Sir Charles Tupper at Washington. When the letter of Mr. Blaine to Sir Julian Pauncefote was brought to his notice, he acknowledged that the statements of Mr. Blaine were true, and that he had been guilty of a breach of confidence and that Sir John Macdonald, as well, had been guilty of making statements which were not warranted by the facts. Now, Sir, I come to the consideration of statements made by the Minister of Finance. On the 11th December, 1892, the Minister of Finance granted to a newspaper (the "Empire") reporter an interview with reference to the Message of the President of the United States, and in that interview the Minister of Finance made this statement:

I need not say that it causes surprise and regret—surprise at the nature of some of the statements made, and regret at the unfriendly tone adopted towards Canada. The statement that Canada was only prepared to offer to the United States the admission of natural products is not full enough to convey an accurate idea of what took place. The Canadian representatives asked those of the United States if they were prepared to consider an arrangement on the basis of free admission of the natural products of both countries, as in the treaty of 1854, with such enlargements and modifications as the changed conditions of the two countries made necessary. The reply was a negative. With a view, then, to clear the ground for arrangement ~~wider~~ than that, if such could be done, Mr. Blaine was asked as to certain conditions of a possibly wider arrangement, among others, whether the United States would insist upon a uniform tariff and would demand preferential treatment in our markets as against British and foreign goods. The answer was that a uniform tariff would be necessary and that, too, on the line of the present United States tariff, and that the United States could admit of no arrangements which did not give United States goods favoured treatment as against foreign goods, especially those of Great Britain, who was their chief competitor. To these propositions the Canadian representatives declined to agree. The conference then broke off so far as regarded the consideration of the commercial question. What the conference plainly developed was that the Canadian Government considered the practical surrender of its fiscal powers and absolute discrimination against Great Britain, with all that this involved, as too high a price to pay for any advantage which might accrue from a possible treaty.

Here is a distinct assertion made by the Minister of Finance, that the United States authorities required as a preliminary, as a condition to a reciprocity treaty, a uniform tariff, and that, too, on the lines of the present United States tariff. That was the assertion made by the Minister of Finance in this interview on 11th December. Now, this interview was brought to the attention of Secretary of State Foster at Washington on the following day, and he reviews all the points taken up in the interview. I shall only refer to those matters relating to reciprocity. In his review with reference to the reciprocity negotiations, Secretary Foster of Washington says:

During the reciprocity conference of last winter, Mr. Blaine did not insist that in a reciprocity arrangement a uniform tariff would be necessary for both Canada and the United States, nor much less, that it should be on the lines of the present United States tariff. He did ask that the schedule should not be confined to natural products, but should include an agreed list [not an unlimited list, but an agreed list] of manufactured goods, and that the reciprocity should be confined to Canada and the United States; and because of these two conditions the negotiations were fruitless.

Now, here is a direct issue between the Minister and the Secretary. If Secretary Foster of the United States is right, Minister Foster of Canada is wrong; if Minister Foster of Canada is right, Secretary Foster of the United States is wrong; one or the other is mistaken. There may be an intentional misrepresentation; there may be merely a misunderstanding. I think I will be able to show that the probability is that there is merely a misunderstanding. The difference is an unfortunate one. It is greatly to be regretted that some record of the proceedings of that conference, attested by both parties, was not published. Then there could have been no question of fact or veracity, and no doubt as to the truthfulness of the record. There is one thing, perhaps, that might militate against Secretary Foster of the United States, in the estimation of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. Secretary Foster is a Presbyterian elder, and I believe the Minister of Finance is not, and has a great dislike to them. This fact may, in the estimation of the Minister of Finance, make Secretary Foster an untrustworthy witness. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to make an extract from the correspondence published and laid on the Table of this House on the 7th day of March—the official statement of the Canadian Government relating to the negotiations which took place at Washington with reference to reciprocity; and I think I will be able to establish that the difference in regard to a uniform tariff on the lines of the United States tariff arose very naturally, and was probably simply a misunderstanding, and nothing more. This report says:

Mr. Foster went on to say that a third question arose at this point which was in its way not less important than the two already discussed; namely, granted that discrimination in favour of United States manufactures in the Canadian market was necessary, how should the standard of discrimination be fixed, and what should be its degree? Would the Canadian tariff have to be raised to an equality with that of the United States tariff upon these articles, or would the present Canadian tariff be accepted as sufficient, or would Canada be at liberty to fix the rate as and when she pleased, provided that the principle of discrimination were always maintained? He took the items of woollens and wool, and illustrated the above point by a comparison of tariffs on these in the two countries.

Mr. Blaine said that this was a vital point; that under the existing tariffs on wools and woollens in the two countries, a reciprocity such as he (Mr. Foster) contemplated would result in manifest disadvantage to the United States, whose policy was one of large protection on wools as well as woollens. Unless such points were guarded there would be no security on the one hand from smuggling along a border line of over 3,000 miles in length, or on the other of maintaining the present policy of the United States. This could, in his opinion, only be done by making the tariff uniform for both countries, and equalizing the Canadian with that of the United States.

Now, the mistake which the Minister of Finance has fallen into in connection with this matter is probably this: Mr. Blaine asserted that it would be necessary, with reference to wool and woollens, to make the tariff of the two countries uniform, and Mr. Foster accepted that assertion as applying to the entire tariff system of both countries. Now, why should Mr. Blaine raise this point as to the necessity of having a uniform tariff on wool and woollens? It is very manifest. The United States has a duty on wool of 10 cents a pound, while Canada admits wool free. If the woollen manufactures of these two countries under a reciprocity treaty were to pass interchangeably free of duty, it is evident that the Canadian manufacturer would have a vast advantage. He would be placing in the market of the United States goods made from free wool, while the American manufacturer would be obliged to compete with him in the markets of the two countries with goods made from wool charged with a duty of 10 cents a pound; and Mr. Blaine simply pointed out to Mr. Foster that it was necessary, in regard to wool and woollens, to have a uniform tariff. Either the United States should place wool on the free list or Canada should place wool on the dutiable list at the same rate as the United States. The necessity of this was obvious. You could not have reciprocity in wool and woollens unless both nations stood on the same footing with regard to the cost of their raw material. The same rule would be necessary with reference to the excise laws of the two countries. If whiskey, beer and tobacco were interchanged free of duty between the two countries, there must be the same excise laws in both; otherwise the two nations would not be on the same footing. This would be necessary in regard to any manufactured article made from imported raw material. If that raw material were admitted into one country free and taxed in the other, the two nations would not be on the same footing; and this is what Mr. Blaine unquestionably meant when he talked about a uniform tariff. If the hon. gentleman is willing to accept this explanation, it will settle the difficulty, and reconcile the difference between the two parties. He will simply have to say that he was under a misapprehension as to the scope of Mr. Blaine's reference to a uniform tariff, which was restricted instead of being unlimited, as he had supposed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to a communication placed by Mr. Blaine in the hands of the President with regard to these reciprocity negotiations. I have read that portion of the statement of the Canadian commissioners which bears on this case. I will now read Mr. Blaine's statement, but before doing so, I wish to speculate a little as to the possibility of our Finance Minister making a mistake. Of course if he is in any sense or to any degree infallible, we will have to accept his word without question, but I may, perhaps, refer to one or two circumstances for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was ever known to make really glaring mistakes, and a mistake in his own department on a matter concerning which he ought to be thoroughly informed. I was looking over the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman at Petrolea on the 7th September last, where, speaking of our public debt, the hon. gentleman used the following language :—

The Opposition claimed that the Government of Canada was rolling up a debt. He would deal with that point. In 1889 the debt of the country was $237,000,000, in 1890 it was $237,000,000, in 1891 it was $237,000,000, and in 1892 it was $236,000,000. How was that for heaping up the debt? For four years the debt of the Dominion was not increased one dollar.

Now, that was the assertion of the Finance Minister, made on the 7th September. What does the blue-book show? According to the report of his own department, the net public debt on the 30th June, 1892, amounted to $241,131,000, and the monthly return made the 31st August, just seven days before he made the statement, showed that the public debt of Canada amounted on that day to $241,035,000; yet the hon. gentleman stated at Petrolea that the returns of the 30th June and the 31st August from his own department, with which he ought to have been familiar, showed a net debt of only $236,000,000. He made a misstatement of about $5,000,000. That, I think, settles the question of the hon. gentleman's infallibility. And I am afraid, after this evidence of financial weakness on his part, there may be something in the charge that he was equally subject to diplomatic weakness in the statement he made concerning the diplomatic conferences at Washington.

I propose to call attention to Mr. Blaine's official statement, contained in Executive document No. 14 of the 52nd Congress, 1st Session, made to the United States Senate. This communication was transmitted in a message from President Harrison, and President Harrison, in referring to the matter, says as follows :—

The result of the conference as to the practicability of arranging a reciprocity treaty with the Dominion of Canada, is clearly stated in the letter of Mr. Blaine, and was anticipated, I think, by him and by every other thoughtful American who had considered the subject. A reciprocity treaty limited to the exchange of natural products would have been such only in form. The benefits of such a treaty would have inured almost wholly to Canada. Previous experiments on this line had been unsatisfactory to this Government. A treaty that should be reciprocal in fact, and of mutual advantage, must necessarily have embraced an important list of manufactured articles, and have secured to the United States a free or favoured introduction of these articles into Canada as against the world; but it was not believed that the Canadian Ministry was ready to propose or assent to such an arrangement. The conclusion of the Canadian commissioners is stated in the report of Mr. Blaine as follows :—

“In the second place it seemed to be impossible for the Canadian Government, in view of its present political relations and obligations, to extend to American goods a preferential treatment over those of other countries. As Canada was a part of the British Empire, they did not consider it competent for the Dominion Government to enter into any commercial arrangement with the United States, from the benefits of which Great Britain and its colonies should be excluded.”

Mr. CHARLTON.

It is not for this Government to argue against this announcement of Canadian official opinion. It must be accepted, however, I think, as the statement of a condition which places an insuperable barrier in the way of the attainment of that large and beneficial intercourse and reciprocal trade which might otherwise be developed between the United States and the Dominion.

And Mr. Blaine, in his communication, says :

This fact—that is, the fact that there was reciprocity negotiations in progress between Newfoundland and the United States.

This fact having come to the attention of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, a strong protest was forwarded by it to the British Government against the ratification of the action of the colonial minister of Newfoundland, and this was followed, in December, 1890, by a proposition initiated and made to me by the British Minister in Washington,— for the opening of formal negotiations in this copy for a treaty embracing commercial reciprocity with Canada, the fisheries, and other unsettled questions with the Dominion Government. I declined to open formal negotiations, but stated that I would be willing to have a full and private conference with the British Minister and one or more agents of Canada, and consider with them every subject connected with the relations of the two countries upon which a mutual interest could be founded, with a view to formal negotiations should the proposed conference indicate a probability of agreement on any of the subjects discussed. This basis was accepted by the British Minister and the Dominion Government, but for various reasons of convenience to the members of the proposed conference it did not take place until 10th February, when the British Minister presented to me, at the Department of State, Sir John Thompson, Minister of Justice, Hon. George E. Foster, Minister of Finance, and Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, Minister of Customs, as commissioners on the part of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, to participate with him in the conference.

Not a proposition initiated by Mr. Blaine :

At the first conference, on 10th February, the commissioner stated that they were authorized by the Canadian Government to propose the renewal of the reciprocity treaty of 1854 (which was terminated in 1866 by the action of the Congress of the United States), with such modifications and extensions as the altered circumstances of both countries and their respective interests might seem to require.

I have often been curious to know what was meant by this extension and modification of the reciprocity treaty of 1854. I did expect at times that the Government would claim they meant that they were willing to go beyond natural products, and the language perhaps would have borne them out in that assertion. I do not think that I ever heard the assertion made; but expected at times that it would be made, as the ambiguity of the language left room for doubt. Mr. Blaine throws light on the subject. He seems to have been troubled also with a little curiosity on the subject, and he says :

In answer to an inquiry, the commissioners stated that the modifications or extensions contemplated in the schedules of articles should be confined to natural products and should not embrace manufactured articles.

So that settles our Finance Minister's meaning on that point :

The commissioners were informed that the Government of the United States would not be prepared to renew the treaty of 1854 nor to agree upon any commercial reciprocity which should be confined to natural products alone ; and that, in view of the great development of industrial interests of the United States and of the changed conditions of the commercial relations of the two countries since the treaty of 1854 was negotiated, it was regarded of essential importance that a list of manufactured goods should be included in the schedules of articles for free or favoured exchange in any reciprocity arrangement which might be made.

The commissioners then inquired if the Government of the United States would expect to have preferential treatment extended to the list of manufactured goods of the United States on their introduction into Canada by virtue of a reciprocity treaty, or whether it would regard the Canadian Government as at liberty to extend the same favours to the manufactured goods of other countries not parties to the treaty on their introduction into Canada.

The reply given them was that it was the desire of the Government of the United States to make a reciprocity convention which would be exclusive in its application to the United States and Canada, and that other countries which are not parties to it should not enjoy gratuitously the favours which the two neighbouring countries might reciprocally concede to each other for valuable considerations and at a large sacrifice of their respective revenues.

Upon receiving this reply, the Canadian commissioners asked that the further consideration of the subject be adjourned till another conference, to enable them to consult as to the course which they would adopt in view of the foregoing declaration.

In the conference of the 11th the Canadian commissioners stated that they had given careful consideration to the suggestion that manufactured goods should be included in the schedules of articles for exchange in a reciprocity convention, and to the desire expressed by the Government of the United States that such American goods on their introduction into Canada should be accorded preferential treatment over similar goods from other countries ; and they announced, with an expression of regret, that they did not consider it possible to meet the expectations of the Government of the United States in these respects. In the first place they encountered a serious obstacle in the matter of revenue. If any considerable list of manufactured goods of the United States should be admitted free into Canada, it would entail a material loss to the Dominion Treasury, and if the same favours were likewise extended to the merchandise of other countries the loss of revenue would be much greater. They felt that they would not be able to recoup these losses by other methods of taxation. In the second place, it seemed to be impossible for the Canadian Government, in view of its present political relations and obligations, to extend to American goods a preferential treatment over those of other countries. As Canada was a part of the British Empire, they did not consider it competent for the Dominion Government to enter into any commercial arrangement with the United States, from the benefits of which Great Britain and its colonies should be excluded.

The announcement of these conclusions of the Canadian commissioners was accepted as a bar to further negotiations on this subject, and it was not again discussed, except in connection with the fishing privileges on the Atlantic coast.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is evident from the documents I have presented to the House, emanating from American authorities, that the general assimilation of the tariffs of the two countries was not proposed, that it was not deemed necessary. It is further evident from these documents that the American authorities at Washington were prepared to enter upon reciprocity negotiations, not upon the basis of unrestricted, but upon the basis of partial, reciprocity in goods. Mr. Blaine said to the commissioners, according to his own statement and according to the statement of Secretary Foster, that if the natural products of Canada were to be admitted free into the markets of the United States, the United States would require from Canada the concession of corresponding privileges, that they would require from Canada the admission into the Canadian markets, not of an unlimited variety of the manufactures of the United States, but a list of manufactured goods to be agreed upon, and he invited a proposal from the Canadian commissioners as to what list of manufactured goods they would be willing to concede. He invited their proposals intimating that he was ready to treat. He did not lay down the ultimatum ; he did not say : We must have admitted into the Canadian markets all the manufactured articles of the United States. He invited them to make proposals, and said it would be necessary to have a list of manufactured goods, etc. ; from all we can gather from the language of Mr. Blaine that list might have been an extensive one or it might be a restricted one. I believe it was possible for the commissioners of Canada to have secured a treaty at that time by the suggestion of a list of manufactured goods, little, if any, more extensive than the list embraced in the Brown draft treaty. And I repeat that they might have suggested a list of goods to be admitted free from the United States which could have received preferential treatment in the markets of Canada without great injury to British trade in this country. We import a great variety of articles from the United States almost exclusively. We import coal oil, barbed wire, agricultural implements, locomotives, cars, steam threshers, axes, spades and a great variety of tools and other manufactures, and we could have suggested an extensive list of manufactured goods. If the commissioners had acted upon the suggestion and invitation of Mr. Blaine and had proposed that list to him for his consideration, we could then have known whether we could have obtained a reciprocity treaty on terms admissible or favourable to this country or not. But the commissioners refused to open negotiations at all ; they refused to adopt a single diplomatic expedient. They said in effect : Here are our terms ; admit our raw materials free of duty or throw up the negotiation, as you please. That was the best possible way of securing the defeat of the purpose they professed to have in view when they visited Washington. Sir, I assert, as I have asserted repeatedly before, that we can get a reciprocity treaty with the United States upon fair and equitable terms. The Government could have had it upon favourable terms, even from the Republican Administration at Washington, and still better opportunities are afforded now that the Democratic Administration is in power. I repeat that the Government trifled with the interests of this country, they deceived the people of the country, they went to Washington, not to get a treaty, but to make a treaty impossible. They did not want a treaty. They made such proposals as they knew would defeat reciprocity; they did it deliberately, with malice aforethought, without any intention, desire or hope of getting a treaty, and they spurned the proposition made by the American authorities, the reasonable proposition, inviting them to make a proposal. The American authorities said: We are ready to open negotiations; let us talk this matter over; let us see how far you would go in admitting our manufactures free into your country; suggest a list of goods and let us talk it over and see about it. But our representatives said: "No; we suggest no list; we will not admit into Canada a single article of your manufactured goods; we demand as an ultimatum that you shall accede to our terms holus bolus, or we will throw up the negotiations." Then the Minister comes back here with what Mr. Blaine said with regard to the difficulty as to wool and woollens; pointing out to him, according to his own statement, that it would be necessary to have a uniform tariff on wool and woollens; that it would not do to have Canada admitting wool free and the United States charging 10 cents per pound, and then exchanging goods manufactured from wool on a free trade basis; and when Mr. Blaine pointed out this and said there should be a uniform tariff in reference to wool and woollens our representatives come back and say that Mr. Blaine demanded a uniform tariff for the whole list, and that upon the lines of the American tariff. The assertion is absurd, especially in view of Mr. Blaine's express declaration that it is not true, and Secretary Foster's declaration that it is not true, together with the internal evidence contained in Minister Foster's report. It seems the most natural thing in the world that the difficulty between the parties is explained by the discovery that Mr. Blaine referred to a single article and that Minister Foster supposed his reference was to all articles. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that I believe the question of veracity is obviated. It was a most distressing and unfortunate position of things to have the Secretary of State of the United States, who is dead, and the Secretary of State of the United States who succeeded that great Secretary, Mr. Blaine, making a statement diametrically and exactly and positively opposite to the statement made by the gentlemen who sit on the Treasury-benches in this House. I am glad to have a loophole through which we can see how to reconcile the differences and to establish the fact that that difficulty rests upon a misunderstanding on the part of Minister Foster and his colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, we shall have this reciprocity treaty discussed again. The issue is not dead; the necessity of obtaining reciprocity has not ceased, the need of this country for a wider market and for its natural market is as great as ever; the people of Canada are as desirous of obtaining reciprocity as they ever were. The people have been misled; they have been led to suppose that difficulties existed surrounding this question, difficulties of an insuperable character, while, upon close investigation, we find that these difficulties vanish away. There is no difficulty in obtaining a reciprocity treaty with the United States in my opinion, but we cannot have it all our own way. We cannot have the reciprocity treaty of 1854, which worked so greatly to our advantage that we exported $2 worth of goods free of duty that formerly bore a duty, where we imported $1 worth from the United States formerly dutiable. We cannot expect to have a reciprocity treaty exclusively in our own interest. If we are to sell the United States untold millions of the natural products of this country, if we are to secure that trade which will increase millions upon millions annually, we have got to give something in consideration for the advantage; we have got to make a reciprocity treaty, and a reciprocity treaty means a mutually advantageous treaty, where the advantages are reciprocal between the contracting parties. If we obtain access to that market, we have got to give them access to some extent to our market, and it should be the care of the Government to ascertain if that can be done; when invited to make a proposition they should be ready to make one; they should endeavour to secure a treaty. They did not endeavour to do that in 1891 and in 1892; they made no effort to get a treaty; their whole course warrants me in asserting that they did not desire to make a treaty. That was not their object when they went to Washington. Their purpose was to deceive the country during the elections, in order to deprive the Liberal party of the advantage that an appeal to the country in favour of reciprocity, would naturally give them. Their object was to deceive the people, to make them believe that the Conservative party were as favourable to reciprocity and as likely to obtain it, as the Liberals were. Then, when they obtained power, they went to Washington ostensibly to carry out the purposes they professed to have in view, but actually to block the road to obtaining reciprocity, and they did do this by making proposals that were not admissible, asking for things that were unattainable; and they came back to the people of this country professing to have met difficulties that did not exist, and now they are discredited as to their truthfulness and their honesty towards the people, by the revelation of facts that has subsequently been made.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Finance Minister speaks, I want to call his attention to one or two subjects that I hope he will deal with when we go into committee on this Bill. Knowing how anxious the House is for pro-rogation, I shall be very brief. I shall appeal to him as a gentleman who has occupied one of the most important positions that one can occupy, namely, that of a professor in a university. The item of the tariff, Departmental No. 760, and Act 245 C, reads as follows:—

Books specially imported for the bona fide use of free libraries, not more than two copies of one book, bound or unbound, which have been printed or manufactured more than twenty years.

Now, I would call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to the fact that this item works very harshly in regard to students engaged in the higher studies at preparatory schools, and in universities and colleges. As my hon. friend the Finance Minister knows, a classical book, an edition of a classic prepared for schools or universities over twenty years ago, is useless to-day. Any man engaging in the higher studies wishes to confine himself to the very best editions. Take Anthon's Horace, or Anthon's Homer, or any of the best books with which we are familiar. When my contemporaries were at school they studied these books, but they would be very ignorant men at the present day. The discoveries of Schleiman, the discoveries of the great university critics, have revolutionized classical criticism as much as the inventions of inventors have revolutionized the world of science. It would, I think, be quite out of keeping that I should enforce this proposition by illustrations when speaking in a practical and busy assembly like this. But, Sir, I think that probably my hon. friend will take my statement, and, in fact, he must be familiar with the facts himself. This item works harshly to our young men who are going in for the higher studies. They are nearly all poor young men, and yet they have to pay the duty on the best classical books. Now, what I shall propose when we go into committee, I bring forward now in this Ways and Means debate, because I think that probably I shall not have an equally favourable opportunity of calling the Minister's attention to it again. When we get into committee, I shall move to substitute the following for the clause I read:—

Books specially imported for the bona fide use of public free libraries—not less than two copies of any one book, and books bound or unbound, which have been printed and manufactured more than twenty years ago, and books of criticism on the Greek, Latin, Hebrew and Sanscrit literatures, or kindred literatures derived from these, and books relating to archæology, philology and the mathematical, metaphysical, physical, chemical, geological and biological sciences.

Mr. FOSTER. What have you left?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, very little. Now, I want to point out to the Minister this anomaly: pictures, the great works of the pictorial art, are admitted free, although we know very well that persons who import these works of art are gentlemen like the hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith), great millionaires. It is a very beautiful peculiarity of the millionaire on this continent that when he becomes rich he becomes a connoisseur of pictures. It is one of the most beautiful results of the increase of wealth, that as a man's balance at his banker's increases, his aesthetic perception of the higher art increases accordingly. I say that that is a providential arrangement for which we may be very thankful, for the result is that pictures of the highest art are brought in. I believe it adds to the value of the picture that it should be expensive for these gentlemen, and we might as well get the duty. It would add greatly to the value of the picture if we put 25 per cent more on the fancy price that they have to pay now, for a great work of Correggio or Raphael, or any other of the great painters. But to charge this duty to the poor classical students who have very little money is doubly wrong. First, we ought not to charge them at all; but charging them as we do we infallibly relegate them to the study of obsolete books. I will just mention, as there are classical scholars listening to me, one fact by way of illustration. Two or three years ago, I think, Mr. Verrall published an edition of the Agamemnon of Eschylus. Prior to the publication of that book, the idea that prevailed in every university in Europe concerning the plot of this work, contained absolutely ludicrous and incredible elements. Mr. Verrall has scattered that completely to the winds, and he has shown that there was no large credulity demanded of an Athenian audience by the dramatist, who knew that critical audience so well. Now, that is one of the things in regard to which, when we get into Committee of the Whole, I shall ask the hon. Finance Minister whether he will not take off the duty. I hope he will consent to have the duty on agricultural implements lowered. I think if he will do that, it will be a great thing. I shall ask him to lower the duty on barbed wire from 1½ cents a pound to, say ½ a cent a pound; a ¼ of a cent a pound would be better. I have a number of resolutions here that I would certainly move in committee if it were not that the House is hurrying to pro-rogation. I may mention, however, that one of the things to which I intended to call my hon. friend's attention was the protection of the farmers in regard to pork. The Government is under a complete delusion in regard to the protection afforded to our farmers on pork. No doubt the Minister of Finance thinks he has given the farmers a great deal more protection than they really enjoy. I will tell the hon. gentleman why. The item, barrelled pork, reads as follows:—

Barrelled pork in brine, made from the sides of heavy hogs after the hams and shoulders are cut off, and containing not more than sixteen pieces to the barrel of 200 pounds weight, 1½ cents per pound, the barrel containing the same to be free of duty.

What has happened in regard to this item? I do not think the Minister of Finance knows. The importing merchant has cut the pieces small, and sold that imported pork as if it were Canadian pork; and the consequence is that if you go in to protect the farmer at all you must give him more protection than is given under the tariff in regard to pork. I had intended to deal further with this subject; to speak on coal oil, sugar and cotton; but I fear if I were to draw too much on the good feeling of the House and of the Minister of Finance I might effect nothing. I hope that in regard to books especially, my suggestion will be considered. I have received letters from the presidents and professors of some of the universities throughout the country, and while it would naturally have escaped those hon. gentlemen, the predecessors of my hon. friend, yet the Minister of Finance has not any excuse, for he has had the means of knowing the great advantage to a man's education of classical erudition. Let the hon. gentleman, at all events, consider my suggestions in regard to books and barbed wire. In speaking at a previous period of the Ways and Means debate and on this tariff matter, I laid down the proposition that we should be placed in the position that if we made suggestions to the hon. Minister of Finance after he made his financial statement, he ought to be in a position to listen to us and act on our suggestions; whereas, the theory that obtains here is this: when the Minister of Finance has made his financial statement, it is a hard, iron wall, and there must be no breaking down and no bending in it whatever. I alluded at that time—and I ask hon. members to bear with me for a few moments, for I will be very brief—to a debate that took place in the English House of Commons in 1851. Lord Naas moved to reduce the duty on home-made spirits in bond. A discussion took place, and the Government were beaten. Mr. Roebuck rose and asked what the Government were going to do in regard to what had occurred in the House. He said:

At the commencement of the session we were told that certain things were to be done as to the tariff of this country. The Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave an intimation of what he intended to do.

Mr. Roebuck further stated that he wished to put a question to the noble lord at the head of the Government in regard to the extraordinary circumstances in which the Government of the country were placed. This is what Lord Russell said:

Mr. DAVIN.

I come now to the division which took place on the motion of the hon. member for Montrose (Mr. Hume). I do not consider that that division was of the nature of which the learned gentleman spoke—namely, a division declaring that he meant to take the Government into his own hands. I consider that all those questions of taxation and burdens are questions upon which the House of Commons, representing the country, have peculiar claims to have their opinions listened to, and upon which the Executive Government may very fairly, without any loss of its dignity, provided they maintain a sufficient revenue for the credit of the country and for its establishment, reconsider any particular measures of finance which they have proposed.

And still bearing in mind the suggestion I was presumptuous enough to make to the leader of the House and the Minister of Finance, that in future I would fain hope we might see the practice prevail, which prevailed in England, and which Mr. Gladstone said should always prevail—a statement made in Committee of Ways and Means, and made under circumstances that would not lead to angry discussion, but to friendly conference on the affairs of the country, which we are discussing as though we were a large firm, I will not say a firm in which there are many sleeping partners, but a large firm engaged in discussing important questions affecting the country. When Mr. Gladstone, in 1866, was giving notice of what he would do in regard to finance, he made this statement:

The House will therefore be good enough to understand that I propose on Thursday next, in Committee of Ways and Means to make the usual financial statement, and I will venture to offer an observation on that subject, which is intended entirely for the convenience of the House and which they will please to put in practice according as they see fit. The old and regular practice of the House, until quite recently, was this: That after a financial statement, an opportunity was given to hon. Members of rising in pretty quick succession one after the other, to put questions to the Minister with respect to any point requiring explanation. There was very great convenience in that practice, because it brought the whole matter into a very small compass, and enabled gentlemen to obtain at once whatever information they might desire.

Then the hon. gentleman said what I have indicated did occur. He continued:

Of late years there has been a tendency to substitute for that practice a general debate on the Budget, and the consequence is, that hon. gentlemen have often great difficulty in putting questions which, if they had an opportunity of putting, the whole plan would have gone forth to the country in a more complete and intelligible form.

What I want to call attention to is this—

An hon. MEMBER. Question.

Mr. DAVIN. Who calls out question? Mr. Speaker, I will say this, that it is very important to have a short session; but it is of much more importance to carry on the business of the country, and with the permission of the hon. gentleman, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will attend to the business I have now in hand, and to the business of my constituents. What I want to point out is this: that the whole statement of the case contemplated here by Mr. Gladstone is a statement of the case comprised of the statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer of England plus facts brought out by questions from various parts of the House, from Ministerial members and from members of the Opposition—or, in other words, a presentment of the House itself to the country. On 3rd May, 1866, Mr. Gladstone made his financial statement, and that financial statement, which I have more than once read, and which I had the privilege of hearing, is one of his greatest statements. Here is the way in which he commenced that address. He said:

It will indeed be my duty to enter upon points in the course of the remarks I have to make, which, as I think, possess an interest to all in this House, and especially for those who are connected with the land and fixed property of the country. I hope, however, from the nature of the proposals I have to make, and indeed I feel convinced upon the matter, that it can only be through my own negligence or inadvertence if anything which falls from me should possibly come into conflict with the feeling or opinions of any hon. gentleman opposite.

I say that it is worthy of the attention of the House and of the Government, and especially worthy of the attention of the Minister of Finance, and the financial critic of the Opposition, whether we should not have our financial statement made under conditions that would permit its being discussed away from the heat and disturbing passions of any party conflict. But, Sir, I called attention at an earlier part of these few remarks, especially to the books, the agricultural implements and the barbed wire. I will not refer now to cottons, because I am afraid at this late period of the session to load up too much. I hope my hon. friend the Finance Minister will see his way, and it will be a graceful thing on the part of an ex-university professor, to be the first to get rid of this grievance on the part of classical students.

Mr. BORDEN. Before this Bill to amend the tariff passes its first reading, I desire to ask the Minister of Finance to explain to the House what provision it contains with reference to the transport of coal oil imported into this country, and as to which he promised in his Budget speech there would be an improvement. The hon. Minister used the following words in his financial statement:—

There is, outside of that, a condition imposed upon trade and transport which has the effect of protecting that industry to a large extent, possibly to the extent of 2 cents or 3 cents per gallon, arising from the fact that transport is limited to certain vessels and in certain directions, and that the oil is subject to inspection, of course. This is outside of the straight protection, and what the Government propose to do, and they have thought over this matter very carefully, is to propose to this House that the transport shall be free and that the straight duty shall remain for the present as it is. In that way, the abnormal and heightened protection, so to speak, will be taken away and transport will be left free to modern methods, and at the same time a large, I acknowledge it, and, I hope, a sufficient protection will be left to the industry, enough to serve it for the present at least.

I think that by the term "modern methods," the House understood that the idea was intended to be conveyed, that instead of limiting the importation of coal oil to importation in casks as at present, upon which a large duty is charged as well as a large inspection fee per cask, that there should be freedom to import coal oil in bulk by tank cars or by tank steamers. I have learned however, that it is the intention under this Bill to restrict the importation to tank cars, and that the privilege is not to be extended to tank steamers. My attention was called to this fact by a large firm of wholesale oil merchants in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend's address on this subject, but I just wish to point out that the Controller of Inland Revenue has a Bill in reference to this, which is already printed in English, and which, by the consent of the House, I hope we will be able to take up to-day. Would it not be better for the hon. gentleman to defer the discussion on this subject until we come to the Bill, just for the sake of getting through the business?

Mr. BORDEN. I think what I have to say is much more germane to the Bill now before us, and I shall detain the House very briefly indeed. The statement made to me is this: That so far as the Maritime provinces are concerned, if the importation of oil in bulk is restricted to tank cars, the advantage proposed to be given will be really no advantage whatever; that owing to the long distance from the point at which the oil is refined in the United States, the cost of bringing the oil by tank cars will be as great as the present cost of importing it in casks, after the duty is paid and the high inspection fee charged. There is no question but that the natural route for importing goods into the Maritime provinces is by water, and there seems to be no good reason, if these restrictions are to be relaxed in reference to coal oil, why the same methods should not be permitted in the importation of coal oil as are permitted with reference to other goods. That is to say, that the people of the Maritime provinces shall have the privilege of importing coal oil in bulk by water, just as they have the privilege now of importing all kinds of goods by water from the United States. It is also pointed out that the restriction against importing oil in tank steamers will be a direct discrimination against the Maritime provinces in favour of the larger provinces, and that the effect of the so-called promised reduction in the price of coal oil to the consumers in the Maritime provinces, as proposed by the hon. gentleman in his Budget speech, will be nullified. The consumers in the Maritime provinces would not benefit in the slightest degree by this proposed relaxation in the mode of transporting coal oil, if it is not allowed to be imported in tank steamers. What possible reason can there be for restricting the importation to tank cars, unless it be for the purpose of discriminating in favour of the railways? Now, as I understood the hon. gentleman's Budget speech, it was that the people of this country should be relieved to a certain extent of the admittedly too high tax imposed upon coal oil, and that that relief should not be limited to any particular portion of the Dominion, but should be extended to all Canada. If that could be done by the importation of oil in tank cars, well and good, but it seems to me, from the facts that I have stated, that, so far as the Maritime provinces are concerned, they will be denied the promised benefit. One word with reference to the relative quantities of coal oil imported into the Maritime provinces and into the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I desire to point out to the House that for every gallon of coal oil imported into the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, per head of the population, there are two and a half gallons of coal oil imported into the Maritime provinces per head of the population, and, therefore, at this moment, there is a direct discrimination against the people of the Maritime provinces with reference to the tax collected upon coal oil in this country. If the representations that are made to me, and of which I have given an outline, are correct, it is now proposed by the Government that that portion of the Dominion which imports two and a half times per head more of coal oil, and therefore pays two and a half times more per head into the Treasury than the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, shall be denied relief under the proposal now made to this House. I might point out also, in regard to binder twine, the only other article in which it is proposed to give any relief to the people of this country, that the Maritime provinces do not participate, in the slightest degree, in the proposed benefit, because they do not use binder twine. Their methods of farming are such that it is not necessary for them to use it. Therefore, if it be a fact that the people of the Maritime provinces are to be denied the privilege of importing coal oil in tank steamers, and not using binder twine, it would seem that the proposed relief from taxation, small as it is, will not benefit them in the slightest particular. I desire, as I said in opening, to get from the hon. Minister a statement as to what provisions are to be made with reference to a relaxation of the provisions as to the importation of coal oil.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it would be best to enter into a discussion of that question at the present time, inasmuch as it forms the subject of a Bill which will be reached in a few hours, and upon which the whole question can be discussed. The provisions of that Bill show what is intended. With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I do not propose, at this late hour of the session, to weary the House by making a formal reply. His assertions have been strong. His imputations of bad faith and deception have been reiterated. My own position has already been stated to the House; the documents have been brought down; and I am quite willing to let my statement and those documents go to the country together, and leave the country to judge. After the dog days are over, and we shall have received the benefits of our invigorating autumn climate and come back here next session, there may be some hours to devote to this very interesting topic. As to my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), he is always reminiscent and always persuasive. He never fails to attack me on my weak point, and I was almost on the point of yielding when he went back and called up the classic ages and initiated me once more into the delights of my student days. I resisted the temptation, however, and all I can say to my hon. friend is that whilst the matters he has mentioned shall have the closest attention of the Government, I think the policy of the Government has been pretty well decided upon; so that all these matters, except those dealt with in the tariff Bill now before the House, will have to form part of the general question, and, if action is taken upon them, part of the general tariff which we hope to bring down next year. I would not like to go into new matters at this stage of the session; and, without saying that my sympathies do not go very much in the direction stated, I merely wish to put in the disclaimer as to whether, at this time of the session, it is possible for us to enlarge the scope of the tariff changes which have been made.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Speaker, it was not my fortune to be present in the House, except for a short time, on the evening when the subject of discussion between the hon. Minister of Finance and my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was brought up, and, therefore, I was forced to refer to the newspapers to ascertain what happened, and when I read an account of the scene in one of the leading journals of the country, given by its correspondent at the capital—who, of course, in order to maintain his reputation for the descriptions he gives of the proceedings in the House, would be careful not to speak in extravagant terms—I have been led to wonder what has shorn the Finance Minister of his strength in not attempting to reply to my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Having read what took place on the previous occasion, I was prepared for an effort on the part of the Finance Minister to-day. I find that one of the correspondents, viewing the scene from above, calmly and impartially, we will suppose, and careful of his reputation in describing it, was forced to refer to it in words like these :

I have never before seen a member of the Government, in reply, so thoroughly use up, so utterly paralyze, so completely jump on, drag out and whip both the leader and his chief followers, as was done to-night.

Well, that was not all. He took up the members of the Opposition in detail. In his reference to the leader of the Opposition, we are told :

No greater speech was ever made in the House of Commons than that of the Finance Minister in following the leader of the Opposition. A more thorough rejoinder could not possibly be conceived. He, too, struck straight from the shoulder, but his blows were those of a giant in debate as compared with a fledgling. He aptly characterized the Opposition leader's speech as a miserable apology for unrestricted reciprocity, upon which he and his party had been defeated before, and upon which they would be defeated again. He fairly scorned his opponent when he compared the breadth and width of his free trade utterances at Hamilton and Toronto to the smallness of his policy to-night. He took up every point of Mr. Laurier's address—some he ridiculed out of existence ; some he demolished with hard facts ; all he disposed of. He scored the new evangel of taxation to the quick, and scornfully asked him : When the United States and Canada had both reduced their tariffs to the necessities of revenue only, where did he expect to get his basis for a reciprocity ? It was a royal effort, and when he got through the Liberal leader's effort was a thing of shreds and patches, a thing to be remembered with pity, albeit with scorn.

But that was not all. He paid some attention to my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who has, this afternoon, reiterated the statement he made on a former occasion, that the Government had gone to the country on false pretenses at the last election. I have been amused that there is no answer to-day, because I find it stated that, on the previous occasion :

Mr. Charlton has a habit of making assertions which he cannot prove and of stubbornly refusing to withdraw them when corrected. Twice had he particularly offended in that respect during his speech the other day. To-night the Finance Minister turned upon him, and if ever a man had a bad quarter of an hour it was the truly good representative from North Norfolk. Mr. Foster simply nailed him to the cross and crucified him. That is the only way in which it can be described.

Shocking scene, Sir, to be enacted in the House of Commons. But that is not enough for this giant, whose passions had been aroused, for the correspondent tells us :

Mr. Davies had offended in somewhat like respect. Mr. Foster devoted ten minutes to him and flayed him alive. Next Mr. Paterson, of Brant, had made misstatements, and he received due and scarifying attention.

Now, there is hope, I thought, of finding some pity in the breast of this giant ; after crucifying and flaying he was content with scarifying. But it was only a lull in the tempest of his fury, for we read :

And while his hand was in the Minister took up the whole party as a body and gave them a roasting that made them howl. Oh, but it did hurt them. They could not stay out of the House, they could not sit still in the House. Even Sir Richard, usually impassive enough, was in a towering rage, and there was gnashing of teeth on all sides.

Contrast that description with the weak attitude of the Minister to-day in not venturing to make his position good. After having made an attack which this correspondent described as equal to the crucifixion of a man, we see him to-day sheltering himself behind the excuse that we have not time to discuss this question—a question as to which there was a dispute on a point of fact between the two gentlemen, in regard to which the hon. Minister said that the hon. member for North Norfolk had departed from the truth. Sir, turning from this scene of slaughter, one would naturally inquire what weapons were used to accomplish this mighty slaughter. We have read in sacred history the instance of a man of supernatural strength, who had, with a part of the anatomy of an animal, slain a thousand of his enemies at one time—part of the anatomy of an animal which, however docile in its nature, when alive, is somewhat stubborn also. But I do not want it to be understood that I make any personal allusion to the Minister of Finance in this. Far be it from me to do that. I would not like to give any one the impression that I do not admire an able speaker, and that the Finance Minister is one can be readily seen, but it would appear that it was by the words which issued from his mouth that he wrought this slaughter in the Chamber. I turned up "Hansard" to see what were the words of irony and scorn with which he slew my hon. friend. I found that he charged him with being an elder of the Presbyterian church, with professing to be a Christian, and with being a stickler for Sabbath laws. Well, I have not heard that my hon. friend has since resigned the position of elder of the church ; I have not heard that he is less careful in his observance of the Sabbath ; but I see him, undaunted and unchanged in these respects, challenging the statement of the Finance Minister, and adducing proof of his position, and the Finance Minister has not been able to find time in which to make a reply, but promises to renew the conversation at another time. Sir, I think it was worth the time of the Finance Minister to have attempted a reply to the statement of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Sir, that hon. gentleman charged that this Government went before the country under false pretenses at the last general election. He charged more particularly that the Finance Minister, in his mission to Washington, had not honestly attempted to secure a reciprocity treaty, which would be in the interests of this country, but had gone there knowing that he could not secure, on the lines he made up his mind to lay down, what he professed to be anxious to secure ; and that, instead of helping forward a movement in that direction in the interest of the people of Canada, the Finance Minister and his colleagues rather attempted to injure and prevent the chances of any treaty being consummated in the future. I recognize the fact that the House is not desirous of hearing subjects discussed at any great length, but I think it was worth the while of the Finance Minister to have attempted to reply to the statements made and the proofs adduced in support of the position taken by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) this afternoon.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Resolutions authorizing the granting of subsidies to certain railway companies and the construction of the railways therein mentioned, were read the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. HAGGART moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 127) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MILITIA LAND GRANTS.

Bill (No. 74) to make further provisions respecting Grants of Land to Members of the Militia Force on Active Service in the Northwest was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. How many in the active service will participate in the operations of this Act ?

Mr. DALY. I cannot give the number. This is to meet the case of those who became entitled to scrip since the Act of last session. The Act of last session provided that they would all have to select their lands and apply their scrip on or before 31st December, 1891. It was found that some of them have not done so, and this is to extend the time, in order to enable them to apply their scrip and select their lands.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the hon. gentleman no idea of the number entitled to that privilege ?

Mr. DALY. Speaking from memory, four or five.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

PATENT ACT.

Bill (No. 110) to amend the Patent Act was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. FOSTER. The object is to have an additional or third copy of the claim or claims to avoid copying in the department.

On section 2.

Mr. FOSTER. This empowers the deputy-commissioner to sign. Hitherto only the commissioner, who is the Minister, has been authorized to sign. And, as the number is very large, this becomes a great tax upon the Minister who has to sign them all.

On section 3.

Mr. FOSTER. Subsection 2 of the Act which was amended provides that if a partial fee only is paid, the proportion of the fee paid shall be stated in the patent, and the patent shall, notwithstanding anything therein or in the Act contained, cease at the end of the time for which the partial fee has been paid, unless at or before the expiration of the said term the holder of patent pays the fee for the further term of five or ten years and so on. This merely extends it to six or twelve years.

Mr. MULLOCK. You had better strike out the words "at or," because the holder should make application for renewal before the expiration.

Mr. FOSTER. This follows exactly the verbiage of the old Act.

Mr. MULLOCK. But it has been condemned by this House ; we have had to pass special Acts to arrange difficulties arising out of this phraseology.

Mr. FOSTER. What is your suggestion ?

Mr. MULLOCK. Strike out the words "at or."

Mr. FOSTER. I should not think there would be any objection to that.

On section 4.

Mr. FOSTER. This is simply to provide against an abuse. The Act as it is makes the fee to be paid with application for a patent $2, and a practice is arising of a person making application at one time for more than one patent. I hold a letter in my hand in which a person gives notice that he is going to apply for eight or ten different patents and proposes to pay only $2 for the whole. The idea is that he should pay a fee upon each separate patent.

Mr. MULLOCK. A large sum of money is collected in the patent office in excess of all disbursements and this represents a profit which may be said to come out of unsuccessful applications for patents. Applicants are now obliged to deposit a fee with their application in order to have their applications and specifications examined. This is all lost if the application is not successful. This is in effect a fine on ingenuity which is none the less ingenuity because it makes its work known a little late in point of time. I believe $40,000 a year is made in clear profit out of the department and I would suggest that the Government during recess should look into the matter and see if the return of a part of the fee cannot be provided for.

Mr. FOSTER. I will call the attention of the Minister to the point.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CARLETON BRANCH RAILROAD.

Mr. FOSTER (for Mr. Haggart) moved second reading of Bill (No. 122) to confirm the sale of the Carleton, city of St. John. Branch Railroad. He said: This Bill is printed only in English, but it is a merely "pro forma" thing with reference to the sale of this branch road which Parliament authorized three years ago and which has taken place. This is merely to confirm the sale.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SCHOOL LANDS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of Bill (No. 109) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: This Bill is to provide for the giving of homestead entries to a number of squatters on school lands in the province of Manitoba. These people squatted on these lands between the years 1874 and 1882; and under the provision of the Dominion Lands Act, it would be impossible for us to deal with these lands except by an Act of Parliament. The squatters had no other portion of the country at that time open to them for settlement, and we feel it would be dealing very harshly with them indeed if, after they have made large improvements upon those lands, the lands were sold at auction, because in many instances the property would pass away from them. In order to settle the long-standing grievance—I think there are sixteen or seventeen cases—we have decided to ask the House for legislation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you propose to sell to these people at the price of ordinary vacant lands at that date, or to make a free gift of them?

Mr. DALY. We make them a free gift of the homestead entries. Of course, we will have to provide land in lieu of these different quarter-sections to make up the school lands.

Mr. DAVIN. I see there is nothing in this Bill dealing with the question of the exemption of a man's homestead. My hon. friend, I suppose, intends to deal with it in another Bill, which I hope he will do before this session terminates. It is a very important question in which our people in the Northwest, as he knows, are deeply interested. I called my hon. friend's attention to it early in the session, and I have good hope that before the session terminates, we will have a short Bill dealing with the subject of exemptions.

Mr. MULOCK. Are these lands that are now being handed over to the squatters withdrawn from the appropriation of lands for school purposes without any other lands being placed at the disposal of the fund?

Mr. DALY. No; the Bill provides for that in clause 2.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

On the preamble,

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is rather curiously worded. Here are a number of parties specially named, and without anything else in this Act to guide us this would be all a mere hypothesis. You say "upon proof being made." I should suppose before the Government took the responsibility of introducing such an Act, they would be thoroughly satisfied as to the "bona fides" of all these claims. Apparently, they have only doubtful evidence in their hands, or otherwise they would have used positive language instead of hypothetical language.

Mr. DALY. We have full evidence as to the facts of these people having resided upon these lands, cultivated them, and in every way coming within the meaning of the Dominion Lands Act, but in order that they may get homestead patents, they have got to prove this in the usual way. Consequently we require that they should produce that evidence, which means that they have to make the usual affidavits.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is clear we are establishing a precedent here which will have to be followed if any other parties are in the same position. If you grant it to these men, you must also grant it to other parties. Now, are any steps being taken in order to assure us that no further applications will follow upon the passage of this Act?

Mr. DALY. I may say that a full inspection was made of all the school lands in Manitoba last year that were squatted upon, and evidence was obtained by the inspectors, and is now in the department. The hon. gentleman will see by these reports that we deal only with those who squatted prior to the 1st of January, 1880—there are no others in Manitoba to-day in the same position as these people are.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why is that arbitrary date fixed?

Mr. DALY. Because, after that date these lands and others were thrown open to settlement. After the 1st of January, 1880, there were lands surveyed further west that were open for homestead entry. The reason why these people that are dealt with here squatted upon those lands, was that those lands were all withdrawn from entry in 1874, as the hon. gentleman will recollect. We had no other lands open at that time, and they squatted on these school lands. It has been a matter of continual grievance with them ever since they squatted on these lands, and we find that the only way to deal with them and settle the grievance is to give them homesteads upon their giving the usual proof required by the Dominion Lands Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Manitoba Government, I presume, had a sort of proprietary interests in these lands as trustees of the people of Manitoba ?

Mr. DALY. They were consulted, they have been communicated with, and there was no objection ; on the contrary, Mr. Greenway informed me that he was very glad indeed that I had taken the matter in hand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Were not these lands surveyed at the time these men entered upon them as squatters ?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We proceed upon the assumption that these men acted in utter ignorance of the law. The lands were surveyed and set apart as school lands, and I can hardly understand how they could ignorantly be settled upon.

Mr. DALY. They knew they were school lands. We do not say in this Bill that they were ignorant of the fact.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On which they went in good faith and in ignorance of the law. If so, we are making a recital that is contrary to the facts.

Mr. DALY. It is a fact that the people were ignorant of the law. They were ignorant of the law in this respect, that, although they knew they were school lands, they were ignorant of the conditions surrounding their acquirement. That is the information I have received.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood the hon. Minister to say that the reason why these lands were settled was not ignorance, but the fact that there were no other lands on which to squat. The Minister found the parties there, and the lands had been surveyed and were known to the parties to be school lands.

Mr. DALY. That is very true, but the parties were ignorant of the law in relation to school lands. Even to-day people are ignorant as to the manner in which school lands can be disposed of. Only last week I received a letter from a man who has been a resident there for some time, and he asks how he could buy school lands, when, as a matter of fact, the law provides only one way in which they can be dealt with. That is the kind of ignorance of the people in regard to this matter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I can understand that it may be proper for Parliament to act on behalf of those parties and ratify their claims as squatters, on the ground that those men, in ignorance of the school law, "bona fide" squatted on the lands, and, under the circumstances, they should obtain homestead entry. If the parties had done so, and if it turned out afterwards that they settled down on lands and cultivated them, which turned out, on some technical ground, to be school lands, and lands on which they could not settle, it might be well for Parliament to confirm their settlement. But I cannot understand that there was any ignorance by the parties in this case. Every one knew these were school lands, and not open for pre-emption, and yet we are reciting in the preamble that which we know is not true.

It being six o'clock the committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 109) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. LAURIER. The committee will require an explanation of this section. As I observe the Minister is absent, as well as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), it is desirable to take up some other business.

Committee rose and reported progress.

VOTERS' LISTS, 1893.

Bill (No. 123) respecting the voters' lists of 1893, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. Would the Minister state what is the reason of this legislation, and why there should not be a revision of the lists this year ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can give that information to the hon. gentleman in a few words. The object of this short Bill is that there should be no revision of the lists during the present year. In view of that we propose to suspend the amendment of the Franchise Act. In addition to that reason, an amendment of the Franchise Act is a subject that always creates a great deal of discussion in the House, and the Act providing for that amendment is put over until the next year, when the House will have time to discuss

It thoroughly. I think myself that the postponement of the amendment to the Franchise Act will result in a mere perfect measure, inasmuch as more time for consideration can be given than at this late stage of the session.

Mr. LAURIER. Is the Minister of the opinion that there is a general wish that there should be no revision this year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. I think so too.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). We will have enough to do to look after the Ontario lists next summer.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes; and the Ontario lists are revised every year, and there is no wish that there should not be a revision, but this Federal Act is so cumbersome and so expensive, and is such a burden upon the candidates and the people at large, that there is always a sigh of relief when there is to be no revision. I ask, in all seriousness, why in the name of common sense should the Government continue on the Statute-book an Act which they dare not put in force according to the letter of its provisions? As the Minister says, there is a general wish that there should be no revision this year, but, after all the only reason for it is, as I said before, that the Act is cumbersome and expensive, and that every one wishes to be relieved of its burden. If the Government would act in accordance with the logic of events, they would repeal the Franchise Act and revert to the old system of municipal revision of the lists, as is done in Ontario and all the other provinces.

Mr. CASEY. If there is to be no revision this year, I suppose there is to be no election.

Mr. LAURIER. That does not at all follow, we have had experience to the contrary.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They will build up a new House on old lists.

Bill reported.

INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

It is expedient to provide that, for the present session, the deduction of $8 per day, mentioned in section 26 of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, shall not be made for six days in the case of members who have been absent from a sitting of the House or Committee thereof during such number of days, but this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the Act relating to the Senate and House of Commons, nor in the case of any member elected since the commencement of the session shall it apply to days prior to his election.

Resolution considered in Committee and reported.

CIVIL SERVICE INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 11) respecting Government Civil Service Insurance.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave a short explanation of this Bill when it was introduced to the House, and I will now explain its principal provisions. It is a companion Bill to the Superannuation Bill, which was passed by the House yesterday. As hon. gentlemen will remember some complaint was made that a Superannuation Bill—as all Superannuation Bills—provides simply for disability, through a public servant who is unable to perform his duties, and receives an allowance for a time after being disabled, or after becoming unfit for work. But the superannuation system of itself affords nothing for the families of those public servants, who, though upon the superannuation list, die before they are superannuated, and so get no benefit. It was with a view of meeting that branch of the difficulty that the present Civil Service Superannuation Bill has been framed, the object being to give a cheap and safe form of insurance to those civil servants who pay the superannuation abatement; and the amount is limited as to the maximum, so that they shall not use it as a means of amassing wealth for their families whom they may leave behind them, but simply as a fair payment to them after their breadwinners have been taken from them. The contribution which the Government makes to this fund is, in the first place, the management of the insurance, and the buildings, which, although a very heavy charge in the case of an independent insurance company, is of slight or almost no cost to the Government. I went very fully into this feature of the measure with the officers of my department, and I am assured by them that they do not anticipate that much extra cost of a clerical nature will be necessary for a considerable number of years. The Bill puts the insurance matter under the care of the Superintendent of Insurance, and the working of it is confided to the Finance Department as a whole. The charge for expenses and buildings being lifted from this insurance system, it is made by that much cheaper and more profitable to the person insured. The second contribution of the Government, which is really a contribution, is this: Upon all the moneys which are paid in and which remain in the hands of the Government, the Government allow a rate of 6 per cent interest, being a contribution of 2 per cent above the rate at which money is borrowed, taking all charges into consideration—a little more, in fact. By these two means combined, first, taking off the charges for expenses and buildings, and, secondly, the contribution of 2 per cent or about 2 per cent upon the moneys in the hands of the Government, cheaper insurance is given by a great deal than can be got from any of the regular line companies, taking security into consideration as well. The charge upon the Government at the inception of the scheme is nil, and the charge gradually increases as the number of policies taken out increases. But even when we shall have advanced so far as to have $4,000,000 of insurance running, the whole charge upon the Government, it is calculated, will be about $13,000. So that, if you place the two measures together, the superannuation measure and the insurance measure, you have, I think, very nearly a perfect system for the Civil Service. You have a superannuation system which is self-sustaining, or very nearly so, and you have along with it a cheap form of insurance, which costs the Government very little; and the two together entail a minimum charge on the public Treasury while giving a maximum benefit to the service as a whole. Thus we gain in two things—first, in the discipline of the service, and the power to dispense with the services of officers who become disabled by illness or infirmity—

Mr. LAURIER. Or political exigencies.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, if it is not fairly administered; but so long as the present Government has the administration of it, we do not look for anything of that kind, and I hope that the example set by us will be so good that when my hon. friend comes in he will carry on the same good method.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the meaning of the fifteenth section?

Mr. FOSTER. I neglected to state that this system of insurance runs "pari passu" with the new superannuation scheme, and is not open to those who belong to the service at present, and who pay their contributions to the old superannuation fund according to the old abatement. But in order to allow persons of that class, if they wish, to have the advantage of this form of insurance, it is provided by the fifteenth section that if they pay the added abatement they will be allowed the advantage of the insurance. The added abatement, taken in connection with the insurance, together with ages of those in the service, most of them having been in it for a long period of years, will pretty well preclude the great majority of those belonging to the service at present from taking advantage of this measure. Some of the younger men may, but if they do they will have to pay more into the superannuation fund than they do at present.

Mr. LAURIER. For my part, I receive with a great deal of diffidence the very optimistic remarks with which the hon. gentleman has just favoured the House. The Government is to go into the insurance business. I know that it has been often discussed by public writers whether insurance should be in the hands of the Government, as well as telegraphs, the post office, and so on. We have not yet come to that, but I understand that the Government is going to enter into competition with the insurance companies in the business of insuring a certain class of the community.

Mr. FOSTER. Its own servants.

Mr. LAURIER. Whenever the Government of the country has undertaken to go into any kind of business, it has not generally proved very successful or economical, as in the railway business, but quite the reverse, and I fear that our experience will be the same in this instance. The hon. gentleman says that the Government contributes 2 per cent to the fund. What reason can there be why the people of the country should be taxed to any extent whatever for the support of one class of the community? I can see no adequate reason for it. Civil Servants may be well paid, or they may not; I do not raise that question at this moment; there is, however, no difficulty in filling the ranks. What reason can be adduced why Civil Servants should not pay their own insurance? The hon. gentleman has not given any reason. He has just made the blank statement that the Government intends to contribute 2 per cent to the fund. It is open to every civil servant to-day to insure his own life. The hon. gentleman has not told us what is to be the basis of the premiums which are to be exacted from the civil servants, under that system of insurance; and if I understand the Bill aright, the basis is to be found in the tables which guide insurance companies. Then, if the system is to be based upon these tables, the premiums should be the same. I cannot conceive, from the statement of the hon. gentleman, that the premiums are to be less than what are charged by other companies. The hon. gentleman has given us no figures to show where the economy comes in; and if there is to be an economy for the civil servants, it is to be at the expense of the Government, and I do not see why we should bear the expense. I submit that the whole system of superannuation is a vicious one; but, as we have discussed that already, I will not renew the discussion. The session is so far advanced that I cannot offer opposition to the Bill, which, I am sure, in any event, the majority with its usual leniency would adopt as well as any other piece of legislation introduced by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave no detailed figures, it is true, because I thought what my hon. friend asked for was the basis, and I have given him that. When an insurance company calculates its tables of premiums, it does so on certain bases. First, there are the mortality tables, then the expenses, which are of two kinds. In the first place, there are the expenses of management, which are with every company a very large item. They must have their head offices and their armies of paid agents, who go about the country soliciting policies and who are paid very heavy commissions; so that in the history of every insurance company these management expenses at the head offices and the agencies are a very large item and have to be taken into account when fixing the rates of premium. Then there is that part of the management which consists of the building of fine offices, etc., which are sometimes very expensive. One has only to look over the annual returns of any insurance company, to see what a very large amount these expenses are. In calculating these tables, as well, some regard must be had to the investment of money, and in this case the Government lays down two principles. First, that it does not load it with any expenses of management at all, and therefore the premium rate will become very much less on account of this saving of management expenses. We have no expenses of head office or agents, which is a great saving. Secondly, the Government gives an advantage in this respect: that it gives 6 per cent on the premiums. That is a steady investment; and although in some cases insurance companies may invest their moneys at a larger rate, such investments are intermittent and do not amount, perhaps, to a steady 6 per cent investment all round. These are the two items which make it possible to give members of the Civil Service cheap insurance. Now, for the figures my hon. friend required. Take the age of twenty. Under this arrangement, calculated on the healthy male mortality tables, upon the basis of 6 per cent, persons insuring at the age of twenty, would get a life policy for $1,000 at $9.97 per year. In the Confederated Life, without profits, he has to pay $13.80; in the Standard Life, without profits, he has to pay $16; in the Travellers' Life, he has to pay $14.24; in the Canada Life, $12.80. Take the age of twenty-five years. The insurer under this measure will get his policy for $11.50 per year. In the Confederated Life he has to pay $15.55; in the Sun Life, $16.15; in the Standard Life, $18.22; in the Travellers', $15.97, and in the Canada Life, $14.70. They get the safest kind of life insurance at the lowest cost. My hon. friend asks, what reason is there that the country should pay? There is no particular reason, except one of practical convenience, and, I think, of practical economy. My hon. friend says we may not be successful and that the clerks may not insure. Well, if they do not insure, the Government contribution will be by that much lessened, and if they do insure, our contribution can be no more than we pay by giving them 6 per cent interest on their investment, that is, 2 per cent over the common rate. So I have just this to say, that if you take the two systems and combine them—and they have both been worked out carefully by actuarial calculations by the Superintendent of Insurance, who is thoroughly a master of that matter—they involve an excellent provision for the civil servants, in case of disability, old age, infirmity or sickness, and provide something for the wife and family after death, if death takes them away during their time of service. In those two ways they make good provisions for civil servants, and they do it at the very minimum of cost to the country.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it provided in the Bill that the insured cannot fail to pay his premiums?

Mr. FOSTER. They are deducted from his salary. If he wishes to retire, he can get his commutation or his paid-up policy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If he contracts under this, he does not remain under the Superannuation Act?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then, I would like section 15 explained.

Mr. FOSTER. This Act, in the first place, is meant as a companion Act to the one passed yesterday. The persons who come in after the passage of these two Acts, come in under a system of superannuation, and also under a system of insurance. The superannuation they will pay is 3½ per cent and 3, and the insurance they get is on the lines laid down here. It would be manifestly unfair to allow persons now in the service, and who pay only 2 per cent into the superannuation fund, to have the advantage of the second provision; so that they are debarred from being insured under this insurance scheme; but there is a provision by which, if they raise the abatement which they pay to the superannuation fund, they may become eligible for insurance under this scheme. This, as I explained to my hon. friend, would be valuable, on business principles, to a very few of the present civil servants. The young men might choose to accept it, but those who have been for a long time in the service, would not find it profitable to take it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you think the Bill carries out that idea?

Mr. FOSTER. That is what it is meant to carry out.

Mr. CASEY. This Bill involves a false principle. I do not believe that the Government should go into the insurance business for the benefit of members of the Civil Service. The hon. Minister has explained that the cost of management is not provided for, and that he proposes to insure the civil servants at the net cost of insurance, without the loading of which, as he knows, is put upon insurance premiums in ordinary insurance companies. Now, it seems to me that civil servants ought to be put upon the same platform as other people and allowed to make such provision for their families in case of death as they please, and I think that, when the Government undertakes to insure these people for less than the ordinary rate, they are doing what it is not the business of any Government to do. Therefore, I object to the whole scheme.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not see anything here making the provision for medical inspection.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; it is here.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes; there is provision, but not sufficient in my opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. When we come to that clause we can discuss it.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister did not give any explanation about that. The Bill provides that when a party applies for insurance he shall furnish the certificate of a doctor with regard to his state of health, etc. Is it the intention of the Government to keep a medical practitioner in the department to examine and pronounce on these certificates before the parties are admitted to the list of the insured? Because, if you are going to take the certificate of every doctor throughout the country, without a careful scrutiny and examination of these reports, you are going to have men placed upon the list as insured whom you may find, in a short time, to be very objectionable subjects for insurance. All insurance companies have a double inspection. First, there is the doctor in the village or town in which the person resides, who applies for insurance and who makes the medical examination. His report is forwarded to the head office, and there subjected to rigid scrutiny by the doctor in the employ of the company. What is the hon. Minister going to provide?

Mr. FOSTER. We can discuss that when we come to the clause.

On section 3,

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to amend this clause to make it read: "The Minister may contract with any person to whom the Civil Service Superannuation Act now applies."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is the very point I wish to discuss. The Civil Service Superannuation Act is not yet law, and, therefore, it applies to no one.

Mr. FOSTER. I see your point; we will make that clear. There are two Acts, and, by section 15, under certain conditions, those to whom the present Civil Service Superannuation Act applies may come in. We want to cover the two.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to understand this matter. I have read that section until I am tired and I do not understand the intention of it. As it stands, under the first section, this is limited to those who come into the service hereafter. The 15th section provides, "in the event of any person to whom the Civil Service Superannuation Act now applies taking advantage," and so on, a deduction is to be made. Therefore, as I understand it, it does not enable any existing civil servant to take advantage of it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is to meet that point that I propose this amendment. The object is that the Civil Service insurance shall apply to all who come in under the Civil Service Superannuation Bill we passed yesterday, and may apply to those to whom the present Civil Service Superannuation Bill applies on condition of their making a higher payment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose a civil servant to whom the existing superannuation system applies wants to come in under this, does he continue under both?

Mr. FOSTER. He continues under the old Superannuation Act, and takes advantage of this, and the increased abatement goes into the old superannuation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then this 2½ per cent is an additional abatement beyond the 2 per cent he pays under the old Act.

Mr. FOSTER. No; it is an additional abatement of ½ per cent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is a matter that will require further consideration. It is well we should understand it before we go into it.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend this clause to make it read, "any person to whom the Civil Service Superannuation Act now applies."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But this Act is not yet passed.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is the name of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, which is already in existence.

On section 4,

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask the Minister what objection there is to having it apply to the service generally?

Mr. FOSTER. Because the whole purpose of it is to meet the case of the civil servant who dies leaving a wife or children.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the man, by attaching a slip or memorandum on the insurance, can describe the manner in which he wants it divided amongst his children. Now, can he, from time to time, alter that description, whether the children are living or dead?

Mr. FOSTER. We have another clause for that.

On section 6,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That contemplates a subsequent declaration.

Mr. FOSTER. That would give a chance for a subsequent apportionment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose the intention is that he may do it in the insurance contract when he makes it, or subsequently.

Mr. FOSTER. Which you can do in any insurance company.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Supposing he made that declaration, can he vary it from time to time?

Mr. FOSTER. I should think so.

Mr. FLINT. About how many persons is this likely to apply to after the Act is well in operation?

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot tell. It is entirely dependent upon the appointments.

Mr. FLINT. The Minister must have some idea of about how many there are in the Civil Service.

Mr. FOSTER. About 4,500.

Mr. FLINT. We might have to make it apply to more than 3,000 at the outset.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be a long time hence.

On section 8,

Mr. FOSTER. That gives no finality. I want to add these words:

And if all the persons so entitled die in the lifetime of the insured, the insurance money shall fall into and become a part of the estate of the insured.

Mr. McMULLEN. Suppose a man has a family and six children, and he insures for the benefit of his wife and children. Suppose that after a number of years none of them die, but one of the boys turns out very disobedient, and the father wishes to cut him off and not allow him any part of the insurance, is there a provision in the Bill that enables him to do that?

Mr. FOSTER. I think he can do that under this section.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He can do that under the 6th section.

On section 11,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As this is not a matter on which any discretion is capable of being exercised by the Governor in Council, I think the matter should be left in the hands of the Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is a mere matter of calculation, and, therefore, can be left with the Minister.

On section 12,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What will be the cost to a civil servant 20 or 21 years of age, who insures his life for $1,000?

Mr. FOSTER. $9.97 per annum.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do the Government think it is desirable to issue policies for $500?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is a mere matter of option.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In my opinion, where the rate is so low as 1 per cent, $1,000 is a sufficiently small amount.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the opinion of the department.

On section 13,

Mr. FLINT. Suppose an applicant should fail in the medical examination, could he make a further application?

Mr. FOSTER. The system will be carried on the same as that of any insurance company. The greatest care will be taken to appoint a reliable physician, who will be looked upon as representing the insurers.

Mr. CASEY. I think it is better to have these details prescribed under the Act. The hon. gentleman may not remain in office forever, and the physicians giving the certificates should be named.

Mr. FOSTER. No; that is a matter of detail.

Mr. McMULLEN. What investigation does the Minister of Finance intend to make in order to prevent imposition being practised? No doubt the hon. gentleman intends to appoint reliable physicians, which is, no doubt, very good in itself, but does the hon. gentleman intend to have the physicians go over the reports of individuals applying for insurance so as to afford another safeguard against imposition?

Mr. FOSTER. Whatever measures are considered necessary by the Superintendent of Insurance, and whatever measures are necessary in a first-class insurance company will be adopted and carried out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The form of certificate might be prescribed by the Superintendent of Insurance or by the Minister, instead of by the Governor in Council.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it should be by the Minister, and I will amend the section accordingly.

On section 15,

Mr. FOSTER. Let that section stand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that this section 15 is intended to apply to the existing Civil Service, and that it is intended to charge any person in the present service who takes a policy, a half per cent more than any one who comes hereafter into the service.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to see whether that is enough or not. I will look into that.

On section 16,

Mr. LAURIER. I thought there were no new clerks to be appointed ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was just going to say that that is the way the public are not fairly treated in this matter. There is no doubt that you are providing a system of insurance, the best in the world for these civil servants, a lower rate, absolute security, and not charging them anything for expenses of management. Past experience teaches us that you will not go on two or three years before you have quite a staff of officers for this purpose. You will not get a man to write out a policy without extra pay unless the department is different from other departments, and I am pleased to say that the department of the Minister of Finance is in a great many respects an example for the other departments.

Mr. FOSTER. I will see that it is done as long as I am there.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the hon. gentleman's intention that the party applying for insurance shall pay the doctor's fees ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I join in the request made by several of the members that the hon. gentleman shall consider the question of dropping clauses 16 and 17. I have no doubt that if he puts in a clause in this Bill saying that the Government are to pay all the expenses that will be incurred incident to the carrying out of the Act, there will not be a man who puts his hand to paper who will not want extra pay. I do object to making express provision for the payment of salaries and incidental expenses at a time when you say you know there will not be any expense.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose a bill were incurred in the printing office for printing forms and such like, we must have authority for paying it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman could take a little vote every year, and it would form a capital opportunity for testing from year to year the working of this Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will think of that.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BELT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MARA. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the dispute that exists between the Dominion and the province of British Columbia relating to the boundaries of the 40-mile belt within that province. By the terms of Union it was agreed that the Government of British Columbia should convey to the Dominion Government, in trust, to be appropriated in such manner as the Dominion Government might deem advisable in furtherance of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an extent of public lands along the line of the railway, throughout its entire length in British Columbia, not to exceed 20 miles on each side of the said line, as might be appropriated for the same purpose by the Dominion Government from the public lands in the North-west Territories and the province of Manitoba. One of the first acts of the Provincial Government, after our province entered Confederation was to withdraw from sale all lands in that province; and for two years after we entered the Union no lands were sold in the whole province. The agreement provided that the surveys should be completed within two years; but as a matter of fact, the time for the completion of the railway had almost expired before the work was commenced. In 1880, the province, at the request of the Dominion Government, conveyed to the Dominion a belt of land 40 miles wide extending from Burrard Inlet up the valley of the Fraser River to the mouth of the Thompson River, thence up the valley of the Thompson to Cranberry and Albreda Lakes, thence across to Tête Jaune Cache, and on to the summit of the Yellow Head Pass. In 1883, the Dominion Government abandoned that line, and asked the province to convey a similar belt of land through the Kicking Horse Pass, which was done in 1884. Previous to that time there had been several questions in dispute between the two Governments, and the Dominion Government sent the late Sir Alexander Campbell to British Columbia to adjust the differences that existed. A settlement was arrived at, which was reduced to a Bill, known in our province as the Settlement Bill. The signatures to that Bill were scarcely dry before the Dominion set up a claim to the precious metals within the 40-mile belt. A long and vexatious lawsuit ensued, which was finally decided by the Privy Council in favour of the Dominion. I find now that there is a probability of another expensive and vexatious lawsuit with regard to the boundaries of the 40-mile belt. At the opening of the present session of the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor made the following statement:—

Mr. FOSTER.

The boundaries of the 20-mile belt on each side of the Canadian Pacific Railway remain undefined, notwithstanding the endeavours of my Ministers to arrive at an adjustment of the question with the Dominion Government. In the meantime, the Government of Canada, claiming a boundary largely, as the provision maintains, in excess of a just limitation of the railway belt, are assuming the status of a freeholder by issuing grants in Her Majesty's name for lands in the disputed boundary, as well as for lands admittedly within the belt. You will be asked to provide the necessary moneys for upholding the rights of the province before the proper tribunals.

Here we find the province has again to go to the courts of the country to enforce her just rights; and I may say that if the province is wrong this time, it is the first time it has entered a claim against the Dominion which is not just and valid. The province has lived up to the letter and spirit of the terms of Union, and I am sorry that I cannot say the same for the Dominion. The position taken by the Attorney-General is practically this: that the Dominion has merely the right to administer the lands and appropriate the moneys arising from the sales, is not entitled to the status of a freeholder, and has no power to make grants of land in Her Majesty's name. The province only has that right, and has not parted with it, and when a sale is made the province must give the patent. The province also contends that the Dominion is claiming more land than it is entitled to, and intends submitting two points to the courts to decide upon, namely, first, is the Dominion entitled to the status of a freeholder? and, second, is not the extent of land claimed by the Dominion in excess of the terms of the Union and Settlement Act? I may say that when these disputes were settled by Sir Alexander Campbell, and when the Settlement Act was passed, the province conveyed to the Dominion a tract of 3,500,000 acres of land in the Peace River Valley to make up the deficiency of land in the belt that might have been alienated. So that after the province has conveyed this large extent of land to the Dominion, the Dominion is now setting up a claim for more than the province contends it is entitled to. What I would suggest to the hon. Minister of the Interior is that instead of entering upon another expensive lawsuit, which would keep the land virtually tied up from settlement, it would be better to refer the whole matter to arbitration. I am sure that an arbitrator could be found in our province, say the Chief Justice of British Columbia; one of the superior judges of Ontario could be selected for the Dominion; and a third man could be chosen from one of the lower provinces to act as umpire. In this way a cheap and easy method of settling the dispute could be adopted, in place of the expensive and tedious method of referring the question again to the Privy Council.

Mr. DALY. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I can say that this matter has received the attention of the Government within the last three or four months. The hon. gentleman will remember that Mr. Davie, the Premier of British Columbia, visited Ottawa in November last, and, amongst other matters pertaining to his province, discussed at great length with the Premier, Sir John Thompson, this question of the 40-mile belt. It is a question fraught with a considerable amount of difficulty. Owing to the sinuosities of the railway through the Rocky Mountains and the Selkirks, there is great difficulty in making the 20-mile belt on each side of the railway satisfactory both to the province and to the Dominion. Two different plans have been suggested. One is that we should take the centre line of the railway and select a belt 20 miles wide on each side, following the sinuosities of the line. Another is that we should take a number of lines, some parallel with each other on each side of the line, and others diverted to meet the windings of the railway, and by that means come to a conclusion. I may say to my hon. friend that I do not anticipate any difficulty whatever between the Dominion Government and the province of British Columbia with reference to this matter. I hope that in the recess, when we have sufficient time to deal with the matter, we will be able to come to an amicable arrangement, and it will be both in the interests of the province and the Dominion that such an arrangement should be come to. No doubt, in the event of our not being able to arrive at that conclusion, possibly a reference to arbitration will be the most satisfactory way to end the matter. I must say that I think, from the evidence the officers of the department have provided, we will be able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion and end the dispute which has existed so long between the Dominion Government and the province of British Columbia in reference to this boundary.

