DEBATES

OF

THE SENATE

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA

1911-12

REPORTED AND EDITED BY

HOLLAND BROS.

(Official Reporters of the Senate of Canada)

FIRST SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT

OTTAWA
PRINTED BY C. H. PARMELEE, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY 1912

SENATORS OF CANADA

ALPHABETICAL LIST

FIRST SESSION, TWELFTH PARLIAMENT, 2 GEORGE V

1911-12

SENATORS.	DESIGNATION.	POST OFFICE ADDRESS.
The Honourable
BAIRD, G. T	Victoria	Perth, N.B.
BÉIQUE, F. L	De Salaberry	Montréal, Que.
BEITH, R	Bowmanville	Bowmanville, Ont.
BELCOURT, N. A	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
BELL, A. C	Pictou	New Glasgow, N. S.
BOLDUC, J	Lauzon	St. Victor de Tring, Que.
BOSTOCK, H	Kamloops	Monte Creek, B. C.
BOUCHERVILLE, DE, C.E., C.M.G	Montarville	Boucherville, Que.
BOWELL, (Sir Mackenzie), K.C.M.G	Hastings	Belleville, Ont.
BOYER, A	Rigaud	Montreal, Que.
CAMPBELL, A	York, Ont	West Toronto, Ont.
CARTWRIGHT, (Sir Richard), G.C.M.G	Oxford	Ottawa, Ont.
CASGRAIN, J. P. B	De Lanaudière	Montreal, Que.
CHOQUETTE, P. A	Grandville	Quebec, Que.
CLORAN, H. J	Victoria	Montreal. Que.
COFFEY, T	London	London, Ont.
COSTIGAN, J	Victoria, N. B	Edmundston, N. B.
COX, G. A	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
DANDURAND, R	De Lorimier	Montreal, Que.
DANIEL, J. W	Westmorland	St. John, N. B.
DAVID, L. O	Mille Iles	Montreal, Que.
DAVIS, T. O	Prince Albert	Prince Albert, Sask.
DERBYSHIRE, D	Brockville	Brockville, Ont.
DESSAULLES, G. C	Rougemont	Saint Hyacinthe, Que.
DE VEBER, L. G	Lethbridge	Lethbridge, Alberta.
DOMVILLE, J	Rothesay	Rothesay, N. B.
DOUGLAS, J. M	Tantallon	Tantallon, Sask.
EDWARDS, W. C	Rideau	Rockland, Ont.
ELLIS, J. V	St. John	St. John, N. B.
FARRELL, E. M	Liverpool	Liverpool, N. S.
FISET, J. B. R	Gulf	Rimouski, Que.
FORGET, A. E	Banff	Banff, Alberta.
FROST, F. T	Leeds and Grenville	Smith's Falls, Ont.
GIBSON, W	Lincoln	Beamsville, Ont.
GILLMOR, D	St. George	St. George, N.B.
GODBOUT, J	La Salle	Beauceville Ouest, Que.
JAFFRAY, R	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
JONES, Kt, SIR LYMAN MELVIN	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
KERR, J. K	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
KING, G. G	Queens	Chipman, N. B.
KIRCHHOFFER, J. N	Selkirk	Brandon, Man.
LANDRY, P. (Speaker)	Stadacona	Candiac, Que.
LAVERGNE, L	Kennebec	Arthabaska, Que.
LEGRIS, J. H	Repentigny	Louiseville, Que.
LARIVIÈRE, A. A. C	Provencher	St. Boniface, Man.

SENATORS.	DESIGNATIONS.	POST OFFICE ADDRESS.
The Honourable
LOUGHEED, J. A.	Calgary	Calgary, Alberta.
MACDONALD, A. A.	Charlottetown	Charlottetown, P.E.I.
MACDONALD, W. J.	Victoria	Victoria, B. C.
MACKAY, R.	Alma	Montreal, Que.
MACKEEN, D.	Cape Breton	Halifax, N.S.
MCDONALD, W	Cape Breton	Glace Bay, N.S.
MCHUGH, G.	Victoria, O.	Lindsay, Ont.
MCKAY, T.	Truro	Truro, N.S.
MCLAREN, P.	Perth	Perth, Ont.
MCMILLAN, D	Alexandria	Alexandria, Ont.
MCMULLEN, J.	North Wellington	Mount Forest, Ont.
MCSWEENEY, P.	Northumberland	Moncton, N. B.
MILLER, W.	Richmond	Arichat, N. S.
MITCHELL, W.	Wellington	Drummondville, Que.
MONTPLAISIR, H.	Shawinegan	Three Rivers, Que.
OWENS, W.	Inkerman	Montreal, Que.
POIRIER, P.	Acadie	Shediac, N. B.
POPE, R. H	Bedford	Cookshire, Que.
POWER, L. G.	Halifax	Halifax, N. S.
PRINCE, B.	Saskatchewan	Battleford, Sask.
PROWSE, B. C	Charlottetown	Charlottetown, P.E.I.
RATZ, V.	North Middlesex	New Hamburg, Ont.
RILEY, G.	Victoria, B.C.	Victoria, B. C.
ROBERTSON, J. E	P. E. Island	Montague, P.E.I.
ROCHE, W.	Halifax	Halifax, N.S.
ROSS, J. H.	Regina	Moosejaw, Sask.
ROSS, W.	Victoria, N.S.	Halifax, N.S.
ROSS, Sir George W., Kt.	Middlesex	Toronto, Ont.
SCOTT, Sir Richard, Kt.	Ottawa	Ottawa; Ont.
SHEHYN, J.	Laurentides	Quebec, Que.
SULLIVAN, M.	Kingston	Kingston, Ont.
TALBOT, P.	Lacombe	Lacombe, Alberta.
TAYLOR, G.	Leeds	Gananoque.
TESSIER, JULES.	De la Durantaye	Québec, Que.
THIBAUDEAU, A. A	De la Vallière	Montreal, Que.
THOMPSON, F. P.	Fredericton	Fredericton, N.B.
WATSON, R.	Portage la Prairie	Portage la Prairie, Man.
WILSON, J. H.	Elgin	St. Thomas, Ont.
WILSON, J. M.	Sorel	Montreal, Que.
YEO, J	East Prince	Port Hill, P.E.I.
YOUNG, F. M.	Killarney	Killarney, Man.

(APRIL 1ST)

SENATORS OF CANADA

ACCORDING TO SENIORITY

1st SESSION, 12th PARLIAMENT, 2 GEORGE V.,

1911-12

SENATORS.	DESIGNATION.	POST OFFICE ADDRE
The Honourable
WILLIAM JOHN MACDONALD	Victoria, B.C	Victoria, B. C.
SIR RICHARD WILLIAM SCOTT, KT	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
LAWRENCE GEOFFRY POWER	Sr. M. Halifax	Halifax, N. S.
C. E. BOUCHER DE BOUCHERVILLE, C.M.G.	Montarville	Montreal, P.Q.
THOMAS MCKAY	Truro	Truro, N.S.
DONALD MCMILLAN	Alexandria	Alexandria, Ont.
WILLIAM MCDONALD	Cape Breton	Glace Bay, N. S.
JOSEPH BOLDUC	Lauzon	St. Victor de Tring. P.Q.
MICHAEL SULLIVAN	Kingston	Kingston, Ont.
PASCAL POIRIER	Acadie	Shédiac, N.B.
JAMES ALEXANDER LOUGHEED	Calgary	Calgary, Alberta.
PETER MCLAREN	Perth	Perth, Ont.
HYPPOLYTE MONTPLAISIR	Shawinegan	Three Rivers, P.Q.
P. LANDRY	Stadacona	Candiac, Que.
SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL, K.C.M.G	Hastings	Belleville, Ont.
JOHN NÉSBITT KIRCHOFFER	Selkirk	Brandon, Manitoba.
GEORGE T. BAIRD	Victoria	Perth, N.B.
WILLIAM OWENS	Inkerman	Montreal, Que.
DAVID MACKEEN	Cape Breton	Halifax, N.S.
ALFRED A. THIBAUDEAU	De la Vallière	Montreal, Que.
GEORGE A. COX	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
GEORGE GERALD KING	Queens	Chipman, N.B.
JEAN BAPTISTE ROMUALD FISET	Gulf	Rimouski, Que.
RAOUL DANDURAND	De Lorimier	Montreal, Que.
JOHN YEO	East Prince	Port Hill, P.E.I.
PETER MCSWEENEY	Northumberland	Moncton, N.B.
JOSEPH P. B. CASGRAIN	DeLanaudière	Montreal, Que.
ROBERT WATSON	Portage la Prairie	Portage la Prairie, Man.
FINLAY M. YOUNG	Killarney	Killarney, Man.
JOSEPH SHEHYN	Laurentides	Quebec, Que.
SIR LYMAN MELVIN JONES, Kt	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
GEORGE MCHUGH	Victoria O.	Lindsay, Ont.
ROBERT MCKAY	Alma	Montreal, Que.
JOHN V. ELLIS	SaintJean	St. John, N.-B.
JOSEPH GODBOUT	La Salle	Beauceville, Ouest, Que.
JAMES E. ROBERTSON	P. E. Island	Montague, P.E.I.
FREDERICK P. THOMPSON	Fredericton	Fredericton, N.B.
FREDERICK L. BÉIQUE	De Salaberry	Montreal, Que.
WILLIAM GIBSON	Lincoln	Beamsville, Ont.
JAMES MCMULLEN	North Wellington	Mount Forest, Ont.

SENATORS.	DESIGNATION.	POST OFFICE ADDRESS.
The Honourable
JOSEPH H. LEGRIS	Repentigny	Louiseville, Que.
FRANCIS T. FROST	Leeds and Grenville	Smith's-Falls, Ont.
JAMES K. KERR	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
THOMAS COFFEY	London	London, Ont.
JULES TESSIER	De la Durantaye	Quebec, Que.
WILLIAM C. EDWARDS	Rideau	Rockland, Ont.
JAMES DOMVILLE	Rothesay	Rothesay, N.B.
L. O. DAVID	Mille Iles	Montreal, Que.
HENRY J. CLORAN	Victoria	Montreal, Que.
WILLIAM MITCHELL	Wellington	Drummondville, Que.
JOHN H. WILSON	Elgin	St. Thomas, Ont.
HEWITT BOSTOCK	Kamloops	Monte Creek, B.C.
SIR RICHARD J. CARTRIGHT, G.C.M.G.	Oxford	Ottawa, Ont.
PHILIPPE A. CHOQUETTE	Grandville	Quebec, Que.
JAMES H. ROSS	Regina	Moosejaw, Saskatchewan.
THOMAS O. DAVIS	Prince Albert	Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.
ROBERT JAFFRAY	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
L. GEORGE DE VEBER	Lethbridge	Lethbridge, Alberta.
JAMES M. DOUGLAS	Tantallon	Tantallon, Saskatchewan.
PETER TALBOT	Lacombe	Lacombe, Alberta.
GEORGE RILEY	Victoria	Victoria, B.C.
JOHN COSTIGAN	Victoria, N.B.	Edmundston, N. B.
SIR GEORGE W. ROSS, Kt	Middlesex	Toronto, Ont.
ROBERT BEITH	Bowmanville	Bowmanville, Ont.
DANIEL GILLMOR	St. George	St. George, N.B.
GEORGE C. DESSAULES	Rougemont	St. Hyacinthe, Qué.
NAPOLEON A. BELCOURT	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL	York, Ont	West Toronto, Ont.
DANIEL DERBYSHIRE	Brockville	Brockville, Ont.
VALENTINE RATZ	North Middlesex	New Hamburg, Ont.
ARTHUR BOYER	Rigaud	Montreal, Que.
BENJAMIN PRINCE	Saskstchewan	Battleford, Saskatchewan.
EDWARD MATTHEW FARRELL	Liverpool	Liverpool, N.S.
WILLIAM ROCHE	Halifax	Halifax, N.S.
LOUIS LAVERGNE	Kennebec	Arthabaska, Que.
AMÉDÉE E. FORGET	Banff	Banff, Alberta.
JOSEPH M. WILSON	Sorel	Moutreal, Que.
BENJAMIN C. PROWSE	Charlottetown	Charlottetown, P.E.I.
ADAM C. BELL	Pictou	New Glasgow, N.S.
ALPHONSE C. A. LARIVIÈRE	Provencher	St. Boniface, Man.
RUFUS HENRY POPE	Bedford	Cookshire, Que.
GEORGE TAYLOR	Leeds	Gananoque, Ont.
DANIEL, J. W.	Westmoreland	St. John, N.B.

THE SENATE DEBATES

FIRST SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 15, 1911.

The Senate met at 2.30 p.m.

A communication under the Great Seal was read announcing that Hon. Auguste Charles Phillippe Robert Landry had been appointed Speaker of the Senate. The Hon. Speaker then took the Chair.

NEW SENATORS.

Hon. Alphonse Alfred Clement La Rivière, of St. Boniface, Man.

Hon. Adam Carr Bell, of Pictou, N.S.

The House adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the House was resumed.

The Honourable the Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated,

The Honourable the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that,—'It is the Deputy Governor General's desire that they attend him immediately in the Senate.'

Who being come, the Hon. the Speaker said:

I have it in command to let you know that His Royal Highness the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present Parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law; but, to-morrow, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon, His Royal Highness will declare the causes of the calling of this Parliament.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor was pleased to retire, and the House of Commons withdrew.

After some time the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 2.30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 16, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 2.30 p.m.

NEW SENATORS.

Hon. Rufus Henry Pope, of Cookshire, Que.
Hon. George Taylor, of Gananoque, Ont.

The Senate was adjourned during pleasure.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

His Royal Highness the Governor General and Commander in Chief of the Dominion of Canada being seated on the Throne.

The Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that,—'It is His Royal Highness's pleasure that they attend him immediately in the Senate.'

Who being come, with their Speaker,

His Royal Highness the Governor General was then pleased to open the Session with the following gracious speech to both Houses:—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is with much satisfaction that I meet, for the first time, the parliament of Canada, and avail myself of your advice and assistance in the fulfilment of the important charge which has been entrusted to me by His Majesty the King. I can assure you that I esteem it a privilege to be called upon to administer the affairs of this prosperous and growing Dominion, and to associate myself with you in the important duties which you are about to approach.

It affords me great pleasure to congratulate you upon the continued and increasing prosperity of the country. Our trade, both with British and with foreign countries, is rapidly expanding, and there is every prospect that its volume in the present year will be largely in excess of that attained at any time in the past.

REVISED EDITION

Although there has been some damage to the crops in certain districts, the harvest has on the whole been abundant, and it is believed that the returns to the husbandman will exceed those secured in any previous year.

The results of the census taken during the present year will be laid before you, so far as they have been tabulated. While the increase in population has not fulfilled all the sanguine expectations that had been formed, yet it has been substantial and encouraging.

You will be pleased to learn that the revenues for the current fiscal year have, up to the present, largely exceeded those during any similar period in the past, with every prospect that this increase will be maintained.

The advantages that would result from a wider exchange of products between the various countries of the empire are undoubted, in view of the wonderful variety and extent of those productions, and negotiations have been opened for improved trade arrangements with the British West Indies and British Guiana, which should prove advantageous to those colonies as well as to this Dominion.

The importance of providing our country with better highways is manifest. A Bill will be introduced for the purpose of enabling the Dominion to co-operate with the provinces in the accomplishment of this desirable object.

It is essential to recognize that, in a country possessing so great an area of fertile land as that with which this Dominion is happily endowed, the great basic industry is agriculture. My advisers are convinced that the time has come when greater aid and encouragement should be given to those who are engaged in the cultivation of the land. To this end, a measure will be introduced under which it is hoped that there may be co-operation between the Dominion and the various provinces, for the purpose of assisting and encouraging our farmers to secure the best results in production, and at the same time preserve the fertility of the soil.

A measure will be introduced revising and consolidating the Acts relating to the inspection of grain and providing the means by which the government can secure, through a commission, the control and operation of the terminal elevators upon the Great Lakes.

A Bill will be introduced to establish a permanent tariff commission, whose duty it shall be to ascertain, by investigation and inquiry, such information as will furnish a more stable and satisfactory basis for tariff legislation than has heretofore been available.

Bills will also be laid before you with respect to the Department of External Affairs, the Archives and other subjects.

The selection of the best route for the Hudson Bay railway is engaging the attention of my advisers, and an announcement will be made to you of the result of their inquiry.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts of the last year will be laid before you.

The balance of the estimates for the current fiscal year, as well as the estimates for the coming year, will be submitted for your approval at an early date.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I commend the subjects, which I have mentioned, to your best consideration, and I trust that your deliberations, under the blessing of Divine Providence, may tend to the welfare and good government of this Dominion.

His Royal Highness was pleased to retire and the House of Commons withdrew.

After some time the Senate was resumed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill ( ) An Act relating to Railways —(Hon. Mr. Lougheed).

Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.—(Hon. Mr. Belcourt).

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION.

MOTION.

Mr. LOUGHEED moved,

That pursuant to Rule 77, the following senators, the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the Honourable Messieurs Gibson, Beique, Miller, Power, Watson, Casgrain, Ross (Moosejaw) and the mover be appointed a Committee of Selection to nominate senators to serve on the several Standing Committees during the present session; and to report with all convenient speed the names of the senators so nominated.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next at 3 o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 21, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (B) An Act to provide for the incorporation of Railway Companies.—Hon. Mr. Davis.

THE ADDRESS.

MOTION.

The order of the day being called—

Consideration of His Hoyal Highness the Governor General's speech on the opening of the first session of the twelfth parliament:

Hon. Mr. BELL moved:

That the following address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General, to offer the humble thanks of this House to His Royal Highness for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of parliament, namely:—

To Field Marshal, His Royal Highness Prince Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught and of Strathearn, Earl of Sussex (in the Peerage of the United Kingdom), Prince of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha; Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter; Knight of the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle; Knight of the Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick; a Member of the Most Honourable Privy Council; Great Master of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath; Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George; Knight Grand Commander of the Most Eminent Order of the Indian Empire; Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order; Personal Aide-de-Camp to His Majesty the King; Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of the Dominion of Canada.

May it please Your Royal Highness:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Royal Highness for the gracious speech which Your Royal Highness has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

He said: It is with great pleasure that I find myself entrusted with the honour of moving the address on this occasion. It is, to many of us at this time, a most important and interesting event, the first session of a new parliament under the auspices of a new government and under the guidance of a new Governor General.

In the first place I have great pleasure in reciprocating the kindly message of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, the Governor General for our Dominion. We have had, during the history of our country, a succession of able men acting as Governors General, but now, for the first time in our history, we have a member of the royal family of Great Britain, and in his person we have not only a member of the royal family and a son of that distinguished Queen whose name will unquestionably go down to history as one of the greatest women who ever lived, one who passed, during two generations, across the greatest theatre of human affairs in ever growing dignity and splendour, but we recognize in the Governor who has been sent to us a man of ability, a man of administrative capacity, a soldier, and from whose presence amongst us we ought to and no doubt will derive inspiration and advantage. We are also delighted with the presence in our midst of Her Royal Highness the Duchess. It is too soon, perhaps, to pronounce, and perhaps not very gracious to suggest comparisons in any case, but it seems evident to the people of Canada that the Duke of Connaught and His Royal Consort are winning a place in the affections of our people already, and are regarded as eminently qualified to adorn the high station in which they are placed, and to stimulate the people of this country to great and if possible greater efforts to fill a more important part in that great circle of nations which some of us at least—I for one—hope to see eventually round out into greater Britain. I hope to see the dream of imperial federation completely realized, and I think it is an agreeable indication that just at this precise time we have had sent to preside over our affairs here a member of the royal family, who had had so distinguished a career. Although we hear so much of peace nowadays, it is undoubtedly borne in upon us that the true way to preserve and maintain peace and to enjoy the blessings of peace is to be prepared for war; and in having a distinguished soldier, a field marshal of the kingdom as our Governor General, we may hope that we will not forget the importance and the necessity of being prepared for our own defence so that we may be able to take a proper part in the wars of the empire wherever they may be carried on.

Now, in reference to the subjects in the speech, it is exceedingly gratifying to us all to find that we are assembling here at a time when Canada is unquestionably one of the most prosperous countries in the world. Elsewhere there may be financial embarrassment, difficulty in business, some indication of a slowing up of the current of affairs, but in Canada there is nothing of the kind to be seen. At this moment our treasury is overflowing. I do not suppose that it is very becoming at so early a stage in the session of the Senate to introduce anything of a contentious nature, and, therefore, it is not well to make comparisons as to the state of affairs in this country now, and at former periods under other administrations. We may, however, be exceedingly gratified at the fact of our prosperity, although we do not pretend to attribute it to the activity of any certain people, politicians or parties. We ought to be exceedingly gratified at the fact that in Canada, no matter what government is in power, our prosperity is unbroken, the stream of our prosperity is flowing on with ever increasing volume, and that we are not likely to be harassed by any difficulties in securing a surplus or providing ample funds for the discharge of all our obligations. Apparently the stream of business is to continue as it has been in the past, and the difficulty will be to know how to dispose of the surplus. The surplus this financial year is likely to be even larger than it has been in the past. Business is so prosperous, the revenue of the country is so overwhelming that no matter how great the expenditures this country may be disposed to make, the government will have ample funds to meet them. As I have already said, I do not suggest that we should make comparisons as to the conduct, the policy or the manner in which either party in this country is directing our affairs. We ought to be satisfied with the fact that we are in a state of great prosperity and that our revenue is abounding in every sense of the word. This year, I understand, the consolidated revenue fund will be $170,780,000. Ten years ago it was $52,514,000, and those of us who can look back—and I presume we can all look back—to the year 1901, will recall the fact that even then our revenue was regarded as very satisfactory, and as furnishing proof of the great prosperity of the country. I believe that occasionally it was used as evidence of the efficiency and satisfactory character of the administration then in power. The expenditure on consolidated revenue fund ten years ago was $46,000,000. It is now nearly double—nearly $88,000,000—and still that does not at all, as is evident, tax our resources. We are so prosperous, our resources are so great, and the volume of business is so rapidly growing in this country that the custom house supplies us with ever sufficient and ever abundant sources of revenue.

In every department of industry in this country, there is great prosperity and active development. Our mineral productions which ten years ago were $65,000,000 are now $105,000,000. The value of our fisheries ten years ago was $21,000,000; it is now $29,000,000. In every department of activity the wealth we as a people are producing and placing at the disposal of the state, thereby strengthening the revenue, is ever and ever increasing, and we should therefore be exceedingly thankful for a state of affairs, with respect to which no critic could find fault. It is possible we do not always realize why it is that we are so well off, and possibly if I were to undertake to explain why we were in this position I would provoke discussion and contradiction. But I think there is one thing at least in respect of which we should always be convinced, and that is that the great prosperity prevailing in this country, and the marvellous evidences of the activity of our people as set forth in the development of our industries, ought to be attributed very largely at least to the fact that as a nation we are expanding from a small beginning to great development under conditions which did not exist at any previous period of the world's history. We have lived in Canada and pursued our activities nearly one hundred years without fear of invasion and without the foot of any party hostile to the peace and welfare of our country touching our soil. In three years we will have completed 100 years of peace. We owe that fact to the great empire of which we are proud to form a very important part. Other countries have had to win their way to civilization and wealth at periods during which at times all the accumulations of industry were wiped out. That has not been the case with us. We have held our wealth secure, and have been able to devote all our attention to dveloping our industries and creating and increasing the wealth of our country.

One matter mentioned in the spech from the Throne is not quite so satisfactory as we would like. Reference is made to the census which has been taken in the course of this year. I presume we all feel more or less disappointed in the result of the census. We have been accustomed to flatter ourselves for a long time with the idea that the exodus from Canada had ceased, and we had indulged in the hope that we were approaching a much higher population than has been revealed to us by the census. When I looked over the figures carefully I discovered that we had made an increase in the ten years of 1,786,000 souls; but I discovered on a little further consideration that our natural increase in that period of ten years, figured upon the basis of natural increase, which is 12·70 for the whole of our country, should have given us an increase of 722,000 souls. Immigration gave us 1,715,326 souls, and the same rate of natural increase applied to the immigrants that we have applied to the native population in the country, would give 113,000 more, so that there should have been a total increase, including immigration and excess of births of 2,551,000. Instead of that, an increase of 1,786,000 is reported, and, consequently, it is evident that 774,000 persons have failed to find their place upon the census of 1911. It is evident, under these circumstances, that there is still a considerable movement of people from Canada to the United States. The exodus is not at an end. It has been checked to a certain extent, possibly, but it is still going on and we regret very much that we are still doing so much to add to the material strength and the population of the adjoining country. For that I do not think any administration can be blamed. I believe that we are pursuing the right course in developing our industries in order to keep our people at home, because the movement of population can be discovered in our country everywhere, not in one particular part but everywhere. It seems to me there is a tendency to drift towards the towns from the country—a tendency to abandon agricultural life for industrial life. Therefore, what is required is not to check the growth of the industrialism of this country, not to do anything at all to interfere with the attraction of people towards industrial pursuits, but the government should endeavour as far as possible to overcome the tendency of our population to leave the country and go in to the towns by making the country life more attractive. If that could be done it would be a great advantage. On the other hand, if there exists an overpowering desire on the part of the people to abandon agricultural for industrial pursuits, then it is evident that we must make greater efforts to attract to this country farm labourers or farmers, those who shall be content to take possession of the farms, which many people do not seem to prize so highly as perhaps they should. In that connection it is gratifying to find that the government of to-day, while not making a great many professions as to what it is going to do at this time, has still shown that the agricultural interests are about to receive particular attention at its hands. The first great measure which is promised in the speech, which must result in the development of agriculture and have a tendency to keep people on the farms, is the promise of assistance by the federal government in the way of highway construction. That is absolutely essential in order to make life on the farm comfortable and profitable. It is, to a certain extent, I believe, one of the reproaches which is to be levelled against the people of almost every province in Canada, that the highways are not creditable; that while the early settlers came here without any capital, except their personal strength, made tremendous sacrifices, they wrought wonderful works in the way of clearing lands and providing roads—works that simply astonish us when we consider how handicapped were the men who accomplished these. It makes us feel that we are not now doing the work at all. In some provinces the revenues are not adequate to the demand for better roads. It is therefore exceedingly satisfactory from the point of view of those who think everything should be done in this Dominion to foster agriculture and to make it truly what the speech claims it to be the basic industry of our country—to discover that not content with devoting the revenue of the country to greater works such as railways, canals and things of that kind, they are going to come down to the more humble mode of locomotion, they are going to provide highways, and these are absolutely essential in order that the people may take full advantage of the numerous railways with which the country is provided.

Another passage of the speech promises that the federal government is about to do more than it has hitherto done, and is about to co-operate as far as possible in the matter of developing and improving the methods of agriculture in our land. That is a work in which the Dominion government has been for a long time successfully engaged, and much has been done, but much remains to be done. I suppose that it is very hard for us to realize that the most difficult business in the world, almost, is the business of the farmer. It is exceedingly technical, exceedingly complicated, and subdivided into a great number of different branches and subjects, all of which require ability and application in order to come to a satisfactory knowledge of them. Scientific cultivation of the soil is a most difficult business to learn, and with all that has been done for the farmer in the past it is still insufficient to enable him to approach his work with proper technical knowledge and proper skill. Even should the government not see their way to increase the number of agricultural colleges, there are other directions in respect of which, particularly in a country with an abounding revenue—they might very well promote the development of agricultural pursuits. In the first place, and as the foundation of all improvement in agriculture—an improvement which requires capital which is frequently beyond the resource of the individual farmer—is the great fundamental improvement of drainage, and that improvement lies at the basis of what has been termed here our basic industry, agriculture. There is scarcely an acre of farm land in Canada which does not require to be drained, and there is not an acre which requires to be drained which cannot be drained to the enormous advantage of the owner and of the state; therefore, in respect of this matter alone it might be very well to follow the example set to us a long time ago by the British government in their Drainage Act, by which capital would be placed at the disposal of the farmer at a reasonable rate, to enable him to drain his land effectively. In other respects as well, capital might be placed at the disposal of the farmer. He can furnish adequate security as a rule, and like every other business man, he will find it impossible to carry on his business successfully without capital. Those who are intimate with agricultural pursuits know perfectly well that farmers thoroughly realize that farming is a business which cannot be carried on without capital. They realize that the proper place to invest their savings is in their land, their implements and their farm stock, and this country would render a great service if it placed at the disposal of the farmers the credit of the state so as to enable them, the proper security being given, to bring to their assistance capital, which is the vivifying influence without which no trade or business can prosper. There are many other matters in the speech which I will not grapple with. We are all exceedingly interested in seeing that something is to be done in the matter of grain inspection and to control the terminals at the Great Lakes, matters in respect of which there is great feeling in the west, and in respect of which a large delegation is about to visit Ottawa, I understand, to present their views to the government. The Tariff Commission is another important matter. I have had the pleasure of taking part in all the tariff fights which have been waged in Canada since 1878, and it has always seemed to me that it is a very rough and ready method of settling a very delicate piece of business like the establishment of a tariff, by making it the main subject of contention in a political contest which takes place in this country every time the great parties go in to the arena to struggle for supremacy. A tariff commission should be composed of men versed in business affairs, who know what a tariff is, who know what it should be, what its purpose is, men who have ample knowledge of the various businesses and industries of the country, and some realizing sense of the difficulty of making a tariff or changing a tariff without interfering with or jeopardizing or perhaps destroying certain industries. I believe that those who realize what that means will be delighted to discover that a tariff commission is to be entrusted with the work of preparing our tariffs in the future. The outcry of depressed industry here or there, or the demands of certain localities resting on certain grievances, by their energy, might force the government into making concessions, disastrous in their consequences. The tariff should be treated as a scientific instrument intended to give the country as much revenue as possible with as little injury to the people as possible, and as little as possible of that revenue should be diverted from its proper goal, the treasury of the country, and private interests should not be allowed to get undue advantage from the changing or modification of our tariff. It is a work to which expert trained minds with adequate knowledge should be called and when it is taken up and dealt with in that way, I believe we may hope to have a fairly satisfactory tariff. Possibly such a thing as perfect tariff cannot be made. It will be impossible to make it satisfactory to all; but we should be able to approach such a goal by using the services of experts not of parties in politics. It should not be a subject of party strife, but purely a business proposition, and an endeavour to adjust the schedules so as to give to the country the largest revenue with the least inconvenience. I shall not deal with the other matters referred to in the address. My hon. friend will no doubt take them up.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I realize the great honour that has been delegated to me in having been selected to second the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. Having so recently been called to the Senate after having served my constituents for 29 years in the popular Chamber, I appreciate the honour all the more, and will endeavour in the few remarks that I propose to make to avoid as much as possible anything of a partisan character.

We in Canada are favoured with responsible government; we are pardonably proud of our British laws and British institutions. His Majesty the King, represented in Canada by the Governor General, is one of the ties that binds us to the motherland. We have been singularly favoured by the governors who have presided over the destiny of our young country in years gone by and now we still have greater reason to feel grateful in having sent to us one of the royal family in the person of His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught. We trust his stay with us during his tenure of office may prove as pleasant and profitable to himself and his royal consort, the Duchess of Connaught, as undoubtedly it will prove to us. His immediate predecessor, Earl Grey, by visiting all portions of the Dominion, became acquainted with the people of Canada, interested himself in their daily lives, and secured a knowledge of the country that aided him materially in the discharge of his high and important duties. His example will no doubt be followed by His Royal Highness, our present Governor General and we hope with a like result.

Canada has for several years been blessed by Divine Providence in providing us with a succession of good crops that has resulted in producing prosperous times, and we are glad to know that the present year has been no exception and all classes of our people have participated in the benefits arising therefrom.

Our population has been increasing rapidly with a better class of emigrants than came to our shores a few years ago, and while complaints have been made as to the correctness of the recent census in many portions of the Dominion and disappointment expressed at the returns in many of our cities and towns, still on the whole the increase in population is fairly satisfactory, and the prospects in the future in this respect are of the brightest.

There is possibly no measure that has been foreshadowed in the speech from the Throne of greater importance to the country as a whole than that relating to the improvement of our highways. The Dominion government has assisted largely in the building of three transcontinental railways which are now constructed or under way of construction and which have been, and will be of great service to the Dominion of Canada, but as the great proportion of the products of the farmer have first to be hauled over our country turnpike roads is it not of first importance that the cost of this transportation be reduced to a minimum by the improvement of our highways? I am informed that in England it costs eight cents per ton per mile to haul produce over their country roads while in Canada it costs about 26 cents per ton per mile. Would it be unreasonable for me to suggest to the government the propriety of building a transcontinental highway and maintaining the same; then arranging with the provinces to build and maintain side roads at certain distances and arranging with the counties in each province to build and maintain the cross roads and concession lines; to have all roads up to a certain standard? If this were done the advent of the automobile will attract a great number of tourists to Canada. And with the Dominion, provincial and municipal governments co-operating towards this end, substantial progress should be made within the course of the next few years. Good roads mean increased facilities for trade, larger traffic, more intimate relations socially and in business between our peoples, to say nothing of the additional pleasure and comfort derived therefrom.

Canada is largely an agricultural country, and when the agricultural industry is prosperous that prosperity will be reflected and extended to all other classes. It is therefore gratifying to know that it is the intention of the government to further aid that basic industry of the country, and thus encourage the young men to remain on the farm, and to afford him every opportunity to be educated along the lines of intensive and scientific farming which will bring him better returns for his labour and render his occupation one of greater attraction.

In accordance with the promise of the Prime Minister made when leader of the opposition, it is the intention to appoint a permanent tariff commission to deal with all matters relating to the tariff. This action it is hoped will do away with many inequalities now existing, and after a careful investigation of all those features which should be taken into consideration in the formation of the tariff, such as cost of production, wages, &c., we trust that greater fairness to all parties, producers and consumers alike, may result; greater stability, a more scientific tariff that will encourage home production with sufficient internal competition to ensure fair prices to all parties concerned.

Reference has also been made to the Hudson Bay railway, and it is only right before entering upon this important work that definite knowledge should be secured as to the best route to the bay, and the best harbour at its terminal. The road will prove a great benefit, especially to western Canada, and when the route has been finally decided upon it should be prosecuted with energy, as with increasing population and a greater area under cultivation year after year, the transportation of our best products will prove a great problem indeed.

The taking over of the terminal elevators is another most important measure, which is to be provided for by legislation at this session of parliament. Abuses have arisen in connection with the marketing of the grain by which mixing has taken place to the consequent deterioration of its quality; and after repeated experiments by legislation to do away with those abuses, but without success, it is now deemed necessary to make provision for the operation of the terminal elevators by means of a Commission with wide powers which it is hoped may remedy the grievances complained of, and result in bringing to the farmer the full value of his crops.

Other measures of importance are likely to come up for discussion and adoption, and we trust will meet with that consideration at the hands of the honourable members of this House that their importance demands.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It gives me very considerable pleasure to welcome to our body certain old-young acquaintances of mine—old in former days, young as members of this honourable body —and I make no doubt whatever that my hon. friend opposite will find these gentlemen who have recently been added to our number a very valuable acquisition to his somewhat depleted ranks. I do not grudge them to him in the least. I have always been of the opinion that it was rather a mistake that one of the two parties in this country should be represented somewhat weakly in this Chamber. We had our experience in old times; my hon. friend may have his experience now. As to the mode in which these hon. gentlemen have discharged their duties, I have no complaint whatever to make. They have, even in the hour of victory, been moderate and temperate. Whether they have always been as moderate or temperate, or whether they would be as moderate or temperate if the proportions between the two parties were reversed, I will not undertake to say, but in the present instance I have no complaint whatever to make as to the mode in which they have discharged their duties.

As to the document itself which we are called upon to discuss to-day, I am not prepared to speak quite as favourably. To my mind it resembles very much the description given of a certain patent by a certain eminent jurist, which was to the effect that everything which was good in the patent was not new, and that everything which was new in the patent was not good. That would be a pretty accurate description, if it is not disloyal to say so, of the speech which has been put in His Excellency's mouth and thus delivered from the Throne. I am sorry to say that there are two or three things in it which are new, on which I shall be obliged to offer some criticism; but as regards the main part of it I am bound to say that there is not much in it to criticise. What it is chiefly remarkable for is the omission to make any reference whatever to a question which was very recently discussed in the country and for some time preceding the election which has been before us for a couple of years, and which has been made the subject of many motions in the House of Commons, and led to a very decided division of opinion between two large sections of supporters of the present government. If there was any question on which we have a right to know, and on which the people of Canada have a right to know, what the opinions of the government are, it is the question of the naval policy which was inaugurated by the late government. It is a mere subterfuge, and in my opinion a cowardly subterfuge, for those gentlemen to say, after having had this question before them for two years or more, that they are not able now to state whether they acquiesce in the policy which was placed on the statute book by the late government or not. Possibly before the end of the debate in another place is arrived at we may obtain some more light on the subject; but I observe that my hon. friends up to the present moment have been most religiously silent as to that question on which it is well known that before they took office the members of the present government were exceedingly divided in opinion.

There is another matter to which I might allude and it is this : unless my memory is wholly at fault I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in former days was wont to complain that the Senate was badly treated because in this Chamber we had only one member of the government holding a portfolio. The complaint cannot exactly be applied to him as I understand he does not hold a portfolio and I am bound to say that having regard to my hon. friend's party experience and general capacity, I pay him no compliment at all in stating that he is fully the equal if not the superior of any of his colleagues with whom he is now associated who are now provided with portfolios and I hope that lapse will be remedied as soon as possible.

Looking at this production which I hold in my hands, particularly the first four pages thereof, I would be disposed to say that so far as regards the first half of this production it might perhaps be very fitly described as the song of the cuckoo, as a kind of jubilation on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite on having got into such an exceedingly well-feathered nest as they now occupy without any exertion, pains or effort on their part. It is satisfactory for me to know, as my hon. friend opposite has said, that Canada is now in a condition of bounding prosperity. He might have said with perfect truth, and no man could gainsay it, that for the last fifteen years the prosperity of Canada has been phenomenal, that not merely in the history of Canada, but I believe in the history of the whole civilized world known to us there is no instance of a country having prospered during the fifteen years which have elapsed from 1896 to 1911 as Canada prospered under the administration which has recently resigned power. I can understand perfectly well that my hon. friend opposite did not like to make comparisons. To those of us who remember the state of stagnation and retrogression which prevailed in Canada for the fifteen years preceding 1896—from 1881 to 1896—it is very easy to understand why my hon. friend did not like to make any unpleasant comparison. I am not equally scrupulous. I think it is well that at this early date he should remember, and the members of this House and the people of this country should remember, that during the last 15 years the prosperity of Canada has been perfectly phenomenal. When we came into office we know the position in which we found Canada. From a trade and commerce of about $200,000,000, the trade and commerce of Canada expanded under the late administration to $800,000,000 during the current year, in all probability. We had a surplus last year of $30,000,000. There is scarcely any doubt that the surplus will reach $40,000,000 this year, and although my hon. friend appears to think that the results of the late census must have been disappointing to our people, surely he cannot have forgotten that even if only 1,786,000 souls were added to our numbers between 1901 and 1911, and if that is less than we had at one time hoped it would be, it certainly does compare most favourably with the addition to our numbers between 1881 and 1891, when, even with the aid of counting a very large number of people who were absent from the country into the returns, we barely mustered 500,000 souls all told. Five hundred thousand, as compared with 1,780,000, is a record of which the Reform party need not be ashamed.

I observe that the hon. gentlemen—and I have not the slightest objection to them doing so—are extremely desirous of putting into effect a certain Bill which passed through this House after mature consideration, a matter of three or four months ago. I may say it would have been much more to the credit of the House of Commons if they had taken that measure up and devoted some time to putting it into effect than spending time in wrangling during the last months of the session. As far as I can understand from the paragraph in the speech from the Throne, what the hon. gentlemen propose to do is simply this: we took power to do everything they propose to do, but we reserved to ourselves the right to make the experiment whether we could or could not do all that the people of the Northwest expected to be done without the necessity of sinking millions of money in the purchase of certain elevators. I do not mean to say that it may not prove good policy. As stated at the time, it might be necessary to be done, but I say it would have been wiser and more politic and prudent to have made the experiment in the first instance before putting the country to very large expenditure with results that may prove very different from those which hon. gentlemen expect.

As for their other propositions, I am wholly in accord with them in thinking it is right and desirable that all possible means should be taken to preserve the fertility of the soil and encourage agriculture, and anything in that way fairly conceived and fairly carried out will always have my individual support, and I think I can say the support of the members of my side of the House. But after all is said and done, that is nothing except carrying out the work which was begun and ably carried on by my hon. friend Mr. Fisher during the period he was Minister of Agriculture. If they will do it as well as he did, and produce as good results as he did, they shall have my hearty commendation and support. I regret, however, to see that there is one proposition they make which is specious enough on the face of it, but which requires a great deal of careful consideration, that is the proposition to co-operate with the several individual provinces for the purpose of constructing roads. Now that is a thing which may or may not, under certain conditions, be of advantage to the country, but the hon. gentleman has not alluded in the slightest degree to certain facts which are very material in this connection, and which this Senate ought in particular to seriously consider when any such measure is brought before them. Everybody who knows anything of the economic conditions of Canada knows perfectly well that there are many provinces which tax themselves at this present moment very highly for local and municipal purposes, and others which hardly tax themselves at all, and they know perfectly well there are many of those provinces which contribute to the Dominion treasury sums per head vastly in excess of those that are contributed by others. Now I am perfectly willing that those provinces which are rich should contribute in proportion to their means, but it is not so clear to me that provinces like Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia which are already heavily taxing themselves for municipal purposes, and which are already contributing enormous sums to the public treasury, larger in proportion to their population than those of many other provinces, should be compelled out of that contribution of theirs to submit to heavy expenditures for the benefit of other portions of the community who do not choose, and never have chosen to tax themselves for municipal purposes. Therefore, I doubt exceedingly the wisdom or propriety of mixing together the Dominion and the provincial finances any more than we have done. Those who remember the circumstances under which our confederation was formed are aware that the system of subsidizing the provinces was had recourse to with extreme reluctance. It was necessary to do it, or let the whole scheme go by the board, but the fathers of confederation were not blind to the dangers which were likely to arise from that, and looking at it from the constitutional point of view I can conceive of nothing more likely to encourage extravagance, or corruption for the matter of that, than requiring one party to provide the money for other parties to spend. Unless great care is taken, I am afraid that will be the result under the proposition which has been suggested by the government of to-day. However, that can be better discussed when we have the matter before us in detail, as I presume it will be in reasonable time.

Now with reference to reciprocity, I desire to say but one thing with respect to certain matters which have lately transpired and which transpired during the course of last election. I have not the slightest objection whatever to the people of Canada deciding for themselves as they see fit whether or not they should extend their trade relations with the people of the United States. That was their clear right. Nobody can dispute it, but I do object and did object at the time in the strongest possible manner to the unfortunate way in which the contest was conducted on the part of a very great portion of the press and supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. If there is one thing more than another that every Canadian statesman who is worthy of the name ought to avoid it is fostering or pandering to a spirit of hostility and animosity between Canada and the United States. Now, for months together I could not take up an opposition paper of that day from one end of Canada to the other without seeing some slur or taunt or innuendo or scurrilous attack—for it amounted to that very often—on the people and government of the United States. I observed some little time ago that the present premier took occasion at a dinner in the city of New York to express to the people and through the press the remarkable good will and affection which he entertained towards the people of the United States. Had he made that statement while the election was going on, had he chosen to curb the attacks of his followers and put a stop to the mode of slandering which was then in practice, I would have held his remarks entitled to more consideration. It may interest the House and my hon. friends opposite and may interest Mr. Borden himself to know how those remarks were received, by some at any rate, among our friends on the other side of the border. I have here an extract which was sent me from some one of the papers of the United States in which they deal with this subject in a fashion which I think is well worth while my hon. friends to consider carefully. The article reads as follows:

We observe that Mr. Borden, the new premier of Canada, has been good enough to intimate at a dinner at New York, that he entertains feelings of the warmest respect and goodwill for the people of the United States.

We are not aware that the people of the United States are likely to concern themselves very much about the state of Mr. Borden's feelings towards them.

But we are aware that Mr. Borden has been elected premier after a campaign during which his partisans and the press which supported him have indulged in every description of paltry innuendo, not to say of downright abuse of the government and people of this country, and that during this campaign the aforesaid Mr. Borden did not make the slightest attempt to check the torrent of vituperation by which he profited.

Now Mr. Borden apparently wishes to apologize.

He might as well and indeed very much better have let it alone.

Neither the insults of his partisans nor his own fulsome apologies will be regarded with anything but contemptuous indifference on this side of the border.

But there is another aspect of the question which he and his friends, and indeed the people of Canada will do well to ponder. No one disputes their perfect right to enter into closer trade relations with the United States or not as they may see fit. But it is one thing to decline an offer courteously and quite another to decline it insolently and to insinuate that it was made from unworthy motives, and this last is exactly what the people of Canada in their collective capacity have just done.

Now it is an open secret that for several years back there has been developing a much more cordial feeling on the part of leading American statesmen and public men generally towards Great Britain and incidentally towards Canada as part of the British Empire than prevailed formerly.

This in our judgment was as it should be. There are many reasons why the United States and the British Empire should act in harmony. But the relations between the two countries are in a high degree a matter of sentiment and it would be idle to deny that the recent action of Canada and the senseless abuse of everything American with which the press of the dominant party has teemed for many months have had a very chilling effect on this sentiment, and Canada may congratulate herself on having done more to estrange the two nations by her conduct than she will be able to repair for many a day to come.

I fear that that expresses only too correctly the sentiment of a great many parties who were formerly well disposed towards us in the United States, and as I have said while I would have given Mr. Borden and his friends every credit had they, while this campaign of abuse was going on, raised their little finger to stop it. I am afraid the mischief which has been done is far greater than they will ever be able to repair. I have all my life long seen and felt that the greatest service the people of Canada could render to the British Empire is, was, and will be to cultivate if they can friendly relations with the great nation on the other side of the border. Do these people know—do these slingers of mud recollect that the people of the United States to-day are something like a hundred million strong? They were close on 95,000,000 two years ago when the last census was taken, and they must be close to one hundred millions to-day. If they increase at even a smaller ratio than they have been doing, it is almost mathematically certain that ten years from now they will number one hundred and twenty millions, and within twenty-five years will reach one hundred and fifty millions, and that is the kind of power, that is the sort of nation that these people think it wise and prudent, and in the interest of the British Empire for us to insult and estrange. There is another class of persons as to whom I would say a word, and that is those ungrateful fools among English public men—and I use the words with emphasis—those ungrateful fools who have recently been exulting at the downfall of the only administration that ever conferred any substantial benefit on British trade or even raised a hand to assist British arms. I know enough of the stolid ignorance of Canada and things Canadian which prevails among too large a section of the British people, not to understand how completely ignorant these people are of what they are talking about; but I can tell them this, that if they did know anything of Canadian history they would know that they had done their best —their little best it may be—to depreciate the one government that did any respectable service to the empire within my time and generation at least.

There are one or two points apart from these on which I desire to say a word, and first as to the attitude of the Senate itself. I know I speak for my hon. friends beside me when I say that my hon. friend opposite will meet with no factious opposition or criticism from this side of the House; but he will do well to remember that the present House of Commons can hardly be considered more than a provisional House of Commons. The present House of Commons is not in the proper sense of the term a true and representative body at all. At this moment the House of Commons contains a large proportion of members from the east, more than the east is entitled to, and on the other hand this present House of Commons hardly allows to the Northwest more than half the representation it is properly entitled to, and until that anomaly is removed, until the House of Commons does fairly represent the people of Canada, it is hardly entitled to the same rights and privileges as might be accorded to it under other circumstances. My hon. friend himself on former occasions complained—and I am bound to say not without reason—of the way in which the government of the day used to treat the Senate in not giving them due time to consider important measures proposed to them. I cry 'peccavi,' although I tried my best to remedy the evil as a member of that government, and I now formally tender to my hon. friend on my own part and on behalf of my hon. friends beside me, our hearty support in aiding him to bring his colleagues to a proper sense of their duty in that respect. I have no doubt my hon. friend will do his best, and I hope and trust that with our aid he will succeed in bringing about a better state of things in the future than has prevailed in the past. To himself I tender my congratulations. I am extremely pleased that he should be leader of the Senate. During the time I sat on the other side, I had every reason to be satisfied with the manner in which my hon. friend conducted his task as leader of the opposition, and I have no doubt that the same pleasant relations will prevail between us in the future as in the past. As to you, Mr. Speaker, I have not the slightest doubt that you will worthily fill the high office to which you have been appointed; I am sure you will be much missed from the floor of the House, and I will pledge my word to you that so long as you remain in the chair, no question will be put to you from this side of the House for which we will not be able to obtain an ample precedent in some of the questions put by yourself from your former place in this body.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I join with my right hon. friend in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address for the very able and genial manner in which they have performed the task placed in their hands. A task of this nature in the Senate possibly is not so easy as it is in the Commons. There is here an absence of that spectacular influence which gives to a speaker inspiration by which he very frequently calls up oratorical powers which in all probability will lie latent in the absence of any special cause to evoke them. It is also very satisfactory to find that the four members of this House that have been introduced into the Chamber during the present session are old parliamentarians from the House of Commons. Notwithstanding the many attacks which from time to time are made in that chamber upon the Senate; notwithstanding the many unfriendly criticisms which are advanced not only by members of the Commons but by the press of the country with reference to the reformation of this Chamber, it is certainly gratifying to find that ex-members of the House of Commons are always found sufficiently courageous to take a seat in this House when tendered it. I hope this will continue. I have always regarded the experience and judgment which hon. gentle men have acquired, and matured by long service in the House of Commons, to be an asset of Canada, an asset of which we should take advantage in public affairs, and I know of no more desirable channel through which to pass to secure that asset than for hon. gentlemen who have served in the House of Commons many years than through the Senate of Canada. We have amongst us a number of hon. gentlemen who have had the experience to which I have referred, and I hope that many of the additions from time to time to the ranks of this honourable body will come from that particular source. It is therefore with no uncommon pleasure that I extend my congratulations to my hon. friends who have been introduced this session, and I hope they will not cease to exercise that same activity in this Chamber that I know characterized them in the House of Commons. One might safely make the suggestion to some of the members of this House that a little additional activity, a little additional interest in the proceedings of the Chamber and in the various duties of the committees would possibly place the Senate in a very much more favourable light before the country than that which we have occupied. Permit me to join with the mover and seconder of the address in expressing my satisfaction at the acceptance by His Royal Highness of the Governor-Generalship of Canada. His appointment has been received throughout the Dominion with profound satisfaction and appreciation. This is the first occasion in the history of this Dominion that a member of the royal family has done us this great honour. It is in fact, I believe, the first occasion in the history of the self-governing dominions that a member of the reigning family has identified himself by residence in the national activities of the greater empire beyond the seas. We regard this as a tribute to Canada, and as indicative of a more organic union in imperial affairs that at an early day must bring together the separate political units which constitute the empire. It must be gratifying to all of us to know that the Governor General is equipped with a ripe experience gathered in every part of the empire. Therefore Canada extends to His Royal Highness and his gracious royal consort, who through her many graces will adorn the office with him, the most loyal welcome, which a most loyal people can extend, and we hope Their Royal Highnesses' term of office in Canada may be to themselves and to us one of supreme satisfaction, pleasure, and success.

There is a clause in the address to which my hon. friends have already made allusion, foreshadowing that it is proposed to take the tariff out of politics. Notwithstanding the fact that my right hon. friend has long been a critic of tariffs, I awaited his criticism of this particular clause in the address. I, however, ascribe to him that good judgment of not being critical as to the desirability of establishing a tariff board for the purpose of placing on a scientific basis the tariff of Canada. I need not say that the fiscal policy of a nation is ever controversial. It is a human product and except for the effort that has been made in the United States of recent years to place the tariff on a scientific basis, I am unaware of any other nation having attempted to take the tariff out of politics, to free it from that pressure of special interests which is invariably brought to bear upon its making. I believe that public opinion in Canada will sanction and approve the adoption by the government of a proper measure for the appointment of a tariff board to place the tariff of our country upon a fair and equitable basis. The difficulty with tariffs, not only in Canada, but the United States, and in the various protective countries of Europe, has been that they are framed chiefly in proportion to the importunities or special efforts which are brought to bear in moulding their schedules. There is not a gentleman in this Chamber who is not familiar with the way in which amendments are secured from time to time in our tariff. If a special interest—a very influential or dominant one, influencing to a very large extent, as many of them do, the political destiny of one party or another, will reflect such influence in public tariffs. The relation between the producer and consumer is very seldom considered, and it is time public opinion became aroused in Canada so that we may have a tariff which may be proof against the very many inequalities that we find embodied not only in our own tariff, but in those of other countries. It is to be hoped that at an early date a bill will be introduced sufficiently illuminative as to what will be done in this particular direction. It may suffice for me to say at the present moment that such a bill may in all probability be based to some extent upon the experience which the United States government has had with reference to its own tariff commission. The tariff commission in the United States, up to the present time has been created under the executive order of the president, and I understand is not yet under the jurisdiction of Congress. I understand that a bill was introduced at the last session of Congress for the purpose of establishing that commission as part of Congress, and that during the approaching session of Congress that will be done.

Hon Mr CASGRAIN.—Will you go to Washington to get that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.—That is not necessary at all; but if we did go to Washington the suggestion would probably have met with approval from my hon. friends opposite us. I understand that was one of their political weaknesses in the days gone by. For the purpose of promoting the friendly relations which my right hon. friend referred to a few moments ago between the United States and Canada, it might be diplomatic to go to Washington to secure any good legislation which they may have passed there.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.—We wanted them to pass it but you would not let them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—From a perusal of an official document issued by the United States touching the creation of a tariff board, I find it most comprehensive. The tariff board in the United States has a staff of over seventy people. I understand its functions are simply administrative and judicial. It does not seek to take from Congress any legislative functions. The staff is composed of technical experts, of investigators, of examiners, by which the most comprehensive knowledge can be readily obtained respecting the tariff. I think some five of six of them reside in Europe. I find from the document before me that of the technical experts in the field they have one in Europe. They have three chief examiners in Europe. They have one representative in the field in Europe. Thus a staff of some four or five who practically reside in Europe, making the closest investigations into the products and the various imports that come in to the United States so as to give the most comprehensive information to the board in shaping the tariff.

Hon. Mr DAVID.—Does that mean that the government must be responsible for the decisions of the board?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.—No. As I understand, the board has not the power to make changes in the tariff. They are simply advisers. They exercise administrative and judicial functions without having any legislative power.

My right hon. friend with some degree of feeling referred to the late campaign which was fought out through the Dominion, and resulted on the 21st September last in a judgment being given by the people of Canada adverse to the late government. It was not my intention to make any reference to that fact, but as my hon. friend has made a charge as to unfriendly, in fact hostile, feelings being manifested by a large section of the people of Canada towards the United States it seems to me desirable that if there is ground for the contradiction of such a statement it should be given. I think my right hon. friend entirely misapprehended the spirit of the electors of Canada in their expression of judgment on the 21st of September. It seems to me that in view of what has taken place in the United States touching the discussion of this very important question in Canada, the people of Canada would have been untrue to their traditions and to the dignity which should characterize them as a people if they did not resent the position taken by public men of the United States on that occasion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Only one man.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no desire to say anything that would in any way be unfriendly to the good relations which should obtain between the two people, but there is not a public man in Canada who is not familiar with the extraordinary expressions which were uttered in the United States by the President, by their public men and press, touching the ultimate object of the United States in seeking to establish reciprocal relations with Canada. I do not say that the sentiments expressed by the President of the United States or by the journals of the United States were unfriendly to Canada, but I say that the only construction you can place upon those sentiments led to only one conclusion, and that was the ulterior object which the United States government had in seeking to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the people of Canada. My right hon. friend has attacked a very large and influential party in England on account of the sympathy which they manifested with the Conservative party on the victory obtained at the polls on the 21st September last. My right hon. friend thinks that the Prime Minister of Canada should make an apology to the people of the United States on the ground of the unfriendly expressions of Canadian opinion as to the motives of the people of the United States during that campaign.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I made no such suggestion. What I did say was that it would be no use to do it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I am not authorized to make a statement on the part of the Prime Minister of Canada, I venture the assertion that the Prime Minister had nothing to apologize for, and I venture to say that the position taken by the Prime Minister in the discussion of that question throughout the campaign from the dissolution of parliament down to the present time is one which not only commended itself to the people of Canada as exemplified on the 21st September, but it had the sympathy and admiration of the whole empire. When we find the President of the United States in that campaign making before the American newspaper publishers association of New York, this statement:—

> I have said that this was a critical time in the solution of the question of reciprocity. It is critical because unless it is now decided favourably to reciprocity it is exceedingly probable that no such opportunity will ever again come to the United States. The forces which are at work in England and in Canada to separate her by a Chinese wall from the United States and to make her part of an imperial commercial band reaching from England around the world to England again by a system of preferential tariffs, will derive an impetus from the rejection of this treaty, and if we would have reciprocity, with all the advantages that are described and that I earnestly and sincerely believe will follow its adoption, we must take it now or give it up for ever

It is for my hon. friend to take his choice betwen the negotiation of a reciprocity tariff between Canada and the United States by which we throw down our tariff walls and permit the United States to take possession of our natural resources, for the development of their own manufactures, and to build up their trade from within our boundaries, or for Canada to work out her destiny as the President expresses it, 'To make her part of an imperial commercial band reaching from England around the world to England again by a system of preferential tariff.'

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Does my hon. friend expect that to follow?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not prepared to say it will be realized but I trust it will at no distant day. I prefer to see Canada a part of a commercial band reaching from England around the world again to England by a system of preferential tariff rather than to see her subordinated to the interests of United States.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—That is not the question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I ask my hon. friend again if he thinks the people of Canada should have accepted in quietude and in docile passiveness the act of a member of Congress in deliberately introducing a bill at the time our representatives were in Washington discussing this treaty, for the annexation of Canada to the United States? This took place at the very time the representatives of Canada were discussing with the representatives in Washington the adoption of this very treaty.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That gentleman was against reciprocity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Even though he might have been against reciprocity, he had the temerity to introduce a Bill to annex Canada to the United States.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —What treatment did that proposition receive in the Congress of the United States?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did not expect Congress to pass that Bill at that particular time without further negotiations with the late government; but at the very time the representatives of Canada were discussing this tariff question with the representatives of the United States they did not sufficiently appreciate the dignity and the respect which they should have paid to a self governing dominion of the British Empire to curb the head of their own Congress from making a speech declaring that what he favoured was not reciprocity but the extension of United States boundaries from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Sea. I refer to Mr. Champ Clark.

These are a few incidents. I could multiply those incidents by a hundred, and not coming from irresponsible sources, but from some of the most responsible sources in the United States, from the President down, from the most influential newspapers to the least influential. Does my right hon. friend fancy that for a moment the people of Canada should have prostrated themselves in the dust and have adopted a quiescent policy while those insults were being heaped on the people of Canada? However, the Canadian people gave judgment on the 21st of September, and from that there is no appeal for the time being. I would, however, indulge in the hope, which I know is entertained by my right hon. friend, and which has been very frequently expressed by him, that it would be exceedingly unfortunate that anything should be done at this or at any other future time to impair the friendly relations which for a century have been maintained between these two great peoples. I venture to say that the good sense and sound judgment of the people of the United States and the empire sprung from the same race, living practically under the same governmental institutions, speaking a common language, worshipping a common Maker, will resent being interrupted or disturbed in any way by political controversy created through the discussion of trade relations between the two nations. We are about to celebrate a century of peace between the Anglo-Saxon races, and I think my right hon. friend will give to the Conservative party the credit of being desirous, as much as the great party to which he belongs, to promote peace and good will between these two great Anglo-Saxon nations.

If I may be permitted to say a word in regard to some of the other questions mooted by my right hon. friend, I would say in answer to those questions of policy which he thought should have been elaborated at the present meeting of parliament, that he must not overlook the fact that it was only on the 10th October last that the present government was sworn in. An inheritance was left to the present government that could only be met by Governor General's warrant for the purpose of extricating the country from the difficulties in which we were precipitated by the dissolution of parliament and the bringing on of the elections, and my right hon. friend can scarcely be very sincere in thinking that the present government would have brought down any declaration of policy on those questions at the present session of parliament. My right hon. friend must not forget that when his government came into office in 1896 and met parliament in the latter part of the summer, notwithstanding the many planks in the Ottawa platform of 1893, there was nothing in the address touching the declaration of the various policies which had been advanced by that party during the eighteen years they were in opposition.

If my right hon. friend, therefore, will be able to await the next session of parliament I have no doubt he will be thoroughly satisfied by the declaration of policy which at that time will be made. I desire to express my thanks to my right hon. friend for the very flattering references which he made to myself. I certainly desire to make an acknowledgment to my friends on the opposite side of the House for the civility, generosity and courtesy which I received while attempting to discharge my duties when occupying the seat my right hon. friend now occupies, and I feel satisfied from my personal knowledge of my friends opposite, and from the treatment which I have received in the past, that I shall receive the same courtesy in the future, and I think I need have no higher aim in discharging the duties which pertain to this particular office than in attempting to follow in the footsteps of my right hon. friend while he occupied the position. If I succeed in discharging the duties as acceptably to the House as my right hon. friend then shall I be perfectly satisfied.

Hon. Mr. POWER.—I do not propose to make a speech. I wish to make a few observations on the speech with which the address deals, but before saying a word about that I should like to repeat, in perhaps stronger terms, the compliments paid by the right hon. leader of the opposition to the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Bell) who moved the address. I have had the pleasure of knowing that gentleman for a great many years, and I venture to sum up my view with respect to him by saying that in the whole Conservative party in Nova Scotia I do not think there was any gentleman whose appointment to the Senate would have been more fitting than his own. The hon. gentleman had experience in the House of Assembly in Nova Scotia and the House of Commons at Ottawa. He is liked and respected wherever he is known, and he has made a good record in both those Houses. I have no doubt that when the history of the present parliament comes to be written the hon. gentleman's record will be at least equal to what it has been elsewhere. The hon. gentleman from Gananoque (Mr. Taylor) has been undoubtedly a very strenuous fighter in another place, but I do not quite agree with the right hon. leader of the opposition in supposing that he and the hon. gentleman from Pictou would have adopted a markedly different tone if the relative strengths of the two parties of this House were different. My experience has been that there is something soothing and tempering about the atmosphere of the Senate, so that when the fiercest fighter of them all comes up from the other Chamber, in a little while he is subdued to the tone of this House. As to the hon. leader of the government in this House, I need say nothing in his praise. The members of the Liberal party in the House have always looked upon him with a friendly eye in the past, and there is no reason to suppose they will change their views; and as a humble member of the House, I wish to express my concurrence in the statement made by our right hon. leader that there will be no factious opposition from this side of the House. Before dealing with the speech from the throne I wish to make a brief observation as to His Royal Highness who now acts as Governor General. I endorse everything that has been said about him, and I wish to point out the exceptional honour done to Canada by the King in appointing his uncle to be Governor General of Canada. His Majesty appointed the man in the empire who stood next to himself to come here and act as Governor General to this Dominion. That is the very highest honour and compliment that could be paid to this country. His Majesty could not come himself, but he did the next best thing and sent his nearest relation. I do not propose to deal with the speech at any length. One of the early paragraphs says that negotiations have been opened for improved trade relations with the British West Indies and British Guiana. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Bell) is perhaps old enough to remember that in the year 1866 a Commission was sent out by Nova Scotia for the purpose of establishing better trade relations with the West Indies and Guiana, and a member of that commission was an hon. gentleman from the county of Pictou. It will be remembered that in 1866 the question of the union of the colonies was a very live question, particularly in the province of Nova Scotia, and this hon. gentleman from the county of Pictou had declared himself as being hostile to confederation, and in order to eliminate him from discussions that would take place in the local legislature he was put on this commission and sent to try and make improved trade relations with the West Indies and Guiana. I do not think any important arrangements were made then, and I do not think any important arrangements will be made now.

At the same time I must confess to a slight feeling of surprise at reading this paragraph of the speech. Every hon. gentleman here must be aware that during the campaign which closed on the 21st of September last the universal cry over this country was, 'let well enough alone.' They did not undertake to say that reciprocity might not be of some benefit, but we were very well off, let well enough alone, do not take any risks. We were well enough off and why should the government try to make a change? If we were well enough off, and if well enough should be let alone, why are the government trying to improve their relations with the West Indies and Guiana? It just shows that we were not well enough. I have no doubt this government will try to improve relations with South Africa, New Zealand, and other places. Having, as I think in the most foolish way, declared they would not improve trade relations with a hundred of millions of people at their doors, the hon. leader of the government tries now to minimize the unpleasant things said of the United States during the campaign; but every one knows the kind of things that was said, and I think the extracts from the United States newspaper read by the right hon. leader of the opposition did not state the case too strongly. Our hon. friends opposite have begun to see new light since the 21st of September. They used means to win success of which they are a little bit ashamed now, and in order to establish that I take the liberty—I know it is slightly irregular—of quoting from the Montreal 'Gazette', of the 14th of this month a report of some of the observations made by the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Geo. E. Foster. Every one knows that the Montreal 'Gazette', is a respectable Conservative paper, and Hon. Geo. E. Foster, I think, may be regarded as speaking the sentiments of the government at the present time. At a dinner which took place in New York on the 13th of November, the hon. gentleman said:

"Canada has always wanted to trade with the United States."

Now that is not what was said during the election. The expression I heard myself was 'We do not want any truck with the United States,' but Mr. Foster says now:

Canada has always wanted to trade with the United States, and under one treaty she did so, but America abrogated that treaty. It is just a question of how trade is to be carried out. . . . We did not reject reciprocity because we did not want to trade with you. We have for the United States two distinct feelings, admiration for your great progress and anxiety to avoid your mistakes. There was no animosity in our rejection of the agreement.

I may say that is not the impression one would get from the speakers and newspapers during the campaign. Mr. Foster continued 'We did it because we did not like that kind of an agreement.' I may say the agreement which the hon. gentleman did not like and which he said Canadians did not like was almost identical with the agreement made in 1854, and he said: 'We want the United States to remain our friend and some day we will reach a solution of all questions between us.' It occurs to me that it is within the bounds of possibility that within a comparatively short time from now, we may have our hon. friends opposite really making an arrangement with the United States almost identical with the treaty of 1854 and with the agreement which was rejected the other day. I can readily understand some American gentlemen who listened to Mr. Foster in New York on the 13th, addressing him in these words, 'It is all very well to dissemble your love, but why did you kick me down stairs?' If Mr. Foster and his friends are so friendly to the United States, why was the offer of the United States rejected in such a contemptuous manner?

There are two other points to which I wish to refer very briefly. One, the government propose to assume and control the terminal elevators at the Great Lakes. I was under the impression that the Conservative party as a party were hostile to the government interfering in what is properly speaking private business. I must express my surprise to find in their very first session and when, as the leader of the government says, they have not had time to formulate a policy, they should come down with this proposition to take over and make a government business of what has heretofore been a private business.

Then there is the paragraph with respect to a permanent tariff commission. That reads uncommonly well, and the remarks made by the hon. leader of the government sounded very well. The hon. gentleman said the proposal was to take the tariff out of politics. When one comes to think how this is to be done, and what the practical operation of the scheme must be, every one knows, and I think the hon. gentleman himself on more than one occasion referred to the fact, that when a government wish to get rid of a disagreeable responsibility they appoint a commission to do the work they should do themselves. Everything depends on the personnel of the commission. From what I know of Canadian politicians, more particularly of the Conservative stripe, I think the tariff commission will be constituted of gentlemen who will be sure to report in one way, and that is the way in which the government feel, and their way of reporting will to a very considerable extent relieve the government of responsibility for the action they have made up their minds to take.

Another paragraph is as to the best route for the Hudson Bay railway. As one humble member of this House, I rejoice that the terminus has not yet been located. In the interest of this country it would be just as well that the terminus should not be located for a considerable time yet, and I trust that the engineers who are at work up there will find employment for some time to come in locating the best port. I noticed recently that a ship that had been sent up to Hudson bay leaving Halifax some time in July failed to get through into Hudson bay at all owing to the ice in Hudson strait and came back to Halifax in sore distress a few days ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was she a steamer?

Hon. Mr. POWER—She was a sailing ship. The feasibility of the navigation of Hudson straits will bear further investigation.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—The speech from the throne can be best compared to an artist's breakfast—very little meat and a great deal of tablecloth. Of course a full programme could not be expected from the circumstances which precided the delivery of the speech, but we must 'take the goods that the gods provide us' and be content with a meagre bill of fare, even if the ambrosia and nectar are very thinly constituted. I was glad to hear the voice of my hon. friend from Pictou on this occasion, from his knowledge of political events, circumstances and questions, and I was rejoiced to hear also the voice of my hon. friend the seconder; because his presence in this Chamber seems to warrant to us that the government take no part and are not supporters of that measure which is depending in the other House for the peremptory and prompt abolition of the Senate. Whether these gentlemen have given pledges to the government that they enter this Chamber for the purpose of putting an end to the Senate or not I do not know; but from their characteristics and past record I may be assured that having passed through the turmoil of political strife and having passed through the lower chamber they can see in the dignity and repose in this one a harbour of refuge and a place for permanent repose.

In the remarks of the hon. mover of the address we must concur so far as they refer to the new Governor General. A high honour has been conferred on Canada by appointing one so near the throne and with such political and military capacity. From his long experience in the combats of England and various parts of the world he is well qualified to lead our army and give his most valuable advice in military affairs, if that advice or action be required in the exigencies of our affairs. I do not think that my hon. friend intended to pass a slight upon the military qualifications of the gentleman who has been selected and placed at the head of the Militia Department, for he too has political and military knowledge and experience, for he too has taken part in the wars of England, but in the projected wars and military expedients and devices they are intended to be carried on in elements with which the Duke of Connaught is entirely unfamiliar, and he proposes to enlist regiments of Hindoos and conduct his operations not only upon the sea and land, but also in the air. Now, we would not at all entrust our Governor General with the conduct of any operations like these, and I think it was far from the intention of my hon. friend the proposer to overlook the capacity of the head of the Militia Department to conduct operations in any element.

I was very glad to hear the voice of my hon. friend from Nova Scotia, because I think that he would have reprobated some of the sentiments I heard from the mover of the address in the other branch of parliament. I think also that the address of that gentleman was not inspired by the government, because in forecasting the legislation which would be proposed, which legislation has been hinted at by the hon. leader of the government, that this is the mode to be pursued, and this is to be the policy of the government:—

> With a buoyant and increasing revenue and with an expanding trade we do not want any expenditure for lighthouses or breakwaters or wharfs, unless perhaps some like those of recent years built by the gentlemen opposite where there was no water, but we will be content, and will rejoice to find the new government implementing the promises they made whilst in opposition by being prepared to assist and co-operate with the provincial authorities in giving us a system of highways which will enable the husbandmen to convey the products of the farm to the elevators and railways.

How must language like that have grated upon the ears of the leader of the government who came from a maritime constituency in Nova Scotia, from the county of Halifax, with 120 miles of sea coast indented every ten miles with harbours that require lighthouses, wharfs and breakwaters every year, and especially when the canvassers on behalf of the leader of the government declared that his little finger would be larger than his predecessor's loins, and that as those people had been starved and neglected by the late government, when the learned leader of the then opposition should be returned, they might look to the gratification of their wants and a lavish expenditure on these objects when before they were neglected and cast aside by the government then in power. How do these two statements compare and correspond with one another?

I was very glad to hear also that the government were proposing to aid the provincial governments in the construction of good roads. My hon. friend from Pictou will remember that at one period the provincial government of Nova Scotia undertook to improve the public roads of that province, and as they did not receive a subsidy for that purpose from the general government they undertook to raise a capital amount in order to overtake the delapidations of the road and to give the advantage to the business people of Nova Scotia, and for that policy, which is now commended by him in his honeyed accents, the press and the Conservative party of Nova Scotia berated the premier and the legislature that has taken the precaution to prevent the common roads of the province of Nova Scotia becoming impassable. But what is this—is it a British policy? Is it a Canadian policy? Does it not follow the lines of the old policy of the United States that built the great Cumberland road from tide water towards the Ohio river and expended upon it $7,000,000? But all that was before the era of railways; all that is a distant bygone operation. It is not commensurate with the present day—it is not the dictate of the policy of the present day. I do not say that at this moment, nor am I competent to form a decision that certainly where we always look for British precedents —and my hon. friend the seconder is looking at me benignly always having followed British precedent—why should we at the outset of this brand new government take up the discredited policy of another government fifty years ago and make it the policy of this country?

I am gratified to see my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in his place, because he will be able now to expound the theories and axioms of the government and also declarations of policy which he could not make from the other side, and he will be also able to determine the meaning of certain phrases which are rolled out from the press, repeated in the Legislature and reverberated from the platform about imperial unity, imperial policy and imperial movement, and he will be able to tell us exactly what they mean. If this imperialism and this imperial policy mean that the resources of the colonies are to be gathered up to be expended for the benefit solely of England or the British Islands, I will not agree with that narrow interpretation; but if my hon. friend and all who follow him and are associated with him mean mutual co-operation, that is the colonies and dependencies contributing to a general fund or to general exertion for the benefit of the whole, for the benefit of the motherland, and the benefit of the colonies individually, and that all shall take part in the defence and protection of all, I am an imperialist. If he has that sense of imperialism I agree with him altogether, and without any hesitation or evasion; but if it be the sense which is entertained, I am sorry to say, in England, that every interest should give way and that every dependency should be sacrificed if necessary and that the bond which holds together the empire should be severed and every dependency let go provided the mother country is protected by every source of the empire, I for one do not agree with it. It would be a good act, it would be an informing and I think it would be what is due to this parliament if the leader of the government would expound that theory and disabuse us of false impressions and take away from us that idea that we are to live solely for England and England is not to live for us. The present Governor General rebukes this small notion, and it shows that England is going to take a larger part and return to the protection of the colonies and the protection of Canada which they partially abandoned in 1866 and 1867.

There is one topic on which I am disposed to say a few words, and on the subject from which my hon. friend from Halifax has begun, and that is the effort which will soon be made to extend our trade relations, and I suppose expand our commerce with the West Indies. This is not the first effort that has been made to send delegations to the West Indies. There were delegations sent out by the old Nova Scotia government and I suppose by the government of Canada. There was a formidable deputation sent out to the West Indies to secure better trade relations, headed by a very important gentleman, the head of the Trade and Commerce Department, the Hon. Geo. Foster, who spent a considerable time in the West Indies. With all his knowledge of Canadian finance, and all his intimate acquaintance with Canadian trade and all the optimism looking to the future, he went authorized by his government to go out and made some important communications and acquaintances, and he tabulated some important statistics and came back, and for years afterwards, although his government was in power a considerable time, no progress was made in expanding our trade relations with the West Indies. Then the outgoing government sent a deputation to the West Indies to extend our trade relations. They were practical gentlemen, merchants and others, but notwithstanding all these efforts combined no progress was made in the expansion of the trade with the West Indies, and why? The trade with the West Indies was with the unimportant and little British Islands, and their trade could not be extended, because all the products they receive, and all that they are capable of receiving in the way of food stuffs they are getting at the present time. But what would have been the effect of reciprocity? Our reciprocity arrangement would have brought us in contact with the great markets in the West Indies—with Porto Rico and Cuba, islands of the greatest extent of territory, with large population and the largest resources, whose trade, both import and export, would be a thousand times any trade which can be arranged, negotiated or conducted with the British West Indies, excepting Trinidad and the trade of Trinidad is largely with Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman tell us what the population of those West India Islands is?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I have not prepared myself with figures; neither do I know what the statistics are.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think it is very small.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—It is regarded by some writers in the press in England and statements have been made by some Conservative parliamentarians and representatives that the reciprocity agreement was disloyal to the interests of the empire, and contrary of the policy of the British government. Now I consider that any policy which is approved of in the mother country cannot be disloyal. What are the facts? Great Britain sends to the United States two hundred and seventy millions worth and receives from the United States five hundred millions worth of their products and the effort of their statesmen, of their commercial men, of their negotiators, and of all those that represent British trade in their diplomacy has been to forward, to increase and to expand in every direction the trade that Great Britain carries on with the United States. How then can my hon. friend, the leader of the government, tell us that the effort that was made by the late government to expand our commercial relations with the United States was disloyal or inimical to Great Britain herself, or could in any way tend to loosen the bond which binds our empire in that great chain of connecting colonies in all parts of the world with the heart and centre, the motherland? Will he show us that? If he will explain that to me, I will be a convert to his views. If he will show me that there is disloyalty in it, I will cast it aside for ever, but I remember when that reciprocity treaty was a great boon to Canada. I remember how Nova Scotia flourished under the reciprocity treaty. I remember how the decay that had been setting in was arrested, and by means of that treaty the trade of Nova Scotia started on a new career, and farmers whose farms had been mortgaged and who were dispairing for the success of their country were enabled to pay off their mortgages, how the navigation interest was stimulated and increased rapidly, and every interest in our country, not to go on enumerating them, flourished and succeeded under the benign influence of the old reciprocity treaty, and can you tell me that our resources have diminished? Can you tell me that our energy has decreased? Can you tell me that the people of the United States are hostile? If they were hostile, all those good results would not accrue, and the experience of the past says to us there was no danger in adopting the reciprocity agreement.

It is not my purpose, and I have had no intention to speak about these matters, or about anything which would create controversy, but when a suggestion was thrown out which touches a very tender sentiment in our hearts, one repels the insinuation that there was any design to fall in with any filibustering with the United States, or any desire that the boundaries of that country should be extended from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic circle. We had no participation in any such propaganda, but would stand upon our line and use the resources of our country in exchange for those we require from another country when we see it is to our advantage, with our loyalty untouched, and our loyalty to the mother country unimpaired and undiminished by anything of commercial quality or anything of political advantage or disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I rise to make a few remarks upon the observations made by the hon. leader of the government. I was surprised to hear him, who is generally so serious, attach so much importance to the annexation cry, and I am surprised that he was under the impression that annexation would be the result of reciprocity, and because a few public men of the United States, Champ Clarke particularly, expressed views which might mean that reciprocity would bring about annexation. We might refer to articles published in western newspapers, and we might quote speeches made by men of the United States denying these things. We could quote statements of prominent men who said they had no desire for annexation, and I am surprised that our Conservative friends have been so easily frightened by this annexation cry. I thought that the bugbear of annexation had served its time, and that no serious man would attempt to use it in argument any more. But I see it still continues to make an impression upon a certain number of our people. Our Conservative friends were not so easily frightened by annexation, when in 1854 they ratified a reciprocity treaty which did so much for the country in the years from 1854 to 1864, and it is now established by history that when Lord Elgin went to Washington to negotiate the reciprocity treaty, one of the reasons which he gave for such a treaty, which reason was embodied in a letter which he sent to the government of England, was that it would stop the annexation movement which was on foot in Canada at the time. It was very well known that in 1849 and up to 1854 there was a strong movement in favour of annexation, because of the financial condition of the country, and because the people at the time thought that the best remedy was to have annexation, and it was in order to discourage that idea and to put an end to that movement that the reciprocity treaty was negotiated. Since the repeal of the treaty of 1854, at what time has the Conservative party been influenced by the fear of annexation? When they went to Washington on two or three different occasions to negotiate a treaty of reciprocity of the same kind as the last one which was negotiated by the late government—reciprocity in natural products—were they frightened by the fear of annexation? No. Evidently that annexation cry does not do credit to those who use it, any more than the cry of disloyalty in the province of Quebec does honour to those who have urged that cry there. I have several English newspapers in which the question has been discussed, and everywhere it has been asserted strongly that it was ridiculous to think that reciprocity would lead to annexation, and some newspapers even declared that evidently the Canadians sacrificed their personal interests in order to please England, or because they were moved by loyal sentiments. I would say that the contrary is true, and that if we are to be annexed it will not be because we have a reciprocity treaty. Such a treaty will never bring annexation. A time may come when Canadians may believe that it is in conflict with their loyalty and it is dangerous to refuse to deal with our neighbours, and that our interests are to have trade relations with the United States. Time will tell what the result will be, and before long perhaps it will be seen that the best interests of the country will be preserved by having a reciprocity treaty.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER moved the adjournmnet of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 22, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (C) An to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.—Hon. Mr. Domville.

THE ADDRESS.

DEBATE CONCLUDED.

The order of the day being called:

Further consideration of His Royal Highness the Governor General's speech on the occasion of the opening of the first session of the twelfth parliament, and of the motion of the Hon. Mr. Bell, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Taylor, that an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General in answer thereto.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The tone of yesterday's debate augurs well. Every one in this Chamber seems to be satisfied, especially hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. We also, on this side of the House, are satisfied. We believe that we have done well for our country in following the policy of our leader and of our party. Having reached 'the parting of the ways' we took the right hand side—in fact the right side, and moved the chariot of state along a course which, starting from Canada, will reach England and then encircle the world to come back to Canada again, as against taking a course which would have landed us amongst our good friends to the south of us where the reception might have been so friendly, so warm indeed that we might have been suffocated in their embrace. We believe in commercial imperialism which will more closely unite the mother country and the colonies and which will make a band, or a preferential zollverein which will encircle the world within the empire. If we are to be imperialistic, that is in my estimation a form of imperialism that we should cultivate.

The members on the other side of the House have been pronounced in their remarks on the phenomenal prosperity which the country enjoys. I for one do not contest the statement that these are days of prosperity. I do not for a moment deny that our revenues have swollen in an extraordinary degree; but being accustomed to accepting no statement unchallenged when it was possible for me to investigate the facts and get to the bottom of those questions, especially in matters historical, I spent last evening in reviewing from my own point of view the financial situation of the country, and while apologizing to the masters of finance, many of whom are members of this House, I will give the result of my personal investigation and my views. Now that cuckoo song of jubilation may be all right in its way, but the country should ascertain whether we occupy an assured position to feel like cuckooing all the way. It is not sufficient to be prosperous to-day; we should see that our prosperity is on such a basis as to be lasting. I find that in matters of commerce, from Confederation up to 1895, the balance of trade, excepting the year 1881, was against us. For the first time in our fiscal history the balance of trade turned in our favour in 1895. A year later the Liberal party came into power. If we compare the state of the country from a commercial standpoint in 1896, when the Conservatives handed over the government to the Liberals, with the state of the country in 1911, when the Liberals handed it over to the Conservatives, we will find that while the balance of trade, owing to the National Policy, was in our favour and continued so for several years, it is to-day enormously on the wrong side.

The Liberals hand us the reins of power after we have made a plunge from $98,000,000 of deficit in the balance of trade in 1910, to $180,000,000 in 1911. This last year we were $180,000,000 to the bad as far as trade balances go. We had surpluses in 1896, when the Liberals came into power, and also in 1897 and 1898 and 1900, and in 1901, but since then the balances have gone the other way. In 1902 the balance of trade was against us, and it has continued so ever since. We did not have a surplus in any one year since 1902 in our favour, as between our imports and exports. The balance on the wrong side in 1903 was $15,000,000; in 1904, $45,000,000; in 1905, $63,000,000; in 1906, $37,000,000; in 1907, $54,000,000; in 1908, $90,0000,000; in 1909, $49,000,000; in 1910, $90,000,000, and last year $180,550,000. Prima facie that is an alarming state of affairs. For the last five years, without going into too many figures, the exports amounted to $2,432,841,510 and the imports amounted to over three billions, leaving a balance for us to pay of $627,479,453. Now here is the legacy the late government has left us. For the last five years we were over half a million to the bad.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If everything was so badly against us, where did we get our surplus?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We got it from the banks. We have the finest system of banking in the world. At confederation the total capital in the banks was thirty millions. When the Liberals came into power in 1896 the paid up capital, I believe, was sixty-two millions. Last year it was ninety-six millions, but this year, owing to the establishment of the new bank National du Canada, I think it is one hundred and four millions. The circulation of the banks last year was ninety seven million. Surely the banks on their own capital, from their own resources, could not meet the exigencies of an adverse balance of trade. Where did we get the money to pay for those goods? Because as hon. gentlemen well know that half billion deficit of five years has to be paid. It is so much money from Canada that goes to foreign countries. There is no denying that fact. We get the money from the deposits in the banks, and it is very remarkable that the deposits in the bank are coincidental with the increase of the discounts. The deposits in the banks save the situation. Take the last five years: we find the capital in our banks in 1907 was $96,000,000, and the circulation $75,000,000. That year the balance of the trade was $54,000,000, against us. The deposits in the banks had increased in that year by $49,000,000, while the increase in bank discounts was $54,000,000, exactly the adverse balance That bespeaks good times. In 1910 the adverse balance was $90,000,000. How was that met? By an increase in the deposits in banks of $127,000,000. In 1911, last year, the adverse balance was $180,000,000. How are we going to meet that deficit? I do not know. The bank accounts are not in yet; but last September they had already discounted loans towards the payment of that to the amount of $81,000,000 out of $96,000,000 of deposit. So far so well. I am not here to say that the outlook is blue, or that we are on the eve of bankruptcy, So far, the deposits in the banks have equalized the amount that the banks had to lend to the commercial community to enable them to meet the obligations they have incurred. Here is the danger—and I call the attention of both sides to this point: While we are living in prosperous times our situation is somewhat like that of mutual societies before they had been put upon a better basis. In reference to these societies, unless there was an increase of membership each year they were doomed to fail. Likewise the moment the deposits in our banks decrease there will be stagnation in our commercial world. That is absolutely certain to my mind. We have to continue increasing our deposit. Supposing we had one or two seasons of bad crops, what would become of the status of our banks? It is hoped that kind Providence will favour us as well as it has favoured our friends the liberals; but if we should have two consecutive bad crops there would be a shake up of the finances of the Dominion the like of which has possibly never been witnessed in the United States republic to the south. To give an instance, hon. gentlemen remember the unfortunate times when that good man, the late Alexander Mackenzie, came into power. There was great depression at the time. The new government were met with bad times and we remember the result. I have quoted these figures to show what the effect on our affairs will necessarily be when the deposits decrease in balance. In 1874 the deposits in the banks were $77,000,000; but in 1875 they had decreased by two millions. What was the consequence? Failures to the tune of $29,000,000 in the country. In 1876 another decrease in the banks took place to the extent of $2,000,000, with failures to the extent of $26,000,000. In 1877 we had an increase of $1,000,000 in the deposits. From $73,000,000 it had gone up to $74,000,000, but still we were on the downward slide, and failures aggregated $26,000,000. In 1878 the people withdrew their money from the banks through panic or necessity, with the result that from $74,000,000 of deposits, the amount went down to $71,000,000. There were $24,000,000 of bankruptcies in the Dominion of Canada. There would have been more but at that time more than half our tradesmen had failed. Here in Ottawa, where I lived at that time, not one merchant on Sussex street stood the strain. There was only one merchant on St. Catherine street in Montreal who did not go under. That shows the effects of diminishing deposits in the bank. Answering my hon. friend again I say that while the country is apparently prosperous, it is prosperious because trade and commerce live on the banks.

Our merchants carry on their business by discounting accommodation paper at the banks. If, to-day, or in the near future, our merchants were called upon to meet their obligations abroad they would not be in a position to realize enough money for the purpose, although they have, no doubt, the assets. Now here is what I wanted to call the attention of our hon. friends to—not to go on singing cuckoo songs as the right hon. leader of the opposition has said we might, but to look at the situation carefully and see when the Bank Act comes before us that this question is not lost sight of, and that we check to a certain extent the abnormal the frenzied importations made by our people in these times of prosperity, and settle if possible the balance sheet between revenue and expenditure. It is a remarkable fact that while we boast of being the most prosperous country in the commercial world, we are the only people in America who show such a balance sheet.

The United States had last year, and for many years before, a balance of half a billion dollars in their favour. South American countries—Venezuela, Brazil, Argentina—all those countries young as we are, have, as a young country should have, a balance on the right side. I know that economists claim it is not a sign of going behind simply because the balance of trade is adverse. No doubt that applies to old countries such as England, France and the Netherlands, where there is an income from money loaned abroad ; but such is not the case and should not be the case in a new country where we have all the elements of prosperity in our raw material and now in manufacturing. But the trouble with us is that our manufacturing industries are not keeping pace with our mania for buying more than we should and more than we can afford to pay for.

A clause in the speech mentions the platform of the government on highways and agriculture. Agriculture has been too long neglected in this country. It has been shown clearly that the salvation of a country like our own lies mainly in agriculture. When the farmers and the classes that produce our raw material and staples cease to be prosperous the country also ceases to be prosperous. Investing money in highways has been proved by foreign countries to be the best possible way of expending money. In France they spend annually hundreds and hundreds of millions upon their highways, and it is computed that they get at least 25 per cent of revenue out of those investments. We have been subsidizing railways to the tune of $150,000,000, without counting what is to come and without including grants of land ; we have subsidized the canals and navigation to the amount of nearly a hundred million dollars. Now what have we done for agriculture ? Last year we appropriated a paltry sum of less than a million dollars towards what is the foundation of the prosperity of all nations, but especially of Canada. I feel like complimenting the government on this policy, as I am sure they will carry out their pledges. No government can make a mistake by helping the agricultural class. By the construction of good roads we assist them materially. The construction of a national highway from Halifax to the Pacific coast is a project which is grand in its conception, and which will in the long and possibly the short run, pay, and pay well. The project of helping to establish agricultural schools for the farmers is one that is most commendable. The only experimental farm in Canada that we have is that established by our regretted colleague, Sir John Carling, and I give Mr. Fisher the credit of having taken up that farm institution and improved it. But that is not sufficient. We should have in every province of the Dominion model farms with a sufficient number of instructors and move along the lines that have made Denmark the prosperous nation that we know it to be. Neither this nor any other government is likely to expend too much money towards encouraging agriculture and enlightening the farmers.

The following paragraph in the speech has more particularly attracted my attention. 'Bills will be laid before you with respect to the Department of External Affairs, the Archives and other subjects.' If agriculture has been neglected much more than it should have been, there is one department which has been more than all others overlooked. It is, if I may use the term, the intellectual department. We have subsidized everything under the sun except possibly agriculture ; but so far neither government has, so to speak, done anything towards helping the advance in scientific and intellectual affairs. To Mr. Fisher and the Liberal government is due —and I rejoice that I can give them credit for it—the formation of or the putting on an effective basis the Department of Archives. To-day that department does honour to Canada. It was timely that it should be removed from the Department of Agriculture to another department; but that is not going far enough. In my estimation, the government should aid research especially applied to the sciences, history, literature and the arts. We are, I believe, the only country in the world which does practically nothing to encourage intellectual enlightenment. All other national governments, even provincial, do something. Not later than this morning we read that a certain Dr. Smith is to get from Italy a sum of $20,000 as a prize for having found a cure for cancer. The government of Norway is giving this year to Madame Curie $40,000 in prizes for her discoveries in chemistry. Everywhere in the world something is being done towards helping the advance of science, except in Canada. We have in the Dominion the Royal Society and to that society we give $5,000 a year. It was founded by the Marquis of Lorne when royalty was represented here by the Princess Louise. With that $5,000 the society has to print its report. If there is an excess of money it has to be reimbursed to the department. If, on the other hand, there is not money enough to pay for the book and the printing of it, the members of the society have to make up the difference. That appropriation is not a gift to them. They are obliged to exchange their reports with scientific societies all the world over, by means of which the government gets reimbursed and more for its outlay. I appeal to my leader, who will have leisure to attend to the matter if he chooses to do so, as he is not encumbered, burdened or cursed by a department, being as free as a minister of the Crown can well be—I appeal to him to take this matter up and see that the Royal Society, which is composed of some of the very best men in the land, is properly aided. The society is divided into four departments—mathematics, science, English literature and French literature. I appeal to him to see that that society is put on such a footing that it may be of real service to the country. So far, with the best of will, with sacrifices on the part of individual members, very little has been achieved except the publication of a report which very few read, and why is that? The members of the society are chosen from all parts of Canada, from Halifax to British Columbia. They meet at Ottawa, as a rule. Now is it fair that those gentlemen who give their time, their intelligence, their enlightenment, and their lives to those sciences to which we owe our boasted civilization, should have to pay their way to attend the meetings of the society? Unless they do so they must stay at home, which many of them do.

What I propose is that a sum be placed in the estimates to cover the expenses of members of the Royal Society to come to Ottawa or wherever the meetings take place, and return to their homes. The outlay would not be excessive, and it would enable those men who are willing to attend the meetings of the Royal Society to come in contact with each other and give us the benefit of their knowledge and research which would be a thousand times more valuable to the country than the paltry sum I ask the government to appropriate for the purpose I have mentioned. More than that, to-day there are many young men, English and French, who are capable and willing to write on matters of history for which we have abundant material untouched, or on matters of scientific importance, who cannot do so because they lack the necessary means. Why should not the government who have such a superabundance give enough money to the Royal Society to enable the society to accept manuscript and have them published in becoming shape and circulated throughout the Dominion. If a couple of thousand dollars were allotted to each of the four departments, then you would see surging from all parts of the Dominion intellectual young men who would undertake research work and achieve something in the way of belle lettres or scientific pursuits, because they would know that what is now impossible would be possible then—there would be a tribunal to judge their efforts and if found worthy their work would be crowned and printed and distributed. In that way we would encourage what is worthy of encouragement and is to-day without any aid whatever. Before dropping the subject, I would call the attention of the hon. minister to this fact, that in matters scientific and intellectual just as in matters more material, if you want a good employee you must pay him well. It is said that the secret of the phenomenal prosperity of the Standard Oil Company was in paying their employees well. Now there is a class of employees in the public service that is underpaid, and it is exactly that class whose achievements are in the intellectual or scientific line. I was amazed to find the other day that the man who drafted the elaborate plans for the Georgian Bay canal was paid less than $3,000 a year, and that the chief engineer of the Public Works Department fared no better. We all know and regret that our Geological Museum is losing every year some of its most effective men because they are underpaid—splendid men, intellectual, scientific, willing, hardworking men, who are doing as good work as is done on the other side of the border, who receive only $1,400 or possibly a little more per annum. Some of the best men have gone and others only remain from patriotic motives. They remain here on starvation salaries when they have only to cross the border and get five to seven thousand a year, or if they choose to go west they can get as much from mining concerns in our own country. The same thing applies to the Archives Department also. Surely the two men we have at the head of the Archives are doing more than manual work, and yet they are paid little if anything more than they would get for manual service. Those two men, Dr. Doughty and Dr. Roy, are to-day, in my estimation, probably the two best informed, the two best authorities on matters historical. They are underpaid. Why not put them on the same footing as our two librarians? It would be only fair to encourage them. They are specialists and do far more than their allotted work. They are enthusiastic and devoted to the service. When information is wanted on matters historical it is to them we must appeal. Are we to let them go as possibly they may? I have no brief for them or for any one else. We should pay men who render intellectual service, I do not hesitate to say, better than we pay men who render services of an inferior order. These are reflections that I leave to my hon. leader, and also to my colleagues here, because we in the Senate I think should assist in legislating for institutions that tend to make Canada a better country not only materially—that part of it is looked after by members of the other House—but also intellectually, and see that the splendid talents we have in our country, not only for commerce and business, but also for the sciences, literature and arts are properly encouraged. I appeal to my hon. colleagues to take up with me that question and encourage the government which has a plethora of money, that it does not know how to get rid of, in encouraging native talent. If we are to have cuckoo songs of jubilation let that class I have referred to have reason to join in the singing.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.—One or two of the statements made to this House by the hon. leader of the government should not pass unnoticed. He said on behalf of the government that the reason there was no mention of the naval policy in the speech from the Throne was that the new government had had no time to elaborate a policy. I, with many others, take exception to that statement and respectfully tell him that he could not have been serious in making it. They needed no time to elaborate a naval policy. They had one last year cut and dried, and took several months to place it before parliament. It was afterwards sanctioned by the people. It was a policy more pronounced in favour of England than that of the Liberal party. That policy was quite sufficient to place before parliament now. What is the reason that the great Conservative, loyal, imperialist party did not mention the subject in the speech from the Throne? The reason is not one of incapacity or want of time. The hon. leader of the House knows, since he has been in ministerial circles, that the great Conservative party have had to swallow that policy at the command of the Nationalists of Quebec. I say so advisedly; I say so knowingly. In the government are men who are opposed to a naval policy of any discription, and not longer ago than two or three weeks one of the ministers, after his election, declared that he was opposed to any naval programme that might be adopted by parliament before it was submitted to the people. So that the reason given by the hon. leader of the House for the absence of any mention of the naval policy in the speech was not correct or sincere. The Nationalists of Quebec with the block from Ontario which is commonly described as the Orange Tory block have combined, not in the interests of the country or empire, but in the interests of themselves personally, and of their parties. It is useless to attempt to blindfold the people or to play the game in parliament that was played in the country during the late campaign. The Conservative party, with the aid of the Nationalists, succeeded in deceiving the people, especially of Ontario, and I regret to say of some 15 or 20 counties in the province of Quebec. The Nationalists element in Quebec were in deadly opposition to the naval policy of both parties and they were in favour of reciprocity. Not one of them would have been elected in any of the counties of Quebec, if the issues of reciprocity had been put fairly before them.