QU'APPELLE AND LONG LAKE RAILWAY.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Before going into Committee of Supply, I desire to call the attention of the Government to a matter of great interest to the North-west Territories, particularly that portion I represent, which is more than one-quarter the total area of the inhabited district. I notified the Minister of Railways that I was going to ask certain questions, and as he is not here, some other gentleman may be able to answer for him. The questions I desire to put to him are the following:—

How many acres of land are given to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway Company?

What annual subsidy is granted?

Is the above-mentioned assistance granted to ensure regular trains?

How many trains have been run into Prince Albert and how many from Prince Albert since 30th January?

What is the state of the weather at Prince Albert and what efforts are being made to run trains?

Has the train service since January served the needs of the country?

How many mails have reached Ottawa from Prince Albert since the beginning of the session?

Is this the adequate service required in return for the subsidy?

I would direct the attention of the House to this fact, that the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway has been granted over 2,000,000 acres of land, besides a subsidy of $80,000 a year for twenty years, amounting in all to $1,600,000. In return, it is understood that they were to give adequate train service and so furnish an outlet to the country, and at any rate carry the mails. I have to-day received a telegram from the Mayor of Prince Albert, in which he says:

Weather fine; railway evidently humbugging, making no effort to move; no train since 10th March. See P.M.G.

Since the 30th of January, only three trains have gone out of Prince Albert, and since I came down here only two trains went out. I desire to know whether that is considered an adequate service in return for the land and money subsidy granted to this company, and if it is not so considered, whether the Government intend compelling the company to give an adequate service?

Mr. HAGGART. I did not hear the first of the hon. gentleman's remarks; but he gave me notice a few minutes ago that he intended to ask these questions. I do not remember the amount of the land grant; but he will find it in the railway report. The subsidy amounts to about $80,000 a year for a period of twenty years. My department has had no information at all with reference to the running of the trains, and I did not know whether they were running regularly or not until the hon. gentleman spoke to me a day or two ago. I cannot therefore give him information on that subject, and I have not had time to look into the legal obligations of the company and see what powers the Government have under the Railway Act to compel them to run more trains. I will inquire as soon as possible from the Justice Department and find out what powers we have. I think the grant to the company is conditional on their running trains at reasonable short periods. I will let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman received no notice whatever of that extraordinary state of things, there must be some strange negligence in his department.

Mr. HAGGART. They are not obliged to furnish any information to the department except their annual statement, and I am very sorry to say some of the railway companies do not even do that.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. TARTE. Will you allow me, Mr. Speaker, to draw the attention of the House to the administration of justice in the province of Quebec and to some of the judges in the same province. The vexatious proceedings taken against me prevent the carrying out of all the promises I made to the people of the county of L'Islet and elsewhere, concerning a number of judges, but, certainly what is postponed will not be lost. Mr. Speaker, I gave early in the session notices of motion to bring this matter before the House; but so many of my colleagues had precedence over me on the Order Paper that I was obliged to drop these notices so that I might avail myself of this opportunity to reach the end I had in view. The duties and the rights of Parliament in connection with the administration of justice are defined as follows in Todd:—

The great function of Parliament has been declared to be the maintenance of the law and the redress of grievances. Thus it is one of their principal duties and functions to be observant of the courts of justice, and to take due care that none of them, from the lowest to the highest shall pursue new courses unknown to the laws and constitution of this kingdom, or to equity, sound legal policy, or substantial justice.

I think it is an admitted doctrine that this Parliament has the right to watch the administration of justice. I think also that that duty is more imperative and more important in Canada, on account of the special nature of our constitution, than it may be in other countries. We are under the federal system; this Parliament is the supreme power. But our provinces have their rights and their privileges, and are self-governing communities. We appoint Lieutenant-Governors, who preside over their institutions. We appoint judges to administer them justice. Suppose that those high officials combine together against the liberty of one of the provinces, I do not think there is any Government strong enough to resist such a combine. I have no desire to allude to-night to any special political fact that may have taken place during late years. I intend confining myself merely to the question of principle, as far as it is possible; but it will be impossible for me to abstain entirely from comments on certain political events in which our judges have been mixed, not in the course of their official duties as judges, but in certain other positions. I shall be told, Sir, that against such a combination as I have alluded to, there might be a check in the removal from office of Lieutenant-Governors and judges. Those of us who have had experience know that when the Lieutenant-Governors and judges belong to the same party as that which happens to be in power, that check is of no use whatever. I have taken an active part in the dismissal of a Lieutenant-Governor, and, as long as our political opponents were in power, we could not succeed. I do not know how much about the judiciary of the other provinces, but I think I know all the judges of the province of Quebec and that I know our judicial system also. I am very sorry to have to state here to-night that the judiciary of the province of Quebec is looked upon as a political organization. The reason for this opinion, which is held throughout the whole province, is that all the judges, or nearly all of them, have been chosen from among the most active partisans of the party now in power. Some of them, I have been told, have even paid for the high positions they occupy.

Mr. OUIMET. Order, order.

Mr. TARTE. I am called to order?

Mr. OUIMET. It is a well-known rule of this House, which has been enforced a great many times, that it is out of order to call the judiciary to account, that is, to make charges against the judges of the land, without having resort to the procedure known as impeachment, which is the only procedure by which one can make charges before this House against the judges. I need not give the reasons for that rule, and for the continued practice which has been followed both in the English Parliament and in this. The reasons for it are obvious.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Speaking to the point of order, Sir, I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that, as I understood the statement of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), he did not make any charge against any judge or any act of any judge in his judicial capacity. He did charge, as I understood him, that some person or persons had received money for using their influence to secure the appointment of persons as judges, and that these individuals, before they were judges, had paid money to get the appointments. But I did not learn that any charge had been made by him, so far, against the judges acting in their judicial capacity.

Mr. OUMET. The charge is that these judges had paid money to get their appointment. If that charge is true, I am quite sure this Parliament would be willing to condemn that conduct very severely. It is said the charge has not been made directly, but it is worse to make such a charge through insinuation than to make it directly, because if the charge were made directly, the hon. gentleman's words might be taken down and he might be called to account.

Mr. TARTE. I do not wish to go outside the rules of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The practice with regard to judges is laid down as follows:—

The rules of the two Houses are only intended to protect their own members, and consequently any reflections on the conduct of the members outside cannot be strictly considered as breaches of order. But the Speakers of the English Commons now always interfere to prevent as far as they can all personal attacks on the judges and courts of justice. They have always felt themselves compelled to say that "such expressions should be withdrawn," and that, "when it is proposed to call in question the conduct of a judge, the member desiring to do so, should pursue the constitutional course of moving an address to the Crown." Members have even been interrupted in Committee of the Whole by the Chairman when they have cast an imputation upon a judicial proceeding.

I was following the hon. member pretty closely, but I did not quite gather that he was making an attack upon the judiciary of the character spoken of by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Oumet), but I would warn the hon. member that if he does that I shall be obliged to call him to order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if that rule does not apply to a case in which a particular judge is mentioned, and if it does not apply where a policy is criticized, as having the effect of destroying public confidence in the judiciary?

Mr. OUMET. It is still worse to make charges without giving names, because it brings dishonour and disgrace upon the whole judiciary of our province. I protest here not only in the name of the judiciary of the province of Quebec, but also in the name of the province itself against such accusations. We shall be very low in the province of Quebec before such charges can be made with truth.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have made some extracts from the English Hansard with reference to this subject. On 26th February, 1883, Mr. Callan made this statement:

Lord Bacon was a man of great legal ability but he was a corrupt and bad judge; and he (Mr. Callan) believed that prejudice and partizanship had made Mr. Justice Lawson far more corrupt.

Mr. SPEAKER BRAND—The hon. member is not entitled to speak in language of that kind of one of the judges of the land.

Mr. CALLAN—I did not say corrupt in a pecuniary sense.

Mr. SPEAKER—I must call on the hon. member to withdraw the expression.

On page 1143 of volume 268, I find the following; Mr. Beggin, speaking of Mr. Justice Fitzgerald:—

Mr. SPEAKER—The hon. member is now about to discuss the conduct of Mr. Justice Fitzgerald. The House is always very guarded in its language in reviewing the conduct of the judges of the land, and the hon. member is now, as I understand him, about to give the House some hearsay story with regard to that judge. I am bound to point out to the member that I think, considering that the House is not in a position to express its opinion on any motion before it, it is not becoming to the judge to give hearsay stories with regard to his conduct.

Further on, 17th August, 1882, Mr. Speaker Brand makes this remark:

The hon. member when he speaks of the judges of the land, must use temperate and moderate language. If he has any censure to pass upon a judge the law and the constitution point out the course to be followed. If he does not adopt that course he is bound to speak of the learned judge in temperate language.

In April, 1884, Mr. Healy said:

In the Republic of America it would be impossible to find a judge like Mr. Justice Lush who would sentence a man like Valentine Baker to only twelve months imprisonment, while he—

Mr. SPEAKER—Order, Order. The hon. member is not in order. He must not use language that is disrespectful to Her Majesty's judges. He may comment upon their conduct, but he is not in order in using language that is disrespectful towards them.

Mr. HEALY—I was referring to the American judges.

Mr. SPEAKER—The hon. member was using disrespectful language in regard to the judges of the land, and was contrasting their conduct with that of the American judges.

My impression with regard to the matter is that the hon. member may refer to the conduct of the judiciary in general terms, but if he makes a special attack upon any judge, that would not be in order.

Mr. TARTE. I have no intention whatever to go outside of the rules of the House. At the same time, I think my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) should not enter so strong a protest before having heard what I have to say. I have just as much respect as he has for the judiciary of the province of Quebec. I have not attempted to use them as political tools. I have always tried to have them respected. But I think that you have interpreted my words rightly, Sir, and that I was not outside the rules of the House. I was stating that to-day public confidence is destroyed in the judiciary in the province of Quebec. I am surrounded here by members of the bar on both sides of the House. During the last six months I have received as a newspaper man, more complaints against the judges of the province of Quebec than I have received on any other question; and I may say that these complaints came from both political parties—from Queen's counsel of both political parties. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works knows, and my hon. friend the Solicitor-General knows, that in Montreal complaints are general; and, Sir, could it be otherwise? During the last two or three years one-half of our judges in the province of Quebec have accepted commissions, duties outside of their own official functions. Members of the bar have complained in vain, the people have complained in vain, and finally the press has taken hold of the question. What has been the answer of some of the judges? We have been threatened with imprisonment. Well, some of us have gone to them and told them to put us in gaol, but we were not put in gaol, and some of us who have been thus threatened, are to-day on the floor of Parliament. If public confidence in the judiciary is destroyed in the province of Quebec, it is because, in the first place, judges have been chosen nearly always from amongst the most active partisans, and especially on account of the political services they have rendered. If, after they had been appointed, whatever their political complexion, they had acted as judges ought to act, we would not complain. Unfortunately it is the fact—and I appeal to legal gentlemen on both sides of the House to bear out my statement—that the political leanings of the judges in the province of Quebec are in most cases known beforehand. There is not a contested election, there is not a libel case, in which the leaning of a judge is not known in advance. I have just alluded to judges who have accepted commissions. I was in the House the other day when my hon. friend the Solicitor-General told us in a very few words that judges who have sat on important commissions, had not even asked permission to do so. We have seen judges accepting salaries from the Government of the province of Quebec, salaries of $2,000 or $3,000, for performing duties that are unbecoming to judges, doing things that have never been done by judges in any other country that I know of, and yet we are asked to sit silent and not to complain. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works knows right well that on many occasions of late years, judges in the province of Quebec have not only neglected their duty—if the word is not parliamentary I will withdraw it—but have actually conspired with some politicians in favour of one party against another; they have conspired, and they have been paid for so doing. I make this statement boldly to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going a little too far; I think he had better make his language a little more moderate. The statement that they have been paid for doing certain things is not quite parliamentary, and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement.

Mr. TARTE. I am perfectly prepared to withdraw the words if they are not parliamentary; but I want to ask from you, Sir, and from Parliament, if a judge comes down from the bench to-morrow, if he goes on a political commission and receives a high salary therefor, am I not permitted to state that fact to the House?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; but the hon. gentleman went further than that. He said that certain judges had conspired to do certain things for which they were paid.

Mr. TARTE. I withdraw the words if, by the rules of the House, I am obliged to do so; but, Sir, the hard fact is there, that judges have come down from the bench, to the knowledge of the whole Dominion, and have sat on political commissions, and the public treasury of the province of Quebec has paid them for it. I want to know from you, if judges act in that way, if judges interfere publicly with politics, and if we cannot complain of that in this Parliament, what other place is there where our complaints may more properly be made? But, Sir, I am told—and I am quite prepared to abide by that doctrine—that when you want to attack a judge, you must impeach him. Well, my political career in this Parliament has not been very long, but I think that when I have pledged myself to a statement in the past, I have proved it. If time had allowed I would certainly, during this session, have impeached two or three judges; and if a kind providence smiles on me, and if I am here again next year, I pledge myself to impeach two or three judges of the province of Quebec. I have not risen in this House to make these statements without being able to prove them. I think we have suffered long enough. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, who is an able lawyer, instead of lecturing me, should himself take the lead in the judicial reform that is so badly needed in the province of Quebec. I have myself witnessed conduct of certain judges that cannot be explained. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has represented the Crown for many years in the city of Montreal. He knows that the rule is that the Crown itself fixes the date of the trial, and the judge never interferes in criminal cases to fix the date of the trial. Well, Sir, in a certain case in which I was myself interested, one of the judges, did, on two occasions, fix the date of the trial of men who were not prosecuted by the Crown; he fixed the trial while there were prisoners in gaol. Why? The intention was to deprive me of two important witnesses, and to protect certain men who, since that time, have been punished by this Parliament. In a trial recently held in the province of Quebec, another rule was followed. The lawyer that was defending one of the accused was also defending prisoners in gaol at the time. He said: My clients are willing to let their trial go, after the trial of the accused now. The judge said no. Of course, the Crown is the master of the situation in all these cases. The object was the same—to attain a political object. Sir, I want to know if a judge, on the same question of principle, has a right to decide white and black to suit his political purposes. We have witnessed such cases during late years in the province of Quebec. We have seen more than that. During the last year or two, we have seen judges, after having come down from the bench, assisting at what we call in Quebec "petit banc," and sitting there side by side with honest men, no doubt, but men not trained in law, such as grocers. I wish to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works if a judge should have permitted himself to occupy such a position? Of course, a great many judges would not lower themselves to that kind of business; but, unfortunately, as I have said, a great many of our judges to-day have been chosen from amongst the most rabid partizans. I am sorry to say some of them are inferior men. When you have to do with high-minded men, you are satisfied that there is a chance that law and decency will not be violated; but when you have to do with inferior men who are occupying high positions, the chances are that both the judiciary and the law lose the respect of the masses. There was a time when judges went so far in their political actions as to be Ministers of the Crown at the same time. We, in the province of Quebec, are not very far from that state of things to-day, when you see judges agreeing to sit as commissioners on the official acts of politicians. Under these circumstances, I hold it would be even better if those judges came down from the bench and entered this House and sat with us. Although citizens are not allowed to attack the judges, these judges are becoming more powerful than Ministers, they are becoming the real political arbiters of our destinies. On reading the celebrated speech delivered by Lord Brougham in 1828, it seems as if it had been written for us to-day. Here is what he said:

Now, what is the consequence of this carrying party principles into judicial appointments? The choice of judges is fettered by being confined to half the profession, so that you have less chance of able men, and those you get are of necessity partizans, and therefore less honest and impartial. Why should the whole bench be ministerial or Tory? No man can desire it to be so for the purposes of judging over a community, far, very far, from being ministerial or Tory. Yet it must be so unless vacancies should occur during those visits of Whig Ministries, "few and far between," when once in a quarter of a century power alights upon that party, and then spreads its wings and flies from them in a few months. Does not this arrangement instil into the minds, both of expectant judges and of men already on the bench, a feeling of a party fatal to strict justice in political questions? I speak impartially but unhesitatingly on this point, for it is perfectly notorious that, nowadays, whenever a question comes before the bench, whether it be upon a prosecution for libel or upon any other matter connected with politics, the counsel at their meetings take for granted that they can tell pretty accurately the leaning of the court, and predict exactly enough which way the consultation of the judges will terminate, though they may not always discover the particular path which will lead to that termination. While the system I complain of continues, while you suffer it to continue, such a leaning is its necessary consequence. The judges have this leaning; they must have it; they cannot help having it; you compel them to have it; you choose them on account of their notoriously having it at the bar; and you vainly hope that they will suddenly put it off when they rise by its means to the bench. On the contrary, they know they fill a certain situation, and they cannot forget by whom they were placed there, or for what reason.

Is it not a fact that, to-day, the whole judicial system of the province of Quebec is saturated with political partizanship? I have presented to this House a state of facts that cannot be denied. Where is the remedy to be found? If circumstances had allowed, I would have given the judges to whom I have alluded an opportunity of vindicating themselves, if they could do so; but I thought it my duty, without making a motion to-day, to call the attention of the House to these facts. Where, I repeat, is the remedy? It is a pretty difficult matter to inflict punishment on judges. They are protected in a great many ways. I will not offer remarks that might hurt the feelings of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), but I think a great many lawyers are afraid to complain of the judges. They are afraid that the judges might ruin them. I know, for example, some judges who do not reside in the divisions in which they are obliged to reside, but the members of the bar are afraid to complain. On many occasions the judges of Montreal have behaved in a manner that has been complained of privately by nearly every member of the bar. I could place on the Table of this House dozens and dozens of articles and complaints made by leading lawyers in Montreal. When I asked one of these gentlemen to put down his name, he said: If I do so, I will lose all my cases. The true remedy rests in the hands of this Parliament. Would it be better to impeach two or three judges or even more, or hold a full inquiry into the administration of justice in Quebec? I am told, moreover, that these abuses are not altogether confined to Quebec. Parliaments have already made inquiries. I think, Sir, that we should not, after all, be too much afraid about talking of the judges. We must not, of course, destroy the respect that is necessary for the administration of the law, but, at the same time, the judges are not above the law. The judges are subject to the law as we are. They should be the first to observe the law, and when you see them, as we have seen them in the province of Quebec, scorning the law, laughing at the law, laughing at the people complaining about them, I think that the duty of this Government is to hold an inquiry. They would discover, for instance, —I am prepared to give the evidence whenever they like to have it—I am prepared to prove that judges have subscribed for political purposes—

Mr. BELLEY. No; no.

Mr. TARTE. I hear my hon. friend say "ha, ha." I never made a statement in this House that I did not prove. I will go out of this House if I do not prove it. Sir, let the judges be judges. We do not ask anything else but that, but it seems to me that the people have a right to insist upon this Government compelling the judges to be judges. I want to know from the Minister of Justice if he thinks that it is a thing to be allowed, that judges in active execution of duty can act as commissioners for the Local Governments? Are the judges wanted or not? If they have not enough of work, let us know it. If they have enough of work then when they spend months and months acting as commissioners, they neglect their duty. Sir, I know judges who, during the last two years, have made for themselves salaries varying from $8,000 to $10,000 a year. As my hon. friends to my right know, a certain number of judges in the province of Quebec are employed by the Local Government in doing work outside of their official duties. I do not know if it is the same thing in the other provinces; but what I do know is, that it is not becoming, and that it is not fitting for a judge to act in such a way. And, Sir, when I see that, among the judges that are acting to-day as commissioners, some of these judges have been tools in the hands of my hon. friends on the other side, I thought that I was within parliamentary rules in saying that they were paid for their services. I may be wrong, but the fact is so, and I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice, and of the acting Prime Minister to-day to that state of things. Is it going to be allowed in the province of Quebec that judges will step down from the bench and interfere actively with politics? We have excluded the judges from Parliament after hard fights, and we had strong reasons for so doing. The same reasons exist to-day, and, Sir, if the same reasons exist the same rules are not applied. I am very sorry to have been obliged to call your attention to these facts, but I have been asked to do so, not only by my electors but by members of the bar. I do not know if a great many of them will rise after me in this Chamber. I know that it is a more pleasant duty for members of the bar to defend judges; even judges that have been denounced by them at certain times; but, Sir, we owe as a duty to our electors, as a duty to justice, to see that the judges are kept in the path of the law and of right. As I have said, if I am here next year—it may not be a very pleasant notice of motion that I will give—but if I am here during next session of Parliament it will be my duty to state specific facts that I would be prepared to state to-night; facts that I have got the proof of in my hands to-day, showing that judges have subscribed money for political purposes, showing that judges—I will not say conspired, since the word is unparliamentary—but showing that judges have agreed between themselves and with a certain number of political men to do certain political things. And, Sir, I hope that those facts upon which I again call the attention of the Government will be weighed by them, and that they will take the lead themselves as it is their duty to do so.

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Tarte) has told us that if he be spared until next year, he will bring forward specific charges against certain members of the judiciary of the province of Quebec. I think it will be conceded by all members of this House, and by the people of the country, that it would have been far better for him to have waited until next year before making the general onslaught that he has just delivered; in fact slinging mud promiscuously at the members of the bench, not naming any one judge or another as having been guilty of very grave charges, I may say of the heinous crimes of which he has accused them. He has indiscriminately cast aspersions upon the whole bench of the province of Quebec, composed of thirty judges of the Superior Court, twenty-two of whom are his own fellow-countrymen, but without indicating any one of these distinguished gentlemen as the person against whom he has directed his accusations. I myself, Sir, have had the honour of being now for thirty years a member of the bar of the province of Quebec, and I must say, to the honour and credit of the judiciary of that province, that although poorly paid men—as is recognized throughout the Dominion by those who know the position they hold and the status they have to maintain in society—to their credit be it said, that although these judges in the city of Montreal and elsewhere in the province of Quebec have been called upon to decide cases involving millions of dollars, we have never once yet heard the integrity of one of our judges attacked, or their honesty impugned in the administration of the law. Mr. Speaker, we are told by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) that he had been flooded with complaints by members of the bar on both sides of politics. Just as he told us a few evenings ago that he had been flooded with complaints against the clergy, so to-night he tells us that he has been flooded with complaints from members of the bar against the judiciary; but he says that when he asked those men who went to him with their complaints to give him the authority of their names, they declined. Well, Sir, I must say that it is the first time that I have ever heard such an attack made upon the courage and honour of the bar of Quebec, because I feel that the bar of Quebec is quite willing not only to assume the responsibility of purging its body of members who are unworthy of it, but I have seen the time in days gone by, when men were not afraid to stand up and make their accusations, and name the persons whom they charged with any particular offence. But, Sir, I cannot believe that the members of the bar of Quebec, or any number of them, holding prominent positions, would be so cowardly as to say behind the backs of the judges what they would not say in the face of the country. Now, Sir, we have been told that it is an extraordinary thing that judges should have been called upon to act upon certain commissions. Why, Sir, let us look to the mother country. Have we not seen there within recent years the political parties appointing judges upon various commissions—land commissions, investigations into political offences, and for many other purposes; and, to the credit of the public men of the Empire be it said, never was the ermine besmirched by accusations against those men such as have been launched against our judges in the province of Quebec. I say it is unworthy of any member of this House to stand up and cast aspersions upon our judges, unless he is prepared to make a charge and define his charge, and name the individual whom he accuses. To stand up here and indiscriminately asperse the character of the whole bench of the province of Quebec is taking an undue advantage of the position which the hon. gentleman holds as a member of this House. He told us that he has made two motions this year, and that he has not had an opportunity of bringing forward what he desired. I want to ask this hon. House what prevented the hon. gentleman bringing forward anything he had to bring forward? What prevented him impeaching any judge he desired to impeach? For months and months he made the province of Quebec and the whole Dominion ring with promises that he was going to bring charges against our judges. Well, Parliament opened: he had just come from his constituents; he had been telling his constituents, and the public through the press, that he was going to bring those charges, that he was going to make certain judges tremble in their shoes if not to come down from their positions. Well, from the beginning to the end of this session what have we had? We had a motion on the paper with reference to the documents in Robert McGreevy's case. The Government might have in their discretion refused to bring down those documents, which were confidential; but in order to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity, if he had anything to say against one of the most distinguished judges in the province of Quebec, a gentleman who was a distinguished member of this House at one time, and a distinguished member of the bar, a gentleman who is a credit to his race and to the Dominion of Canada, we brought down those papers at the very first opportunity. With regard to the second motion of the hon. gentleman, there were no papers. The hon. gentleman was in the House three minutes before his motion was called; I was sitting here waiting to give whatever explanations were necessary; the hon. gentleman disappeared, and one of his friends called out "drop" when the motion was called. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that there was nothing to prevent the hon. gentleman bringing any charge he wished to bring against any member of the bench of the province of Quebec; and I consider that it is an injustice to the bench of that province, and to the people as well—it is creating a disturbed state of feeling in the minds of the people who have to go before those judges and have their interests tried by them—I say it is an injustice to those men, against whom no man can breathe any suspicion, to hurl against them these indefinite accusations, which, when the opportunity was given to the hon. gentleman, he did not lay before this House in definite terms, so that any charge might be dealt with according to the principles of justice. He says that he has not made any charge yet against any persons which he has not proved; but what charge has he made to-night? What judge has he mentioned? Talk about the bravery of coming before this House and making good his words. Why, Sir, what words has he used except general aspersions against a body of men who have not their superior in any other province of the Dominion nor upon this continent? The other day I had the pleasure of assisting at a banquet where Consul-General Knapp represented the United States of America.

An hon. MEMBER. Louder.

Mr. CURRAN. If the hon. gentleman has anything to say, let him say it. I am very glad to hear this interruption. This cackling like a lot of geese merely demonstrates the humiliating position of these hon. gentlemen. I say that if any hon. gentleman has any interruption to make, let him make it like a man. I am here to defend no particular person. If there is any judge charged with an offence, the Government is ready to place him upon trial. Let him be impeached, and justice will be done; but in the name of common decency let us not have aspersions cast upon a body of men who do not deserve such treatment. Consul-General Knapp, I was going to say, only a few days ago, speaking at the banquet of the Board of Trade in the city of Montreal, said he would carry with him, amongst other memories of Canada, the fact that we had a judiciary of which any country might be proud. He said that, dealing with the affairs of Canada as he had found them during his stay here for the past four years. But there is no necessity for any such testimony. What gentleman in this country has attacked the bench of the province of Quebec except the hon. gentleman who has now raised his voice against them? For months and months we have had these attacks made; we have had public confidence disturbed; we have had the people in a state of mental turmoil; but there has been no good result. And tonight, in this House, we have simply this speech of the hon. gentleman, in addition to other speeches made and articles written; but we have no charge made in this Parliament against any individual of having been guilty of any corrupt act. We have no charge that this House can possibly deal with, and when the hon. gentleman asks the Government to take note of his remarks, I want to know what the Government is going to investigate. Has there been any petition laid before them? Has there been any document signed by any responsible person asserting certain things against certain individuals? Nothing; and yet the attempt has been made to asperse still more the characters of those honourable judges by an indefinite attack that will be carried through the province to-morrow by the public press. The hon. gentleman is therefore entirely in error when he says that he had no opportunity of making his charges here. He had every opportunity. His first motion was granted; his second motion was dropped. He has come before this Parliament tonight simply for the purpose of making one more attack of this indefinite kind upon the judiciary of the province of Quebec, and I am satisfied that the people of that province, seeing that he has failed to make good his words, will at all events wait until he lays his charges before this Parliament in proper form and in such a manner that they can be met by those who are charged, before they place any more reliance upon anything that the hon. gentleman may say upon the subject.

Mr. AMYOT. I fully concur in what the hon. Solicitor-General has said, and I wish only to add a few words, which I feel it is my duty, under the circumstances, to say. If we look at the "Canadien" of the 4th January, we find the hon. gentleman's programme to his electors, in which he said:

Scandalous abuses have introduced themselves into the administration of justice; too many judges have become political partizans.

Therefore, as far back as the 4th January, the hon. gentleman must have been ready to make his charges and give his evidence. He now pretends that it was not possible for him since then to bring down a regular impeachment before this House. Well, justice has been done to that pretence, and it is not longer tenable. The man who wants to attack such a body as the judiciary of our Dominion, the real rampart of our liberties, and who desires to retain his standing in public opinion, should be ready with his charges and evidence, and not trifle with the matter. The hon. gentleman has thrown a general accusation against the whole judiciary; but he has only mentioned two cases, one in which the judge would have himself postponed or fixed a trial, and another in which the judges sat upon what the hon. gentleman terms the petit banc or petty bench. Then he precised his accusations a little more, and brought them home to parties whom we cannot fail to recognize. I will not go into the details, but will remind this House that one of the enquêtes to which he alludes is the enquête concerning the Baie des Chaleurs. Who advised the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint three judges to investigate that matter? Who, if not the political leader of my hon. friend in the province of Quebec at that time, Mr. Mercier? Mr. Mercier took the responsibility of the enquête, he took the responsibility of the choice of judges, and among the judges the president of the court belonged to the Liberal party. But I never found a Conservative in this Dominion who accused him of corruption or neglect of duty because he was a Liberal. You will not find the Conservative party attacking any of the Liberal judges and going back to their career as lawyers in order to remind the people that they were of this or that colour. We have more respect than that for our judges. The three judges were appointed, and no one would accuse any one of them of partiality or neglect of duty. Now the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) says that the judges ought not to go down from their position to act as commissioners. But when the hon. members Mr. Casgrain and Mr. DeBoucherville wanted another inquiry they selected only one judge, and they appointed to sit with him a lawyer and a merchant. The hon. gentleman asks how can a judge go down and sit with a wholesale merchant. What can we do to please the hon. gentleman? If judges are selected he says they should not go down and sit as commissioners, and when lawyers and merchants are chosen he says they are unworthy of the position. What does he want? He should know that there is a law in the province of Quebec which authorizes the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint commissioners. He must take somebody, and how many will he find in this Dominion who do not belong to one or the other of the different political parties?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. To whom do you belong?

Mr. AMYOT. Thank Heaven I do not belong now to the party in which we find the hon. gentleman, and in which men say something to-day and the next day flatly contradict themselves when brought face to face with proof. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) we know accused Dr. Montizambert, of Grosse Isle, of having told him many things. Dr. Montizambert is an honourable and serious man, who does not speak without knowing what he says. The next day he contradicted the hon. gentleman, and those heads which are very small and in which there is nothing should hold their tongues. Judge Mathieu was selected as the chairman of the second commission. Is there a lawyer in the province of Quebec who has not the law books of Judge Mathieu and his judicial reports in his library? Is there a judge who has worked more in the interests of the legal profession? Judge Mathieu fell sick, and Judge Pagnuelo replaced him.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. What was his illness?

Mr. AMYOT. What was his illness? Overworked, perhaps. I do not know; I am not a doctor; but he was reported sick. Perhaps there were cowardly accusations made by some papers, edited by irresponsible people, which may have tried him. Perhaps there were found in the press then some people, hiding themselves behind the responsibility of editors worth nothing, who would throw out all sorts of accusations against that gentleman, and as he has some nobleness of character, he may have suffered from those insinuations, I admit; but if any of those gentlemen know something against him they should have the moral courage to come before this House and indict him. It is not a fair way to fight a man when he is not here, and throw out all sorts of insinuations without daring to name any one, but hoping that the public will know who is meant. That is not a fair way, and certainly does not reflect to the credit of the hon. member for L'Islet.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why did they not appoint Bancroft?

Mr. AMYOT. My hon. friend has found Bancroft, and he should thank me for that, because he could not find him himself.

Mr. McMULLEN. One rogue can find another.

Mr. AMYOT. You have heard, Sir, that nice expression, "One rogue may find another."

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary expression.

Mr. AMYOT. I take it from where it comes from, and it falls down to my feet. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) says that the judges should not interfere with politics. I hold in my hand a report of that bench which he calls the "petit banc." I read over that report and the evidence, and there is not a word of politics in it. It is the history of a robbery under the cover of law; it is the history of a conspiracy against public money; it is the history of people authorizing themselves, with the authority the law has placed in their hands, to take money from the public Treasury. It is the history of facts. There is no politics in that; there may be political consequences; but I do not find anywhere that our judges have interfered with politics. And when the Government wants to learn facts important to the public, I think that the best men to select for enquêtes are the judges of the land, who have the experience, are learned in the law and who know what questions are legal, their minds being trained to the consideration of these points. I must prefer them to act as commissioners—or call them what you like—than men whose study and experience are not in the practice of the law. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) says that some judges have paid for being appointed. I protest against any such insinuation, because, as it is put, it weighs against every one of the judges. Every one of the judges now may be suspected, after this accusation, of having paid for his appointment. And if the hon. gentleman—I hope it may not be the case—should disappear with his papers and his secrets, then, for the rest of their lives the judges would be suspected of having bought their appointments. That is not fair fighting; it is not worthy of the position of a member of this House. I may speak of the judges lately appointed. Take Judge Lacoste—Sir Alexander Lacoste—will the hon. gentleman leave the name of Sir Alexander Lacoste as one who may be suspected of having bought his position?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Nobody believes that. He is a most honest man.

Mr. AMYOT. There is the Hon. Justice Hall; will he be suspected of having bought his commission?

Mr. TARTE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. AMYOT. Am I out of order?

Mr. TARTE. No; but you are putting questions to me. If I am not allowed to give names, I should not be asked for names. My hon. friend does not know what he is speaking about.

Mr. AMYOT. The Hon. Justice Blanchet has been appointed lately. Is he suspected of having paid for his appointment? It is all very fine to cast suspicion in this general way, but when we come to the names, it is a different matter. I will not undertake to speak of the judges of the district of Montreal; I do not know enough of the Montreal bar, and I will leave that for the Montreal bar to deal with. I speak of the Quebec judges, and I deny the statement the hon. gentleman has made.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman who objects is not acquainted with one of our judges. Now, one of the judges lately appointed is Judge Bossé. I am speaking of the Appeal Court, because in the Superior Court we have had no changes lately. Will any one in this House pretend for a moment that Judge Bossé has bought his commission? The Appeal Court of the province, which sits alternately in Quebec and Montreal, is composed of the four judges of whom I speak, lately appointed; the others, like Justices Baby and Wurtele, have been appointed of old time. As the court is constituted, it is of such a character as would make it a source of pride to any country. More learned judges, harder-working judges, more experienced judges cannot be found anywhere, and it is a real pleasure for any lawyer to be at that court, when judgments are delivered. There is no better piece of legal literature to be found than the judgments delivered by the members of this court, and every lawyer who takes pride in his profession, will approve of my words. Now, we have our Superior Court judges, Justices Casault, Routhier, Andrews and Caron. Will the hon. gentleman undertake to attack any one of these judges? I am sure he will not do so. Then, why these accusations against our bench? They are like a shot from a hidden marksman, directed toward a crowd.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You refer to the North-west rebellion.

Mr. AMYOT. Well, in the North-west I should probably find some people much more polite and intelligent and witty than the hon. gentleman who interrupts me. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) complains of the way the judges are appointed. How does he want them to be appointed? Take them individually, and you find they are worthy of their high position. What does the hon. gentleman want, then? He is vexed because they have been finding facts which do not agree with his political views. And he says that the bench is falling into discredit. I say the bench has not fallen into discredit, generally speaking. It may have fallen into discredit in some quarters, where the ideas and writings of the hon. gentleman have reached. He is the cause of that discredit. The judges may not be held in high respect by the hon. gentleman and those who pull along with him, but, generally speaking, our judges are respected. If any one of the judges has done any wrong, let the person who knows it bring the facts before Parliament, and he will find, not one, but all the members of Parliament ready to give him assistance, because we want a good bench; we want honest judges, judges deciding questions according to their oath of office and the justice of the case. But, Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of the Dominion, more particularly a citizen of the province of Quebec, in conscience I feel bound to protest against the general accusation of the hon. gentleman against the whole of our bench. I say it is unfair; it is unworthy of his position as a member of Parliament. He has had ample time, he should have come here with a precise and definite accusation. He has spoken of a judge who he said was to be condemned because he fixed a trial. I never heard any such accusation against a judge before. I think I may guess at the circumstances to which he refers, and I invite him to bring the facts specially before the House. If he finds anything wrong in the judge's conduct, I invite him to bring the case before Parliament, I invite him to bring down the facts that they may be examined. In the name of the Bar of Quebec I protest against the insinuation that we, the lawyers, dare not give our opinions about our judges. In any law suit, one of the two parties always loses his case, and generally the lawyer who loses is not afraid of criticising. It is in Quebec as in every other country. But how can we complain of the honesty of our judges when we believe them to be honest? The hon. gentleman may remember a law suit that we had together in 1886, when the judge was strongly against me, but the jury was all in my favour. Did I complain of the judge? No; I differed in opinion from him, but I thought he was honest, and that he had charged the jury according to his convictions. The hon. gentleman never thought then of complaining against the judges.

Mr. LISTER. What was the case?

Mr. AMYOT. I took an action for libel against the hon. member for L'Islet.

Mr. LISTER. What was the libel?

Mr. AMYOT. I will send you the record, if you wish.

Mr. LISTER. We want to know what the case was about.

Mr. AMYOT. The jury declared the article to be libellous and defamatory.

Mr. TARTE. But no damage was declared to have been done.

Mr. AMYOT. But the jury decided that the hon. gentleman should pay all the costs, and the judge did not think fit to tell the jury that they had no right to mix up the question of costs with the verdict. The hon. gentleman then found that our judiciary was splendid, he admired the judiciary of the province of Quebec; but to-day, when some of the judges have decided against him, they all become perverse, bad, rotten, and there should be an inquiry, and so on.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Which side were you on ?

Mr. AMYOT. I need not say that I know how much weight to attach to these interruptions. They may have the effect of disturbing me, but they will not convince anybody that those gentlemen are serious. I never interrupt a speaker as they are interrupting me. Whenever I do interrupt I do it politely. But I take the general conduct of the members at your left—thank God they are not all alike, from their chief down. I can count dozens who are respectable, and are incapable of discourtesy—but, judging from the rank and file of the Opposition, there must be some amongst them who have received a bad education and who do not know how to conduct themselves in a respectable Assembly. Sir, I am sorry that the hon. member for L'Islet wishes the whole Dominion to believe that our judiciary is corrupt, is venal, is unworthy of the bench. I protest against those accusations; I protest against the mode he has adopted of making sweeping accusations without mention of any specific cases. He has had ample time to formulate his accusations, and yet he comes into the House at the end of this session saying that he has had no time to prepare specific accusations, and tries to justify himself on that ground for making these sweeping charges against the whole judiciary. I am of the opinion, and I know something about it, that our judiciary is equally worthy with the judiciary of any country in the world.

Mr. LAURIER. In the few words I intend to offer to the House on the subject brought up by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), I intend, so far as I can, to speak with the judicial calmness which the subject demands. It is a mere truism to say, as has been said by the Solicitor-General, that the bench ought to be treated with the greatest respect. That is a proposition that no one will contradict. But it is with the bench as with every other class of the community—the judges will be treated, not all with the same respect; there will be some degree in the respect which is given to them, but all will enjoy the respect, I believe, to which they are entitled, and which their conduct deserves. The Solicitor-General, a moment ago, made the absurd remark, that my hon. friend from L'Islet had attacked the whole judicial body of Quebec. Sir, no one supposes that my hon. friend ever had the intention of attacking, for instance, the character of the present Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals. I could name many other judges, also, who are held in the highest esteem and respect by all parties in the province of Quebec. But it would be equally absurd to say that the bench of the province of Quebec to-day commands the same respect that it commanded some years ago. The reason is very obvious, it has been stated by my hon. friend from L'Islet; it is that all appointments to the bench made by the present Government, have been political appointments. I will not say that they have all been bad, but some have been bad simply because they have been made on political grounds. Sir, it is not on record that all the members of the bar in the province of Quebec who belong to the Liberal party would make good judges, but it is not on record that the present Government ever appointed a Liberal member of the bar to the bench in that province.

Mr. OUIMET. Yes; Judge Belanger, Judge Doherty. Judge DeLorimier was never much of a politician, but I think most of the time he voted with hon. gentlemen opposite. And Judge Pagnuelo.

Mr. LAURIER. Judge Belanger and Judge Doherty were appointed, if I remember aright, in 1873.

Mr. OUIMET. Will you name the Conservatives you have appointed ?

Mr. LAURIER. Sir, if the Liberal Government did not appoint a Conservative judge, it is because, when they came into power, they found none but Conservatives on the bench. They were five years in office, and I do not think they can be reproached with having made bad appointments. I do not say that all the appointments which have been made by the present Government have been bad, but I say unhesitatingly that the present Government, not the Government of twenty years ago, but the Government which came into office after Mr. Mackenzie's downfall, have appointed men who had no other qualification for the position than the fact that they had been mere party hacks. This Government have taken members from this House and promoted them to the bench for which they never had the slightest qualification. I do not make this fact a reproach against the Government, and I say that the same rule has not been followed in appointing judges in the province of Quebec that has invariably prevailed in the province of Ontario. In the latter province men have been appointed to the bench of the Superior courts, at all events.—I do not know as to the inferior courts—who were chosen for their merits, and invariably without regard to their politics. But the present Government have done with the bench in the province of Quebec as they are now doing with the Senate. It was one of the rules laid down at Confederation that the Senate should be a body representing both political parties in the Dominion. Has that rule been followed? Is it not a fact that for years vacancies in the Senate have been filled, with a few exceptions, by creatures of the Government; that not a Liberal, except, perhaps, Mr.

John Macdonald, has been appointed to the Senate ?

Mr. HAZEN. How about Senator Snowball ?

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Snowball, so far as I recollect, was not a Liberal when he was appointed. He may have been before his appointment, and he may be a Liberal now, but he was not when he was appointed. But if, out of all the appointments made by the Conservative Government, there have been two exceptions, they but prove the rule I have just laid down. I ask my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Hazen) if he is of the opinion that the Senate, as it is now constituted, fairly represents the political parties now existing in this country ? Sir, you might count the number of Liberal Senators on the fingers of one of your two hands. The Senate is now composed very much as was the Legislative Council of the province of Quebec at one time, when, out of twenty-four members, there was only one Liberal. This is why the work of the bench has been degraded, as it has been. It is asserted, and hon. gentlemen know the names as well as I do, that judges of the province of Quebec have paid for their appointments. It is asserted, and I believe the truth will be forthcoming some day, that judges contributed to the election fund of the Conservative party at the last election. This is a statement current in the streets of Montreal and Quebec, and I believe, moreover, the fact will be proved before many months have passed over.

Mr. LISTER. Inferior judges in Ontario have paid for their appointments.

Mr. LAURIER. These are the reasons why my hon. friend has spoken as he has to-night. Certainly the bench should be respected, but if the bench has to be respected, let the appointments be made, not for considerations of politics, but simply for legal qualifications. But the question involves a more broad and more useful consideration. The hon. member for L'Islet has alluded to a question which I think should receive the consideration of this House, that is to say, that the judges should not sit on political commissions. The Solicitor-General asserted that the judges were appointed on commissions in England. It is true judges are so appointed ; but it is to decide questions of a judicial or quasi-judicial character. Judges have been appointed to sit on commissions in Ireland on land questions, and very properly so ; but it is not on record that judges have been appointed to sit on political questions. I know but one instance, and that was the Parnell Commission. That is a precedent, if a precedent it be, in favour of the theory of the Solicitor-General. But the hon. gentleman knows that this action, this appointment was strongly resisted by Mr. Gladstone and the Liberal party. Parliament, however, decided that judges should sit on that commission ; but everybody will agree, and history proves it, that it would have been better if the advice of Mr. Gladstone had been adopted, and the matter had not been dealt with by a commission, but it had been dealt with by Parliament. We have lately had three commissioners appointed. One, appointed by Lieutenant-Governor Angers on the advice, it is true, of Mr. Mercier, was composed of Judges Jetté, Davidson and Baby. As regards those three judges, I have nothing to say.

Mr. CURRAN. There was a Judge Dorion on the Laviolette case

Mr. LAURIER. It was a quasi-judicial case, the question being whether Mr. Laviolette had resigned his seat. This was properly a judicial case. It was not so, however, as regards the question into which Judges Jetté, Baby and Dorion had to inquire. It is true Mr. Mercier is responsible for that commission and not Lieutenant-Governor Angers. But though it was ordered by Mr. Mercier, I think it was a great mistake, and in my opinion Mr. Mercier would have acted more wisely for himself if he had insisted on being tried, not by the commission of judges, but before the Legislature and before the people. However, that is a precedent which is quoted by hon. gentlemen opposite ; but I do not admit its force, for I think it was a great mistake made by Mr. Mercier from a constitutional point of view.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was decided at Ottawa.

Mr. LAURIER. It may have been so, but we have no evidence of it, and it was kept dark. We had a commission appointed by the present Government, consisting of Judge Mathieu and two laymen. As regards Judge Mathieu, every one knows he is a jurist eminent in his profession. Then we had a commission appointed, consisting of Judges Routhier and Tait, and it is a pleasure for me to say that both of those judges are most able men and competent to perform their functions. Nevertheless, while I do not complain of the composition of the commissions in these instances, I contend that the principle is a wrong one, that no judge should be allowed to depart from his judicial functions, and especially he should never be allowed to do so in regard to political matters. We know what politics are, that they involve acrimony and discord to a certain extent ; and if the judges depart from their high judicial functions to act on such commissions, it is obviously adopting a principle which is wrong in itself, and which I am sure would not be tolerated in England. I protest against any such departure from the correct principle of constitutional government, which is that every political offence should be tried on the floor of Parliament. For my part, I would rather have any such offence tried, even by a hostile committee of the House of Commons, where at all events we have all the advantages of discussion, than to have it tried by any commission of judges, because if you have all the advantages which result from a discussion on the floor of Parliament, you have ten chances to get at the truth more than you have even before a Royal Commission. Take the commission which has sat on the charge brought against the Postmaster-General. You have only to read the evidence to see that only half the truth has been revealed. I do not blame the judges for that fact. I think the judges decided properly the question laid before them; but it was because there was not such a discussion as would have taken place on the floor of Parliament or before a committee of this House. As regards the hon. member for L'Islet, I was surprised that the Solicitor-General should have reproached him with not having proceeded with his motion when he had an opportunity. My hon. friend gave the reason, namely, that if he had done so he would not have had the opportunity of discussing it, and so he let it drop in order to bring it on now. Accordingly, nothing in the direction of a reproach can be brought against him. It has been stated against the hon. member for L'Islet that he stated that he would impeach certain judges on charges which he would bring forward. Certainly, for my part, I would have much preferred if the hon. member for L'Islet had specific charges to make against any members of the bench, one, two or three of them, that he should make them in a specific manner. But it is not fair to him to say that he has not done his duty during this session. The session has lasted two months, and we are now within its closing hours, and it is well known that on account of certain procedures that took place, the hon. member could not take his seat at the opening of the House, and so he had no opportunity to bring the charges which he had said he would bring. But if the hon. member for L'Islet has one distinguishing quality more than another, it is that of courage—no man ever accused him of wanting in courage, and if the accusations require to be made, I am quite sure his accusations will be made in due time.

Mr. LANGELIER. I desire to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). I do not want to enter into a discussion as to the administration of justice in the province of Quebec, because I think I shall have another opportunity, but I cannot allow the hon. gentleman's speech and accusations to pass without comment. I was greatly surprised when I observed him last year make the somersault which he did. But of course I could not prevent it. His record recalls to my mind the history of Saul on the road to Damascus, perhaps the change was not due to the same cause, but whatever the cause may have been, the hon. gentleman who has so much zeal in behalf of the Government—as new converts generally exhibit—has no right to fling mud at the heads of the people who have been doing nothing else than he did, except that they have done it with less violence. His speech to-night brought vividly to my mind what I heard him say last year. He spoke to-night of the report of one of the Royal Commissioners—"small benches," as we call them in the province of Quebec—and he said there is nothing political in the report of that commission. I remember very well an occasion when he was not of that opinion, and that occasion was when all the evidence that had been adduced by that commission had been printed and published, and was before the public of the province of Quebec, and in the hon. gentleman's own hands. It was the day previous to the last election in the province of Quebec, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Amyot) will remember the circumstances. I was present at an immense meeting held in the Berthelot market hall, of the city of Quebec. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) made a speech there. He defended every act of the Mercier Government which had been brought before that Royal Commission, and he defended those acts much more strongly than any other member who was present. Not only that, but he made a most violent attack against the whole Conservative party, he called them a corrupt party, and a rotten party, and that was the very expression that he used. Well, of course it is his own business to go back to that rotten party if he likes, but he has no right to throw mud in our faces, because we have remained in the same party that we were in with him for some time.

An hon. MEMBER. Was Mercier in power then?

Mr. LANGELIER. Not any more in power; it was the day previous to the polling of the last election in Quebec. It is not at all a private affair, because it was spoken before an immense gathering of 2,000 electors in the city of Quebec, in my own division. The hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Carroll) was there. I do not remember all who were present, but the audience included several members of this House, and we spoke in defence of our party in the province of Quebec. But none of us spoke so violently against the opposite party as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) did. I did not say one word against the Conservative party in this House, but the hon. gentleman went out of the time and circumstances to make a most violent attack against the whole Ministerial party at Ottawa. I do not know what that party has done since to deserve the support he is giving it to-night. But unless he has seen something very marvellous in the party since, he has no right to approve of that party which he then called a rotten party, and to throw mud at the Liberal party of the province of Quebec.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker, I want to give a personal explanation of these words. I completely deny what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Langelier) has said. At the meeting I only spoke of the Constitution, and I refused to speak of the acts of the administration of Mr. Mercier in any way, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Langelier) has as much memory as he has words, he will remember that.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, though I felt at first disinclined to take any part in the debate, still, after listening to the remarks just fallen from the hon. member for Bellechasse, and to the bold denial opposed by him to the arguments of the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier), I think it my duty to say a few words. The hon. member for Quebec Centre has just drawn the attention of the House to events well known by all those in the province of Quebec who have followed the fluctuating political course of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). Not a word has fallen from the hon. member for Quebec Centre to-night, that did not tally and perfectly agree with the public utterances of the hon. member for Bellechasse on all the hustings of the province of Quebec, and with his written statements in the columns of his journal, "La Justice." The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has imputed as a capital crime to my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) the remarks passed by the latter on the conduct of the judges who have accepted to sit on royal commissions under the circumstances we are all perfectly familiar with. Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking from my own personal experience, I say, fearless of contradiction, that never were the judges impugned with great severity—I should say, with great violence—on the hustings of the province of Quebec, than by the hon. member for Bellechasse, and no lawyer ever displayed greater eloquence in defending the interests of those accused before the royal commissions than the hon. member for Bellechasse. The most violent accusations launched against the judges sitting on those commissions we are now dealing with came from the hon. member. Still, what do we see to-day? We see this very same member standing up in this House and slinging mud at the Liberal party, to which he owes his political station, at least since 1887, and to whose aid he is indebted for his election; we see him to-day, I say, turning his back to the party which defended him, and siding with another party, and with the men whose ermine he has besmirched! Why, Mr. Speaker, at the very opening of this Parliament, the hon. member was seen siding with us, and taking part in a caucus held within the very walls of these buildings. At this caucus he was heard—I feel quite at liberty to make this statement to the House, without betraying the secrecy of our deliberations—he was heard, I say, hurling against the judges the same charges made by him at all the public meetings throughout the province of Quebec, and which we repeat here to-night, on the floor of this House, but with more sincerity than the member for Bellechasse at that time; for, unlike him, we still denounce certain judges who have come down from the bench to meddle with politics. I refrain from commenting too severely on the course of the hon. member for Bellechasse; for I consider he has received at the hands of this House a condign punishment in the ironical cheers and interruptions which have greeted him. As regards the judges, I must enter my solemn protest against the words fallen from the hon. Solicitor-General, to the effect that the hon. member for L'Islet had made a general onslaught and cast aspersions on the whole bench of the province of Quebec, while, as a matter of fact, the latter has plainly stated that his attacks were only directed against three or four members of the judiciary, who have laid themselves open to serious criticism. The members of the judiciary, in general, have all our respect, and their integrity and honesty in the administration of the law are above suspicion; and should it prove true, as stated by the hon. member for Bellechasse, that the public voice brings home to certain members of the bench the accusations brought forward by the member for L'Islet, it can be on no other ground than their enjoying in the public estimation an unenviable reputation, or, in other words, to use a vulgar saying, that the cap fits them. Certain members of the bench are afraid of the threatened inquest, on good ground; and when, at the next session, the hon. member from L'Islet will come before this Parliament and bring forward specific charges against certain members of the judiciary, I have no doubt he will be enabled to substantiate his statements of to-night. Coming to my own constituency, what are the facts in connection with the administration of the law? There happened to be there a certain judge sitting on the bench, who later on went to Spencer Wood, and is now in Ottawa, where he fills the position of Minister of Agriculture, and who in nearly all the cases submitted to him acted the part of a political partizan, to gain favour with his party, without any regard to the strict administration of the law. To substantiate this statement, Mr. Speaker, I need only refer you to a certain record to be found in the Supreme Court archives; and the judge, who had to deal with a controverted election case, was the same Mr. Angers who boasted in a public speech at Montreal, having jumped over the wall of the constitution, as the surest and quickest way of getting past a wall, and bringing his friends into power; you will find on record, I say, an affidavit bearing my signature, in which I charged the judge with having given judgment in the case to gain favour with his friends, and that too in his own private dwelling, without any legal counsel being present to defend the sentenced party. I may also add, Mr. Speaker, that this judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court; that never did Mr. Angers dare lodge a complaint against me; that never have I been summoned to appear before the Bar of the province on the ground of having signed such a document, and that neither have I been sentenced for contempt of court. Why so, Mr. Speaker, if not that he well knew that I could substantiate all my charges? It was with this case as with the threats preferred by Mr. Justice Bossé against the hon. member for L'Islet; after threatening my hon. friend sitting next to me to have him incarcerated, Judge Bossé had to retrace his steps, and, as everybody knows, never was the member for L'Islet imprisoned. Why, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand certain legal proceedings, authenticated by the prothonotary of the court at Montmagny, containing further evidence as to political intrigues carried on by members of the bench, with a view to preventing a candidate from entering the field at the late local elections, against the party which Mr. Angers, in violation of the Constitution, and of his oath of office as well, had placed in power at Quebec; evidence will be found, I say, in these documents, that the counsel for the prosecution prevailed upon one of the judges to deliver up to him the papers on record in the case, with a view to the issuing of a judgment which would have enabled the defendant to run for the local House. These documents will be produced in the proper time, as also evidence, I think, will be brought forward, showing that this judge subscribed to the election fund. Although I did not, at first, intend to address the House in this debate, still I thought it well to take up the gauntlet thrown down by the hon. member for Bellechasse. This is not the first time we have been challenged by him. But let him, Sir, look up his own journal, "La Justice," on the date of the 27th April, 1891, at a time when he filled the office of attorney for the Crown, and let him read an editorial, no doubt penned by him, in which he insinuates the very opposite of what he holds now. Judge Bossé presided in the court. The article reads as follows:—

An unblushing Tory press condemns, in no uncertain tone, the postponement till the next term of the conspiracy trial. This postponement ought to be ascribed, they pretend, to the absence of a second panel, whereas it is well known that it has been ordered by the court, without the interference of the Crown, at the request of Messrs. Murphy and McGreevy.

As previously stated, this article was obviously penned by a lawyer, somewhat conversant with the business of the Crown. As it bears no signature, it cannot be strictly fathered upon the hon. member, though it evidently issued from his pen. I, therefore, say this, that of all men, the hon. member for Bellechasse ought to be the last to sling mud at his opponents, and that he, who was a member of both parties in this House, should have the decency of refraining from condemning either one or the other. Let him, if he wishes to be entitled to the respect of his colleagues, never animadvert on the past career of the Hon. Mr. Mercier or of the Liberal party. When Mr. Mercier was driven from power, the hon. member for Bellechasse chose to abandon him, as he had a right to. We do not reproach him with it; we do not impute to him his desertion as a crime; no, on the contrary we would rather have him as an open antagonist, than see him play the part of a false friend; but, in the name of common decency, let him at least, out of respect to himself, not insult those with whom he has sided and to whom, I regret to say, he is indebted for his election to this House in 1887 and 1890, opposed though he was by the very men upon whom he now fawns in his new role of a sycophant. Another statement of the hon. member I might animadvert on, is when he asserts that Conservative newspapers were never seen to attack the bench; I need but refer him to the "Minerve," which, not long ago, attacked Mr. Justice Jetté. I could also point out to him a pamphlet entitled "A Disgrace," in which the author slings mud at the honourable Judges Plamondon and Dorion. The writer of this brochure, the Hon. Mr. Landry, now sits in the Senate: I do not question his right as to attacking the judges; but I ask the question: when he became a member of this House, why did not the Hon. Mr. Landry impeach the judges? The hon. member for L'Islet, did not attack the whole bench, but only three or four judges whose conduct cannot be defended on any reasonable ground. He censures the course of certain members of the Bench who, in the sight of the whole world, were seen leaving Montreal to go and advise the Lieutenant-Governor at Spencer Wood. As I said, I did not intend to address the House in this debate, and I seize this opportunity for saying that I profess the highest esteem for the judiciary of the province, that is to say, for such members of the Bench as deserve the esteem and the respect of those amenable to the tribunals. But I am sorry to say that some three or four judges are unworthy of such respect and I hope that, next session, we will have the opportunity of having an investigation made into the conduct of the latter before the House.

Mr. BRÔDEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, at this advanced stage of the debate, I only intend to say a few words in relation to a question I have previously put to the Government. It is a well-known fact, as stated by the hon. member for L'Islet, that, at the present time, in the district of Montreal, we are very badly circumstanced, owing to the snail-slow administration of the law, for which the Government is, in a certain measure, open to blame. As stated several times to-night in the course of this debate, the members of the Bench, instead of attending strictly to their judicial duties, have, of late years, sat upon commissions which have taken up a considerable portion of their time. Whether these judges have acted wisely or not, is not now the question at issue; although I consider it would have been preferable had other parties than the judges acted on those commissions. This House is bound to see that the judges keep themselves out of all public affairs, and do nothing outside a judge's work. Judges move, to my mind, in quite a different sphere from ours; and I consider it to be a precedent, fraught with peril, to allow the judges of the land to meddle, directly or indirectly, with the political affairs of the country. The House recollects that a law was enacted with a view to make the judiciary power distinct from the legislative power. Under the existing state of affairs, brought about by the Conservative party, I am sorry to say, we are retrograding to the old system, and to the time when the judges of the land wielded legislative power. Now, Mr. Speaker, I rose, at this stage of the debate, to lay before the House a grievance of the district of Montreal, as to the insufficient number of judges. You are aware that a vacancy occurred in the Superior Court, some months ago, owing to the promotion of Judge Wurtele to the Court of Appeals, and that no appointment has as yet been made to provide for the vacancy. On this ground, I hold the Government are partly open to censure for not taking the necessary steps to insure a speedy administration of the law. My hon. friends from Ontario will realize our position, when I add that a cause entered this very day cannot possibly be heard till the month of December or January next, owing to the roll being so charged. Beyond a doubt this state of things is brought about by the insufficient number of our judges, and is owing to the fact that they hold positions outside of their official duties. I cannot see on what ground a new judge should not be appointed to fill the vacancy created by the promotion of Judge Wurtele. I am quite aware of the difficulties the matter is beset with, springing from a racial or national question, but I consider this is no reason why the citizens of the district of Montreal, amenable to the tribunals, should be left so badly circumstanced. Are the Government unable to cope with the difficulties of the situation? Or, are they attempting again to shift off any responsibility on the question, as they have done in the case of the Manitoba school question and a host of other questions? Mention was made, a little while ago, of the appointment of senators. Why do not the Government fill up the vacancy created in the Bedford district? Assuming that the Senate is to be retained, the vacancies in this body should be filled, so as not to allow a whole session to elapse without appointing a senator for this district. I contend, that as regards this appointment to the Senate, as also in the case of the Manitoba school question, and that of the appointment of judges, the Government are unwilling to set to the task of redressing the grievances complained of. As regards the appointment of a senator for the Bedford district, I take exception to none of the candidates aspiring to the position. I do not object to the choice of the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Baker), one of the candidates aspiring to the position. He is an upright and honourable man; but, on the other hand, the seat he aspires to in the Senate should not fall to his lot, on the ground, I contend, that, under the circumstances, the Government ought to appoint a French Canadian for that district. The province of Quebec is entitled to twenty-four senators. Out of this number, the English-speaking element are entitled to, at most, four or five seats; as a matter of fact, they have seven seats. In the Bedford district, an English senator has just died. The French-Canadian element being in a majority in this district, I contend that a French-Canadian nominee should be appointed as its representative in the Senate. As just stated, on no reasonable grounds would I object, under ordinary circumstances, to the appointment of the hon. member for Missisquoi, nor to that of his competitor, Mr. Justice Foster, who both aspire to the position. But, in the present circumstances, the Government would only be acting fairly by appointing to the vacant position a French-Canadian as the English-speaking element of the province have more than their due portion of seats in the Senate, and as the French-Canadian element are in a majority in this division. Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), who is proving quite entertaining by this time. I will not venture to say that I have felt any surprise at his somersaults, or at hearing him give utterance to opinions quite opposed to his statements of some two years ago on the floor of this House, and which he went on repeating on all the hustings of the province of Quebec. We all bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that when the Hon. Mr. Mercier was in power at Quebec, the hon. member held a position from the National Government. I will not venture to state that he supported this Government for the sake of this position, but I begin to realize that his course evidences that such was one of the motives which actuated his conduct. In 1891, the hon. member openly supported the Mercier administration, and went through the political campaign alongside with Mr. Mercier, in the general elections held that year. He was one of the most determined opponents of the royal commissioners set up, or the small benches, as they were then styled. But behold! now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member flatly contradicts his course of one year ago. The hon. the Postmaster-General (Sir Adolphe Caron) was perfectly entitled to say, in 1886, that the hon. member for Bellechasse was not to be relied upon. I gather from the "Hansard" in the session of 1886, from a speech addressed to the House by the hon.

the Postmaster-General, that the member for Bellechasse had extended his congratulations to the hon. Minister on the ground that he had been knighted by Her Majesty the Queen and also for the help extended by him to the battalion the hon. member was in command of. I find also letters from the hon. member concerning General Middleton in which he flatly contradicts himself in regard to his later statements. As regards Sir Frederick Middleton, the hon. member spoke as follows, in a letter addressed to the General, on the 26th August, 1887:—

DEAR SIR.—I should have written you sooner to join in the unanimous concert of congratulations which you receive from all parts, but a prolonged absence from the city prevented me. Your elevation to the Knighthood is only the first recognition of the services which you have rendered to the Dominion of Canada, and the honour which is bestowed upon you is reflected on all those whom you have encouraged by your personal bravery surely guided by your experience, and who have all largely benefited from the science which you have acquired during an honourable military career.

I deeply regret the attacks of a mean and malicious press against our general, but your reputation stands so high that these foolish slanders cannot reach it.

Allow me to present, through you, my respects to Lady Middleton and believe me,

Your very devoted,

G. AMYOT.

Shortly after this the very same man who had been fawning upon General Middleton, and extending his congratulations to him, attacked him most maliciously. I find in the same volume of the "Hansard" that he thus wrote to the hon. Postmaster-General, the then Minister of Militia:—

What an amount of gratitude the country owes you for the activity and zeal with which you have fulfilled your important duties during these days of trouble! Our soldiers, whose heroic courage during the recent campaign is now known far and wide, know how to appreciate, to their just value, the promptness with which you have acted, your vigilance and your anxiety for their welfare.

The very same man who wrote these encomiastic words, was seen a few months later to recant his professions of friendship and sling mud at the hon. the Minister of Militia, whom he attacked most maliciously. We also see by the "Hansard" that the hon. member sent to the Postmaster-General, telegrams which the latter was so happy in 1887 to read to the House. The member for Bellechasse wired to the then Minister of Militia:—

Arrived here all right. Found General Laurie perfect soldier. Advance of Middleton's troops too hurried; consequence being immense useless expense. Volunteers should be used for garrison and protection of place and ammunition. American scouts and Indians and half-breeds doing the same kind of fighting as rebels, should do the fighting and attacking. Part of Middleton's force exposed to be slaughtered. Troops hearty. Rely upon 9th.

Now here is another telegram dated at Calgary, 14th May, 1885:—

I add and I persist in saying that this war should be made by men fighting in the same way as rebels.

Volunteers are specially adapted for protection of forts and provisions.

I have given of the man but a brief outline, such as chalked out by himself. He is sent to the North-west to fight and he lacks the necessary courage. He took the trouble to send telegrams to the Minister of Militia to tell him that he was only fit for the guard of the forts and the provisions. As to the latter point, I begin to realize that it is his specialty. In 1891, he was siding with us, when the Hon. Mr. Mercier was in power and had patronage at his disposal, and as soon as Mr. Mercier had no more favours to dispense, the member for Bellechasse deserted the Liberal ranks to pass to the enemy. In so doing, he remains faithful to his traditional instincts and true to his character; now, as in 1887 he is guarding the provisions, I need not, I think, Mr. Speaker, expatiate any longer on the subject, as every one must be satisfied that the member for Bellechasse does not deserve henceforth to command the attention of the House.

EXPORT DUTY ON LOGS.

Mr. EDWARDS. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a very important question, not only to this part of the country but to Canada as a whole. I refer to the possibility of the re-imposition of the export duty on logs. The hon. Minister of Finance, in the course of his Budget speech, referred to the matter, stating that it was one that would be considered during the recess; and his remarks were such as to lead the House to believe that, at the next session of Parliament, the export duty might be re-imposed. Of course he did not say that it would be re-imposed; but he spoke as if the question were an open one. Now, I think that the hon. Finance Minister, in making that statement, committed a very serious error. If he had known how much he imperilled the interest of the lumber trade by making that statement, I do not think that he would have made it. This, however, I know right well, that there are a great many who are agitating this question, and who are urging upon the Ministry as forcibly as possible, the advisability of re-imposing the duty. The grounds on which the request is made are as follows:—First, the depletion of our forests, next, the loss of labour to Canadian workmen, and next, the loss to Canadians in the business of furnishing supplies to those engaged in getting out the logs that are exported. Now, so far as the depletion of our forests is concerned, I, as a lumberman, and as one interested in the welfare of Canada, do not desire, by any manner of means to see our forests unduly depleted. It is in the interest of every Canadian that our forests should be preserved. Now, Sir, these gentlemen who are urging the re-imposition of this duty see but one little district of the country. They see the portion of country about the Georgian Bay on Lake Huron and they think that embraces the whole lumber interests of Canada, and that when, as they suppose, that small portion of the country is being depleted, the forests of Canada are being entirely ruined. The lumber interests of Canada, however, extend from Prince Edward Island to Vancouver, and cover a very large territory indeed, and in the whole territory we have great forest riches. Of that there is no kind of doubt. The re-imposition of the export duty upon logs might, perhaps, hinder a portion of them going to the United States, but, at the same time, the whole lumber industry of Canada would be imperilled and very seriously injured. There are those who believe that our pine lumber is very nearly exhausted. There are those who believe that our timber supply is being and has been most largely exhausted at the instance of the lumbermen. This, Mr. Speaker, is not at all the case. There is another source from which the forests of Canada have suffered, and far more extensively than they have suffered from the lumberman's axe; I refer to forest fires, and to fires which are brought about by the settlement of the country—not in every case by legitimate settlement, but very largely by illegitimate settlement. I can point to an instance not 150 miles from the city of Ottawa where over $1,000,000 worth of pine was destroyed by one fire, while the benefit to the country from settlement was simply the raising of $5 worth of potatoes. That is only one instance; but it is safe to say—and I am sure that every lumberman in this House will bear me out in the statement—that ten times the amount of forest wealth has been destroyed in Canada through that instrumentality than has been cut by the lumbermen; and those who desire to protect our forests should devote themselves to advocating the care of our forests and to discouraging, in every way, this illegitimate settlement. If this is done, I will venture this statement, that you may let our timber be cut, even as it is being cut to-day, and it will last this country for at least 100, perhaps 200 years to come. With regard to the loss to Canadian labour, I think a far greater loss would take place if the export duty were re-imposed, and why? Because I believe that the industry would be very much crippled, and that less labour would be employed by the lumbermen than is at present employed. In a great many instances, too, very serious loss would result to the country and the lumbermen, because a great deal of lumber would be burned up which otherwise would have been cut and realized upon, and have brought to the country a good return. Now, even with regard to the Georgian Bay district, I ask if there is the direct loss that is supposed? Not at all. There are a great many who suppose that the sawing of lumber is the great cost of producing it. Such is not the case. The great cost of producing lumber is the production in the woods—the cutting of the timber, the hauling of it, and the driving of it to the mill. The cost of manufacturing lumber, after it is delivered to the mills, is just about one-fifth of the whole. While this is the case, and while I admit there is some loss, as far as the sawing is concerned, yet we do not make that entire loss, because the lumber is rafted by Canadian lumbermen, and the rafting of the logs costs about one-half as much as sawing them. Therefore, the total loss is simply about one-tenth. Those gentlemen who would have the duty reimposed for the sake of protecting a little bit of country up about Georgian Bay would imperil and very largely destroy the entire lumbering industry of Canada. In my humble opinion that would be simply absurd. It is also held that American labour comes over to perform the work of getting out these logs and takes the place of Canadian labour. Such is not the case. It is simply absurd to make such a statement, because Canadian labour takes out nearly all the logs taken out in Michigan and Wisconsin, and saws them as well. I have been through mostly all the important lumber districts of Michigan and Wisconsin, and I have never yet gone into one saw-mill in which half a dozen or a dozen of the men would not come up and ask me when I came from Canada. I did not know them; but they knew me, and when I asked them how they came to be there I was told at once that it was nearly all Canadians who were employed in lumbering in the States. So far as the question of supplies is concerned, the idea that the lumberman, who is taxed on almost every article that goes into the production of his lumber, will not buy his supplies wherever he finds them cheapest is simply absurd and preposterous. Do you suppose that a man is going to import his oats and hay and other supplies from the United States when he can get them cheaper in Canada? Not at all. The American lumbermen who come over here to manufacture are not fools, and they will buy their supplies where they get them the cheapest, and if they do bring over their pork, so do the Canadian lumbermen, because nearly all the pork used in the production of lumber in Canada comes from the United States. Now I do not want to take up too much time on this subject; but as a lumberman from this district, and one who ought certainly to know something of the subject, I felt it my duty to bring up this matter now, because during the recess I believe it is to be considered, and as I may not have an opportunity of referring to it again, I desire to bring before the notice of the Finance Minister my views upon the subject. Apart from all that I have said, I think there is another matter, and one of very considerable importance, to which I would like to refer. At the time of Confederation the lands in the various provinces and the timber thereon were handed over to the provinces to administer in their own interest. Each of them administers its land affairs and timber matters as it considers best. Each province puts up its limits for sale under certain regulations, which are made known at the time of the sale. Surely these provinces ought to know what is best to do with their own property, and surely, so far as the administration of their land and timber is concerned, should be governed by their necessities. Now, supposing one of these provinces desired to realise upon its timber supplies, and the limits were put up for sale and to be operated, and that in the interest of the province they should be sold and operated. Now I hold this, that any Act of the Dominion Government, which would curtail operations or interfere in any way with the interests of the provinces in the management of their own property, in the operation of their limits and the selling of their lumber, would be a very great injustice to the provinces. Some of our provinces have greater necessity for disposing of their limits than others, and in fact it is the case that some of them have endeavoured to make it a condition in sales of timber limits that they must be operated. What would be the result if the reimposition of the export duty should have the effect of curtailing these operations and hampering the business of the provinces. Further it is often the case that the lumberman is unable to keep pace with settlement, that he is unable to cut the timber as fast as necessary in order that it shall not be destroyed, and in every way I think that the reimposition of the saw-log duty would be injurious to the general lumbering interest of Canada, and might very seriously effect the interests of the various provinces. For these reasons, I hope that the Government will consider well before they take a step which I believe would imperil the greatest industry in Canada, apart from the agricultural industry.

PROHIBITION OF FISHING.

Mr. BRUNEAU. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the House will allow me to offer a few remarks in connection with the prohibition of fishing within the limits of the province of Quebec. I have received to-day from the hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Costigan), the acting Minister of Fisheries, a letter stating that the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Tupper), previous to his departure for England, had himself sent orders to the fishery overseers of the province of Quebec, prohibiting fishing up to 1st July, and that, under the circumstances, he did not see his way clear to accede to our request asking that the regulations prohibiting fishing be rescinded; but that, at all events, he would lay the matter before the Governor-General in Council. This prohibition of fishing is no new departure and the Government are well aware of the trouble they have experienced in the matter. I am anxious to spare not only the Government, but the poor people who must suffer the evils resulting from such prohibition, all further trouble in the future. On the 11th April, 1892, the following proclamation was published in the "Canada Gazette," issuing from the Governor-General in Council:

In the province of Quebec, no one shall fish for, catch, kill, buy, sell or possess any bass or maskinonge between the 25th day of May and the 1st day of July, both days inclusive, in each year.

The taking of pickerel was already prohibited, the close season extending from the 15th April to the 15th May. The pickerel, the bass and the maskinonge are what is called hard fish, and the other species, soft fish. On the very same day when this proclamation was issued, the Department of Marine sent a circular to the fishery overseers, supplementary of the instructions they were to follow. Clause 5 of this circular reads as follows:—

The privilege heretofore granted as to the taking of soft fish during the close season applying to other fishes is withdrawn by order of the Minister, as it is considered that the judicious regulations enacted for the preservation of fish, during the spawning season, must be rigidly enforced.

This regulation was quite new. It was the first time that fishing was prohibited up to the 1st July in the province of Quebec. Fishermen, taken by surprise, continued fishing. Their fishing apparatus were seized, as also the fish sent to the Montreal market. It was upon that occurrence that petitions began to pour forth upon the Government. Delegations were also sent to prevail upon the Government to rescind the departmental regulation. Some fishery overseers told the fishermen, who were electors in their constituencies, to go fishing without fear, as the Government knew they were entitled to it; while other fishery overseers applied the stringent regulations in all their rigour. The result was that, last year, great hardship was inflicted on that class of people. In order to prevent the recurrence of such hardships, I asked the Government, on the 13th February last, what policy they intended to pursue on the matter this year. They said that they intended carrying out the same policy as last season. Numerous petitions have poured forth upon the Government. Several delegations, consisting of members from both sides of the House had interviews with the Government, with a view to prevail upon them stopping the department from putting the regulations into force. On the 22nd instant, the hon. member for St. Maurice asked the Government whether they had come to any decision on the matter. The answer given was as follows:—

The above petitions have been considered so important that the Government are now considering the subject to see if the said prohibitory regulations could be relaxed or not.

The session is drawing to its close, and I am happy to see the hon. Acting Minister in his seat, in order to tell him that the members for the district bordering upon Lake St. Peter, that is to say the members for St. Maurice, Maskinongé, Berthier, Yamaska and Richelieu are anxious to know what line of action the Government intend to pursue on the matter. I dare say we are entitled to be informed as to whether the Government have decided upon a policy, and whether the regulations are to be relaxed or not. I call the attention of the Government to the importance of the question, and tell them that it is a matter of vital interest to that class of people who are affected by this regulation, on account of the great hardships that were inflicted on them last year and that are likely to occur again this year. I would also draw their attention to the great economical values of the fisheries affected by this regulation within the province of Quebec. The people in the neighbourhood of Lake St. Peter are a loyal, honest, hardworking class of the community, who, in the words of the great Lacordaire: "Beg of God to give them their daily bread, and ask of religion for an honourable life." Never have the overseers complained of their behaviour. I dare say there is not to be found in the department a single grievance or complaint lodged against them as to any infringement of the regulations. For over seven years I have practised at the bar of the Richelieu district, I may say that there has not been a single legal prosecution brought up against them for any infringement of the fishery laws. I know that these fishermen, who are subjected to so many hardships in following up their calling, are no richer to-day than the fishermen of old, the Apostles. In 1890, and even prior to that year, they petitioned the Government with a view to have the license dues removed from their fishing apparatus; very far from removing it, the Government increased it. Among the papers brought down on the Table of the House, under an Order in date of the 11th May, 1891, I see that the Hon. Senator Guévremont had been entrusted, in the spring of 1890, with the mission of investigating into the condition of fishermen in the Richelieu district. The report, which is drafted in English, will show what hardships were inflicted on them through the regulation preventing them from fishing up to the month of July.

Hon. CHARLES H. TUPPER,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa.

SIR,—I thought it my duty to obtain all proper information before answering your favour of the 4th of January last, and I am now in a position to lay before you the result of my investigation.

There is no question that the fishermen of our district belong to the poorer class, and that the slightest charge is a heavy burden on them.

I went first to Ste. Anne of Sorel on the 25th of January, when I called a meeting of all the interested parties, at which appeared Oly. Parré, Narcisse Lavallée and eighteen others. I ascertained that none of these fishermen sell out of the district.

Two years ago one Bénonie Tremblé sent a few barrels of fish to the United States composed of eel, pout, carp, sunfish and perch, but never tried the experiment again. He also sent a barrel of pickerel which he could not sell, and lost entirely.

On the 1st of February, I went to the Grand-Nord, where I met Delphis Pierre Dalcourt and 17 others. They all suffer every year from the rise of the river, having to save their cattle and goods by means of scaffolds or by taking them to the lofts. This means that they are very poor.

On the 3rd of February I called at Grande-Rivière where the following fishermen were assembled: Charles Barque, Octave Latour and 98 others.

On the 15th February, I met at St. François, Aimé Desmarais and 28 others.

They are all poor people involved in heavy debts and they hardly make their living out of the fishing season, having during the winter no other resources.

There is in no case any exportation of fish, it is all sold for local consumption.

It is impossible for them to pay any license. They are quite willing to submit to any regulations which might protect the fish, as they understand that strangers will be prevented from fishing in their waters, so that they are willing to take a license at a cost, let us say, of ten cents, but no more.

I hope you will take their unfortunate condition into your most serious consideration, and that you will find your way to suit policy to the sad necessities of their poor condition.

I might add that formerly they were allowed to fish for pickerel and bass up to the first of May.

Now they are limited to 15th April, that is to say, they are entirely forbidden to catch these fish at all, as the ice never moves before that time. Can you possibly extend the open season to the 1st of May?

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

J. B. GUÉVREMONT.

April 20th, 1890.

This report of Hon. Senator Guévremont, who is well acquainted with the situation of these people, has not been, I think, taken into consideration by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I just referred to the petitions sent up to the Government on the matter. I have before me one of those petitions, to which I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman acting as Minister of Marine. It gives the economical value of the different species, and bears the date of the 11th May, 1892. It is signed by Messrs. Montplaisir, Senator; by J. Bte. Guévremont, Senator, and by several others. In this petition particular stress is laid on the main objection raised against the prohibition of taking soft fish. It says:

It is most particularly to this portion of the regulations that apply the remarks the undersigned beg to submit. The undersigned do not question the fact that these regulations have been framed with a view to protect and develop the soft water fishing industries, in general; but inasmuch as the electoral divisions which they represent are concerned, these regulations are beyond doubt detrimental to a great many families; they are calculated to deprive some of them of the means of making a livelihood and to create discouragement among others, resulting perhaps in their being forced to leave their native country. Such was the result of former laws prohibiting the hunting of ducks, and more serious results may be anticipated from the rigid enforcement of the prohibitive regulations concerning the taking of soft fish.

Further on, the same petition continues in this strain:—

The undersigned beg to call your attention to the fact that the distinction between the poor man's fish and the rich man's fish convey no aggressive meaning towards the wealthy. The poor man's fish merely stands here for the common fish, on which the inhabitants of the banks of the river depend for the maintenance of their families; while the rich man's or sportman's fish is mostly caught with a golden hook. The former is a kind of manna which Providence yearly brings back to our shores, for the well-being and welfare of a great many poor people. It seldom happens that the poor man indulges in the luxury of catching the latter, as, when it appears in our rivers in the months of June, July, August and September, the poor, for the most part are busy with more remunerative harvest labour. At all events, through respect for the law, they generally set free the hard fish, when caught by surprise within their seines or their weirs, as, owing to the fact that they do not use any gill-nets, they run no risk of drowning it. Out of their catch of soft fish, in the spring season, many families realize an income quite insignificant for others, but quite considerable for them, of $25, $30, $40, $50 and perhaps occasionally somewhat larger, every year; and they feel happy and contented and become more attached to the native soil. How many poor people owe their happiness to the yearly produce of this soft fish catch, amounting to $75,000? From a social and Christian stand-point, the happiness of such a deserving class of people, and the protection of fishes doubtless of a superior quality, but after all only an article of luxury for the wealthy, cannot be paralleled.

Not only is the question one of great importance, in so far as it inflicts hardships on a poor and deserving class of the community, but also in regard of the consequences inevitably resulting from the enforcement of these regulations. The petition I have just read, in fact, Mr. Speaker, evidences this state of affairs, and at the present time the ill-feeling and consternation caused by this regulation is such that no later than last week, seven or eight families from the Island St. Ignace passed through Sorel "en route" for the United States. Why this exodus? Just because the Government did not yet see their way clear to state their policy as to whether or not these regulations were going to be relaxed. A poor, hard-working and honest class of people, who depend on this industry for their livelihood, are deprived of their only means of maintenance during part of the year; for we must bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that there are two classes of fishermen; those, first, who are engaged in the pursuit as a trade, and, secondly, those who have no land enabling them to live with the produce of the soil; and in the region bordering on Lake St. Peter many lands are flooded every spring, at the rise of water. It often occurs that water subsides only in the month of June. Now, during the interval, these people, owning these lands, must of necessity resort to fishing to earn their living and the bread of their families. The Government enforces the regulations prohibiting the taking of soft fish, on the ground that they do so with a view to the propagation of this fish. I may say, Sir, that among soft fish there are species which do not come under this rule and are an exception to it. Take, for instance, shad, which come up into our rivers for about fifteen days, and never spawn in our country. As regards spawn, I will quote again from the memorial of the 11th May, 1892, signed by Senators Guévremont and Montplaisir among others, but which was obviously inspired by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Jones), who is an authority on the matter, or by Mr. Montpetit. In this memorial, the ichthyological question as to whether the spawning season is comprised within the period covered by the regulations is debated at some length. The following are the remarks submitted to the Government in connection with this matter:

The Statute enacts that no one shall fish for bass or maskinongé, between the 25th April and the 15th June; for pickerel, between the 15th April and the 15th May; on the ground that these fishes are then considered to be in their spawning season.

Now, is this season uniform everywhere? Is it the same for the rivers Yamaska, St. Francis, St. Maurice, and the region of Montreal, as for the heights of the Laurentian Mountains? It may well be called into question; but, beyond any doubt, the spawning season differs materially in Europe from that in America, under the same latitudes and for the same species. Have observations been repeated in sufficient number in the waters of Lake St. Peter and tributaries, to enable us to decree and determine the spawning season? Where does the pickerel spawn? Where does it lay its eggs? On stones and branches, in placid, running and deep waters; namely, in such places as are not within the reach of the seine and other fishing apparatus commonly used by our fishermen. The maskinongé, congenerous with the pike, shelters its eggs under the branches near the deserted and secluded spots which the seine fisher avoids or which are not within his reach. As to bass, it is well known that it spawns at a slight depth of water, in the middle of pebbles which obstruct the operations of seine fishing. The spawning season varies according to age, from May till the end of July. I may tell the hon. Minister, that speaking from experience, as a resident in this region—at the Bay de la Vallière, quite close to Lake St. Peter, parties who go fishing make an observation, confirmed by my own experience, that as there being many shrubs, as soon as the waters subside, thousand and thousands of eggs of fishes are found on the branches. To this cause may perhaps be ascribed the depletion of fishes in those quarters. I may tell the hon. Secretary of State that I took the trouble to study the question and that the remarks I have just made perfectly agree with the data of science. Deschanel and Pontillon, in their dictionary of theoretical and practical science, say:

The eggs of fishes, generally adhering to each other in masses of more or less magnitude, by means of a glutinous envelope, and discharged by the females in selected and sheltered places, with a convenient temperature, commodious shoals and water well adapted to their state. Speaking in general, fishes inhabiting the open sea come from the depths of the ocean to the shores, while others run up from the ocean into the large rivers; some run up from the lakes to the sources of rivers and brooks; carps like to dwell in grass-grown bottoms; tenches, eels like best mud and stagnant waters; trouts, perches, gudgeons, loaches seek running waters on gravel. Large schools of salmon are often seen going up rivers, such as the Meuse, for instance, in quest of nests in the sand they have previously resorted to. At all events, the spawning season varies with the species: for instance, it extends from November to March for salmon-trouts, pike, loches, &c., &c.

As regards eels, the first school arriving in May, the general opinion is that they spawn in the open sea, about the month of December or January.

Under the word "nests," the same authors add: the customary period at which fishes establish their nests, varies not only for the genera of a same family, but also according to circumstances for members of a species.

As already stated, Mr. Speaker, from the author just quoted, I gather that there are fishes we are forbidden to take under the prohibition regulations, and which, however, according to the best authorities, spawn only in November or March. In the book just quoted may be found a nomenclature of all different species of fish, and of the spawning seasons of the principal species in Central Europe. From this list it would appear that spawning takes place as follows:—For pike, in February and March; for perch, in April and May, and for carp, in May and June. The conclusion I infer from all this, Mr. Speaker, is that the reasons alleged by the Government to forbid fishing up to July are certainly unfounded, and I call the attention of the Government to the following petition forwarded by me to the hon. Minister acting as Minister of Fisheries, and signed by the fishermen of my county. It reads as follows:—

They learned with regret that the Government intended prohibiting again this year, in the province of Quebec, the taking of soft fish, in like manner as was done last year:

That such a prohibition has inflicted on them in the past, real and numerous damages, and they also anticipate for the future, hardships which several fishermen will be unable to bear any longer, the consequence being that they will have to expatriate themselves.

That under these circumstances, they humbly ask the Government not to cause their ruin and that of their families.

That, further they do not believe that the Government will reach the anticipated result and that they do not see on what ground such a prohibition may rest, considering how they have always obeyed the fishery laws existing heretofore.

That the present petition be forwarded to the members for the counties of Richelieu, Berthier and Yamaska. They do so with prayers that they bring its contents to the notice of the Government and co-operate with the senators representing those divisions, with a view to take the proper steps to obtain justice.

Such justice, Mr. Speaker, the fishermen of my constituency demand of the Government through my mediation, and that of the hon. members concerned in the question. I trust that, considering the reasons alleged in the petitions addressed to the department, not only will the hon. Minister of Fisheries lay the petition before the Council of the Ministers, but that he will, moreover, lend us his help and efficacious support. This prohibition will have no practical result beyond dealing harshly with the fishermen: it will also result in accelerating the exodus to the States which has already assumed such large proportions; it will also deprive poor families of the means of earning their livelihood: far from promoting the preservation of soft fish, it will only exercise a tyrannical and arbitrary power over the poor and the weak. I trust that the Government will not assume on themselves the responsibility and consequences of a narrow-minded policy as little justifiable as it is uncalled for.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) The hon. member who has just taken his seat has developed and elucidated the question in such a way as to prevail upon the hon. Minister of Fisheries to give us the assurance that the regulations prohibiting taking soft fish in the counties bordering on Lake St. Peter will be rescinded.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will ask the hon. member if he is rising with the intention of asking for information as to what the Government proposes to do on this matter, as I am ready to give him an answer at once; or whether he wants to speak at some length on the subject.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, supposing he does.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. Minister what course he intends to pursue on the matter before the House, as I think I am entitled to put such a question; but, I want to show him, first, that the regulations now in force, respecting the fisheries, are neither more nor less than tyrannical to a class of men who deserve a far better treatment at the hands of the Government. The hon. member for Richelieu has just shown that the grounds on which the Government prohibits the taking of soft fish in the waters of Lake St. Peter are altogether unfounded, and we are still at a loss to know what are the true grounds of that prohibition. In 1890, when the Government imposed a tax on the fishing apparatus, their friends, both in the Senate and in this House, entered their protests against the imposition of such a tax, and left no stone unturned to show them that it was unjust and too heavy a burden on the shoulders of the people who had to bear it. The hon. Senators Guévremont and Montplaisir urged the Minister to remove this tax on the fishing apparatus. From the papers laid before the House, on the 11th November, 1891, it appears that the members representing this section of the province, Messrs. Vanasse, Boisvert and Dr. Coulombe, complained bitterly of this tax, which was by no means so onerous as the regulation now in force. The Government, instead of acceding to the suggestion of these members, went still further. On the 11th April, 1892, a letter, signed by Mr. Bauset, was sent by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the fishery overseers. Among other clauses it contains the following :—

The privilege heretofore granted of taking soft fish during the close season as applying to other fishes is withdrawn, by order of the Minister; as it is considered that judicious regulations during the spawning season ought to be rigorously enforced.

The close season, as every one knows, against the different species of fishes, such as the pickerel, bass and maskinongé, extends to the 1st July. It also appears from this letter that the privilege of taking soft fish is withdrawn. Obviously it amounts to a total prohibition of taking soft fish, as, at such date, this fish has no value whatever. Owing to the high degree of the temperature and of the waters, this fish, at such a date, has no value as an article of immediate consumption, and is of still less commercial or marketable value. I would like to know on what ground the Government deprives these poor people of what I look upon in the light of an old vested right. These families represent an honest and hard-working class of the community, who succeed, through fishing, in having a competency; outside of the fishing season, these people, in general, are given to agricultural pursuits in the neighbouring parishes. These poor people are strictly entitled to the fishing, as they depend on this industry for their livelihood. From the section just quoted it would appear that the real ground of the prohibition is the protection of hard fish, as mentioned. The hon. member for Richelieu has just shown, from good authorities on the matter, that the preservation of fish is a mere pretense; but, were it well grounded on fact, I would like to know whether it is acting in fairness towards these poor people to deprive them of a considerable source of revenue, raised from the sale of the different kinds of soft fish, and with a view of preserving what is known as the rich man's, or sportsmen's, fish. As I have taken the trouble to examine the report of the Minister of Marine, I will just show that the value of the hard fish, which is the object of such protection, is quite insignificant in comparison with the varieties of soft fish among which the fishermen find their most copious supply of food, depending upon it for the support and maintenance of their family. From the report of 1890, I gather that the total value of fisheries for the counties of Richelieu, Three Rivers and Berthier was $69,428.80. To be deducted from such sum is the value of 70,000 bushels of tom cod, amounting to $15,000, leaving for all the other varieties an aggregate sum of $54,428. Maskinongé, bass and pickerel, giving a yield of 15,000 pounds, at 5 cents a pound, this represents the small sum of $755. So that the total value of soft fish is $53,673. The following table will show the results for the years 1891 and 1892 :—

1891.
Richelieu, Yamaska, Nicolet, Three Rivers and Berthier, total value	$64,890 40
To be deducted tom cod, 50,000 bushels.....	25,000 00

All other fishes.....	$39,890 40
Maskinongé, bass and pickerel, 13,000 lbs. at 5cts	650 00

Total value of soft fish....	$39,240 40

1892.
Richelieu, Yamaska, Nicolet, Three Rivers and Berthier, total value.....	$38,852 80
To be deducted, tom cod, 15,000 bushels.....	7,500 00

All other fishes.....	$31,352 80
Maskinongé, bass and pickerel, 29,185 lbs	1,459 25

Total value of soft fish....	$29,893 50

We have, therefore, for three years, a total which is figured up as follows: Pickerel, bass and maskinongé, $2,864; soft fish, $122,807.65. I ask the House and the Government whether, with these figures at hand, and with the view, apparently, to protect the favourite fish of the sports, it is fair to deprive this hard-working and honest people of the community of a revenue amounting, for the last three years, to $122,807.75. I think this question has not been taken into the serious consideration of the Minister. And the Government, far from yielding to the representations made by our predecessors in this House, and by the hon. senators above mentioned, praying that the tax be removed from the fishing apparatus, went to the further length of absolutely prohibiting the taking of soft fish. The hon. Minister asked, a little while ago, whether I desired to have a reply to my question. No doubt, Sir, I would like to have an answer, and by all means one favourable to the class of people to whom this prohibition inflicts such hardships. After listening to the remarks which fell from the hon. member for Richelieu, and to my own remarks, I may ask him, whether he does not see his way clear to give us an assurance that he will not wait till next year to have the prohibitory regulations relaxed, or whether he is going to let us understand that the matter is under consideration? There ought no longer to be any reason for Ministers now to answer: To-morrow, to questions put by members. All I want from the Government is fair-play and a just treatment to the people who only ask to be allowed to follow up their trade, in a legitimate and honourable way. As the representative of a constituency where are to be found a great many persons engaged in similar pursuits, I would be failing in my duty should I not seize this opportunity of showing, in as adequate a manner as possible, that the regulation complained of is tyrannical, arbitrary and unfair to those people.

The hon. Minister has in his possession a great many petitions asking for the repeal of this regulation, and I say again, it would be most unfortunate should he come and tell us that he is going to consider the question, and that, later on, he will see what steps may be taken in the matter. It may be quite convenient for a Minister to consider such questions at leisure, in the silence of his cabinet, with plenty of time at his disposition; but, as regards the poor people on whom these decrees inflict such hardships, and the wretched fishermen who, in consequence of these harsh measures, will be forced to leave their homes and expatriate themselves, I say, Sir, it would be an almost inhuman act for the Government to temporize, and come and tell them that, later on, their grievances will be righted. Later on, when several of these poor people will have betaken themselves to the United States, it will be no longer time to remedy this state of affairs. The evil will then be beyond redemption; an evil inflicted in consequence of the harsh rule enforced by the Government on a hard-working, honest class of the community, who obey the laws of the country and are fully entitled to the legitimate pursuits and to the calling they have inherited from their fathers.

Mr. DESAULNIERS. (Translation.) I think it my duty, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words in reply to the remarks fallen from the hon. member who has just taken his seat. This soft fish question is one of those to which the attention of the Government has repeatedly been called to; and several members of this House have also submitted to the Government petitions in the same connection. It is quite easy to understand that the hon. members for Maskinongé and Richelieu at aiming at making political capital, with a view to telling their constituents that it was through their exertions and their representations that the Government have suspended the regulations prohibiting fishing. I am not aware what course the Government mean to pursue in connection with these regulations, and whether they are going to tell us that the fishermen's complaints will be reconsidered; all I know is that, of all the members who have exerted themselves, since the last seven or eight years, to bring this soft fish question before the Government, none have put forth so great exertions nor taken more effectual steps towards softening the heart of the Government, and prevailing upon them to temper the severity and harshness of these stringent rules, than the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil). It being so, great was my surprise to hear the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Legris) advocating before this House the free taking of soft fish. He has just mentioned the petition of the 11th May, 1892, asking the Minister to do right to the fishermen of the region bordering on Lake St. Peter, while it is a well known fact that this great defender of the fishermen's cause cannot even boast of having signed this petition. It is signed by Senators Guévremont and Montplaisir, by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Cargnan) and several others, but the name of the member for Maskinongé is conspicuously absent from the list.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) I was not asked at the time to sign the petition.

Mr. DESAULNIERS. (Translation.) I know quite well that the hon. member will tell again his constituents, at Louiseville, that the Conservatives did not ask him to sign the petition. Should the Government yield to the pressing representations made to them, the hon. member will claim the merit of the settlement of this question, and will boast of it. But I tell him, fearless of contradiction, that he can claim no merit whatsoever in that connection, and that, among the members who may lay a just claim to this merit, the most conspicuous figure is the hon. member for Berthier, who has devoted all his energies to the settlement of this vexed question, without trying to make it a party question. The member for Maskinongé, previous even to the Government answering the question and making known their policy, hurried to heap reproaches upon them. Such a course was anticipated from the hon. member, who only rose to criticise the Government, not to advocate the cause of the fishermen of his country; for the hon. member makes the whole question subservient to his own political interest. I trust the Government's reply will be a favourable one to those who concern themselves about and take to heart the interests of the fishermen of this region. Unlike the hon. member for Maskinongé, my hon. colleagues, the members for Richelieu and Berthier (Messrs. Bruneau and Beausoleil) have taken an active part in the settlement of the question, have participated in all the steps which have been taken with a view to bringing about a favourable solution. But the member for Maskinongé, though he has not moved in the matter, will be the first to claim the largest share of merit. The hon. leader of the Opposition is welcome to smile, but he should bear in mind at the same time that his friend the member for Maskinongé is a new acquisition for the Liberal party; and that friends of the eleventh hour ought not to be too much relied upon. They are well known, chiefly in the Three Rivers district, those men who pose before the people as the vindicators of outraged morality, and who have to resort every time to Riel's spectre to get elected.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) Riel's scaffold has also rendered you material service.

Mr. DESAULNIERS. (Translation.) It hardly availed to the Conservative party, but it has been of great avail to the Liberal party. These facts are well known in the district of Three Rivers, since 1887. Mr. Speaker, I would have refrained joining in this debate, being satisfied with the exertions I have put forth to further the cause of the fishermen, had not these remarks fallen from the hon. member for Maskinongé. When he pays visits to his constituents scattered through the parishes of his riding, he misses no opportunity to sling mud at the Conservative party with which he sided not long ago. Though we, Conservatives, are, perhaps, open to the reproach of putting up too patiently with this kind of abuse, we claim, at least, the merit of not trusting to or reposing confidence in a party or a Government of false economy. I do not allude to the old Quebec Government, which is out of the question now, as they have been driven from power. I was one of those who insisted upon the Government relaxing the severity of the regulations, enforced with a view to the preservation of fish in our inland fisheries, and to the protection of that deserving class of the community who depend on fishing for their livelihood; and I feel happy to state that, should the Government alter their decision, such a result will have, in some measure, been brought about by the exertions and representations of the member for St. Maurice, as well as those of the hon. members for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), and for Champlain (Mr. Carignan), but not, by any means whatever, by those of the member for Maskinongé. While certain members busied themselves with the settlement of the soft fish question, the hon. member for Maskinongé was, no doubt, engaged in working in the upper regions of liberal politics, in the interests of his new allies of the day, the liberal-national party.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) I would ask the hon. the Secretary of State to condescend to declare the Government's policy, previous to my addressing the House on the question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman states, apparently without knowing the answer I made to the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Legris), that before he makes his speech I should make my declaration. The only declaration I have to make, Mr. Speaker, is that, receiving the representations made last night, principally, I might say, from gentlemen representing constituencies in Ontario, I stated then that on account of the numerous petitions sent in and representations made to the department in connection with the regulations in Quebec and Ontario, as well as other provinces, on two points some change would be made; but I would have to ask the authority of Council. These two questions were as to the question of "poisson mou," and the question of the restriction on the River St. Clair. There were other questions more in the way of detail, as to changes in the size of the mesh of nets and the size of pound-nets, gill-nets, seines, etc. But these two questions I stated clearly were matters of importance, and would involve a wide departure from the regulation, and that I would have to take the advice of Council. But I stated that, seeing that the fishing season was approaching, not an hour would be lost; and I have kept my word. On these two points no doubt instructions will immediately be sent to the officers, both in Ontario and in Quebec. The restrictions on the River St. Clair will be modified at once. I am keeping the word I gave when I stated that I would take the first opportunity to consult Council, when I would see how far we could meet the wishes of gentlemen on both sides. The hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Legris) has put the question rather unfairly in my judgment in regard to what they call "poisson franc," which is a superior fish, in stating to the House that the policy of the Government was to maintain the protection of this small quantity of fish in order to protect the larger quantity of the inferior fish. It is evident there is a reason for that. Why has the "poisson franc" decreased? Because the regulations have not been sufficiently stringent, and thus the only fish left is the "poisson mou," which also requires protection or they will be exterminated also, and the House must remember, while discussing the policy of the department, that this question strikes at the very deepest interests of these people, and that the department must adopt the policy of protection even for the inferior fish, because, until there is some system of restocking rivers with superior fish like bass, maskinongé and pickerel, the people must depend upon the "poisson mou," which, though they are an inferior fish, are of value. The policy of protection is thus seen to be in the right direction, though it operates harshly for a time.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) I only wish to extend my thanks to the hon. Minister for the promise just made of sending instructions to the fishery overseers to suspend the regulations complained of. I declare my intention to avail myself of this declaration, and I thank the hon. Minister. The hon. Minister, I doubt not, is actuated by the best intentions and favourably inclined towards the class of fishermen, but were he anxious to have all causes of complaint removed, he should take one further step. There is another grievance in addition to the complaint with regard to the prohibition of fishing. The first of these grievances is as to the regulation imposing a license on fishing apparatus used in the waters of the St. Lawrence. This system of license is unfair to the class of people who have to bear it. The Act complained of dates back as far as 1888. This tax is a heavy burden upon the poor people who are unable to pay it. Already, I regret to say, several families have seen themselves obliged to leave the parish of St. Barthélemy and Isle du Pads in the county of Berthier. On a depth of four miles each year, the lands at St. Barthélemy flooded, and the water only subsidies about the 15th or 20th June. The settlers, therefore, cannot begin sowing before that date and are forced in the interval to remain idle. Now, should these people be prevented from fishing, they will find themselves without any means of making a livelihood and as the result, they will be forced to emigrate, as it has often occurred since 1888, on account of this license fee or tax being imposed. I had ventured to trust, Mr. Speaker, that after the promise made by Sir John A. Macdonald, the Government would come to a favourable decision on the matter. I entertained the hope, I say, that the Government would do away with this tax. I must confess that I feel disappointed at the hon. the Secretary of State having left this point untouched and at the Government not being ready to redress this grievance. I desire also to call the attention of the Government to the order given in December last with regard to trout fishing. Under the old regulation it was prohibited to catch these fish from the 1st October to the 1st January. Under the order I have just referred to, the close season is extended to the 1st May, which is tantamount to a total prohibition of trout-fishing, and is calculated to inflict great hardships on the settlers. Trout-fishing is the only industry within reach of the settlers, as also the only one which constitutes for them a means of making a livelihood. By the extension of the close season for these fish, settlers are deprived of a much needed supply of food upon which they depend almost entirely for the subsistence of their families. In fact, at the approach of the Lenten season, they catch trout and bring it to the markets of the towns. But, by the order issued, in December last from the Fisheries Department, a poor, hard working, and most honest class of the community are deprived of a means of making a livelihood and of a valuable resource in critical times, such as the settlers, as we all know, often meet with. I, therefore, call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the hardships inflicted on these poor people by this regulation; and as he is kind-hearted, I have no doubt he will hasten to do right to them and redress their grievance. To my mind, the hardships consequent upon this prohibition need only be pointed out for the Minister to take up the matter and do away with the obstacles thrown in the way of the settlers. Instead of discouraging colonization, the Government ought to adopt such regulations as were calculated to facilitate the work of the settlers who undertake to open up our public lands and not to force them to give them up, after undergoing so many hardships to fertilize the soil which yields the food of their numerous families. It must be borne in mind that colonization is one of the surest means of increasing the wealth and prosperity of a nation. I would also call the attention of the hon. Minister to the regulation concerning seine fishing. I have in my hand a letter addressed to me by a citizen of St. Barthélemy, to which I think it right to call, for a moment, the attention of the House. With the small seine an enormous quantity of small fish is destroyed, and in the writer's estimation (Mr. Pierre Choquette) in that single locality, over ten or twelve thousand small pike are destroyed. Fishermen use part of this small fish to bait their dead lines, and the rest is wasted. Mr. Choquette says :

Another demand which is, beyond a doubt, one of the most important for the preservation of fish, is the prohibition of fishing with small seines by means of which, here, in the single North Range, a daily catch of from ten to twelve thousand small pike takes place. Fishermen use this fish to bait their dead lines, as they are known here. This fishing with the small seine takes place from the 15th June to the 15th September, and the fishermen from the North are all agreed in view of the preservation of these fish to do away with this destructive engine.

Such is the subject to which I wished to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State, trusting that he will take my demand into his serious consideration, and that he will strive his best to afford protection, first, to fishermen, and then to fish itself.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, with the intention of participating at any length in the debate, but merely to put a question to the Government. To save time, I will put the question without any further preamble, the length of my remarks depending upon the nature of the reply given. I understand that the regulation prohibiting the taking of soft fish applies equally to water-courses, to rivers, in short, to the inland waters in general, as well as to the counties bordering on Lake St. Peter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) Such is the right interpretation to be put on the regulation. Were it to apply to inland waters, the river Yamaska would then be included in and fall under the operation of the regulation. I may state that there are in the neighbourhood of St. Hyacinthe parties who, although not exclusively depending upon fish for subsistence, nevertheless catch a certain quantity which they bring to market for sale. I understand that, were those parties not to be allowed to catch fish during the close season now in force, they would lose all the benefit this catch yielded them. For, during hot weather, it is impossible to take this soft fish and to keep it in a saleable or marketable condition. This should also be remedied by the Government in the interest of those well-deserving persons. The Government have also given instructions to have migratory passes established at two places on the river Yamaska, the first one at Rapide Plat, the second in the very city of St. Hyacinthe. This is done with a view to enabling these fish to ascend the river for spawning, and then return to the waters of the St. Lawrence. Those who know well the fish which frequent this river, say that they make but a short stay in the river Yamaska, within a space of about eight miles, and that, after fifteen days or three weeks, go away. So that there is no reason for prohibiting fishing with a view to protect the spawning of these fish. I trust the hon. Minister will favourably receive my remarks, and take the necessary steps to protect that class of people living on the banks of the river Yamaska.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Experimental Farm—Maintenance $75,000

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Before that item passes, I want a little explanation. How many labourers are kept on that farm?

Mr. FOSTER. About thirty at present.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I find in the annual report that some $5,000 was spent for labour upon the farm. I find there are thirty-six labourers, if you count the gardeners, stablemen and cattlemen, but there are twenty-three, apart from stablemen and cattlemen, and the wages they get is $7,356. That is a large sum indeed for labour. I think the item for labour is excessive. I think we have not got a proper statement. That land should all be laid out into fields and sections, and we should know the quantity under timber, the quantity under trees, and the quantity under small fruits. I have spoken of that before, but it has not been done.

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed it is all laid out in plots.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then, why is that not in the annual report, so that we can go over the report and see how it is?

Mr. FOSTER. A statement is made of the amount grown on each plot.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). There is no statement made respecting cattle. There should be an annual statement given of the number raised, number purchased, number sold and an inventory of the value of the stock. There is no such statement given in this annual report.

Mr. FOSTER. All particulars are kept, but they are not all embodied in the report. We do not want to make this report a second Auditor-General's Report.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The farmers should know the number of stock kept on the farm. What number of stock were kept during the winter of 1891-92?

Mr. FOSTER. From seventy to ninety head.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I was told that only sixty-six head were kept. We were told on a previous occasion that the farm would be able to keep forty head of cattle on forty acres of land. When this experiment was made, it failed. The same forty acres of land is referred to in this report, but no information is given as to the number of cattle kept on them. Such statements are only valuable when kept for a number of years, and the results of one year prove nothing. In this case, during the first year a hail storm struck the barn and did injury. Such unforeseen events will happen, but a strict account should be kept of the number of cattle on the certain number of acres, extending over a number of years. I desire to inquire how many cattle were kept on those forty acres last year?

Mr. FOSTER. Twenty-eight head of cattle were kept on forty acres last year, but the year is not up yet.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). How, then, does it come about that a statement was made in the annual report for the previous years, for more than a year has elapsed since then?

Mr. FOSTER. The statement was for ten and a half months.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). It was stated that they kept the cattle ten and a half months. If they are able to keep twenty-eight cattle on forty acres, it was surely unnecessary to expend such a large sum for purchasing feed. Yet I find $1,630 were spent on purchasing feed last year. The statement is made, from the report, that a large quantity of grain has been distributed. Was all this grain raised on the Experimental Farm?

Mr. FOSTER. Some was raised on the Indian Head Farm, in the North-west Territories.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). All the grain distributed could have been grown on thirty-five acres. Then, there are thirty-six tons of straw bought. I was on the farm in the harvest of 1891, and there was sufficient straw to have kept all the cattle comfortably, if properly taken care of. Yet we find $165 spent for straw alone. Of course, this should not occur. There must be great waste on the farm. One of the benefits to be derived from the experiments conducted at the farm is to show farmers how many cattle can be kept on a small quantity of land. Large quantities of food have, however, been purchased, and it is apparent that these purchases should cease, except a little oil cake and linseed meal, used for purposes of fattening: but the cattle kept on the farm should be only such as can be fed from the farm. In my opinion, the farmers of Ontario derive very little benefit from the model farm. Why, in manure alone, $5,600 were spent, the price of a good farm, and beside all that was purchased, there was the quantity made on it. So long as the present system continues, it is impossible that the farmers can be benefited. If the farmers are to receive benefits, an inventory of the stock should be taken and a valuation put on it every year, as is done on every well-conducted farm. We have often been pointed to the cost of the Ontario Model Farm. But in their report the number of cattle purchased, the number bred and the value of the stock is stated yearly. It is impossible that farmers can learn how a well-conducted farm should be kept, when the stock is not taken every year and the value not given. I also see an item of $600 expenses of men attending agricultural fairs. I understand the farm does not exhibit stock. What, therefore, were the men doing?

Mr. FOSTER. There were exhibits at Montreal, Toronto, London and Kingston.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Was any stock shown there?

Mr. FOSTER. No, they were grain exhibits.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). One man might have taken the exhibits to each fair and have left them there, as other farmers do. How many head of cattle were purchased for fattening during 1891-92?

Mr. FOSTER. Fourteen were fattened on the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). There is no item for purchasing animals. I find a statement of eight cattle being bought for experimental purposes, but the purchase does not appear in the Public Accounts. They should have realized from $500 to $600, and the only amount received was $200 for cattle and beef sold. There is something wrong, when these statements are not complete and placed in the Public Accounts. What does the sale of beef mean—do they kill cattle and sell beef at the farm?

Mr. FOSTER. Cattle are sold to the butchers.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then, what is the reason of this small amount? If fourteen or eighteen head of steers were fattened, they should have been worth $70 per head, and yet only $242 altogether were received. How does it happen that there is no account in the Public Accounts, either of the purchase or sale?

Mr. FOSTER. We are buying these cattle young, and some of them are still being kept.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The statement is made in the dairy report that they were purchased at two years old, and that statement ought to appear in the Experimental Farm Report.

Mr. FOSTER. We will put it in next year.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The report gives $1,293 for cattle purchased, but when I come to the Auditor-General's Report I can only find for cattle, hogs and all, $1.100. If everything was kept in proper order both reports should correspond.

Mr. FOSTER. The cattle are sent to other farms in certain cases.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron).

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then they should be credited from one farm to the other, as any business man would do.

Mr. FOSTER. They are bought for and debited to this farm.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then the cost put on them for the time they are on this farm should be added to the original cost and credited to the farm. There is not a single item of revenue entered in the farm report for this year, and only expenditure is mentioned. But, if we are to have a proper account of the farm, we should have revenue and expenditure. Although I am only a workingman myself I can show you the revenue and expenditure on my farm, and the Government farm should be kept in a businesslike manner. I stake my reputation as an agriculturist that there is not a practical man to conduct that farm, and from what I have seen from the management the whole thing shows it from beginning to end.

Mr. LAURIER. You farm to make a profit.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). And if the Government does not conduct the farm to make money there is no use for it. However, I suppose that it is too late in the session to go into the matter this year, but if I am spared next year, and if there is not a proper account kept on that farm, depend upon it the farmers of the province of Ontario shall know what this farm has cost them. The farm this year has cost $16,000, although the statement is made that it only cost $22,000. The officers on that farm, and the positions they occupy, should all be put down in the report as well as the cost of the buildings and the expense of running the farm. The farmers of the country want to know that, but it is not done. I can assure you that if there is not a proper account kept next year the country shall know it.

Dairying Interests... $25,000

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). If you are going into that I want to know what became of the butter and cheese bought last year. I find that there are 80,000 pounds of that cheese, and only 20,000 sold, and we have no statement as to the difference. As far as cheese is concerned, it is something that the Dairy Commissioner ought to leave alone, at least as far as the province of Ontario is concerned. I think it is a mistake to purchase cheese to put it on the English market, because I find that the cheese which was purchased by the Government brought 11¼ cents per pound, and if you deduct from that freight, insurance and commission it will leave something less than 10 cents per pound. That is under the price the factory men have been selling their cheese for in western Ontario. A number of gentlemen engaged in the business, purchase their cheese and go to the old country every year and get what the market requires, and the Government should not interfere. I will admit that there was a necessity for establishing creameries, but the way that should be done is for the Government to dispose of the products of these creameries and not to become traders.

Mr. FOSTER. Seventy-nine thousand seven hundred and twenty pounds of cheese were sold, and the deposit was $7,516.56, which was equal to 9.42 cents per pound. Then there were 20,338 pounds of butter sold for which was deposited $3,920.08, or 19.27 cents per pound. The Auditor-General for once was caught napping, and there was a mistake in his figures.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I observe that there was a mistake in the cheese that was sold. It is very questionable whether the butter put upon the English market raised the credit of Canadian butter even to the extent that our dairymen, who are running creameries, are doing at the present time, because I understand that a sum of money had to be taken out of the public treasury to compensate the patrons of the factories over and above the price that the butter brought in the English market. Unless the article sold by the Government is superior to what our private dairymen can put on the market it is injuring our market in butter to a greater extent than any private maker of butter could do. The butter sold by the Government should be first quality, but it must have been inferior to bring the price that it did. We have a gentleman who runs four creameries in the county of Huron, and he was able to give his patrons 18 cents a pound last year for the butter put upon the market. That was what they were not able to do with the butter in the Government creameries.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must remember that 20,338 pounds of butter were sold, and that the deposit was $3,920, but that is not the full proceeds of the butter. The full proceeds brought that sum up to make to the farmer about 21 cents per pound for his butter, and the butter was sold on the English market at from 22 to 26½ cents per pound. All that is paid to the farmer is the net proceeds. The Government loses nothing. The 19.27 cents per pound does not show the income from the butter, but the net income to the farmer was 21 cents.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I rather think there is a mistake there, because Professor Robertson admitted before the Agricultural Committee that over $200 had to be taken out of the public Treasury to pay the patrons of the factories on account of that butter.

Mr. FOSTER. That was for one very small shipment.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that it is highly desirable that we should encourage the butter and cheese industry in every way we can. It is very satisfactory to find Canadian cheese taking such a leading position in the English market, and I am sure that if we can encourage the butter industry so as to cause larger shipments than we now make it would be very desirable, for, in my opinion, there is more room for butter than for cheese in the English market. The creameries have been doing well, but I think if we offer a prize for the exportation of creamery butter, as is done in Australia, the money would be better spent than in speculating by purchasing butter and placing it on the market. However, it is gratifying to know that improvements have been made in both butter and cheese exportation.

Purchase of a new Steamer..... $50,000

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister promised to bring down copies of the certificates of the parties in charge of the several Government steamers, in accordance with an Order of the House. I want to know why that return has not been brought down. I have a reason for asking for it, which I will tell the hon. gentleman when he brings down the statement.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I stated to the hon. gentleman that as some of the information had to be obtained outside of the department, the return could not be completed up to the present time. But the deputy tells me that the full return will be ready to-morrow, when it will be laid on the Table.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we should have an opportunity of examining the return, because I have some reason to believe that men are in charge of these steamers who do not possess the certificate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I may state that there is no officer against whom there can be any objection on the ground of his not having the certificate except one officer, that is, Officer Wakeham. He has been appointed according to the practice that has always existed of putting in command of the service a medical man, and having a certificated master for the sailing of the vessel. Every predecessor of Commander Wakeham has been a doctor, because these vessels touch at many out-of-the-way places along the coast of Labrador, and a medical man is supposed to be necessary.

Meteorological Survey..... $62,900

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far have you gone north?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Edmonton is the furthest station north.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will trouble the hon. gentleman to supply the House with a short memorandum showing the stations that exist north of parallel 50.

Fish-breeding..... $51,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If we let this pass, I must make this stipulation that should it be necessary to have a discussion on concurrence, it must be in committee.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be all right.

Fishery Protection Vessels—To provide for the cost, maintenance and repair of fishery and protection steamers and vessels $100,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you expect to spend all that money?

Mr. FOSTER. No; we do not generally spend that much, but we keep the round vote.

Miscellaneous $289,070

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this item, I think the hon. gentleman had better let it stand, or let one item stand.

Mr. FOSTER. Let one item stand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will tell you what you had better leave:

To pay for services performed by Customs and Fisheries Departments, and other expenses in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty and collection of statistics.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER moved first reading of Bill (No. 128) to amend the General Inspection Act.—(from the Senate.)

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

STEAM-SHIP COMMUNICATION WITH AUSTRALIA.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire, with the consent of the House, to introduce a Bill to amend the Act relating to ocean steam-ships. I would like to do that and to dispense with the usual form.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the purport of the Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. To make a change with respect to the section regarding the Australian service, which was voted three years ago. That gave us the power to grant a subsidy for a term of ten years, $25,000 for fortnightly steam-ship service and the proportionate amount for less than a fortnight. I wish to change that, so that the subsidy shall be granted to a steam-ship service not less than monthly. I will fully explain it tomorrow.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Wednesday).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 29th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 11 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. FOSTER (for Mr. Patterson, Huron) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the Royal Military College, and to provide that the salary of the Commandant shall not exceed three thousand two hundred dollars a year, that the salary of the Staff Adjutant shall not exceed fourteen hundred dollars a year, and that the salaries of the professors, instructors and assistant instructors shall not exceed the total sum of twenty-six thousand dollars annually.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the $3,200 a year of salary granted to the Commandant in addition to his residence?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is. This resolution does not increase the salaries now paid by a single dollar.

Resolution concurred in.

DOMINION IRRIGATION ACT.

Mr. DALY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 130) The Dominion Irrigation Act.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the nature of that Bill?

Mr. DALY. It is not my intention to press the Bill this session. Its object is to provide for the irrigation of a large portion of the North-west Territories that will require to be irrigated. It is intended that persons or companies who desire to irrigate lands will be allowed to do so under the conditions and safeguards provided in the Bill. The Bill will be printed and circulated for the use of members, and will not be pressed until next session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TILBURY CENTRE INDUSTRIES.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron) (for Mr. Campbell) asked, What is the description of each of the manufacturing establishments in the town of Tilbury Centre, according to the census of 1891? What are the names of the several manufacturers? What number of hands were employed in each of said manufacturing establishments?

Mr. FOSTER. The industries in Tilbury Centre, according to census of 1891, are as follows:—

PORT OF SANDY COVE, N.S.

Mr. BOWERS asked, What were the amounts received for customs at the port of Sandy Cove, Digby county, N.S., for the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1891 and 1892; also the amounts received from 30th June, 1892, to 1st December, 1892? The salary paid to the officer at that port? Have there been any charges preferred against said officer in connection with bounty claims?

Mr. WALLACE. The customs collections at Sandy Cove for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1891, amounted to $10.55; for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1892, 62 cents; and from the 30th of June to the 1st of December, 1892, $33.40. The salary paid to the officer is $150 per annum. Some 85 vessels entered and cleared at this outport during the year ended the 30th of June last. It is necessary to have this officer stationed at this point. Charges have been preferred against him, and the matter is now in the hands of Inspector Kinney, of Yarmouth, N.S., for inquiry.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. gentleman to make the statement he promised with regard to the French Treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. I have to ask my hon. friend for further delay. A telegram has been received this morning which is now being deciphered, and I would not care to make an answer before knowing the purport of it. My hon. friend, I am sure, is anxious for all the information.

MACKEREL NETS.

Mr. FRASER. Early in the session I put a question respecting an Order in Council passed 21st March, 1892, relating to mackerel nets, and the acting Minister replied that the matter was under consideration. Can he tell me now what is the intention of the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No definite decision has been arrived at on that point yet.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Dominion Cartridge Factory . . . $40,000

Mr. MULOCK. Before this item is passed I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Militia the grievance of a former member of the service, Sergeant Slater by name. This soldier was originally in the regular service and served with distinction for many years. After having left the service with good conduct medals and everything to his credit, he enlisted in the Canadian militia, becoming a member, I believe, of the Governor-General's Body Guard. During the rebellion he rendered valuable service to the country by serving in the North-west. At the end of his three years' service, he came into collision with the military authorities, and I am sorry to say that, I think, he was very hardly treated. A demand was made upon him under the Militia Act for the return of his kit into stores. It is stated that this demand was not complied with as the law required, and he was summoned before a magistrate in Toronto, and sentenced to jail for thirty days. He served in jail for thirty days. It appears from his own public statement, whether well founded or not, that he had been making certain charges against the administration of the Guards in which he had been serving. These charges, he thinks, led to what he calls his persecution. I think myself that the treatment he received was harsh, to say the least of it. The charges have been formulated, I understand, and presented to the Militia Department, and Sergeant Slater has demanded an investigation into these charges. I do not intend to repeat these charges. I understand they are set forth explicitly in documents in the custody of the department. The sergeant has published his book, a copy of which I have here. No doubt the hon. Minister has seen it. This book sets forth the sergeant's record, and, I presume, the charges in question. In that respect I suppose this book would be a copy of the documents in the custody of the Government. Sergeant Slater says he has been informed that these charges have been investigated, but there is no evidence of an investigation, and it is alleged here that there has been no investigation, as there should have been. I rise now simply to suggest to the Minister that the charges should be taken up, and dealt with in a way that will satisfy the complainant that they are well or ill founded. Up to this time it would seem that he has received anything but justice at the hands of the militia authorities, from his own superior officer up to the head of the department, and, now that we have a new Minister of Militia, I would ask him to put his department into communication with the parties and see if the grievances set forth here have been adjudicated upon as required by law. It is hardly necessary for me to repeat what I said last session in regard to this soldier. I have no reason to change my mind, and I believe today, as I did then, that he is an honest, trustworthy, well-meaning, industrious and steady man, and that no charge can fairly be made against him to the contrary. That being the case, considering his record, considering that he has spent at least twenty-five years in the service of Her Majesty, and has fought on many a field, and that he left the regular service with honour, and with every badge of honour, I think it is not asking too much of the department to ask that the humble petition of a person in this position shall be treated with as much respect as if it came from the most powerful in the land.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to say a word or two about this matter, as the attack is directed principally against me. I might say that this man Slater was not in the

Mr. MULOCK.

North-west in our corps, and I never heard of him being on active service, though he has the long service medal. I think it is very unfair of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) to bring this matter up again, seeing that it was brought up last session. I think the reason is, that he wants to call off this man Slater from himself, and induce him to confine his attentions to me. I may say that this man, through the excessive use of liquor, has had his mind very much weakened, and the course taken by the hon. member and others on this side of the House, who last year brought the matter up in the House, is having the effect of weakening the man's intellect to such an extent as to make him a regular crank. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) says about him, he is not a steady man. The hon. gentleman sees him only when he is sober and then his appearance is in his favour. He has been drinking so long that his mind is weakened and he has become nothing but a crank and that in great degree because of the action of hon. gentlemen opposite. I may say that he has not only reported me, but I believe he has reported the hon. member himself. He reported the late Mr. Bigelow, the solicitor who defended him, to the Law Society, and asked that society to have him struck off the rolls, because, as he alleged, Mr. Bigelow had betrayed his case. He reported a letter carrier to the postmaster of Toronto on the ground that I had tampered with the letter carrier and had got his letters. The postmaster inquired and satisfied himself that I had not tampered with the letter carrier. Then he reported the postmaster himself to the authorities in Ottawa. The authorities here inquired and satisfied themselves that the postmaster had acted properly. He reported my conduct to the Governor-General and reported also to the Horse Guards in England, and they inquired into the matter, and I think they were satisfied of the style of man who made the accusation. As to the book itself, I have not read it and I do not intend to. I shall not waste my time looking into it. I leave that to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) when he is not better employed. I think the hon. member is taking a very unwise course in encouraging this man in his actions. The first thing he knows, he will drive him to a lunatic asylum.

Mr. MULOCK. I congratulate the gallant member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) on his manifestation of chivalry in dealing with a man who has served, as this man has, in many capacities. He has entirely misrepresented the case I presented to this House, and I doubt if such harsh and cruel words as these, coming from a high officer in the service, will reflect honour upon the hon. gentleman or commend him to the high opinion of the militia of Canada. I say that the humblest individual in the land is entitled to justice, and from what I know of this inquiry and the treatment this man has received up to this moment, I believe he has not received justice; and as a humble member of this House I say that any man who appeals to me, who has a grievance, I do not care whether he has friends at court or not, will have my attention. It will be my duty as well as my pleasure, to stand up here and plead for those who cannot plead for themselves. Instead of hon. members throwing the target of unfair criticism against those who undertake such a cause, I think they should leave it, at all events, to the conscience of each one to judge as to the propriety and justice of his course. I will not enter into the details of the accusation which the hon. gentleman has made against this man. No matter whether he is a steady man or an unsteady man, it is immaterial whether he has made reports and complaints against officers; it is immaterial what he has done in other respects; the question is, has he received fair consideration in regard to the particular grievance that he is suffering under. That is the issue, and it is no excuse to say that he may find fault with other people. I am not aware, either, that this soldier sent a complaint against me. The hon. member for West Toronto knows very well that he is only suggesting an excuse in order to cover up his own lack of nerve or lack of generosity in this matter. This poor man applied to me, and gave me a petition on one occasion to present to this House; but it contained irrelevant matter, and charges against persons that I thought ought not to appear in a petition, and for that reason I declined to take the responsibility of presenting it to the House. I do not propose to be the medium of giving publicity to charges calculated to affect the status of people when those charges cannot be investigated; and to that extent I may have incurred the disapprobation of the soldier in question. But when, as I understand, he presented charges and asked them to be investigated in a regular way, and says they have not been investigated, it is my duty to present his case to this House and to the country, and I do so. I again repeat what I said last year, that having had many opportunities of meeting this man—he has called upon me, it is true, and then, no doubt, he selected only the occasions when he was sober—but I have had many opportunities of meeting him, and on the streets of Toronto his face is a familiar figure, but on no occasions have I ever seen him in the slightest degree under the influence of liquor. I have always seen him neat, tidy, respectful and respectable, and that being the result of my observation, which I think fairly represents his general conduct, I regret that the hon. member for West Toronto has chosen, in this way, to comment upon the habits of a man, which habits in the slightest degree would not disentitle him to justice, if such be his right, as I think it is.

Mr. DENISON. I will say just one word more. Last session, a few weeks after this was brought up in the House, I received a telegram from the Toronto police authorities telling me that this man Slater had threatened to shoot me, and asking me to put myself in communication with the police authorities here so as to protect myself. I took no action in the matter, because I am quite ready to take my chances in any danger of that kind; but at the same time it shows the kind of a man that the hon. member for North York is encouraging in his present course.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). I know this man Slater to be one of the greatest cranks I ever met. He has persecuted me in my office day after day, and month after month, with his petition. I have conversed with him in regard to it, and have never been able to get an intelligent account from him. He did make threats of all sorts against the hon. member for West Toronto, and against two other members of this Parliament, and if there ever was a man that seemed to me to be like Guiteau, it is that man Slater.

Mr. COCKBURN. We must all have been delighted to see the disinterested way in which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) proposes to plead the cause in this House of everybody who has a grievance. He has declared himself ready to espouse on all occasions the cause of offended justice. He seems to take a particular interest in the case of the crank that he has brought before us. Whether it be that there is a certain affinity between those of crankish tendencies, I know not, but, certainly, when the hon. member puts himself forward as the Don Quixote who, with spear in rest, is ready to fight the battles, not only of every fair maiden, but of every impudent crank, I think such action ill-becomes members of this House, although such men may sometimes be useful in an election or otherwise. Still, talk of the kind he has indulged in does not contribute to the gentlemanly tone and feeling that one member ought to exhibit towards another in this House. We have been told that this man was so far lacking in the furnishings in the upper part of his head, that he has apparently reported every one with whom he came in contact as guilty of offending his dignity; and trespassing in some way on his peculiar privileges. The hon. member for North York has posed as the knight-errant of chivalry. I can assure him that if he takes up this task he will have enough to do for the remainder of his life, and one injurious effect of his entering upon this new and promising career, will be that we shall be deprived of the benefit of his services and advice in the more intricate and lengthened debates in which this House is apt to indulge. I may say that after the publication the hon. gentleman has made this morning to the House, that he is prepared to espouse the cause of every crank in the Dominion, I am sure that my hon. friend from West Toronto, and many other hon. gentlemen in this House, will be glad to entrust to his care all the cranks that trouble them and usually pester members of this House.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not aware that I am indebted to this non-commissioned officer for any support in elections; if the hon. member for Centre Toronto suggests that, he is entirely mistaken. I know nothing of this man's politics, and I never spoke to him on the subject in my life. As to the attempt of the member for Centre Toronto to come to the relief of the member for West Toronto, I can only say that certainly the member for West Toronto is in need of supports, but it is unfortunate that he should have had to call the "bombasto furioso" of the House to his aid under such circumstances. Their remarks will not in the slightest degree cause me to depart from the line of duty. We all know that when men think that they are suffering an injustice they gradually come to feel that they have serious grievances which need to be redressed. What was the foundation of the charge? I think the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) must be of the opinion, if he will recall this case, that it is a disgrace to the administration of justice, and a disgrace to the militia service of Canada, that this man should have been treated as he was treated. He served his country with distinction, but unfortunately he came into collision with some of his superior officers. As soon as his time of service had expired, he was not even allowed to renew it. With that determination, they laid a "plant" in order to place him in a false position at the earliest possible moment. A demand was made on him to send in his kit to the stores, and in the most cruel way, advantage was taken of a supposed refusal on his part, which after all may have been an innocent matter of inaction, and he was summoned before the magistrate of Toronto to answer the charge. He was not defended; it happened that his counsel was not present when the case came before the magistrate. He was wholly unfamiliar with magisterial law. The magistrate of Toronto is an officer in the service, and no doubt sympathises, as he ought to do, with his brother officers, and he stepped down from the bench and allowed his deputy to take the case and adjudicate upon it. The relations between the police magistrate of Toronto and his deputy are such that the case should have been conducted with far more care than usual in order to prevent a grievance; and yet this trial took place, the man being undefended and his witnesses absent, and before he knew where he was, he was found guilty and sent to jail for 30 days to consort with the common criminals of the city. This was harsh and cruel action, and if there had been any spirit of chivalry among the officers, they would have been content to have secured compliance with the law and secured the kit, and have not subjected the man to such cruel treatment. This was an insult to every fair-minded man in the country, and being endorsed by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) the hon. gentleman has failed to place himself on a plane superior to that occupied by those who took this action. I venture to say that the volunteer spirit of Toronto will not endorse him in the attitude he has taken on this occasion.

Mr. COCKBURN. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for threatening me with his declaration that the volunteer spirit of Toronto would not endorse the position I have taken. I beg to tell him that when there is a matter of justice before me, it never enters my mind to consider whether my action will cause me to lose or to gain votes. That question is never before my mind, and I hope, with the increasing intelligence which will come to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) with increasing years—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COCKBURN. Is there anything wrong in supposing that the hon. gentleman will become more intelligent? I yet entertain the hope that with his advancing years and growth in intelligence, we shall find him sitting on this side of the House. I, therefore, trust that with advancing years and advancing intelligence, he will be enabled to deal with a question of this kind, and be able to draw a distinction between a gentleman and a crank, and not insult members of this House by telling them that they have adopted a certain line of action simply with a view to gain votes. I am happy to state that in Centre Toronto I do not require to gain votes. Last time I appealed to the electors I never asked for a vote; I lay on my bed, and the Grit party were defeated by a majority of over 500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That accounts for the hon. gentleman's success.

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia again to this item. The cartridge factory at Quebec has been in operation for a great many years, and has been admittedly a complete success. We now use the cartridges manufactured there all over Canada, and find them to be of very good quality, perhaps superior to those imported from Europe. If I am correctly informed, the cost of English ammunition we use is, landed, $19.50 per 1,000. If we take those made by Eley Bros. for the Sniders, the cost is $20. The Canadian article costs $19.77¼. If we take the cost of the shells, there is a still greater difference. English shells cost $11.57, while Canadian cost only $8.42. The common shell, English, cost $4.76, the Canadian article $3.95. The cost of the 9-lb. shrapnel is, English, $3.47, Canadian, $3.81, but the common English shell costs $1.42, while the Canadian only costs $1.38. So, if quality is considered, it will be found that the Canadian ammunition is superior, and, moreover, it costs much less. If you look at the question from the point of view of home industry, it must be admitted that it is a wise policy to manufacture the ammunition in Canada. As to the location of the factory: it is located in the first military city of the Dominion, all expenses necessary for the building has been incurred, and I do not see any reason why a change should be proposed. The Government have thought fit—I do not know why, but they must have been misled, perhaps, by the same man who had something to do with the Gatling gun—to diminish the appropriation by $10,000. If we diminish the quantity of ammunition manufactured, we will increase the price. I do not see why the Government should change the policy they have been pursuing for so many years, especially when it has met with the satisfaction and approval of the whole of the country. I hope the Government will again look into the question. They are well aware that Major Prevost, who is at the head of the establishment, is fully competent, and has given the country an establishment of which it has reason to be proud. The Government should replace this sum of $10,000, in order that the full quantity of ammunition may be manufactured at this establishment, and thus pursue the line of policy adopted many years ago, and carried out with general satisfaction, as well to the force as to the whole country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe in the Auditor-General's Report an item of 47,177 lbs. of pig iron, which was charged at the rate of $42.75 per ton. What special kind of pig iron was used?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I will look into it and inform my hon. friend. I may say to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) that the policy of the Government has not changed in regard to the cartridge factory. In view of the fact that it is the intention to employ a new arm for the force in Canada, it would not be judicious to manufacture a large quantity of cartridges for an arm that was obsolete, and which it is intended to cease supplying to the force. For the coming year it is not intended to manufacture the Snider cartridge, but only the Martini-Henry cartridge. As regards the statement made by my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), I can only say that if he will furnish me with the information, contained in that pamphlet, I will give the case my special personal consideration.

Mr. MULOCK. I will ask the hon. gentleman to relieve me from the duty of formulating the charges, but I will report to the man in question and perhaps he will communicate directly with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). That will be all right.

Expenses in connection with Fishing Bounty $5,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to call the acting Minister's attention to a letter I have just received on the subject of the distribution of these bounties. The system formerly was, that fishermen were allowed to make their proofs of claim before magistrates, but last year the Government adopted the new system of sending around fishery agents to the different fishing establishments. I do not know whether they were unfortunate or not in the fishery agent appointed in King's county, Mr. McGinnis, but I think they have removed him since. I have received a letter from the manager of the largest factory in that part of the province, which I will read to the hon. gentleman. I am anxious to read it publicly, because I think the statement contained in it ought to be given to the Minister and to the House:

The fishing bounties have arrived here and there are quite a lot of complaints about them. There are three vessels that there is no bounty for. They put their claims in, but there is no bounty, and the consequence is that there are about 20 men who have fished, some of them all their lives, and still no bounty. This throws the owners and men who have fished in these vessels out of about $300. The reason they have not received the bounties, I hear, is that the Government appointed Mr. A. J. McGinnis of Murray River to receive the claims and he lost them. I may say that the vessels are all owned in Murray Harbour and I thought I would drop you a line, so that you may be able to call attention to it.

The writer goes on to suggest that the old system of paying the bounty was better than the new one. I trust that the acting Minister will see to this. If these men made their proper proofs and the fishery officer lost their claims, of course they should not be punished for that. I know the writer of this letter very well. He is a gentleman of good standing, in whose word I would place absolute reliance, and I trust that the Minister will ask the officer of the department to make inquiries and see that these men are reinstated on the bounty list.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman will send me the name of the officer I will have inquiries made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The name of the officer who is said to have lost the proofs, is A. J. McGinnis.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will see that inquiries are made. The new system of paying the bounties was adopted in order to prevent frauds which had been attempted, in some cases successfully, by false and irregular claims. Under the new system the inspectors were to visit the districts at certain times, and a rule was laid down which I must admit has since proved to be inconvenient, that where the parties did not appear to file their claims they were not in a position to have them paid. That of course was an experiment, but it has since been decided that their not being present to file the claims will not debar or prejudice those who are entitled to the bounty, and instructions have been issued to that effect.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The letter to which I called the hon. gentleman's attention, states further:

The fishery officer was only here for two days to receive claims, and it was at a season of the year when the men were coasting in their vessels to Halifax and Pictou, and could not be home to enter their claims. Then A. J. McGinnis was appointed, and the men did not know it for a long time, and they were only given two or three days to file their claims. McGinnis lives about eight miles from the harbour, where most of the fishermen live.

I will write to the gentleman inclosing this letter and calling his attention to the matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Nothing will prejudice the fair, legitimate claims of these men.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before whom will these men make their claims, now that the old ones have been lost?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We will arrange that they be sent to the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If they could make their claims before a custom-house officer or a justice of the peace, as formerly, the matter might be easily arranged, but under the new regulation the department will not receive the claim at all unless it is made before some special officer appointed by the department. That is why I call special attention to it. If the inspecting officer who was sent there lost the papers, the men of course must have another chance to make their claims, otherwise you would be punishing the men for the neglect of the officer. If the hon. gentleman would give the people in that locality a chance to make any "bona fide" claims they have before the customs officers, it might be sufficient.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the intention of the department is that these claims shall be recognized, and that a claim will not be rendered invalid because it has not been filed with the proper officer. I cannot tell what particular officer the hon. gentleman refers to, but the department will see that the claims shall reach the department and be paid.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is quite satisfactory. I could not ask more than that.

Mr. FRASER. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the unsatisfactory method in which the bounty claims are now paid. I think it is absurd to compel a fisherman to walk twenty or thirty miles, as some of them have to do, to get three or four dollars. Why should not the department send to each beneficiary a cheque payable to his own order, which would be a sufficient receipt? Many of these fishermen have no horses, so that they have to travel on foot, and very often they would probably spend the whole amount of their claim in going for it. I am glad that the Government are taking the greatest possible care that only those entitled to these bounties shall be on the list. I suggested last year that they should have the list posted in the offices of the collectors of customs in the various seaport towns, so that the fishermen themselves could see the names of those entitled to the bounty. If that were done, there would not be so many frauds. In this connection I would like to know when the Government propose to bring down the papers ordered some time ago in reference to the frauds in the county of Victoria. But what I want to call particular attention to is the desirability of adopting some better method of paying the bounty. The Government might take 5 cents from each fisherman to cover the cost of registering the letter in which his cheque would be sent to him. The amounts are so small in many cases that the Government should make it as easy as possible for the fishermen to obtain them.

Mr. STAIRS. I would urge upon the Minister the desirability of adopting the suggestion made by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), that cheques for the amount of the bounty should be sent to the fishermen. I do not see any objection to that. It may be said that there is danger of the cheques going astray, and being wrongly endorsed. That would apply to any cheque, and you might as well say that a cheque should not be sent payable to the order of anybody. If a cheque went astray and were wrongly endorsed, it would be forgery, and there is a remedy for that. It would simplify the distribution of the bounty very much to adopt that method. In respect to the filing of claims, I would suggest that some better arrangement should be made than that in force last year. I think an officer should be appointed in each locality to receive bounty claims, and a little more time should be allowed to file the claims.

Mr. BOWERS. In regard to this matter I am perfectly in accord with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), that the department should send a cheque to each man. It would be a cheaper method in the long run than the present method. With regard to the filing of claims, the fishery officer did not arrive at some places in my county until the last day of the month within which the claims could be filed, and a great many of the fishermen had gone away on their vessels, so that it was impossible for them to file their claims. I think that the papers might be given to the fishermen a month, at least, before the list is completed, so that each crew could sign their claims while on board the vessel. By 30th November a great many of the crews have left in their vessels; some of them are thousands of miles away, and it is impossible to get their signatures to the papers, so that a great many of them have to be signed by other parties. I congratulate the department on the means they have taken to stop the leakage and prevent frauds. When we find that the vessels which had been getting $1.50 a ton during the last few years are this year getting $3 per ton, it is evident that there must have been a leakage of at least $25,000 a year in bounty frauds. I wish to call the attention of the department to a number of claims that have been rejected in certain counties. In Gloucester, the claims rejected during six years numbered 102 or .018 per cent, and in 1891, 677 or over 41 per cent. Bonaventure, claims rejected during six years, 94 or 1006 per cent; in 1891, 139 or 1 per cent. Gaspé, claims rejected in six years, 94 or 7¹/₁₀ per cent; in 1891, 47 or over 2½ per cent. Victoria, claims rejected in six years, 27 or 1¹/₁₀ per cent; 1891, 28 or 3 per cent. Richmond, last year, about 2 per cent. Cape Breton, about 5 per cent. while Digby, Yarmouth, Queen's and Shelburne were only about ⅓ of 1 per cent. This kind of thing has been going on for years, and I congratulate the Government on having at least been able to put a check to it. I would ask the acting Minister whether any attempt has been made in any of these counties towards investigating the bounty frauds. I find that in the county of Victoria several bogus applications were made, one man having filed a claim for his dog Peter. This is a matter which should be looked into, and the parties who have been defrauding the fishery bounty for the last four or five years detected and properly dealt with.

Mr. McALISTER. I would ask the acting Minister if it is the intention of the regulation that the fishermen engaged in fishing should, besides catching the quantity of fish required, have to be constantly engaged in that calling for three months? For instance, would a farmer who attends to fishing a part of the day, covering a period of three or four months, and who has caught the quantity of fish required by the regulations, be entitled to receive the bounty therefor?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The intention of the regulation was that those entitled to it must be actually engaged in fishing for three months, and cannot spend part of the time in fishing and part of the time at anything else.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the acting Minister of Marine if he would, at the earliest moment, give his attention to the petition presented to the House on the 13th March on behalf of the Ojibbeway Indians. It is in the Votes and Proceedings of that day and sets forth certain grievances. The band in question is most industrious and worthy, is engaged in husbandry and making rapid progress, and is in every respect deserving the consideration of the Government. I would like the hon. gentleman to look into their grievances and give them the relief warranted by justice. I have received communications suggesting that all the fishery regulations and orders referred to in that petition, not only as they affect the Indians but as they affect the white people, are in need of overhauling in order that the fishing industry may be put on a proper basis. I refer to the waters of Lake Simcoe, and my application for an investigation is not only on behalf of the Indians but of the people generally who use those waters.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will look into the matter.

Indians--Ontario and Quebec...$67,956

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I beg to call attention to what seems to be very grave irregularities which have grown up in the last ten or eleven years with reference to the Indian School Fund, the Indian Land Management Fund, and the province of Quebec Indian Fund. It will be remembered that the Indian School Fund was substituted for the old Imperial contribution to the Indians' arms and ammunition every year from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. When the hunting in a large degree ceased, the moneys that were formerly appropriated by the Imperial Government and the Government of Canada to the arms and ammunition fund were converted into a school fund. This fund in 1878 amounted to about $143,000, and has varied very little from that time down to the present. For the past seven or eight years, it has been $141,422.83. There is an income arising from the interest upon this fund and from the payments into the fund varying from $14,000 or $16,000 to about $5,000 a year. The sum varies, and the charges upon this fund of course vary. It was the intention of the law that the expenditure should be kept within the income derived from the fund. The following is the statement showing the condition of the fund in the several years from 1878 to 1891:—

Year.	Capital.	Income.	Expenditure.	Excess of Income.	Deficiency of Income.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
1878.....	142,912 83	2,138 27

1887.....	141,222 83	24,714 30	46,040 94	21,326 64
1888.....	141,222 83	{ L.G 19,318 10 }	45,656 15	24,736 56
		{ 20,919 59 }
1889.....	141,222 83	20,393 44	49,781 74	28,388 30
1890.....	141,222 83	30,249 11	63,260 79	33,011 68
1891.....	141,222 83	{ L.G 25,291 75 }	45,740 76	40,968 32
					211,932 13

So that, from 1881 to 1891, embracing eleven years, the fund has been overdrawn to the extent of $211,932, nearly $100,000 more than the amount of the fund itself. Now, I may say here that, in every one of the three funds I have mentioned, there has, during the past years, been a gradually increasing charge against it, and if the amount expended were charged against each fund, it would be far in excess of the capital that goes to constitute it. Now, the Indian Land Management Fund was created in 1855. It was made up, I think, of 10 per cent taken from the various sales of land and of timber and set apart as a fund to be charged with the cost of managing Indian property, and taking charge of the Indian interests. This fund, in 1878, amounted to $115,000. It fell, in 1882, to $103,669, and from that time it has risen until, at present, it is $150,680; at least, in 1891 it amounted to that, and it is still at that figure for the last four or five years. Now, the income from that, of course, is the interest of certain payments of contributions that have been made from sales of Indian lands and timber each year, so that the revenues derived from the Indian Management Fund have varied from $31,000 to $15,000 a year. Now, the management of Indian affairs has, it seems, been charged with a very considerable expenditure that ought, perhaps, to have been otherwise provided for. But I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that, in 1878, the income was $31,000, expenditure, $21,600, leaving a balance of $9,400 of revenue not expended. In 1879 the income was $28,600, expenditure, $25,295, leaving a balance of revenue unexpended of $3,227. But from that year, beginning with 1880, there has been a deficit, and that deficit has decreased each year up to the present. The following table shows the capital, income, expenditure and balance and income and expenditure for the several years of this fund:—

Year.	Capital.	Income.	Expenditure.	Excess of Income.	Deficiency of Income.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
1878.....	114,865 57	31,022 66	21,616 01	9,406 65

1885.....	129,847 50	19,901 66	63,131 29	43,229 63
1886.....	(127,483 13) (8,883 49)	20,988 71	71,983 12	50,994 41
1887.....	145,250 11	28,613 49	81,182 33	52,568 84
1888.....	150,965 36	20,544 74	86,436 15	65,891 41
1889.....	156,680 61	27,077 32	103,410 09	76,332 77
1890.....	156,680 61	(25,728 05) (In. 9,652 21)	106,874 38	81,146 53
1891.....	156,680 61	22,990 14	109,776 40	86,776 40
					580,843 45

Now, during the eleven years up to 1891, the income from this Indian Land Management Fund was withdrawn to the extent of $580,843 against the capital of $156,680. Then, in the case of the Quebec Indian Fund, it is partly Imperial in its origin and partly Canadian. That fund, in 1878, and for a number of years before, amounted to nearly $50,000, and it has continued stationary in amount down to the present time. The deficit in the expenditure with regard to the fund began in 1882. The following figures will show the capital, income, expenditure and balance between income and expenditure for the several years from 1878 to 1891:—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

So that this fund, having a capital of a little less than $50,000, has been overdrawn during the last seven years, for which we have the figures, $163,716. These three funds taken together represent a capital of $347,669.74, and they have been overdrawn by $956,491.97. Now I may say here that the report of the Indian Department for the last year does not contain any information in regard to either of these funds; but down to last year the statement of the amount was published in the report. What I wish to call the attention of the House to is, that the funds have been exhausted nearly three times over. There is no capital left, if you are to charge an income and capital with the expenditure that has taken place. The Minister will be able to explain how this large expenditure has been made. It has been made to a very large extent by parliamentary appropriations. I may say that the Indian School Fund in 1877 had a legislative grant of $19,318. In 1890 again there was a legislative grant of $25,000; but I have included both these legislative grants in the statement of revenue, and the deficit I have mentioned, amounting to $212,000, in the case of the Indian School Fund, is over and above the appropriation made by Parliament in the two years which I have mentioned. So, with regard to the Indian Management Fund, I suppose this must have been the practice. The Finance Minister will be able to say whether it was or not. These sums are $212,000 of the Indian School Fund, and $581,000 of the Indian Land Grant Fund, and $164,000 of the Quebec Indian Fund must have been provided by a general charge against the Indian annuities in these two provinces. But if that is so, I cannot see in what way the department has succeeded in obtaining the money to make these payments. If it is so, the Indians have, I think, good ground for dissatisfaction. I do not see how these accounts could have passed the Auditor-

General if they were provided for in any other way than under the previous consent of the Indians and an appropriation of a portion of the annuities each half year to which they are entitled. I think if that is so, it is very important that some change should be made. If Parliament wishes that Indian schools should be established, and that an expenditure should be made of a very large sum each year, it ought to be with the consent of the Indian population to be benefited, if the charge is to be made against the Indian Fund, and that fact ought to be known to Parliament, and the consent of Parliament had to the appropriation. I call attention to this fact, that the expenditure from the Indian School Fund in 1879, was $11,867; in 1890 the expenditure was $63,260, an expenditure of $33,000 in excess of any income that could be derived from the fund. It does seem to me that in the administration of the department this answer should be made to every religious or other body applying for aid to establish a school under denominational care, and to take charge of the Indians: Gentlemen, there are no funds. That ought to be the conclusive answer. No expenditure ought to be made beyond what the income of the department would permit, without bringing the matter under the attention of Parliament and making an entirely different system; and that, it seems to me, could only be done by Parliament, after the consent of the Indians had been obtained. Now, with regard to the Indian Land Management Fund, the expenditure of that fund in 1879 was $25,295. That, I think, will be found some $4,000 higher than it has been at any time since Confederation down to that year. I make no complaint of that expenditure, because it was within the appropriation; but that expenditure from $25,000, in 1879, became $27,000 next year, then $33,000, then $46,000, then $56,000, then $61,000, then $63,000, and so on, till 1891, when it became nearly $110,000. Now, I do not think there is any justification of a policy of that sort. I do not say how the money was expended, I do not say whether it was expended beneficially or otherwise, but I say there has been a large sum of money expended for which there was no proper authority. There have been moneys expended under the head of management that clearly cannot be for the purposes of management. Now, I will mention that in looking over the accounts I found in 1889, not many less than 100 newspapers which have advertisements charged against this fund. I do not remember the exact sum, but it was a large sum, and must have been not far short of the whole income for that particular year. I think that is a most unjustifiable expenditure, and there may have been many others of the same sort. I do not find in the last three or four years any charge of that sort against the fund, but there have been a multiplication of officers far beyond what is necessary. Now, let me mention this to the hon. Minister. Formerly, Mr. Mackenzie, and after him Mr. Watson, had charge of nearly all the bands of the west, but now you have four or five Indian agents where there was one before, and in this way you burden the fund with a cost for management in the form of salaries to agents that seems to be altogether uncalled for. If the Minister will look into the matter in that particular, he will find that he could dispense with three-fourths of the agents without, in the smallest degree, interfering with the efficiency of the service; or, if he desires to have an agent in the immediate neighbourhood, then more than one-fourth or one-fifth of the present charge is quite unnecessary. I do not like to mention names, but I know myself men who are receiving $500 a year in connection with the management of Indian affairs, in my opinion a wholly unnecessary expenditure. I call the Minister's attention to these facts. I dare say they have been brought under his attention since he has had charge of the department, but I think the more he will investigate the matter, the more clearly he will see that there has been a serious misapplication of moneys that do not constitute any part of these funds. During the last eleven years there has been an expenditure beyond income from these funds of $976,000. I say that that money belongs to the Indians; that it is no part of any parliamentary appropriation, and that that money has been kept out of the annuities of the Indians during these years. I do not see how it can fairly be said that there is any one of these funds now in existence. I have called the attention of the House to the fact that the funds amount to less than $350,000, and that accounts have been overdrawn to the extent of nearly $1,000,000. I do not intend, at this period of the session, to trouble the House further with the matter, but I think it is important to bring under the attention of the House, and to have a proper supervision of these accounts, and to have some alteration made in the departmental management that will subject the Deputy-Minister, or whoever has charge of it, to the same limitation and control to which other public officers are subjected in expending the funds appropriated by Parliament.