They were elected in Quebec because they were opposed to the naval policy and the expenditure of Canadian money for foreign purposes. That is the reason of their victory in fifteen or twenty counties in Quebec. It was different in Ontario. In this province I believe there is a large sentiment in favour of a naval policy but it was not the question of naval policy that decided the election in Ontario. It was not even the question of reciprocity that turned the vote in that province. It is just as well to state frankly and bluntly the cause of the turnover in that bright, intellectual and progressive province of Ontario. The defeat is attributed, can be attributed, and I know is due to religious feelings. The speeches of the Minister of Militia, of Dr. Sproule, now Speaker of the Commons, and others, inflamed the public mind of Ontario in regard to the eucharistic congress and the Ne Temere decree in reference to the marriage law. These were the dominating influence in the judgment rendered by the province of Ontario, and there was another influence. There has been in the corridors, on the street corners, in parlours and elsewhere the cry of 'It is time to get rid of French domination. Now is our chance.' These are the three causes of the turnover in Ontario, by which the Liberals lost over thirty seats. I believe to-day that most of them are heartily ashamed of the judgment they rendered on the 21st September, and the cry 'We will get rid of French domination———'

An hon. MEMBER—The religious cry had nothing to do with it in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It had a lot to do with it. The people would not stand for French domination and peace and good will under the Laurier administration; but they will stand for French domination under the Nationalist bunch. There is the difference. It shows that the Conservative party in their declaration of loyalty and imperialism, and in their declarations against friendly relations with the United States were not sincere. The Conservative party was not sincere in making these declarations, because the day after the victory they locked arms with the enemy of these same people, and the country is beginning to see and understand it, and the ministerial explanations of their attitude on this question, and of their manner of treating and administering the affairs of the country will not be accepted, and I have no hesitation in saying that if there was an opportunity in the immediate future to demand a fresh verdict from the people, the decision that they gave on the 21st of September would be reversed. That is the true state of the political situation. There is no use in trying to blind oneself to it, and there is no use in trying to hoodwink the people and make them believe otherwise. The sooner we get down to a basis of common sense, of common interest, without appeals to race and religious prejudice, the better for Canada, the better for its people. Under the Liberal government this country had achieved a position remarkable in its annals. When the Liberal party took hold of the reins of power in 1896 it found the country divided along racial and religious lines, but by the influence of goodwill and conciliation, manifested by our honoured leader at the time, he brought the people to a standstill on their highway of division and dissension. He made them understand by his conciliatory methods, his offer of peace, that Canada could get along better by the people of the different races and different creeds living in harmony and in union, and what was the result? Up to the 21st September we had a peaceful country; we had a united country; but in one short campaign of six weeks the Tory party were enabled to demolish that great national work of Sir Wilfrid. They tore the provinces one from the other. They tore one race from the other and one creed from the other. Ontario was filled with religious cries, as were also Quebec and New Brunswick. But thank God we have provinces in the west that did not need any such cies to influence their judgment and enable them to give a verdict on the public questions of the day. I believe British Columbia went Conservative on account of its fear of reciprocity and its Tory inclinations. I believe Manitoba voted Conservative because it is Tory, but I do not believe that Ontario voted as it did in a solid Orange Tory block on commercial or material grounds. I do not believe the 27 Nationalists were elected on commercial or material grounds. They were elected on appeals against our honoured leader that he was untrue to the French people, that he sacrificed their interests, that he wanted to send their sons to battle on the sea and on land, in the interests of a foreign cause. That was the appeal made in the province of Quebec to take away from the Liberal party some 15 to 18 seats. So that the Conservative party stand today with their new record of destroying the noble and useful work accomplished by Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. That is a phase of the political situation that cannot be denied, and that is accepted by the people of the Dominion of Canada, and it is a phase which appeals to men and makes these Liberals of Ontario ashamed of themselves to have voted as they did, and to have given 30 good Liberal seats to the Conservative party. Is it not a sight —I will not say for admiration—I cannot admire it—but for amazement, to see the Nationalist band from Quebec hand in hand with their enemies in the present government? If there was one man more than another responsible for this state of things in the Dominion of Canada it was Colonel Sam Hughes, now Minister of Militia. He denounced in every possible manner and in every possible tone the religious celebration that was held in Montreal the year before. He has denounced the French. He has denounced the sisters, the nuns, and we find Messrs. Monk, Pelletier, Nantel, and the entire Nationalist gang arm in arm with him, swallowing not only the condemnation which he passed upon them, but swallowing himself. We find them condoning the government by placing in the speaker's chair a man who did all in his power in the Orange lodges to raise up racial and religious prejudices in this country. Was that conduct sincere on their part? Is it to be commended? Would it be tolerated in England or in any civilized community? No, and I hold that the government of to-day does not fairly represent public opinion in this country, for if it were known in Quebec that this was to happen you would have no 27 Conservatives, or so-called Conservatives in that province, and you would not have 74 or 75 Conservatives from Ontario. The Grits would never have abandoned their party if they knew this state of things was going to happen. They would not have voted Tory if they knew the Tories were to be held down and strangled by the Nationalists. So that the government does not fairly or truthfully represent the opinion of this country. Under these circumstances, I fail to see how the Conservative government can count on an agreement between themselves and the Nationalists. The Nationalists were in favour of reciprocity. The Conservatives opposed it, and now we find in the speech from the Throne an allusion to trade expansion to the West Indies and Guiana. If an expansion of trade with these countries is good, why would an expansion of trade with the United States not be good also? If an expansion of trade with a few thousand niggers and a few white people down in the West Indies is to be made a plank in the platform of the Conservative party, why oppose trade expansion with the United States? The Conservative party in the development of their policy are not sincere and frank with the people of this country. As to the annexation bogey raised by the hon. leader of the government, I am quite in accord with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) yesterday. The annexation cry was used in Ontario and Quebec, and there was absolutely no foundation for it. The hon. leader of the government gave us the basis on which to make the charge that Mr. Champ Clark introduced a resolution in Congress to pass a Bill in favour of annexation. When the question was put, how many voted for it? The Bill was thrown out. There was not a single vote in its favour. That is another way in which they blindfolded the people, and made them believe there was a danger which did not exist, and which was only used as an election cry. If the speech delivered by Mr. Foster in New York on the 13th of November had been made in Toronto during the campaign, would the Minister of Finance have been elected? He practically declared in favour of the most friendly relations on all grounds, especially commercial grounds, between Canada and the United States. Why did he not make that statement in Toronto? Why did his leader, the chief of the party allow the press to denounce the policy of the Liberals because it would lead to annexation? The record of the Tory party in this regard is one that should not be encouraged in the public life of this country. Insincerity and hypocrisy should never be national characteristics, especially of a great party like the Conservatives. Those are the chief means by which they attain victory sometimes, but I hope this victory will not be lasting. It would not be to the credit or advantage of Canada that it should be. I feel the day is coming when the frankness and sincerity of a man like the Hon. Sir Wilfrid will be heeded and accepted and will be the guiding power of the Canadian people along its march of development and progress. There is an old saying that everything is fair in love and war, but these foul means should not be encouraged in the public life of this country.

I desire to close my remarks by paying my respects to the hon. Speaker and congratulate him on his appointment. My only regret is that his leader did not think fit to take him into the cabinet. I am of the opinion, with many others, that he would have made a more economical and just as able an administrator as the present Minister of Militia, and I think that where the present incumbent of the office will spend a hundred dollars on frills, brass buttons and gold braid, that our Speaker, if discharging the duties of Minister of Militia—which was his due—would spend less than fifty dollars. With regard to the hon. leader of this House I also have the one regret, that he did not receive what he deserved, first because of his own personal merits, and secondly on account of the dignity of this House. I agree with the right hon. leader of the opposition in saying that he could fill many of the departments with ability equal to that of those who hold them. He was deserving of ministerial recognition by a portfolio, as was our Speaker. I think this House should have an active ministry.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE.—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We should have a really responsible minister in this House. I hope the hon. member will not take it in bad part, but I regret it for this hon. House and also for himself.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax).—Before this subject is exhausted, I desire to say a few words about the personnel of the government. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, from the time he formed his government till he retired with honour had three Presbyterian ministers in his cabinet. The present Premier has no Scotchman nor has he any one of Scotch descent, as far as I know, and I am well aware that doctors of divinity worked hard for the present Premier in Nova Scotia, but the Presbyterians have been altogether ignored. In the opposition we have Scotchmen and scores of people of Scotch descent, both Methodist and Protestants. Though they are now on the opposition side of the House, in the course of time they will eventually occupy other positions. The 'Orange Sentinel' boasted that Orangemen carried the victory in Ontario. I hope there are no Orangemen in this House, if there are I regret it, because I look upon them as a great curse in this country. The rejection of the reciprocity treaty has been most unfortunate for Nova Scotia as well as New Brunswick because it would have benefited the fishermen of those provinces to an extraordinary extent. The proposed treaty was more advantageous to us than the former arrangement, because the Americans had then the right of fishing close to the shores, but under the proposed treaty they were kept outside the three mile limit the same as they are now. I would have liked very much if the hon. leader of the government in this House had been honoured with a portfolio, because, though able in his present capacity, he scarcely represents the government in any official capacity. I might ask him in passing, are we going to have a navy? Is the Borden government going to give us a navy? I think public sentiment has a right to know what the policy of the government is in this respect.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL.—As the circumstances under which we meet are very peculiar, a new parliament, a new government, and opened by a son of our late revered Majesty Queen Victoria, I think it is only right to say a few words on the subject before us. The speech that has been delivered by his Royal Highness does not contain very many matters for discussion. Of course we could not expect that it would be a very voluminous speech, as everybody knows the government has only been a short time in power and could not be expected to bring down any very important legislation. The matters referred to in the speech from the Throne are of considerable interest to the people of this country, and I desire to give expression to my views on some of those important questions. I am very much pleased to see my old friends from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) and from Leeds (Hon. Mr. Taylor) who were colleagues of mine in the House of Commons for many long years before occupying seats in this House, and I was particularly pleased with the remarks delivered by those hon. gentlemen in moving and seconding the address. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) has not been in public life for some years, and has not been in the heat of the political campaign, and we naturally would expect from him a speech such as he has delivered, but I was very agreeably surprised to find that the hon. gentleman from Leeds, who has always taken such an active part in the House of Commons, and who was so full of political matters when he came to this House to second the address, did so in a mild statesmanlike speech, without referring to any subjects of controversy at all. He confined himself particularly, and with a great deal of discretion to the matters contained in the speech from the Throne.

I regret that the hon. leader of this House did not see fit to accept a portfolio and assume a position that I think he should have taken. It would also add to the dignity of the House if we had a full uedge minister in the Chamber.

He is peculiarly fitted to discharge the duties of any department of State, and I am sure it would have been a pleasure to every member of this House and to the people of this country if he had been made Minister of the Interior, a position which we all expected he would assume. I have no doubt he could have had any position he desired in the government, but for reasons best known to himself he has declined to assume any of the arduous duties of administering a department. We hope, however, that as a member without portfolio he will be able to give us full information on all the matters that pertain to the government and discharge the duties as leader of this House in the same satisfactory manner that he did as leader of the Opposition.

The speech from the Throne refers to two or three important matters. One is the appointment of a tariff commission. That is a subject which has been before the public for some years. I was never particularly struck with the idea of a tariff commission. The members of the government are responsible to the people, and this project looks like shifting the responsibility that properly rests with themselves to a commission. I fear that the commission will be so partisan or appointed in such a way as to report according to the wishes of the government of the day, and I fear that the great mass of the people, the working classes and farmers will not have the representation and influence on that Tariff Commission that they should have. I hope the government will stay their hands and consider the matter more carefully before shifting the responsibility that they ought to assume themselves to a commission of outsiders who are not responsible to the people and who at the best can only collect evidence and material, a matter which the government can easily do themselves. Therefore I do not favour the appointment of a tariff commission.

Another matter referred to is the selection of a route for the Hudson Bay railway, and I noticed that the Premier has stated that the government propose to build and operate that line. For the best interests of the people of this country I hope they will think twice before carrying out such a programme. I was never much in favour of building the Hudson Bay railway, but it is a heritage from the late government who favoured its construction, and the people of the Northwest seem to be unanimously in favour of it. Therefore, I suppose the Hudson Bay railway will have to be built, but I hope the government will never attempt to operate it. It will be another Intercolonial railway, only a thousand times worse. The Intercolonial railway runs through a good country. A large portion of it in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is well settled. There are many villages, towns and cities which afford traffic for the road ; but on the line of this Hudson Bay railway there is not a settler, and there are no feeders to supply it with traffic. I venture to say if the government operate the road they will have a deficit of many millions every year. It would be much better to let a private company build the road and give them whatever assistance may be necessary ; but if the government build it, then they ought to make terms with some one of the three great railway companies—the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Canadian Northern railway—which have many feeders to secure traffic for that road, and perhaps the company could make the line self-sustaining. But if the Hudson Bay line is to be built and operated by the government it will mean a heavy and steady loss to the country. I am sure the government before finally deciding on the operation of the road will consider well what the consequences will be.

I am very pleased to see in the speech from the Throne a recognition of the great prosperité of this country. Every one must be pleased that Canada is making such progress. If there is anything that the late government can look back to with pride and satisfaction it is the fact that for the fifteen years they guided the destiny of Canada there has been the greatest era of prosperity that has ever fallen to the lot of any country in the world. I do not claim that the credit all belongs to the late government. The rain fell, and the sun shone and the crops were bountiful, and the people were industrious, contented and happy; but I say this, and I think nobody will gainsay it, that the policy enunciated by the late government and carried into execution contributed to a large extent to the prosperity we have been enjoying. Look at the record of the late government from the time they took office in 1896 until they left office in 1911—look at the measures they introduced—the deepening of the canals and harbours, the improvements of transportation facilities between the east and west, the building of the National Transcontinental railway, the granting for the first time in the history of this country of a preference to old England, and other measures introduced by them to promote trade and prosperity of the country. Can you point to a single thing that any former government every did which has contributed so much to the prosperity of this country as the system of cold storage instituted by the late Minister of Agriculture? I remember that before 1896 we could not ship our perishable goods to the old country. They attempted to carry them in cold storage by having ice in the vessels, but the ice melted before the vessels were out of the harbour, and when the goods reached the old country they were unsaleable. The late government took hold of this matter and by improving the system of transportation by railways first and then on the steamboats, and then with their mechanical cold storage warehouses in the old country, they perfected a system of transportation which carried the products of the country safely from the farmers' door to the consumer in England. By this system our producers have been enabled to send their products to all parts of the world in good condition, thus enhancing the value of those goods to the producer, while at the same time reducing the cost to the consumer. I remember well when Mr. Fisher first attempted to bring this cold storage system into operation. He went to the railways and said, 'We want you to put cold storage on your cars to carry goods to the sea board,' but the railway managers said 'No, it will never pay us to do that.' The government said, 'We will make it pay you. We want you to put it on the freight, and if the freight is not sufficient to cover the cost we, out of the public treasury, will contribute enough to make it pay.' The railways adopted the system. At first we had to contribute a little towards the expenditure, but the next year the service was self-sustaining, and the business has been ever increasing until now the railways are providing cold storage cars on all their main lines to carry perishable products to the seaboard. It was the same with the ocean vessels. At first they refused to put in mechanical cold storage, but the government in the same way induced them to give it a trial, and now every steamer that leaves our ports is provided with the best system of mechanical cold storage to carry perishable goods across the ocean. They know that if they do not provide such accommodation they will not get the freight. This is one act of the government that has contributed wonderfully to expand the prosperity of the country. I do not know of anything else that has done so much to advance our prosperity as the preference that we gave to England in 1897. It was 12½ per cent at first. Then it was increased to 25 per cent, and it has been for some years at 33⅓ per cent. That is the preference that is given to goods manufactured in England when imported into this country. The result has been that our trade with England has increased enormously. In 1895 our imports from England had fallen to about $26,000,000; last year they amounted to something over one hundred million dollars. That has been brought about largely through the preference. Our exports to England have increased immensely as a result of the good feeling that was produced by the preference given by this country. Canada was the first of all the British colonies that without any bargaining gave to the mother land a preference in her markets.

It brought about such a feeling of friendship for Canadians that our products are sold largely in the English markets and the demand for them is increasing. I remember an instance which came under my own observation. As millers we had been sending a great deal of flour to the old country, and it was usually stipulated that it should be branded, 'made in America,' but after the preferential tariff was put in force the cables came across to us, 'brand your flour no longer made in America, but brand it made in Canada.' The feeling towards Canada was so good that they wanted all our bags and barrels branded that wey.. That feeling has contributed greatly to increase our trade with England. Another thing this government did for the first time in the history of Canada: It sent men to South Africa to help the old country in time of need. England was not in such distress that she required our men to fight her battles, but Canada said, we will send a contingent as an object lesson to show that we are ready to help you fight the battles of the empire. That produced a warm feeling in England for Canada and it is to the everlasting credit of the late government that they were the first Canadian government that offered to contribute such aid to the imperial authorities. The imperial spirit has grown of late years to such an extent in this country that a motion was passed two years ago unanimously in the House of Commons to assist in the naval defence of the empire. The motion was made by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it stated that the time had now arrived when this great Dominion with all her wealth and possessions and her great trade interests on the sea coast should contribute something towards the support of the British navy. That motion was followed up by the government wisely, I think, not rushing too extensively into the matter but providing the nucleus of a navy. It has been ridiculed by the opponents of the late government, but it was a start in the right direction. It was felt that as we grew richer we could build larger and better vessels and ultimately have a navy and shipyards of our own which would be of enormous benefit to the people of this country and to the imperial navy. British war ships could use our dry docks to make necessary repairs, and I think it was wisely decided by the late government not to start on too large a scale but to let the navy increase with time, so that if war should break out we would be able to defend our own sea-coasts, and to that extent relieve the mother country of the burden of our defence. I look upon the present situation with a good deal of alarm. The nations of Europe are armed camps and are recklessly building Dreadnoughts by the dozen. What will be the outcome of all this? If a war should break out—I hope it never will—in what position will Canada be placed? We will be helpless with a thousand miles of sea coast, great cities and immense traffic on the ocean and lakes to be protected. We would have to fall back upon England that is carrying to-day almost as much of a burden as she can bear. So I think the late government did wisely in starting a small navy which would grow as our population, our wealth, and our interests increased. I regret that no mention has been made of this subject in the speech. I hope sincerely that before another session the government will make up their minds to take a stand upon this navy question, and state to parliament what their decision is. I do not propose to find a great deal of fault with them just now, knowing that they have been but a short time in office. Reference is made in another paragraph to the terminal elevators. In my opinion the Bill which was passed by the Senate last year was almost a perfect measure and should have received the support of the present government. I am not much in favour of public ownership. As a rule I do not think that the government have the time or ability to manage these great commercial enterprises as well as they can be managed by private interests, but I strongly favour government control. The Bill of last session gave the government complete control over all those elevators. It placed them in the hands of an independent commission which had absolute control. They could buy them out if they liked or could close them down at a moment's notice if they did not obey the law. Precautions were taken to prevent the mixing of grain, precautions so complete and far-reaching that I believe every interest was well protected and our desire would be attained without the expenditure of very large sums of money required to purchase and control these elevators. There are many things about those elevators that we can regulate, and I think the public elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William need a good deal of regulating. The charges for storing and handling grain are altogether too high. There are some four or five times as high as the charges at Owen Sound, Midland or Victoria Harbour for the same work. Under the Bill of last session, power was given to the commissioners to regulate the traffic to fix the charges after full consideration of the capital invested and the necessary expenses in handling. They had complete control of those elevators, and had that Bill gone through and the elevators been placed in the hands of an independent commission, I believe that the charges for handling grain at Port Arthur and Fort William would have been cut almost in two, to that extent increasing the value of the farmers' grain in the northwest. As I have said, the charges are excessive, but all this could be dealt with effectively without buying out and operating the elevators, and I hope the government will, before coming to a final decision, carefully consider the situation. I would recommend the leader of this House to urge his government to take up the Bill that we passed last session and make it law, then appoint a commission which I am sure would accomplish everything we have in view which government ownership of those elevators would entail.

Nothing has been said of it in the speech from the Throne, but some hon. gentlemen have referred to the result of the elections and to the causes which led to the defeat of the late government. For my own part I was strongly in favour of the measure of reciprocity introduced by the late administration, and I think the people of this country made a great mistake in rejecting it. To the people of the Northwest alone it would have meant at least $10,000,000 more for their wheat crop of this year had the reciprocity arrangement been ratified. You have only to look at the markets of Winnipeg and Minneapolis to see the differences in prices. No. 1 Northern in Minneapolis is not as good by three cents on the bushel as No. 1 Northern in Winnipeg, yet you will find the difference in value is about ten cents per bushel the higher price being paid in Minneapolis. Unfortunately for the farmers of the Northwest they have a great deal of low grade wheat this year. You find the inspection of wheat at Winnipeg shows that out of six or seven hundred cars of wheat coming in there daily only forty or fifty cars are graded No. 1 Northern. The rest are lower grades and there is a great deal of feed wheat. Now those low grades and feed wheat cannot be sold anywhere but in Ontario. You cannot ship it to the old country. The only place you can send it to is eastern Canada to be used for feed, and when you take the cost of transporting that wheat from the far west to the east it leaves the farmer nothing for his crop. If reciprocity had been adopted it could have been sold in Washington, where they do not raise this wheat and where they want it badly, and would get it if it was not subject to a duty of 25 cents a bushel. If reciprocity had carried, our farmers could have marketed a great deal of that low grade wheat in Washington and got ten or fifteen cents a bushel more for it, so I am safe in saying that the farmers of the Northwest would have received ten million dollars more for their wheat this year had reciprocity carried. That loss will be greater and greater as the years go by. I do not expect for many a long day to see reciprocity established between Canada and the United States. We have been looking for reciprocity for forty years. Every government has been trying for it, but without success, until circumstances arose in the United States which made its adoption possible. Mr. Taft was very anxious to secure the reciprocity agreement and he called a special session and used his utmost efforts and succeeded in getting it passed. I venture to say if the President of the United States had been obliged to submit that treaty to a popular vote it would have been overwhelmingly defeated: so I am told and verily believe. There was not a single agricultural paper in the United States that did not oppose reciprocity with Canada. All the farmers were opposed to it. They did not want our products entering their markets free of duty, but owing to the persistent power and influence of the President and some members of Congress, reciprocity was adopted at a special session. The occasion has passed ; you could not get reciprocity to-morrow in the United States, and should it be necessary to reduce the tariff on grain and other Canadian products entering their market, the reduction will apply to the whole world. We will not have the advantage that we did have under this reciprocity agreement. We and we alone would have had a preference in the markets of the United States. With the reduction in the tariff applying to the Argentine Republic, California, and all the rest of the world, the advantage to us would not be as great as it was under the proposed treaty. So far as the province of Ontario was concerned, I was greatly surprised that it should go so overwhelmingly against a government that had done so much for the country, a government that in its fifteen years of power had brought Canada up to such a high state of prosperity and excellence, when everybody was making money and its industries were going forward by leaps and bounds—that they should turn down the government, because as they said 'We are satisfied with what you have done and we do not want you to do any better.' I consider that in the province of Ontario it was a snatched verdict. The question of the benefits of reciprocity or anti-reciprocity was entirely overshadowed, and it became a question of which flag are you going to sail under, the Stars and Stripes or the Union Jack. Unfortunately for us, the speech which was quoted by the leader of the opposition, which the President delivered in the United States—not for the people of Canada, but in order to try and induce the people of the United States to accept reciprocity—was terribly effective in Ontario, and Champ Clark's reference to annexation was also used. The merits of the reciprocity treaty were entirely overshadowed and it became a question of annexation versus loyalty. That was no doubt the real reason of the change. The other reason was that the manufacturers of Canada, as a rule, were opposed to reciprocity, not because the reciprocity tariff affected them particularly, but they feared that if products were made free of duty, and the farmers had free trade backwards and forwards, it would necessarily mean an increase of the British preference on some things. By giving free trade in many products to the people of the United States I presume it would have been necessary to increase the British preference on some articles beyond thirty-three and a third per cent. The manufacturers of Ontario do not want any increase in the British preference. The loyal Tories of Toronto are howling about the necessity of maintaining British connection and loyalty to the mother country. Let the government increase the British preference to fifty per cent and you will find a howl from the Toronto Tories; their boasted loyalty will ooze out through their fingers and you will hear no more of it. The manufacturers believe that the treaty would lead to somethig else, and they concluded that it was better to join together, Grit and Tory, and defeat this measure in its infancy, rather than let it have a foothold in Canada. I venture to assert that if reciprocity were in force for one year the benefits to Ontario would be so apparent that no government would dare think of repealing it. It was under the influence of that fear the manufacturers joined together and determined, with the material assistance of our friends across the border, to defeat it. In the United States there was the most determined and bitter opposition to the pact. The manufacturers, trusts and combines sent deputations to Washington and every effort was made to get Congress to reject the agreement, but they were unsuccessful. Then of course the parliament of Canada had to pass it, and the influence of the manufacturers and trusts of the United States joined together with the similar interests in Canada, became a powerful factor, and they also had money to burn. The 'Canadian Century' magazine did great work in the fight. Its editorials were published in four hundred different papers in Canada, Liberal and Conservative. Who paid for this advertising? Immense funds were raised to carry on the campaign.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—There was $60,000 left over

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Yes, I dare say. We had the solid opposition of the manufacturers of Canada, aided and assisted by the manufacturers of the United States, and also aided, I am told, by our Unionist friends in the old country, who now, by the way, are looking to this government for an increase in the British preference. Will they get it? They propose now to have reciprocity in Canadian manufactured goods. I should like to see this government attempt to do anything of that kind. I would not advise them to try it. I think the tariff which we have maintained for the last few years is a very good one, and I do not believe that we should meddle with it. It has built up Canadian interests as they never were built up before. Our manufacturers have never met with such success and prosperity as they have in the last fifteen years, and our country is progressing more rapidly than ever, I would say, 'Let the tariff alone.' But the Unionists are chuckling with glee and gloating over the fact that the proposal to send wheat, oats and barley to the United States markets free has been defeated. But I would point out that our farmers need not go to the United States unless it pays them to do so. If they can make more money by selling to the United States, why should they not do it? I think the opening of another door to our markets was a master stroke. It was not closing any other door. Our people could take advantage of it if it paid them, and if it did not pay they need not take advantage of it. There is another important feature about it: if it did not prove advantageous to Canada, we could have given notice and denounced it at once. It was not a binding tariff that lasted for years. It was optional, and as long as it was beneficial to us it would be continued and no longer. I regret very much that it was not carried, not for myself, because to the ordinary citizen of Canada it makes very little difference. I suppose the rain will fall and the sun will shine, and the world will move on under the present leadership. If the present government are only wise enough to continue the good work carried on by the late government for the last fifteen years, if they will simply maintain the tariff as it is and follow in the footsteps of the late government, they will bring credit to themselves and the prosperity of the country will undoubtedly continue. I look to the future of this country with a great deal of satisfaction. We have a mighty stream of immigration flowing from the United States to our Canadian Northwest. The late government are entitled to a large portion of the credit for that because of the systematic and businesslike way in which they encouraged immigration that is now flowing in at an ever increasing rate. This year there will be over 300,000 immigrants of the best kind from the the United States and Europe, next year possibly 350,000, and so on as time goes on. These people are bringing immense wealth into the country. They are for the first year consumers and not producers. They keep the wheels of the country going to supply their wants, and in that way the prospects of trade are exceedingly bright, and I think the Conservative party ought to thank their stars that they have fallen into office under such happy circumstances. If they continue in the footsteps and adopt the programme laid down by their predecessors they will undoubtedly contribute to the success of this Dominion, and to their own credit. For the present we will have to accept the meagre programme of business that has been presented to us, and do our best as good citizens of this Dominion, without any party bias, to give to those measures when they come before us, the very best consideration of which they are capable.

Hon. Mr. CHOUQETTE—It is not my intention to debate the subjects mentioned in the speech from the Throne, I merely wish to point out, as the leader on this side of the House has done, that the Senate has not been fairly treated in the matter of the formation of the government. It seems to me that this House deserves to have a minister with a portfolio. We all know the ability and the devotion to his party of the hon. leader of this House, and it seems to me that the leader of the government should have permitted him to choose what he considered to be the best portfolio, as was done with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in Quebec. I am very glad, as we all are, to see the hon. gentleman from Stadacona in the chair. In selecting the hon. gentleman for that position the government could not have made a better appointment. We all know that he will fill the position with ability, grace and impartiality. On the other hand, I am sorry to see him in the chair, because I am sure if he occupied a seat on the floor of the House he would have criticised the breach of the constitution, as he said last session, committed by the government in not having a member of the Cabinet in this House, also a French minister. The hon. Speaker of this House, when he was simply a senator, on several occasions asked the late government the reason why no French minister was appointed to this House and inquired as to when one would be appointed. I simply wish to point out the injustice which has been done to the Senate in not having a minister with portfolio, and also in having no French minister. It has always been the custom and, according to the contentions of the hon. Speaker in the past, we ought to have one. Now that he occupies such a prominent position, I am sure he will do his very best to see that the government will very soon honour this House, not only with a minister with portfolio, but also with a French minister.

The Motion was agreed to.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the day being called—

Second reading Bill (A) 'An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that this Bill was carefully discussed, not only during the last session, but during the session preceding as well, and that after it had been referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health it was very carefully criticised and examined, and on a report to this House it passed the third reading unanimously. The Bill was sent over to the House of Commons in the usual way, but owing to the early dissolution of parliament this measure along with many others, did not receive any consideration in the Commons at all. I am sure every hon. member of this House, with the exception of those who have been appointed since last session, is very familiar with the Bill and its various provisions. I propose to move the second reading of the Bill and ask that it may be again referred to the Committee on Public Health.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not printed and distributed yet, and while no one disputes the statement of my hon. friend that it is the same Bill that was introduced and passed through certain stages last year, yet there are many members present who have never seen it, and are not familiar with its contents. As the session is young I would suggest that the Bill should be printed and distributed.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I move that the order of the day be discharged and placed on the orders of the day for to-morrow.

The Motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 23, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved the second reading of Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill has not been printed in English and we do not know what its contents are. It was discussed last session and I may say that the Bill involves an important principle affecting different streams, and under certain circumstances, to my mind, would be impracticable, if the Bill is of the same character as the one considered last session. I would like to see a copy of it, if we are going to endorse it.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—It is the same Bill as we passed last year.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Exactly the same.

The Motion was withdrawn and the second reading of the Bill was set down for Tuesday next.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (D) An Act respecting the Sale of Bread.——Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE

FRIDAY, November 24, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

THE DIVORCE COMMITEE.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER, from the Committee on Divorce, presented their first report, recommending that the quorum be reduced to three members when dealing with uncontested petitions for divorce, and that in contested cases the quorum shall be five members. He moved the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the report is concurred in, I would ask this honourable House if in a matter of such great national importance a quorum of three should be deemed sufficient to decide issues of that nature? Does it not seem to diminish the responsibility of this House when we reduce the quorum to three? In view of the record that Canada has maintained during the past forty years, of being a country where the evil and cancer of divorce was as limited as human nature could make it, we should do nothing that would tend to increase it. If we are going to practically place the decision of these matters in the hands of three men, then we open up an avenue, I will not say of abuse, but probably an opportunity to err in regard to petitions for divorce that the people of Canada do not want to tolerate or encourage. I do not think it is fair to the honest and virtuous people of this country that decrees of that kind should be left in the hands of three men, because we know that when the report from the committee comes before the House, as a general rule, it is accepted. I for one protest against placing these matters in the hands of three men, who bring the matter before the House in such a way that we are forced to accept it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—As one of the committee, it struck me at the time that a quorum of three was not sufficient, that it should at least be five and perhaps seven.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The question is, what are the hon. members going to do? Are they going to be lax in these matters which affect the moral welfare of the country?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The rule is the same as it has been in former years—in case, owing to some accident, one or two of the members were not present, that three would form a quorum. But it was not expected that much business would be done when only a quorum of three would be present. The larger quorum would do the work. In case of necessity three would form a quorum.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—When we come to a proposition to reduce the quorum in all the committees of the House, I think the hon. members making the motion should give us some information as to why they want it done. The Committee on Divorce is not the only committee. I do not see the use of reducing the quorum on the Standing Orders Committee or the Railway Committee. Surely, we could place enough members on the committee so that a larger number could attend. I do not think nine members would be a sufficient number on the Railway Committee, or three on the Standing Orders Committee, which is the gateway for all legislation coming into this House. Surely when a proposition is made to reduce the quorum of a committee some reason should be given why it should be done.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I can see nothing wrong in the proposal to reduce the quorum of this committee. Unless it is reduced, we will frequently be unable to have a meeting of the committee. After the evidence is taken it is printed and distributed to members, and every member has an opportunity to look into it carefully.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not always. Sometimes the evidence comes after the verdict is rendered.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If the House does not get the evidence in time, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Cloran) will see that the necessary information is in the hands of senators before further action is taken. He is not so modest that he will fail to insist upon his rights. If we had not an opportunity of looking into the evidence before deciding on any case there would be some excuse for the objection being made. I am not a member of the committee, but I know a small quorum is necessary if the evidence is to be taken. I remember the inconvenience caused in former years by the absence of members of the committee. No divorce is granted unless it is recommended by the committee, and the report of the committee is not acted upon by the House until the evidence is printed and in the hands of members. Then the Bill has to go to the other House and be passed there before it becomes law. Is that not sufficient protection? Does my hon. friend pretend to say that he would vote for a divorce Bill however strong the evidence might be? I do not think we should discriminate against this particular committee, but should follow the rule which prevails in relation to all other committees.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This is not a question of getting the evidence. The evidence can be obtained before one man as easily as before three or five or seven or nine or twenty.

The SPEAKER—I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that he has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I obey the ruling of the Chair, because I know the Speaker is capable of making a right order, not like others we have had in the past. I have no objection to the evidence being taken before any number of senators, but I wish to remind the House that when a committee makes a report it is almost certain to be adopted, and there is no appeal. That is placing in the hands of three men the decision of the most vital interest in the social and moral life of the community.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the quorum is not reduced to three, evidence cannot be taken unless there is a quorum, and it might cause very great inconvenience and expense to witnesses who are brought here from distant places. I am assured that the quorum of three members is only for the taking of evidence, and that the report is not prepared until there is a larger meeting of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I wish to point——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has made two speeches already and he surely does not propose to make a third one.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I sat down.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Why didn't the hon. gentleman remain seated?

Hon Mr. CLORAN—I merely wish to resume my remarks.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman spoke once. The second time he spoke with the leave of this House. The House having given him leave to speak a second time it can withdraw that leave also and if the House now objects to the hon. gentleman speaking again he is out of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not speaking again. I was interrupted and sat down to listen to what was said, and I am now resuming my remarks. I am glad to know that the decision of the Chair is not so tyrannical as decisions we have had in the past. I am not trying to obstruct the business of the committee; I am speaking in the interest of the social and moral life of the Dominion. I am not influenced by religious prejudice, but solely by a desire to protect the social and moral welfare of the country. We have a record; let us maintain it. I have no objection to the quorum being reduced to three for the purpose of hearing the evidence. I went further and said that one would be enough to hear the evidence. But the balance of the committee, when the evidence is taken, should carefully read and weigh it before deciding whether a divorce should be granted, and so reporting to the House. But how many members of the committee read the evidence? The danger is that after the evidence is heard before three senators, it may be presented to the House with a recommendation to grant divorce, and my question is simply this—why put in the hands of three men the moral and social welfare of Canada?

The Motion was agreed to.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next at three o'clock in the afternoon, and that thereafter, unless differently ordered by the Senate it shall adjourn on all future Fridays until Tuesday at three o'clock.

The Motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN introduced Bill (E) An Act concerning the payment of salaries or wages of employees of railway companies.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved that the Bill be read a second time on Thursday next. He said: This Bill is exactly similar to the measure which was before the House when we adjourned last May, and I am just reinstating it in the position in which it was when parliament was prorogued. It is to provide for the payment of railway employees twice a month.

The Motion was agreed to.

DECEASED SENATORS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the orders of the day are called, it is my sad duty to direct the attention of the House to the fact that we have lost three of our members through death since the last session of this House. I refer to Sir John Carling, Mr. Comeau and Mr. Chevrier. With reference to the late Sir John Carling, he had endeared himself to all the members of this House on both sides. I doubt if there has been any man in public life for generations, of the same geniality and amiability of temperament as our late confrere. Looking back over a short sketch of his life, which will be found in the Parliamentary Companion, I am inclined to say that there is no other man actively engaged in public life in Canada that was associated with the public affairs of the Dominion so far back as the late Sir John. He entered the old legislature of Canada in 1857, and served therein until 1867. He was Receiver General under the Cartier-Macdonald government in 1863, and when confederation of the provinces of Canada was carried into effect, we find him entering the government of the late John Sandfield Macdonald, and serving therein, from 1867 to 1871. We find him an active and distinguished member of the House of Commons as far back as 1872, and continuing as such until he became a member of this Chamber. During the last half of the nineteenth century, Sir John's career, I think, may be said to have been largely identified with the political history of Canada. It is doubtful if he has any contemporary living at the present time within the Dominion of Canada who had entered upon those political activities so far back as he himself had done. We therefore look back with a great deal of pleasure upon having had within our Chamber a man of such distinguished public services, and we express our regret and sympathy with his family that he has passed away.

The late Senator Comeau was a comparatively young member of the Senate of Canada, but he had served his native province in different capacities. He was a man distinguished in business, a man who had identified himself with the municipal government of his province, who had been a member of the legislature of Nova Scotia, and afterwards of the executive council of that province. He was appointed to the Senate in 1907, and I have no doubt if the late Mr. Comeau had been spared, owing to his having been one of the more youthful members of this Chamber, he would have rendered us distinguished services.

The late Senator Chevrier came from the province of Quebec, and having great confidence in the development of our western country from which many of us come, he emigrated to the province of Manitoba in 1871, served his province there with acceptability, and during his lifetime had the pleasure of seeing a bleak unsettled stretch of prairie blossom into one of the most prosperous provinces in the Dominion He had the pleasure of seeing the district in which he settled, old Fort Garry, develop from a Hudson Bay fort into a large and prosperous city, one which will probably emulate the greatest cities of this Dominion in the no distant future. I am sure the Senate of Canada will place upon record its regret and sympathy in the bereavement which the families of these three senators who have passed away have suffered.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I had not the pleasure of a very intimate acquaintance with two of the gentlemen to whom my hon. friend has alluded, but short as that acquaintance was I believe that they would have been of very great service to the Senate, and would have proved very useful members, as they had, I believe, previously been in their own provinces. With respect to the late Sir John Carling, I entirely endorse all that my hon. friend has said. For very nearly fifty years I had been more or less intimately acquainted with the late gentleman. I think that I voice the feeling of the Senate on both sides in saying that however we may differ as to political opinion, nobody who ever came in contact with Sir John could have failed to recognize his kindliness of heart and his numerous genial qualities. No man in the old House of Commons was better liked on both sides of the House than Sir John Carling, and although of late his infirmities may have prevented him from taking as active a part in the business of this House as he would otherwise have liked to do, there is no doubt whatever that on many matters Sir John's judgment and long experience were calculated to be of great value to the members of the various committees on which he served. My hon. friend has alluded to his very great length of service. He is quite right, I believe, in saying that, so far at any rate as the province of Ontario is concerned, Sir John Carling was the oldest member of either House who could look back to as early a period of parliamentary service as he did. When I was elected to parliament in 1863, Sir John Carling had then been, I believe, a member for some five or six years, and I think I am correct in saying that he and myself are the only members from the province of Ontario who were members of the legislative assembly in 1863. Sir John, as my hon. friend has observed, had not merely been a member of the administration of Macdonald-Cartier, but he was also practically the leader of the Conservative wing in the coalition government of Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, and aftter that, as everybody knows, he was a very active member for a long time of Sir John Macdonald's cabinet and party. We will all, I think, entirely agree with my hon. friend in saying that while he is gone from us in the fullness of years and honour, that we desire to express our most hearty sympathy with his family and friends in the loss they have sustained.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—I would ask the indulgence of the House to pay a tribute to my late confrere from London. I knew Sir John Carling as a public man for the last fifty years and had intimate acquaintance with him in all spheres of activity. I must candidly say, that while there were those who differed from him on political questions, no man in the country stood higher as a citizen in the estimation of all. I knew of him in his home life also, and no man in his native city commanded to a greater degree the respect and love and admiration of every one. He was a gentleman in every sense of the word. Never in his whole life have I known him to unnecessarily wound the feelings of another, and now that he has left us I will freely say, and I conscientiously believe what I say is the simple truth, that Sir John Carlings life, take it all in all, in his home life and as a business man, has set an example to the rising generation of the Dominion.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Having been associated in public life for a period of over fifty years with the late Sir John Carling, I feel that it is due to him to make a few observations on this occasion. I had the pleasure of sitting with him in the parliament elected in 1857, and also in the parliament elected in 1861. I was with him for six years after confederation in the Ontario legislature, and subsequently was with him here when he was a member after confederation. In all those years, whether we were politically allied or sat on opposite sides of the House, our friendship continued unbroken. Fifty years ago he was one of my dearest friends, and supported me on very many important questions. On the school question, which we fought out betweeen 1860 and 1863, and on the question of the seat of government, which was up at that time, he always gave me his support. While in the Ontario House, our friendship was unbroken, and so continued to the end. Sir John Carling should be remembered for the important services he rendered in this country. The man who succeeds in growing two blades of grass where one grew before is a benefactor to his country. Sir John Carling established the Dominion experimental farm, which has proved such a success, and has obtained recognition all over the world. The school at Guelph was also established on his initiation. That school probably is the most important institution of its kind now in the world. Students attend there from China, Japan, Russia and all the countries of Europe and Asia. It has a reputation far beyond Canada and has been an advertisement of the Dominion. Therefore, if reference be made to no other act of his career, than the services he rendered Canada in this connection, his name ought to be recorded with those of men who serve their country efficiently and well. I had great pleasure in listening to the observations of my hon. friends opposite, and my hon. friends on this side of the House, especially my hon. friend from London who is familiar with Sir John Carling's home life. For over fifty years I was probably one of his closest friends. Whether we were both on the same side of the House or on opposite sides made no difference in our friendship, and I deeply regret the loss this country has sustained through his death.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER——It is indeed meet and proper that the memory of those who have lived amongst us should not be forgotten, but should be recalled at least on the first occasion when this House meets after their demise. Our turn will surely come and is fast approaching. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that the grim mower is constantly and eternally doing his work, and is not forgetting this Senate, whose members certainly die proportionately in larger numbers than the members of the other House. I agree in all that has been said concerning our departed colleagues, and more especially as to what has been said concerning Sir John Carling and Mr. Comeau, whom I happen to have known better—I may say more intimately. A curious co-incidence exists between these two gentlemen. Sir John Carling entered active political life possibly earlier than any living member of either House. Mr. Comeau belonged to the nation that was first to colonize this part of North America and implant the seeds of Christianity and civilization. His appointment to the Senate by the Liberal government was a graceful act. He deserved the appointment on his merits he deserved to be appointed on account of the numerical importance and other claims of the people he more particularly represented. I do not mean to narrow it down to sectionalism and say that a man ought to be appointed to this House because he happens to belong to a certain nationality or a certain religion but there is harmony in giving minorities representation. It is conducive to good feelng and shows that the power that looks towards giving minorities their due rights is prompted by motives that are conducive to harmony and contentment. The Laurier government in appointing Mr. Comeau did a graceful act and I trust that my hon. friends on this side of the Senate will see their way to replacing Mr. Comeau by one of his nationality, were it merely as a historical ethic that the nation that founded the first colony in this great confederation, which is still represented by large numbers, should have appropriate recognition at the hands of governments of either political party.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know that I can add anything to that which has already been said in reference to our departed friends and colleagues. I rise merely to express my personal gratification at the remarks that have been made, not only by the leader of the House but by the gentlemen who have spoken on the opposite side, and more particularly was I pleased with the remarks made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Coffey) who has lived in the city of London and knew our late colleague for so many years, not only in his political and business life, but what is of infinitely more importance, his home life. If any one wished to know in what appreciation Sir John Carling was held in his own of Commons, he scarcely ever rose to reply, present in London during his funeral. In my long acquaintance with Sir John Carling we were friends not only politically but personally. I do not think there was a more congenial companion to be found. He was a colleague of mine for many years. Notwithstanding his great business ability in the management of his official duties in the offices which he held, he was a very timid man—so timid that when he was violently attacked, particularly in the House of Commos, he scarcely ever rose to reply, and if he did reply it was in the most courteous and gentlemanly manner. Many a time have I sat behind him when he was violently attacked by his opponents and have urged him to retaliate, but on no occasion have I ever known him to do so in the spirit which I probably would have shown under the circumstances. The experimental farm in Ontario and the central experimental farm here, organized while he was a minister of the Crown, are the best monuments that could be erected to his memory, better than anything that could be raised in marble or brass. In reading the history of this country, his family will be able to refer to these institutions, one established while he was a minister in the Ontario government, and the other while he was a member of the Dominion Cabinet, as evidences of the services he rendered his country. Personally, altogether apart from politics, I deeply regret the demise of a gentleman whom I personally held in such high esteem. I regret that every session it is our paintul duty to have to mourn the loss of some of our members. As my hon. friend to my right has intimated, we must all follow in the same way, possibly some of us in the near future, and when we do it will be well for us if we can leave as good a record behind us as our late colleague, Sir John Carling.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 29, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

NAVAL PLEBISCITE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVID inquired of the government:

Has the question of a plebiscite been considered in the formation of the government in connection with the organization of a navy, and was there an understanding in respect thereof?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In reply to my hon. friend I would say that, except in so far as these questions have been dealt with in the public utterances of the Prime Minister, No. To the second part of the question, the answer is, No.

INCORPORATION OF RAILWAY COMPANIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS moved the second reading of Bill (B) An Act to provide for the incorporation of Railway Companies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

He said: I do not think it is necessary to enter into any explanation of this measure. It has been before the House on two different occasions, last year and the year before. It made very slow progress. It reached the Railway Committee last year. The principle of the Bill was approved, and a subcommittee was appointed to deal with the matter in detail; but as the session was a busy one the measure got no further.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The session came to an unexpected end.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The bill of fare which the government has laid before parliament is not large, and I am justified in hoping that this measure will reach the Commons this session. The Bill provides a new system of dealing with the granting of railway charters. I have previously explained to the House the effect of it, and hon. gentlemen, except probably the new senators, are aware of its provisions.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Is it the same measure that was introduced last year? Is it limited to a certain class of railways or does it apply to all railways?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does not apply to provincial railways.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It applies to all railways under the control of the Dominion government. We have no jurisdiction over provincial railways, and of course it cannot apply to them.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I understand we do not affirm the principle of the Bill by passing the second reading?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It goes to committee.

The Motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved the second reading of Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

He said: As I explained the other day, this is the same Bill which was fully discussed in this House and passed the previous session. It went to the House of Commons in the usual way, but it was not considered there owing to the early dissolution of parliament. Unless it is desired that I should further explain the Bill, I shall content myself with moving the second reading now.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—An opportune time is offered for the presentation of some views which I hold on this subject, pertaining to the health of the community. No higher duty can be imposed on parliament or on any legislative body than making laws that will extend the lives of the people. In other words to cut off all those causes that bring about premature death. That has been my view for a long time; but the parliament of Canada, believing that that duty devolved upon the provinces, has hitherto given a cold shoulder to the introduction of measures for protecting the health of the people. The late government took the stand that it was the duty of the provinces, and former governments had adopted the same principle. Now, in a matter of such importance as the health of the people, surely we cannot brush aside a subject of such magnitude; therefore I propose to submit to the House a few figures showing that Canada ought to be the healthiest country in the world, where we have the finest opportunities for pure air, where we can have pure water, if my hon. friend's Bill is carried out, and where we have more than the ordinary sunshine that is enjoyed by any country in the world. I am sorry to say that with all those facilities for developing health, Canada stands very low down among the countries of the world in its mortality scale. I am unable to get very recent figures, as the census of 1911 is not yet complete, but I take the figures of the census of 1901. Very few changes have taken place, however, in the last ten years, and relatively to population the mortality may be considered on the same scale. Those figures disclose the following facts: The population in 1901 was 5,300,000. The death rate was 81,000 in a single year, and of that number 21,328 died in their first year, slaughtered the year of their birth. In the next four years 10,019 were slaughtered, making a loss in the first five years of 31,347 children no doubt healthily born, but sacrificed in the first five years of their existence. That is, three-eighths—nearly one-half—that die through ignorance of the proper way to bring up children. From five to twenty-five years the deaths were 12,248. That is, the deaths occurring up to the age of 25 years were 43,595. Considerably more than one-half of the deaths in Canada in one year occurred before attaining the age of 25. That is a grievous reflection on the intelligence of the people. Before the flood, men lived for centuries. After the flood, we are told by the Bible that people attained the age of 125. Later on, the Psalmist speaks of people living up to three score and ten; but we have knowledge that 125 years is reached by some, showing that the natural vitality leads up to the century mark at any rate. An animal that reaches maturity in five years dies at the age of 25. Man does not reach maturity until nearly 25 years, and therefore he ought to live to one hundred, yet we find that half the deaths in Canada occurred before reaching the age of 25. How does that compare with other countries? Quoting from the table relating to males, the deaths of females is somewhat less. (See Webb's Dictionary Statistics, pp. 187.) In England and Wales the mortality of every thousand children born is 171 in the first year. In Denmark the number is 146, in Norway 105, in Austria 249, in Belgium, which is a densely populated country, very little larger than Nova Scotia, but with a population of a little over eight millions, the mortality is 202. In Canada it is 260. We head the list of all those countries. Then of the number who die before reaching the age of five years, the figures are for England and Wales 273, Denmark 201, Norway 171. Norway does not get anything like the sunshine that Canada enjoys, and yet life is longer than here. The rate in Austria is 385, in Belgium 294, in Canada 380, just five less than Austria. The difference in the death rate between Canada and Norway shows that 209 more children in every thousand are slaughtered here than in Norway. Figures of that kind ought to alarm people. I venture to say that if one suggestion which I am prepared to make were adopted, so far as Canada is concerned, that we could cut the figures in two. I have had sixty years of observation and experience on the subject I am speaking of, and I say if you could pass a law that no child under five years should have a drug administered to it, you would cut the mortality down one half. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup and similar compounds are openly sold in Canada and very often without a doctor's prescription, and they are the drugs which kill children. In Montreal last summer in the months of June, July and August, out of 1,000 children born 770 died.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Were they all killed by Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—That drug and similar compounds are used more extensively in the province of Quebec than in any other part of Canada. Are the children of lower Canada not born with vitality? You frequently hear of families of eighteen, twenty, twenty-two or even twenty-four children. That many children are born—how many live? Four thousand more children die in each year in the province of Quebec before attaining the age of five years than in Ontario. I speak in the presence of members from the province of Quebec, and I ask them if that is not the fact? Now, why do two-thirds of the children die in the province of Quebec? From using soothing syrup. It is a most tempting drug to administer. If a child cries, the mother has nothing to do but to give it some soothing syrup and put it in a cradle. The child goes to sleep and when it wakes and cries again the dose is repeated. Now in all that soothing syrup there is opium in some form.

No question about the fact why it dies. 'The Lord calls it away,' and we blame the child's death on its Maker, who intended that it should live seventy-five years, and perhaps have risen to prominence in the community. All these children would have some vocation; very often the child who is lost had in him the possibilities of a future statesman, or in some other vocation would have been able to give valuable advice and assistance to his fellowmen. I have no hesitation in committing myself to the statement that one-half of these infantile deaths would be avoided if a law were passed prohibiting the administering of drugs during the first five years of life. Probably after that, although the child would be better without it, it might be able to resist the evil consequences of the drug. In my experience, which runs over sixty years, it is the delicate man or woman who lives, because they do not draw on their constitution as the strong and vigorous do, who turn their stomachs into a swill pail—that is the only interpretation you can put on it—and no wonder they die. There is a difference in mortality between Canada and Norway of 209. In England and Wales they have the advantage of 89—where poverty prevails to such an extraordinary degree, where they have not the benefit of pure air and are living together so closely that the health of the people diminishes. Here, with our magnificent climate, pure air, sunlight and all the advantages for a long life, a large number cannot attain their maturity. It is monstrous to allow poisons to be sold that bring about such mortality. When we had a discussion on the question of public health last year, the use of morphine and opium came up, and we found gentlemen advocating the permitting of a horse doctor giving a prescription for morphine and opium. I pointed out the fact that we imported tons of opium into this country. For years and years the people of China have been begging and entreating the British government not to allow opium grown in India to be sold in China, a trade that was putting money in the pockets of those who traded in the drug in India, and was debauching the Chinese. I think it is a shocking and unchristian thing for a great country like Britain permitting such a trade to continue, in the face of the protest from China.

Hon. Mr. POWER—She does not do that any more.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No. She has reduced it to a lease for five years and the lease has not yet terminated. During the time parliament was sitting in Ottawa in the early part of the present year we were face to face with an epidemic of typhoid fever, and it seemed very opportune that the Bill of my hon. friend from Ottawa was being considered by parliament.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I really introduced it the session before.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—It had been held over. Hon. gentlemen were somewhat impressed by the immense number of typhoid cases in the city of Ottawa. I think they ran up to about a thousand last year.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Nearly two thousand.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—That was all due to allowing the clear, wholesome, pure waters of the river that runs by our doors to be polluted with human excreta. Typhoid is a disease you contract through your stomach. You must eat or drink the germ, and you generally drink it. The typhoid bacilli will live in the colon. There are other bacilli but strange to say bacteriologists maintain that there are only two bacilli that are really deadly to man, cholera and typhoid bacilli, that the human organism is sufficiently powerful to throw the other bacilli off. My conviction is that if we live naturally we would be absolutely immune to typhoid. There were two thousand cases here last year. The population of Ottawa was about eighty thousand. I do not hesitate to say that there were about twenty-five or thirty thousand men and women who drank from the tap during all that time and did not contract typhoid. Why did they not catch the disease? Simply because their systems were immune to it. The organization of our cows and horses is certainly not as strong as that of men, and yet they did not contract typhoid because they lived on natural food. That is the reason, and it is a very easy explanation. Man was the most complete creature in organization that left his Maker's hands—simply perfect. Perhaps I should not go into that part of the story, because we all recognize that man's organization was perfect and therefore absolutely immune from all diseases. But, unfortunately, as a result of the way people live they are susceptible not only to typhoid, but fifty other diseases. We have about eighty on the list. The typhoid epidemic of this year, as was clearly proved, resulted from persons being allowed to throw the excreta from typhoid patients into the water. Doctors are usually called in in typhoid cases; at all events there should be a doctor in every district where there is typhoid, and a law should be passed that not only the excreta, but the fluids, should be treated with carbolic acid, or some other disinfectant, which would destroy the germs and prevent any evil consequences. To allow it to go into the water and to be consumed by people who have to drink that water is simply murder, and a law should be passed to prevent it, as is the case in other civilized countries. Why should we be so neglectful of human life? I have in my hand a table showing the average death rate from typhoid per 100,000. In the United Kingdom with such a large congested population, the death rate is only eleven per hundred thousand. That reminds me of a very important question which I see is being discussed in the press in reference to water that has to be purified for domestic use. Sixty per cent of the people of London—which would embrace probably four millions of the total population—are supplied with water from the river Thames, and yet only eleven cases of typhoid per 100,000 of the population occurred in England and Wales. Why? Because they have strong laws against the pollution of streams and they purify the water by filtration. The subject is now being discussed in Ottawa, on the report of an expert commission who recommend taking the water supply from a point fifteen or sixteen miles away, although we have the finest water in the world at our own door, if we can keep the poisons out of it and filter it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The deaths from typhoid in the United Kingdom are eleven per hundred thousand. In Belgium, where the population is more crowded, it it eighteen per hundred thousand. France, twenty-eight, Germany eight, Denmark seven. In little Denmark the population is necessarily very crowded, and yet they can get rid of their filth in other ways than throwing it into the water. I called attention to Norway before, but I desire to refer to the preservation of childhood in that country. The mortality rate from typhoid is only five per hundred thousand —just imagine, only five.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Let us all go to Norway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we have a better country in Canada. All we have to do is to act wisely, and take proper precaution. In New South Wales the mortality from typhoid is 22; Victoria, 16; New Zealand, 8; Japan, 12; United States, 32; Ceylon, 142; Canada, 35, all per 100,000. We are ahead of the States, and we are seven time ahead of Norway in the death rate.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—We are worse off than the United States.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are ahead in mortality. We are seven times worse off than Norway. Is it not a disgrace to the legislation of the country that such a state of affairs should be allowed to exist? We get more than double the amount of sunshine than Norway does, and typhoid is a disease that does not necessarily exist unless we chose to drink it, and the fluid that we use can be protected without any trouble, if we chose to take steps to do so. There should be no great difficulty about it. I hope public opinion will soon be educated up to the necessity of acting on the suggestions I have made. Certainly the city of Ottawa has a very good source from which to obtain good water. The capital is better situated for obtaining a pure water supply than any other city in the world. The watershed of the river that passes by comprises forty thousand square miles. The preceding government of the country—and I have no doubt this government will follow them in that regard—adopted a principle of storage dams at Temiskaming and a number of the leading lakes tributary to the Ottawa, which I need not mention. By constructing dams the water can be stored and let down gradually. Any hon. gentlemen who have been here in the spring of the year and have seen the tumbling waters come down beneath the suspension bridge at the rate of one hundred and fifty thousand cubic feet per second can imagine what that would mean if it were held back by dams in the lakes and gradually let down to us at the rate of, say forty thousand cubic feet per second. I have no doubt the present government will follow up that policy, because it is a reasonable one, and at all events in building the Georgian Bay canal it will be necessary to provide necessary depths of water required in the different streams in the stretches between the lakes. The best section from which to obtain our water supply would be where there is the heaviest rainfall. The Ottawa river flows with very considerable rapidity. At various points there are falls and rapids which help to aerate the water. But the principal advantage it has is that the area is so large for the rain and snowfall, which I think amounts to about forty five inches. Nearly four feet of water falls over that entire area every year, and it is constantly flowing away. The supply is fairly constant from the fact that there is this large drainage area. If we could get the water fresh as it comes to us from the clouds we would have pure distilled water. As it falls to the earth, it becomes contaminated and polluted by man. A merciful Creator sends it on to the ocean. It is there purified and raised again to the sky, and we get it back again purified and distilled, and the process continues month by month, year by year, and century by century, supplying us with pure water from the heavens.

There is, therefore, no possible excuse for the proposition to take the water from any other locality than the Ottawa river. The government of this country have a voice in this. The representatives of the people are here for about six months in the year. They want the best water Canada can afford, and the best water we can have is from the Ottawa river. Allow the sediment to settle and then purify it by filtration, a process which is easily done. Some parties may say that the water is turpid. Filtration would remove the turpidity. I have heard no objection to it on that score; but even if it were turpid, the remedy is easy. I trust this government will assert themselves in this matter, and that they will have a voice in the question of the water which is to supply this city. It is used for several months each year by the representatives of the people from all parts of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—How do they deal with this question in Norway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Norway is not a thickly populated country, and the people are not concentrated so much in the cities as they are in other places. They lead a simple life, and are in the open air a great deal.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Are they allowed to drain the sewege to the streams?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not in a position to say. It is a mountainous country, and there is a large snowfall and rainfall there, therefore the fresh waters come down more frequently and freely than in Canada.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They are great wine drinkers, are they not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I think this Bill is a step in the right direction, and if it has the effect of reducing the death rate, as I am sure it will, it will be a great benefit to the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman has compared the death rate of Canada with that of Norway. In a new country we are subject to conditions which they do not meet with in Norway. In the western districts, we find that typhoid prevails in places situated far from streams. Probably they do not use proper precautions and typhoid results. I think the comparison of Canada with Norway is not a proper one. This is a healthy country taken all around. In any new country where you have mining camps and railway construction, unhealthy conditions will prevail, and the deaths occurring in such districts are recorded and tend to increase the mortality rate of the whole country.

In Norway and Belgium they have not been constructing railways many years. The Bill is a step in the right direction, and I hope it will meet with the approval of the government and become law.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think it is well to prevent the pollution of the small streams; but what harm can it do to discharge sewage into the St. Lawrence below Montreal? There are, of course, large towns along the river, such as Three Rivers, Sorel, Rimouski and Quebec, but I cannot see where the health of the people in those places will be in danger through discharging sewage into so large a river.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Is it not salt water there?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not at Quebec. The tide begins 25 or 30 miles below. This legislation would prevent towns and cities discharging sewage into navigable waters where it could cause no danger to the health of the people.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—They would have to purify the sewage.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is no need of purifying it where it is discharged into a river like the St. Lawrence below Montreal, where the stream is several miles wide in places.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The Bill is wide enough to allow the Department of Agriculture, who will have the putting of it into force, to exempt cities like Quebec and Three Rivers from the operation of the law, or require only a limited filtration. There is no necessity to deal with these details, because hon. gentlemen will remember that the Bill merely creates a penalty and enables the Department of Agriculture, after consultation with the health officers, both federal and provincial, to enact regulations suitable for the localities they may affect. One provision, if the Bill is assented to is to enable the government, through the Department of Agriculture, to take up the matter and enact regulations of a general or a specific character. If there are places on the St. Lawrence or any other river where filtration of sewage is not necessary, that is a matter which will be dealt with by the department. I stated in the House last year that I was very careful to eliminate from the Bill anything which would call upon parliament to determine what was going to happen in any particular locality. That is too wide a matter, and would have to be determined only after consultation and wise advice, and necesarily such details must be left to the Department of Agriculture. If we pass this Bill all we are doing is sanctioning the principle that sewage, before it is discharged into our navigable rivers, must be treated. We say that the practice of dumping sewage into navigable rivers must cease. We say, in order to bring that about, the Department of Agriculture is authorized to enact regulations which will be put in force, not now perhaps, not six months or even six years hence, but whenever and wherever the department finds it advisable to enforce the regulations. All we are doing now is to pass a Bill which, to use a vulgar phrase, 'puts it up' to the government to consider the matter with the health officers of Canada and devise means by which this criminal, stupid and murderous practice must be put an end to. There is a provision in the Bill also that even after the regulations are put into force the Governor in Council may suspend the provisions of the Act or any portion of it for any part of Canada, or the whole of Canada, and may do so from time to time as the public convenience of any locality may require. I was extremely anxious to leave out of the Bill anything that would be controversial or anything which would put upon parliament the necessity of dealing with this question as it applies to one locality or another. We all realize that in matters of this kind that what will do for Ottawa might not do for Aylmer or Montreal. Different localities require different treatment. All such specific details have been carefully left out of the Bill. It simply provides for the enactment of regulations which will enable the government to take the matter up and deal with it effectively at such time as the officers of the Crown may think best. I hope the Bill will commend itself to the House and to parliament generally, and that we are going to begin now to put a stop to a stupid and dangerous practice. It may be a long time before we have the law in force all over Canada, but if we do not begin now we may never begin. The difficulty of putting a stop to a practice of that kind will increase with the growth of population. Now is the time to begin. I quite realize that it will take time to kill off all the typhoid germs in the water we drink, but as has been said by the hon. and venerable gentleman who has just addressed the House, no language is strong enough to qualify this practice. It is not only criminal, it is stupid in the extreme. Why should the water of the river Ottawa be polluted with human excreta? The thing is not susceptible to proper qualification. We see in our press occasional strong articles against a little village a few miles above us which is draining its sewage into the river. Last summer, at the time we had the typhoid epidemic, the daily papers were filled every day with the iniquity of Aylmer, with its population of 3,000, dumping its sewage into the Ottawa, while the city of Ottawa itself, with a population of one hundred thousand people, was guilty of the same practice. The people below us were getting the germs from the two thousand patients we had here last winter, and shortly after the epidemic in Ottawa there was an epidemic at Rockland a few miles below the city.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Has the hon. gentleman any evidence that there was a typhoid epidemic below the city of Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Yes, at Rockland, the home of our colleague, Mr. Edwards.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why was there no epidemic at Buckingham?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Because Buckingham is not on the Ottawa river, it is three or four miles inland.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, at Hawkesbury?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—There may have been an epidemic there, and at other places. I could quote figures to show that the deaths from typhoid every year are enormous. I think they are next highest after tuberculosis. But why should we allow this practice to continue when we can get pure water at very little expense? My hon. friend spoke of Belgium, which has one of the most congested populations in the civilized world, between three hundred and fifty and four hundred persons to the square mile, as compared to three or four in Canada. In Belgium they have a system of treating sewage, and the cost of securing immunity from typhoid germs is only seven cents per head per annum. Who would not pay seven cents per head to secure immunity from such a disease? I admit that it would cost more to treat sewage in Canada than it costs in Belgium, because the cost of labour is higher here and because the government of the kingdom contributes one-third of the cost of installing these purification plants. I only mentioned that to show that it is a matter of very small expense for cities like Ottawa and Montreal to install purification plants. It is a trifle compared with the enormous loss which we sustain for want of these purification plants. Look at the loss to Ottawa through the epidemic of last winter, when two thousand people were stricken, It must have been a heavy loss, between the expense of doctors and nurses, and loss of production, to say nothing of the loss of life. Let me ask again, as I did on a former question, what would we think if our drinking water were brought to us in a swill pail? Is not that what is happening? We are doing that year after year. The provinces say, 'it is not our concern'; the Dominion says, 'we have no power to legislate on this question.' In that way we keep tossing it from the province to the dominion, and from the dominion to the province, and shirking an imperious duty. So far as navigable streams are concerned, over which this parliament has jurisdiction, let us take up the question and deal with it, and the provincial legislatures will follow suit. The provincial health bodies in Ontario, Quebec and Saskatchewan have expressed themselves entirely in support of this Bill, and have agreed, should it become law, to do everything they can to enforce it in their territories. Let us pass this Bill and get power to stop this criminal practice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I feel that the Senate is under a very great obligation to the two learned and hon. gentlemen from Ottawa for the valuable information they have given us in connection with the second reading of this Bill. It is only natural that we should hear from these hon. gentlemen in connection with the matter, because it is only necessary to go back to last winter to find that the city of Ottawa suffered——

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I know what the hon. gentleman would like to say. I am aware that he introduced this Bill before last year.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The hon. gentleman's remarks lose some of their force.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman stated, if I am not in error, that there had been every year a considerable amount of typhoid in Ottawa. That is true, whether he stated it or not. Therefore it is natural that the hon. gentlemen who represent the city of Ottawa should take a special interest in this question, and I think it is to their credit that they have shown that interest and have taken the trouble to bring the matter up in this House, and offer so much valuable information for the consideration of parliament. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to my statement?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I rose in a good-natured way to remind him that I had introduced this Bill a year before there was any epidemic in Ottawa, and therefore it was not prompted by the fact that there was an epidemic last winter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose we all agree in thinking that the object aimed at in this Bill is a most desirable one; notwithstanding that we have to consider whether or not the Bill in its present form is likely to bring about the result that we all desire. The hon. gentlemen said it applied only to navigable waters. The second clause of the Bill provides as follows:

2. Every person is guilty of an offence against this Act and liable on summary conviction to the penalties hereinafter provided, who puts, or causes or permits to be put, or to fall, flow, or to be carried into any navigable water, or into any other water any part of which is navigable or flows into any navigable water,—

(a) any solid or liquid sewage matter; or

(b) any other solid matter which, not being sewage, is poisonous, noxious, putrid, decomposing, refuse, or waste; or

(c) any liquid matter which, not being sewage, is poisonous, noxious, putrid, decomposing, refuse or waste;
unless such matter, whether solid or liquid, is disposed of in accordance with regulations or orders made or permits granted under the authority of this Act.

The hon. gentleman must see that all the water in this country flows ultimately into navigable streams. It is only right to understand what we are passing. From the city of Quebec up to the head of Lake Superior there are numerous cities whose sewage at the present time goes into the St. Lawrence river. There are cities and towns on the Ottawa river from Montreal up to New Liskeard, all of whose sewage is discharged into the Ottawa river. These are navigable rivers. Then, under this Bill, if a farmer anywhere within the basins of the Ottawa or St. Lawrence river—and when you speak of those you mean practically the whole of Ontario and Quebec,—permits the soakage from his stable to find its way into any stream which is an affluent of one of these large rivers, he is guilty of an offence against this Act and liable to a penalty of $50, and an additional amount of $10 for each day the offence continues, or to imprisonment not exceeding two months or for both such fine and imprisonment. All these cities would have to completely alter their present system of disposing of sewage. It is desirable that both the cities and the farmers should alter their method of doing things; but it seems to me that the hon. gentleman in his Bill has put the cart before the horse. Instead of saying that this Bill shall apply to the whole country at once, and that after the Bill becomes law the government may except such portions of the country as they deem fit from the operation of the measure, the natural and reasonable course would be to impose upon the government the duty of gradually extending this law from small beginnings to the whole country. The government could find out which was the best way and the best place to begin at in a district and then gradually extend the operation of the law by proclamation. But to undertake to bring this law into operation all over the Dominion at once, and then exempt certain portions of the country is not a wise or prudent way to proceed. This is a matter which does not affect the principle of the Bill, and I mention it so that when the hon. gentleman takes it into committee some consideration may be given to this view.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—We must all feel grateful to those who have taken such an interest in this question. Every one must recognize its importance. The statement made by the hon. knight from Ottawa goes to show that an enormous proportion of the children born in this country die prematurely on account of diseases generated by contaminated water. All will agree that it is a question deserving the consideration of every member of the House. We all regret the high infant mortality and would like to devise means to prevent it. But the question arises, how are we to accomplish the object in view? Will this Bill, even if it becomes law, attain the desired result? If the hon. gentleman can show me that I shall join hands with him and do all in my power to place it on the statute book. It may possibly mitigate, to a certain extent, the evils arising from the contamination of water. But as has been pointed out, if this Bill should become law, unless the government of the day intervened, every farmer would be prevented from properly fertilizing his land. All the waters run to the sea. We know that the farmers have drainage which carries water into the small streams which eventually find their way to navigable waters. Is it part of the hon. gentleman's object to prevent farmers fertilizing their land? If so there would be friction at once between the Dominion and provincial authorities.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It is not intended that the Bill shall go into force at once. It will only go into force when a proclamation is issued. As to whether there will be friction between the Dominion and provincial authorities, that is a matter which will be dealt with by the Dominion government in framing their regulations.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman says the conflict will come in later on. Has he a right to leave it optional with the Governor in Council to cause such conflict? I should hesitate very much to be a party to over-riding the jurisdiction of the provinces, because the local authorities are far better able to carry out a health law than are the Dominion authorities.

I think we should leave to the provinces the rights and privileges which have been specially allotted to them. If this Bill would accomplish the result my hon. friend predicts and lessen mortality among children, we might stretch a point and pass the measure. But I think it would be impossible to prevent the drainage from farms from flowing through the creeks into the navigable streams, thereby polluting those waters. I cannot see the object in passing a Bill which would not accomplish beneficial results. Even the power reserved to the Dominion government to suspend the law in various localities would not prevent the polluting of navigable waters. I do not think my hon. friend will pretend that it would have that effect. Unless something can be accomplished, we should not interfere with the jurisdiction of the provinces. Let them alone and they will enact laws to protect the health and lives of the people. I sympathize with the hon. knight (Sir Richard Scott), when he deplored the great loss of the children who are being sacrificed by drinking contaminated water. But he must remember that water is not the only cause of the death of children.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is due more to impure milk.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I suppose the hon. gentleman knows that the water that the cow drinks will contaminate the milk and that milk will produce disease in the children. How is he going to avoid that? I suppose he will say that he will prevent the water from being contaminated. He would have to prevent the farmers and others from throwing refuse into navigable streams. Is it possible to accomplish that? If diarrhoea exists to an abnormal extent in a certain district the doctors take precaution that the milk the children use is free from danger or contamination, by the cows that supply it drinking only the purest water possible. Will his Bill accomplish this? I also sympathize with the hon. gentleman from Ottawa when he deplores the serious results of the administration to children of poison in the form of patent medicines and the great number of deaths resulting therefrom. The hon. gentleman does not believe in medicine. I do not think his judgment in that respect is superior to that of gentlemen who have devoted all their lives, their ability and energy to acertaining what is best for the human system. He cannot convince me that he is entirely free from poison, that he has not taken any poison into his own system and that it is the sole reason he is so healthy, I can assure him that every day of his life he takes a certin proportion of poison into his system in the diet he uses, and a little poison is a good thing once in a while. All physicians hesitate to give an opiate to a child, not that it is particularly poisonous, but a child is liable to be thrown into convulsions after taking any preparation of opium or paregoric. Physicians are not all fools, and they know how much opiate they can safely administer to children. Again, how can we settle this matter with the rural sections? Instead of sending the measure to a select committee, I think we should deal with it in committee of the whole House where we will get the very best information possible as to the proper course to pursue. If we have a guarantee that it will be considered in Committee of the Whole I shall vote for the second reading, but if it is to go to a select committee I shall vote against it.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Perhaps my hon. friend will explain the poison that I take?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend knows as well as I—and perhaps better, because he has had longer experience—that almost everything he takes into his system contains more or less poison.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No, no.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—And that it is absolutely necessary at times that a certain amount of poison should be taken into the system.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I deny that I take poison into my system. I have not in sixty years had a drug of any kind, not even a seidlitz powder.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman takes in more or less poison with the air he breathes. He takes no food that does not contain more or less poison. It is true, the human system eliminates poison, which if allowed to remain in the body would cause death. Providence has come to our rescue and has taught my hon. friend a lesson that unless his system eliminates the poison that is constantly going into it, the destruction of life would be rapid and persistent. I call upon the hon. leader of the House to see that we have an opportunity of expressing our views fully on this matter, and that there shall be nothing done to bring about a collision between the Dominion and the various provinces.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I have the honour to be a member of the Committee of Health for the Dominion, and have been interested in this question, not only since my appointment, but for years before, and I have some opinions about the pollution of rivers that lead me very seriously to doubt the wisdom of this Bill. In the first place I question the statement that the enormous loss of life that is said to take place during the period of infancy is due to typhoid germs. This Bill takes it as an established fact. I would like to see a census taken by competent persons that would establish that as a fact. I believe if the opinions of competent medical experts as to the real cause of this great loss were ascertained, it would not be found to be a typhoid germ which was causing the mischief, but it would be attributed to another cause altogether. I am sure every medical man on the floor of the House will agree with me that in most cases, during the hottest period of the summer especially, sickness of children is almost solely due to indigestion. and the result is diarrhoea which at that period of life is very difficult to handle successfully. The consequence is, the death of a large majority of these children is due to starvation from improper nourishment, and not from germs that are supposed to have come from the water that they used in their food. Before a Bill of this kind is passed it should be determined or not that this great mortality rate is due to typhoid germs. I do not think that can be established, and therefore we are starting from a false basis in dealing with the mortality question.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I do not attribute the mortality to typhoid.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I understand that is the basis of the hon. gentleman's argument.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, no.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I was speaking of the necessity of the government looking after the health of the people.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I am speaking of the health of the people, and if we start with the assumption that the pollution of the streams is the cause of the excessive mortality amongst children it is a mistake.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—It is merely one element.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—My argument is just in the line of the Bill and the speech that has been made upon the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I never used that argument.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS.—We might purify all the streams in the Dominion of Canada, great and small, and the mortality that now exists would not be modified to any great extent. That is what I firmly believe because I made it a subject of special study for years and I have gone into the whole chemical question connected with the subject. I venture to say that the actual reason why we have so much mortality among the children is not impure water so much as improper food, and food given to them at a period in life when nature has not given them the ability to deal with it. When a child is sufficiently matured it is able to digest a certain kind of food, then Providence gives it the wherewithal to deal with the food that is given. I appeal to every medical man present in the House to-day if it is not a fact that in their experience that only the most robust and strongest constitutions are able to cope with the difficulties that the medical man is called upon to deal with. The child survives, it may be, because it has superior strength of constitution and power to assimilate the food that is given to it, it may be in kindness, although it is really not so. You cannot supplant the mother's milk with the cow's milk because it contains an element that the child cannot deal with in its mastication and assimilation, the cheesemaking property, which lies upon the stomach as an indigestables mass and trouble ensues. It produces indigestion and it decomposes in the bowels. Before you could convince me that typhoid ensued from that cause you would have to show there was ulceration of the bowel caused by the typhoid germ. We never look for anything of that kind in such cases because we do not suppose such an effect would be produced from that cause. But we expect to find decayed food in the bowels, and the consequence is the child dies day by day from actual starvation, or inability to assimilate the food that is given to it and in my opinion—and I have yet to see reasons why I should change it—the purification of the streams of itself will do very little towards prolonging the life of our Canadian infants. I do not oppose the purification of streams of water in the slightest. Do all you can along that line, but let us be intelligent and let us not overlook that fact that the remedy we are going to apply will mean an enormous expense, without any proof that it will produce the results expected. In my opinion the arresting of the progress of disease and death in infancy should be undertaken from an entirely different standpoint.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—There is only one answer to the question and that is that typhoid fever, with very rare exceptions does not occur with children.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I am only expressing the opinion of the medical faculty to-day, and I am speaking in the light of my own experience. I had the privilege of seven years hard work in a tropical climate, where it is almost impossible to get children through the period of infancy owing to the intense heat and the difficulty of getting proper food for them. In India to-day you will find acres upon acres of little graves side by side in great rows. The fact is that nearly all the children of British born residents in that country are sacrificed in their infancy.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Are the springs contaminated there worse than in any other country?

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—They are not very clean, and I am glad that the provinces of this country are willing to take the suggestions in that connection which have been given by our committee, and from the Commission on Conservation. They have accepted the hints that have been thrown out and are willing to adopt the principle of looking strictly after the purification of the streams in the west. I am glad to see that Saskatchewan and Alberta are most hearty in their support of it, but before this Bill is placed upon the statute-book I think there are some questions which require vestigation and consideration. I have made these remarks with perfect honesty and sincerity and I have yet to be convinced that I am not right.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved the adournment of the debate.

The Motion was adopted.

THE SALE OF BREAD BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved the second reading of Bill (D), an Act respecting the sale of bread. He said : The purpose of the Bill is to regulate the weight of bread and provide also that scales be kept where bread is offered for sale in order that any one purchasing a loaf may have it weighed if he so desires. The opinion of a great many people is that they are not getting the proper weight. Bills similar to this have been passed by the legislatures of Ontario, and Québec, but the weight and measures of this country are properly under the jurisdiction of this parliament. I hold in my hand the Revised Statutes and I find that the Inspection and Sale Act regulates almost all articles of food. Some time ago we regulated the weight of a bag of potatoes, even going so far as to make an exception in the case of the province of Quebec, where a bag of potatoes is only 80 lbs. We also regulate the weight of barley, buckwheat, oats, and other grain. There is no doubt that weights and measures are within the jurisdiction of this parliament. The fourth clause deals with the penalty for infringement of the Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend say why he did not make this an amendment to the Inspection Act instead of introducing it as a separate measure?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The Sale and Inspection Act is a very large and cumbersome measure. I took legal advice on the subject and was told it was better to make it a separate Act, because there are so many sections in the law on the subject of weights and measures that it might make it more difficult in operation. In the Sale and Inspection Act you provide for the weight of grain, fish and other things, and it might mix it up and make it unworkable or more difficult to be understood. I was advised that it was better to bring in the Bill as I have introduced it.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—On reading the Bill, I find that the provision for weighing the bread requires that it shall be weighed where manufactured. I do not believe that there is one loaf in five hundred that is purchased where the bread is made.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I can give all the explanations necessary when the Bill is referred to a Committee of the Whole. It is the principle of the Bill that we are discussing now.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am quite in accord with the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill. The bakers in this country do not give proper weight. Their pound loaves weigh 14 oz., and that is the case with very prosperous bakers. The point raised by the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick is right—the bread should be weighed where it is sold to the consumer. That is a matter which can be dealt with when the Bill is considered in committee. We should require every man who sells bread to weigh it if the purchaser wants to have it weighed, and I would provide that every bread cart should carry scales.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Nobody buys a six-pound loaf of bread.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They do in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—A small family would not want a six-pound loaf. Subsection 2 of clause 2 provides that small bread may be offered for sale in loaves not exceeding 12 ozs. That leaves a loop-hole to enable bakers to sell bread under weight. I think the Bill is badly drawn and that it is a matter which should be dealt with by the provinces. In Ontario the legislature has devoted a great deal of time and attention to regulating the weight of bread.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—If the hon. gentleman is not opposed to the principle of the Bill I think it is better to let it go to the committee, where we can deal with the details.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman consulted the laws that are on the statute-books of the different provinces regulating the weight of bread, and does he know if this measure will conflict with the local legislation? If so, will this measure be substituted for the local laws? If the local legislatures have no constitutional right to pass Acts of that kind, then his Bill, if it becomes law, will be substituted for all the local legislation dealing with the subject.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I have the statutes of Ontario and Quebec, and this Bill is drafted on the same lines as the local legislation on the subject. It is to remove all possibility of doubt. If the local authorities want to make the violation of the law a criminal offence they must come to us.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—If bread is sold the day it is made, the probability is the weight would be all right; if it is held over until the next day it might lose two oz. in weight.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—That is another point. The weight of the bread should be as it is eight hours after the making when it is cold and the loaf reaches its normal weight.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The shrinkage in weight is very small, not more than a quarter of an ounce.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Has the hon. gentleman taken any precaution to ascertain whether this Bill comes under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The Bill is drawn on the lines of provincial legislation and is for the purpose of making it operative.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—That is no answer to my question. I asked whether it is or is not under the jurisdiction of the parliament? I want to know if it is an encroachment on the rights of the provincial legislature.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I explained that it was within the jurisdiction of this parliament.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called Second Reading Bill (C) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, Hon. Mr. Thompson, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Domville, moved that the order of the day be discharged and that the second reading be fixed for Tuesday next.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that this is a money Bill and affects the revenue. If his hon. the Speaker decides that it is open to that objection, there is no necessity of keeping it on the notice paper. If it is not a money Bill we can go on and consider it.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I think the hon. gentleman is right in his objection since the Bill involves a question of expending public funds; but in the absence of the mover of the Bill I thought it best to ask for a postponement of the second reading.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Indemnities are not in the nature of a salary.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not desire to press the objection under the circumstances. The order can be postponed and the point decided later.

The motion was agreed to

SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES OF THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER read a letter from the Auditor General as follows:—

Please send me authorized list, duly approved by Speaker, of sessional employees for the present session.

He said: I will lay this letter on the table of the House where every hon. member can see it, and I ask them to read it carefully. I did not like to take a stand in the matter until I had the opinion of of the House.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 30, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

CANADA'S POSITION IN THE EMPIRE.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The notice of Motion being called:

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN:

That he will call attention to the following report from the Montreal 'Gazette,' of remarks made by Mr. C. H. Cahan, a prominent supporter of the government, at a meeting of the Canadian Club on Monday, the 27th of November, 1911, and shall ask if these sentiments expressed by Mr. Cahan are concurred in by the government:

MUST PROGRESS OR SEPARATE.

'If that were to be the last word to be said with regard to the development of constitutional government in this empire with regard to giving to these colonies capable of intelligent self-government the right of full liberty and representation in Imperial affairs,' declared Mr. Cahan with strong emphasis, 'then I for one would be willing to devote my life and such powers as I possess, although I love the empire and am an Imperialist by blood and education, I would give the rest of my life to carrying this country out of the empire.' (Applause.)

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN asked that the notice be allowed to stand until Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend what his reason is for asking to have this matter postponed?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I thought it was a very serious matter, and that I would not press the government to give an answer in 24 hours after the notice was given. I wanted to give them time to make up their minds. I thought the government might like, in their own interest, to let it stand until next week. If any prominent supporter of the government wishes to carry Canada out of the empire, it is a matter of very serious consequence and the government should consider it carefully. I thought, therefore, it would be better to let this notice stand.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The question is manifestly irregular. The government is no more responsible for what a private citizen may say, than for what my hon. friend might say, and it would be very sorry to assume a responsibility of that kind. This has nothing whatever to do with the government, or anything for which the government would be responsible, and I simply point out the irregularity of it to my hon. friend in order that he may withdraw his notice.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Was he not representing the government ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The question is whether the government concur or do not concur in the sentiment expressed by one of their prominent supporters; but I am quite willing to let the notice stand until next week.

The notice was postponed.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the 2nd Reading Bill (A). Intituled 'An Act respecting the Pollution of navigable waters.

Hon. Mr. McMULLIN—I consider this to be such an important Bill that I do not like it to pass its second reading without saying a few words upon it. I am in entire accord with the proposition made by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa regarding the necessity and desirability of preserving the purity of our navigable streams. I agree with the view that parliament has only control over the navigable waters. It is our duty to set a good example before the provinces in endeavouring to preserve the purity of those waters, and we have not moved a moment too soon. The condition, for instance, of water in the United States is such that it is becoming a matter for very serious consideration with them. All their streams appear to be so polluted that they are entirely unfit for domestic use. Take for instance the Mississippi river. The water has been so polluted that, as has recently been discovered, many of the diseases that have broken out in the city of St. Louis are due to the pollution through the flow of sewage from the city of Chicago into that stream. In the United States the use of light beer is becoming more common in large cities than it was years ago, largely owing to the belief that it is not safe to drink the water. The amount of beer consumed in the United States in 1900 was thirty-nine million barrels.

Ten years after that, in 1910, the amount of beer consumed in the United States was 56,500,000, or seventeen and a half million barrels more than in 1900. It is generally believed that the enormous increase in the consumption of beer is largely due to the general fear that the water is so polluted that it is not safe to use it. We in Canada have not reached that condition, and I think it is well to take some steps to prevent it. The sewage of Glasgow, and many cities in Europe is put through a process that produces a valuable fertilizer, which is sold, and the receipts from the sale covers the expense of the disposal of the sewage, and the lands are benefited by the use of the fertilizer. Some such process could be adopted for the disposal of sewage in this country. We are beginning to realize that our lands are becoming impoverished by continuous cropping, and if farmers who live upon the shores of rivers could be induced to adopt some method that would use the sewage from their farms, instead of draining it into the rivers, and polluting them, it would be a decided advantage all round. I think the Bill before the House deserves very serious consideration, and I hope that it will become law in some shape. Let us make a beginning. I was very much struck with the speech delivered by the senior senator from Ottawa, (Sir Richard Scott) yesterday. It was full of information, facts and figures, which are well worth knowing, and the evidence that he produced to the House, of the results that followed the pollution of waters, deserves serious consideration. For these reasons I hope the Bill will get a second reading, that it will go to committee, and that it will be reported back, although perhaps not in the form in which it now appears. Let us take a step in the right direction, and from year to year we can amend as we find that amendment is necessary. I have no doubt the provinces will cordially co-operate with the Dominion in any step that they may take to purify our streams and keep them purified. It is a national necessity that we should take some action at once. We did not begin soon enough, but it is better late than never. Other countries are suffering from abuses which they have permitted to exist from year to year, resulting in the poisoning of their streams, and it is time we took warning and made an effort to preserve ours. I am heartily in accord with the movement and I shall do anything in my power to assist my hon. friend in passing the measure.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—I spoke at some length last year, and I spoke very fully when the report of the committee of this House appointed to investigate the subject was presented. We took the evidence of the best experts we could obtain in the country. Our report was accepted by this House and referred to the Conservation Commission. They called a meeting of representatives of the different provinces and discussed the matter fully. The result was that it led up to something that benefited the country. A board of health was formed with the object of conserving the public health, which is the greatest asset of any country. They held a meeting of the representatives of all the different provinces, and it was found that the provinces practically did not want the responsibility of looking after the public health. They did not want to have it in their hands at all. It had been practically forced upon them by the inaction of the federal government, and they took no action till the year 1882, when Ontario passed a public health Act. Since then the different provinces have taken up the question, and of necessity passed laws in regard to the matter. I hold that the federal government has a perfect right to deal with the question, because everything which is not mentioned in the British North America Act as being relegated to the provinces, belongs to the federal government, and there is no mention whatsoever made in the British North America Act of the conservation of the public health. It states that every province must provide hospitals, charitable and eleemosynary institutions, which are for all purposes poor houses. No mention whatsoever is made of public health. If a pauper is sick the province is supposed to look after him. Under the British North America Act the subject really belongs to the federal government. Each province has a Health Act, and if we look through every one of these Acts we will find that they are almost identical with the Bill which my hon. friend has introduced in the Senate. In each one of the acts there is some little difference. For instance we will suppose that Ontario has an Act in this regard and Quebec has one slightly different. Here is a river running between the two provinces. What is the use of Ontario preventing the defiling of the Ottawa river if Quebec still does it? Then to go further, we have international rivers. No province can make an agreement with the United States. It must be made by the Dominion government, and the only way we can prevent the pollution of the international streams is by a uniform law being passed by both countries in regard to the drainage of sewage into these streams.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Reciprocity.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—So that it is necessary that the preservation of public health in every way should be left to the federal authority. Our action in holding an investigation has borne good fruit.

Our action in holding our investigation has borne good fruit. On the recommendation of the Conservation Commission, a Board of Health was formed. They meet at Ottawa each year and advise the government as to what is the best course to pursue. The late government went so far as to agree to have—I do not know exactly what you might call it—but a body of experts attached to one department, who would go so far as to manufacture anti-toxine, vaccine, and several other specifics that are sold in the country. Having gone that far, I think if pressure is brought to bear they will proceed further. I know that the provinces are only too willing to hand this question over to the federal government, and the federal government is the only body that can act effectively, because any health laws to be effective, must of necessity be uniform all all over the country. I feel that it would be very much in the interest of public health if this Bill were passed, in order that the attention of the government may be again called to the imperative necessity for such legislation.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The hon. senior member from Ottawa deserves a great deal of credit for the amount of research he has made and the valuable information which he has submitted to the House. I doubt very much whether the Bill, in its present shape, will tend to improve the condition of things in the way he expects, but it may be amended in committee. Statements have been made as to the purity of the Ottawa river. I deny the statement that it is pure. It is the impurity of the river that caused all the trouble here years ago. If you want to have pure water in this city you must take it from McGregor lake and the other lakes of the system close by, because they are elevated much above the city, and a large pipe could be laid from the outlet of those lakes to the banks of the Ottawa river and the water would be forced through the service pipes by gravity pressure to the highest elevation in the city. Then you would have pure water which would satisfy the people. In Halifax we have the best water system in the world. It has been recently tested and proved to be pure. The lakes are elevated high above the town and the water comes down in large pipes to Water street, and then goes up again in small pipes to all parts of the city. That would be the result in Ottawa if you took the water from McGregor lake, and the lakes adjoining it and brought it to the city. I do not believe that you will succeed in obtaining pure water from the Ottawa river.

The Motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When this Bill was before the House last session it was referred to the Committee on Public Health. The promoter is not present to-day and I hardly know what course we should take.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend might move that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Public Health.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Public Health.

Hon. Mr. McMULLIN—It is hardly fair to the promoter of the Bill that we should deal with it in this way without first allowing him to say what his wish would be. A reference of the Bill to a Committee of the Whole House was spoken of during the discussion, and the promoter should be given an opportunity to decide whether it would be better to have it dealt with in that way or not. It would be better to leave the Bill until he can deal with it himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman who has moved the motion that it should be allowed to stand as a notice until to-morrow, when the hon. member will no doubt be present.

The SPEAKER—The better way is to adjourn the debate on the motion.

The debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 1, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

HOUR OF MEETING OF SENATE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved:

That until differently ordered by the Senate, the hour of meeting of the House on Friday shall be half past two o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there is a provision that requires certain notice to members of any proposed change in our rules. I do not object to the principle involved, but we should adhere to the rules. Is this not in contravention of the rules of the House?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I wish to point out this distinction: When a change is made in a rule of the House, and a new rule is proposed, it is absolutely necessary to adopt a different procedure. As the hon. gentleman has mentioned, the members should have special notice. But this merely makes a temporary sessional order which may be changed at any time if the Senate desires to revert to the old rule. It is a procedure that has been adopted for many years in the Senate—making what is called a sessional order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit the correctness of the statement made by the hon. gentleman, but we have been acting in contravention of that rule by meeting fifteen or twenty minutes before the usual time. The rule distinctly provides that the Senate shall meet at a certain hour every day. This proposal would change that rule and why should we not take the regular and legal method of making the change? If practice is to become law and change the rule then we must accept it; otherwise I do not think the reasoning of my hon. friend is in accordance with his better judgment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend state to the Chamber the reasons which led him to propose that this rule should be changed and that we should meet at two thirty instead of three o'clock on Friday?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The only reason is one of comfort and ease for senators who reside in Montreal, Toronto, Kingston, Belleville and other places, and who desire to catch the afternoon trains on Fridays.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not affect Belleville or Toronto.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is a matter of convenience simply, to meet on Friday at half past two, to enable a reasonable amount of business to be transacted, so that the members to whom my hon. friend refers should not be so hurried as they were formally. The House of Commons meets at two o'clock on Wednesday for convenience. We had this rule in operation last year and it was found to work very well. There were no objections to it.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Would it not be more seemly if the leader of the House gave notice that when the Senate adjourns on Thursday it stand adjourned till the following Tuesday. It seems to me a farce that for the sake of the convenience of a few the rule should be changed as proposed. I think that would add to the dignity of the House and the business of the country would not suffer.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the Montreal men would want to leave at half past two on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me that the hon. member from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) is mistaken in his remembrance of last session. My remembrance is that the Speaker when announcing the adjournment on Thursday afternoon announced that the Senate was adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock sharp in the afternoon. It was not half-past two. Then we have to consider that we have not very many days on which the Senate meets. We have only one representative of the government in this Chamber, and that hon. gentleman cannot be here and in council at the same time. He cannot reach here till a few minutes after three o'clock. I do not see why we should be continually altering our practice to convenience half a dozen gentlemen who are anxious to get away on a train that leaves shortly after three. If hon. gentlemen do not wish to remain here and attend to the business, they can put in an appearance at prayer, which they perhaps need somewhat, and then take the train to Montreal. The members from Toronto and other western places are not affected by this motion. If the members of this House received no indemnity for their services, I could readily understand that we should be justified in putting ourselves to as little inconvenience as practicable; but we receive what I consider a very handsome indemnity, and the country expects us to be here and to do our work just the same as the Commons do. It is highly discreditable to this House and calculated to lower the Senate in the estimation of the public that we should be continually altering our rules with respect to adjournment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In corroboration of the statement of the hon. member from Halifax, last session we met sharp at three on Fridays, and that seemed to meet the requirements of the hon. gentlemen from Montreal. They were able to make their departure in time to catch the train.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I rise to a question of order. I want to know whether this motion is in accordance with the rules?

The SPEAKER—This is governed by rules 29 and 30. Rule 29 refers to the making of a standing rule or order. Rule 30 refers to the suspension of any rule or standing order. I consider this motion as creating not a standing order, but a sessional order, and it may be moved on one day's notice. It does not interfere with the changing of our rules; it is rather a suspension of a standing order.

The Senate divided on the motion, which was rejected on the following vote.

CONTENTS.

The Honourable Messieurs

Baird,	Lavergne,
Beith,	McHugh,
Cartwright	McSweeney,
(Sir Richard),	Montplaisir,
Cloran,	Ross (Halifax),
Dessaulles,	Tessier,
De Veber,	Thibaudeau,
Farrell,	Watson,
Godbout,	Young—17.

NON-CONTENTS.

The Honourable Messieurs

Bolduc,	McDonald
Bostock,	(Cape Breton),
Boucherville, de	McKay (Truro),
(C.M.G.),	McLaren,
Bowell	McMillan,
(Sir Mackeniez),	Poirier,
Campbell,	Pope,
Costigan,	Power,
Davis,	Ratz,
Derbyshire,	Riley,
Douglas,	Talbot,
Edwards,	Taylor,
Forget,	Thompson,
Frost,	Wilson (Elgin),
Kerr,	Wood,
LaRivière,	Yeo—30.
Lougheed,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from Ottawa has not voted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I did not vote because I live in Ottawa all the year round and I do not think I should vote on a question of this sort. If I had voted I would have supported the motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand, after the decision of the House to-day, that hereafter the House shall meet at three o'clock sharp instead of a quarter past three?

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman wants an answer to that he should give a day's notice. The rule of the House is that the House shall meet at three.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand from the Chair that the House will hereafter meet at three o'clock sharp?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose whenever it is three o'clock by the Speaker's timepiece.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the Speaker should be in the Chair at three.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The Speaker will come in when he gets ready.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that (Bill A) intituled: 'An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters,' be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and the Inspection of Foods.—Hon. Mr. Wood.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—This order stands in my name merely. I do not wish in making the motion to be understood to agree with the Bill in its present form. It appears to me to be unworkable altogether. I scarcely see how we can by legislation, or by any regulations which the Minister of Agriculture can make under this measure, purify the streams and rivers under the jurisdiction of the Dominion. It would be too serious a task. The rivers are the outlets provided by nature for carrying away the refuse from the country and through the province from which I come the whole population drain their refuse into navigable rivers. It may be discharged into small streams in the first place, but it is in that way carried into the navigable waters. In the country districts the drinking water is usually obtained from springs or wells, and not until the country becomes fairly well settled do we get our drinking water from any other source. In the small town where I live, we get our drinking water from a brook which is supplied by springs. We have as good water as can be had anywhere. The sewage of the town is discharged into the navigable river. I do not know of any other way in which the sewage could be disposed of. It would appear to me, if this legislation were passed, that in a community such as that in which I live, there would be far more danger to the public health from cesspools and other devices of that kind which the people would have to adopt for taking care of the sewage, than there is from the water used under present conditions. We have never had any trouble arising from our drinking water, and I know of no case in the province of New Brunswick where a complaint has been made except some years ago regarding the city of Fredricton discharging its sewage into the St. John river. I do not know if it affected the health of the people below Fredericton or not, but some legislation was adopted by the local legislature which I believe has resulted in the city of Fredericton making some arrangements to purify their sewage.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—No.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I may be mistaken, but I thought that was the result. I do not want to commit myself to the principle of the Bill in making this motion. I fully sympathize with the object which the mover of the Bill has in view in bringing in this measure, and if it is referred to the committee I should be glad if something could be suggested to meet the object which he has in view.

The SPEAKER—I beg leave to call the attention of the House to the nature of the motion which is before the Chair. The question is to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee of Public Health and Inspection of Foods. The second reading has taken place, and the principle of the Bill has been adopted by the House. The reference to the committee was postponed because of the absence of the mover of the Bill, so that he could decide whether it should be referred to a Committee of the Whole House or to the Standing Committee on Public Health. I think that decision should be made now.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—My name being connected with the Bill, I made the observations I did to show that it was done in that qualified way.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the promoter of the Bill is not prepared to make a motion referring the measure either to the Public Health Committee or to the Committee of the Whole House, then I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson) that it should be referred to a Committee of the Whole. If the hon. promoter of the Bill has anything special in view, or expects to present evidence to the committee, I would not oppose his motion. There are many sections in Canada where pollution of a stream does not in the least interfere with public health. It would be a great disaster, a great inconvenience and a matter of great expense to cities like Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec and Rimouski, and all these other towns along the St. Lawrence to have to provide some new system for the disposal of their sewage. At Montreal the river runs from eight to ten miles an hour, and the river down to Lake St. Peter is two miles wide. The sewage dumped into so large a stream would not pollute the water. The further you go from Montreal towards Rimouski and the other points, the less danger there is in allowing sewage to be drained into the river. Although this Bill is in order, and is along the lines of public health, it would interfere with the natural advantages possessed by many cities of the Dominion. At present I am referring to the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman from Westmorland spoke for New Brunswick, and I believe the same thing could be said in regard to many of the streams in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and British Columbia, where the current is anywhere from two to five and ten miles an hour, with high tides. In those localities the sewage would not pollute the water sufficiently to endanger public health.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—How about Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Poor Ottawa. The waters were polluted years ago. The saw dust thrown into the river has done more to injure public health than all the sewage that has been dumped into it. If this Bill is made applicable to every city in the Dominion it will result in great inconvenience and unnecessary expenditure. I admit there are streams into which sewage should not be dumped, and there should be a provision that even in large navigable streams like the St. Lawrence and other rivers in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the sewage should not be dumped within a mile of the intake pipe, on the down grade and not above it. In the Ottawa river the intake pipe is under the level of all the sewage that comes down from the upper country. That is not the case in Montreal, Three Rivers, Sorel, Rimouski or Point Lévis, or any of the towns along the St. Lawrence. The Bill, although good in itself, might injuriously affect a large section of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—After the speeches of the hon. gentlemen from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Wood) and Ottawa (Sir Richard Scott and Hon. Mr. Belcourt) I feel inclined to support the resolution to submit the matter to the Public Health Committee, where expert evidence can be given. The hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) said there was no danger of disease from the use of the water of the St. Lawrence below Montreal. I should like to have some evidence as to the correctness of that statement. The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland said that if some cities did not drain the sewage into the streams it would cause serious trouble in places where there were no other means to dispose of it. I think there is another way to dispose of it and this Bill is a step in the right direction. Before this measure would be brought into force it would be necessary to pass an order in council or issue a proclamation. Before the government would take such action they would consider all the phases of the question, and make the Bill applicable only where it was absolutely necessary. We know what has happened in Ottawa, Prince Albert and other places. The Saskatchewan is a large river, very swift and very few towns on it. We had an epidemic of typhoid there which resulted in a number of deaths, and the typhoid was caused by our own sewage. It is an important matter for the health of the people, and we should deal with it thoroughly, and obtain all the expert evidence possible before the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the objection taken by the hon. members from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson) and Victoria Division (Hon. Mr. Cloran) can easily be met. Refer the Bill to the Committee on Public Health, and they can inquire as to the effect which its provisions will have upon navigable streams and the various cities situated on them. To my mind some of the provisions of the Bill are impracticable, and when the report is made from the Committee on Public Health we can move to refer the matter to a Committee of the Whole, and have a discussion on the merits of the measure. The views of the hon. members from St. Thomas and Victoria can be met in that way, which I think is a sensible course to pursue.

Hon. Mr BELCOURT—The motion to refer the Bill to the Public Health Committee was not made by me. I am entirely in the hands of the House. I naturally wish to have the matter expedited as much as possible, and no doubt the Committee of the Whole would be the most expeditious method. However, if it is the general desire to have it referred to the Public Health Committee, I am quite satisfied. The hon. gentleman from Victoria division, speaks for the province of Quebec. I am not going to enter into discussion of the scientific observations which he has made as to whether typhoid and other germs are destroyed by a current of eight or ten miles an hour; but I think a higher authority in the province of Quebec, than my hon. friend, has spoken on this question. Dr. La Chapelle of the Provincial Board of Health has stated that he approves of the Bill and undertakes to do all in his power to carry out its provisions if it becomes law. The provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan and others are all in favour of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I have no inclination or desire to obstruct the reference of the Bill to the Public Health Committee, if it is the wish of the Senate to do so. We could better obtain expert evidence there than in the House; but we must remember that as far as typhoid fever is concerned the committee might bring in a report and not be in a position to say definitely whether typhoid fever originates from the use of river water, or spring water, where decayed animal or vegetable matter might exist. We are all aware that typhoid fever exists in the newer sections of the country, where there is no contamination of the rivers or streams any more than what may naturally exist. In any district where new earth is thrown up, and wells are dug, there will be contamination of the water and typhoid, perhaps more than arises from the pollution of a river. I withdraw my objection to the reference of this Bill to the Public Health Committee, and will do all in my power to assist in obtaining information

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I ask that the motion be amended so as to read as follows:

That this Bill be referred to the special Committee on Public Health, and that their report be submitted to a committee of the Whole House afterwards.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The usual practice is to take one stage at a time. If the Bill is sent to the Public Health Committee and reported back to the House it will be for the Senate to decide what the next step will be.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If the report from the Public Health Committee is satisfactory, it would not be necessary to refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—If any hon. friend desires to be in a position to discuss this matter intelligently, let him obtain the report of the Public Health Committee issued three years ago. All the leading experts of Canada were called before the committee, and their evidence was taken, printed and published. I should like hon. members to read that evidence, and discuss the matter in the light of the present day, and not according to conditions existing forty or fifty years ago—not from the point of view whether a few dollars can be saved in this way or that, but as to whether lives can be saved. It is not a question of money, but one of health.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned till Tuesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

REMARKS OF MR. CAHAN.

INQUIRY.

The order of the day being called:

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN:

That he will call attention to the following report from the Montreal 'Gazette,' of remarks made by Mr. C. H. Cahan, a prominent supporter of the government, at a meeting of the Canadian Club on Monday, the 27th of November, 1911, and shall ask if these sentiments expressed by Mr. Cahan are concurred in by the government:—

MUST PROGRESS OR SEPARATE.

'If that were to be the last word to be said with regard to the development of constitutional government in this empire with regard to giving to these colonies capable of intelligent self-government the right of full liberty and representation in Imperial affairs,' declared Mr. Cahan with strong emphasis, 'then I for one would be willing to devote my life and such powers as I possess, although I love the empire and am an Imperialist by blood and education, I would give the rest of my life to carrying this country out of the empire.' (Applause.)

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Is the hon. leader of the government ready to give me an answer to question No. 1?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was under the impression that I gave my hon. friend an answer the other day. My answer today will be a similar one, and it will be found in the Debates.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I submit that I did not receive an answer the other day. The leader of the House simply said that the government were not responsible for what Mr. C. H. Cahan, K. C., said any more than they would be for what I said. That was not an answer to the question I asked. I inquired whether or not the government concurred in the sentiments which were expressed by Mr. Cahan before the Canadian Club, in the presence of some five or six hundred people, a great number of them being supporters of the present government. Mr. Cahan was one of their most prominent supporters, and the first English disciple of Monsieur Henri Bourassa the master of the present government, and I asked the hon. leader of the Senate whether the government concurred in what their own supporters said in regard to carrying this country out of the empire; and, if so, where are Cahan and Henri Bourassa going to carry it? I have had no answer to that question so far.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no desire to occupy the time of the House by answering questions of this character. If my hon. friend were familiar with parliamentary practice he would not have placed this notice of motion on the Order Paper. On the face of it, it is clearly irregular. The government is in no sense responsible for what individuals outside of the government may say on any question.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—We will let it stand.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, we will not let it stand. I propose that it shall be struck out of the Order Paper.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVID inquired:

Has the question of the schools of Manitoba been considered in the formation of the government, and has there been any understanding in respect thereof?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In 1897 the late Prime Minister informed parliament that this question had been satisfactorily settled between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba.

THE LEGISLATION OF PARLIAMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POPE moved:

That in the opinion of the Senate the initiation of private and public legislation ought to be more equally divided between the two Houses of parliament, with a view of curtailing the length of the sessions, but more particularly to prevent in future the deprecating custom known in parliamentary parlance as 'the railroading' of important measures at the end of a session;

Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the House of Commons with the request that they join with the Senate by means of a joint committee of both Houses to devise measures by which such a result could be obtained.

He said: The motion standing in my name is sufficiently clear and well defined to render it unnecessary that I should speak on it at any great length. I also understand that the subject is not new in the Senate. The propositions contained in this motion have been moved in this House on former occasions, and while the result may not have been all that was desired, there is no reason why we should not urge a new government and a new parliament to pay some attention to our views in the Senate in order that the business of parliament may be more efficiently and expeditiously done. I am sure the older members of the Senate will realize better than I do that as the session comes towards an end, measures are not only railroaded through the House of Commons, but are carelessly dealt with, and sent up here in a condition that is not in the interest of legislation, resulting in a great deal of litigation, but they are submitted to the Senate of Canada in the last hours of the session when there is no opportunity to deal with them as they ought to be dealt with. The result is imperfect legislation which leads to litigation throughout the length and breadth of Canada. The Senate is increasing in numbers and becoming a more important body. The legislation of Canada is also increasing in bulk as the country grows, and the congestion that has taken place in the House of Commons of late years must be intensified in the future. If the measures sent to us from that House in the past have not been in the form and condition they ought to have been, we have very little hope, if some change is not made in the mode of dealing with our legislation, that the same difficulty, only intensified, will not take place in the future, causing the public great loss. Viewing the matter as I do, I have placed on the Order Paper a resolution calling for the formation of a joint committee of the two Houses of Parliament, to see if we cannot devise some scheme by which private and semi-public legislation will be given to this branch of parliament at an earlier date, that we may be able to do more effective service to the country and produce better legislation than we can under existing conditions. I also take the opportunity of impressing upon the people of Canada this fact, that if we are not busy all the time it will not be our fault—it is not because we have not applied to have business sent to us in the early part of the session. I feel sure that if this matter is pressed to a proper conclusion we will have something like the same result that was attained in the United States when they formed a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to deal with legislation. I understand that there is a wide difference in the operation of the legislative bodies of the two countries; still we may be able to gain, by a closer study of this question, information from that source and a committee of the two Houses ought to be able to solve the problem of giving the Senate legislation at an earlier stage of the session, to the great advantage of Canada and the convenience of the people seeking legislation. If promoters of Bills discover that measures brought to this House early in the session are better looked into and better opportunities are afforded to put them in proper shape, those who seek legislation will follow the way of least resistance and come first to this Chamber. If we can get this committee I feel that some good may be done, and the usefulness of the Senate may be increased to the great benefit of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Having last year proposed a motion on the same lines as this, I naturally concur in the resolution moved by the hon. member for Bedford, and I hope it will pass and that the proposition will be considered in the House of Commons. The only reason why the resolution that I moved last year was not taken into consideration by the House of Commons was that it came too late in the session and I was told at the time by prominent members of the other chamber that they would have been happy to take it into consideration if it had come in time. This session, the same reason cannot be assigned, because it will come before the Commons when they are in a position to consider it, so I am happy to know that the hon. member has moved the resolution. I think it is the most practical means of remedying a grievance we have been complaining of the last ten years.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I call the attention of my hon. friend opposite to the fact that this motion is not new. It has been moved, to my certain knowledge, at least half a dozen times before, and I am sorry to say that the House of Commons has not responded in any very marked degree in the matter.

Looking at the matter practically I think this might be done: My hon. friend, the leader of the House, might take it into his consideration, and if possible ascertain during the recess which will shortly come, whether the government would be disposed to co-operate. I have been of the opinion for some time that it would greatly improve the character of private Bills in particular, if all such measures were required to be initiated in this Chamber, just as divorce Bills are. It is a course that I recommended more than once from my place here, and more than once in council. I may mention that without breaking any of the restrictions of office. However, I did not succeed in carrying my point. My hon. friend is coming in as a new hand and can take the matter up with the new ministry and House of Commons. Perhaps he may be more successful than I was. If it could be accomplished I think a great step would be taken in the right direction. The other point the hon. gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) alluded to rests with the Senate itself to a large extent. If we make up our mind that important measures shall not be railroaded through this House, the Senate can simply suspend them, and if that is done once or twice; I will take it upon myself to assure this body that measures will be laid before them in proper time; but, until an example or two of that kind is made, I doubt very much whether any reform will take place on the part of either the government of to-day or the House of Commons. We will consider that matter when these measures come up. I have already notified my hon. friend opposite, that under the new ministration we will expect measures to be laid before this House in due time, and I have no doubt that as far as he is personally concerned he will do his best to accomplish that. If they are not laid before us in due time it is no fault of mine, and will be no fault of ours if the Senate should decline to consider them without due notice. I would press the other matter on him—that there is no reason why private Bills should not be initiated in this House. I am not quite certain whether that can be done by a mere resolution of the House of Commons. Even if it were necessary to pass an Act for that purpose, it would not be a difficult matter. I would ask the hon. leader of the House if it is under an Act of parliament that the divorce Bills are originated in the Senate, or whether it is simply a matter of practice?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a matter of practice and a rule of the House.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There are many good reasons why private Bill legislation should be initiated here, and from my own experience in the House of Commons I am sure it would be better attended to than it very often is in that body. Perhaps my hon. friend would take this matter up with his colleagues during recess, and when we reassemble he will be able to inform us whether the government will concur in carrying out that which I think would be a very desirable reform in the practice of parliament.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Personally I am much in sympathy with the motion of my hon. friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) and I am satisfied that it meets with the approbation of every hon. gentleman in this Chamber. The attention of the Senate on former occasions has been directed to this very important point, as my right hon. friend has said, and I recall that a session ago my hon. friend from Mille Illes (Hon. Mr. David) directed the attention of this Chamber to the desirability of more legislation originating in this House than heretofore. I cannot say that I am any too hopeful about bringing about so desirable a change. If my right hon. friend has exhausted his efforts—and I can congratulate him upon their always having been of an influential character—there is not very much hope of my being able to do very much better than my right hon. friend has done.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Oh yes, we will help you from this side.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can assure hon. gentlemen that I shall urge upon the government in every possible way the importance of impressing upon the House of Commons, not only the desirability, but the necessity of introducing more public Bills legislation in this Chamber, and, if possible, initiating more private Bills here. The difficulty of doing so lies in this fact:

Every member of the House of Commons who may be charged with the introduction of private measures in that body feels a sense of responsibility attached to a duty of that kind, and he is very naturally desirous of discharging that duty himself rather than delegating it in the first instance to another. However, there should be no difficulty amongst men of common sense impressed with the desire of passing efficient legislation. There should be no reason why representatives from the House of Commons and from the Senate should not come together and discuss conjointly the necessity of carrying a measure of this kind into effect. My hon. friend who made this motion, being comparatively fresh from the Commons, may have some influence with the members of that House in consenting to work with a committee of this House in carrying into effect the proposal which has been made. I can assure the House that I shall be only too glad to do anything I possibly can to promote the end in view.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—While the hon. gentleman is looking after this matter, I suggest that he should see also that we have a fair representation of the ministry in this Chamber. Every one feels the necessity of having two cabinet ministers here, charged with the affairs of state, so that the proper men would be here to introduce the legislation, and see that it is properly guided through this Chamber. If I were the hon. leader of the Senate I would not be satisfied until I was a full fledged minister myself, and have a colleague beside me to help carry on the affairs of the state. I think it is due to the dignity of this branch of parliament that we should have such representation here.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I heartily agree in the remarks just passed by the hon. senator. I had an opportunity to express my opinion on this subject in this Chamber some time ago. I feel that while the Liberals were enemies of the Senate and expressed themselves as such in the past, that the Conservatives, by the one act of ignoring the Senate, have done more harm to this House than all the statements the Liberals ever made. The hon. leader of the Senate is more than able to fill any department the Prime Minister could allot to him.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not wish to embarrass the hon. leader, but I desire to ask him why the government has not given the province of Quebec the representation to which it is entitled, and why it has ignored the rights of the English Protestant minority in that province? Since the conquest, the province of Quebec has always had an active and responsible minister of the government of the day in the Senate. To-day it has none. It has a minister without portfolio, and without any influence and without any action in the government. This is a serious matter. The people of Quebec are not at all satisfied with this condition of things, and if necessary I shall give notice of this question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sure the Protestant minority in Quebec will appreciate very much the solicitude of my hon. friend for their interests; but if the hon. gentleman will put a nōtice of that kind on the Order Paper we will give him an answer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite concur in the desirability that something should be done in the direction indicated by the resolution of the hon. gentleman from the Bedford division (Hon. Mr. Pope). At the same time it must be remembered, as stated by the right hon. leader of the opposition, that this matter has come up on various occasions before this House, and the House has attempted to deal effectively with it; but I regret to say that we have not succeeded. I remember, away back in 1880, I think, the Hon. Sir Alexander Campbell, who was at that time leader of the House and a member of the government, made a vigorous effort to remedu the evil which we all acknowledge. I rise not for the purpose of enlarging on the objectionable condition of things, but briefly to indicate what the difficulties are. One of the difficulties is that indicated by the hon. leader of the government. As a rule, gentlemen who have private Bills to present prefer to go to their own representatives in the lower House. Occasionally a private Bill is introduced here, but as a rule the ordinary citizen, if he has a private Bill to present, likes to place it in the hands of his representative in the Commons, and as the hon. gentleman has said, the representative in the Commons prefers he should present the measure himself, rather than have it presented by some senator who has no special claim on him. That is the difficulty with respect to private Bills. As to public Bills, the difficulty is one that I do not think we can very well overcome. I should say that four-fifths of the public Bills presented to parliament are government Bills. Each minister of the government holding a portfolio, if a measure coming within the sphere of his department is to be introduced, prefers to introduce it himself, and it is perfectly natural that he should. He understands the measure and knows, or thinks he knows, the reasons why he considers it is necessary, and you can hardly expect him to hand that measure over to a gentleman at this end of the building. My hon. friend, the leader of the government, is quite capable of handling almost any measure on short notice; still I think he would not care to assume the responsibility of taking up all the departmental Bills, or half the departmental Bills and introducing them here. While no doubt towards the close of the session there is more or less of a rush of public Bills, the private Bill legislation has not suffered very much in the past. This House has always, I think, given a reasonable amount of care and attention to the private Bill legislation which has come before it, and it does not matter whether a private Bill comes toward the close of the session or earlier. As to the public Bills, it is perfectly true that there is not as much attention given to them when they come down at the end of the session as there should be. But the government are responsible for that. The right hon. leader of the opposition has suggested the course to be adopted to provide that those public measures shall receive due attention.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—There is another matter I should like to call the attention of the House to, and that is the procedure in reference to Bills passed by the Senate. I particularly refer to the fact that a public Bill may pass the Senate unanimously and be sent to the House of Commons late in the session, and it is scarcely ever reached. That was the case with the Water Carriage of Goods Bill, which I had charge of four years ago. It had been subjected to a very close investigation by the Senate after it was introduced, and only reached the House of Commons late in the session, so that it could not be expected it would then receive the consideration of the House of Commons. The next year it was introduced the first day of the session, and passed this House in the shortest possible time, unanimously. It went to the House of Commons and was put on the list of public Bills and Orders, and those public Bills and Orders were never reached. I think public Bills passed by this Chamber should receive the consideration of the House of Commons. Bills passed by the House of Commons come over here, are duly considered and passed or amended as the Senate sees fit; but Bills passed by the Senate do not receive the same treatment in the Commons. It is ten chances to one that the public Bills now before the Senate, even if passed in this Chamber, will never be reached in the House of Commons, because the public Bills and Orders may not be reached. I think the procedure in the Commons should be changed so that Bills passed by the Senate shall receive favourable consideration at their hands. The Water Carriage of Goods Bill passed the Senate three times, unanimously twice, but it was never reached in the House of Commons. On the fourth occasion, at the urgent request of myself and others, the minister took it up, otherwise it would never have been reached.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—While I am in accord with the object the hon. gentleman from Bedford has in view in proposing this motion, I do not entertain very much hope that it is going to have any practical results. As has been intimated in discussion, the matter was the subject of a motion on several occasions, for many years past. We have heard from the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) that his motion, which was unanimously adopted last year, was not considered in the Commons because it came too late. My hon. friend may have that consolation, if he wishes to take it; but I doubt very much, even if the session had lasted a month or many months longer, whether his motion would have received very serious consideration over there any more than the motion we are going to pass to-day is going to receive serious consideration in the Commons. We might make some progress if a committee of this House were to discuss the matter, and go to the House of Commons with some concrete and definite proposal, in the hope that they might accept it; but if we leave it to them to appoint a joint committee with ourselves to discuss this matter at large, I am afraid that the committee is not going to meet in the very near future, and when it does meet the discussions are going to be so wide that nothing practical will be accomplished. With reference to the public Bills, I am afraid the right hon. leader of the opposition has put an impossible proposition to the leader of the government. The right hon. leader of the opposition has confessed his inability to make any progress on the lines which he wants my hon. friend the leader of the government to adopt.

It is quite evident to me that as far as private Bills are concerned, I do not think the members of the Commons will give up their rights to introduce in their own House the Bills for which they are themselves responsible, and I doubt very much if senators were asked to do the same thing if they would agree to it. They would not agree to have all private legislation initiated in the House of Commons any more than the Commons would agree to have all private Bill legislation initiated in the Senate. So long as we have not a larger representation of the cabinet in the Senate we will not have many public Bills introduced here. After all, the solution of the difficulty is the one which has been suggested—have larger representation of the cabinet in the Senate. If my hon. friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) would propose something more definite—that a committee of this House be formed for the purpose of considering the matter—he would make more progress than we can by pressing the motion before the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

A SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 18) an Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1912.

The Bill was read the first time.

The Bill was then passed through its final readings under suspension of the rules.

SALE OF BREAD BILL.

COMMITTEE STAGE POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved that Bill (D) An Act respecting the sale of bread, be referred to a committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I am not opposed to the principle of the Bill, but I understood that it was to be referred to the Private Bills Committee, or to a special committee, and I so informed people in Montreal, and members of the council and of the board of control who are all interested in the measure. A great number of citizens are interested and want to be heard. If I had been here when it was proposed to refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole House I would have objected. It is a very important measure and merits a good deal of attention. Speaking for myself, unless the parties who are interested in the measure pro and con are heard I shall not be in a position to vote on the measure. This question has been discussed in Montreal at different times and by-laws have been passed regulating the sale of bread. During the last session of the local legislature, a Bill was passed, and is now in force throughout the province of Quebec. Under the circumstances, I hope that the hon. gentleman will consent to have the Bill referred to the Private Bills Committee, or if he prefers, to a special committee in order that the parties who are interested may be heard. I was told by a representative of the Attorney General's Department for the province of Quebec that they would like to be heard, as the local legislature has enacted a law on this same question. They want to show that they were acting within their powers in passing such legislation, and that this parliament should not intervene now. I think the same may be said of other provinces. I believe there is legislation on the subject in the province of Ontario, and, consequently, it would be dangerous to proceed too rapidly with this measure to permit parties interested having an opportunity to be heard. I, therefore, move that the order of the day be discharged, and that the Bill be referred to the Private Bills Committee. I hope my hon. friend will not oppose my motion, because there is no necessity to press the measure now. No harm will be done if we delay it for a month or two, and the members of the Senate will then be in a better position to vote intelligently on the measure.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—If my recollection is correct, the hon. member was here at the second reading of the Bill. However, that is a matter of detail. The point I wish to raise is that this Bill is a public measure, and it is the right of the Senate to consider it in a Committee of the Whole House. Everybody knows that in our large cities there are associations of bakers which are in the nature of trusts or combines. They fix the price of bread, and all the dealers are obliged to sell at the same price. Now what would be the effect of sending this Bill to a special committee? These associations, with large amounts of money at their command, would come here and make all sorts of representations. They would engage perhaps the ablest lawyers in the country to defend their interests, while the interests of the general public would be represented by volunteers from this House probably—I hope many of them, but that is all. If we were to be guided by the evidence, the weight of evidence would be given by the bread trust. If that is the way to kill the Bill, why does the hon. gentleman not have the courage to kill it here. The Senate voted unanimously in favour of the principle of the Bill, and all that remains to be done is to see whether or not, when the people of this country buy bread they get proper weight. No honest baker will object to that. There are some bakers who are not opposed to this Bill. Two of the principal bakers in Montreal called at my office on Saturday morning and claimed that they give right weight and are not opposed to the principle of this Bill. We want bread sold by the pound, not by the loaf. Bread is manufactured in fractions of pounds. For instance, a loaf weighing a pound and a quarter is sold for a pound and a half, and a loaf weighing a pound and three-quarters is sold for two pounds.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I do not think this is the time to discuss the details of the question.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is very difficult to determine by sight alone whether a loaf weighs the full two pounds or less.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the motion before the Senate, and I ask for the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER—The question is on a motion to refer the Bill to a special committee.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am speaking against that motion. I have been informed that some bakers stamp their bread with a large two and a small zero after it representing twenty ounces, and the loaf weighs only a pound and a quarter, but this large figure two leads one to believe that he is buying two pounds of bread. A loaf which weighs three and a half pounds would readily be mistaken by one who is not observant for a four pound loaf. What happens? The large hotels and railway companies—

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman should confine himself to giving reason why this Bill should go to a Committee of the Whole House instead of to the Private Bills Committee.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I claim that the special committee is not a proper place to send this Bill; that it should be dealt with in a Committee of the Whole House. Surely hon. gentlemen do not require expert evidence to know whether the people of this country wish to buy bread by the loaf or by the pound? The object of this Bill is to enable them to buy bread by the qound. Surely this Chamber is able to deal with a matter of that kind and say whether it wishes or not that the people should get full weight, and do as the large institutions do—buy so many loaves, get them weighed and pay so much a pound for their bread.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This may appear a small matter, but it is a matter of life. I can speak with a little authority, as my father was in the business for about fifty years. There is a big difference between the bread of to-day and the bread sold in the past. There was a time when the workingman who bought a three pound loaf got the full weight, and sometimes one or two ounces over. To-day the man who is earning a dollar and a half a day and has to feed a number of children, when he buys a one pound loaf gets 13½ or 14 ounces instead of 16. That I know. When my father baked his bread he put in it three pounds of dough, and three or four ounces over, so as to make it at least the full weight when it was baked. That is not what is done to-day. The bakers now put in 16 ounces of dough, and when the loaf is baked it comes out weighing 13½ or 14 ounces, not more.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Then they are liable to be fined for short weight.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A poor man can not afford to bring a baker into court. Under our laws, we have fixed measures for nearly everything that is sold. A bushel of grain must weigh 60 pounds, and a bag of potatoes 90 pounds, and so on throughout the list of commodities for human consumption. Bread is the staple of life; it is practically the main thing the poor man can count on to feed his family, and when he gets bread under weight it is not fair to him. The Senate has no greater obligation than to see after the welfare of the working man. I am perfectly in accord with the promoter of the Bill. There is absolutely no necessity to send it to a special committee. All parliament is asked to do is to say that when a baker sells a pound loaf it shall weigh sixteen ounces. Let parliament be honest in dealing with this matter and make the bakers honest.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It seems to me probably all that is desired by my hon. friend from Mille Iles could be obtained by leaving this matter over until after the House reassembles.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is an important Bill probably. It affects the trade and the public. In some parts of the country there is legislation on this subject such as by-laws and provisions of that kind and unless the question is understood fully both by the trade and the public, there may be a conflict in administering any law such as we might make by an amendment of this character. I would, therefore, suggest, instead of a reference to a special committee, that the hon. gentleman should move that the Bill be not now referred to commiiee, but that the reference be postponed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I trust the hon. mover of this Bill will accept the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I am cordially in favour of the measure. I think it is an important one, but it has not been gone over yet by any critical eyes, except those of the hon. gentleman who has introduced it, and before we undertake to pass a measure of such importance we should have a little more time to consider it. I quite agree with the hon. mover that it is not a Bill which should go to one of the committees on private Bills. I may however call attention to one or two points which I think should be considered. In the first place, the title is 'An Act respecting the Sale of Bread'. The sale of bread, and the sale of smallwares is a subject generally dealt with by the ordinances and by-laws of the cities and towns, and it would seem at first sight that this measure proposes to deal with a matter which comes within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. I am simply speaking of the way it looks. My feeling is that the measure does come within our jurisdiction, but I wish to have it framed so that the ordinary reader will not be troubled by any doubts. The first clause says that this Act may be cited as 'The Bread Sales Act, 1912.' If I may be permitted to say so, I think it would be better to make this Act an amendment to the Inspection of Food Act. Subclause 2 states that small bread may be made for sale. What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Less than twelve ounces—fancy bread—loaves.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That should be a little more definite.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is the wording of the Ontario law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Ontario law is good enough for Ontario; but it may not suit the other provinces. It should be made more definite. My suggestion is that the House should refer this measure to a Committee of the Whole, and that the hon. gentleman should have it taken up when we return after the adjournment. In the meanwhile those members who take an interest in it could consider the proposed amendment.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion, if the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles will withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I will modify my motion in that way.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think this is a matter which should go before one of our committees.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The best committee is the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—No matter how important the subject is there is a good deal of conflict of opinion as to the rights of this parliament to pass such a measure. We know that last year the province of Ontario passed a bread Act which is very rigidly enforced. Inspectors can take the bread out of the delivery wagons and weigh it right there, and if it is found to be short weight, it is immediately taken away and the party is fined. Very heavy fines have been inflicted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Very often, too?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I venture to say that in Toronto, of which I can speak personally, the bread there is fully up to weight.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I am not speaking of Ottawa. A one pound loaf of bread is a pound in weight. It is not fourteen ounces, but sixteen, and that is owing to the system of inspection. The fines have been so severe that it is foolish for bakers to attempt to pass light weight bread. Large interests are affected by this Bill throughout the whole Dominion, not only in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, but in other places. It will do no harm to refer it to a committee, so that if there is any opposition to it we can hear what it is. The hon. mover of the Bill fears that if it is referred to the Private Bills Committee the powerful trusts and combines will come down and buy up the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I never said anything of the sort, or hinted that. I wish that statement to be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—That is the only inference.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No, I never said or hinted anything of the sort; I said they would retain able lawyers to appear here. I never spoke about buying this honourable House, and I call upon the hon. member to retract those words at once. I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I did not say they would buy up this House, but the only inference I could draw from his words was that that would be the effect, with the ablest lawyers of the Dominion coming before the committee.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—A committee of the Senate is the last place that any trusts or combine would come to try to exert an influence. My experience in the Senate is comparatively short, but I find that committees of this House are strictly above anything of the kind; they judge the Bills upon their merits alone. No powerful interest can come here and sway or buy up the Senate. If it is desired to leave the Bill over until the Senate meets again, well and good; but I think it would be wise to refer it either to a special committee or to the Private Bills Committee, where if there is any objection to it we will hear it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Sixteen ounces to the pound—that is the whole question.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I sympathize with the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill in his effort to keep this thing out of the hands of the trust. To my mind the bread supply of the country is in the hands of a trust. The fact that you would make them bake loaves of a certain weight would not affect the pockets of the public very much, because they would advance the price. I cannot see what object there would be in sending the Bill to a select committee. I did not hear the explanation on the second reading, but as far as I can gather it simply compels bakers to give 16 ounces to the pound of bread. I do not see that any expert evidence is going to change that. If a man buys a pound he should have a pound. Clause 2 provides that people who are selling bread must have scales, and if anybody who is buying bread gets the idea that he is not receiving a pound, he demands that the loaf be put on the scales. I do not see what expert testimony we require to explain that.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The scales are to be kept in a convenient place.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—In the delivery wagon.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—When they buy it from a delievery wagon the delivery wagon should have the scales.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Wherever the bread is sold.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I would compel them to stamp on each loaf of bread the weight. If they were selling it as one pound, you would be in a position to fine them if the loaf did not weigh a pound. If a man thinks he is not getting a pound he has a right to ask to have the bread put on the scales and weighed.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The same with tea or anything else.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend is better acquainted with the question, because it affects Montreal more than any other part of the country. I think the Bill is a good one and I see no necessity for expert testimony. I would be opposed to referring this Bill to a select committee. It should be dealt with here.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I will accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Toronto and withdraw my motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER—The Motion is that the Bill be not now referred to a Committee of the Whole, but that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole on the 25th of January next.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES PAYMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Second reading (Bill E) intituled: 'An Act concerning the payment of salaries or wages of Employees of Railway Companies.'

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I move that the order of the day be discharged, and that it be placed on the orders of the day for January 25. Since we discussed this Bill last session, the Trades and Labour Council of the whole country held a meeting at Calgary and unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the measure, and at the same time repudiated the statement made by a gentleman named Hall who came before the committee and said he was representing labour organizations who were opposing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—One of the biggest frauds on earth.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think this is a proper argument to address to the House just now. Surely the hon. gentleman does not wish us to take everything that was said at the meeting in Calgary as gospel.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Many Senators have presented petitions praying for the adoption of this legislation, and a circular giving a copy of the resolution adopted by the labour organizations of Canada has been received by every senator.

The Motion was agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (20) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the suspension of the rules relating to the Bill. He said: This Bill should have been passed last session and it is desirable that it should receive the assent of the Governor General at once. The charter will expire before the Senate resumes.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read a second and third time and passed under a suspension of the rules.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (21) An Act respecting the National Transcontinental Railway.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill. He said: This is a Bill complementary of the Bill we have just passed. Its object is to permit the government to extend the time for the construction of the western section of the National Transcontinental railway, which has been provided for in the Bill which we have just passed.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Why does the legislation take this form? All the provisions respecting the construction of this road are brought into concrete form and enacted as legislation, so that it is amending the Act, and this Bill instead of amending that Act by extending the time as is usual where the extension or completion of roads is desired, is leaving it permissive with the government. Why does not the Bill declare that the time is extended?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The necessity for this legislation has unexpectedly arisen and it permits the government to consider the question as to what time should be given to the National Transcontinental railway to complete the various sections referred to. The government of Canada is quite as much interested in it as the Grand Trunk Pacific. It is all part of one system. The bonds have been guaranteed by the government of Canada and it is surely a question that can be left safely with the government.

The Bill was then read a second and third time, and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

THE SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I want to call the attention of my hon. friend opposite to a little matter which he may remember occurred at the close of last session. Some hon. gentlemen who had been appointed senators, under a construction of the law, which I was not able myself to understand, were not merely stated to be entitled to no indemnity for the period during which they had attended, but were informed that they were required to pay certain sums into the consolidated revenue for fines caused by the fact that they had not attended for, I think, a longer number of days than the total indemnity would cover. My hon. friend will recollect the matter?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It was intended that these gentlemen should be relieved, and, I suppose, paid for the days that they did attend. That is a matter which my hon. friend as leader of the Senate should take up and put into shape during the recess. I am quite sure he will have no objection to do it. I do not presume that these gentlemen paid their fines, but I believe that they are charged against them all the same.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My attention was directed to this anomaly within the last few days. The conclusion arrived at was the result of the submission of the Act to the late Minister of Justice, and is as has been mentioned. The Minister of Justice, I understand, quite appreciated the difficulty which would arise, but he took the position that there was the statute and there was no alternative but to come to the conclusion mentioned by my right hon. friend. It will, I think, involve an amendment to the statute, and I notice upon the Order Paper a notice of motion by the Hon. Mr. Domville which may possibly lead to a discussion of the question. I cannot say that the object of his Bill is to amend this particular section; but it is an amendment of that particular Act, and while his Bill may be subject to certain criticisms, it may possibly result in our being able to amend the Act so as to give the necessary redress. I shall take the matter up with very great pleasure, and with a view of our escaping any difficulty of that kind in the future.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think my hon. friend should himself take special charge of that point. The Bill of the hon. member from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) goes a good deal further than perhaps we will be able to go.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not make reference to his Bill with a view of approving of the measure itself, but as it is an amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act, in which Act the difficulty has arisen that my right hon. friend refers to it may permit of our discussing an amendment to overcome the difficulty which has now been pointed out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I respectfully suggest to the hon. leader of the government that the Senate and House of Commons Act needs various other amendments besides the one now proposed, and I hope he will give his attention to the subject.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the statute makes it possible to do what has been done, I pity the legislators. Suppose a session lasted 300 days; that would mean the Auditor General would have a right to charge up against a member of either House $15 a day, $4,500, and the indemnity is only $2,500. That would bring a member in debt $2,000. On the face of it, that is absurd, and I do not see why the hon. leader of the government should have any objection whatever, but on the contrary he should hasten to remedy the evil.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He is going to do it.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

The Senate was adjourned during pleasure.

His Honour Mr. Chief Justice Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Deputy Governor General, being seated at the foot of the Throne, the following Bills were assented to:

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company; and

An Act respecting the National Transcontinental Railway.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1912.

The Senate resumed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (F) an Act to incorporate Revillon Frères Trading Company, Limited.—Sir Richard Scott.

DELAY IN PRINTING.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the leader of the House use his influence with the Printing Bureau during the adjournment to accelerate its work done for this House? The speeches which were delivered on the address a fortnight ago have not yet been distributed in a revised form, and further—and this is a matter which does not affect this House alone—the statutes passed last session have not been distributed yet. It is a most unbusinesslike and unsatisfactory condition of things.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall direct the attention of the minister to that.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, the 24th January, at 3 p. m.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 24, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

TYPHOID FEVER BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT introduced Bill (G) An Act to check the spreading of Typhoid Fever.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT moved the second reading of the Bill for Tuesday next. He said: Although it is quite unusual to give an explanation of a measure on the first reading, we have lots of time now, and I have been asked to do so by an hon. gentleman. If I read the preamble I think it will assist hon. members to understand the Bill. It is as follows:

Whereas, it is generally recognized that the typhoid bacilli obtains an entrance into the human organism through the medium of drinking water, but sometimes by inhalation, or they may be swallowed in polluted food, multiplying by millions in the alimentary canal. If there is present any fermenting or undigested food, it therefore becomes essential for the preservation of the public health that those dangerous germs should be promptly destroyed by disinfection when expelled from the human being, thus annually saving many lives, but only if disinfection is rigidly enforced.

The object is to provide that the excreta, both solids and fluids, from a typhoid fever patient shall be promptly disinfected with carbolic acid, or some other disinfectant which will effectually destroy the germs. It is recognized, I believe, not only by the public generally, but by medical men, scientists and bacteriologists, that typhoid fever is largely spread through drinking water. The water becomes infested with the germs in the excreta from typhoid patients being thrown into the water. Abundance of evidence of that can be obtained, but that will come in more properly on the second reading. I am merely mentioning the general purpose of the measure. This Bill makes it a criminal offence for a doctor or other attendant on a typhoid fever patient who neglects to give information at once to the health officer, or the head of the municipality, that the patient has typhoid fever. It then becomes the duty of the municipality to see that the excreta is disinfected and disposed of in the particular way stated in the Bill, and not thrown into a cess pool or into a closet, from which it finds its way into the water. There is no doubt that 90 per cent of typhoid cases have been caused by the excreta of typhoid patients being disposed of in such a way that the germs find their way into the drinking water. It is extraordinary that up to the present time no notice has been taken of this fact, and no measure has been adopted to prevent the dissemination of this disease.

As an illustration I may mention an interesting case to which my attention was directed some years ago, and which was quoted recently by a professor of McGill in a lecture on the necessity of pure water. In the town of Plymouth, Pennsylvania, they get their drinking water from a stream that passes the place. One spring, typhoid broke out in the town, and over a thousand people were almost at once attacked by the disease. It caused great excitement, and after some investigation it was discovered that a man who had taken typhoid in Philadelphia had gone into the country and was taken ill in a house on the bank of this same river from which the people of Plymouth took their drinking water. The excreta of the typhoid patient were thrown on the bank, and the spring rains carried the typhoid germs into the river, and thus the disease was disseminated throughout a thousand homes in Plymouth. The cause was unmistakeable, because it was clearly shown that there was no typhoid on the river bank above this particular point. But I need not go so far away to find an illustration. Hon. gentlemen will remember that last March typhoid broke out in the city of Ottawa and between one and two thousand people were affected by it. The cause of the outbreak was traced to the opening of a valve in the intake pipe of the waterworks which allowed the water from Cave Creek to enter the pipe. There were a number of cases of typhoid on the banks of Cave Creek and there is no doubt the disease was disseminated in that way. If typhoid germs can be destroyed by the simple means I have indicated, surely this legislation must commend itself to this House and to the people of Canada. Those who read the Bill can understand why it has been introduced and also how typhoid is disseminated. Typhoid is an annual visitor in Canada. Looking over the statistics of deaths for the last twenty years I find that typhoid has annually increased in number with the increase of population. Recently there was an outbreak of typhoid at Sarnia, and in Toronto and Montreal they have had outbreaks of the disease repeatedly. Ottawa, no doubt, contributes to the outbreaks in Montreal because of the manner in which this city discharges its sewage into the Ottawa river. It has been proved by bacteriologists that typhoid germs multiply by millions in the intestinal canal. If people would only keep the alimentary canal in a proper condition they would be immune from the disease, but they will not do so, and they must bear the consequences.

The Motion was agreed to.

WATER RIGHTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired of the government:

If their attention has been drawn to the statement made by the Hon. Richard McBride, in referenec to the railway belt, as reported in the 'News-Advertiser,' of the 25th November.

'The question of water rights is a pertinent one at this time demanding immediate action. Mr. Ross and the Attorney General have come to an arrangement with Mr. Borden, which although I am not in a position to make a public announcement upon to-day, will commend itself to all present.'

Is the government in a position to state what the terms of the arrangement made between the Attorney General of the province and the Hon. Mr. Borden are?

If so, what are the terms of the arrangement? If not, when will they be prepared to state the terms of the arrangement?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, is the answer to the first question. The answer to the second is, not at present, and to the third, during the present session, so that my hon. friend during this session will have the advantage of seeing whatever legislation may be brought down, and that will give him all the information he seeks.

MAIL SUBSIDIES TO OCEAN STEAMSHIPS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General; praying that His Royal Highness will please to cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of the contracts between the government of Canada, and the various steamship companies for the carriage of the mails between England, France and Canada, and all the correspondence relating thereto since the first of January, 1909. Also, the agreements, if any, for the carriage of mails via New York. Further any contracts, subsidy agreements, &c., for the conveyance of mail between Canada and Newfoundland, and the correspondence relating thereto since the first of January, 1909.

He said: I received a letter from the department asking me to limit the information I sought. The Deputy Minister of the Department of Trade and Commerce wrote me to say that these documents were very voluminous and contained a lot of matter which might not be absolutely relevant, and if I would be satisfied with less than the motion covered he would have it prepared, that it would save time, and if I wanted more they would give it later on. I agreed most cheerfully and obligingly, seeing that we could get it at once.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Then the Motion should be amended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will indicate to me what he would be satisfied with, I will at once take the necessary steps to have it prepared.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I think the work is already done.

The Motion was agreed to.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 75) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be read the second time on Friday next.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Is this measure intended to relieve our hon. friends who have been billed by one of our officers for a sum of money for being made senators?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object of the measure is to prevent a like difficulty arising in the future.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I presume our friends did not pay, and therefore there will be no question of refunding.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say that the Bill as presented is not retroactive, but the attention of the government having been directed to the difficulty which has arisen for the last four or five years, or more, they consider this an opportune time to have the difficulty remedied.

The Motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 66) An Act respecting the Public Archives.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 2) An Act to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act, 1908.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 10) An Act respecting the British Colonial Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 26) An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw).

Bill (No. 58) An Act respecting the Department of External Affairs.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 65) An Act to correct certain clerical errors in the French version of the Revised Statutes of 1906.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 31) An Act to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1889.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

THE HOUR OF MEETING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. POWER—During the thirty-five years that I have been in the Senate, the House met at a quarter past three. For the last two years, for the convenience of hon. gentlemen who reside comparatively near Ottawa, it has been the practice to meet at three o'clock sharp on Friday. To-day the Senate has been summoned to meet at three sharp, and I do not think any good end can be attained by doing so. If we meet on Fridays at three o'clock we shall suit the convenience of hon. gentlemen who are directly interested in the matter, but the general convenience of the House would be served by our meeting on other days at the hour at which we have met since confederation.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Last year we met at half past two on Fridays.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The House of Commons meets at three o'clock every sitting day, and if there is absolutely nothing for senators to do between three o'clock and three fifteen, I do not see why we could not meet at the same hour as the House of Commons. It is the rule of the House, and why should we not live up to it? If we have been dilatory in the past, we should turn over a new leaf and adhere to our rules. I was the member who called the attention of the Speaker to the rule, and until it is altered I think we should observe it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Speaker does not regard it as three o'clock until a quarter past three. For over forty years that has been the uniform practice, and I contend that it meets the convenience of the great majority of senators better than meeting at three sharp. On Fridays, when members are anxious to get away for the week end, the House might meet at three sharp, or half past two if they like.

The SPEAKER—I am placed in rather an awkward position in this matter. If I conform to the rules I must be here at three o'clock sharp. I have no objection to the rule being changed, but until it is changed I must follow it, if my attention is called to it.

THE LEADER OF THE SENATE.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I take this opportunity of congratulating the hon. gentleman from Calgary on the position he has attained, as leader of this Chamber. I am sure he will conduct the affairs of the House with ability, discretion and courtesy. He has had the very good example for the last few years of the late Minister of Trade and Commerce, who exhibited great ability, tact and patience, and who conducted the proceedings of the House in a manner acceptable to both sides. The right hon. gentleman followed the give and take principle, and did not ram government measures down the throats of hon. members without full opportunity for discussion and amendment when necessary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I thank the hon. member from British Columbia, and I am sure my successor on the other side of the House will, as heretofore, act on the give and take principle, and show all possible tact and discretion.

The Motion was agreed to and the Senate adjourned till three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 25, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE.

The order of the day being called,

That the report of the Joint Librarians of Parliament requesting the appointment of Allan Phillips Starr to the position of Clerk in the Library, be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I find that some mistake has been made in connection with this report. The Minutes do not correctly represent what was said in the report. The report proposes to deal with another officer besides Mr. Starr, and there is a mistake as to the salary. Turning to the Minutes, I find it was represented that the messenger is to get a salary of $1,200 a year. That was not in the report, and that fact renders it the more necessary that the report should go to the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. I, therefore, move that the report of the Joint Librarians of Parliament, respecting not only Mr. Starr, but the other officer as well, be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend say in what way we have fallen into the practice of referring to a select committee a joint report? Let us assume for the moment that the select committee would disagree with the joint committee, or report itself, and that it should come back to the Senate, then what would be the result? As a matter of fact, I understand the practice has been that the joint report should be simply confirmed or approved by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It happens, as I stated just now, that in the present instance the report as set out in our Minutes is not a correct transcript. If there is nothing objectionable in the report, the Committee on Internal Economy will report favourably as a matter of course.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there be an error in the report, should it not come back to the joint committee? How would the Committee on Internal Economy have authority to ratify a mistake of the joint committee on the library?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The joint committee did not make the mistake. The mistake was made in printing the report; but if the hon. gentleman looks at the Act of, I think, 1908, or 1909 perhaps, he will find that in the case of appointments to the library of parliament the two Houses have to concur. This House has never found it convenient to undertake to deal with the matter of patronage without a reference to the committee. The reference to the committee is to enable the House, when the report comes up, to deal with the subject intelligently. I do not think there can be any objection to having all the information that is desirable in connection with a matter of that sort.

The SPEAKER—Before the question is put, I would like to call the attention of the House to the report itself, which is to be found on page 90 of the Minutes, and which reads as follows:

Sir,—We have the honour to request the appointment of Allan Phillips Starr to the position of clerk in the Library of Parliament (to fill a vacancy created by resignation) in subdivision B, of the second division, at a salary of $1,200 per annum; and of Frank Tozer, as a sessional messenger, (to fill a vacancy created by resignation in subdivision B, of the second division, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, his appointment to date from the 19th instant.

As this is the first occasion of making original appointments to the library under the new Act, we wish to point out that action is taken under section forty-five of the Civil Service Act, 1908.

Instead of saying, 'In subdivision B of the second division' it should read: 'At the customary wages of $3 per diem during recess, his appointment to date from the 19th instant.'

The original report was made in those words, and the mistake occurred in the Printing Bureau, repeating the line they had before them, two lines above.

THE LATE SENATOR McKAY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, it is my painful duty to direct the attention of this Chamber to the loss through death, since we had our adjournment, of one of the oldest and most respected members of the Senate. I refer to the late Senator McKay, of Truro, Nova Scotia. 'The grim reaper' has been very busy within the walls of this Chamber during the last six months. This is the fourth removal by death that the Senate has suffered in that time. Immediately previous to the adjournment, Senator McKay was with us, and from his then appearance gave prospects of several years of useful service. He was one of the senior members of this body, there being only five senators enjoying seniority to him. For nearly forty years he was engaged in the political activities of Canada. As far back as 1874, he occupied a seat in the House of Commons, and in 1881 was appointed to this Chamber, thus rendering more than thirty years service of a very valuable character as a member of this body. During that time his services, rendered in a quiet, unostentatious and yet active way, were appreciated by this Chamber. In his earlier days he had attached himself particularly to committee work, and his opinion and services were always regarded as of very high value to his country. His qualities of mind and heart appealed strongly to the members of this Chamber who knew him most intimately, and thus cemented the ties of friendship between him and themselves to such an extent that his death will be to this Chamber and to his friends a serious and a re-regrettable loss. I am sure, therefore, that the sympathy of the Senate will be extended and conveyed to his widow and the members of his family in the very sad bereavement which they have been called upon to suffer.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I entirely agree with the remarks which have fallen from the leader of the Senate in reference to our departed friend Senator McKay. It is very nearly forty years since I had the pleasure of making his acquaintance, both of us at that time being members of the House of Commons. The late Mr. McKay had been nearly thirty years a member of the House, and consequently there are many here present who are better qualified perhaps than I am to speak of the services that he rendered; but I have always understood that Mr. McKay had on all occasions shown himself to be a very attentive and diligent member of this House. As chairman of the Standing Orders Committee he showed himself in every respect worthy of the trust and confidence placed in him. I am sure the members on both sides will cordially agree with the hon. leader of the House in expressing their sympathy to the widow and family, and our own sense of the loss which the Senate has sustained by Senator McKay's comparatively untimely death. I had hoped myself, as we all hoped, that Mr. McKay had many years of usefulness in store for him. Certainly there was nothing in his appearance which indicated when we were parting the probability of his comparatively untimely death. We all agree heartily with our hon. friend in tendering our sympathy to the widow and family of the deceased.

THE ANNUITIES ACT.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—Before the orders of the day are called, I should like to direct attention to a subject discussed yesterday in the other Chamber—I mean the Annuities Act introduced in this House by my right hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) and passed by parliament. That Act has not been received in the other House with anything like favour, and I regret to say that there is an idea that there is no necessity for such an Act in the Dominion of Canada. If we turn to New Zealand, a colony as prosperous as Canada, and whose exports according to population, man for man, are double those of Canada, we find that they have passed an Act which is creditable to themselves, and would be a credit to us if we copied it. I did not approve altogether of our Annuities Act, because it did not go far enough. Mr. Bastedo, in a lecture delivered in Toronto, stated that the Act covers every man, woman and child in Canada. That statement is far from being correct. It includes only those who are capable of paying a certain sum every month or every quarter. If there is any necessity for such legislation in New Zealand, surely there must be necessity for it in Canada, where there are thousands of people who are incapable of paying any amount at all. Those people are left out in the cold; there is nothing provided for them in any shape or form. They could say with Burns:

> 'Death, the poor man's dearest friend,
> The kindest and the best,
> Happy the hour my aged limbs
> Are laid with thee at rest.'

I hope there is sufficient generosity of feeling in the other House to see that the Act will not be thrown out altogether, but that it will be amended to conform to the New Zealand Act, which provides that a man of sixty-five years of age that has been twenty-five years in the colony, and against whom no charge of crime or offence was ever brought, shall be entitled to a pension. New Zealand has been in advance in every kind of sensible legislation, perhaps more so than Canada, and I hope that some of the representatives in the other House will see that our Annuities Act is amended to make it the same as that of New Zealand.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am not going to enter into a discussion with my hon. friend behind me as to the merits or demerits of the Annuities Act, or the New Zealand Act, but I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Senate and of the other House to a very serious error which was made in the discussion there last Wednesday. I observe that the minister who succeeded me, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, made a most misleading statement, not intentional I presume, but a most misleading statement as to the number of persons who had availed themselves of that Act, and I notice that several members who discussed it afterwards followed his lead. He said, that 314 annuities had been taken, whereas the actual fact is there were nearly 3,000—I believe the exact number is 2,800, or thereabouts—who had entered into contract with the government for purchasing annuities. The underlying question which the hon. gentleman has alluded to is one of very great importance. I will merely say that it would be, in my opinion, in the present condition of this country, a disgrace to Canada if we introduced a measure for granting old age pensions. It is not for us to provide for a submerged tenth, but to see that there is no submerged tenth in Canada.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 19) An Act to amend the Inquiries Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SALE OF BREAD BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (D) An Act respecting the sale of Bread. He said: Since the Bill was before the Senate, and consequently before the public, I have heard nothing but praises in the press and elsewhere of the measure. Before you, Mr. Speaker, leave the chair, it is desirable that we should know what the policy of the government will be on this measure, and for that purpose, and in order to enlighten the government, I may be allowed to read a few words from the 'Montreal Herald.' The following is from an article in the issue of that paper of December 28, 1911, under the heading 'The Weight of Bread':

Senator Casgrain succeeded a few days ago in heading off a movement to refer his Weight of Bread Bill to the Private Bills Committee, and getting January 25 named as the date for its hearing in Committee of the Whole—a distinct tactical gain, as it prevents the measure from being quietly smothered while nobody is looking. The condition of things in regard to the weight of bread in this country is far from satisfactory and the senator is entitled to considerable gratitude for his persistence in bringing it before the attention of the lawmakers. There is the usual confusion between the powers of the provinces and those of the Dominion, and the clause of the British North America Act, which gives the Federal parliament power to deal with 'weights and measures' will not be universally regarded as covering such a question as the enforcement of a particular size in a particular commodity. There is legislation in the province of Ontario on this subject, which appears in some localities at least to be working well; and there is legislation in Quebec, which has not been dazzlingly successful in providing full-weight in the city of Montreal.

In itself, apart from the question of the place in which it is proposed to enact it, Mr. Casgrain's measure is simplicity and common-sense itself. It establishes a difference between the permissible maximum size of 'fancy bread' and the minimum size of standard bread, which would prevent any possible confusion between the two; and it enacts a standard size of six pounds for the great loaf, which may be divided into halves and quarters, but not otherwise. It requires that accurate scales shall be kept wherever the bread is sold and that the seller shall weigh the bread upon demand; the penalty for infringement is limited to twenty-five dollars. It would appear as if some provision should be made for the sale —of course at bargain prices, and with due warning to the customer—of loaves which have accidentally failed to come up to the standard, for the loss of weight in baking is somewhat variable. The principle of the Bill, however, is one against which no serious objection can be taken. Its effect must be to assist the honest baker and embarrass the man who seeks to make his profit by cutting the size of his loaves, so that the better element of the trade itself should be in its favour.

I may say further, without discussing the Bill, in order that the representative of the government in this House may be aware of the fact, that in the city of London, whenever one buys a loaf of bread, it is placed on the scales, and if it falls short of the weight, a piece of bread is cut from another loaf and added to it, and people in the trade for years have never seen anybody neglect to take the extra piece thrown in to make up the full weight. I should think this measure would appeal to this Chamber. When the question was discussed before, a great many hon. members spoke in favour of it, and I have no objection, if the government requires more time to look into such a weighty measure as this, that it should be delayed for a few days, but I desire that the Bill may be put through and sent to the other House as soon as possible. There has been in our province, and I understand in the other provinces also, a great demand that people should be able to buy bread by the pound and not by the loaf. The 'Montreal Witness' published a sort of appeal from the bakers, stating that the people did not care what they paid for bread, it was the quality they were looking for, and the price or the weight of it was of no consequence if the quality was there. Under the pretense of making bread of a special quality, the weight is not put in such loaves, and as hon. gentlemen know, tickets are generally sold by the dozen. Each ticket represents a four pound loaf, or a two pound loaf, and sometimes the baker will give a loaf weighing a pound and three-quarters, or possibly one pound and a quarter for a ticket calling for a two pound loaf. The bread is not weighed. I have taken special pains to inquire into the matter and I have learned that very few of the heads of families know the weight of bread they are giving their tickets for. Many people have told me, 'I have been giving a ticket for a two pound loaf, and receiving a loaf weighing a pound and a quarter, or perhaps a pound and a half, and when I remonstrated with the baker he said 'It is true that it only weighs a pound and a quarter, but it is made of superior flour and is better bread.' I am informed that the bread is all made from the same quality of flour, only of a different shape, perhaps a fancy form. Before pressing my motion I should like to hear what the policy of the government is.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot say if the government has any policy on this question; but reference of a Bill of this nature should be made in some way to the department that in all probability would be charged with its enforcement, and I shall take the opportunity of referring it to that department, namely Inland Revenue. I presume my hon. friend would expect this measure to be enforced under the Sale and Inspection Act. The difficulty which I see in the way of this Bill, in looking over it casually, is that no machinery is provided for its enforcement. If my hon. friend wants it to be effective, it seems to me he should give a little more consideration towards providing machinery for the proper administration of the Act. One difficulty that faces us in connection with the Bill as it appears before us, is that nearly all the provinces have passed almost similar legislation. It is copied, very nearly word for word, from the Ontario Act, and I understand there is an Act in force in Quebec which has practically the same object as this Bill. I need not point out that it is very undesirable that legislation should be duplicated in the provincial and federal parliaments. If legislation of this kind is placed upon our statute-book, and similar legislation is placed upon the statute-books of the provinces, then it becomes nobody's business to enforce the law. I shall take the earliest opportunity of speaking to the minister in charge of this particular department in regard to the Bill, but would suggest in the meantime that some provision should be inserted in the Bill looking to its enforcement if it becomes law.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—When this Bill was before the Senate on a previous occasion, I moved that it be referred to the Private Bills Committee, but I did not insist, because the hon. member from De Lanaudière wanted the Bill to go before the Committee of the Whole, and I reserved my right to make a motion when the question came up, to refer the Bill to the Private Bills Committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is it a public Bill?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—We should send this Bill to the Private Bills Committee, as we have done with such measures before, because it is a Bill which requires a good deal of consideration, especially as legislation of a similar character has been passed by the different provinces.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—What is the statute in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—There are many statutes. The matter has been considered by the legislatures of both provinces long ago. There is a statute in Ontario authorizing the municipality to pass by-laws concerning the sale and weight of bread, enacted about twenty years ago, and I may say that the first year after confederation some provision was inserted in the statutes of the province of Quebec, and the municipalities were authorized to pass by-laws in regard to this matter. One of the reasons why I ask that the Bill be referred to the Private Bills Committee is to enable the different governments which have passed legislation on this subject to be heard, if they desire, and I have reason to think that the government of Quebec intend to be heard. If they do not appear before a committee of this Chamber they will go before the House of Commons. I think we owe it to the dignity and the good reputation of the Senate to do what the House of Commons will do, and to give this Bill all the consideration it deserves. A great many parties in the province of Quebec are interested in this measure. They desire to be heard and we should give them an opportunity of placing their views before us. There are two principal objections which can be urged against this measure. In the first place, I have great doubt—and I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax expressed a similar view—as to the constitutionality of this Bill. It is very true that section 91 of the British North America Act includes weights and measures in the list of the articles which come under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament, but what does that mean? I am inclined to think that the clause does not apply to a matter of this kind, but rather applies to the instruments which are used to weigh and measure the different articles. It refers probably to the weight of wheat and grain in general, and perhaps to the weight of a bag of potatoes or of other produce sold for export. Although I am not ready to admit that the Bills which we have passed on different occasions were strictly constitutional, I admit that articles of trade and commerce exported to other countries, should be measured in the same way, by the same instruments, by the same weight and measure, because it is in the interest of trade and commerce and of the whole country. But does that apply to bread or candy or foodstuffs usually consumed in the locality in which they are produced? I think it would be going too far to say that it does. Bread is a matter of private local and provincial character. Clause 92 of the British North America Act provides that all matters of a local and provincial character are within the jurisdiction of the provinces. If hon. gentlemen do not recognize the strength of my argument on the question of constitutionality, I think they will have no doubt on the point I now make, that even if it is constitutional, it is inexpedient and improper to pass such legislation, because similar legislation has been enacted by other provinces, especially Ontario and Quebec, and the Governor in Council has never seen fit to disallow those Acts; therefore it is fair to presume that the provinces have jurisdiction in these matters. These laws passed in Ontario and Quebec have been in existence for twenty years. What reason has been given why the federal parliament should intervene in such matters? If the laws enacted by the legislatures are not perfect, it is easy to have them rectified, and it is only necessary to apply to those provinces to have the Acts amended. Is it proper for the Dominion to enact legislation which will conflict with Acts passed by the local legislature? I am inclined to think that the law of Quebec is better than this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—If we pass this enactment here it will be all right.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—There was a law passed in Quebec, amended last year by chapter 40 of the Statutes of Quebec, as follows:

'Notwithstanding any law to the contrary, all bread sold, or made for sale within the limits of the province, shall be made of good and wholesome flour, and baked in loaves of one, two, three, four, five or six pounds or more, but without any fraction of a pound, &c.'

The section also provides that the loaves shall bear a label of three-quarters of an inch square with the baker's name on them. In virtue of this provision, the city of Montreal passed a by-law in conformity with it. What more could we expect to give as a guarantee to the consumers of bread? The Ontario statute gives to the province the same right as has been given to the municipality of Quebec.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman intend to move an amendment?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Yes, I desire to move that the Bill be referred to the Private Bills Committee.

The SPEAKER—Then I will put the motion so as to allow the hon. member to speak to his amendment. It is moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—In view of the doubt which must exist in the minds of hon. members in this House as to the constitutionality of this Bill, in view of the legislation which has been passed by the different provinces of Canada, or which they may pass, in view of the fact that this Bill would come in conflict with local legislation and would cause much annoyance and conflict between the federal and local authorities, I had intended to move that the House do not form itself into a Committee of the Whole to-day, but that it resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole this day six months. However, I think I shall content myself with moving that this order of the day be discharged and that the measure be referred to the Private Bills Committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Mille Isles has told us that the subject matter of the Bill comes within the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec, and that hon. gentleman has been from the beginning a sincere and earnest advocate of the rights of provincial legislatures. That is a point on which I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. There may be some question as to whether parliament has the right to legislate on this subject, but my own impression is that we have a right to deal with it, and I think it is our duty to do so, because the evidence submitted to the House by the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière goes to show that gross wrong and injustice are now perpetrated on the people of Montreal, and the hon. gentleman speaks with knowledge.

I have no doubt that the same condition of things exists in other provinces, and as we are charged with the good government of the whole country it is our duty to see that this wrong and this injustice are, if possible, remedied. It is true there have been enactments by the local legislatures, but it is clear from the statements made, and which are sustained by the evidence submitted by the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, that these enactments have not been operative, and that notwithstanding the enactments of the local legislatures, the abuse and injustice continue. While I am a great believer in sticking by the constitution, the mere fact that there is some doubt as to the constitutionality of a measure is not a sufficient reason why we should not proceed with it, if on further inquiry we find that the Act is within the power of parliament. I, therefore, hope that the House will not reject this Bill. The hon. gentleman from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. David) has moved that the Bill be referred to the Private Bills Committee. If that motion had been made at an earlier stage I should not have been disposed to quarrel with it, but, as a matter of fact, after the second reading of this Bill the question was discussed as to whether it should be referred to a select committee, or to a Committee of the Whole, and the House at that time solemnly decided that the Bill should be referred to a Committee of the Whole. We cannot in the face of that order with any proper regard to the procedure of this House, undertake to reverse our decision, and send it to the Committee on Private Bills, which I do not think is the proper committee in any case. I should make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman who is in charge of this Bill: He has got his Bill now in a pretty forward position, and inasmuch as the hon. leader of the House has expressed a desire to consult his colleagues, and particularly that one of his colleagues whose department would be charged with the administration of the Act, as to what changes or amendments might be necessary, and as it should be our desire to make the measure as effective and perfect as possible, the mover of the Bill should allow it to stand at its present stage until the hon. leader of the House is in a position to report to us the opinion of his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—I think the majority of this House will agree with the hon. senator from Mille Isles that this Bill should be referred either to the Private Bills Committee, or a select committee. The promoter of the Bill is in error in stating that the people of Montreal unanimously favour this measure. I would judge to the contrary from the different telephone messages and letters I have received from Montreal opposing the Bill. Since this discussion arose, while the hon. member from Mille Isles was speaking, I received a telegram from the city of Montreal that would show that the people most interested, the bakers in Montreal, are unanimously opposed to the measure. The telegram is as follows:

Montreal, January 25th, 1912.

Senator Owens,
Parliament Building, Ottawa.

Montreal bakers opposing Bill and will forward petition soon as possible.

JAS. M. AIRD.
JAS. STRACHAN.
F. COURSOLLE.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The bakers—certainly.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The bakers probably want to support the fraud.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The bakers deserve to be protected as well as others.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Not in fraud.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—We are not admitting there is fraud.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Then the Bill will not be operative.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The bakers of Montreal have been put to very great expense by being obliged to change their machinery and pans on account of legislation that was passed by the Quebec legislature last year. Now, if this Bill should become law it would affect the bakers of Montreal, not only with regard to four sizes of bread—there are many sizes of bread, and different varieties of bread—but they would be obliged to change all their pans and machinery, again involving great expense. That is not fair. My object in speaking is to second the motion made by the hon. senator from Mille Isles that this Bill should be referred either to the Private Bills Committee, or to some other committee of the House in order that people who are opposed to it may be heard. If it goes to a Committee of the Whole House they cannot be heard.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There has been a great deal of unnecessary discussion over this matter, especially from a constitutional point of view. The object of the Bill is as simple as possible—to secure 16 oz. of bread to the pound for the money you pay. If bread is worth three, or four, or five cents the pound, let the baker give the 16 oz. for his three, four or five cents. The sole object of the Bill is to secure for the consumer the protection of law against the fraudulent seller.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—If that can be secured by provincial legislation, why not do it that way?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It can be secured by provincial legislation, but it can be better secured under the Criminal Code of the Dominion parliament, and I for one would not hesitate to put this Bill under the Criminal Code. That is where it ought to be. The object of the Bill is to secure for the poor working man with a large family one pound of bread when he pays the price for a pound, whatever the kind of loaf may be. I have personal experience that first-class bakers in Ottawa selling their bread at a good price, give three pounds for four. I make that statement on the floor of this House, having personal experience of the matter. That does not amount to much in my case; but take the case of a poor man with a family of eight or nine children to feed, to give him three pounds when he is paying for four is a crime.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It should appeal to every member of parliament to protect the consumer. It would not pay me to lodge a complaint against the baker who gives me three pounds when I pay him for four. This Bill, as far as I understand it, provides against that. It does not prescribe the shape or quality of the loaf; it simply provides that when a man buys bread he gets sixteen ounces to the pound. The provincial legislature and the municipalities can dictate the form and quality of the loaf if they see fit to do so, but parliament should demand that the baker give the full weight of the bread he sells. That is not done in Montreal or in Ottawa. I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles opposes this measure on constitutional grounds. It does not interfere with provincial legislation. There should be a criminal penalty for a breach of this measure. There is no doubt the poor man to-day is not getting what he is paying for. Parliament has taken precautions to safeguard the consumer against short weight in potatoes, wheat, oats and many other commodities. Why not safeguard the consumer when he is purchasing bread which is practically the main article consumed by very many families throughout the country. I fail to see any ground for opposing the measure.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—Under this Bill the baker cannot make a two-pound loaf, or a one-pound loaf, or a half-pound loaf.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If that is the object of the Bill, I would be opposed to it. We have no right to dictate to the baker how he shall make his bread.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—That is precisely what this Bill does.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I would be against the Bill. What I want is to require the baker to give 16 ounces to the pound.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Provided you buy a loaf which is short in weight from a baker have you not the right to prosecute him without this legislation? Anybody may prosecute for having received short weight in anything he purchases.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is everybody's business is nobody's business. It is not worth while for one man to prosecute another for two cents. The object of the Bill is to require that if the consumer wants to have his bread weighed, it must be weighed in his presence. I should like to see the hon. gentleman go to a store and buy butter without having it weighed; or purchase tea without knowing he was getting full weight. Would he depend upon the clerk putting the scoop into the tea chest and taking out exactly the amount he wanted to purchase? The same way with bread. There is no difficulty in a baker carrying a scales, and if he is an honest baker he will not need to use it. Once his customers have faith in his honesty they will not exact weighing the bread every day. The object of the Bill in that regard is to safeguard the rights of consumers. An ordinary little scales will do, and if a loaf weighs only fourteen ounces the consumer will pay for only fourteen ounces. Parliament ought to protect the poor man, because to-day he is robbed right and left.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—We have now three propositions before us. The first one by the promoter of the Bill is to consider it in Committee of the Whole. The second is the amendment my hon. friend who wishes to refer the Bill to the Private Bills Committee, and the third comes from the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) that the Bill ought to stand until we have the opinion of the leader of the House on this question. I would be in favour of the two last propositions. I am quite willing to let the Bill stand until the leader of the government can consult his colleague and inform the House what his opinion is. I am also prepared to vote for the motion to send the Bill to the Committee on Private Bills. Although it is a public Bill, we can and we ought in this case to send this Bill to the Private Bills Committee, and then inform the provinces that such a measure is under consideration and let them be represented before the committee if they think proper to do so. We have already the Ontario law which has been referred to, and we had an Act passed by the Quebec legislature last session dealing with the question. That law has not been disallowed. The government have twelve months within which to disallow a provincial Act. That Act was assented to on the 24th of March last, so the government of the Dominion has nearly three months within which to disallow the Act if they think it is desirable to do so. Looking over section 91 of the British North America Act which includes weights and measures, I believe that the Bill is properly presented to this House; but in view of the fact that the provinces have legislated on the same subject, I think we should suspend the Bill at least until we have the opinion of the leader of this House. He will consult the Minister of Inland Revenue, who will no doubt, consult the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice will see whether the law of the Quebec legislature should be disallowed, and we will be in a better position to deal with this matter than if we proceeded now. There is no special hurry to pass the Bill. It seems to me there is a great danger in having provincial and Dominion laws which are contradictory, or even to the same effect on any question, because they would be inoperative. If anything arises under the Dominion law which is covered also by a provincial law, the Minister of Justice will not direct that criminal proceedings be taken, but will refer the matter to the province to be dealt with under the provincial law. Again, if application is made to the Attorney General of the province, the Attorney General will say: 'You should go to Ottawa, because there is a Dominion law dealing with the matter.' Thus it happens that both laws are dead letters. Take the Sabbath Observance Act as an illustration. We have local and Dominion laws on the subject with the result that nothing has been done to enforce either.

Though we have authority to deal with this Bill I think we ought to refer it to the Private Bills Committee. The clerk of the committe should be given instructions to notify the provinces, and they can be represented here if they think it necessary. They will be in a position to ask on what authority we undertake to pass this Bill, and we will know where we are.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I cannot understand why the promoter of the Bill should refuse to refer it to a committee. If there are any objections to the measure, parties who are interested will have an opportunity to be heard. I am quite sure that the Ontario government will oppose the passage of this Bill, and I think the Quebec government will follow the same course. So far as the bakers of Toronto are concerned, I do not think they care very much about it except they would like to have the loaves a little different. Then labels will be put on the bread, and if the loaves are not up to the right weight, the bakers whose bread is under weight will be liable to heavy fines. We all agree with the hon. gentleman from Victoria division (Hon. Mr. Cloran); nobody wants the poor man to pay for sixteen ounces of bread when he gets only fourteen. That is all buncombe.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not so. I know from personal experience.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I am speaking of the members of this House; no senator wants anybody to pay for sixteen ounces of bread when he is getting only fourteen, and I do not believe they are doing it. The hon. senator from Halifax says that a gross wrong has been perpetrated. What evidence has he of that? Have any petitions been presented in this House asking for the passage of this Bill? Has any evidence been submitted to this House that bread is sold under weight in Montreal? I can speak for the city of Toronto, and the province of Ontario, and I say that the bakers of this province put the full weight in their bread as represented by the tickets. Until lately, local inspectors were continually confiscating lightweight bread. That does not occur now, but it used to be a matter of frequent occurrence. The bakers find it does not pay to give short-weight, and they are careful to have their bread up to the standard. I do not know how it is in Montreal, but there is a good law there passed by the Quebec government, and there is a heavy penalty for any infraction of the Act. Are they enforcing that law, or are they not? We have no evidence that they are not enforcing it. I do not know what the city of Montreal is doing. They have all the machinery for carrying out the law, and if poor people in that city are not getting the weight of bread they are paying for, it reflects very seriously on the authorities of Montreal. I am free to say I do not believe that such is the case. It is not the case in Toronto anyway; I can speak with authority on that point. My object in supporting the motion to have the Bill sent to a committee is that all interested parties shall be heard. There need be very little delay. We can have the Bill reported back to the House in a very few days. In a matter of this kind that is the proper way to proceed. We cannot hear the interested parties if the Bill is sent to a Committee of the Whole House, and I would, therefore, urge the promoter of the Bill to consent to have the Bill referred to a committee. It seems to me that when the provinces having legislated in this matter, legislation by parliament is unnecessary. If we pass the Bill, who is going to enforce it? We would be merely duplicating the laws already passed, and which are now on the statute-books of the provinces. I think all the provinces have legislated on this subject, and it seems to me it is unwise for us to proceed any further with this measure. If the House thinks it is wise to proceed, the only fair way is to refer the Bill to some committee where any objections which there may be to it can be urged.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Personally I am in sympathy with the motives which prompt the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière inasmuch as the buyer of bread should get the weight of bread he pays for; but I am puzzled by the objection he appears to have against loaves of bread weighing one or two pounds.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—There is no objection whatever as long as the weight is stamped on the loaves.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I must be reading the Bill improperly and giving it a different interpretation from the one he places upon it. Clause 2 reads as follows:

> Except as provided in subsection 2 of this section, no person shall make bread for sale, or sell or offer for sale bread, except in loaves weighing six pounds avoirdupois or one-half or one-fourth of that weight.
>
> 2. Small bread may be made for sale, offered for sale and sold in any weight not exceeding twelve ounces avoirdupois.

It must weigh six pounds or one half of six pounds, which is three pounds, or one-fourth of that weight, which is one pound and a half. This will compel the bakers to make bread of those specific weights, precluding them from making loaves weighing one pound. What objection has the hon. gentleman to loaves weighing one pound?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—None.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—By this Bill the bakers will be precluded from making such loaves.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That will be corrected.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I am not sure what legislation they have in New Brunswick, but if they have not the same legislation in other provinces, this Bill will be apt to do mischief, because I do not see that the other provinces of the Dominion should adopt the same standard of loaves which Quebec has adopted. It would not do to say that all the provinces must adopt laws identical with the laws of Quebec. It would not do to force New Brunswick to adopt laws which are legal in Quebec alone, or possibly in Ontario. There is no justification to make these uniform, unless the provinces are willing to adopt these standards. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles that this legislation, however desirable, should be left to the provinces. Until we are sure that these different weights conform with the weights in force in the provinces, I will object to the measure.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understand that the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière has no objection to adjourn the discussion for a week or so, till the leader of this House obtains the opinion of the government or of his colleague, the Minister of Inland Revenue, on the Bill. The Bill can simply be adjourned to a given date. If the hon. gentleman deems proper after a certain time has elapsed to press his Bill I confess I would be very much in favour of having it sent to a committee, in order that we may have some evidence as to the custom of trade. I would not like that our legislation should upset any trade custom. We could have the bread inspectors of Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal give us their views as to the operation of provincial laws up to this moment. I am sure my hon. friend desires with us all that when we do make federal legislation, it will be in the best possible direction, and with the best possible experience that can be furnished by people who have been enforcing the laws up to the present time.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I cannot consent to the proposition of the hon. gentleman. I do not want to take the responsibility. I consented once before and I had reason to regret it, and I desire a vote to be taken. If the measure be sent to the Private Bills Committee the Minister of Inland Revenue may be consulted, but I do not want to be bound by the department.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Nobody would be bound.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The Bill will be in its proper place where parties interested can be heard, and then it will be time to consult the department if necessary; but I think the Senate should take the responsibility of deciding whether it is expedient to pass such legislation, in view of the legislation which has been passed, and which is better than this Bill—the legislation passed in Ontario and Quebec. We should decide whether we have a right to pass this Bill.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I think my hon. friend is making a mistake, so far as his best interests are concerned. I am in favour of dealing with the Bill as he suggests—that a committee shall be appointed—but my view is that the suggestion of the leader of this House should be accepted. He suggests that the Bill in its present form will not be effective. There is no machinery to enforce it, and he desires to discuss the matter with the Department of Inland Revenue to ascertain whether machinery may be provided. It does not interfere with the action this House will take. I shall be glad to support my hon. friend's suggestion. If there are outside interests to be heard it is only fair that they should have an opportunity of stating their views, but at the present moment, in his own interest,

I think the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles should accept the suggestion of the hon. leader of this House.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I think it is a mistake to send this Bill to a select committee. There is a doubt among hon. gentlemen whether this subject comes within provincial or federal jurisdiction, and if we send it to a select committee the committee will send back a favourable or unfavourable report, and we shall obtain no opinion as to its constitutionality. It comes under either provincial or Dominion authority. If it is a provincial matter we have no right to deal with it. Of course we all desire that the workingman shall receive justice, but will he receive any more justice from the Dominion than from the province? We should be careful not to deprive the local legislature of the right to legislate in a certain direction. The leader of the House should obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice as to whether we have jurisdiction. I do not think we are treating the bakers fairly. We cannot charge them with being dishonest. I do not look upon the bakers of Montreal and Toronto as being dishonest men. I do not say they are doing an injustice to the labouring man. I believe bakers are as a rule honourable men. It is wrong to make charges in this way. I feel that it is hardly fair to submit this measure to the Private Bills Committee until we are in possession of further information as to our powers in the matter. We are daily encroaching upon the prerogatives of the provinces and we should not do it. Let it remain where it is until the leader of the House says that it is within the competence of the Dominion to legislate, and that it would be no injustice to the local legislatures to take it out of their hands.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I consent to accept the suggestion made by some hon. gentlemen to have the whole matter suspended.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I have not spoken on the amendment, but I want to show the great inconsistency of the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles. He states that this Bill is not within the jurisdiction of parliament, and in the same breath he moves to have it referred to a committee. That is quite inconsistent. If the Bill is ultra vires of parliament we have no right to deal with it at all, and it should not be referred to any committee.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I never said that the Bill was unconstitutional. I said that I had doubts as to its constitutionality.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It was agreed two hours ago between the leader of the House, and the promoter of the Bill that we would allow it to stand for a sufficient time to enable the government to announce their policy on the subject. So that if my hon. friend will allow his amendment to be withdrawn——

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—He has stated that he will withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The leader of the government says that I did not provide machinery for the working of the Bill. I did that for a good purpose. In the first place, it is wide open for any one to prosecute under this Act. If I had named any officer it would have made this a money Bill, and I would have no right to introduce it; so that there was a little method in my action as the hon. gentleman will understand. If it is the desire of the government to add to the Bill, and provide the funds necessary for its enforcement, I shall be pleased. I shall go further; if the government will make it a government measure I will be delighted; but in the meantime I move that the debate be adjourned—

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman cannot make a motion to postpone the debate on the discussion of an amendment where he has already taken the floor.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the debate be adjourned until a week from Tuesday next.

The Motion was agreed to.

SECOND READING.

Bill (F) intituled: 'An Act to incorporate Revillon Frères Trading Company Limited'.—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 26, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

IMPORT AND EXPORT TRADE OF THE DOMINION.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

What is the amount of imports from the United States to Canada for the nine months from the 1st of April to the 31st December, 1910, and from the 1st April to the 31st December, 1911, and also, the amount of exports from Canada to the United States during the same periods?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answer to the hon. gentleman's question is as follows:

	9 months. 1910.	9 months 1911.
Imports for consumption —dutiable	$110,930,139	$144,699,384
Imports for consumption —free	97,225,704	119,714,332
Total	$208,155,843	$264,413,716
Exports, domestic produce	$81,288,208	$74,759,289
Exports, foreign produce	9,048,893	11,578,064
Total	$90,337,101	$86,337,353

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am afraid not much progress is being made in reducing our trade with the United States.

UNEARNED RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Domville, moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General, praying that His Royal Highness will please to cause to be laid before the Senate a statement of unearned railway subsidies either in land or in money granted before confederation by the government of United Canada or by the government of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would seem to me that parliament would not have the information referred to in the latter part of this motion. It is information that would be particularly obtainable from the provincial governments named. Another difficulty that may possibly arise is whether parliament will have such information as is asked for in this motion anterior to confederation. I point that out as a difficulty which may possibly confront us.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When these provinces came into the confederation they carried everything with them, did they not? Everything is therefore in the hands of the Dominion government.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The lands were not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The lands were not, but the information as to the standing of the different provinces was.

The motion was agreed to.

CABINET REPRESENTATION OF THE PROTESTANT MINORITY IN QUEBEC.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN rose to Ask the government how and why it is, that the English Protestant minority of the province of Quebec is without an active and responsible representative in the government of the day?

Although this question is in my name, I am not particularly interested in the matter, probably not more than the vast majority of this honourable House. The English speaking Protestant minority in the province of Quebec, ever since it has been a portion of the British Empire, have had representatives in all governments, active representatives, and to-day for the first time in its history, we find that province one of the most influential in the Dominion, is without such representation in the government of the day. Some may think it strange that I should advocate the rights of that minority as I have enough to do to look after the rights of the other minority, but I am open minded and fair minded enough when there is nobody to look after the rights of the other minority to do so myself. I may be told that the English speaking Protestant minority of Quebec have a representative in the cabinet in the person of Mr. Perley, but Mr. Perley is not accepted as a Quebec representative. He is an Ontario man who has certain lumber interests in Argenteuil, and is elected thereby, but he is not an active representative of the people. I know from friends in Quebec that they feel very sore over the matter, that their representation has been lost under the present government. These are some of the reasons why I placed this inquiry on the order paper. I think it is a legitimate question and one which ought to be answered and which the people of the province of Quebec will expect to have answered. I have no animus in the matter. I would do the same thing for my own people if they were in the same position. I have undertaken the task probably not to the taste of some, but I have undertaken it in the interest of justice and fair play to the minority in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sure the minority in the province of Quebec will appreciate deeply the solicitude of my hon. friend; but the government feel that the rights of the minority in Quebec can be very safely entrusted to the present representation in the cabinet from that province.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If that is all the satisfaction they will get it is not much.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 31) An Act to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899.

He said: This Bill proposes to reduce the representation on the Quebec Harbour Board to three in number. For a number of years, representations have been made to the federal government that the Harbour Commission of Quebec should be brought in to line, so far as its constitution is concerned, with the Harbour Commission in Montreal. The boards of trade of the city of Quebec and also of Levis have repeatedly asked and pressed very strongly upon the government that this be done, entirely irrespective of the political composition of these boards of trade. I understand the present board is composed of nine members. It is needless to point out to hon. gentlemen that the efficiency of the board will be improved by reducing it to three, inasmuch as those three will be called upon to give special attention to the duties pertaining to that particular office. Heretofore the duties were performed in a somewhat indifferent way, and it was represented to the government that the provisions incorporated in this Bill would render the commission a more efficient body.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the hon. leader of the House omitted a somewhat important point in telling us what the effect of this Bill would be. I do not question the policy of reducing the number of members of the Quebec Harbour Board, but the hon. gentleman forgot to tell us whether or not that was the sole object of the Bill. It would be interesting to the House—I do not know that it would affect our action, but it might possibly—if we were given to understand that the most deserving and useful members of the present board were to be retained. Otherwise we shall be divided between two opinions, as to whether the principal desire of the government is to improve the constitution of the board by reducing the number, or to improve it by substituting supporters of the present government for supporters of the late government. I think the hon. gentleman should give the House to understand at least whether it is proposed to continue any of the present commissioners in office, or whether it is proposed to substitute gentlemen whose views are in harmony with those of the present government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend could scarcely expect the present government to appoint, say three harbour commissioners diametrically opposed to them in politics, but I might point out that the composition of the new board was discussed in the House of Commons and the question was asked as to who the three new commissioners would be, and the following statement was then made:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who are the three new commissioners?

Mr. PELLETIER. Mr. Victor Chateauvert,—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good man except for his politics.

I presume my hon. friend from Halifax will accept that as a recommendation of the first name.

Mr. PELLETIER. That part of it we are going to take care of ourselves. I am glad to hear that the appointment is good in all other respects. We have appointed another gentleman to whom I am sure the same certificate will be given by the right hon. leader of the opposition, that is Mr. J. B. E. Letellier, a name which will appeal to the hon. gentlemen on the other side. There is no fault to find with him, I suppose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. PELLETIER. The third is Mr. Belleau, who has always been considered a good Liberal.

That is about as much information as I can give my hon. friend in reference to the composition of the board, and I suppose he will be satisfied with that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The statement as to the third commissioner does infuse a little saving grace into the answer, but I think that the question was a natural one, because the right hon. leader of the present government in days past was a very strong opponent of the removal of public officers on political grounds, and a strenuous advocate of the retention of men who did their duty.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 66) An Act respecting the Public Archives.

He said: This Bill has for its object the placing of the archives in a more satisfactory condition than that branch of the public service has occupied for some time past. I understand that it is proposed, in the first place, to give the chief officer of the Dominion Archives the status of a deputy minister, and it is also proposed to attach for the time being the archives to the office of the President of the Privy Council.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Does the hon. gentleman mean by that to place it under the special control of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, for the time being, but there is a provision in the Bill by which, upon an order in council being passed, this branch of the public service may be transferred to any other department. It is not being made a department in itself, but is placing the archives under the control of the Privy Council for the time being.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not mean to oppose the Bill but I doubt the wisdom of creating an additional deputy head for a matter of that sort. I do not think that the chief officer of the archives is entitled to the position which a deputy head necessarily occupies. This practice of creating additional deputy heads, as my hon. friend will speedily discover, if he does not already know the precedent that he is now establishing, will lead to a number of complications and a good deal of trouble. Placing it under the control of the Prime Minister is a domestic affair; but my impression is that the Prime Minister will find ample occupation for his energies and all his time in keeping his political team together without interfering with the archives.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the Bill is rather in the right direction perhaps, but subject to the qualifications indicated by the right hon. leader of the opposition with respect to making the chief officer of the archives a deputy head. I am not quite clear, looking at clause 9 of the Bill, whether the archivist is to be a deputy head from every point of view. That can be considered when the Bill goes into committee. Clause 9 of the Bill provides that:

The Dominion Archivist shall be a deputy head of a department within the meaning of the Canada Evidence Act, and with respect to any of the records or documents under his custody and control he may give any certification or do any act or thing which, under the said Act or any other statute or any regulation, may be given or done by a deputy head of a department of government, and any such certification, act or thing shall have the same force and effect as if given or done by such deputy head of a department.

Just how that may be interpreted I do not know, but I think there is one point with respect to the Bill as to which this House is entitled to a statement from the hon. leader of the government here. This Bill does not say that the present archivist is to be a Dominion archivist. Looking at the course of the government with respect to some other important offices, it may be that it is their intention, when the Bill goes through, to dismiss Dr. Doughty and put some good Conservative in his place. I think at least there should be some assurance from the leader of the government that that is not the intention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thought my hon. friend was going to suggest that that be put in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should be willing to take the hon. gentleman's statement.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think I can assure the hon. gentleman that the government has the public interest at heart to a very much greater extent than to introduce a Bill for the purpose of dismissing the present head of the archives. If there be any such object as that, I know nothing of it. The latter clause, to which my hon. friend refers, is simply embodied in the measure to bring it within the Canada Evidence Act, not for the purpose of establishing it as a department. With regard to what my right hon. friend has said, I think it may be urged with every sense of justice, that the placing of the present gentleman who is at the head of the archives branch in the same position as that occupied by a deputy head would receive the approval of both sides of politics in Canada. It can scarcely be expected that a gentleman with the experience and historical knowledge necessary to the head of such a branch of the public service should be compensated with less remuneration than the deputy head of any other department.

However, I simply make that suggestion as warranting the attitude taken by the government on the Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would not object to making the salary of the archivist, if necessary, a little larger, putting it on an equality with a deputy head; but the point I took was that it is not expedient for us to have a multiplication of deputy heads. We had in former times a good deal of experience of that. Sundry departments had certainly two, and I think three deputy heads and it was found to be decidedly inconvenient. If my memory serves me, a deputy head has many special privileges and they cannot be removed at pleasure, but only for cause, and that must be communicated to parliament. However, we can discuss this matter better in committee. I do not want to raise objections at this stage, but the question of making new deputy heads requires a little consideration at the hands of the government and at our hands too.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The gentleman in charge of the archives is an exceptional man, possessing qualifications that it would be difficult to find in almost any other person. The way he has discharged his duties shows that he is qualified for the highest honours that can be bestowed upon him in connection with the archives. He should be free from interference—should be placed in the position of a deputy head. I entirely share the objection to increasing deputy heads. It is very undesirable, and will not meet with favour generally; but this is an exceptional case, and, under the circumstances, should meet with no opposition. There are reasons why the archivist should be free to make his representations direct to the minister rather than through a deputy head. The department is growing in importance every year. I do not know of anything more interesting in the city than a visit to the archives.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 75) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act. He said: Some representations were made before adjournment of a very serious difficulty which had arisen, and which confronted many hon. gentlemen who have come into this Chamber within the last four or five years. A senator coming in to this Chamber, say in the middle of the session, would be liable to a charge of $15 for every day of the session that he was not here—not every sitting day, but every day of the session. The consequence was that some hon. gentlemen in this Chamber —I do not know whether any members of the House of Commons suffered in the same way but it would be applicable to them also—found themselves serving the public during the substantial part of the session and yet not entitled to any compensation; not only not entitled to compensation but becoming indebted to the Crown in a penalty of $15 a day, which in some cases amounted to a rather substantial sum. For the purpose of preventing a repetition of any such difficulty, the government felt called upon to amend the Act, and the purpose of the present Bill is simply to provide that the deduction of $15 a day shall be only made to apply to the sitting days of the session.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—As one of the unfortunate victims of the law as it stands today, if there is no objection on the part of the leader of the government, I would ask that the second reading of this Bill be left over for another day. We are considering whether it would not be possible to introduce an amendment to this Bill with a view to making it retroactive for at least one year in order to cover three cases which occurred last session. I believe those are the only cases which have arisen since the enactment of the law which affects so injuriously the parties concerned. We find that we are not only not entitled to any indemnity for the part of last session we were in attendance here, but we are actually indebted to the government for the privilege of sitting in this House during the few days that we were in this Chamber last session. Of course if that was the rule with regard to every member, and we had to pay for the honour of sitting in this House I would not be the last to pay for the privilege; but as the rule is otherwise I think it should be universally applied.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in making this representation to the leader of the House. A very simple clause might be added to the Bill to provide that the above provisions shall apply to all members returned to parliament during the last two or three years. This matter was brought to my attention at the beginning of the session by a member of this House interested in the matter, and I promised as far as I could to see justice done. I regret the hon. member from Banff (Hon. Mr. Forget) felt obliged to put his case before the House personally. His colleagues here ought to have undertaken that task, and it was my intention to have done so, but he rose to speak before I had an opportunity. It is not fair or right, and I think it is not legal that parliament should collect a debt that he does not owe from any man. These gentlemen were called to the Senate at the fag end of the session, and we find the clerk of the Senate charging them up with a bill for non-attendance. There is no sense in that. We find them not only receiving no indemnity but charged with indebtedness to the government. Parliament cannot stand for a thing like that, and there should be no hesitation to pass a special Bill if necessary to put them in a right position. The government would be doing only the fair thing if they were to say that the charges against these members for non-attendance shall be withdrawn and that they be paid their indemnity according to the time they were here.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I am not concerned personally in this matter, but I know of other cases, one in particular, which I am sure the man who is involved would be the last to speak of it, but in his case the charge against him amounted to $900. If the Bill is to be made retroactive, we should go further back than the last two sessions, because there might be other cases of a similar character and we ought to extend the time to a reasonable limit so as to put all members on an even footing. I am sure we would all regret if any member had settled such a demand made on him. It is not reasonable or legal. More than that, it is not a nice thing to do for the honour of the House itself. It is quite right that we should step in and make the provision retroactive.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have no doubt that the hon. leader of the House quite concurs in the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken; but it is a question whether the Senate has a right to amend this Bill. It strikes me that the Senate has not that right. Then if these gentlemen have been mulcted in any way, the proper course under the circumstances would be for the hon. leader of the government in this House to see that the sums necessary to recoup them are placed in the supplementary estimates. The government have the right to do that, and the difficulty could be got over in that way. But there is another point to which I wish particularly to direct the attention of the leader of the House: Looking at the way in which this Bill is worded, it seems to me not unlikely that a gentleman who during the course of the session was transferred from the House of Commons to the Senate would be enabled to draw two indemnities. That has happened in the past, and it might happen in the future under the peculiar wording of this Bill. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should see what the Minister of Justice thinks on that point. The hon. gentleman probably remembers himself that a few years ago one or two gentlemen did draw two indemnities. They came here in the middle of the session and drew one indemnity as members of the House of Commons and another indemnity as members of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Bill was prepared by the Minister of Justice, and introduced in the House of Commons by the same minister.

Hon. Mr. POWER—So was the law under which that thing happened.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend has suggested that I refer this Bill to the Minister of Justice; but he has already assumed the responsibility. However, it is a subject worthy of consideration and I shall be glad to look into it with that object in view. So far as the statement of the hon. member from Banff (Hon. Mr. Forget) is concerned, I know there is a great deal of sympathy for those gentlemen who have been deprived of the indemnity they should equitably have received. The difficulty we find is this: The late government under whom these gentlemen were appointed had their attention directed to the weakness of the Act and its oppressive operation so far as new senators were concerned. The ex-Minister of Justice had his attention fully directed to the fact, and yet the late government did not consider it wise, apparently, in their discretion to give the relief which the hon. gentlemen sought. I need not point out that this Chamber would not have authority to amend this Bill, on account of its being a money Bill, but I would repeat what the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) has said, that the more likely way of having the difficulty remedied would be to place a sum in the estimates, and I would suggest to those hon. gentlemen who have been deprived of their indemnity that they should take what steps they possibly can to induce the House of Commons to remedy this grievance from which they have been suffering for some years past. Of course I cannot say what the government would be prepared to do upon that subject, but it seems to me, instead of trying to make this Bill retroactive—legislation of that kind being almost invariably objectionable, not knowing what it would lead to—that the hon. gentlemen should take the step I have suggested.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The government has put these senators in debt. On what legal ground can they collect that claim?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I beg to correct the hon. gentleman; there was no Bill presented to us on the part of the government for any sum there may have been over and above the indemnity.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. member from Prince Edward Island tells me that he was charged by the government for a debt of some $15 or $35. If that is the case, I should like to know on what ground the government can take action against him to collect that debt?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think we need discuss this phase of it. I can assure the hon. gentlemen who have claims appearing against them that they will not be pressed for payment.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The circumstances under which the last session of parliament terminated would probably be a reason why the matter should be dealt with when the Supply Bill comes down. It was different from a session coming to its end in the usual way. It cannot be said that the last parliament in its closing hours could have dealt with this question. It was left open and will have to be dealt with now. I would suggest that it might fairly be considered in the estimates to be brought down. No one seems to see any reason why these gentlemen should not be placed on a fair footing of equality with the other members of the Senate. I would suggest to the hon. leader of the House to let the Bill stand over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am quite willing.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I would ask him to consider what course he proposes to take with reference to this Bill and another Bill to amend the same Act. The two should be dealt with at the same time. If the other Bill is to be passed, it would seem to be absurd to amend the Act by two Bills passed the one session. It is far better that the whole subject should be dealt with in the one measure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am under the impression that the Bill is no longer on the order paper. I think the attention of the hon. gentleman in charge of it was directed to the fact that we have no authority in this Chamber to pass a Bill such as he proposes to introduce.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The Bill is on the orders, though it should have been introduced in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—It has been said there is only one case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand there are several cases—my hon. friend from Banff, my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, and if I mistake not another senator, have been deprived of their indemnity. I am quite willing that the Bill should stand, but would suggest to the hon. member from Banff that he should in the meantime enlist the good offices of his friends in the Commons to carry out the suggestion I have made.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think it is fair to expect hon. gentlemen to lobby the members of the Commons. The representations made in the Senate should be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We ought to undertake the task ourselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It can only be done by resolution. I move that the order of the day be discharged and the Bill placed on the orders for Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 2) An Act to amend the Juvenile Delinquents' Act 1908. He said: The Bill is self explanatory. It makes provision that where juvenile courts are established and there are children of other faiths than Roman Catholic or Protestant, the machinery provided by the Bill shall be brought into operation as to their protection and care.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 10) An Act respecting the British Colonial Fire Insurance Company. —Hon. Mr. Choquette.

Bill (No. 26) An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company—Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw).

Bill (No. 65) An Act to correct certain clerical errors in the French Version of the Revised Statutes, 1906.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS.

FIFTH REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER moved concurrence in the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The report expresses a doubt as to whether or not the legislation which is sought for by the petition in this case is such as could be passed by the parliament of Canada, or if it is not rather such legislation as should be sought from the legislature of Quebec. As I understand, the petitioner lives in the city of Hull, and under a will under which he is the beneficiary, he is called upon in order to obtain the legacies left him to change his name to that of the testator. It seems to me that that is a measure which deals altogether with property and civil rights, and it is not in any sense a measure which should be dealt with by parliament. Perhaps, as the House is thin, and as it is a question which deserves some consideration, the hon. chairman of the committee will pardon me if I move that the debate be adjourned until Wednesday next.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I quite agree with what the mover has said. I do not think parliament has jurisdiction in this matter. The civil status of a citizen is determined by the law of his domicile. It is altogether a provincial matter. The fact that the man lived in Hull or Ottawa or anywhere else in Canada makes no difference whatever. Parliament has no jurisdiction in determining the status of Canadians. That is a civil matter, exclusively within provincial jurisdiction. If this petitioner lives in Hull, clearly he should apply to the Quebec legislature, and if in Ottawa he should apply to the legislature of Ontario; but in no case can he come to the parliament of Canada to have his name changed in any way. I have not looked into the matter, but it seems to me that is elementary.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—I have no objection to the adjournment of the debate. The committee reported that the rules had been complied with and the proper notices given. There is no special recommendation in regard to this question, but there is a remark at the conclusion of the report expressing doubt as to whether parliament has jurisdiction. I do not see that there is much to discuss.

The SPEAKER—If the report is in doubt there is no conclusion.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—There is a conclusion that the notices have been properly given. The remark at the end is simply to call the attention of the Senate to this doubt.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—All the hon. members who have expressed themselves on the question are clearly of the opinion that the subject matter of this Bill is outside of our jurisdiction. Then why should we keep it on the order paper?

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The committee have nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction, and simply have to report as to whether the petition was in order. The adoption of the report to-day does not affect the question at all. It will come up on the second reading. The petitioner consulted a very high legal authority in Canada who told him that he could change his name without legislation at all. He however, said that if he was going to apply to any legislative body, as far as he could see it was just as suitable to apply to the Dominion parliament as any other, if he chose to adopt that course. The property in which he will become interested is spread all over every province of the Dominion, from Halifax to British Columbia. That may not alter the case at all, but the reason why he brought the matter before parliament was in order that it might have the greatest publicity throughout the country. That is the statement he made to me.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the point made by the hon. gentleman from Rockland (Hon. Mr. Edwards) is perfectly sound, and, if the House will permit me, with the consent of the seconder, I shall withdraw my motion for the adjournment of the debate, and let the report go; and we can deal with the matter on the second reading.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I wish to correct a misapprehension. As a member of the Committee on Standing Orders, I wish the House to understand that we did not expect, by making the remark in the report, that we were going to have the House pass upon it, but, the point having been raised, we felt that it was our duty to call attention to it.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 30, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (H) An Act to incorporate the British Canadian Loan Company.—Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw).

REMOVAL OF JOHN PARK, POSTMASTER.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return giving copies of all letters, papers or other documents in the hands of the government relating to the proposed removal of John Park, postmaster at Orangeville, Ontario.

The motion was agreed to.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN inquired:

Is it their intention to dismiss Mr. John Park, postmaster at Orangeville, Ontario, from his position as postmaster without giving him first an opportunity of answering any charges made against him?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was established to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General that Mr. John Park had been an active political partisan during his employment as postmaster of Orangeville, and orders were given for his dismissal. The order which has just gone for the papers to be brought down will state the reasons of the dismissal, and then my hon. friend will be at liberty to discuss it.

RAILWAY MILEAGE IN CANADA.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT: inquired:

How many miles of railway were completed within the Dominion on the 1st January, 1912?

How many in process of construction?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The latest available information in the department is up to the year ended 30th June, 1911, at which date the mileage in operation was 25,400 miles; and the mileage under construction was 7,000 miles.

To ascertain the mileage down to the first of January, as my right hon. friend has asked, would involve correspondence with all the various railway companies. There are no returns in the department later than the first of July.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not want to press too much, but it would be very interesting information to have if the department can get it without too much trouble.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very glad to further press the inquiry. I was anxious to get the information for my right hon. friend, but that was the answer given.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If the first of January is too late a date, we could put it a little earlier—put it say three months before.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it will involve correspondence with the railway companies we might as well ask for a return to the first of January. I shall see what I can do.

CUSTOMS REVENUE FROM WESTERN PROVINCES.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

What amount of customs duties have been collected in the nine months from 1st April to the 31st December, 1910, and 1911, in the several provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, respectively?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The following statement has been furnished of Customs duties collected in the nine (9) months from 1st of April to 31st of December, 1910 and 1911, in the several provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia, respectively:

	1910.	1911.
Manitoba	$5,166,053 03	$6,368,220 79
Saskatchewan	1,069,508 01	1,764,956 21
Alberta	1,328,991 64	2,219,351 18
British Columbia	5,754,063 39	7,682,164 83

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Very considerable increases.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Apparently.

REDISTRIBUTION OF REPRESENTATION.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

Is it the intention of the government to introduce a Bill during the present session for the purpose of arranging the representation of the several provinces in accordance with the recent census?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have to answer my right hon. friend in the negative. It is not the intention of the government to introduce such a Bill this session.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Can the hon. gentleman give any further information as to when it can be introduced?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No further information at present, for my right hon. friend, except that we might follow the precedent set by the late government, and postpone it for a couple of years.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There may be two words about that.

SENATORSHIP TO MR. LANCASTER.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN inquired:

If it is true as reported in the press, that a certain Mr. Lancaster, a member of the House of Commons was offered a senatorship by a member of the government on certain conditions?

Also, if it was stipulated that if the said Mr. Lancaster accepted the said offer he would allow the question of abolition of the Senate to remain in abeyance, for the term of his natural life, and would likewise extend the same consideration to the decrees of the Council of Trent?