Mr. DALY. In answer to the hon. member. I have only to say that this matter has been brought to my attention since I took office, and I find that in September last a report was made by a sub-committee of the Privy Council, who had under consideration the accounts of the Indian Management Fund, the School Fund and the Quebec Fund. It appears that this Land Management Fund has been, so far as I can see, used more for Indian management than for land management; because, as the hon. gentleman has stated, we find that so far back as 1872, and even prior, such charges as insurance, medicines, advertising, building of bridges, building of school-houses, and all that sort of thing, were charged to this fund. The hon. gentleman is in error in believing that the annuities of the Indians have been used in any way to make up this expenditure. Their trust fund is intact to-day. The only funds that have been used are this Land Management Fund, the Quebec Fund and the School Fund. I can better explain to the hon. gentleman the position that the Government has taken in the matter, by reading the report of the Committee of the Privy Council on the subject:

A Sub-Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration the condition of the province of Quebec Indian Fund, the Indian Land Management Fund and the Indian School Fund, and the joint memorandum from the Deputy-Minister of Finance and the Deputy Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs dealing with the same subject which is hereto attached. The Sub-Committee observe that the interest accounts of these funds upon the 31st May, 1892, were overdrawn: Province of Quebec Fund, $37,231.22; Indian Land Management Fund, $114,992.34; Indian School Fund, $44,987.41, and the interest producing power of the capital of these funds, has in consequence fallen so low that the necessary expenses cannot be met without some assistance from without. To furnish this assistance, and at the same time to avoid the possibility of making it a charge for all time upon the Consolidated Revenue, has been the subject of grave consideration. The only plan which seemed at all feasible, and of which the Sub-Committee could recommend the adoption, is the one which may now be briefly outlined. It is proposed at once to reduce the rate of interest upon that portion of the Indian Fund now bearing 4 per cent, to 3½ per cent. As this amount is $1,860,000, the saving in interest would be for the year 1892-93, about $9,300. The saving in this item of interest will constantly increase, as the amount on which 3½ per cent will be payable, will be augmented annually at the rate of about $50,000.

This saving in interest will be an offset against the amount to be granted yearly from the Consolidated Fund, which, for the year 1892-93, will be $19,000.

With the exercise of economy the Department of Indian Affairs will be enabled to reduce the expenditure gradually until a limit is reached, which will represent the lowest point at which the service can be managed without endangering its efficiency. It will, therefore, be possible to reduce this annual grant from year to year, and it is thought that for 1893-94, not more than \$15,200 will be required, and for 1894-95, not more than \$14,000. It is confidently expected that with proper economy in expenditure, and with this aid from sources outside the fund, the present debit balance may be reduced, and as any such reduction will at once be felt to the benefit of the funds, as it will increase the revenue producing power of the capital, it will be seen that the capital of the funds may, after the lapse of some years, be restored to their full amount. When this is accomplished, which may not be for a considerable time, all aid from outside sources will cease; but, in the meantime, the saving of interest by the reduction of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, would form such a valuable offset to the annual grant that, in the space of seventeen years the one will balance the other.

The Sub-Committee, with the hope that this plan will be found workable, recommend that authority be granted for reductions in the rate of interest paid upon that portion of the Indian fund now standing at 4 per cent to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, the change to take effect on the 1st July, 1892, and that the sum of \$19,000 may be included in the Supplementary Estimates for the current year, to be submitted to Parliament at its next session, as a grant to the province of Quebec Indian Fund, Indian Land Management Fund, and Indian School Fund.

It would seem proper, in order to make the best possible use of this grant, and after the precise amount required by each of the interested funds has been ascertained, that it should be distributed annually at the close of the year, with the authority of Council, upon a joint report of the Deputy Superintendent-General and the Accountant of Indian Affairs.

The Sub-Committee further recommend, as it may be possible from time to time to make such changes in the manner of meeting the expenditure for the management of the land and timber as will result in a saving to the funds, that the authority of the Governor in Council should be obtained for such changes, based upon a joint report of the Deputy Superintendent-General and the Accountant of Indian Affairs, and that a similar joint report should be submitted for any change in existing appointments.

The Sub-Committee, in conclusion, are strongly of opinion that no new appointments of agents, physicians, or missionaries should be made if their salaries will become a charge upon the overdrawn accounts.

In pursuance of the recommendation made to Council, some changes have been made in the province of Ontario in connection with the agencies, and in the direction the hon. gentleman has indicated, and I hope before Parliament meets next session, to be able to effect further economies in the direction of doing away with the duplication of agencies. We have abolished three agencies already, and the work performed by two men is now performed by one. For instance, Mr. Stevenson, agent on the Georgina Islands, has been retired, and his duties will be performed by Mr. McPhee, the agent at Orillia. It is necessary that Mr. McPhee should be continued in office, because he has succeeded admirably in managing Indians, and the morals and good behaviour of the band under his charge have wonderfully improved.

Mr. MULLOCK. Will he get an increase of salary because of increased duties?

Mr. DALY. He has not got one yet.

Mr. MULLOCK. What are the arrangements made with him?

Mr. DALY. The arrangements have not yet been completed. Probably he will receive an increase of $100 a year, but not more. The official who performed those duties formerly received $500 per year, which was not too much.

Mr. MULLOCK. I have mentioned this for ten years past.

Mr. DALY. In some parts of Ontario other agencies have been abolished, and from time to time it will no doubt be found feasible to diminish the number, the policy of the department being to wipe out as much as possible the duplication of work which appears to have been going on in Ontario, and thus effect economies in that direction. I have here a long statement prepared by the officers of the department in regard to Indian lands management, and I would weary the House if I read it; but I will hand it to the hon. gentleman in order that he may have the opportunity of ascertaining exactly the condition in which the funds now stand. By taking in the Estimates of the year, the sum of $15,200 and $19,000 in the Supplementary Estimates, and carrying out the suggestion made by the Sub-Committee of the Privy Council, we will be able to overcome the state of affairs now existing in regard to this fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From what source did you provide the moneys required to balance the account?

Mr. FOSTER. Out of the capital of the fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By what authority was the capital used?

Mr. FOSTER. It was used by authority of custom. This practice has extended over a series of years. It is apparent that at a very early day, say 1872, there was an evident lack of appreciation of what ought to be expended properly for land management, and appropriations were made out of that source of income which could not properly come under land management. I went into the matter pretty carefully, and I came to the conclusion that at all events the expenditures were made for the benefit of the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you refer to the advertisements that cost thousands of dollars?

Mr. FOSTER. There may have been such cases, and there were probably mistakes committed in regard to inserting advertisements; but, as a rule, it will be found that the expenditures were for the advantage of the Indians, although some of them cannot be properly charged against Indian land management. There was set apart at an early period capital for the different funds, and that capital has remained intact. The interest which accrued, together with certain other income made up the amount for expenditure which should not be exceeded each year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The first deficit was made in 1881.

Mr. FOSTER. No; the deficits began in 1872 and continued until 1891; expenditures were made in excess of the income that could properly be expended, and the overplus of the expenditure was taken out of the three funds.

Mr. MULLOCK. There was no custom up to that time.

Mr. DALY. Yes; from 1871 down.

Mr. MULLOCK. There was no deficit until 1881. By what authority could money be expended—you could not have any vote?

Mr. FOSTER. No vote was taken. I am simply detailing what occurred. The expenditures were made, and it was supposed that there was sufficient authority for making them. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in conversation asked me whether these accounts had been audited by the Auditor-General. I am informed that the Auditor-General has audited these accounts. Only within about the last two years has my attention been called to the matter, and an investigation has since been made. We ascertained exactly what was the state of the funds. A sub-committee of Council was appointed to go into the whole matter, and they found out a certain state of things to exist, and they submitted recommendations with a view to stop the excessive expenditure and to set right the funds. That is the condition of the matter at the present time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have these matters had any effect on the Indians annuity fund?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the overplus was taken from other funds.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has stated that only since 1871-72 has the practice of making charges against the fund, which did not properly belong to it, prevail. I am not aware of any such changes. Of course, there is no necessity for coming to Parliament with reference to the management, so long as the income derived from the fund was not exceeded; and that excess did not take place until 1881 or 1882, with regard to some funds. With regard to roads and bridges that were built, that practice grew up in this way. We had in the department, Indian lands for sale, and sometimes the construction of a bridge or the siding of the construction of a bridge brought the lands into the market and enabled the department to make sales where otherwise they could not make them, and where there was a sufficient amount of money for the year on hand, sometimes appropriations were made in that way, and made for a very early period. It seems to me that was legitimately within the rules of management, but the difficulty I see in the explanation which the hon. Minister of Finance, and the Minister in charge of the department makes is that the expenditure within the period I have mentioned, in excess of the income or revenue of these funds amounts to nearly $1,000,000, while the three funds together amount to a little less than $350,000, so that upwards of $600,000 have been expended during the eleven years in excess, not only of the revenue, but in excess of the entire capital.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, yes. I have gone through each year after year, and I have the figures with regard to that.

At one o'clock the Committee rose and the Speaker left the Chair.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman explain in what way these moneys were paid to the Indian Department?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the explanation is mainly this. You have to go back to the years before Confederation to find the creation of this fund. A certain amount of capital was set apart to form the Indian Land Management Fund, for instance, and the interest on this fund, together with the revenues which came in from the management of the lands, produced a certain revenue which was to be expended, the idea being without doubt when the fund was instituted that the original capital of the fund should not be diminished.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How was the fund created in the first place—out of sales made by the Indian Department?

Mr. FOSTER. Partly out of those and partly out of money voted by the Legislature for the purpose. In 1870-71 there was to the credit of the Land Management Fund a capital of $195,225, the revenue in that year being $18,539, and the expenditure, $22,688. This over-expenditure was taken out of the capital of the fund, which left the capital balance at the end of the year at $191,000. In 1874-75 the fund had been further diminished by over-expenditure to $186,000; in 1876 to $180,000; in 1876-77 to $175,000, and in 1877-78 to $129,000. There is a note opposite the entry for this year, which shows how that great decrease was brought about. It seems that more money was needed for the Indian School Fund, and in that year, by the authority of Council, $44,000 was transferred from the capital of the Land Management Fund to the School Fund. In 1878-79 it further diminished to $124,000; in 1879-80 to $111,000, in 1881-82 to $87,000, keeping at about that figure until 1885-86, when it decreased to $84,000. In 1887-88 it rose to $92,000; in 1888-89 it was $85,000, and in 1890-91 it was $75,534. That is the history in brief of the Indian Land Management Fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister has not touched upon the point I want to get at. I quite understand how the thing was done so far; but he knows, as I know, that this is merely a book debt, and what I want to know is, how did the Indian Department get hold of the additional money?

Mr. FOSTER. They took it out of the capital which stood to their credit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, the Government of the day—it does not matter whether it was the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, the Government of Sir John Macdonald or the present Government—must have allowed the Indian Department to overdraw from one quarter or another. The money must have been advanced to the Indian Department, and that would not be done without an Order in Council in each case.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very peculiar, but in looking into the transaction, I have not found that there was the authority of an Order in Council in any case.

Mr. MULOCK. On whose authority was it done?

Mr. FOSTER. It was simply done departmentally, and when the Auditor-General came in, he found that custom prevailing, and he raised no objection to it, and he has been auditing the accounts consecutively since that time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I want to understand, and what is not yet clear, is this: I quite understand that they have been drawing on capital, but that capital had, in point of fact, no existence at all, except in the shape of a book debt.

Mr. FOSTER. It must have had a tangible existence. At least this is true. There were moneys in the hands of the Government to be used for the benefit of the Indians. What was spent, came of course out of the census and revenue and diminished by that amount the sum to the credit of the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It had, just as the funds in the savings banks have; but the hon. gentleman holds no securities for it. It is simply a book debt. In order that the Indian Department could get the actual hard cash, the Consolidated Fund must have advanced it. There is no other way that I can see that the money could have been got, and I want to know how the Indian Department managed to get that actual hard cash out of the Consolidated Fund?

Mr. FOSTER. It must have been transferred to them through the Audit Department and the Finance Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, in what shape did the Finance Department make this advance? Was it done by the respective Ministers from time to time?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot find that there was the authority of an Order in Council in any case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because there is apparently nothing to prevent the Indian Department drawing the whole of this trust fund behind our backs, without Parliament or anybody else knowing anything about it. There is no check upon them. They could do this on their own sweet will and pleasure; and the Finance Minister does not know of a single document or Order in Council or order of his department under which this money was paid out. It must have come from the Government coffers, in some shape or form. We have Indian Funds at 6 per cent, at 5 per cent and at 3½ per cent, one amounting to $1,100,000, one amounting to $600,000 and one amounting to $1,702,000, in all a matter of nearly $4,000,000; and, to all outward appearances, the Indian Department could draw any portion of that sum and spend it just how it pleased, and there does not appear to be any sort of a sufficient audit or check or control over the matter in any shape or form, and we wake up some fine day and find—I do not know which is correct, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) or the hon. Minister of Interior (Mr. Daly)—$600,000 or $200,000 or $900,000 of these funds have disappeared and nobody seems to know who authorized that. All we know is that the department seems to have taken the money. That kind of thing is contrary to all proper system or order and all proper book-keeping. I do not see how they can have drawn against it without the concurrence of the Finance Department at least, or the Receiver-General's Department, as the case may be. That is what I want to understand. How did they manage to lay their hands on these capital moneys? As far as the income goes and parliamentary votes go, that is all plain enough, but these are not securities which could be sold piecemeal. They are sums in the hands of the Government, represented solely and simply by certain entries in our books, and the cash could not be got hold of, that I can see, without the concurrence of the Finance Department at least.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite true, and it must have gone to diminish the revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is clear. Surely it must have come, in some form or other out of the Consolidated Fund in the hands of the Government. What other possible fund could it have come from? You must have advanced the money to them out of their capital. There is no other way; and if it was advanced out of capital, the department which advanced it must have known all about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Langton, in his time, authorized it, and the same has been done under the present Auditor-General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I never remember the matter—although I speak under correction, it now being a considerable distance of time—having been submitted to me in my official capacity, and if I had found that Mr. Langton or anybody else had authorized money to be paid, without my consent, his days in the land would have been very short as my deputy, and I can hardly think the hon. gentleman's deputy, who is a very worthy and punctilious officer, could have authorized the advance without consultation. I do not recollect a single case having been brought under my notice, in five years time, in which I was asked to authorize an advance on capital account of the Indian Management Fund.

Mr. FOSTER. The transfer from one fund to the other was certainly made in your time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be, but I do not recollect at this moment a single case having been submitted to me to authorize an advance on capital account.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman had better allow me to refresh my memory about this. I have not had the time to look it up now, as it was two years ago when we looked into the matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to understand in what precise way the Indian Department got hold of this capital money. Of course I quite understand, it was deducted from the capital account. That is plain enough, although I do not understand the extraordinary discrepancy between my hon. friend's statement and that of the Minister of Interior. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) makes it nearly $1,000,000, and the Minister of the Interior made it about $200,000. That is a question we cannot properly investigate without the aid of a special committee or the Public Accounts Committee; but the other point we ought to know is how the money has been got hold of.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not hear the first part of the statement of the Minister of Finance, but there are certain facts of which the House of course has cognizance. In the first place, there is no actual money on hand. These capital accounts are simply liabilities on the part of the Government to these various Indian funds; and if the capital account is overdrawn, while you may charge the Indian Fund with the amount so overdrawn, to the extent of the fund, the money itself must come out of the ordinary revenue of the country or must be borrowed. If it comes out of the ordinary revenue, it ought to appear as a charge against that revenue, and the amount should be charged against the Indian capital account. That is perfectly clear, and yet, so far as the report shows, there is no report of the Finance Department to show that the ordinary revenue was charged with this sum. I fail to understand how these sums could be charged to any other capital account but that mentioned in the report of the Indian Department. Now, I stated that in 1880 the capital account of the Indian Management Fund is represented at $108,000. In 1891, it is represented as $156,680. The Minister said it would be found that the capital was diminished to the extent of the excess of expenditure over revenue each year. But that is not the case. Any one who will go over the reports will, if these reports properly represent the accounts, see that that is a mistake. Let me give some facts by way of illustration. In 1881, the capital account of the Indian Land Management Fund was reported $106,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It is $87,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am taking from the account as printed in the Indian Department report. All the figures I gave to the House were taken from that. In 1881, it is reported as being $106,469.82. Now, the income for that year was $16,645.95, and the expenditure was $33,111.13. That would be an expenditure of $16,465 in excess of the income. Yet the next year we do not find the capital diminished by this $16,000. It is put down at $103,669.82, and the report declares just in what way the capital was diminished. In 1889, the capital of the fund was reported to be $156,680.61.

Mr. FOSTER. What fund is that?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Indian Land Management Fund. Now, the expenditure in that year was $103,410.09, and the income was $27,077.32, leaving an excess to be charged somewhere of $76,332.77. In 1890, the capital fund is exactly to the cent what it was in 1889, and the expenditure was $106,874.33, and the income $25,728, leaving a deficit of $81,146.33 to be charged somewhere. Then the next year, the last year for which I have the figures, 1891, the capital is exactly to a cent what it was in the two previous years, $156,680.61. The income is $22,990.14, the expenditure $109,776.40, leaving $86,776.40 to be charged against either capital or some other fund. What I call the hon. gentleman's attention to is that the expenditure of these three years is $80,000 in excess of the total amount of capital. I have taken all these figures from the report, so that the hon. gentleman will see that, unless there is something altogether mistaken in the reports that have been brought down from time to time, these charges could not have been made against this capital.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will tell him where one explanation of the disparity exists. I notice that the hon. gentleman takes the year 1889, and states that the capital balance was a certain amount.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was $156,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The capital balance given here is $85,000. That is the amount of capital in hand. What does the hon. gentleman make the revenue in that year ; it is here $32,792.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No ; the revenue is reported as $27,077.32.

Mr. FOSTER. Then take the next year, 1889-90.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is $25,728.05.

Mr. FOSTER. That agrees with this statement ; that is the revenue which arises from the fund itself, and the income from the parliamentary vote. Now, when my hon. friend speaks of the expenditure, he should remember that there have been the revenue of the fund as well as the parliamentary vote to draw upon.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would say that in the Indian School Fund, I find for certain years a parliamentary vote added as part of the revenue, but, with regard to this Indian Land Management Fund, I do not find any parliamentary appropriation, and the hon. gentleman will see that if there is a parliamentary appropriation for 1890, it will require to be $81,146.53 to square up the difference between the expenditure and the revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. If nothing had been taken from capital as formerly.

Mr. DALY. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) asked how these funds originated. The Indian Land Management Fund it appears arises from a deduction of 10 per cent from the sales of land and timber the assets of the Indians, that is, assets of the Indians in the old provinces, Quebec and Ontario. The School Fund was made up of appropriations made by the old Provincial Parliaments, and this Parliament. The School Fund, the hon. gentleman may recollect, was augmented, I think in 1876, by deducting $44,000 from the Indian Land Management Fund. As far as I can make out, this is merely a matter of book-keeping. The Indian annuity funds are intact ; they have not been touched.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are they ?

Mr. DALY. They are made up of sales of their lands and timbers, less 10 per cent deducted for this fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not cover the question how this money was got at. The only possible source I can see is that the Government must have advanced out of consolidated funds. That is the obvious way.

Mr. DALY. That is the way it was done, I think ; but I cannot give any definite information on the subject.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Or there may be constantly sales of land going on and the department, instead of adding the amounts received to the funds and checking it out always under due supervision, may simply have appropriated the sums paid on account of current expenses.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No ; the 10 per cent is counted in the revenue for the year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of sales which are frequently made and which might cover a large sum of money. Would they not be allowed to appropriate these sums to ordinary expenses ?

Mr. DALY. No ; nothing is appropriated for current expenses except the 10 per cent. The Annuity Fund remains intact. I think it is from the consolidated revenue fund that this money has been taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that in 1876-77 there was still another transfer of $102,000, transferred to the Indian School Fund, part from the Quebec Fund and part from the Indian Land Management Fund. That seems to have been done for the purpose of having a larger sum for the expenditures for Indian schools.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be merely a book-keeping transaction ; but these things are cash actually spent.

Mr. FOSTER. In part made up by parliamentary appropriations. Taking the three funds. The capital at the credit of the Indian Land Management Fund in 1871 was $191,000 ; in 1890-91 it was $69,000. It had diminished partly by the transfer of $44,000 to the Indian School Fund and partly to over expenditure. At the present time this fund stands at $69,000. When you come to the Quebec Fund, you find that the capital to the credit of the fund in 1870-71 was $117,000. It began to diminish until in 1875 it was $108,000. Then the transfer was made which decreased it by $50,000 and in 1890-91 it had come down to $15,000 but was not yet depleted. The Indian School Fund commenced with a capital of $41,528, in 1871. In 1876, the capital became $142,000, because $102,000 was transferred from the other funds to the credit of this fund. Then it went on decreasing until in 1890-91 it reached $100,000. Taking the three funds, they commenced in 1870-71 with about $350,000, and in 1890-91 they amounted to about $185,000 so that the capital which was $350,000 in 1871 had been reduced to $185,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister will see by looking at the reports of the department, that from 1880 to 1891 the Quebec Indian Fund remained almost stationary, as it was $49,165.72 in 1880, and in 1891 it was $49,166.30.

Mr. FOSTER. That totally disagrees with this. I have no doubt this is correct.

Mr. DALY. This is from the Auditor-General's Report, yours is from the departmental report. It appears that the Auditor-General deducts all the expenditure.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) The hon. gentleman speaks about the indiscriminate use of the moneys of this fund. I can understand how that might be with regard to the Indian Management Fund and the Indian School Fund, but the Quebec Indian Fund is a wholly distinct fund. The Quebec Indian Fund arose, I think, about 1849, when the Government, there being no extinguishment of the Indian title in the province of Quebec, by legislation undertook to make provisions for an Indian fund, and certain Imperial and Canadian funds were made the basis for the beginning of this fund. But to take the moneys of the Indian Land Management Fund, which were wholly Ontario funds, and use any portion of them in the province of Quebec, would be an appropriation of one man's money for another man's benefit.

Mr. MULOCK. It is certainly not creditable to the book-keeping of the Dominion that there is no proper public record showing how these funds have been managed from their inception to the present time; much less is it to the credit of successive governments that so far as appears, there has been a far greater laxity in dealing with these trust funds than the country requires in regard to the consolidated funds. It is certainly unfortunate, and I may say discreditable, that the funds have been handled with the laxity that appears to have characterized their administration. I presume the discussion to-day will not do more than call attention to the facts, preliminary to a thorough inquiry into the whole matter. According to the information that has fallen from hon. gentlemen, we are in this situation: There was an Indian fund which was to be the basis from which annuities were to be paid. That fund was derived from the sale of lands, and from timber on Indian lands. For the purpose of managing these lands, 10 per cent of the funds realized was set apart. Now, that 10 per cent was in the first place charged with the administration of the lands, and if there was any surplus, if the whole of the 10 per cent was not required for the administration of the Indian lands, I presume the balance would naturally lapse back again into the source, or the common fund, from which it came.

Mr. FOSTER. No; it would go to that fund that was absolutely set apart for that purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. That 10 per cent was absolutely set apart for the management of the lands.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. FOSTER. If less was used one year, more might need to be used another year.

Mr. MULOCK. If there was any surplus it would certainly belong to the foundation fund itself.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; if it were ever closed up.

Mr. MULOCK. Because it came from the Indian property, and it was simply a provident way of managing. Instead of administering the whole income and dividing it up into annuities, the Government, I suppose, deemed it prudent to say: We estimate that it will take about 10 per cent of this fund to carry out certain other arrangements for the benefit of the Indians, and that will constitute a separate trust fund, and the first charge upon this 10 per cent will be the management of the property, and if any surplus should arise, that surplus will naturally fall back into the original fund, and thus increase the annuities of the Indians. The Indians are deeply concerned in the economical administration of the Land Fund. The same remarks apply to the School Fund, because the School Fund was also derived from the lands of the Indians. I wish here to correct a statement made by the Minister at an earlier period of the debate, when he said that it did not make any difference if the money was unwisely expended out of the funds set apart for the management of the lands, because it would not impair the income of the Indians. Quite the contrary, the less you draw out of the Land Fund and the School Fund, the more there ought to be over, and whatever is over, goes to the parent fund from which the annuities are to be drawn.

Mr. FOSTER. As to the surplus of 10 per cent.

Mr. MULOCK. So that the Indians themselves are entitled to an economical administration of those branches of the fund. It is merely a sub-division for the purposes of management, and they are the only ones to be benefited or injured by any maladministration or over expenditure. So that it was entirely erroneous to state that when the moneys were unnecessarily expended, as was shown by the hon. member for Bothwell, in allowing advertisements in connection with Indian affairs to appear in a hundred newspapers—

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman will allow me to explain that. It appears the expenditure was made by publishing the advertisements of the sale of Indian lands.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know what the advertisements were, nor do I know the amount, but I understood the hon. member for Bothwell to say that there had been an unnecessary expenditure of money on advertisements, out of these Indian funds. Well, if there was any wastefulness of money, such wastefulness ultimately comes back and is charged against the Indian funds and reduces them. Now, we are face to face with this financial result. Twenty years ago there were to the credit of these three funds, the Land Fund, the School Fund and the Quebec Indian Fund, in round numbers, $350,000, all the result of the 10 per cent taken away and transferred from the sale of Indian lands and timber at that time. What has become of that $350,000? We now learn that the $350,000 capital was set apart, which capital belonged to the Indians, and would ultimately inure to their benefit, and increase their annuities, if not expended. That $350,000 has been impaired, and it now stands at the sum of $164,000. There has been, according to the statement of the Finance Minister, an impairment to the extent of $185,000 out of the capital derived from this 10 per cent, and that has taken place without the authority of Parliament, apparently without the authority of the Government, and, so far as appears, without the consent or the authority of any Minister of the Crown. That is the result of the admissions made on the floor of Parliament this day. It is a most unfortunate, if I wanted to use a stronger word, I would say, a discreditable state of affairs. The Parliament of Canada is the trustee of these funds for the benefit of the Indians, and I say it is most discreditable that that sacred trust should have been violated, as it appears to have been, by some maladministration somewhere. It is idle to say that this waste of funds does not affect the Indians. It does affect the Indians; it affects their income, for, if they do not receive it to-day, in the shape of annuities, they will be entitled to have it placed to the credit of the fund, and thereby increase it. If you lose part of the fund, the income decreases and, to that extent, you are neglecting the interests of the Indians. Parliament is bound to investigate these transactions, to restore this capital, and, in the restoration of it, to credit up to that capital a reasonable rate of interest on every dollar of capital withdrawn during those twenty years, and to restore that fund to that same amount it would have stood at but for those breaches of trust. Parliament is entitled to call for an examination and audit from the beginning, in order to ascertain what the fund should stand at; and it will be for Parliament next year to vote the proper sum of money to restore that trust fund, and also to go a little further and ascertain who is to blame for this breach of trust, because it strikes me as extraordinary that hundreds of thousands of dollars should be checked out of the Treasury of the country without a vote of Parliament, without the sanction of any responsible person.

Mr. LISTER. And without any evidence.

Mr. MULOCK. It may be that explanations may be forthcoming; but we have, apparently in the House, in and around it, all the persons who possess information, and, up to this moment, there is no satisfactory explanation forthcoming. If it were contended for a moment that the sanction of Parliament was not necessary to authorize the disbursement of the interest arising from the fund though I controvert that contention as well—still we have this result, that, last year, there was paid out of the Consolidated Fund, without the vote of Parliament, without any legal authority of any kind, the sum of $162,000. There was over and above the income derived from those funds last year an amount paid on account of management of $162,000, without the sanction of Parliament, which sum comes right out of the pockets of the people. This is the state of affairs with which we are confronted on the floor of Parliament to-day. I regret this matter was not brought up at an earlier period of the session, in order that proper inquiries might be made. It has been rumoured that there was this shortage. I have had communications on the subject, but I found it difficult to arrive at any facts from the records. It may be that the conclusions at which I have arrived may not be correct, but they are based on statements made by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury-benches and by private members of this House.

Mr. LISTER. Have the Government agreed on any scheme for the restoration of the fund; and, if so, what is the scheme?

Mr. DALY. If the hon. gentleman had been present this morning he would have heard a full explanation as to the item of $15,200, and that the Government proposed to restore the fund by appropriations each year, until we bring the fund to the condition in which it was when they commenced to impair it. In regard to the remarks of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), I think his remarks were too strong when he said that this was a breach of trust. The Indians have not suffered in any way.

Mr. MULOCK. They must suffer.

Mr. DALY. That is a matter of argument. I cannot see that they have suffered, because the money has been expended for their uses and for their purposes. Exception was taken by the hon. member for Bothwell as to expenditures made some years ago on advertising largely in the newspapers. On inquiry, I find that the amount was almost wholly spent in advertising sales of land of different Indian bands in Ontario. The mistake was committed far back, and I have not any information before 1871-72, but it will be seen by the Public Accounts and the Auditor-General's Report, that this system has prevailed during all those years. Parliament did not take action in the matter until two years ago. This money has been used, not to carry out the management of the land, but for paying insurance, legal expenses, advertisements, rents, medical attendance, telegrams, grants to school houses, surveys of buildings and roads, salaries of Indian agents, and even clerks and temporary clerks employed in the department here. The Indians have had the benefit of the expenditure indirectly if not directly. I have here a statement of the expenditure in connection with the three different funds up to June, 1892, as prepared by the Deputy-Minister of the department. I shall have pleasure in submitting it to the House.

Mr. LISTER. Is it the intention to restore the fund out of the consolidated fund of the country?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. Is it intended to make any charge against interest moneys of the Indian Fund so as to reduce the annuities of the Indians?

Mr. DALY. No, not at all.

Mr. LISTER. So the result is that this money has been spent, and the country has to make it good?

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose 10 per cent taken from the proceeds of sales of Indian land and timber, were not required for management of the land and for school purposes, what would become of the balance?

Mr. DALY. The balance would be paid to capital.

Mr. MULOCK. What capital?

Mr. DALY. The Land Management Fund.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose it was not required for the Land Management Fund, or for school purposes, what then?

Mr. DALY. Then it would go to the credit of the different bands.

Mr. MULOCK. It would go back to the source from which it came?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. So the Indians are interested in the good administration of the 10 per cent, although it may be as he remarked in the first place to meet certain charges.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Finance have stated that these irregularities began as far back as 1871-72, or even earlier. I do not know to what irregularities the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. FOSTER. The diminishing of the Capital Fund.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Let me call attention to this fact, that so far as the Indian Management Fund is concerned, the income in 1878, the first year in which I began my investigation, was $9,406 in excess of the expenditure; and, so far as the Indian School Fund is concerned, it was $2,400, and so far as the Quebec Fund is concerned, it was $2,007 in excess of the expenditure.

Mr. DALY.

As hon. gentlemen will see, that period of expenditure in excess of income began two or three years later. I call the attention of the House to this fact, that in 1879, the first year of the present regime, the expenditure on the Quebec Fund was $6,734, in 1891 it was $35,533; on the Indian School Fund, it was, in 1879, $11,867, and in 1890, $63,260. So far as the Management Fund is concerned, in 1879 the expenditure was $25,295, and in 1891 it was $109,776. The hon. gentleman will see that there is no comparison between the expenditure when he began the administration of this fund, with the state of things that exists to-day. Every year our expenditure has gone on increasing. Let me just give one result more, and I do not intend to discuss the question further. In 1878 the expenditure from the three funds was $43,897, and in 1890 it was $202,475. That is as near as may be an increase of 500 per cent. It does seem to me that hon. gentleman will find that it is not simply a question of irregularity, but that it is a question of the growth of the expenditure out of all proportion to the fund upon which the department professes to rely. Here is an expenditure in a single year of $202,000, as against a fund, the capital of which is $350,000.

Indians—Manitoba and North-west Territories. $777,271

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister explain this very large increase, amounting to $8,401, under the head of live stock?

Mr. DALY. We are purchasing cattle to give to the Indians in Treaty No. 7, the Bloods, Piegiens and Blackfeet, in order that they may have the benefit of the increase of these cattle and have something to do. The country they inhabit is more of a ranch country than a farming country, and we find from experiments that have been made with the Duck Lake and other Indians in giving them cattle, that they take a great deal of interest in cattle raising, and that from year to year the cost of providing them with food is being reduced. We expect to decrease the cost of supplying them with food when they get the cattle.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total number of Indians to whom bounties are paid?

Mr. DALY. The total Indian population in the North-west Territories is 15,327, and Manitoba, 9,388; total, 24,715.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Am I to understand that covers the entire estimate of the Indian population on this side of the Rocky Mountains? Because I think in former times that is put at a much higher figure.

Mr. DALY. It does not include the Ontario Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are there Indians outside the treaty?

Mr. DALY. There are between 6,000 and 7,000 outside of the treaty, and they are not included in the figures I have given.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose there are no other lands that the Government are desirous of acquiring from these Indians?

Mr. DALY. Except the Peace river country and the Athabasca region.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We can afford to wait for that. I was just about to observe that taking five to a family, these Indians cost us $150 per year each family, which is steep, to say the least of it. You might almost maintain in absolute independence a number of white families for very little more than that.

Mr. DALY. I will give some figures comparing our Indian expenditure with that of the United States. The United States voted for their Indian Service for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1891, $5,804,399. Divide this by the Indian population of the United States, which is placed at 246,000 souls, and you have a per capita per annum of $23.76. For the same year the Canadian Government voted for the Indian Service throughout Canada, $1,081,235.13. The Indian population for that year is put at 122,000, showing that our Indians cost the Government per capita, $8.86. The United States Blackfeet, Bloods and Piegiens, resident in Montana, are similarly situated to our Blood Indians south of Fort Macleod. These Indians in Montana number about 1,900, and it is found that there is an item for food, etc., of $150,000. This corresponds with our Destitute Indians Supply vote. The Canadian Blood Indians number about 1,700, and our expenditure on them for food, etc., was very little over $50,000 for the same year. The United States voted in 1891, $1,456,960 for educational purposes, or an average of $5.90 per soul of the population. The Canadian Government voted $208,119 for educational purposes, or an average of $1.70 per soul. It will be observed that the United States Government voted for Indian children attending industrial schools, $150, $167 and $175 per capita, to different schools very much better situated than our industrial schools, which receive $100, $115, $120 and $130. Take, for example, the Carlisle school in the United States country, where they have a good market for their manufactures, and where they receive contracts for harness, wagons and other supplies for army purposes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not, I think, a correct way of putting it. There are a great number of Indians in Ontario and Quebec who are practically self-supporting, or, at least, to whom we pay very little, except for interest on the fund. We must confine ourselves to the expenditures which we make under the treaty with the Manitoba and North-west Indians, and which amount to about the sum I stated. I must say that this appears to be a pretty large expenditure, though it is a little reduced from former years. A great deal of it, I am afraid, does not go into the hands of the Indians at all, but practically into the hands of the white population.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to say just a few words; I do not want to detain the committee very long. I do not hold the hon. Minister now in charge of this department personally responsible for the expenditures of last year, though the Government of which he is a member is undoubtedly responsible. But I hope that he will make a very determined effort to cut down the Indian expenditure in the North-west next year. The hon. gentleman has given quotations to show the cost of supporting the Indians in the United States. I have not the slightest doubt that they also have their national debt blood-suckers—persons who are employed by the Government, and who do not care, so long as they get Government pay, whether they get it in the Indian service or in any other service. Any person who looks over the Auditor-General's Report and examines the salaries, must come to the conclusion that Mr. Blake came to many years ago, when he said that the North-west was made a happy hunting ground for political hacks. Last year salaries and travelling expenses in Manitoba and the North-west cost $188,174, of which $19,562 was paid to doctors. The idea of paying very nearly $20,000 to doctors for attending 25,000 Indians is absurd. Then, we have men drawing high salaries of $2,400 or $2,500 a year. One man who draws $1,900 follows a lucrative profession in one of our large towns. I hope that when the Minister brings down his Estimates next year, we shall find that he has made enormous reductions. I can assure him that if I shall be here, I will devote my time to careful criticism of the expenditures under this head, and see if I cannot point out where considerable savings can be made. It is quite unnecessary for us to pay such an enormous sum for salaries and travelling expenses, and such an enormous sum for doctors. They can well afford to make a living for themselves without being hooked on to the Indian service, and sucking from the Dominion these large sums of money.

Mr. DALY. I think the hon. gentleman is a little hard on the officers of the North-west when he calls them blood-suckers. My experience is that they are a hard-working, self-sacrificing lot of men. As for the agents, he is very much astray if he thinks they have an easy time of it or enjoy many luxuries. The fact of a man being an Indian agent does not imply that he is living in the immediate vicinity of all the Indians under his care. Some of the agents have as many as nine reserves to look after, others have six and others four. These men are on the alert from morning till night, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that if he occupied the position of an Indian agent he would think that he well earned his salary. I agree with him that the expenditure looks large, and it will be my duty to investigate it and endeavour, if possible, to reduce it. But I think it right that I should say one word in favour of men whom I have known for many years, and who are a hard-working, industrious lot of officials.

Mr. McMULLEN. I assert that there were some men employed in the service there who were blood-suckers. I take the name of Mr. Hayter Reed, who is the superintendent in the North-west. According to a return brought down in response to an Order of this House, we found that Mr. Reed got leave of absence, that he came to Kingston to see his friends, that he went from there to Toronto, and that all the time he was away he attempted to charge the country $3.50 a day for his living allowance, as well as his railway fare to Kingston and from Kingston to Toronto; and if it had not been for the Auditor-General, he would have collected the money. When the account was produced here before the authorities, they docked off these items. Will the hon. gentleman say that he is not a blood-sucker?

Mr. DALY. Yes; I will.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I will show him the account, with the items struck off. I am prepared to prove it if the hon. gentleman calls the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. DALY. I am satisfied that, next year, the hon. gentleman will be afforded every opportunity of bringing Mr. Reed before that committee. I may say that, so far as my knowledge goes, Mr. Reed is one of the most efficient officers in any department of the Government, and I cannot believe that he would attempt, in any way, to make money by charging travelling allowances or expenses to which he was not entitled. The visit which the hon. gentleman speaks of may have been made by Mr. Reed, at the request of the then Minister of Interior, and while down here on departmental business, he may have been at Kingston to see his friends; but I am satisfied that everything connected with Mr. Reed and his office will bear the fullest and freest investigation by this House.

Mr. McMULLEN. In the account he rendered, he certified these items as correct, and they were erased, with the words in the margin, "away on leave of absence." That account is now in the Public Accounts Committee room, and I will point it out to the hon. gentleman if he wishes to see it.

Mr. COCKBURN. I may say that I have had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Hayter Reed from his infancy upwards, and I am sure, from what I know of him, that he is perfectly incapable of any mean or dishon-ourable action. It may be, that he felt it within his duty to make certain charges which the Auditor-General objected to. The charges may have been strictly honourable on his part; he may have thought that he was entitled to make them. I do not like to hear it hinted that any gentleman of such high standing as Mr. Hayter Reed would attempt to do anything unworthy of a gentleman.

Mr. LISTER. Of course, it must be very gratifying to Mr. Hayter Reed to have the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) get up and testify to his character and reputation. I have no doubt that the hon. member is animated by the kindest motives and is perfectly sincere in the statement he makes. I would remind the hon. gentleman, that it is hardly consistent with the theory of perfect innocence, that when Mr. Reed was away on leave of absence, because that is the statement made in the account, he should have charged the country with his expenses and it is difficult to imagine he did so, with the entirely honest conviction on his part that he was entitled to that money. If it was a fact that he was away on leave of absence, he had no right to charge the country with his expenses. The overcharge was discovered by the proper officers and eliminated from the account, and that evidence in writing is the strongest evidence possible that Mr. Hayter Reed must have known, when he put in the account, that he had made a charge which he had no right to make, and if he had succeeded in getting the money, he would have got money to which he had no possible claim. I do not wish to speak harshly of that gentleman, but I cannot forget the fact that in a somewhat important investigation he appeared as a very important witness, and he did not give his evidence with that frankness which would carry conviction to the minds of those listening to him, that he was telling the whole truth. There is one thing connected with that investigation, and it is this, that Mr. Hayter Reed wrote two letters connected with the Brenner furs. He was implicated along with the General and the other men who were mixed up in the robbery of that unfortunate man of all he had in the world. And there is this important fact to be remembered, that a Hayter Reed wrote two letters. The one which would have convicted him he got possession of and substituted for it another bearing the same date and relieving certain gentlemen from the imputation or charge that might have been sustained against him, of improper practices during the rebellion. If he was capable of writing two letters, the one incriminating himself and friends, and the other relieving them from the charge made against them, we are bound to say that it is our duty to look with some suspicion upon any statement made by such a gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. In order that we may nail this thing home, so that the Minister of the Interior can inform himself of the correctness of the statement I made, I will give him the dates of the amounts charged. Mr. Hayter Reed got four days leave of absence and charged his trip to the country, as follows :—

Fare, Kingston to Ottawa	$ 4 10
Cab fare Ottawa	0 75
Brockville to Kingston	1 65

He also billed the Government for the living allowance of $3.50 per day during the four days he was away on leave of absence, and his bill was cut down by the Auditor-General on this account. In striking out the items which he considered wrong, the Auditor-General marked on the margin of the bill, "off on leave of absence."

Mr. MULOCK. I do not rise to take part in the discussion on the question just closed. I can only express the hope that Mr. Reed will succeed in offering explanations which will entirely exonerate him from evil-doing. I remember some years ago making a pretty strong statement on the floor of this House against a gentleman, Mr. McDonnell, and I have found since that perhaps I overstated the case. And whilst I speak strongly on the floor when the persons I refer to are present, I am getting a little cautious about interfering in the cases of others who are not present. At the same time, all the explanations required should be forthcoming. There has, no doubt, been a great deal of laxity in matters comparatively small, but which amount to very large sums in the aggregate. I remember looking over the bill of expenses, in an investigation held in my own county, and seeing a charge of $3.50 per day for board in a country village hotel, when the most fashionable hotel in that place considered $1 a day very ample remuneration. I have received a communication from the region of Piegiens to the effect that the agent there has been stinted in his supply of food, flour and beef for some time, and the Indians have become hungry and restless. At last, driven by hunger, a few of the more vigorous of the band broke into the store-house and carried off a certain quantity of beef. The agent thereupon called upon the chiefs on the reserves for the surrender of the criminals. The chiefs denied all knowledge of the guilty parties and refused to admit that he or his band were responsible for the wrongdoing. Nevertheless the agent stopped all supplies in order to secure the surrender of the guilty parties, and I am informed that for about a week all supplies were withheld. As the Indians live in a hand to mouth way and depend upon the agency for their daily bread, they were reduced almost to a state of starvation. At the end of the week, when disease was breaking out amongst the band, a few of the young men came forward to save the others from threatened starvation and acknowledged the theft. They were brought before Mr. Justice McLeod and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. Whether or not they were guilty, I do not know, but we may assume they were. The effect of this treatment has been, I am told, to create disaffection, not only among the Piegiens, but also among the Bloods and Blackfeet, so much so that some of the white people there at the present time are, I am assured, extremely anxious for fear of an Indian rising. I hope that the grievance, if any, has been entirely removed. Whatever economy is necessary in the management of the Indians, I think it is a mistake to deprive them of their food. Meantime the hon. Minister will observe that the commencement of the trouble was the cutting off of the supplies by the Indian agents. The question for the Government to consider is, in the first place, did they allow sufficient rations for the proper feeding of the Indians? If so, then in the second place, did these rations find their way to the Indians? and thirdly, if not, why were they withheld, and by whom?

Mr. DALY. I desire to say in answer to the hon. gentleman that the report he has received is considerably exaggerated. There was trouble amongst the Piegiens some short time ago. It occurred in the absence of Mr. Pocklington, the agent, who was absent on sick leave, and Mr. Nash, the assistant, was in charge. It appears that these people were receiving their ordinary rations and were getting the same food they had been getting all winter. They broke into the store-house, and Mr. Nash took it upon himself to discipline them by saying that they should not get food until they delivered up the perpetrators of the offence. It was a couple of days, and not a week, as my hon. friend says, that they were without rations, and as soon as the matter was brought to the notice of the commissioner, instructions were given to Mr. Nash to go on rationing the Indians as usual. Even while the rations were withheld the Indians had food; they were simply not getting the usual semi-weekly ration. They are very improvident. We might feed them three times a day. It is important to discipline these people; but no person would like to see them starved. They were not without food; but the action taken by the sub-agent was without authority of the agent or the department, and I am satisfied will not be repeated. There is no dissatisfaction; the trouble has all been settled and the Indians are perfectly satisfied. The trouble did not extend to the Blackfeet or the Bloods. I may say for the information of the House that considerable trouble is occasioned on Treaty 7, by the ranchmen and cowboys who try to impress the Indians with the idea that they are not getting enough food, perhaps because the ranchmen would like to have the contract for more beef. I am glad the hon. gentleman has made the statement he has, because it gives me an opportunity to say that the trouble has quieted down, and that it is hardly possible that it will occur again.

Mr. MULLOCK. I am glad the hon. Minister is able to make this statement. The Minister is well aware how improvident the Indians of the North-west are. I doubt if they keep in stock food for one day ahead or even one meal ahead. He will see, then, what a cruel thing it must have been to deprive them of food for 48 hours, which according to the agent's statement was the case, unless they had something in stock, which is very doubtful. According to my information the period of fasting extended beyond two days, almost to a week. I hope my informant is in error in these points; but he is a most reliable person, and lives in the vicinity of these Indians, and he made no qualification of the statement. I have such confidence in my informant's accuracy that I think if the hon. gentleman inquires into the matter he will find that food was withheld from the Indians for more than two days.

To provide for the payment of Mr. Fabre's salary, and contingencies of his office $3,500

Mr. McMULLEN. Has he furnished a report?

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman will see Mr. Fabre's report in the Report of the Department of Interior.

Mr. McMULLEN. What particular service has he rendered for the last year?

Mr. DALY. I can only answer so far as immigration is concerned, that Mr. Fabre has been assisting the Government agent who has been over in the north of France and in Belgium. Mr. Fabre has been distributing literature and otherwise assisting in the usual work of his office.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was he engaged in connection with Sir Charles Tupper in negotiating the French Treaty?

Mr. FOSTER. He rendered Sir Charles Tupper all the assistance in his power in negotiations for that treaty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He acted as an interpreter, I should judge.

Mr. FOSTER. Sir Charles Tupper has very good knowledge of French.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I should be inclined to think.

Mr. DALY. Going back to item 217, I can now give the hon. gentleman the information he asked for. Schools, clerical assistance and printing, I find, comprise fourteen items, Mr. DALY.

and according to the estimate recommended by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, were as follows: of that amount, $123,836 was for schools; $800 for light and fuel of legislative hall; $2,000, probable cost of elections; $650 travelling expenses of officials; roads and bridges, $44,450; clerical assistance, $14,730; contingencies, $2,000; printing, advertising, $4,000; newspapers, periodicals and magazines, $500; management of the well-boring machine, $2,000; caretaker and messengers of legislative hall, $1,320; stationery, telegrams, etc., $2,300; advertising sittings of the courts, $100; books for the North-west Government library, $1,000, making a total of $199,686.13.

To meet payments to extra clerks for services rendered in preparation of returns ordered by Parliament $5,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What amount is required from year to year for this purpose, on the average?

Mr. FOSTER. More or less, according to the number of returns that are asked for by the House. For the last year or two the amount was quite small; this year it will be large, on account of so much extra work being required for the preparation of the returns asked for in connection with the census.

To meet cost of arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. (Payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the Civil Service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.) Revote, $9,500..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When is this likely to be brought to a close?

Mr. FOSTER. All the preliminaries have been settled, and the arbitrators have had their first meeting, and are to meet again in April. The arbitrators are Judge Boyd, Judge Casault and Judge Burbidge. The questions for settlement are, first, as to the rate of interest which the Provincial Governments shall be allowed on their debts, whether it shall be 5 or 6 per cent. That is the main question. Then there are some questions in dispute between the Dominion Government and the two Provincial Governments as to certain items in connection with the Indian account, and others. Those are the two principal questions at stake. Then there are some differences between the two provinces themselves, which the arbitrators will also take in hand and decide.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About what amount is the present claim?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not tell my hon. friend the amount of the claim at stake.

Customs—Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports :

do Québec.....	210,345
do Ontario.....	303,080
do Manitoba.....	33,300
do North-west Terri- tories.....	5,200
do British Columbia..	59,495

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a pretty large increase, and we require some detailed explanation—in the case of British Columbia, for instance.

Mr. WALLACE. Additional officers have become necessary on account of the increase of work. At Vancouver, for example, the work has increased 60 per cent. We have established a number of outports at New Westminster and along the boundary line between Canada and the United States, and of course these involve additional expenditure.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Controller say at what places offices have been established ?

Mr. WALLACE. Eleven new officers have been appointed at New Westminster, Kootenay and other places on the boundary.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who are the officers ?

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot give the names of the officers. Four were appointed at New Westminster and seven at the outports.

Mr. McMULLEN. What salary is attached to those new appointments ?

Mr. WALLACE. They are only appointed temporarily ; they have not received permanent appointments, and their wages vary from $2 to $2.50 per day.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have all of them passed the Civil Service examination ?

Mr. WALLACE. I think so.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the Controller prepared to say that such is the fact ?

Mr. WALLACE. It is not necessary according to the law. Some are preventive officers, and they are not required to pass the Civil Service examination.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is generally understood that those who have passed the examination should receive appointments.

Mr. WALLACE. For temporary positions the Government are not always able to obtain men who have passed the examination. In this case the law does not require it.

Mr. McMULLEN. When were these appointments made ?

Mr. WALLACE. During last year.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is not a satisfactory answer. Will the Minister state whether they were made within the last two or three months ?

Mr. WALLACE. They were made before I came into office.

Allowance to Chairman of Board of Appraisers

$400

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who is the Commissioner of Customs now ?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Watters is acting Commissioner. He is the Assistant-Commissioner, and by law he has all the powers of Commissioner.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then he will act as chairman of the board and draw this amount of $400 ?

Mr. WALLACE. That is the intention.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the present salary paid Mr. Watters ?

Mr. WALLACE. $2,800.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suppose he gets the yearly increase of $50 ?

Mr. WALLACE. No ; the law limits the salary to $2,800.

Mr. McMULLEN. And he receives this $400 in addition ?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes ; as chairman of the board.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is this officer obliged to attend solely to the business connected with the Department of Customs ?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is it a fact that this same officer is engaged in business outside of the department, and is this within the knowledge of the department ?

Mr. WALLACE. The department is aware that he has been so engaged in the past ; but since my assuming office Mr. Waters has done a great deal more than a full day's work each day in the department.

Mr. DEVLIN. That is not a satisfactory answer ; it is not even a reply to the question. I merely asked if the Controller is aware, or the department over which he has control is aware, that Mr. Waters at the present time is engaged in private business outside of the regular duties connected with his position as an officer of the department ?

Mr. WALLACE. The department has received letters and representations to that effect. A like inquiry was made in the House, and I stated then that so soon as the session was over, we would take up the matter and give it consideration, and arrive at a decision on the question raised in the correspondence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it be the case that this officer or any other officer of customs is engaged in any other business, his services should be dispensed with at once. There is no better understood rule in England and Canada than that salaried officers in the customs shall, under no conceivable circumstances, engage in independent operations. I do not suppose any hon. gentleman opposite will dispute the soundness of that proposition, the reason being so obvious and clear; and if this person is engaged in any other business, then I say the Government are derelict in their duty if they allow him to remain in the service one day. Did I understand that instead of being dismissed he was to be promoted? If so, it sheds a very strong light indeed on the complaints, neither few nor far between, made in this House and out of the House, as to the manner in which the Customs Department has been administered by some of the officials connected with it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I object entirely to the making of additions to the salary of an officer who is already well paid. Mr. Watters now receives $2,800 a year, and he should be willing to devote his entire time to the service of the country and to the performance of his official duties. He is now Commissioner of Customs, and also chairman of the commission, and he should be willing to serve his country on that salary without obtaining any additional income. This is another case in which an officer appointed to a position at a good salary finds some excuse for obtaining an increase.

Mr. WALLACE. The Act authorizes the appointment of the Commissioner as chairman of the board of customs appraisers. The allowance previously made to the chairman of the board was $800, and we have reduced the amount to $400.

Mr. CHARLTON. I understand Mr. Watters is interested in some mica mines, and I am very doubtful whether the character of his business is of such a nature as to interfere with the performance of his duties. Certainly if an officer possesses some surplus money he should be allowed the privilege of investing it. Perhaps it would be as well to inquire into the matter before censure is passed on Mr. Watters, for I understand his business transactions are simply of the character I have indicated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That statement which my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) makes would undoubtedly put a different face on the matter, but as I understood my friend from Ottawa (Mr. Devlin), this officer—I did not catch the name until he had spoken later—was carrying on an ordinary business

Mr. DEVLIN. I was not censuring Mr. T. J. Watters, I was putting a question to the Controller, so that when the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) complains, he simply did not understand the position as it was put before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

What I was asking was simply this: Is it within the knowledge of the department that this gentleman is engaged in business pursuits outside of the duties of his office? It is a well-known fact to-day that the conduct of this officer has already been called to the attention of the Senate. I think the Hon. Mr. Clemow brought the whole matter before the Senate, and it is not a fact that can be concealed in any way, because the business in which this gentleman has been engaged has already been the subject matter of a report. I know that I have received letters from different electors of the county which I represent, asking me to draw the attention of the Government to this very matter. I have not done so, and I did not wish to do so at the time the matter was already before the attention of the Senate, as I thought the Government acting, upon whatever advice might be tendered by the Senate, would take some action. The fact is that this officer of the Department of Customs is, as I am informed, at the head of a large mining business in the county of Ottawa and elsewhere, which necessarily takes up a great deal of his time. I simply asked the Controller of Customs to give a reply to my question. Is the department aware, at the present time, that he is engaged in this business and is discharging whatever duties may be required of him by that business, in addition to the duties of his office?

Mr. WALLACE. After the letters had been received by the department complaining that Mr. Watters was engaged in outside business, I asked Mr. Watters to make a report to me as to the whole facts of the case. He has done so, and in that statement he says that he has large interests in the mica mining industries in the county of Ottawa, that he has large investments there, that the business is carried on by his son, that the head office is in the city of Ottawa, here, that the business is in no way conducted by himself, but that he has a financial interest in that business, and that he expected at an early date to be entirely clear of any financial or other interest in it.

Mr. DEVLIN. That is the answer I wanted.

Mr. BECHARD. I have nothing to say on the matter raised by my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Devlin), but I have to state that if the gentleman mentioned does not pay more attention to all the business submitted to him than he did to a matter I submitted to him a few weeks ago, he does not deserve to be longer continued in his office. I submitted a letter to him and he cast his eyes upon it but did nothing, and I may say that I afterwards submitted it to the Controller of Customs, who paid great attention to the matter and did full justice.

Mr. DEVLIN. With regard to the statement of the Controller of Customs, that Mr.

Watters is not at the head of the business, and that his son manages the business, I can say that all suits in the name of the company are taken out in the name of the father, who is Commissioner of Customs.

Customs—Testing of Sugars.....$5,150

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The testing required with reference to sugars must be very small, compared to what it was some time ago. The only test is now for colour, I understand, and before it used to be tested for degrees of strength. What is the explanation of this item then?

Mr. WALLACE. There is not, of course, so much testing of sugar as formerly, but there is testing yet, as to whether it is under or over fourteen Dutch standard. All the mollasses and syrups that come into the country has to be tested, and this entails a great deal of work upon the department.

Excise—Salaries of Officers and Inspectors $305,232.50

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the explanation of this increase of $4,248?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That increase is made up largely by increase of salaries consequent upon promotion examinations from class to class. In reference to decreases in the department, during the year there were four deaths, representing a decrease of $3,440. Three superannuations, decrease $2,250. Reduction of vote for the North-west as compared with 1892-93, $2,000. Decreased commissions to sellers of stamps for Canadian twist tobacco, $50. Total decrease $8,057. The increases are due to the operation of Excise regulations, being the percentage between the minimum and maximum salaries, $1,932.50; increase due to class promotion, after examination, $2,701.25; special increases, $1,500; increase granted but not voted, $672.50; new appointments, $4,550; transfer from Preventive to Excise service, $900; increase to collectors, commissions, showing the vote for 1892-93 was too small, $500; increase in methylated spirits vote, due to changing the annual outlay in this line, $74,515; total increase, $87,221.25. The item with respect to the methylated spirits is simply the result of the difference in the system of book-keeping, and is not in reality an increase. Formerly the outlay in connection with the methylated spirit warehouse did not appear in the Estimates, and only appeared in the Annual Report of the Department of Inland Revenue, so that that is really no increase at all. If you deduct the decreases from the increases, the balance is just the amount mentioned in the Estimates.

To enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufacturing factories..... $79,515

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What absolute necessity exists for the department buying these methylated spirits? Why cannot the manufacturers buy them for themselves?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The department, since 1888, has taken into its own hands the manufacture of methylated spirits. Prior to that date they were manufactured by licensed manufacturers in bond. The proportions then used were twelve gallons of wood naphtha to each 100 gallons of spirits of not less than sixty above proof. The department had reason to believe that these methylated spirits were being deodorized, the objectionable odour of the wood naphtha being removed by the use of essences or flavourings, and were being converted into a potable liquid which would pass muster in outlying places. Hence the privilege was withdrawn and the department undertook to carry on the trade. I am informed by my officers that a seizure was made in Montreal of spirits which has been converted into a potable liquor, and it was decided for the purpose of better protecting the revenue that the Government should undertake the manufacture itself. The result, I am glad to say, shows a balance on the right side of the ledger, amounting to $23,345.65 for last year.

Weights and Measures and Gas...$95,450

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the cause of this increase of $850 in the North-west?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The increases during 1892-93 were in two cases—Mr. Fitzgerald, of Hamilton, $100, and Mr. Piper, of Toronto, $100. For 1893-94, the proposed increases are $1,050; but against these, an item included in the former Estimates, for two new offices in the North-west, is omitted, leaving the net increase on the inspector's salaries only $50.

Adulteration of Food..... $25,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to object to this item. It is a branch of the public service which may be made very useful. But I want to inquire of the Minister—it may not come strictly under this head—whether he will cause it to be understood that parties who suspect water of being impure can have the water supply of any town or village or city analysed by the Government inspectors. If this continent should unhappily be visited by cholera this year, it might be a matter of very considerable moment to the public health to know—and I think the hon. gentleman should take steps to cause it to be known in good time—that the roughly skilled officers would be allowed to inspect samples of water from various localities. If that were done, preventive measures might be taken in many places that would largely avoid the risk of cholera. I should be glad to have the hon. gentleman take that matter into his consideration.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I should be very glad to act on the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Post Office—Salaries, etc. . . . $1,185,420

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the reason for the increase?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is owing to the increase of business, which necessitated an increase in the staff, and, as the revenue is now $660,000 more than it was in 1888, or 24 per cent increase, and the expenditure has been increased but $649,000, the hon. gentleman will see that the increase is justified.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it the intention of the Government to place the other cities on a city basis?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not this year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it intended to extend the system of letter carriers to cities that have not got them?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask the Postmaster-General, if there has been much improvement in the mail service during the past year, at all events, in the district of Ottawa?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I consider that the service is continually improving, not only in the district of Ottawa, but all over the Dominion, and I think our postal facilities equal those of any other country in the world, considering our population and the means at our disposal.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that any new post offices have been opened in the county of Ottawa, which is a very large and populous territory?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not exactly tell the hon. gentleman. Speaking merely from memory, we have, of course, opened some in that county. As the hon. gentleman said, it is a very large territory, almost a province, in so far as area goes, and I know that applications have been made for new post offices. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman made one himself, in the interests of his constituents. We, however, were not in a position to grant all the applications.

Mr. DEVLIN. I know that there is a disposition to put this item through, and I am not going to oppose it, but I wish to say that next session I will go into the matter more fully. I believe that inspectors were sent out to the county of Ottawa at times. What kind of reports they brought back or whether their reports were acted upon, I am not in a position to say. All I can say is, that we have more than once sent petitions, very largely signed, from important points in the county, asking for better mail service, and the invariable reply was, that the matters would receive consideration. I do not rise to complain, but I would ask the Postmaster-General's attention to this. It is true, I am in opposition to the Government, but I hope the mail service of the county will not be left in its present state on that account. It is one of the few counties in which population has very largely increased. That population to-day numbers nearly 70,000 souls, and the hon. gentleman will understand that a mail service, which may have been good ten years ago, is not adequate to-day. I press this upon the Postmaster-General, because petition after petition has been sent to his department, asking for simple justice, and to each one the invariable answer was that the matter would receive the consideration of the department. In hardly one instance, however, has justice been done, and, as we are taxpayers, as well as any other portion of the country, we are entitled to receive whatever is due to us in this respect.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I agree that justice should be done the hon. gentleman's constituency, as is done to other constituencies, and I agree also that the fact that he occupies a seat to the left of the Speaker, should not have any weight or influence in the department. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I shall be very glad if he will bring the matter up next session. In the meantime, during the recess, I will reconsider the application he has made, and, if it is within the power of the department to comply with the petitions referred to by him, he may be quite certain that we will do so.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to say a word or two with reference to the mail route, about which I asked the hon. Minister a couple of questions during the session. I refer to the carrying of mails over the branch line of the Cornwallis Valley Railway. I asked him whether the service connecting the two stations of that railway with certain post offices were to be offered for public tenders, and his reply was that such was the general practice followed by the department. I further asked him if he was aware that a private citizen of the county of King's was making private negotiations with parties to carry the mails from the stations to certain offices, and he stated that no person was authorized to do anything of that kind. Now, the hon. Minister will perhaps be surprised to know that these mail services were actually hawked about by the gentleman who contested King's county in the Conservative interest in the last Dominion election, interviewing different parties to see who would take them and at what price they were willing to take them. I have in my possession letters from reliable men stating that this is the fact. It seems to me that the hon. Minister can scarcely approve of that sort of thing. I quite understand the principle upon which patronage is distributed by the Government to its friends. I quite understand that when a post office is to be established and a postmaster to be appointed in my county I am not consulted; I do not expect to be; and that the gentleman who opposed me will be consulted. But when it comes to a gentleman who does not represent the constituency being permitted to go about the county and see what political capital he can make by the use of his power to distribute contracts for the mail service which should have been offered to the public for competition, to see who would carry them at the lowest rate. I think that if the Minister is made aware of that fact, he will take good care to see that it does not happen again. I state here in my place in Parliament, and I take the full responsibility of the statement, that the gentleman who opposed me during the last election was permitted by somebody (it must have been some person in connection with the Post Office Department) to go about and make arrangements privately with parties and to have those arrangements actually carried out and the parties he selected entrusted with the carrying of the mails from these different offices. My first question elicited the fact that no private person had been employed to do this. In the second question I asked I repeated this part of it, and the hon. Minister said that the inspector at Halifax was the gentleman who had made these arrangements. Now, I give the hon. gentleman information of what has been done and I take the responsibility of stating it here in my place, and I trust he will investigate the matter and see that such action on the part of officers of the department is not repeated. And, I would say further, as I understand the contract has not been given to these parties for any length of time, that it is a temporary arrangement, that I trust the hon. Minister will see that these contracts are offered by tender and the temporary arrangement terminated.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have nothing to take back of the answer I gave in reply to the hon. gentleman's question, because the hon. gentleman knows that I was not Postmaster-General at that time, and I had merely to convey to the House the information I had.

Mr. BORDEN. But this happened within a month. This service was established on the 1st of March, this year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I still maintain that the answer I gave the hon. gentleman was the information which was given me by the officers of the department. The hon. gentleman knows that I do not know who these gentlemen are who apply for or who have got these contracts. I must tell the hon. gentleman that in ordinary cases we do ask for tenders, but very frequently (and this is not a precedent that I have established in the department, the Postmaster-General before me had the same system and it was found to work very well) if the contractor has carried out his contract properly that contract is renewed without any tenders being asked for. That system generally meets the wishes of the public, who have grown accustomed to the contractor, and, very often, if there is a large contract the contractor has provided himself with horses and vehicles for the purpose of carrying the mail. But, as a rule, unless there be some such reason as I have given, we always call for tenders. It is quite a surprise to me to hear it stated here that any private gentleman should undertake negotiations about these contracts. If he has done so, he has done it upon his responsibility and we could not prevent him, and, if the contract happened to be given to the people with whom he negotiated, it must be that he negotiated with the proper people to carry out the contracts, because the department considers simply the interest of the service and not the interest of the individual. I will be glad to take up the whole question and see how these contracts have been given, and, according to the information I get, I will take such action as will be in the interests of the service.

Mr. BORDEN. It was a coincidence then, that the gentleman with whom my opponent negotiated should have been selected by the department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; such accidents do happen.

Mr. BORDEN. I am glad to know that the hon. Minister disapproves of the practice I have mentioned, and I hope that he will see that in the future nothing of the kind occurs. With regard to this service, and the fact that the different routes were not offered by tender and contract, I would like to point out to the hon. Minister that the department has had ample time. I think it is fully eighteen months since negotiations were first begun with a view to having the mails carried over this railway and distributed to these different offices.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am glad to hear the Postmaster-General say that contracts are renewed without tenders being asked, because it is an intimation that the course followed two months ago in the case of the mail between Mercier and Notre-Dame du Rosaire is not approved by the department. Mr. Mercier, who is the postmaster, had the contract for $80 a year, to take the mail from Mercier to Notre-Dame du Rosaire. The contract expired on the 1st February. Tenders were asked for. Mr. Mercier was not a very well educated man, and did not exactly understand the system of tender. He sent a letter to the department stating that he was ready to do the work for the price, $80, but if somebody sent a tender lower, he would accept the contract at the price of that tender. I wrote a letter to the department explaining the circumstances, and stating that, although Mr. Mercier did not make a tender on the blanks provided he had written the letter, as I have said. I received an answer that it was impossible to do anything for him because the tenders were asked and they must be considered, and that no contracts were renewed without tender. So what the hon. Postmaster-General has said is a condemnation of what has taken place in that case. I do not know if it is because it was in my county, and because I am opposing the Government, but there is something in the case very extraordinary. I was surprised that no better answer was given to my letter. This poor man who had bought a horse and vehicle was obliged to sell them, and, perhaps, will go away to the States.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend knows me too well to imagine that I would be wicked enough to interfere with a contract of that kind, because it happened to be in his county. I would never think of such a thing. But my reply to the hon. member is no condemnation of what I did in his constituency. I never meant to convey to the House the idea that it was an invariable rule in the department to continue a contract. I pointed out that in making contracts of that kind the department always asked whether it was in the interest of the public to continue the contract or to call for tenders. It was purely by accident, of course, that the contractor, whose case the hon. gentleman is defending so ably to-day, was not, perhaps, satisfactory to the department, and it is purely an accident that it should happen in his county. I certainly considered that question solely from the stand-point of the public interest, and from the information which I received from the inspector. Probably it was considered better to call for tenders. But I am certain the hon. gentleman will do me the justice to believe that I would not deal with this matter in the way I did, involving a sum of $80, merely because it happened to be in the constituency of a member of the Opposition.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I did not say it was because it was in my county; I do not know that; but I may say that the hon. gentleman has in my county some very wicked counselors, who may induce him to do that in spite of himself. I will give him the names, if he wishes. The tender which was made was for the same price, $80, and the department did not save a single cent, as the late contractor offered to do the work for the same price, or for a less price, if the same tender was sent in. This contract may be all right, according to the rules. There is another point on which I insist still more strongly. My hon. friend knows that for two or three years past petition after petition, signed by three-fourths of the inhabitants of Notre-Dame du Rosaire, has been sent to the department, asking that the post office be placed nearer the church. At present it is five acres from the church, on a concession line, where nobody passes, where there is no road in the winter but a foot-path, and in summer the people are obliged to jump over fences in order to reach the office. I ask the hon. gentleman why he did not comply with these petitions and place the post office nearer the church? I asked for the papers, and they have been laid on the Table of the House; but I did not see the reports which have been made by Mr. Bolduc, the inspector, or by his assistants. If I am correctly informed, the inspector himself has recommended the change. I do not know if the reason why the change is not made is because it is in my county, or because the Minister has received bad advice from some of my opponents; but I know that reports have been made asking for the change in the interest of the public.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. About the case at Notre-Dame du Rosaire, the hon. gentleman complains that the report of the inspector was not laid upon the Table.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. That is not the real complaint.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am first dealing with the last reproach that the hon. gentleman has made against the department, and I tell him that the report of inspectors are never placed upon the Table. It would be almost impossible to conduct the affairs of the Post Office Department if these reports were laid upon the Table. That is a confidential report, and if the hon. gentleman could see some of the reports which are handed into the Postmaster-General he would understand the policy of not laying them upon the Table of the House. Now, regarding this case at Notre-Dame du Rosaire: I assure my hon. friend that nothing has been done by the department which I do not consider to be right and proper in the interest of the public in that parish. It is true that some petition was sent in asking for a change; but the hon. gentleman must recollect that there were no complaints against the old postmaster. It appears that since he became postmaster a new man, a stranger, a very respectable man, if you like, came in and built a house nearer to the church than the place where the present post office is situated. I was asked to dismiss a public servant who had done his duty faithfully, and to replace him by a new man who had come in and built a house nearer to the church where the friends of the hon. gentleman wished to have the post office established. Now, as a matter of principle, I hold that if a public officer has done his duty faithfully, very strong reasons indeed must be used to justify the department in dismissing him and replacing him by a newcomer. That is the reason that determined the course followed by the department.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not think that reason is a good one, because the post office must be placed where it will be most convenient for the people of the parish. I say that the place where the present post office is situated is very inconvenient, so much so that the letters received and to be sent are deposited in another house. In the winter time there is no road passing the office, and in the summer time the people have to jump over the fence to reach a house which is five acres from the church. I make no complaint against the postmaster. He is a decent and respectable man; but the people want the office in a more convenient place. As to the reports, I think some of them which are not confidential may be laid on the Table of the House, and, generally speaking, I think that a report made to the Post Office Department should be laid on the Table of the House. We have a right to know when the report was made, and whether it was favourable to the change proposed, for I am told it is so. An officer of the department visited the place and made inquiries, and found the people were asking for the change, and it is quite unjust and unfair to allow these representations to go unanswered. If I happened to be a supporter of the Government, the change for which I ask would undoubtedly have been made long ago, especially as it is asked by every one in the locality. I know who are at the bottom of it, and who are asking not to have the change made, because these people prefer to punish the whole parish rather than I should obtain credit for having secured the change. In regard to the post office at Cap St. Ignace, I desire to ask if the postmaster has been appointed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. A postmaster has not been appointed.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. One is going to be appointed, I suppose?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We will have to appoint one some day.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I desire to direct the attention of the Minister to an answer given to a question I asked in February, in which the Minister stated that the postmaster had not resigned. The postmaster of this place is now living in St. Thomas, county of Montmagny, and has been there for some months, and so the hon. gentleman's answer was not according to the facts. I do not blame the Postmaster-General himself; I know he gave the answer to the House that he received from the department, but, at all events, it is not true and correct. I hope the Postmaster-General will grant the prayer of this petition and appoint a postmaster; I hope he will make a choice between the rival applicants as soon as possible.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is there any prospect of a daily mail being placed on the line between Gravenhurst and North Bay. There is at the present time only a mail every other day for the locality. The through mail passes through in closed bags, and only on alternate days is the local mail received. The population has increased very considerably, and the business done is very large. There is not sufficient accommodation provided for this district. The postal clerks are scarcely able to do the work on a single train, and complaints are made in regard to the Government not furnishing the mail service to which the people are entitled. Every town and village has petitioned the Government for additional service, and I desire now to ask whether there is any prospect of their request being granted. I know the answer always given has been that the expense would be too great, that it would involve an additional mail car and almost double expense. At present the business is too large for a car running on alternate days, and the mail clerks are so overburdened with work that letters are frequently carried beyond the point to which they are addressed, because the clerks are too busy to look after them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I regret to be obliged to tell the hon. gentleman it is not contemplated to increase the expenditure by granting the service to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Is it the intention of the Government to establish a post office at Paquette's Corners, the cost involved being $50 a year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The matter has been considered by the department, and it is the opinion that the post office which the hon. gentleman asks is at present unnecessary, and consequently his request cannot be granted.

Mr. MCGREGOR. This matter has been under the consideration of the Government three years, and the total expenditure involved is only $50. Trains pass twice a day; and, if this accommodation were provided it would prove of advantage and value to the people.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The expenditure asked is not very much, but we are economical in very small things.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think the Minister, at all events, can answer this question, which I will ask him. A short time ago, a deputation waited upon him in regard to the mail service between Ottawa and Montreal, that is, the service to points between those cities, the object being to have the service improved. Has improved mail service been given to Ste. Scholastique, Lachute and Buckingham?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The matter has not yet been decided. We had to get information, which the department is looking into at present. No decision has been arrived at so far. The hon. gentleman must know that, during the session, deputations wait on members of the Government and submit their claims. But this matter could not be looked into at once, and I could not find time to do so. Again, the information required in regard to all these postal routes must be obtained from the inspectors, who are frequently not in Ottawa, but elsewhere, and time is occupied in obtaining information from them. In regard to this service, the matter will be taken up as soon as possible and looked into from the departmental stand-point.

Mr. DEVLIN. Has no decision been arrived at in regard to Ste. Scholastique ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In regard to Ste. Scholastique, the grant was made as requested, but I direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that that application was made long ago, and that fact will explain why the matter has been considered, for the department had all the necessary information before the session commenced.