He said: In rising to ask this question, I assure the hon. leader of the House I do so without any intention of embarrassing the government in this House or in the House of Commons. On the contrary, my object is a most charitable one. The public for some time past has been seized of the information—well founded or ill founded, I am not in a position to say—that Mr. Lancaster, an hon. member of the House, was offered a position in this Senate by a member of the government of the day. The question is one of fact, and can be easily answered. What makes the question a peculiarly interesting one is that the government undertook, according to public information, to offer the senatorship to this hon. gentleman on two conditions: that he would cease his opposition to the existence of this body as long as his life should last; and, secondly, that he would not oppose the marriage decrees of the Roman Catholic church. As far as the first question is concerned, whether the government offered him the position or not casts no reflection on the government or on the hon. gentleman. I think it would do honour to both. The hon. gentleman has been a very useful, esteemed and respected member of the lower House. The government could not have a more valuable member to aid them in their legislation. What is surprising in the information given to the government through the voice of the people, and through the press, is that the government exacted, or wanted to exact from him these two conditions. Now, that I am not prepared to believe. I do not think the government, or any other government, would put up to a member of his standing such a proposition as that, although the government would be perfectly justified in doing so. The opposition to the existence of this body, made in the other chamber by Mr. Lancaster, is a natural one. I do not veil the fact that I was personally opposed to the present constitution of this body. I was not opposed to the existence of a second chamber, but I certainly was opposed to its constitution as it then existed, and the manner in which it conducted the public business some fifteen or twenty years ago, when the vast majority of this honourable House belonged to the opposite side of politics to that which I then supported, and which I still endorse. I was one of those who found fault with the Senate's activity when they undertook to do the washing of the dirty linen of the parties, the same as the right hon. senator from Belleville did in 1891 and 1892, when he undertook to wash the linen, so-called dirty, of the Quebec party in this House, and succeeded admirably. His investigation into the matter at the time resulted in the downfall of the Mercier regime. The downfall did not last long. People evidently had faith in the hon. member from Belleville, and in his party, but that faith expired on the 24th June, 1896, and was transferred to the Liberal party. So that up to that time I was opposed to the manner and the methods by which this honourable House conducted its business. On these grounds I have no special objections to Mr. Lancaster being opposed to its existence. I can understand that, but I cannot understand that the government would offer him the position of a senatorship on condition that he would cease his opposition. We have heard a great deal of talk in regard to Mr. Lancaster's opposition to the marriage decrees of the Catholic church, and from Mr. Hughes, Mr. Sproule, and other prominent men in the public life of this country.

I know a little about the theological aspect of the question, and I am free to say that honourable gentlemen on the floor of parliament, and the ministers in the pulpits of the different churches of the country, know very little of the marriage decrees of the Roman Catholic church. The marriage decrees of Rome, whether they be put in the form of a pastoral letter, or a Ne Temere decree, take no rights from the citizen and do not affect his civil status. They simply affect the conscience of the adherents of that church, and if those adherents do not wish to accept the decrees, they are at liberty to retire from the fold and join another church, with easier methods of marriage and easier modes of dissolving marriage. But the uselessness of this discussion on the Ne Temere decree is shown by the fact that the courts of Quebec uphold the marriage decrees of Rome. They have no option. For centuries every decree in regard to marriage passed by the Roman court was endorsed by every civilized country on earth, and embodied in their statute-books until the reformation, when they were disowned. But France always observed the Roman decrees and enacted them in her statutes. When England conquered Quebec, and defeated France on American soil, one of the matters which was left to the French people of the province of Quebec, was their laws in regard to property and civil rights. So that when a question of marriage comes before the courts of Quebec, on which the church has been called upon to pronounce, and has pronounced a voidance of the marriage—that there was no marriage at all, the court has absolutely nothing to do but to register the verdict of Rome. England gave them that right, and guaranteed it. Those rights have been in existence for 140 or 150 years, and I may tell Mr. Lancaster and the men who speak as he does, that the more they antagonize this status of living in Quebec the less they will succeed. The decrees of Rome have no effect in Ontario, or other provinces of the Dominion, or in any country where the decrees of the Council of Trent were not promulgated. It is simply a matter of conscience between the adherents of the church itself, with which the state has nothing to do. The church may declare a marriage null and void, but the civil law protects both parties and their offspring. All this talk by Mr. Lancaster and his friends in regard to the Ne Temere decree is based on fallacious and ill-conceived grounds, without any special knowledge of the constitutional history of our country or the ecclesiastical law of Rome. We have nothing to do with other races or creeds at all. I do not say that the government asked Mr. Lancaster to forego his opposition to the marriage laws of the Catholic church, but if they did, I think it was a wise action and one that would redound to the union, the peace and harmony of the community. You have never yet found the Catholic church interfering with the decrees of the Presbyterian church, the Methodist Conference, the Jewish rabbis or anything of that kind. We leave them all alone, and all we ask is to be left alone. Rome does not interfere with any of their laws. The Catholic church is working for the best interests of society, in consecrating the marriage tie. Let others break it if they will, and I must say that right in this honourable House it is too often broken. I do not suppose that the honourable leader will be able to tell us that the government did impose such conditions on Mr. Lancaster, but I would appreciate it if the hon. gentleman could tell us that it was so. It would show that they were wise in their generation. They were off-setting and getting away from difficulties which I am sorry to say menaced our near future.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would say to my hon. friend that the answer to the first question is 'no,' and the second question is answered by the reply to the first question.

SALE OF BARRACKS AT WINNIPEG.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS inquired:

Has the government sold or agreed to sell, the barracks and land adjacent, in Winnipeg, to the local government of Manitoba, and if so, what terms?

Also, how many acres does the said property contain?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The matter is now under consideration, but if it should be concluded I could then give him the information as to the area of land, which I cannot do at present. I suppose the interest in that would be involved in the taking over of the land by the Manitoba government.

TYPHOID FEVER BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (G) An Act to check the spreading of typhoid fever. He said: When it first occurred to me to draft a Bill on the lines of the one now under consideration, I was not aware that similar legislation had been adopted on either side of the Atlantic. I have discovered, however, from a reference more particularly to the encyclopædias of England and the United States that such legislation has been enacted, although I have not been able to find it.

The disease in Canada has for some years been rapidly increasing. In 1881 the deaths from typhoid were 1,035, in 1891, 1,592, and in 1901, 1,909—in twenty years they had practically doubled. Those figures are taken from the official report issued by the Department of Agriculture. One fact about them is that the persons affected by typhoid are those with the highest vitality—that is between the ages of 20 and 45, and another peculiarity is that men die more freely than women of typhoid fever. The last ten years I have quoted the males were 1091, and the females 819, a difference of nearly 300. Now the explanation of the first peculiarity, that is of persons dying at the most vigorous period of life, is that they think at that time of life that they are absolutely immune to disease, and therefore, exercise no care whatever, but eat and drink what their fancy prompts them to take. The explanation of the second fact is that men indulge in alcoholic drinks to a greater extent than women do, particularly in times of epidemic, or when they fear disease is spreading. That can be the only explanation, because the marked difference of nearly 300 in the number mentioned is so extraordinary that it requires some explanation, and the one I have given will fit, and should be accepted as the fact. The largest number of cases have occurred along our lakes and rivers, and may be traced to the fact that sewage from our towns and cities is discharged into the waterways from which the drinking water of the people is obtained. Consequently, the water has been polluted by typhoid bacilli. The germs do not increase in the water. It has a fatal effect on them, though they may live two or three weeks in the water. They multiply in the alimentary canal of the human body. When a person is not particular in keeping the alimentary canal clean, and undigested food is allowed to accumulate, it becomes a nest for the typhoid germs, and they multiply by the million. Their life is short, but they are multiplying all the time. No doubt a very considerable percentage of the people escape entirely, although they drink water containing bacilli, but nature has made the human body immune if persons would only take reasonable care to live normally on food we were intended to use. You never hear of horses, cows, or hogs being infected with typhoid, although they drink polluted water. Their organization is not as perfect as ours, but they live on food that it was intended they should, except when at times they are forced, as hogs are, to eat filthy food. Now the number of deaths among those attacked by typhoid has been about 10 per cent, which I think is a very high mortality, higher than in any other country.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN. I think it must be ten in the thousand, not ten per cent.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—It varies.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Ten per cent is a very high mortality.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Here in Ottawa the cases numbered less than two thousand, and the deaths were between ninety and a hundred. They vary, according to the medical treatment, from five to ten per cent. If with increased population the number of persons affected should be as great relatively as it has been in former years it will mean, unless something is done, from twenty to twenty-five thousand people will be laid up every year for six or eight weeks from typhoid, and that two thousand of them will die unnecessarily, because typhoid, to begin with, is a preventable disease, and under proper treatment, in my judgment, the chances of recovery are good. But we have to deal with things as they are. The mere mention of the fact that two thousand of our citizens will die this year from a preventable cause should certainly stimulate parliament to take some measures, even if they had not been practically tried before, to in some degree check the spread of this disease. If twenty-five thousand hogs were ill, we would spend probably a half million dollars to save the hogs, and yet no government in Canada has made any arrangement for checking a preventable disease in the human family. Now that is not discharging our duty as public men.

Paternal legislation is necessary in this age, and it prevails in all civilized countries. Canada is behind the rest of the world in the preservation of the lives of its own people. We take care of our hogs; we take care of our cattle; of our horses. We spent last year for the protection of these animals from disease, $300,000. And what did we spend on the human family to protect them? After a great deal of lobbying, the government voted ten thousand dollars to the Tuberculosis Society of Canada. It was only a fraction of what ought to have been granted. This country collects from the people of Canada over a hundred millions of dollars, and yet they discourage spending any money on the preservation of the lives of the people from whom it is collected. When I mention this bald fact to you, I do not think it should require another word of argument—that in this year of our Lord one hundred thousand people will die from various diseases, and over fifty thousand will die before they reach 25 years of age. Now that is an appalling fact. We are spending huge sums to induce foreigners to come and settle in Canada, and surely the Canadian born is superior to those whom we bring into Canada; and to think that such a number of Canadians should die, many from preventable causes, seems shocking. It is reproach to the intelligence of the people of Canada. Those statistics ought to appeal to every man who is charged with making the laws of this country, that our highest duty should be the preservation of the health of the people. When I quote the fact that we spent three hundred thousand dollars last year on the hogs, cattle, and horses, it ought to be a stimulus to us to force the government of the day to take at least as good care of the citizens of Canada as it does of the hogs and cattle of this country. We are responsible for the illness of the hogs, because we allow them to be fed on distillery swill, on fermented foods. That is the reason; and a statement made a few days ago by the bacteriologist of the University of Wisconsin was to the effect that in the thirty-five million hogs that were being killed in certain states, to his knowledge, five millions were affected with disease, yet they were passed and palmed off on the public, the inspection was so imperfect. In fact it is impossible to inspect once disease gets into animals. I noticed that not very long ago in the city of Toronto, where they have abbatoirs and abundance of inspectors, in one lot that were examined eighteen per cent had to be condemned; but that happened because there was keen examination. We know very well that day after day animals are sold on the public markets in different parts of this country that are not fit for human food. On one occassion 200 calves that had been taken into the city of Montreal on a single day, had been seized; and at another time I saw that a seizure had been made in the city of Hull of a very large number. I mention these instances to show that it is no wonder diseases prevail when people are fed on diseased food. The consciences of men who sell such animals for human food are not as keen as they should be. Recently we had a very interesting address delivered in Ottawa by Dr. Wylie, Food Inspector at Washington, and it would have done good to all the members here if they could have heard him describe the battle he had had for so many years to secure pure food for the United States, and the conspiracies against him were so strong that they actually succeeded in getting Congress and the members of the government of the United States to order his dismissal. Why? because he was so exacting. They trumped up a case against him, and if it had not been for the influence of President Taft, he would have been discharged. I mention that as an incident showing the difficulty that exists in securing pure food for the people because of the influence of those behind the market. They are numerous, and have so little conscience that the people have those foods forced upon them. The $300,000 that we pay under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, is not the only money expended for the protection of animals; I find that there is other legislation very similar to provisions in this Bill. Among other things section 43 provides that:

'Every person who moves, or causes or allows to be moved, any animal, hide, skin, hair, wool, horn, hoof, offal, carcass, meat, dung, hay, straw, litter, or other thing in violation of the provisions of this Act with respect to infected places, shall, for every such offence, incur a penalty not exceeding $200.'

'Every person who throws or places or causes or suffers to be thrown or placed, in any river, stream, canal, navigable or other water, or in the sea, within ten miles of the shore, the carcass of an animal which has died of disease.

Well, we have already applied to animals the legislation that is specified in this Bill. Are we not going to apply it to our own fellow-beings? It is monstrous that any opposition should be offered to such a measure There is also a clause in that Act which says:

Every person who neglects to give notice, as required by this Act, of any facts discovered or perceived by him indicating the appearance or the existence of infectious or contagious disease among animals owned by him or under his special care, or who conceals the existence of infectious or contagious disease among animals, shall incur a penalty not exceeding $200.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is that the Dominion statute?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Yes, chapter 75, entitled, 'An Act respecting Infectious or Contagious Diseases affecting Animals.' It gives most extraordinary powers to officials employed by the government. We have a very large staff, and it would not be very much to extend to that staff the powers intended to be conferred on the officials who should put in force the Bill now before us. The cost would be a bagatelle.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Are you reading from the Revised Statutes?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Yes, the Revised Statutes. I find that we give extraordinary powers to our agents at Grosse Isle and other points where the ships arrive, with respect to immigrants entering Canada, and we pay for that service $140,000. We examine the foreigners, many of whom are affected by diseases, and they are turned about or confined at Grosse Isle for a given time. Then we spend on leprosy $10,000. We have also an Act showing the paternal care this government exercises when its attention has been drawn to particular cases. We have the Act entitled 'An Act for the Preservation of Health on Public Works,' no matter what kind of work it is—it includes every railway, every canal, bridge, telegraph, and every other public work in Canada. We take care of the people at those points. We look after the inspection of their houses, their tents, their quarters, the cleaning and purifying and disinfecting of them. We limit the number of persons in the houses. We see that there is a qualified medical man employed on the works, and we provide for the isolation and care of persons suffering from diseases. We take all sorts of fatherly interest in men who happen to be there; yet in our cities and country parts our own citizens may die by the hundred thousand and we take no interest whatever in them. It seems to me extremely inconsistent. There is no sense in such a policy. As I have said, the only sum we subscribe in this direction is $10,000—formerly it was $5,000 a year—to the Tuberculosis Society. We know that tuberculosis is spreading in Canada. We know that it is a disease easily checked. We know also that there is no country in the world where it can be checked so quickly as in Canada. The cold of our winter is destructive to all germs that affect the human body, and therefore a man breathes more oxygen in Canada than he can in almost any other country. At the same time he gets the sunlight. There are the two agencies that really cure tuberculosis. But so long as over-crowding continues in the houses, and knowledge of hygiene in withheld from the people, this scourge will continue. Hygiene ought to be one of the elementary sciences that is taught in our public schools. People ought to know how to live rationally. There is no reason whatever for the extraordinary death rate that prevails in this country. The opinion of the latest scientific authorities that typhoid is a preventable disease, and that it is developed entirely from the one source, is expressed in the last edition of 'Encyclopædia Britannica', which has just been published, quoting from vol. 27, page 506. There are several pages devoted to this subject, but this quotation seems apt as to the prevention, which is the only part of the article with which at the moment I will trouble the House:

> If home drainage were always perfectly carried out, sewage satisfactorily disposed of, water supply efficiently protected or treated, patients segregated and the typhoid material excreted by them, and typhoid 'carrier' effectually annihilated—if in short, scientific cleanliness were completely attained, the disease would disappear or be at least excessively rare.

They have had more experience with typhoid in the United States than they have had in any other country, because, as we know, that country has conditions similar to ours, and the most convenient way of getting rid of sewage was by draining into their great rivers—the method we adopt in disposing of our pollution—and then they found difficulty in getting pure water; and the cost of filtration is so enormously large that I noticed in a morning paper the statement that New York city has been spending one hundred and sixty millions in an aqueduct to draw pure water from some distant part of the state.

I will quote from a very recent edition of the 'Encyclopædia Americana' to show how typhoid is spreading. The extract is as follows:

> But drinking water polluted by the bacilli through infected sewage, &c., is the most frequent cause of typhoid infection. Germs from a single case of typhoid may find their way into springs and other sources of water supply and cause widespread dissemination of the disease. The epidemics in Lausanne, Switzerland (1872), Chicago and Philadelphia (1890-1900), and Ithaca, N.Y. (1903), are examples of typhoid outbreaks caused by polluted water. In Vienna, when for a period the water supply from guarded springs was turned into the city, typhoid, which had persisted in epidemic for years, almost entirely disappeared, and when, as the drier season advanced, this purer supply was insufficient and the water of the Danube was again turned on, the scourge broke out with renewed violence, but in those parts of the city supplied by river water. This experience was repeated in Paris, and it is practically true of every city supplied with drinking water from exposed streams and lakes.
>
> That flies which have found access to the excrement of typhoid fever patients may carry the infecting organism to food and so produce typhoid, was proved in the Spanish-American and the Boer wars. The danger of typhoid in armies is always imminent; soldiers will drink polluted water, not caring to wait till it is boiled; the ground becomes saturated with discharges, flies and dust abound; and many of the men will not keep clean. Typhoid fever in our camps, says Sternberg, has been to a large extent due to the neglect of the well-known sanitary measures. This has been the experience in nearly all wars.

I would like to call particular attention to this:

> The New York department of health which insists upon the importance of disinfecting the urine as well as the fæces of typhoid patients, states that 'it is probable that in 50 per cent of the cases the typhoid bacilli are present in the urine at some stage of the disease,' and recommends keeping the urinal or bed pan partly filled with a 1 to 20 solution of carbolic acid.

The evidence on both sides of the Atlantic is undoubted that this is a water-borne disease, that it is preventable, and that this is one of the channels through which we can check the spreading of it. I do not suppose it will annihilate it. I doubt it. There are other methods of contracting the disease. Even the sputum may contain the bacilli. At a later stage we many amend the Bill by inserting the word sputum. Once the bacilli enter the body, they are not easily got rid of, and can only be stopped through a normal condition of health. This Bill, for the sake of simplicity, is based on an Act already on the statute-book. I may illustrate by this observation: If a man throws a poisonous weed into his neighbour's pasture and the cattle eat this weed and die as a result, there is no doubt that man is liable for the consequences, and if a man throws typhoid bacilli into his neighbour's drinking water, should he not also be punished? This is exactly a parallel case, and I propose to attach this Bill to clause 222 of the Criminal Code, which reads as follows:

'Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to one year's imprisonment or a fine who commits any common nuisance which endangers the lives, safety or health of the public, or which occasions injury to the person of any individual.'

The provision in this Bill will read:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, &c., who endangers the lives or public health by emptying or depositing any excreta, whether solid or fluid, of any typhoid patient on the banks of a river, &c.

The next clause provides that the medical attendant, or whoever is looking after the patient, must give notice to the head of the municipality of the existence of the typhoid patient. He must take measures, by the use of carbolic acid, to destroy the bacilli. The excreta must be dealt with in the manner indicated in the Bill, and not thrown into the water. A clause should be inserted providing for payment of the cost, but I presume that will be more properly done in the House of Commons. The costs ought to be charged to the municipality, but in the meantime they might be advanced by the government. I think the Bill is so important that the government should take it up and put it through as a government measure. If it goes to the House of Commons, with the multiplicity of private Bills which they will have to deal with, it will have very little opportunity to be put through. It entails a very slight charge on the public revenue, if any at all, because the ultimate cost is thrown upon the municipality where the typhoid happens to prevail.

That municipality can be properly charged wtih it, because the evil is due to the carelessness, ignorance, or negligence of the municipality in which it occurred. The Bill relating to the pollution of streams evidently cannot be adopted for some years in Canada. It has to get the support of the provinces and of the Dominion before it really can become law. Take as an illustration the Ottawa river, which derives its water from streams on both sides, in Ontario and Quebec. If we passed a Bill here preventing the pollution of the Ottawa it would have no effect as far as the individual provinces are concerned, at all events until the sewage question is satisfactorily disposed of, and that will take five or six years in the various cities. You could not enforce a Bill of that kind. Under the circumstances, I trust that parliament will adopt this measure and give it a trial as it entails no expense whatever on the public treasury.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Before proceeding with a Bill of this kind we should have the opinion of the Minister of Justice as to its constitutionality. I would suggest, therefore, that my hon. friend let his order stand until we ascertain whether it is within our jurisdiction.

It is unfortunate that we should undertake to multiply offences, and deal with matters which pertain exclusively to the local legislatures, and the municipalities. I appreciate the able manner in which the hon. gentleman has moved the second reading of this Bill; but if he considers the matter properly he will see that the subject with which he attempts to deal should be dealt with by the local legislatures. To pass such a measure as this will accomplish nothing. The cleverest physicians we have in the country would be unable to place their fingers on what would be the best means of preventing the spread of typhoid fever. We know the destructive effects of the disease, but we cannot say that purifying the water will wholly prevent it. Wherever there is decomposition of animal and vegetable matter typhoid fever germs will originate. After his very able explanation, I think my hon. friend should let his Bill stand until we have the opinion of the Minister of Justice. If we have the power then we can proceed intelligently to make a law on the subject that can be enforced without injury to the country. This is a very important matter. We are making provision to punish people who may be innocent. It is a stringent provision to put on the statute-book creating an offence punishable by fine and imprisonment, and perhaps hanging and quartering. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should let his Bill stand over until another session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There are several objectionable clauses in the Bill which should be recast. I would direct attention to the money clauses of the Bill.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—That, I said would not be taken up here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The last clause throws an obligation on the municipalities to provide certain funds.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The government will have to consider that, and it can be dealt with in committee.

The motion was agreed to.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Second reading Bill (No. 19) intituled an Act to amend the Inquiries Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the order be postponed until Tuesday next.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—At the second reading, my hon. friend will be in a position I hope to give us the names—I believe they have been already made public—of the commissioners intended to be appointed, and it would be as well, perhaps, to know the salaries, costs, &c.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What commission does my right hon. friend refer to?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I understood this Bill was for the purpose of giving special authority to a certain commission?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object of the Bill is to amend the Inquiries Act so that any commission hereafter appointed to make an investigation, or inquiry into the public general service may have certain powers. Under the law as it stands when a commission is appointed to make a departmental investigation it has the power under the Act which is sought by this Bill to confer on all commissions, so that the law will apply to any commission. investigations.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is with special reference to the present committee which is inquiring into certain matters that this amendment was proposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was ascertained that there was such a limitation of powers under part I of the Public Inquiries Act as to render it desirable to amend the Act so that the same power would be given in case of any inquiry into the public service. In the meantime the right hon. gentleman will find in section 9 of the Public Inquiries Act a similar authority is given to that which is contained in this Bill, but limited purely to departmental investigation.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We will look into it on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved the second reading of Bill (E) An Act concerning the payment of salaries or wages of employees of railway companies. He said: It will be within the memory of hon. gentlemen that when the Senate adjourned last session, before the dissolution of parliament, this Bill had been referred to the Railway Committee. That committee heard evidence, and the Bill came back to the Senate. I may remind the House that this Bill was passed unanimously in another place, both parties agreeing to the principle of the measure. Since then the representatives of the labour element at Calgary, and from all parts of Canada, gave this Bill their unanimous approval. A circular was sent from the General Labour Council of Canada to all the members of the Senate. I know that I received one before we adjourned for the holidays. It represented that labour, more especially the railway employees, was in favour of this Bill. In itself, the Bill is very simple. It provides for the payment of railway employees every two weeks instead of monthly. I may remind this honourable House that in England railway employees are paid weekly, and from the information I have received, many railroads in the United States pay their employees on the first and fifteenth of each month.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Not all the railways.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—This House knows as well as I do how important it is for the working men that they should be paid as often as possible. If they are paid once a month, they must necessarily buy on credit during that month, and thus have to pay more for their supplies than if they had cash in hand every two weeks. Last session it was shown that when a man commenced to work say on the 1st of February he would work all through that month without receiving his wages, and on in March until the 22nd, or 23rd of the month before getting his pay for the month of February. Now that is a hardship, and the Bill provides that the railways which have received aid from the government shall pay their employees every fortnight. Having granted subsidies or guaranteed bonds of these railway companies, the government can reasonably exact something in return. We know that railways which have received aid from the government during the last ten years or so have to carry the mails free. I hear some expressions of doubt on this point. I may explain that a railway receiving the usual subsidy, credits the government with three per cent on the amount of the subsidy every year, and the government can use that amount for any purpose it likes, and one of the purposes is the carriage of the mails. If the government wanted to send troops by rail that three per cent on the subsidy is available to pay for their transportation. The government are entitled to use the amount placed to their credit in the way I have mentioned every year; but it is not capitalized from year to year when it is not expended. However, that does not pertain to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The hon. gentleman has referred to a report of the Railway Committee on this Bill last year. What was the purport of that report?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am informed that the committee did not deal finally with the Bill. We adjourned to attend the coronation and when we came back parliament had been dissolved. The committee did report unfavourably, but the Bill was still considered by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—As this matter is of very great importance, why is it that there are no petitions for such legislation? We have the Bill brought in at the instance of one member. No doubt he feels that there is something to complain of, but it is for the men themselves to complain by petition, asking parliament for legislation such as the hon. gentleman is offering now. Great care should be taken to avoid interfering between employer and employees. The railway companies pay their men punctually monthly or fortnightly, and what more do we want? The House should not interfere needlessly in a matter of this kind. I have no shares in any railway, but I think the railway companies should receive fair play as well as their employees. We all know that the workingman is on top to-day all over the world. If he wants anything he gets it by fair means or foul means, and the House should not press this Bill until it is asked for.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There were hosts of petitions for such legislation when the Bill was before us last session. I have not refreshed my memory with it at all, but we did hear a good deal of evidence. Leading railway men spoke against it. We had some in favour of it. We had a gentleman from the lower House representing the labour men, who told us they were earnestly asking for it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The House may remember that the committee's report on that Bill was to the following effect:

'That the preamble had not been proved to their satisfaction, and the grounds on which the committee have arrived at such a conclusion are that the provisions of the Bill are not practicable, and that the passage thereof would not be in the public interest.'

That was the report of the committee, and not as I understood the hon. gentleman to have informed the House. I should like to ask my hon. friend if he has considered whether the provisions of that Bill do not come within the thirteenth subsection of the ninety-second clause of the British North America Act, which declares that the provincial legislature shall have power to deal with property and civil rights in each province? It seems to me that when you step into the office of a company or a private house and dictate to the employer how he shall employ his servant and what he shall pay him, that that is a direct interference with civil rights.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they have the right and power to deal with the payment of the wages of railway employees or the employees of any other corporation, would we not have the same right to enter the house of my hon. friend who has introduced this measure and declare how and when and what amount he shall pay his servant girl? It does seem to me that this kind of legislation by the Senate and parliament of the Dominion is not only an interference with municipal and provincial rights, but it is dabbling in small questions that ought not to be introduced in this Chamber. I should not like to attribute any personal motive to my hon. friend, but we are too apt in dealing with questions of this kind to listen to outside influences which are brought to bear by those who have votes to cast at the election. My hon. friend shakes his head. There is the fact that we are dealing with this question, and there are other questions which my hon. friend has brought before this House which are equally objectionable, interfering with municipalities, and also with the rights of different provinces and the powers given to them under the Confederation Act. It seems to me that it is quite time that parliament adopted a system in dealing with questions affecting the general public—that they should keep within their own powers and not interfere with the rights of local legislatures or municipalities. Personally I object to this kind of legislation altogether. It is no argument to say that because trade unions make a demand that certain things shall be done, that we must comply. Many of the trades unions declare that no person who does not belong to the union shall be employed in any factory or any industrial institution. Why not go a little further to justify that, and introduce a Bill declaring that a by-law of a union providing that no man shall be allowed to work unless he joins that union and pays the fees, and adheres to the rules and regulations of it, shall be the law of the land? I think he should go the full length while he is at it, which to my mind is for no other purpose than to pander to demands made by certain classes. Why has the employer not a little right in matters of this kind as well as those who are employed? These are questions affecting the individual rights of the employer and of the employees. The general law provides that if a man employs another to work for him that he shall be paid, and if he does not pay the law steps in and compels him to pay; but there are no laws upon the statute-books declaring how a servant shall be paid, or what amount he shall be paid. It seems to me such matters should be left entirely to the employer and employee, and if there is any question affecting the civil rights of the employer and employed, let the local legislature deal with it. This is interfering with civil rights, which the parliament of Canada ought not to deal with, more particularly if such measures are demanded by one class of people only. We heard a great deal of evidence given pro and con before the Railway Committee when the measure was under consideration last year. Taking the Canadian Pacific railway and Grand Trunk railway, the number of employees runs up into the thousands. The difficulties that present themselves, more particularly where the companies have numerous branch lines in all the provinces, of obtaining the information necessary to arrive at the correct amount which shall be paid to each individual, and compel the companies to make the payment once a fortnight are unsurmountable, and we would be asking them to do something which is unreasonable, and which employees do not want. It is only the demand of certain agitators who are constantly claiming that the only rights that should be guaranteed are those of the employed, and that the employer, or the man who furnishes the money, has not the right to say a single word. We have gone too far in that direction already, and the sooner we put a stop to it, the sooner we shall arrive at a period when we shall have fewer outrages committed in the interests of labour. Legislation of this kind is encouraging, rather than discouraging, these outrages. While I express my views freely, and while I feel strongly in this matter, I do not wish to be understood as saying one word against the rights of the labouring people; they have just the same rights as others. I question very much whether my hon. friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), has worked as many hours as I have in different positions during my life, and I never found it necessary to ask an interference between an employer and myself.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think the Senate will have any particular sympathy with the suggestion that we have no right to deal with this matter. The legislators in both the Commons and the Senate agreed years ago that we had a right to deal with such matters, especially when they created the Conciliation Board, which interferes in labour disputes. I think it is rather late in the day to contend that we have no right to deal with such matters. By passing the Lemieux Act we recognized the fact that we have a right to deal with labour organizations and companies, and dictate how and what amount employers shall be paid. I have had some little experience of this, and know whereof I speak. The statement just made by the hon. gentleman in regard to the Senate's action on this Bill last year is correct. It must be remembered—and I expected the mover of the Bill would have explained it—that there were two sides interested in this Bill, even between the workingmen themselves. I think the report made by the Railway Committee last year, to whom the Bill was referred, was largely based on the representations made by the men who were most affected.

Hon. Mr. WILSON.—Will the hon. gentleman tell me whether the representatives agreed in regard to this matter? There were two gentlemen, Mr. Hall and Mr. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I remember it. The representatives, one the accredited representative of the conductors, and the other of the engineers, both stated so far as their people were concerned they had no desire to have payments once every two weeks, and were satisfied with monthly payments, and the explanation given to the committee was that the only few people who might be affected by the Bill was what they termed the 'tramp army,' who worked only two or three days or a week at a time; that the men who worked steadily for a railway company preferred their check once a month, knowing that the pay was sure. Upon that evidence, the committee decided to report that the preamble of the Bill was not proven. I was influenced by the representations made by these influential representatives of the conductors and engineers on that occasion, and with the representations also made by the railway companies. It was stated by the representatives of the railways that it was practically impossible, without an enormous expense, to pay the men every two weeks. These railways are operating from the Atlantic to the Pacific, some three thousand miles, with branch lines in all directions. The preparation of the pay rolls must be an immense undertaking. I think it was Mr. Creelman, on behalf of the Canadian Pacific railway, stated that they would be willing to contribute the cost of making that extra pay sheet to any benevolent or insurance fund that the employees of the company might be interested in rather than undertake what he considered the impossible task of paying the men every two weeks. Therefore, the House having come to that conclusion last session after hearing all the evidence, it seems to me an unnecessary waste of time to refer the Bill again to committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—One or two remarks dropped by the hon. member from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and also from the hon. gentleman from Belleville (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) in regard to organized labour should not pass unnoticed. The hon. member said that the workingmen would get anything they wanted, if not by fair means then by foul. I do not like that expression. The working classes are honest, laborious and industrious, and they get very little by foul means. I call the attention of the House to the fact, and on behalf of a large section of the country I repudiate the statement. Then remarks fell from the hon. gentleman from Belleville which are not altogether fair. He says trades unions have rights they should not have. They can prevent a man obtaining work in a factory—

Hon. Mr. POWER—He did not say that. He said they claimed the right.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why does the hon. senator from Halifax claim the right to exclude everybody from the practice of the legal profession, except himself, and those who pay the fees?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not under examination.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have asked a question and the hon. gentleman has not answered. Why does the medical fraternity prevent duly qualified medical practitioners and graduates of universities of England, Europe, United States and other countries, from practising in Canada? If they do not belong to the special trade union in a certain province or locality, they are prevented from earning their living. That is not right. The engineering body is protected on the same lines. Every professional body is organized on the same line, and no man, no matter how well qualified as an attorney, notary, solicitor, medical practitioner, or engineer, can practise unless he is a member of the union. Even the barbers have a guild now. No man can shave another unless he pays his fees into the guild. So that when the hon. gentleman from Belleville says that the trade unions are overstepping the mark in this regard, I fail to see how they are doing so. Their example is taken from the highest branches of society, and it is not fair to taunt labour for organizing trades unions so as to safeguard their rights and interests. We are not here to pass laws to dictate to the employer what he shall or shall not do. We are here to enable the masses to maintain their rights and secure their interests against the few. We do not walk into a man's house and dictate to him what he shall pay his servant girl. The Dominion government, under the Lemieux Act, has been stepping in and settling disputes between the employee and employer. I will admit that it would be a great expense to a large company to prepare a pay-sheet twice a month, but what is that expense to a company that is making a million a year out of the country, compared to the immense advantage which would accrue to the 75,000 employees of having money in their pockets to spend as they pleased? It is all very well to argue that there is a division in the ranks of labour on the question, and that certain men have obtained from their guild, or union, a declaration against this proposition by a narrow majority. The man with ready money can buy all his commodities on inspection: go from one store to another and select what he thinks is suitable, without being subject to the dictation of the grocer, the butcher, the baker, and every seller of human necessities. The workingman today has to be under the control of his baker, his butcher, and of all who supply the necessaries of life. That is not a fair condition in which to keep hundreds of thousands of working people. I am fair enough to admit that it would be a matter of expense and some trouble to the railway companies to make up their sheets twice a month; but what can be done once a month, can be done twice a month or can be done weekly. There is no question about that. The principle is there. If you are going to lay down the principle of expense on the part of a company for not making up a list twice a month, why not give them the privilege of making it up every quarter of a year? As far as we have the power we should remove any obstacle from the working people, who are asking for this legislation from one end of the land to the other on behalf of their families, and on behalf of their expense accounts. There is absolutely nothing revolutionary in that, and I fail to see why so many hon. senators have so little sympathy for the people from whom they sprang.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I regret that the promoter of this Bill has not been able to place more arguments before the House in support of this resolution for its second reading than he has presented. It is simply forcing upon the House a reconsideration of arguments presented last session—arguments that were taken up, fully considered, and disposed of. It is certainly a left handed compliment to this Senate to ask us to go over the same ground again that we went over but a few months ago. I do think that the committee to which this matter was referred, after listening to deputations from the railways both in favour of, and opposed to the measure, came to a reasonable and prudent decision that the preamble of the Bill was not proven. After all that, and the pains we took to sit from day to day, and hour to hour, and listen to all those arguments for and against that Bill, we are now asked, before the end of another year, to go over the same ground; and the hon gentleman who moves the Bill admits that he has not a single new argument to present in its favour. There is no doubt that the labour organizations, at least the labour agitators, are anxious to show those organizations that they are doing some work in order to earn the money they get for their services. We know that they are always represented here. We have no objection to that. They want to be able to show those organizations that they are doing something for the money that is contributed week after week, and month after month, and year after year of the earnings of the workingmen to pay these men to agitate and promote certain changes. I agree with the views expressed by the hon. member from Belleville regarding the rights of the provinces. I think we should fully satisfy ourselves how far this Bill now before us comes within the jurisdiction of this House. Although I am not a lawyer, or the son of a lawyer, I am rather disposed to think that the subjects of property and civil rights are entirely under the control of the local legislature, and this Bill certainly is in the catalogue of civil rights. I think we should know the view of the Minister of Justice with regard to that. We should be certain before taking up this measure again, and going to all the trouble we did with it last year, that we are acting within the jurisdiction vested in us as a Senate and in any case I think the promoter should be able to bring before this House some stronger arguments than were presented before, in order that the House would feel justified in again hearing the whole evidence and disposing of it over again. What would you think of counsel for a convict or for a party that had not succeeded in court, if he went back to the same judge and asked if he could have the same case tried over again? The judge would naturally ask, 'What additional evidence have you to present?' If the reply was, 'Oh, I have no additional evidence at all,' I would like to know whether the judge would grant a rehearing of the case. He would not. He would naturally say, 'If a lawyer is prepared to submit new evidence, and fyle an affidavit that matters were overlooked in the last trial, and that he is prepared to give that information or evidence in the case if granted a new trial, then I will grant a new trial,' But here we have a case where there is not a tittle of new evidence. The promoter of the Bill does not say that he has anything to present in addition to what was presented last session. To ask us to go over that all again is hardly courteous, I might say, to the Senate. I agree largely with what the hon. member from Belleville said upon the question. I don't think we should be forced to take up this question, and again grind away hour by hour, going over the very same evidence, and the very same arguments.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—As long as I live we will grind it every year.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I am going to move the adjournment of the debate as a number of senators are absent who are anxious to speak on this. There is a lot of new matter coming up all the time, and I move the adjournment of the debate until Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 31) An Act to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. POWER—The new clause says that the president and other commissioners may be paid out of the net revenue of the harbour such remuneration for their services as the Governor in Council may determine. I have some doubt as to whether that is, on the whole, a very judicious way of fixing the pay of those commissioners. I think there ought to be some limitation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There will be a limitation. It is not proposed that the commissioners shall receive the whole of the revenue of the harbour; but it is a very proper thing that they should be paid out of the revenue of the particular fund which they are administering.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Oh yes, that is alright, but the point is that there is no limitation to the revenue which they are to receive. They may be paid out of the revenue of the harbour such remumeration for their services as the Governor in Council may determine.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—May I ask is there any net revenue?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, really I could not tell my right hon. friend whether there is or not.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My recollection is that there is no net revenue.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is hoped that under the new commission more special attention will be given to the development of the harbour and its results than heretofore; but that remuneration will have to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and I fancy it can be safely left with the Governor in Council.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would say to my hon. friend opposite that by inserting the word 'net' you give those commissioners strong incentive to make both ends meet.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is to be hoped they will.

On clauses 8, 9, 10.

Two commissioners shall be a quorum. If a quorum be present and act, vacancies in the corporation shall not prevent or impair the effect of such action. It shall not be necessary for more than two commissioners to sign any debenture, bond or other security that may be issued by the commissioners.

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, appoint one of the said commissioners as president of the corporation.

The president and the other commissioners may be paid, out of the revenue of the harbour, such remuneration for their services as the Governor in Council determines.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us what the provision in the existing law is with reference to the payment?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the existing law, the president or the chairman was entitled to an annual salary not exceeding $2,000. Then the commissioners received such renumeration for their services as the corporation determined by by-law. What that amounted to I really could not say. I understand that they received so much for every meeting.

The clauses were adopted.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps when we are getting the third reading my hon. friend can tell us whether the Harbour Commission have ever paid any interest on the sums advanced to them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very glad to make inquiry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I may be safe in saying they never paid anything.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 58) An Act respecting the Department of External Affairs. He said: I gave an explanation of this Bill at the first reading, and the second reading was postponed until to-day at the request of the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Bill is in the right direction. It is a commendable move that this department should be put under the direction of the Prime Minister. I simply asked my hon. friend to adjourn the second reading because it struck me that I could perhaps suggest an extension to the activities of this department. The appointment of the deputy minister was a good one, and could not be improved upon. He will do honour to himself and to the country in the discharge of his duties, as he has in the past. The idea I want to submit is that perhaps the deputy minister should have an assistant, a literary man of repute in the French language, to supervise all documents sent to foreign governments. I have had occasion to notice that such documents in the French language have been so queerly translated that high officials of the French government have expressed a preference for English versions. It would be an important function of this new department to see that documents in the French language which are sent to foreign governments are in such form as will do the country honour. Coming from this bi-lingual country, I felt somewhat humiliated when I was in Paris to learn that documents emanating from the Federal government of Canada, were so badly translated that the French government asked that the English version be sent instead. Now this is a matter which the Department of External Affairs might well attend to. I had occasion myself some twelve months ago to suggest the appointment of an assistant deputy minister qualified to supervise documents from all departments which are sent abroad, and I suggested the name of a gentleman whose services have since been secured by the present government for another department. I hope the suggestion I make will be looked into and that such an official will be appointed to supervise the literary form of documents emanating from this government and parliament.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does not the hon. gentleman think that the appointment of a secretary will remedy the difficulty? As I understand, defects arise from the manner in which the translation staff do the work. If such an officer as the hon. gentleman suggests were appointed he would require a whole translation staff.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Of course I understand that these documents emanate from divers departments, and the translation should be better, but there should be a competent official attached to the Department of External Affairs to see that when these documents are sent abroad they leave this country in proper form, or at least in such a form as not to humiliate the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think clause 4 of the Bill is sufficiently wide to permit of such an officer being appointed, but I shall take occasion to direct the attention of the Prime Minister, to whose department this is to be attached, to the remarks of the hon. gentleman.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 12) An Act respecting the Erie, London, and Tillsonburg Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (No. 22) An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Power.

Bill (No. 25) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 28) An Act respecting the West Ontario Pacific Raiway Company.—Hon. Mr. McMullin.

Bill (No. 33) An Act respecting the Alberta Electric Railway Company, and to change its name to the Alberta Interurban Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (No. 34) An Act respecting the Algoma Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 37) An Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 43) An Act respecting the Cap de la Madeleine Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Montplaisir.

Bill (No. 45) An Act respecting La Compagnie du Chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord.—Hon. Mr. David.

Bill (No. 51) An Act respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 31, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

EXPROPRIATIONS FOR CENTRAL STATION AT QUEBEC.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of Acts, documents, correspondence, &c., concerning the expropriation of the properties of F. Turgeon and F. Gunn, in the city of Quebec, for the purposes of a central station.

He said: My object in moving for the return is to ascertain what decision the government have arrived at, if any, with regard to the building of the central station at Quebec. According to the railway law all houses and buildings on property taken by the National Transcontinental Railway Commission at Quebec for the purpose of constructing a station belong to the government. Last summer they gave notice of expropriation to all the proprietors, including these two gentlemen, whose properties were required for the station, and offered so much for the property as valued by experts. Mr. Turgeon has notified the government that he is willing to accept the amount offered him, but Mr. Gunn has refused. Both cases came before the Exchequer Court, and proceedings are still pending. Later on, with the consent of the government, notice was served on the parties that the proceedings were suspended. At the time, in their name, I wrote to the chairman of the commission asking what the government were going to do. He wrote me that the matter was pending and he would give a reply later on. Nearly two months have elapsed and we have no answer yet. These parties want to know what they are to do. The lessees of the property do not know whether to renew their leases or not. In the meantime no rent is being paid to the owners because it is supposed to belong to the government, so these poor people have neither their property nor the money. They are placed in a very awkward position. If the government, for any reason, do not want the property, they should notify the parties to that effect, and pay damages for the injury done them. On the other hand, if the property is to be retained by the government they should pay the owners for it. I draw the attention of the leader of the House to the awkward position in which these people are placed, and there are hundreds of others in the city of Quebec who are in the same position. I hope we shall soon have a final decision in the matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There appears to be no objection to granting this return. The necessary steps will be taken to have the papers brought down. From a memo. placed in my hands by the National Transcontinental Railway Commissioner, I learn that the names of Mr. Turgeon and Mr. Gunn, appear with a number of others contained in a description of the properties required by the Commissioners of the National Transcontinental Railway in Champlain Ward, and the Parish of Sillery, for the purpose of Quebec terminals. Mr. Turgeon's property is described as being on plan No. 160, Cad. No. 2272, Sup. ft., 1272, valuation $10,247.16; and that of Mr. Gunn, as being on plan No. 155, Cad. No. 2277, Sup. ft, 1219, valuation, $16,072.37.

In a memo. from the National Transcontinental Commissioners it is stated that these properties are on Champlain street, Quebec, and shown on the plan filed January, 1911, for the purpose of terminals at Quebec; also that valuators were appointed and on their reports information was laid before the Exchequer Court at Quebec on October 2nd, last, with a view to determining the compensation for these properties.

The Exchequer Court proceedings were stayed by direction of the Minister of Railways in November and nothing further has been done in the matter.

District Engineer Doucet, at Quebec, was written to last Friday to prepare all information in connection with the matter, and to fill out copies of the forms that were placed in the Exchequer Court, and as soon as received will be sent to the department.

THE STATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE inquired:

1. Is the State Life Insurance Co., of Indianapolis, Indiana, U.S., still doing business in Canada?
2. If so, has the said company made a report to the government for the years 1910 and 1911?
3. If not, has the deposit been returned, and what were the reasons given for discontinuing business?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The State Life Insurance Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, is still licensed to transact business in Canada.

The company made a report to the government for the year 1910. Its return for the year 1911 has not so far been filed. It is not required to be filed before March 1, 1912.

Its deposit is still with the Receiver General.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 11) An Act respecting the Canadian Birkbeck Investment and Savings Company, and to change its name to the Canadian Mortgage Investment Company.—Hon. Mr. Kerr.

Bill (No. 13) An Act to incorporate the Liverpool-Manitoba Assurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Bill (No. 15) An Act to incorporate the Vancouver Life Insurance Company, of Vancouver, British Columbia.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 57) An Act respecting the Union Bank of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (No. 31) 'An Act to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899.'

He said: Yesterday my right hon. friend opposite, and my hon. friend the senator from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) asked for certain information relative to the revenue of this port. I beg to give the following figures: The revenue of the Commission for the year ending December 1, 1910, was $121,036.84, and the expenditure for the same period was $117,007.16, leaving a surplus of $4,029.68.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—And the amount of interest on bonds?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The advances on loans from the Dominion government to date amount to $3,622,802.42. The interest payable on such loans is four per cent. The overdue interest on these loans amounted on the 31st March, 1910, to $3,312,795.40.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Will my hon. friend just repeat that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The loan being $3,622,802.40—there must be some mistake about this $3,312,795.40, as being for overdue interest. That is clearly an error.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not quite certain about that. That would be very interesting to know.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Those are the figures given me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are likely to be correct. When you consider the length of time that some of those loans have been standing it is not at all improbable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. The commission have only paid $72,300 interest all told, and the last payment was made in November, 1890, so that apparently they were paying interest up to 1890. Whether it was interest in full or not I cannot say. The commission have issued debentures to the public to the extent of $750,000. They pay interest on these debentures at the rate of four per cent semi-annually. The interest on them is paid up to date. Under the provisions of chapter 36 of the Statutes of 1907, the commissioners were authorized to issue $800,000 in preference bonds. So far only $400,000 have been issued. The secretary-treasurer advised the Department of Marine and Fisheries, under date of November 8, 1911, that the balance would be put on the market on the 1st December instant. Now, some other hon. gentleman asked me for information as to what remuneration the commissioners were receiving. The following is the information on that point:

By-law No. 108 as approved by order in council of the 17th May, 1910 reads as follows:

> Each commissioner attending a meeting of the commission or a sub-committee meeting at the time fixed for holding the same, shall be paid the sum of not less than $5, but not exceeding $10 for each attendance at such meeting.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I ask the leader of the government if the same gentlemen have been appointed?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I really cannot recall the names, but when the Bill was read a second time I gave that information to the House.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The names of the Liberals who were put out of office were given; but I desire to know the names of the gentlemen who will be appointed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend gave us the names of the new commissioners on a previous occasion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but my hon. friend must not labour under the impression that these were the former commissioners.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE--Under this Bill, three commissioners will be appointed, and I desire to ask if the government has decided on the names? Are they Messrs. Chateauvert, Letellier and Bellier?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The names of the appointees are Mr. Victor Chateauvert, J. B. E. Letellier, and Mr. Bellier.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Will those men be appointed under this Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think so.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not object at all. They are very good men.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 65) 'An Act to correct certain clerical errors in the French version of the Revised Statutes, 1906.'—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 75) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

He said: The second reading of this Bill was permitted to stand at the instance of my hon. friends from Banff (Hon. Mr. Forget), and Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Prowse). Nothing further has been done towards remedying the grievance of which they complained. I have made a suggestion to my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, which possibly, if acted upon, may result in some satisfaction being obtained. In the meantime I move the second reading of the Bill, and if it is the desire of those who are interested that it should be further postponed, I have no objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill makes provision only for the future, and does not deal with cases such as those referred to by the hon. leader of the House. As I understand it, it does not remedy the injustice that was done to senators or members of the House of Commons who were appointed and took their seats at so late a period of the session that it rendered them liable to penalties for having accepted the positions. I am somewhat surprised that the government, when they were dealing with this question, did not make provision for cases of that kind. Last year I called the attention of the Senate to the case of a member from Prince Edward Island, who instead of receiving his travelling expenses was indebted to the country for a substantial amount on account of having accepted a position in this House. Surely that should have been provided for. When the attention of the late government was called to it, my right hon. friend, the then leader of the House, not only admitted the injustice, but made a tacit promise that it should be remedied. I am glad that my hon. friend has suggested that this matter should remain upon the order paper until the attention of the government was called to the injustice, and to the fact that no remedy has been provided for it. I should have preferred—and I think the general opinion of the members of the Senate and the House of Commons who have considered the provisions of the present Indemnity Bill is similar to mine—that the Act should have been remodelled from the first clause to the last. It is apparent to every one who has studied the question, and considered its application to members of parliament that there are injustices and incongruities in it. I pointed out upon previous occasions that the most wealthy men in this Dominion who are members of the Senate could attend, under the law, and did attend but a very few days during a session of three, four, five or six months, and drew an indemnity nearly as large as those who were present every day the Senate sat. Surely that is neither justice nor equity, and I do not think the provision should continue on the statute-book. The same incongruities and injustices exist in reference to the payment of mileage of members attending this Chamber. Take the case of Sarnia and London. When a senator leaves Sarnia to attend parliament, he takes the same train which brings the senator from London. The same time is occupied and the same expenses are incurred by both senators. One receives six or seven dollars, and the other receives thirty. The law provides certain payments for members of parliament and senators who live 400 miles from the capital, while the payment of the member who lives 399 miles is reduced to the actual expenses of his pullman and meals en route. Is there any reason in that? Abolish the travelling allowance altogether if you like. I am not advocating an increase of payment for mileage to any of us. Place every member on the same basis and equity and justice will be done. I am sure the hon. leader of this House realizes this fact, and will call the attention of his colleagues to these inequalities, incongruities and injustices to members and senators which exist under the present law as administered. I call the attention of the Senate to this, and having no power to do anything further, I request the government to give it their consideration. Abolish the day's pay if you like, but put all on an equal footing.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. member from Hastings, and I hope the hon. leader of the government will give full weight to the very important little speech that the hon. gentleman has made. With respect to the first point, as to the hon. gentlemen from Banff and Prince Edward Island, I understood the leader of the House to say the other day that he was in favour of having the amounts due to those gentlemen placed in the estimates; that inasmuch as this was a money Bill we could not amend it, but that the difficulty could be got over in that way. I hope the government, with that keen sense of fair play which they always exhibit, although these gentlemen are political opponents will treat them as well as if they were their political supporters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call attention to the fact that these two senators are not alone. There are others.

Hon. Mr. POWER—All the others are supporters of the late government. I call the attention of the hon. leader to the fact, and it simply shows what care should be taken in dealing with this matter. I quite agree with the hon. member from Hastings in thinking that the law with respect to indemnity and mileage is in a most unsatisfactory condition. That law has been tinkered with a great deal during the last few years, and it seems to me that each change has simply made confusion worse confounded. A difficulty arose, and it was felt it was an abuse some years ago, when it was found that a gentleman might come here and stay one day at the opening of the session and never come back until the close, and at the close might draw nearly his full indemnity. An attempt was made in the House of Commons to remedy that abuse, and the result of the work done on that occasion was that while it perhaps hindered a member who came here at the beginning from counting all the non-sitting days, it was found afterwards that a gentleman who did not come at the beginning, but came near the close, could draw nearly the whole indemnity. I hope the leader of the government will call the attention of his colleagues particularly to this point; we have had cases here where a gentleman has spent a certain number of days as a member of the House of Commons, and who has been transferred to the Senate during the session, and that hon. gentleman has drawn two indemnities, one as a member of the House of Commons, and one as a senator, with certain deductions, so that in the end the member drew an indemnity of something like $4,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Just for information on that point, I should like to know was he permitted to hold the indemnity from both Houses, and did not the Auditor General put out that he was not entitled to do so under the Act?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, because as the law stood he was entitled to the money. He drew his indemnity as a member of the House of Commons, less a deduction for the days after he was transferred to the Senate, and he drew his indemnity as a senator from the time he came into the House, less the number of days he was absent before he was introduced in the Senate, so he drew two indemnities with a certain moderate deduction. As this Bill before us is worded, I feel that that abuse may occur again, and care should be taken to so amend it that a member will not be in a position to draw a double indemnity.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Do I understand that the cases which arose last year and which form the basis of this Bill may be attended to in the supplementary estimates, or is the leader of the House willing to postpone this Bill in order that he may introduce a clause to give it a retroactive effect?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What I said when introducing the Bill was this, that notwithstanding the fact that the attention of the government had been directed to the claims of these hon. gentlemen for indemnity which, apparently, they could not receive under the Act, yet the government felt that they would not be justified in making this Bill retroactive, not knowing precisely where it would end. The government has no official knowledge as to what those claims are, or how many claims there may be, or the amount of the claims. What I did suggest at the introduction of the Bill was that the proper method would be, instead of making a Bill of this kind retroactive, if there were any claims—and there apparently are—which should receive consideration, they should be presented to the government through the medium of the House of Commons and provided for in the supplementary estimates. I have suggested to my hon. friend from Charlottetown to-day that the attention of both leaders in the House of Commons should be directed to this grievance, and I fancy if proper representation were made this grievance would be remedied. It seems to me a much more satisfactory way of doing it than to make legislation of this kind retroactive, not knowing where it may extend.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Perhaps our colleagues who have claims for indemnity will hand a memorandum to the hon. leader of this House, who could transmit them to the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very glad to do anything I can to assist in remedying the difficulty. It is certainly one which, in my judgment, should receive most favourable consideration.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That can be done when we go into Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the meantime, I move the second reading of the Bill, and after it is before the committee, if the House thinks that it should further stand, I am quite willing it should.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 58) An Act respecting the Department of External Affairs.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 3,

3. The member of the King's Privy Council for Canada holding the recognized position of First Minister shall be the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and in this Act he is hereafter referred to as 'the Minister.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It may, and my impression is that it will be found possibly inconvenient that the First Minister should always be charged with the administration of this particular department. We have on two or three occasions nominated a special minister to take charge of a department, with the provision that at any time, if found expedient, another minister might be charged with the administration of same. I do not care much about the matter, but I would suggest to my hon. friend that before the third reading is taken he might call the attention of his colleagues to the inconvenience that might arise from having a similar clause introduced; otherwise a formal Act would have to be passed—which is always to be avoided if possible, transferring it from the First Minister to some other minister. My own private impression is that the First Minister will find after a time that it will be inconvenient to attend to the duties of this department, and on the other hand it is not expedient, in my judgment, that it should ever come to be left wholly and entirely in practice to the deputy head. It is a department to which some minister or other should give personal attention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite appreciate what my right hon. friend has said, but it seems to be the policy of the Bill, and the impression of the government, that this is an office which should peculiarly attach itself to the department of the First Minister.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not want to object to the Bill, but hereafter it may be found convenient to alter it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the question arises—and I would suggest to my right hon. friend to consider that point—as to whether it is not in the interests of the Dominion to make it obligatory that this office should be attached to the department presided over by the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State in Canada has never occupied the same position relatively to that of the Secretary of State in England, or in other constitutionally governed countries. It has never been considered an office of importance, such as many other departments of the government; but now that Canada has assumed a very important position amongst the other nations of the world, although we are simply part of the United Kingdom yet, there is no good reason why anything that is done in this department should not be done with the imprimatur, so to speak, of the Prime Minister upon it. I must confess that I am perfectly in sympathy with the policy of the Bill, making it obligatory that the office shall be administered by the Premier. It is in the interests of Canada that it should be so, and not that it should be attached to any subordinate or minor office.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have had some experience in these matters, and I might tell my hon. friend this—my strong conviction is that the Prime Minister of Canada has, and will continue to have all that he can possibly attend to in discharging what are known to be the duties attached to his office, and that the result of this—while theoretically my hon. friend is all right—will be that this matter will be left to a very great extent to the permanent Under Secretary. The present permanent Under Secretary is a good officer, and will conduct it very well, but he may not always be equally good. While I have no disposition to oppose the progress of the Bill, I think my hon. friend will find that in this country, which is a federal republic in a sense, the Prime Minister is obliged to be absent frequently for very considerable spaces of time from the centre of affairs; and I can conceive a considerable number of cases in which the fact that he is the formal head of this department might cause considerable inconvenience and considerable delay. However, the hon. gentleman's government is responsible, and they must do as they please.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should be very glad to let the third reading stand after the committee rises, and I shall direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the remarks which my right hon. friend has made. They may appeal to him so strongly as to lead to the insertion of a provision that, upon an order in council, this office may be attached to any other department of the government.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I believe that the direction of this office regularly appertains to the Premier. If my memory serves me right, in former times, before we had representative government in the shape we have it now, the foreign affairs were under the direction of the Secretary of State, who, at that time, was Prime Minister; he was, I believe, a Stuart under the Bourbons. Mutatis mutandis, taking the change of the name, the office actually reverting to the Premier is what it was in the beginning, under the care really of the Secretary of State, who then acted as Prime Minister to the King.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I realize the fact that there is a good deal of force in the objection taken by the right hon. leader of the opposition, but I cannot say that I have been convinced by what he has said that this Bill needs amendment in this particular. The external correspondence of the country must, as a matter of course, come before the Prime Minister; and it is above all things desirable that the correspondence should be, as far as practicable, confidential. Now, under the system which has been in operation during the last two years or so, this correspondence had to pass through three or four hands after leaving the Prime Minister's office. That was objectionable, and I am glad that this Bill proposes to do away with that objection. As to the case of absence of the Prime Minister, I think it is the universal practice that when the Prime Minister is absent from the capital some other hon. gentleman acts as Prime Minister, and of course he would be the acting Prime Minister with respect to this department as well as the department which the Prime Minister for the time being occupies. Then, while it is no doubt true that the duties of the Prime Minister are now more engrossing than they were some years ago, still I do not think that, considering that he has to see this correspondence, this Bill is going to impose any very great additional burden on him. And we find this, hon. gentlemen, that in a great many cases the Prime Minister of Canada has occupied the position of head of an important department. I remember that at one time Sir John Macdonald was Minister of the Interior, and at another time he was Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman from Hastings was Minister of Militia, I think, when he was Premier.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was Minister of Trade and Commerce when I was asked to form the government, but I surrendered that and took the Presidency of the Council. I might add that the practice in the past has been—and I think my right hon. friend will remember it—that in the absence of the Premier the senior member of the Privy Council acts. I have a distinct recollection of my right hon. friend being the head of the government during the absence of the Premier.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I have acted a half dozen times in that capacity myself.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Naturally the senior member would be discreet. I have nothing more to say.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not want to prolong the discussion unnecessarily, but I would just remark that the Prime Minister on several occasions did carry on the business of important departments besides being Prime Minister, and that to my certain knowledge—and I am not speaking with reference to one side more than to the other—the public service suffered severely from that fact. That is one of the reasons why I would desire to see the Prime Ministership, as far as possible freed from other work than that appertaining to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in the remarks that my right hon. friend has made, because I distinctly remember that the Prime Minister at one time was also Minister of Railways and Canals. The business pertaining to that department is very laborious, and requires the close attention of the minister, and no Prime Minister in my opinion, should assume such responsibility. As head of the government he must have knowledge of everything that is going on, particularly the correspondence with foreign nations or the home government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This is the very reason why I commended the change yesterday when the Bill came up for second reading. My experience has not been as great as that of my right hon. friend to my left, but whatever experience I have had in the contact of representatives of foreign governments, as consuls general, with the Federal government, has been that to whatever department the correspondence went, it mostly had to find its way to the Prime Minister. Of course I know that among other nations it has not been the practice for the Prime Minister to hold the portfolio of foreign affairs. There may be good reasons why the Prime Minister in this country should not hold the portfolio of Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I think Mr. Poincarré holds it now in France.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If he does—as I think he does—it is quite exceptional. It is very seldom the Prime Minister of a European nation has held that portfolio. It seems to me that, under our present conditions, the best thing to do is to allow this correspondence to go to the Prime Minister till new conditions evolve a change.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I suppose Great Britain would be a foreign country from the point of view of this Bill?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

The clause was adopted.

On clause six,

6. The administration of all matters relating to the foreign consular service in Canada shall be transferred to the Department of External Affairs.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The observations made by the right hon. leader of the opposition strengthen the objection to the passing of this particular clause. The consular service is not a diplomatic service It is a commercial service, and I think it would be found that the Prime Minister of the day would have more trouble in dealing with the subject matter of this clause than with everything else covered by the Bill. I do not think that any Prime Minister is supposed to be specially equipped for dealing with commercial problems. I am not going to move in the matter, but I think the wise course would be to strike out clause 6, and leave the consular business with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with whom, I think, it would more properly rest.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —We have no consular business.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We have not a consular service but the communications from the consular service in Canada should pass through the Department of External Affairs. My hon. friend is possibly confusing the term 'consular service' with 'trade agents,' who are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We have been making history pretty fast in Canada the last ten years, and I do not suppose the Right Hon. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain would take the same stand to-day as he attempted to take some few years ago in the House of Commons in England, when he seemed to doubt that the government had taken upon itself to correspond with the German consul, Mr. Boppe, over German matters. It seems to me, therefore, we may as well recognize that there are consuls general here who can approach our government on diverse matters pertaining to the affairs of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not objecting to their approaching the government, but the question is through what channel? Inasmuch as the questions that are raised by consuls general are always commercial questions, they ought to go before a minister whose duty it is to deal with commercial matters, and, inasmuch as the Minister of Trade and Commerce seems to be the one who would have most to do with commercial matters, from that point of view, it seemed to me he would be really the proper officer.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The party who deals with the tariff is the party who would be approached by these consuls.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Minister of Finance?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that any approach which the foreign consular service would make to the government of Canada would be on behalf of the nation they represent, and must necessarily be through the highest channels of our government. True, the matters may be referred to other departments which may be more strictly concerned in them, but the channel through which they would come, I venture to say, would be the Prime Minister of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I may inform my hon. friend that the consuls general were very happy when this department was created a few years ago, because for the first time, they were informed of the channel through which they could reach the government. Up to that moment, they never knew to what minister they should address their communications.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MACKEEN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

HIGH RIVER, SASKATCHEWAN AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

FEES REMITTED.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved that the fees paid in connection with the High River, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Bill, last session, be remitted, less the cost of translating and printing.

He said: This Bill passed the Senate last session and went to the House of Commons. Some amendments were made there, but owing to the dissolution of parliament the Bill did not return to the Senate. I am taking the usual course in this motion.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have no objection to the motion, but it seems to me the sum of money paid becomes the property of the Senate. At the end of the year, when the accounts were closed, the money was placed in the public treasury, and we may not be in a position to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—We are still within the financial year, and the fees have been remitted by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is it customary to remit the fees in a case of this kind? I think we should have some reason for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Has the Bill been withdrawn?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Parliament dissolved and the Bill did not go through its final stages.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is a bad principle to adopt.

The motion was agreed to.

SASKATCHEWAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the third reading of Bill (No. 26) An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I ask the hon. gentleman to let this order stand till next Tuesday. Representations were made to me by a prominent member of the other House in regard to this matter and I have been asked to make this request.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—May I ask what is the nature of the representations?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The difficulty is that last year a Bill was passed entitled 'The Alberta-Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.' This company is called 'The Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company,' and in the event of the two companies coming into existence there will be confusion as to the names. The member of parliament desires to have the third reading of this Bill postponed to see if some other name could not be suggested.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not see any objection to letting it stand, but these people had an opportunity to object to the Bill before the Banking and Commerce Committee. They were present at the committee and they came to the conclusion that there was no use in objecting. If people from Alberta adopt the name Saskatchewan, and other people living in Saskatchewan ask for a Bill with the name Saskatchewan in it, I do not see that there can be much objection.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The matter was brought to the attention of the Department of Finance, and Mr. Fitzgerald, superintendent of Insurance was appealed to in regard to it. He said there was no objection at all to the incorporation of this life insurance company. He was there on behalf of the government, and he could see that there was no infringement at all. The company was decidedly for the province of Saskatchewan, and the Bill was passed unanimously.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—He further stated that the insurance company to which reference has been made by Mr. Campbell, had never organized. It is not really in the field so far, and is not an insurance company in active operation.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—But these gentlemen have plenty of time now to organize. The member of parliament told me that he had overlooked it in the House of Commons and in the Senate, and he asked me as a favour to allow the third reading here to stand.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 10) An Act respecting the British Colonial Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Tessier.

Bill (No. 2) An Act to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (H) An Act to incorporate the British Canadian Loan Company.—Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw).

Bill (No. 12) An Act respecting the Erie, London and Tillsonburg Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (No. 43) An Act respecting the Cap de la Madeleine Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Montplaisir.

Bill (No. 45) An Act respecting La Compagnie du Chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord.—Hon. Mr. David.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved concurrence in the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Public Health and the Inspection of Foods to Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this amendment, which is a very trifling one and, apparently, as far as it goes, is in the right direction, but I wish to express my surprise and regret that the committee to whom this Bill was referred, have not made much more considerable amendments to it, because I think that the Bill in its present form is unworkable. I had hoped that when it was referred to this committee they would have taken steps to make a practicable measure out of it. That is all that I wish to say. I suppose that the hon. promoter of the Bill proposes to have it go to the Committee of the Whole, where there will be some chance, perhaps, to improve it.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved that the Bill be read the third time on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Inasmuch as the hon. promoter of the Bill is not here, and as the Bill, being a public Bill, should go to the Committee of the Whole, the course that the hon. gentleman is proposing to take is irregular. I think he had better either postpone action until the return of the promoter of the Bill or let it go to the Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—Then I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (I) An Act respecting the Trust and Loan Company of Canada—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 2, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (J) An Act respecting the Methodist Church.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL MATTER.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General, praying that His Royal Highness will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all contracts, agreements, &c., which are in force or which may become effective within the next twelve months between the government and any electric railway company for the transportation of mail matter and government officials and employees, including letter carriers.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF MATHIAS NADEAU.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN inquired:

Has Mathias Nadeau resigned the postmastership of Clair, county of Madawaska, New Brunswick, or if he has been dismissed? And also, if any change has been made in the fish wardenship at Lake Baker in the said county?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answers to the two inquiries are as follow. To the first: Mr. Mathias Nadeau has not resigned or been dismissed from the postmastership of Clair, New Brunswick.

To the second, regarding the fishwardenship at Lake Baker: No change has been made in the fishery guardianship at Lake Baker, Madawaska county, New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—Mr. Nadeau, a very respectable gentleman, has occupied the office for a number of years to the satisfaction of the public, and in the most convenient place for the public. I understand that the contractor for carrying the mails, has been notified that the contract should cease, because the post office has been changed. That is the reason why I put the question. I do not think there is anything to be gained, even from a political point of view, in making these changes. I have had the honour of representing that constituency for a number of years. I do not think that I ever changed an office in a single instance without consulting the people who were living in the territory, believing that to be the true principle. Mr. Nadeau was also the customs house officer, and I thought he might have resigned the position because it involved a considerable amount of work, which he performed satisfactorily for a number of years, but for which it was claimed he was inadequately paid. The post office authorities would not increase his salary, for economic reasons, I presume, and perhaps for reasons I would not question at all. But this disarranges the whole system. The man who had the contract for carrying the mail may lose his contract because the office is to be removed from the present location, which is decidedly the most convenient place it could be located for the whole locality, near the railway station, near the bridge crossing to the state of Maine, to a place called Port Kent, and I would regret very much to hear that he was forced to give up the position, or that any change had been made in the post office location at that place.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know nothing of the circumstances to which my hon. friend has referred. These answers were just placed in my hands.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to inquire of the government when we may expect the papers that have been ordered by the House in regard to the proposed dismissal of the postmaster at Orangeville? The order was granted Tuesday last. The papers cannot be very voluminous. I understand they are not down yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no information with regard to that return. I shall call the attention of the leader of the House to it when he returns.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 22) An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.

He said: The principal object of this Bill is to extend the time for building a branch of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company. It provides that the company may issue securities to the extent of $30,000 a mile on the road already constructed, or under contract for construction. As most hon. gentlemen know, this branch has recently become the property of the Canadian Pacific railway. I think that their powers of borrowing have been somewhat increased. I do not suppose there can be any objection to the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 25) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 28) An Act respecting the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McMullen.

Bill (No. 33) An Act respecting the Alberta Electric Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The Alberta Interurban Railway Company.'—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (No. 34) An Act respecting the Algoma Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 37) An Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 51) An Act respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 11) An Act respecting the Canadian Birkbeck Investment and Savings Company, and to change its name to 'The Canadian Mortgage Investment Company.'—Hon. Mr. Kerr.

Bill (No. 13) An Act to incorporate the Liverpool-Manitoba Assurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Bill (No. 15) An Act to incorporate the Vancouver Life Insurance Company of Vancouver, B.C.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

UNION BANK OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 57) An Act respecting the Union Bank of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The most important provision of this Bill is that the head office of the bank shall be moved from the city of Quebec to the city of Winnipeg. That is a somewhat important change. Inasmuch as this company has branches in the lower provinces, the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill should mention, at any rate, briefly, the reasons which lead to this change.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—The reason is that the largest portion of the business of the company has been transferred to the western part of Canada, where the bank has, I believe, the largest number of agencies of any bank in the country.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 27) An Act respecting the Security Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Owens.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 6, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (K) An Act to change the name of Ezra Butler Eddy Bessey.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES.

MOTION.

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing:—

1. The number of annuitants and parties having made payments on account of purchase of same up to the 1st February, 1912?
2. The amount of money paid in to the same date?
3. The number of contracts for annuities entered into in each month from the 1st January, 1911, to the 1st February, 1912.
4. The number of letters received by the officials in charge of the annuities branch during same period.
5. The total number of lectures and addresses delivered during the said year, 1911.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My purpose in moving for the information required in this motion is two-fold. First of all, I wish to correct certain glaring misstatements that were made in the other House, and which were calculated, if not contradicted, to leave a very false impression as to the amount of work which had been done during the past two or three years by the Department of Annuities; and, in the next place, I think that the time is opportune to again call the attention of this House to the great importance of the underlying principle involved in the Act which we passed unanimously some three years ago, and the very great desirability, on every possible ground, of setting our faces against the mischievous project of introducing in a country like this a system of old age pensions. Those are both questions of considerable moment, and questions to which the attention of this House may very properly be directed for a few minutes. As regards the first, I observe in the report of the Debates in the House of Commons that by some extraordinary error—mistake, I am willing to suppose—the gentleman who succeeded me put down the number of annuities at 514—a mistake which was taken up and used largely in the debate that followed. The actual fact is that the number of parties who have contracted for the purchase of annuities is not 514, but nearly 3,000—between 2,700 and 2,800—and that the amount of hard cash which was paid into the treasury on account of it was about $1,250,000. Under the circumstances, and bearing in mind the difficulty of introducing such a scheme, those results most amply justify the statements I made to the House when I introduced the Bill, and I say that they reflect credit and not discredit on the parties who were entrusted, whether as lecturers or in any other capacity, with the task of laying this scheme before the people of Canada.

But I may tell the House that one reason, and not an insignificant reason either, why this matter did not receive better consideration at the hands of the working classes, for whose benefit it was more particularly intended, arose from the ignorant and ill-judged conduct of certain mischievous demagogues, both in and out of parliament, who did not scruple in many cases to assure the people intended to be benefited by this Act that if they would only wait long enough they would be perfectly certain to get what the Act proposed to give them for nothing at all. And also, I may add, by the very bad example which has been set by some colonies in a somewhat similar position to Canada, notably by New Zealand and Australia, who have introduced, on various occasions, diverse socialististic elements into the administration of their affairs, which I trust will never be introduced into the administration of Canada. I make that statement with knowledge, because before I introduced the Bill I was at pains to ascertain how these things had worked both in Australia and New Zealand, and I am within my rights in stating that a very considerable number of the ablest and best informed persons in these colonies, and no inconsiderable number of the working classes themselves, regret exceedingly the action taken in that direction. They allege, and allege with perfect truth, that no scheme could be devised more likely to destroy the spirit of thrift and providence among the working classes than by assuring them that whether a man was prudent or improvident he would be equally provided for in his old age by the state. In the case of England, which has been cited, I have less to say. I regard it as a distinct misfortune that the British government should have been obliged to introduce old age pensions; but I am aware, as every student of history is aware, that the condition of affairs in England affords no parallel or justification for similar action on our part. Whether it be owing to misfortune or misconduct in past times of the governing classes, or from what different causes it may be due, there can be little doubt that, as a former Prime Minister said on one occasion, there are in England millions of our fellow subjects who hardly know from one day to another whether they can secure a meal on the following day. Under these conditions, which I hope and believe will never exist in Canada, I do not feel free to criticise their action as I might otherwise, though I may remind the House that some of the ablest men in England, of both parties, deplore the necessity, if it be a necessity, for the action that has been taken.

I say deliberately that the worst enemies of the working classes are those who would seek to pauperize or degrade them into being recipients of pensions they have not earned, and I say further, that the true object for the people and the government of Canada to strive for is, as I have said time and again, not to make preparations to relieve the submerged tenth, but to see to it that no submerged tenth ever exists in Canada, at least for many generations to come. We have every advantage in our favour, and, if well used, Canada ought to be an example, and not, as the states that I have alluded to, a warning against the introduction of a system of old age pensions. It may interest the House to know that since this Bill of annuities was introduced, the officials engaged in conducting it have received testimonials from a very great number of different quarters, all expressing the strongest approval, not merely of the object intended to be attained, but of the method in which it was being attained. Without enlarging on the point, I may say they have come from parties widely opposite in other matters to each other, parties as far apart as Mr. William J. Bryan, and Dr. Gordon, better known as Ralph Connor, an author whose books I have no doubt, my hon. friend and many others of us have read with pleasure and profit. While I for one am always prepared, and will be prepared to do justice to the virtues displayed by many of the working classes, still I am within the judgment of this House, and of every man, who has paid any attention to the practical course of life of the working classes, when I say that both in the United States, and in England and Canada, a great many of the working classes, are, unhappily, grossly improvident, and a great many are in the habit of expending on their personal indulgences sums which, if properly used, would put them far above the need of want in their old age. In fact, it is hardly an exaggeration to say that their improvidence has attained almost the proportions of a national sin. As to the cases of genuine misfortune, which undoubtedly occur sometimes, and will occur, with the resources at our command, our churches and our philanthrophic institutions, the people of Canada ought to be amply able to take care of such cases without applying to the federal government; and, if they fail, there are the municipalities and the provinces to fall back upon. Nor do I consider that granting pensions for the relief of parties who have fallen into misfortune is in any way a proper part of the federal work, or was ever intended to be made a part of it by our constitution. We stand here, to some considerable extent, at a parting of the ways. Either we may be called upon to spend very many millions for the purpose of providing old age pensions, or we may spend a few thousand dollars a year in educating our people and in encouraging habits of thrift. The House probably is not aware of the enormous cost which the system has already involved in England. I believe I am correct in saying that the present expense will amount to from thirty to forty million dollars a year at least, and in all human probability, if the proposals now before the House of Commons are carried out, it is likely to range close to a hundred millions a year. As respects the action of the government, if the government, or the parties who are charged with the administration of the department, had chosen to wait for a few months till they obtained an insight into the real working of the system, and had then decided on abolishing it, they would at least not have been subjected to the charge of acting with undue precipitation. What they have done has been to degrade the Annuities branch into a few mere clerkships under the control of the Post Office Department. They have abolished the lecturers, and they have done so exactly at the wrong time. Had they left it alone for a matter of two or three years, in all probability a sufficient number of persons would have become annuitants to have enabled the project to stand to a very great extent on its own feet without additional assistance, and when I state to the House that within the last year, from the 1st of January, 1911, to the 1st of January, 1912, 1,500 people more or less became purchasers of annuities, they will see that the lecturers were by no means remiss in their duty of bringing the matter before the attention of the public. As to the plan the government has adopted, of transferring this department to the post office, in my opinion it has been done inconsiderately. When we took this matter in hand, we made careful inquiries into the opportunities which the post office possesses for encouraging the purchase of annuities, and we found very shortly that it was a rotten reed to lean upon. We found that the vast majority of the postmasters knew nothing, cared nothing, and would take no trouble whatever even to disseminate the literature placed in their hands, and we found further, that of those who did understand the matter, a very considerable number were decidedly disposed to discourage it instead of encourage it, on the paltry ground that if they encouraged it it would detract from the amount of the savings at present deposited in the Post Office Savings Bank. I can tell these gentlemen that if the whole amount which is now at three per cent in the savings banks could be transferred into annuities, the people of Canada would have been enormously gainers by the transaction. I should not have spoken in this way but that the language which was used on both sides of the House in the lower branch showed that they knew very little indeed about the subject of which they were speaking. There was one honourable exception on the side of the government, and I am very glad to have the opportunity of paying tribute to him. I found, to my great gratification, that the Minister of Finance had taken the trouble to make himself well acquainted with the subject, and had spoken on it in a manner which did credit to his comprehension of the whole matter. The government may depend upon it, however, that no more penny-wise and pound foolish action was ever taken than that of abolishing the lecturers. I speak with reason, and I speak with knowledge, after several years study of the situation, and I maintain that the proper diffusion of information on this subject must and can only be to a great extent by oral instruction and discussion between properly qualified parties and those whom we desire to induce to purchase annuities at our hands. I make no apology to the House for having detained them in this matter, because I know that in the course of a few years the question is bound to become a live and active one, and unless something is done, and unless some reasonable encouragement is given, the House may depend upon it that they will be called upon to spend many millions for the purpose of pauperizing the people, instead of a few thousand for the sake of educating them and giving them an opportunity of obtaining an honourable independence.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no objection to the return being brought down. Had I known that my right hon. friend was going to make the observations which he has made upon this subject, I might possibly have furnished myself with such information as would indicate why the government had changed this branch of the public service from the Trade and Commerce Department to the Post Office Department. However, in the course of a short time this information will be forthcoming. Of course it is very desirable in the public interest that no such mistake shall be circulated as that pointed out by my right hon. friend. As to the amount of annuities which have been sold under this particular policy, I might say that upon the present government coming into office, the impression in the Post Office Department, which had been apparently administered very wisely—or at least it was so contended under the late government—seemed to be that they could much more advantageously administer this branch of the public service than the Department of Trade and Commerce. The impression was held that the Post Office Department could by a transfer from the Trade and Commerce very substantially expand this particular branch of the public business, and sell very many more annuities than were being sold under the system which then obtained. I am not in a position to give facts and figures today; but upon the return being brought down I shall be very glad to state to the House why this change was made. I agree with very much of what my right hon. friend has said in regard to the undesirability of the government of Canada entering upon such a scheme as that which has been outlined, or at least advocated, of adopting the old age pension system in Canada. I think we are some distance from that as yet, and that we need lose no rest for some little time concerning the adoption of such a system as that which obtains in the United Kingdom, and I think I can further say that the public of Canada appreciate the services rendered by my right hon. friend in introducing the annuities system. Wherever I have heard any comment, whether it has been public, or whether it has been in private regarding this, it has been of a character which speaks most highly for the work rendered by my right hon. friend during the time he occupied the office of Minister of Trade and Commerce in placing before the people of Canada the desirability of providing for old age by a system of annuities such as we now have in Canada. However, I am very pleased to have heard the observations made by my right hon. friend, and this return will be brought down at the earliest possible date.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—With the permission of the hon. gentleman I will say that if the post office can do the work well and good. When the matter comes up again I shall give some further reasons why I think it will be impossible to do justice to this system without some course more or less identical with the discredited system of lecturing. That, however, is a fair matter for difference of opinion; but when the government comes to examine it I think they will find that this particular business might be more efficiently carried on under the Finance Department, much in the same way as the life insurance is carried on, than it could possibly be done by the Post Office Department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While my right hon. friend is on his feet, I would direct his attention to the fact that in England this branch of the public service is carried on by the Post Office Department, and I understand it is carried on with great satisfaction not only to the government, but to the public of Great Britain.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend refer to the simple granting of old age pensions, or to the purchase of annuities?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was under the impression that the purchase of annuities was attached to the Post Office Department.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Because he will find on examination that while there is no difficulty whatever in getting people to accept old age pensions, very small and very indifferent results accrued in the way of the sale of annuities. However, that is a matter that we can discuss later on.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY PENSIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY inquired:

The number of men who received pensions under the Provident Fund of the Intercolonial railway of Canada for the year ending January 31, 1911?

Also, the amount paid out for pensions under the said Provident Fund Act during the same period?

Also, the amount contributed by the employees, and the amount contributed by the government for the above date?

And also, the amount to the credit of the said fund on hand, with the names, occupation and present residence of those in receipt of pensions under the said Act for the same period?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend permit his inquiry to stand until to-morrow or next day? This information is now on the way from the department. I sent for it; it has been posted, and I expected it here to-day.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—With the permission of the House, I would like this return to apply to 1912, as a mistake has been made in the date.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That will involve further delay.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I would like to have it placed on the order paper for this day week.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Perhaps the hon. gentleman desires to speak some time on this question, and unless there is something very important to be done to-day it might be well to advance the discussion. The hon. gentleman is prepared to address the House on the question.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—No, this is a different question altogether.

CONTRACTS FOR SUPPLIES.

INQUIRIES.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) rose to Call attention to the custom of having preferential lists in the spending departments to favour partisans, and ask the government if it is the intention not to adopt such a custom, but to award contracts to the lowest responsible bidder?

He said: I have no personal knowledge of the practice of the departments, but I have reason to believe that this system of patronage is practised extensively. I fully acknowledge the difficulty the government have in keeping their own friends and supporters at a proper distance from the treasury. A former Premier, some years ago, was asked how he liked being Prime Minister. He said, 'It is simply damnable; I cannot keep my own friends away from the treasury.' I believe that is as true of conditions to-day as it ever was. The government ought to recognize that the prosperity and revenue of the country are not made by any one party, but that the revenue is produced by the people and for the people, and should be used equally for the advantage of all. I hope there will be no gross partisanship displayed in this direction under the present government. The purchasing of supplies ought to be open to competition. My hope is that the government will be able to inform the House that it is not the intention to keep a patronage list, and that supplies will be procured by open competition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—By Act of Parliament, tenders for supplies exceeding $5,000 must be called for. Of course there are occasions when that practice has not been adhered to; but I am not aware of any partisan list or preferential list in the departments here. I made inquiry, and understand that there is nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) rose to Call attention to the employment of middlemen in the purchase of government supplies, and ask, will the government consider such a system unnecessary and invite tenders direct from the wholesale or retail dealers?

He said: Everybody knows there has been great abuse and the treasury has been robbed by middlemen. It is an extraordinary thing that deputies in the office should lend themselves to anything of the kind. It has been done more by them than by the heads of the departments. Still, as the final payment of accounts must come before the heads of the departments, they must be aware of what is going on. That deputies, in procuring supplies, should go beyond the wholesale or retail man, where they can purchase at the market price, and pay middlemen over one hundred per cent more, is unjust and indefensible. There have been many gross cases of that kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is the intention of the government to invite tenders for the purchase of supplies, and where the tenderer can be relied upon, to accept the lowest tender.

THE BRITISH PREFERENCE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY inquired of the government.

If it is their intention to introduce a Bill during the present session to increase the British preference?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The attention of the government has not been directed to this matter as yet.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Or ever will be.

CARILLON AND GRENVILLE RAILWAY BONUS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY inquired:

1. If in 1856 the Parliament of Canada passed an Act to provide for, and encourage, the construction of a railway from Lake Huron to Quebec?

2. Were certain companies by this Act authorized to build railways from Quebec, Montreal and Brockville, to Ottawa (formerly called Bytown) formed into a company to extend the time from Ottawa to Lake Huron?

3. Was there among these a company, the Montreal and Bytown Railway Company, and was this company authorized to build a line between Montreal and Bytown, now Ottawa?

4. Did any of the Acts above referred to grant four million acres of land in the neighbourhood of the railway as a bonus towards the construction of a line to Lake Huron?

5. Were these lands to be delivered as each 25 miles of the line was built?

6. Was the Montreal and Bytown Railway Company entitled to 24 per cent of this grant?

7. Was the railway line referred to constructed as provided for in this Act?

8. Did the Montreal and Bytown railway construct 13 miles of line between Carillon and Grenville?

9 Did the railway become financially embarrassed?

10. Was this line in 1859 sold to a new company, incorporated by Act of parliament, under the name of the Carillon and Grenville railway?

11. Was this Act of incorporation amended and extended in 1860?

12. Did this new company acquire the property and rights of the Carillon and Grenville railway and were they further empowered by Act of parliament to connect their line with the Grand Trunk railway at Ste Claire or Lachine, near Montreal?

13. Does section 11 of the new Act of 1860 provide that in event of the company building the line between Ottawa and Grenville, or Grenville and Montreal, the company shall have all the rights and privileges conferred upon the Montreal and Bytown Railway Company by the Act 19th and 20th Victoria, Chapter one hundred and twelve, intituled: An Act to incorporate the Lake Huron and Quebec railway?

14. Is the Carillon and Grenville railway entitled to the benefits and terms under this Act?

15. Was an Act to incorporate the Canada Central Company and amend the Act to provide for and encourage the construction of a railway from Lake Huron to Quebec passed in 1861?

16. If so, does this Act confirm previous legislation respecting the land grants and rights of the Carillon and Grenville railway for its share of it?

17. Has there been any further legislation passed respecting cancellation or in any way taking away the rights or privileges above referred to?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are taking the necessary steps towards getting this information, if at all possible, but most of it is in possession of the different provinces referred to, and it is yet uncertain whether we can furnish all the information from 1856 down to confederation. In the course of a couple of days I hope to be able to furnish an answer.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I have asked this question on behalf of the hon. member from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) who is unable to be present to-day.

THE RAILWAY BELT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRIES.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

Is it the intention of the government to put in force any regulations dealings with the administration of the land and timber in the Railway Belt in British Columbia. If so, how soon will they put the regulations in force?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The matter is now under consideration.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

What action does the government propose taking to deal with the settlers on Crown Land in the Railway Belt in British Columbia who have for many years been living on land, which they spent time and money in improving, but to which they have not been able to get a title?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This matter is under consideration.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

What action does the government intend to take to settle the question as between the squatters and the timber limit holders in the Railway Belt in British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The same answer will be given to this. There are a number of controversal questions of this nature which have arisen between British Columbia and this government, and it will take some time to obtain all the information necessary for the proper consideration and settlement of them; but the matter is being dealt with as fast as possible.

WESTERN REPRESENTATION ON THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE, in the absence of the Hon. Mr. Davis, inquired:

Is it the intention of the government to give the western provinces representation on the tariff commission?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As the Bill has not yet been passed by parliament, it is impossible to say what the government will do with regard to settling representation on that commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman may assure them that the government will collect enough from the western provinces.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They will hear from the western provinces no doubt.

THE POSTMASTER AT ORANGEVILLE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Before proceeding with the orders of the day, I desire to refer to an order of this House, made this day week, with regard to papers relating to the dismissal of the postmaster at Orangeville. I moved for these papers, and the order of the House was given. I courteously went across the Chamber and asked the leader of the House to request the government that no action with regard to the dismissal should be taken until the papers were brought down, and he promised that action would be delayed. Instead of the government laying the papers on the table of the House, the postmaster was turned out of office last Friday, and the papers have not yet been supplied. It is a peculiar proceeding. I endeavoured to make the inquiry in such a way as to give the government as little trouble as possible; but instead of giving the matter any consideration they closed their ears to everything, and turned the postmaster out of office and installed another. I want to know to-day when may we expect to get those papers that were ordered by this House on Tuesday last?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is certainly labouring under a misapprehension. When he moved for this return some days ago, the question was asked whether the postmaster had been dismissed, and the answer was that he had been.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will look at the record he will find that what I have stated is correct. Then he asked for the reasons, and I promised to bring them down. I saw the Postmaster General to-day, and he said the information had been sent, but I have not received it yet. The hon. gentleman puts me in a difficult position, as I have to contradict his statement that I gave a promise that the officer would not be dismissed until the papers were brought down. I could not have given any such answer, because I stated at the time that the officer had been dismissed. The papers will be placed on the table doubtless to-morrow or next day.

Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend has evaded the question I put to him. I asked him to see that the proceedings were stayed in the case of the Orangeville postmaster until such time as the papers were brought down. He agreed that he would ask for that. In place of staying the matter until the papers were brought down, the government appointed a successor to the postmaster and installed him.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When was that?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—On Friday last.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. leader of the House says he gave the hon. gentleman a reply to his question the Tuesday before.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He did not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will look at his notice of motion on Tuesday, January 30, he will find that it was as follows:

That he will inquire of the government if it is their intention to dismiss Mr. John Park, Postmaster at Orangeville, Ontario, from his position as postmaster without giving him first an opportunity of answering any charges made against him?

The answer I gave to that question was that Mr. Park had been dismissed. I therefore, could not give an undertaking to my hon. friend to reinstate Mr. Park in view of that fact.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I admit that my hearing is not very acute. I may have misunderstood my hon. friend, but I made the request that I have mentioned, to stay proceedings until such time as we had the papers before us, and he promised to do so. Instead of the government doing that, they appointed another man to the position that Mr. Park had held.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (L) An Act for the relief of Edna Wells.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill (No. 29) An Act respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'The Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 35) An Act respecting the Architectural Institute of Canada, and to change its name to 'The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.'—Hon. Sir Lyman Jones.

Bill (No. 36) An Act respecting Barcelona Traction Light and Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'Barcelona Tramway Light and Power Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Beith.

Bill (No. 41) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 47) An Act respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (No. 48) An Act respecting the Kootenay and Alberta Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 49) An Act respecting the Montreal Central Terminal Company.—Hon. Mr. Owens.

Bill (No. 71) An Act respecting a patent of the Spirella Company of Canada, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Farrell.

SASKATCHEWAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the third reading of Bill (No. 26) An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—There could be no possible objection to the third reading of this Bill except it be to the name. I desire to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that last year a charter was granted to a life insurance company called the Alberta Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company. That company is now about ready to do business. I have a telegram from Toronto stating that they have now over $350,000 subscribed by 55 prominent men in the west; over $25,000 has been paid in on actual stock account and deposited with a chartered bank; notice of the calling of a stockholders' meeting has been published for permanent organization under the statute of 1910, which organization will be perfected in a few days. Objection is taken to the name of this company, as it is called the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company. Hon. gentlemen will easily see that if these two companies commence business in Alberta and Saskatchewan, it means that they will do business all over the Northwest, and as their business grows they will extend it not only through the Northwest, but also to the older parts of Ontario as well; and one can readily see that the names of the two companies being so much alike—The Alberta Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company and The Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company—that it is desirable, if possible, some change should be made in the title. It is true that this Bill passed through the House of Commons, and no objection was taken to it. It was also before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Senate, and no objection was taken to it there; but, all the same, if there is any duty with which the Senate is charged above everything else it is that of preventing hasty legislation. The Senate is more a revising body than anything else, and it is our duty, if any Bill passes hastily through the House of Commons, or is not fairly well considered, to see that such legislation is carefully revised. It is but right and proper, and in the interests not only of this company but also of the other company, that some change should be made in the name. Perhaps it was a mistake last year in granting a charter to a company situated, as I believe it was, in Alberta—to give it the title 'Alberta Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.' They ought to have been confined as to name to their own province, the Alberta Company. However, that was granted; we cannot undo it; but before we charter a company with a name that will certainly conflict with the other, and hamper both companies to a greater or less extent, I think we should make some change. I was requested by one of the members to ask that the Bill be referred back to the Banking and Commerce Committee, who are to meet to-morrow or next day, as I understand, with a view of seeing if some arrangement could not be made by which the name of this company could be changed. Personally, I think that if the promoter of the Bill would agree to call it The Life Assurance Company of Saskatchewan—which to my mind would be a better one than the one proposed—it would not conflict with the other name. I simply ask the promoter of the Bill if he sees the force of the objections I have raised, to refer it to the Banking and Commerce Committee and let them take the matter up at an early date. I have no interest whatever in the Bill; it makes no difference to me; but I was requested to make the suggestion, and I have already spoken to the promoter of the Bill, and hope that he will consent.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think the objection to the name is taken at a rather late stage of the proceedings. This Bill has been through all its stages; proper notices have been given; it has passed through all its stages in the House of Commons; and was submitted to and passed by the Banking and Commerce Committee of this Chamber, of which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is a member. He had then ample opportunity of protecting the name of the company and preventing hasty legislation. He was there when the Bill to incorporate The Alberta Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company was passed last year. It would appear on looking over this Bill, that the incorporators are all residents of Regina, the capital city of Saskatchewan. Because those people from Alberta have chosen to come here at this late stage with a Bill in the title of which they desire to use the word Saskatchewan, we are told that the people of Saskatchewan must drop that name in the title of their company. It would not be fair to deprive the people of Saskatchewan of the right of using that name when they are doing business in their own province, simply because Alberta saw fit to add the word Saskatchewan to the title of their Bill. The promoters of the Bill are anxious to have it passed in its present shape. There can be no complaint by the people from Alberta that they did not know this Bill was being passed. That province has representatives in both branches of parliament, and this Bill went through without opposition. The superintendent of insurance, Mr. Fitzgerald, was present before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and saw no objection to this name, and I think he should be looked upon as an authority in such matters. He is there to hear complaints and to make suggestions. The name suggested by the hon. gentleman from Toronto would not improve the situation at all, because we would still retain the word 'Saskatchewan.' The promoters of this Bill asked to have it passed in its present shape. I do not want to press it. If the promoters of the Bill are satisfied to make some arrangement, I am content. I do not think it necessary to refer it back to the committee. The change could be made in this House. I submit that unless the promoters are agreeable to the change, we should pass the Bill as it stands.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The only question to be considered in determining whether we should comply with the request made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto is whether there will be confusion in the public mind if parliament incorporates 'The Alberta Saskatchewan Insurance Company,' and incorporates also 'The Saskatchewan Insurance Company.' If there is a consensus of opinion that it will cause confusion, I am under the impression that we must give preference and precedence to the claims of the company who were first incorporated by us with these two names, and that it is always time to alter the title of a Bill for the incorporation of a second company which is presently before us, because if we are convinced that there will be confusion, we simply place on the first company the obligation, as my hon. friend has intimated, of coming back here to alter its name. Therefore, we should either decide now, or if the motion be adjourned, decide at a later period the question whether we shall incorporate these two companies,' one 'The Alberta Saskatchewan Insurance Company, and the other the Saskatchewan Insurance Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Toronto is in error as to what took place in committee. The question was raised in the committee as to a conflict which might occur in the two companies doing business in the same section of the country, and it was understood, after a short discussion, that the Alberta Saskatchewan Company was not in a position to organize; that they had done nothing, and were not likely to do anything, and for that reason the objection to the name was not pressed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would remind the hon. gentleman that the discussion did not even take place around the committee table, but took place by the side of the table.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite right. When the question arose I took objection to the name. It is well known that in the past, in the Commons, and also particularly in the Senate, great care was taken in the passing of Bills not to incorporate a name that might conflict with an Act then upon the statute-book, and very properly so. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie, (Hon. Mr. Watson) to allow this question to stand for a few days, to ascertain if the promoters of the Bill, which we are now considering, would not consent to some change in the name, or adopt a name to which there could be no objection, is a fair one. If they agree to this suggestion, then the change can be made when the third reading of the Bill is proposed, instead of going to the trouble of sending it back to the committee. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman from Toronto that he should accept that suggestion, allow the matter to stand, communicate with the parties who are interested in the Bill, and see if some compromise could not be arrived at.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I regret to say that I cannot, as I usually can, agree with the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a pity.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is. I feel really very sorry, because I find that generally I can agree with the hon. gentleman. But there is this to be borne in mind with respect to the Bill: Suppose that the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie on Thursday states: 'On consultation with the promoters of the Bill I find they are willing to change the title slightly'; that does not end the matter, because the title occurs in some three or four places I think, in the body of the Bill, in two places at any rate. Consequently I think the course suggested by the hon. gentleman from Toronto is, on the whole, the more convenient one. If we refer this Bill now to the committee, and the committee meet to-morrow, they can change the name in the title, and wherever it occurs in the Bill. The point on which I differ from the hon. gentleman from Hastings is, that in dealing with private Bills he apparently thinks we should consider only the wishes of the promoters of a Bill. The people whom we have to consider rather are those who will do business with these companies, and our duty is to see that there is no trap laid for the unwary; therefore, even though it does involve a slight delay, inasmuch as no risk of the ultimate fate of the Bill is involved, it would be better to follow the course suggested by the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I confess I had overlooked the fact that the name occurred in a number of clauses in the Bill, but after the explanation of my hon. friend, it is my privilege and my pleasure to say that I perfectly agree with him.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why should not the promoters of both companies form a merger, and have one company, with one set of officers, instead of having two separate companies, paying two staffs of officers, and wasting the money of the insured in building palatial offices in different sections of the northwest? If they merged, one office would be sufficient, and a vast amount of money would be saved in the conduct of the insurance business, which would redound to the credit of the insured? Would that suggestion be of any value before the Banking and Commerce Committee?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think my hon. friend from Victoria division should remember that the more competition the better for the insured. If one company had control of the business of Saskatchewan and Alberta the rates would be raised. There would be no competition, and the company would charge whatever they desired. My hon. friend from Hastings made a slight error when he said a conference took place around the side of the table. That is not correct. The deputy minister, representing the government, was asked the question if he saw any objection to the Bill being allowed its name, and he said that he could see no infringement and, so far as that was concerned the promoters had complied with the rules, and he had no objection to raise against the name of the Bill as it stood.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the statement which my hon. friend has just made that the more companies the greater the competition based on his experience and study of facts? My experience is that the more companies there are the less the competition, and the greater the combine between companies the higher the rates become, and if one company refuses certain risks the other companies will also refuse them.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—My hon. friend suggested the combination, not I.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I wanted to do away with the two companies and have only one.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I have no desire to refer the Bill back to the committee. Perhaps the object will be gained if the hon. mover will postpone the third reading to Thursday or Friday, and, if these gentlemen who are interested get together I think they can arrive at a compromise.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I move that the order of the day be discharged and that it be placed on the order paper for Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (No. 58) An Act respecting the Department of External Affairs.

He said: I would inform my right hon. friend that I directed the attention of the Prime Minister to the suggestion which he made; but he is of opinion that under no circumstances should the department be attached to other than the portfolio that is now held by the Prime Minister.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —All right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He ventured to say that even though the duties of the office of Prime Minister might be so onerous as to warrant his foregoing some of the duties attached thereto, under any consideration he would adhere to the duties incident to this office.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Then as to the point with respect to the consular agents; as a rule I think that any communications with the consuls are on trade matters pure and simple and really would much more belong to the Department of Finance than the Department of the Prime Minister. However, he will have to relegate it to the Finance Department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend refers to clause 6 of the Bill?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not press it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It was I who raised the question.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL. BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 19) An Act to amend the Inquiries Act.

He said: In introducing the Bill, I made an explanation as to its objects. If the House desires any further remarks as to the desirability of amending chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes. I should be very glad to make them.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not know that there is very much objection to be taken to the Bill itself, although it may be subject to amendment; but in that connection I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman and of the community at large to the very important question of the character of some of the proposed appointments that are likely to be made, unless the newspapers are even more misinformed than they usually are with respect to carrying out these investigations. I am advised that it is the intention, among other things, to create a special committee—shall I call it a muck-raking committee—that I believe would be strictly constitutional and parliamentary—for the purpose of investigating, and either finding out or inventing any scandals that come handy against the preceding administration. I have no objection, for my part, that all proper investigation should be made—not the slightest—and if any faults have been committed, any errors of judgment, any extravagances, or anything else, let them be brought forward. But I have grave doubts, indeed, as to how the community at large will regard the appointment of several gentlemen whose past career shows them to have been neither more nor less than very active partisans—gentlemen who have gone over the country from one end to another making all sorts of accusations against the late government. Now, apparently, because everybody sees that those men must act in a judicial or semi-judicial capacity—these very accusers are to be made, practically speaking, the judges of the accusations which they brought forward. My opinion in these matters is that when the government find it necessary to conduct an investigation, that investigation should be put in the hands of parties of known high-standing, and as little as may be connected with political parties on either side. I may remind the House that that was practically what was done by the late government in issuing commissions such as that of Judge Cassels, with respect to certain irregularities which took place in Quebec, and also with respect to the investigations presided over by Mr. Courtney and other gentlemen in such matters. I am aware that there are objections, and I am aware that there are difficulties about employing judges too often in these matters; all the same I am very much disposed to think that none of those judicial investigations should be conducted except under the presidency, at least, of a judge, or a lawyer of such high standing that he could not afford to compromise his reputation by countenancing any irregular proceedings. Unless I am very gravely misinformed, the gentlemen who have been appointed to conduct these investigations, could by no possibility be considered as anything else than extreme partisans, having the strongest bias and the strongest desire to make good the accusations which they had been for a long time levelling against the preceding government. I do not know how many have been appointed,—perhaps my friend can tell me—in the province of Quebec alone; but if, as I said, the statements made in the newspapers are to be believed, a very considerable number of gentlemen whose earnings would be extremely limited in the direct exercise of their profession, are now being employed at high rates per diem. I think I was told that one ingenious gentlemen was employed by one department at $15 a day, and by another department at $15 a day, which means $30 per diem; or something like $10,000 a year, roughly speaking, a sum which I doubt very much he would earn at any other occupation that might be devised for him.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And his expenses.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—And his expenses, which are not likely to be slight or stinted, but such as become an official of the government. I submit that it is a very questionable proceeding, and one that requires to be very carefully looked after, that ordinary men, who, as I say, are neither more or less than accusers should sit in judgment on the charges that they themselves had brought; and in that respect I doubt very much the wisdom of the proceedings which the government have been taking. As to the inquiries themselves, properly conducted, I have no sort of an objection to make, although when we go into Committee of the Whole there may be some amendments which we may suggest to make sure that those gentlemen will conduct their inquiries with a reasonable amount of publicity, and with reasonable notice to the parties accused.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

WAGES OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES BILL.

DEFEATED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming adjourned debate on second reading (Bill E) An Act concerning the Payment of Salaries or Wages of Employees of Railway Companies.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I think the proposed amendment to section 259 of the Railway Act to provide for fortnightly payment of wages is a very moderate request by employees to the Railway Department and the different railways of the country. I was struck by the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in which he stated that no employees had asked for the Bill. We received here hundreds of names attached to petitions in favour of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Without interrupting the hon. gentleman, I am the member from Victoria, and I don't remember ever having made such remarks.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Victoria, B.C.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Qualify if it pleases, because I would not have my name going on the records as making such a statement.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) also stated that the labour representative—Mr. Harvey Hall, I think it was—stated that the railway conductors had sent no request to have their wages paid monthly. Well, I may say that I have here an address from the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada re Bill (E) which is as follows:

TRADES AND LABOUR CONGRESS OF CANADA.

Office of the Executive Council
112 Florence Street
Ottawa, November, 29, 1911.

RE BILL 'E'

Hon. and dear sir,—The Trades and Labour Congress of Canada represents, approximately, 100,000 organized wage earners in Canada. At the last convention of that body, held in Calgary, in September, 1911, there were present representatives of the following bodies, directly or intimately connected with the railways: maintenance of way men, telegraphers, carmen, electric street railwaymen, mineworkers, boilermakers, machinists, mould-ers, blacksmiths, electrical workers, painters, and locomotive engineers.

The convention unanimously passed a resolution endorsing the Bill introduced in the House of Commons, last session, by Mr. Martin, and that subsequently was referred to a committee of the Senate, and which was practically the same as Bill 'E.'

In addition, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Whereas, a party at Ottawa purporting to represent labour in Canada made the statement before a committee of the Senate at Ottawa, that labour as a whole did not favour any change from the monthly wage system; be it therefore

Resolved, that this congress places itself on record that this party was not authorized to make any such statement on behalf of any organized body connected with this Congress, and further, that this Congress again places itself on record as favouring a half-monthly pay system on all railways or other corporations who now have a monthly pay day; be it further

Resolved, that the executive council of this Congress be instructed to re-introduce this measure and use every effort to have an enactment passed by parliament making the half-monthly pay day compulsory throughout Canada.—Adopted unanimously.

The reference in that resolution is to the statement made by Mr. Harvey Hall before a committee of the Senate last session.

May we ask you to give Bill 'E' your support so that it may become law.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES C. WATTERS. Victoria, B.C., President.

FRED. BANCROFT, Toronto, Ont., Vice-President.

P. M. DRAPER, Ottawa, Ont., Secretary-Treasurer.

Executive Council, Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

So that hon. gentleman will see that we are backed up by a very influential body representing the train employees all through Canada. I think myself that it is a very moderate request. There is no doubt that at present it is sometimes six weeks before those people get their pay, and in every case they hold a quarter back. Now, it is of vital importance to wage earners to have their money in hand because they can buy goods cheaper, and be more independent. It is not only better for the employees, but it is better for everybody, storekeepers and all.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that frequently railway employees did not get their pay within six weeks.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I understand that was on the first engagement, if they happen to start in at the first of the month. The information before our committee was that if a man began employment on a railway on the first of the month, six weeks would expire before he got his pay because the payments are made regularly on the 15th of each month. After one payment was made, if the man continued in the employ of the railway, as I understand the operation of paying railway servants, there are just four weeks between the 15th of one month and the 15th of the next, which becomes pay day. Although there were fifteen days when wages had not been paid under the original engagement, only 30 days or one month exists between the subsequent payments.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is three weeks too long.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Payments are made weekly or fortnightly in Great Britain and in many of the States the same. They find no difficulty at all in paying; it only requires a few more clerks, a little more clerical labour. I shall read to the House a statement from the 'Star' of a night or two ago, as follows:

RAILWAY WAGES.

Senator Casgrain's proposal that the railways be compelled to pay their employees at least twice a month, will not seem excessive to men in most employments who would growl if not paid at least four times a month. It may be a serious thing for a workingman to be kept out of his pay for a month. It can easily mean that he must depend on his credit with some particular grocer, baker or butcher, which, in turn, will mean that he is deprived of the natural advantage of competition and pays too much for his groceries, bread and meat. The housewife who goes out to buy, cash in hand, is always in a better position than her less fortunate sister who buys 'on tick.' If the railway companies find it too expensive to pay as often as every fortnight, they ought to meet the men by paying in the middle of the month, and so sharing with them the burden of the delayed payment. This could easily be done with steady employees, while the temporary 'hands' must be paid frequently in any case. —'Star' Wednesday, January 31.

This is from one of the most influential newspapers in the country. The whole question has been thoroughly threshed out time and again, and I will simply say I am strongly in favour of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Last year this Bill came before the Private Bills Committee and a report was made to this House, I then moved an amendment which I thought would be agreeable to a majority of the members of this House to refer it back, and an investigation took place before the Private Bills Comittee; witnesses were heard both on behalf of the companies and of the workingmen, and after I heard the evidence that was produced I came to the conclusion that this Bill as framed was unfair, and perhaps would entail too great a hardship upon the companies, and I think it was proved that in a certain case —if I remember rightly, it was the Grand Trunk railway—it would be impossible to put into execution the provisions of the measure as it existed. At the same time I was convinced that the labourers working for the company have good reason to complain. Then I thought that in this matter, as in many others, something could be done, that between the two extremes a middle line could be drawn which would do justice to the workingman without doing injustice to the companies. I was convinced also, after having heard the witnesses who came before the committee, that the Bill was not asked for by all the employees of the railway company. There was a gentleman, whose name I do not remember,—Mr. Hall, I think—who represented a certain association of employees, I think the trainmen, who did not care for the Bill and did not ask for it. But I put a question to him. I said: 'Do you think it would be wise to apply the Bill to those who are working in the workshops of the companies in the principal places where they have workshops and what they call mechanical and car departments ?'

He said: 'Well, that is different!' So that I thought it would not be proper for the Senate to reject the Bill absolutely and to lead the workmen to believe that everything in their behalf proposed in this House is always rejected. It is not proper to give them reason to think that the Senate is never disposed to entertain their demands. I am sure that the House will let the Bill go to a Committee of the Whole, and give to those who like myself are disposed to do justice both to the companies and the workingmen, a chance to lay their reasons before a Committee of the Whole House, why the amendment which I gave notice of should be accepted. I am sure hon. gentlemen will recognize it as reasonable and admit that it can be put into execution very easily by the companies. It will be good for the workingmen, and will cause no serious inconvenience to the companies. The effect of the amendment would be to put all those who are employed in the workshops or in the mechanical departments of the companies in the same position as those who are employed in manufacturing establishments. There is no reason to deny to the four or five thousand people employed in the Angus shops in Montreal the same advantage that is given to workmen employed in the cotton, textile, or iron establishments of the country, who are paid weekly, or every two weeks. This is my amendment:

Every person employed or working in the work shops and mechanical and car departments of any railway company to which the parliament of Canada has granted aid by means of a subsidy or guarantee, shall be paid on the first day of each month such wages as have been earned by such person during the first fifteen days of the preceding month, and on or after the fifteenth day of each month such wages as have been earned by such person during the first fifteen days of the month.

I ask that this Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House in order that we may hear the arguments for and against this and any other amendments that may be offered.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am somewhat surprised that the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, who is looked upon, and very justly so, as one of the great champions of provincial rights in this House, should advocate our dealing with a measure which I think must strike him as one that would come more properly within the sphere of the provincial legislatures.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman will allow me——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I shall not allow the hon. gentleman to interrupt me. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Victoria has no right to interrupt the speaker.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to a point of order; I want to know what is before the House?

The SPEAKER—The question before the House is the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles has moved an amendment.

The SPEAKER—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is just about as much substance in that point of order as there is generally in the hon. gentleman's speeches. To my mind, the hon. gentleman from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) was perfectly right when he said that this was not a measure which came within our jurisdiction. This is a measure which deals simply with civil rights. Surely the engagements made between masters and their employees are matters for the local legislature. That is a matter of civil rights as clearly as anything can be.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Has not the hon. gentleman already spoken on this motion? If so he has no right to speak again.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have not spoken.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am so informed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman should not act upon hearsay. He ought to be a good enough lawyer for that at any rate. Constitutionally I think this is a matter which we should not deal with. I go further—

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I do not like to contradict the hon. gentleman on the question of provincial rights. I may be mistaken, but I understood last year that the principle was decided. Although a certain number of members of the Senate made the same objection, it was considered that the Bill, because it was a measure to amend a public and federal Act, was within our jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not remember everything that took place last year, but I remember that the committee reported against the Bill, and the Bill had not been passed at the time parliament was prorogued. It is slightly embarrassing when one has not prepared himself particularly to discuss a measure, that he should be interrupted so frequently. I think I have stated that, even if parliament had a constitutional right to pass this Bill, still I thought it was a measure that they should not pass. Why should parliament interfere between employer and employees, unless it is absolutely necessary? I contend that no necessity whatever has been shown for interference. The men who are employed by a railway company are not compelled to work for the company. They know the terms on which they are employed, they know that they are to be paid once a month; and if a man with his eyes open chooses to enter a service where he knows he is to be paid only once a month, why should he, after he gets into the service, try to induce parliament to alter the bargain he voluntarily entered into with his employer? I do not see it at all. I believe in giving labour every right it should have, but I do not believe that parliament should make itself a party in differences between employers and employees. For that matter, I contend there is no evidence that those employees have agitated, and made representations to the railway companies for the purpose of having this change made. It was not shown before the committee of last year that there had been any agitation, that the companies had been approached with a view of having this change made. Under the circumstances, it is really preposterous for the workmen to ask us to interfere between them and their employers, when there has been really no absolute conflict between them. When the workmen get up an agitation and fight it out with the railway companies for some time, then they can come before either the Railway Commission, which I think would have a right to deal with a question like this, or go under the Lemieux Act and have an arbitration. But to come here when there has been no absolute conflict, and ask us to alter the bargain they made with their employers is something which should not be encouraged. That is a kind of legislation which I do not think we in Canada should attempt. The hon. gentleman from Moncton (Hon. Mr. McSweeney) read certain resolutions which had been passed at trades union gatherings; but, hon. gentlemen know very well how easy it is to get resolutions of this kind adopted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why they resoluted to abolish the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—All you have to do at a meeting of that kind is to say this is a case in which labour is arrayed against capital, and any resolution at all, even though it were a resolution such as those passed in the Iron Workers' Union in the United States, will go through. The workingmen, so called, are true to their unions, and if one member of a union asks for a thing the probabilities are that he will be backed up by all the other members. There is always a shrinking from anything that looks like refusing to go the whole distance with their fellows. Outside of what we have heard here in parliament there has not been any agitation in the country on behalf of this measure. You never hear or read about it. The men who are really at the back of this Bill are not the workingmen themselves, but certain gentlemen who expect to make a little political capital out of the workingmen.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I could understand that if I ran as candidate for mayor in a city in which the labour element is very strong, I should perhaps introduce a Bill of this kind.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The election is over now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There are other elections to come. I can understand too that there are certain gentlemen who, amongst the multifarious objects that they take under their protecting wings, include all classes of labourers, and who think they should, as a matter of course, support a measure of this kind; but how any business man, any sensible man who wishes well for his country, should undertake to urge a measure of this kind, I do not understand.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Sir Wilfrid drafted that Bill himself.

Hon. Mr. POWER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is justified in making a statement of that kind. In the first place, unless Sir Wilfrid stated it himself, it is mere hearsay, and in the next place I do not think it is a fair argument. It is not impossible that the gentleman who was introducing the measure may have gone to Sir Wilfrid, and asked him to put his idea into correct language. That may have happened; but I am satisfied that Sir Wilfrid did not himself originate or draft the Bill. I have not looked into the statute creating the Railway Commission, but it seems to me this is a question which might very properly come before the Railway Commission. Before that body, the men will get fairplay. The Railway Commission has not shown any disposition to unduly favour the railway companies, and if the men have a grievance, I am satisfied the commission would, unless I am wrong in my view, of the law, see that they got fairplay. The hon. gentleman must remember also that if we legislate this way for the railway employees we shall be obliged to legislate for any other class of working people who come forward and say we need to be paid weekly, daily. or every six hours. There is no limitation to it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It applies only to railways subsidized by the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—For instance, take the civil servants of this country. They are, I take it, very nearly as deserving a class as the railway employees, but they are paid only once a month. The truth is, any class of people who get good wages or good salaries, and who are certain to be paid every month have no reason on earth to complain. The great trouble with most people is that they cannot get their pay when it becomes due. I am sorry that I should be obliged to differ from two or three hon. gentlemen here for whom I have great respect, but I feel that it is due to ourselves, and to this House that we should look at this question in a cold-blooded and businesslike way.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I am in sympathy with the Bill, and would like to see it become law, but it seems to me it is not within our jurisdiction. The Bill provides that any employee of any railway company to which the parliament of Canada has granted aid by means of subsidy or guarantee, &c. I have a doubt as to whether the mere fact of the parliament of Canada having granted aid to a railway is sufficient to give us jurisdiction to pass such a law as this. If the Bill were confined to employees of railway companies incorporated by parliament, then it might perhaps be within our jurisdiction. The Privy Council has established the principle that parliament has a right to legislate on the necessary incidents of those subjects which are clearly within its jurisdiction. For instance, in any matter in which jurisdiction is given to parliament if it is necessary to legislate on any incident necessarily connected with that legislation, though that incident might of itself be the subject of provincial legislation, it has been held by the Privy Council that we can legislate not only on the subject, but on the incident as well; but only in such cases where the incident is connected with a principal subject, which subject is clearly within our jurisdiction; but I doubt very much if the railway companies, and I think the payment of wages to employees of such companies would be an incident, and so far as they are concerned, parliament would have jurisdiction; but I doubt very much if the mere fact of granting aid to a railway company would be sufficient to give parliament jurisdiction concerning the payment of wages by that railway company. Take the case of a railway company incorporated in the province of Ontario, a purely provincial corporation, amenable only to the laws of the province; would the mere fact of parliament aiding it be sufficient to bring that corporation within the jurisdiction of this parliament? I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is made to apply only to federal roads.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Oh no, that is where the difficulty in my hon. friend's Bill lies. The language used clearly contemplates, and very probably will include provincial railways, to which parliament may have granted aid by way of subsidy or otherwise. It is clear to my mind, so far as these provincial companies are concerned, that we have no sufficient jurisdiction in parliament to legislate concerning wages of employees of those railways. If my hon. friend wants to make his Bill constitutional, he should say 'any railway company incorporated by the Parliament of Canada.' Otherwise I do not think it would be constitutional.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Has not parliament already legislated in the very direction to which the hon. gentleman takes objection now? Parliament compels all railways which have been aided by the Dominion to grant free transportation to senators and members of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That is a different question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is a different question but along the same lines.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With the leave of the House, I wish to call attention—because it is an important incident—to the fact that before the committee of last year, when the committee were about reporting on the Bill, the gentlemen who represented the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk Railway Company both stated in the most positive manner that if a majority of their employees expressed a desire that this practice should be adopted of paying semi-monthly, the companies would adopt that practice.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman state to the House what the answer was on behalf of the men—that they dare not do so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I may answer the hon .gentleman, that in so far as the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada is concerned, nobody appeared on behalf of the men to ask for such a Bill. The member for the division in which the terminals of the Grand Trunk railway are situated, who is now the Minister of Justice of Canada, who appeared before us, declared that he had had no representation from the men of the Grand Trunk railway —that not one man had approached him to ask for this legislation, but that he appeared at the request of a number of merchants in his division who preferred the bi-monthly pay to the monthly payment.

However, I do not rise to discuss the position that the railway employees took. We are now dealing with the principle of the Bill. I had occasion to say last year that I could not comprehend on what lines this Bill was framed; but the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has just drawn attention to the fact that the division seems to be very clear indeed. This seems to be governing railways which had been subsidized by the government of Canada. I wonder why my hon. friend has not drafted this Bill to cover the railways that have been incorporated by the Dominion, because they fall under the jurisdiction of parliament. It does not mean that the principle of the Bill would not be adhered to, but at all events he would have solid ground, and he would not have legislation which appears to be absolutely arbitrary as to its scope. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) seems to doubt that parliament has a right to regulate companies not incorporated by Canada. This doubt has been removed by a judgment of the Privy Council on a reference made by pparliament itself, in 1904. An Act was passed, 4 Edward VII., Chap. 31, which declared that no agreement with railway employees by which the companies were relieved from liability for personal injury could avail in any law suit in damages. I am just putting briefly the effect of this legislation. This Act was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court declared that the Act was intra vires of the federal parliament and the Privy Council, on appeal, rule as follows:

> The question in this appeal is as to the competency of the Dominion parliament to enact the provisions contained in section 1 of 4 Edward VII., chapter 31, of the Statutes of Canada. These provisions may be generally described as a prohibition against any 'contracting out' on the part of railway companies within the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament from the liability to pay damages for personal injury to their servants.
>
> It is not disputed that, in the partition of duties effected by the British North American Act, 1867, between the provincial and the Dominion legislatures, the making of laws for through railways is entrusted to the Dominion.
>
> The point, therefore, comes to be within a very narrow compass. The respondent maintains, and the Supreme Court has upheld his contention, that this is truly railway legislation. The appellants maintain that, under the guise of railway legislation, it is truly legislation as to civil rights, and, as such under section 92, subsection 13, of the British North America Ac, appropriate to the province.
>
> The construction of the provisions of the British North America Act has been frequently before their Lordships. It does not seem necessary to recapitulate the decisions. But a comparison of two cases decided in the vear 1894, viz: Attorney-General of Ontario, v. Attorney General of Canada (1894) A.C. 189; and Tennant v. Union Bank of Canada (1894), A.C. 31—seems to establish these two propositions; first, that there can be a domain in which provincial and Dominion legislation may overlap in which case neither legislation will be ultra vires, if the field is clear, and secondly, that if the field is not clear and in such domain the two legislations meet, then the Dominion legislation must prevail.
>
> Accordingly, the true question whether this law deals with a civil right—which may be conceded—but whether this law is truly ancillary to railway legislation.
>
> It seems to their Lordships that, inasmuch as these railway corporations are the mere creatures of the Dominion legislature—which is admitted—it cannot be considered out of the way that the parliament which calls them into existence should prescribe the terms which were to regulate the relations of the employees of the corporation. It is true that, in so doing, it does touch what may be described as the civil rights of those employees. But this is inevitable, and, indeed, seems much less violent in such a case where the rights, such as they are, are, so to speak, all intra familiam, than in the numerous cases which may be figured where the civil rights of outsiders may be affected. As examples may be cited provisions relating to expropriation of land, conditions to be read into contracts of carriage, and alterations upon the common law of carriers.

This judgment of the Privy Council seems to be on all fours with this Bill, although there remains to be settled by this House the question of policy. I would not be disposed to vote in favour of the Bill as it now stands, and I will await whatever amendment may be brought before the Committee of the Whole to see if I can support it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I ask whether the judgment did not refer entirely to the liability of railway companies to the employees who met with accidents? I understood from the reading of the decision that that was the cause of the appeal to the Privy Council and that the Privy Council decided that the railway corporations were not relieved from liability for accidents to their employees. Does the decision go further than that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It went to the extent of declaring intra vires the legislation passed by the parliament upon this subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that; but the application of those words, as I understand it, was exclusively to that one point, and not to the question of a bargain that might be made as to the amount the men should be paid for their services.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then if I am right, that is not applicable?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But it declared that we could legislate on all things ancilliary to the incorporation of a railway and to the powers governing thereto.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I did not rise to a point of order when the hon. gentleman from Halifax was speaking, but I think it is only right that I should make a correction. There is a well-established rule of the Senate that we must not impute motives. The hon. gentleman from Halifax said that the hon. member who was promoting this legislation was seeking to become mayor of the great city of Montreal, and, with the object of obtaining the votes of the workingmen, this measure was being introduced. That was imputing a motive. An old parliamentarian like the hon. gentleman from Halifax should set a better example in this House. I did not choose to interrupt him and I let it pass for the time. Another matter which I wish to correct, which is also very much against the rules of this House, is the remark by a senator, doubting the statement made by an hon. gentleman in this House, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had drafted this Bill. If hon. gentlemen will refer to 'Hansard' of 1911, they will find after the Bill had passed its second reading unanimously in the House of Commons——

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Was it the same Bill?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Exactly the same Bill—verbatim. After it had passed the second reading unanimously in the House of Commons, it went into committee and Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

'This clause, which will be the whole Bill is amended to read as follows'—

And then follows the Bill verbatim as presented by myself.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am sorry that the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière should have taken the more or less facetious observations which I made as applying to himself. I never mentioned the city of Montreal, and never mentioned the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière. All that I said was, I could understand that a gentleman who was aspiring to the position of mayor of a city where there were a great many workingmen might support a measure of that kind.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—How many such gentlemen are there of that kind in this House?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not think the hon. gentleman was going to put the cap on in that way.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. member referred to the hon. gentleman who introduced the legislation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman, as usual, is in error. I did not say that. I said that I could understand a gentleman wanting to represent such a city introducing such legislation. I did not say that anybody did introduce it, and really I think the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) should have a private secretary who could take the notes of things for him, so that he would be able to get them correctly.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What did the hon. gentleman mean, if he did not mean what he said?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I made a few observations a few days ago on this measure, and, in justice to a representative who appeared before that committee I desire to correct the statement. In my remarks I think I said that the engineers were represented before that committee and that they were not in favour of the Bill—at least I am so reported. I am informed by the representative of the engineers that he appeared before the committee in favour of the Bill. I mentioned two gentlemen, Mr. Harvey Hall and Mr. Maloney, but am informed that neither of these gentlemen represented the engineers.

The House divided on the motion for the second reading of the Bill, which was lost on the following division:

CONTENTS.

The Honourable Messieurs:

Belcourt,	Ellis,
Boyer,	Gillmor,
Cartwright	McSweeney,
(Sir Richard),	Poirier,
Casgrain,	Prince,
Cloran,	Riley,
Costigan,	Ross (Halifax),
David,	Scott
Douglas,	(Sir Richard)—16.

NON-CONTENTS.

The Honourable Messieurs:

Baird,	King,
Beith,	Legris,
Bell,	Lougheed,
Bostock,	Macdonald
Boucherville, de	(Victoria),
Bowell	McLaren,
(Sir Mackenzie),	McMillan,
Campbell,	McMullin,
Coffey,	Power,
Derbyshire,	Prowse,
Dessaulles,	Thompson,
Edwards,	Watson,
Gibson,	Wilson (Elgin),
Kerr,	Young—26.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 66) An Act respecting the Public Archives.

(In the committee.)

On clause 3,

The Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be called the Dominion Archivist, who shall have the rank and salary of a deputy head of a department, and who, under the direction of the minister, shall have the care, custody and control of the public archives.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I have made a particular study of this Bill, because I am somewhat interested in the matter of archives. The government has made a good move in transferring the archives from the Agricultural Department to that of the Prime Minister. But this clause somewhat puzzles me; it changes to a considerable extent, as I understand, the status of the Dominion Archivist. Dr. Doughty is a most efficient official, and the right man in the right place, a gentleman who seems to possess particularly exquisite qualities for holding that position. Therefore what I say is not intended to cast a reflection, direct or indirect, upon that gentlemen, either in his personal or his professional capacity. But there is to-day in the Archives Department another gentleman who occupies a position apparently equal to that of Dr. Doughty. This gentleman is Dr. Roy, who was appointed to the position by the Liberal government some three or four years ago on account of his special efficiency, to look more particularly after the French portion of the Archives. You readily understand that a person, however well versed he may be—and Dr. Doughty is one of those persons—in historical lore has his hands full looking after the English part of the Archives; and that as the country was for centuries under the domination of France, there is a wealth of French manuscripts and documents which it will take almost a man's life time to master. These being the facts, the late government selected Mr. Roy, from the province of Quebec. His appointment, as I see by a report of the Committee of the Privy Council, is dated the 14th May, 1908, and reads as follows:

'Mr. Joseph Edmund Roy, Litt. D., F.R.S.C., of the town of Levis, Quebec, is appointed a member of the staff of the Archives Branch of the Department of Agriculture with a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum from the 1st of May, 1908.'

Now, that salary of $3,000 per annum is exactly the salary drawn by Dr. Doughty, which prima facie shows equality at least of salary. Equality of salary in this case pretty well indicates an equality of status. I would like to ask my hon. leader what, under this clause, is going to become of this gentleman?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This department will be adminstered the same as any other department. My hon. friend must rely upon the government to do what is right with reference to all the employees of this particular branch of the public service. We cannot give each employee a status in the Bill. The head of the department is Dr. Doughty.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—What I wanted to know was whether any provision was made for this gentleman, who at the time of his appointment occupied a position as regards salary and status, exactly on a level with Dr. Doughty, except as to title.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am entirely unaware of any contemplated interference with the present employees of the department. My hon. friend will have to rely on the Prime Minister, who will be the head of that department, seeing that justice is extended to all the employees.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I am glad to hear that. I may raise the matter later on, but I certainly rely on my leaders, the Premier and the leader in this House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There cannot be two deputy heads of a small department.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The hon. leader of this House says there cannot be two deputy heads. I crave permission to contradict him. There can be, and there are at times, in certain places, two deputy heads; witness the library here, where Mr. Decelles is librarian and Mr. Griffin is also librarian, Mr. Decelles holding precedence. The position of archivist is as important to this House and to the country as that of librarian. An Englishman once said: 'Give me the making of a nation's songs and I will give you the making of its laws.' Gentlemen give me the making of the history of a country, and I will pretty well shape its standing or its good name in history. In this particular case I have personally all confidence in the actual incumbent of the place, but it is most important that our archives be well looked after. I will give another instance to my hon. leader where two deputy heads are employed—I refer to the Civil Service Commissioners, Mr. La Rochelle and Mr. Short. It is still more important in the case of the Archives that the department should have at its head one whose particular attention should be devoted to the English end, and who should be Archivist with precedence. Dr. Doughty should have that. But another one, as was intended by the Liberal government, should hold a situation equal to that of Dr. Doughty in order to look after what constitutes the great bulk of our archives, that part of it which is more difficult of access and more difficult of understanding, because it is remote and goes down to the foundations of our country. Although trusting to the wisdom of my hon. leader—and no one trusts him more implicity—I say that on the face of this Bill there is apparently a dropping of one of those two gentlemen. Now, I would not have Dr. Roy appointed chief archivist; Dr. Doughty should have that title; but I would have Dr. Roy continued in the status given him by the other government. I have reason to ask for that. In Nova Scotia there was a commission appointed by the government at Halifax, and Dr. Atkins was appointed with the object of gathering documents and preparing a documentary book which would serve for historians. He did that, and what is the consequence? To-day we have proofs that a large number of documents favourable to the French Acadians, justifying them as it were, have disappeared—and it has been suggested by writers of authority that their disappearance was not accidental. What is the consequence to-day? Historians take the compilation of Dr. Atkins, and every time condemn the French Acadians in the matter of their deportation and justify those who deported them. If the French were guilty and deserved to be deported, let history say so; let the truth be told; but there should be no garbling of documents upon which the history and honour of a nation, or a people is based. Of course nothing of this sort can happen with such men as Dr. Doughty or Dr. Roy; but I am giving an instance which goes very far towards justifying me in the position I am taking here, and that has been taken before me, in having at the head of the Canadian Archives, for gathering material on which to base the history of this country, two men of the capacity of Dr. Doughty and Dr. Roy. I warn my hon. friend, that if Dr. Roy is dropped from this service it will be a loss to the historical lore of this country, and the historical society, and all the historians of Canada will regret it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY. I happen to know a little of Dr. Roy and the circumstances under which he was chosen to help Dr. Doughty in the performance of his duties. I know that at the time, Dr. Roy refused the position because it was not intended to put him on the same footing, and until that status was obtained from the government of the day he persisted in his refusal. The government granted what Dr. Roy wanted, and he came up here. He has performed his duties to the satisfaction of the country, and the government of the time, and I do not see why, in a service of so much importance as the Archives, he should lose his status by any improvement which is made in the department. I hail with pleasure the fact that Dr. Doughty is made a deputy minister; but the government should, in all fairness, find a way to do justice in the case of Dr. Roy, and if they cannot put him on the same footing as they have put the other librarians in this country, they should at least give him a status, whatsoever it may be, and a salary equal to the status they are now giving to Dr. Doughty.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I hope the government will take into serious consideration the remarks which have been made by the two hon. senators who have just spoken.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER. I did not expect to speak at all in this debate, but I wish to emphasize the remarks that have been made by the Hon. Mr. Poirier and His Honour the Speaker of the Senate as to the merits of Dr. Roy. His appointment by the late government to the important position which he has occupied with so much honour was not a political appointment. Dr. Roy had been an adversary of the late government, had always been a good Conservative, but he was chosen by them on account of his special merits and of his capacity. He is well known as being probably the greatest authority on Canadian history that there is in Canada. I am very happy to join my humble voice with the hon. members who have spoken to say that I hope Dr. Roy will be treated with generosity and justice.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—If he is a Tory I guarantee he will.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the very flattering references that have been made to Dr. Roy.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—With the hon. gentleman's permission, I will state that as in the case in England, in France, in Germany, and in other European countries there is an excellent opportunity to give these distinct titles, not conflicting in the least, one being as in England, in control of the historical manuscripts and the other of the departmental records. If we are to have a new Bill, it is important that we should have it so framed as to improve the efficiency of the service. The documents that go towards making history are of two kinds—the departmental documents, and the really historical documents. One of these gentlemen could have one title, and the other another, with an apportionment of work by which there would be no conflict of jurisdiction. I think that is the division that obtains now.

The clause was agreed to.

On clause 4,

The Governor in Council may appoint such other officers and clerks as are required for the proper care, custody and control of the public archives, all of whom shall hold office during pleasure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I wish to amend that by adding the following as a subsection:

'The provisions of the Civil Service Act shall apply to the Dominion Archivist and all officers and clerks appointed under this Act.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would not the Civil Service Act apply as a matter of course?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is doubtful.

The clause as amended was agreed to.

On clause 8,

The Dominion Archivist, under the direction of the minister, may acquire for the public archives all such original records, documents and other material as he deems necessary or desirable to secure therefor, or he may acquire copies threeof, and all such originals or copies so acquired shall form part of the public archives, and he may pay for the same, or for the transcribing, binding and repairing thereof, or any other expense incurred in connection therewith, out of such moneys as are voted by parliament for the purposes of the public archives.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I desire to ask what has become of a certain order in council, dated April 17, 1908, which appointed a commission to act with the Dominion Archivist in collecting documents? The members of the commission were foremost historians from Ontario and Quebec. Dr Roy was among them. The commission found favour with the public and the newspapers on both sides. I will read to the House from a report of the Committee of the Privy Council. The memorandum is dated April 8, 1907, and is as follows:

1. That there shall be established an Historial Manuscripts Commission for Canada, which shall act to the Minister of Agriculture in an advisory capacity.

2. That the members of the said commission shall be historical scholars of recognized attainments, whom the minister may deem it advisable to invite to take part in the task of shaping and of executing a systematic plan for the prosecution of all those activities that are carried on under the auspices of the Archives Branch.

3. That the main function of the said commission shall be to co-operate with the Dominion Archivist in collecting, arranging and rendering accessible, those original sources from which alone an adequate knowledge of Canadian history can be gained.

4. That in addition to such other duties as from time to time may be assigned to the commission by your Excellency in Council, it shall:—

(a) Take steps to examine, and revise, if necessary, the translation in the official reports of the Archives Branch, already published, and to consider what means should be adopted to supplement and improve the existing calendars, with a view of making them a complete index of the documents relating to the period which they cover;

(b) Consider what clauses of documents should be copied or published by the Archives Branch, and report regarding the order to be followed in the quest for materials:

(c) Consider the question of publishing under the care of competent editors, such historical materials as, in the interest of historical science and the development of a national spirit, should be committed to print:

(d) Seek to ascertain the nature and extent of the materials for local history that still exist in different parts of the Dominion, and report on any steps that can be taken to preserve these from destruction.

5. That it shall be a further duty of the said commission to consider in detail, the question of the expenditure of such sums as may be appropriated by parliament for carrying on the work of the Archives Branch, and to make their recommendation accordingly to the minister.

6. That the chairman of the said commission shall be the Minister of Agriculture, or in his absence, the Deputy Minster.

That meetings shall be held at the call of the chairman.

That the members of the commission shall be invited to serve without remuneration, their expenses in attending such meetings, however, shall be paid by the government.

That the Dominion Archivist shall be, ex-officio, a member of the commission.

That the members of the commission shall not exceed nine, including the chairman and the Dominion Archivist.

I see nothing of the commission in this Bill. That commission is a very important and useful one in obtaining material for making history. To my knowledge they have performed very useful advisory and other work. Why has it been dropped?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Bill in no way disturbs any organization, if there be an organization such as my hon. friend refers to. The intention is to bring out of the confusion which exists at present in the Archives, some system of organization. The idea is to assemble the Archives under one central control or administration. At the present time, the Archives of Canada are distributed over the whole Dominion. There is no organization, no method, no system; everything is confusion, and, so far as the existence of this commission is concerned, the order in council does not necessarily fall by reason of the passage of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—But, in order to better attain the very desirable object the hon. leader mentions, I should like to see a clause empowering the Dominion government to come to some arrangement with the provincial governments, so as to restore, as the case may be, to the provincial governments, materials or documents which we hold, of interest to them more particularly, and, in exchange for that, they might give us other documents which are in their possession, and which should be under the control of the Dominion Archivist.

The clause was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD, from the Committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (I) An Act respecting the Trust and Loan Company of Canada.—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

Bill (J) An Act respecting the Methodist Church.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 7, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (M) An Act respecting certain Patents of the Continental Can Company.—Hon. Mr. Bell.

SHIPMENTS OF GRAIN TO THE UNITED STATES.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to call the attention of my hon. friends opposite to a despatch, which I believe is confirmed by a statement made in the House of Commons last night, and which is to this effect.

> Washington, Feb. 5.—Under special permission by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern railways have put into effect rates on wheat and oats from Canadian points to Duluth and Minneapolis. The rates were made effective on short notice in order to move about 25,000,000 bushels of tough or damp wheat, which must be shipped during cold weather, or be absolutely wasted.
>
> The commission at first declined to establish the rates on less than statutory notice—thirty days—but on representations that Canadian farmers would suffer severely if the permission were not granted, the commission acceded to the request. The understanding is that the wheat or its products will be exported from Duluth and Minneapolis, being shipped from Canada in bond.
>
> The commission has not been called upon to determine whether the Canadian roads may require United States railway cars for transporting the wheat. This probably will be left to the Canadian Railroad Commission.

With respect to that statement, I believe that those representations were made either directly or indirectly at the instance of the government of Canada. I entirely approve of their having acted in this matter; but I must also say that this is a most marvellous commentary on the wisdom of the action of certain sections of Canada in refusing to hold any intercourse with the United States when their markets were open to them. I must further point out to hon. gentlemen, and I hope they will bear it in mind, that any men who may suppose that reciprocity is a dead issue will very shortly find, so far as the Northwest at any rate is concerned, that reciprocity between the United States and Canada, or at any rate much freer interchange of products between those two countries, will be a dead issue when Canada is an island in the middle of the Atlantic or Pacific, and not before.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am delighted that my right hon. friend derives a measure of comfort from the newspaper despatch that he has read, and of which he has spoken. The conditions are not at all of an economic character that have brought about the shipment of grain to Duluth. I might point out to my right hon. friend that there has been a large congestion of grain in the Northwest for a couple of months past, that could not possibly be relieved owing to the limited capacity of the elevators at Port Arthur. The terminal elevators there have been filled. In addition to that, the rolling stock of the various companies operating in Canada has been crowded to capacity, I might say; but owing to the very rigorous winter which has prevailed in the Northwest, particularly during the last month—the reading of the thermometer being, I suppose, continuously lower than it has been for many, many years—it was utterly impossible to move that grain by our own lines. There was a very large measure of elevator capacity at the terminals in Duluth, which would have permitted, and are to-day permitting, a great deal of our grain to be shipped in bond via Duluth. Owing to the large number of empty cars belonging to American railway companies in Winnipeg, or at least coming from the west routed east, it was thought desirable to take advantage of that situation. Such was done; and it was done as much at the instance of the railways as at the instance of the government of Canada.

The conditions were peculiarly physical and not economic, as my hon. friend seems to think.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that although there was a larger acreage under cultivation this year, the production was not as large as it might have been. I wonder what would have been the condition of Canada if that production had been a little higher in proportion than it has been? We now hear of this grain blockade. I invite my hon. friend to consider this situation when we meet again next year. He will find that the blockade will have become far more acute and dangerous than it is to-day, and I am quite sure that it will take all the wisdom of my hon. friend and his colleagues to devise means for the prompt transportation of the crop of next year, without speaking of the years to come; and then he will be here, as he is just now, declaring that it is in the interests of the northwest that a good proportion of this crop should go from north to south, without imperilling the flag or the loyalty of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend labours under a misconception. In the first place, while the crop this year is no larger than it was last year, yet owing to the increased capacity of the Canadian railways, they have carried about 50 per cent more to the head of the lakes within the same given time than they did last year. Is it not very much better for Canadian ports if there be a blockade or congestion of grain, as there is, within our own territory, to ship that grain in bond and thus forward it to Canadian ports rather than have it shipped to Minneapolis and milled there or used for the purpose of improving our neighbour's flour at our expense?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The fact of shipping this grain to the United States in bond is not the serious question that meets the grain men of the Northwest. The fact is that a lot of this grain is not fit for export. It is not a loss caused by being unable to ship it out of the country, but a loss that is due to being unable to find a market for it. The duty on wheat going to the United States is 25 cents a bushel. Millions of bushels will be lost which would have been valuable for milling purposes if the United States market had been open; but our friends turned down the offer of reciprocity. Had that agreement been ratified, ninety per cent of the damaged wheat would have been milled in Minneapolis. It could have been sent there in good condition if it could have been forwarded at the right season of the year. We are told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that by the end of this month they expect to be able to get reduced rates on grain for export.

A great many of our people are selling not wheat, but barley in the United States, and realizing ten to twenty cents a bushel more for it at Duluth, after paying twenty cents per bushel duty, than they could get for it in Canada. Gentlemen who read the market reports in the press will see instances cited of where barley has been sent in carload lots to the United States market, and the shippers have been able, after paying $150 duty on the carload, to realize a larger profit than if they had sold it in Canada. It is a serious loss to the Northwest that we are shut out of the United States market. It is not only the fact that the railroads have found themselves unable to move the crop this year that is the difficulty. As has been stated, if the crop had turned out as well this year as it did last year, the conjestion would have been very much worse. The railway companies made a vigorous opposition to reciprocity with the United States, but they find that they can not handle the crop of this year. The elevators at Port Arthur cannot take care of it, and they have to seek an opening at Duluth. It is a strange commentary on the condition of affairs existing to-day, in view of the campaign that was put up three or four months ago against reciprocity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is paid for barley in the United States?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The market price in the United States for No. 3 barley is about $1.10 in Minneapolis. The price has been paid to the men who have actually conducted transactions.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What is the price on the Canadian side?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Where I come from, Portage la Prairie, people have realized 65 cents shipping it to Duluth, when they could realize only 45 cents in Canada.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—The hon. gentleman must be mistaken.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not mistaken. I would like to know whether it was at the instance of the government or of the railway companies that these railways are giving the same rates to Duluth as to Fort William? I was under the impression that it was the railway companies, when they found themselves unable to handle the crop or find storage for it at Fort William. Our railway companies, while they talk loyalty, have their connections with the United States railways by lines running north and south. The Canadian Pacific railway has such a connection at Moosejaw. The Canadian Northern railway has connections with Duluth, and these companies will divert traffic to the United States when it suits their convenience. As far as the west is concerned, so long as we get better prices by sending our grain to the United States than by shipping it over our own lines to the eastern ports of Canada, that is the way we will send it. There is no sentiment in trade, and if the United States market could take a large portion of our wheat that will be useless if it is held for two or three months, it would be better for Canada. Millions of bushels of grain in the west will be useless, because it has been exposed to the wet weather in the fall and frozen in the winter.

If you could get it into a mill and separate and grind it at once it would make just as good flour as the No. 1 Northern; but as soon as the warm weather comes on and the ice melts, the wheat will be useless. When one makes an estimate of the loss to the Northwest of $30,000,000, this year, through not having the American market for an outlet, I think he is below the mark.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT. For what length of time has this arrangement been made? How long is the reduction of rates to last?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know. I am not in the government. I must confess I did not anticipate we were to have a re-hash of the speeches made during the last campaign, nor do I propose to enter into a discussion of it at the present moment; but I am at a loss to understand what concessions have been made of so much advantage at present to the farmer if the grain is simply to be sent to Canadian ports via Duluth in bond? That system of bonding grain through the United States and even to Minneapolis, to be used in the mills there, has existed for years. I have not yet learned what has been done to be of such great advantage to the west, nor do I understand the concessions which have been made.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Concessions have been made in the reduction of freight rates; in one case ten cents, and in the other seventeen.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What has that to do with reciprocity? I can understand—and so can any one else who has had experience in these matters—that the depreciation in the value of grain in the Northwest arising from the climate, the wet and difficulties in harvesting, will be very great, and the farmers should have some means to prevent it if possible. If the railways have made a reduction in freight rates, that has nothing to do with reciprocity, on which subject my hon. friend has made such a glowing speech, endeavouring to show its advantages. If the railway companies have reduced the rate of freight so that this injured grain can be moved during the inclement season, while it remains frozen and does not get heated sufficiently to make it germinate, they have done so in order to increase their income from freights, and in order to provide facilities which neither the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern railway nor the Canadian Pacific railway could provide. That is the difficulty that has arisen, and no other. The question of trade has nothing whatever to do with it. The bonding of grain via Duluth has existed for years and years. We all know also that wheat has been bonded to Minneapolis, ground into flour, and the flour shipped in bond, and the millers had all the advantages of the bi-product arising therefrom. Whether the present arrangement is due to the intercession of the government or anybody else, the effect has been to increase the income of the railways, and provide these extra facilities, which our own railways could not furnish, in order to enable the western people to get their grain out of the country. It is a pleasing reflection to myself and those who so strongly advocated the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway and the opening up of the prairie country, to know that the products of the great west have already become so enormous as to demand further means by which to carry them to market. I think my right hon. friend who has spoken so learnedly, shall I say, or so earnestly on the question of reciprocity, was in the House at the time when his own friends and the party with whom he was connected declared that the road would never earn enough to pay for the grease to lubricate the wheels. I have a distinct recollection of how Sir Charles Tupper was ridiculed by every member of the then opposition for daring to predict a product of 50,000,000 bushels of wheat a year from that country. Yet we have these same gentlemen claiming all the credit for our present success, and denouncing the government for having done something that will prove to be to the advantage of the people of the Northwest, as well as to the railways. The difficulty arose from the inclemency of the weather, and the impossibility of getting the grain under shelter in the fall, and the further difficulty of getting sufficient cars to carry it out of the country. The question of reciprocity does not bear on the matter, nor would reciprocity, had it been adopted, provide that which the hon. gentleman contends should have been provided.

I should have been quite prepared to enter into a discussion of the question of reciprocity, even with my astute and more talented right hon. friend who is leading the opposition at the present day, and who, I say in all sincerity, could deal with it better, and I think more forcibly than any of the hon. gentlemen who attempt to discuss it. I have nothing to say about the flag, to which my hon. friend referred. Without being disrespectful to the hon. gentleman his argument about 'the flag' is the veriest clap-trap in the world.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We heard very much of the flag during the last election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Whenever my hon. friend desires to discuss the question, let us prepare for it, and we will have a good fight over it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. leader of the Senate has not as yet given us any of the information I asked for. I inquired whether the government had requested the Interstate Commission directly or indirectly to ask the railways for this reduction?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand my right hon. friend asks if the government made the application?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may not speak with the greatest accuracy upon the point, as it occurred some little time ago; but my recollection is that attention was directed to the large congestion of wheat in the Northwest at the time, and of the facilities which were obtainable at Duluth for storing wheat, also that the rolling stock of the United States roads could be readily secured to move that grain. As I understand, the application was made to the United States Railway Board. I think the question had to be dealt with by the Railway Board. Thirty days' notice had to be given of that. The Canadian railways had the notice shortened—in fact dispensed with—so that the grain could be moved without further delay.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Had they constitutional power to do that?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Did the government ask for it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, the railways.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The government, as I have been informed, backed the request of the railways, and I entirely approve of their action.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government intervened in the first place, but did not ask. The railways in the meantime came in and asked that the thirty days' notice be dispensed with, and upon an application being made to the board by the Canadian railways the notice was dispensed with, so that the wheat could be shipped without further delay.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The government asked first, and the railways second?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They co-operated.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—For what length of time is the arrangement to last?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.—I could not answer my hon. friend upon that subject. I fancy it is to last sufficiently long to enable them to make use of the facilities which could be had at Duluth for the transportation of the wheat.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—As the matter is one of very considerable importance, perhaps my hon. friend would be in a position to answer the question to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is simply a temporary suspension of whatever regulations they have for that purpose.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I move the adjournment of the debate in order to give me an opportunity to speak. Several hon. members have spoken, and I do not think any hon. senator who is interested in this matter should be shut off.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman desires to make a motion, let him do so in the usual way, with a seconder.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I second the motion.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The hon. gentleman from Belleville was leading us off into byways and highways in reference to what had been done in years gone by in building the Canadian Pacific railway, and something that was said by some Liberals at that time, about thirty years ago, in reference to grease that would be required to put on the axles of the Canadian Pacific railway. We are not now interested in what was said thirty-two years ago, any more than we are in what was going on in Noah's ark. What we are now interested in is the question that has been brought forward by the right hon. leader of the opposition with reference to the transporting of grain across the line. I think the government is to be commended for their action, and we all agree in that; but it is very strange after reading what appeared in the papers, and hearing the speeches of gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches in the House, that they should do such a thing. I remember reading a speech of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, under whose department this present proposition comes, with reference to these very same railways running into Canada from the south. He alluded to them as American serpents that were wiggling in, and that were going to suck the blood out of the people of this country. It is strange to see these very gentlemen now introducing the same serpents to suck out the blood of our people. It must be taken into consideration the fact that the three great railway companies in this country have fallen down this year and have failed to move the crop. It may be said that they moved more grain than they did last year, but that is not the point. The point is that in this year of grace they have not been able to move the crop out of the western country, and farmers are therefore losing millions and millions of dollars. They came for a measure of relief to the government, and the government, I understand, took the very disloyal course of asking the United States to take part in relieving the situation. I understand it was necessary to get their consent to the new arrangement.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, no; my hon. friend misapprehends. Before the Canadian railways could give a rate to carry this wheat to Duluth—and it was proposed that the wheat should be carried at the same rate from Winnipeg to Duluth as from Winnipeg to Fort William and Port Arthur—it became necessary to make an application to the Railway Commission or Railway Board of the United States for a reduction of the rates, the rates from Winnipeg to Duluth being very much higher than from Winnipeg to Port Arthur and Fort William. Consequently, thirty days' notice had to be given by the railways who desired a reduction of those rates. That thirty days' notice was dispensed with; the Railway Commission of the United States permitted the reduced rate to be adopted, and consequently the wheat began moving.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I quite understand that, and I admit that the government did what was right all along the line; but I am pointing to the fact that this does not harmonize with the statements that they made previous to the general election. If any person had in the month of September made a proposition of that kind—trotting to Washington to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to do something for us—we would have heard a roar from one end of the Dominion to the other. There would have been flag waving all over the country; but now that the present government have got into the treasury benches by flag waving they are practically carrying out—and I am glad to see they are doing it—what would have been carried out by the late government. But if the three railways have fallen down in the matter of moving the crop this year, what can we expect them to do next year? Will not the same thing happen next year? We were told that the Americans were going to build railways that would tap all the Canadian lines now running from east to west. The very loyal people who wanted to protect our institutions last fall were induced to vote to protect our railway interests also, among other things. The west is increasing production by leaps and bounds, the people there having introduced a new system of farming, ploughing by gasoline or steam engine. That being the case, what is going to become of the crop next year? We should surely look ahead. I am very sorry to say that the wheat this year is damp, and it is a very good thing to get it into American elevators where it can be dried out and preserved at the same time; but if we could have had what we were asking for last fall in the west, namely reciprocity, we could have marketed all that grain, because we could have sent it across the line and got from ten to fifteen cents a bushel more. We have no market for barley at the present time. If we had a market we would not have so much frosty wheat on hand. If we could grow barley, oats and flax on the new land for the first two or three years, we would be able to grow wheat more successfully, and the country would not be getting a black eye with this frozen wheat that we hear so much about at present. But we are not allowed to do that, for we practically have a wall built around this country, and we cannot get a profitable market anywhere inside that wall for our barley. The people of Canada know that they are not able to consume all the stuff that will be produced on those prairies within the next few years. What are we going to do with it? We could get a market in the United States for all the barley we could produce; we would grow oats, and so all along the line if we were allowed a market; but we have not been allowed the market. We had such a wet season last fall that there has been hardly any fall ploughing done in the western provinces, and the only grain that farmers will be able to grow this year will be oats or flax. For this class of produce they have no market; they cannot go up against a duty of 25 to 30 cents a bushel on barley, no matter if the railways go back on their statements and reduce the freight rates. That duty prevents us from marketing barley and oats, and next year, I am afraid, we will have a great deal of those grains grown, though I hope not. We are liable, however, to have the same condition next year as we have this year in regard to transporation, and the railways, having fallen down and being unable to move the crop, should not play the dog in the manger. If they are not able to move it themselves, they should permit the American railways to do so. Some people have said that reciprocity is dead; but I contend that reciprocity is a very live issue to-day from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The people did not understand it, and the waving of the flag and the Ne Temere decree and other things confused them; but when we come next to the firing line we hope the Ne Temere will be put back where it belongs, and that the waving of the flag will have ceased, and that Mr. Hawkes, who appealed to the British-born, will stay in a nice little fat job he got for writing all he did about the British-born, and we will have a fair, square appeal in favour of what is going to build up this country, and that is the reciprocity pact.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I regret that this debate was not held in some of the large centres of Ontario—it was not necessary in the west—during the last election campaign. As one speaker said, they have more sense in the west than the people of Ontario who allow their political consciences to be clouded by Ne Temere decrees and Eucharistic congresses. The debate here is very enlightening and very encouraging for the future. The government evidently is obliged to follow in the footsteps of its predecessor to a certain extent. The hon. member from Belleville (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) upbraided the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) and one or two other members for re-hashing speeches delivered during the election last fall. I thought myself the rehash was excellent. It had quite a flavour, it was fresh and good for consumption, but when I heard the hon. gentleman who was Prime Minister of this country at one time, and Minister of Customs thirty-five years ago, rehashing the axle grease, and sea of mountains and so on, I thought his hash was stale, and not fit for a parliamentary table. As the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) said, he did not want to hear any Noah's ark history; he wanted something fresh. He was right. The censure passed on the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie was not justified in the face of the hon. gentleman's (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell's) own re-hash of events that occurred over a third of a century ago. I am puzzled by one or two things which happened in this debate. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa put a very plain question to the government. He asked how long this arrangement made between the gentlemen at Washington, the Canadian railway companies and the Canadian government would last? The answer of the government was that it was a temporary arrangement. Does the hon. gentleman take the hon. member from Ottawa to be a child? What does he mean by temporary? Why does he not say three or four months? Temporary may be one week or one year. That is not a dignified answer to give to a member of this House. Other questions were answered in the same irrelevant, uncertain manner by the government. Has the government no definite policy with regard to these matters? Its policy last September was very definite when he told the Canadian people that it was a shame and a disgrace to sell the soul of Canada and go to Washington to look for favours. But this government did not even take the course of going to Washington; they went simply to a commission to seek for favours. Does the government expect to gain credit in the eyes of the country by doing such things? Is not their action today a justification of the attitude taken by the Liberal government in the past? Not that I denounce them for it; on the contrary I believe they are doing well in the course they are pursuing now; but I find fault with them because they were not sincere when they denounced the Liberals in September last. They deceived the people, not so much by the waving of the flag as the waving of a papal flag in the eyes of the people of Ontario, and in a few counties in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They waved that flag under the guise of the Ne Temere decree and the Eucharistic congress, and on these grounds the great Conservative party won the election in September last. I heard the leader of the government in this House make lamentation over the fact that there were not sufficient transportation facilities in the country to carry out the grain of the west. One of the most prominent members of the government today is opposed to an essential route between the west and the east, the Georgian Bay canal. We have now official opponents to that great project in this government and in the Conservative provincial government, and still the hon. gentleman laments the fact that our transportation facilities are inadequate. There are men in his own cabinet who are openly opposed to the construction of a great national work which is admitted by all who are not sectionally interested to be essential to the welfare of Canada, and particularly to the welfare of the west. I only hope the people will open their eyes before the next election and realize what they are losing by putting such men at the head of affairs, and turning down Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party, who have done so much for Canada and the empire. How much will this government do for the empire? Not later than yesterday, a most pertinent question was put to the government with regard to the British preference, and what was the answer? It was a reply that was not fit to meet the intelligence of a child. Is that the way the present government is going to conduct the public business. Does it think it can hood-wink and blind people? These are matters that are publicly discussed. When members on this side of the House ask questions which call for direct answers, we are entitled to the information we seek, and the sooner the government knows it the better.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I have not so much to say in reference to what the government has done or not done; I think that the rebellious spirit shown in this debate is largely against the clerk of the weather. If you come down to the facts, it was the rainy season that contributed largely to the loss sustained in the Northwest. It is quite true that we had a banner season, and if it had continued after the grain was ripe we would not have had this loss. I have a feeling, right or wrong, that perhaps there is a good deal of exaggeration in the newspapers in regard to the loss the public have sustained. I am speaking for the province of Saskatchewan, the grain growing province par-excellence. So far as I am personally concerned, I never had a better or more fruitful season. We were able to harvest the crop in proper time, and put it on the market, and realized 96½ cents per bushel, and had the money in the bank before all this calamity befel the country. I suppose the same might be done almost any year. It depends a good deal upon the activity of the people, and a good deal on their having knowledge of the possibilities of that climate. Many poor people have entered the western country in the past two or three years to engage in cultivating the land. They had a beautiful crop just within their reach, but they were not able to avail themselves of the facilities for handling it, and having it threshed in the proper season. The great want this season has been lack of power to thresh the crop that was produced. For that the people are themselves largely to blame. They might have clubbed together and purchased threshing outfits and accomplished the work before the rainy season really set in. There is a considerable quantity of grain in our district still to be handled. When we had got through with our own work we sent our threshing outfit to help our neighbours, and continued to help them as long as the work would pay; but when the grain and straw got damp it was necessary to get more help than the business would pay for, ant we found that we had to haul in our outfit. So to help them out of their difficulty we sold out to our near neighbours, and they went on as long as the weather would permit. I think the fault is perhaps in Providence giving us a large amount of moisture at a time of the year when we have not been accustomed to receive it. That fact must be kept in view. Another great fault, to my mind, is the lack on the part of the railway systems of rolling stock. I have not much sympathy with the Canadian Pacific railway when it tells the country that it should not expect the railways to keep enough rolling stock to move the entire crop out in two or three months. They argue that we should have patience, that we should put up buildings and protect our own grain and give the railway companies time to move it as fast as they can. The three railway companies have failed in getting as much work done as they hoped to do. That is an old story. It is not a thing which has come on the railway companies because of the peculiarities of one season. They have been struggling with this difficulty as long as I know anything of that country, and I have been there thirty-two years. I know something of the asthmatic engines that would not work in December or January, and many that would break down half way to the market. I have in memory a statement made by the late Mr. Drinkwater, and I mention his name with all credit to him for his activity. He told us in all confidence in his office, shortly before he died, that all that they could expect of any one car in their rolling stock was three loads in the season, judging by the record of the past. They had the figures to make the statement good, that a car could only take from a point, say

Brandon, to the head of the lakes three loads of grain in the season. I said to him: 'Why do you not take off these engines and put on oxen? They can do better than that.' It is a known fact that there are men engaged in the freighting business at the town of Brandon who haul loads of dry goods and groceries, just such work as the Canadian Pacific railway ought to do, to the south by teams, and make money alongside the Canadian Pacific railway that does not do more than make its line pay. Their poverty hinders them from getting a larger number of cars and engines, such as should be on the road to serve the business of the country. No one can read the reports that have appeared in the 'Winnipeg Free Press' without feeling that the company has not exercised itself to meet the necessities of the occasion, and do what they should have done in December and January. The fault is largely climatic, to begin with. The inexperience of the new settlers and the inadequacy of the rolling stock possessed by the railway companies to do the work demanded of them is another cause. When they have been spending so much money in improving their roads, why have they not also increased their rolling stock to meet the requirements of the country? It was my opinion years ago that the Canadian Pacific railway would never move the crop if the output increased. In the next four or five years they would find themselves swamped by the amount of business required of them. That is the case now. Then there is the high price we have to pay for labour in harvest time. Farmers who are alive to their business are to-day seeking ways and means to reduce the cost of producing grain, so that there may be some margin left for themselves and their families. They cannot go on paying the rate of wages that they are now paying. It is very good of the people in the lower provinces and other eastern points, in our need, to send us help; but we find lads who never had a razor on their faces, and perhaps never turned a sheaf of grain with a fork demanding wages of $3 a day and the best of board, and we have therefore to think of new ways of cultivation that will reduce the cost and make it more profitable to continue farming.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—How would reciprocity have fitted in?

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—If we had reciprocity when the grain was cut, the wheat would not have been frozen. If we had had the rolling stock necessary to move the grain, there would be no cry from that land to-day, and no noise whatever about the millions of bushels of grain being lost.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that it was the bad weather which led the government to change their policy and divert the traffic to the south?

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—No, but that the lack of rolling stock, the increase of population and of production called for reciprocity. It would have come like a shower of blessings. I did not need reciprocity last year because I got through successfully. Next year I do not know how it will be; but I have determined, if my health is spared, to dispense with our heavy horses in the cultivation of the land and use oil fuel engines. We believe we can in that way plough and sow the land at the rate of twenty-five acres a day. Two men will do that and we will not need so many men from the eastern provinces. We will reduce our expenses.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—And our boys will not get $3 a day?

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—No. I am not going to reflect on what has been done in turning out the Liberal government; but I contend that if reciprocity had carried, there is no doubt the grain would have been all out of the country and there would not have been any extent of damaged wheat.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it not a fact that each of the railway companies exhausted the power of the different factories to supply them with rolling stock, and is it not also a fact that after many of the cars were loaded with grain, they were frozen to the rails and could not be moved for a long time? These are the difficulties that presented themselves in complying with the just requirements of the trade of that country. I have seen the statement made that all the railway companies doing business in that section of the country exhausted the power of the different manufacturing establishments to turn out sufficient cars to carry the crop to market.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I feel satisfied that the railway companies are largely responsible for the condition of things we have there to-day. I rather think that this movement of going to Washington for help, as has been said, originated with the government of Saskatchewan. One of its ministers and some other officials, realizing the condition of things, and knowing that a large number of cars belonging to the United States roads could be utilized if arrangements could be made so to do, made it their business to interview the officials in the United States and ascertain the difficulties that lay in the way. They received nothing but kind treatment, and it was made plain to them that if they pursued a certain course and the rates were cut so as to make the rates from the west to Port Arthur and the rate from the west to Duluth equal, that such an arrangement could be made. From reading newspapers and hearing from the officials at Regina, my idea is that it originated there, that the negotiations were made with officials in Regina, in Saskatchewan, and that the provincial government, at the suggestion of the railway companies, carried through this arrangement and gave them this relief. Had the railway companies done their duty at the time, and we had adopted reciprocity, we would have needed no such negotiations.

Hon. Mr. BELL—It seems to me that we are throwing too heavy a burden on the railway companies. I saw a statement in the newspapers, which has not been contradicted, that the railway companies had over 54 per cent more cars up to February of this year than they had last year. They also point to the fact that on account of the coal strike they had to make extraordinary efforts to secure a supply of coal for themselves and for the people in the western territory; and furthermore, as is well known to every one, such extraordinary winter weather as we are experiencing at the present time, practically paralyses a railway company, reducing their efficiency 30 or 40 per cent.

If the coal strike had not occurred and the extraordinary severe weather they have experienced, the railways could have moved out much more crop than they have done, and really would have met pretty fully all the requirements of that country as to transportation. Is it not a fact, when we get to the bottom of it, that the condition that exists in the Northwest Territory is to a large extent created by the people themselves, that they are making wheat raising a speciality—mining wheat as is sometimes described—without any regard to the means by which they are going to market the grain? They are engaged in ploughing, breaking up thirty acres a day of virgin soil, doubling their crop, without making any calculation as to the means by which their product will be put on the market.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Should that be their business?

Hon. Mr. BELL—They are producing an enormous quantity of wheat, for which there can be no immediate prospect of an outlet.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—They should be fined for growing so much wheat.

Hon. Mr. BELL—They are being fined, not by the government but by the inevitable logic of events. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Campbell) knows that if he produces twice as much flour as he has a market for, he will be fined most effectually, because if he did not sell the flour he would suffer a loss.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—There is plenty of market for the wheat, but you will not let them get to it.

Hon. Mr. BELL—If hon. gentleman opposite and their friends are disposed to nail the reciprocity flag to the mast, we wish them well, we are satisfied with the situation. If they are not satisfied after the result of the election on September 21, they have a perfect right to try it again, and no one here representing the government will object. But is it not absurd, in view of the facts which have been cited here to-day by honourable members from the great west, to find their argument against or in favour of reciprocity on conditions that are particularly exceptional? This government has to be governed according to the circumstances of the normal, and not the exceptional year, and no government or opposition can afford to depart from what is a wise and safe policy for an individual, and frame a general policy upon exceptional circumstances.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Does the hon. gentleman consider this year's crop exceptional?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I think it is. It is surprisingly large. The amount of land that has been brought under cultivation is astonishingly large, and my hon. friend from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) must know that it is so in consequence of the new facilities at the disposal of the farmer. My hon. friend admits that the circumstances of this harvest are exceptional and extraordinary. The wet season prevented threshing, but that is not the fault of this government. If the railways are not equipped with sufficient facilities to handle the traffic, that is not the fault of the present government, but is the fault of the late government, inasmuch as they had not seen to it that these railways were properly equipped. It is impossible to throw the responsibility for existing conditions on the government of the day. The fact of the matter is that everything, in a sense, in the west, is being conducted on the policy of putting all the eggs into one basket. Every one is growing wheat. There is an enormous demand for wheat. The west is a country of specialists who are producing a special crop, and they are making a demand upon the railway to transport it, and lay the responsibility upon the government of the day for a service which no people could possibly demand in reason.

What reasonable man or community can demand that a great railway corporation shall supply engines, cars, trainmen and track facilities to carry the whole product of the Northwest to the markets of the world in three or four months? It is not a reasonable proposition. If it could be done it would do very little good to the farmers, because the world cannot consume that crop in three or four months; it requires a year to market and use up the crop of a year, and, as far as I can see, it is not to the advantage of the farmers that they should have their whole crop crowded on the market in three or four months. There are a great many things the farmers ought to do for themselves. I do not know that our friends on the other side of the House are giving wise counsel to the farmers of the Northwest when they tell them their calamities are not at all due to their own neglect and lack of prudence, but to lack on the part of railway companies or the government, or even to Providence in the way of a bad season. Would it not be well for the farmers of the west to learn now to act as farmers of the east have had to do—to calculate everything—to see that the crops are regulated both in volume and character, and that they themselves take proper precautions for securing and harvesting their crops?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The market is too small; why don't you look for another one?

Hon. Mr. BELL—The market is growing remarkably fast, and I cannot see that it can be said to be small. It is the whole world. It is all open. The only market that my friend can refer to now is the market to the south of us.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Sure.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Although that is a much larger market than ours it has more grain to send into it, therefore that is not the market to which we should turn at all.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—What market?

Hon. Mr. BELL—As far as we are concerned, the market we want is one that can supply us with the things that we do not produce and that will take from us the things that we produce and that they do not produce. We want a proper principle underlying a reciprocal arrangement or reciprocity. We do not want to go into a market where our greatest rival will beat us, and consider it a great concession to us. That would be a mistaken policy. We have to-day, the greatest market in the world for our wheat, and what we require, as far as I can see, is to learn how to measure and shape our policy in accordance with our circumstances so as to adapt it to the conditions in which it has to be carried out. What would be the sense of this country multiplying its production of wheat, doubling it again if you please, with the large immigration, with the increased facilities in the Northwest? What would be the sense of producing four hundred million bushels of wheat if you knew you could not get out two hundred millions? Would it be a wise course to take? Is it compulsory? Is it practically necessary that the man who has those fertile acres must produce a large quantity of wheat, part of which he cannot market to advantage? Is it not a great deal better for him to preserve the fertility of his acres and adopt the plan which the Northwest will eventually have to adopt, of mixed farming, cultivating the crops for which they can find a market anywhere and everywhere? It is absolutely impossible for a man anywhere to prosper unless he acts prudently and wisely. It is absolutely impossible that any community can prosper if it is taught that its failure to succeed is not its own fault, but the fault of some outside bodies, whether government or railway corporations, or some other body acting in the capacity of our servant, or subsidiary to it. The conditions which make for success are the conditions under which an individual carries on his work. You cannot by any government policy whatever, or assistance to railway development, make up for the lack of individual qualities of prudence and foresight. There is a remedy for all these difficulties in connection with the wheat. What is to hinder each farmer at a very moderate expense from furnishing himself with granaries, or little store houses? Some of them have done it for years. Why should a man be in a position which may require him to pour out his wheat on the soil and expose it to the inclemency of the weather? He is not compelled to do it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—He has not the lumber.

Hon. Mr. BELL—He does not need an expensive building of lumber because he can get corrugated iron. But if he does not choose to provide the facilities and take those precautions to keep himself where he ought to be, it is a poor and cheap subterfuge for hon. gentlemen to throw the blame on the railway corporations or the government, and to suggest the absolutely untried and the hopeless policy of reciprocity, which presented itself to the majority of the people of this country as a dangerous experiment. The failure to adopt the reciprocity pact is not the thing to which is to be attributed the present temporary and passing misfortune of the people of the west. The people of the west are not saying a great deal. Our hon. friend here has said, and I have no doubt at all that he is perfectly justified and warranted in saying it, that it will be found in this case, as in most other cases, that the predictions of loss to the farmers are being grossly magnified, and that probably in the next three or four months, with the advent of good weather and the activity of the Canadian Pacific railway, they will get all this surplus crop to the market in good condition and we shall hear no more about it; the dark clouds will disperse and our friends will retire again under the old reciprocity banner.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In replying to the hon. gentleman, I would designate him as a small Canadian, and I would draw his attention to the inquiry that is now on the order paper as to why immigrants do not go to the eastern provinces. I do not wonder why they refuse to stay in the eastern provinces. I think this is the first occasion I have heard an hon. member say that the western provinces are producing too much wheat. I think the banks, the implement manufacturers, and other manufacturers would hold up both hands if there were more people in the west, for the opening up and settlement of the west is the making of Canada. There is no place in the Dominion where a man can produce as much wealth as out on the prairie by growing wheat. My friend ought to intercede with the government of the day and get the western farmers cheap lumber with which to build granaries, get them cheap nails, cheap iron—corrugated iron he suggests. The government, since they came into power only a few months ago, have succeeded in placing a duty of $2 a thousand feet on lumber to prevent the western farmer from building granaries to hold his wheat. The farmers of Saskatchewan, 90 per cent. I think, of them, the largest wheat producing community in Canada, voted for reciprocity, and voted that way regardless of party. Alberta voted the same way. They voted for a market, and they were so sure that reciprocity would carry that the grain buyers, shrewd business men, were paying ten cents to fifteen cents a bushel more for barley than the market price warranted because they expected to get it into the United States market free of duty after the election. So far they are being retarded by the action of our friends in eastern Canada. I ask my hon. friend where the market is to be found? He says, in some country that will furnish us something that we cannot ourself produce. Is there any market in the world that will not furnish us with what we ourselves produce? Reciprocity did not shut off the other markets, but it gave us free access to that other market for our products. We must have the United States market for our wheat; there is no other place to which we can ship it and find a market. My hon. friend suggested Liverpool. A great many people are under the impression that we can keep on growing wheat and market it in Liverpool. The British Isles are trying to reduce the population, and a great many people are spending money to assist that policy. Last year we shipped some forty-two million bushels of wheat to the British Isles, and my information is that we shall never again ship more than fifty million bushels there, for the reason that the miller in Britain buys wheat that suits his trade, and a great deal of the flour there is made from wheat, being used by people who do not know the strength of flour. The British Isles have a population of forty five million people who are not educated to eat hard wheat flour, whereas the United States has a population of nearly a hundred million—at least twice as large as the British Isles—of people who have been educated to eat hard wheat flour ever since the Minnesota mills started to grind hard wheat forty-five years ago; and man for man they are able to pay more for wheat than the people of the British Isles. The people of Ontario are being educated to eat hard wheat flour; Great Britain is not so educated; Americans are. We have to find an outlet for our hard wheat, and there is no question at all that that outlet has to be in the United States; there is no other country in the world to which we can ship our surplus wheat profitably except the United States, for their wheat area is decereasing, especially their area for producing hard wheat. Our wheat area is increasing, as has been stated, and it is quite possible that inside of five years the Northwest will have five hundred million bushels of wheat for export. My hon. friend will say that that is a calamity. I wonder what the bankers and manufacturers will say about it? They will say it is a good thing for Canada and for their business, for if it was not for the wheat production of the Northwest the money could not be spent with the manufacturers of eastern Canada that now makes them prosperous. We grow the wheat for them, and we are able to pay for the goods they produce. We should not listen to a small Canadian's remark that it is not wise to produce unless we are looking for a market. The people of the west are not in that position, because they did look for a market, and they will get it; and the wealth of Canada depends on the opening up of the great Northwest and the production of wheat —that staple article which we can produce better than any other country in the world. As an apologist for the railroads, my hon. friend is probably a success. He has told us all the good things they have done. But in referring to railways, this matter of congestion is not one of only recent date. Why, his leader, or recognized leader in the other House, (Mr. Borden) when the late government suggested building the Grand Trunk Pacific, divided the House on the policy of purchasing the portion of the Canadian Pacific railway north of Lake Superior, to give us one road less rather than one more, and make it a government road. That was his policy—to restrict the construction of railroads to carry our wheat east and west. Now, as has been stated by the hon. member for Prince Albert, the railway companies are up against a problem this year that they cannot solve, and they have to admit it. One reason, which has not been referred to here, is the strike of the machinists of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway; locomotives are not in as good condition as they should be to handle the trains. These things are bound to occur; but are we to be told that we should stop wheat production in the west because something is going to happen to a railway? Surely not. I say we are to go on. I believe the immigration policy of the late government will be continued by the present government, and people will come to this country to produce wealth out of the soil. I know the Minister of the Interior, who has charge of the immigration policy, and who is a westerner, will not take any stock in the hon. gentleman's arguments that have been advanced this afternoon. We shall probably have a field day, as has been suggested by our hon. friend, to discuss this matter later on. Railway extension to the south is a matter that has been discussed in the west for a great many years, and when——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the hon. gentleman leaves that point, was it not Mr. Borden's policy to purchase the road north of Lake Superior and double the track all through?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—To what?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Double the track—make it a double track road.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I hope not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not ask the hon. gentleman what his opinion was; I asked if that was not Mr. Borden's position?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I don't think so. I don't think it was discussed at all. I think it was to buy the road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then permit me to say the hon. gentleman only knows half of it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I don't pretend to say all. I am not in the confidence of Mr. Borden, and I do not know what was discussed behind closed doors.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that was his proposition before parliament.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Then I say it was a most foolish proposition—an all-rail policy and doubling the tracks, including curves. My hon. friend went back to ancient history and talked about what was said thirty-five years ago by some Liberals, that the Canadian Pacific railway would not earn the grease required for their wheels. The hon. gentleman, the present member for Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) was in the government at the time, and did everything in his power to retard the progress of the Northwest by not allowing Manitoba to have free access to the United States by means of branch railways. The government gave a monopoly to the Canadian Pacific railway, so that no line of railway could be built to the United States, and they maintained that policy until practically the people of Manitoba went into rebellion, or talked annexation to the United States; then his government came down and gave the Canadian Pacific railway fifteen millions of a guarantee for the purpose of doing away with that monopoly and allowing a free interchange of railways being built between Canada and the United States. Those railways are being used to-day, and the government, notwithstanding their protest and talk about the American flag, what have they done? They have gone to the Canadian Pacific railway and Canadian Northern railway, and on their knees to the United States, and asked them for God's sake to come and help us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, no!

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We cannot handle the wheat in Fort William; we cannot handle it all-rail to those Lake Superior points, and for God's sake give us relief; and this was only two or three months after they were denouncing any trade with the United States at all. I don't think my hon. friend the leader of the House is well informed on the reasons why delay occurred in securing the reductions. The rate on the Canadian Northern railway——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There was no delay in securing the reductions.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—My hon. friend is not well posted even now, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated last night in the House of Commons there was delay.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There was a delay of a few days, but I mean the thirty days.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, but at the present time there is a higher rate on some other grains than there is on wheat. The reduction of the rate was brought about first by Mr. Motherwell going to Winnipeg to interview the railway people, and ask them if they would not give the same rates, because there was no storage at Fort William, and no way of treating this grain. There is one elevator at Port Arthur, and a small one at Fort William with facilities for drying this wheat. They have facilities at Duluth, and Mr. Motherwell, the Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan, busied himself to see if there were not facilities elsewhere, knowing the quantities of damaged grain; and the railways agreed to give the same rate to Duluth that they give to Port Arthur and Fort William—the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern—but when they found the rate was less than was charged to the Dakota farmer, the Interstate Commerce Commission could not grant the rate to carry that wheat from the boundary line to Duluth, hence, under the United States law, they had to give 30 days notice before they could even make the change, and that was the reason of the delay. I think I am perfectly accurate in making that statement; I know it has been made public through firms that I think are reliable, and it was on account of the rate of 13 cents given to Duluth from a point, say Brandon—which was a lower rate than the Dakota farmer was charged for a similar distance through Dakota to Duluth, consequently the railway companies had not power to deal with it, and our friends of the government had to go on their knees to Washington and pray for relief. I trust the government will take stock of the conditions we have this year, because we cannot take chances of a recurrence of these losses. The climatic conditions have something to do with it no doubt, but they may have those climatic conditions again. Those climatic conditions will recur; certainly the crop will increase; and if we have a loss this year of twenty or thirty millions on a crop of two hundred million bushels, what will we have on a crop of five hundred million bushels? The people of Canada have to wake up and give us facilities—cheaper lumber—cheaper iron, cheaper transportation, and the right market, and that right market ought to be wherever we can find it. I have knowledge of the points on which I speak. There are millions of bushels of wheat in the Northwest to-day that will not realize a cent because they cannot be handled at all, all through the winter weather; whereas if we had had a free market in the United States for that wheat our farmers would have realized 85 or 90 cents a bushel for it. These are the conditions, and they will have to be faced by this government, even though they are a short time in power. There is no doubt at all that the United States market has to be the market for Canadian wheat, and the sooner it is secured the better. I am pleased that the right hon. gentleman referred to the matter this afternoon. It has led to a discussion that ought to do good; things have been said here to-day that ought to give some information as to the condition of the affairs in the west, and I hope that the government will take cognizance of the statements that have been made. If our farmers could have shipped their barley under reciprocity they would have realized about $350 a car more for it. Surely it is a good thing for the farmer and for the manufacturers of eastern Canada; and when the time rolls around and hon. gentlemen give a record of their stewardship, I trust we will find that all the good things that were offered by the Liberal party will be offered to the northwest by the Conservative party.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—Whilst we in the west fully appreciate the small grain of comfort thrown at us in the way of lowering the railway rates to enable us to get rid of some of our surplus grain through the United States, how much more would we appreciate it if the government could see their way to go so far as to enter into an agreement with the United States to remove the duty on wheat entirely, and allow our grain to be consumed in the United States—not ground in bond for export? In the west to-day we have a great many million bushels of damaged wheat that will be graded as feed grain, for which there is no demand in the west, but a very large demand in the United States. On my way home at the adjournment, in passing Fort William, a number of grain men entered the car, and we got into conversation as to how this damaged grain was to be got rid of in Manitoba—being Manitoba men they spoke exclusively of that province. They were not grain raisers, but grain dealers. In the party was a very large grain buyer from the United States, and after considerable discussion as to frozen wheat this gentleman said: 'If you could get the United States to remove the duty of 25 cents a bushel on grain, or if you will even induce them to allow it to be brought in as seed grain'—on which I believe the duty is 10 per cent ad valorum—'I will buy every bushel of damaged grain in Manitoba; but the duty of 25 cents a bushel on grain of money value such as this is prohibitive.' Now, if the people of Canada had voted for reciprocity, and it had carried, there would have been no trouble in the northwest to-day.

The motion to adjourn the debate was lost on a division.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 40) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 66) An Act respecting the Public Archives.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 75) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

(In the committee.)

On clause 1,

1. Subsection 1 of section 37 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:—

37. Whenever any person is a member of either House for more than thirty days during any session, though such person may be a member for a part only of such session, he shall be entitled to his sessional allowance, subject to the deduction aforesaid for non-attendance as a member, and subject also to a deduction of fifteen dollars for each sitting day of such session before he was elected or appointed, or after he ceased to be a member, as the case may be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I find that I was in error the other day when the Bill was up for second reading. The hon. leader of the government will probably remember that I thought it was possible that a member who was transferred from the House of Commons to this House during the session might claim two indemnities. I find that about 1905 an Act was passed to prevent that, and I suppose—although I have not examined this Bill carefully, together with that Act—that that Act would apply to the clause before us. I think it is only fair to the House and to the government to make that statement. The hon. gentleman intimated that he would consult his colleagues so as to ascertain whether there were not other respects in which this Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons and dealing with the indemnity required to be amended. I should like to know whether he has done that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend expressed some doubt whether the measure as it stands to-day, would prevent a second indemnity being drawn by a member.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I withdraw that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I said I would look into the Act with a view to prevent anything of that kind arising, and I satisfied myself that there was no possibility of an abuse of that kind growing out of the Act.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I understood from the hon. leader of the House that he was to give us some information as to what they propose to do about the cases that were referred to last session. There was a great injustice done to those hon. gentlemen. They were summoned to the Senate towards the close of the session and found that they were in debt to the country for having accepted the position. While we are going to prevent that in the future,

I think that the government ought to make this measure retroactive so as to provide for cases, which every one admits, were absurd and outrageous.

A man is summoned here in the last days of the session, and he comes in obedience to the order of the Governor General, to find that he is punished for obeying. The leader of the House ought to provide against such a condition in this Bill. Now is the time to fix it, here and now, and we surely can do it. The leader of the House spoke about these hon. gentlemen sending in their claims, but they might or might not be voted for by the House. That is not a satisfactory way. The government might possibly put an item in the supplementary estimates, and they might not. If the leader of the House will give us assurance now that due provision is to be made in the supplementary estimates to settle these claims, I shall accept his word and say no more; but unless that assurance is given, the House ought to insist that this Bill be made retroactive for a year or so at all events, so as to cover cases that everybody admits are outrageous.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This being practically a money Bill, the Senate would not have authority to make any such amendment as my hon. friend has indicated. In the second place, I have spoken to the hon. gentlemen who have suffered from the infirmity of the Act which this is intended to cure, and suggested to them what I thought was the better way of proceeding and having their grievances met, and I think my suggestion appealed to them. I am reasonably satisfied that if they adopt that suggestion, the difficulty will be overcome; but it will be quite apparent to the House that we have no authority to make this Bill retroactive or amend it in any way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state to the House whether or not he has had any conference with his colleagues with respect to a way of meeting the difficulty which has arisen in connection with last session and on previous occasions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My colleagues are aware of the difficulty which has arisen. They are not disposed to make the Bill retroactive, on account of not knowing where it would lead to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not suggest that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have suggested to the hon. gentlemen from Banff (Hon. Mr. Forget), and Charlottetown (Hon. Mr. Prowse), that a representation should be made by them as to wherein they have been deprived of indemnity on their coming into the House late in the session, and if that is properly represented to the leaders on both sides of the House of Commons, my impression is that their grievances will meet with proper redress. No doubt the proper way to meet this difficulty would be to have a sum placed in the supplementary estimates for the purpose of indemnifying the hon. gentlemen for the losses they have sustained. There is a proper way of making that representation, and I think it will be effective.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman can assure the House that that will be done, there need be no difficulty in the matter. I do not favour the idea of these gentlemen having to apply to five or six of the ministers to have justice done. The leader of the House ought to make proper representation to the Treasury Board. The statement is made here publicly, and the leader of the House is the channel of information between this House and the government. It is well within his right, if not his duty, to lay the matter before the Treasury Board, and see that a full amount to cover what belongs to these hon. gentlemen should be put in the estimates. That is the proper and dignified way to do it. The hon. member from Montreal is not here; the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island may be called away before the close of the session, and the hon. member from Banff may not be here at the right time, and there will be nobody to look after their interests.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After the explanation made by the leader of the House, I am not so sure but that is the proper way of meeting the difficulty. The amounts can be ascertained. The Clerks of both Houses will be able to give the necessary information to enable the Finance Minister to deal with the question. I can only express my regret that the government has not had time to consider the character of the whole Bill. I have pointed out several times the incongruities in the Act. No doubt the government, with so many important matters before them, have not had time to consider this question; but by next session they may be able to introduce a new Bill which, while not retroactive, will bear equitably upon every member of the two Houses.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Hastings as to the necessity of revising the present law. It is a strange anomoly that some members in both Houses, who attend the meetings of parliament for one or two days in the beginning of a session, and remain away from that time until prorogation, can draw nearly the whole of their sessional indemnity. That is something that the government should look into. I thought now was the time to amend this Bill and make it retroactive. However, as the leader of the government is of the opinion that we cannot change the Bill here, I am content to let it go at that, more especially as he has given us almost a positive assurance that the amount will be voted in the estimates. If that can be done, it should be done, and I hope the government will do it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (A) An Act respecting the pollution of navigable waters.

(In the committee.)

On clause 2.

2. Every person is guilty of an offence against this Act and liable on summary conviction to the penalties hereinafter provided, who puts, or causes or permits to be put, or to fall, flow, or to be carried into any navigable water, or into any other water any part of which is navigable or flows into any navigable water,—

(a) any solid or liquid sewage matter; or

(b) any other solid matter which, not being sewage, is poisonous, noxious, putrid, decomposing, refuse, or waste; or

(c) any liquid matter which, not being sewage, is poisonous, noxious, putrid, decomposing, refuse or waste;

unless such matter, whether solid or liquid, is disposed of in accordance with regulations or orders made or permits granted under the authority of this Act.

2. Any person, other than a municipal or sanitary authority, shall not be guilty of an offence under this section in respect of the passing of sewage matter into a drain communicating with any sewer belonging to or under the control of any municipal or sanitary authority, if he has the sanction of the municipal or sanitary authority for such passing.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—This section seems to be very far reaching, and I do not know whether its application would be general all over Canada. In Fredericton, we have a sewage system which is discharged into the St. John river, with the approval of the municipality, and the legislature. We draw our drinking water from that river and use it, after a system of purification, which has cost a great deal of money. I do not know whether clause 2 of this Bill would make persons who drain into the sewer that runs out into the River St. John, liable to a penalty.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The scheme of this Bill is that none of its provisions, with one exception, shall come into force when the Bill is sanctioned. The one exception is the provision referred to in section 4 and other sections of the Act, which enable the Minister of Agriculture, under the authority of the Governor in Council, to pass regulations of a general or specific character, or to declare the Act applicable to this or that portion of Canada, or to declare that it will not be applicable to this or that portion of Canada. I have no doubt that the case which is referred to by my hon. friend from Fredericton—and there are many similar cases—will receive the consideration of the Minister of Agriculture, and if, in Fredericton, there is no occasion for the application of this measure, the regulations will determine that. The provisions of section 2, creating the offence, and section 3 imposing the penalty for the offence, are sections which shall come into force only on proclamation of the Governor General in Council after consultation with the provincial boards of health.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Would section 4 give the minister the power to make the provisions apply to one part of the country, and not to another?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The intention of the Act is to have its provisions made applicable only to the extent which each locality may require. If the wording of the measure is not sufficient for the purpose I am open to any suggestion from my hon. friend, or any other gentleman? To my mind, the language is adequate, and will enable the Governor in Council to pass regulations, exempting one or more districts from the operation of this Bill. Clause 8 illustrates how it will be carried out. It reads:

> The Governor in Council, when it is shown to his satisfaction that the public interest will not be injuriously affected thereby, and with due regard to the interests involved and to the circumstances, means and requirements of the locality or district, may from time to time, by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' declare any such waters, or part or parts thereof, exempted in whole or in part from the operation of this Act, and on such conditions and terms as he may prescribe, and may, from time to time, revoke such proclamation.

My hon. friend will see that, manifestly, the object of the Bill is to leave it entirely in the hands of the government, after proper consideration, to determine whether the Act shall apply to a certain district.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does that clause give the government power to make regulations which would be directly opposed to the provisions of the Act itself?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—No. It will be quite open for the minister to make regulations providing that the city of Halifax, which empties into the ocean and does not require to conform with the provisons of this Act, and that city of Halifax or Fredericton, similarly situated, shall be exempt from the operations of this Act, or that special regulations of a different character shall apply to them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The first portion of clause 4 provides that the Governor in Council may make such regulations, general or special, as are requisite or expedient to carry out the purposes and intent of the Act. These regulations could not be such as would defeat the object of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I did not say to defeat the object of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But it would be defeating the object of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I said—that with reference to Halifax, it might be provided that the general regulations should not apply; but that specific regulations with reference to that city could and would be made. I do not say that the minister could make regulations to wipe out the provisions of clauses 2 and 3.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—My understanding of the Bill is that no relief could be asked under section 4 for an object such as was mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Fredericton. It would be under section 8.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I contend that under clause 4, it would be quite open to the minister to say that the city of Fredericton might continue its present practice of draining its sewage into the river St. John; but under specific conditions to be fixed by the regulations.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We are making it an offence to do the things mentioned in clause 2, and are giving to the Governor in Council the right to make regulations to nullify the provision of section 2. That would be the effect of clause 4; but under subclause (a) it would be open to the Governor in Council to exempt certain places. May I ask the hon. gentleman from Ottawa if the Bill before us is the same as the one passed last year?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—With one exception; an amendment was moved by my hon. friend to clause 8, and was inserted in the Bill. I had a discussion with him at the time over it. We could not quite agree as to the effect of it, and the amendment was made. On looking over the matter and considering it again, it oc-cured to me very strongly, even more strongly than before, that instead of extending the scope of section 8, it was curtailed, and for these reasons I left those words out.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have every sympathy with the object of my hon. friend's Bill, as probably most of us have, but this clause 2 is an extremely sweeping and formidable one, and I would like to know from the government whether the attention of the Department of Justice has been called to the Bill at large, and to clause 2 in particular. I do not want to delay the Bill. My hon. friend is anxious to make progress with it. and has taken a great deal of pains with it, but I think we might reserve a section, if need be. before we finally pass the measure, and obtain an opinion from the Department of Justice on the two points: whether this matter is fully within our jurisdiction—as to which I confess I have some doubt—and, secondly, ascertain their opinion as to the clause, which is an extremely sweeping one, and might get innocent parties into considerable trouble, if it were used as a means of oppression.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Inasmuch as this Bill passed the Senate last session, and, I am under the impression, was approved by the Department of Justice, and there being a continuity in the Department of Justice, as far as constitutional opinion is concerned, which is not altered by any change of government, I considered it unnecessary to direct their attention to it. Consequently, I have not done so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Bill was not passed by the Senate last session.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I may be mistaken, but I do not think the attention of the Department of Justice was called to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thought it was.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me that clause 2 of this Bill would come into collision with the Typhoid Fever Bill, introduced by the senior member from Ottawa, which will prevent any sewage, liquid or solid, being placed in any drain or sewer in a city, whereas clause 2 of this Bill will allow such sewage to be drained into the sewer. The Typhoid Fever Bill will prevent that being done, even when the municipality consents to it. I think we are assuming a jurisdiction which properly belongs to the local legislature. Under the Typhoid Fever Bill, people are prevented from putting refuse, either liquid or solid into a drain, unless the municipality concerned gives them permission to do so. Can the municipality do that? I am strongly in favour of everything provided in the measure introduced by the senior member for Ottawa, but I feel that we can scarcely place the two laws on the statute-book, because one will interfere with the other. I call attention to the fact that this Bill will allow acts to be done that my hon. friend (Sir Richard Scott) says shall not be done; that such acts shall be considered a crime, and will render a person liable to a criminal action. I call the attention of the leader of the House, and the government of the day, to this legislation, and would ask whether it is really in the interest of the country, and whether it is possible to have the two laws placed on the statute-book? I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to this fact, and if we are to go on with this Bill, and with the other Bill, we had better try and harmonize the two, and see that they do not come into collision with each other.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The object of the Bill is quite humane, but I think the machinery by which it is to be put in force is quite human. I see where lots of errors can occur in putting this measure into force. I asked the promoter of the Bill what clause 4 meant. We are not decided on that point. We have had the hon. senator from De Salaberry disagreeing absolutely with the promoter of the Bill. If two hon. gentlemen of high legal attainments cannot agree on a certain point in this House where we are passing the measure. what may we expect from the courts? Clause 4 gives the government power to pass regulations to carry the provisions of this Bill into effect. What does that mean? That is putting a tremendous power in the hands of one department of the government—power to dictate to a municipality that may be adverse to the policy, or to the government of the day as has been done in the past. It may be rehashing old subjects, but we know that counties and municipalities have been threatened or favoured by the governments of the day according to the amount of support they might give to the party in power, or the party out of power. We have had a statesman on the Liberal side, the Hon. Edward Blake, who said he would not take power if he had to make a promise of a subsidy. That referred to a constituency right across the river here and Mr. Blake made that statement in the House one day. We should consider it very seriously before giving our sanction to anything of the kind proposed in clause 4. As the hon. gentleman opposite has called attention to clause 2, and has asked that the Bill should not be proceeded with until investigated by the judicial department of the government, I think we should not proceed further with the measure at present. Any one reading clause 2 will see the danger to which municipalities and individuals in the country will be exposed. This clause gives the right to public officials to meddle with purely local and provincial matters. I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that that clause, on the face of it, is ultra vires. We may have a right to deal with navigable waters, but we have no right to deal with any water which may be in part navigable, or not at all navigable. The clause is a very stringent one. It leaves it open to anybody to prosecute a neighbour. It is a clause that ought to be considered very carefully, because it would be one of the most dangerous under the Criminal Code. Anybody who should carelessly drop something into the water might be prosecuted. That is a power which should not be placed in the hands of any individual. The suggestion of the leader of the House is quite proper—the Bill should go to the Department of Justice to be considered from the criminal point of view, and whether it would be advisable to place such a power in the hands of any individual or any officer. I move that clause 2 be suspended.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It has been suggested that this clause be allowed to stand until we could get the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—This is a very important matter unquestionably. I have no objection whatever that the views of the Minister of Justice should be sought on the constitutional question. As to the question of policy, the Minister of Justice has nothing to say; it is for this House to say whether we should pass it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There would be a question about the constitutionality of the measure.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Last year we discussed the constitutional question at great length, and while there was some difference of opinion, in the end there appeared to be no doubt that the Bill was constitutional; if the hon. gentlemen wish to be fortified on that score, there is no reasonable objection. The only point I wish to urge on the House is that this Bill has been before us three sessions. Last session it did not reach the House of Commons in time, and if it is delayed here and this session is to be short, it may meet the same fate. We might send it to the House of Commons and let them make it a government measure if they choose. I have some reason to think that if the Senate passes this Bill, and it reaches the Commons in time, it will be made a government measure. The constitutional question has been gone into by members of the House, and, so far as I know, the doubts which existed at one time have been all removed.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell me, as he has studied this question with a good deal of attention, if all the legislation contained in clause 2 could be passed by the provincial legislatures?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That is a question which I should not like to answer offhand.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They could not make a violation of the law a crime.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—As far as navigable waters are concerned, the provincial legislators could not pass a law of the kind, because the navigable waters are under our jurisdiction and not under theirs.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Do you not think that jurisdiction is given to the federal parliament as regards navigation only?

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—When we are considering this question we should bear in mind the fact that while we are splitting straws finding out who have the power to do this and to do that, hundreds of people are being murdered every year. Let us send the Bill to the other House. The Minister of Justice is there and it will be his place to decide whether parliament has power to pass this legislation. All the provinces of the Dominion have pollution of Streams Acts. Some are stronger than others—some are as stringent as the Bill before us. We, by passing this Bill, are simply backing them up, and, I think, in justice to the people whose lives are being endangered every day by this practice of emptying sewage into the rivers, we should take their health and safety into consideration and pass the Bill, leaving it to the House of Commons to determine the question of its constitutionality.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have no doubt the promoter of the Bill remembers distinctly that on more than one occasion I showed a spirit which was hardly friendly to the Bill, but I must say on the present occasion, with respect to clause 2 of the Bill, that if we are to have a Bill at all to protect the streams from pollution, the language of the clause is not too strong. It forbids the putting into any navigable water or any other water which flows into navigable water, of any solid or liquid sewage matter. That seems to be a necessary thing if you are going to have a Bill. I do not see how, if you propose to pass this measure at all, you can use any weaker language than that. Then sub-clause 2 says:

2. Any person, other than a municipal or sanitary authority, shall not be guilty of an offence under this section in respect of the passing of sewage matter into a drain communicating with any sewer belonging to or under the control of any municipal or sanitary authority, if he has the sanction of the municipal or sanitary authority for such passing.

The effect of that will be that in a case like that of Fredericton, the householders who let their sewage go into the common sewers are not liable. The fight, if there is to be a fight, will be between the city of Fredericton and the federal authorities. I can understand why some hon. gentlemen object to clause 3, because the penalty is rather high, but for a corporation it is not to exceed $500, and for an individual not to exceed $50.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Does that apply to municipal corporations?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that is what it means. I withdraw my objection to the Bill as a whole, but I wish to call the attention of the committee to what I think is really the weak point about it. Supposing that the Bill goes into operation over the whole country, or is about going into operation, then under clause 8, the promoter of the Bill has provided a means of exempting certain districts. Then clause 9 says:

9. Sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall not come into force until such date as is appointed therefor by the Governor in Council by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

The suggestion that I respectfully make to the promoter of the Bill is that he should develop clause 9 a little further.

The CHAIRMAN—The committee to which this Bill has been referred have amended that clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I know, but that is not the point I am making. My point is this: that you have to take the position, when this Bill is assented to by the Governor General, that it is supposed to apply to the whole country. You cannot very well bring clause 8 into operation until the Bill is in force. Under clause 9 the Bill goes into operation over the whole country subject to any exceptions to be made under clause 8. My suggestion to the hon. and learned promoter of the Bill is that he should develop clause 9 so as to provide that the law shall not go into operation in any district until the Governor General in Council declares that it is to operate in that locality or district. The amendment that I put down hurriedly is to read at the end of the first line of clause 9:

Sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall not come into force in any locality or district until such date as is appointed therefor.