Mr. DEVLIN. I know the information just given was obtained by the Minister from the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Girouard). That hon. member, the hon. member for Argenteuil and myself approached the Minister in regard to this subject. At the time we approached the hon. gentleman nothing had been done in regard to Ste. Scholastique, Lachute and Buckingham. It was only after that interview a decision was arrived at, if I am correctly informed. At all events, nothing was done up to that time. Now, we know that the petition coming from Ste. Scholastique, backed up as it was by a member supporting the Government, has been favourably considered. The Minister also informs the House that nothing has been done in regard to the mail service between Lachute and Montreal. If I am correctly informed, the local paper of Lachute says that the Minister himself wrote to Mr. J. C. Wilson, formerly the Conservative member for Argenteuil, stating that the application from Lachute had been considered and granted out of consideration of the request made by the same Mr. J. C. Wilson. That, I understand, is the information conveyed in the letter written by the hon. the Postmaster-General to Mr. Wilson. We have him now admitting here that the application of Ste. Scholastique is granted but he states that of Lachute has not, although in the letter he states that it has.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have nothing to take back of what I have said in answer to the question put by the hon. gentleman. So far as Ste. Scholastique is concerned, the inspector reported to the department on the 23rd of January last. I cannot recollect whether I told the hon. gentleman when he called upon me as one of a deputation everything that the department had done so far as Ste. Scholastique is concerned, but the information which I am giving the hon. gentleman is the correct information obtained from the department. Now, about Lachute ; I did not understand that the hon. gentleman travelled outside that enormous county of his which is equal almost to a province, and that he took a deep interest in Lachute. It is out of his beat altogether.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not think that is an answer to the question.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman will permit me to answer, he may criticise my answer afterwards. I am telling him that, in so far as Lachute is concerned, I did not consider that he attached any importance to that portion of the service, and I gave him the information which came to me from the department. With regard to Buckingham, the matter is not decided. The hon. gentleman, as he knows, has sent in a number of applications. As I have stated to him, it is almost impossible for me to be in my seat for any time during the sitting of the House, as I am called out continually, and I am quite prepared to meet any hon. gentlemen who may wish to see me on public matters. I mention this fact simply to indicate to the hon. member for Ottawa how impossible it is for me to look after departmental work during the session. The department is very large, and these applications come from every portion of the Dominion, and have to be inquired into and reported upon. I can tell the hon. gentleman that in so far as the Buckingham service is concerned, it is a very important one, and I am not prepared to say that it will not be granted, nor am I prepared to say that it will be granted. In so far as Lachute and Ste. Scholastique are concerned, I told the hon. gentleman exactly how matters stood.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. Minister tried to have a little fun at my expense, in saying that I travelled outside of the county to which I belong.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no fun about it.

Mr. DEVLIN. I have a perfect right, as a member of this House to question the Minister in regard to the mail service in any part of Canada. I was not questioning him, however, with regard to the mail service outside of Ottawa county, except in this much: That an application connected with mine, was also sent from Lachine and Ste. Scholastique. The hon. Minister told me that the matter was receiving the consideration of the department. I pointed out that it had received more than the consideration of the department, and that the application of Ste. Scholastique had been granted. I went further and I said that the application from Lachute, in accordance with a note which he himself had written to Mr. Wilson, had also been granted, and the only application that was not considered was that of Buckingham. My experience of the department is, that if that application is to be treated as all other applications coming from the county of Ottawa, it will not be considered until the day of general judgment.

It being six o'clock the Committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEVLIN. When the committee rose at six o'clock, I was replying to the charge made by the hon. Postmaster-General, that I was interfering with business that did not concern me, in bringing up the question of additional mail service for Lachute. I do not propose to take up the time of the House on this matter, as I believe my hon. friend the representative of Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) will throw some light upon it. I was not at all interfering with the duties of that hon. gentleman, nor did I wish in any way to interfere with the business of the county he represents. What I did was simply to correct the statement made by the Postmaster-General in regard to the mail service between Montreal and Ottawa, which statement was erroneous from beginning to end. When I mentioned the matter, he said it was receiving the consideration of the department. I pointed out that it had already received the consideration of the department, as Ste. Scholastique, for instance, had already been accommodated. I will simply relate what transpired in connection with this whole matter, because the town whose claims have been overlooked, is a town long accustomed to have its claims, not only in this matter, but in other matters, overlooked by the present Government, that is the town of Buckingham. Three members of this House, the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Girouard), the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) and myself, approached the Postmaster-General. Two of those gentlemen brought petitions with them, whereas I accompanied the deputation. We were assured by the Postmaster-General that the matter would receive his consideration, and it did receive his consideration, so far as Ste. Scholastique is concerned, because he forthwith granted to it what the hon. member for Two Mountains asked. Afterwards, a local paper published in the county of Argenteuil, took great credit to Mr. J. C. Wilson for obtaining the accommodation, stating, that although the hon. member for Argenteuil had made representations to the hon. Postmaster-General at the same time as the hon. member for Two Mountains and myself, those representations had no weight with the Minister, but that it required the interference of Mr. Wilson to obtain what had been asked. As to that, I have nothing to say, but all this was intimately connected with the question of postal accommodation for Buckingham. I am told to-day by the hon. Postmaster-General, that so far as Buckingham is concerned, the question will receive his consideration, that is, during the recess; and, no doubt, next session, when I bring this matter up again, I shall then be told that it will receive his consideration. I merely rise to contradict the Postmaster-General as strongly as I can, that I was interfering with the business of the hon. member for Argenteuil.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I had not intended to bring up this matter, but as it has been brought up, I desire to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster-General to an editorial relative to it which appears in the Lachute "Watchman," as follows:—

Lachute will in a short time obtain a great boom and one that her people have not taken much trouble in obtaining. We have time and again urged upon the inhabitants of Lachute the necessity of two mails each day and advised some organized effort in that direction. Such efforts were not followed by active work. A deputation waited on the Government some time ago representing the counties of Ottawa, Argenteuil and Two Mountains, but Lachute did not reap any benefits therefrom. Mr. J. C. Wilson, however, both during the time he was a member and since, although unsupported by petitions from the town, has been working energetically and urging every possible reason for this additional mail service. As a result the following letter, which we are permitted to publish will speak for itself.

OTTAWA, 14th March, 1893.

MY DEAR Mr. WILSON.—In accordance with the recommendation contained in your letter of the 13th instant, I have authorized that the exchange of mails between Lachute and Montreal be made semi-daily.

Yours faithfully,

ADOLPHE P. CARON.

J. C. WILSON, Esq.,
Montreal, Que.

Now, all that I know in connection with this matter I may state in a very few words. I can fully endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Ottawa county (Mr. Devlin). So long ago as the time of the Mackenzie Administration, I made an application for an evening mail service between Ottawa and Montreal. This session, however, the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Girouard) was the first to move in the matter. The hon. member for Ottawa county and myself co-operated with him. We were all anxious that our respective counties should obtain this evening service. We waited on the Postmaster-General on or about the 25th of February, and urged as strongly as we possibly could the necessity of an evening mail service, both for Ste. Scholastique, Lachute and Buckingham. The Postmaster-General received us very courteously, and promised to give the matter his immediate and best consideration, and to grant the request if he found that it was in the public interest. Three weeks afterwards, in order to ascertain what had been done in regard to our request, I called at the department, hoping to meet the hon. Postmaster-General; but his deputy kindly informed me that the application for an evening mail service to Lachute had been granted. Now, I simply wish to draw the hon. Postmaster-General's attention to this statement in this editorial, which I think he will not endorse: "A deputation waited on the Government some time ago representing the counties of Ottawa, Argenteuil and Two Mountains, but Lachute did not reap any benefits therefrom." The idea conveyed there is that the united efforts of the three members and the petitions which we presented and which we supported with all the ability we could command, failed to impress the Postmaster-General. Now, I do not think that the hon. Postmaster-General will say anything of the kind, because it would be a complete contradiction of the policy which that hon. gentleman enunciated this afternoon, that in all postal matters he had no regard whatever to party or political interest. I do hope that that is the policy which has governed him heretofore, and that it will continue to be his policy. I do not wish to press the matter, but simply to give the Postmaster-General an opportunity of explaining it, because there seems to have been an attempt to make political capital out of this evening mail service which has been granted to Lachute and Ste. Scholastique, and I await the Postmaster-General's explanations with some degree of curiosity.

Mr. GIROUARD (Two Mountains). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to the remarks fallen from the hon. members from the county of Ottawa (Mr. Devlin), and d'Argenteuil (Mr. Christie), and I may say these gentlemen labour under a false delusion. They stated that in the month of February last, we had waited upon the hon. the Postmaster-General, to ask him for a more regular postal service for Buckingham, Lachute and Ste. Scholastique, as I had previously asked for Ste. Scholastique. Owing to the fact that my demand had been granted prior to theirs, they seize this opportunity to censure the Government, and accuse the Ministers of intentional delays. I wish to set the facts in their true light, and bring back these gentlemen to better sentiments. I did, in fact, accompany them, as well as a delegation from Buckingham and Lachute, when we waited upon the hon. the Postmaster-General, in view of obtaining a more frequent postal communication for Buckingham, Lachute and Ste. Scholastique. But, as regards Ste. Scholastique, I must say that I have gained a great deal of ground on them, and that, as far back as the 15th of January last, I had presented a petition of the citizens of that locality, with a view of obtaining a more frequent postal service. It was on the 14th of February, I think, that, in company with these gentlemen, I called on the hon. the Postmaster-General, and a few days later, I was informed that the demands of Ste. Scholastique had been granted. The favour was not granted Ste. Scholastique through the interview we had with the Minister, one or two days before, but it was owing to the petition of the citizens of that locality having been sent to the Postmaster-General a month before. My petition in favour of Ste. Scholastique had been sent on the 14th or 15th of January, and on the 23rd or 25th of the same month, the post office inspector at Montreal, Mr. King, came down on an official visit to get the necessary information in connection with this postal service. The hon. members for Ottawa and Argenteuil complain of their demand not having been acceded to without delay. I quite understand the delay brought by the Government. The fact that Buckingham and Lachute have not yet been accorded their demand does not involve any idea of political capital or favouritism. This delay is owing to nothing else but the encumberment of affairs and to the additional work the hon. Minister has to perform during the session, and, I have certain reasons to believe, as I have been informed by the member for Argenteuil, that the more regular postal service asked for will soon be granted. The least favour the hon. Postmaster-General and his employees may expect from the public is, that they be given the necessary time to consider the matter, in order to organize a postal service which will prove satisfactory to all.

Mr. DEVLIN. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I am quite satisfied with certain explanations which have been given by the hon. member for Two Mountains; but when he states that I charged the hon. Postmaster-General with political bias in connection with this postal service, I think he is altogether mistaken. I do not charge the hon. member alone with partiality, but I also accuse all the department of the Minister; and not only on the question now before us, but on a host of other subjects connected with the postal service. I would like to know from the hon. member for Two Mountains whether it will take long to settle the question now debated. The hon. Postmaster-General knows perfectly well how the case stands. He knows the revenue of Ste. Scholastique and that of Buckingham. He knows perfectly well that Buckingham yields to the postal department a much more considerable revenue than Ste. Scholastique; and that the postal service asked for has a far greater importance for Buckingham than for Ste. Scholastique. At Buckingham there are a good many manufactures, as well known, it is a great mining centre, and there are numerous mines scattered alongside the Lièvre River, and the working of these mines creates quite a bustle in that town. I have nothing to say against the village of Ste. Scholastique. I know it is a calm and peaceful village, but that there are no manufactures to be found there, and it does not yield to the Government the same postal revenue as Buckingham, which is an important mining centre. The hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Girouard) charges me with having been unfair towards the Postmaster-General, for having said that he showed political bias in settling these questions. I may tell the hon. member that, not having studied the question, he does not know all the circumstances of the case. The village of Lachute had not sent in an application before Buckingham, still, thanks to the intervention of Mr. Wilson, the postal department had already granted their request, while they refused to grant the demand I had made in favour of Buckingham. Such was the object of my complaint a little while ago, and it was well grounded. I have worked and I will continue to exert myself in the interest of my constituency, and I will continue to do so without minding what the hon. member for Two Mountains may think on the matter.

Mr. BERNIER. (Translation.) Before this item is adopted, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know from the hon. Postmaster-General whether he is now ready to give an answer to the demand I put in his hands a few days ago, in connection with the daily carriage of the mail between the city of St. Hyacinthe and St. Thomas d'Aquin?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) I have inquired from the Deputy Postmaster-General whether these papers were ready, and I think I may be prepared to-morrow to give the hon. member the answer wished for.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) I would also inquire whether the demand I had made to the Postmaster-General, during the last session, with regard to the establishment of a daily postal service for the parish of St. Edouard is going to be granted. The name of this post office is Rivière Paquet. When I made this demand, the hon. Postmaster-General made answer that the question was under consideration. May I know now whether the hon. Minister has done considering the question and whether he is ready now to grant it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) The question mentioned by the hon. member has been taken into consideration, as I stated at the time. From the report drawn up by the officers of the department, we have not considered that we could grant the establishment of the daily postal service applied for by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Commercial Agencies $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is to provide for an extension of the system, as I have explained twice before this session. Commercial agencies have been during the past year formed in five ports in the West Indies, and reports have been received quarterly in bulletin form and a number distributed. All of them will be ready for distribution in a few days. Six bulletins altogether have been published, two or three from our commercial agents in Great Britain, where the immigration agents act as our commercial agents. This year I propose to take $5,000 more to provide for the extension in other places.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you pay the agents?

Mr. FOSTER. The arrangements are chiefly tentative. They send quarterly reports and answer correspondence and the like, and we pay them for the first year a small allowance of $250 each.

Steam Subsidy between Campbellton and Gaspé, and intermediate ports $12,500

Mr. FOSTER. The contract has expired, and advertisements are out calling for tenders for a new contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The general impression was that the amount paid was out of all proportion to the service rendered. Is it proposed to pay the same subsidy?

Mr. FOSTER. We have invited tenders.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose the hon. gentleman only gets one tender, and that at $12,000, does he propose to give that subsidy?

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot allow that section of country to go without steam mail communication; and while we hope for better offers, it will be a question for us to decide, if we do not get lower tenders, whether we will not have to pay that amount.

For three lines of steamers running between the ports of Halifax and St. John, N.B., or either, and the West Indies and South America..... $103,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How many years are we bound to pay this?

Mr. FOSTER. Two years more.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) $13,000 I think we pay the Jamaica boats.

Mr. FOSTER. $15,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that the quantity of goods she carries does not at all come up to expectation, and, in fact, is almost a burlesque.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is increasing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the information furnished me is correct, it is perfectly ridiculous. The steamer goes once a month and takes 25,000 quintals of codfish. That is the whole quantity that goes on board the steamer. Over 75,000 quintals are carried between the same ports by sailing vessels. For the carriage of these 25,000 quintals, we pay $15,000, because what the steamer carries besides does not amount to anything. What makes the service intensely unpopular is the belief that the shares were quietly bought up by Pickford & Black at par, when they knew, as managing owners, that the boats were paying enormous dividends, so that they are now practically the owners of the boats. Until very lately there was competition existing between a line of steamers running from Montreal and the rates were cut; but I understand some arrangement was made between these boats. I understand a new competing line is seeking a subsidy. I do not know whether the Government are considering the matter. As a matter of fact, I am told that it is cheaper for Halifax merchants to send their goods to New York and ship them by New York. Have the Government, considering they subsidize those boats so largely, any control over the rates charged by Pickford, Black & Co. on the goods they carry?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the Government has no control over the rates on any subsidized lines, and, so far as I know, it never has had. I do not see how it practically could have such control. I think that would have to be left to the competition in the trade, and to the general desire which I think all carriers would have to carry as much as they possibly could.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No doubt the general law of competition regulates these matters if left to itself, but when the Government steps in and gives a subsidy of about $15,000, the case is altered. If I am not misinformed, this same boat gets a subsidy of $4,000 from Turk's Island.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I believe that is the case, and when the boat was making 30 or 40 or 50 per cent, Pickford & Black bought up the shares at par and are now practically the owners. They do not need to cut rates, they can run everybody off the track. The moment a Montreal boat comes into competition, Pickford & Black can put their rates down to a non-paying basis, because they have the Government subsidy. I am not going to discuss the subsidy now; it is of no practical use at this time, as the Government is bound for two years. So far as I am able to gather from those who are interested in the trade, they do not think they get any benefit from the subsidy. Three quarters of the fish shipped from Nova Scotia to Jamaica go by non-subsidized lines, and only one-quarter, or 25,000 quintals by the subsidized steamer. That being the case, I bring the subject before the attention of the hon. gentleman, because, before this subsidy expires, the House will have to consider whether the results justify a renewal of a contract involving an expenditure of $103,000 per year. For my own part, I unhesitatingly say that the results do not justify the expenditure. The trade which was expected to grow up has not grown up, and, when the time comes to consider the renewal I think it would be well, in the public interest, to save that money altogether. I think the hon. Minister of Finance was to give me a general statement of the cargo the vessel carries to Jamaica. I do not want the details, but a general statement I think would be valuable.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. FOSTER. I have a statement here for the year 1891-92, and for the year 1892-93 up to date. I find that the vessel carries fish of different kinds, potatoes and other vegetables, coal (a large quantity of this), oats, corn meal, etc., butter, cheese, nails, drugs and medicines, liquors, cordage, canned goods, animals, and various other assorted merchandise. The average for the year, value of export per trip, was $25,143, besides 3,195 packages of various articles of which no value is given.

Mr. MULOCK. How many trips?

Mr. FOSTER. One per month.

Mr. MULOCK. And it costs $103,000 to sell—

Mr. FOSTER. No, you must not come to that conclusion. It is bad enough the way my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island put it. The amount of subsidy paid per trip is $15,000. The total value of export is $301,712, besides these 3,195 packages, the value of which is not given. I have here the statistics of five trips for this year, and they average about $23,000. The last vessel took 1,250 drums of fish, also other packages of fish, and much the same assortment of articles as I have read.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have made the point I wanted, which no doubt the hon. gentleman sees, that we send 100,000 quintals of fish to Jamaica, and the quantity is not increased since the subsidizing of this line; this vessel carries about 25,000 quintals, and that 75,000 quintals go by unsubsidized ships. So that practically we are paying this $15,000 subsidy for carrying a very small proportion of the exports which go from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to Jamaica.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a large assortment of other merchandise.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there is no substantial development of trade.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; from the first it has developed, but the best development is on the Windward route.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was confining myself to Jamaica.

To meet cost of litigated matters
(Justice) $20,000

Mr. CURRAN. This item is to provide for lawsuits that may turn up during the course of a year. It is the same amount as was voted last year. The expenses incurred last year were $19,993.53, and it is estimated that we may require the same amount next year.

To pay salaries of Extra Clerks at head office, Ottawa; advertising, ing, copying, &c $6,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What position in the service does the late Minister of Interior's secretary hold, Mr. McGirr?

Mr. DALY. He is a second-class clerk. He has been in the outside service, but his services as secretary will be dispensed with after the 1st of July.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does he return to his former position?

Mr. DALY. No. He remains in the service here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood he was brought from the outside service.

Mr. DALY. He was, and he is now in the inside service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What position does he hold?

Mr. DALY. I think it will take a second-class clerkship. The item will come up in the Supplementaries.

Immigration--Salaries of agents and employees in Canada. . . $22,000

Sir RICHARD CARTRIGHT. Before this resolution is passed, it is proper that the Minister should give us a general summary of the mode in which he proposes to employ this vote, and what he expects to do. I need not tell you that the state of this department has been not only unsatisfactory, but extremely disgraceful to Canada for a great many years back. The grossest mis-statements have been perpetually made by the officers of the department, and the census shows conclusively that of all the immigrants brought here, not one-sixth have remained. Now, I desire to know what policy the new incumbent of the office proposes to adopt, and, in particular, how he proposes to make use of the general sum placed at his disposal for immigration purposes.

Mr. DALY. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I will, as briefly as possible, outline the work that is being done at present in reference to immigration. I may say, in the first place, that we have dispensed with the services of the agents that used to hold office in Canada, that is in the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and in this way a saving has been effected of $22,000. That saving was made in the Canadian agencies. There appears here to be an increase of over $14,000, but that is providing specifically for salaries which formerly were taken out of the general vote. Then, as to the salaries of agents and employees in Great Britain and Ireland, it is my intention to dispense with the services of the present incumbent at Dublin, and the present incumbent at Belfast, who seem to have outgrown their usefulness. As concerns their remuneration, and the remuneration of the other agents in Great Britain, the practice which formerly prevailed of giving them a per diem allowance for travelling expenses, will be done away with, and they will be placed upon a direct salary and allowed only actual travelling expenses. Now, I will describe the work that is being carried on to-day in Great Britain Mr. Bailey Stewart has been lecturing in the north of Scotland since last November. That gentleman spent some six months in this country last year, seeing it in both winter and summer, travelling from Cape Breton right through to British Columbia, and consequently, he has a splendid idea of the country and its resources. Mr. Stewart was highly recommended by leading people in Scotland, and seems to be giving great satisfaction to the Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, and we expect good results from his work in the north of Scotland. In the south of Scotland, we have employed Mr. Peter Lang, who was, for twenty years, connected with Australian emigration. He does the same work in the south of Scotland that Mr. Stewart does in the north of Scotland. We have employed these two men for one year at a salary of $1,200, and so much for travelling expenses—I have forgotten the exact amount. They are provided with magic lanterns and different shades, containing views of this country from ocean to ocean, and are doing splendid work, according to the newspaper reports we receive from time to time from different parts of Scotland. In the south of England, we employ a Mr. Ritchie, a Scotch farmer, now settled in the county of Essex, who, with a party of Scotchmen, went to the south of England a couple of years ago, and came out to Canada last year. He spent the whole of last summer, and most of last fall, in Manitoba and the North-west, and has written a pamphlet describing his visit to Canada. He has been employed for the season in the south of England, delivering lectures and distributing literature. We have made an arrangement with the different steam-ship companies in Great Britain and Ireland to distribute our literature. In order to induce them to give the same attention to the booking of passengers to Canada, we raised their commissions by $1.70, that is, the Government pay them $1.75 for each booking to Winnipeg, after a certificate has been obtained that the passenger who is booked, has arrived in Winnipeg. The reason for giving that $1.75 was that it brings up the commission that they receive from the steam-ship companies equal to the commission that they receive from Australian bookings. It was ascertained by our agents in Great Britain that these men were neglecting entirely the booking of passengers to Canada, simply because they could not earn the same commission as they could on bookings to Australia. In addition to Mr. Ritchie, in the south of England, we have Mr. E. I. Wood late of Holland, in the province of Manitoba, and a resident there for ten years, who has also been employed for one year at the same salary as Mr. Bailey Stewart and Mr. Peter Lang in Scotland. Mr. Wood has the advantage of ten years' actual farming experience in the province of Manitoba, where he has been successful. He is a man of unusual intelligence, and good education, is very well connected in the old country, and he is doing good work for us there. Now, in addition to these, of course we have still our agent at Liverpool, Mr. Dyke, and the agent at Glasgow, Mr. Graham. In addition to these gentlemen, we have men in Scotland, in England and in Ireland to-day, who have farmed in Manitoba and the North-west for some years, and have been sent home for three or four months. Transportation is given to them by the steam-ship companies and by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Government make them an allowance for travelling expenses. All of these men who are well connected and have relatives in different parts of the country, are going to work in Great Britain, and I may say that we find it is absolutely necessary for an agent to do good work that he should be connected with persons to whom he can refer as to character, and as to whether his statements can be relied on or not. Owing to the fact of Great Britain having been overrun with agents of American railways and the Australian colonies as well as the South American republics, the people are very chary of receiving as true statements made by agents seeking to induce people to emigrate to other countries. And, therefore, it is that any person endeavouring to work they should be able to refer to people of responsibility as to the facts he states. We have three of those gentlemen in the north of Ireland, a portion of the country that seems to have been neglected, because the number of people coming here from that part has been small indeed. Those men are all practical men, who have had practical experience in farming in Manitoba and the North-west, and, so far as accounts go, good work will be performed by them. In addition, Sir Charles Tupper has secured from the British Government the right to put up our posters in the 25,000 post offices in Great Britain and Ireland. In addition, we have advertised in every leading periodical and paper in Great Britain, and to-day Canada is a household word from one end of the country to the other. We have distributed all the English Farm Delegates' Reports not only to different parts of the country, but to almost every school there. Undoubtedly gross ignorance prevails as to our country. Our efforts are not directed alone to bringing emigrants to our western country, but we are endeavouring to bring before the people a knowledge of the whole of Canada. In order, if possible, to increase the effectiveness of our work, I communicated with the Premiers of the different provinces, calling attention to the machinery we possess in England, and asking their co-operation. With the exception of a reply from the Premier of Prince Edward Island, I have received no communication from the Premiers of the provinces. It is, in my opinion, a great oversight on their part. We have a number of farms for sale in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, and if we could obtain lists of vacant farms or be furnished with any information, I would be happy to distribute any literature the Local Governments might prepare or any lists of farms for sale through our agents in Great Britain. So much with respect to Great Britain and Ireland.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the hon. gentleman a statement showing the number of emigrants from each district sent out by those agents during the past twelve months, and who have arrived, say, in Winnipeg?

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman will find the figures in a statement I laid on the Table of the House some time ago. I have given up the idea altogether of keeping returns such as were kept in the Department of Agriculture of the number of emigrants coming into the country, and relying on them. The hon. gentleman will find in the report the number of homestead entries made by the people going into the North-west, either from Great Britain or the United States.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The reason I asked was to ascertain how far each agent has been successful, and what results have been secured by agents in any particular district. Of course, some agents might send out many, and others no emigrants whatever.

Mr. DALY. Those agents of which I have spoken have only been home since October, and they have had no opportunity of obtaining results from their work. Statistics, however, will be kept as to the work done by each man; but, I repeat, that I have given up the idea of keeping a record similar to that kept by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a dangerous experiment.

Mr. DALY. Yes; I think so. All I propose to do is to keep a record in each Dominion lands office of the number of persons in the family of the individual making the homestead entry, and in this way we will have undoubted evidence as to the number of settlers. Passing on to speak of continental Europe, it will be remembered that we are met with considerable difficulty, many obstacles in dealing with the question of immigration. We are excluded entirely from Germany, being proscribed by name in the State papers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why?

Mr. DALY. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman the reason; but in consequence of that fact, we are unable to send any authorized agents into Germany to do our work. The only way we can obtain a foothold is through the steam-ship companies, and we give a bonus of $5 to every shipping agent making a booking for Winnipeg, this amount being payable on the arrival of the immigrant in that city. This course has to be adopted in order to meet the efforts put forth by the Australian colonies and the Argentine Republic and other countries seeking immigrants. We have, in fact, to meet the competition of other parts of this continent and of the Australian colonies in their efforts to secure emigrants. In the north of France we have an agent who has gone over for the season, a gentleman who has spent considerable time in Canada, living both in the eastern townships and in Ontario, as well as Manitoba and the North-west, and that gentleman is doing good work in Brittany, Normandy and Belgium. We have secured a comparatively large number of emigrants from Belgium and the north of France, and as those immigrants live not very far from me in Manitoba, I am in a position to say that they are a hard-working, industrious and excellent class of settlers, who seem to like life in the west and are doing very fairly well. In Sweden likewise we are under a ban, and can only work through passenger steam-ship agents, and also through people who have been settlers in the west and who return home to tell the story of their success to the friends they had left behind. In Norway we are permitted to go in and work openly and distribute our literature. In Austria we are shut out, as we are in Germany. In France we are distributing literature printed in the French language, through Mr. Fabre, and through the instrumentality of our other agents there. This is the work that has been done in Great Britain and in France and in the other portions of continental Europe. As the House is aware, some years ago the Department of Agriculture entered a new field of immigration, and that is the field to the south of us, the United States. We have been fairly successful in that, and the immigration from that country is growing materially. The work was first confined to Dakota and portions of Minnesota; but to-day we find large numbers of people coming from Idaho and Washington Territory. A great many of them are returned Canadians, and a great many are old country people who have lived in the States for a number of years, and who have accumulated money. We have people coming here who have settled in Vermont, Massachusetts and the eastern States, and have also been able to set aside a sufficient amount to justify their going to the west and taking up homes. Good work has been done in other states such as Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and even in the state of New York, and the reports that we are receiving from our agents indicate that there will be a large influx of Americans into our great North-west during the next few months. When we see from the newspapers that 7,000 people are waiting for the opening of the Indian lands in the western states we can see how great is the land hunger there. I think that the money that is spent in that work will bear good fruit. As regards what has been done in Canada, we propose this year that all immigrants shall land at the city of Quebec, as soon as the St. Lawrence navigation opens. There, they will be met by our staff of agents, and they will be accompanied, if they are foreigners, by one of the interpreters speaking their own language as far as North Bay. At North Bay another agent will accompany them, so that they will have an immigration agent in charge of them from the time they get on the cars at Quebec until they reach Winnipeg. Our experience in the past has shown us that the American immigration agents are very active, and that they frequently endeavour to persuade our immigrants when en route to divert their course to the United States. It is absolutely necessary therefore that an agent of the department should accompany these immigrants on the trains. We have men in Winnipeg who speak the languages of the different continental countries, who will give these immigrants all information and send them to the different places they wish to go. The sum that is asked this year, $200,000, is increased, as the hon. gentleman will see, by a sum of $19,175. That increase is due to the fact that I have mentioned specifically here, the sums required for the services opposite which they appear. These moneys were formerly taken out of the large grant of $150,000. I have now given a brief outline of the work proposed to be done by the department in reference to immigration.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I am glad to hear that the Government has at last woken up to the necessity of making some effort to people our great domain in the west. If we do not get the people into that great country, the immense sums of money which we have spent on railways there, will bring us very little return for our investment. I am pleased also to hear that emigration work is being done in Sweden, Norway and Germany, but from what I have seen and heard and know, I am afraid that if we spend money in the United States, it will be to bring men over here who are of no value as settlers in this country. There are families coming to Canada who have been in the States for years, and who have been unsuccessful, and I feel, and I may say that I know, that a large portion of this money spent in the States is being lost. I am sure that the House feels anxious in every way possible to strengthen the hands of the Minister of the Interior, in bringing to this country men from the northern countries of Europe, who will make good settlers, but my experience is, that people who come here from the United States, are not at all desirable citizens for Canada. We, on this side of the House are disposed to assist the Minister in all his expenditures to promote desirable immigration to this country, but we feel that it would be very little use to bring settlers from southern countries to this northern climate. There is no country under the sun which offers the same opportunities to the new settlers as Manitoba and the great North-west does. The land is of the very best quality, the irrigation is good, and it has a most healthful climate. It is true that the climate is a little severe in winter, but, Sir, we see that there the people are happy and comfortable, and that there is room for millions of good healthy settlers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad to hear the hon. Minister intends to turn his attention somewhat to the older provinces, which have been neglected in the matter of immigration in the past. I hope that every effort will be made to place before settlers the advantages of taking up land in the older provinces. I think that the hon. Minister will admit that our own people make the best settlers in the North-west. I am glad to know that he is about to turn his attention to the older provinces, and, as he says he will be glad to have a list of lands open to settlement, for circulation in the old country, I myself will be happy to furnish him with a list of such lands in my section. I think the Minister proposes a good change, and I trust he will press the consideration of the settlement of the older provinces on immigrants coming to this country.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, having been an eye-witness, within the last few years, of the losses resulting from the exodus in the rural districts of the province of Quebec, and as a representative of one of the counties where the ravages of depopulation are felt as in all the other rural centres of the older provinces of Confederation, I thought it incumbent on me to rise at this hour when the Government ask us to vote a credit of $200,000, to enable them to pursue their foreign immigration policy so prejudicial to the rate-payers of this country, and to beg of the hon. Ministers to open their eyes to this lamentable state of affairs rather than throw away money to bring here strangers. It is quite obvious, that our farmers, feeling unable to better their position here, every day find their way over the border to strengthen our rivals. These emigrants, Mr. Chairman, would constitute by far the better class of settlers the Government might choose to people the boundless and fertile plains of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It is admitted that our own people make the best settlers in the North-west, and are a more desirable class than the newcomers brought here from Europe, and it seems strange to me that the wisdom of our Government, who are exerting themselves and spending thousands of dollars to settle the province of Manitoba and the North-west, can suggest no better course than bringing in strangers when they have ready at hand people of a superior class, much better fitted for the development of these new provinces, hundreds of whom are leaving the country to settle down in the United States. Is it not strange, I say, that the Government have overlooked these people, who are at any rate, a more desirable class of settlers for the colonization of these new provinces than the overflowing population of European towns? It would be idle to deny, Mr. Chairman, that within the last few years a stream of emigration from the older provinces has set in, and is still flowing in the direction of the United States. Should any one question this fact, I would refer him to the last census, which substantiates and proves beyond the shadow of a doubt this statement. We see, in fact, from the census that in a great many counties, and chiefly in the rural districts, the population has decreased. To begin with the province of Quebec, there are twenty-seven counties which indicate a falling off in the population. In the province of Ontario, the same state of things prevail; there are thirty-six counties where a decrease of population has taken place. In New Brunswick, seven counties happen to be in the same case. In Nova Scotia, population has decreased in eight counties. It may be further stated, Mr. Chairman, that the rural counties are the chief sufferers from this depopulation. Facts are stubborn, and there is no denying this statement. No man in his sober senses would deny it; there is no man, acquainted with the state of things in our rural districts, who will deny that a strong stream of emigration has set in from these centres towards the United States. This class of farmers who thus give up their lands in the older provinces to better their situation in the United States are the most desirable class of settlers the Government might plant in the North-west Territories, should they be anxious to have a class of settlers who will know how to avail themselves of the advantages and of the wealth of the new soil of these regions. I would draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the interesting statistics included in the report of the Auditor for the Dominion of Canada, as compared with the data found in the report of the Department of Agriculture. We are asked to vote a large appropriation for the purposes of immigration; let us see what has been the result in the past. Let us compare the expenses with the number of immigrants who have settled down in Canada. From the Auditor-General's Report, I see that in 1882 the sum of $215,339.24 was expended for immigration purposes; it appears from the report of the Department of Agriculture that we brought into the country 112,458 immigrants. In 1883, $373,957.71 was expended for immigration purposes, and we brought 133,624 immigrants. In 1884, $516,208.83 was expended, and we had 103,824 immigrants. In 1885, $423,860.90 was the expenditure, against 79,169 immigrants. In 1886, $257,354.93 was expended for 669,152 immigrants. In 1887, $341,236.39 was expended for 84,526 immigrants. In 1888, the expenses for immigration purposes rose to $244,789.09, and we brought in 88,766 immigrants. In 1889, the expenses for the same purposes were $202,499.26, against 91,600 immigrants. In 1890, $100,091.76 was expended for 75,067 immigrants. Finally, in 1891, the amount expended for immigration was $181,045.38, and the number of immigrants was 82,195. During this decade we have expended a total amount of $2,861,383.49, and for this sum we have brought into the country 920,351 immigrants. Last year we expended a considerable sum for the same purpose, and this year the Government ask a new vote of $200,000 for the same service; and the Government do not consider that our countrymen in the meantime are leaving the country, that this country is bleeding to death through this exodus; that those who thus leave their native country are ratepayers who have been taxed to enable the Government to bring in these new-comers who have benefited by the advantages the country offers them. I say this system is most unfair to our own people. How is it, Mr. Chairman, that the Government, in their wisdom, have never offered our own people, our French-Canadian compatriots, the same advantages they offer strangers brought from Europe? How is it that we have given money, passage fares, board, etc., to strangers who are an inferior class of settlers, while our own compatriots are forced into exile? Why has not the same encouragement been offered to French-Canadians as was accorded Europeans, under the shape of transportation fares and money bonuses? A great number of immigration agents in Europe are paid large salaries for immigration purposes. How is it that the Government who, at such large expense, bring here strangers, do not see that lamentable exodus which is taking away so many of our worthy citizens from our provinces, bound for a foreign land? And the fact still remains that our countrymen are the best class of settlers the Government could choose to settle our immense North-west Territories. This suggestion of mine has already been offered by men whose opinion should have been law. Newspapers have published communications from persons of high social standing, good judges of the remedies best calculated to stem it, and to direct emigration to its proper channels. I happened to read of late, a letter from Abbé Dugas, which was published in a leading Montreal journal, in reference to this matter. This gentleman has devoted all his attention to this subject for a number of years. In this letter he met the objection of those persons who pretend that French-Canadians are coming back from the United States. He says:

Coming back, inquire about the fact of repatriation and you will soon learn that for one family that is repatriated, ten go away; this is no ground assuredly to rejoice.

Further on, he said:

A great many families from the United States would be willing to take up farms if assistance was given them to reach Manitoba. Several families in the province of Quebec would also be inclined to go, should they be afforded the means of going there.

Talk of good-will! Ah! Should only the Government be willing to spend for Canadians but one-half of the sum expended for bringing here people from the remotest quarters of the globe—for Mennonites, Irishmen, Swedes, Norwegians, Jews and so many others! The country we have to colonize was settled, at the outset, by our fathers, and it belonged to us.

In twenty-five years from now, Canadians, with a spark of patriotism in their heart and with some understanding of sound policy, will wonder at our own supineness and absence of true patriotism in this emigration matter.

I consider there is some truth in these remarks, and that the Government are not doing right to the people of this country. I read, of late, in a Montreal journal, the following article:—

Annexation in detail continues every day without awakening any emotion or alarm in the Conservative press.

Yesterday evening, forty-two poor farmers, for the most part from the Eastern Townships, were waiting at the Bonaventure Station to take the train for the United States. These compatriots on their way to a foreign land came partly from St. John, Lacolle, Sabrevois and Clarenceville. Seven of them were from Bord à Plouffe.

Thirty-one of these emigrants are bound for Dakota, five for Wallace, Kansas, and six for Pullman, Washington. Out of forty-two, forty are French Canadians, and I am told that a hundred more will follow them within a few weeks.

Another journal said, on the 11th instant:

The exodus to the United States is on the increase again. Railway ticket agents are quite busy. I was told by one of them, this very day, that hundreds of Canadians emigrate from the district of Quebec.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we, impassive spectators, witness this exodus, which drains our rural districts, and with the census figures artfully arranged, the conclusion is reached that the country is in a state of prosperity, that Canada is growing fast. It may be that prosperity prevails in some corner of the country, but it is none the less true that our rural districts are being depopulated on a large scale. Meanwhile, the Government are throwing away the money of the very people of the very farming class who are forced into exile, to allow new-comers to take possession of the soil and partake of the wealth of the country. I charge that the French-Canadian Ministers are specially open to censure, for ignoring the miserable state of the province which they represent in this House. I dare say that the immigration brought here within the last decade has been prejudicial to the interests of the French-speaking people of the country. And the result of the immigration policy of introducing into the country a European population entertaining views hostile to the French population, is evidenced in the fact that they have reached this juncture in Manitoba, when both political parties agree in robbing our compatriots of their most sacred rights, secured by the Constitution, and which were, up to this moment, considered as out of the reach of a fanatical majority. To substantiate my statement, I will quote figures taken from the report of the Minister of Agriculture, for the last decade, from 1882 to 1892. The following table will show the arrivals at the port of Quebec during the last decade, as also the proportion of French immigrants, compared with the English immigrants :—

ARRIVALS OF IMMIGRANTS AT THE PORT OF QUEBEC.

Year.	Total.	English, Scotch and Irish.	French and Belgians
1882	44,850	33,693	50
1883	45,965	37,972	306
1884	31,729	26,151	150
1885	17,030	14,717	140
1886	22,782	18,108	100
1887	32,749	22,256	147
1888	28,530	18,772	255
1889	22,091	15,662	166
1890	21,165	14,828	147
1891	23,435	14,666	307
	290,126	216,825	1,768

It is quite obvious, from the above table, that the immigration policy of the Government up to this day, was calculated to drown the French population of Manitoba and the North-west Territories in a wave of foreign emigrants. In view of such a policy, I think I am warranted in stating once more that the French-Canadian Ministers are open to censure for not better protecting the rights of the people they are representing in this Parliament. It is a most lamentable error to have thrown away millions to encourage and foster such an immigration, while our own citizens were leaving their native land for the neighbouring states. That such a state of things should have been brought about by the mere force of events, and that such a result was not foreseen as probable and inevitable, I cannot be prevailed upon to believe. I contend that this immigration policy was directed mainly against the French population of Manitoba. Such a policy was calculated, at the same time, to prevent our French-Canadian citizens from emigrating to Manitoba and the North-west. Meanwhile, our Ministers offered no resistance. To conclude, I may say that it is to be regretted that such large sums of money should have been thrown away to foster a foreign immigration, while no steps have been taken to stem the tide of the exodus that carried away so many of our French-Canadian citizens. I enter here my solemn protest against the policy of the Government. I protest also against the declarations made by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly), as tending to the same end. The exertions of the hon. Minister are always directed to an end prejudicial to the interests of the country; and the public money is not spent with a view to the development and the settling of Manitoba and the North-west. I think it would only be fair that the enormous sum of $200,000, which the House is asked to vote for immigration purposes, instead of being expended in bringing here a foreign population, should be applied so as to check the tide of emigration towards the United States, and so that the stream of our emigrants should be set in the direction of the fertile plains of Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Mr. LEGRIS.

Immigration Expenses..... $150,000

Mr. BRODEUR. Before this vote is passed, I wish to enter my protest against so heavy an expenditure for immigration. In view of the census returns that have been brought down, it is very unfortunate that the Government should ask us this year to increase the expenditure for this purpose. It is well known, that during the past ten years the emigration from this country, especially from the province of Quebec, has been very large. According to the census returns, the population of the province of Quebec has not very largely increased during the last ten years; but I do not think those figures give an accurate idea of the population of the province of Quebec. I have taken the trouble to look into a report made by the Provincial Government, giving the number of deaths and the number of births during the last ten years; and, comparing those figures, I have arrived at the conclusion that, instead of having an increase of population in the province of Quebec, we have had a large decrease. In the rural districts of the province there has been, according to the census returns, a slight increase in the population; but, taking into account the excess of the births over the deaths, we must arrive at the conclusion that during the last ten years the population in the rural districts has decreased by 163,114. I say that in all the rural districts of the province of Quebec, without any exception whatever, there has been a large decrease in the population. I will give the figures relating to every county. I may say, however, that these figures do not give the excess of births over deaths in the Protestant population; they comprise only the returns made with reference to the Catholic population. But I take for granted—and I think my assertion cannot be disputed—that during those ten years the Protestant population of the province has not increased. I find that the population of the county of Argenteuil in 1881 was 14,947, and in 1891, 15,158, an apparent increase; but during the same period I find that the excess of births over deaths was 1,440; consequently, adding these 1,440 to the 14,947, the population in 1891 should have been 16,387. Consequently, there was an emigration from that county of 1,229. In the county of Bagot the population in 1881 was 21,199, and in 1891, 21,695; but taking the excess of births over deaths during the same period, numbering 3,300, the population in 1891 should have been 24,499; consequently, there was an emigration from that county of 2,804. In the county of Beauce the population in 1881 was 32,020, and in 1891, 37,222; but the excess of births over deaths was 9,680; consequently, there was an emigration from that county of 4,478. In the county of Beauharnois the population in 1881 was 16,065, and in 1891, 16,662; the excess of births over deaths during the ten years was 3,000; consequently, there was an emigration from that county of 2,343. In the county of Bellechasse there was in 1881 a population of 16,914, and in 1891, 18,368. This is, perhaps, one of the reasons why our friend the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) left the Liberal party last year. He was, perhaps, convinced at the time that there was an increase of population in his county. Taking the excess of births over deaths during that same period in that county, we find it to be 4,400, and there has been an emigration from that county of 2,946. The following is a list showing the figures in all the counties:

What is the result of the last decade? As I have said, the census returns do not give us the exact amount of population. Instead of having an increase in the province of Quebec, we have a large decrease, as I have shown by the figures I have just given. In those last ten years, the population has decreased by 163,114 in the rural districts, and has decreased in all the province by 109,909. Now, it has been said by members on the other side that the decrease in the rural districts was compensated by the increase in the cities. Well, that large city of Montreal, which should show so large an increase of population, has only increased during those last ten years 14,000. Take for example my county, Rouville, the population of which in 1881 was only 18,000, it shows a decrease since then of 5,500. Take three or four counties, or rural districts, whose population is about 40,000, they show a decrease corresponding to the increase of the city of Montreal, with its population of about 200,000. I contend, therefore, that we ought not, under the circumstances, to vote anything for immigration. I do not at all see the necessity of doing so, when our own population is leaving the country, and I hope the Government will not, at all events, increase the money expended for that immigration, as they propose to do by the Estimate.

Administration of Justice - to provide for the salaries of two Circuit Judges of the District of Montreal. $6,000

Mr. LAURIER. What is the meaning of this item?

Mr. OUMET. By an Act passed last session, it was provided that judges of the Circuit Court should sit as such exclusively, and the object of this is to provide their salary. I suppose the judges will be nominated by the 1st of July.

Mr. LAURIER. I am surprised at the change of view on the part of the Government. In 1889, if I recollect right, Mr. Mercier appointed two judges as district magistrates, giving them the same jurisdiction as these judges, that is, up to $100. This Act was disallowed; this Government would not allow it, though the province, under that Act, would have paid the salaries of the judges. The new Government of Quebec passes a law giving practically the same jurisdiction to two judges, under a different name. The only difference is that under Mr. Mercier's Act the judges would have been paid by the province, and under this Act they will be paid by the Dominion.

Mr. OUMET. It is rather late in the day to discuss the district magistrate courts. The district magistrate courts have been in the past under the jurisdiction of the Local Government. I am not discussing the wisdom of the then Minister of Justice in disallowing this Bill, because they were held to be an encroachment on the Circuit Court jurisdiction. The hon. gentleman knows that the Circuit Courts of Lower Canada are part of the judicial system that has existed since before Confederation. The only change is that until now the judges of the Superior Court had to hold Circuit Courts, and in order to provide for the speedy administration of justice in the city of Montreal, the Local Government has provided for the appointment of two judges who will receive about the same amount as one judge and will do twice the work. The judges of the Superior Court have been complaining for many years that they were obliged to hold that Circuit Court. Now, that this disadvantage is removed, no doubt there will be no further cause for complaint on this score, and I think the change will be to the benefit of the public of the city of Montreal.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will surely admit that he is altogether in error. The district magistrate courts had always been in existence in the province of Quebec since the year 1869, as the hon. gentleman knows. Their jurisdiction, from 1869 to 1889, was not $100, but simply $50. The only thing that Mr. Mercier did was, so far as the city of Montreal was concerned, to increase the jurisdiction of these judges to $100, giving them practically the same jurisdiction as the Circuit Court. This Act was disallowed, and I could never see what was the reason of its disallowance. Certainly if the Local Government had power in 1869 to create a court with a jurisdiction of $50, it had power to increase that jurisdiction to $100. Now, the new Government abolishes the District Magistrates Court, re-enacts the same statute under a different name, and puts upon the Government of the Dominion, by creating a Circuit Court, the appointment and payment of these judges, which, under the law of Mr. Mercier, would have been paid by the province. That is the only thing that is gained, so far as the Government is concerned, by the operation. Nothing can better show the great anomaly which exists in reference to the Superior Courts under the British North America Act than the method of appointing judges. The creation of the court belongs to the Legislatures of the provinces, but the appointment of the judges belongs to the Dominion. So according to this theory, which the Government seems to accept, if the Legislature of Quebec increase the number of judges by two or ten, the Dominion would have to pay their salary. I think the Government have shown by their action that they were influenced by other considerations than public policy when they disallowed the Act in 1889.

Mr. LANGELIER. I think I can give the motive. The motive is the desire to get rid of the present incumbents in the District Magistrates Court in Montreal. These two incumbents are Mr. Barry and Mr. Champagne. The Dominion Government, by disallowing the law which had been passed by the Local Legislature in 1889, thought that they would remove particularly Mr. Champagne, but also Mr. Barry. But some alterations were made in the commissions of these gentlemen and they remained in their places. After their jurisdiction was curtailed, their salaries were raised by the statutory increases. Now, the present Government of Quebec wants to get rid of these gentlemen. They are very popular with the bar and the public of Montreal, and instead of simply removing them, which would be a most unpopular thing, the Government of Quebec provide for the repeal of the law concerning District Magistrates for the city of Montreal, and have enacted a new law establishing Circuit Court judges for the same court. The result of that alteration will be to change the name of the judges. Another important result will be—and in securing it both the present Quebec Government and the Dominion Government have been at one—they will get rid of the two present incumbents.

Mr. OUIMET. If the hon. gentleman is ever appointed a judge I hope he will be a better judge of law and of fact than he is of motives.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the Government intend to appoint to these new positions the same gentlemen who now occupy the position of judges in the Magistrates Court?

Mr. OUIMET. The matter will be taken into consideration in due time by the Government.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the Government ought certainly to answer the question which I now put to them. We were told yesterday that the Government would only appoint judges of the same political persuasion as themselves, and consequently they make political appointments to the bench. I understand that the reason why the Government bears the expense of the appointment of two more judges in the city of Montreal is only that they may have an opportunity of appointing two more of their friends as judges. We remember that when Mr. Mercier appointed these two judges for the Magistrates Court in Montreal, all the Conservatives of the province of Quebec were angry, and were sorry to see two Liberals appointed judges in that province. They always supposed that the appointment of judges was exclusively in the hands of the Federal Government, although the law under which these two judges were appointed, was passed by the Conservatives in 1869. Consequently the only reason for which they objected to the creation of the Magistrates Court in 1887 was because Mr. Mercier appointed two of his friends to those positions. Now that their friends have returned to power in Quebec, they have passed a new law by which they are going to abolish that Magistrates Court and revive the Circuit Court, and the Federal Government is coming to the rescue of the Provincial Government in order to dismiss the two judges who have been appointed by Mr. Mercier, and appoint two of their own friends. The judges who now sit in the Magistrates Court give full satisfaction to the bar of Montreal, and I see no reason why these same gentlemen should not be reappointed, if the Federal Government is ready to take charge of their salaries. These gentlemen have given full satisfaction to the public and bar of Montreal, and if this Government does not appoint them to the new positions it will be only because they want to put two of their political friends in their places.

Mr. OUIMET. I am not aware that Mr. Champagne is still a member of the Liberal party, or that he has leanings towards the party of the hon. gentlemen; if he is, I would infer from what was said by hon. gentlemen opposite last night, that Mr. Champagne is now disqualified from being a member of a court of justice, because he ought now to have renounced all his partizan feelings after being on the bench for three or four years. I am surprised to hear that Mr. Champagne is still a warm friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. I know that he was once a strong Conservative, but for one reason and another, he turned in favour of Mr. Mercier, and rendered him very important service by giving his seat in the Legislature to a supporter of his (Mr. Mercier's) Government. But I thought that after three or four years of judicial life, he had given up all partizan feelings. The hon. gentleman is paying him a very bad compliment.

Mr. LAURIER. We can easily see through the reasoning of the hon. gentleman. He seemed to convey the idea that Mr. Champagne had been on the Liberal side. I understand that both Mr. Barry and Mr. Champagne have been very good judges, and have given satisfaction to the bench, the bar and the public; but I am much afraid the hon. gentleman will not put in practice the theory which he advocated last night, and that the gentlemen who ought to be appointed, will not be appointed.

Mr. LANGELIER. The hon. gentleman cannot dispute the fact that Mr. Champagne and Mr. Barry have given perfect satisfaction as judges of the Magistrates Court in Montreal. I never saw a complaint against them in the newspapers, and I never heard a word of complaint from any member of the Montreal bar. On the contrary, I have frequently seen the judgments of Mr. Champagne reported in the Law Reports of Quebec, a thing which has never been done for an incumbent of a Magistrates Court before. I think if the Government do not appoint these gentlemen as Circuit Court judges they should at least appoint men who have had some training.

Penitentiaries—Kingston Penitentiaries—For construction of a Female Prison and a Criminal Asylum—Materials $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what side of the penitentiary is it proposed to build this? This is a matter of some consequence, as there is some danger of these asylums for criminal lunatics becoming a nuisance if they are erected close to private dwellings. It would be well that the Government should understand what they are about. They have got a considerable area there on which they might erect this building without, I imagine, bringing themselves into collision with anybody. But, on the other hand, if the Government were going to build on the lower lake front, this would undoubtedly, I am advised, expose them to actions for damages of a rather serious kind, because any one acquainted with the nature of these lunatic asylums knows that the inmates are somewhat disorderly, and make themselves considerable nuisances to people living in the vicinity. I want to know where this building is to be placed.

Mr. OUIMET. I will give the information to-morrow.

Mr. OUIMET.

Mr. MULOCK. I communicated with the Solicitor-General in regard to certain charges that were communicated to me with respect to management and discipline in the Kingston Penitentiary. I do not propose to read those charges publicly, because they attack individuals, and I think in justice to the parties they should not be published, except at the time of their investigation. At the same time the charges are of that gravity that warrants me in asking the Solicitor-General as to what action is proposed to be taken in respect to them.

Mr. CURRAN. The hon. gentleman spoke to me some time ago, after he had made a statement in the House, and I listened attentively to what he said; but I failed to elicit from him anything more than this—

Mr. MULOCK. Permit me to say that the first interview I had was with the Minister of Public Works, who stated that he would send me a shorthand writer and I could dictate the charges to him. The shorthand writer waited on me, and I did as I had promised. The charges are therefore in the hands of the shorthand writer.

Mr. OUIMET. My secretary to-day read to me the notes dictated by the hon. gentleman. They have not yet been extended; but they will be, and I have no doubt when the Minister of Justice returns from Paris he will inquire into the whole matter. The charges conveyed to me by the hon. gentleman will be inquired into in the proper way.

Salary for Binder twine Foreman, $1,500

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The committee should receive some information as to what is being done in regard to the proposed manufacturing of binder twine—as to what the intentions of the Government are, and as to how soon they expect to manufacture binding twine.

Mr. OUIMET. The machinery will be purchased in a short time and put in place. In the main Estimates we took a vote with which to buy machinery, and we have been in negotiation with a firm in Galt. There is an item here of $25,000 with which to buy manila fibre. From inquiries made from brokers in that line of trade it is ascertained that we shall have to pay 7 cents per pound. Perhaps when the department communicates with the head offices in England, cheaper quotations may be obtained.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When is it the intention to engage the foreman?

Mr. OUIMET. As soon as the plant is bought.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In whose hands will be the duty of purchasing the fibre?

Mr. OUIMET. Some expert appointed by the department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will it be the foreman?

Mr. OUIMET. Some expert.

Mr. PATTERSON (Brant). Manila fibre is subject to great fluctuations in price, and there will, of course, be danger that it may be purchased at the wrong time. Who is to be the judge? Is there to be one supreme authority, or is there to be departmental action?

Mr. OUIMET. I think it will be departmental action, with the advice of experts and of the foreman of the factory itself.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The salary paid to the foreman will be sufficient to secure the services of a man to whom may be entrusted the power to buy this fibre. If we are going to have expert advice outside of the foreman it will be the means of increasing the cost of binder twine, and the expenses will become so large that the Government establishment will not be able to compete with ordinary manufacturing industries. The Government is taking this action with a view to employ prison labour, and at the same time keep the manufacturers of binding twine at Halifax from obtaining too high a price for their product.

Mr. OUIMET. This salary of $1,500 is the same salary as the foreman is paid in the Central Prison, Toronto.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). On whose judgment and advice has the present expenditure been made?

Mr. OUIMET. On the advice of the department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With respect to machinery, where is it to be bought, and what will be the character of the buildings in which it will be placed? Certainly the Minister of Justice is not himself in communication with manufacturers of machinery, and therefore we wish to know who is in charge of the work.

Mr. OUIMET. The Inspector of Penitentiaries is responsible for the work indicated by the hon. gentleman. I understand he has visited the Central Prison, Toronto, and obtained at that establishment all the information possible. Probably he has also consulted other people who are experts in that line of manufacture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many convicts are likely to be employed in this work?

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot tell.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, that is a matter of very considerable moment to know. Possibly the only justification for this would be that it will give employment to a large number of convicts, and if only a small number are employed, then the experiment is one of a very dubious character.

Mr. OUIMET. Three hundred tons of material are to be bought, and I suppose the foreman will see to the employment of as many convicts as are wanted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is no information at all. There are about 600 men in the Kingston penitentiary, and from one cause or another, it has been extremely difficult to employ them. The question for the Department of Justice is, how to provide employment for a large number of these convicts. If this binder twine business is going to give employment to a large number, there is a good deal to be said for it, but if it is only going to give employment to a small number, then I extremely doubt the propriety of passing this vote. My hon. friend the Solicitor-General is the locum tenens and he ought to have made himself familiar with the details, he ought to know all about penitentiaries.

Mr. CURRAN. I saved a great many people from going to the penitentiary in my time.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) appears to think that the principal question is, how many people are to be employed in this manufacture? It seems to me that the principal question is, how is this proposal going to be reconciled with the great National Policy? If the Government start a manufacture of binder twine in the penitentiary, it appears to me to be a violation of the great principle that certain persons should be allowed to tax everybody else for their own benefit.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Where will the power be obtained to drive the machinery?

Mr. OUIMET. One of the present buildings is being prepared to receive the machinery. I do not know with reference to the power.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) Have any tenders been asked for yet?

Mr. OUIMET. The department is in communication with a firm in Galt, and another firm in New Jersey for that plant.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) Have you not inquired of any of the English manufacturers?

Mr. OUIMET. I was told by the Prime Minister that negotiations had been made in England, as well as in the United States to procure the necessary machinery.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Is it not true that in the United States there is considerable difficulty in getting that class of machinery?

Mr. OUIMET. I think so.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I have been informed that it was under the control of the combination known as the National Cordage Company, and I apprehend there will be considerable difficulty in securing that class of machinery in the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish to know when the machinery will be in working order, and the binder twine turned out? If it is not ready until the 1st of July, as I saw stated in a Kingston paper, it will be of very little use to the farmers this season. Our wheat crop in Ontario is ready for the harvest about the 10th July, and if the machinery is not in operation before the 1st of July, there will be very little twine ready for the crop in the coming year.

Mr. OUMET. It seems to be impossible to get the machinery ready for the present harvest.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It is plain, from the statement of the Minister that the farmers will not be benefited by the production from this machinery this year. It is also plain that whatever action the Government may take, a very limited quantity of raw material will be necessary so far as the current year's harvest goes. The goods would have to be put in the hands of the wholesale dealers, to be of any use at all this year, before the machinery can be placed there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a new departure and one of considerable importance, and we ought to be advised better as to the details. I am advised by some of my hon. friends, who are better acquainted with the matter than I am, that as a matter of fact, a comparatively small number of hands are likely to be employed, and they tell me that female labour is largely used in other factories, which I do not suppose the Government will introduce here. Convict labour is not of very great value, but if we are to make this experiment at the cost of at least $50,000, we ought to be advised as to whether it is going to give any adequate results in the way of affording employment. If the item is allowed to pass now, I must ask the Minister to make certain that he will obtain this information.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, I will see that it is got before concurrence.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to know in what way it is proposed to purchase this machinery. Will that power be vested in the Inspector of Penitentiaries? I suppose the duty of the foreman will be to superintend the work of manufacture; but what may be called the business part of the arrangement, the purchase of machinery and material, will, I suppose, be entrusted to some individual, and if so, who will that individual be?

Mr. OUMET. We will give all these details to-morrow before going into concurrence.

Mr. CASEY. I may suggest to my hon. friend that these matters will be managed in the same way as the purchase of material for the Printing Bureau.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth).

House of Commons $6,150

Mr. AMYOT. I take the opportunity of this vote to call the attention of the Government and the hon. the Speaker to a matter which may not seem important, but which is one of justice; I refer to the payment of the messengers and the sessional clerks of the House. I am told that the messengers will be paid this year only $2.50 per day for the number of days of this session, and, as the session is very short, this will be a very inadequate payment. These messengers, I may say, I think, without fear of contradiction, are generally men of great activity and honesty. They perform their duty so well that nobody can complain. When the session opens they have to give up their ordinary occupations in order to come here, and when they return to their homes they have to wait for some time before they can find other employment. I suppose that when we give them employment it is not for them to lose money. When you take into consideration that they have to pay their travelling expenses to Ottawa and back to their homes, and their boarding expenses while here, and that they have always to be properly dressed while on duty, you may find that if they are only paid $2.50 per day for the days of the session, some of them may not have money enough to get home again this year. It was fully understood as far back as 1882, I judge by "Hansard," that the minimum salary would be $250 for a session not exceeding a hundred days, and that if a session exceeded that period, they would receive $2.50 a day for the extra days. Our pages, I understand, are paid $1.50 a day; but their work is not to be compared to that of the messengers, besides which messengers are supposed to be heads of families, and to have heavier expenses. I think, therefore, that we should in justice give the messengers a minimum salary of $250, and the sessional clerks $300 for a minimum session of a hundred days. A requisition has been signed by the majority of the members of this hon. House in favour of this, and I am convinced that if every member of this House had been asked to sign it, very few would have refused. One petition is in the hands of one of the hon. Ministers, and another is to be presented to the hon. the Speaker. I think the Parliament of Canada is in a position to pay its officers adequately, and for my part I humbly suggest the propriety of doing this act of justice. I do not think we should allow them to suffer because the session is shorter than the average.

Mr. SPEAKER. I fully concur in the statement made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) as to the activity and diligence of the sessional messengers connected with the House of Commons; but I cannot quite agree with him in his opinion as to the amount that they should be paid. I may explain to the Committee that during the first session I was Speaker, the session of 1891, I found that the salaries then paid to the sessional messengers was $250 per session. That was the basis upon which they had been paid for a number of years. It will be remembered that the session of 1891 was a very long one, extending, I think, over five months. When one hundred days had elapsed, the messengers made a representation to me, through a deputation they sent to interview me, that $250 was too small a sum for a session of the length which the session of 1891 promised to be, and they asked that, in addition, $2.50 per day should be paid to them after the hundred days had elapsed. I thought there was a good deal of justice in the proposition they made; but I thought also that if they were entitled to $2.50 a day for a long session, they would not be entitled to the full $250 for a short session; and I made this proposition to them: I said that I was prepared to continue the payment of $250 per session if they chose to accept that sum for every session, no matter what its length might be; or that, if they were not willing to continue on that basis, I would recommend to the Committee of Internal Economy to put them on the basis of $2.50 per day, which would be paid to them no matter whether the session should be 100 days, or 150 days, or 50 days. I understood from the representatives of those gentlemen that they were willing to accede to that proposition. I made that recommendation to the Committee on Internal Economy, and it was adopted; the resolution providing for the payment of $250 per session was rescinded, and they were put upon the same basis as the sessional clerks; and I will show the Committee the justice of adopting that course. In the session of 1887, the sessional clerks were paid $3 per day, the messengers received a considerable sum in excess of that paid to the sessional clerks, and it seemed to me that that was not a fair basis upon which to place these two classes of officers. It may be quite true, as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has stated, that these men have to wait during the recess to be at the call of the House whenever the House meets, and perhaps they may lose some other employment in the interval, or may have to give up employment in which they are engaged in order to come here and attend to their sessional duties; but I am quite sure every member will agree that there are twenty applications for every vacancy that occurs, with the full knowledge on the part of the applicants of the amount they are going to receive, and I am unable, from my point of view, to agree with the proposition which the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) submits to the Committee. It seems to me that for the kind of work that is to be done here by these sessional messengers, $2.50 per day is pretty fair pay. It is as much as the higher class of mechanics get in any part of the country.

Mr. GIBSON. As an employer of labour in this country, I say in all fairness that Mr.

Speaker loses sight of one fact. I quite agree in what he says with regard to paying men by the day, but he loses sight of this fact, that during the first month of previous sessions we were in the habit of simply meeting and closing, so that these men have had to put in more hours during the last two months, or as many, inside this building as they would have done in an ordinary session of three months. I know, and the Speaker knows, that when he employs men beyond a given length of time per day, they are entitled to some consideration, and I think, in all fairness to the men, seeing that this has been a business session and that they have been putting in about fifteen hours a day, some consideration should be given them on that account. The principle laid down by Mr. Speaker, however, is the correct one, that the number of days should be taken, but it seems to me there is no rule which may not at times be departed from; and I think in justice to the men, some consideration should be given to the fact that they have been steadily employed since the session started about a day and a half for every day, and, therefore, I think we should be a little lax in enforcing the rule which the Speaker has laid down.

Mr. CASEY. I am not sure that this is the proper place to discuss this matter, but as it has come up, I must say that I think the men, seeing they have worked harder than usual, and have had to incur expense coming here and returning, should receive pay as for an ordinary three months session.

Mr. LISTER. I would ask the Speaker whether the salaries of these men have been fixed either by custom or express agreement up to any particular period?

Mr. SPEAKER. The salaries were fixed by the Board of Internal Economy at $250 per session. In the session of 1891, they claimed that amount was not a sufficient remuneration, and we considered their claim a just one. Everybody will agree with me that it is not fair to pay those men $250 for five months instead of $2.50 per day, but it would not either be quite fair to the country to pay $250 for two months. I point out to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) the fallacy of the doctrine he has laid down with reference to the hours these men are employed. They are employed on the express understanding that they are to be here when required; and if the doctrine laid down by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), that they shall be paid an additional sum because of the length of the days they were employed this session, in all fairness it should apply to the permanent employees as well as the extra ones. We have one of our clerks here who comes to his office at ten in the morning and never leaves, no matter how late the House sits, until fifteen minutes or half an hour after it adjourns. I refer to Mr. Bowles. Perhaps, in many instances, he has to remain longer

Of course, I am not going to object if the House takes the ground that that is the basis on which the extra employees should be paid; but, in all fairness, if that principle is to be applied to sessional employees, it ought to be applied to the permanent officials as well.

Mr. GIBSON. There is a great deal of truth in what Mr. Speaker says, but I still think that I am right in my contention that as these men have done three months' work in the two, some consideration should be given them. The permanent clerks are not put to the same expense as they are residents of Ottawa, but these extra men come from distances, and when they are only employed two months in the year and have put in a day and a half every day, that should be taken into account. There is quite a difference between the permanent clerks and the extra men, because the former get their holidays during recess and are paid all the same, which makes up for the extra duties they perform while the House is in session. On the other hand the expenses of the extra men are almost just as great during a two months' session as during a three months' session, and in all fairness, I think that you, Mr. Speaker, should adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot).

Mr. TAYLOR. I may just say that I have placed in the hands of the leader of the House a petition signed by 149 or 150 members, asking that the sessional clerks may be paid $300 for the session and the messengers $250. These messengers and sessional clerks have to travel a long distance to come here and return home, and have to pay their fare both ways, so that paying these expenses and the cost of living in Ottawa, there will be very little remaining to them, if they are only to get $150 for the two months. In all fairness to these gentlemen, they should be given the prices mentioned in the petition, which I presented to the leader of the House, and which just now has been placed in the hands of Mr. Speaker. Another petition signed by the same members on both sides of the House was hurriedly got up, as they learned that the first petition was addressed to the wrong party and this is signed by some seventy or eighty members, none, as I understand it, having refused to sign it to whom it was presented. I agree with my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), that these gentlemen have put in from fifteen to eighteen hours a day since the session opened, and that to pay them the miserable sum of $2.50 a day is not a fair return for their services.

Mr. LARIVIERE. We must not lose sight of the fact that our sessions are supposed to last 100 days, in fact our indemnity is based upon that basis at the rate of $10 a day, and when the Estimates are prepared for the payment not only of sessional clerks and messengers, but also of pages and others, the amount is calculated also on the same basis of 100 days. Therefore these people in accepting their positions and performing their work, do so with the expectation that they will get paid for at least 100 days. When our sessions have lasted five or six months, as has been the case in former years, we have been sufficiently careful of ourselves to increase our indemnity by $500 and were very glad to accept the same as well earned. Of course we have done the same thing to the sessional employees of the House, but while we were adding six days to our own attendance to help ourselves with the public funds, I do not see why we should be so stingy about the payment of poor people who are faithful officers of this House. It may be said that we can have twenty or forty or one hundred applications to take the places of any of these who resigned, but I doubt if we could get as good and able men if we went on the cheap plan. I believe we must be more generous to these people who work sometimes not merely fourteen or fifteen, but sometimes eighteen hours a day, and I hope the House will express its opinion in this matter favourable to these people, the amanuenses and those who have sessional employment, even extending our favour to our young pages, and will do what is fair by them. Let us be generous to those who are living on small salaries when we are generous to ourselves, and I do not believe the country will blame us for such an act of generosity.

Mr. MASSON. I would call attention to one distinction between the permanent staff and the sessional employees which, it seems to me, the hon. the Speaker overlooked. He argued that if a change was made in reference to the increase of the pay of sessional clerks, the permanent staff were equally entitled to the same. But I submit that there is this distinction—the permanent staff are employed by the year; they know what their employment will be and they take chances on the length of the session. But the amount paid to the sessional staff was based upon a session of such length as would yield them $250, and when the time was longer, that amount was increased. Now, the hon. the Speaker has referred to the fact that some of the permanent staff have to be here all the time the House is in session and for some time afterwards. I would point out that the messengers and sessional writers have to be here not only when the House sits but for many hours afterwards. When the House adjourns early, as formerly it frequently did, members expect to find messengers at their call during the whole of the day. I think that fact should not be overlooked. These men are entitled to the full time they serve and if the number of hours per day is higher on the average I think that should be considered.

Mr. METCALFE. I think we have very efficient service here and as my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) or some other statesman has said, there can be no true economy without real efficiency. We have here a very efficient staff of messengers and I think it is false economy by any quirk or quibble or by taking advantage of any previous understanding to make a reduction in this way. I think we ought to settle this question so as to give these men what is fair and right. We have been served here night and day and we have been running at high pressure for some time, and it is only fair that these efficient officers should be remunerated for their services.

Mr. FRASER. I wish to add a word to what has already been said. I think perhaps we may make a mistake in not recognizing that when work is well done it ought to be well paid. We have been voting millions for the last few days. That is all right. I do not think we can get any men to come here from a distance and do the work of these officers and remunerate them fairly with less than $250. I think every member who has come here knows that $250 would not be very much toward allowing him to get away in a decent way. If we bring these men here we ought to pay them fair wages. There is much in what the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) says. As to the expectation of the length of the session and as there are not so many of these men as to cause a deficit, I would be in favour of giving them $250.

Mr. MULOCK. It is to be remembered also that you cannot put a stranger into this House at a moment's notice and get good service from him. These messengers, though they do unskilled work in a sense, have to be familiar with the run of the building, the offices and the departments and to have a good deal of local knowledge. Therefore it is in the public interest that the same men should be continued. If they are to be treated in the same way as ordinary day labourers the same efficient service cannot be expected. I quite agree with what has fallen from others that not less than $250 should be paid to these officers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. the Speaker will soften his heart on behalf of these messengers. They have certainly done very good service, and I do not think there are any men about the Parliament buildings who work harder or who earn their money more faithfully than these men have done. I do not wish to argue with the Speaker but I simply appeal to soften his heart towards these officers.

Mr. SPEAKER. The House knows what my opinion is with regard to this matter; I have never concealed it. But after the expression of opinion by hon. members of the House, I shall certainly bring this matter before the Committee of Internal Economy. I am not going to say what they will do. I make this promise upon one condition and that is that members of the House shall not poster me with applications for appointments to the position of messengers hereafter.

Contingent Expenses, etc., in connection with Voters' Lists.... $2,500

Mr. LAURIER. What is this?

Mr. FOSTER. This is for by-elections.

Mr. LAURIER. But there are no lists for by-elections.

Mr. FOSTER. The Auditor-General said it would be necessary to have this for odds and ends. He is the bible now.

World's Columbian Exposition--
Additional amount required... $70,000

Mr. LAURIER. How much is the appropriation for that exposition this year?

Mr. FOSTER. This will make the total appropriation about $190,000.

To enable the Dairy Commissioner to make purchases of cheese and butter at the several experimental stations, the proceeds of the sales of such purchases to be placed at the credit of the consolidated revenue fund..... $36,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is to enable Professor Robertson to start the experimental dairies which he runs for the first year, taking the milk from the farmer and making them advances upon the butter that is made and marketed. After the expenses are paid, the remainder goes to the farmers. This is simply for financing the matter. In order to make the advances, he must have some money out of which to make them. All this will come back into the Treasury during the course of the year. This is for the experimental stations, chiefly in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have great objections to purchasing butter or cheese except what is made at the experimental stations.

Mr. FOSTER. Not a pound is to be purchased outside.

Military defence of Esquimalt.
B.C..... $70,000

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). This item is for the purpose of carrying out an arrangement with the Imperial Government for the fortification of Esquimalt. The understanding is that the Canadian Government purchase the sites and furnish a fixed sum of money to the Imperial Government, and the fortifications and submarine works are to be constructed by the Imperial Government. It is thought that it is a better plan than to build the fortifications and construct the submarine works by the Canadian Government, and as they will then be subject to the supervision of the Royal Engineers, it might entail great additional expense if they should vary their plans from time to time. The Imperial Government furnish the most modern armaments, at a value of £42,000.

Militia..... $160,712 72

Mr. ROSS (Dundas). I take advantage of the presence of the Minister of Militia to call attention to a motion I had upon the Order Paper, but which we did not reach. I notice that when the militia items in the main Estimates were voted, there was a re-vote of $2,000 for certain monuments on the battle-fields of Canada. In the conversation that occurred, when that item was passed, I understood the Minister to say that the points likely to be chosen for monuments this year—and I was glad to see that the Government contemplated immediate action—were Lundy's Lane, Stony Creek, and possibly Chateauguay. I wish to put in a word for the battle-field of Chrysler's Farm. We all know that Queenston Heights, a scene of one of the battles of the war 1812, is largely provided with a fine monument, and rightly so. I see that private enterprise has taken hold of Lundy's Lane, and I daresay the Minister of Militia would be glad if private enterprise should also erect a monument at Chrysler's Farm. Now, we have two battle-fields in the western peninsula provided for, and I think a word ought to be said for Central Canada and for the province of Quebec. When we consider what the American plan of campaign was on that occasion, when we consider that the object they had in view was the capture of Montreal, expeditions being sent from Sackett's Harbour, 10,000 men under Wilkinson, and a large force under Hampton, lying at Chateauguay, with the design of advancing when the western force had proceeded far enough—when we consider the importance of that threatened attack, I think we ought to give due weight to the battles that destroyed that combination. Wilkinson's army proceeded safely after escaping some of the British arrangements to prevent its progress. They got down the St. Lawrence as far as Chrysler's Farm, and there they halted for the night. Colonel Morrison, who was in command, managed to draw them into a battle, and there is no doubt that that battle was one of the best evidences of the prowess of the British arms which has ever been given. I will quote from Allison with regard to the importance of the battle of Chrysler's Farm. He says :

The glorious defeat of an invasion so confidently announced and so strongly supported, diffused the most heartfelt joy in Lower Canada, and terminated the campaign there in the most triumphant manner.