If the clause is developed in accordance with that idea, then the Governor General in Council, according as the country is prepared for the Act, can put it into operation. I only make the suggestion and I think it is worth considering.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I think that is probably a good suggestion, but I might possibly improve on it—why not put it this way:

This Act shall come into force in such district or districts as may be specified by the Governor General in Council.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The Senate is in much more of a panic over this legislation than the country is. I have not learned that there is any feeling in the country that legislation of this character should be dealt with by the Senate. I am of the opinion that we are forcing this on the public without any disposition on the part of the country here, or elsewhere, that we should meddle in this matter. The municipalities have the direct control. There is no question that if this Act went into force the minute a proclamation took place and a district had not made application to the government, it would apply to that district. The fact is, a general proclamation by the government, or in districts by the government, before the districts are heard from would cause a condition of things that would be very disturbing. Take it in its application to the River St. John, for instance. For hundreds of miles on one side is the United States and on the other side New Brunswick. On that river, one hundred and fifty million logs are rafted every year, and two or three thousand men are engaged there in operations, driving, &c. If this Act were in force for two hours, every individual employed on that river might be liable to be brought before the court. Unless there is a demand, if it is not clearly constitutional, I do not think it improves our position as a Senate to ride rough shod over the constitution of the country.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—On that score, I may set my hon. friend's mind perfectly at rest. He says there is no demand for this legislation. I have here a series of articles published by Mr. Murray, C.E., in the 'Globe,' quite recently, one on the 29th December last and one on the 1st January, 1912, and the last one a few days later. In discussing this very Bill, Mr. Murray says, among other things:

There appears to be a general consensus of opinion among those representing provincial health authorities that the time has come when some defined action must be taken by the Dominion legislature. On October 12-13 last year the Public Health Committee of the Commission called a joint conference at Ottawa at which were represented the public health officials of the various provinces as well as the Dominion officials connected with public health administration. This conference resulted in a report, which in part stated: 'Whereas the pollution of the waterways of the Dominion by raw sewage and factory wastes is a menace to the health of the public by reason of the contamination of public water supplies as indicated by the excessive mortality from typhoid fever alone,' &c. The report then goes on to point out that the question is national as well as provincial, as provincial authorities only have jurisdiction over the waterways within their own boundaries and are unable to protect those resident against pollution which may happen either in a contiguous province or in an adjoining country. The conference recommended that the Dominion of Canada enact a law on the lines of the draft Bill, this being the Bill now before parliament.

It will thus be seen that the provincial health authorities will welcome any Dominion legislation on this question, and are not inclined to view the matter in the light of interference with provincial rights.

It is unquestionable that the provincial authorities may by enactment prohibit the pollution of surface waters within their own boundaries. The difficulty in the past has been the adoption of some effective method of enforcing legislation. The province of Saskatchewan, however, appears to have solved the difficulty, and enacts that no money by-law is valid or can be submitted to the people until such time as the consent of the provincial government has been obtained to any system of sewerage or water supply. The provincial health authority of Saskatchewan is represented by a Bureau of Public Health administered by a commissioner, and while no purity standard is laid down, each scheme is considered on its merits with referenec to local conditions, and the commissioner establishes a standard relative to each particular circumstance. It would appear that this precedent is likely to be followed by other provincial health authorities; in fact, the conference of the Dominion and provincial health officers adopted the following resolution:—

That the legislatures of the Dominion of Canada be recommended to insert in their public health Acts a clause as follows:—'No by-law providing for the raising of money for the construction, operation or extension of any system of waterworks or common sewer or system of sewerage or sewage disposal shall be submitted to the votes of the electors by the council of any municipality until the consent of the Commissioner of Public Health or of the Provincial Board of Health, as the case may be, to the proposed construction, operation or extension has been first obtained, and the preamble to every such by-law shall declare that such consent has been duly obtained; no debenture shall be valid if issued under any by-law passed in contravention of the provisions of this section.'

Mr. Murray has evidently given very serious consideration to this matter, and he says that in every aspect of this Bill it has not only received his approbation but also that of the boards of health of the country. Hon. gentlemen must remember that this Bill, at the request of the Senate, was submitted to the Conservation Commission last year, and it was returned with a report expressing approval of it and asking the Senate to pass it. So it is idle to say that there is no demand for this legislation. It must be remembered that the Bill was introduced long before there was a typhoid epidemic in Ottawa, and it was not introduced because of that epidemic, but because it was an absolute necessity. I do not think my Bill is perfect, and would welcome any suggestions that would make it so; but if we are to pass legislation of this kind when are we going to do it? Are we going to wait ten or twenty years, when it will be ten or twenty times more difficult to enforce it? I do not see how anybody is going to suffer. We simply say the time has come when the principle should be sanctioned, and we provide the machinery to enable the government some time, perhaps in five years or ten years, to stop this criminal practice of polluting the water supply with sewage. It is only after taking the opinion of experts on the subject that regulations will be framed, and cases such as Halifax and other parts of the country will be considered on their merits.

Hin. Mr. WILSON—Will the hon. gentleman say whether this Bill in any way interferes with the jurisdiction of the local legislature if it passes? In other words, has a local legislature the right to pass an Act to prevent excreta from typhoid patients and other matters being put in the sewer of a new municipality?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Yes, they have.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will they have a right to pass an Act to prevent the transmission of typhoid discharges and such matter being put into the sewers of a municipality?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend has asked me to explain things that are not germane to this Bill. What local legislatures can or will do is a matter of very little concern to us, except that we know for a fact that the provincial legislatures are with us in this legislation and want us to pass this Bill.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The provincial legislatures?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell me that the provincial legislature of New Brunswick has passed such a resolution?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I say that at the request of the Commission on Conservation the various members of the public health officers from the provinces were asked to come to Ottawa and consider this Bill with them, and jointly with the Dominion officials, the various public officers commended and approved of the passing of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Does my hon. friend tell me that if this Bill passes, the provincial legislatures will be debarred from passing an Act to protect the public health from any other cause?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No, it does not interfere with the provinces at all.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I call the attention of the senior member for Ottawa to the fact that this Bill will prevent clause 10 of his typhoid fever Bill from becoming law should it pass.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—There is no conflict between the two Bills at all; no conflict whatever.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I cannot see it in that light. If we get a legal opinion upon it, we shall find that they are in conflict. This Bill provides that if any matter is drained into a sewer, permission must be obtained from the municipality. My hon. friend from Ottawa says if that is a deleterious matter they are liable to fine; therefore I think the Bills will come in conflict. I am not a lawyer, but it would seem to me that such would be the case; and I would suggest that the gentleman having the Bill in charge should move that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT— I am wiling to do that.

The clause was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I think the Bill should not pass. There is no great hurry for it, no anxiety for it expressed by the country, and I think it would be better that the committee rise and report progress.

The committee rose and reported progress, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 27) An Act respecting the Security Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Owens.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 8, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (N) An Act to incorporate the Dominion Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill (O) An Act respecting the Protectorate Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

NAVAL ACT REPEAL BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE introduced Bill (P) An Act to repeal Chap. 43 of 9-10 Edward VII, An Act respecting the Naval Service of Canada.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE moved that the Bill be read a second time on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is the purpose of this Bill?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—To repeal the Naval Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I will second that every time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was ordered for second reading on Tuesday next.

MOVEMENTS OF POPULATION IN CANADA.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:

That a special committee be forthwith appointed to inquire into and consider the disappointing nature of movements of population in Canada, more especially as affecting the rural districts of the older provinces, as shown by the census of 1911, and to report from time to time.

That such committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath and to employ stenographers; and

That such committee be authorized to expend for the foregoing and other necessary purposes sums of money not exceeding in the whole five hundred dollars.

That such committee be composed of the hon. Messieurs Yeo, Beith, Derbyshire, Casgrain, Tessier, Baird, Taylor, Pope and the mover.

He said: I do not think it is necessary to trouble the House for any length of time in moving the resolution of which I have given notice. The result of the census taken last year is, on the whole, satisfactory. The population of Canada has increased at a reasonably rapid rate; but, when we come to look at the details of the census, we find certain facts which are not so satisfactory. In the first place, it will be noticed that in the three lower provinces there has been practically no increase of population. In the province of Nova Scotia, if one excepts the cities of Halifax, Sydney and Glace Bay, there has been, I think, an actual falling off of population. In the province of New Brunswick there has been a slight increase, but in the province of Prince Edward Island, which has been very properly called the garden of the gulf, one of the most fertile portions of the whole country, there has been a very considerable decrease in the population during the last ten years. Take the great province of Ontario, while there has been some increase in the aggregate population of the province, when we come to examine a little carefully, and deduct the increase which has taken place in certain cities, there has been substantially no increase whatever in the rural districts, and, as I have already indicated, the misfortune is that in the rural districts, where the increase of population is most desirable, there has been, in a great many cases, not only no increase, but an actual diminution. I have said enough, I think, to indicate what is the case in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia; but in the province of Ontario, take counties like the Hurons, a most fertile district with a very enterprising and industrious population, we find there has been a falling off I think of something like nine thousand in the ten years. This is an unsatisfactory condition of affairs, as every hon. gentleman must acknowledge.

There are various reasons given for this condition of things. You meet one gentleman and he gives one reason, and you meet another who gives a different reason. I think it is desirable, with a view to future action calculated to improve existing conditions, that there should be some sort of inquiry which would lead to some substantial, definite and authoritative results; and for that reason I have taken the liberty of moving for this committee. Every hon. gentleman must admit that the subject is of sufficient consequence to deserve a committee, and we have rather more time here to devote to questions of this kind than they have in the other House, and as it is desirable that the inquiry should be made I think it is only reasonable and proper that it should be made in this House inasmuch as it cannot just now be made in the other. It is stated in this resolution that the committee be authorized to expend a sum not exceeding in the whole $500. It will be remembered that when the Committee on Public Health were authorized to make an investigation two years ago, I think it was, they were given power to spend the same amount of money, and I do not think that they spent all the money which was appropriated. I have no reason to suppose that the committee which I am moving for, if appointed, will spend anything like the $500, but I put it at that amount in order to be safe. I do not think it necessary to say anything more.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am very glad that my hon. friend beside me has brought forward this motion. There could scarcely be a question of greater interest to the whole community than that of a proper distribution as between the agricultural and civic classes throughout this Dominion. I am sorry to say that my experience, and I think it is the experience of most hon. gentlemen, is that, from whatever cause it may be, there is at present, and has been for a very considerable time, not in Canada alone, but in many other countries, a drift from the country to the city, which is neither wholesome nor desirable, in my opinion. In the great province from which I come, the province of Ontario, I may say it has been almost painfully noticeable during the past few years. The distribution of population, I hear from the census authorities, has been altered to such an extent that to-day probably one-half of the whole of the population of that great agricultural province are immured in various towns, cities and villages, while, on the other hand the agricultural population, on which the rest must depend, and on which the welfare of the country depends, shows in almost every county from one end of Ontario to the other, either an absolute or positive reduction, or else they are simply standing still; in other words they have lost the entire of their natural increase. My hon. friend gave as an illustration a case of the three ridings of Huron, with which I am particularly well acquainted, as I have the honour of representing the whole of them, or parts of them, according to the way in which they were gerrymandered from time to time. Now, in those constituencies—and he was right in saying that they are among the most fertile in all Ontario, and I might say in all Canada—there has been a very steady, and a very formidable decrease of population within the last twenty or thirty years. I believe I am right in saying that not merely has there been a decrease, as he stated, of some 9,000 in the three ridings within the last ten years, but that since 1891 the decrease has amounted to fully 20,000. The same thing has taken place in a great many other constituencies. I believe that out of the 86 constituencies into which Ontario is divided, scarcely sxteen of those, almost invariably city constituencies, or constituencies in which there are large towns, have grown considerably at the expense of the rest of the community. There are of the 86, scarcely more than 16, I believe, that show a positive increase, and a very great number that show a downright decrease.

No doubt the general results of the census were satisfactory. The population of Canada had increased by something like 1,750,000 within a space of ten years, a most gratifying exhibit compared with the increase that had taken place the preceding eleven years, and quite equal to the increase which took place in the United States, when their population was about the same as ours was in 1901. Nevertheless, I think my hon. friend's committee will do a considerable service if they investigate and report to us the reasons, so far as they can ascertain them, why in such a country as Canada, more particularly in such a province as Ontario, and I might add Prince Edward Island——

Hon. Mr. POWER—And Nova Scotia.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Nova Scotia, I am inclined to think, is more a maritime than an agricultural province. But in any case I think that my hon. friend cannot employ his spare time better than in endeavouring to obtain information, from whatever quarter he can, as to what are the causes of what I regard as very unfortunate circumstances, that is, the positive loss which has occurred in so many fertile rural constituencies and the drift which has taken place, from various causes and reasons, towards the cities and towns in their vicinity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree as to the desirability of appointing a select committee for the purpose of making such an inquiry as my hon. friend has in view. I think, however, that such a committee will not discover causes with which we are not familiar at the present time, but may in all probability be better able to direct attention to the causes which are well recognized, that bring about decrease in population. The whole trend of population for generations past has been westward. The incentive to any man is to reach some place where there are greater possibilities before him than in some community which has practically been developed. The United States have passed through the same difficulties—at least the New England States have—from which the maritime provinces suffer. When the western prairies of the United States were opened up, the New England states became to some extent depopulated. When our western provinces were opened up, the same effect was found in the eastern provinces of Canada. That is human nature. It is owing to well recognized economic conditions. You cannot expect young men, who are battling their way through life, and who hope to see a promising future before them, and to take advantage of many conditions which present themselves to the public mind, particularly in western Canada, to remain in an old settlement. I say without hesitation that in no part of the civilized world are there such favourable conditions awaiting the energetic and ambitious young man as are to be found in western Canada to-day. We cannot, therefore, expect the rising generation, in those sections of Canada which have been developed for a generation past, to permit themselves to become fixtures in their native provinces, from purely patriotic or home motives, and thus sacrifice the opportunities of which others are taking advantage in the great Northwest. The same thing presents itself to every observing mind in every country in Europe. There we find the same thing prevailing—hundreds of thousands leaving the comforts of civilization in Europe and becoming pioneers in new countries that they may better their condition. Those same conditions to which my hon. friend refers are to be found in every country in the continent of Europe. Furthermore, it is almost unnecessary to point out that this is an age when people seek pleasure and amusement which cannot be furnished in the country. The great cities of the United States, which lie near the boundary of Canada, are powerful magnets which draw the young people from Canada—cities like Boston, for instance. There was a time when the younger generation of Ontario sought Chicago and other western cities of the United States, which like magnets drew them from their homes.

It seems to me that the most important duty the state or the people of the older provinces have to give consideration to, is to make agricultural or farm life appeal more strongly to the rising generation than it has in the past, and I am glad to see that throughout the Dominion of Canada the good roads movement is taking hold and receiving a very great deal of attention. There is to-day a very large representative deputation waiting upon the government to urge the importance of developing colonization roads throughout Canada. You cannot expect the rising generation to remain on a farm all their days, and to face the difficulties and undergo the trials and deprivations which their forefathers have undergone, and unless the people themselves, and the state, will give proper consideration to developing conditions of farm life which are so necessary to make life attractive, then so long may we expect the farms, particularly in the older sections of Canada, to be depopulated of the rising generation. I fancy this committee will take into consideration those problems. I do not think they will discover anything which has not already been recognized, but such a committee will be able to direct the attention of the provincial and federal governments to the necessity of working out this problem, by which the population may be more evenly distributed than we find to-day, and by which the older parts of the country may retain that importance which we would like to accord to them, and which we hope may remain with them for many years to come. I shall be very glad to support anything my hon. friend has in view in the direction of such a committee making every inquiry into this subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in every word uttered by my hon. friend the leader of the House. But any one who has travelled through the northwest provinces will soon find a reason for the depopulation of the rural sections of the east, particularly in Ontario. I have been through a considerable portion of the Northwest, and a large portion of Manitoba. I took the trouble some years ago to inquire of almost every farmer I met, and in different sections of the country as to the place from whence he came to settle in Manitoba, and I can inform the hon. leader of the opposition that, in one or two sections of Manitoba, 99 per cent of the people I spoke to informed me that they came from the counties of Grey, Bruce or Huron, the portions of the province of Ontario that my hon. friend referred to as being their representative. I do not say that the people left because he represented the county. Those who have had any experience of settlement in older provinces of the Dominion know that the farmer had to settle upon a thickly wooded farm. His life was almost passed before he had made a comfortable home for himself, and as the son grew up the parent would try and settle him as near as he could, by dividing up the farm, or purchasing lots that were then sold by the government without a single stick cut. The moment the Northwest Territories were opened for settlement, and the farmers began to understand the advantage of going to that part of the country, the father in the old sections of the country, instead of investing $500 or $1,000 in the purchase of a lot for his son, give the money to him to go west, because he knew that when he reached the west and secured a homestead all he had to do was to put in the plough instead of having to clear the land upon which he was to settle. I will give a practical illustration from my own county. A young man from the county of Hastings had been in the western states, I forget whether it was Montana or Dakota, but the result of his return to the county was the depopulation of that section of the riding to the extent of thirty or forty people. He took some married men, and some young men and women away with him. He gave a glowing description of the fertility of the soil, and the readiness with which they could obtain land and settle upon it, and produce in a couple of years enough to live upon instead of having to go to work to clear the land and wait for half a generation before getting a comfortable home. In visiting my own constituency—and I presume it is the experience of every one who has been in the Northwest—I did not dare give my own honest, frank opinion as to the advantages to the farmers in leaving the part of the country in which they were settled and going to the west. I studiously avoided doing that, and, on the contrary, recommended every one who had a farm of his own to stay where he was if he could get a good living from it. I think my hon. friend, who is the chairman of that committee, will find that the cause of the depopulation of the older portions of the country has been that which has been so clearly pointed out by my hon. friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Lougheed). It is true, as the hon. leader of the opposition says that there has been a great influx from the rural sections of the country into the cities and towns for a number of years past, for the reason that the investment of large sums of money in the industrial pursuits of the country demanded labour, and thousands left the farms because they thought town life or work in a factory was easier and more comfortable, and that they would be in better society than they would be at home. I deplore that state of affairs. I think it is a great mistake. The young men are better on the farms, and when I say this I am speaking from long experience in association with the rural population. My father went on a backwoods farm before a stick of wood was cut on it, and remained there during his whole life. If the Northwest Territories had been opened at that time, and if he could have gone there and turned his attention from his business as a builder, and contractor, and settled on a farm in the Northwest, instead of having to work until he was sixty or seventy years of age, before he had a clear farm or a comfortable home, he would have been much better off. Had he invested the same amount of money, and applied the same industry to a farm in the Northwest he would have been a wealthy man, instead of being simply comfortably off. Such are the reasons which have induced people to leave farms in the older provinces, particularly the young men, and go to the Northwest. If I am not much mistaken, the hon. gentleman will find that the reasons for the depopulation of the older sections of Ontario, and more particularly of some portions of the maritime provinces—although it has not occurred in Quebec to the same extent as in the other portions—are two fold. One is that peopeople have gone into the manufacturing states to find employment, and other people have gone into the Northwest; that while the older provinces have to a certain extent been depopulated, the population of the great Northwest Territories have marvellously increased, not altogether by foreigners, but by the migration of the younger members of the community from Ontario, and the other provinces, who are seeking homes in the Northwest.

To realize this fact, all we have to do is to look at the gentlemen who are here today from the Northwest; every one of them came from the older provinces and went west because they could better themselves, and I am very glad to know that they succeeded in doing so. Depend upon it thousands more from the older provinces will migrate to the newer provinces in the west. The movement has not yet stopped. The advice given half a century ago by Horace Greely to the younger men of the United States—'Go west, young man'—has been acted on, as was proved by the fact mentioned by the hon. leader to my left, by the depopulation of the eastern states of the neighbouring republic to a much greater extent than has occurred in Canada.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There is one thing that is satisfactory about the result of the census—that is, that the population of the Dominion, as a whole, has increased to a very encouraging extent. The complaints made that young men go from eastern Canada to western Canada really afford reasons for gratification, because there is no doubt at all that a farmer in the west will produce three or four times as much wealth in a given time as he could on the old homestead in the east. But there is another aspect of this matter, which I am glad has been discussed here, namely, the advisability of keeping the young men on the land. The government of the day ought to turn their attention to that very important point. Good roads alone will not do it; but the general legislation of the country should be along the direction of making the condition of the farmer more profitable.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If that is done, he will stay on the farm. The trend of our legislation in Canada for a number of years has been in the wrong direction. It has been entirely along the line of building up the cities and the urban population. You have been bonussing and protecting manufacturing industries that are able to pay higher wages than the farmer is able to pay. You are bleeding the farmer, on the other hand, by making him pay more for the goods he has to consume on account of that protection.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Now, I trust that this committee, when they report, will be able to show some reasons that have brought about this condition of affairs. There is no question that a great many people, notably Mr. Hill, of the Great Northern railway, are saying, 'Stay on the land; stay on the land.' A term that Mr. Hill very often uses, and a very appropriate term, is 'People without land are a mob; while land without people is a wilderness.' There is no question about that at all, and Mr. Hill does everything he can to try and keep the people on the land, probably for the purpose of encouraging them to grow produce that will give him more freight. The opinions expressed by every hon. gentleman who has spoken here to-day should direct the government along the line of making the conditions of the farmer more profitable, because he will stay on the land if it is more profitable there than elsewhere. It is the lure of money making that controls his movements. We are pleased to know that within the last ten or fifteen years Canada has not only retained her natural increase, but that the population has greatly increased by immigration from abroad. Previous to that, we, unfortunately, saw our young people going to the United States; Canada was simply a breeding ground for the United States for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—We have some yet going.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, but while we have some going to the United States we have hundreds of thousands coming from the United States to the Northwest.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—With money in both pockets.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am pleased with the sentiments that have been uttered here to-day, and it is a wise thing for the government and for legislators to sit up and consider the position we are in, and that legislation should be directed towards making the position of the farmer more profitable and not subsidizing manufacturers and thus enabling them to draw young men off the farm into the cities and urban settlements.

The motion was agreed to.

THE ANNUITIES GRANTS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BELL moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing:—

1. The number of persons who have been appointed to the position of lecturers upon the subject of annuities under cap. 5, 7-8 Edward VII., 'An Act to authorize the issue of government Annuities for Old Age and Amendments thereto.'

2. The names of such lecturers, the amount of salary paid to each, of travelling expenses or payments for any other service rendered in connection therewith.

3. The number of clerks and others employed in connection with the organization and putting into force the provisions of the Annuities Act; and the salaries and wages paid to each one so employed.

4. The total expense incurred in the organization of the Annuities Branch of the Public Service, to the end of December, 1911.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT --The motion is, of course, a good one, and should be adopted. I take this particular opportunity of calling the attention of my hon. friend to a little matter which was not in controversy, but which was alluded to by him in the course of some remarks recently made. He was under the impression that the British government, through their post office service, had successfully conducted a system of deferred annuities. It is true that the British government, through their post offices, had adopted a system of deferred annuities; how many years it has been in operation I do not know. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the English population is forty-five millions, or thereabout, while ours is a little over seven millions. I have here a return from the Imperial parliament on the matter of deferred annuities. I find that the total number of deferred annuities granted in the year 1908, which is the latest that I can obtain information about, by the English post office service, was exactly one hundred and fifty. The number granted by us last year was fifteen hundred. So that I think I am within my rights in saying that unless our post offices bestir themselves infinitely more than the English post offices have done, the change to that department is not likely to be attended with any very important results.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 9) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be read the second time on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN--Will the hon. gentleman state the object of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It deals apparently with taking possession of drift timber, and also with the defacing of marks on timber. It is evidently legislation looking to the protection of timber in streams.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 53) An Act respecting Patents of Edmund F. Piper.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill (No. 63) An Act to incorporate the Premier Life Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (No. 72) An Act to incorporate the Sterling Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Taylor.

Bill (No. 96) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SASKATCHEWAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called for third reading of Bill (No. 26), An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the order be discharged and that the third reading be fixed for Tuesday next. He said: The solicitors in charge of the Bill are in communication with the company in Regina. They have not yet got sufficient information to enable them to agree to change the name and I am, therefore, moving for a postponement of the third reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was ordered for third reading on Tuesday next.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 75) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING FURTHER POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called for second reading of Bill (C) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the order be postponed until Thursday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What object can there be in allowing such an order to remain on the paper? It is clearly out of order. It deals with a question of public money, and can only be considered by us after it has been recommended by His Excellency to the House of Commons, and then sent up to the Senate. I take that point now as a matter for the ruling of the Chair. Unless there is some reason why my hon. friend thinks the second reading of the Bill should stand, I ask for a ruling.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I only moved it, as a matter of courtesy, for the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) who is not here. I understand he is expected here next week, and it will not do any harm to let him express his views to the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the circumstances, I will withdraw my objection.

The motion was agreed to, and the second reading was postponed until Tuesday next.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (L) An Act for the relief of Edna Wells.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

Bill (No. 47) An Act respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (No. 48) An Act respecting the Kootenay and Alberta Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 49) An Act respecting the Montreal Central Terminal Company.—Hon. Mr. Owens.

TYPHOID FEVER BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (G) An Act to check the spreading of Typhoid Fever.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I have been requested to give further information in regard to the measure now before the committee, and I may be permitted to make a few observations on the source of the typhoid epidemic which visited Ottawa a year ago, and of the method that has been suggested for the checking of it. In the month of March last, the epidemic became so very serious that the attention of the whole country was called to it, and at the instance of the chairman of the Commission on Conservation, the Provincial Board of Health were appealed to, and they took up the question, and published the result of their inquiry in a volume which I hold in my hand, and from which I shall quote a few extracts. I may say briefly that they found up to the time of the inquiry in March—and the epidemic continued some time after that—over nine hundred cases had been reported, and fifty-two deaths had occurred. It still continued to prevail. The members of the committee were Dr. J. W. S. McCullough, Chief Health Officer of the Province; Dr. R. W. Bell, Medical Inspector of the Board of Health, and Colonel Jones, the head of the Medical Department of the Militia Department of Canada, and Major Drum, who, I think, is the Secretary of the Provincial Board of Health. They went very fully into the inquiry as to the causes of this epidemic, and I shall briefly refer to the conclusions which they reached. They found that in the month of December, 1910, there had been two cases of typhoid in one of the suburbs of Ottawa to the west, on what was called Cave Creek, and the excreta from those persons, while they had typhoid, was thrown into a privy that had its back on the creek, and therefore was carried down to the Ottawa river. The intake for the water supply of Ottawa goes well out into the centre of the stream, but at times, when the water is low, there is a valve midway between the aqueduct and the intake pipe, opened for the purpose of allowing additional water pressure in case of fire. This valve in the intake pipe had been opened some eight or ten times during December and January, and the conclusions reached by the commission were that owing to the opening of the intake pipe, which was in the vicinity of the outlet of Cave Creek, the typhoid bacilli entered the pipe and were carried down into the aqueduct and distributed through the service pipes among the people. That fact was also corroborated in another way. While Ottawa suffered from this epidemic, the city of Hull was entirely free, although they drew their water from practically the same source, the currents of the Ottawa river, and that is further confirmed by the fact that a couple of years ago typhoid broke out in Hull owing to some defect in their supply pipe, and it did not prevail in Ottawa, showing conclusively that it is due to water pollution. The evidence there was of course absolutely undoubted. The commission reported, after investigation as to the causes of the Ottawa epidemic, that throughout the city there were the old fashioned privies in existence, and that in cases where the typhoid occurred, the excreta had not been properly disposed of. On March 11, they say:

> 'Where such a relic of mediaevalism (privy pit) is in use, and becomes the receptacle of the excreta of a typhoid fever patient, it is imperative that there should be a thorough and careful disinfection of the contents, and for this purpose the health department should exercise the greatest vigilance, by systematically performing the necessary services; for, if left to the individual householder, it is found the work is never properly performed. The conditions to which your attention is directed are such as to call for immediate action by yourself and the local board of health, which would look to the thorough disinfection of the pits and their contents, and also of the premises immediately around the pits wherever they are found to be contaminated by the typhoid excreta, and for the careful removal of the contents of the pits after disinfection.'

Accompanying this report is a list of houses in which typhoid fever was discovered. They go on to say that had it occurred in the summer season when the flies would have carried the bacilli, instead of in the cold weather, the epidemic would have been very much worse; but the effect of the freezing in winter checked to some extent the dissemination of the disease. I find the highest authorities, both in the United States and in England, recommend disinfection by carbolic acid or some other powerful disinfectant, of the excreta. They should never be disposed of where they are liable to affect the population, either through the drinking water or through the access that flies may have to them, and they strongly recommend the process that I have provided in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Has the hon. gentleman found in the statutes of other countries a provision making it a criminal offence, if the Act is not observed?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—We make it a criminal offence to throw a diseased animal into the river, and therefore, if a part of a diseased human being is thrown into a river, how much greater ought the crime to be. The same principle is carried out in our statutes.

The criminal law contains a provision similar to this. I was able to quote, on the second reading of the Bill, parallel cases exactly similar to these. You will observe from what I have read that the provincial board of health recommended disinfection, that there was no use trusting to the people to do it, it must be done by some official authority; and I think I mentioned just now that both the latest scientific authorities in England and United States recommended that as being the proper mode of destroying typhoid bacilli. Part of the Criminal Code provides that if you do anything that in anyway injures the health of another you are liable to be tried for it; anything that affects the health of another, without specifying the particular act. All the provisions concerning nuisances come under that clause. I do not know that there is anything more I can say on the subject. I went very fully into this matter on the second reading of the Bill, and do not choose to repeat what I then said; but the conclusion reached has been that it is only through the Parliament of Canada that we can check the spread of typhoid. It has prevailed more or less every year for the last thirty or forty years, more particularly since we have been relying on the rivers and lakes for our drinking water. It has prevailed pretty steadily in Toronto; Sarnia has recently had an outbreak; and Montreal has had it pretty constantly, so that the city is undertaking an expense of some millions of dollars to purify the water by the most approved methods, that is, by the reservoir system, and by sand filters. Many scientists say, however that the bacilli are so insensible to the eye, even with the most powerful glass, that they are not visible, and that they sometimes pass through even the sand filter, and therefore the only way seemingly, to check it is by preventing their existence. They do not multiply in the river; they die within a limited time—I cannot place the number of weeks or days —but they do not propagate there, they propagate in the human body, in the alimentary canal, and they do not propagate in every individual, as evidenced by the fact that at the time the epidemic prevailed here, of all the persons who were drinking tap water up to a certain period, when the hypochloride treatment was adopted, only a certain percentage were attacked by typhoid. That was simply because their systems happened to be in better order. The human body would be immune to typhoid bacilli if it were kept in normal health. But so few people are in normal health, so many people have disturbed digestion—undigested food and fermenting food in the alimentary canal—that that is a nest for the bacilli, in which they multiply, up into the billions. There is only one way of dealing with them, that is by destroying them when they have left the human body.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I have no fault to find with subclauses 'a,' 'b' and 'c,' in this first clause. A person committing any of those offences would be guilty of a misdemeanour, and I think might be charged under the Criminal Code; but typhoid might occur in many homes throughout the country, especially among poor people who might not know the nature of the disease for a week or two. It takes some little time before the nature of the disease can be diagnosed, and if it were proved that the excreta from such a patient had been disposed of otherwise than as this Bill provides, the people would be liable to punishment. It would be harsh treatment of individuals for a matter over which they would have no control. The Bill is too drastic.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The Bill makes provision that in any municipality where typhoid fever occurs, or has occurred within a year before the passing of this measure, this Act shall be published at least twelve times in a daily or weekly newspaper in or near the locality where such case occurred. It is a matter of inconvenience to one individual or the possible death of a thousand.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Take the cases that occurred in Ottawa. Those people who suffered at that time would not know that they had typhoid for some time.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The law would scarcely operate until a case of typhoid was pronounced. Unless the law is severe it cannot be operative. Take the case which I mentioned at the second reading of this Bill, which occurred in the town of Plymouth, Penn., a few years ago. In that case over one thousand persons contracted typhoid fever because a typhoid patient had gone to a place a little above the town, and the excreta being thrown on the banks of the river the rain washed the germs into the river.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—But it is not right to make a man a criminal if he does not know that he has typhoid.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No judge would condemn a man if he did not know he had the disease.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will the hon. gentleman tell the House the difference between the symptoms of typhoid, malaria and chills and fever? It is a very serious matter to pronounce an innocent man a criminal and fine or imprison him when he does not know what is wrong with him.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman has read the Bill he will see that it contains the expression : 'knowing that person to have typhoid fever.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—Provision is made for the case of a doctor, but none for the case of a man who is not a doctor, and who could hardly be expected to know whether or not the disease is typhoid. I would suggest to the hon. member from Fredericton (Hon. Mr. Thompson) that his object would be met if in line 21, on the first page, he would add these words: 'known to be such.' Then it would read: 'from a typhoid fever patient known to be such.'

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The Bill makes provision for that; if a person does not know when he has typhoid he is not liable.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This Bill does not appeal to my sense of justice. Laws are passed very often without due consideration of their possible effect, and very often without regard to the responsibility of the men on the bench. This Bill creates a criminal offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment. The vast majority of families in Canada live in small houses, very often with little land attached thereto. If typhoid occurs under such conditions, what are they going to do with the excreta? If it is dumped any where the occupants of the premises are liable to punishment.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The health officer must make provision.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am tired of hearing about the health officer. The vast majority of the people live in small houses with not ten feet square of land around them, and many of them without drainage. Where are they going to keep the excreta—in their trunks or in a wardrobe? This Bill is a fad—impracticable. It is all very well to enforce it against people who have ways and means to get rid of the excreta; but nine out of ten families have no other way to dispose of it except in drains or in sewers, or in their back yards. Let us pass laws that are sensible and reasonable, and which people can obey. The hon. gentleman has mentioned once or twice a case that occurred near Plymouth, Penn. It is all very well to tell the story; but I do not believe that the depositing of excreta in that case on the bank of the river was the cause of the outbreak of typhoid in the town. If the waters were anyway rapid they would carry away the germs. Take Montreal; Westmount is one of the most sanitary and best looked after municipalities in Canada, yet it has had typhoid cases by the dozen, when there were none in the lower part of the city. So the fact of depositing sewage in running streams does not appeal to me as a cause of the spreading of typhoid fever. This Bill is much in the same line as that relating to the pollution of streams. If that measure is going to pass, what will happen? The same thing that will happen under this. It is utterly impracticable, and at the same time undesirable. Sewage should be discharged into running rivers. Take the St. Lawrence. All the way down you have a current of six to ten miles an hour, and at Quebec sweeping tides. No amount of sewage discharged into that river will affect the public health. Take our lakes and streams throughout this vast Dominion, where there are but few residences along the banks. What is going to happen if you prevent people from dumping rubbish such as empty cans—because we know that empty cans are poisonous. The people along the shores of lakes and rivers dump bottles and cans and rubbish of all kinds into the river, and under this Bill that would be a criminal act. There is no sense in that. We know that in Canada, where the rush of waters is so violent in the spring, the river channels are washed out. I can understand that the discharging of sewage, or dumping of refuse into a river at or near the head of an intake pipe might prove disastrous to the people who have to use the water; but in a case of that kind it is up to the health officer of the district to see that nothing of the kind is done. During the past fifty years the Ottawa river has been filled with the worst kind of sewage and sawdust, but it did not destroy the health of the people living along the shores of the Ottawa, or of the people in the city of Ottawa. Of course I understand the object of the Bill is a very humane one, but it is a difficult measure to put in practice; it opens the way for a lot of vindictive prosecution between neighbours. A man with a grudge against his neighbour, seeing his servant girl dumping a pail of harmless material into the stream might inform on him and have him fined or sent to prison.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I regret that I cannot approve of the first section of this Bill. I know very well that the promoter has the best intentions in the world, and that he has prepared the Bill with the idea that he was doing a service to his country; but I cannot concur in the clause because I think it goes too far. The only feature of it which gives jurisdiction to this House in the matter is the fact that it makes a violation of this law a criminal offence; because the hon. member will admit that if that clause were not inserted in the Bill, this is a matter which is essentially of a local and provincial character.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—So that in order to give jurisdiction to this House it was necessary to insert the clause, making a violation of the provisions of this law a criminal offence. To bring a public work under the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament, it was necessary to declare that such work was in the general interests of Canada. I have always held that it was a very dangerous clause and should always be considered with a great deal of care. So it is in this case; although it is true that we may, with such a clause, make a criminal offence in the case of a violation of this law, still we must not abuse that power, which is given to the federal parliament when we must admit that there is concurrent jurisdiction with the province and the Dominion the same as in the case of the manufacture and sale of bread. I contend that in this case there is no reason strong enough to induce me to think that the federal parliament should interfere. It is not the fact that the provincial legislatures of the provinces of this country have a right to do everything which is contained in this Bill? Nobody can deny that the legislatures have that right, and that they have exercised that right, and that in Ontario and Quebec especially, they have passed legislation to the same effect as this Bill, and going as far as this Bill, the only difference being that they do not inflict such a drastic penalty as imprisonment or penitentiary. I can very easily prove the truth of my assertion, to wit, that in Quebec as in Ontario, the Provincial Board of Health have all the powers necessary to pass such legislation as is required in such cases.

Hon. Mr. DAVID.

Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Yes. I will prove it. First let us look at the law in the province of Quebec. The Board of Health of that province—

> May make, amend, repeal and replace by-laws for the following purposes . . . to prevent as far as possible epidemic and contagious diseases of men and animals.

That is not all. Article 3895 reads as follows:

> Everything declared by the Board of Health or by the Municipal Council or its Board of Health to be a nuisance or to be injurious to public health shall be considered to be such.

Now, the Board of Health of the province of Quebec, in virtue of the powers given to them, passed by-laws, and in those by-laws I see the following section:

> Any pool, stagnant water, ditch, watercourse, urinal privy, water-closet, earth closet, drain, sewer, refuse, receptacle, cesspool badly constructed or in offensive state or injurious to health.

Article 3917 reads:

> Whenever the head of any household or of any establishment whatever ascertains that any person dwelling in his house or in the establishment or under his control has smallpox, varioloid, asiatic cholera, plague, typhus, diphtheria, croup, scarletina, typhoid fever, measles, tuberculosis, leprosy or any other disease which the Board of Health has designated by by-law, he shall within twenty-four hours notify the same to the municipal sanitary authority of the locality in which he resides or has his establishment.

Then I call attention to this clause:

> Every person obliged to give the notification required by articles 3917 and 3918 is liable, in case he neglects to give the same, to a fine not exceeding twenty dollars a day for each day during which such neglect lasts.

The municipal authorities are, therefore, obliged to act in accordance with this law,

> The municipal sanitary authority shall notify the Board of Health of the province by registered letter, to be deposited in the post office within the twenty-four hours after having been informed under the provisions of articles 3917, 3918 or otherwise.

So that when a contagious disease occurs, the legislature has provided everything required to prevent the spreading of the disease.

The law of 1907 provides in clause 23:

The isolation of a sick person with typhoid fever, although very desirable, is nevertheless not obligatory; but, the evacuation—fecal matters and urine—and the linen soiled with the same must be, at once, disinfected as described in schedule D.

Schedule 'D' reads as follows:

Burn the remains of the food which has been served to the patient or sprinkle them with a solution of carbolic acid and bicloride of mercury, or again sprinkle them with chloride of lime and bury them.

Hon. gentlemen will see that everything is done to disinfect, not only the house, but everything which may spread the disease. The only difference between that Act and this Bill is the penalty. If in the legislation passed by the different provinces of Canada we have everything required to prevent the spreading of the disease, with a severe penalty, why is this Bill necessary? The penalty under the present measure is very drastic, and I think we ought to have recourse to such a penalty only for very serious reasons. We should not go as far as that when we can attain the same object otherwise. I say it is almost cruel to impose such a penalty when it is evident that there will be perhaps hundreds or thousands of cases where the persons violating the law will not know that they are committing an offence which exposes them to a term in the penitentiary.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Whose duty is it to disinfect under that law?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—It is the duty of the municipality, and the owner of the house. I call attention to the last part of the section which provides that:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who endangers the lives or health of the public.

And so on, and one of the provisions is:

By making any other disposition of the excreta except as hereinbefore certified.

Clause 222b reads as follows:

222b. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to one year's imprisonment, who,

(a) being a medical or other attendant upon any person, and knowing that person to have typhoid fever, fails or neglects to give notice immediately to the health-officer of, or to the mayor or other head officer of, the municipality in which that person is being attended, or was attended, that the person has typhoid fever; or, &c.

The 'other attendant' referred to may be a woman, who for charitable purposes has consented to look after the sick person, who may know nothing about the law, and who may neglect to give the notice required. Without knowing she is committing an offence, under this clause she renders herself liable to a term in penitentiary.

The subsection reads:

(b) Being such health officer, mayor or other head officer, and having received such notice fails or neglects to make promptly effectual arrangements to have the excreta, both solid and fluid, of such person treated with carbolic acid or such other disinfectant as will effectually destroy all bacilli and germs therein, and to have the said excreta after they have been disinfected, buried in the earth at least three feet below the surface of the ground and at least three hundred yards from any lake, river, pond, stream, drain, ditch, conduit, sewer or other waterway.

I contend that it is impossible to carry out the provisions of that clause, particularly the latter part. If that law were enforced in Montreal, the jail would be filled with people who never knew anything about the law. Thousands of families in Montreal would be utterly unable to do what is provided for in this clause. In Toronto, as well as in Montreal, there are hundreds of establishments, flats and other places, where there are no back yards, and in addition to that thousands of families live in houses where there are no grounds, and how could they possibly bury the excreta three hundred yards away? In Montreal, in the long stretch between Lachine and Long Point, where could we find a place to deposite excreta three hundred yards from any lake, river, pond, stream, drain, &c?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—My hon. friend forgets that it is the municipality that pays the expense.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I am not speaking only of the payment, but of the means by which the municipality or the individuals shall be able to comply with the law. The penalty does not fall upon the municipality. It is said here that all persons who violate this law shall be subject to the penalty of imprisonment. By virtue of the last paragraph, it is the person himself who shall be guilty of the offence mentioned in this measure if he does not comply with its provisions. Under this Bill, municipalities will be obliged to provide special grounds or fields, like cemeteries. Perhaps we would call them typhoid fever fields or excreta fields, but where shall we find them? I hold that it is really very dangerous, unjust, unfair and severe to make it a criminal offence for a person to violate a law of this kind, which is impossible to put into execution. I move that the clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I agree with all the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles has said. I consider this Bill not only impracticable, but barbarous, and I am sorry that a measure of this kind has been introduced. The promoter of the Bill has seen fit to bring it under the Criminal Code. All that is contained in this measure is already on the statute-books of the provinces, particularly in Ontario and Quebec. In order to satisfy the conscience of my hon. friend, who certainly means well, I tell him that the law is not only in force in Quebec, but there is a case now before the court to enforce the law, and to punish those who do not respect the law. On Monday last, my partner was going down to Montmagny to appear in certain actions which have been taken against municipalities and individuals who had not complied with the provisions of the law passed by the board of health of the province, which have just been read by my hon. friend. If this Bill becomes law, it will be a dead letter. Take the case proceeding in Montmagny.

If this proposed law were now in force, no doubt the lawyer on the other side would move to suspend or take proceedings before a justice of the peace against the man, and then there would be judgments in both cases and nothing would be done. It is regrettable when laws are on the statute-books of the province which are intra vires of the provincial legislature, that we should enact Dominion laws on the same subject, which are within our jurisdiction only because they are brought under the Criminal Code or declared to be in the general interest of Canada. This Bill ought to be killed here, and in order to do it now, I move that the Chairman do now leave the chair.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The proper motion is that the committee rise. That kills the Bill if the motion is carried.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—This Bill was founded on section 222 of the Criminal Code, which reads as follows:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment or a fine who commits any common nuisance which endangers the lives, or health of the public or which occasions injury to the person of any individual.

This Bill is copied from that particular section. I am not going now to discuss the necessity for it. On the second reading of the Bill I gave the figures and showed that typhoid had been increasing for the last thirty years in Canada, and that in one period of that time it had doubled. I gave the facts that it prevailed in many parts of Canada—in Quebec, in Sorel, in Montreal, in Toronto, in Hamilton, Ottawa, and in all parts of Canada. The law that my hon. friend referred to cannot have been observed, but was absolutely ignored, because proper provision was not made for the cost of enforcing it, whereas this Bill provides that all expenses are paid by the municipality at fault. He will admit that typhoid has been increasing in the province of Quebec; and that the law has been absolutely ignored. The number of cases that I gave from the official records average about 600 a year in the province of Quebec alone. Those were all preventable; those deaths need not have occurred. If this Bill had been in force last year in the city of Ottawa, nearly one hundred deaths would not have occurred; and to throw out a Bill of that kind seems to me to show very little regard for human life. I pointed out where it is a criminal offence to throw the carcass of a diseased animal into water that may be used for drinking purposes. Persons are now allowed to throw a diseased part of the human body into the water, which is just on the same parallel. The two are similar in principle and in result. Of course hon.

gentlemen may think it is better to let typhoid continue to sweep away some of our best citizens year by year, although we could stop it by imitating what other countries are doing. I pointed out that in the state of New York a similar law prevails, and that in the last edition of the most scientific book we have, the Encyclopedia Britannica, published only last year, disinfection is shown to be the only possible means of checking and getting rid of it. Otherwise it is sure to spread. I should regret if the Senate throws out this Bill. It is, at all events, an effort to save human life. There are some amendments proposed, to which I have no objection if they do not interfere seriously with the Bill. The junior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt), I think, has some amendments that he wanted to propose.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—My first impression was rather favourable to the principle of the Bill. I think we are all agreed that every possible means should be taken to prevent contagious diseases. But on a careful examination of this Bill I have come to the conclusion that it is altogether unworkable, for the reason stated by the hon. member from Mille Iles. You will notice that under clause 1 of the Bill, which is now under consideration, it is made an offence if anybody does the things that are mentioned in that clause, 'which, endangers the lives or health of the public by emptying or depositing any excreta, whether solid or liquid, from a typhoid fever patient' into such and such things, except that it be at 300 yards; it must be at 300 yards.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—But that is a very immaterial point. It could be changed there.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am not going to limit my criticism of the Bill to that, but I must commence with something.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I understand there was a motion made that the committee rise, and since that hon. gentlemen are discussing the principle of the Bill. I would like to know from you, Mr. Speaker, what is before the Chair?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has the right to speak.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I may say that it would be encumbent upon the persons who had the typhoid patient under their control to do all the things that are mentioned in that clause. In the last paragraph of it, we find the words, 'By making any other disposition of such excreta, except as hereinafter specified.' Now we have to look to see how it is 'hereinafter specified.' What do we find in the Bill? We find that it is the municipality whose duty it is to dispose of these things, and if the municipality does not do it, the owner of the house who has the patient on his premises, will be liable to go to jail, because there may be no possible provision for the disposal of the excreta. Therefore, I contend that the Bill is altogether unworkable.

The hon. gentleman from Halifax has suggested a proper way of amending the first clause in order to protect, in a certain measure, innocent parties who may be affected by the Bill. But there is a much larger objection to the Bill in the fact that it is not workable, from the nature of things. In large cities it would be impossible where there are drains everywhere to find places where excreta of that kind could be buried 300 yards from a sewer, or a certain depth in the ground. Thousands, and thousands of inhabitants would have to carry such excreta 15 or 20 miles away to comply with that provision.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—That is a minor point which could be arranged any way you like.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I gave a good deal of attention yesterday and to-day to this matter, and consulted the legislation in force in other countries, and I find that there is nothing of the kind in any country in the world, because of the nature of the subject. These things are left to be worked out, on account of the complexity of the subject, by the local authorities. As has been stated, there are in several provinces of the Dominion laws governing the matter; there are boards of health composed of medical men and experts who are entrusted with making proper regulations to deal with a subject of this kind, and I think it should be left to them. I commend the good intention of the hon. member. It was well that the subject should be brought to the attention of this honourable House, but I fail to see that we can properly enact legislation of this kind. Therefore, I feel very reluctantly obliged to support the amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was adopted. Contents, 12; non-contents, 9

The committee rose.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I am not disposed to make any factious or determined opposition to the Bill, because I am not opposed to the principle of it, only I think it is a question whether it is good policy on the part of the Senate to urge matters of this kind as though we were more interested in the matter than the legislatures of the provinces. I doubt whether the Senate has a constitutional right to deal with the subject. An opinion has been expressed to me by one of the fathers of confederation, Sir Charles Tupper, that the only change he would make in the British North America Act would be to place health under the control of the federal parliament. I wish to quote the following from Bourinot:

> If any Bills are sent down from the Senate with clauses involving public expenditures, or public taxation, the Commons cannot accept them. Such Bills may be ordered to be laid aside. The same practice is also strictly carried out in the case of amendments made by the Senate to Commons Bills. Latterly, however, it is not always usual to lay such Bills immediately aside, but to send them back to the Senate with reasons for disagreeing to such amendments, so that the upper House may have an opportunity of withdrawing from them.

Then on page 628, Bourinot says:

> The House will not insist on the privilege claimed and exercised by them of laying aside Bills sent from the Senate because they impose pecuniary penalties: nor of laying aside amendments made by the Senate because they introduce into or alter pecuniary penalties; nor of laying aside amendments made by the Senate because they introduce into or alter pecuniary penalties in Bills sent to them by this House. Provided that all such penalties thereby imposed are only to punish or prevent crimes and offences, and do not tend to lay a burden on the subject, either as aid or supply to her Majesty, or for any general or special purposes, by rates, tolls, assessments or otherwise.

Now this Bill certainly imposes 'assessments and tolls' on the municipalities if it goes into force. If this is correct, the House of Commons could not deal with a measure that originated in the Senate, involving a question of taxation of the subject or tolls and assessments, and this Bill certainly does.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—What provision is there in the Bill of that nature?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—If this Bill went into force by proclamation of the Governor in Council, there is no doubt provision would have to be made by the municipalities, or districts or individuals—they would have to go to some expense to carry out the provisions of the Bill. For instance, take the case of a town discharging its sewage into a river; under proclamation of the Governor in Council it is prohibited from doing so and is put to expense thereby. There would have to be an assessment levied on the people.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Does the hon. gentleman contend that the Bill is unconstitutional?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I am contending that the Senate cannot deal with this Bill, according to Bourinot.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—But this is not taxation by the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Bourinot does not say the parliament of Canada. He simply speaks of a burden on the people.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Nothing would prevent this House passing a law which would compel any municipality, or all municipalities, to bear certain expenses.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not think we could.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Did we not pass a law last year imposing on municipalities the obligation of maintaining guards at level crossings of railways? Are we not doing something of the kind every day in parliament?

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have devoted a good deal of time to this Bill and we do not seem to be making that rapid progress which is desirable. A good deal of the hostility to the Bill is due to the fact that, as drafted, it apparently provides that this rather drastic law shall go into operation over the whole country as soon as the Bill passes, and after that, the Governor in Council may issue a proclamation exempting certain portions of the country from the operation of the law. The hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill has considered the point, and has agreed to make what I think is a very important change in the latter part of the measure. The change may possibly influence the mind of hon. members in dealing with the earlier clauses of the Bill. As I understand, the promoter of the Bill is now prepared to substitute for clauses 8 and 9 of the Bill the following:

Sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall not go into operation as to any area, district or locality until a date to be appointed by the Governor in Council by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and in such other way as may be deemed advisable. Such proclamation shall also describe clearly such area, district or locality.

The Bill has no effect whatever until the proclamation has been issued by the Governor in Council, making it applicable to some particular district. Then the subclause proposed is as follows:

2. The Governor in Council may from time to time, as he deems advisable, issue proclamations as aforesaid bringing such sections 2 and 3 into operation as to additional areas, districts and localities.

Hon. gentlemen will see that this amendment provides in the first place that the Act shall not immediately affect any district, and that afterwards it shall affect districts only as it is deemed advisable by the Governor in Council that they shall be brought under the operation of the law. It puts the responsibility and power of dealing with the matter in the hands of the Governor in Council, and I think that is where it ought to be.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—Are the districts to have notice before this proclamation, and shall they have the privilege of a hearing before the proclamation is issued?

Hon. Mr. POWER—If my hon. friend will look at clause 4 of the Bill, he will see there that the Governor in Council is to make such regulations, &c., as are necessary to carry out the provisions of the Act and they would naturally provide that there should be notice.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—At the commencement of the sitting, I gave notice of an amendment which I said I would move when this Bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. The amendment is very much in the line of the suggestion made by the hon. member from Halifax. The wording which I had intended to suggest was this:

The proclamation mentioned in section 9 of this Act may be issued and revoked from time to time and may be restricted to such waters or part or parts of waters as the Governor in Council may deem advisable, and subject to such permits or restrictions as may be embodied in such proclamation.

This wording may be more flexible than the wording suggested by the hon. member, although it is on the same lines. There may be also this advantage: the hon. promoter of the Bill last year was afraid that the amendment which I suggested might raise the question of constitutionality, because it was dealing with territory, as the wording of the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax does. It is with a view of removing his objection on that score that I have used the wording, 'waters or parts of waters' in order not to speak of any territory. The Bill is limited to navigable waters, or other waters discharging into navigable rivers. I would suggest this for the consideration of the House.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 8,

Hon. Mr. POWER moved that clause 8 be struck out and the amendment he had read be adopted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Possibly the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax will meet with less objection on the part of any government called upon to enforce the Act. The amendment of my hon. friend pre-supposes that there is a sentiment expressed or known in the locality or district which would justify and possibly impose on the government the enforcement of the Act, and for that reason, I quite realize that the government of the day, whichever it may be, is not going to be very anxious about enforcing an Act of this kind. It is not going to be a vote-getting Bill, I am quite sure of that; but if there is a strong sentiment expressed in any particular area or district for the enforcement of the Act and the government is apprised of that, I think they will find less difficulty in carrying out its provisions than if the Bill were passed as I have it now, because as I have it the Act goes into force at a certain time. My hon. friend's amendment to the Act will only come in force from area to area and district to district as public opinion or the necessities of the case warrant. For that reason, I am quite prepared to accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Halifax in substitution for clauses 8 and 9. I think possibly it might meet the difficulty the government is going to find in carrying out the Act better than the amendment proposed by the hon. member from De Salaberry.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The proclamation once issued would not be revoked. That might be an objection, and then, in the wording which I have suggested, there are these words, 'The proclamation .. .. may be made subject to such permits or restrictions as may be embodied in such proclamation.' It is much more flexible. Of course if the hon. gentleman is satisfied with the other—I am afraid it will defeat his object.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—May I make a suggestion to let the Bill stand over till next sitting and my hon. friend from De Salaberry and my hon. friend from Halifax will get together and see if we cannot embody everything that is put in both amendments, and perhaps meet the views all around. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

WHALE FISHING ON BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing the terms of lease to the whaling company or companies for whale fishing on the coast of British Columbia, giving the extent of sea over which exclusive rights are given, rent paid, and restriction as to close season, and all other particulars relating to this subject.

He said: This subject is one of the highest importance. Whale fishing in British Columbia has developed into an extensive business. Thousands of tons of oil are being shipped to Europe, and the by-products are shipped to California for fertilizing purposes. If the farmer of the Northwest could obtain these by-products they would be able to supply themselves with fertilizer for their land. I hope the hon. leader of the government in this House will see that the restrictions are properly enforced. I do not suppose that a superintendent is looking after it at the present time, and it is very doubtful if any one in the department knows anything about the close season for whales, or anything of that kind. Ships are going through to the Arctic on both sides, and if they catch three or four whales on a trip they are doing very well; but last year seven hundred whales were captured by these companies on the west coast of British Columbia, which shows the volume of the work being done and the great trade resulting from it. Hon. gentlemen would be surprised if they could see the number of thousands of barrels of oil coming into port every month from the west coast of the island to be shipped to Europe.

The motion was agreed to.

FISHING RIGHTS IN FRESH WATERS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing the term of lease by the government to a company giving rights to exclusive fishing in the fresh water lakes of the Dominion; with all conditions as to time, rent, sub-letting and close season, and any other information relating to this subject.

He said: Some years ago a lease was given to a company of the fishing rights in some of the great lakes of the Dominion. At that time it was thought a very improper thing that the settlers and people living in that part of the country should be deprived to a certain extent of fishing rights in those lakes, and that a company should be allowed to monopolize the fishing and make money out of it; and further, that the Montreal Company, who first secured those rights, should be allowed to sell them to United States companies. Foreign companies have been prosecuting their work in those waters. Whether they have been depleting the lakes of the fish which should belong to the country, I do not know, but it is one of the matters which the government should inquire into, and I hope they will do so.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NAVAL SERVICE.

INQUIRIES.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE inquired:

Is the government in a position to announce its policy in naval matters, if not, why has it provided in the estimates for an increased number of employees in the naval service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government is not in a position at present to announce its policy on naval matters. I am not in a position to answer my hon. friend as to any alleged increase of the number of employees provided for in the estimates. If he desires it, we will postpone the answer to the question and I will look into it further.

The question was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE inquired:

Has the government decided to maintain the naval college which has been established at Halifax, N.S.?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is the intention of the government to maintain the naval college until it brings down to parliament its policy on naval matters.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC MINORITY IN THE TERRITORIES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE inquired:

Does the government intend to allow the Roman Catholic minority in that part of the Northwest Territories which is to be annexed to Manitoba, the same rights and privileges which it enjoys in virtue of the Territories Act?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government expects shortly to lay upon the table of parliament a Bill containing the proposed terms between the Dominion government and the province of Manitoba touching the extension of the boundaries of the province, and until that Bill is laid on the table of parliament, it would be manifestly improper to state what negotiations have taken place between the two governments.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Will the hon. gentleman state when we may expect the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—At an early day.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Next week?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot say whether it will be next week, but it will be soon.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman from Drummond (Mr. Lavergne) has asked a simple question, which the government should be prepared to answer. He wants to know whether people going into those territories will enjoy in the future the same rights that they enjoy to-day. The government should answer that yes or no. If the policy of the government is to be changed, it is time that the people should know it, and not have to wait until the Bill is laid on the table of parliament. I think it is a most important question and one that ought to be answered.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I suppose the question is too ticklish for the hon. gentleman from Hastings.

SESSIONAL INDEMNITIES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FORGET moved:

That the clerk of the Senate be authorized to prepare a statemnt showing the dates on which the hon. Messrs. A. E. Forget, J. M. Wilson and B. C. Prowse were summoned to the Senate; the dates on which they took their respective seats in the Senate Chamber during the last session of parliament, and the dates on which said session began and came to a close; also, whether any allowance was made to those members for their attendance at such session, and if not, what amount would have been allowed to them under the provisions of the Act intituled: 'An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act,' which has this session been passed by both Houses of parliament.

He said: The object of getting this statement is simply for the purpose of carrying out the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the government when the Bill to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act was under discussion the other day. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman is the best course for these gentlemen to obtain redress of their grievances.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (Q) An Act to incorporate the Universal Eyesight Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

Bill (R) An Act for the relief of Herbert Horsfal.—Hon. Mr. DeVeber.

Bill (S) An Act for the relief of Kenneth Molson.—Hon. Mr. Taylor.

ERIE, LONDON AND TILLSONBURG RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved the third reading of Bill (No. 12) An Act respecting the Erie, London and Tillsonburg Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Is this the Bill which has been before us for a number of years past? If so, has there been any work done upon the road and have we any guarantee that it will ultimately be constructed? This is a charter to construct a road from Port Burwell, north to Tillsonburg, where the line is to be divided into two branches, one running to London and the other to Woodstock. Has any money been expended on the construction of this line? The road would be a great benefit to Port Burwell, and the section in that locality, and I would gladly support the Bill if I thought it would really be constructed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman from St. Thomas had better explain the scheme himself. He knows more about it.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am not in a position to state whether any work has been done on the road or not. I found the Bill standing in my name and I do not know how I came to be connected with it. If that part of the country is opened up, no doubt it will be a benefit. This Bill asks for an extension, and if the company does not proceed with construction they will not obtain a renewal of their charter. Similar measures for extension of time have been passed in the Senate on many occasions.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 43) An Act respecting the Cap de la Madeleine Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Montplaisir.

Bill (No. 45) An Act respecting La Compagnie Chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord.—Hon. Mr. David.

Bill (No. 22) An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Power.

Bill (No. 25) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 28) An Act respecting the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McMullen.

Bill (No. 33) An Act respecting the Alberta Electric Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The Alberta Interurban Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (No. 34) An Act respecting the Algoma Eastern Railway Company—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 37) An Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 51) An Act respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (H) An Act to incorporate the British Canadian Loan Company.—Hon. Mr. Ross, (Moosejaw).

Bill (No. 13) An Act to incorporate the Liverpool-Manitoba Assurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Bill (No. 15) An Act to incorporate the Vancouver Life Assurance Company of Vancouver, B.C.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (L) An Act for the relief of Edna Wells.—Hon. Mr. Ratz.

ARCHITECTURAL INSTITUTE OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY, in the absence of Hon. Sir Lyman Jones, moved the second reading of Bill (No. 35) An Act respecting the Architectural Institute of Canada, and to change its name to 'The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.'

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Is there not some prohibition on the use of the word 'Royal?' There was something about it in the House last year, or the year before. One would like to know why the name is to be changed?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am glad the hon. gentleman has called attention to the matter, because we did have a discussion last year with respect to the use of the word 'Royal' unless specially authorized, and I think the hon. gentleman who has moved the second reading of the Bill should be in a position to inform the House as to whether the royal consent to the use of the name has been obtained in this case.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I am sorry to say that I cannot tell whether it has been or not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The question arose as to the Secretary of State issuing letters patent using the word 'Royal' or 'Imperial' without the consent of the Imperial authorities. It would not necessarily apply to parliament; at the same time I quite agree with my hon. friend from Halifax as to the undesirability of any private corporation taking to itself the term 'Royal' without obtaining permission.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The preamble of the Bill sets out:

> Whereas the Architectural Institute of Canada, hereinafter called 'the Institute,' was incorporated by chapter 82 of the statutes of 1908; and whereas, by special permission of His Excellency the Governor General, dated the second day of June, one thousand nine hundred and nine, his late Majesty, King Edward VII, was graciously pleased to grant permission to the Institute to adopt the prefix 'Royal.'

It would appear that they already had that permission.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 41) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 71) An Act respecting a patent of the Spirella Company of Canada, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Farrell.

CONTINENTAL CAN COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BELL moved the second reading of Bill (M) An Act respecting certain patents of The Continental Can Company.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Can the hon. gentleman give us some explanation of this measure? We have had discussions in this Chamber on previous occasions in regard to renewals of patents, and I observe that there are conditions in this Bill which are peculiar.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The measure is for the purpose of overcoming the difficulty in complying with the provision that the patentees shall commence the manufacture of the article in two years. In this case the patent is for the manufacture of cans. It is impossible at present to manufacture these cans in Canada because the company cannot put them on the market. They do not know what size or shape of cans to make, and any expense they went to now would be lost to the company. They desire to have this clause suspended in that respect.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The policy of the House has been absolutely adverse to this practice. Having regard to the importance of patent rights, there has been altogether too much laxity in regard to renewals. Previously, if any person or corporation presented a Bill asking for relief, they obtained it, and when the attention of the House was called to the frequent evasions of the law by means of these applications, a different view was taken by the Senate with regard to such measures. There is a very large number of patents to which this very explanation which has been given to-day would apply, but the department absolutely refused to grant extensions. When these people apply to the department for an extension and it is refused, their patents practically lapse, because of non-manufacture in the Dominion, and it is open for anybody to manufacture the article. I do not say that I object to the second reading of the Bill, but when the matter comes before the committee for consideration it should be thoroughly investigated. If an extension is justice in this case, we have denied justice to a great many people.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I will endeavour to furnish a full explanation when the Bill goes to committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No reason is given why this company has not proceeded with the manufacture of the article. The preamble of the Bill asks for a renewal of their rights, the patentee having allowed them to lapse. There is no reason why they should have allowed them to lapse, and no reason why the time should be further extended merely to prevent people in Canada from manufacturing the article. I have been opposed to granting these extensions unless good reason is shown. It occurs too often. People from the United States secure a patent from Canada, and they allow it to run until it lapses, owing to the fact that there has been no particular market for the article in Canada during the time the patent has been in existence. Then, when an opportunity arises to commence the manufacture of such articles, they apply for a renewal of the patent, in order to cut out any Canadian industry that might undertake its manufacture. There may be good reasons why the manufacture of this article has not been proceeded with, but until the Senate is furnished with a reason I do not think we should deal too leniently with the application for this renewal, particularly as the policy in the United States is of a much more rigid character than that which prevails here. The moment a patent lapses in the United States owing to the non-fulfilment of the provisions of the law, they refuse pointedly to grant any concessions or renewals. They have pursued a similar course in England. A short time ago the British government annulled a large number of patents that had been granted, which created, I admit, a great deal of opposition and discontent in foreign countries, the patents having been obtained by foreigners who failed to carry out the provisions of the British law. The British government took a very strong stand upon that question. The result was the introduction of these manufactures into Great Britain, established with foreign capital by the holders of the patents. Unless good and sufficient reasons are given in each case for renewals I think it is about time Canada put a stop to all renewals of foreign patents.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I second the motion of my hon. friend, although I have often felt that these renewals should not be allowed. I do not know that I feel so strongly in the matter that I would vote against them. The law of Canada makes certain provisions in regard to patents, which should be rigidly observed in view of the importance of the whole matter.. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Hastings that very good reason should be given before granting the extensions.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—There is no doubt the Senate is acting more stringently now in regard to granting extensions of patents than was done formerly; at the same time I see no good reason why the measure should not be sent to the Private Bills Committee, where all the facts can be brought out.

The motion was agreed to.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved that the House resume in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—With so many members of the House absent, I think the Bill should be postponed until next week.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I want to remind the House that yesterday the whole Bill was practically gone through and adopted, and was left over until to-day in order that the amendments proposed by the hon. gentlemen from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) and Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) might be made one and incorporated in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE moved in amendment that the order of the day be postponed until Tuesday next.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected, contents 7, non-contents 10.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The hon. members from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) and Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) met with myself last night, and we decided to recommend that the committee strike out clause 9 and substitute the following in lieu thereof:

8. Sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall not come into operation as to any area, district or locality, until a date to be appointed by the Governor in Council by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette and in such other way as may be deemed advisable. Such proclamation shall also describe clearly such area district or locality.

2. The Governor in Council may from time to time as he deems advisable issue proclamations published as aforesaid bringing such sections 2 and 3 into operation as to additional areas, districts or localities.

3. Any proclamation issued under this Act may be revoked or amended from time to time, such revocation or amendment to be made known by proclamation published as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—How will this Bill affect people who are obliged to live during the whole season of navigation on board steamers?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It would apply to them no doubt; but the minister who shall have charge of the administration of the Act will make regulations to prevent such people from being subjected to any hardship.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—What effect will the Bill have on people who live on vessels plying betwen Montreal and Toronto?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The Bill does not make any special provision for them; but, as I have said, I have not the slightest doubt the minister will provide for such cases in the regulations to be issued.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock on Tuesday next.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 13, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY PENSIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY inquired:

The number of men who received pensions under the Provident Fund of the Intercolonial Railway of Canada for the year ending January 31, 1911 and 1912?

Also, the amount paid out for pensions under the said Provident Fund Act during the same period?

Also, the amount contributed by the employees, and the amount contributed by the government for the above date?

And also, the amount to the credit of the said fund on hand, with the names, occupation and present residence of those in receipt of pensions under the said Act for the same period.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hold in my hand the information asked for by my hon. friend. It is too voluminous to inflict upon the House; therefore, I shall lay it on the table, where hon. gentlemen will have access to it.

The return was laid on the table.

TAXATION IN PROVINCES OF THE DOMINION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS moved:

For a committee of nine to examine into the incidence and demand of taxation in the several provinces of the Dominion, and also into the loss sustained by the failure to secure access to the markets of the United States, and the course of interprovincial trade. With power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses under oath and report from time to time.

Said committee to be composed of Hon. Messrs. Bostock, Young, Casgrain, Talbot, Kerr, Thompson, Bell, Baird and Taylor.

He said: I should like, with the permission of the House, to add that the committee be authorized to expend, for the foregoing and other purposes, sums of money, not exceeding on the whole one thousand dollars, and that they be empowered to employ stenographers. As is well known, various opinions are entertained throughout the Dominion as to the results to Canada consequent upon the reciprocity pact having been rejected by the people. It will be interesting, therefore, to ascertain, as far as possible, the effect upon Canada of the defeat of that agreement. It is also desired to ascertain the course of interprovincial trade between the various provinces comprising the Dominion. I think we will agree at once that it is highly desirable in the interests of Canada that the true situation, in regard to this matter should be ascertained, and there can be no better way of obtaining information than through a committee of this House. It has been suggested to me that the name of the Hon. Mr. Pope be added to the committee. He has resided in the west for a considerable time. My attention has also been called to the fact that my own name is not on the list, and that as I am making the motion I should take the responsibility. Therefore, I ask that the names of the Hon. Messrs. Gilmour, Pope and my own name be inserted in the motion.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I would suggest that the word 'gain' be inserted, so that the committee could ascertain what Canada has gained or lost as a result of the defeat of the reciprocity agreement, because many of us believe that Canada has gained by it.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I have no objection.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION TO NORTHWEST PROVINCES.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

1. What number of immigrants are supposed to have settled in the several provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, respectively, since taking of the recent census up to February 1, 1912.

2. What is the estimated population of the said provinces, respectively, on February 1, 1912, allowing for the natural increase and immigration as aforesaid?

3. What amount of revenue was collected from excise in each of the said provinces in the nine months from April 1, 1910, to January 1, 1911, and during same period from April 1, 1911, to January 1, 1912?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answer to this question is somewhat voluminous, and with my right hon. friend's permission, I will lay it on the table. The report was as follows:

1. Emigrant arrivals from June 1, 1911 to January 31, 1912: Manitoba, 21,654; Saskatchewan, 22,571; Alberta, 23,814; British Columbia, 29,555.

2. Estimated population of the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia, on February 1, 1912, based on the census population of 1901 and 1911: Manitoba, 475,000; Alberta, 420,000; Saskatchewan, 542,000; British Columbia, 413,000.

Collected on account of Excise Revenue during the nine months from April 1st to December 31st, 1910 and 1911, respectively.

1911-12.				Months.	1910-11.
Manitoba.	Alberta.	Saskatchewan.	British Columbia.		Manitoba.	Alberta.	Saskatchewan.	British Columbia.
$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.		$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
78,012 10	28,776 28	12.510 91	42,209 67	....April.....	66,261 82	25,883 80	9,726 61	41,741 45
77,356 88	36,351 06	12,021 94	81,281 70	....May.....	78,031 59	33,929 20	10,398 63	55,642 24
79,952 91	33,393 93	14,468 82	70,362 12	....June.....	73,187 00	31,646 65	12,921 36	57,929 86
89,814 09	44,034 19	14,894 14	77,058 15	....July.....	83,389 16	30,027 99	11,749 10	53,952 51
91,827 69	38,043 25	17,337 08	78,686 35	...August.....	81,764 09	36,778 74	12,539 52	97,340 67
110,741 01	38,634 76	20,017 64	67,418 90	....September.....	98,553 70	32,807 65	13,560 29	62,351 76
121,163 93	46,405 05	20,196 80	77,298 18	....October.....	106,204 78	37,244 73	17,710 27	60,263 97
130,064 71	49,152 57	26,284 49	83,747 17	.. November.....	102,402 85	42,071 66	16,396 25	68,572 30
129,134 38	51,300 22	25,832 84	80,791 81	... December.....	107,702 61	39,879 97	16,650 71	72,275 58
908,067 70	366,091 31	163,564 66	658,854 05	.....	797,497 60	310,270 39	121,652 74	570,070 34

IMMIGRANTS IN ONTARIO.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

How many immigrants are supposed to have settled in Ontario, from the 1st April, 1910, to the 1st July, 1911?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The number of immigrants who have settled in Ontario is 444,190.

THE NAVAL POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Before the orders of the day are called I wish to direct the attention of the hon. leader of this House to an interview which I have seen in Ottawa and Montreal papers. I hold in my hand a copy of the Montreal 'Star' of the 9th instant in which it is said:

Senator Lougheed, leader of the government in the Senate, stated that before the Bill comes up for a second reading it will be considered by the cabinet. He expressed the personal opinion, however, that the government could not consent to a private member initiating a measure affecting one of the largest questions of public policy before the country. It is unlikely that any strong element will rally to support of Senator Choquette, while it would also seem very improbable that the Naval Act will be repealed until the government has had time to fully consider an alternative policy.

The Bill referred to is the one which I had the honour to introduce, the Navy Repeal Bill. I think I may be permitted to ask the hon. the leader of this House if this interview is correct, and if it is true that the government is neither willing to leave this question to a private member nor ready to go on with it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to my hon. friend that inasmuch as his Bill appears on the order paper for a second reading to-day, and as we usually discuss the principle of a Bill upon the second reading, he should move his Bill as intimated, and then the matter can be discussed very much more advantageously than at the present moment.

An hon. SENATOR. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very pleased to state to my hon. friend what the attitude of the government is upon the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I should like to know if the interview is correct? There is no use discussing the question if the government has already decided not to allow a private member to go on.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government cannot prevent my hon. friend from introducing the Bill and moving it, and carrying it through its various stages if this House supports him in so doing.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That is not the question at all. I am merely anxious to know whether the interview reported is true or not? This comes officially from the leader of the government in this House and before going on with such an important Bill, I wish to know whether the government has decided not to let me go on with it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I stated to my hon. friend that the government cannot prevent him from going on with his Bill. My hon. friend has a right to introduce a Bill and put it through its various stages, if the House will support him in so doing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understood that the hon. gentleman was asking if the interview reported had taken place?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That is what I am asking?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not bound to tell my hon. friend of any or all interviews that may take place between myself and others. I am prepared to tell what the policy of the government is upon this Bill when we reach it, and that should be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Is the Montreal 'Star' correct in printing that as a statement by the leader of the government here?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no answer to give my hon. friend on that question.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (T) An Act respecting the Rainy River Radial Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (U) An Act for the relief of James Denny.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

SENATE APPOINTMENTS.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the hon. leader of this House if the government is prepared to name the senators for the vacancies existing in Nova Scotia? Influential parties down in that province are very anxious to know when the government will fill the vacancies. Might I ask this upon the request of influential citizens of that province?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The subject is now under consideration by the government.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER (in the absence of Senator Belcourt) moved the third reading of Bill (A) An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Has the amendment which was proposed been made in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr CLORAN—The third reading of this Bill involves a piece of legislation that affects a great many persons inside as well as outside of this chamber, and should not be put on the statute-book, notwithstanding its very humane and sanitary object

It covers ground which it will be very hard for the federal authority to supervise. It endeavours to prevent things which should not be done, and so far as it goes in that direction it is right; but there are many things that the Bill will prevent which can cause no contagion, and yet which will, if done, leave the individual or corporation doing them liable to heavy fines and punishments. I have every sympathy with the object the promoter of the Bill has in view, but this is a class of legislation very difficult of enforcement, and which, when enforced, creates much trouble. Under this Bill any individual, or corporation, on the shore of a lake or stream, or even of the wide St. Lawrence, who empties a pail of swill or any refuse or excreta into the water, even where the currents are swift, is liable under this measure to prosecution. Now, in a country like Canada, with its vast territories and numerous streams and bodies of water, such legislation ought not to be introduced at the present stage of our existence. We have rivers and lakes large enough to contain all the refuse that the inhabitants of the country could discharge into them, without danger of contagion to the people. Take the St. Lawrence, for example: it passes Three Rivers, down to Lake St. Peter, past Batiscan, Quebec, and other centres of population along the shores of the river. These places, with their present system of sewage and drainage, would be seriously affected if those districts should be proclaimed and they were obliged to change their system of drainage. It would put them to tremendous expense, useless expense, because Quebec and other cities and towns discharge their sewage into the great river which carries it into the gulf, where it cannot contaminate the water. The current is rapid. There is a tide of from eighteen to twenty-two feet running at from six to nine miles an hour, and the river is flushed twice every day. Furthermore, after you pass Quebec, at the island of New Orleans, you strike salt water which cannot be used as a beverage. Now, under this Bill, all the towns lying on the shores of the St. Lawrence will be affected and liable to prosecution. Then the means taken by the promoter of the Bill to put it into operation is objectionable. A law should be law irrespective of any petty officers of the government. Parliament ought to know what it is doing and not put the publication of a proclamation into the hands of any one or two petty officers in a department, no matter how well qualified they may be. It is a way of evading the law. Let the Act be of general application, or not at all. If you are going to make a law applicable to some and not to others, you make it invidious, and therefore tyrannical. This Bill is based on false principles: first, of administration, by allowing it to go into force only on the proclamation of the Governor General. What does that mean? It means he gets a report from one or two officers of the department, and thereupon he signs the proclamation. That is the rule. Take our inland lakes, some of which are almost seas: the dumping of sewage into those great bodies of water cannot cause contamination to any extent, certainly not to any dangerous extent. Take our fishing lakes. Very few people dwell on the shores of those lakes, often not five inhabitants around a lake miles in extent. They are frequented by fishing and sporting clubs, and hundreds of families spend the summer months at such lakes all through the country. Their houses are necessarily built on the rocks, There is actually no soil, no earth anywhere in the neighbourhood. Where are they going to put their refuse and excreta where it will not be carried into the water?

They are not going to place it opposite their front or kitchen door. Any one who is acquainted with life on the lakes knows that the guardian fills the boat with refuse and takes it out in the lake and dumps it. Under the law, that man is liable to prosecution. That is an altogether unnecessary precaution. Some of these lakes are 150 to 200 feet deep, three or five or six miles long, and sometimes just as wide. We know that the cans which contain preserved goods are sometimes poisoned, and all this is dumped into the lake, and the people who dump them are liable to prosecution. I contend that this will be placing a hardship on all people who go to the lakes to spend a few days fishing or hunting. The clause of the Bill uses the expression 'dumping any refuse of any kind into any water running into any navigable streams.' That provision places this enactment outside the jurisdiction of parliament. We have no more right to interfere with the little streams, no matter whether they terminate in the St. Lawrence, the Ottawa or any other large river, than the man in the moon. It is ultra vires. There cannot be the slightest doubt that that clause interferes with provincial rights. Then another hardship will arise from the passions of men, jealousy, envy and vengeance. Take the case of a farmer who has a man or maid servant to whom he has given instructions to throw no refuse into a stream, navigable or not; perhaps that servant does it. He has a neighbour who is jealous of him, and that neighbour informs the health officer that such a thing is being done, and the innocent farmer is fined, and I understand that under the law he cannot even know the name of the informer, who is not supposed to appear at the trial. That is one of the incidents that will arise under the ordinary condition of things. On the whole, this Bill is useless from one point of view. It is unnecessary and creates hardships. What are you going to do in the case of our little streams where pleasure yachts and launches are running, or our large rivers on which the steamers run, on board of which there may be two or three thousand souls? Are you going to force those steamships to carry all their refuse to say Quebec and dump it on the hill of the citadel, or bring it up to Montreal? It is said that such a case can be provided for under this Bill. If so it would be invidious. Why should 4,000 Poles and Russians travelling up the river from Montreal have the right to dump their refuse into the river, and the farmers who are paying taxes to the province be prohibited from throwing a bucket full of refuse into the river? That is tyrannical. It strikes me that if this legislation passes there is a big thing in it for somebody. If I had a few hundred thousand dollars it would not be long before I had a company established to take charge of all the drains and sewers, &c., in the Dominion of Canada, and I would be a multi-millionaire in a few months. I would have influence enough to have as many districts proclaimed as I desired. Is there anything in that suggestion? Is there a company in readiness to take over the drainage system of Montreal and create a new plant? If there is nothing of that kind behind the Bill just now, there will be. I see danger, hardship and useless precautions on every side. The Bill might have properly provided that no municipality or corporation should allow the dumping of a drainage system at the head of a water service intake pipe. The outgo of a sewer system should not be tolerated within three or four or five miles from the head of an intake pipe. That would be a proper precaution and would be sufficient for present purposes. I regret that the promoter of the Bill is not present. He made a statement the other day that impressed me very much. He said that if this House passed the Bill, the Dominion government would most likely take it up and make it a public matter. I should like to ask him a straightforward question. I doubt very much if the present government, under the circumstances, would have given him a guarantee or any kind of promise that such would be done. I am very sorry that I have to take this course, but I think it is my duty, on behalf of the various interests I have mentioned, to move that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I second the motion. I have no doubt the majority of senators present know which way I am liable to vote on this measure. While I have every respect for the promoter of the Bill in his desire to benefit the general public, I am apprehensive that the Bill would cause more friction and more injury than exists at the present time. We have no desire to injure any one and are desirous of doing what is for the general benefit of the public; but this Bill would not result in any benefit.

Can you enforce this law if it is enacted? Is there a possibility of making this law effective? I do not imagine that you can, nor do I think the government of the day is ready to place such a law upon the statute-books. I do not think the leader of the House would say he is in favour of this Bill passing parliament now. Should it be placed upon the statute-book it would interfere very materially with an important section of this community. Can we place a law of this kind upon the statute-book without interfering with the success of the farmers? I suppose that one of the most important objects of the farmers is to keep their lands in a fertile condition, in order that they may realize as large crops as possible. I do not see that they have not the right to enrich their lands by the use of any fertilizer that they may have within their control. But this Bill would prevent it, because it says that no one shall throw anything on lands that would affect streams running into navigable waters. If it is in any way polluting navigable waters then it is a crime, punishable by law. Are we prepared for that? Do hon. gentlemen feel that they would be justified in striking so severe a blow as that at the farming community? We know that all wealth and all prosperity come from the farmers and miners of the country; and this Bill would prevent the farmers from producing as large crops as they possibly can and benefiting themselves and the country. The resources of the farm are the greatest sources of prosperity of the Dominion. Some may ask: 'How the Bill will affect it?' It matters not how small a drain is, when the rains come they wash into the creeks, and from the larger streams into the navigable streams. You cannot place any fertilizer on the land that will not directly or indirectly affect the waters of the navigable streams of the country. It we could adopt any method to prevent that we might feel that it was the proper thing to do, but this is an impossibility. It is true that there are diseases, and it is also true that there will be diseases so long as the world lasts. Go wherever you may you will find diseases existing, typhoid fevers and diseases of various kinds, coming from the impurities of the water, from impurities of the atmosphere, and from other causes. If Bills of this kind are allowed to pass, we will next have some one trying to purify the atmosphere—the air that we breathe, because disease may be inhaled by the inhalation of the bacilli, or the microbes floating in the air. It is a fad. There is really not any benefit to be derived from a law of this kind. I believe there was an amendment made in Committee of the Whole that the Bill should not go into operation until a proclamation was issued by the government. Will that benefit the public? Will that prevent injustice being done? Will that prevent innocent men from being charged with a crime and being severely or heavily punished? I say no. On looking at the Bill to-day, I find the amendment has not been incorporated in it. The amendment proposed left it entirely in the hands of the government of the day to put the Act in force. But does the mover of that amendment provide that if it is once put in force the provision may be repealed? I could not find that if it came into force there are means provided whereby it can be repealed whenever it was felt that it was no longer required. The senior member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) had control of that amendment, and I would like to know from him if there is a clause providing means whereby, if the Bill becomes the law of the land, it can be repealed? As far as I can understand, once it becomes law it remains there unless the whole Act is repealed. It is true there was contamination of the waters of the Ottawa; we have contamination of the waters at Toronto and some other places, and the typhoid fever was imputed to that cause. We will have typhoid fever so long as there is animal matter in the water or in the land. The cause of typhoid is the deposit in water of vegetable and animal matter. You will have animal matter constantly in the ground; you will have angleworms and other impurities, and on the prairies, I understand, you will have any amount of decaying animal matter in the wells and other places there. That being the case, how are you to prevent it? Can you prevent a man from digging a well and throwing the excavation from the well upon the ground around him, because the rain will wash it into the stream? I am very much afraid indeed that the promoter did not consider all the difficulties raised by this Bill. Further, what are you going to do in reference to the navigation of our Great Lakes? Boats are plying every day during the season from one end of them to the other, and no doubt the water becomes more or less contaminated along their course. Will you interfere with trade and navigation in their case? You will have to do it if you interfere with the right of the citizens to throw waste matter into the water. Then, as to our right to legislate upon this matter, it is contended by some that we have jurisdiction. I really do not know. I understand that civil rights come directly within the power of the local legislatures, and they are the bodies to enact laws in reference to such matters. Have they not already enacted laws to protect the health of the citizens? Take, for instance, Toronto. There they have typhoid fever imputed to the pollution in the lake; the intake was too near the shore, and it caused that difficulty. Did they legislate? Yes. Provinces have laws upon their statute-books to prevent the spread of such diseases, and they are the authority to look after it; their officers are employed for that purpose; and if you have too many officials appointed to look after violations of the law you find that the law will be very poorly enforced.

What right has parliament to interfere in the proper jurisdiction of the local legislature? We are intruding too much on the prerogatives and rights of the local legislatures and I feel that we are not as competent to look after local interests as the provincial authorities are. That being the case, we should hesitate before multiplying crimes by enactments of this kind. There are enough crimes already; if we go on increasing the number we will reach a point where innocent people will be afraid to do anything lest they violate some law. Moreover, I do not see how we are to carry out this legislation in cases where there is joint jurisdiction. Take the great lakes for instance; on one side the jurisdiction is under the laws of the United States, on the other under Canadian laws. Can we compel the people of the neighbouring country to observe our laws? They have their own state laws designed to protect the health of the people, and so long as we are not fully satisfied that this matter comes under our jurisdiction we should hesitate before passing a law of this description. I feel very strongly that it is not in the interest of the general public that this measure should be placed on the statute-book. I feel that it should be held over until we are thoroughly satisfied that it is within our jurisdiction, and I am therefore opposed to the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is laid down in our rules, and of course it is the universal practice in parliamentary bodies, that objection to the principle of a measure shall be taken at the second reading. The speeches made by the hon. member from the Victoria division (Hon. Mr. Cloran) and the hon. member from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson) would have been quite appropriate if directed against the Bill at its second reading, but I do not think they are altogether in place at this stage. The Bill as introduced in this House first, was, if I may be allowed to say so, just a little bit crude. It was a Bill that did not seem to provide the machinery for bringing its provisions into operation in a satisfactory way, but the Bill was amended in Committee of the Whole, and I shall now ask my hon. friend from St. Thomas to listen to the amendments then made.

8. Sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall not come into operation as to any area, district or locality, until a date to be appointed by the Governor in Council by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette' and in such other way as may be deemed advisable. Such proclamation shall also describe clearly such area, district or locality.

That is to provide that no action can be taken under this Bill until the Governor in Council sees fit to take action. It is not at all probable that the Governor in Council will take hasty action. We all know that governments are influenced by a strong desire to meet the views of their constituents, and if there is any strong sentiment in any district against being brought under the provisions of this measure, we are perfectly safe in saying that the Governor General will not bring the Act into operation as to that district. That is the first point. Then the second subclause goes on:

2. The Governor in Council may from time to time as he deems advisable issue proclamations published as aforesaid bringing such sections 2 and 3 into operation as to additional areas, districts or localities.

It just provides for the modus operandi of the Bill that is, as one district after another is satisfied to put this law in operation, the Governor in Council will publish a proclamation and the law will go into operation. I wish particularly to direct the attention of the hon. member from St. Thomas to the third subclause:

3. Any proclamation issued under this Act may be revoked or amended from time to time, such revocation or amendment to be made known by proclamation published as aforesaid.

The hon. gentleman stated that there was no means afforded of getting rid of the Act after it came into operation. I think it is a pity the hon. gentleman had not read the amendment made when the Bill was in Committee of the Whole. I am reading from last Friday's 'Minutes.' I did not rise to reply to these two hon. gentlemen, but simply to call the attention of the House, as there are some members present who were not here on Friday, to the exact wording of the Bill as it is now before us. It can do no harm whatever now.

Hon. Mr. De VEBER—I did not think any argument was necessary to show the House the necessity for such legislation. This is the third year we have had practically the same Bill before us. Three years ago, the Bill was introduced by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, (Hon. Mr. Belcourt). It passed the second reading. It was referred to the Committee on Public Health and Inspection of Food, of which I happened to be chairman, and on our recommendation was referred to the Conservation Commission. They considered its provisions and were favourably impressed with it, and last session the Bill was reintroduced by the hon. gentleman, passed this House, and owing to the way it was retarded in the Senate it reached the other House too late to have any action taken upon it. I wish to take note of one or two arguments that have been made, which show the total ignorance of some people in speaking on questions such as this—arguments that might have been effective fifty years ago, are now advanced against this Bill. My hon. friend lays great stress upon the hardship there will be on the few people who go out for the summer and camp, or have boat-houses upon the lakes, who wish to keep their lawns clean and free from rubbish, who throw cans and every rubbish into the lake. He says it will not do any harm. Let me illustrate in the case of New York. Some years ago, New York determined upon having a pure water system. They bought the Croton Lakes and very nearly all the watershed in connection therewith. They got a beautiful supply of perfectly pure water. I may say that in New York, and all the large cities, the water is tested almost every day to see if it is being contaminated. They found after a few years that the water in New York was contaminated, They found that some of these people who were camping on Croton Lake were throwing refuse into the water. The result was, the people of New York had to spend a few millions more to acquire the whole watershed of the streams emptying into the lake. My hon. friend lays stress upon the fact that under this Bill the names of informers are not known. I happen to be the health officer in the city in which I live, and I welcome anybody who gives me information, whether he gives me his name or not. If any man, woman or child tells me that he thinks there is scarlet fever or diphtheria in such a house, not reported, I do not care what his name is, I go at once and find out, and if I find that the disease exists, have the people fined for breaking the law. Instead of being a hardship upon people, I think the informer should be encouraged in every way to lay information before the proper officer that the laws are being broken. Upon the information being furnished, the proper officer visits the place to see if the law is broken. Of course if the law is not being broken, the man is not disturbed; but if the law is being violated, he is brought before the proper official. The hon. gentleman speaks of the large steamers carrying thousands of people upon the great lakes. Surely the companies which own the large steamers, who are making lots of money and declaring large dividends, can provide a remedy? Western Canada is known as the wild and woolly west; but I can assure my hon. friend that years ago, before we had any such thing as sewers, many people in the west, in preference to having outside privies, had crematories put in their houses, and once a week burned all refuse on the premises. Surely the large companies paying big dividends can have crematories that would burn the refuse every twenty-four hours? My hon. friend says the waters of Canada are so large, and the country so vast that there is no necessity for such legislation. Surely the hon. gentleman could not find a greater amount of water coming down any river, or any other river that afforded such a fine example of aeration as the Niagara Falls, which, some people contend, kills all the typhoid germs, yet the scientists sent by the government to the Niagara river to test the water below the falls have never yet been able to get a sample out of that river that was not full of bacilli. Another hon. gentleman makes the statement that the cause of typhoid fever is decomposed animal and vegetable matter. I daresay that that statement might have been accepted forty or fifty years ago; but I do not think it will hold good to-day, because if typhoid fever does not come from decomposed animal and vegetable matter, you can have water that is so putrid and so unpleasant to the senses that you could not drink it and yet be perfectly free from typhoid, which is caused by the typhoid bacilli and nothing else. Its favourite habitation is in the intestines of the human being, and from the excreta of the human being these bacilli increasing by the million, are emitted and consequently get into the streams, and people swallow them in drinking water and get typhoid fever. As to the constitutionality of the Bill, although every province in Canada has laws on this subject, some of them very strong, and some of them not quite so strong, the trouble is they are not enforced. By placing this law upon the statute-book it will as it were back the provinces up, and perhaps push them forward in carrying out their own laws as they should.

The amendment was lost.

The motion for the third reading of the Bill was carried, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 19) An Act to Amend the Inquiries Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 12,

The commissioners may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this Act, and shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I move that section 12 be amended by adding thereto the following:

No report shall be made against any person until reasonable notice shall have been given to him of the charge of misconduct alleged against him and he shall have been allowed full opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel.

I should like to know whether the hon. gentleman who leads the government is opposed to this amendment, or whether it is necessary to say anything in support of it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It occurred to me that section 12 would be sufficiently wide to permit such protection being given to any person whose conduct was being investigated as to insure him having a fair investigation. I must confess I do not see very much difference between clause 12 and the section suggested by my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That would depend entirely upon the interpretation put upon this by the commissioner, and the commissioners might take the view that the statute just left the matter as expressed by the form of words in the section. I think there should be an express enactment providing that any person against whom a charge is made shall have full opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This clause is even wider than the proposed amendment. The first part of the clause gives power to the commissioner and the second part of the clause makes it obligatory upon the commissioner to permit the person whose conduct is being investigated to be represented by counsel. It is not a permissive clause, so far as the permission is concerned, but it is obligatory upon them that they shall do it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—In the first place, there is no notice given to him.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The difficulty to my mind would be in the application of that clause. The clause reads:

> The commissioners shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of such investigation to be represented by counsel.

Could the word 'allow' not be interpreted as giving the facility to one whose name may have been mentioned in some evidence to claim the right to be heard, and to be heard by counsel, while if notice of any kind of accusation of the charge is not brought to his knowledge, then the report could be made against one or many persons whose names would have been mentioned unknown to themselves. In other words, under this clause would the commissioners feel that they are obliged to notify the party against whom they would be likely to report, of the charge or accusation brought against him, or if there is simply the right of any one, knowing he is accused, of appearing and claiming the right to be heard personally or by counsel. That is my difficulty.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some amendment is really necessary in this subclause 12, which appears to divide these cases into two classes. First, there is the class of persons whose conduct is under investigation. An officer, for instance, is charged with offensive partisanship, and as to that case the clause simply says the commissioners may allow such officer to be represented by counsel. Then there is the other case of a party whose conduct has been brought under notice at the investigation, who has had no notice that his case is coming up, and he has a right to be represented by counsel. I do not think that there is any justification for such a diversity of treatment in the case of the two parties. If these inquiries were conducted before a tribunal composed of independent, non-partisan men, of judicial mind, then probably it would not be necessary that there should be any counsel whatever.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite concede the right of any person whose conduct is being investigated—and the government feel that that is the case—to be represented by counsel, so there is no necessity for discussing the policy of it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is very satisfactory to know that the hon. gentleman takes that view of the question; but when this Bill becomes an Act, and is put in operation, one has to consider how the commissioners will look at it. I am not going to dilate on the personnel of one of the commissions which has been appointed, but that commission is the very reverse of judicial in its character, and I am perfectly satisfied that, in probably nine cases out of ten, that commission would not allow an official accused of offensive partisanship to be represented by counsel. Consequently, this House which, to a certain extent, has those officers under its protection, should regard it as one of its duties to see that they get fair play and should make some provision to prevent a man being convicted without, really, a proper hearing. I think the amendment is necessary.

Hon. Mr. KERR—What I had in mind was this: in the first place, no report should be made; the evidence should be heard, and if there is anything calling for an explanation about it, then the person who is named, and who might not have been present at the investigation, or know what the evidence was, should have reasonable notice of the charge against him. That is the first point; and, secondly, that he should have an opportunity of being heard in person, or by counsel. Hearing, of course, implies that he should be at liberty to offer any evidence. It is the right to be heard that gives him an opportunity, not only of making his own statement, but of substantiating that by evidence he may choose to offer. We know perfectly well that it involves an explanation. Well, the Act as it stands at present does not authorize or prescribe that there shall be an opportunity given him to make that explanation; and in justice to any person who may be accused, or whose conduct may be investigated, I think it is right that he should have an opportunity and reasonable notice so that he might produce evidence if he wants to be heard, either in person or by counsel.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there be any doubt about the matter, I am quite satisfied that there should be the fullest recognition of the principle, which we quite readily accede to, that any person whose conduct is being investigated shall have an opportunity to be properly represented before the commission, no matter what commission it may be, and if it is the opinion of the House that this amendment will better safeguard the rights of persons so involved, I have no hesitation in yielding to the suggestion of my hon. friend.

An hon. SENATOR. Hear, hear.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendment was incorporated as subsection 'B' of clause 12.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I would now propose as another subsection that:

> Every commissioner whether appointed under part I or under part II of this Act, and every person engaged as accountant, engineer, technical adviser or other expert under the provisions of this Act, shall be incapable of being appointed to or holding office, place or employment in the nomination, gift or control of the Crown or of the Governor General of Canada until after the expiration of five years after this report of such commissioner shall have been made.

The object of this, as will be seen, is to provide that the tribunal is an absolutely impartial one. It may not be within the power of the government to know, in appointing a commissioner, whether he is or is not either then or subsequently to become an applicant for a position under the Crown. That would be a matter perhaps in the mind of the commissioners alone; but I think it would be a monstrous thing that men should assume this duty and undertake the investigation of the conduct of officers under the Crown, doing so at the same time with a view of preparing themselves for occupying perhaps the position of a person whose conduct they are investigating, or any other position of honour or trust under the Crown. Men should not be appointed for this duty who are applicants for positions. Men should not accept these appointments who are going to be applicants for positions. They should not, in other words, be showing their qualification by discovering and reporting with reference to the conduct of those whose places they want to fill. No confidence can be placed in a commission unless it is free. Now, here are a number of persons who may be appointed, the original commissioners; after that those original commissioners may appoint accountants, engineers, technical advisers or other experts, and those gentlemen are clothed with the same authority as the commissioners themselves, and may, therefore, have the power of investigating, of drawing and reporting on their own conclusions —in other words of creating the ground work for a dismissal or a vacancy in order that they may themselves become applicants for the positions upon which they are reporting. Everybody will agree that that would be a monstrous state of affairs, and that this amendment is providing only that such persons cannot accept office until after a period which, for the purpose of bringing the matter before the House, I have named as five years. I move, therefore, the addition of these words to subsection 'C' of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw the attention of my hon. friend to what appears to be going further than he seems to be desirous of covering. The hon. gentleman wants to insure perfect impartiality on the part of the commissioners, and I think his draft amendment would disqualify a judge from being appointed as commissioner, as I read it. It says: 'Every commissioner whether appointed . . . . . shall be incapable of being appointed to or holding any office, &c. I wonder if the words (holding any office) would not affect the office of a judge who would be appointed to act as commissioner?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think perhaps it would.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say that under no consideration could the government accept this amendment, or in any way accept the principle intimated by my hon. friend, in placing any restriction upon the commissioners who should be appointed. Of course it is within the judgment of this House to amend this Bill, or to destroy it if they think fit. My hon. friend urges the element of impartiality as the principle at which he aims. Surely under the principles of responsible government the Cabinet is charged with the selection of whomsoever they may appoint for the carrying out of every duty or obligation which by statute or otherwise may be placed upon such commission. Starting at the judiciary, we select from the most advanced partisans all our judges. During the administration of the late government, extending over some fifteen years, outside of three or four exceptions, the higher judiciary of Canada has undergone a change, from the Supreme Court down to the Superior Court; and scarcely in the Dominion of Canada will be found an appointment to the Bench that was not made from the partisan ranks of the government. That was so with the late government; it is so with most governments. I am not saying that a selection from partisans destroys in any way or lessens the confidence which the public have in the administration of justice, or the sense of obligation which will animate any official who may be called upon to discharge the duties of this office. Does my hon. friend think, after making this suggestion, that under the political system by which we carry on government he will ever arrive at the point of having non-partisans appointed to discharge the various duties of state? He surely must look for an earlier approach of the millenium than most of us would expect. Now, we have to be practical in this thing. The government is charged with the proper selection of officers for the purpose of carrying out the duties of the state, no matter what those duties may be, and they are responsible to the people. So long as we have government by the people and for the people, we must take the risk of a variable administration of law. We cannot by any safeguards with which we may surround the statute be able to select men from whose minds we know will be eliminated all political prejudices; that is utterly impossible. We must accept the institutions under which we live, and which we administer by government and for which the government of the day is responsible to the people. We have upon our statute-book now a law dealing with inquiries. It has been on the statute-book for many years. It was under this statute or a similar statute preceding it, that the government appointed its commissions, and made inquiry into public and departmental matters. That policy has been accepted for years and years. If public inquiry is in the public interest, then the duty of parliament is to make that machinery as efficient as it can possibly be. What is the object of the government in bringing down this Bill? It is for the purpose of widening the powers of a commission with a view to economy—economy in money and economy in time. The object is, and it is quite recognized, that extending over the length and breadth of Canada it is utterly impossible for one commission, within a reasonable time, to make proper investigation into the various matters that may come before it; and, consequently, parliament asked that authority be given to that commission to enable them to delegate their powers to experts, to accountants and to others, for the purpose of facilitating the object which we all have in view, of investigating whatever public abuses may come within the jurisdiction or the authority of that commissioner. Now, what is the object of my hon. friend in moving this amendment? It is to destroy the machinery of this commission. I say it unhesitatingly. Does any reasonable man think that men could be so selected for the making of an investigation into the many public abuses which grow up under any government, and have those commissioners handicapped by disability, by disqualification, from holding any office within the gift of the Crown for five years? It is monstrous. Can one suppose for one moment that any efficiency could be given to such a commission under a disability of this character? Since confederation down to the present time I am not aware of any such a suggestion having been made. Certainly no such suggestion, or no such principle, has ever been embodied in a statute. The only thing approaching to it that I know of is the principle which was advocated by a member of the late government who is at present occupying the position of Chief Justice of one of the divisions of the High Court of Justice in Ontario, who strongly urged that no member of parliament should be permitted to accept an office from the Crown until one year had elapsed after he had been a member of parliament; and that gentleman, who declared in the most stentorian tones that this principle should be embodied into our legislation, took an office within the gift of the Crown and went directly from the House of Commons to the Bench. That is the only occasion within my memory, and within my knowledge that a principle of this kind has ever been advocated. But what does my hon friend propose to do? He proposes in this amendment to disqualify the judge who has been taken from the bench to conduct a commission, from returning to the bench. He proposes to disqualify any accountant, any engineer, any technical adviser or any expert who may be called by the commission under order in council, from holding office within the gift of the Crown for a period of five years from the time of making the report. Now what good can be accomplished by such an amendment? I ask my hon. friend if he for one moment thinks it would result in such a commission making an impartial report? If there is anything calculated to arouse vindictiveness in the human mind it would be this very proposition urged by my hon. friend. If any commissioner with a disability facing him such as we have in this notice of motion should accept office, facing the responsibility which attaches to it or the disqualification which attaches to it, he certainly might be relied upon to make the most vindictive report that a commissionr could make. It is not calculated to carry out the object which my hon. friend states he has in view, but quite the opposite. Why is this being done? As I say, the object is to destroy the usefulness of this commission. Surely we will all, on both sides of this House, join hands in agreeing and concluding that investigation into public abuses is a very wise policy, and should be carried out to whatever extreme end such a system can be pursued. I know very well, and my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House know, that no matter what government may administer the affairs of this country, that government will have engrafted upon its administrative system certain abuses, and those abuses, through a long course of years, will be increased. It is absolutely necessary that there should be on the statute-book complete machinery for the purpose of conducting most thorough investigation into and suppressing such abuses. Going back a short time, will my hon. friends opposite say it is not desirable that a most effective investigation should be made into the scandals which were exposed not long ago in the Printing Bureau? I am satisfied that every Liberal gentleman, who is patriotic and desires to see the institutions of his country placed on the highest pedestal of public confidence, will assent to the proposition that where an abuse exists in a public department, or outside of it, the most effective machinery should be set in motion for the purpose of throwing upon it the light of day. I think both sides of politics agree upon the desirability of having that condition of affairs. Any other would not be patriotic and would not reflect credit upon this country. We are agreed upon the existence of abuses and the necessity of investigation, because under all governments such abuses exist. Hon. gentlemen opposite will recall the abuses which crept into the government that preceded the late administration, when the most rigid and drastic inquiry was made resulting in the government of that day punishing some of their supporters.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —An investigation by whom?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—By parliament.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Exactly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will say this, it resulted in the government of that day prosecuting criminally their own friends, and imposing very severe penalties upon them. I was pointing out that those abuses will arise under any administration, and that it is desirable to provide the most effective machinery for their investigation. So far as the selection of the men constituting those commissions is concerned, we have to rely upon the political sympathisers of the party which may be administering the government of the day. That is the most natural thing in the world. We have not yet arrived at the point when this government is going to select its adversaries to constitute a commission for the purpose of inquiring into such abuses as those which I have mentioned. I do not believe that in the history of Canada since confederation there has been a commission with the obligations thrown upon them incident to such a condition, that did not try to properly carry out its duty, and although my hon. friends may attack one or two members of the commission referred to, I am satisfied that the duties which fall upon those gentlemen will be performed with fidelity, as such duties have been discharged by previous commissioners. I have not heard any charge brought against those gentlemen other than that they were attached to a certain political party. If that is going to be a disability in the appointing of commissioners, of judges and of the higher officers to discharge the duties of state, it certainly imports a new principle into our political system. I simply point out these matters to impress upon my hon. friend, if I can possibly succeed in doing so, that the object he has in view will certainly not be attained in the way he proposes, and that the government will not accept his proposition. True, the Senate may amend the Bill and succeed in attaching these clauses to it, but I simply point out that the government will not accept a Bill so amended as to destroy its usefulness and efficiency. Under the statute which we are now amending we can make the fullest investigation and inquiry, only it will involve other commissions being appointed. I ask hon. gentlemen to keep that in view, that the statute, as we have it now, will permit the fullest investigation being made, but not as economically or speedily as it could be made with this amendment to the law. However, the object we have in view by the Bill now before us is for the purpose of advancing economy, so far as we can, and for the purpose of accelerating the discharge of the duties of these commissioners. The amendments proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite will only involve multiplying commissions in order to attain the object of this Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —If economy is the object my hon. friend has in view, I very much fear that he is taking a most extraordinary method of enforcing it; but of that I shall say something further on. When this matter was first brought before the House I called attention to the fact—and the fact is worth calling attention to—that these propositions are to a great extent equivalent to requiring that men who have been accusing the late government of all sorts of crimes and misdemeanours should be appointed judges to make good the accusations they themselves have brought. Here is something, as my hon. friend has said all through, equivalent to a judicial inquiry. He pointed out that judges are usually appointed from the partisans of each party, which is perfectly true; but he keeps out of sight altogether the fact that once these men are appointed, they are, by law, by custom, and by reason of the fact that they sat before a vigilant bar and their decisions are subject to revision by higher courts, including courts as high as the Privy Council—as far as possible, removed from all temptation to partiality. That is directly the opposite of the case of those commissioners. So far from being removed from all temptation to make an improper report, there is not the slightest doubt that a very considerable number of them do expect—in fact some of them have openly stated, I am informed—that after they have performed what they are pleased to call their duty, in the way of exposing the misconduct of the late government or their officials, they will be taken care of by their friends.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the hon. gentleman will give me the source of his information I will be glad to make inquiry as to whether it is correct.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—He has appointed so many of these gentlemen, and some of them have been so indiscreet, it is not a matter of surprise if some of them make curious statements from time to time. What are the government proposing to do? To appoint certain bitter political partisans, our opponents, who have spent years, possibly their whole political lifetime, in denouncing the late government from one end of the country to the other. They are offering these men large salaries, larger salaries, I believe, in most cases, than they would be able to earn by the exercise of honest industry, and all we ask is that they should not be eligible for future rewards besides the very abundant recompense they will get from delving and finding, or may be inventing, scandals against their predecessors. Now, just let me ask my hon. friend this—does he, on his honour and conscience, think that defeated candidates are the safest persons to be put in a judicial position to try their political opponents? I ask hon. gentlemen here, who have been through a good many elections at different times, if there be any sorer man than another is it not a defeated candidate? If there is one man on the face of the earth who goes back from a contest of that kind more likely than another to desire to be avenged, if he can get an opportunity, it is a defeated political candidate, and, nevertheless, in the case of the chief of these commissioners to be appointed the majority is composed, I believe, of defeated candidates.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is hard on a great number of hon. gentlemen in this Senate.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Judging from recent appointments I think that my hon. friend is not altogether innocent in that regard. My hon. friend is a lawyer; at all events, I have noticed in him a good aptitude in dealing with legal questions. Supposing it is a case between man and man, does not my hon. friend know well that most of these gentlemen would not be allowed to be members of a jury to report on a case as between themselves and men of whom they expressed such opinions as most of these gentlemen have expressed with respect to their political opponents?

But they are not to be on a jury. They are to be judges. If they were put in the witness box and my hon. friend was on the bench, as possibly he may condescend to be some day, I feel sure that my hon. friend's sense of justice would cause him to tell the jury of the day that any evidence given by parties having so manifest a bias and so obvious an object in putting the worst possible construction on the acts of their opponents, should be received with very great caution, indeed. The government of the day have had every chance to discover wrong-doing. They made many and very grave accusations against the late government of which I was a member. They have been four months in office. They have had access to every paper in every department of government. They have found those departments most abundantly provided with their own political friends, high up in office, men of their own appointment and their own choice. There has not been the slightest difficulty in their getting at the bottom of any iniquity that we may have committed. They have, besides that the Auditor General's Report, if any of them have ever taken the pains to go through it, which I doubt, and they have had into the bargain the Public Accounts Committee, and they have had the courts of law to appeal to if they saw fit. Have they brought forward in the House of Commons one single charge against their predecessors that they have chosen to press to an issue, or have they brought forward any charge in the Public Accounts Committee? I have not heard of it if they did. My hon. friend can enlighten me if they have done so. Have they appealed to the courts of law? Not they. What have they done? They have, as I say, chosen to appoint certain bitter political partisans, and they propose to give these people the power to appoint other political partisans. If I remember right anything of my old law studies, a long time ago it is true, I think there is a good old legal maxim, delegatus delegare non potest; and it is an extremely objectionable thing to allow a man who is charged with an important duty to delegate full powers to others, as this Bill proposes to do. My own opinion about such matters is this: First of all. I think the government of the day, if they have charges, or if they wish to bring forward charges against their predecessors, ought to state in full parliament what those charges are. Having done so, and having given their political opponents an opportunity to reply, it is open to them to refer the matter to the Committee on Public Accounts, or to a committee of the House, or to a commission as we did on several occasions when we had reason to impugn the propriety of the actions of our predecessors, and I have always thought myself that in commissions of this particular description the chairman, at any rate, ought to be a judge or a lawyer of eminence. If I may make a suggestion to my hon. friend opposite me, if there is any doubt as to whether a judge should be empowered to act on such a commission, that doubt should be removed, and that most undoubtedly a judge of the land should not be incapacitated from sitting on a commission if the government saw fit to appoint him. I expressed that opinion when this matter was at its first stage before the House, and I repeat it now. The hon. gentleman desires, and we all desire, that a full, true and proper investigation be made if any charges are brought forward; but in order that that investigation should command the respect of the people, it ought to be made, not by political partisans, but, as I have said, by impartial parties; and I may remind him that on two or three important occasions, when the late government saw fit to enter into investigations of the proceedings of several departments they appointed in the first case Mr. Justice Cassels, to conduct an important investigation into the Marine Department, and they appointed in the next case, an eminent public servant in the person of Mr. Courteney, to conduct another investigation. Men of that class should be the parties charged with conducting investigations, and not extreme political partisans. What are these gentlemen to inquire into? They are to inquire into, I suppose, the expenditure of about one hundred millions a year for three or four years back. That expenditure covers perhaps an outlay in a thousand different places, scattered over a territory of three or four thousand miles. I put it to the common sense of the House and to the common sense of my hon. friend; what an opportunity is presented in cases like that for anybody who chooses to exaggerate, or anybody who chooses to misrepresent, or anybody who chooses to suppress facts, to bring forward a report which will be damaging to its opponents, and which will be at the same time utterly unjustifiable. I do not say these men will do it. I am simply pointing out what the opportunities will be, and under those circumstances I say there is double and treble the need that these inquiries should be conducted by perfectly impartial commissioners. The hon. gentleman says he is afraid he cannot get, or the government cannot get, anybody to undertake, what shall I call this investigation—these muckraking inquiries, unless, in addition to the present salary, there is a hope of future reward.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No. That may be the conclusion my hon. friend drew; but I did not say that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is what would follow from my hon.

friend's statements. I am quite sure there would be found competent parties to conduct these inquiries if my hon. friend would look for them—people who would not be the least affronted, if they knew that by taking them, they were disqualified for a reasonable period of time from receiving a reward or fees from the government, and I say that on grounds of the highest public policy, it is extremely desirable that these men, if their reports are to obtain any credence at all—if they are to be believed or respected, should have at least the outward show of being impartial. Valuable amendments have been made to the Bill. It is extremely desirable that all parties accused should have a right to be heard, and that they should be represented by counsel, if need be, but I contend that it is utterly and entirely unfair that partisans should be appointed.

My hon. friend, or his friends—I do not accuse him—showed their extreme desire for economy by abolishing some dozen lecturers in a department over which I presided, saving some twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars a year. I venture to say that if the various commissions that are being appointed are all set to work in full blast, that the salaries and expenses—not to speak of the contingent of sub-commissioners that appear likely to be appointed under this Bill—will run to two or three hundred thousand a year, judging by the expense we have seen incurred in similar cases. That is their idea of economy. In a really useful service they will save twenty-five thousand dollars. For the purpose of rewarding a lot of heelers—for the most of them will be nothing else—they will not hesitate to spend two or three hundred thousand dollars. I doubt myself extremely whether these commissions should be issued, at any rate until parliament had been fully seized of the reasons and facts which have led to the issue of them. I grant that to a certain extent what my hon. friend proposes is an innovation. I have no wish and no desire that it should be rigidly forced on the House; and as the matter is of considerable importance, and as members of the House would like to give it full consideration, possibly it would be well that before we proceed further with the Bill the House should allow it to stand for a day or two till we consider the reasons offered by my hon. friend, and suggest any other modifications that may be considered reasonable. I contend that the principle is a sound one, that men who are appointed to conduct this sort of investigation should be particularly put above suspicion of expecting, or being likely to receive, further rewards in addition to the sums that the government may see fit to pay them. I understand some of these gentlemen expect to receive seven, or eight, or ten thousand a year for the work they have undertaken. I have a memorandum on the paper, under which my hon. friend may perhaps be able to give me the information I desire, which will show how far they propose to go in that way; but there is no doubt whatever that the class of men I hear have been appointed to this position are not men in the slightest degree calculated to inspire confidence in the minds of either his own party or of the party to which I belong.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was very glad to hear the right hon. leader of the opposition make the suggestion that he did, that it would be well to have the committee rise and give a little time to consider, not only this amendment, but perhaps another. I quite sympathize in practically everything the right hon. gentleman has said, but if I may be permitted, before the committee rises, I wish to indicate certain points which I think deserve consideration. This is the amendment:

Every commissioner whether appointed under part 1 or part 2 of this Act——

I am not going to say anything about the policy of that, but the amendment goes on:

—and every person engaged as accountant, engineer, technical adviser or other experts under the provisions of this Act, shall be incapable of being appointed——

Now, whatever you do about the commissioners, it does seem to me that it would be unfair and impracticable to put the latter portion of it, with respect to the accountants, engineers, &c., in operation, because if the inquiry is going on as to certain alleged misdoings in any department, the engineers and other officers of that department should be called. Under the wording of the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, these men would be affected just in the same way as the commissioners and would be disqualified from further holding office. Then the amendment proceeds:

—shall be incapable of being appointed to or holding any office, place or employment in this nomination, gift or control of the Crown or of the Governor General of Canada until after the expiration of five years after this report of such commissioner shall have been made.

Leaving out the appointing entirely, clearly it would be unjust and unfair—I think it would work out that way—to say that any one who had been summoned as a witness, even in a case of this sort, and had given information, should be liable to lose the office that he held. If a judge of the higher courts were appointed a commissioner, under the wording of this amendment he could not continue to hold his office after the investigation was over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nor could a witness.

Hon Mr. POWER—I am satisfied the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment does not propose to go as far as that. We have to be reasonable, and to be sure that we are not making more mischief than we are curing. As to the term, I think five years is a somewhat long term, but, however, I am not going to raise any question about that. There is another point to which the right hon. leader of the opposition has directed attention and as to which the Bill really needs amendment more than the amendment I have just been discussing, and that is in the first clause which reads as follows:

11. The commissioners, whether appointed under part I or under part II of this Act, if thereunto authorized by the commission issued in the case, may engage the services of such accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts, clerks, reporters and assistants as they deem necessary or advisable, and also the services of counsel to aid and assist the commissioner in the inquiry——

So far I do not see any special objection, but the first paragraph goes on:

—and the commissioners may authorize and depute any such accountants, engineers, technical advisers, or other experts, or any qualified persons, to inquire into and report to the commissioners upon any matter within the scope of the commission as may be directed by the commissioners, and such persons, when authorized by order in council, shall, in the execution of the powers so deputed or authorized, have the same powers which the commissioners have to take evidence, issue subpœnas, enforce the attendance of witnesses, compel them to give evidence, and otherwise conduct the inquiry.

I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman who has just spoken that that is going too far. It is well enough to give the commissioners the power to do these things, but I do not think it is sound legislation to authorize them to appoint whom they please to appoint.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The commissioners have the power already under the present Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, it is well enough that they should, but I doubt very much the wisdom of allowing them to depute other people, who may be of an inferior character, to do that work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand my hon. friend objects to that portion of the Bill where authority is given to the commissioners to delegate authority to experts, to technical parties, engineers, &c., to make a report, and to take evidence?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let us assume that the commission desires to make inquire into some engineering work on the Northern Timiskaming railway. My hon. friend would scarcely expect the commission, with their staff, to go there for the purpose of making an investigation into some matter of a technical character. Is it not highly desirable that they should have the power to delegate, say to engineers, and technical experts, authority to make inquiry, upon the ground, into questions which may be at issue, or which may have to be investigated, and to have that technical commissioner, if you so choose to term it, report to the commission, keeping in view, as I would point out to the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that this is done under order in council, subject to the Governor in Council authorizing the commisioners to do it. The government, therefore, assumes all responsibility for whatever delegation of powers may be set in motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I directed attention to this particular matter, because I think it is one which deserves to be considered. I see the force of the argument of the hon. leader of the government, but if these sub-commissioners, as one may call them, are obliged to report the evidence, the objection would be somewhat diminished; and, taking the very matter to which the hon. gentleman referred, the Northern Timiskaming railway, there was an inquiry into the way in which that undertaking was managed, and the witnesses were brought to Ottawa and examined before the Committee on Public Accounts. On the whole, that was a better way than sending some under-strappers out to the west to examine and report. But if the evidence taken is to be reported, and the persons accused are to be represented by counsel, perhaps this would not be so objectionable. That is one reason why I was very glad to hear the right hon. leader of the opposition suggest that the committee report progress.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It seems right that the commission may employ engineers to make certain measurements of quantities and see if they are correct, but, in my opinion, those engineers should not hold inquiries. The holding of inquiries would be the business of the commissioners themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But they would have to hold an inquiry as to the subject matter which they were investigating at that particular time. Let us assume that my hon. friend, being an engineer, is authorized by the commissioners to look over a certain piece of work, or a certain public work. My hon. friend would not, as such delegated engineer, examine that himself; he would have to call others, and possibly get information from them. He would have to obtain information as to this, that and the other—all matter which would have to be investigated. Surely it is not an unreasonable power to be granted to a delegated authority to call in other parties to aid an investigation of a technical character and then report to the commissioners?

Hon. Mr. KERR—My object is to protect parties who may be called upon and appointed in this way, from any aspersion that they have any motive, or any interest whatever, in the investigation that they may have to undertake. In other words, they should be men who will deal with the matter in an impartial and judicial way, and discharge their duties as public servants, and not as aspirants for employment in office. I am far from having any such wish as has been suggested by the hon. leader of the government in this chamber. I entirely disavow any intention to interfere with the usefulness of this measure; on the contrary, I wish to have it in such a position that any inquiry made under it will have some measure of public confidence, instead of being regarded as entirely a party move.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will have to change the language of his amendment.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I may have to do so. With reference to the appointment of judges, the suggestion is made why should judges not be appointed? At the time I was drawing the amendment, I had in mind the impeachment made of the late government, because they had appointed judges. I can remember well how the halls of the building rung with the eloquence of gentlemen who spoke very strongly of the impropriety of asking a judge to leave the bench and come down and make inquiry into these matters. If those gentlemen are penitent, and now see the folly of what they stated then, and are desirous of appointing judges, I see no objection to it whatever. I would be only too glad to consent to an amendment whereby those holding the office of judge shall be exempt from the disqualification imposed by this amendment. I do say that a public investigation, which is to go before this country, should be of such a character that it will command the confidence of the people, that people will not be at liberty to say, 'This is a partisan investigation; it is conducted with closed doors, and those who are accused are not to have the opportunity of knowing the accusation against them, and those charged with being guilty of offences will not have the opportunity of explaining what is charged against them as being an offence against the laws of the country.' In that view, I say it is of importance that those appointed should be men above suspicion, that they should not have in their minds the hope of gaining a reward, and I think the greatest danger is that men who are now applicants for positions, and who cannot get them because they are already occupied by others, will be stimulated to make an inquiry of this kind of a wholly partisan character, with the hope and expectation that out of the vacancies so created they will in some way meet with a reward beyond the remuneration given to them under the law. That is the motive with which I approach the matter. I am not approaching it with a view of making it more difficult to carry out investigations. The question is asked, why should an engineer not be authorized to go out on the line and make a measurement? As has been stated by my hon. friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), if he is permitted to go out on his professional reputation, on his judgment and observation, to make a measurement or ascertain facts, doing it all in his professional capacity, then no one could object; but if he is going out as a dismissed official, on a fishing expedition, trying to find out something in the back woods, and then coming here to report in the absence of any person who can show the facts to justify the conduct of the person or the act that was done, then the people of this country will have no confidence in the inquiry, and there will be no justification for it. When you look at the powers given these persons, this accountant, this engineer, this technical adviser, or the other expert, clerk, &c., he may be clothed with all the authority of the commissioners themselves. Is that kind of thing desirable? Is it not dangerous? It is in the interest of the very men who are to be appointed that such a thing should be prevented. It is for the protection of the character of those who should be appointed, and to let them understand that they are serving the country and not a party, that I asked for the amendment. When they accept office they disavow any intention of looking for a reward in the shape of an appointment. I would be very glad to amend the clause to permit the appointment of judges as commissioners; if judges are appointed, I do not care anything about subsequent disqualification, because I have confidence in the judiciary. They discharge their duties in open day in the face of the world, and they are responsible. Their characters and positions are the best guarantee that they will perform the work fairly and impartially, no matter what political party may appoint them. Those holding the office of judge may be entirely excepted from this disqualification; but if it is to be an inquiry made by men who are looking for reward and who are hoping to get it when a vacancy can be created, then the sooner that is understood, and disqualification of the kind I propose is imposed upon them, the sooner we are likely to have an investigation which will be of some use.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Evidently, from the discussion which has taken place, we will not be able to dispose of the Bill this afternoon, and I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the committee rises, it will be just as well if all of us who are not lawyers should understand what the Bill means and what object the hon. gentleman has in view in the amendments which he has offered. I must confess I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) because his mind seems to run in the same direction as the hon. gentleman's did as to what the effect of the amendment would be if adopted. Dealing with that particular point, I fail to see anything in the amendment or in the Bill itself delegating power to experts who may be employed by the commissioners to make an investigation. They are employed when the object is to ascertain whether a piece of work has been properly constructed, and, after investigating, they are required to report to the commissioners. It would be absurd to suppose that the commissioners could go to every part of the Dominion to investigate complaints of improper conduct made against officials. Take the other case to which the hon. leader of the opposition and others have referred, of the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific. If a complaint should be made of improper construction of any part of the line an engineer or a scientific man would be required to make an investigation. Is it reasonable to suppose that the commissioners should undertake to ascertain such facts for themselves by visiting the locality on the route and making the investigation themselves? Even if they could go to make the investigation, is it likely that the commissioners would be men capable of ascertaining whether the work was properly done or whether it required an extraordinary expenditure on construction? It seems to me the common sense reading of the clause itself is that the commissioners are given power, if they deem it necessary, to send experts, engineers or others to make certain investigations and report to them, and the commissioners would have to make their finding upon such reports. To my mind it is the only possible way of arriving at a safe conclusion. I am not going to follow the right hon. leader of the opposition in the strictures he has passed and the insinuations he has made as to what may be the effect of these amendments, or what may be expected in the future. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to his remarks. It brought back to my mind old times when the hon. gentleman exhibited the same vigour that he has shown today in attacking his opponents. He and I have sat together in parliament for the last thirty or forty years, and when I heard him denouncing his opponents in his forcible style and language it brought back to me an earlier period of our lives when we did not hesitate to call a spade a spade in the excitement of debate. I hope to hear him very often, but if I were to retort in the same line—which I do not propose to do—I think I could point out to my hon. friend that in some of the cases to which he has alluded, the facts would not justify the statements he has made. On the contrary, the facts would prove quite contrary to the opinions he has formed and to which he has given expression.

I listened to the statements made by my hon. friend who moved this resolution and consider they were not only impracticable, but, without being at all disrespectful, I would say absurd. One would think, to hear him speak of the possible appointment of politicians and partisans, that such a thing never existed in the past. My hon. friend to the left (Hon. Mr. Lougheed) has pointed out that the practice of both parties, when they were in power, was to select men who, though capable of investigating the subject referred to them, were at least in most cases, if not all, men who, in their political lives, might be termed partisans. When my hon. friend spoke of denunciation of the appointment of a judge, I did not recall to whom he referred, but on reflection I remember that a late senator here referred to the appointment of Judge Cassels. I do not know whether I am correct or not.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, it is a case of Mr. Ferguson's speech and motion made, backed up by the whole of his supporters on this side, in reference to the investigation made by Mr. Justice Britton in reference to Yukon matters. It was the employment of a judge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think my hon. friend has gone just a little too far in that respect. I took part in that discussion, and I am very glad my hon. friend has reminded me of it. It was not because Judge Britton was appointed, but because he made no report upon the investigation which he had made; and my hon. friend Sir Richard Scott, was then leading the Senate, and I pointed out to him that although the investigation had taken place by the judge and a large amount of money had been expended, no result had followed from it, that he had made no report; nor was any report laid before parliament until after I had called for it. The matter of complaint was not the appointment of the judge, but the manner in which he had conducted the investigation, and not having made any report until it was called for by parliament. Fortunately for me, I have a tolerably clear recollection of events as they occur. I know that some remarks were made by an hon. gentleman on that side of the House at the time in reference to the appointment of Judge Cassels, but those who knew Judge Cassels, and those who paid the slightest attention to the investigation which was carried on by him into the wrongdoing in Quebec, Halifax and other places never had the slightest fault to find with the manner in which that investigation was conducted, or with the report which was made. On the contrary, the complaint was that he was restricted in his investigation, and could not follow up to their logical conclusion the faults that were discovered, to show where the wrongs had been committed. If it were necessary, I could point out what these wrongs were. There were facts elicited in that investigation, and when the inquiry arrived at a certain point, the judge was stopped in his investigation because the commission under which he was acting did not permit him to go far enough to follow matters to their source. During that investigation, certain clerks in the department made extraordinary statements. It is true they were not dismissed, one of them in particular who stated to the commission appointed by the government of which two of my hon. friends opposite were members, that through the manner in which contracts had been given out, the government had lost some $200,000. The investigation stopped there; it did not go beyond that to know how and where it was done. That official was not dismissed, nor was he promoted, but he was superannuated for life on a tolerably good allowance. If my hon. friend from Toronto had moved an amendment to disqualify for five years the commissioners who were appointed to make this investigation, there might possibly have been some little reason in it. Then it would only be upon the presumption that those commissioners would make reports against gentlemen holding positions with sufficient emolument to justify their getting rid of them in order to get the positions themselves. That is the only inference that can be drawn from the amendment which has been made and from the speech which the mover has delivered. But he goes a long way beyond that in his amendment, and looking at it closely, anyone will find that every person engaged in any investigation which may take place is disqualified. If an accountant is appointed by the commission to investigate the books or the expenditure of any person carrying on the affairs of the government, that man, though he may be non-partisan, or he may be a partisan, is disqualified for five years under this amendment, though he is only required to be an accountant or an expert in book-keeping and figures, if I may use that expression. Then he mentions an engineer, whom they must necessarily appoint if they want to ascertain the facts connected with the construction of any public work. It goes further and mentions a technical adviser. Now, a man possessing technical knowledge might be employed to consult an engineer, or he might be a technical book-keeper. I recollect a case where the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries appointed some technical book-keeper from the United States, and brought him here at an expenditure of $100 a day to see whether or not his own books were kept properly. If that technical book-keeper had been a Canadian and had been employed for that purpose he would have been disqualified for five years under this amendment.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Chartered accountants would be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A chartered accountant is just as likely to be appointed to investigate books and look into accounts; yet my hon. friend from Toronto makes the provision that if a chartered accountant be employed for the purpose of ascertaining whether the books of any department, or the books of any railway or employee of the government are incorrectly or improperly kept, he is disqualified for five years from holding any office. But the amendment goes further. If this technical adviser gives an opinion that the books have not been properly kept, he is also discredited and put upon the shelf for five years as if he had committed a criminal offence. I cannot myself understand what the hon. gentleman could have been thinking of when he wrote out this amendment. Each one of these persons who are mentioned as experts, under the provisions of this amendment are to be incapable of being employed by the government for a number of years. I quite concur in the position taken by the hon. leader of the House, who is a member of the government, that such an amendment could not by any possiblity be accepted. My hon. friend from Toronto disavows his intention of killing the Bill. I am bound to accept his word for that; but unless he is more innocent than I give him credit for, he must, on a moment's reflection, conclude that the Bill would be destroyed if his amendment were adopted. My hon. friend, the leader of the House, says distinctly that the whole subject is to take power, not to delegate it, to seek information through the parties mentioned by the commissioners, to facilitate the investigation into the workings of the departments or into any charge that may be made. I fully concur in the first amendment, although I do not think it necessary, nor do I think that the Bill is any better with it than it was before. Had the clause been repealed as it stands in the Act, and the additions made to it by way of an amendment, it would have been much more logical and better than it is with that which has been attached to it. I am glad my hon. friend, on the part of the government, was willing to accept the suggestion that if there could be any possible doubt, the man accused, whether from a partisan standpoint or in his official capacity, should have not only protection, but also every opportunity to defend himself. I go further and lay down this principle, that I would not take the word of any one for the dismissal of a man accused of partisanship. During the time I held office, I declined to accept the mere declaration that a man had committed a partisan act, as a reason for his dismissal. I wanted the evidence placed before me to show that that man had violated the rules and regulations which govern the civil service before I would discharge him. I do not desire to be boastful, but during the thirteen or fourteen years that I administered the Customs Act, I had under my control about a thousand officers, and I challenge any one of them to show that during that whole period any man was dismissed except for misconduct; and not a single man for partisan reasons. I have a very strong opinion upon that question, and I never forgot what I heard from Sir John Macdonald, when discussing this matter with his colleagues—and I may be excused for repeating it—that an official under the pay of the government should not be deprived of the rights and privileges of a free man to record his vote for or against any candidate; but he had no right to take part in an election campaign as a partisan, for he did not know to-day who his master might be to-morrow, and for that reason he should commit no act that would bring him in conflict with those with whom he might have to work in carrying out the administration of the affairs of his office. Seeing the extent to which this amendment, if carried, would go, and the effect it would have, and after hearing the declaration on the part of the leader of the government in this House that an amendment of this kind should not be accepted, I hope that, unless my hon. friend desires to kill the Bill, he will withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again next Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (K) An Act to change the name of Ezra Butler Eddy Bessey.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill (No. 40) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company. —Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (N) An Act to incorporate the Dominion Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill (O) An Act respecting the Protectorate Life Insurance Company of Canada. —Hon. Mr. Edwards.

NAVAL SERVICE ACT REPEAL BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE rose to move the second reading of Bill (P) An Act to repeal Chapter 43, 9-10 Edward VII., An Act respecting the Naval Service of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend permit that Bill to stand until to-morrow, or till some other day?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am very sorry I have to go to Quebec to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Some day that will be convenient to my hon. friend?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I just wish to put a question to my hon. friend if he is willing, as leader of the government, in order to make the matter plain, to make some kind of statement as to what the government is willing to do this session? I am not going into the matter to embarass the government, and if my hon. friend would be prepared or is willing to make a statement as to the attitude of the government on this question, or what they are going to do this session on the matter, perhaps the question will be settled.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When my hon. friend moves the second reading of the Bill, I do propose to make a statement as to the position of the government in regard to the naval service and to the obligations and responsibilities now resting on the government touching the carrying out of the duties involved and embodied in the Naval Service Bill. Consequently, if my hon. friend will discharge the order of the day and place it on the orders of the day for a day that would be convenient to himself, that statement can be made.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Will the government then be in a position to declare its policy—declare what it is going to do this session?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, the government will not be in a position to declare its policy on the Naval Service question this session.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Well, perhaps the word policy is too large; I may ask what the government will be able to do this session?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend wants to extract information by instalments.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Perhaps that would be a good way to settle the question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not prepared to make any further statement than I have made.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am going back to Quebec to-morrow, and may not be able to come back till next Thursday week.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, next Thursday week.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I should like to know before, as a matter of consolation, who is going to support my Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would not advise my hon. friend to rely too strongly on that.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE moved that the order be discharged and put on the order paper for Thursday week.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 29) An Act respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited and to change its name to 'The Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.'—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 53) An Act respecting patent of Edmund F. Piper.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill (No. 63) An Act to incorporate the Premier Life Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (No. 72) An Act to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Taylor.

Bill (No. 96) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 14, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (V) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (W) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

THE POSTMISTRESS AT COLLINA, N.B.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY inquired:

1. Was Miss Mary Fowler, postmistress at Collina, N.B., in 1906?
2. If so, when was she appointed?
3. Did she ever give the bonds necessary under the rules of the department, and when were they given?
4. If so, who were the bondsmen,
5. Was she removed from office?
6. If she was removed from office when was she removed, for what reasons, and on whose complaint?
7. If she was removed from office, what was the date?
8. In 1896 was the post office kept at the store of a Mr. Gibbons, Collina?
9. In 1896 was Mr. Gibbons postmaster at Collina?
10. Did he give the usual bonds of office?
11. At what date did he cease to be postmaster at Collina?
12. Did he resign? If so, for what reasons?
13. According to the post office records, who was postmaster or postmistress at Collina, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897?
14. Did not Mr. Gibbons retire from business at Collina in 1896 and leave the district?
15. If so, was the post office placed in the hands of responsible parties there?
16. If so, who was appointed postmaster or postmistress, and at what date?
17. Did the then sitting member (1906) ask for her removal?
18. If so, did he give any reasons, and what were they?
19. Was she removed on account of his complaint?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The following are the replies:

1. No. Cornelius Chamberlain was postmaster of Collina in 1906.

2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. See answer to No. 1.

8. The department has no knowledge as to this.

9. No. James M. Gibbons, postmaster of Collina, died on or about July, 1895.

10. Yes, when he was postmaster.

11 and 12. See answers to Nos. 8 and 9.

13. James M. Gibbons was postmaster in 1894-95 Mrs. May Folkins was postmistress from September 1, 1895 to February 9, 1897. Cornelius Chamberlain has been postmaster since that date.

14, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19. See answers to Nos. 8 and 9 and answer to No. 13.

SALARIES AND CONTINGENCIES OF THE SENATE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved:

That the salaries and contingencies of the Senate, under the head of legislation, and found on page 39 of the estimates laid before parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1913, be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

He said: I make this motion, not because I am in any sense disposed to find fault with the sum total as shown in the estimates, the amount of $108,207 being placed to the credit of the Senate and subject to being withdrawn by the Clerk of the Senate or such other party to whose credit it may be placed, as may be designated by the Speaker; but I have moved it for the purpose of referring to the division of this money as shown in the estimates and the matter which it contains. Hon. gentlemen will readily understand that, as an independent branch of parliament, we are in no way responsible to the government in the control of the expenditure of the Senate, as is the case with the other branch of parliament. The Senate, from time immemorial, has had by practice, and it has become an unwritten law, control of its expenditure through its own Finance Committee, the committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. Bourinot, referring to the duties and responsibilities of the committee and what is expected of it as an advisory board of the Senate, declares that it would be the duty of the Senate, having regard to its practice, to refer questions of this nature to the committee for their determination and advice. In the estimates we have $3,150 in addition to the estimates of the previous year, and we have the details showing the items which go to make up the $3,150. None of these increases have so far been presented to the Senate, and the Senate has expressed no opinion upon them.

I am not here to criticise or to say that the Senate would not approve of them; but as they appear here the only practicable way in which they can come to the Senate for confirmation or for affirmation would be that they should be dealt with by the Senate as a whole or referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate so that a report might be made in regard to them. It will be seen that a new departure appeared in the estimates which we have before us which makes provision for a new service at a cost of $1,200 to provide a private secretary for the represntative of the government in this Chamber. While I am not opposed in any sense in providing clerical assistance for the leader of the government, I am personally of the opinion that it should not be a charge that ought to be placed under the head of civil government; and before we concur in the estimates for the disbursement of the money from the appropriation of $108,000 odd which is handed over to us, we ought at least to express an opinion in regard to this matter, as well as in relation to the other increases which are suggested in this estimate. There has been no change in respect to the financial side and the responsibility side of the question in respect of moneys that the Senate gets from the revenue of Canada by any Act of parliament. There has been a change with respect to the recommendations under the Civil Service Act. We have changed the mode by which certain officials and certain members of the staff of the Senate shall come under the attention and notice of the Senate; but the Act does not in any sense interfere with the responsibility of the Senate in respect to the disbursement of the money, unless we think it proper to do away with the Financial Committee of this House. I would like, if hon. gentlemen will permit me, to read the nature and responsibility of that committee as stated in Bourinot, page 270, of the third edition, edited by T. B. Flint:

'Whenever it is necessary to appoint any officer, clerk or messenger, the subject is referred to the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, who report as to the necessity for such office and the salary that ought to be given.'

That in no way interferes with the application or the provisions of the Civil Service Act, which changes the modus operandi of appointment or recommendation to the Senate, but leaves it clear that both in relation to the position and the salary the matter, as Bourinot puts it, should be referred to the Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Bourinot continues:

'All appointments and salaries except the appointment of Crown Officers as well as to motions and recommendations for superannuation, or a leave of absence, are practically regulated by this committee. In fact, it supervises all the ordinary expenses of the Senate, apart from the members indemnity and other expenditures authorized by statute. Its members have always jealously resented all attempts to interfere with the control of matters which it is the practice to refer to them. All petitions and papers referring to salaries and expenses of the House are inwardly submitted to the consideration of this committee before any definite conclusion is arrived at on the subject.'

I think that is entirely a justification for my asking that the Senate refer the estimates, or the disbursements of the amounts of money placed to the credit of the Senate of Canada to this committee, that they may report to the House in respect of matters contained in it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the Civil Service Act, as it stands upon the statue-book to-day, at all interferes with the principles laid down by Bourinot? In many cases where the powers that were exercised under the law and by practice were removed from the Internal Economy Committee altogether, and placed in the hands of the Speaker and Deputy Head, (the Clerk) it placed them in the position of deputy heads of departments. I have not looked into the point myself, but I presume my hon. friend has, and perhaps he could explain to the Senate whether the principles laid down by Bourinot have been interfered with at all?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not think the Civil Service Act at all interferes with the principles as laid down by Bourinot, for this reason: that Act does not give to the Speaker, acting as the minister for the time being, or the deputy, any other power than the making of recommendations which were formerly initiated by the Internal Economy Committee, and referred to the House. Having made these recommendations they have discharged all the duty that is assigned to them under the Civil Service Act, and the Senate has to deal with these recommendations in the way that have always dealt with them, as Bourinot states.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that these recommendations were not made to the Senate and approved by the Senate? Is that what the hon. gentleman complains of?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—These recommendations have never reached the Senate. If such recommendations had been made by the Speaker under the Civil Service Act, they would have been in the hands of the Senate. I might add that recommendations in respect to increases under the Civil Service Act have been generally made so near the close of the session that the Finance Committee of this Senate have never had an opportunity to advise in relation to them, and while I think they might concur in all of them, I believe it to be the duty and work of the Finance Committee to report in respect to them, whether their views are adopted by the Senate or not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point to which the hon. Chairman has called attention is a serious one and should elicit a few expressions of opinion in this Chamber, so as to strengthen the hands of the Financial Advisory Board of the Senate, as he properly calls it, when they come to deal with the matter. The government of the day is making an intrusion into our financial affairs. I concur with the view of the hon. chairman of the committee, and I think the minister of the government without portfolio in this House is entitled to the best aid he can get. He is alone in this House, and represents some fourteen or fifteen departments. I am somewhat surprised that he is able to discharge his duties so effectively. I have no objection to his being provided with the best amanuensis and typewriter and such other assistance as is necessary; but he would not get that simply as a Senator. He would obtain that as a minister of the government—minister without portfolio if you like.

I, therefore, think that if the government supplies him with a stenographer or clerks, and with an office, it is doing well. I concur with the government in what they have done, because I feel the hon. gentleman has a great deal to attend to, and one clerk would not be enough, but the question is this: should the Senate pay the expense out of its own little fund for the ministerial party? That is the point. I have every sympathy wtih the hon. gentleman in the discharge of his duties, but I think he will agree with me that if these expenses are to be paid they should come out of the general fund of Canada, and not out of the limited fund given to the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate. I hope he will see eye to eye with me in this matter, and I for one am prepared to have him get all the aid possible in the discharge of his duties. I think it would be well if hon. members would strengthen the hands of the committee in this matter, and so advise the government.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS — The matter to me seems larger than the hon. gentleman from Victoria division (Hon. Mr. Cloran) has pointed out. We have not here the power of dealing with the expenditures of the government, except as a whole. If we pass this resolution relating to a portion of the estimates, would we not equally have the power to deal with the whole of them? Are we not proceeding along a line that is quite unusual if not irregular? I must confess I would be somewhat alarmed at the situation were it not that the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), who is such a keen constitutionalist, is the seconder of the motion, and it may be, therefore, a safe one; but I should like to know more about it from that point of view.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not think we are going to affect any change in the estimates as they are before parliament. They will go through just as they are. We do not ask to amend them; but we do ask for an expression of the Senate, when we get the money, as to whether we shall carry out the division of that fund on the lines indicated in the estimates. I think that is the only point at issue. I do not ask for an amendment; I do not know what our committee may do. I simply ask that the matter be referred to them, but we shall in no sense attempt to change the estimates.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no personal inclination touching this subject so far as the submission of the question to the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts is concerned. The only thing I desire to see done is to proceed regularly and consistently in this matter. I may be pardoned for first of all referring to the personal mention which has been made of the amount placed in the estimates for secretarial work in connection with the office I happen to occupy for the moment. I may mention that this amount is not being paid out of the Senate estimates; it is an additional amount which has been placed in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That makes a difference.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Therefore, the Senate is not paying for it in the sense which seems to have impressed the House. It would be entirely immaterial whether this item appeared under any other head, but it is placed in the Senate estimates on account of its being appurtenant to this particular office—not to the minister's office without portfolio, but to the leadership of the Senate, and for that reason it appears in the Senate estimates. As to the other question, it seems to me the inconsistency of the position taken, and which we have been pursuing for some time past, is that estimates which are passed upon by parliament are, in the first place, prepared by officers of this Chamber. They are then submitted to the government, they pass the Treasury Board, and are submitted to parliament, and there voted for specific purposes. Since the estimates are voted by parliament for a specific purpose, it seems to me that it would be highly contradictory for a committee of this Chamber to sit in judgment upon that question.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the estimate, as it appeared here, has been before the Senate and approved of by this House?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I do not say that. I say the estimates have been prepared by the proper officer of this Chamber; that they have been submitted to and approved by the government, and in due course will be submitted to parliament. It seems to me that we are beginning at the wrong end. If there be a policy along the line of pronouncing upon the sums which are to be voted for the expenses of this Chamber, then before the estimates are prepared, or during the course of preparation of those estimates, this committee might well sit in judgment or sit as an advisory committee in recommending to the proper officers of this Chamber through whose hands those estimates pass into the hands of the government. But it seems to me that we would place ourselves in a false position after the estimates have been approved, to sit then in judgment upon them. Another matter; under the Civil Service Act I suppose there cannot be any two opinions that the policy, so far as parliament is concerned, is to assimilate the expenditures and recommendations to office, and so on, of the two branches of parliament, to the practice of a department. Having done that, the Act has specifically designated who shall be the heads of this department, namely the Speaker of the Senate shall be the head of the department, and the Clerk of the Senate shall be the deputy of the department.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And the Senate will be the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And the Senate, I suppose, will be the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—'The Governor in Council' never saw any of these things.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can well appreciate the wisdom of a committee sitting in an advisory capacity; but let us assume for a moment that the committee will not agree with the heads of this department who are designated by the Act. Who then, has the power of appointment?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Senate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not prepared to say that the Act will bear that construction.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 22 of the Act, in my judgment, will bear the opposite interpretation to that which the hon. gentleman has placed upon it, because it designates who shall be the heads of the department, and, of course, I assume that the heads of the department will work in harmony with the Senate; but it seems to me that the Senate and not the committee should act in these matters and should pronounce upon the various reports.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The hon. gentleman said, as I understood him, that those estimates had been prepared by the proper officers, and laid before parliament?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am assuming that, because they were forwarded to the government.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman where, in the consitution of the Senate, there are any officers appointed in respect to making these estimates unless it would be by a reference to the Internal Economy Committee? In the Act the only reference to the Senate will be found in chapter 43, and section 44 of that chapter, which says:

> Credits for all sums voted by parliament and payable in respect of allowances to members of the Senate, as hereinafter provided, and in respect of other expenditure for the service of the Senate shall issue from time to time.
>
> 2. Such credits shall issue on one of the banks of Canada in favour of the Clerk of the Senate and the Assistant Accountant of the Senate or such other persons as the Speaker of the Senate from time to time designates for the purpose.
>
> 3. Such clerk shall from time to time apply for such credits as he deems necessary, by order signed by him.

I think it is very apparent, if Bourinot is to be taken as an authority, that the expenditure of the Senate—the salaries (it says so) and the appointments (it says so) have always been referred to this committee as an advisory board. The House of Commons have no Financial or Internal Economy Committee that is not appointed by the government of Canada. The government appoints the Internal Economy Committee that prepares the estimates of the House of Commons; they are referred to the Speaker for his approval; subsequently they go to the Finance Minister for his approval before they become part of the estimates to be presented to parliament. The constitution of this branch—I don't know for what reason—has made the Senate so absolutely an independent branch in respect of its expenditure and other matters, that has no connection with any department or with the Finance Department and is not required to have any other approval than the Senate itself.

While we would not interfere with what parliament has done, let us imagine what would happen if in the preparation of those estimates there had been a great enormity in them. Suppose there had been something that we could not ourselves defend. Suppose they had been prepared without our knowledge and included matters which did not belong, and which ought not to appear there, what are you going to do? Parliament passes the estimates; it would be charged against the Senate of Canada as one of the idiosyncrasies of this body, who are old men, and had forgotten their duty and obligation. I think it is proper and right that any fund placed by parliament to the credit of the Senate of Canada should be expended by the authority of the Senate who were alone responsible and if not all expended, it should find its way back to the revenues of the Dominion. Automatically, any money not paid out, passes back into the exchequer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend does not apparently view with me the necessity of following the logical sequence of the various steps which should be taken in reference to this subject and that is where the difficulty has been in the past. We have had more or less friction, unfortunately, with the Auditor General since this Civil Service Act became law, and it is very desirable to obviate that as far as possible, and that we should bring ourselves into line with whatever the law is. I am therefore, desirous of seeing some practice adopted which will harmonize with the views entertained by that officer, whose functions we have to recognize and respect, so that friction will be avoided if possible. Let me point out to my hon. friend this difficulty. So far as the preparation of the estimates is concerned, they must necessarily be prepared during the recess. The Minister of Finance will ask for those estimates before parliament is called, and, therefore, if this committee is to exercise any functions it is to exercise the functions of an Advisory Committee, and I think that they should prepare their estimates, say, during the present session of parliament for the ensuing session, so that in the recess, when the estimates are called for, and have to be prepared by the Clerk of the Senate, and approved by the Speaker of the Senate, these will be practically the estimates of the Internal Economy Committee. So far as that committee is concerned, there is no recognition of such a body in the Civil Service Act. The Internal Economy Committee is simply speaking for the Senate, and when we speak of the Senate we must eliminate all thought of the Internal Economy Committee, because the Senate simply delegates the duty, for the time being, under restrictive powers to the Internal Economy Committee to asist them in meeting the requirements of the Act.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—They have always done so in relation to those matters.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a question which should be taken up by a special committee or by the Internal Economy Committee, so that we may harmonize our practice with the requirements of the Civil Service Act. If it is difficult to understand, let us get the matter settled and harmonize it also with the views which the Auditor General may entertain, so that we may avoid the friction we have had to confront in the past. All this can be brought about by the Internal Economy Committee in the first place, simply becoming an advisory committee, advise the Speaker, and the Clerk of the House, as to the estimates and as to what should be done in regard to the various appointments and expenditures in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If I understand the position, it is this: provision has been made in the estimates for increases of salaries of officials of the Senate. If that is so, it seems to me that this is a violation both of the Civil Service Act and of the privileges of this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The practice has always been that this Senate was master of its own staff—of all its officials. I can remember a number of senators in the Chamber, and especially the hon. gentleman sitting to the right of the hon. leader of the House (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) very often rising to assert the importance of the privilege of this House. I am afraid we are now on the verge of a great violation of that privilege. Under the Civil Service Act, as has been very properly stated, any recommendations are to emanate from the hon. Speaker of this House, who is supposed to occupy the same position as a minister of a department; and he acts with the Clerk of the House; but the recommendation is made, not to the government, but to this branch of parliament, and this branch is called upon to pass on that recommendation, to sanction or refuse to sanction it. Here we have estimates which are the result of suggestions that additional amounts be paid to officials of this House, or possibly the creation of new officials, and of this the Senate has never heard a word. If this can be done, the whole of our staff may be dealt with independently of any control of this honourable House. Although I am not against the minister, I am afraid the referring of this question to the Internal Economy Committee will not be a sufficient remedy. I have no objection, as far as I am concerned. Let the motion pass and we shall see what will result. It may aid in the solution of the question. My main object in speaking is to urge upon the committee, if the reference be made to them, the importance of the question, and that the committee should be invited to take such a stand that the privileges of this honourable House will be vindicated and maintained.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not absolutely at one with my hon. friend the mover of this resolution, as to the functions of the Internal Economy Committee under the new regime. I had occasion to express my mind a couple of times as to the functions of the Internal Economy Committee under the operation of the Civil Service Act, and I shall do so in a summary way now. We are under a new order of things, which, I think, has somewhat altered the function which had been delegated to the Internal Economy Committee, previous to the adoption of the Civil Service Act. Now all matters pertaining to the employees and officers of the Senate are not referred to the Internal Economy Committee de jure. The recommendation now somes from his honour the Speaker upon a report made by the deputy minister of our branch, who is the Clerk of the Senate. But the recommendation of his honour the Speaker must be approved by the Senate, just as the report of the ministers must be approved by the Governor in Council. The division of opinion in the Senate has been as to the right of the Senate to refer the reports of his honour the Speaker to a committee of this House. I have held that all reports concerning the increase of the staff, or the increase in salaries, should be referred to the Internal Economy Committee, although the Civil Service Act mentions nothing of the kind. But surely when the Senate is seized of a report coming from his honour the Speaker, the Senate can delegate to a smaller body the study of it, so as to obtain a report from that committee, just as the Governor in Council can delegate to a sub-committee of council any such report from a minister concerning the increase in his staff or a proposed increase in salary. For my part, I have never had any doubt that when a report comes from his honour the Speaker concerning the officers or employees of the Senate that the Senate is seized of that report, can do what it pleases with that report, and can send it, if it pleases to the Internal Economy Committee. Of course, the situation as explained by the hon. leader of the Senate is somewhat a surprising one, if any explanation can be given of the situation which we have to face. But I am informed that the officer who is charged with the preparation of the estimates for the Senate, who is the Clerk of the Senate, our deputy minister, has prepared and submitted them to the Senate every year. According to that report, the Clerk of the Senate did submit the estimates last March, and they were forwarded to the Minister of Finance. Those estimates simply contain the increases of salaries which in his opinion should be made. We have approved of those increases.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—No, they come up later.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What about the new secretary?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—They came up last March. I am informed there has been an error in the preparation of those estimates in charging the Senate with the salary of another employee, the secretary for the leader.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was not done in March.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not know what is the opinion of the hon. gentleman who leads us; but I am under the impression that those estimates which are today before the House of Commons can be varied, if the hon. gentleman is of the opinion that from the sum total which is voted for the Senate this amount should be deducted and charged to another department. My opinion is that that can only be done in the House of Commons. If the estimates come here as they are, whatever may be the action taken by the Internal Economy Committee on this matter, we would have to vote the supply Bill as it comes, that we are not able to modify it; so that if it appears in the judgment of the Senate that we should not be charged with that sum, which is, I admit, a paltry one, we can perhaps declare that it is best we should not be charged with it because of the precedent it would establish, and not because of the amount. Then it can be very easily done in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon friend suggest to what particular branch of the public service that item should be charged?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Civil government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is where it is—legislation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have not examined the budget itself. I would rather leave it to my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Richard Cartwright) who sits beside me, and the hon. gentleman from Hastings, (Hon. Mr. Bowell) to answer that question. I have never had anything to do with the preparation of the estimates or the budget, so that I could not give an opinion which would have any weight in this matter. Before adopting this motion, we should, perhaps, pause a little, and I would suggest to my hon. friend that instead of moving it now he should adjourn the further discussion of it until next week, so that we may consider what effect this step may have should we take it.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I understood the hon. gentleman to say the increases that appeared here had been approved last March. They have not yet come to the Senate. They will be recommended later on in the session by the Clerk in respect to the salaries included in the estimate for the year ending March 31, 1913. These increases have not yet been recommended by the Speaker. There is no difference of opinion between the hon. gentleman and myself that would make a matter of controversy. He says the Civil Service Act has changed, in some respects, the modus operandi of handling these questions here. That is correct. It is only done with respect to the nomination through the Speaker instead of through this committee, and the moment it reaches this committee Bourinot says before the Senate takes any definite action with respect to an expenditure to be made by the Senate the matter is invariably referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate. Unless you ignore the practice of the Senate and desire that this committee which has been appointed every session from time immemorial, shall be ignored the matter should be referred to that committee. Although the nomination comes through the Speaker, there is no reason why it should not be referred to the committee. We do not determine it. The matter is reported back to the Senate by the committee, the committee having gone through it in a more complete way than would be possible in the Senate. The committee is able to get to the bottom of such questions. I claim that, under the Civil Service Act, we are proceeding entirely in conformity with its provisions. I merely rose to say that I think the hon. gentleman was wrong when he said that this matter had been considered by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like, before the conclusion of this discussion, to absolve the clerk from any responsibility for inserting that very disturbing factor of $1,200 for secretarial assistance with respect to the office which pertains to this desk; but I would just point out that my hon. friend made the statement that the estimates which the Internal Economy Committee now want to be submitted to them again passed this committee or had been submitted to the committee——

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understood my hon. friend opposite to say that they had been.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I was under the impression, from information I had received and which I may have misunderstood, that the intended increases of salaries had been laid on the table of the House last March in one form or another.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I have already said, I have no personal inclination one way or the other in the matter, except this: to whatever committee these estimates may be sent it should be an advisory committee to the Senate in the preparation of the estimates.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like to ask a question of the leader of the government. He has made a declaration here that this $1,200 salary for a secretary attaches not to his position as minister, but to his position as leader of the Senate. Suppose occasion should arise, and circumstances required that the government will have two or three extra ministers in this House; would all the expenses of their departments be saddled upon the Senate? Because if the hon. gentleman is right in this case, they would be justified in asking the same thing to be done with regard to the other departments. We are establishing a dangerous precedent. I am simply looking after the small amount of money we have at our disposal. If all these expenses are to be saddled on the Senate, the people will say: 'Look at what the Senate is costing the country?' All I want is to see that the expenditure goes through the proper channel, where it will not be charged against the Senate. Does the leader of the government think I am right?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If a minister with portfolio should be appointed to the Senate the expense of a secretary would be charged up to his department; but it happens that that is not the case at the present time. There being no portfolio in this Chamber, it therefore becomes necessary to charge that item to the branch where it belongs.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It was not necessary seven or eight years ago when Mr. Templeman was minister without portfolio.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But Mr Templeman was not charged with the duty of leading the Senate. There are other ministers without portfolio and no grant has been made to them for secretarial assistance. It is only on account of the duties pertaining to this particular office that that has been done. I will credit my hon. friends with sufficient genorosity to quite readily recognize the necessity for such an officer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—The Civil Service Act, which governs us was passed in 1908, so the practice laid down by Bourinot is overruled by that law. Bourinot has nothing to say in the case, because we have ourselves accepted the Act in passing it, and we are governed by the Act, and the Act comes before the opinion of Bourinot in the matter. Now what does the Act say. Clause 39 provides:

'Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination, and irrespective of age, be appointed for a period not exceeding one year and paid as a clerk in sub-division (B) of the second division.'

So you see a minister has the power to name his private secretary and that private secretary is not obliged to undergo any examination. Who will pay him? It is the House of Commons that votes the money, not the Senate. Clause 81 says:

'No salary shall be payable to any private secretary unless the amount has been voted by parliament.'

The amount must be voted by parliament, and to be voted by parliament it must be introduced in the estimates. It is out of our power altogether.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The question is, against whom shall it be charged?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—When there is no department it must be charged somewhere.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It should not be charged to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—When a minister in this House has a department, it should be charged against the department; but when it is a minister without portfolio, where should it be charged?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The travelling expenses of a minister without portfolio are not charged against the Senate. The principle is wrong, and if the leader of the government wanted to admit it he would say so. We do not object to the $1,200; but we want it charged to the proper source, not to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—I am not defending the charging of it to the Senate, but I say the Senate has nothing to do with the private secretaries, that they are chosen by the ministers and the amount is voted by parliament. The hon. gentleman asks where it is to be charged. It is not for me to find a place, but I say that the Internal Economy Committee has no mandate to point out the place. The Senate may protest against the charging of it to the Senate, but they have no right to designate the place where that expense shall be charged.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly they have.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—They have no right to change the estimates.

This is merely a memorandum which is nothing more than a protest.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We can reject the estimates. I would ask the Speaker to refer to the other items, because the one he has spoken of is not the only item.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I naturally expected, the leader of the House takes a reasonable view of the matter, and he expressed his willingness that this motion should pass, and when the report of the committee comes up, the House can deal with it as it pleases. I rise chiefly for the purpose of expressing my dissent from the proposal made to postpone this discussion to a future day. We have devoted quite sufficient time to the matter, and are in as good a position to vote on it now as if we waited three weeks. The question is substantially this, whatever it may appear on the surface: shall this House abandon the control it has heretofore had over its staff? Any hon. member who is prepared to vote for that will vote against the motion of the hon. member from Fredericton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—While I see no objection to the motion, and shall vote for it, I must enter my dissent from the expression of the hon. member from Halifax, who says that a vote against this motion is tantamount to the abrogation of our control over our staff. I dissent from that altogether.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASES IN NAVAL SERVICE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE inquired:

Why has the government provided in the estimates for an increased number of employees in the Naval Service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that the question is rather ambiguous, and scarcely permits of such an answer as he may expect. In the first place, the main estimates for the Naval Service for 1912-13 show a decrease of $1,340,000 compared with 1911-12; but there having been attached to that department the hydrographic and tidal service, and wireless telegraph branches, certain employees have been appointed to that service and as it is part of the public service of the state, entirely irrespective of the Naval Service but for convenience attached to it, the estimates may possibly show an increase of employees.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE—The government has provided for a new set of civil servants in the Naval Department, new employees. Did the government appoint them?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend would indicate what additional employees have been appointed, I should be very glad to get him the information.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE—There has been an augmentation, according to the budget; that is all I know about it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To speak of it in a general way, it would be explained in the manner I have indicated—that there have been attached to that department certain branches of the public service, and that service is expanding and may possibly show additional employees in the Naval Service, speaking generally.

Hon. Mr. LAVERGNE—Will the hon. leader of the House tell the Senate if this Naval Bill is to be repealed?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government has not changed its attitude upon that Bill since yesterday.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They have increased the estimates.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 50) An Act respecting the Ontario and Ottawa Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Davis.

Bill (No. 89) An Act to incorporate the Bank of Saskatchewan.—Hon. Mr. Ross, Moosejaw.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. RILEY—Before the orders of the day are called, I would draw the attention of the hon. leader of the government to the fact that next Wednesday is Ash Wednesday, and will be a holiday. Perhaps it would suit the hon. members of this House if they knew in advance what the intention of the government is as to an adjournment. Some are of the opinion that it is not worth while meeting on Tuesday and then having a holiday on Wednesday, that it would be better to adjourn till Thursday. Others are of the opinion that it would be better to adjourn all next week. It would suit the convenience of members if they knew in advance what was likely to take place so that they might make their arrangements accordingly. I therefore, thought it well to ascertain the opinion of the government and hon. members of this House as to what we might expect as to a probable adjournment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am entirely in the judgment of the House in this matter. There is a statutory holiday next Wednesday, and, personally, I think there would be no objection if we should adjourn from Friday until Thursday. As to the remainder of the week, while I have no particular inclination on the subject, there are two very important Bills which should reach this House before Thursday next, namely the Grain Bill and the Tariff Commission Bill. If the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite do not detain the Tariff Commission Bill too long in the Commons, it should also be here by that time. Is it the opinion of the House that in view of the legislation which we see looming up, and the fairly large order paper which we have before us, that we should take the whole of next week? My suggestion would be to adjourn until Thursday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman might perhaps, inasmuch as to-day is Wednesday, give his notice for Friday, and between now and Friday he will see if he could give notice that when the Senate adjourns on Friday it stands adjourned till Thursday next; but in the meantime, between now and Friday, he may see whether we can afford to go a little further and take the whole week.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (X) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Public Health Association.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Hon. Mr. RILEY.

BARCELONA TRACTION LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. BEITH moved the second reading of Bill (No. 36) An Act respecting Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I observe that this Bill contains a reference to a charter, and to certain powers that are conferred upon this company which is the petitioner here. Before we undertake to say anything with reference to this Bill we ought to have before us the powers that the company already possess. It seems to me that the matter should stand over till that information can be furnished to us. It is not expedient that we should be at all in the dark with respect to this matter, and we should be able to say whether it is advantageous or convenient that such powers should be conferred on a company which has been authorized to do business by letters patent, without havig those powers before us. It differs entirely from the case of a company incorporated by parliament and whose acts are upon the statutes of Canada. Perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill will be able to let us know when he can have copies of the letters patent to submit to us. I would suggest that the order be discharged and that it be placed on the order paper for this day week.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would draw the attention of my hon. friend to the question whether the committee is the proper place to examine into the powers that this company have or are to be conferred on them.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Before we can decide that it is desirable that those powers should be conferred on the company, we ought to have before us the powers that are ancillary to it. In other words, I think this Bill should have been printed with the letters patent as a schedule to the Bill; then we would have known exactly what was before us.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—One thing they are asking for in this Bill is to change the name, and the other is the right to acquire under that changed name. I do not see that they are asking any new power or that there is anything extraordinary in it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Yes, but they may have power under the letters patent that we would not grant.

Hon. Mr. BEITH moved that the order of the day be discharged and that it be put on the order paper for Friday.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (Q) An Act to incorporate the Universal Eyesight Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

Bill (R) An Act for the relief of Herbert Horsfall.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (S) An Act for the relief of Kenneth Molson.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 96) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a very short Bill, but it means a great deal to the interests involved. Very strong pressure has been brought to bear on the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is charged with this particular branch of the public service, to make an additional exception to the exceptions found in the present law, chap. 45 of the Revised Statutes of 1908. The present exceptions read as follows:

'The commissioner (that is the warehouse commissioner) shall have power in his discretion to order cars to be supplied contrary to the provisions of this Act to elevators that are in danger of collapse, or in cases where the operator of any country elevator or warehouse, reports in writing under oath, that some portion of the grain in his elevator or warehouse is heated, and that in order to preserve the same it is necessary to ship such heated grain to the terminal elevator for treatment, provided however that no relief shall be granted in such last mentioned cases unless the warehouseman has plenty of room in his building for the rehandling of such grain.'

I am instructed that there are many millions of bushels of grain yet in the northwest that are threatened with very great deterioration unless it is immediately handled. The grain is damp, and in all probability it will be destroyed at an early date unless some relief is given by legislation so as to depart from the Act as we suggest to-day. The Act is rather of cast-iron character, only making provision for two exceptions which I have mentioned. It is therefore proposed that another exception be included in the Act as provided by this Bill, which exception reads as follows:

To places where grain is damp and liable to become damaged, or for the purpose of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division.'

Hon. gentlemen will appreciate the necessity of a rapid movement of grain for the purposes mentioned in this particular Bill, and the desire of the government is to meet public opinion and sentiment in the Northwest, and make provision for the movement of this particular class of grain.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Where is it moved?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To the terminal elevators for treatment. There are no hospital elevators in the interior of the country, and this grain will have to be moved to terminal elevator points for the purpose of saving it.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I should like to know from what source this Bill emanates? Is it the people who own the grain who are calling for this legislation, and who are desirous of setting aside the principle which we embraced in Bill (Q) last year, and in which they had every confidence? I understand there is a certain amount of grain that may become damp, and will become damp, and that of course will occur in any season. It is a well known fact to-day that the threshing machines are busy at work and are getting the grain in fairly good shape and selling it at good prices. I am given to understand that the principle involved in Bill (Q) last year will be preserved in the government

Bill which will reach us in a few days. I fail to see the urgency for putting this Bill into effect, which is against our judgment of previous years. Very likely the question will be under discussion and this provision will be set aside in the government Bill which is now before the House of Commons. It is perfectly evident that the commissioner at Winnipeg has now all the powers necessary to meet the case, and on that account I feel disposed to press the House to consider the fact that there is no need for a change. The commissioner may order cars to meet the emergencies which may arise, and why should we not leave the matter in his hands?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The commissioner has no authority unless we give it to him by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—He has authority under the Bill which passed this House in 1908, which has not been repealed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it is entirely limited to the two classes of cases which I read from the Act a moment ago, chap. 45, sec. 41.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—And 99-B.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—My hon. friend refers to the urgency in this matter. I see no urgency at all. They can call for cars any where in the province if they are available and forward seed grain to any point without further legislation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, seed grain is not provided for in the present Act.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—The second provision relates to distributing grain to any point in the western provinces. There is no urgency in that case. What is needed is cars. This is a blow at the general principle embodied in the Act of 1898, which we adopted last year, and which will come up in the new Bill for approval. It would be well to keep this matter in abeyance for a week.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a case of urgent necessity. There will be no necessity for it three weeks hence. This amendment is designed to meet an exceptional condition of things which prevails in the Northwest, where millions of bushels of damaged grain require to be moved at once to terminal points for treatment. It will be all over within the next two or three weeks I apprehend.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Has the hon. gentleman any assurance from the railway companies that if this Bill is passed today they will be able to move the damaged grain that he refers to? If it is put on cars it may stand, as grain has stood during the past, for three or four weeks at a time on the track without leaving the place. This Bill looks to me like a scheme of the railway companies to put themselves right before the people. This clause leaves it to the discretion of the warehouse commissioner and surely it might remain within his discretion until the general Bill comes before us and we can review the whole matter.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This refers to grain that is liable to be damaged.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—We cannot tell what amount there is of damaged grain.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Will the passing of this Bill do any harm?

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—If the situation can be relieved by the passing of this measure and the railways will furnish the cars and facilities without delay to move the grain, I do not think there is anything really bad about the Bill. At the same time, it seems to me superfluous. The principle is already provided for in the Act, and I am sure that all that is needed is additional cars and rolling stock. What is wanted is better engines to handle the grain during the winter season, and without such facilities this legislation will be of very little value—really none at all. I am not going to oppose the Bill, because it is likely to be fully discussed and we can embody it, if we see fit, in the Grain Bill when it comes before us, but I would prefer to postpone further discussion of it until then. I move that the order of the day be discharged, and that it be postponed until we have the general Bill before us which will probably be in a very few days.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We may not need it then.

The CHAIRMAN—The hon. gentleman can only move that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Then I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day two weeks.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—With reference to the effect of this clause, my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Douglas) feels that the power is already in the hands of the commissioners who can accomplish all that is proposed by this Bill. In the Act there are two conditions under which the Warehouse Commissioners may take action. First, if an elevator has collapsed or is about to collapse and, secondly, if grain has become heated in a warehouse or elevator. That applies only to grain that has already been received and stored and has gone wrong. It has always been a puzzle to me to know what cure you can work on grain that has heated. It may be as well that the commissioner has power to remove it from the elevator. This Bill goes a little further and deals with grain not in an elevator and not heated, but grain at or near a station, whether in an elevator or not, which is damp at present and liable as soon as the warm weather comes in, to become damaged. If there is any fault to find with this measure it is that it is belated. It should have been on the statute-book and acted upon a month ago, because the men who should get the very first relief are the farmers whose season's crop is jeopardized by the approach of warmer weather. I would suggest not only that this legislation should be passed, but that the government should see to it that in future those who are in the unfortunate position of being liable to lose their crop should have the first consideration at the hands of the transportation companies, and thereby minimize as much as possible loss in that direction. I am supporting the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I was absent during the discussion on this Bill, but I would like to know who asked for this legislation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The owners of the grain.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Did the grain growers, who had a deputation here two or three days ago, ask for it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The growers of the grain asked for it. There is only one sentiment in the Northwest in regard to this question. It must be manifest to the hon. gentlemen that if there are millions of bushels of damp grain that may become destroyed for want of treatment, it is immaterial who may have asked for it, it is the duty of the government to see that the grain is saved if at all possible.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Then I understand that although the accredited representatives of the people who grow grain in the Northwest were here a few days ago, we have no information whether they asked for it or not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. Is it not manifest to my hon. friend that if there are millions of bushels—and I am told the quantity is fifteen or twenty million bushels—in danger of being lost, is it not the duty of the government, even though no one asked for it, to take steps to save such valuable property?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There are not only the people who own elevators, but hundreds of farmers all over the country who have grain of that character. This legislation may have the effect of relieving the owners of elevators; on the other hand it may have the effect of preventing men who have not as large an interest, but whose wheat is scattered all over the west, from getting their wheat to market. This is the principle that has been fought for by the grain growers for years, ever since I have been in parliament—I mean the proper distribution of cars, so that the men in business would not get an advantage over the farmer. If there is anything in the Grain Act that they want guarded it is the proper distribution of cars. This Bill comes like the thin edge of the wedge: the grain commissioner can, if he sees fit, if an elevator collapses, or grain is heating, have that grain shipped out; but under this new provision he might do that in one or two cases, and the farmers would have no cars at all. I have attended every session of the grain growers where they have met the railway and milling people, and the farmers have stood by that provision in the Act solidly. Every year we have found the railway and elevator people and others interested in that way trying to get that section of the Act repealed. Surely the majority of the people ought to know what is best for them. If the railway people would pay more attention to providing cars, to move the grain out, there would be no need for such legislation. Unfortunately, they will not provide what is needed. If they got more rolling stock and looked after the operation of their roads and did less lobbying about the corridors of parliament, it would be better for all parties concerned. We had an account in the press despatches yesterday of a pitched battle between the farmers at a point in the Northwest where one hundred cars were required on one branch of the railroad to move the wheat. A dozen cars were brought in and in the struggle to secure them a number of people were clubbed and one of them is likely to die. That was the result of a shortage of cars. The railway companies have been treated generously by this country. They have received subsidies of money and land, and have been given great advantages, and surely those people whose stock commands nearly three hundred, can afford to supply cars enough to do the ordinary business of the country. But they would rather come here for legislation like the Bill now before the House. I see in this measure an attempt on the part of the railway interests to remove the safeguard which the farmers now have in the Act. If such legislation was desired or thought necessary by the grain growers, surely they would have asked for it when their representatives were here. As a matter of fact, they do not want it. For my part, I am opposed to this legislation. The Grain Act which was passed by the Senate last year is being dealt with in the other House. It will be here in a day or two: would it not be well to let this legislation stand until that measure comes before us, when we can deal with the whole matter? Supposing we were to pass this Bill now it might not be assented to for two or three weeks. I should like to see the people who are interested outside of the railway and elevator people, consulted before it becomes law. I second the motion that the committee rise.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If what the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert says be true—and I believe it is true—the situation is a serious one. He practically tells the Senate that the railway companies will not furnish individuals or small corporations with cars when they are prepared to furnish them to companies owning elevators. It means that the railway companies are rendering a service to large companies which they refuse to individuals. If such is the case, why does not the hon. gentleman move to insert in the law—and I will support him if he does—a provision whereby on the demand of any farmer or farmers who want cars, the company shall within forty-eight hours supply them. If they have not all the cars demanded then they should give a percentage of the cars at their disposal to the farmers. With such a proviso the injustice complained of will be prevented.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There is such a provision in the Act as it stands now. It was secured after a long and bitter fight. It places farmers in a position that they can get their share of cars as well as the elevator people. The railways would rather load from an elevator than take grain from a platform at a siding, therefore they have always been trying to get rid of this provision in the Act which enables farmers to load their grain. It not only gives the farmer a chance to ship his grain, but a chance to avail himself of competition in selling his grain. If you do away with this clause, you place him absolutely in the hands of a few grain buyers at the local stations, and they will then be in a position to offer him just what they like for his grain. This Bill is very carefully drawn. It does not say that its object is to provide for the prompt removal of wheat that is lying on the prairie. It provides for inserting after the word 'collapse', in the third line thereof, the words 'to places where grain is damp and liable to become damaged, or for the purpose of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division.'

This Bill, to my mind, relieves, to a certain extent, the warehouseman. It does not say that he shall take it out of the bin or a pile of wheat or anything; he has the power now to apply this to every elevator over the country where they suppose grain is liable to become damaged. It is very easy to report, 'If you don't bring me 25 cars to take my wheat out of this elevator, I am going to lose it.' That is a very easy way indeed, and one that they would be very liable to adopt, and the warehouse commissioner sends twenty-five cars. But here are twenty-five farmers who are not getting any cars at all; they may have wheat in the same condition, but they are shut out, they don't get the cars; Mr. Elevatorman gets the whole of them. You may apply the whole of that to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the law is going to be practically a dead letter. This is simply a condition under which we are trying to deprive the farmers of a privilege they have fought for for years and years; I think it would be well to leave it over, seeing that the farmers were here a week ago, and they did not ask for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is not fair in saying that. They have asked for it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend did not say so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I said it was not necessary for any one to ask for it in the face of the fact that the government knows that approximately 20,000,000 bushels of grain will be destroyed unless this legislation goes through; but the farmers of the Northwest have strongly urged upon the Department of Trade and Commerce that this legislation be passed without delay.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman who has just spoken reads the clauses carefully, with the amendments suggested, he will see that this amendment will not affect the law at all as it is, and will not apply to any grain in elevators, because the provision for that remains in the Act as it was. It is intended merely to apply to grain outside of elevators, and to emergency cases. It is not left to the railway companies or to the dealers in grain; it is entirely left to the judgment of the commissioner; and it seems to me that if it was wise at the time this Act was passed to provide for such emergencies as damaged wheat in elevators, it is surely wise to-day to provide for an emergency when it is known that there are millions of bushels of wheat all over the country liable to be damaged if not removed quickly. It seems to me, therefore, the measure is altogether in the interests of the farmer, and the amendment does not apply to any grain in elevators.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I would like my hon. friend to point out where he finds, within the four corners of that Bill, anything that prevents them from taking it out of the elevators.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The clause in the Bill of last year gives the commissioner power to order cars to be supplied to elevators that are in danger of collapse, and the present Bill adds the words:

'Or to places where the grain is damp and liable to become damaged or for the purposes of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division.'

The provisions in the former Bill remain the same, therefore no elevator man can derive any benefit from the amendment at all. The provision embodied in last year's Bill will be maintained, and the cars can be furnished at the request of the commissioner for grain elevators only in such cases where the operator of any country elevator or warehouse reports in writing under oath that such portion of the grain in the elevator or warehouse is heated.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The present Bill amends the statute of 1908 by inserting after the word 'collapse' the words 'to places where grain is damp and liable to becomes damaged,' &c. What does that mean? Does it mean a grain bin where you have grain piled, or does it mean an elevator?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is followed by a special provision in regard to elevators. The effect will be, when amended, that it will not apply to elevators at all, because there will be a special provision regarding elevators.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The original Act says:

In cases where the operator of any country elevator or warehouse reports in writing under oath that some portion of the grain in his elevator or warehouse is heated and that in order to preserve the same it is necessary to ship such heated grain to the terminal elevator for treatment.

If these gentlemen were overly anxious to assist the farmer, would it not be well to add after the word 'heated' the word 'damaged'?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, because that would be limited to grain in elevators.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This measure would apply to elevators.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nothing to do with elevators.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It says that where it is necessary in order to save the grain it shall be shipped to the terminal elevators for treatment.

The CHAIRMAN—The elevators have that power.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—As far as heated grain is concerned; but the owner has to make an oath if the grain is heated. Does my hon. friend say that before he can get the grain out of the elevator he has to make an oath? Under the Act he has to make the same oath and is subject to the same penalty.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Not outside of elevators.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I think this refers to elevators, and if my hon. friend who has charge of this Bill has any idea that it does not apply to them, could we not insert a clause as follows: 'This Bill shall not apply to elevators.' I would be satisfied if he did that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think the purpose for which the Bill is being passed would be served by inserting a provision that it should not apply to elevators. If grain is damp and liable to become heated, why should they not move it, no matter where it is. But this is going outside of elevators. This amends the Act by allowing the grain commissioner to permit a car to be loaded out of a wheat field, if you like. There is grain in the fields, and the commissioner can direct the railways to send a car there to pick it up. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young). When you attempt to save grain which has been heated, I do not know what possible treatment you can give it. No doubt a great deal of the wheat at the present moment is in such a condition that if handled within the next few weeks it will probably be saved to a considerable extent. My only regret is that the government did not discover the necessity for this weeks ago. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen should ask to delay it, because it is in the right direction.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Not from the standpoint of the farmer.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, from the standpoint of the farmer. The commissioner has no power to refuse the farmer cars in his turn as provided by the Act, but this gives him additional power to take away the rights the elevator man has at the present time.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS. It is just a temporary provision.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I say it should not be temporary, but should remain in the Act. If such a provision had been in the statute, probably millions of bushels of wheat which have been destroyed would have been saved. In regard to the facilities for treating such wheat, I understand they can treat about 60,000 bushels a day in the hospital elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and at Duluth somewhere about 15,000 bushels a day The treatment of that amount is going to make a saving, provided the weather does not get warm too soon, because this wheat was threshed after the snow came, and is mixed with ice, and as soon as the warm weather comes and the ice melts that grain will be worthless. Legislation should have been passed sooner to direct the commissioners to give the cars to these unfortunate people. I do not see any reason why a man who has the wheat heating in an elevator should not have power to move it as well as the man who has wheat on the farm. I was informed yesterday that there were large sections of country in Saskatchewan, twenty or thirty square miles, where only about 15 per cent of the crop has been threshed. If the weather is favourable, they will thresh it as soon as they can. That grain is bound to have more or less ice in it if threshed in hard weather, and if it is not taken to market at once it is a dead loss to the farmer. I am in entire sympathy with this legislation, and regret that the government did not discover the necessity for this legislation weeks ago instead of at this late date.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I am not at all satisfied, with all due respect for my hon. friend's opinion, that the Bill means what it says.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I trust it does.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I am almost absolutely sure it is the very reverse, and in any case I believe, if it is simply relief which was intended, the loss will not be great by waiting one day more, and I suggest that this committee rise, to meet again to-morrow, so that we can ascertain the meaning of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I sincerely hope that the Senate will not assume the responsibility of contributing in any way to the further destruction of this grain than the process now going on. The Minister of Trade and Commerce urged upon me some days ago to put the Bill through as rapidly as I possibly could. He said very great pressure was being brought to bear upon him by owners of grain to have this Bill become law at once. I understand the Railway Commissioners have decided to take exceptional steps to provide extra cars for the ready movement of the grain. I venture to say that it will not detract one iota from the normal supply of cars already contemplated and provided for by the Act. It only gives the warehouse commissioner authority to furnish cars for this particular purpose, and from the statements made by the railway companies I am satisfied that such additional facilities will be furnished as not to interfere in any way with what I might term the inflexible rule laid down as to the distribution of cars for normal purposes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—My hon. friend admits that the Bill is not introduced for the purpose of removing the grain which is owned by farmers and liable to losses.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certainly it is for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The railway companies have given assurances that if this Bill passes it will not prevent them distributing cars to people as much in the future as in the past.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I did not say that. I said that, owing to the emergent conditions which have arisen there within the last few months, and the railways recognizing those emergent conditions, they will take exceptional steps to furnish cars for the rapid movement of this grain to terminal points, so that it will undergo hospital treatment.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I would draw attention to the powers already given to the commissioner under this Bill with reference to grain that is heating. What does the hon. gentleman say as to the other grain which we were discussing? Is that not liable to be heated just the same?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Bill deals with grain that is damp and liable to be damaged. It may have nothing to do with the heating. My hon. friend might order cars to be loaded opposite a farmer's field where the grain could be loaded. It does not refer to elevators particularly.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) said this referred to grain lying out in the field. I can imagine that you are to relieve the congestion by going out in the fields and loading the grain on the cars there. You want to relieve the elevators by giving them all the cars the railways have available, and leave the grain which is wet on the platform with no cars at all There is nothing to prevent the elevators from getting the cars under the present Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I cannot see any difficulty in interpreting this amendment:

The commissioner shall have power, in his discretion, during a car shortage to direct the railways to make an equitable distribution of empty grain cars to all stations in proportion to the amount of grain available for shipment from such stations.

What does section 99B of the Manitoba Grain Act of 1908 say?

The commissioner shall have the power, in his discretion, to order cars to be supplied contrary to the provisions of this Act, to elevators that are in danger of collapse.

Then the amendment comes in:

And to places where grain is damp and liable to become damaged, or for the purpose of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division.

So that it is a general power which we give to the commissioners, and it seems to me that it is broad and clear enough.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend has abiding faith in the commissioners, more so than I have. I do not wish to see the farmers' rights placed in the hands of the commissioners. If wheat is wet it is going to heat and be damaged. If the grain is damp and liable to heat, the commissioner can give orders for cars at the present time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The section of the Act says:

Where the operator of any country elevator or warehouse reports in writing under oath that some portion of the grain in his elevator or warehouse is heated, and that in order to preserve the same it is necessary to ship such heated grain, &c.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is not the farmer.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is it intended that the Bill shall be for the benefit of the farmers?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Why not provide that it shall not apply to elevators? My hon. friend tells me the farmers have asked for this. I was told by the secretary of the Grain Growers' Association that this was to be brought down, and that the railways and elevator men were going to get in the thin end of the wedge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He does not know what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I submit that people out there have as good a knowledge of the shipping and handling grain as an hon. minister, who has never been there.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I think the hon. gentlemen who are opposing the Bill are asking nothing unfair. What harm will be done by postponing the Bill for three weeks? If the contention on the part of the leader of the House and those who adopt his views on this matter, that it is essential the Bill be passed at once is correct, they have not shown that there is any danger whatever under the legislation of the previous section, that the Act amply protects the wheat in the west. It would appear from the nature of this Bill that there is some object to be served. What is that object or what advantage is there in it? Is it a strike at the railway companies? Are they not doing all they possibly can under the present law? We all know that wheat exposed is liable to be damaged; but the present law is just as ample protection to the farming community having wheat exposed as this Bill would be. Who is asking for the Bill? Have the farmers of the Northwest been petitioning for it? If the matter were urgent we would be flooded with petitions asking for such legislation. The representatives from the Northwest are divided on this question; therefore I think we should postpone the consideration of the Bill.

Are you to take it for granted that if there is a possibility of grain becoming heated you are going to have it taken out of the elevator or wherever it may be, to be disposed of at once? The difficulty is to get cars. If you had cars there would be no danger, for you could send the wheat to market. Under the old law, you have as ample protection for enforcing the transfers of wheat, as you have in this. I am therefore in favour of the delay asked for by members of the Northwest, and I have heard no reason stated showing advantage or benefit from the immediate passage of the Bill. I shall therefore vote for the delay.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—As far as I am concerned, I have no evidence that the grain growers, the men who actually produce the grain, have asked for this Bill, and there should be some delay at least until we can communicate with them. My hon. friend has not told us how soon he is going to get this Bill assented to. If it was an emergency it should have been rushed through the House of Commons under suspension of the rules. I have not seen any such hurry as that, but I am willing to stand corrected. Supposing we put this Bill through and get its third reading, we have no assurance that it will be assented to in the next two or three weeks. A delay of a day or two is not serious, and I would like to communicate with the people interested in this matter before the measure is railroaded through parliament. The secretary of the grain growers' told me that there was an effort being made on the part of the railroads and elevator people to deprive them of the privileges that they had in that direction by entering the thin end of the wedge with a proposition of this kind. If this is satisfactory to the grain growers', I am positive they never told me about it, and I am in communication with them when they come here. I met them, and all the information they gave me was to put me on my guard against this sort of thing. I see some danger in this Bill, and I would like to have it delayed. Therefore, I suggest that the committee rise and report, and ask leave to sit again at the next meeting of the House, which will not be more than one or two days and I will wire to the west. You cannot get the Bill assented to anyhow in less than ten days.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (the Chairman)—To-morrow night.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—To-morrow night? I do not think it is the intention to have this Bill assented to to-morrow night. Does my hon. friend say that he intends to have this assented to to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Assented to at an early day.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Well, to-morrow is an early day, and so is next week and the week after. It is something like the language of this Bill, that says 'places'; but do 'places' not include elevators? It means an elevator as well as a bin.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I notice by the 'Hansard' of the House of Commons that this Bill passed there unanimously on the 6th of February with great haste. The west is represented largely, particularly the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta where this damaged grain is, by members in that House. They were unanimous in favour of passing the Bill, and in great haste. On page 2628 of 'Hansard' of February 6. I read this:

Mr. OLIVER. The liability to damage would not be a sufficient reason for giving the warehouse commissioner the extraordinary authority proposed. Such authority should not be given, unless the conditions were such as might be expressed in these words:

All places where the grain is damped and is liable to be destroyed by reason of that condition.

There must be the existence of the condition which, under ordinary circumstances, is going to produce destructive results, rather than the double proposition that where the grain is damp or where it is liable to damage.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is not the word 'or' which is used. If it were I would take the same objection. The word 'and' is used where the grain is damp and liable to become damaged. It is the one condition which threatens destruction.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I withdraw my objection to the Bill, because it is only to go into effect in connection with the existing Act, but I give notice that when he proposes to introduce some amendment into the Act before us, we may give it further consideration.

The Bill passed the House of Commons unanimously. As there is urgency, and there is a request from the representatives from the west to have this Bill go through, it is no use for us to delay it for two or three weeks, because then the damage will be done, if the weather turns warm. I think it is our duty to pass it immediately, and that the Governor should come down and give assent to it at once, so that the people who are suffering with damaged grain will have an opportunity to save it from utter ruin.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I trust that this House will not delay the Bill for one hour. My friend from Saskatchewan seems solicitous as to the grain growers' suggestions, but if he had watched the proceedings connected with this Bill he would find that the House of Commons passed it under suspension of rules, at every stage, I think, for the purpose of providing for the emergency. So far as I am concerned personally as a member of this Senate, having some knowledge of the Northwest, I do not purpose waiting until any section of men, grain growers or otherwise, suggest legislation to be passed, if it is in the interests of that country. I think we should be sufficiently well informed, and my friend from Prince Albert is sufficiently well informed about this legislation, without waiting for the grain growers or anybody else; but I cannot understand why he should suggest that the Bill be delayed for two or three weeks for the purpose of hearing from some person in the west. This legislation provides for only two things in emergency cases. They have to do certain things under the Grain Act; that is, when an elevator is liable to break down the commissioner can make a special order to relieve the situation by providing a certain number of cars to take care of the produce in that elevator, or when grain is heated. In this particular case, the grain that is damaged and liable to become worthless is not heated grain, and is not in an elevator that is breaking down, but is in a warehouse, in the farmers' granary, in bins on the field, in sacks piled up at the stations on the platforms. That is the grain that is provided for in this Bill, and without such legislation the commissioners would have no power to make a special order to direct the movement of cars for relieving that situation. This is special legislation provided for that purpose, and I say that the legislation is right. I regret it is brought down so late. If it had been passed a month ago and the commission had used discretion placing cars and making special orders, I have no doubt thousands of bushels of grain would have been saved, because it is only a few weeks when the weather becomes warm that this wheat will be destroyed, and once it is heated in the bin it is of no use for milling purposes and has very much deteriorated for feeding purposes. I know the fear suggested by some of those grain growers—a fear that was expressed by some people during the distribution of cars in connection with the car order book. A man who had some influence with the railway companies exercised that influence by directing the distribution of cars to his friends; but I think that is pretty well over now, because where the companies have been prosecuted for not delivering cars according to the order book, they have been very careful not to allow anybody to interfere with the distribution of cars. The commissioner will have a great responsibility thrown on him when this legislation passes. He may make mistakes; he may not send the cars in the right direction at all times, because it will be impossible for him to make the investigation. I think the situation is so well known and manifest among the grain men of the west and to the commissioners that he will know where the greatest need is for cars for immediate relief. I believe the railway companies will honestly try to relieve the situation to the utmost of their ability; but they have not got the cars, and if they have the cars they have not the motive power to move them; consequently there is a blockade. However this Bill is in the right direction and should relieve the situation to quite an extent; I trust there will be no delay in passing the legislation, in order that the country shall get the benefit of it, by enabling the commissioners to direct the cars in the right direction for the relief of the situation.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend is not very logical. He has put up a man of straw and knocked him down, for he knows that all over the west there is a certain amount of damaged wheat, and that it is not confined to any particular part of the west.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have said so.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If it were, there might be some sense in this proposition; but does it not occur to the hon. gentleman that where there are not enough cars to remove a third of the grain at the present time, if a commissioner orders a lot of cars to a certain part of the west the other parts are going to suffer? My hon. friend says: 'Put this Bill through and relieve the situation at once.' Does he mean to tell me that where there are not a third of the cars necessary he is going to relieve the situation at once? This is simply tommy rot. If you send cars away from one part to another, somebody where the cars were will lose. There is now on the statute-book a fair, square law under which everybody will get a fair share of the cars available, and if a man loses a certain amount of wheat in one section, hasn't he as much right to stand a certain amount of loss as another man has to lose his whole crop? It is better that every man should get a share of the cars than that some man who had a pull would get his whole crop to market where others would not get a car at all. The fair distribution of cars is already provided for, and I contend that it is wrong to interfere with it in any possible shape or form. You cannot do it without injuring somebody.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The case appears to be just this: that under the laws as they exist to-day cars must be uniformly distributed. There is now a condition in the west where a large amount of property is in danger of being destroyed. A temportry arrangement is suggested whereby the grain that is secure and is all right shall temporarily remain in that position and allow the grain which is liable to be destroyed within a short period of time to be dealt with; and I am amazed beyond measure that there is a man in Canada who would for one moment oppose such legislation. The case is exactly parallel to a condition where a neighbour's house is burning down, and you stay by your own house to protect it where there is no danger, while your neighbour's house is being destroyed. It would be a crime if parliament does not pass this legislation, and without one moment's delay.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend would like to order all the fire engines and hose to one man's house and let the other man's house burn down. That is about the logic of the statement he has made. Suppose there are ten men's houses burning down, he would want to order the fire engines out to quench the fire at some man's house with whom he was, perhaps, a little more friendly than somebody else, and the other eight or nine men might let their houses go up in smoke.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS. Within the last two days I have received papers from the grain growers of Saskatchewan containing resolutions passed at meetings assembled, attended by about a thousand people in Regina, to consider this whole question. Those papers and resolutions are on my desk in my private room. One of them bears upon this subject exactly. They are jealous of any tampering with the principle upon which car distribution is based. Those are not men interested in the business; those are not men who are——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Without any damaged grain; they have no damaged grain.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—They have damaged grain; there is no doubt about it.

In one of those resolutions—which I cannot produce at the moment, but you will take my word for it—the principle was carefully guarded that men whose wheat is being damaged will sacrifice their grain rather than sacrifice the principle governing the distribution of cars that is referred to in the Bill and is now law. They are determined that it shall not be tampered with; and why? Because it is based upon the principle of equity and of justice to every man, and you cannot carry out this resolution that is proposed to give relief even though it be temporary. If you help one man you are bound to do injury to half a dozen more; and if the great zeal to help the farmer, about which hon. gentlemen have spoken, is to be of any importance in connection with this Bill, it has been very slow to express itself. Where has been the sympathy of the railway companies since January 1 when the grain was in the fields? What were they doing with their rolling stock and with their moving machinery? I sold my grain before that, although it stood in the yard for days, into the second week, and not a wheel was turned to take it away. This inadequate service has continued up to date, and now there is great zeal for the farmers who have grain in the fields or grain in their granaries. I have grain in my granaries and it is in as good shape as need be; it is suffering no damage. It is being cared for. It is true there is a good deal of grain that has not been drawn to market, but if the cars were available, the highways would be thronged with teamsters getting their wheat to the market; but supposing the statement goes forth that there has been a great deal of sympathy for the producing public in parliament, will that relieve their condition? They will have to go to work when they get in there and build granaries to take care of their grain until the companies are able to move it. You may just as well take time to consider. Let this Bill be taken under consideration with the government Bill which will come before us probably within a week, and then we can intelligently deal with the whole question. I am quite satisfied, and I would not speak so strongly were I not firmly convinced, that this is not a movement on the part of the men whose grain is perishing. It is an afterthought of other parties concerned; the men at Winnipeg as well as the railway companies. They can make more money out of damaged grain than they can out of good grain. I have been told by dealers in Montreal that when there was damaged grain in the west they were overjoyed. They say they have no margin on good grain. If there is frozen grain in the west, they can mix it with good grain and handle it to their own advantage. With good grain they cannot do anything like that. If the delay of this Bill is granted I will bring documents from the farmers who assembled a few days ago in Regina to show that they are directly in opposition to any temporizing with this principle of the distribution of cars. If you tamper with that to any extent, you will simply set the grain legislation back fifteen years. It will be retrogression instead of progress. It is absurd to pass special legislation for seed grain at this season. We have often given out seed grain through the government in past years. No one would have thought of special legislation for the purpose. I do not think the people of the Northwest are so poor now that they need any such help. There is abundance of good seed in the country, and these conditions are only a pretext to get an opportunity of upsetting the principle which has been and is now so dear to the farmers. Under the existing law they have justice, man for man, when they go to a railway company for cars to ship their grain. We can remember the time when the railway companies issued circulars to their agents all over the country saying that no car should be given to any producer of grain, but under the existing law the agent must distribute the cars, not only to the buyers, but to the producers of the grain. The old monopoly has been broken up and it has put from seven to ten cents a bushel into the pockets of the farmers, since they can sell their own grain instead of passing it through the elevators. The object of this Bill is to restore the monopoly which the people fought in years past. I shall lay on the table of this House the statements of people who have a right to speak.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can do that at the third reading.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I do not press for two weeks' delay. If hon. gentlemen think that time is too long, and we can have the government Bill before us inside of a week, I am quite satisfied.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I want more information about this Bill. The last clause of it deals with the distribution of seed grain. Does the representative of the government here mean to tell us that it is absolutely necessary to rush this Bill through parliament in order to be able to distribute seed grain in February? Or is this a few flowers to dress this thing up and conceal the tail? Generally the sting is in the tail; but in this case they put the flowers on the tail and the sting is in the middle. Why is this legislation necessary? Is anybody in the west asking for seed grain, or have petitions been presented to the government asking for a distribution of seed grain at this time of the year? It is the duty of the railway companies to furnish all the rolling stock necessary for the removal of the crops, and any company whose stock is selling at $300, and whose revenue is larger than that of the whole Dominion of Canada, can well afford to supply enough cars to move the crop. We have heard of trouble recently over cars in the west, but if this Bill is put on the statute-book, and the commissioner can order cars to be sent to one place, and leave other places without cars, there will be more trouble in the west. There should be a fair distribution. I do not ask for an indefinite delay of this Bill. From the way the Grain Bill is being put through the House of Commons, I do not expect it will reach the Senate for thirty days yet, and it will be thirty days later before it can be assented to. My hon. friend says this Bill is to meet an emergency. Will my hon. friend agree when the Grain Bill comes down to repeal this measure?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When the Grain Bill comes down—and I do not think there is any doubut about its being down next week—all the old legislation, including this if it goes through, will be repealed and the whole discussion can take place on its merits in the new grain Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Possession is nine parts of the law. You may say you are going to repeal it—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All legislation will be repealed.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That is encouraging. We consider that this legislation is simply got up for the purpose of depriving the farmers of a right which they only succeeded in securing after fighting for years. My hon. friend tells me this Bill will be repealed. If he guarantees that this Bill will be repealed—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All the legislation touching grain will be repealed and placed in the new Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend says this is an emergency measure the object of which is to move all this damaged grain, and he says the Grain Bill will be here next week. If so, what is the use of putting this through?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It may take a couple of weeks to put the other Bill through.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And we may not repeal this.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That is exactly what I think, and that is why it is put here, to get it passed. It will be claimed as a vested right, and it will be harder to repeal than to enact it. When it is once on the statute-book, it will be hard to get it off. There is no terrible hurry. One day will not make much difference. You cannot possibly enact this legislation without doing somebody an injury, and I should like to have it delayed a few days until we can consult with the people who are most interested, the farmers of the west.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—This Bill was introduced in the House of Commons on the second of this month, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce made this remark:

All the representatives of the different interests, including the railways, are favourable to this being done.

At that particular time, there were some representative farmers, of Saskatchewan and Alberta and Manitoba in Ottawa. They had been consulting the Minister of Trade and Commerce on many things. No doubt they consulted him on this, or were consulted by him. I should like the hon. leader of the House to tell us if these farmers were in favour of this Bill at that time. If so, I will support it; if not, I shall vote against it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I really cannot give the information. I do not know the names of the people who approached the Minister of Trade and Commerce If the Minister of Trade and Commerce made that statement I fancy his reputation for truth is sufficiently good, and that the public can rely on it.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—It says the different interests, but does not state what interest.

The amendment was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—We are all representatives of the west and hon. gentlemen must not imagine we are fooling away time. If we thought this Bill is really meant to do what it is claimed to do, we certainly would accept it without hesitation I quite understand the impatience of hon. gentlemen like my hon. friend who spoke so strongly on the subject, because he is firmly convinced that the Bill is a proper one. Although the measure looks simple enough it is not at all plain to me, and I should like to see it postponed until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend can speak on the third reading to-morrow if he wishes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If the matter is so urgent, how is it that the Bill was passed in the Commons on the 6th February, and only reaches us now?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It passed through the different stages and was sent up to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Why did the hon. gentleman not suspend the rules? If it was so urgent the rules could have been suspended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED — That request would have been met with the same opposition we have experienced to-day.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If I am to have an opportunity of speaking on the third reading, I have no further objection.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 15, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

REVILLON FRERES TRADING COMPANY BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (F) An Act to incorporate Revillon Freres Trading Company Limited, with amendments.