Christie says this :

This, called the battle of Chrysler's Farm, is, in the estimation of military men, considered the most scientific military affair during the late war, from the professional skill displayed in the action, by the adverse commanders ; and when we consider the prodigious preparations of the American Government for that expedition, with the failure of which their hopes of conquest vanished, the battle of Chrysler's Farm may probably be classed as the most important, and the best fought that took place during the war.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron)

I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to these very strong adjectives used in connection with that battle. There is no doubt that the plan of campaign on the part of the Americans was well arranged ; and although their leaders were not capable of seizing the points of the situation, further evidence was given that, although the armies matched against each other at the battle of Chrysler's Farm were very unequal in point of numbers, as soon as the British soldier gets a chance in a fair field with the bayonet, seemingly nothing can stand before him. In this connection I might quote an expression of Lord Napier regarding the battle of Albuera, in the Peninsular war, when he said : " And then was seen with what strength and majesty the British soldier fights." It sometimes happens that the ludicrous enters into the most solemn things in life, and there is one little circumstance to which I wish to call the Minister's attention. We know that the anser played an important part in the history of Rome and we find that the busy bee had a share in the glories of Chrysler's Farm. I quote from Croil's valuable and interesting history of Dundas county. Referring to what occurred at that time, the writer says :

Previous to the battle of Chrysler's Farm, the American soldiers had imprudently been feasting to excess upon honey, which they found plentiful in Matilda and Williamsburg. The consequence was, that hundreds of them were so weakened and enervated by dysentery, that they reeled and staggered like drunken men, as they were marched up through the mud, ankle deep, to face the resolute charge of the British bayonet. Even in the field of battle they could not be restrained from repeating the imprudence, in passing Bouck's farm, where stood nearly one hundred bee-hives, in consequence, before the battle was over, their bloated corpses presented a disgusting aspect, as the honey with which they were gorged oozed from their mouths, their noses, and even from their ears.

So even the bees largely aided. All the forces in the country were united for one purpose, and I hope that will always be the case. I trust I have referred to a matter on which we are all agreed, and that the Minister of Militia will consider that this is deserving of serious consideration. There is a chimney standing there still, which was a central point of the battle, and when the Minister visits the scene he will not find it very difficult to locate the battle field.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What better monument do you want ?

Mr. ROSS (Dundas). If we had ivy growing there over the ruins, or even a tablet erected, that might prove sufficient. What is desired, however, is that the matter should receive attention. Speaking of the topography of the place, I notice that one of the Kingston newspapers in attempting to locate the battle field places it opposite Ogdensburg. I think Chrysler's Farm deserves to be better marked.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Minister of Militia should give a short description of the several battle fields, stating his preferences.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Nothing could withstand the hon. gentleman's eloquence. If the matter is not attended to by private enterprise, I will be very happy to bring the matter up next session.

Lachine Canal $50,000

Mr. TISDALE. I wish to call attention to a matter more important than even the Lachine Canal. The other day in the House, in speaking to a resolution in regard to a canal I foreshadowed. I had not the opportunity to quite finish my observations. I now wish to call the attention of the House to this matter, as I shall not have another opportunity of doing so. According to the resolution I submitted, and according to the report of the engineers I read on that occasion, the scheme foreshadowed was to build a canal from Two Creeks, on Lake Erie, in a direct course to the mouth of the River Thames in Lake St. Clair, a distance of fourteen miles. The canal, as shown by the scientific reports made on it, would pass through a comparatively level country without physical difficulties so far as regards canal construction; the soil is either sand or loam, and therefore, the canal could be cut with the most improved class of machinery used for that purpose. From the mouth of that canal the route to run through Canadian territory would pass through the fen lands on the eastern borders of Lake St. Clair, to the channel Bearte East and back of Walpole Island. When it struck that channel it would meet with a current so rapid that for all time to come it would keep the canal open by the action of the water. Further, it would only require a break lock at Lake St. Clair to regulate the flow of the water, and a lock at Lake Erie on account of the water rising and falling. The estimates of the engineers from which I quoted shows that the canal proper could be built at a cost of $800,000, and the dyke canal, continuing the scheme through Canadian territory, was estimated to cost $500,000. But this would be for a system of fourteen feet navigation, and my idea is that the canal should have a depth of sixteen or seventeen feet, so as to be large enough to accommodate the largest lake craft, the large steam-barges that carry 100,000 bushels of grain. That would increase the total cost to $2,000,000 or $2,500,000. My idea in having a larger canal would be so that it might permit the passage of the largest class of American barges that pass from the upper lakes to the lower lakes, although my principal motive in introducing the resolution was to submit a scheme of a national character, to secure for Canada a complete waterway from the great lakes to the ocean through our own territory.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the matter with the Detroit river?

Mr. TISDALE. I will come to that later. I will show in what respect the canal would give great advantages over the Detroit river. My idea was that we should have a canal large enough to accommodate the traffic of both countries, because although my object is to secure an independent route through our own territory, still I do not intend the proposal to be one of an unfriendly or offensive nature to our neighbours. If they will use our waterways and treat us as good neighbours, and as having a right to our own views and our own policy, I have every desire, as I have always said, to deal in a friendly spirit with them. If, on the other hand, they wish to be coercive, aggressive or prescriptive in regard to trade relations with us, then I wish our waterways and other lines of commerce to be such that we may be able to teach them that we can get along independently, that we will hunt up new avenues of trade and enlarge the avenues in our possession. I believe we have a country, a people, with sufficient capacity and resource to maintain our position. Moreover, in days to come, if they continue such a policy, we will be able to meet them in the markets of the world, compete with them, and I believe rival them. I need not enter into discussion as to the benefits derived from water communication. We are all agreed that for the moving of the vast grain products of the North-west, canals are indispensable. I will read one short quotation from Mr. McNabb, the engineer, which is as follows:—

It has been very often urged that in these days of rapid transit transportation by water is being abandoned by shippers and that the railways are absorbing all the traffic; such, however, on investigation is found to be very far from the true facts of the case, as we find the tonnage moving on our great lakes rapidly increasing and assuming enormous proportions; so much so that the most sanguine anticipations of one season are dwarfed by the actual increase reached in the next. During the year 1890 twenty-two million tons passed between Lakes Huron and Erie; and during the year 1891 the tonnage passing through Detroit river exceeded by ten million tons the tonnage of the two ports of Liverpool and London. The new type of lake vessel for the carrying trade aptly termed the "Whaleback" promises great results in this direction, as they are light draft and capacious, permitting of a loading whereby they can make a ton-mile with the consumption of but a fraction of an ounce of fuel. Canada possesses a national highway to the Atlantic of over two thousand miles in length, with but seventy-two (72) miles of detention by lockage, whereas the United States route via the Erie Canal presents three hundred and fifty-two miles of constant detention by lockage, or, as admitted by a writer on the other side of the line: "Canada retains the key of the carrying trade of the great lakes to the ocean, not only from her own, but from American shores. From Duluth as much as from Port Arthur, from Chicago as much as from Toronto, the way to the Atlantic for wheat and minerals is by the St. Lawrence. It will form a great bee line for the commerce of two hemispheres which by reason of its few obstructions and detentions, its freedom from the necessity of breaking bulk, and its minimum cost of transportation is destined to control a business which no imagination of man can picture or estimate."

Now, Sir, as to the advantages of this route. In the first place, from the report that I read the other day, it will be seen that it will be of immense advantage in the way of the drainage of the locality in which the work is to be constructed, and in the second place—and now I come to the Detroit River—it will avoid all the great obstructions and difficulties in the way of navigation on the route, from the head of the great lakes to the Atlantic Ocean; these are Grosse Point, the Limekiln Crossing, near Amherstburg, Bar Point and Colchester Reef. Mariners will tell you what an immense advantage it is to be able to avoid these difficulties. It will shorten the round trip to Buffalo or Port Colborne by at least 130 miles. Engineer Pinney estimated it at 137 miles; but I call it, in order to be safe, 130 miles, which would be fully one-fifth of the distance, saving from 12 to 20 hours in time according to the speed of the steam-barge. The traffic in 1857, passing between the two lakes, was only 2,500,000 tons; in 1890 it was 22,000,000 tons; and in 1892, 25,000,000 tons. If we divert two-fifths of that, which would be 10,000,000 tons, that, at an estimate of 1½ cents per ton toll, almost a nominal toll, would produce $150,000 a year. That sum would pay the interest, the cost of maintenance and operation of the canal and the sinking fund. All the advantages, the saving of time and the avoidance of the obstructions I have spoken of, the steam barges would get for nothing, because the fuel, oil and waste on this saving of time would pay all the tolls which would be necessary, supposing we only diverted two-fifths of the traffic. But I believe the advantages of the route would be so great that in a short time it would largely monopolize the traffic, so that in the hands of the Government the tolls could be reduced, I think, after a little while to 1 cent a ton. I have mentioned three advantages that would be gained by this route, and I come now to the greatest advantage of all—I refer to the advantage in a national sense. When we complete the St. Mary's canal, we will have, except this canal I am speaking of, a complete route from the great lakes to the Atlantic ocean through our own territory.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). So we have.

Mr. TISDALE. We have not now, because as I explained the other day, in passing through the St. Clair Flats canal, it is partly in American and partly in Canadian territory. True, it is regulated by treaty; but this will give us a canal altogether through our own territory. We have expended $100,000,000, and I think wisely, to procure a great transcontinental railroad from ocean to ocean through our own country, and we have the best road on the continent. When the St. Mary's canal is finished, and our canal system deepened to 14 feet to the ocean, as the Minister told us the other day it would be in three years, we will have expended from $75,000,000 to $80,000,000, and again I think wisely, on our great canal system. I think I showed to the House the other day by what an uncertain tenure we would hold the right to use the St. Clair Flats canal, if American political exigencies were supposed to require the contrary. I think, therefore, it will pay us to expend a couple of million dollars more to build this great channel of communication entirely through our own territory, especially as I have shown the expense of it would be easily recouped from those using it at a saving to them after such payment. We would then truly be the arbiters of the only great and speedy waterway from the head of the great lakes to the seaboard, without fear of interruption or international complications. I hope and trust that the hon. Minister—as I had not the opportunity of taking the voice of the House upon the resolution—will consider it, and will adopt it, and will give the exploration and survey I asked for, and have an estimate prepared to submit to the House. I hope more than that. I hope that the Government will take up the scheme and complete it. I have such an abiding faith in the limitless possibilities of Canada and the great North-west, that I believe that in the time to come, we will not only need fleets of vessels on this water-way, but we will need to build the Hudson Bay road and to double-track the Canadian Pacific Railway. I believe that the completion of our great waterway, in the manner I have mentioned in the resolution, will not only be a national blessing, and safeguard our commercial independence, but that it will further safeguard the institutions under which we live, and which we love so well; institutions that are unequalled in my opinion on the face of the globe, for the promotion of genuine equality and actual liberty. I hope, Mr. Minister, that you will see your way to do that, and I would like to ask you to express your opinion upon the matter if you feel at liberty to do so.

Mr. MCGREGOR. At this late hour of the night, and at this late stage of the session, I will not detain the House for many moments. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) spoke of this subject very early in the session, and we fully expected to have the matter dealt with before this. But, it being an important scheme, and we being very desirous that the Government should give us a survey at an early date, I think it is but fair that we should lay some statements before the Government to enable them to see the advantages of that great work. In the first place, there would be a saving of 130 miles in one round trip. We would avoid a great difficulty in the waters of our lakes and rivers, because the most intricate passage from Chicago to Buffalo is that portion from Lake St. Clair Flats to Bar Point to the neighbourhood of Colchester Reef. The American Government, seeing the necessity of increasing the depth of the water and the width of the channel, have expended something in the neighbourhood of $150,000,- 000 at what is called the Limekiln Crossing near Auherstburg, which is half way down on this route. We know also that the increased depth of water that a vessel can draw reduces the cost of transportation very largely. In 1859 the average cost of carrying corn from Chicago to Buffalo was 15¼ cents per bushel; in 1861 that was reduced to 10½ cents, and in 1871 to 7½ cents. When the channel was deepened so as to give 14 feet of water, and 16 feet in this Detroit district, the cost of transport was only 3.20 cents a bushel, and in 1890, when the Limekiln Crossing was so arranged that vessels could come down drawing 16 feet of water, they carried wheat for about 2 cents a bushel, and corn for 1.88 cents. In iron ore, in 1867, the cost from Escanaba to Erie was $4.25 per ton. In 1870 it was $2.50; but in 1890 it was only 55 cents. We now have a draft of water in the Sault Canal, and portions of the St. Mary's river, of from 14 to 14½ feet. With 20 feet of water we would reduce the present rate of freight nearly one-half, because the navigation of boats drawing 20 feet would cost but little more than that of boats drawing 14 feet. The tonnage on the lakes has increased greatly owing to the rapid development of the North-west country, and owing also to the rapid growth of the iron industry, and the waterway is the great highway for the commerce of both Canada and the United States. The growth of the tonnage on the lakes during the last few years is shown by the following figures:—

1886.....	4,219,397 tons.
1887.....	4,897,589 "
1888.....	5,130,159 "
1889.....	7,221,935 "
1890.....	8,454,435 "

These figures indicate the existence of a tremendous traffic on the great lakes. Through the Sault Ste. Marie canal, at the outlet of Lake Superior, there passed in 1890 10,557 vessels, having a net registered tonnage of 8,454,435 tons. The actual freight tonnage was 8,041,213 tons, but the registered tonnage is used for the purpose of comparison. Through the Suez canal there passed during the same year 3,389 vessels, having a net registered tonnage of 6,890,014 tons, so that nearly three times as many vessels and over 1,500,000 tons more of freight passed through the Sault canal, away in the centre of the continent, than passed through the Suez canal, which is an international work, and a highway for the commerce of the world. And it should be remembered, too, that the Sault canal was opened but 228 days for navigation, and the Suez canal was opened, of course, during the entire year. And this represents the business of one lake only. In an argument opposing the construction of a bridge across the river at Detroit, presented to Congress by a delegate to the deep waterways convention, Hon. George Ely, of Cleveland, he estimated that through the Detroit river, representing the commerce of all the lakes, except Lake Ontario, there passed, in 1889, more than 36,000,000 tons of freight. This is nearly 10,000,000 tons more than the combined entries and clearances of all the seaports of the United States, Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific, and 3,000,000 tons greater than the combined entries and clearances both coastwise and foreign, of Liverpool and London, the commercial centres of the world. To show the immense growth of the traffic on our great lakes, and its advantage to our people, I may say that the total expenditures to 1st January, 1891, on the St. Mary's river, including the new lock, were $4,170,046.28. It is thus seen that the saving effected by this waterway in two years paid 2.400 per cent on the total cost up to 1st January, 1891, and a large portion of these expenditures, such as those on the Hay lake channel, and the new lock in the canal, are for improvements not yet available for shipping. The total cost of all the river and harbour improvements on the lakes to date has been about $29,000,000. The saving in one year of $147,027,514.80, as shown above in the cost of transportation, is over five times the total expenditure for improvement on the lakes. Or again, the total expenditures by the United States for harbour and river improvement, all over, from 1st August, 1790, to 3rd March, 1887, was $157,962,762. It is thus seen that the saving effected by the lake marine in 1890 paid 93 per cent of all the river and harbour improvements to 3rd March, 1887. We are trying to show that this canal is necessary for the same reason, because it would do away with the most intricate portion of our great river and lake system; and our North-west is growing so rapidly that the shipments of wheat and other grain from that country will soon be so large that other facilities than those we have at present will be required for transporting those products to the eastern seaboard. There would be no difficulties about the construction of this canal. It would only require a dyke and one lock. A survey would be required from the St. Clair tunnel to Two Creeks, or that portion of Lake Erie where the canal would end, a distance of about 30 miles, and one engineer could do this work in a very short time. Therefore we think we are only asking the Government a small thing in asking them to take this matter into their consideration at any rate, to have a survey made during the recess; and when we meet again next session we may be in a better position than we are to-day to show that it would pay this country as well to construct the proposed canal as it will to construct the Sault Ste. Marie canal.

Mr. HAGGART. At this late hour of the session I will not go into ~~this~~ question as fully as I would like to do in reply to the speech of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who seems to have devoted a great deal of time and labour to the question upon which he spoke so well the other evening. I would like to have an opportunity of speaking more fully on the subject, to which I have lately given a great deal of attention in connection with a memorandum which it was necessary for me to prepare for Council; but I will confine my remarks to the practical result which the hon. gentleman wishes to accomplish, and to which he has referred in the latter portion of his speech this evening, that is, the proposition to have a channel constructed on the east side of Walpole island in our own waters. I hardly think there is any necessity for that. The present channel, which was built partly by ourselves and partly by the United States, crosses the international boundary in some places; it has completely obliterated the old channel; and, I think, it is as much open to our use as it is to the Americans—we have as much right to use it as they have. As to the Detroit river, most of the principal channels of navigation going to Lake Erie are found on the north side of the river, in our own waters; but whether they are on the north side or the south side of the river, we have under the treaty an equal right of user to those channels with the Americans. It is true, as the hon. gentleman says, that if a canal were made through the county of Essex, it would shorten the distance considerably; but he must remember that a canal would entail the digging of a ditch $14\frac{1}{4}$ miles long. The land rises gradually from Lake St. Clair up to the centre point of the peninsula, the height of land being 38 or 39 feet; and there is a difference between the level of the water of Lake St. Clair and that of the water of Lake Erie of $5\frac{1}{4}$ feet, which would necessitate the building of a lock. All this would entail a large expenditure in dredging the canal to the east of Walpole Island. It would also entail a considerable expenditure in dredging that channel down to the proposed mouth of the canal, where it proceeds for the purpose of passing into Lake Erie; and the total further expenditure would not be under \$14,500,000. There is no doubt, as the hon. gentleman has said, that the traffic on the waterways, far from decreasing, is increasing, and that the possibilities of trade in that section of the country are illimitable. The hon. gentleman has given us some very interesting figures of the increase in tonnage along the Detroit river, and that tonnage, I believe in time will increase to a wonderful extent, and at some future day the advisability of building the canal there may become a matter of practical consideration; but at present, with the limited amount of capital at our disposal in the Dominion, I do not think it is necessary to enter into such a large expenditure. We have in the possession of the Government pretty accurate surveys of that proposed canal. There was a very interesting paper read on the subject before the Canadian Institute in 1885, by Major Laughlin, who advocated it, and I have had communications from a Mr. Roberts up there. There is a great deal to be said in favour of the scheme, but the principal thing in its favour is the saving of sixty miles. I do not attach much importance to the necessity of having the waterway entirely in our own waters, because we have just as much right to the navigation of the Detroit river as the Americans themselves, and, in case of any difficulty, it would be as easy to stop navigation above Walpole Island as at Detroit river. From a military point of view, perhaps the Minister of Militia will be able to speak on that subject better than I can. However, I promise to have a survey made by our numerous staff on the canals, without entailing any extra expense upon the country. I will try and get an accurate account of what the proposed canal would cost.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not going to say a word as to the merits of the canal. It may be a very meritorious work. Upon that I do not feel that I am called to express an opinion; but I hardly think I would agree with the hon. gentleman, supposing such a canal were built, that Detroit would be side-tracked and converted into a deserted village. I may say, however, one thing, that for one who expresses such an absolute and unbounded confidence in the future of the country, it did seem to me his speech was strangely at variance with himself in this particular. He spoke as if the Detroit river and the waters that are the boundaries between the two countries, were the property of the United States. Under the convention of 1818, while the boundary is marked out as regards where it shall run in that waterway, it is declared that the waterway, throughout its entire extent and from shore to shore, shall be open to the navigation of both countries. Under that convention, the United States have a right to navigate the waters on our side of the boundary, and we have a right to navigate the waters on their side. Further than that, the doubt arose, under that convention, as to whether, in case an island intervened which was the entire property of the one party, the other party would have the right to navigate the waters lying between that island and the mainland. Now, the 7th article of the Treaty of 1841, known as the Ashburton Treaty, settles that question, and it is there expressly provided that the waters which lie between the island and the mainland, and the places where doubt has arisen, shall be open to the navigation of both countries. So that, when the United States built the St. Clair Flats Canal, they built it within a waterway which we have the right to navigate; and we have the absolute right to navigate that canal, without any restriction, in consequence of that provision of the Treaty of 1841. So, when they undertook to put restrictions, by way of retaliation, upon our use of their canals, they put no restriction upon the St. Clair Flats Canal, because by the Treaty of 1841 we have as much right to navigate the waters that flow through that canal as we have the waters that flow entirely within our own territory. I think, therefore, that when the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) spoke about the Detroit river and the waters separating the two countries as those to the navigation of which the United States had some claim more than we possessed, he minimized our rights, instead of undertaking to uphold them. If he desires to advocate this canal, well and good; but it is not necessary to undertake to show that the Americans have a greater right to these waters than we have, in order to promote that enterprise.

Ottawa Printing Bureau--Paid to the heirs of the late H. Lépine for the removal of a cottage from Nepean Point..... $250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why should we pay for the removal of a cottage from Nepean Point? Was it erected entirely at the pleasure of the department?

Mr. OUMET. Mr. Lépine was employed by the Department of Militia and was allowed to erect a building on Nepean Point. He has been there about thirty years. But when the Printing Bureau was built, it became necessary to remove this cottage, and an agreement was arrived at with the Minister of Militia by which the department was to pay the cost of removal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it for granted that the permission to erect a cottage there was a privilege given to Mr. Lépine.

Mr. OUMET. It formed part of his salary.

Public Works--British Columbia
--Victoria--New Post Office.. $100,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cost of this building likely to be?

Mr. OUMET. About $200,000. The site is to cost about $82,000, but we will receive for the present post office $70,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the size of the site?

Mr. OUMET. Perhaps I should not go quite so far as to say that the site is absolutely fixed. We had the choice of sites. One of them was the site upon which the Western Hotel was to have been built. It is a very large piece of ground, and we might not require the whole of it. Excavation has been made by the company which cost $30,000. That, of course, would represent a saving, as the work could be used. It is a very central site, lying between the old and the new parts of the city of Victoria. The size of the site is 200 feet by 170 feet, or about 29,500 feet in all.

Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia.. $7,834

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a matter of great importance, a matter of such great importance that I shall not even excuse myself for claiming the attention of the House for a few moments, while I refer to it. A petition was presented to the Minister of Public Works, an acknowledgment of which I received. The petition reads as follows:—

To the Hon. the Minister of Public Works.

We, your petitioners and loyal subjects humbly show:—

That the southern shore of the Bay of Fundy, from Cape Blomidin to Digby Gut, is without a harbour of refuge, and for the want of such harbour many lives and much valuable property are annually sacrificed: two schooners and nine lives being lost near Margaretsville within the past two years, besides, a few years since, the Government steamer "Princess Louise," all of which could easily have been saved had there been a suitable place of refuge between the above named points. Fully a score of lives have been lost during the last three years.

In view of the foregoing facts and the great danger to which the coasting trade is continually exposed, and the fact that the port of Margaretsville affords good natural facilities for the construction of a harbour,

We, your petitioners, would humbly pray that a stone pier be at once built at Margaretsville, thereby forming a low water harbour and affording to the immense coasting trade of the Bay of Fundy ample protection and shelter.

Trusting that the prayers of this petition may be granted, we, your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

This petition has been largely and influentially signed. It is not merely a local matter, though a great deal might be said in its favour from a local stand-point. It is a Maritime matter. This petition has been signed by merchants and owners of ships in the town of Windsor, Hants county, Truro and Five Islands, in Colchester county, Springhill, Parrsborough, in Cumberland county, also largely in St. John, Digby, Annapolis, Canning, in King's county, Wolfville, and all the places along the Bay of Fundy on both the north and south shore. Shipmasters and owners of ships generally have been looking towards the port of Margaretsville for a number of years as the place for the location of a harbour of refuge, and when the hon. Minister of Public Works, speaking on the 17th March, 1892, with reference to the public works of the Maritime provinces, made this remark:

Perhaps on some future occasion, I may bring forward a plan indicating my view, that public money should be expended on permanent works, which would be échelonnés on the coast so as to serve as harbours of refuge for the fishermen.

the people began a practical move in the direction indicated by the petition. In my opinion, they have acted very wisely. When hon. gentlemen take into consideration the fact that the whole coast of the Bay of Fundy, from Blomidon down to Digby Neck, is nothing but one rock-bound coast, and that the tempestuous and uncertain weather which often prevails there, not only owing to the winds, but also owing to the tide that prevails, it will be seen that it is almost certain destruction for a vessel to be caught in a heavy gale upon that rock-bound coast. I have taken some pains to look into this matter with reference to the disasters that have happened there since 1883, and they were somewhat astounding to me. I knew that a great many disasters had happened there; I knew that a great deal of property had been lost in that Bay of Fundy from the lack of a harbour of refuge for shipping to run to, and I knew that a great many lives had been lost, but there were more disasters than I anticipated. I have here a table showing the dates and description of the vessels that were lost:

Finally, there was the loss of the "Princess Louise," on December 3rd, 1883, with eight lives and $30,000. That was the greatest disaster of all, and one of those of which we have a perfect record, which shows conclusively that had there been a harbour at Margaretsville, where this vessel could have run, there is not the slightest doubt but that she would have been saved. There is a full report given in the blue-book, which I will read.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Don't.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). This is a matter of such extreme importance, where the lives of men are at issue, that I feel justified in taking up the time of the House in laying the facts before the House. I did not consider it of so much importance some years ago, but the more I look into it, the more I feel it is my duty to raise my voice and to draw the attention of the Minister and of this Parliament to this matter:

The new Government steamship "Princess Louise," 364 tons register, was totally wrecked on the 3rd of December last, near Point Prim, Digby county, in the Bay of Fundy, while being towed to Halifax by the Government steamship "Newfield," whence it was intended she should sail to Glasgow, where she was to receive her engines. The vessel was built at Maccan and had only recently been launched. She was taken in tow on the 2nd December, off Harvey Point, in the Cumberland basin, and proceeded down the bay, with the wind from the southward and eastward. The weather continued fine until noon, but between noon and 2 p.m. the barometer commenced falling, with a dark and threatening sky, and as that aspect of the weather continued, the course of the ship was shaped for Digby—

Here is where the danger arose. The press took the matter up at that time, and thoroughly reported it, and we learn that at noon they were right off Margaretsville, and they could easily have run into Margaretsville and waited until all the danger was over ; and the lives that were sacrificed on that "Princess Louise," in all human probability, would have been in this world to-day, and the property would have been saved to this country, if there had been a harbour of refuge at that locality :

The course of the ship was shaped for Digby, as it had been arranged between Captain Guilford of the "Newfield" and Captain D. M. Browne, who was in command of the "Princess Louise," that they would go into Digby should the weather become threatening.

Digby was then something like forty-two miles away.

At six p.m., the vessels were within one mile of Digby Gut, the light bearing S.S.W., the weather being misty, with drizzling rain and a light breeze from the south-east, but as the ships were under a weather shore, with a light breeze, Captain Guilford considered the position a safe one and stood off and on expecting the weather would clear up.

The weather was such that they could not make Digby. Digby is a place that cannot be made in all kinds of weather. It is a safe harbour in some respects, but there are times when even exceptionally fine harbours cannot be made.

Mr. WELSH. May I ask the hon. gentleman if the "Princess Louise" had anchors and chains on board ?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I will come to that presently.

At 10 p.m., the wind suddenly shifted back to the east, and rapidly backed into the north-east, with a blinding snow storm. The "Newfield's" head was then put off shore by Capt. Guilford, the engines going full speed. At midnight the wind backed to the north, blowing hard, with a heavy sea, rolling the "Newfield's" waist boats under water, and as the wind increased after midnight the vessel made but little headway. At 3.30 on the morning of the 3rd the steel hawser with which the "Princess Louise" was being towed parted, and that ill-fated vessel drifted on the rocks near Point Prim, becoming a total loss. There were ten persons on board, of whom two were saved. Amongst the lost was Capt. D. M. Browne, who was in charge of the vessel. The vessel was valued at $30,000. The "Newfield" found it impossible to render the "Princess Louise" any assistance after the hawser parted, as owing to the violence of wind and sea she had as much as she could do to save herself.

The persons saved gave a full report of the occurrence when they came on shore. Their report is set forth in the newspapers at the time, as follows :—

On reaching Digby light about 8 o'clock in the evening the night became very thick, and the "Newfield" towed them up and down the coast. Those on board the new steamer did not at first know why this course was adopted, but it was surmised that the "Newfield" was endeavouring to get the bearings of the light and then run in. As the night wore on the sea rose, and what might have been possible at 8 o'clock could not be attempted at midnight, and the only safety for the two vessels was to run for the open bay. This was attempted, and just at the critical time the cable parted, and then commenced the struggle for life on board the new vessel. Not a sail had been bent when she was launched, and she floated toward the shore completely at the mercy of the wind and waves. They tried to bend first a jib, but the wind was too strong to admit of this. They let go anchors, but both anchors and chain went over by the run, and while they were in the act of hoisting a main staysail she struck.

I could go on and give further reports with respect to that disaster, which show conclusively that a harbour at this point would be of great advantage, but these should be sufficient to convince the Minister of Public Works that he should at once send his engineers to that place with instructions to prepare and submit estimates for the construction of a deep-water stone pier at Margaretsville. There is no doubt whatever that most of these wrecks, if not all of them, would have been prevented had there been a harbour there. The prevailing wind in the Bay of Fundy is such that Margaretsville is accessible at almost all times. There may be other harbours that would benefit some portions of the bay, but there is no other harbour that would benefit the whole bay as would Margaretsville. That is shown by the practical men who have signed the petition, by the men in St. John who have lost their ships, and also, in some cases, their friends in the Bay of Fundy, because there was no harbour of refuge for their vessels. I have here a letter from parties in Parrsboro', who wrote to the collector of Customs at Margaretsville in regard to a ship that was lost, as follows :—

March, 1892.

Collector of Customs, Margaretsville, N. S.:

DEAR SIR.—The schooner "Glengariff" sailed from this port with a cargo of coal for Digby on Friday morning, the 18th inst., and it is generally supposed that the vessel went down with all hands. The crew was composed of Charles W. Woods, Peter Woods and Patrick Kelly, and if you can furnish any particulars as to the wreckage or bodies washing ashore or any information touching on the matter, you will confer a great favour on the afflicted parents. Please write either Mr. Charles Woods or myself.

Yours truly,

E. GILLESPIE.

Mr. Landers says, with respect to this wreck :

This schooner stood close in to the wharf, Friday afternoon, but they dare not come in, but stood off their death. Last year there was a large American schooner sunk with all on board. I think the members for Cumberland, Hants and Annapolis should see to this at once and establish a harbour of refuge here.

I could say much more with respect to this matter, but I leave it in the hands of the Minister of Public Works. Let the Minister and hon. members stretch their imaginations to a great extent, and still they would not exceed the facts as I could represent them. In regard to this matter, I know I will be supported by the hon. member for King's, by the hon. member for Cumberland, if he were in his seat, and by hon. members representing counties along the shore of the Bay of Fundy. I leave this matter in the hands of the Minister of Public Works, trusting that he will, without delay, set his officers to work to obtain a practical and scientific survey and other information with respect to the harbour proposed.

Mr. WELSH. I have always understood that the navigation of the Bay of Fundy is very dangerous, and the extracts read by the hon. gentleman fully bear out that opinion. In quoting the loss of the "Princess Louise," I must say that that loss was altogether owing to the incapacity of the men in charge. The vessel was launched, the builders undertaking to have the vessel towed down to a certain place, and I believe from all I have heard and know, and my information is no doubt correct, that the chain were not even bent in the anchor. The hon. gentleman has mentioned that the anchors ran out, there being nothing to stop them. I believe the loss of the "Princess Louise" was altogether owing to the incompetence of the parties themselves, and I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me in that opinion. This matter relates to the Bay of Fundy, whereas the item before the committee is respecting LaHave, on the opposite side of Nova Scotia. I know the Bay of Fundy pretty well, but I will not attempt to contradict the hon. gentleman's statement that a breakwater is required.

Mr. FLINT. I do not know what the Minister of Public Works is about to say, but I know what he ought to say, and I will endeavour to state it in a few words. He should announce to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) that this important question is under the consideration of the Government; and he ought further to add that, after the Government have repaired the breakwaters which they have allowed to fall into disrepair and become useless, then they will take into consideration the advisability of building new breakwaters and harbours of refuge wherever required on the coast of Nova Scotia. It would come with very ill grace from the Minister to promise more than that, when I can point to valuable public works in my county which, if repaired at a cost of $500 or $600 some years ago, would have proved most useful public works. But, to-day, owing to the inexcusable neglect of the Government, notwithstanding the strong representations that have been made to them from time to time by myself and others who are well acquainted with the locality, these public works are now complete ruins. I do not think they can be rebuilt now at as small a cost as if there had been no public works there at all. I do not see how the Government could give any encouragement to any applications for appropriations for harbours of refuge or for new breakwaters, until those that are out of repair and have been nearly destroyed by the tides, winds and ice of the last two or three winters, have been placed in a satisfactory condition. I make these remarks particularly for the ear of the Minister, and I do trust that this scandalous neglect of the wants of the people of the county that I represent will no longer continue to be a reproach upon the Government. Considering the enormous amount of money which is paid into the public revenue by the county of Yarmouth, and considering the amount of money that the people themselves have invested in public works along the shore, their claim should have a greater degree of consideration from the Government. I will not say that other motives than those of a broad and public character have prevented the placing in the Estimates of a reasonable appropriation for the works I refer to, but I have had it from the lips of supporters of the Administration, within the constituency, that one reason why a vote of money has not been taken for this object is of a political character. I will not go so far as to say that those reasons fill the mind of the Minister of Public Works or of his leading subordinates, but I must feel that representations of an opposite character than those I have made have been made to him, or else he would have repaired the breakwater at Sandford. I ask any hon. gentleman to consider the position of a prosperous and thriving community, dependent almost entirely for a continuance of its prosperity upon a public breakwater where vessels can be moored in safety, who see this public work dropping to pieces before their eyes. When they reflect on the very heavy charges they pay into the public revenue and for which they receive no return, they have a right to complain against the Government, to insist upon appropriations for these works, and to look with the utmost disapproval upon the expenditure of public money in other quarters. I think a great deal can be said, for the work referred to by the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills), but if I recollect aright, the circumstances of the loss of the "Princess Louise," there was at the time a strong opinion in the line of that expressed by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Welsh), that there was gross and inexcusable carelessness on the part of those who had charge of bringing that ship from the port at which she was launched, to the port at which she was to be fitted out. Perhaps a harbour of refuge at Margaretsville might have saved that vessel. I think that no claim should be put forward with any prospect of success until the Government have repaired the breakwaters which have fallen into decay in Yarmouth county, and which demand immediate attention on the part of the Government.

Mr. BORDEN. As the member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) has referred to me in the somewhat lengthened speech he has made, I will simply say that I am in sympathy with him in reference to that work. It is generally conceded in that part of the province of Nova Scotia that it is desirable that a harbour of refuge should be constructed along the south coast of the Bay of Fundy. In fact it is not a new matter. Some twenty years ago elaborate surveys were made of the various harbours along the southern coast of Nova Scotia with the object of determining where this harbour should be located. That is a matter for engineers to settle. I know that when these surveys were made, several other points were examined not very far distant from Margaretsville, such as Harbourville, Morden and Ball's Harbour, but I think myself, speaking of course without any special knowledge of the subject, that it is probable that Margaretsville would be the most suitable place. It is perhaps nearer the centre of the coast than others, and would likely afford refuge to more vessels in distress than perhaps any other point. I do not take the optimistic view of my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) that every one of the disasters which has occurred in that bay would have been prevented had there been a harbour of refuge, but still, I agree with him that it would have prevented very many of the disasters, and it is a work which, in the interest of the public, should be carefully considered by the Minister.

Harbours and Rivers, P.E.I. . . . $32,400

Mr. PERRY. I am very much surprised that the Minister of Public Works has not asked for a small amount of $500 to repair the breakwater at the Brae.

Mr. OUMET. I think I told my hon. friend that the necessary repairs would be made there out of the general vote.

Mr. YEO. I would like to remind the hon. Minister that this is a new work, and the money is required for repairs. It is a work begun by the inhabitants of this place and will cost about $600. The Government last year gave a contract to extend the work, but it requires a further extension. It is a matter of very great importance to the people of that locality, as may be inferred from the fact that they have spent a large amount of their own money in beginning the work. I understood the Minister to say that this work would be proceeded with, and I was very much surprised to see that there was no provision for it in the Estimates. Unfortunately the western part of that county has been completely overlooked. We hoped to have obtained a grant for work at West Point, and we certainly had every reason to expect from the assurances of the hon. Minister that this work at the Brae would be attended to. I again impress on the hon. gentleman the necessity of giving a further contract. The amount of money required is small, and the work is absolutely necessary. I would also draw the attention of the Minister to Malpeque Harbour, because if some attention is not paid to it during the coming season, it will be completely destroyed. In my opinion, a small outlay now would save that harbour, which is the most valuable that we have on the north side of Prince Edward Island. I have spoken of it before in this House, and I would like to draw the hon. Minister's attention to the necessity of its being attended to as early as possible after the opening of navigation. I trust that the Minister will carry out his promise and give us an expenditure at this point.

Mr. GILLIES. I intended, when we were on the items appertaining to the province to which I belong, to bring to the notice of the Minister of Public Works a work of which I think he has some knowledge, that is, the Arichat breakwater. About fifteen years ago that very important public work was constructed at a very considerable outlay. Some years ago it was found that the work had fallen into decay; an estimate was made of the cost of repairing it, and last year a sum of money was expended, but the amount appropriated was insufficient to complete the work. I would like to know now from the Minister if the amount asked for or recommended by the engineer in the province has been appropriated for the work?

Mr. OUMET. The breakwater of Arichat has been repaired for the last two years, and I understand that it was in a pretty good state of repair. The fact of the matter is that if I were to do all the works that have been asked for, I would require for the purpose about $2,500,000 of public money.

Mr. GILLIES. The answer of the Minister is not at all satisfactory. The work is an important one, and though we may perhaps be asking too much, the simple question before the department is this: Are we entitled to have these works repaired or should they be allowed to fall into disrepair and decay, as they have been doing?

Mr. OUMET. They will be kept in repair.

Harbours and Rivers Quebec . . . $32,100

Mr. MIGNAULT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, before leaving the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I would draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that, last week, he gave me to understand that the report of the engineer who has made the survey of Lavallière Bay would be communicated to me. The hon. Minister did give me communication of said report, and after examination, I found it to be incorrect in several points. For instance, the engineer reaches the conclusion that the waters which flood the commune of Yamaska are those of Lake St. Peter, and that the losses must be attributed to them. I agree that up to the 25th June or so, the Lavallière Bay is flooded by Lake St. Peter; then the water subsides and the greatest part of the bay becomes fit for pasture and raising hay. After that date, this portion of the bay is never flooded, except when heavy showers swell and overflow the waters of the St. Lawrence which flow back to the lower end of the bay. It is worth while noticing that a few acres above the dam there is a small channel through which, prior to the construction of the dam, the waters of the lands drained into the River Yamaska. Since the dam was built, the waters of the River Yamaska drain through the channel into the Lavallière Bay, and as a consequence heavy losses have been inflicted on the proprietors of the commune by the erection of this dam; first, because it prevents the farmers sending their cattle to graze in as large numbers as previously; secondly, because it prevents them from making as much hay as they used to. In his report, Mr. Berlinguet further states that no indemnity has been granted to any of the farmers for losses suffered on account of the flooding of their lands. Now, the engineer here again is altogether mistaken, as I will show, Mr. Chairman, by the report of the Auditor-General of Canada. I now hold in my hand the Auditor's Report for the year 1887, and I see the Government have paid the following items for losses sustained: To Mr. Carlin, $60; to Mr. St. Germain, $193, and to Mr. Tonancourt, $180. Here again the report of the engineer is inaccurate. As a matter of fact, Sir, I consider the engineer does not seem to have been very careful in his survey, as evidenced by this statement of his that the flooding is owing to the waters of Lake St. Peter which overflowed the commune. I am positive he is mistaken. To the waters of the River Yamaska, which flowed through this small channel, the floodings may be ascribed as to their cause as evinced by the fact that prior to the erection of the small dam the lands were almost always flooded, but since a dam has been erected at the entrance of the channel there is no longer any flooding or losses caused. The president of the trustees of the commune petitions the Government asking that the proprietors of the commune be compensated for the damages inflicted on them on account of their having been prevented by these floodings from making hay in as great abundance as usual, and further, for the loss inflicted on them by the failure of pasture, that is to say, for their being prevented from taking to pasture as many cattle as before. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would beg of the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) to give new instructions with a view to have another investigation made into the extent of the damages inflicted on the owners of the commune of Yamaska. The other day the hon. the Minister of Public Works was telling me that he had promised no investigation. The hon. Minister is quite mistaken. I was in my seat when he made this promise, and further, I have ascertained, through the "Hansard," that in reply to a question asked by the hon. leader of the Opposition, he had declared that he would give orders to have an investigation made. The reply was given in French, I recollect quite right. I would secure from the hon. Minister a new promise that a full investigation shall be made this time to give satisfaction to the parties concerned.

Mr. MIGNAULT.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) In reply to the hon. member, I will tell him that the engineer in chief will proceed to Yamaska and verify the facts on the spot.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) He will hear also the parties.

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The hon. member for Yamaska (Mr. Mignault) will be notified when the engineer goes to make an investigation.

Burlington Channel—New ferry scow..... $1,500

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this item. At the same time I want to point out to the Minister that it is not what the hon. member for Hamilton, the hon. member for Halton and myself have been asking for. We feel, in view of the importance of that section of the country and the very large amount of traffic that takes place at this point, that we are entitled to a swing bridge. I believe that last year it was estimated that $15,000 or $16,000 would construct a bridge there. I would like the Minister to take this matter into consideration, and possibly he can yet see his way clear to comply with the request we have made.

Mr. HENDERSON. Like the hon. member for South Wentworth, I do not oppose the vote. I concur with him in what he says. I feel that to build another ferry scow would be to perpetuate a system that should have been done away with many years ago. What was quite sufficient for traffic across this channel fifteen years ago is altogether insufficient now, and I trust that the hon. Minister of Public Works will not ask the people of that section of the country to put up any longer with the inconvenience that they have submitted to so long, but that in another year he will arrange to build a swing bridge across that channel.

Mr. McKAY. I can endorse what the hon. gentlemen who have spoken say as to the necessity of a bridge at that point. The traffic is increasing year by year; in the summer months it is immense. Hundreds of teams cross on that ferry every day, and during the summer season the place is a great pleasure resort, and the old scow which has been in use there all these years is the first primitive method of crossing that channel, and is totally inadequate to the business now done at that point. I hope that the Minister will consider the representations which have been made to him, and which will be made later on, as to the necessity of constructing a bridge at that point. It is very much needed.

Hydrographic Surveys..... $6,000

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the Government have committed a very serious error in taking the Hydrographic survey of Georgian Bay out of the hands of Commander Boulton, by whom it was so efficiently, thoroughly and well conducted. But as that has been decided upon and the matter is at an end, there is no use in my saying anything more about it. I do not, however, like to let this opportunity pass, as Commander Boulton is on the point of leaving this country, without expressing, as a representative of a constituency very much interested in the work, what I think is due to that gentleman by all interested in the navigation of Georgian Bay. He has carried on a work of vast importance to the shipping interests of the upper lakes; he has done it in a manner not only economical, but satisfactory in every way, and I think those interested in the survey cannot do less than take this opportunity of expressing their high appreciation of the services which Commander Boulton has rendered the navigation of the upper lakes.

Towards the expenses of determining the boundary line between Canada and the United States of America; between the southernmost point of the Prince of Wales Island and the 141st meridian of west longitude $60,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is that business likely to cost us altogether?

Mr. DALY. $92,000 altogether now. That will be for the work of one year, commencing 1st April next; but I presume it will average about $60,000 for the next two years after the first outfit. In the $32,000 is included the purchase of a number of instruments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand you expect about $200,000 will put through that boundary line.

Mr. DALY. About $250,000 will be sufficient.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The United States contribute a like amount?

Mr. DALY. Their part will cost more than ours.

Weights and Measures. $289 36

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I wish to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that they promised to inspect the milk cans of those parties who petitioned here last year. The petitioners asked to have a uniform can made of 8-gallon size, and that the Government should inspect them. To prove that the Government have made these promises, I wish to read a few letters addressed to the Milk Suppliers' Association by members of the Government and their supporters. I have here one addressed to Mr. Duncan, one of the delegates that were here last year:

I must apologize for not having sooner answered your letter of the 16th instant. I have now submitted the matter to our new Controller of Inland Revenue, Hon. John S. Wood, and I am sure that he will remedy the evil. I know what was done before, and the understanding with which you left Ottawa, and am surprised to hear that the law is not being effectually enforced by the Inspector of Weights and Measures. In a few days I will write you full particulars, and hope that the information I may then be able to convey to you will be satisfactory.

This letter was written from Ottawa on the 25th February, 1893, by N. Clark Wallace. I have another letter that was written by the Controller of Inland Revenue to Mr. Maclean, the member for East York, who was interested on behalf of the farmers in that vicinity. It is dated Ottawa, March 7, 1893:

Mr. Miall has recalled the circular instructing officers as to inspecting milk cans, and is issuing one of a more peremptory character. We shall probably have no more trouble from your friends' side of the question, but expect a siege from the other.

It seems that they expected trouble from the other side, and as proof that there was some trouble, the Government have not taken any action in the matter yet, and do not intend to this session. I have another letter addressed to the Controller of Customs by the Controller of Inland Revenue, dated Ottawa, March 10, 1893:

I have your favour of the 7th inst. inclosing a letter from Mr. McPherson, and beg to say in reply that a short time ago I gave positive orders that the inspector at Toronto was to carry out instructions given him on the lines of the wishes of the deputation which waited upon Mr. Costigan, then Minister of Inland Revenue, on the occasion to which you allude in your letter. Mr. McPherson's letter hints that the inspector has no power to enforce the verification. I shall go into this matter at once.

Now, this association of farmers who are supplying milk in Toronto, have also taken the advice of an eminent lawyer, Mr. Montgomery, and here is his reply:

We have seen Mr. Piper, of the Department of Weights and Measures here, and had a conversation with him in regard to the registration of milk cans. He agrees with us in what we stated to you this morning, namely, that there was nothing in the Act or in the Regulations compelling the registration of milk cans. We have written Mr. Piper a letter in this matter, a copy of which we inclose you, which he states he will forward to Ottawa for the purpose of getting more definite instructions from the Joint Commissioners there. It appears to us that it will be necessary to have an Act passed compelling the registration of these cans. Possibly they might be compelled to register them should the Government see fit to pass an Order in Council requiring them to do so.

Now, they sent down another delegation recently, and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), and the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Carpenter) and myself waited on the Government, who promised that they would introduce a Bill giving the inspector at Toronto and elsewhere in Canada power to compel the inspection of these cans. We waited on the Controller of Inland Revenue and he drafted a Bill. That Bill was submitted to the Premier of this Government, and we understood that it would be passed as speedily as possible. One day last week I called upon the Controller of Inland Revenue, and he told me that they had abandoned it, and asked me to call upon the Premier. I did so, and the Premier also told me they had abandoned the idea of passing the Bill this session. Now, unless the Government have power by Order in Council to make some regulations that will empower the inspector at Toronto to compel an inspection, the milk suppliers will remain in the same position for another year. This promise was made last year, and twelve months have gone by, and it will be another year before any legislation can be had on the lines that are required. Now, I wish to give you an estimate of the losses sustained by the farmers in the vicinity of Toronto. In East and West York, in the immediate vicinity of Toronto, in the years 1890-91, with three branches to hear from, they estimate their loss in milk, over and above what they are supposed to supply in their cans, at $4,000. The branches in Peel and Halton estimate, from what is reported, that they have lost $1,500. In the county of Ontario they estimate their loss at $1,500. Here we have a total loss in those districts of $7,000 during those two years. The above figures do not represent one-third of the loss that the farmers in that vicinity have suffered for the last four years, which they estimate at $21,000. Many of the milk dealers in Toronto who are opposed to this regulation being in force, are reliable men and willing to do the square thing; but they have to compete with other men who are not willing to do what is right, men who want to get nine gallons into an eight-gallon can, and when they can do that, they have an advantage over the honest dealers. For the information of the patrons of that trade, I will give the rating sheet of milk vendors in Toronto, made by J. R. E. Winters: 18 per cent are good pay; 50 per cent are only fair pay; 13 per cent are very risky and 19 per cent are no good at all. That is the class of men that these dealers have to deal with, and it is the class of men that are endeavouring now to control this traffic in milk in Toronto. I will read a report of a meeting of the Milk Dealers' Association opposed to the proposed Act of Parliament:

The Milk Dealers' Association at Shaftesbury Hall last night protested against the action of the Farmers' Supply Association in sending a deputation to Ottawa requesting that all milk cans be verified and stamped. This, it was considered, impugned the honesty of the milk dealers, and it was suggested that the farmers could avoid any difficulty by selling by the gallon and supplying their own cans just as they did receptacles for other produce. A further objection to the arrangement proposed by the farmers laid in the fact that on the trains cans would become bruised and indented, and fail to hold the exact quantity. It was complained that the farmers would not meet the dealers for a business discussion of the matter.

A resolution embodying these and expressing the hope that the Ottawa Government would not unduly oppress any one class of bread-winners was prepared and Secretary Benson instructed to forward the same to the honourable members for the city of Toronto.

Now, the hon. members for the city of Toronto have taken a stand on this question, and have endeavoured to influence the Government privately. I think they are encouraging people who are not willing to deal with the public generally. I have also a reply from one of the farmers who are interested in supplying milk. He writes to the editor of the "Globe," in which also the other appeared:

SIR,—To put the position of the Farmers' Supply Association, as it is called, in the report of the milk dealers' grievance in the "Globe" of Thursday, in its true light, an explanation of the so-called grievance is necessary.

The Toronto Milk Producers' Association, composed of farmers supplying the retail dealers of Toronto with milk, asked the Government to establish a standard milk can of a capacity of eight gallons, and also to verify those now in use, that the farmer might know without any dispute just how much milk each can he filled would hold, and could claim pay for the quantity held. Under the present conditions, very few farmers get pay for the full quantity held by the cans they fill, and, although they may sell by the gallon, there is no satisfactory way of telling how much a certain can contains, and besides, the dealers as a rule try and buy by the can, giving the farmers to understand that his cans hold about eight gallons, while in many cases they hold from eight and a half to nine gallons. Many farmers to-day are losing from a quart to four quarts on each can of milk sent to the city, and when one man sends five or six cans a day the loss is considerable.

The railways, in charging freight on milk, recognize a can as containing eight gallons, and say they will charge extra for any holding above that quantity, and nearly all the cans used some years ago by the dealers held about eight gallons, until an eight-gallon can became recognized generally as a can of milk, but some of the dealers thought they should have a quart over the quantity paid for to make up for loss in retailing, and many of them got their cans made to hold eight gallons and a quart, and from that time the cans have been getting larger, until now most of the new cans sent out to be filled by the farmer hold nine gallons, while the dealer, if he can, still makes his bargain on the basis of an eight-gallon can.

This is what has given rise to the agitation to have all cans used in shipping milk made to a standard, and verified by the inspector of weights and measures.

As a sample of the honesty that rules some of the milk-dealers in the city, in the year 1891 the losses sustained by farmers through milk-dealers failing to pay amounted to over $5,000.

PRODUCER.

Islington, March 17.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have also a copy of a contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway for the carriage of this milk. I will read the contract they entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway:

CONTRACT.—It is understood and agreed:

1st. That each can will be addressed, stamped or marked with the names of the station shipped from and the owner and station destined to.

2nd. That delivery will be made by owner or shipper on the baggage cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway passenger trains that carry milk.

3rd. That delivery will be taken by owner or consignee immediately on arrival of trains at station to which milk is destined from the baggage cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway passenger trains.

4th. That the owner or shipper will attach one of these tickets to each can of milk of above description and if can contains more than eight gallons of milk, two tickets will be delivered with each can.

Therefore you can see, Mr. Chairman, that if a man sends a can holding more than eight gallons, he is liable to pay freight on two cans. It seems to me that the farmers are never going to get justice in this matter unless they can effect a combine, and they are not in a position to do that, and moreover, they are too honest to do it. The farmers in the neighbourhood of the city of Toronto are anxious to have a standard can. I do not see there can be any objection to that, because dealing on the basis of a standard can, the milkmen would know what they are buying. If the cans are of uniform size, they will buy at the price the milk is worth per gallon, whereas if it is a question of the can containing nine and a half or nine and three-quarter gallons, it involves book-keeping at either end, and probably disputes. If the uniform sized can is used, all the dealer will have to do will be to mark down the number of cans. If a can is not filled, it will be churned by the motion of the train, and, of course, will be sent back by the dealer. It is, therefore, to the interests of the farmer to fill every can full so that it may carry safely to the city of Toronto.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). This milk-can question ought to be settled, and I wish to say a few words in regard to it. I owe here a divided duty. I have constituents who produce the milk and constituents who sell it, only 28 per cent of whom, according to the last speaker, are honest.

Mr. FOSTER. And constituents who drink it.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). All drink it, and nothing else. This grievance has been brought up here year after year, but so far the grievance of the farmer has not been remedied, although more progress has been made this session than in any session heretofore. Before we leave the subject I want some pledge from the Government that they will consider the question and will try to give the farmers what they want. This is an immense industry, and if the Government are not prepared to deal with it they need not show their faces in any of the constituencies of York. I would like the Controller of Inland Revenue to say that this question will have attention.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman explain what the trouble is?

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). The trouble is that the Government are not equal to giving the farmers what they want—a standard milk can.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. Will the hon. gentleman state what the complaint is?

Mr. MACLEAN (East York.) The complaint is that the Government undertake to inspect these cans; they have a law on the subject, but this law cannot be enforced because of some defect in it. Lawyers have given that opinion. There is, therefore, no inspection or regulation of the cans now. Some men say you cannot have a standard milk can. But we have a standard barrel of flour, 196 pounds. The same principle can be applied in this case, and I would like to know if the Government intend to deal with the question?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. As I understand it, the practice has crept in of milk dealers insisting on paying for less milk than they actually get. I understand that you wish to have a standard can to meet that difficulty.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). The farmers want a standard can of eight gallons.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Why of eight gallons?

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). As a matter of convenience, the same reason that fixes the standard of a barrel of flour at 196 pounds.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am surprised at the assertion of the hon. gentleman that there has been less progress made in this matter during the present session than in any other session during which the subject has been considered. This is the first time it has come up in this House, and the hon. gentleman is not doing me justice when he says I have not given it attention. We have, besides Toronto, other cities, Halifax, Hamilton, Montreal and St. John among the number. The farmers in no other section of the country have ever written or communicated to the Government finding fault with the present system.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). Because none of them have the milk trade that Toronto possesses.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Then the hon. gentleman practically asks for special legislation. It is difficult to make the law applicable to the whole country, because in many cases the milk men deliver the milk themselves, and no retail dealers are employed. In Ottawa that is the practice, and I also believe in Hamilton. However that may be, a practice has crept in under which the retail dealer insists on getting nine gallons of milk for the price of eight gallons. I should like the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston) to explain how it is that the farmers are compelled to supply nine gallons of milk for the price of eight. I intend to continue to give this matter attention with a view to arriving at a satisfactory and just conclusion to all parties.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. When the milk trade was established in Toronto, fifteen years ago, it was on a very small scale. The trade was done with eight-gallon cans. Since that time the men who receive the milk furnish the cans. This is the reason. Suppose a dealer receives twenty cans from a company, they will probably come from six or eight different farmers. So he sends his own cans to the farmer, for if the farmers furnished the cans they would probably be lost. When these cans are supplied by the milk dealers, however, they are returned and there is no trouble with the railway transportation because they bear the name of the dealer. The hon. Controller wishes to know the reason why the people desire to establish an eight-gallon can. Since the trade has been established it has been done principally in eight-gallon cans, or weighing about 100 pounds, for which the railway charges a regular rate within fifty miles of Toronto, and this can weighs about as much as one man can handle. The dealers commenced to increase the quantity by having new cans made somewhat larger, and even bands put round the cans so that they would hold three quarts or a gallon more. That is what the people complain of. I am satisfied the Controller is anxious to meet the wishes of the people, but I have not heard there is any objection raised by any other city of the Dominion to the adoption of the principle of the eight-gallon cans. I do not see why a standard eight-gallon can cannot be adopted.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If such a plan were adopted, people in Kingston or Brockville would be compelled to supply milk in eight-gallon cans.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Only in a wholesale manner.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is very difficult to know where to draw the line. It is, however, a matter well worthy of consideration, and I do not intend to arrive at a conclusion until I have very carefully considered it.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). I had no wish to reflect on the Controller. No less than 1,000 cans of milk are brought into Toronto every day, and the number is steadily growing. At the present time there is a law which provides for the inspection and marking of cans, but it is not being carried out. A legal opinion has been given by the milk producers as to the reasons why the law cannot be carried out; and they ask not only that that law should be carried out, but that there should be a standard eight-gallon can. If it is the custom of the trade to handle milk in this way, it is the business of the department to meet the wishes of the people, and especially when we have a Government that claims to specially protect the interests of the farmers.

Increased Salary—To increase the salary of F. Hawken, Post Office Inspector of the Ottawa Division, in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. $200

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to draw the attention of the Postmaster-General to this item under the head of Post Office. I see it is provided that $200 is proposed to be voted to increase the salary of Mr. Hawken, the Post Office Inspector at Ottawa, from $2,000 to $2,200 a year, in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I assume, from that fact, that the Ottawa division is recognized as a first-class division, the provision of the Civil Service Act being that a salary of $2,200 is allowed to the inspector of a first-class postal division. The point to which I want to draw the attention of the Postmaster-General is this, that this increase of salary to Mr. Hawken is an act of tardy justice. Mr. Hawken has occupied this position for the last three years, I think, and has discharged his duties very faithfully and very efficiently; and if the Ottawa division is recognized as a first-class division, I think I may fairly ask the Postmaster-General to consider the question of compensating Mr. Hawken for the amount he should have received as inspector of a first-class division, since the time he occupied that position.
Mr. FEATHERSTON.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it because of the great increase of population in St. John that six additional letter carriers are required?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the census pointed that out.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 131) to further amend the Railway Act.—(Mr. Haggart.)

Bill (No. 132) to further amend the Act relating to the Senate and House of Commons.—(Mr. Foster.)

THIRD READINGS.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 30th March, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 11 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of Robert Boston, Esq., for the electoral district of South Middlesex.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the indulgence of the House for two or three minutes while I refer to a personal charge. This is the first occasion, in my parliamentary experience of twenty-one years, that I have done anything of this kind. The matter is a very insignificant one, at least I consider it so, but there seems to be a disposition to make it a matter of significance, almost a matter of state, and I felt called upon to refer to it. I find an article in this morning's "Citizen," which is as follows:—

The Presbyterian "Witness" is a rather solemn publication, but there is a fund of quiet humour in it which occasionally finds expression in such articles as the one cited below. In replying to the Halifax "Herald," which had made some remarks upon the pillar of the sanctuary who hails from North Norfolk, it says: "The 'Herald' has oftener than once published the statement that John Charlton, M.P., who takes a leading part in promoting Sunday legislation at Ottawa, owns steam tugs which he employs on Sundays as well as week days in tugging logs from the Canadian to the American shore, or in other similar work." For this employment of steam tugs on Sundays Mr. Charlton, as the "Herald" alleges, is responsible. Now, we are not in a position to contradict the statement. We have listened to Mr. Charlton making clear and forcible and long speeches on the Sunday question; and we would say "a priori" that the charge against him cannot be correct.

Following this is a criticism by the "Citizen," not very complimentary, which I need not read. If legislation for a good object can only be introduced by perfect and saintly men, we would have very little of it. I do not claim to be of that character, and the legislation I have introduced relating to Sunday observance was distinctly based upon physical, moral and material grounds, and I carefully avoided referring to its religious bearing at all, as a reason for urging the Bill in this House. I think the charge made, first by the hon. member for East Simcoe, and repeated by the Finance Minister, was one hardly worth noticing, because it was indefinite and general in character; but as the press seems to deem it worthy of notice, perhaps it is better for me to say just a word about it. In the first place, the charge is a very indefinite one, as I have said, and I call upon the Finance Minister, the hon. member for East Simcoe and other members, who have referred to it, to give the name of the boat, the place where that historic whistle was heard, and the place from which it was heard. I do not know whether any tug I own or am interested in has transgressed the fourth Commandment, and if it has I would like to examine into the matter. It is not necessary for me to say that when a tug is out in the open sea, prosecuting a voyage, she must continue her work on the Lord's Day, and if she is going into port she may do so on that day. There is a great variety of work it is necessary and proper to do on the Lord's Day with tugs and vessels. It is proper to go to the relief of a wrecked vessel on the Lord's Day and to continue a voyage, but I do not know whether in the case referred to the work it was charged was being performed was necessary or not. I may say that I am the nominal owner of one tug only. I do not manage her. Throughout last season she was chartered most of the time to other parties, and was beyond my management and control. I rise to make this statement in order to put myself right in regard to this question, and, if the hon. gentleman will say what was the name of the tug that whistled, why she whistled, where she whistled and at what date she whistled, I will be able to learn whether the tug was my property, whether she was at the place intimated at the time named, whether she was under charter at the time and controlled by other parties, and whether any blame attaches to me, and lays me liable to the charge so loosely and indefinitely made.

FISHERIES—MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mr. FRASER. I desire to put a question to the Government, and as I see two of the Controllers present, perhaps they may be able to give me an answer. Some time ago the statement was made that a gentleman was to be brought from Scotland to look after the fishing business in the lower provinces. His name, I believe, was Mr. Ross, and he was employed by Sir Charles Tupper. I would like to know if he has arrived, and if the Government intend to put him in charge of the fishing industry, to teach the fishermen of the lower provinces their business in the curing of fish and so on?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I will ask the hon. gentleman to wait until next session.

Mr. FRASER. The fishermen are anxious for information on this subject, but if the Government will give an answer some time to-day that will be all right.

POSTMASTER AT STE. ANGELE.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Government to a question raised by me last year, in connection with a demand for the bringing forward of papers relating to the discharge of Mr. Loïselle, ex-postmaster of Ste. Angèle. I do not wish to make any lengthy remarks, I simply wish to lay before the House a fact which may prove interesting. At the session of 1891, I asked the Government whether this postmaster had been dismissed and why. The Government, through the then Postmaster-General, now Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) answered that this postmaster it appeared, had been dismissed on the complaint of a certain Guillet, who had stated that this employee had altered the date of receipt of a letter in order to delay the delivery of this letter to the receiver, namely, Mr. Guillet. The then Postmaster-General (Mr. Haggart) went to the length of stating that a forgery had been committed by this postmaster. I regret for the sake of the hon. Minister, to have to add, since Guillet has stated under oath, that the statement of the Postmaster-General was ungrounded, and that he had never lodged any complaint.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the rules of the House provide that any declaration or statement, made under oath or otherwise, outside of this House, cannot be taken as a basis for any argument in a debate. I hope that the hon. member will not forget that rule.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) As I am not allowed by the rules of the House to make known to the House the declaration or statement made under oath by Mr. Guillet, I must bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I may add that in 1892, I asked for the production of all the documents bearing on the dismissal of the postmaster. An order issued from this House, enjoining on the Government to bring down these papers before the House. The session of 1893 is now drawing to a close, and I regret to have to state that the papers have not yet been brought down. I may say that last year the hon. Postmaster-General stated that the reason why the papers had not been brought down was that they had been lost—but he added that even should the report of the inspector be found on which he had decided to remove Loiseau, he would not lay the papers before the House, owing to the confidential nature of these papers, but that they might be privately communicated to me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, I am not conversant enough with French to understand quite well what the hon. member says, but I feel it my duty to remind him to confine himself as much as possible in his argument within the rules of the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. My intention in rising was to draw the attention of the Government to a certain statement of fact, and at the same time to complain that the document asked for by me two years ago had not yet been produced before this House. It is true the Postmaster-General stated that these documents had been lost, and that there was in the department only the report of the inspector to the department, upon which report the local postmaster was dismissed. I desire to call attention to the declaration of the Minister to that effect, and I do not know if I am out of order in that. I was just reading the declaration of the Postmaster-General of last year, promising that these documents should be produced if they were found, and that the report of the inspector, at all events, should be shown to me. I do not know if I am out of order in relating these facts to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Not if the hon. member will confine himself as closely as possible to the object he has in view. If he wishes to obtain information from the Government, it is perfectly in order to ask the question, but I would ask him to confine his remarks so that what he says may not provoke discussion.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was just coming to that point, and I wanted to know whether the Government would produce that report. I desire to see that report, especially when I am informed by sworn statements that the complaint in question has never been made.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Since I am out of order, I will go no further for, when rising to speak, I desired but to make known the nature of the statement made under oath by Mr. Guillet. But, as I am not allowed to use this statement, I will just call the attention of the House to the fact that, at the last session, the hon. Postmaster-General stated that he would produce, as soon as possible, the papers relating to this removal. The session of 1893 is drawing to a close, and these papers have not yet been laid on the Table of the House. The question to be dealt with is an important one, as this postmaster has been accused of forgery. Now, I have the declaration under oath, proving the contrary, and this declaration is made by the very same party whom the Government have designated as the plaintiff. It seems strange that the Government should withhold these documents which would show that this postmaster was not guilty, such as is established to-day by the statement of Mr. Guillet, the very same man who, according to the hon. Postmaster-General (Mr. Haggart), would have charged the postmaster with forgery. Moreover, the very fact that the Government do not produce the documents asked for, goes to show that the person in question has been dismissed on other grounds not mentioned, and that unjustly too.

THE COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. LAURIER. If I may be allowed I desire to put a question to the Government, in which the Controller of Customs is more particularly interested. I see in the "Evening Star" of the 29th inst., the following paragraph:—

In reply to an inquiry, Mr. Thomas F. Wallace stated that his brother, Hon. N. Clarke Wallace, is still a member of the firm of Wallace Bros.

Now, though we have no law on the subject as they have in the United States, to prevent the officer at the head of the Customs Department being himself an importer, it has always been the tradition of this Government that the gentleman at the head of this department should not be himself in the importing business. I remember distinctly that when Mr. Burpee was taken into Mr. Mackenzie's Administration in 1873, he severed his connection with the firm with which, up to that time, he had been connected. If it is true that the Controller of Customs is an active business man in the importing trade, I submit that it is contrary to the traditions of the Government, and contrary to good government, and I think the attention of the Administration should be at once called to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I may reply to the hon. gentleman that if the position I hold as Controller of Customs requires that I should sever my connection with any business in which I am engaged, I shall do so at once. I may state further that our firm has practically no business with the Department of Customs, as they are not importers. During the last three years, perhaps, there have been two or three importations by our firm, but I think that would be all. But, as I said, if it is necessary, I shall at once sever my connection with the firm.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, is aware, as everybody else is, that it has been an invariable custom and tradition in his department, that the officer at the head of that department should not be connected with any importing business.

Mr. WALLACE. I may say that I shall at once sever my connection with the firm; but our business with the Customs Department in the past has been practically nil.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the hon. gentleman say now whether he proposes to go on with the North-west Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to my hon. friend I may say that, owing to the crowded state of the Order Paper—we have some twelve or fourteen Orders to go through—the general agreement which seems to have been reached that we shall prorogue on Saturday, and to-morrow being a holiday, the Government will have to forego some of these measures and they propose to drop the following: Order 25, Bill further to amend the Insurance Act; Order 35, Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting land in the Territories; Order 38, Bill further to amend the Revised Statutes respecting canned goods; Order 39, Bill to amend the North-west Territories Act; Order 46, Bill to amend the Dominion Irrigation Act—which the Minister said would not be pressed, that it was introduced merely for information. These, so far as I know at present, are the Acts that will not be pressed this session.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

ROBERT BOSTON, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of South Middlesex, introduced by Mr. Laurier and Mr. Sutherland.

CENSUS INDUSTRIES.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, 1. What is the description of each of the industries established in the town of Strathroy? 2. What are the names of the several manufacturers? 3. What is the number of hands employed in each establishment?

Mr. FOSTER. Stand.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is the last day, working day, of the present session and I would like very much to have the answer to that question if the hon. Minister could kindly favour me. The notice has been on the Paper over two weeks.

Mr. FOSTER. If the answer is not ready and the information has not been furnished to me I would hardly like to give an answer for which I would be held responsible.

Mr. LAURIER. Could not the Government during recess issue a blue-book containing this information?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure what is to be put in the blue-book. The remaining volumes of the census will be issued from time to time, but whether these particulars are to be published or not I do not know. If they were it would make a very bulky volume. I think I may say to my hon. friend that the answer to his question may be sent to him.

Mr. FORBES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he would extend the same favour in relation to the second question—manufacturing establishments in Liverpool, Queen's, N.S.? This question has been on the Paper about three weeks.

Mr. FOSTER. Generally, yes.

Mr. LAURIER. I will suggest that the Government publish all these particulars for every constituency.

Mr. FOSTER. That is out of the question; it would make an immensely large volume.

INDUSTRIES OF THE TOWN OF KINCARDINE.

Mr. ROWAND asked, 1. What is the description of each of the industries established in the town of Kincardine, as per census returns? 2. What are the names of the several manufacturers? 3. What is the number of hands employed in each establishment? 4. What is the value of land and buildings attached to each? 5. What is the value of the output of each?

Mr. FOSTER. It was understood that no details further than the number of employees should be given. The following is the answer to the other parts of the question:

POLICY-HOLDERS AND INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. TYRWHITT (for Mr. Denison) asked, Do the Government intend to prevent policy-holders and others interested in the statutory returns of insurance companies, from inspecting the same; and if so, for what reason?

Mr. FOSTER. The statutory returns of insurance companies are not public documents. From such returns a report is annually prepared and distributed for the information of the public which embodies all material information and particulars. Should a policy-holder desire to see a particular return and state his reasons therefor in writing, such return might be exhibited if the reason therefor were satisfactory.

MANITOBA AND A PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW.

Mr. DENISON (for Mr. Coatsworth) asked, 1. What action has the Government taken with reference to the petition for the passage of a prohibitory liquor law received from the Government of the province of Manitoba? 2. If nothing has yet been done or decided upon, when does the Government propose to move in it?

Mr. FOSTER. No action has been taken by the Government as yet with reference to that petition, and no action will be taken until the report of the Prohibition Commission has been received.

CIVIL SERVICE INSURANCE.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 11) respecting Government Civil Service Insurance.

(In the Committee.)

Mr FOSTER. All the sections of this Bill were passed with the exception of 15, 16 and 17. My hon. friend raised a point whether it was necessary to put in sections 16 and 17. I do not think there is any necessity, and I am quite willing to have them struck out. Then I want to amend section 18 by adding:

The provisions of this Act shall be carried out by the staff of the Finance Department, under its direction and supervision.

In reference to section 15, I will suggest that instead of "two and a half" we read "three."

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 109) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act.—(Mr. Daly.)

WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE.

House proceeded to consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 23) respecting Witnesses and Evidence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the Solicitor-General kindly explain the nature of these amendments?

Mr. CURRAN. Three amendments have been made in the Bill. Section 4 states that in every case of a person charged with an offence, wife or husband shall be competent and compellable witness. The Senate have left in the word "competent" and struck out the word "compellable." The next amendment, is a proviso to the effect that no person shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife, and no wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during her marriage. This is an absolute change from the Bill as passed in this House, when we declared neither competent. Then the Senate has added a subsection: subsection 2 to section 4 setting forth that failure of the husband or wife of such person to testify shall not be made subject of comment by counsel for the prosecution when addressing the jury. The last amendment is in section 27. This House only authorized commissioners to take certain declarations and act in certain proceedings, but the Senate has extended the clause so as to cover all persons having power to receive solemn affirmations or affidavits.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the amendment in regard to testimony to be given by wife or husband is an amendment in the wrong direction. As the Bill left this House, wife or husband was competent to give evidence in respect to acts committed by one or the other, but not in regard to admissions made by one to the other. If I understand the explanation of the amendments, the Senate has provided that wife or husband may be a competent witness, and can be examined as to conversations between each other, the provision simply relating to a witness being compelled to answer, being applicable only if the witness chose to claim the privilege. I think that is entirely contrary to the spirit of the committee of this House, as manifested on the division taken when that point was determined. This committee determined, after thorough discussion of the point, that under no circumstance should wife or husband be a competent witness as to conversations between the two parties during marriage.

Mr. CURRAN. That is so.

Mr. MULOCK. That determination was arrived at by an overwhelming majority. Now, the Senate has amended the Bill so that a witness may be examined not only as to acts, which we agree to, but also to conversations, and may claim the privilege of not answering if desired. That is entirely contrary to the amendment made by this House.

Mr. McCARTHY. It appears to me that the chief amendment made by the Senate is in the right direction, because it does away with the provision we inserted making it compellable on the part of husband or wife to give evidence, and leaving it free to the husband or wife to give evidence, if he or she think proper. That is the first amendment made by the Senate, and in that I most cordially concur. I agree with the observations made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), that the other amendment is in the wrong direction, because it was not framed in the same spirit, but in the opposite spirit, because it seems to regard the right of a witness to disclose matters that came to their, his or her knowledge, through the marital relation, as a privilege belonging to the witness, whereas it is a privilege belonging to the opposite party. I do not think we should concur in the amendment as it now stands. When the Bill was before this House I supported the Minister of Justice in making a prisoner a competent and compellable witness, but in view of the large minority in the House that opposed this, and in view of the fact that the other Chamber is opposed to it, I would not be prepared to force any division on the House. I am willing to accept the Bill in the form in which it comes from the Senate, leaving them competent witnesses but not compellable. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact, that the present Attorney-General in England, whose experience in criminal matters has been enormous, in a speech in the Imperial House of Commons some time ago, declared himself in favour of the Bill as it was introduced here. Sir Charles Russell, when speaking of the Criminal Evidence Bill, which made criminals competent but not compellable, and which was introduced by the then Attorney-General, Sir Richard Webster, said:

He did not hesitate to say that, upon his present information and judgment, he should be prepared to go, and to make the party accused not only a competent, but in some cases at least a compellable, witness. He would ask the hon. and learned Attorney-General (Sir Richard Webster), whether he did not think there was, at least, one case in which a prisoner should be a compellable witness? That was the case of four or five persons jointly charged with an offence, against three or four of whom there might be cogent evidence, but as to the fifth there might be some evidence, but not of a cogent kind. As the law now stood, the fifth man might be convicted; but if he were enabled to call the men beside him in the dock, they would be compelled to say that he was not present at the commission of the crime. In the Maastricht case, many hon. members—not only those from Ireland—felt very uneasy in their minds with regard to one of the accused persons who was hanged. He knew that the Solicitor-General, the Under Secretary of State for India, and he himself, took great pains to investigate the case, and they all three came to the conclusion that there was strong reason for doubting whether one man who was found guilty of murder with the rest, and suffered for it was guilty of or took an active part in the crime. Could that man have called his fellow-prisoners and his wife as witnesses, it would, in all probability, have saved him from death.

That is pretty strong evidence given on this point by the Attorney-General of England. I am in favour of this Bill as it was originally passed by this House, but such a large minority agree with the Senate that I do not think it would be perhaps judicious to press the thing to a further division. I may say that I cannot see why, if you accept the amendment of the Senate in the first instance, you do not accept the amendment in the other. Why would you not allow the husband or wife to disclose a communication if he or she desired to? I would give the husband and wife the privilege of disclosing the facts if they choose, but I would not compel them to shut their mouths.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the Government had better drop this Bill, because owing to an oversight of the hon. and learned gentleman who had charge of it, it practically repeals an important section of the North-west Territories Act of 1891. That Act gives the Assembly of the Territories power to deal with evidence as any of the provinces has. But this Bill, if it passes, practically repeals clause 13, subsection 10 of that Act.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the House is considering amendments made by the Senate, and that the discussion must be confined to that.

Mr. DAVIN. I am going to move that the amendments now moved a second time shall be read a second time this day six months, and I am going to give my reasons for so doing. Section 6 dealing with section 13 of the Act, provides that the Legislative Assembly shall, subject to the provisions of this Act or of any other Act of the Parliament of Canada at any time in force in the Territories, have power to make ordinances for the Government of the Territories in relation to the administration of justice in the Territories, including the constitution, organization and maintenance of territorial courts of civil jurisdiction, including procedure therein. The latter, of course, includes evidence. Mr. Speaker, if you look at clause 2 of this Bill, you will see that it applies to all criminal and civil proceedings and over any matters whatsoever, respecting which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in this behalf. The object evidently was that this Bill should apply to proceedings in the Exchequer Court, but it will go further than that, and it will apply to all proceedings in territorial courts, because this Parliament has jurisdiction in the North-west Territories. Therefore, if the Bill passes in its present form, it practically tically takes away the power of the Territories under the Act of 1891, and I will move that these amendments be not now read a second time, but that they be read a second time this day six months.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. In reference to the amendments made by the Senate to section 4, I may say that I am prepared to accept section 4 as it was transmitted by this House to the Senate. The first part of it is that the husband and wife shall be competent and compellable witnesses, and I am willing that that should remain in the Bill. The Senate, however, in the second portion of section 4, have made a very material alteration and one of a character, that I do not think this House is going to adopt. The change made by the Senate leaves the husband or wife competent to disclose the secrets that have passed between one or the other, it may be in their bed. Now, I do not think this House is prepared to accept that amendment. My hon. friend the Solicitor-General says we must accept it, but I certainly will never accept it. I feel that though it is quite right that a husband and wife should be competent witnesses in a criminal proceeding, neither of them should be obliged to disclose against the wish of the other secrets that have passed between them, after a lifetime together, so to speak, in one room. I can hardly understand how the Senate came to make the alteration, but as they have done so, I think it is our duty to refuse to accept it. I feel very strongly upon the matter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it would be well for the hon. Solicitor-General to give us his view as to the point raised by my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). We have given the North-west Assembly power to legislate in regard to civil proceedings; but we are now passing a law providing that a wife or husband shall be competent to give evidence against the other in criminal proceedings, and in civil proceedings which are under our jurisdiction, and in so far we shall be repealing the constitutional Act we have already passed in regard to the North-west Territories. That is the point raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia, and we want to know which will be the law in the North-west Territories, the North-west Territories Act or this law.

Mr. CURRAN. There is not the slightest difficulty about this matter. I think my hon. friend has not shown that this Bill in any way curtails the law of evidence in the North-west Territories. It enlarges it, if anything.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You take away the power you gave last year.

Mr. WELDON. This being the last utterance of Parliament, it would be the law. I agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe. If we had not reached this stage of the session, I would be in favour of approving of the first amendment and disapproving of the second; but I think very little harm would result from carrying the Bill through as it is. It would be a perilous thing to reject the Bill, because in a short time the Criminal Code will come into operation, and this law of evidence will be necessary.

Mr. McCARTHY. We have a law of evidence, even if this does not pass, and the question is whether it would be better to pass it now or to allow it to stand for another year. I quite agree with the hon. member for West Assiniboia. The intention was that this Act should apply to all proceedings over which we have jurisdiction. We have jurisdiction over the civil law in respect of the North-west Territories, although not in respect of the provinces, and the consequence will be that this law will override the civil law of the North-west.

Amendment negatived, and House proceeded to consider the amendments.

Mr. MULOCK moved:

That the amendment made by the Senate in line 16 be disagreed to, for the reason that it is against public policy that husbands or wives should be allowed to disclose conversations between them during marriage.

I understand if this motion is carried, it does not defeat the Bill, but that its effect will be that the resolution is transmitted to the Senate for consideration by them.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MULOCK moved that the amendment made by the Senate in line 18 be disagreed to on the same ground.

Amendment agreed to.

On the fourth amendment,

Mr. McCARTHY. Is it in order to amend at this stage?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is perfectly in order to propose an amendment to the amendment made by the other House, provided it is consequent upon or relates to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the Bill as introduced by Mr. Cameron, some years ago, which received the approval of the Minister of Justice, there was also a provision that the failure of the wife or husband to testify should not be made the subject of comment by counsel or judge. The object is to prevent any comments going to the jury at all. I move that the words "or the judge" be added.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CURRAN moved that a Message be communicated to the Senate giving the reasons for the disagreement of this House with the amendments made by the Senate to this Bill.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of Bill (No. 127) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the motion passes, I wish to put myself on record with reference to the vote to the Nova Scotia Central Railway. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to send me the papers on which he came to the conclusion that the Justice Department have passed the opinion that this money should be paid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway and not to the purchaser under the trustee deed. There is no such deduction to be drawn from those papers. The Department of Justice had not before them at all the fact of the sale by the trustees. There could be no question at all, on the papers submitted to the department, as to what opinion they should give. They merely had a power of attorney from the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company authorizing Messrs. Eisenhauer & Wade to draw the money, they also had a revocation of that power of attorney, and with those two documents they had a telegram from the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills). They gave their opinion that the power of attorney having been revoked, the money must be paid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company to whom it was voted. That is all plain sailing. But now we come to this point which has not been, so far as the papers show, submitted to the Department of Justice at all. That road was bonded to secure advances made by some of the banks. The road was put in the hands of a trustee to whom a mortgage deed was given. That mortgage deed is not before the House, the House may assume that, like all other mortgage deeds, it conveys the property and franchise and rights of the company. There can be no possible doubt on that point. If that mortgage deed does convey the road, its franchise, and the rights of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, to the trustees, then when the trustee sold, the purchaser took from him all and every the rights of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company. Among these is the right to receive the balance of the subsidy. It does seem on its face most monstrous, when the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company is a bankrupt company whose property has been given to a third party, that that third party, who has got the rights, the property and the franchise of that bankrupt company, is not to receive from this Government the balance of the subsidy, but the bankrupt company is to receive it. On what possible ground of law or justice can that money be paid to a bankrupt company? They have ceased to exist for all practical purposes; their property, rights and franchise have been sold to a purchaser. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to take power in that Bill to have a fresh investigation into this matter. I would suggest that his Bill should read: "That it should be paid to the Nova Scotia Railway or to such persons as the Railway Department may find entitled to receive the money." I do not think hon. gentlemen will object to that amendment. I have no interest in the world in this matter, but I have read these papers and I listened very closely to the statements made on both sides, and I have come to the conclusion that if this item is passed in such form that the money must be paid over to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, the department being allowed no discretion, injustice might be done. I do not mean to say that injustice will necessarily be done. I say it might be done. I ask the hon. gentleman in the face of these facts, to amend the Bill in the direction I have suggested and to take power to give the money to the railway company or to such other person as may be entitled to it.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I am quite satisfied that if the hon. gentleman had looked into this matter more closely his opinion would be entirely different from that he has expressed. I hold in my hand a copy of the mortgage deed under which this property was sold. The hon. gentleman may examine it. A document similar to this was before the department. Under that deed the trust company have no right whatever to the subsidies. It was under that deed that Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer got their present title to the road. The contract with the Government was made by the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company. Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer had nothing whatever to do with the contract. Under the contract the money was paid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company. That company gave a power of attorney to the Halifax Banking Company to draw that money. After a large proportion of it had been paid and a small balance only remained, then, by some arrangement between Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer and the Halifax Banking Company, the mortgage was foreclosed, though the road was entirely built, and the title vested in Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer in that way. Hon. members seem to think that the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company put no money into the enterprise. That is an entire mistake. This Nova Scotia Central Railway Company are the sufferers in the transaction. At present Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer have a well-constructed road which furnishes them the wherewith to get back every dollar of their money, and, if Mr. Eisenhauer's idea were carried out, I believe they would get every dollar with interest and considerable commissions. But the idea is to make a big thing out of it, to the sacrifice of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company whose members have put something like $140,000 in hard cash into the enterprise, for which they have not one vestige of security, the whole security having been taken over for the benefit of Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer. I verily believe, as I said on a former occasion, that all Mr. Eisenhauer wants to get out of this is the amount of money he put into it. But there are other persons who are driving him on and who are endeavouring to get the property and sell it so that they may make a larger amount out of it, to the sacrifice of the members of the company, some of whom are to-day in a penniless condition by the reason of the road being in its present position. I would like hon.

members to understand that there is still a lawsuit pending with reference to this subject. My own opinion is—though I do not put it forward as carrying weight in this matter, but it is also the opinion of the Department of Justice—that the Government have only to deal with the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, because that mortgage does not cover the subsidy, which subsidy was granted for the purpose of constructing the road. The mortgage does not cover the subsidy by any manner of means. The matter was brought up in the court and it was decided that the mortgage did not cover the subsidy. The Government made the contract with the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, and the subsidy is to be paid to them. That is what the Department of Justice has decided, and I think they have decided rightly.

Mr. HAGGART. Even if the statement of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) is correct, the suggestion of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) will not alter the position at all. If the subsidy was not conveyed under that deed of trust to Mr. Eisenhauer, the amendment will not alter their position in any way. I do not see any objection to the amendment, which will leave the case to be submitted to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) to the extraordinary character of the position he takes. It is admitted that a contract was made by the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company; but that company is no longer in existence; it is bankrupt, and the road is in the hands of a receiver. But the hon. gentleman claims that the company is entitled to this subsidy because the members have put cash into the enterprise. But these subsidies are part of the assets of the company, and under the circumstances must, like the other assets, go to the benefit of the creditors. The doctrine of the hon. gentleman is a most monstrous one, that a company which is bankrupt should take part of its assets and keep them to the detriment of its creditors. The suggestion of my hon. friend is the only right one: that the Minister of Justice should decide whether the money should go to the bankrupt company or to the creditors who, as well as the members of the company, have put their money into the enterprise.

Mr. BORDEN. I understood the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) to say that the courts had decided that the subsidies were not transferred to Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer as part of their security. I have here an extract from the order of the court, which is found among the papers laid on the Table by the hon. Minister, the order of the Supreme Court of the court of Nova Scotia or of one of its judges on the 5th of May, 1891. It decides that the receiver of the road shall have and receive all the assets of the company, including all the moneys receivable from individuals, corporations or Governments. That does not look very much as if the statement made by my hon. friend from Annapolis was correct. On the contrary, the court orders that any sums of money due from the Government shall be payable to the defendant. But the hon. gentleman has said that the case is not fully decided, that the suit is still pending. Surely, if that be true, the hon. gentleman would not urge the Government to pay over these moneys in advance of the decision of the suit. That is certainly an argument against his intention. The hon. gentleman says that the members of this company have expended a large sum of money. That may have been true in the early stages of the road. This road has been under construction for a great many years.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). There is more than one company. This is the last company that has come into the control of the road. I understand this road has been on the carpet for the last eighteen years.

Mr. BORDEN. But I understand there is a close connection between the two companies. The same man, Mr. Stern, is president of this who was president of the former company. Practically this is the same company. It is true a certain amount of money was spent by them in the early stages of the road, ten or fifteen years ago; but I believe it is equally true that not one dollar has been spent by this company in the construction of this road since this Dominion subsidy, about which the suit is pending, was granted. As a matter of fact, that subsidy was assigned to Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer, or at any rate a power of attorney was given to the Halifax Banking Company, by which they were to receive this subsidy from the Government as fast as it was earned. On the strength of that power of attorney, Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer gave their obligations to the bank, and the bank advanced the money out of which this road was built. Now, the bank contends that this company had no right to revoke that power of attorney, that they would not have advanced this money, had it not been for the power of attorney, and it is a monstrous thing to say that, after a solemn engagement has been entered into like this, and a sum of $400,000 or $500,000 has been paid on the faith of this power of attorney, that they could turn around and revoke that power of attorney. It is a monstrous thing, and whether it is legal or not, certainly it was not a just or proper act, and not one that this Government should encourage. I have here a telegram from Mr. Wade, to this effect:

Notice discussion re Central Railway subsidy. I hold positive documentary proof that the subsidy was transferred to us, and is ours now legally. I so wired the Minister of Railways. Please try and get me a hearing.

F. D. WADE.

I am glad that the Minister has consented to the proposal made by the hon. member for Queen's, to insert in this Bill a provision by which the money shall be held until it is ascertained to whom it shall be rightly paid.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I consider I cannot let this motion pass, without entering my protest, now as the other day, when the resolution on which the present Bill is based came up for its second reading. In my opinion, the railway companies should be subsidized in proportion to the difficulties encountered in the building of their roads, as also in proportion to the importance of these railways, from both stand-points of colonization and commerce. The Government, to my mind, should they be anxious not to injure their general railway policy, ought to ascertain that the railways subsidized are not totally useless, and often also prejudicial to the best interests of colonization and commerce. They ought, prior to granting any subsidy, have an estimate of the cost of railway construction prepared by the competent engineers in the employ of the department. Nowadays the Government grant subsidies to railways without knowing whether they will be of any use. I contend that the Government would certainly not have granted a subsidy of $102,400 to the United Counties Railway Company, had they known that the same company had received a large subsidy from the provincial Government and had they inquired about the difficulties the company was beset with to bring the enterprise to a happy termination. No such precaution was taken. The Government grant subsidies in aid to railways which are of no value from the stand-point of colonization and commerce, and in sections of the country which have already their roads, without asking themselves whether such subsidies will not be prejudicial to the interests of other railway lines as also to the municipalities concerned. The most important railway in the section of the country south of the St. Lawrence, including also my county, is beyond a doubt the South-eastern Railway. We are left without any means of communication with the town of Sorel, owing to the fact that the bridge on the Yamaska River was carried away last year, at the breaking of the ice. The hon. Minister should, previous to granting so large a subsidy to the United Counties Railway, have inquired whether it was not preferable to grant a subsidy to the South-eastern Railway. I understand how the Government may well hesitate before subsidizing new roads, whose cost of construction would involve the granting of considerable aid from the municipalities; but I do not understand how the Government may allow to remain idle railways that have been operated till within a short time, and which constitute the most important lines of communication in their district. The hon. Minister has been asked to grant aid towards the construction of a bridge on the River Yamaska, whose destruction had left without any means of communication the Richelieu district and the eastern portion of the province. In my opinion, should the Government take into consideration the report of a competent engineer, they could have ascertained that it was better to retrench a portion of the subsidy granted to the United Counties Railway and give it to the company which have undertaken to build the bridge on the river Yamaska, and thus restore to the South-eastern road its activity of old. Under the present law, the United Counties Railway is relieved from building two important bridges, one on the river Yamaska, the other on the Richelieu river, and the whole cost of construction was estimated, last year, by the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau), and by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Bernier), at over $150,000. Therefore, this company, to which is granted under the shape of a revote, a subsidy of $102,400, is exempted, under the law, from executing one-half of the works for which a subsidy had been granted last year. While retrenching this year one-half of their obligations, the Government should also have retrenched one-half of their subsidy, and transported it to the company willing to restore the broken communication between Sorel, the eastern portion of the province of Quebec and the United States, in constructing the bridges on the rivers Yamaska and Richelieu. I do not boast, Mr. Speaker, of being perfectly acquainted with all the sections of the province; but, I contend, that were the subsidies distributed everywhere as injudiciously as in certain portions of the country, I say the Government policy which, in aiding the building of our railways, aimed at the development of our commercial wealth and the opening up of our lands, has been a total failure. Such a policy will also be prejudicial to the Government, in so far as it will thwart many works which the public are enabled to judge of and appreciate to-day, while fostering railways the usefulness of which is still very problematic. It sometimes happens that railway companies which are not of public utility, as, for instance, the United Counties Company, which has succeeded in being exempted from its obligations; it happens, I say, that these companies build the easiest portion of the road, and in order to make the operation more remunerative, they come to the municipalities for aid, and tell them: Your money or your life! as was the case of the United Counties Company in the parish of St. Damase. They will go still further. Should this road have an extension up to Sorel, clever business men will come among our credulous country people, extolling the advantages to be reaped from the building of this railway—advantages greatly exaggerated. They will even use gold, thrown by the Government into their safe as an aid towards the construction of the road; they will, without any scruple, attempt to corrupt the municipal voters, to prevail upon them to grant subsidies towards perfectly useless purposes. Mr. Speaker, these men thus come among our credulous country people, using municipal corruption, all kinds of subterfuges, their hands and their mouths full of promises; they will magnify the so-called advantages to be reaped, should they be willing to aid such a company—and after exhausting all means of persuasion, as I said a moment ago, they will tell them: Your money or your life! Should the municipalities resist, and refuse to be bled to death for the benefit of these achievers of exploits, then it is that these companies resort to every sort of exactions against the recalcitrant municipalities, as often witnessed under similar circumstances, whenever municipalities showed themselves refractory to the exigencies of the companies. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that, should the Government deem proper to subsidize this work, and at the same time exempt them from the execution of the most important portion of their work—I mean the bridges on the rivers Yamaska and Richelieu—on the assumption that the Government did think fit to liberate the company from the obligation of building these two bridges, which constituted the only portion of the work calculated to give a commercial value to this road, and which is now reduced to the small proportions of a petty local enterprise, having no longer any direct communication with the large centres—I hope, I say, that should the Government think fit to go to this excess of liberality, they will also think fit to seriously consider the lamentable condition of the South Eastern Railway. I hope the Government shall not fail, next session, to see to it that this railway is run throughout the line, in having rebuilt, by means of a liberal subsidy, the bridge over the river Yamaska. Any one conversant with the country is aware that the South Eastern is one of the most important lines of the province of Quebec, and that so long as this bridge is not rebuilt, considerable losses will result therefrom to this section. Any one ever so little acquainted with this section of the country knows very well of what immense utility the rebuilding of this bridge will prove not only for the town of Sorel, but also for the whole district of Richelieu, as regards the shipping of fruit from this district to the United States. I hope the hon. Ministers who represent the province of Quebec in the Cabinet will bear in mind that when the Government could display so much liberality towards the United Counties Railway Company, by granting them this year the same subsidy as last year, after exempting them from building two bridges, the cost of which was estimated at $150,000, they ought not to hesitate giving the necessary subsidy to enable the South Eastern to rebuild their bridge on the Yamaska river, and thus restore the broken communications on that line which has a considerable commercial value. The United Counties Railway, as specified in the Bill concerning subsidies to railways, has no commercial importance, nor is it an enterprise calculated to further colonization, as the territory traversed by it is already colonized.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) This Government no longer deserves your confidence.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) I do not say the Government no longer deserve my confidence, but were I to place that confidence in any one of the two parties which divide this House, I could not place it in the hon. leader of the Opposition; on the ground that, as I am well aware, he is going hand in hand with the Government and he has urged them to aid the United Counties Company. I know that he has given his full approbation to the granting of a subsidy to this railway; the hon. leader of the Opposition did not raise his voice against the granting of this subsidy, while he exerted himself in throwing obstacles in the way of more meritorious enterprises. I have heard it stated that if some of his friends were directors of a certain company, he would have full confidence in the policy of the Government.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Does the hon. member pretend to be the only good judge of the question?

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) In order to judge well a question, in this House as elsewhere, Mr. Speaker, we have not to inquire as to which side belongs the majority; one need only be disinterested, and were the hon. member as disinterested as I am myself, he would see things from the unique standpoint of public interest, and like me, he would find that the subsidy granted by the Government to the United Counties Company is too large, when we consider the nature of the works to be performed in consequence of the alteration in the location of the line, an alteration which exempts them with building two bridges at a cost of $150,000. I have, Sir, no interest to serve either for or against this company. I consider the section of country to be crossed by this railroad is already greatly benefited by the railway building industry. I am opposed on no personal grounds to this enterprise, only I tell the Government they were wrong in subsidizing it with so much liberality, as it has no commercial value, and furthermore, as by subsidizing it, you enable it to thwart other enterprises already in full operation or enjoying a greater importance. I say this is calculated to create prejudice against the Government in the public mind and tends to make people believe that the Government railway policy is defective. I say the erroneous and wrong applications of this policy as in the present instance, will result in spreading the belief that this policy, which has had beneficial effects in the past, is no longer adapted to our time. And were the Government, through repeated mistakes like this, to lose ground in the public confidence so as to be brought through their own fault to the verge of ruin, and fall down, then there will be nobody to uphold it, and the hon. leader of the Opposition as also the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe will be among the first to applaud the result and to rejoice at the funerals of the Conservative party and Government. I say the hon. leader of the Opposition, as well as all those who urge on the Government in the path of a wrong application of this policy, and prevail upon them granting unnecessary subsidies, will reach a double end; they will favour their own friends and bring about the death of the Conservative party, in rendering them unpopular. I say it is a wrong application of a good policy, and that they who approve of the course followed by the Government in this circumstance are neither the friends of the Cabinet nor of the country. The day when the Government's doom will be sealed, on account of such a ruinous policy, I say on that day, the hon. leader of the Opposition with his friends who invite the Ministers giving subsidies with so little "apropos." will be among the first to reproach them with this lamentable application of their railway policy. I warn now the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), while it is yet time, and I trust the hon. Minister, and his colleagues who represent the province of Quebec in the Government, will no longer grant subsidies without reflection, that in the future they will subsidize only such roads as will have a well established commercial value, such as reported on by the Government engineer. I contend the subsidies ought to be granted only in proportion to the importance of the roads, and to the difficulties to be encountered, and that, first of all the Government ought in every circumstance to acquire information from their engineers as to the nature of the difficulties to be overcome, and as to the probable cost of the necessary works in view at the building of the projected railways, in order that equal subsidies be not indiscriminately granted to all companies, irrespective of all other claims, so as to proportion them, according to the obstacles to be overcome, and the value of the enterprise from both commercial and agricultural standpoint. It happens that railway companies meet with natural obstacles to be overcome which bring the cost of the road somewhere between twenty and twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, whereas, in other cases the cost of the building scarcely reaches five thousand dollars. Would it be fair, in a similar case, to grant a uniform subsidy to all the companies? I consider the House will share my views on the matter, and that the Government will make it their duty to render justice to enterprises of such nature, having a real value from both a commercial and colonizing stand-point. The Government ought also to take into consideration the difficulties to be overcome by the companies in carrying out their enterprise.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 124) respecting the appointment of commissioners to the World's Columbian Exhibition.—(Mr. Foster.)

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron) moved second reading of Bill (No. 118) to amend the Act respecting the Royal Military College.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we were promised some explanations on the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). This is to legalize certain appointments and certain salaries in excess of the statutory provision in connection with the Royal Military College. Since the college was first established the statutory law has been broken in regard to the number of professors and their salaries, and I am now legalizing what has heretofore been done; but I do not purpose by this Bill to add a dollar additional expense in connection with the college, or to increase the salaries of any of the officers.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. It is provided here that the Governor in Council shall select the candidates in the order of merit. If the order of merit determines their right to enter, you do not require any Governor in Council machinery at all.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). There is a Board of Examiners, and the result of the examination is submitted to the Governor in Council.

Mr. MULOCK. I presume that the Board of Examiners determine the merit, and not the Governor in Council. Then, I would suggest that their right to enter be determined by the Board of Examiners. This simply opens the door to the Governor in Council to do a lot of interfering. If you want to live up to the spirit of the matter you will not interfere with the examiners.

Mr. DENISON. There might be some physical disqualification in the way of passing a candidate.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). This is the law at present. The only change we make is to increase the number of candidates who may be admitted in one year. The law provided for two candidates from each military district. We have increased the number of military districts, so that the number of candidates has been, for years, in excess of the statutory limit. We have accommodation for thirty each year. With our ample staff it will not add to the expense to provide for them; and I am advised that we had better make thirty the outside limit. I do not think there will be any divergence from the rule laid down here as to receiving them in the order of merit. That has been the provision ever since the college was started.

Mr. MULLOCK. Perhaps this cast-iron rule providing that not more than thirty shall be admitted in each year, will sometimes interfere with the advantages of the college. For example, you have a teaching strength of 120. Assuming that the students in the senior years will always be present, you will always have ninety old students, and vacancies for thirty new ones. Suppose the ninety did not all turn up, you would have accommodation for more than thirty. Instead of saying thirty each year, you should provide that not more than 120 shall be in attendance at one time.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I think that is a very happy suggestion on the part of my hon. friend, and I will adopt it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt whether there is accommodation at present for the full number authorized by law.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Of course, if we have not the accommodation, we are not bound to admit them.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 128) further to amend the General Inspection Act (from the Senate).

Mr. LAURIER. What is the nature of this Bill?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is to alter the standard of apples. I may say that the change has been made at the request of the Fruit Growers' Association, of the province of Ontario. The present standard is so high as to be unworkable.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, and read the third time, and passed.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS. N.B.

Bill (No. 104) relating to juvenile offenders in the province of New Brunswick, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 11,

Mr. COSTIGAN. I beg leave to propose the following words in the thirteenth line, after the word "consent":—"of the parent or guardian of the boy." The provincial authorities agree to this change.

Bill reported, as amended, and read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION OF PETROLEUM.

Bill (No. 112) respecting the inspection of petroleum, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. FLINT. What is the difference between this section and the one for which it is substituted?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It simply lowers the flash test. Heretofore, the railway and steam transportation companies have been compelled, at great inconvenience and some loss, to purchase a high grade of oil. This does not refer to the illuminating oil. They require a special class of oil for their use. It was found that the test formerly in use, and which has been lowered, was the highest of any country in the world, when it was first made. In fact, the legislation went to the extreme of protection in making the test so high. The same reason applies to lowering the flash test from 95 to 90 degrees. From all the evidence I could learn—and I sent for the gentlemen who made the test in 1888, I think—and they all assured me, and I have their written statement to that effect, that the lowering of the flash test would, in no sense, endanger the public safety, but that oil would be just as safe at 90 in the one case as at 95; and, in the high grade oils, they believed it would be perfectly safe to grant this concession.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the meaning of that alteration in weights?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The weight is the specific gravity. It was found that the one followed the other. The specific gravity, as I learn, is determined by means of the petroleometer, and the whole test is made by an instrument called a barometer. It is placed in a water bath, and the water heated to the temperature of 62 degrees Fahrenheit, and when the vapour that is emptied off the oil by means of the heat attains 95, and flashes, that was considered, heretofore, the safe test. It is considered altogether too extreme a protection, and, upon a very careful examination, at the request, I may say, of all parties interested, it was considered perfectly safe to lower the test.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I refer to the paragraph whereby he requires that it shall weigh not more than 8.43 pounds, and not less than 8.14 pounds per gallon.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). When distilled, the crude oil has to go through the process of steaming, and the lighter substances are thrown off until we get a heavy grade. It must be within certain limits of height and depth.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was there a standard of weight before?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The weight under the former Act was restricted to S 23 and S 22.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Whereas you had 9 of a difference before, and now you allow, roughly, 30?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. The Controller of Inland Revenue told us that these changes are satisfactory to the transportation companies. I have a little suspicion. I dare say it is not well founded, that these changes are the outcome of the reduction of the protection on oil, and that these changes are to affect principally Canadian oils, and not the imported oils. In fact, I am half under the impression that these changes are being brought about at the urgency of the oil producers of Canada.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I assure the committee in all honesty that such is not the case.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman knows from what sources he obtained his inspiration, I do not.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). So far as high grade oil is concerned, this is an old matter.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know that any member in the House is individually responsible for these technical changes, but I think the public are entitled to know what would be the effect of these changes upon the quality of the various oils that will find their way into commerce.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I may say that I went into that subject thoroughly and I found, as I have already said, that the test used in Canada was the highest of any country in the world. Now, anticipating the criticism which the hon. gentleman has made, I took pains to ascertain the tests in the different states. I find that in Maine it is 73; New Hampshire, 73; Massachusetts, 110, flash; Rhode Island, 63; Connecticut, 63; New York, 72; New Jersey, 72; Pennsylvania, 63; Georgia, 73; Arkansas, 83; Kentucky, 83; Tennessee, 92; Ohio, 92; Indiana, 92.

Mr. MULOCK. I should think the tests of other countries would not be altogether safe to follow here, because the tests must depend to a large extent upon the quality of the crude oil.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Not so much as that in the process of distillation.

Mr. MULOCK. Will not the effect of lowering the test be that you will have more inflammable material, benzine for example, in the article that goes into commerce?
Mr. Wood (Brockville).

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am assured on every side that it will not. If I had the least doubt in that regard I would not for one moment have allowed this change to be made.

Mr. MULOCK. I hope the Controller is correct in his views. I had been under the impression that the process of distillation was resorted to for the purpose of freeing the oil of benzine and explosive and objectionable ingredients, and that the higher the test the greater the purity of the oil. If you lower the test, you certainly run the risk of having a lower grade of oil, which will find its way on the market, and as consumers will soon find this out, the Government will be blamed for it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have fully considered that point. I sent for every person who had anything to do with the examination of oil, and I thoroughly satisfied myself that this was a step in the right direction and that advantage would accrue from it.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the advantage?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The importers will be benefited and those who use, for example, headlight oil, because they will be able to obtain oil which is perfectly safe and which has stood the test of ninety degrees and could even stand ninety-five degrees.

On section 8,

Mr. FLINT. This section is more important than any other section in the Act, and it will be received with considerable disapproval in that portion of the Dominion which obtains no advantage from the proposed changes in the law. The Maritime provinces receive a very much larger proportion of imported oils than do the upper provinces. This fact was established by the figures given by the hon. member for King's, N.S., (Mr. Borden) the other evening. They show that during last year, while the total American oil imported reached 5,776,514 gallons, the Maritime provinces took 2,154,242, or three-eighths of the total importation of the Dominion. Whatever may be the cause, it is an undoubted fact that Canadian oils are not appreciated in the Maritime provinces as are American oils, and accordingly American oils are considered to be absolute necessities. In no portion of the Dominion does the protective policy in regard to oil products cause so much discontent as in the Maritime provinces. Consequently any measure of relief in that direction will receive the support of the people of those provinces. But hitherto we have found that practically no relief has been given except on the matter of inspection. I move in amendment that petroleum may be imported in tank steamers as well as tank cars. Almost all the importations of oils into the Maritime provinces are by water, which is a more convenient and a safer and cheaper means of carriage. I have here a circular from one of the largest dealers in oils in the Maritime provinces, and in it a suggestion is made that the carriage of oil should be by tank steamers as well as by tank cars. The circular is as follows:—

Heretofore importers were compelled to import oil in American made barrels, not over fifty gallons, on which was paid a duty of (40) forty cents per barrel and (30) thirty cents per barrel inspection fee.

The Finance Minister, in his Budget address, on behalf of the Government, proposed to allow the importation of oil in bulk, but it is now reported for a fact the importation of oil in bulk will be restricted to "tank cars" only.

For the following reasons and in the trade interests of this province we ask your interference and influence with the Government to prevent such restrictions being placed on the importation of oil, and beg you to insist on no law being made that will interfere with the importing of oil in "tank steamers" or by the cheapest route and manner.

1. Owing to the long distance from American refineries, the importation of oil in tank cars only, the change proposed in the law, while benefiting the upper provinces, would not benefit this province or any of the Maritime provinces.

2. The natural route for importing goods from the United States to this country is by water, and in justice no restriction should be placed on oil that is not on other goods.

3. The presumed saving of duty on barrel and inspection fee would be more than taken up by the long distance freight. Thus the consumer of oil in Nova Scotia and the Maritime provinces would receive no benefit by the proposed change.

4. By restricting the importation of oil in "bulk," to "tank cars only," it is a clear discrimination against the Maritime provinces and in the interests of the railroads.

5. The restriction of importation of oil in "bulk" to "tank cars only" would not cheapen the price of oil here, and importing would be done as at present. Whereas, if importing could be done by "tank steamers," the industry of making barrels and the establishment of tanking stations in different parts of Nova Scotia would be accomplished.

If time permitted we could send a strong petition to the Government opposing such restrictions being placed on Maritime trade, as considerable indignation has been aroused by the obnoxious proposition.

Of course the hasty conclusion of the session has prevented the parties interested in the trade from preparing and making to the Government those representations which the importance of the occasion demanded. Consequently we have to appeal to the Government here to allow the privilege of importing oil in tank steamers. This clause also provides that the Governor in Council may designate the places at which petroleum for illuminating purposes may be imported in tanks. Now, I fear that giving the Government this power, as well as the power of making departmental regulations regarding the care and handling of this material, may impose an additional restriction to the disadvantage of the consumer. The complaint is almost universal on the part of those opposed to the high protective duties on oil, as well as on other goods, that the Government, by means of regulations framed apparently for the purpose of protecting the public, can practically add to the protection by creating various difficulties and obstacles, thus constructively destroying the advantages to the consumers, which the reading of the law would seem to give to them. Now, if oil is to be imported in tank steamers as well as in tank cars, I do not think the power ought to be given to the Government to designate the places where it can be imported. Every port of entry should be a place at which oil could be imported. The clause, if amended as I propose, would read as follows:—

Notwithstanding anything in this section contained, the Governor in Council may make departmental regulations relating to the importation of petroleum for illuminating purposes in tank cars or tank steamers; but all petroleum so imported shall be put into packages, inspected and marked according to the requirements of section 7 of this Act.

If we are to allow oil to be imported in bulk, and if the people of the Maritime provinces are to obtain some advantage from this concession, I think the Government ought to yield to these representations and grant this privilege. The only other concession made to the consuming classes this session has been one which is deemed important to the agriculturists of the upper provinces; but this concession, small as it is, will be, to a certain extent, a concession to the whole public. It will be a concession to the agricultural and all other classes of the Maritime provinces, because an enormous quantity, relatively, of oil is used in those provinces. The people of the Maritime provinces use 2½ gallons per head, against less than one gallon per head in the upper provinces. A mere glance at the figures of the importation of American oil and the quantity of Canadian oil used, respectively, shows that, notwithstanding the inspection fees besides the high tariff restrictions in the way of duty on barrels, and which some claim to amount to 200 per cent, the imported oils have forced their way into consumption, in spite of all the efforts of the Government and the protected classes to encourage the consumption of Canadian oil. We find that in 1880 the quantity of oil imported was less than 1,000,000 gallons, in 1882 it had increased to over 3,000,000 gallons, in 1887 it was over 4,000,000 gallons, and during last year it ran up to 5,000,000 gallons, while the consumption of Canadian oil has remained almost stationary during the last five or six years. These facts, given in a general way, ought, I think, to induce the Government to make the concession to the Maritime provinces proposed in this amendment.

Mr. CHESLEY. There is evidently a difference of opinion as to whether this oil should be allowed to be imported in tank vessels or only in barrels. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) has spoken for the Maritime provinces. Well, I am not going to speak for the Maritime provinces. I do not presume to speak for the Maritime provinces on this question, because there may be quite a difference of opinion in different parts of those provinces upon the question. I think it is enough for me to deal with the question from the point of view of the people of the constituency I have the honour to represent. Hon. members may remember that during the session of 1891 there was considerable agitation in the city of St. John upon this very question, and as a result of that agitation, a petition, set on foot by parties interested in the trade and those interested in the coasting business of that city, was largely signed by the merchants and traders of the city, and also by those interested in shipping, irrespective of politics; and that petition was forwarded to the Governor in Council. I have now that petition in my hand, and in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Yarmouth, I think it would be well to read it to the House:

ST. JOHN, N.B., 3rd June, 1892.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Frederick Arthur Stanley, Baron Stanley of Preston, Governor-General of Canada, etc.

The memorial of the vessel owners, lumber shippers, lime shippers, and others, of the Maritime provinces,

Respectfully sheweth,—

That the foreign illuminating oil imported into the Maritime provinces has been carried exclusively by our coasting vessels in barrels from New York and Boston to the Maritime province ports up to the present time, to the extent of about seventy to eighty schooner cargoes per year, being a source of very considerable income to our coasting trade.

That if the Bill now before Parliament, promoted by an agent of the Standard Oil Company of the United States, asking for the admission of foreign oil in bulk be made, it will result in serious loss to our coasting trade, as that oil would then be carried in tank steamers, the property of the said Standard Oil Company, who would not only obtain all the profit from the sale of the imported oil (at the expense of established local dealers) as a monopoly of that business by them must inevitably result, as has been the case in all other places where they have obtained the facilities, which the said petition would give them, for destroying all competition, but they would also derive all of the benefit from the transportation of oil in bulk at the expense of our coasting vessels.

That it would furthermore seriously affect the shipment of lumber from the Maritime provinces, as where our schooners which carry cargoes of lumber to the United States ports are enabled to obtain return cargoes of oil, under the present conditions, they can afford to carry the lumber at a less rate of freight than if they had to return in ballast, as would be the case if they lost the oil traffic, and the advance in rate of freight on lumber which would thereby be necessitated, would add to the cost of the lumber delivered in American markets, and make competition in those markets with that commodity the more difficult, which at present is only too formidable.

That it would also add another burden to the lime industry, which our vessels are enabled to carry at a comparatively low rate of freight at present, in consequence of their obtaining deck loads of empty oil barrels for United States ports, which traffic would be destroyed were foreign oil imported in bulk.

Your memorialists would, therefore, earnestly and most respectfully pray that this Bill be not passed, the passing of which would result in a serious loss to the local capital, and to the advantage of a foreign corporation.

This petition is signed very largely by the representative merchants of the city of St. John, not only interested in that trade, but in the coasting and lumber business as well. In addition, I may say that the day before yesterday I received the following telegram which I will read to the House:

ST. JOHN, N.B., 28th March, 1893.

J. A. CHESLEY, Esq.

We strongly deprecate any change in regulations to permit importation of oil in tank vessels, or steamers, as it would be prejudicial to the interest of the trade of the Maritime provinces, and would urge all opposition possible on your part.

If this honourable House knew the character of the men who signed that telegram as well as I do, they would not hesitate a moment as to what should be done with this Bill or as to any amendment offered to the House to allow this oil to be imported in tank steamers or vessels. This telegram is from the representative merchants of the city, and I daresay the hon. member for Yarmouth is acquainted with many of them and knows many of them by reputation. It is largely signed by gentlemen of his own party, Liberals in Dominion politics, and the reasons set forth in that petition are those which induced these people to send this telegram. We have in the Maritime provinces a large coasting trade with the ports of New York and Boston. Our vessels carry cargoes of lumber, lime and timber of one kind or another to these ports. Competition is keen, freights are low, and anything in the way of a return cargo helps the vessel out. If she cannot get a return cargo, she must return in ballast, and that is the reason people interested in shipping wish to keep out tank steamers and vessels. On the other hand, the local trade in oil in St. John object to the oil being imported in tank vessels or steamers, on the ground that such a course will destroy their trade. They are residents of the city, they are large tax-payers, and their trade will be destroyed in that line by the distribution of this oil being taken out of their hands. It has been said, I do not know with what degree of truthfulness—I am not personally interested in the trade myself—that if oil were allowed to be imported into the Maritime provinces in tank vessels and steamers the Standard Oil Company would own the steamers, would bring the oil into the Maritime ports in bulk, barrel it, and distribute it, and thus destroy the local trade. That statement may not be worth anything, it may be wholly inaccurate, but they argue that such has been done in sections in the United States where the company have been allowed to bring in oil in bulk in that way. So far as I am personally concerned I am simply voicing the feelings and sentiments expressed in this petition and telegram. These gentlemen who sent this telegram evidently had the provisions of the Bill before them, and knew what they were talking about. They simply say they do not want any change made in the Act which will permit oil to be imported in tank vessels and steamers. When this question was before the House some time ago, I hoped the Government would be able to reduce the duty on the oil itself. This they have not done. They have lightened the burden to some extent by reducing the inspection fee, and I hope they will see their way clear to go a little further and reduce the duty to some extent. That they have not yet done, but the inspection being reduced to 10 cents a package will make a certain saving to the people; and if the Bill passes as it is before the House, I think it will meet the views at all events of the people I represent.

Mr. GILLIES. I regret, to a certain extent, the step I must take to-day in connection with the amendment to the Bill. I declare at once that I must vote for the amendment. I gave my hon. friend the Controller of Inland Revenue notice of the conflict between the Bill he is now promoting and the statement made by the Minister of Finance on the 14th February. And it is a conflict between the statement of the Minister of Finance and the action of the Controller of Inland Revenue to-day that I leave them to reconcile. Now, the hon. Minister of Finance, when bringing down this measure on the 4th of February, speaking upon the very subject legislated upon here, namely, the importation of coal oil, said:

There is a straight protection on oil of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per imperial gallon, exactly equivalent to the 6 cents per wine gallon which was upon it before the present rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per imperial gallon was made. There is, outside of that, a condition imposed upon trade and transport which has the effect of protecting that industry to a large extent, possibly to the extent of 2 cents or 3 cents per gallon, arising from the fact that transport is limited to certain vessels and in certain directions, and that the oil is subject to inspection, of course. This is outside of the straight protection, and what the Government propose to do—

And I direct the attention of my learned friend to this, and ask him to reconcile his action in promoting this Bill with the statement of the Finance Minister:

—and they have thought over this matter very carefully, is to propose to the House that the transport shall be free and that the straight duty shall remain for the present as it is.

I want to know from the learned gentleman (Mr. Wood) who has proposed this Bill, how comes it that he now asks this House to pass a Bill allowing the transportation of this commodity that is used so much by the people, in one way only? Why restrict the methods of transportation? Why in the world, if my steamer—I have no steamer, as a matter of fact—happens to be on the Delaware or any other port where coal oil is shipped, with tanks on board ready to load coal oil for any point in the Maritime provinces, or any port in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, why should I be deprived, or why should any ship-owner be deprived, of the liberty to ship or load that coal oil, while the right is given to the railway, which has coal oil tanks, the same as those on board the steamer, to ship? Is not that class legislation of the worst kind? Why my hon. friend should bring down this Bill I cannot understand. What purpose does it serve? What interest does it serve? Certainly not the interests of the consumer; therefore it must be the interests of class transporters or common load carriers. I would like to draw the attention of the House to another point, and that is that there are oil merchants in the Maritime provinces who do not agree with those mentioned by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley). I could not understand the hon. gentleman's argument at all. He tried to argue a point as to return freights. We are not here legislating for return freights at all. We are here simply to see that fair-play is shown between common carriers, in the interests of the people. The moment we pass this Bill allowing the common carrier by land to carry or transport what the common carrier by water is prohibited from carrying or transporting, we establish class legislation of the worst kind. Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to read a letter that was placed in my hands by a party from the city of Halifax. I think if the hon. members from that city are in the House they will recognize the names as being those of persons pretty well up as authorities, so far as this question is concerned. I believe, for that matter, they are supporters of the present Government, and, therefore, their testimony will be taken as stronger and more impartial. This is a letter from Messrs. Shatford Bros., a very important wholesale oil firm in the metropolitan city of my province, and which I will now read to the House, and will ask the attention of hon. members to the views therein set forth :

HALIFAX, N.S., 4th March, 1893.

J. A. GILLIES, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa, Canada.

DEAR SIR,—We take the liberty of directing your attention, in conjunction with other Maritime members of Parliament, to the proposed change in the importation of kerosene oil.

Hitherto, importers were compelled to import oil, in American made barrels not over fifty gallons, on which was paid a duty of 40 cents per barrel and 30 cents per barrel inspection fee.

The Finance Minister, in his Budget address on behalf of the Government, proposed to allow the importation of oil in bulk, but it is now reported for a fact the importation of oil in bulk will be restricted to "tank cars only."

For the following reasons, and in the trade interests of this province, we ask your interference and influence with the Government to prevent such restrictions being placed on the importation of oil, and beg you to insist on no law being made that will interfere with the importing of oil in tank steamers, or by the cheapest route and manner.

1st. Owing to the long distance from American refineries, the importation of oil in "tank cars only," the change proposed in the law, while benefiting the upper provinces, would not benefit this province or any of the Maritime provinces.

2nd. The natural route for importing goods from the United States to this country is by water, and, in justice, no restrictions should be placed on oil that is not on other goods.

3rd. The presumed saving of duty on barrel and inspection fee would be more than taken up by the long distance freight. Thus the consumer of oil in Nova Scotia and the Maritime provinces would receive no benefit by the proposed change.

4th. By restricting the importation of oil in "bulk" to "tank cars only," it is a clear discrimination against the Maritime provinces and in the interests of the railroads.

5th. The restriction of importation of oil in "bulk" to "tank cars only," would not cheapen the price of oil here, and importing would be done as at present. Whereas if importing could be done by tank steamers, the industry of making barrels and the establishment of tanking stations in different parts of Nova Scotia, would be accomplished.

If time permitted, we could send a strong petition to the Government opposing such restrictions being placed on Maritime trade, as considerable indignation has been aroused by the obnoxious proposition.

By giving this matter your earnest and special attention, you will confer a benefit on the oil consumers of your province, and in the interests of trade generally.

All of which we respectfully submit.

Yours very truly,
SHATFORD BROS.

Mr. CHESLEY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is not quoting from the agents of the Standard Oil Company in Mr. GILLIES.

Halifax? Are these gentlemen not the agents of the Standard Oil Company?

Mr. GILLIES. I think I said from whom the letter was—Messrs. Shatford Bros., of the city of Halifax—and it is not for me or for the hon. gentleman to inquire what particular company they represent. As a matter of fact, I do not know. I state as a gentleman and a member of this House, that I do not know whether the Standard Oil Company has a single agent in the whole province of Nova Scotia, and I care not whether they have or not. I give you the names of these gentlemen; they are men prominent in the trade, and I think it is a piece of—well, I will not characterize the hon. gentleman's interruption as it deserves. But, supposing they were agents of the Standard Oil Company, has that anything to do with the question? The question is simply this: Are we going to legislate here in such a way as will increase the cost of this commodity to a people who are constantly using it? The question whether the Standard Oil Company has an agent here or there has nothing to do with the question before the House. Are you going to prevent a steamer or vessel, built for the purpose of carrying oil into this country, from doing so, while the railway may carry it freely? That is what you will do if you pass this Bill, and that course would be unjustifiable, in my humble opinion. Why should you do it? You must be playing into the hands of some party. If you are not doing that, you are trying to benefit some people better known by the Government, but not named in this Bill. I would like the Minister of Finance to say how he reconciles his action with the words of his deputy, and before this Bill passes the Minister of Finance should answer my question in this regard. In the name of common sense, why has this Bill come down here under his authority, asking us to saddle an untold and unknown imposition upon the people? Why? Simply that some hidden party or other may be benefited. Now, last year we imported into Canada, in round numbers, 5,000,000 gallons of oil, and of that quantity the lower provinces took about 2,000,000 gallons. That quantity, multiplied by 7½ cents, will give you the exact duty we pay. The Government have given us distinct promises that they would reduce the burdens upon the people in respect to the duty upon this article. With this Bill, however, they attempt to go back upon that promise. Why do you come down here on the last days of March and go contrary to the promises you made six weeks ago? I would be sorry indeed to put any views before this House that would not bear the light of day; I would be sorry indeed to make a single statement that could not be borne out by the facts. I say, if we endorse the action of the Government in accepting this Bill, we will be doing a wrong to the country, we will be stultifying the Minister of Finance and be putting him in a false position; and I would not be willingly a party to that, and I would be sorry if he would compel me to occupy so silly a position. The fact is I would not do it for him or any other person. I say further, that if there is one single reason that can be given in support of this Bill, I will vote for it. I am not making a political question of this Bill. I am not here as a machine politician; I would not remain here five minutes as a machine politician; but I am here to look after the interests of the people of this country, and I ask members from both sides of this Chamber to vote down what I deliberately designate one of the most iniquitous measures that was ever introduced into a legislative assembly.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Gillies) says he will support this Bill, if we can give him any good reasons for doing so. At first, I shared somewhat the feelings of the hon. gentleman in regard to this measure, but, upon reflection, I have changed my opinion upon the subject, and I think the Bill is right. I will give the hon. gentleman very good reason for voting for this Bill as it stands. His objection appeared to me to rest almost entirely upon the fact that we were legislating against a certain class of shipping. Well, even if that were the case, we are simply legislating against foreign steamers, in favour of our provincial coasting schooners, and I think such legislation would justify every Maritime provinces member, at all events, in supporting the Bill. But, beside all that, there does not really appear to me to be hardship to the consumers, in allowing the matter to stand as this Bill proposes. The coasting schooners, as the hon. gentleman said, carry oil on their return cargo, and carry it at a very low rate, a rate, I believe, that seldom exceeds 20 cents a barrel, which is not more than $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a gallon. I do not think any tank steamers will carry oil at a cheaper rate than that. The only advantage in bringing it in a tank steamer, would be to save the duty of 40 cents on the barrel, which would be about 1 cent a gallon, or scarcely 1 cent a gallon. That might be an advantage to certain large centres. Tank steamers could only come to large centres, like St. John and Halifax; I do not think they could touch at any other port in the Maritime provinces. A tank steamer carrying freight at this low rate, would have to bring about three months' supply for the whole Maritime provinces in one cargo.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What of that?

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I say it can be distributed to the small ports. It would have to go to one or two central ports, like St. John or Halifax, and there, perhaps, people could get the oil a fraction of a cent cheaper. But before that oil can be sold in any outport, it has to be barrelled and re-shipped. We know that schooners now coming in from the United States, bring oil to all the different outports, in my own county, such places as Moncton, Dorchester and Sackville; they will bring it for about the same freight rate as to St. John. It might be, as I say, some advantage in a central port, where the tank steamer came, but it could be of no advantage to the consumers generally throughout the Maritime provinces to have it brought in that way. The only good I see that could be accomplished, would be to transfer the trade from the provincial coasting vessels to foreign steamers, and I think there is no good reason for us adopting legislation which would even render that possible.

Mr. CHESLEY. The hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Gillies) has seen fit to read to the House a letter received from a Halifax gentleman favouring the importation of oil in tank vessels and tank steamers. I think it is only fair that the House should hear the petition received from Halifax merchants and others against the importation of oil in bulk by tank vessels or tank steamers. This petition was sent here about the same time as the St. John petition. The Halifax petition uses even stronger language than the St. John petition, protesting against the admission of foreign oil in bulk. I will read the petition:

That in the past the illuminating oil business of the Maritime provinces, both Canadian and Foreign in barrels, has largely been done through the wholesale grocers, satisfactory to consumers, who have been well served.

That the Bill now before Parliament asking for the admission of foreign oil in bulk, is promoted, as your memorialists are informed and believe, by an agent of the Standard Oil Company of New York, and not as the result of any effort on the part of the legitimate traders.

That the policy of the Standard Oil Company has been one of monopoly, and they have done everything possible at each point where they have been located, to kill off competition at any cost. In the United States they have tank wagons, not only for selling the oil in cities and towns, but throughout the country districts, to retailers and consumers, in any small quantity, with the object of destroying competition, and thereby removing trade away from its legitimate channels; and not to cheapen the cost of oil to the consumers, but so as to enable them to increase the price where they have succeeded in killing off competition. This they are enabled to do by reason of their large capital, and ability to establish stations at chosen points for carrying large stocks in bulk; as also by selling below cost, until they succeed in their object of getting control of the whole trade, when they resort to the highest price obtainable.

Your memorialists would therefore earnestly, but respectfully ask that this bill be not passed, the passage of which would result in a monopoly to a foreign corporation at the cost of legitimate trade, and a serious loss to those engaged in it.

These are the views of merchants, and they constitute a fair answer to the remarks of the hon. member for Richmond and the hon. member for Yarmouth in favour of bringing in oil by tank steamers.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood from the hon. gentleman's previous speech that he was against the amendment of the hon. member for Yarmouth; but I now understand he is also opposed to the Bill.

Mr. CHESLEY. No; I am only making those statements to show the feeling of the Maritime provinces.

Mr. LAURIER. Is the hon. gentleman in favour or against the Bill?

Mr. CHESLEY. I am against oil coming in by tank steamers or tank vessels.

Mr. LAURIER. The argument submitted by the hon. gentleman, and supported by letters read by him, applies not only to the amendment of the hon. member for Yarmouth but to the whole Bill. If his argument means anything, it is this, that there should be no importation by tank steamers.

Mr. CHESLEY. I think we are dealing with the Bill before the House as it is, and not with something imaginary.

Mr. LAURIER. Oil comes in on tank cars now.

Mr. CHESLEY. It can be brought in in tank cars from the United States and from Canada.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. In addition to the large petition read to-day, an equally large petition has been received from Prince Edward Island, including the signatures of the shippers and merchants of that province. I need not read it; but I may say that the people who have signed it are people who are largely interested in the mercantile shipping business. There are two reasons why this Bill should pass as it is. The first is, that the consumers of the Lower provinces want the Bill as it is.

Mr. MULOCK. Not the consumers.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. They do; and I may say that not only the vessel-owners, but the consumers will not be any worse off when this Bill becomes law. The only objection ever brought before this House by any representative body is by the Standard Oil Company. I will read a short extract from a newspaper in the United States representing the paints and oil interests, and which represents interests in the United States that are opposed to the Standard Oil Company. It has been stated that the effect of the legislation proposed would be to place the trade in the hands of the Standard Oil Company. If we did anything to advance that interest we would be stirring up a hornet's nest beyond question, because wherever the Standard Company has taken possession in the United States the result has been that the price of oil has been increased. Let me now quote from this American newspaper, representing the paints and oil industry, whose remarks bear out the statements contained in the petition read by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley), as follows:—

We appreciate the fact that it would be policy upon the part of this country to have free entry into Canada for its crude and refined petroleum or any and all other products of our soil and workshops. It would be considered patriotic, therefore, for the "Review" to advocate the abolition by Canada of the duty which the Standard is working to have removed. But in the present instance there is a very large nigger in the wood pile which the public do not see. If the independent petroleum interests here were as powerful as the Standard, and would receive their share of the benefit, it would be quite another thing, and would inure to the advantage of this country; but, as the petroleum industry exists in these United States, the advantages of free entry into Canada would only fill the coffers of a corporation whose existence is a menace to the prosperity of our country, an organization which violates its laws with impunity, tramples on the rights of its citizens, bankrupts all honest competitors that it can, and is un-American in all its instincts.

It is stated that refined petroleum from these states is preferred to the Canadian refined, and is purchased by the Canadian even though it costs ten cents a gallon at retail more than the product of their home-wells. If this is so—if it sells anyway—why need Canada reduce its revenue in favour of a foreign corporation which would use its newly acquired power to crush out all Canadian competition, with the eventuality of charging the public there even higher prices than they now pay?

These statements in the petition are borne out by one of the trade papers published in Chicago. I contend that this Bill should pass, in the first place because the Maritime provinces do not want vessels to come with tank oil, because one of the Standard Company's vessels would supply a whole district in one trip, and the return-carrying trade from the United States would be absolutely destroyed, and there would be no return cargoes, while at the present moment when 50,000 or 60,000 barrels are carried our coasting vessels obtain return freights; and, in the second place, because we would assist the Standard Oil corporation to obtain possession of and control our market, and to do so is to give the possession of the Canadian trade and afford them an opportunity of increasing the prices to consumers, very much to the disadvantage of the latter.

Mr. FLINT. I desire to offer a few remarks in reply to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley). The petition read and the names given are only valuable so far as regards the weight of argument they possess. No matter how respectable the gentlemen signing the petition may be, their names add additional weight according to the force of the arguments they present. So far as I am acquainted with them, they are fair representatives of the commercial interests connected with the oil trade. The argument that has been advanced is in the first place against the Standard Oil Company of the United States, of which I know nothing more than the information that is acceptable to the general public. The petitions that have been read to the House were not petitions prepared with respect to this Bill, but with regard to another measure altogether, and that was in opposition to the introduction of oil in bulk, and consequently the value of the petition disappears entirely. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley) was under the impression that oil could be imported in bulk, previous to the passage of this resolution; but this is a new position taken by the Government that oil may be imported in tank cars. Is it not exceedingly strange that hon. members from the Maritime provinces are anxious to protect those provinces from gigantic corporations such as the Standard Oil Company, while they are willing to open the markets of Ontario to the same corporations? If the people of Ontario are to enjoy the benefits of the competition of the Standard Oil Company, the people of the Maritime provinces are entitled to that same competition. In regard to the fees paid for inspection of Canadian oil, I am satisfied that they must have been paid in other inspection districts; at all events, it is certain that the bulk of all the oil consumed in the Maritime provinces is imported American oil, and no doubt the bulk of it is the product of the Standard Oil Company. All of this oil comes in barrels imported from the United States, and is either the product of the Standard Oil Company or some other American oil company, and the change proposed, and the permission granted to bring oil in in tank cars will not affect to any extent the Standard Oil Company or any other American company engaged in the business. I desire to point out that both the petitions read were drawn up in the interest of the oil companies of Canada, and the Standard Company, being the principal company in the United States, is held up as a bogey, with which to alarm the oil consumers in the Maritime provinces. Referring again to the arguments contained in the petition, I may say they are the old arguments in the interests of certain classes of people, either steam-boat owners or schooner owners, but, at all events, they are opposed to the interests of the consuming public. I was pleased to observe that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley) was careful in presenting the statement of certain petitioners, not to make those statements his own. The interests of the vast bulk of the people of the Maritime provinces, 700,000 or 800,000 people, must be consulted in preference to the interests represented by special classes, such as schooner owners, in the community. It is the old protectionist theory and policy to endeavour to place one class against another, and in the opinion of such people, trade and commerce may be promoted by setting one class against another. I am not prepared to interfere with the interests of those engaged in bringing in oil in barrels. At all events, the interests of the consuming classes should be promoted. We contend that the concession given by the Government is so small as to be almost infinitesimal, but small as it is, we claim that the people of the Maritime provinces have as much right to that benefit as the consumers in the upper provinces. If, in conferring those benefits on the consuming classes, other classes are obliged to extend their trade in other directions, to make up for the changed circumstances, they must bear the loss. It has always been found, when any important change has been made, conferring great benefits on the people, that if it interfered with the old privileges and advantages, it would be stoutly resisted. I contend that, as regards imported goods, that are absolute necessities, if it is advantageous to the people of the upper provinces to have such goods come in in bulk, whether from the Standard Oil Company, or any other American company, then Parliament has the right to give the consuming classes of the Maritime provinces that advantage, in order not to discriminate in favour of one portion of the Dominion, as compared with the other. I am not speaking in the interests of one class, but in the interest of the whole consuming people, and I believe if the Government will so reduce the burden on this article of commerce, this household necessity in the Maritime provinces, and strike off the restrictions surrounding the trade on this article, they will be conferring a boon on the people far outweighing any injury or temporary disturbance to a small class in consequence of this change. It is on this account that I have moved this amendment, and I trust that the Committee will accept it in the interest of the people of the Maritime provinces.

Mr. MONET. (Translation.) I may be allowed to say a word in connection with a point which has escaped notice in this debate. The first part of the third section allows petroleum to be imported in tank cars, but the last part obliges the retail merchant to barrel it up, in order to have it tested as to quantity and quality. I would offer the suggestion that leave be given to test the oil in the tank car itself, in order to avoid this barrelling up, on which an inspection fee is collected; for some merchants are provided with large reservoirs where they might directly receive their oil. From the information supplied by certain merchants, the leakage out of a barrel of from 45 to 50 gallons amounts to two or three gallons per month, in winter, and over four or five gallons in summer. It is a waste both for the merchant and the consumer. The means how to avoid this loss would be to allow the test or inspection taking place in the tank cars; and to allow the retail merchant to receive directly into his reservoir the petroleum as imported. The hon. Controller of Inland Revenue (Mr. Wood) has told me that the Governor-General in Council was empowered to enact a regulation to the effect of remedying the drawback I have just pointed out. I call the attention of the French Ministers to this state of things, and ask a remedy for it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman was good enough to see me this forenoon regarding this matter. I have only to say that there is no objection whatever to allowing the oil to be put into tanks at the point of shipment. That is necessary, because, when it remains in barrels for a considerable length of time, there is a good deal of loss from evaporation and leakage. I may say to my hon. friend that the department has power under section 31 of the original Act to make regulations authorizing that to be done; and at the city of Winnipeg it is done to-day in the case of Canadian oil, which is taken there in tank cars. I can assure him that that request will be attended to.

Mr. MONET. Is it the intention of the Government that such a regulation will be adopted for the whole country?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes; where it is required.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the Government nothing to say with regard to the proposed amendment with reference to tank ships.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think it is quite clear that we are not prepared to accept the amendment. The arguments presented by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Chesley), and my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), are quite convincing that it is in the best interest of the Maritime provinces that the Bill should pass in its present shape. With regard to the second point of the amendment relating to the designation of the places to which petroleum may be shipped; I have only to say that this is a precautionary measure. When tank cars come in, the oil cannot be inspected at the port of entry, but it can be inspected at the place to which it is transported; and that being the case, it is very necessary that an officer should be on hand who has sufficient knowledge to do the work of testing. If it were allowed to be shipped to every corner of the Dominion, it would find its way to places where there are no officers of the Inland Revenue Department. As a matter of fact, there are officers of excise in all the large places, and in most of the smaller places.

Mr. LAURIER. I apprehend that the privilege of importing coal oil in car tanks is granted for the purpose of cheapening the cost of coal oil to the consumer. If that be the object, it is manifest that the object will be still more promoted if the same privilege is extended to ships. This is recognized by the hon. gentlemen themselves; but they state that the Standard Oil Company would be the owners of those ships, and would flood the country with their own oil and establish the monopoly, and then raise the price. But if the hon. gentleman reflects a little, he will see that there is no argument in that. If this amendment is adopted, and the Standard Oil Company flood the country with their oil and afterwards raise the price, it will be open to the parties of whose competition we have heard to-day, to import oil in barrels. That is allowable under the law. Therefore, the very difficulty which is apprehended could be defeated at any time. The argument defeats itself.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand from the observations made by the Controller of Inland Revenue that he and the Government have come to the conclusion to resist this amendment in consequence of the arguments of the hon. member for St. John city and county (Mr. Chesley), and the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood). I would, therefore, like to ask the hon. member for St. John whether, in urging the House to resist this method whereby the people may get cheap oil, he is offering that advice in the interests of the consumers or not. On behalf of what class does he present that argument?

Mr. CHESLEY. I will tell the House the reasons why I am urging that. They are two. One is that some of the most representative merchants in the city of St. John have asked me. The other is that there is no petition or telegram or letter from the consumers or from anybody else representing them. Therefore, I think the feeling is that the consumers will be fairly well taken care of.

Mr. MULOCK. May I put a similar question to the hon. member for Westmoreland? I am in that judicial frame of mind that I want to know the arguments and the reasons behind them in order that I may arrive at the right conclusion. Will the hon. member for Westmoreland tell me whether he speaks on behalf of the consumers, or what class?

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I am advocating the interests of two classes in the Maritime provinces—first, the vessel owners, and, secondly, the general consuming public of the Maritime provinces.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not put the general consuming public first. He puts first the carriers, the favoured few, and subsequently the general many. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley) does not speak for the consumers at all, because he has not heard from them, and the Controller of Inland Revenue tells us that, although one great class in the city, interested above all others in cheap oil, the consuming class, are not represented, and have not been heard, yet he comes to the conclusion that they shall still be kept out of cheap oil. The course taken by these hon. gentlemen reminds me of the argument advanced in England against the introduction of railways. The owners of stage-coaches and the publicans who carried on business along the lines of travel were very much interested in keeping up the old state of things, and they got the farmers to petition against the introduction of railways, on the ground that the steam engines, like wild, fierce and unknown animals, plunging through the country, would so terrify the domestic animals that they would cease to be productive.

Mr. FLINT. I wish to emphasize one point, and that is that the only ground on which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Chesley) and the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Lister) objects to this amendment, is that certain petitions are here which moved their minds in that direction. It will be remembered that those petitions are against the provisions of this Bill. They are against the importation of oil in tank cars and strongly against the principle of importing oil in bulk. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Lister), in his able address, in which he reviewed the whole oil question, took strong grounds against the importation of oil in bulk, and although his pretension is overborne by the Minister of Finance, yet, he, in conjunction with his associates from the Maritime provinces, wheels around into line and supports this method of importing oil as best in the interest of the Maritime provinces.

Amendment negatived, and Bill reported.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. FLINT moved :

That the Bill be not now read the third time but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend clause 15 of section 8, by striking out the words "designate the places at which petroleum for illuminating purposes may be imported in tank cars," and substitute therefor : "making departmental regulations under which petroleum for illuminating purposes may be imported in tank cars or steamers."

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Before the second reading of this Bill is carried, I wish to say that while I have not pressed the two-cent-a-mile amendment this session I intend to bring it up next session and to go fully into it and try to carry it through the House. The sentiment among the people in favour of this amendment is very strong. A Bill of this kind passed the New York Legislature, and in other State Legislatures the question is coming up. I shall bring it up in this House next session.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sorry that this Bill has come up in the House on the last day of the session. As presented in the Senate it contained one important amendment to the Railway Act which I am glad to see has been dropped, but it still contains some provisions of an objectionable character. I do not intend to weary the House with any general observations, but merely to call attention to one particular clause in the Bill. Like other legislation which will not stand criticism, this comes down at an unfortunate time, so far as the general public is concerned. I refer particularly to section 4 of the Bill, which provides as follows :—

4. Section two hundred and eighty-seven of The Railway Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor :—

"287. All actions or suits for indemnity for any damages or injury sustained by reason of the railway or the working thereof, shall be commenced within one year next after the time when such supposed damage is sustained, or, if there is continuation of damage, within one year next after the doing or committing of such damage ceases, and not afterwards, the defendants may plead the general issue and give this Act and the special Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon."

What change in the law is made by that section? It happens that the railway companies have had special legislation from time to time giving them special privileges over and above those of the general public. For example, in the province of Ontario, there are limitations of varying length to actions. In regard to railways, the limitations are much less than in other cases. On what principle of fairness is it provided that the right of action against a railway company shall expire unless action is taken within a year, and yet the cause of action survives for years if it is against any other incorporated company or against an individual. The law, as it is on the Statute-book, is I think, unfair, and if there was to be any change at all it should have been in the direction of repeal. But instead of repealing it you are now extending it. To what degree you are extending it time only can tell; but you are extending it or we would not have the Bill here to-day. The old law was that actions claiming damages sustained "by reason of the railway" must be begun within a year. You now provide for the same, if the cause of action arises "by reason of the railway or the working thereof." What cause of action is not included in these words? Is there any one can tell us the far-reaching effect of that section and why the railway company should escape if the action is not begun within a year, while a private citizen or another incorporated company would continue liable for a much longer period, according to the laws of the various provinces. I object to this discrimination. It is very much on a par with much of the legislation that has been enacted by this House for some years past in favour of concentrated incorporate power. Such legislation is unfair and is not worthy of a representative body which is supposed, at all events, to speak on behalf of the people as a whole. I hope the Minister will not press section 4, but that when we go into committee on the Bill he will be content to drop the section and to leave the law in this respect as it is and not increase the privileges or extend the powers of corporations, but leave these corporations as nearly as possible on the same footing with all other contracting parties and liable to answer in damages for any of their shortcomings.

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman I may say that instead of making the wonderful change of the law which he believes, this Bill is simply for the purpose of making the law clear, as it was intended to be. The first clause makes a mere verbal change, to make it clear that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has jurisdiction over the mode of crossing. The second clause is to make the Railway Act in respect of crossings applicable to lines of the same railway crossing one another. The third clause is to carry out an arrangement made with the Government of Ontario and this Government to leave the electric railway in the Niagara Falls Park under the control of the Ontario Government. The fourth clause changes the existing section so that instead of "all actions or suits for indemnity or any injury sustained by reason of the railway" the words "or working thereof" shall be added. Some of the courts held that "damages or injury sustained by reason of the railway" meant damages or injury sustained during the construction of the railway. This change merely makes it clear what was originally intended by the Act. In the first place, the Bill was intended to cover damages sustained by reason of the railway during construction or after its completion. This is simply to make the law clear.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. MULOCK. I think that part of this clause is "ultra vires" of this Parliament. Line 12 says that no railway shall cross another railway, however incorporated, by Dominion, provincial, or other authority, without complying with certain regulations which this Bill proposes to enact. I do not think that this Parliament can control the powers that may be conferred by any other legislative body upon a corporation that it has created. Each legislative body is supreme. A legislature can incorporate a railway company and give it certain powers and privileges. There is nothing in the Confederation Act saying that, where the Dominion Parliament incorporates a railway, and where the exercise of those powers might, to some extent, interfere with the exercise of similar powers of a company incorporated by a legislature—I say there is nothing in the Confederation Act saying which shall be the senior company, or which shall defer to the other. So, when we say that any railway company, no matter how created, shall bow to their will and observe the regulations we may seek to impose, I think we are attempting to enact a clause that is "ultra vires" of this Legislature. It is true, this provision is not a new one; it appears in the previous Act referred to, but nevertheless, it is equally, I think, open to the objection I have mentioned.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. HAGGART. As the hon. gentleman says, it is no new provision, and it is the only clause which gives us the power of dealing with these matters before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. It is thought that the language is rather involved. In the Act it was "unless the place and mode of protection of the proposed crossing." The simple effect of the Act is to leave out "of protection."

On section 2,

Mr. HAGGART. There is a special regulation in reference to an electric street railway track crossing another, that is all. The regulation is embodied in the general Act, and is only to make it apply to two lines of the same railway.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this provision original with this Parliament?

Mr. HAGGART. It is the same in the Railway Act, except the application to an electric railway.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a difference between applying a regulation to a street railway and a steam railway. We all know that. There are many regulations in the Railway Act that would be quite absurd, if applied to street railways. I am afraid it will be found inconvenient, and I think you will be called upon to modify it in a short time.

Mr. HAGGART. Possibly. I know of no other way than for the car to stop and the conductor to go forward and see that the track is clear.

On section 3.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this electric line of railway to the Niagara Falls Park likely to be used as a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think so. This clause was put in at the instance of the Ontario Government. Mr. Mowat was down here, and, I believe, saw the Minister of Justice, and he wished this railway to be excepted from the general Railway Act, as they own the park and control the electric railway, I understand. There was special legislation in the Ontario Legislature, which you will remember. This railway had not to make fences or cattle-guards or any of those things, being purely an electric railway. It was thought not advisable to bring it under the provisions of the Railway Act.

Mr. CHARLTON. I doubt whether it is proper to except this road from the provisions of the Railway Act. It is a general impression there that it will be used by the Canadian Pacific Railway; in fact, there was sharp practice in getting the charter, and the Canadian Pacific Railway got the inside track of all the other lines. They have laid the line with sixty-six pound rails, which is far too heavy for an electric line.

Mr. HAGGART. I have specially guarded against the road becoming a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because I say "as long as it continues to be an electric railway." They wished the privilege of being allowed to use steam, but I refused to go so far as that.

On section 4,

Mr. CHARLTON. Why should this limitation be imposed? A farmer may have stock killed, and he may not be aware of his remedy, or he may not be in a condition to attempt to secure that remedy. I doubt the propriety of barring his action after the expiration of a year.

Mr. MULOCK. Drop this section; it will make a lot of discussion. The words are most comprehensive. They exceed any interpretation that has ever been given to a clause, so far as I know, by any court. The Minister says that the original Act from which it is taken, meant something. Well, it has received a judicial interpretation, and that is the only way we can find out what it means. Now, if the construction placed upon the Act by the courts, was that this limitation of actions applied simply to a road in process of construction, what is it proposed to do? It is a new declaration in the working of railways, that there should be a statute of limitation for one year. According to this provision, any case arising in connection with a person injured by reason of the operating of the railway, must be brought within one year. That is not the law between individuals, that is not the position of private citizens. Why should there be special legislation affecting railways in this particular? Such must be class legislation, legislation in favour of concentrated power, and made at the expense of the many. Take the case of a farmer whose lands are traversed by a railway. That railway company is obliged to operate the railway in a certain manner, and it must maintain the culverts and other works, and fulfil other obligations connected with the operating of the road. A farmer's cattle may stray on the track, or his lands may be flooded, or other injury may be caused him, on account of the railway company not complying with the law. Yet, under this Act, the railway company will not be liable, as a citizen will be liable, but its liability will cease unless the farmer possesses such knowledge of law as will lead him to enter an action within one year. Every man knows the ordinary limitation of actions, the six-years' clause in Ontario, and shorter dates in other cases; but it is unfortunate that these should be complicated by the present provisions. I hope the Minister will take another year to consider this Bill, for this is due to the public, as the Bill only came down to this House today. This Bill was introduced into the Senate during the present month, and only very recently have its provisions become known to the public.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think there is the slightest doubt that the present law is to the same effect as this Bill, which is, in fact, only to remove doubts in regard to the law. The majority of the judges have decided in this direction, but a few other judges have expressed a contrary opinion.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a communication from His Excellency the Governor-General's Secretary, as follows:—

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S SECRETARY,
OTTAWA, 30th March, 1893.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor-General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament, on Saturday, the 1st April, at 3 o'clock, p.m.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

J. ST. AUBYN, Major,
Governor-General's Secretary.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the House of Commons.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. LISTER. Before the business of the evening commences, I ask the permission of the House to offer a word or two in explanation of a matter affecting myself. I do so to-night, because I shall not have an opportunity of doing so again, inasmuch as I am obliged to leave Ottawa in the morning. I consider this as a matter affecting myself, as well as a very large, influential and high-minded portion of the community of this country. In the issue of the "Empire" of 30th March, there is an article headed:

"Slandering the Judiciary," which reads as follows :—

There are some noticeable and unpleasant features in the debate on the Quebec Judiciary on Tuesday. That a notorious and unscrupulous politician like Tarte should take it upon himself to attack and grossly slander the judges of his own province is perhaps not surprising. This rather nasty specimen of the free lance in politics has shown on more occasions than this that his chief, if not only, object is to acquire notoriety, no matter at what cost or what sacrifice of decency. But that a member of Parliament from this province should be so coarsely indecent as to assert, as did Mr. Lister, that "the inferior judges of Ontario have paid for their appointments," is not only surprising, but rather shocking to one's sense of what is seemly and right, especially when it is considered that Mr. Lister is himself a member of the bar. We have no hesitation in characterizing the statement as a gross falsehood and a piece of brutal cowardice in its vague generality. Our judges, and we may fervently thank heaven therefor, are above reproach and need no defence from us. But the gravity of the situation lies in this : Mr. Lister is one of the prominent men in the Grit ranks ; he has conceived this vile slander out of his own imagination, which means nothing more nor less than that in his eyes and in the eyes of his associates it would be quite feasible to appoint such creatures from among their ranks to the Bench as would be willing to buy their undeserved promotion by a round subscription to the Grit party fund.

Now, Sir, it will be seen that the "Empire" makes the statement that I said : "The inferior judges of Ontario have paid for their appointments." The language used there is not true, and if the gentleman who thought proper to pen that article had taken the trouble to read the "Hansard," he would have found I made no such statement. The statement I made was, "inferior judges in Ontario have paid for their appointments," and the statement made in the article is plainly, if there is any meaning at all to it, that I included the inferior judiciary of the province of Ontario in the statement that I made. I desire to say, in regard to so far as the judiciary of Ontario is concerned, as a body, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, in any country in the world, to find a more high-minded, upright body of men ; but I state here to-night, what I stated the other night, that certain inferior judges in Ontario had paid for their appointments. I make the statement deliberately, upon evidence that I believe warrants me in making the statement, that certain inferior judges in the province of Ontario have paid for their appointments. I make this statement under full responsibility of my position as a member of Parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is proceeding with the indulgence of the House. As my attention has been called to the question of order, I must rule that the hon. gentleman has no right to speak at this time as there is no question before the House.

Mr. LISTER. I understand so, but I will place myself in order by having the adjournment moved, if necessary, although I do not want to do so, for I am just through my remarks. I repeat here that the judiciary of Ontario is composed of as high-minded and as honourable a body of men as could be found in the world ; and I say, moreover, that the man who penned that article was guilty of a wilful slander, and he is a miserable, contemptible coward.

Mr. TARTE. I wish to call the attention of the House to an article in the Montreal "Gazette" of this morning, in which I read as follows :—

Mr. Tarte's is not the best record. Judging by sworn statements of those who acted in the matters, he profited out of the proceeds of two of the worst pieces of corruption that ever disgraced Canadian public life. Notes on which he was responsible, it has been testified, were paid out of the proceeds of the Baie des Chaleurs job, and money obtained from Contractor Whelan as the price of getting his claims for building the Quebec Court-house recognized, it has also been affirmed, was handed to him by the recipient.

So far as the first part of this statement is concerned, what took place was this : after the elections of 1891 I put my name on certain notes, as I have done before many times with my political friends on the opposite side of the House, to raise funds.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think this is going a little too far.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TARTE. As I was saying, Sir, I put my name on certain notes, the proceeds of which were to raise funds to contest elections and to protect ourselves. Our money was deposited to meet the notes when they would come due. I would do the same thing to-morrow, as I know that my opponents on the other side of the House do every day themselves. Whether Pacaud or any other person paid the notes with his money is not material to the issue, because, I say again, our money was there. I never received a cent of benefit from the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and the editor of the "Gazette" knows it. He is a member of this Chamber ; let him act like a man ; let him rise from his seat and make a statement against me. So far as the second part is concerned, it is a great deal more serious to me than the first part. The impression is conveyed there that I got money to have Whelan's claims settled. Well, Sir, it is known by the members of this House that at that time I was one of their strongest opponents of Mr. Mercier's policy. I had been asked many times to go down to Quebec as the leader of the Conservative party, because our friend Mr. Taillon did not feel disposed any longer to carry on an unequal fight. It is true, that sums of money came into my hands as treasurer of the Conservative party ; but I may say, as one of the great leaders of that party with which I have been so long connected said one day : My hands are clean. I appeal to-day to my former political friends on the other side of the House to say whether, since I have sat on this side of the House, I have given out any secret of that party. Sir, I have suffered because I have chosen many times to be silent. But there are times when silence is no longer a virtue. I challenge any member of the House here to say that I got money from that man Whelan, who is a fair second edition of Figgott. Money came into my hands, and with regard to it I am prepared to accept a jury of honour, chosen from members on the other side of the House. Money came into my hands; but money went out of my hands—not for dishonourable purposes. I must say, but for legitimate purposes. I have paid money as the joint treasurer of the party—I say again—not for illegitimate purposes, but for legitimate purposes, and the editor of the "Gazette" knows it. He is a malicious man, because he knows that not a cent of that money remained in my hands. He knows, because I am an honourable man that I am bound by those secrets of honour that honourable men never divulge. Well, Sir, I give my word of honour to the House that I never had any financial intercourse with that man Whelan. I give my word of honour that I never had a cent of money knowing that it came from him. I give my word of honour that on the occasion alluded to here I acted with the full knowledge and consent of the leaders of the party in the Legislature of Quebec. I give my word of honour that the money which came into my hands was given to the political organization of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec—to members of the House and to lawyers in connection with making up electoral lists. Sir, I have cheques and books in my possession to prove what I say. I am very reluctant to speak of these things. I have no desire to mention names; far from it. But you will understand readily that I feel strongly about this matter, because the editor of the "Gazette," I say it again, has been warned by leaders of the party opposite that I had acted like an honest man. He knows that I cannot give names—unless I am forced to do it, by an accusation brought against me in the House; in that case I would give names. But I am quite prepared to-morrow to accept as a jury any of the members of this House. Sir, the "Gazette" has many times repeated the same accusation with the full knowledge—I say it again, because it seems to me that it is a shameful thing to do—that I was not free to speak, that I was bound by honour not to speak. I hope that my statement of to-night will put an end to these malicious accusations. Sir, we may change our political allegiance; but I hold that a man who has been something in his party, who has thought proper to change his political allegiance, and who gives out the secrets of the party to which he formerly belonged, is a traitor and a coward. I appeal to my hon. friends on the other side of the House, have I ever been guilty of such a crime? I appeal to my hon. friends on this side. I am respected by them, because while coming among them I have kept sacred the secrets—although we have never committed crimes—of my political friends of past days—friends whose respect, and even in certain cases whose friendship, I have no doubt retained.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention at first to take part in this debate. But I am glad to see that the hon. member for L'Islet is out of temper, and on good ground too, as he contends that the Montreal "Gazette" has published untruths with regard to him. And I think he is out of temper on good ground; but he ought to bear in mind that this editorial was prompted by the attack directed by him against the judiciary of the province of Quebec. The members of the bench would be entitled also to be out of temper, as they are not at liberty to defend themselves, even outside of this House. General charges are made against them, before the country, and they must be silent. When members of this House feel indignant when wrongly accused, though free to meet face to face their accusers, how much more entitled to complain are they who are not free to clear themselves from unfair charges made against them by members of this House. Even on the assumption that the charges were true, they are, at all events, to my mind, entitled to a fair measure of fair play. When members of this House who are free to defend themselves, against their accusers, charging persons who are not at liberty to exonerate themselves, on the ground not of their being guilty, but of their occupying positions which forbid their doing so. Such members are not welcome to complain of their being open to reprisals. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) is free to justify himself before the country, either in this House or in the press, or on the hustings; he is free to prove that he is not guilty, which I am quite willing to admit; but our judges, what are they to do? They are not allowed to write in the press, to repulse the attacks against them; they are not able to address the people on the hustings; they are not free to come down and speak before popular meetings to contradict aspersions on their character. Discredit is thrown on them, and they have not the least opportunity to deny the charges laid at their door. They could well afford, in their turn, to say, like the member for L'Islet: I challenge you to prove your charges. I say all this is most deplorable; therefore, I seize this opportunity of showing my hon. friend the member for L'Islet what he is well aware of, namely, that it is always a course fraught with peril to attack one's neighbour, be he friend or foe. Who is the man thus struck who could say: As for me, I am not afraid, you may look about me as much as you please; I challenge you to find aught wrong with me. Mr. Speaker, I have always remarked this, namely, that the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) always preached union, peace and harmony among French-Canadians, in order to make more compact and more efficacious the constituent elements of our nationality. This union he has advocated in the press and before the popular meetings throughout the province of Quebec and we all know he is a gifted speaker, and since his entrance into this House he has gone on preaching this gospel of peace and harmony among our compatriots. Now, what part is he acting? By his accusations against the judiciary, he is preaching the contempt of the most distinguished members of the Bench, of our leading citizens and business men, of our national leaders? Is it through such a course he hopes to consolidate the work of union among Canadians, he has undertaken? I regret to have to tell here the hon. member that his attack, directed the other day against the judges, was a perfect disgrace. We are a people composed of heterogeneous elements; we should always bear this in mind. The members from the province of Ontario are too wary to follow such a course. Why, only the other day, when one of them happened to drop a word leading to believe that the bar or the bench in their province were not above suspicion, and when he understood the construction given to his remark, he hastened to state that his words conveyed no such meaning, that the bar of Ontario was a credit to the whole Dominion. Did the hon. member for L'Islet do as much? Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. He preaches a gospel of peace and union among compatriots, but he cares not whether he follows a course calculated to bring down on us the contempt of other nationalities. From the very moment we begin to talk respect for and confidence in our judiciary, we are hastening towards anarchy and revolution. Anarchy begets chicanery, multiplies lawsuits and perjury. They who follow closely our legal affairs before the courts, know something about it. The greater respect our people profess for the Bench, the better they will be, and the less of lawsuits, chicanery and perjury we will have. We ought to join hands to bring about the happy consummation. The other day, when the hon. member for L'Islet brought up this question before the House, I did not think it incumbent on me to address the House, not that I shared in the opinion that the hon. member was entitled to attack the Bench as he did—for I am satisfied, from what I know from personal experience, that our magistrates deserve all our respect, as I feel that more learned, more distinguished, more upright judges could hardly be found sitting on the Bench. Now, as the question comes again under debate, I avail myself of this opportunity—late though the hour, at this last stage of our debates—to say that then, as now, I deplored the attacks made on the Bench. The hon. member for L'Islet ought to repent also having brought these charges, without the proper amount of deliberation and forethought. It is a most deplorable incident in every regard.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) I feel no regret.

Mr. FOSTER. Unfortunately to-morrow is a day on which we cannot work, so that the only hours left are those from now to 12 and a portion of Saturday. I hope, therefore, this discussion which has arisen impromptu will not be carried further than necessary. It might not be improper for me to say that I regret exceedingly that, just at the last hours of the session, statements should have been made such as those we have just heard. The tongue of slander, when used against an individual by name, outside of this House, is an instrument which can deal terrible harm and injury; but it can be met by the person who is slandered and whose name is given. The one who makes the charge can be punished if it be proved slanderous, and if it be proved true, the people can judge as between the two and can visit condemnation upon the person who deserves it. But when a member of Parliament rises in his place, in the last hours of the session, and sets a statement like this afloat, which cannot be investigated in Parliament for a term of six or nine months—a statement directed not against an individual who can take it up and refute it, but generally against one or more of a body of men, not one of whom is designated—he appears to me to go outside the privilege which even a member of Parliament ought to claim for himself. It seems to me that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has done neither his duty to himself nor to the judiciary when he has contented himself with uttering a general charge of this kind, and has not gone further, and done what is plainly his duty to do, that is, impeach the recalcitrant and bring the matter to a speedy determination, so that the whole judiciary may not rest under the imputation under which they must now rest during the recess. For I presume my hon. friend intends when Parliament meets again to do his duty, as a member, knowing that such a thing exists, and impeach the judge, and have the judiciary made pure as it ought to be in this country. I do not think I have taken more time than might be given to me in making these few remarks. At the same time, I hope the discussion will not take too wide a range or a longer time than is actually necessary.

Mr. LISTER. I am very much obliged to the Finance Minister for his attempt to correct or reprove me for what he thinks is not a proper course on my part. I have had the honour of a seat in this House, I think, for eleven years, and it has been my painful duty, during some of those years, to prosecute men in the employ of this very Government. For five or six long months my whole time was taken up in preferring charges against those men and in prosecuting them before a committee of this House. It was my painful duty at the last session of Parliament to bring before the attention of the House what I considered to be, and what the country considered to be, a gross act of impropriety on the part of a county judge. I have lived to see the men whom I have prosecuted, with the exception of one, reinstated in their places. I have lived to see these men who have been proved guilty of high crimes against the state, go unwhipped and unpunished. There is no man living, who has read the evidence, who has given the slightest passing attention to the evidence, but who must see that the present Postmaster-General was guilty of the highest crimes against the commonwealth of Canada, and I have seen this hon. gentleman, who now for the time being fills the office of Finance Minister, get up in this House and whitewash the most damnable crimes that a public man in this country ever committed. What is there to induce, what is there to encourage a man to bring into the light crimes committed against the state, in the face of a party such as we have to meet here to-day? The man who brings the charges is hounded down as a slanderer, and when the charges are proved, the mechanical majority at the back of the Government get up and whitewash the gentlemen accused, and try to make him out pure and clear of all guilt. I repeat, upon my responsibility as a man, that I can prove that a judge of this country paid $2,000 for his appointment. Nay, more, I can prove that a postmaster in the employ of the Government paid $800 for his position.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going too far altogether in saying he can prove that a judge of this country paid $2,000 for his commission, unless he is prepared to proceed in the ordinary constitutional manner.

Mr. LISTER. I am prepared to proceed in the ordinary constitutional manner.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the hon. gentleman had better do so before making the accusation.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. Min—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman had better withdraw the expression.

Mr. LISTER. In deference to your wish, Sir, I withdraw the statement, until I make the formal charge; but I say that the Minister of Finance has no right to get up here and lecture me, in view of his past history. I have done my duty to the country, honestly and faithfully, in unearthing crimes against the state, and I have lived to see this House, by its action, whitewash the culprits and keep them in the highest positions in the gift of the Government. I ask again what encouragement is there to a member of this House to bring forward and prove charges, if the result is to be the hounding of that man, because that is what this article, written by that cowardly correspondent of the "Empire," amounts to. He has attempted to hound me down because I have had courage enough to stand up in this House and make charges against men inside and outside, which I have proved and can prove by further evidence, if necessary. Does the hon. gentleman want to know the name? If he does, I can give it to him, and if he wants to know further, I believe the money paid went into the Conservative funds of this country for the purpose of bribing and corrupting the electorate. Therefore, I say the Minister of Finance, in view of his past history and past conduct in this House, had no right to get up and lecture an hon. member as to what he ought to do. I know my duty as well as he. I am as responsible a man as he in every sense of the word, financially and every other way. I am capable of answering for damages, if necessary, outside of this House; but I shall not be deterred from performing my duty, as a member of this House, by any lecture or by any threat the hon. gentleman can make against me. I say that the articles written by that scribe deliberately misrepresented a statement that I made, because he would have seen, by a reference to the "Hansard," that the statement I made did not apply to the judiciary as a whole, but only to certain members of it. I say here to-night that the judiciary of Canada, as a whole, is as pure, as high-minded, and as able as any judiciary in the world; but when I say that, it does not follow that in the whole body of judges there are not some unworthy ones. Having said this much, I do not think the time of the House ought to be further taken up by me, at all events in discussing a matter which I am not responsible for bringing before the House, except in so far as I believe it to be my duty to defend myself from the wanton attack of a cowardly ruffian.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

BRANDING DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Bill (No. 125) to prevent the manufacture and sale of filled or imitation cheese, and to provide for the branding of dairy products was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the hon. Minister's attention to this section. I do not speak as an expert, but it seems we are to inflict very severe penalties for what, under certain circumstances, might not be a very serious offence. The words are:

No person shall manufacture, buy, sell, offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any cheese manufactured from or by the use of skimmed milk, to which there has been added any fat which is foreign to such milk.

Does the addition of fat foreign to the milk necessarily produce a deleterious effect in all cases?

Mr. FOSTER. It makes an inferior article—yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am desirous of doing everything that can be done in reason to encourage and protect our cheese manufacture, which is one of the most important we have. Who is responsible for the legal part of this Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I may say to my hon. friend that this Bill was prepared by the advice, and under the direction of Professor Robertson for a purpose which is patent in the Bill itself—to prevent the production of the spurious imitations of cheese that are being put upon the market. I am not an expert any more than my hon. friend, but I know that Professor Robertson has gone over the Bill very carefully.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The fine provided is "not exceeding $500 and not less than $50." That is a pretty severe punishment for what, under certain conditions, may be a comparatively venial offence.

Mr. FOSTER. We might consider the penalties when we come to that clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think the provisions of this section will be found to be just in their application upon all occasions. There is no definition here of what kind of fats may be used to incorporate with skim milk in the manufacture of cheese, and I believe that wholesome cheese can be manufactured in this way if the skim milk is enriched with fats that are not deleterious. This clause would absolutely prohibit the manufacture of cheese from skim milk enriched by any kind of fat whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. Anything foreign to the milk.

Mr. CHARLTON. I imagine there should be some definition as to the kind of fat that might be used. Cream is a fat, and other fats might possibly be used that are nearly as unobjectionable as cream. I see that later on in the Bill it is provided that cheese may be made of skim milk, but it must be branded in some way. It strikes me that this Bill is not carefully drawn, and that the prohibition of the use of fat altogether is going a little too far.

Mr. FOSTER. This Bill is represented to be of very great importance.

Mr. CHARLTON. Who drafted the clauses of this Bill, Professor Robertson?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; they are his entirely.

On section 3,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a clause that might, under some conditions, be the means of inflicting very great hardship.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose we make the maximum $200. You must have a pretty good fine or it will not be deterrent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object where there is a deleterious adulteration, but I draw a distinction between mixing the skim milk with innocent substances, and adulterating with injurious fats, and, therefore, I think the minimum penalty ought to be considerably reduced.

Mr. FOSTER. At the same time, the maximum penalty ought to be kept up, because, to a large establishment, any light fine would be a comparatively unimportant matter. I would move that the minimum penalty be $25 instead of $50, leaving the maximum as it is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I approve of the general purpose of the Bill; but we must not forget that we are creating an absolutely new offence, and, under the circumstances, I think we had better guard against the imposition of excessive penalties. However, if you make it $20 or $25, I think it would not be objectionable.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the House should take into consideration that a person may be innocently selling this substance believing that he is selling cheese that is not adulterated. It seems to me it would be a tremendous hardship to subject such people to the penalties of the Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was just going to suggest an amendment to the first clause that would meet the objection that the hon. the Speaker has raised. I would suggest to leave out the words "have in his possession," making the clause read "no person shall manufacture, buy, sell, offer or expose for sale," etc.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be better to amend it so as to read "no person shall manufacture, or knowingly buy, sell," and so on.

Mr. LAURIER. Why not put "knowingly" after "shall."

Mr. FOSTER. A man cannot manufacture this substance without knowing it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the reason this Bill was introduced?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to keep up the credit and standard of our cheese.

Mr. CHARLTON. In some of the western states the character of their cheese is so much deteriorated by additions of that kind that it is hardly saleable.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to read an extract from a letter in the "Grocers' Gazette," of England, dated 4th March, and directed to some of the Canadian operators in cheese:

In the first place, great injury has been done to the reputation of Canadian produce, as well as to the confidence and integrity of Canadian shippers, by the unprincipled conduct of some firms who have shipped New York State and Wisconsin cheese as Canadian.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite in accord with the Government in the desire to protect the high character of our cheese. That is a perfectly legitimate protection.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I agree with the member for South Oxford with regard to preventing cheese being manufactured in such a way as to commit fraud upon the purchaser elsewhere, and to discredit the cheese manufactured in Canada. That is a perfectly legitimate object. Here the hon. gentleman provides that cheese made from skimmed milk shall be marked, and so on. Now, it may be possible that by using other ingredients a fair article of cheese not deleterious might be made, but here you undertake to interfere with the manufacture of such cheese. Suppose it should really turn out that by the use of something else than the fat of cheese a superior article could be made, why should you, by legislation, interfere with that? I can well understand how you ought to insist upon its being marked, and make it penal for not marking it, so as to distinguish it from other varieties of cheese; but I do not know that you would be doing just right to say that it should not be manufactured at all. This section says:

No person shall manufacture, buy or sell, offer, or expose, or have in his possession for sale, any cheese which is manufactured from or by the use of skimmed milk to which there has been added any fat which is foreign to such milk.

Now, I say that I do not know that a cheese so produced might not be a superior article; therefore we are legislating against the production of something that might be a fair article to put upon the market. When you legislate so as to compel parties to mark their cheese in such a way as to distinguish it from the cheese of other varieties, I think you have gone as far as you ought to go.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). There is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says; but in effect he means that a compound article of food which does not contain deleterious substances, ought not to be prohibited, but should be branded, following out our legislation with regard to deleterious food. With regard to the article of lard and some other articles which are compounds, the only restriction upon their manufacture is to label them as such. But I assume that in the case of cheese there ought to be an exception because we are proud and jealous of the reputation our cheese has attained in the English market. I dare say it was in the mind of Professor Robertson that if a compound was allowed in the case of cheese, that compound would find its way to the English market, and come into competition with our cheese, and in that way injure the reputation of our pure cheese.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would call attention to the wording of this second clause. Any other than skimmed milk would not come under the operation of this Act at all. Any ingredient to strengthen, or fatten, or increase the richness of the milk, other than skimmed milk, would not come under the operation of this clause.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Other than fat, you mean.

Mr. McMULLEN. If they use ordinary milk, that is not skimmed milk, and then they can add fat.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Certainly.

Mr. McMULLEN. In order to settle the point as to their guilt, you would have to prove that it was skimmed milk; and if they do not use skimmed milk, if they use good milk, and if they make a larger amount of cheese thereby, although not as good, you cannot reach them.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The Act does not contemplate going so far. If by any other means they can make an article of cheese from pure milk, the Act does not contemplate any restriction of their right to do so. But I take it that the object of the Bill is to prevent any article made from skimmed milk being exported and coming into competition with pure cheese, even though it was marked compound. It may be the extreme of jealousy; but having regard to the very high character of our cheese in England, I would like the section to be retained, at all events for the present.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am in favour of the principle of the Bill, and of guarding the high standard of our cheese, but I think the Bill as now framed will not meet that object. Supposing a man uses good milk, and he adds something else to it that will seriously deteriorate the standing of the cheese, but will increase the quantity; supposing he puts something into good milk that will produce a good deal more cheese, but the cheese is not as good, he does not come under the provision of this Act.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Do you mean to say that by so doing it would result in the manufacture of a deleterious article?

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt it might.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If so, the present law regarding the adulteration of food provides an ample remedy.

On subsection 2,

Mr. TAYLOR. I suggest that the fine be increased, the minimum being $25.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better keep that.

Bill reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is to be regretted that legislation of such an important character should not have been brought down at an earlier period of the session. We have been unable to give it that attention to-night which it should have received, and I am afraid that the Bill will prove to have been rather hasty legislation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite in sympathy with the object of the Bill, but those who attempt to administer the law will have to recommend changes in several provisions next session. I do not think any magistrate will be able to understand clause 2, with respect to the component parts of cheeses, to enable him to impose a fine. If it is anything else than skimmed milk, the man who is brought before the court will be dismissed. It will be necessary for those who bring the accusation to prove that the cheese is actually made from skimmed milk. If it is not, it does not come under the provisions of this Act at all. The hon. Controller says that it would come under the provisions of the Adulteration Act. It would not, unless it is a poisonous or injurious ingredient.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Not at all. If the substances put into the cheese are deleterious in their nature, it would not come under the Adulteration Act unless the substances are injurious to health. But I fail to see the force of the hon. gentleman's contention. He puts the case of cheese into which, fat, or something that benefits the cheese, is added. The scope of the Act does not cover such a case; but the hon. gentleman is supposing a case that is absolutely impossible. No person in his senses would ever think of doing such a thing.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Bill (No. 132) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to draw the attention of the committee to this circumstance. The Bill provides that the deduction of six days shall not apply in the case of a member who has been elected during the session; but it does not state that it shall not apply in the case of a member who has been unseated during the session, and the question may arise as to whether a member who has been unseated during the session and who has not lost any days during the time he has been sitting, should not be allowed the six days. I think that cannot be the intention of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not know whether it is intended to include the case of a member who, through no act of his own,

Mr. FOSTER.

although elected before the beginning of the session, was prevented from taking his seat owing to some proceeding being taken to contest his right. Is it proposed to take from him the time that elapsed before he was actually introduced to the House? I think we have on several occasions recognized the right of a member---

Mr. FOSTER. That has only been done by an appropriation in the Estimates.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I may cite the case of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), who was elected on the 4th January, but who was not allowed to take his seat until fourteen days after the session opened, although he was here and ready to take his seat. He was the representative of L'Islet, as declared by the result of the election; he was as much its representative the moment the election was over as he is to-day; but because of some proceedings being taken against him, the declaration was not made.

Mr. FOSTER. This Act will not cover a case of that kind.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACTS AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 126) further to amend the Acts respecting the duties of customs was read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. I beg to move in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by reducing and remodelling the duties on iron.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Would the hon. gentleman consent to strike out the words: "twine for harvest binders," and make it read, "twine, hemp, jute, manila," and so on. By taking out those words he will not interfere with the policy he has adopted, and will include lath yarn, which is very largely used by a large number of manufacturers, who mainly find a market for their products in the United States and have to pay duties on the value of the article which they ship, including this very twine. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that it would not at all affect the principle of his proposition to say, "twine, hemp," and so on, leaving out the words, "binder twine." That would simply widen the provision or rule he proposes.

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to oblige my hon. friend, but I am afraid I shall have to keep that over for consideration until another session.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My attention was called to the fact that a large number of manufacturers are seriously affected by the high duties on this class of twine.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

OCEAN STEAM-SHIP SUBSIDIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 129) to amend the Act relating to ocean steam-ship subsidies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Please explain this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. It is to amend the Act passed three or four years ago, in which were included the China and Japan and Australian subsidies. The Australian subsidy was put in more as a tentative measure as was also the subsidy for a fast Atlantic line, the idea being that these three services together, if they could be successfully established, would make a very excellent outside steam-ship service for our trade. The sum was £25,000 for a fortnightly service or a proportionate rate for a less frequent service. The fortnightly service could not be arranged for that amount of money, and I wish to amend it by making the Bill authorize that this amount of money may be granted to assist in establishing an effective monthly or more frequent steam service between British Columbia and the Australian colonies, including New Zealand.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SPEAKER OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 114) respecting the Speaker of the Senate. He said: This Bill was passed by the Senate and affects that body entirely. It is intended to overcome the practical difficulty experienced in the Senate by the Speaker not being able to call some one to the Chair when he leaves, and by the Senate not being able, in the forced absence of the Speaker, to appoint one of its members to attend to his duties during his absence. The desirability of this power being given the Senate, from a common-sense point of view, could not be doubted, but there was considerable difference of opinion as to its constitutionality, and opinions in the Senate are very much divided. However, the Senate passed the Bill by a large majority, and it has been sent to this House. And, although it is somewhat late in the session, it seems to be an urgent matter, so far as the Senate are concerned, and I have taken the responsibility of bringing it before the House and asking the House to give it the attention it deserves and to pass it.

Mr. CHARLTON. How long have the Senate been able to get along without such a law?

Mr. FOSTER. That is scarcely an argument. The mere fact that we have got along in a certain way for a time is no argument against making a change for the better. Such an argument would have prevented the use of steam-ships or electric lights.

Mr. LAURIER. But it is an argument for not pressing the matter now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We all know about how much time the Senate has, during the past quarter of a century, devoted to the consideration of public business, and we know that they have succeeded in getting on without any serious difficulty during that time. If the Government choose to appoint an invalid to the Speakership by commission issued under the Great Seal, upon them rests the responsibility. But, Sir, I cannot, myself, see any necessity for the measure which they propose, even if we have the power to pass such a measure, and it seems to me that we have no authority, under our Constitution to pass such a Bill. And if we were to give our sanction to that measure, and it received the sanction of the Crown, I am of opinion that it would, nevertheless, be a void measure. Now, Sir, to pass a measure of this sort is a very serious business. Let me suppose, for one moment that the courts of the country and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council were to hold this measure void. It might have a very serious effect upon the legislation during a whole session, or during a period of two or three sessions. It might have the effect of rendering everything that was done under such a measure a void proceeding. Now, Sir, it is far too serious a matter to be dealt with during the expiring hours of a session, and I think that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House ought to insist that this measure shall stand over until there shall be an opportunity for the representatives of the people to give it the fullest and most careful consideration. Sir, when we look at the practice in the United Kingdom, we find there that, when letters patent are issued to the Lord Keeper, or the Lord Chancellor, other parties are named in the letters patent as Deputy-Speakers. Sometimes three or four parties are so named. And, further, the House of Lords, by the law and custom of Parliament, has power, in the absence of the Lord Chancellor and the Deputy-Speakers, to name some one of their number to act as Speaker of the House of Lords. The question we have to consider, is not a question of convenience; it is a question of power, of capacity; it is a question whether, under the provisions of our Constitution, we have the power to create by Act of Parliament the office which we propose to create by this Bill. Sir, I can find nothing in the Constitution which gives us that authority. The British North America Act, at the very outset, declares that it is desirable to establish a federal union of the provinces named, and it is also declared that, in order that there may be such a union, "it is expedient, not only that the Constitution of the legislative authority in the Dominion be provided for, but also that the nature of the executive government therein be declared." There are two things the Act does—it declares certain things that are law, and it enacts certain things that were not law before the enactment took place. All through the Statute you have declarations, and you have enactments, and you have this provision with regard to the Constitution, that it is to be "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom." And what that is, you are compelled to look outside of the Act to learn. But when we come to the Constitution of the Senate and of the House of Commons, every power under the legislative authority is enacted, and not declared, and, being enacted, it exists within the Act altogether. When we look at section 34, we find this provision :

The Governor-General may, from time to time, by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, appoint a senator to be Speaker of the Senate, and may remove him and appoint another in his stead.

There is marked distinction between the Constitution of the House of Lords and the Constitution of the Senate. In the case of the Constitution of the Senate there is no power possessed by any officer, other than that set out: in the Constitution of the House of Lords, the Chancellor is Speaker by virtue of his office, and the Deputy-Speakers are parties named in the letters patent. The Speaker of the Senate is not necessarily a member of the Government; he has no executive functions; his functions are those of a Speaker, as provided in the British North America Act. If the Speaker of the Senate is ill and incapable of discharging his duties, the law provides that his appointment is only during pleasure, and the Government may at any time supersede his appointment, by issuing letters patent to another party. That is what has been done heretofore, and, that being so, I contend there is no way of providing for a Deputy-Speaker in the other Chamber, other than by the authority of an amendment to the British North America Act. The section I have read, section 34, is the only one applicable to the case, and, that being so, if the Government desire that there shall be a Deputy-Speaker, they ought to have come down early in the session and asked the House to join in passing an address to the Imperial Parliament to amend that section of the British North America Act. I point out that, when we desired to acquire power to examine witnesses before our various committees, on oath, we applied by address to the Imperial Parliament to amend the 18th section of the British North America Act. That was the course open, and the hon. gentleman, if he desires to appoint a Deputy-Speaker, if he wishes to take the responsibility of declaring to-day, that a second officer, an alternative officer, is necessary in the Senate Chamber, let him propose to amend this 34th section. He could do that by providing that the Governor-General may, from time to time, under the instrument of the great seal, appoint a Speaker and a Deputy-Speaker, who shall undertake the duties of Speaker, in the absence of the Speaker of the Senate. That could be done. But I would like to know how the hon. gentleman can for a moment suppose that, when the Act provides that the appointment is to be by the Crown, that the appointment is to be under the great seal, that the party must be so appointed to discharge the duties of Speaker, that they can by an Act of Parliament divest the Crown of that power and, in effect, amend the British North America Act. It is true, that, so far as measures are concerned that are within our jurisdiction, so far as we are authorized to legislate, the prerogatives of the Crown being a part of the law of the land, we can extend it, we can restrict it, we can abolish it, if we see proper. But with regard to that prerogative here given to the Crown, it is a prerogative power given under an Act which we are not authorized to amend. There is no authority given to this Parliament to amend the Act; there is no constituent authority given to this Parliament, other than that set out with regard to the election of the House of Commons. That being so, I wish to call attention to another section that seems to be relied upon in the Senate by those who favour the Bill, and that is section 91. Now, there is not a syllable in section 91, from beginning to end, that relates to this subject; there is not a syllable which provides in any way that you can alter the Constitution of Parliament, when the Crown is given the power to appoint a Speaker to the Senate, under the great seal. But you propose to appoint a Speaker in some other way, you are amending the Constitution itself, which you are not authorized to do. There is nothing in the Act warranting such a proceeding. Now, when you look at section 91, you find it is a grant of legislative power, it is not a grant of constituent power. There are a series of sections relating to the Constitution of the House of Commons. Sections 40 and 41 are constituent, and if section 91 had the meaning that some parties in the Senate have given it, then sections 40 and 41 would have been wholly unnecessary; you have a limited power in the Constitution on the subject of the constitution of this House, just as they have the inherent power in legislative assemblies to legislate upon their local constitutions. But when you look at section 92 you find the very first article is the power given to the Local Legislatures to alter their constitution. There is not a syllable in section 91 about the power of this Parliament to alter its constitution. When you look at section 91 you find a number of examples set out which shows the character of the authority that is intended to be given. The section begins :

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Subject, of course, to the powers exclusively conferred upon the Local Legislature by the following section ; but when you come to read the detailed statement of these powers you find there is legislation with regard to the public debt and property, the regulation of trade and commerce, the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation, the borrowing of money on the public credit, and a number of other ordinary legislative powers ; but there is not a syllable relating to any power or authority to alter the Constitution itself. I think that is perfectly clear. Then when you look at section 18, you have had an interpretation given to that by two very eminent law officers of the Crown, the present Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in England, and the late Master of the Rolls, Mr. Jessel, both very eminent men, and they held that you had not power to pass an Act authorizing the taking of evidence before a committee of this House upon oath. You were compelled to go to the Imperial Parliament and to seek an amendment of that section. There was with regard to that no additional substantive authority sought ; you had power already to examine witnesses ; you had power to take evidence with regard to any matter concerning public affairs. All that you sought was an amendment to the law, as to the mode in which you were to exercise this power that you already possessed. They held with regard to that adjective law, which was not a substantive law at all, that you had not power, by an Act of this Parliament, to confer upon a committee of this House the power to take evidence on oath. That being so, how is it possible, in face of that section which says the Governor-General may from time to time, by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, appoint a Senator to be Speaker of the Senate, and remove him and appoint another in his stead, that you propose by an Act of this Parliament to confer upon the Senate the power to appoint a party themselves, to discharge the duties of a Speaker. But supposing that you have power to do this you must have the power to go further, and say that the Governor-General shall not appoint the Speaker at all. If you say that another party shall act for an hour, you can say that he shall act for a whole session, and if for a session, he shall act for all time. And so you could obliterate a section of an Imperial Act by an Act of the Parliament of Canada. Now, I say that you have no power to amend a section of that Act except where the power is expressly conferred upon you in the Act, or in some other statute. How are you going to say that by an Act of this Parliament a man may act as Speaker of the Senate who is not appointed under the Great Seal ? The Governor-General has the power, under the Great Seal, to appoint one member as Speaker. If he is disqualified by sickness, by imbecility, by negligence to discharge his duty he can appoint another, and the appointment is during pleasure only. But you cannot confer upon the Senate, by an Act of this House, the power to make the appointment. You are in effect undertaking to amend the British North America Act, which is an Imperial Act, when you are not authorized to amend that Act at all. There is a simple course open to the Government. If they had proposed at the beginning of this session an Address, asking for an amendment to this 34th section to enable them to appoint an alternative to the Speaker, as they do in England, or enabling the Senate to make an appointment in the absence of the Speaker, then the Act will be validly done. But what you propose to do here is as impossible as the constitution of a perpetual motion. You are undertaking to create a power by an Act of Parliament which is to supersede a power that is expressly given by the Imperial Act, and which you are not authorized by anything in the Act to alter or amend in any particular.

Mr. WELDON. I will detain the House at this very late period of the session but a short time in urging some reasons in answer to those advanced by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and in support of the position I take that the Bill now before the House is well within the powers of the Parliament of Canada. The hon. member for Bothwell has suggested that we have an alternative remedy in cases where we have a well-grounded doubt of our power, and that that is to proceed by address and go to Imperial authorities and ask for such amendment to the Constitution as will place this matter beyond doubt. I quite agree with the hon. member that if, in the judgment of the House, there is strong reason for doubting that we possess legal competence to carry through such a measure as that before the House, we should take the course suggested by the hon. gentleman ; but I shall endeavour to show, and I trust I shall succeed in showing, that, under the Constitution of the Canadian Parliament, as embodied partly in Imperial statutes, and partly in what may be said to be in the nature of common law, we are competent to pass such a measure as that now before the House. I agree with several of the positions taken by my hon. friend in challenging the legality of the measure. I agree with that section 18, and the amendment, adopted in 1875, making the section more clear and definite, and enlarging the powers of the House and its privileges, has nothing to do with the question. I cannot so certainly agree with the hon. member when he argues that section 91, giving Parliament power to make laws for the maintenance of order and good government, and setting forth that a certain group shall be defined legal powers, and a certain other group undefined powers, are all legal powers, and not constituent powers. I could agree with his argument if it was that the sixteen subsections of section 92 covered co-ordinate powers, and the hon. gentleman will agree that, in a general way, those terms which characterize group 91 may be used to characterize group 92. I think, to draw a line between section 91 and section 92 is simply to go back to the powers which we have in old Canada. If it is right that the powers given Parliament in section 91 are co-ordinate with those in section 92, then it is clear that one of the powers in section 92 is, beyond all doubt, not a legal power, but rather a constituent power, for the reason that section 92, subsection 1, says that among the provincial powers set forth in that group, the province shall have power to make amendments, from time to time, to the Constitution, except as regards the office of Lieutenant-Governor. Well, then, if, under the common law, our powers are, in general terms, the same, or nearly the same, as the local powers, the provisions are not legal but constituent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The powers of the provinces were conferred on them by statute, prior to 1867. The powers since that time possessed by this Parliament have been created by compact. The powers possessed by this Parliament, as Lord Carnarvon said, are the result of treaty, and, therefore, cannot be varied, for they are the result of a compact entered into between the different provinces.

Mr. WELDON. It may be that those phrases have been used by some of the members of the British Parliament. But it is within the knowledge of the hon. member for Bothwell, and other legal gentlemen, members of this House, that this question has arisen in appeal cases, and I can specially speak of a case that was heard before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, from New Brunswick, ex parte Renaud, in which it was distinctly laid down that our Constitution could not be so interpreted. Take the Act as applying to New Brunswick. One of our leading New Brunswick lawyers took the ground that the courts could not construe in a liberal and free manner the terms of the Act as they could those of a treaty, and their Lordships answered that a statute like the British North America Act could be construed the same as any other Act. The hon. gentleman is wrong when he says that the provinces, before the Union were provided with statutory powers. That is not true with respect to New Brunswick, and it is also not true with regard to the province of Nova Scotia. You cannot find those powers in the statute or in the Governor's commission except in a vague and crude form, and I wish here to say that that statement is not correct. I could make a verbal argument to show the absurdity of the contention of the hon. member for Bothwell. In section 34, I read that the Governor may from time to time, by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, appoint a senator to be Speaker of the Senate. The moment you undertake to construe that Act in a hard and literal fashion you find yourself face to face with many difficulties. If the hon. gentleman were to press me with a technical difficulty, I could raise another one that would place him in a most difficult position. There is a clause stating that the Speaker shall preside at all meetings of the House of Commons—which would go to show that the Speaker was an essential part of the House of Commons. There is no such clause in the Act as regards the Speaker of the Senate. So, if you press the literal phrases and interpretations you are driven to most absurd lengths. Take another section of the Act, section 65. It will be remembered that in the famous Letellier case the point was taken that the Lieutenant-Governor of a province was appointed by the Governor, while his dismissal could only be made by the Governor-General in Council. Surely if there was ever an antithesis it would be that the appointing power was not the one that could dismiss. But every one knows that the law officers of the Crown admitted that the words in the first section were Governor-General in Council, and that they should be read in the same way in that regard as were the words Governor-General. I observe that these sections to which I refer are 58 and 59. The hon. member for Bothwell says this is an interference with the prerogative. In my judgment it does not in any way affect the prerogative. If I know the meaning of prerogative it is the common law power of the Queen or Executive in any country. We do not propose to interfere with that power in any event, but with the power given under a statute, and there is all the difference in the world between a prerogative power which the Crown holds at common law and an executive power which the Crown exercises which is clearly and fully defined in the terms of an Act. In this view no interference is proposed with the prerogative. It must be remembered that the Governor-General in this country represents the Queen, and is the guardian of the royal prerogative. It is his duty to guard that prerogative, and if he considered an Act invaded that prerogative he would withhold his sanction, and the Act would not become law, unless the Imperial authorities superseded his action. So it cannot be said that this measure in any way interferes with the prerogative. And if it does so, it does so by the consent or authority of the Crown which is a party to the Act—not only the Governor-General, but also the Queen herself. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I might sit down with that statement and say no more, but I will add one word. In my judgment, you cannot work a constitution for five millions of people inhabiting half a continent under such rigid and technical ruling as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has laid down. Would it not be a reproach to the makers of the Constitution to say that the Speaker of the Senate cannot leave his Chair for five minutes to take a cup of tea without throwing the whole constitutional machinery out of gear, without making it necessary to close the doors of Parliament and send the members home about their business? What an absurd conclusion this would be. Would you not say that those who made such a law were a set of children and not statesmen? I take the view that we have ample power to deal with such difficulties under the reserve power that there must be in every great body, and under the common law there is power in this Parliament to make provision in such a case as this. I have a memorandum here covering the experience of the Senate during twenty-three years and setting forth four or five cases in which, through death, illness or incapacity, the Senate has been left without a chairman, the difficulty being sometimes overcome by the election of a temporary chairman and adjournment, sometimes going to the Crown for a commission to appoint a substitute. These are the shifts they have been driven to in other times and which, under present circumstances, they cannot escape. I wish, as I sit down, to call the attention of the House and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to the fact that this experience under our Constitution is not new. There are other great constitutions that have been enacted by the Imperial Parliament. There is the constitution granted to New South Wales forty odd years ago, the constitution given to the colony of Victoria—not federal, I grant you, but elaborate full, with most minute and particular provisions for the appointment of Speakers, for the organization of legislative bodies and the arrangement of their procedure. This constitution had not been working five years before this very difficulty which has arisen in Canada arose in the colony of Victoria. Opinions were divided upon it. One set of lawyers were strict and technical; they took the view advocated by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and said: You have a written constitution and if there is in it a declaration that the Speaker of the Assembly must be elected he must be elected; if it enacts that the chairman of the Legislative Council must be appointed by the Crown, he must be so appointed. But there were other lawyers in these chambers who said: Let us bring common sense to bear upon this question. Is it possible that the Imperial Parliament would give a constitution to this colony made up of hundreds of thousands of people and restrict them so closely that if the Speaker of the Legislative Council wants to go out and smoke his pipe you have to go across the ocean, twelve thousand miles, to petition for an amendment of the constitution before any person can be appointed to fill his place temporarily? That may be law, but it is not common sense. And their view so strongly prevailed that, to remove all doubts, in the year 1865, two years before our Constitution was born, an Imperial enactment to meet the case was passed. It is known as the Colonial Laws Validity Act. There is a clause dealing with this precise difficulty and giving an excellent, common sense way out of it. Here is the clause which makes it clear that we have the power to pass this Act. The Act is cited in the Law Books as 28-29 Vic., Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865, the 5th section of which reads as follows:—

Every Colonial legislature shall have, and be deemed at all times to have had, full power within its jurisdiction to establish courts of judicature, and to abolish and reconstitute the same, and to alter the constitution thereof, and to make provision for the administration of justice therein; and every representative legislature shall, in respect to the colony under its jurisdiction, have, and be deemed at all times to have had full power to make laws respecting the constitution, powers and procedure of such legislature; provided that such laws shall be passed in such manner and form as may from time to time be required by an Act of Parliament, Letters Patent, Order in Council or Colonial law for the time being in force in the said colony.

And I call the attention of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) particularly to these words: "Shall have, and be deemed at all times to have had full power," and so on. There was a difficulty like ours and a solution applied by the Legislature to make it impossible for technical and austere lawyers to say: You must go to England in order to meet any such case and provide for the smooth working of the constitution. If there were any doubt as to the Bill now before the House being within our powers, to my mind, the clause I have quoted settles the matter. What can you say in reply? You can say, to be sure, that the British North America Act was passed two years afterwards. But does it repeal this Colonial Laws Validity Act? No. Is there anything to indicate that it was the intention to repeal it? No. Was it not fresh in the memory of the Colonial office and of the legislators who enacted this Constitution? Yes; it had been passed but two years before. Does it not deal with this precise matter? Undoubtedly it does, for what could be clearer than the words I have read? Then, if the hon. member will follow me, he must show that there is a repugnance between the Colonial Laws Validity Act and this Constitution which makes the second a repeal of the first. That is an unsound view which cannot be sustained in argument. There was no failure in this case and, so long as that Act stands, so long are we relieved of embarrassment in a case like this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not like to be in a hurry when called upon to give my vote on grave constitutional questions. I would like to sleep over this question. I have a great dread of falling into constitutional man-traps on either side. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he might, with advantage, adjourn the debate for twenty-four hours and proceed with other business.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite willing to agree to that and to take it up on Saturday morning.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTIONS.

Mr. DALY. When the House adjourned at six o'clock I was going to ask, by the leave of the House, the privilege of presenting the Bill of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), an Act to repeal the Homestead Exemption Act. It is provided by section 3 of the Homestead Exemption Act that:

Any man who is the owner of an estate in fee simple or for life in laud, situate in the Territories, with a dwelling house thereon occupied by him, may register as a homestead an extent of such land not exceeding eighty acres, if in a rural locality.

The Legislature of the territory undertook to extend that to 160 acres, and it has been held by the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, in the case re Claxton, that that ordinance of the North-west Territories is "ultra vires," and this places the people there in a very awkward predicament, and it is necessary, in order that the wishes of the people, as exemplified by the Legislature, should be carried out, that legislation should be had. With this view I am very desirous that this Bill should pass. I had the matter under consideration myself, but there were some legal difficulties in the way and the Bill I have brought down is not exactly similar to that of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). I will explain more at length in committee, and, with the permission of the House, I will move the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DALY. I may explain that the Act respecting the Homestead Exemption Act of the Territories passed in 1886 provided among other things that a homesteader could register 80 acres as exempt from seizure; but the Legislative Assembly of the North-west Territories undertook by an ordinance to extend that to 160 acres. The ordinance remained in force about four years, and it was only last September or October that the Supreme Court of the Territories decided, in the case re Claxton that subsection 9 of section 1 of chapter 45 of the Revised Ordinances, providing that 160 acres should be exempt from seizure under execution, was "ultra vires" of the Local Legislature. Now, by placing that ordinance upon their Statute-book the Legislature expressed the will and the desire of the people of the Territories that 160 acres should be exempted, and in order to carry out that desire this Bill is introduced. It is not intended to repeal the Homestead Exemption Act, as the Bill proposed by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) would have done, but simply to amend section 3 by striking out the word "eighty" and substituting the words "one hundred and sixty."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Indian Affairs $10,000

Mr. DALY. Since a statement was made yesterday by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), with reference to an account sent in by Mr. Reed, the commissioner, giving the items of certain railway fares and cab-hire on a journey he made to Kingston and the city of Toronto, I have investigated the matter, and I find that Mr. Reed went on that occasion to Kingston on the business of the department to meet the Presbyterian Synod there in connection with North-west matters. I find also that he went to Toronto to meet the superintendent of Methodist missionaries in connection with other Indian matters, at the request of the Superintendent-General, and that his railway fare and the usual charges were allowed by the department. I find further that during that time he was three days on leave, and no charge appears for any expense incurred during the three days he was on leave. I thought it only right, in justice to Mr. Reed, that I should make this statement to the House.

Kingston Penitentiary $190,443 66

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Solicitor-General was to have stated to the House, when this item came up for concurrence, the number of people he expected to employ in the binding twine manufactory, and also the location of the projected asylum and female prison.

Mr. CURRAN. With regard to the latter part of the hon. gentleman's question, I find a memorandum left by the Minister of Justice, which is to the effect that it is the intention that the female prison shall be erected in the field immediately to the east of the prison, and the asylum on the grounds north of the warden's residence. With reference to the other point, I find an explanation given by the Minister of Justice in the early part of the session that 40 men are to be employed in connection with the binder twine industry.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 134) to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 133) relating to granting subsidies in land to railway companies.—(Mr. Daly.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that, when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned till Saturday next at eleven o'clock in the morning, and that Government Orders have precedence on that day, and that all Senate amendments to private and other Bills be considered immediately on their receipt in this House.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he has any more information to give us with regard to the Treaty with France?

Mr. FOSTER. I have a few words to say with reference to the French Treaty. The House will remember the statement I made when that treaty was laid before the House about a fortnight ago. At that time, after having explained the terms of the treaty, I said that, owing to certain points which were touched upon then, I did not propose at present to ask the House to ratify the treaty; that communications had been opened with the British Government and the High Commissioner, with reference to certain clauses and other matters in connection with the treaty, and we were waiting the result of those communications. I may say that those communications have progressed to a certain extent. With reference to two of the clauses regarding which I was in doubt at that time, the meaning appears now to be clear. The terms "Poissons conservés au naturel" and "Homards et langoustes, conservés au naturel," were badly translated, I believe, into English, and I came to the conclusion, in looking them over, that they meant simply that fish in their natural shape were admitted. They are, however, wider than that and bear out the construction given them by the papers laid upon the Table, and the despatches of Sir Charles Tupper, that canned fish and salmon and canned lobsters are allowed in, under these clauses, at the minimum rate. With regard to soaps, I am not clear. The clause, it seems to me, gives entrance to common soaps of all kinds, although the papers distinctly showed that castile soap was what was negotiated for by the commissioners. I think it is regrettable that immediately upon the statement being made by me at that time, information was cabled to the other side, that I had positively said that the Government would not ratify the treaty, and, upon that information which was not of course correct, certain comments were made and, probably, certain impressions were received on the other side of the water, which, of course, being based on that wrong information, were not correct. It has been stated that the Canadian Government acting in that way, a way in which they did not act, had caused umbrage in London and in Paris, and I am happy to be able to state, that, so far as that is concerned, there is no foundation for the statement. All proper explanations have been made as to what was said, and neither in Paris nor in London is there any feeling which would warrant a declaration of that kind. Parliament will not be asked to ratify the treaty this year. I think it is also well to state that one of the chief points which the Government have to keep in view, is with respect to the favoured-nation clause. Whatever may have been our understanding with respect to all the other clauses of the treaty, as to articles which were to be allowed to come in, it is perfectly true that by our telegram of 12th January we assented to those clauses, whether we fully understood them here or not, and are responsible for them. But, with respect to the extension of the most-favoured-nation treatment, that was never contemplated by the Government, that was not included in our instructions, and, so far as that is concerned, was entirely beyond the wish of the Government. How that came to be, is explained by Sir Charles Tupper in the papers laid before the House. I may say, in passing, that I know no discourtesy is supposed to have been shown by the Government in its action towards France, under the explained condition of affairs, as I am quite certain, and the House well knows, no discourtesy was intended.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think the Minister of Finance can be at all surprised, if, after the statement he made two weeks ago in this House, the impression was conveyed abroad that the treaty would not be ratified this session. His language fully justified the impression which was then conveyed abroad, because the hon. gentleman has just told us that the treaty is not to be ratified this session. I am at a loss to understand, notwithstanding the explanation given by the hon. gentleman, and he will pardon me for so saying, what can have been the motives that induced the bad feelings which evidently have sprung up between the Government and their Ambassador at Paris, the High Commissioner in London. Of course, I do not know whether there has been some misunderstanding or not; but, at all events, the Government have indicated that they have not been fully represented by the commissioner, and the commissioner replied, that except on one point, he has carried out all the instructions of the Government. There is one matter that seems to me to be of more than ordinary importance: whatever may have been the cause of the difference between the Government and their ambassador, the Government have tamely submitted to be rebuked and lectured by their ambassador in a manner unknown to any civilized Government. I think it is not to be found anywhere in the history of any nation that a Government would tamely submit to be rebuked as this Government has been rebuked by Sir Charles Tupper, who has stated openly in the press of London that the Government either must ratify this treaty or resign. It is true we have no official correspondence on this point, and I am not aware that the Government have taken any steps to ascertain from Sir Charles Tupper whether the language attributed to him was uttered by him or not. In my judgment I conceive the duty of the Government under such circumstances would have been to call on Sir Charles Tupper by cable, in order to sustain the dignity of this House and of the country, and ask him whether he made use of such language or not. Of course, it is not my duty to interfere in this family quarrel, because I take it to be a family quarrel after all; but still, if the Government desired to uphold the dignity which belongs to the Government, they would not have tolerated such language as appears to have been used by Sir Charles Tupper. But it is a question for the Government and their ambassador to decide between themselves. As to the merits of the treaty, I have no suggestion to offer, since it is left in abeyance. I understand the hon. gentleman reserves to himself the right to ask the ratification of the treaty at a subsequent period if it be so decided, say next session. As to the treaty itself, I have no remarks further to offer than those I made on a former occasion. The treaty is a very unsatisfactory one, the Government have accepted it, and I think their duty under the circumstances was to have asked the House to ratify it; but the Government think it preferable to wait until another session, and so there is nothing to do but to wait until another session.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not aware that any exhibition of bad feeling has taken place between the Government and Sir Charles Tupper—at least, I am quite certain there has been no such exhibition on the part of the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has shown no bad feeling at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has touched the kernel of the question when he has intimated a doubt as to whether Sir

Mr. LAURIER.

Charles Tupper used the language attributed to him. I am inclined to think that some ambitious and enterprising reporter has very largely added to and extended any remarks that may have been made. I certainly would not feel that any action should be taken until it was known whether the reporter was at fault or not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It might have been an ambitious and somewhat disappointed ambassador.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true. But I think the Ministry would have consulted the dignity of the Government of Canada by calling, as could easily have been done, our Lord High Commissioner and inquired whether the language attributed has or has not been used by him. Ample time has elapsed to enable the Government to have communicated with him, and as this language has been repeated from one end of Canada to the other with all imaginable particularity, I think the hon. gentleman and his colleagues should, for the sake of their own dignity, have required an explanation, or at least ascertained whether the statements were true or not.

Mr. FOSTER. Slow haste is the best haste in this matter.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 1st April, 1893.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 11 a.m.

PRAYERS.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SPROULE moved:

That the final report of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization for the current session be now adopted, in so far as the recommendation therein contained relates to the printing and distribution of the report itself, notwithstanding that it has not been recommended by the Printing Committee.

He said: I am obliged to make this motion, because the Printing Committee has not had a meeting since the report was submitted to the House, and, therefore, they could not deal with it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the rule will have to be suspended.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, as you say, Mr. Speaker, the rule would have to be suspended, but there is another feature of the case which, I think, the House ought to consider. If I recollect aright, the recommendation of the Committee gives a very large order for the printing of the agricultural reports.

Mr. SPROULE. This does not refer to either the Agriculture or Dairy Commissioner's report. It refers to the Committee's work only.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that the hon. gentleman's report is modified to the extent of recommending simply with reference to the Committee's own report, the printing of one hundred thousand copies. If the House would favour the idea, I would have no objection for my part to agreeing to the suspension of the rules to move to authorize the printing of fifty thousand copies of the committee's report. That is still a large order, taking into consideration that two hundred thousand copies of the Agriculture and Dairy reports have been ordered.

Mr. FLINT. How many pages will it cover?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is a very large report.

Mr. SPEAKER. The evidence will bring it up to about eighty or one hundred pages.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I should think fifty thousand copies would be a pretty large order, but that will be as many copies as will be read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is a very great deal of printing in this Agricultural Committee's work that is repeated unnecessarily, as it seems to me. We have examinations before that Committee of the head of the department and the director of Experimental Farms, and testimony given that is very interesting and instructive. But what they say to us is already dealt with in the reports. A question is asked, and the answer very frequently is: "I have already dealt with that in my report." I think it might be arranged so that a great deal would be saved in this printing by not repeating.

Mr. CARGILL. With reference to the number of the reports, I think the number asked for is little enough. There is a great deal of valuable information contained in these reports, and I have never heard any good reason why the reports should be put into the hands of half the agriculturists and the other half not supplied. Another thing in connection with the distribution of these pamphlets—the same number is given to every senator as is given to every member of the House, and I think that in many cases the distribution is duplicated. I have spoken to members of the Senate upon the subject, and they tell me that they do not care about having any of these reports, and I think if the number distributed to the senators were divided among the members of the House, the distribution to the public would be more satisfactory. I do not think the order given by the committee is an extravagant one, in fact, I think more of these reports should be printed.

Mr. SPROULE. As the sense of the House seems to be against the printing of such a large number, I move:

That the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization for the current year be now adopted in so far as the recommendation therein contained relates to the printing and distribution of the report itself, to the extent of fifty thousand copies, and that rule 94 be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

DEBATES AMANUENSES.

Mr. LARIVIERE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to mention to this House that, having learned that the Internal Economy Commission have granted an extra allowance of fifteen days to the sessional clerks and the messengers, as well as the pages, it was my intention, had I been able to do so, to call a meeting of the Debates Committee in order that we might suggest that the amanuenses of the "Hansard" reporters, who are under the control of that committee, be put on the same footing as the other officials of the House favoured in that direction. But as it is impossible at this late hour of the session to have a meeting, and to have a quorum, I have thought it advisable to bring this matter before the House. The amanuenses work as hard as any of the other officials, and I think they should be treated with the same favour as the others are being treated. I would willingly move that they be paid at the same rate as the others are to be paid, according to the report of the Internal Economy Commission; but, as I understand that such a motion would be out of order, I ask the hon. leader of this House to advise us as to what can be done in the matter, so that these men may receive the same treatment as their brother officials of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see that anything can be done except upon a report of the Printing Committee itself, and out of its own vote. As my hon. friend says that it is quite impossible to get a meeting of that committee this year, I do not see any other course open than for the Printing Committee to take up the subject next year, when they come together, and when they can make a report, which I have no doubt the House will consider sympathetically, just the same as it would were the report made this year.

Mr. LARIVIERE. The hon. leader of the House will bear in mind that the Committee which will exist next session will not be the same as that which exists this session. Our committee is not a sessional committee, therefore there might be some doubt as to what the powers of the committee next session will be with regard to the matters that may have taken place this session.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt my hon friend who has discharged his duties so satisfactorily this year, will next year be upon that committee, and his influence will be felt in that direction.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Will the indemnity be the same next year as this year ?

Mr. FOSTER. The sessional indemnity ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. No ; as chairman of that committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose about the same.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

House proceeded to consider amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 99) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. With respect to one of these amendments, I wish to say that it does not exactly carry out the intention of the Bill, and the effect of it will be to make the Commissioners appointed by the Government and those appointed by the local authorities equal in numbers upon the Commission, whilst the principle and policy has always been to have the Government appointees in a majority. I therefore move to amend by substituting "11" in place of "10," and "6" in place of "5," before the word "members," and to add the following clause :—

The Board of Trade, the Corn Exchange Association, and la Chambre de Commerce du district de Montréal, shall severally, at a meeting to be held at their respective chambers or usual places of meeting in the city of Montreal, at noon on the first Monday of August (or if that day be a legal holiday, then the next day, not being such a holiday) in each year, elect each one a person to fill the office of Harbour Commissioner ; the person having the majority of votes of those personally present at each of said several meetings, shall be held to be duly elected, and the secretary shall give him a certificate of his election, and shall also certify the same to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER moved the following resolutions :

1. Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1893, the sum of $1,471,976.58 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1894, the sum of $25,191,646.03 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. LaRIVIERE.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER introduced Bill (No. 135) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1893, and the 30th June, 1894, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Bill read the first, second and third times, and passed.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Bill (No. 133) relating to the granting of subsidies of land to railway companies read the second time and considered in committee.

Mr. DALY moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In my opinion, a Bill of this kind cannot originate in the Senate, as it makes a grant of land, any more than can a Bill making a grant of money. The Bill states :

1. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Dominion Lands Act, the Governor in Council in all cases where authorized by any Act of Parliament to grant a subsidy in land to a railway corporation is hereby empowered to grant such subsidy wholly or in part in tracts, each comprising a township or a fractional part of a township.

It seems to me that this Bill comes within the rule.

Mr. DALY. This clause is in substitution of section 1 of chapter 12, 49 Victoria, and the whole object of the Bill is to clear up a doubt. The Hudson Bay Company will not give their consent to the townships named, being handed over as railway grants without the company's land being reserved, and it is in order to deal with that feature of the case, this Bill is required. We are not giving any power not already given by this House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that it may be held that this Bill goes further than the hon. gentleman indicates. Suppose some grants have lapsed, what will be the position of the matter ?

Mr. DALY. The railway companies in question have never dealt with these lands in any way, and it is simply to remedy the defect in the present Act that this Bill is required.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 134) to amend the Revised Statutes respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. He said : The object of this Bill is to regulate the payment of printing of forms, tickets, &c., for the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways. These have always been printed, and are more conveniently printed, nearer to the points where they are needed, and the Bill guards the public Treasury by enacting that they shall be printed at no greater cost than they could be printed for at the Bureau. They are to be supervised by the Superintendent of Printing.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We are allowing these Bills to go through with a great deal of facility, and I hope the hon. gentleman is not leaving another Bill to be taken up later.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE SPEAKER OF THE SENATE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster for second reading of Bill (No. 114) respecting the Speaker of the Senate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Surely the hon. gentleman does not intend to force this Bill through. He knows that it is liable to most serious objections. He knows that it is a Bill which under ordinary circumstances would not be allowed to pass this House without a very important debate. He knows that it involves a great constitutional question. Surely, under these circumstances, he is not going to attempt to force it through. I can assure him that if he does, he has not the power to do so. He knows that there are questions of prerogative involved in it, that the probability is that if it passed it would be reserved, and that the very strong probability is that it would be disallowed. I tell the hon. gentleman distinctly that this Bill is not going to be allowed to pass.

Mr. OUIMET. This Bill is nothing more than a matter of the internal economy of the Senate, and I think it would be an act of discourtesy on the part of this House not to pass it and allow it afterwards to be submitted to the legal test to which it must be subjected before it becomes law. If this House wanted to pass a small Bill in order to facilitate its business, I am sure that the hon. member for Bothwell would consider it a great discourtesy to us if the Senate should stop it on a legal point which after all would have to be tested and decided somewhere else. After the legal argument of my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) the other night, surely there are very few minds that are not satisfied that this Bill is constitutional, and I would ask that, although it is late in the session, the Bill should be allowed to go through as a matter of courtesy to the Senate, and I am sure that there will be no reason, from a constitutional point of view, to regret having done so.

Mr. FLINT. If this were simply a Bill regulating the internal economy of the Senate, and involving no important points such as those raised by my hon. friend from Bothwell, the argument of the Minister would be very pertinent and powerful. But, if I understood correctly the argument of my hon. friend, the questions raised by him were of very great magnitude and moment. The Bill was discussed at great length and with marked ability on the same lines in the Senate. A great many members of this House were not aware of the importance of the Bill or of the question raised by it, and it does not do for us at this stage of the session to put aside those weighty considerations and pass the Bill solely on the ground of convenience. I understand that several of the leading legal minds of the House had formed pretty strong opinions on the measure, but owing to the lateness of the session they found it inconvenient to be here to discuss it. I think it will be far better to allow this measure to stand over, inasmuch as it can create no present inconvenience, and it can be brought up again next session either in this form or in a form more acceptable, when it can be fully debated. Probably if the same object could be accomplished by a change in the rules of the Senate, there would be very little objections raised. I do trust that at this late hour of the session the Minister will not press the Bill, because there is no doubt that it would lead to the raising of questions which could only be settled at great expense to the Treasury of the country, and we should be no farther ahead at the lapse of ten or twelve months than we are to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not suppose that anything can be gained by discussing the Bill at any greater length. Opinions differ as to its constitutionality. Very strong opinions are held on both sides of the question in the Senate, and after a full discussion there the weight of opinion was overwhelmingly in favour of passing the Bill. The Bill was discussed here, not at great length, but with marked ability by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), and the House has seen these two men learned in the law expressing opinions diametrically opposed to each other. Every one admits, as a matter of common sense and business, that it would be a great convenience to the Senate if the Speaker had power to call a member to the Chair when he was forced to leave the Chamber, or if there were some means by which the Chair could be constitutionally and legally filled when the Speaker was unavoidably absent. It is under these circumstances that the Bill comes before us to-day, and I would be very glad to see it pass. Of course, the rules of the House are rules, and if hon. gentlemen are inexorable they can push their rights to the full. I would like my hon. friend to consider, however, whether that would be best under the circumstances or not. I fail to see that any great crash or cataclysm can ensue if this Bill passes. It is the intention of the Government, I may say, to advise His Excellency to reserve the Bill, and not give his assent to it here. That prevents anything being done without the review of the British law officers of the Crown. I know that my hon. friend opposite holds very strong views on the subject, but I should be very glad if he could see his way to waive them, and allow this Bill to pass.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. gentleman that I feel so strongly on this matter that I do not think I would be discharging my duty were I to comply with the proposition which is now made. I asked the hon. gentleman a few moments ago whether it was his intention to press this objectionable Bill, because we were giving him great facilities to hurry through the rest of the business, and I understood him to say that it was not his intention to press it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry if my hon. friend misunderstood me. I thought he referred to new Bills coming from the Senate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. FOSTER. I am equally sorry if I misunderstood him, and I must withdraw what I said, as I spoke under misapprehension.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then I hope the hon. gentleman will allow us to go back to the Bills we had before.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that is impossible according to the rules of the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, I am afraid this Bill must stand over.

Mr. McNEILL. As this is purely a constitutional question, as it is simply a matter of law (there being no difference, as I understand it, between the two sides except on this question), there can be no harm in allowing the Bill to pass, and leaving it to be decided by the authorities that must in the end decide it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the House will permit me, I would say there is very great objection to the Bill passing. Let us suppose for a moment—and I could refer the hon. gentleman to half a dozen cases—the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should annul the decision given by the law officers of the Crown. In the case of the appointment of a bishop of Cape Colony, it was decided by the law officers of the Crown that the Crown had power, and letters patent were issued, but years after the Judicial Committee held that the law officers were mistaken. Let us suppose that in this case the law officers in a great hurry gave an opinion on this subject without exhaustive consideration, and that afterwards legislation passed by this Parliament was questioned, and it was found that the law officers were mistaken. What would be the effect of that upon the legislation? It might affect the rights of great corporations as well as important principles of jurisprudence. There is a perfectly clear course to take, and that is by address of this House, asking for an amendment of the 34th section of the British North America Act. I suppose the House might not permit me to enter into a discussion of the subject in reply to the speech of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) last Thursday evening, and I do not undertake to do so, but I shall take the opportunity to do so if the hon. gentleman proceeds with the Bill and the House goes into committee, I think I could show conclusively to the satisfaction of every hon. member who will not give his mind a holiday but will think upon the subject, that the hon. gentleman was wholly mistaken in the opinions which he expressed, and that the statute he read had no applicability in the most remote degree to the question now before us. I could point out that since that statute was passed in 1865, we carried through an old Bill here having reference solely to the point, that is, the question of procedure. We already had the power to examine witnesses; we simply undertook by that Act, to alter the mode of procedure. The opinion of the law officers of the Crown was that that statute was "ultra vires," and yet, if the statute which the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) quoted had any applicability at all, it would have validated that Act. But it did not validate that Act, and we were obliged to come here and address the Imperial Parliament, asking that legislation should be had to enable us to examine witnesses upon oath. Now, it does seem to me that in the face of a declaration of that sort, it would be a most monstrous proceeding to pass this Bill. Ought we to take any risk at all as to our legislation? Even if the Government could get a favourable opinion from the law officers of the Crown, it would not give that security to our legislation which is required. What we require is absolute certainty. We want to know that what we do within our jurisdiction is properly done, and if we had a man sitting in the Speaker's Chair in the Senate who had not received his letters patent from the Crown, but had derived his authority from proceedings of this House, the Senate would not be properly constituted, and would be, in fact, proceeding without a Speaker at all. That being so, I think the hon. gentleman ought not to proceed with this Bill, and I do not think he will be dealing fairly with those opposed to the Bill, after we have furnished this morning the facilities we have of going on with the business, if he presses this upon our attention. The hon. gentleman would never have reached this Bill by three o'clock if he had given us an intimation that it was the intention to proceed with the measure. When we go into Committee on the Bill, I shall go into this question exhaustively, and I will point out as I have not done yet, that it is too late. Besides, I think I can make it as clear as noon-day that we cannot confer upon the Senate the power proposed to be conferred by this Bill. The hon. leader of the House has told you that the overwhelming weight of opinion in the Senate was against this view. The overwhelming majority may have been against it, but the overwhelming opinion of those who are qualified to deal with the question was the other way, and, that being so, I trust the hon. gentleman will not proceed with this discussion, but will wait until the Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) are here, and until we have an opportunity to consider this question fully at an earlier period of the session.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me, I feel that I must come to the conclusion that my hon. friend, having stated that he will go into this question exhaustively, rather rules this Bill out.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I propose reading the first volume of Hallam to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought that in the long speech my hon. friend made on Thursday, he had completely exhausted his side of the question, but if he has yet more to say, I think we will not be able to go further with this Bill at the present time.

Mr. DALY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

COMMANDER BOULTON.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to say that I have learned with great regret, and I am sure that many other members of the House share my regret, that the country is to be deprived of the services of such an efficient officer as Commander Boulton. He is a man of great experience, of great practical ability, and has been doing a work which is appreciated in the very highest degree by those who are acquainted with it. Vessel owners and practical seamen in the Georgian Bay or on Lake Huron speak in the highest possible terms of the value of the work that Captain Boulton has performed. I think it is only right that some reference should be made to this matter before the House rises. I hope my hon. friend the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries will add his testimony to what I have said as to the high character of this officer.

Mr. SPROULE. I heartily concur in every word that has been said by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) regarding this officer. I believe every member representing a constituency along the Georgian Bay, who knows anything about the great work he has been doing, are of opinion that it is a great pity that this man's services could not be retained until the work which he began, and has so far successfully carried on, is completed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have made inquiries in the department with regard to the officer referred to, with a result most creditable to himself. I need not assure the House that we made the change because we thought it was in the interest of the country that the work should be done by the department. I am quite certain that the House will understand that the change implies no reflection upon that officer, whose record is most favourable indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. Whilst the matter has been brought up, I would like to say a word. Commander Boulton was in the service and was conducting the survey when I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I also desire to bear my testimony to the capabilities of that officer, and to the admirable way in which he has carried on his work. I know he has given the utmost satisfaction; he has done a work which will be his best monument. But there is this to be said about it. Commander Boulton has stayed out the term for which he came here, and during the time he has been carrying on the survey, he has had under him some capable young men, one of whom has turned out to be a worthy and, I may say, a successful follower of himself, of whom he himself speaks very highly. This young man last year carried on an independent survey of a part of the British Columbia coast, and did it so well as to merit the commendations of the British Admiralty. I understand that the work is to be given over to him, and that, with Commander Boulton's opinion in his favour, he is in every way qualified to carry it on. Therefore, while we have lost the services of Commander Boulton, for which we are sorry, and for which we are very grateful, it can be said that he leaves behind a pupil of his own eminently qualified, I believe, to carry on the work successfully in the line which he himself began.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not at all question the competency of Mr. Stewart for carrying on the work begun by Captain Boulton, but there is this difference between the two men. Commander Boulton is a navigator, which Mr. Stewart is not; and it is impossible for any one to complete that survey as it ought to be completed, and to lay down the courses as Captain Boulton has laid them down, who is not a navigator. I do not at all question Mr. Stewart's competency as a surveyor, but to carry on a hydrographic survey, a want of knowledge of navigation is a serious defect. It may be said that the master of the vessel is competent for that. Then you have the two heads, a surveyor and a navigator, and which is to rule? Anybody can see that there may be cases where a difference of opinion may occur as to how the works can be carried on. Now the hon. gentleman will have a survey conducted by two heads, and I think it will be by no means as satisfactorily performed as formerly. I regret that the Government should have taken this out of the hands of Commander Boulton until his work was completed.

Mr. McNEILL. I should have added that the Minister of Railways, had he been present, would have concurred, I know, in expressing his high appreciation of Commander Boulton's services.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is to be regretted that the Government did not retain the services of Captain Boulton. He was, according to all the information we have, admirably well qualified to discharge the duty, and I believe he was a most conscientious, a most upright, and a most painstaking man, one upon whose conduct and upon whose work, the utmost reliance could be placed. That being the case, I think it is a great pity that his services were not retained.

House rose at 1.10 p.m., to resume again at 2.30 p.m.

PROROGATION.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor-General as follows:—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The Commons of Canada have voted certain Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1893, and the 30th June, 1894, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal assent was signified in the following words—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor-General thanks Her Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor-General was pleased to close the Third Session of the Seventh Parliament of the Dominion with the following speech:—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from attendance in Parliament for this year, I congratulate you upon the energy and promptitude with which you have disposed of the duties of the session just ended.

The assembly at Paris of the Behring Sea Arbitration Tribunal gives reason to hope that the differences which have existed between the Government of the United States and the Government of the Dominion are approaching a satisfactory adjustment, while the nomination of the Prime Minister of Canada as one of the arbitrators affords a guarantee that the interests of our sealers will be properly though not unduly safeguarded.

The treaty of commerce which was negotiated with France on behalf of Canada has been laid before you, together with the correspondence which passed during the negotiations; but owing to the late period of the session at which the treaty was received, and the pendency of communications as to its bearing in respect of most-favoured-nation treatment and the interpretation of certain of its clauses, my Government has thought it advisable to postpone for the present its ratification by Parliament.

I thank you for the ample provisions you have made to protect the country from the possible introduction of cholera, and I trust that the precautions taken will result in guarding against any danger from that source.

The liberal provisions made for the proper representation of Canada at the World's Columbian Exposition will, I doubt not, enable this country to make a worthy exhibit of her resources and progress among the nations of the world.

The various Acts which you have placed upon the Statute-book will contribute to the maintenance of public security and the continued progress of the country.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provisions you have made for the requirements of the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I feel with deep regret that the period of my official connection with the Dominion is drawing towards its close and that in all probability I am taking leave of you for the last time. Lest this should be the case, I desire to avail myself of the present occasion to express my abiding interest in all that concerns the welfare of Canada, and my sincere affection to her people, who have never failed to testify their loyalty to the person and throne of our Sovereign, and to show kindness and consideration to her representative. It will ever be my sincere desire to be of service to the Dominion and I shall continue to cherish feelings of the warmest solicitude for the welfare and prosperity of those amongst whom I have been placed during the past five years.

I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may at all times attend you.

The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Thursday, the eleventh day of May next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the eleventh day of May next.

ORDER PRIVILEGE AND PROCEDURE:

ORDER:

JUDICIARY OF QUEBEC: Conduct of Judges impugned by Mr. Tarte, some having paid for their appointments. Mr. Ouimet raised a question of Order.
Mr. Speaker quoted Rules and precedents, 3289; ruled, that if the member made a special attack upon any judge he would not be in Order, but reference to the judiciary in general terms would be permissible, 3291; Member requested to withdraw unparliamentary expressions, 3292.

MAKING SPEECHES ON PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS: A Member having spoken through the indulgence of the House, Mr. Speaker's attention was directed to the fact that said member was making a speech, and out of Order. Mr.
Speaker ruled: there being no question before the House the hon. gentleman had no right to speak, 2523.