Hon. Mr. FORGET.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT moved that the report be adopted. He said: As the Bill was drafted and passed last year, there was a schedule transferred to the incorporated company. It was thought the simpler and better way would be to name two directors, with residence in Montreal, as attorneys, to ascertain the assets of the company, when it became incorporated. The company was incorporated first in 1894, but never was organized in consequence of the absence of the directors. There are only two directors in this country.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I regret that I was absent from the committee when the Bill was reported. I am in accord with the general purposes of the Bill. I think it was a necessity under the special circumstances: but there is one clause to which I should like to draw attention, which is a new departure entirely from the general Act, and the policy of both branches of parliament. It is a clause whereby power is given to the directors to vote by proxy. It is made very offensive—if I may use the expression—in this case, because it would allow one director to give three votes, his own vote and two other votes as representing the two other directors, while the meeting of the board might consist of himself and another director. Therefore, it would give to one man the whole conduct and management of the company. For my part, I am unable to assent to that or to depart from the general law and the policy heretofore followed, that the powers of directors should not be delegated to be exercised by proxy. I call attention to this and ask that the clause be removed from the Bill. Last session, when the Bill was entrusted to me, and when it was passed, I insisted on a clause of that kind being removed from the Bill as it had been drafted.

The SPEAKER—In accordance with the rules, two days' notice should be given of any material amendment.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I do not consider this amendment material.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the Bill is to be considered to-morrow, except it be the intention to move for a reference of the Bill back to the committee to amend it, I would suggest that if it is the intention of any one to move any amendment to the report, notice should be given of it to-day, as it is a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I move that the report be received and that it be considered to-morrow. With regard to what my hon. friend says about directors being empowered to vote by proxy, every one knows that directors are very largely given that power by the shareholders. The president or vice-president receives all the proxies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman refers to the shareholders, but this is another matter; this is the directors.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—What is the difference?

The motion was agreed to.

INQUIRIES ACT.

MOTION.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing:—
1. Names of commissioners appointed under the Inquiries Act, or otherwise for purposes of investigation.
2. Objects of such investigation and copies of instructions to such commissioners.
3. Salaries or allowances to be paid to them severally per diem or otherwise.

He said: Perhaps my hon. friend can bring down the return and a reply to the inquiry that follows it on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no objection. I think I shall be able to do that.

FISHING LICENSES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) inquired:

Now many licenses have been issued for salmon and herring fishing in British Columbia for the year 1911 to white fisherman and Japanese, respectively?

He said: I am asking for this information on account of remarks made in the other branch of parliament as to complaints that fishermen make that the Japanese are monopolizing all the fisheries in British Columbia. I think it is only right that the government and those members of parliament, and the people should know exactly how matters stand. I do not myself know how many licenses have been issued to Japanese and whites respectively, but I dare say the officials of the department will be able to tell us. I do not know what the Japanese are doing, although they deserve a great deal of credit for the developments they have made in British Columbia. Herring fishing in Nanaimo has never been taken up by white people, and in the last three or four years the Japanese fishermen have gone in and cured thousands of tons of herrings and shipped them off to Japan. In doing that, of course, they help trade by buying supplies and materials of all kinds, twine, and lumber and food—and they provide return cargo for ships. Therefore, I think they ought to be treated fairly, whatever they are doing, and not be shut out. There is plenty of room in that part of the country for white men and Japanese to prosecute fishing as an industry. This year the fish are so plentiful that scow loads have been taken away to the American side at Seattle. Sometimes the beaches are strewn with millions of herrings that are pressed in from the ocean. There is, therefore, plenty of room for white men and for Japanese also.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The nationality of fishermen holding fishing licenses is not on record in the department; but the government have telegraphed to Victoria for this information, and it will be forthcoming in a few days.

CATTLE DISEASE IN PICTOU.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BELL inquired:

Has the attention of the government been called to the continued ravages of the Pictou county cattle disease in the counties of Pictou and Antigonish?
2. As to what measures have been taken or are under consideration for the extirpation of this disease among cattle and horses?

He said: I wish to make a few remarks before the question is answered. I dare say many members of this House have heard of the Pictou county cattle disease, which originated at or near the town of Pictou about 60 years ago, and which has extended through the counties of Pictou and Antigonish and has continued to destroy a great many cattle and horses from that day to this. A great deal of attention was paid to it in past years by the federal government. For a long time attempts were made to deal with the disease, and a large amount of money was expended at different times in making partial payments to the farmers for animals destroyed. During the years 1903-4-5 and 6 the Department of Agriculture carried on a series of experiments, the result of which determined that the disease was not contagious and could not be dealt with under the Contagious Diseases Act. They attributed it altogether to the eating of a certain weed, known as 'Stinking Willie,' a very common weed in Nova Scotia, and I believe in Scotland as well, but which does not seem to affect the cattle in other districts in this particular way. The department having come to the conclusion that the disease was due to the cattle eating this weed, they decided they could not do anything more under the Act. Since this decision they have done nothing to relieve or assist the farmers who are suffering from this plague. I believe an official of the department reported not long ago that the disease was not now as prevalent as before. Instead of that being the case, however, I have been informed on good authority that the disease is increasing in severity, and I shall submit a few figures to show the extent to which the farmers of that locality are being injured. The disease made its appearance in the county of Pictou. It has continued ever since to progress, always in an easterly direction, until now it has crossed entirely the eastern part of the county of Pictou, and is prevalent in the adjacent county of Antigonish, always making progress in the same direction. It is not now so prevalent in that part of the county of Pictou in which it first prevailed, but it is apparently increasing in virulence and destructiveness in the county of Antigonish, and parts of the county of Pictou. Individual cases make their appearance from time to time where it is not now common as at first. The matter has been brought to my attention by the Rev. J. J. McKinnon, P.P., Pictou county, whose parish is just about the centre of the infected area which extends from Ponds in the county of Pictou to Fairmount in the county of Antigonish, a distance of thirty miles, over a tract of country five miles in width, with an area of about one hundred and fifty square miles, and the disease is increasing in destructiveness. The priest has given me certain figures, not to cover the whole period during which this disease has worked its ravages in that country, but during 1909-10-11.

These figures show that in that part of the county of Pictou thirty farmers have in these three years sustained losses amounting to $5,950, and in Antigonish sixty-five farmers have lost $7,564. The disease has been prevalent for fifty years, but the reverend gentleman has collected figures for only three years, and he informs me that those are only partial returns. For some of those to whom he has written have failed to furnish information. I understand that the department has information to the effect that this disease is decreasing, but the figures submitted by the Rev. Mr. McKinnon, show that it is increasing. For instance, in 1909, in the district in question, forty-nine cattle and thirteen horses were lost; in 1910, ninety-seven cattle and fifteen horses, and in 1911, 124 cattle and 17 horses. In the first years in which this disease prevailed, it affected cattle only, but afterwards it destroyed horses as well, and the proportion of horses lost in that section of the country is increasing steadily.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What is the proportion of cattle to horses that are being lost?

Hon. Mr. BELL—In 1909, six per cent; in 1910, 14 per cent, and in 1911, 23 per cent of horses.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What is the total percentage of the stock in that district?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I cannot tell. I am merely calling attention to the fact that in the first year of the plague horses were little affected, but the percentage of loss is increasing. It is noticeable in connection with this disease that the parts of the country which have been affected by it for a long time show the largest percentage of deaths in horses as compared with cattle. In the first years that it prevailed, Pictou county alone was affected. The percentage of deaths of horses increased regularly; but when it got to the county of Antigonish, in 1910, sixty-five cattle died, and only four horses, showing a percentage of six per cent, while in 1911, 124 cattle and 17 horses died, showing an increase to 13 per cent in loss of horses. I want to show what an important matter this is to the agriculturist.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Has no effort been made to eradicate this weed?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I will deal with that in a moment. It having been determined by the experts of the department what is the cause of the disease, the question which the hon. gentleman puts is a very proper one. An effort has been made. We have Acts in the province which authorize or order the destruction of the weed, and farmers are required to eradicate it from their property, and the local authorities to cut it from the road side, but I am sorry to say that the order is not generally obeyed. It may be to a certain extent, where the disease prevails, but rag wort is well known in Nova Scotia, and while it is possible to destroy it in cultivated lands, it grows in enormous quantities in partially cut and cleared lands, and in waste land where it would be utterly impossible to destroy it. The secretary for agriculture of the provincial government, to whom this matter was referred, attended a meeting of the Provincial Agricultural Association, where the farmers had assembled, and passed a resolution asking the government to destroy this weed. He affirmed that a million dollars would not be sufficient to destroy it completely, and I think he is perfectly right. The cost of cutting it down in open ground is comparatively trifling, but when you go into broken and waste land the amount of work a man could show for ten hours labour would be insignificant. I believe it is impossible to exterminate the weed. I want to show what it means to the individual farmer. I have here in the statement prepared by the Rev. Mr. McKinnon, a list of the parties who have sustained these losses, and it shows that one has lost $445, another $470, another $485, another $490, and one farmer has lost $580 in three years. In many cases, of course, these losses fall on women. These figures are startling. I need scarcely tell hon. gentlemen that an ordinary farmer endeavouring to make a living on a hundred acre farm in eastern Canada is absolutely incapable of standing up against such a loss, and is ruined. My reverend correspondent tells me, that this is becoming a very serious question, that people are beginning to lose hope and are abandoning their farms. I feel that the Senate is the place in which a matter of this kind should be taken up and discussed. We are in a position to devote some time to the subject, and we are, particularly at this time, disposed to give attention to agricultural questions, because we know it is the policy of the present government to devote special attention to agriculture and make it a matter of more importance to assist the farmer.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Is not this a local matter, and should not these people apply to the local government?

Hon. Mr. BELL—We are not so sensitive in Nova Scotia about provincial rights as my hon. friend, and we are perfectly willing to receive assistance from the Dominion, and let the Dominion authorities grapple with the problem. If evidence were brought before us here to show that a county in Quebec, or any other province was suffering from a cattle plague, making it impossible for the people of that community to prosper, or even exist, then I say we should come to their assistance and do something for them.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It is quite within the scope of the Dominion government. Has this matter been brought to the notice of the veterinary authorities of the Dominion government, and have they taken any action in the matter?

Hon. Mr. BELL—Evidently the hon. gentleman did not hear the early part of my remarks. I said that for twenty years or more this matter had engaged the attention of the Dominion government, and a grant was made by parliament to combat the disease; but in 1903-4-5 and 1906, investigations were conducted by the Veterinary Department, as a result of which the official in charge decided that this was not a contagious disease, and therefore the government cannot deal with it, under the Contagious Diseases Act, and they have done nothing more.

What I want to call attention to is that this disease is inflicting losses upon the people of that locality to an extent greater than they can bear. It is depopulating the place, and there is no particular reason to believe that it will not extend further. So far as I know, it has not reached the eastern counties of the province in Cape Breton, but it is very near there, and if it should pass into those counties I have no doubt its ravages would be just as severe as on the mainland of Nova Scotia. If that should be the case, it would force those farmers into a most unfortunate position.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What does the hon. gentleman suggest? What could the government do?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I think further inquiry should be made into the matter. A great many people believe that the conclusion reached by the experts of the department is not satisfactory. If rag-wort in that locality is causing this disease, it is very singular that nowhere else is this disease known, although rag-wort is very widely known in Scotland, and in some portions of America. The disease has been named 'the Pictou county cattle disease,' and it first made its appearance in the town of Pictou when some foreign hides were landed there. It has spread continuously, and it is somewhat singular that it always moves east, not west. I believe the disease is contagious, and I do not find it easy to concede that it is caused by the ragwort, or 'Stinking Willie' as it is popularly known. For these reasons, I think an effort should be made to induce the department to come to the assistance of the people to this extent at least, if nothing more—that they make further inquiry into the matter and see if they cannot determine that possibly there is a contagious feature in the disease. I think the government would be warranted in giving some measure of relief to the farmers. We cannot safely see any portion of the country depopulated; we cannot see any particular section of our fellow citizens driven out of the country by misfortune or by plague, and this is unquestionably a plague. I believe it would be perfectly justifiable on the part of the government to consider the matter, and either furnish a remedy or give relief to those people who are being driven from their farms and practically out of localities where they have been brought up, by what is, as far as we can see, a visitation of Providence. In early years not much precaution was taken against contagion; but now diseased animals are buried or destroyed so as to prevent contagion, and the farmers are doing everything they can to stamp it out. It is quite easy for hon. gentlemen to understand the position in which a poor farmer finds himself when he has to bear a loss of $400 to $600 in the course of three years.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Has not the government of Nova Scotia come to the aid of those people?

Hon. Mr. BELL—No.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Did you apply for it?

Hon. Mr. BELL—Yes. Assistance thus far has been given altogether by this government, and I believed that they would do something more for us. As the matter now stands in the department, they have decided that they have nothing further to do. Their expert has decided that it is not a contagious disease, and, therefore, they say they cannot do anything for it under the Contagious Diseases Act, which I suppose is a logical view to take; but it will not do to rely altogether on an unsatisfactory conclusion arrived at by scientists when the people are being driven to want and destitution and compelled to leave the property on which they were born.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answer of the government is somewhat lengthy and rather technical. It is as follows:

1. No. A report received from a veterinary inspector of the department in June, 1910, stated that the disease was not nearly so prevalent as in previous years.

2. In view of the fact that it was clearly shown by the feeding experiments conducted by the department near Antigonish in the years 1903-4-5-6, (see report on Pictou Cattle disease, issued 1907) that the disease was due to the ingestion of the weed known as Ragwort, or 'Stinking Willie' (Senecio Jacoboea) and was therefore not of a contagious nature, it has not been possible for the department to take any action in connection with it, under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. The control of noxious weeds is, in any case, a matter usually dealt with by provincial authorities.

Schools and other local institutions have taken active steps towards the eradication of rag-wort in many districts.

Copy of report forwarded herewith.

There is attached also to the answer a special report prepared by the Department of Agriculture in 1906, touching this particular matter. I shall therefore lay on the table the answer which has been sent me, and my hon. friend can peruse the report, and perhaps it will throw light on the subject.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The matter to which the hon. gentleman from New Glasgow has called attention is a very important one, and I wish to direct the attention of the leader of this House, in the hope that he may direct the attention of his colleague the Minister of Railways, to the fact that the railway has been the means of disseminating this pernicious weed through other parts of the province.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The control of obnoxious weeds is a matter dealt with by provincial authorities. As it arises from this particular cause pointed out by my hon. friend, it would appear that a grave responsibility is thrown on the provincial government, who should take active steps to stamp out the disease. The Federal government have done the best they could within such authority as they can exercise, but that does not absolve the provincial authorities from taking every possible means to prevent the destruction of live stock by this weed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And that the railway should not distribute the disease.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware of that fact.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If it is a contagious disease, should not the government pay a considerable portion of the cost of the destruction of its cause?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know that it can be regarded as a contagious disease. It is apparently a local disease arising from local conditions. I doubt if it would come under the Contagious Diseases Act.

Hon. Mr. BELL—For a long time the government controlled this matter by appointing inspectors, and when it was determined that an animal was suffering from the disease it was ordered to be slaughtered, and a third of the value of the animal was paid to the owner. That was in 1906, when Sir Richard Cartwright was a member of the government; but from the time the departmental experts decided that the disease was not contagious, the government thought they were not justified in continuing to exercise supervision and they have abandoned it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think a lengthy speech on a subject of this kind should go unanswered. This is no reflection on the government, and they are not justified in paying for these cattle. It has been determined that the disease is not contagious, and has nothing to do with the adminstration of the Department of Agriculture. The statement made to-day is that in that particular locality certain weeds grow which poison the horses and cattle that feed on it. If a man takes up a section of country in the Northwest and finds that he cannot raise horses on it he drops the venture and tries to raise something else. It is like the Irishman who was trying to raise chickens. The water came into his cellar and drowned them, and his friend said to him, 'Why don't you raise ducks.' The government would be going out of its way to pay losses to people who are trying to raise something in any part of the Dominion which is not profitable and cannot be raised. There are only two things for those people to do; stop raising stock or get rid of the weed. Why should the public be taxed for the losses of those farmers when the disease is not contagious?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Because the people of Canada are taxed in a great many cases for producing manufactures which cannot be produced except at the expense of the people at large.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—A very good answer.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY SERVICE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing the names, position and pay of all persons appointed to the Intercolonial railway service in the city of St. John, N.B., from the first day of September, 1907, to the first day of March, 1911.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL inquired:

1. What year did the government of Canada first grant bounties for the production of iron and steel?
2. How much bounty was given per ton for each year?
3. Have the bounties been discontinued, and if so, when?
4. What was the total amount of money paid out for the production of iron and steel in bounties and the names and amount paid to each firm or individual in each year?
5. Is it the intention of the government to renew the bounty, and if so, for how much per ton?
6. If the government decide to renew the bounties on iron and steel, will they also grant bounties for other manufactured goods for export to foreign countries, such, for instance, as flour, agricultural implements, farmers' products, such as beef, cattle, grain, &c., which would greatly stimulate the production of these goods and thus bring our exports up to more nearly balance our imports?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have the answer to these questions in my hand. It is very lengthy and I will place it on the table.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps the hon. leader will give us the reply to the last portion of it. Question No. 6.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would say to my right hon. friend that it is not the custom to make any announcement in a matter of this kind except in a budget speech, and as the budget will be presented very shortly my hon. friend will then be enlightened.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved:

That when the Senate adjourn on Friday next, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, the 22nd instant, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I move in amendment that when the Senate adjourn tomorrow it do stand adjourned until Tuesday the 27th instant.

After some discussion the Senate divided on the amendment which was rejected.

Contents 10, non-contents 34.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved in amendment that when the Senate adjourns tomorrow it stands adjourned until Monday, the 26th inst.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The motion to adjourn until Thursday, the 22nd instant was agreed to

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (Y) An Act respecting Motor Boats. —Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (No. 95) An Act respecting the National Transcontinental Railway —Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SASKATCHEWAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the third reading of Bill (No. 26) An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—When this Bill was before the House some days ago I gave notice that on the third reading I would move that the name be changed to 'The Life Assurance Company of Saskatchewan.' I gave my reasons then for proposing this amendment. Last year we incorporated a company called the Alberta-Saskatchewan Insurance Company. The similarity of the two names would be very confusing, and I thought it but right, before the third reading of the Bill, to change the name in the way I have indicated, or adopt some other name that would be a little different from that of the company we incorporated last year. I am from the province of Ontario, and this is a Bill relating to the province of Saskatchewan. It does not make any difference to me particularly what the Bill is called, but as the promoters desire that the original name be retained, I do not want to press the amendment. I leave the responsibility with the promoters of the Bill. If they insist on retaining the name, they will have to take the responsibility. I beg, therefore, to withdraw the amendment of which I gave notice.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—There is no difficulty about the Bill, and no responsibility attaching to the promoters of the Bill. When it was in committee it passed unanimously. Surely the men who attended the meeting of the committee knew what they were doing. The objection which the hon. gentleman mentions was taken at that time, but there is so much difference between the Alberta and Saskatchewan and the Saskatchewan Life, that we could see no danger of confusion. When the attention of the Department of Insurance was called to the matter, the superintendent could see no similarity in the names, and thought the name given this company was a very appropriate one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There was some question in my mind that the name might cause confusion, but I am quite clear that the amendment of which notice was given would not have removed the difficulty, because the company would still be the Life Assurance Company of Saskatchewan, and the confusion, if any may be caused, would not be removed by the change of name as proposed.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 11) An Act respecting the Canadian Birkbeck Investment and Savings Company, and to change its name to the Canadian Mortgage Investment Company.—Hon. Mr. Kerr.

Bill (No. 57) An Act respecting the Union Bank of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer.

Bill (I) An Act respecting the Trust and Loan Company of Canada.—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

Bill (R) An Act for the relief of Herbert Horsfall.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (S) An Act for the relief of Kenneth Molson.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

THE MANITOBA GRAIN ACT.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (No. 96) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.

He said: In moving the third reading of this Bill, I promised my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) and some other hon. gentlemen, that I would inquire from the government on whose representations this Bill was introduced. I spoke to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to-day on the subject, and he informed me that the grain growers of the west through their officials, expressed their sympathy and favour, and he gave me the following names: Mr. Frean, secretary, Alberta Grain Growers' Association; Messrs. Hopkins and Green, who, I understand, are the duly accredited officials of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association, and Messrs. McKenzie and Henders, the duly accredited representatives of the Manitoba Grain Growers, and upon those, as well as other representations, the government recognized the necessity of introducing this legislation. I am further informed that in the event of the measure receiving its third reading to-day the Prime Minister will request the deputy of His Royal Highness the Governor General to come down to parliament to-morrow to give the Royal Assent to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I am very much pleased to hear the explanation that has been given by the hon. gentleman who leads the House; but I happen to have in my hand a statement which was sent to me by the Grain Growers' Association of all the requests that they made to the Minister of Trade and Commerce when they were in Ottawa. They are all in typewritten form and were sent to me for the purpose of guidance. While I do not wish to doubt or cast any reflections on the minister's statement of what these gentlemen may have said in private, I have here the public announcement of the Grain Growers' as a body, and within its four corners there is no indication that they wish this measure to pass. I will read from their memorandum, which is altogether different:

STATEMENT
PRESENTED TO THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE.
BY GRAIN GROWERS DELEGATION.
February 4, 1912.

In view of the claims set forth by representatives of the railway so that car distribution clause of the Grain Act handicaps them in the free movement of railway equipment and is partly responsible for the congestion that now exists in the movement of grain from the western provinces, we wish to make the following statement:—

The clauses relating to car distribution for shipment of grain was first placed in the Manitoba Grain Act in 1902—amended in 1906 and again in 1908. Not till the latter amendment became effective did the growers of grain receive the full benefit of that provision of the Act. About one-third of the crops of 1908 and 1909 were loaded in cars by farmers over the loading platform. That quantity is reported by Mr. Peters of the Canadian Pacific railway as being reduced to 20 per cent or 23 per cent for the first four months of the 1911 crop. That statement may be correct as at any points where farmers used the loading platform freely the spread between street and track prices that used to be excessive is reduced to a minimum, consequently growers use the elevators instead of the platform.

I can find nothing different in it. They go on to say the number of cars that were loaded at the different platforms, with which I need not worry the House, and they show in this proposition that the fault is not with the farmers for not loading the cars promptly at the loading platforms, but rests with the railway corporations, which do not forward the cars to their destination in the time that they should take them. They have evidence to show that for two or three or four weeks cars are left on sidings here and there when they should be hauled to their destination at Fort William or Port Arthur. The railway companies blame the delay on the farmers because they say they do not load the cars. Everything has been done to discredit this proposition. That is the only clause in reference to the distribution of cars that we find in this statement that the farmers have given me here, and the only official statement made to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. For the guidance of members from the west, the Grain Growers' have prepared a statement of the different matters which they would wish to look after and safeguard during this session of parliament. They refer to this very proposition, and I will read it for the benefit of the House:

It has been rumored that section 207 of the Grain Bill will be considerably changed. This section is, we consider, one of the most important in the Act and one on which considerable time and attention should be bestowed before allowing any changes to be made. It gives a privilege to the farmer which is his only safeguard against the elevator interests and while a determined onslaught has repeatedly been made upon this provision yet the opponents of same have never yet been able to present any logical argument why a change should be made. Before this clause was added to the Grain Act the farmers were completely at the mercy of the interests, and if the clause is removed or in any way weakened by dangerous amendments which might be made to give two different meanings, conditions will be such that in a short time the farmers would find the car distribution and the general treatment they would receive from the railway companies and the elevator interests even more intolerable than they were before the clause was introduced into the Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What clause is the hon. gentleman referring to?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—To the provision enacted in this Bill before us. This memorandum expresses their views on any proposed amendments which may be made by this or any other House to the Grain Act. The memorandum proceeds:

While it may be possible to provide for permission being given to the commission after investigation to supply cars for seed grain, or upon petition of farmers for the removal of wet or damaged grain, or where there was suffering through shortage of fuel or food supplies, yet if there is any chance of the rights of the farmers being infringed by ambiguous or vaguely worded amendments introduced into the Bill it will be better for our interest as producers for the clause to remain as it now stands.

They do not want any amendments made that are not very clear and to my mind this proposed amendment is not clear. It reminds me of a story which I will relate to the House. A gentleman went to a solicitor and said, 'I want you to draw an agreement' and the solicitor said 'All right, what kind of an greement do you want?' The client said, 'I want you to draw an agreement that will bind Goldstein, but will not bind me.' The people who are behind this proposed amendment have the best legal talent, any amount of money and expert lawyers to draw clauses which the ordinary man does not understand, but which will bind Goldstein, and will not bind them. What is the hurry in this matter? The Grain Bill will reach us in two or three days. If hon. gentlemen look at the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Leeds yesterday as to what the Minister of Interior said, they will see it is the intention of the western men to fight against that clause being inserted in the Bill. What is the use in passing it at the present time and placing it on the statute-book if it is to be repealed in a week or ten days? Are you going to get any benefit in the western country in eight or ten days from a proposition of that kind? Not at all. Then it will be urged 'We have not had the benefit from it, and if you leave it on the statute-book we will get the benefit perhaps later on.' There you have the principle of the Act attacked as it has been attacked for years. The farmers would rather have the Act remain as it is. I am willing to do this; if it is a matter of administration, place that power in the hands of the responsible minister. Let the government take the responsibility. Will the government agree to amend the Bill by saying that the minister may instruct the commissioner to do so and so? If so, I am willing to accept it. Or if my hon. friend will not allow the Bill to be amended in that way I am willing to accept a clause allowing action to be taken on a petition signed by twenty-five farmers. But I protest against the Bill as it stands because it is not in the interest of the farmers of the west. I ask the hon. gentleman to strike out the following words: 'The commissioner shall have power at his discretion,' and insert in their place, the 'minister may instruct the commissioner' to do so-and-so. Then in section 99b: 'The minister shall instruct the commissioner, &c.' We are quite willing to trust the minister, but we do not want to trust the officials.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is a good enough parliamentarian to know that the minister must assume the responsibility for the acts of his officials, and that it would be utterly impossible for a minister presiding over a department in Ottawa to acquaint himself with conditions two or three thousand miles away. He has to rely on the commissioner. The Bill, in my judgment, is quite effective as it is, and my hon. friend need not be apprehensive of any abuse being caused by it. If the Saskatchewan and Manitoba grain growers have approved of the Bill as they have done, my hon. friend is absolved from any responsibility for any evil effects which may flow from it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I have here a statement showing that they have not approved of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend has read from a document which purports to come from the Grain Growers' Association, and the only thing they object to, in that memorandum, is the ambiguous wording of any measure. That element does not enter into this Bill, and even from the document the hon. gentleman has quoted, the stamp of approval has been given to it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If my hon. friend refuses to accept the amendment I proposed, would he have any objection to inserting: 'On a petition from 25 farmers?'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government is charged with the responsibility of administering this Act, and they cannot delegate their authority to any 25 farmers.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There is no use beating around the bush or dodging the issue. I say the minister should not act until he gets a petition from 25 farmers. That is not delegating authority to anybody. If he takes that as a delegation of authority and objects to it on that ground, why does he require an affidavit that grain is heating or that an elevator has collapsed?

Hon Mr. LOUGHEED—Surely a responsible officer such as the warehouse commissioner is not going to sacrifice his reputation and risk his retention of office by recklessly acting in a case of the kind. He must know what the conditions are, and when the conditions warrant setting the machinery in motion he must act. We have to rely on his discretion.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This looks like government by commission. If we have to delegate all powers to the commissioners, where does the responsibility of the minister come in? There should be some safeguard of the kind I have mentioned, and I see no reason why the amendment I offer should not be accepted. In the Land Act, we give discretion to the minister to do things, and I do not see that there is anything wrong in it. We say the minister shall instruct when a crisis arises, because this power is only supposed to be exercised when a crisis such as they claim at the present time exists in the west, occurs. We hope such a thing will not occur again in ten years; but we want to have the rights of the farmers safeguarded. I should like to provide that the minister shall take action and issue instructions when necessary. It is easy for the minister to make up his mind on the advice of somebody to give instructions by telegraph to release cars.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I have abundant evidence to show that all that was contended for is amply sustained by the reports in the leading newspaper in Winnipeg, the 'Free Press.' Our contention was that this Bill, simple and pathetic as it appears, and very emphatically presented on the pathetic side, had very little to do with any prospect of securing relief for the farmers under their present situation; it was rather an effort put forth by certain associations interested in the grain business, together, it may be, with railway officials. I desire to place on record the first article which appeared in the newspapers on this subject, which takes in the whole question. It is not simply the two clauses at the foot of the Bill, but I am going to speak to the question. The Bill is the outcome of this discussion in the papers and the communications that have been sent to the minister at Ottawa. The article is as follows:

CAR DISTRIBUTION STRONGLY ASSAILED.

Government Petitioned to Suspend Provision in Manitoba Grain Act.

Business Men Active.

Want Distribution of Cars Placed Under Control of Railway Commission.

The system of car distribution which had been a statutary provision of the Manitoba Grain Act for many years has never been favourably regarded by the grain-handling interests, which hold that it blocks the rapid transportation of grain and is unfair to the elevator owner and also to the small farmer who sells less than carload lots. The law puts every applicant for a car—whether an elevator or an individual farmer—on an absolute equality. Since the provision was first placed in the Grain Act in 1902 it has been periodically attacked; but its repeal or suspension has not been secured, the farmers rallying strongly in its defence.

The banking and wholesale interests of the city are now taking active part in a movement to bring about a modification of the system. The Canadian Credit Men's Association is preparing a petition to present to the Minister of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa, demanding the temporary suspension of the Manitoba Grain Act, in order to place the distribution of cars for grain transportation under the direct control of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada.

Mark this departure:

At a meeting of the bankers and businmen, held recently in the board room of the Great West Life Insurance Company, a committee was appointed to arrange with the Credit Men's Association to mail petitions to the retail trade and to farmers throughout the country, and to approach the jobbing houses with the request that they should co-operate with the association, by bringing the matter to the attention of their customers in order that prompt action should be secured.

At a meeting of the bankers and in the matter, which accompanies copies of the petition, the Credit Association attributes the present disastrous business situation to the opperation of section 59, chapter 28 of the Manitoba Grain Act, which it is asserted is working a hardship upon the wagon-load seller. They represent that the producers market eighty per cent of their grain through the elevators and that of this amount, sixty-one per cent, is purchased on the street by the wagon-load. That as soon as the country elevators are full of grain their doors, it is asserted must remain closed until it is made possible for them to obtain cars; and that it is only when the cars are available that the farmer is able to sell his grain by the wagon-load, and settle his store account.

The association states further that the measure of relief asked by the petition is only a partial solution for the very serious situation now facing producer and merchant alike, but that they ask it in order that grain which is already out of condition may be speedily transported to terminals having drying and other necessary treating facilities, by which action a portion of the crop may be saved.

I wish to put on record this section and the petition, and hon. gentlemen can see that this is no farmers' movement; it is the trade, the grain men and the railways that are pressing for this, and they quote the Act they desire to put into the hands and under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. Section 59, chapter 28, of the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900, is the clause referred to as arbitrarily governing the distribution of cars, and is the one it is demanded shall be suspended. It reads thus:

If there is a failure at any shipping point to fill all car orders as aforesaid, the following provisions shall apply to the application for and the distribution of, cars:—

(a) Beginning at the top of the list in the order book and proceeding downward to the last name entered on the list, each applicant shall receive one car as quickly as cars can be supplied.

(b) When an applicant has loaded or cancelled a car allotted to him he may, if he requires another car, become eligible therefor by placing his name, together with the section, township and range in which he resides, or other sufficient designation of his residence, at the bottom of the list; and when the second car has been allotted to him and he has loaded or cancelled it, he may again write his name, together with such designation of his residence, at the bottom of the list; and so on until his requirements have been filled.

(c) No applicant shall have more than one unfilled order on the order book at any one time.

The suspension of the provision would make it possible for the railways to deliver a string of cars to an elevator and clear it out. At present, the elevator company can only get one car at a time in turn with each farmer applying.

It may be expected that farmers who have orders on the order book for cars for their grain will fiercely resist the proposal to suspend the car distribution provision. The issue will be fought out at Ottawa, where a conference is to be held shortly, at which representatives of the farmers, the elevators, and the railways, will be in attendance.

This is a copy of the petition upon which they base the change which they propose to make in the distribution. It reads:

The Honourable, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—The undersigned would respectfully submit that the present situation in respect of the shipment of grain in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchwan and Alberta, is such as to demand some immediate and drastic action for the protection of the interests of the country at large. Under the law as at present enforced, such shipments are confined to those who have a sufficient quantity of grain to make up a car-load. The elevators, in respect of receipt of cars, are in no different position from the farmers, yet those producers constituting 61 per cent of those who ship grain in the said provinces, who are compelled to sell their grain by the wagon-load on the street, are unable to dispose of their produce in car-load lots, and are forced to rely upon the elevators. These latter are practically blocked, with the result that a very large quantity of grain in this country cannot be marketed, which otherwise would be, were it possible for the elevators to handle the grain as it is offered to them. In consequence, collections cannot be made and the business of the country is almost at a standstill. Moreover owing to climatic conditions during the past season, a large quantity of grain is in need of proper treatment as speedily as possible otherwise it will spoil. This would mean heavy loss to those who are not in a position to ship in larger quantities.

Your petitioners therefore pray that the clause in the Manitoba Grain Act, regulating the distribution of cars for grain shipment at country elevator points, be temporarily suspended and that the control and distribution of cars at such points be placed under the sole direction of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada with instructions to the commissioners that absolute impartiality be shown, and an equitable distribution be made, based on the necessities of the extraordinary situation prevailing, and so as to enable all of the producers to stand on the same footing in respect of the shipment of their crops and that the necessities of the farmers, as a whole, large and small, in each locality affected, shall be the basis to govern the said commission in the distribution of cars.

I have not read it all, neither have I read the strong defence that has been put in in opposition to this petition and in opposition to any proposed change in the principle of distribution. These gatherings have been busy with the preparation of arguments which show that it is not that specific section in the Act that has had anything to do with the hindering of the grain going forward. They argue in a very forcible way that on account of the unnecessary time occupied in grain being sent forward to the lakes by train it is impossible to overtake the business and get the relief that is desired. For example, from the time that a car is billed it is filled, and shipping bill or bill of lading is taken out and then sent forward, and the grain is supposed to be inspected at Winnipeg, or at the lakes; but the time that elapses from the taking out of the shipping bill until the car arrives at the lakes is a month or six weeks, and that delay has occurred not through any defect in the legislation now on the statute-book. The farmers are not agitating in any sense to have it changed, but they want legislation to be directed towards the parties who have it in their power as common carriers to move the grain as soon as the car is laden, that it shall go forward in something like reasonable time. We have done this in several ways and by several methods, showing conclusively that this particular part of the Grain Act that was introduced into the Bill in 1906 had nothing whatever to do with the present delay and confusion. While this is set forth in the papers I hold in my hand and in discussions through the public press, I have also papers that were prepared within the last few days where an assembly of some thousand farmers met together in the city of Regina and passed resolutions. Strange to say, and my experience is like that of the previous speaker, I do not find a single expressed desire for this Bill, in these resolutions that were prepared and sent forward to us over the signature of the secretary of the meeting convened in the city of Regina on the 4th of February. Nor do we find it in the papers sent forth to the minister. Our contention is that there is a power behind and underneath this whole matter, and that this Bill, simple as it is, is an effort to get the thin end of the wedge in so that they may be able by and by to destroy, if possible, that clause in the Act that has stood for so many years as a protection to the business of the farmers generally. I spoke to a man from Regina in my room not long ago, and he said emphatically that the West will never stand for this legislation. They know the section in the Act has been a benefit to them, and they have felt it in their purses. They have as good a right as anybody to protect their own interests. We are told that this is good legislation and that it ought to have been passed four months ago. It would have been good legislation for the grain buyers and the elevator men—good legislation, but one-sided legislation in their favour. The principle of car distribution is on a basis of strict justice between man and man, and in making laws here we have no right to discriminate in favour of any class of men, or against the poorest or weakest man in the country who is producing grain and wishes to put it on the market in his own way. It has been said that because a man has not a full carload of grain, he ought to give way to the man who is buying grain and handling it in large quantities, and so reaping a large reward, far beyond that which the farmer himself may enjoy; but I claim that there should be equal opportunity given to all shippers. We spoke strongly yesterday; we are prepared to speak strongly to-day. We claim that this is not a farmers' movement, that they are not seeking relief in reference to their grain or its condition. The demand for this legislation comes from another source. I may be told that it is not well to question anybody's motives, but here we have the statement of the grain growers, and they say that they stand by car distribution. I do not want to be unreasonable and I have never been conscientiously unreasonable. My sole object is to seek the good of the people as a whole, and see justice done between man and man. I would be quite willing to second the proposition of the hon. member from Prince Albert, and leave the whole matter with the minister, who can issue instructions to the commissioner to give any relief that is in his power. If you ask me will it be effective, I frankly say I do not think it will be worth the paper on which it is written, because it is altogether out of time and will not accomplish anything. They will not be able to take out a load between this and the end of March. It will take a month or six weeks to carry grain from, say Moosejaw, or Regina, down to the lakes, and the relief that can be offered under this legislation must be meagre indeed. But here is the other point—the people are not asking for the Bill. I venture to say, without fear of contradiction, that there are men in that country who would sacrifice any damaged grain they have, or feed it to the hogs, before they would allow any tampering with that section of the Grain Act. The grain buyers, the elevator men and the banks want this legislation. We have often been asked who has the right to control the rolling stock if not the railway company. My answer to that is simply this, any railway company is a common carrier. It has received a charter from parliament to serve the public, to make contracts at certain rates, with all who have freight to ship, and any man, whoever he may be, who offers freight to be moved from one part of the country to another, and is willing to pay the established rate, should be treated in the same way that all others are. It should not be a matter of choice with the railway company, but a matter of obligation upon them to enter into a contract and accept the freight and carry it to its destination.

So that it is not a matter of choice with the railways. They are common carriers in the service of the people. They have received large subsidies from the country, and the people have had to pay them, and we have for a long enough time paid heavy taxation in the excessively high rates which have been exacted from the farmers of the west. We have a right to say, 'You shall walk by the law and according to the law.' Let the rolling stock be devoted to the services of the whole country, every shipper being treated on equal footing and foundation. I would say a great deal more about these papers, but as the general Bill will be before us in a few days, we will be able to reach some definite conclusion in reference to the disputed points. I second the proposition which has been made by my hon. friend from Prince Albert.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR--Let us look at this matter from the common-sense standpoint for a few moments, and not waste the whole day in discussing something which is not affected by the Bill. This is an amendment to the Manitoba Grain Act of 1906. If we pass this Bill to-day, the Governor gives it his assent to-morrow, and it goes into effect. The Bill before the House of Commons is a consolidation of all the Grain Acts, and as soon as it is passed by the Commons and Senate, and assented to by the Governor General it repeals the Manitoba Grain Act, the Manitoba Grain Inspection Act, and the Inspection and Sales Act. Therefore, as soon as we pass that Bill, the Manitoba Grain Act of 1906 is repealed.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Then what is the good of passing this Bill if we are going to repeal it next week?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—It will be in force three or four weeks, or until the end of the session, or whenever the Governor General assents to the consolidated Act. In the meantime this grain may be moved out of the country and saved, otherwise it will be lost. The Consolidated Grain Act will repeal the measure we are passing to-day. I think it is our duty to pass it immediately and have the Governor assent to it to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—When this Bill was in committee I made an earnest request that it should remain as it was, stating that I would be in a position to-day to suggest something for the purpose of making its meaning a little more plain. It looks to me undigested; that is the only fault I find with it. But now that we are at the stage of the third reading of the Bill, it is rather late for any suggestion of the kind, and I, therefore, refrain from attempting any. Yesterday I was in doubt as to the real meaning of this Bill, but I have had time to study it, and in view of the assurances made yesterday by the leader of the government, and also repeated by some members on this side of the House, that this Bill was primarily intended for the purpose of relieving the serious situation in the west and to come practically to the relief of the farmer, and in view of the full assurances given us to-day by the leader of the government, that requests were lately made to the government for this legislation, I believe, as a member from the west, that it becomes my duty not to stand in the way of the passing of this Bill. Therefore, I withdraw any personal objection I might have against it, and shall vote heartily for its third reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Domville, moved the second reading of Bill (C) An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend, and to the House, that this is clearly a money Bill, and inasmuch as the principle of the Bill must be involved in the discussion on the second reading, that it would not be proper that we should allow the Bill to receive the second reading without raising the point.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A money Bill in what sense?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the language of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If we are going to be blocked on every measure by the cry of 'money Bill' being raised, we could pass no legislation. Scarcely a Bill is brought in and discussed and adopted by this House that is not a money Bill. I fail to see the force of the objection of the hon. leader of the House. If that point is going to be raised with regard to this Bill, it could be raised in every case. The late Bill we have been discussing is a money Bill. It takes money to put it into force. I don't understand why this objection has been raised.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Perhaps my hon. friend's attention has not been directed to the fact that this Bill has originated in this House and has to do with the revenue of the country. However, I raise the point so that his honour the Speaker may pass upon it.

The SPEAKER—I am not prepared to give a decision immediately. The matter might stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would like to say to the House that I am not objecting to the Bill remaining on the order paper until the hon. gentleman who introduced it attends here; but I do not want to let it be read the second time without directing the attention of the House to the objection. Let it stand.

The SPEAKER—I will ask the permission of the House to postpone my judgment until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the order be discharged and placed on the order Paper for a week from to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the motion has been carried to postpone the consideration of this Bill; but that does not withdraw the objection made by the leader of the House as to our rights.

The SPEAKER—The objection is not withdrawn. When the Bill comes up again I shall be ready to give a decision.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (T) An Act respecting the Rainy River Radial Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (U) An Act for the relief of James Denny.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 16, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

DELIVERY OF MAILS AT ROTHESAY.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Domville), rose to inquire:

1. Why the Intercolonial train, going east from St. John, N.B., does not stop at Rothesay, N.B., to deliver mails and passengers at that station?
2. What were the earnings of the Intercolonial railway at that railway station for the last fiscal year?
3. What were the earnings at that station for the years 1911, 1910, 1909, 1908 and 1907?
4. Has any complaint been made by the inhabitants at Rothesay, N.B.?
5. If so, what were the reasons given for the discontinuance of the Rothesay service on train referred to?
6. Under whose control and direction does the act of the Intercolonial railway refusing to stop mail train at Rothesay station come under?
7. Is the government aware that within thirty days eight mails from the west have been undelivered at the railway station, Rothesay, and likewise the mail from Rothesay to Halifax and the east been left behind?
8. Is the government aware that on the 7th instant, the mail bag or bags going east for St. John at that day for Rothesay disappeared and that beyond a dozen letters picked up in the snow along the railway track, in a wet and almost destroyed condition, nothing is known?
9. Has this been brought to the attention of the government? If so, what is the explanation?
10. Does the government propose to investigate at St. John, N.B., and find out who the blame attaches to?
11. What is proposed to be done in the near future about the Rothesay mails?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will the hon. gentleman permit this inquiry to stand till Thursday next?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly. The hon. gentleman will understand that I am asking these questions in the name of and on behalf of an absent colleague.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The information is now being collected.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 53) An Act respecting patents of Edmund Piper.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 71) An Act respecting a patent of the Spirella Company of Canada, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 40) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 41) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 47) An Act respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (No. 48) An Act respecting the Kootenay and Alberta Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (U) An Act for the relief of James Denny.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 36) An Act respecting Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Beith.

Bill (No. 50) An Act respecting the Ontario and Ottawa Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Davis.

Bill (No. 89) An Act to incorporate the Bank of Saskatchewan.—Hon. Mr. Ross (Moosejaw).

BILL ASSENTED TO.

Bill (No. 96) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 22, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

INQUIRIES INTO DEPARTMENTS.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

How many commissioners have been appointed to conduct inquiries into any department, or for any special purpose, and at what salaries per diem or otherwise?

He said: I gave notice that I would make this inquiry, and also moved for an order of the Senate somewhat in the same direction, but a little fuller. It should appear on to-day's order paper.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will lay on the table the answers which I have received. The return will appear in the debates.

The return tabled was as follows:

Department of Agriculture.

1 salary not to exceed $15 per day.

Department of Customs.

6, remuneration not to exceed $15 a day for each full day's attendance in connection with the work of the commission, exclusive of reasonable moving and living expenses when obliged to travel for the purpose of executing the commission.

Department of Inland Revenue.

1, remuneration is to be as provided by order in council of January 3, 1912, allowing fees to commissioners appointed under the above Act.

Department of Marine and Fisheries.

9, remuneration not to exceed $15 for each full day's attendance and reasonable moving and living expenses.

Post Office Department.

19, I beg to inform you that in order to control travelling expenses we have divided the work, and consequently we have had at some time or other nineteen commissioners appointed by this department to undertake judicial investigations into the charges of active partisanship preferred against certain postmasters.

Seventeen of these commissioners are paid $15 per diem, in addition to actual travelling expenses, and $3 per diem for living expenses, and two are paid $10 per diem, in addition to actual travelling expenses, and $3 per diem for living expenses.

Department of Public Works.

4, three at $15 a day, one $12 a day and travelling expenses, also $5 a day for living expenses when employed.

Department of Railways and Canals.

8, at a salary of $15 per diem and all reasonable living and travelling expenses to conduct investigations.

Two other commissioners were appointed for the special purpose of investigating National Transcontinental railway matters.

COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED BY ORDER IN COUNCIL UNDER THE INQUIRIES ACT SINCE 11TH OCTOBER, 1911.

P.C. No.	Date of Order in Council.
2455	18th October, 1911	Appointment of H. D. McCormick, assistant law clerk, Department of Railways and Canals, to inquire into sinking of steamer 'Emperor' in the Sault Ste. Marie canal, 16th October, 1911.
2685	25th November, 1911	Appointment of James A. Macdonald, barrister, of Hailfax, to inquire, &c., into charges of political partisanship against customs officers in the maritime provinces.
12/2721	30th November, 1911	Appointment of E. T. C. Knowles, K.C., a commissioner to inquire into charges of political partisanship against customs officers in the province of New Brunswick.
2740	30th November, 1911	Minister of Marine and Fisheries authorized to appoint a commissioner to inquire into management and discipline of government shipyard at Sorel.
2725	4th December, 1911	Appointment of William L. Shurtleff, K.C., of Coaticook, Que., a commissioner to inquire into charges of political partisanship against customs officers in the province of Quebec.
2765	4th December, 1911	Appointment of Emile Gelly, advocate of Quebec, to inquire into charges of political partisanship and neglect of duties against officers of the Intercolonial railway in the province of Quebec, and of James A. Macdonald, barrister, of Halifax, to inquire into similar charges in the province of Nova Scotia. Remuneration $15 per day, with reasonable living and travelling expenses.
2771	4th December, 1911	Appointement of J. G. H. Bergeron a commissioner to investigate and report re charges of political partisanship made against customs officers in the province of Quebec.
2837	13th December, 1911	Minister of Public Works authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges against officials of the Department of Public Works—interference in politics and otherwise.
2862	16th December, 1911	Minister of Agriculture authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges against officials of the Department of Agriculture—interference in politics and otherwise.
39/2885	16th December, 1911	Appointment of Napoleon Garceau, Drummondville, Que., a commissioner to inquire and report into charges of political partisanship against officers of the Department of Inland Revenue in the province of Quebec.
2915	20th December, 1911	Minister of Marine and Fisheries authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges of political partisanship against officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.
2928	21st December, 1911	Appointment of Messrs. A. B. Morine, A. Ducharme and R. S. Lake, commissioners to inquire into the public service (the Public Service Commission). Copy of O.C. laid before parliament 10th January, 1912.
2933	21st December, 1911	Commissioners to inquire into charges of political partisanship against government officials authorized to employ stenographers at current rates.
2929	22nd December, 1911	Minister of Marine and Fisheries authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges of political partisanship brought against officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the province of New Brunswick.

P.C. No.	Date of Order in Council.
2993	3rd January, 1912	Appointment of Robert Hockin, of Pictou, N.S., a commissioner to investigate, &c., charges against fishery overseer John D. Reid, of Pugwash, N.S., of not carrying out his duties and of retaining public moneys.
2996	3rd January, 1912	Remuneration of commissioners. (Copy of O.C. annexed.)
28	6th January, 1912	$5,000 set apart from unforeseen expenses for expenses of the Public Service Commission.
2934	6th January, 1912	Appointment of E. T. C. Knowles, of St. John, N.B., barrister, to investigate charges of political partisanship against officials of the Intercolonial railway in New Brunswick. Remuneration $15 per day and living and travelling expenses.
21	8th January, 1912	Appointment of James A. Macdonald, of Halifax, barrister to inquire into and report charges of political partisanship and neglect of duty against officials of the Intercolonial railway, in the county of Halifax; and of Henry Pope Duchemin, of Sydney, N.S., barrister, to investigate similar charges in the counties of Cape Breton, Inverness, Richmond, Guysborough, Antigonish, Pictou and Cumberland; and of Charles W. Lane, of Lunenburg, N.S., to investigate similar charges in the counties of Lunenburg, Queens-Shelburne, Yarmouth, Digby, Annapolis, Kings, Hants and Colchester, Mr. Macdonald being unable to act outside of the county of Halifax. Remuneration $15 per day and living and travelling expenses.
22/85	15th January, 1912	Appointment of Henry Pope Duchemin, of Sydney, barrister, a commissioner to investigate and report charges of political partisanship against officials of the Department of Customs in the maritime provinces.
23/85	15th January, 1912	Appointment of Chas. W. Lane, of Lunenburg, barrister, a commissioner to investigate, &c., charges of political partisanship against officials of the Department of Customs, in the maritime provinces.
24/85	15th January, 1912	Appointment of William L. Shurtleff, K.C., of Coaticook, a commissioner to investigate, &c., charges made by J. Christie Gustin and J. C. Gilfillan, M.D., against Homer R. Worthen as to the means he took to procure his present apointment in the customs at Beebe Junction.
75	15th January, 1912	Remuneration of the Public Service Commissioners, Hon. A. B. Morine, chairman, $40 for full day's attendance or occupation; Messrs, G. N. Ducharme and R. S. Lake, $30 for full day's attendance or occupation; this to cover living expenses in Ottawa, but otherwise the reasonable living and moving expenses of the commissioners to be allowed in cases where they have to travel for the purpose of executing the commission.
160	29th January, 1912	Appointment of M. F. Alward, law clerk, Department of Railways and Canals, a commissioner to investigate, &c., charges against Clem Gorden, overseer, Trent canal, Peterborough, expropriation of material and use of time of canal employees, by him in connection with his own private property.
169	29th January, 1912	Appointment of F. P. Gutelius, C.E., of Montreal, and George Lynch Stanton, K.C., of Hamilton, who shall be chairman of the commission, commissioners to make investigation in respect of the construction of the Transcontinental railway between Moncton and Winnipeg, covering all matters bearing on the actual construction of the railway, the expenditure thereon, whether direct or indirect, the system adopted for such construction, and the management of the undertaking generally.

P.C. No.	Date of Order in Council.
227	3rd February, 1912	Appointment of Norman A. Campbell, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., barrister, commissioner to investigate charges of political partisanship against officials of the Prince Edward Island railway; remuneration to be $15 a day, together with reasonable living and travelling expenses.
230	5th February, 1912	Appointment of D. Hazen Adair, of Sussex, N.B., barrister, commissioner to investigate charges of theft and political partisanship brought against J. W. Gaskin, foreman, electrical department, Intercolonial railway, Moncton, N.B.; remuneration to be $15 a day, together with reasonable living and travelling expenses.
260	5th February, 1912	Expenditures incurred in connection with investigations, &c., charged to 'Miscellaneous Unforeseen Expenses.' (Copy of O.C. hereto annexed.)
297	9th February, 1912	Appointment of John A. Matheson, of Charlottetown, a commissioner to investigate charges re payment of fishing bounty claims —where regulations were not complied with —against fishery overseer J. A. McCormack, Souris, P.E.I.
307	12th February, 1912	Appointment of Victor Allard, K.C., of Berthier, a commissioner to investigate charges of theft as servants, brought against certain conductors of the Intercolonial railway; remuneration $15 per day and reasonable living and travelling expenses.
325	12th February, 1912	Appointment of Sir William Ralph Meredith, Chief Justice Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice, Ontario, a commissioner to investigate facts in relation to the organization, management, operation and failure of the Farmers' Bank. (Copy of O.C. laid on table of the House of Commons on 13th February, 1912.)

P. C., 2996.

Certified copy of a report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Royal Highness the Governor General on the 3rd. of January, 1912.

The committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration the question as to the rate of remuneration which should be allowed, commissioners appointed or to be appointed to hold inquiries or investigations under the Inquiries Act, chapter 101, of the revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

The committee advise that, except in cases otherwise provided for by order in council, the fees allowable to a commissioner appointed under the authority of the above mentioned Act shall not in any case exceed fifteen dollars for each full day's attendance or occupation in connection with the work of the commission, exclusive of the reasonable moving and living expenses of the commissioner to be allowed where he has to travel for the purpose of executing the commission; and that the said per diem allowance shall be deemed to cover letters and interviews on other days as well as on the days for which the commissioner is entitled to such per diem allowance; and that no further charge be allowed for such letters and interviews; and that a professional man shall not be entitled to any fees or allowances as commissioner to which other commissioners are not entitled as aforesaid.

The committee also advise that a copy of this minute be sent to every commissioner hereafter to be appointed, with his commission, or the notification of his appointment, and that such commissioner be at the same time informed that the provisions of this order in council will be strictly followed in ascertaining the amount to which he may be entitled for his services as commissioner.

The committee further advise that the order in council (P. C. No. 2648), of the 21st of September, 1897, fixing the rate of remuneration of commissioners appointed to hold inquiries into public matters or departmental business, be cancelled.

All which is respectfully submitted for approval.

RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

P. C., 260.

Certified copy of a report of the committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Royal Highness the Governor General on the 5th. of February, 1912.

The committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, advise—with reference to the order in council of the 3rd. of January, 1912, setting forth regulations as to the rate of payment to commissioners appointed to hold inquiries and investigations under the 'Inquiries Act,' chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906—that the expenditures incurred in connection with such inquiries and investigations be, for the current fiscal year, charged to 'Miscellaneous Unforeseen Expenses.'

RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

DELIVERY OF MAILS AT ROTHESAY, N.B.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Domville) inquired of the government:

1. Why does the Intercolonial train, going east from St. John, N.B., not stop at Rothesay, N.B., to deliver mails and passengers at that station?
2. What were the earnings of the Intercolonial railway at that railway station for the last fiscal year?
3. What were the earnings at that station for the years 1911, 1910, 1909 and 1907?
4. Has any complaint been made by the inhabitants at Rothesay, N.B.?
5. If so, what were the reasons given for the discontinuance of the Rothesay service on train referred to?
6. Under whose control or direction does the Act of the Intercolonial railway refusing to stop mail train at Rothesay station come under?
7. Is the government aware that within thirty days eight mails from the west have been undelivered at the railway station, Rothesay, and likewise the mail from Rothesay to Halifax and the east been left behind?
8. Is the government aware that on the 7th instant, the mail bag or bags going east for St. John at that day for Rothesay disappeared and that beyond a dozen letters picked up in the snow along the railway track, in a wet and almost destroyed condition, nothing is known.
9. Has this been brought to the attention of the government? If so, what is the explanation?
10. Does the government propose to investigate at St. John, N.B., and find out who the blame attaches to?
11. What is proposed to be done in the near future about the Rothesay mails?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows:

1. Seven Intercolonial trains each way daily, of which three carry mails, stop at Rothesay, N.B. Only one, No. 26, Canadian Pacific through train from Montreal does not stop at this point.

2. Earnings for the first fiscal year was $11,575.82.

3. Earnings for year ended March 31:

1911	$11,575 82
1910	10,348 73
1909	7,815 14
1908	7,980 24
1907	6,350 07

4. Some complaints were made about the train not stopping at Rothesay two and a half years ago.

5. See answer to No. 1.

6. The operation of the mail trains on the Intercolonial railway come under the control of the Government Railways Managing Board.

7. January 11, mail from Rothesay post office was knocked off catcher, but was recovered and forwarded to St. John by next train.

January 19. No mail was received or delivered owing to neglect of mail clerk who has since been removed from this run.

February 1. Mail was knocked from catcher, but was forwarded by next train.

February 6 (not 7th). Mail for despatch was drawn back under wheels and contents partially destroyed.

On only one occasion, the 6th, was mail destroyed, case is still under investigation.

8. Answered by No. 7.

9. Answered by No. 7.

10. Answered by No. 7.

11. The department taking the necessary action to ensure safe delivery and receipt of mails from Rothesay.

POSTAL DELIVERY AT ROTHESAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved for:

An order of the Senate for all correspondence respecting the inefficient postal delivery service at Rothesay, N.B.

The motion was agreed to.

QUANTITY OF WHEAT RECEIVED IN TERMINAL ELEVATORS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT moved that an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing:

1. The quantities of wheat by grades received into the several terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur from the date of weigh-up in 1910 to the date of weigh-up in 1911.

2. The quantities by grades delivered from each of the said elevators during the same period.
3. The overage or shortage as the case may be of each grade in each of the said several elevators as shown by the said weigh-ups.

The motion was agreed to.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

COMMITTEE STAGE POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called, 'The House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 19) An Act to amend the Inquiries Act.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have received just now a communication from Senator Kerr, who is unavoidably absent, and who wishes to make some modification of the motion in his hands, and also some remarks. If, therefore, it does not inconvenience the government, I should be glad if my hon. friend will let this order stand until Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the order of the day be discharged, and that it be placed on the orders for Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is an amendment standing in my name, as to which, I understand, there is not likely to be any difference of opinion. On the whole perhaps it would be just as convenient if the House went into committee and adopted that amendment, leaving nothing outstanding except the motion of the hon. member from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I am not disapproving of the amendment in any sense, I think it would be better to take up the whole subject at one time.

The motion was agreed to and the order of the day was postponed.

SALE OF BREAD BILL.

COMMITTEE STAGE POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Casgrain for Committee of the Whole House on (Bill D) intituled: 'An Act respecting the sale of bread,' and the motion in amendment thereto of the Hon. Mr. David, that the said Bill be not committed to the Whole House, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am unaware why this order stands in my name. I think a suggestion was made that I should submit the Bill to the Department of Inland Revenue, which department will, in all probability, be charged with its administration should it be passed. If my hon. friend, who is the promoter of the Bill, were present, I should be glad to state what the opinion of that department is, but in his absence I think it better to let the order stand.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved that the order of the day be discharged, and that it be placed on the orders for Wednesday next. He said: I understand that legislation in regard to this matter is being initiated in the Ontario legislature by one of the members from Ottawa. I do not know how his Bill will affect this measure, but he is practically asking for the same thing—that is, instead of having 12 ounces to the loaf, there should be 16 ounces to the loaf. In the absence of the promoter of this Bill I am not prepared to say whether it should be held up in view of that legislation, This Bill comes properly under the Department of Inland Revenue. They are the guides in regard to weights and measures, and I have every confidence that the government will put the matter properly before us.

The motion was agreed to, and the order was postponed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called: Second reading Bill (No. 9) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a Bill that apparently stands in my name. I moved the second reading thinking it was a government measure; but I am not familiar with the contents of the measure or the object the promoter has in view, except in a general way. I wish, therefore, to get more information before proceeding with the Bill. I move that the order be discharged and that it be placed on the orders of the day for this day week.

The motion was agreed to, and the order for second reading was postponed.

MUFFLERS ON MOTOR BOATS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE moved the second reading of Bill (Y) An Act to require the use of Under-water Exhausts or Mufflers on certain Motor Boats. He said: This Bill deals with a nuisance complained of all over the Dominion in connection with motor boats. If any hon. gentlemen live in localities where such boats are operated they will know that a great deal of noise is caused at all hours of the day and night by the absence of under-water exhausts or mufflers for these boats. The noise is a public nuisance. If each boat were equipped with a muffler the nuisance would be abated. It is a small matter, but one in which a great many people are interested. I have had letters from Toronto and other parts wanting a clause in the Bill to provide that these mufflers may be removed during regattas or trials of speed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What about the smell?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The same thing. This Bill would be in the interest of those who wish for a quiet summer resort.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not rise particularly to object to this Bill, but to object to parliament being called upon to pass all sorts of little regulations for the suppression of what are classed by some people as nuisances. This is not such a serious matter as to require legislative action. Sometimes one would like to hear the sound of those machines, but whether that be so or not, is it worth while for us to fill our statute-books with rules which nobody enforces or observes, and with legislation which is only dealing with small matters in a large way.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Has the hon. gentleman made an attempt to have the Marine Department adopt regulations to cover the case?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—No, I have not seen any one. I thought I would bring the matter before parliament and see if we could not suggest a measure which would regulate the nuisance and have it considered in committee. I have letters from a great many different places, especially summer resorts all over the country, requesting that such a Bill be passed in the interests of people who desire quiet and rest, especially in the evenings and at night. These boats have become a perfect nuisance. I am satisfied this Bill is in the interest of the people.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—How about steam?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—It does not interfere with steamboats.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I do not object to the provision being made, but I think this matter should be taken up with the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I am inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) that it is rather straining the functions of parliament to pass legislation to regulate these things. I should think that is altogether a matter for the Department of Marine, and my hon. friend should endeavour to have the principle adopted there before presenting his Bill to parliament.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Strictly speaking, this being a public Bill, I think it should go to a Committee of the Whole, but probably the course adopted by the hon. gentleman is the wiser one.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have no objection; but I think it would be a hardship on the motors to make them wear mufflers in the summer time.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—If any hon gentleman lived in a place where these motors were in use, he would want to see the mufflers used.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 95) An Act respecting the National Transcontinental railway. He said: The purpose of this measure is to authorize the government to pay an amount in the vicinity of some five million dollars to the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Is the amount not ten million dollars?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Hon. gentlemen will doubtless recall that by the legislation of 1903 the government of Canada entered into a contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific to guarantee certain bonds of that railway company's enterpise. Section 28, which is one section of the Act dealing with the subject out of which has arisen the litigation requiring the payment by the government of Canada to the Grand Trunk Pacific reads as follows:

> For the purpose of aiding the company in the construction of the western division, the government shall guarantee payment of the principal amount equal to seventy five per centum of the cost of construction of the said division, as defined and ascertained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 18 hereof; but such principal amount shall not, in any case exceed thirteen thousand dollars per mile of the mileage of the Prairie section, or thirty thousand dollars per mile of the mileage of the Mountain section, although seventy-five per centum of such construction may have exceeded the said respective sums per mile.

In 1904 the company, apparently, upon making further inquiry into the carrying out of their enterprise seemed to have come to the conclusion that the assistance then proffered by the Dominion government was not sufficiently large to warrant them entering upon the project, or they apparently thought they could induce the government to give them further assistance. They therefore again approached the government of Canada, and in 1904 an amendment was made to the legislation of 1903 increasing that assistance, as will be seen by section 5 of the legislation of that year, and this is the section upon which arose the difference between the government of Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company as to what the meaning of the additional assistance really was. The section reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, the government may and shall, preserving always the proportions in the said contract provided as between the Prairie and Mountain sections of the western division, implement for the purposes and subject otherwise to the provisions of the said contract, its guarantee of the bonds of the said company to be issued for the cost of construction of the said western division, in such manner as may be agreed upon, so as to make the proceeds of the said bonds so to be guaranteed a sum equal to seventy-five per centum of the cost of construction of the western division ascertained as provided in the said contract, but not exceeding in respect of the Prairie section thirteen thousand dollars ($13,000) per mile.

I would direct the attention of the House to the fact that this practically repealed the limitation of the guarantee of the government, so far as the cost of the Mountain section of the western division was concerned, leaving the obligation of the government guarantee to be seventy-five per cent of whatever cost the Mountain section of the western division should be. It was found upon placing the debenture stock of the company upon the market that the three per cent debentures guaranteed by the government of Canada did not realize par, but sold at an amount considerably below par. There appears to have been three sales of these debentures which particularly affect the western division. In 1905 £3,200,000 were sold at 92½, and produced $14,559,670. In 1909 two million pounds were sold at eighty, and produced $7,773,490. In 1910 two millions were sold at about eighty pounds, three shillings and nine pence, and produced $7,856,119. There then arose the question as to what the legislation of 1904 meant, as to whether the government of Canada was to guarantee an additional issue of bonds. That, I understand, was the construction placed by the government upon the legislation of 1904, whereas the railway company placed a different construction upon it, claiming that the government are obliged to pay to the railway company the difference betweeen the figures those debentures sold at and par, or, in other words, the government of Canada was to implement by the payment of cash the difference between the par value of the debentures which had been guaranteed by Canada and the amount for which they sold; that is between their face value and the amount for which they sold.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If they sold for nothing the government would have to pay the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In round figures the difference slightly exceds $5,000,000 on what is sold. This Bill, of course, will authorize the government to pay in the future whatever difference may arise between the face of the debentures and their proceeds. Up to the present time we are simply dealing with the debentures which have been sold. Upon this question arising, it was submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada for that court to place a construction upon the contract. The Supreme Court, in answering the questions which had been agreed upon between the two parties, decided in favour of the contention of the government. Upon an appeal being taken to the Privy Council that tribunal reversed the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. POIRIER—As usual.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They found in favour of the railway company, thus adjudging the government of Canada to be responsible for the payment of the amount I have mentioned. I will just read you a short extract from the judgment of the Privy Council, which will more explicitly explain the position of the parties relative to this dispute than I can do. The judgment of the Privy Council has been distributed, and I think a copy has been placed on the desk of each member. On page 15 of the judgment, which has been distributed, hon. gentlemen will find the following extract:

> Differences having arisen as to the interpretation of paragraph 5 of the supplemental contract, it was agreed between the government and the company that the questions at issue might be conveniently referred to the Supreme Court under the provisions of the Supreme Court Act. The government proposed a series of questions for the consideration of the Supreme Court. The questions so proposed, which are somewhat cumbrous and diffuse, may be summoned up in one simple question: Does paragraph 5 contemplate any additional liability being imposed on the company, or is it incumbent on the government to make up the proceeds of the first mortgage bonds to their nominal or par value without recourse to the company? The Supreme Court was of opinion that the liability on the part of the government contemplated by paragraph 5 was a scondary liability only as guarantors, that the primary liability must fall upon the company, and that it rested with the company to issue additional bonds which the government was to guarantee.
>
> With the utmost deference their Lordships are unable to accept the interpretation placed by the Supreme Court on paragraph 5. It seems to their Lordships that there is nothing in paragraph 5 imparting that any further liability was to be imposed on the company in respect of the first mortgage bonds, and that it falls upon the government to implement their guarantee so as to make the proceeds of those bonds issued and to be issued equal to their par or nominal value. It would be a breach of faith with the Grand Trunk Company to let in any further charge in priority to their security, and as it appears to their Lordships the company has no power to issue bonds other than those authorized by the original contract.

It is singularly unfortunate that in the preparation of this contract the position of the government was not more fully protected. A very few words inserted in the documents of contract would probably have protected the government from the payment of the very large amount which now faces them, an amount which will at least reach the very large sum of ten millions by the time the road is completed, or by the time the different issues of bonds are sold.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Was there a special guarantee by the government that the bonds would bring par?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—The government could not be responsible for the amount the bonds sold at unless they gave a guarantee they would sell at par.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the bonds sold at par the government would not be called upon to implement any difference. The question naturally suggests itself as to whether the company obtained the highest possible price for the bonds.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Could the government be heard on the question as to when these bonds should be placed upon the financial market, or was it a question entirely in the hands of the company?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The original contract did not contemplate that this condition would arise. Apparently the assumption was that three per cent bonds guaranteed by the government of Canada would sell at par. Consequently, it was a condition which apparently was not anticipated at the time of the contract and no provision was made for it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Is my hon. friend quite sure that there was nothing in the contract to provide for it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nothing in the contract of 1903.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT——It seems to me that there was a provision that the government should be consulted at the time the bonds were placed on the market.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, there was a provision of that kind; but there was nothing in the contract dealing expressly with the sale of those bonds below par.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—As a matter of fact, was the government consulted at the time the debentures were sold?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware of that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. leader of the government make a statement with regard to the financial situation? It is one that is going to surprise the country. We are paying now, and we are going to pay a very large sum for the construction of that road. If the Grand Trunk Pacific places its bonds on the market, and sells them anywhere from ninety-two downward, I understand, according to the judgment of the Privy Council, the government is responsible for the difference.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does not the hon. leader of the House think that a very strange condition of things? I would ask him to urge his government to bring in legislation this session to prevent it, so that when the Grand Trunk Pacific puts its bonds on the market, the government shall only be responsible for the amount they bring. What is to prevent that company putting its bonds on the market and letting them go at fifty, knowing that the government would be responsible for the difference between fifty and par? That may happen. They sold their bonds at 92 one year and the following year at 80. There is nothing in the contract to prevent them selling at any figure they please knowing that the government will have to supplement the difference. Is it not right that the government should deal with the matter by legislation? I think the Supreme Court was right in saying that Canada was responsible simply for the amount obtained for the bonds, and not for the par value. Supposing the company had sold the bonds for 110 or 120, would we have to pay interest on those figures? It is absurd, and it is equally absurd to take it the reverse way. The leader of the Senate I know is a good Canadian, and I hope he will see that the government of Canada shall not be mulct in any future sale of these bonds. We may have to face larger claims in the future for the difference between the amounts obtained for the bonds and their par value. The past government was not sufficiently explicit in passing the law, but it was explicit enough for our Canadian judges to say that the government was right. The company appealed to the Privy Council and the decision in appeal was given in their favour. It is up to the government to make the law so plain that it cannot be misunderstood. I have been contending for that ever since I became a member of the Senate. There are some members of this House who think that the laws we pass should be interpreted by the courts. That is not the proper function of the courts. Their function is to enforce the law, not to put their own interpretation upon our legislation. Parliament should have its laws read in plain English, as plain as the alphabet, and let the courts enforce them. The proper function of a judge is to apply the law and not to make it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not see any necessity for discussing what should have been done in the past, or what may be done in the future. We have to face the facts as they are presented to us. The Bill which we are now passing involves an expenditure—if the Finance Minister's calculations be correct, and I presume they are—of five or six millions at once, and possibly an equal amount in the future. The honour of Canada is involved in this transaction, and whatever our opinion may have been of the legislation of the past, it is incumbent upon us now to maintain the honour of Canada and comply with the findings of the Privy Council in this case. It is all very well for us to comment upon the decisions of our own Supreme Court and of the Privy Council. Many important suits in the past have been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada, and their decisions have been reversed by the Privy Council, while in other cases equally important their decisions have been upheld. I could refer to two or three very important cases, but that is not at all necessary. The whole trouble involved in this instance is in the construction of one simple word 'implementing' a certain guarantee. The Supreme Court of Canada put one construction upon it, the Privy Council in England put another. When the Bill of 1904 was introduced to amend the law of 1903, giving a further guarantee to the Grand Trunk railway, it was pointed out in the other House by Mr. Barker, of Hamilton, that this difficulty might arise. Mr. Barker is an authority on railway legislation, he having been the lawyer who negotiated the whole of the transactions in connection with the amalgamation or purchase by the Grand Trunk railway of the Great Western railway. The ability which he displayed in the settlement of the dispute between those two companies when that amalgamation took place gave his opinion on questions of this kind special value. He brought the whole matter out of the involved condition in which he found it, and in a very short time settled all the difficulties. Mr. Barker, when the Bill of 1904 was under discussion in the House of Commons pointed out what he thought might be the result of using that word 'implementing' in the contract. His warning was disregarded, for the reason, I presume, that the lawyers, and those who had the matter in hand at the time did not regard his objections as of any consequence. However, if the decision of the Privy Council be right it proves that Mr. Barker's opinion was correct. I have no sympathy with those who cry out against the reversal of decisions. I remember that I took a firm stand on a very important question some time ago, and the Supreme Court of Canada unanimously held that the view of the government of that day was right. Their decision was reversed by the Privy Council in England. When I analysed the reason they gave for reversing that judgment, I was convinced they were right and we were wrong to a certain extent in the interpretation which we put upon the law. The same difficulty has arisen in this instance. It is unfortunate, financially speaking, that the warnings that were given by Mr. Barker in the House of Commons were not listened to at the time. It is too much a habit of governments when they introduce measures to parliament to maintain that they are right in every particular. If parliament had in the past, and would in the future pay a little more attention to the opinions expressed by men of common sense, we might be relieved of difficulties such as have arisen in this instance. There is no doubt that when these bonds were guaranteed not only the government, but every one, supposed that 3 per cent bonds guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada, would bring par in the English market; but for some reason which it is not my province to just now enter into, they were sold as low as 80 per cent. With the interpretation placed upon the word 'implement' by the Privy Council in England, the government are obliged to come to the rescue and pay the ten or eleven million dollars it involves, whether we like it or not.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That was a very costly 'implement.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I might say in reply to some of the remarks made by my hon. frined behind me, and also by my hon. friend before me, that I hope the government will lay carefully to heart the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Hastings (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) touching the desirability of seeing that their measures are very clear, and the possibility of their being mistaken occasionaly. In that I entirely agree with him; but as to the question mainly at issue, no doubt the present position is an unfortunate one. When the contract was entered into, there was reasonable ground for expecting that the 3 per cent guarantee would be sufficient to float the bonds within a mere trifle of par; but every hon. gentleman who has paid attention to the progress of events in the financial world must be aware that since the time when those bonds were first issued there has been an enormous depreciation in what is called gilt-edged securities all over the world, and particularly in England. The fall in 3 per cent guaranteed bonds is not, if my memory serves me correctly, much more than the fall in consols. As regards another point, to the best of my recollection—I am speaking subject to correction—the government must be consulted on all occasions before those debentures are sold or issued. I think they have a kind of veto power on the time and also the figure at which they are placed on the market. Unfortunately, the Privy Council took a different view of the situation from our own Superior Court. Speaking as a layman, I think the common sense of the question was on the side of our Supreme Court. The legal points, I dare say, were on the side of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Privy Council. At any rate, we must pay; but, as regards the future, I think it is quite within the power —and if they have not the power they should certainly take it—of the government to purchase their own guarantee bonds if they see fit, and in that way they can protect themselves against any very material fall without any particular great loss to the country. It is worth while considering the point, and as my hon. friend has intimated that a further sum of five millions or more may be lost by allowing the Grand Trunk Pacific to put more bonds on the market with the government guarantee. It is worth while considering whether the government had better not take up these bonds themselves. In that way the loss would be minimized, and as our credit is pretty good and they cannot have exhausted the thirty million surplus we left behind us, they should take some action in that respect. If the government have not the power to purchase the bonds, there will be no difficulty whatever about getting legislative authority to do so. The course of the English market is very peculiar. I remember one occasion where I was myself concerned I found that Canadian bonds guaranteed by the British government themselves could not be sold at anything like the price that English consuls commanded, simply because they were a smaller security and not much known in the market; and I know also that these guarantees are not favoured in the English market. I believe we could borrow money at greater advantage and meet the liabilities incurred. My hon. friend would be glad I am sure to see the loss to the country minimized as far as possible, and I think it could be done that way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the suggestion were carried out it would be adding twenty-five million dollars to the debit side of the country to save only a small per cent on the whole transaction.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not see that at all. We have issued a guarantee to pay three per cent on these bonds. We will be none the poorer if we pay it direct to the English holder or indirectly through the company.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Are there any more of these bonds likely to be issued?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, there will be sufficient issued by the railway company to complete the undertaking. This simply represents the difference on the bonds already sold, and it is estimated that upon the sale of the remainder of the bonds the amount to be implemented will be substantially the same as that which has already arisen. In answer to my right hon. friend's suggestion, I have no doubt the government will regard with some interest the further disposal of these bonds. As the hon. member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) pointed out a few moments ago, the contract provides that the government must first be consulted with reference to the sale of the bonds; but as to carrying out the suggestion of my right hon. friend, as the government of Canada is and must necessarily be a borrower in the European money market, it all comes down to a question of supply and demand for money, that is to say if they retired or bought those particular bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, guaranteed by themselves, it would involve their securing the money from some source to take them up, and the question is if they go on the money market for that amount how much will it cost. Looking at it in a very general way, it seems to me the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company guaranteed by the government of Canada would realize substantially as much——

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think my hon. friend will find, and I think the Finance Minister would admit, that for reasons peculiar to the English market the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific, guaranteed by Canada to pay three per cent, will not fetch anything like as good a figure as a three per cent Canada loan.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this contract was entered into between the parties in 1903, the views of the government and also of the railway company must have been very optimistic, because apparently they did count upon these three per cent bonds realizing par. The government of Canada in 1903 was not securing its money for anything less than three per cent. My recollection is that when criticisms were being made on the Bill in 1903, in the government of Canada undertaking to charge an interest rate of three per cent to the Grand Trunk Pacific, the government themselves were at the same time paying three and a half per cent for money. My right hon. friend will doubtless recall that. The criticism was made in 1903, when the government of Canada entered into a contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific to charge only a rate of three per cent as rental for the eastern division and also upon the arrears of interest which might arise upon both divisions that we were at the same time paying three and a half per cent for money we were borrowing.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think not quite so much.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was a fraction over three per cent, and therefore it would look as if all parties had considered that the Grand Trunk Pacific could get better terms. However, that has not turned out to be the case.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I don't think any three and a half per cents were issued until after 1905, but that is a matter of detail. It is a curious fact, however,—and I just mention it for my hon. friend's information—that while ordinary persons would say that the credit of the Grand Trunk Railway, plus the credit of Canada, was better than the credit of Canada alone, in the London market it is not so looked upon. The credit of Canada alone without the Grand Trunk railway would fetch a bigger figure.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I put the question to the hon. leader of the government, whether he would undertake to have the government use precaution that the same condition of things shall not occur again. Under the judgment of the Privy Council, the Grand Trunk Pacific, without respecting the provisions which necessitates consulting the government, can go into a foreign or the home market and sell their bonds at any figure, knowing that the Dominion government will be responsible for the difference. The Grand Trunk need not care what the bonds sell for, whether forty, fifty, seventy or eighty cents, knowing that the Canadian people will make up the difference. Now, what is to prevent capitalists from selling the bonds at from sixty to seventy, knowing that the thirty per cent is going to be paid by us? That would create a serious condition of things, and the government should provide against it. It would only be fair to themselves; in fact it would be a feather in their cap if they did. If the present statute does not give power to do so, I would ask the leader of the House to see that precaution is taken, by legislation if necessary, to protect the country in the issue of all new bonds. I put that to the hon. leader of the House. If he carries out such a policy his party will not suffer, and the country certainly will not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The suggestion will be kept in view.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member from Hastings made a statement, no doubt with perfect good faith, that at the time this legislation was passed in 1904 the member from Hamilton, Mr. Barker, had drawn the attention of the government to the fact that the legislation might oblige the government to pay in cash the amount necessary to implement the guarantee of the government. I have taken the trouble to refer to the debate on that date, which is to be found in the Commons 'Hansard,' page 2428, and following, and I fail to find anything of the kind. Mr. Barker discusses the question that it will be open to the government to discharge that obligation in three several ways; first, by paying in cash; second, by purchasing bonds at par; or, third, by guaranteeing the initial amount of bonds; and it was taken for granted both by Mr. Barker, and by the then leader of the opposition, and by all the members of the House, the Minister of Finance, and the Prime Minister of the time, that it would be open to the government to discharge its obligation by guaranteeing an additional amount of bonds, and therefore the government at the time, in perfect good faith, acted on the advice of counsel. When the question came up two or three years later, I think in 1908 when the question was first raised, the government had the opinion of the Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Justice, and of Mr. Shepley, an eminent counsel, and they all reported to the government that there could be no question about the matter, that it was not open to two different constructions, but that it was open to the government to discharge its liability by guaranteeing the initial amount of bonds. Now, in the course of events, we have the Supreme Court of Canada maintaining unanimously the contention of the government, but the Privy Council, in a very short judgment deciding otherwise. We have to abide by the decision of the Privy Council as being the law on the matter, and discharge the obligation as it is; but I make these remarks to act fairly to all parties concerned, and put the matter before the country in the way in which it should be put—not that the attention of the government had been called to the danger, but that all parties concerned dealt with the matter in hand in perfect good faith.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I based my remarks on the debate in the House of Commons when the Bill was before that body, and I find no contradiction made to the statement which had been made by Mr. Barker upon that question. There may have been other reasons than the ones to which my hon. friend has referred. I am not aware what legal authority was invoked at that time. All I can say is that if he will refer to that debate he will find that Mr. German, the member for Welland, stated that they consulted only common lawyers. I do not know who they may be, but that is the statement made in the House without any contradiction.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member from Hastings is quite correct. I followed the debate in the House of Commons on that question, and the present leader of the opposition seemed to have admitted that Mr. Barker had called attention at the time to the matter, and that is the reason I looked up the debate. Of course I speak subject to correction, but the part of the debate that I examined bears on the very clause in question, and the report of the remarks made by Mr. Barker is not susceptible of that construction at all, but the other way, and I could find nowhere the attention of the government being called by any member to the danger which has cropped up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made this statement:

> I know that my honourable friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) did make a statement to that effect; but the Privy Council understood the clause in one sense, our own Supreme Court and our own council understood it differently. It was a case of disagreement between lawyers, and the final judgment is in favour of the contention of my honourable friend from Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—As the government considered the advisability of introducing legislation for the purpose of construing the Act of 1903, it seems to me they did not intend to make themselves liable for more than guaranteeing the bonds, and guaranteeing additional issues of bonds if that were required. We would have escaped the liability on the interest, because it is hoped the interest in time will be paid. But it is quite clear, in the light of the judgment of the Privy Council, that whilst the Grand Trunk Railway Company understood one thing, the country, represented by parliament, understood another. I can realize that as far as the bonds that have been issued are concerned, there is nothing else for us to do but pay; but in reference to bonds that are to be issued in the future, should not the position of parliament as it was intended to be in 1903 be defined properly by legislation to be introduced now? I am not prepared to say that that should be done; at all events it is a matter which I think the government ought to consider—whether the country has not the right to say now what it intended to be liable for at the time this legislation was passed. I do not know whether the subject has received the attention of the government, if not I respectfully submit that it should.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In answer to the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, that could scarcely have been in contemplation at the time, because legislation was passed by parliament in 1903 authorizing the Grand Trunk Pacific to issue a second series of bonds to the Grand Trunk Company. Therefore it would be impossible for the railway company to issue bonds that would take priority to the Grand Trunk railway bonds, and immediately follow or be on a parity with the bond issue already made, guaranteed by this government. So that the most that could have been done assuming that the company had it in contemplation was the issuance of a series of bonds by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, subsidiary to the Grand Trunk railway bonds, which would be a third series of bonds. I need scarcely point out to my hon. friend that that issue of bonds, coming after the first and second issue, and occupying the position of a third issue, would not be as saleable as the first issue—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend considers that would be a breach of the agreement if attempted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The language of the Privy Council is as follows:

> It would be a breach of faith with the Grand Trunk Railway Company to let in any further charge in priority to their security, as it appears to their Lordships the company has no power to issue bonds other than those authorized by the original contract.

So that is the reason upon which the Privy Council proceeded, and when one familiarizes himself with the facts, there is very much to support it.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REFUSED SECOND READING.

The order of the day being called:

> Second reading Bill (C) intituled: 'An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.'—Hon. Mr. Domville.

The SPEAKER—A point of order has been raised in regard to this Bill, on the ground that, being a money Bill, it cannot originate in the Senate.

What is a money Bill?

Its best definition is to be found in a resolution agreed to in August, 1857, by the elective Legislative Council of South Australia in its famous quarrel with the House of Assembly on the subject of money Bills, and embodied in the compact of 1857 between those two representative bodies, and which reads as follows:

'III. That this council further declares its opinion that all Bills, the object of which shall be to raise money, whether by way of loan or otherwise, or to warrant the expenditure of any portion of the same, shall be held to be money Bills.' (Vide Edwin Gordon Blackmore's manual of practice, procedure and usage of the Legislative Council of the province of South Australia, pages 137 and 182.)

This definition has been accepted by all the parliamentary authorities on the subject.

Todd's 'Parliamentary Government in England,' second edition, page 815, says:

'We will not proceed to consider the subject of money Bills, which are of three kinds, viz.: tax Bills, Bills of supply, and Bills of appropriation.

Tax Bills, for raising revenues to be applied towards the services of the current year, are founded upon resolutions of the Committee of Ways and Means.

In like manner, Bills of supply, or rather of ways and means, authorizing an advance out of the consolidated fund, or the issue of exchequer Bills, towards making good supplies which have been voted by the House of Commons for the service of the year, emanate from the Committee of Ways and Means, in the way which has been already described.

When the Committees of Supply and Ways and Means have finished their sittings, a Bill is introduced, which enumerates every grant that has been made during the session, appropriates the several sums, as voted by the Committee of Supply, which shall be issued and applied to each separate service, and directs that the said supplies shall not be used for any other than the purpose mentioned in the said Act. This is known as the Consolidated Fund Bill, or, more generally, as the Appropriation Bill. By this Act, which completes the financial proceedings of the session, the supply votes, originally passed by the Commons only, receive full legislative sanction.

In another work (Parliamentary Government in the Colonies, 2nd edition, page 709) Todd says: 'The relative right of both Houses in matters of aid and supply must be determined, in every British colony, by the ascertained rules of British constitutional practice. The local Acts upon the subject must be construed in conformity with that practice wherever the imperial polity is the accepted guide. A claim on the part of a colonial upper chamber to the possession of equal rights with the assembly to amend a money Bill would be inconsistent with the ancient and undeniable control which is exercised by the Imperial House of Commons over all financial measures.'

At page 705 of the same work, we read: 'The Victoria Constitution Act, 1855, sec. 56, and the British North America Act, 1867, sec. 53, severally declares that 'Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the assembly or House of Commons.' No further definition of the relative powers of the two Houses is ordinarily made by any statute; but constitutional practice goes much further than this. It justifies the claim of the Imperial House of Commons (and by parity of reasoning of all representative chambers framed after the model of that House) to a general control over public revenue and expenditure, a control which has been authoritatively defined in the following words: 'All aids and supplies, and aids to His Majesty in parliament, are the sole gift of the Commons to direct, limit and appoint in such Bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the House of Lords.

'This parliamentary principle, moreover, has been generally if not universally, admitted in all self-governing British colonies by the adoption in both legislative chambers of standing orders which refer to the rules, forms, usages, and practices of the imperial parliament as the guide to each House in cases unprovided for by local regulations.'

'Whenever,' says Bourinot, in his 'Parliamentary Procedure,' 3rd edition, page 626, public Bills grant supplies of any kind, or involve directly or indirectly the levying or appropriation of any tax upon the people, they must be initiated in the proper branch, in accordance with law and constitutional practice. Section 53 of the British North America Act, 1867, expressly provides:

'Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the House of Commons.

And a standing order (rule 78) of the House of Commons declares explicitly:

'All aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit and appoint in all such Bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants which are not alterable by the Senate.'

A Bill granting a pension is a Bill 'appropriating a part of the public revenue' it is equally 'an aid granted to Her Majesty by the parliament' and can, in no possible way, be amended by the Senate.

May is explicit on the subject:

'By the practice, says May, (page 574 of 'Parliament Practice,' third edition) the Lords are excluded. not only from the power of initiating or amending Bills dealing with public expenditure or revenue, but also from initiating public Bills which would create a charge upon the people by the imposition of local and other rates, or which deal with the administration or employment of those charges.

'It follows accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in Bills which they receive from the Commons dealing with the above mentioned subjects, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, the amount of a rate, or charge, —its duration, mode of assessment, levy, collection, appropriation or management; or the persons who pay, receive, manage or control it; or the limits within which it is leviable. Other forms of amendment by the Lords have also been held to infringe on the privileges of the Commons, such as the addition of a clause providing that payments into and out of the consolidated fund should be made under the same regulations as were applicable by law to other similar payments; of provisions for the payment of salaries to officers of the Court of Chancery out of the suitor's fund; and alteration in a clause prescribing the order in which charges on the revenue of a colony should be paid.'

Referring now to the Bill before us, let us find out in its constructure what is the element which makes it a money Bill. The Bill reads as follows:

BILL C.

An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Subsection 2 of section 35 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, is hereby amended by adding thereto at the end thereof the following words:—'or in event of serious illness preventing him being present at Ottawa or of serious illness necessitating his returning to his home, on advice of his medical attendant.'

In adding the following words to subsection 2, section 35, of chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, viz.: 'Or in event of serious illness preventing him being present at Ottawa, or of serious illness necessitating his returning to his home, on advice of his medical attendant,' the Bill imposes the obligation to pay over to a member of parliament who finds himself in the specific conditions determined by this new piece of legislation, a sum of money to which actually he is not entitled under the existing laws. The Bill consequently brings out of the consolidated fund of Canada the necessary money for the payment of a certain number of days of attendance at a session during which a member is absent, and for which absence, under the enactments of the present law, he would not be paid. It is then by itself a Bill appropriating the public funds, and, at the same time, a Bill changing the conditions, limitations and qualifications of certain clauses of a previous money Bill, now the law of the land.

One must not also forget that the rules of the Senate of Canada contain the following clause 70: 'The Senate will not proceed upon a Bill appropriating public money, that shall not within the knowledge of the Senate, have been recommended by the King's representative.'

This single rule of ours would suffice to put a stop to any further procedure on Bill (C), but, considering the gravity of the question, as to the stand which suggests itself to the Senate on money Bills, I thought it would be convenient for this House to be acquainted with the sources from which the opinions of the authorities on the subject are to be collected, and I have seized this opportunity to lay the whole question before the Senate.

Taking into consideration the nature of this Bill which appropriates public funds in a manner different from the one determined by the existing law, and taking also into consideration the well known doctrine laid down by our constitution, by the rules of this House, and by the accepted authorities on the subject, I declare the point of order well taken.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing an hon. member was to propose a Bill, enacting that a member should not be absent for fifteen days, or any number of days, would he be in order? This Bill refers to a fund which is already appropriated and voted by both Houses of parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER—My answer covers that ground. The fund must be paid in the way the law prescribes. This is to amend the law and make a larger payment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Has the Senate the right to make its own regulations in regard to attendance?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not against the law of the land.

Hon. Mr. POWER—After hearing the very full, satisfactory and I think also necessary decision of his honour the Speaker, I think it is the duty of the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill to move that the order of the day be discharged.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I suppose that is the most effective way to retreat, and I make the motion that the order be discharged. However, as a layman, while his honour the Speaker is quoting authority which I have no reason to doubt, I would like to ask what right the Senate has to excuse a member, as they occasionally do, from attendance, and pay him his indemnity? It seems to me if we have a right to pass a resolution excusing a sick man from attendance, and paying him his indemnity, we are fixing a charge on the country for which we have no authority.

The SPEAKER—All those members paid at the close of the session are paid on a special vote, by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—On a Bill passed by the House of Commons.

The SPEAKER—Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the order of the day was discharged.

The SPEAKER.

CANADIAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved the second reading of Bill (X) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Public Health Association. He said: I think this Bill will meet with the full approbation of the House. The object is the development and diffusion of the knowledge of sanitation and all other matters connected therewith, or pertaining thereto. This association is the outcome of legislation of this House. You can remember some three years ago certain matters were referred by this House to the Conservation Commission asking them to take some action. They took action and called together representatives from all the provinces, and at that meeting this association was practically formed. The association contains in its membership gentlemen in all walks of life, united together with the one aim, the conservation of what should be considered in every country its greatest asset, namely the public health. The list is headed by the Governor General. Its honorary officers include Lord Strathcona, the Premier, ex-Premier, and the Premiers of every province of Canada. The executive takes in all the health officers of the different provinces and anybody who reads the names on the application list will see, as I have stated, that it contains people of all degrees and walks in life in every part of Canada.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

REVILLON FRERES TRADING COMPANY BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill (F) 'An Act to incorporate Revillon Frères Trading Company, Limited.'

He said: The amendments are purely formal. All the properties owned by the company in Canada, over one hundred, were set forth, and the committee thought the better plan would be to name two trustees, and after the company was incorporated to make an assignment to them of the properties. These clauses were fully discussed last year in the House of Commons Committee, and changes were made, which were afterwards discussed in the House of Commons, and after consultation with the law clerk were adopted in the form we have them to-day.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As I stated the other day, I do not think it would be good policy to introduce in this Bill the right of directors to vote by proxy to the extent of giving to one single director too much control of the affairs of the company. I have prepared a clause which might be inserted in all Bills promoted by foreign capital. I have submitted this clause to Mr. Lafleur, who is acting as promoter of the Bill, and he has accepted the suggestion, if it meets with the approval of the House. All that is required is to amend this Bill or any similar Bills which give to the directors of the company the entire management of the affairs of the company so as to enable shareholders, if they so chose, to limit by by-law the exercise of the power of their directors. The amendment which I propose to introduce would take the place of subsections 2 and 3 of section 12, and would read in this way:

12-A. The company may by by-law classify its directors into two groups, and limit the exercise of the powers of the board of directors to both groups, being presented by some of its members, and such representative or representatives forming part of the majority at the meeting, or otherwise.

There are five directors. To enable the company to hold its meeting in Canada, there must be at least three directors on the board who reside in the Dominion, and the other two might be domiciled in a foreign country. It would enable the shareholders, by by-law, to classify the five directors into two groups. Two of the directors residing outside of Canada, and one of the directors residing in Canada in one group, say group No. 1, and the other two directors residing in Canada forming group No. 2. It would also enable the shareholders by by-law, to allow the directors in group No. 1 giving one of the directors residing in Canada the right to represent their views at the meeting of the board and to prevent any decision being adopted by the board, unless he forms part of the majority in favour of that decision. It would meet the requirements of this company, and I think also of all others. With the consent of the House, I would therefore move:

That the amendments made by the Senate Committee on Banking and Commerce in the Act to incorporate Revillon Freres Trading Company, Limited, striking out sections 2 and 3 of clause 12, be substituted by the following clause: The company may by by-law classify its directors into two groups and limit the exercise of the powers of the board of directors to both groups, being represented by some of its members and such representative or representatives forming part of the majority at the meeting or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment, because I do not know what it means exactly.

The report of the committee as amended was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (Z) An Act for the relief of Ethel May Stuart.—Hon. Mr. Roche.

Bill (A2) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (No. 16) An Act respecting the Patents of Thomas Wadge.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 52) An Act to incorporate the Pacific, Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 61) An Act respecting the Gatineau and Ungava Railway Company, and to change its name to the Ottawa and Ungava Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Tessier.

Bill (No. 56) An Act respecting South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McMullen.

Bill (No. 62) An Act respecting the Kettle Valley Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 67) An Act respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McHugh.

Bill (No. 73) An Act respecting the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

Bill (No. 79) An Act respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (No. 81) An Act to incorporate the High River, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (No. 82) An Act to incorporate the Northern Territorial Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 84) An Act respecting certain Patents of Thomas D. Rambaut.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 90) An Act respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 91) An Act respecting the Kootenay Central Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (No. 92) An Act respecting the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (No. 93) An Act respecting the United Goldfields of British Columbia, Limited.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (No. 105) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at Three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 23, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (B 2) An Act to incorporate the Montreal Transcontinental Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Beique.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I desire to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that in the return brought down by him yesterday the order of the Senate was not entirely complied with, inasmuch as the names of only thirty out of forty-nine commissioners appointed are given. Perhaps the hon. gentleman thinks that thirty are enough to satisfy our curiosity for the time being; but I should be obliged if he would let us have the names of the other nineteen.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall do so.

THIRD READING.

Bill (F) An Act to incorporate Revillon Frères Trading Company, Limited.—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 95) An Act respecting the Transcontinental Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Did my hon. friend ascertain at what date the first three and a half per cent loan was floated? I think it was in 1905. It is not a matter of any very great moment, still the question was brought up yesterday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it never occurred to me to make the inquiry; but I shall be glad to do so. May I ask what was the date?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think we put any three and a half per cents in the market until after 1905. The point, of course, was simply this: That at the time when these agreements were made, there was a reasonable probability that three per cent guaranteed bonds would sell pretty close to par. If we had been obliged at that time to borrow money at three and a half per cent, that could not have been said or thought. I think we did not float any loans after that date.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. leader of the House be in a position to tell the Senate the exact amount that the treasury of the country will be responsible for, as the difference between the par value of the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the amounts that they sell for? Of course he can tell us the total amount of bonds to be issued, but will have to wait for future developments to find out what they are going to sell for.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Department of Finance has estimated that the amount to be implemented will in round figures be ten millions.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is upon an estimated sale of the bonds at what figure?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot say—I presume at whatever market figure they would be standing at when sold.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then it is up to the company to sell them for what they can get I suppose, after consulting the government?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fancy the Grand Trunk Pacific would be anxious to secure the best possible price for these bonds. I would not be apprehensive of any sacrifice of the bonds being made, more particularly in view of the fact that they must first consult the government on the subject. For their own reputation and credit, they would endeavour to realize as much as possible upon their own security.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That would not be necessary under the present condition of things. They can afford to sell those bonds as low as possible. I understand the statute contains a provision that they shall consult the government; but that is a very meagre provision. These capitalists can rig the market and have the bonds sold at seventy-five or eighty, and can show that they could not get any more for them. It is a dangerous position for this country to be placed in, and I am of the opinion that the people of Canada will not like to face this expenditure. As I suggested yesterday, if the statute contains no provision now to prevent that condition of things, it is time the government introduced legislation to meet a serious danger. I think I voice the sentiments of the people of Canada in stating the fact.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Let the government buy the bonds themselves.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They might as well.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the House has no objection, I should like to move the third reading now. The company are very anxious to have the Bill passed, for financial reasons.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No doubt of it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The rules must be suspended to have the Bill read the third time to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not see any immediate hurry for the third reading. The company will not suffer any more than they have suffered if it will stand until Tuesday next. The country should have time to examine into the matter and bring pressure on the government to make better provision for the protection of the public in the future.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not object to the third reading, but the rules should be suspended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the rules be suspended as far as they relate to this Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I regret that the third reading of the Bill was not deferred until Tuesday. I presume that it is urgent: otherwise the leader of the government would not have pressed the third reading to-day. It is much to be regretted that the condition of things regarding the National Transcontinental railway is such that the country is subjected to a large loss without getting anything at all in return. It is no use entering into a criticism of the arrangement made between the Grand Trunk Pacific and the country when the scheme was first inaugurated and at the inception of its construction; but it is to be regretted that we should be called upon to meet this loss. I agree with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division that the government should immediately ask parliament to give them power to control the sale of the balance of those bonds. If necessary, they should have power to take them over and hold them until they can be sold at par. In the face of the decision of the Privy Council in England regarding the responsibility of the Dominion for the deficit created in the sale of these bonds, I think it would be a prudent and proper act on the part of parliament to clothe the government with power to control the sale of the balance of them. I hope they will not allow the company to sell the balance at a sacrifice, or a considerable reduction. In the face of this decision we might be called upon to pass another Bill like this one to meet a further deficit. It is greatly to be regretted that in connection with this important undertaking such an unfortunate bungle should have occurred, whoever is responsible for it. If the provision of the agreement were all that could be reasonably expected on behalf of the Minister of Justice and the government acting at the time, we had better in the future, if contracts of this kind are to be made, insert a clause in them providing that no further appeal shall be allowed to the Privy Council in any dispute between any person or corporation and the government regarding such contracts as this.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It affords me much gratification to find that there is another voice in the Senate able and willing to express the opinions of the country in regard to this matter. Of course, I understand that the government of the day is not responsible for the Bill that is now before parliament; but the House should give the government to understand that in the future they will be held responsible for a recurrence of this condition of things. The leader of the House is a faithful guardian of the interests of Canada, and I am sure will see that his influence on this question shall be felt in the Council Chamber. It is only right that the government should be advised in these matters. Since this debate has started, I am informed that should anything occur to involve the company in ruin, we should have to redeem the bonds at par. The situation is a serious one. I do not look at it from a political or a party point of view, but from a financial point of view. I sincerely hope that although the Bill has got its third reading, the leader of the government in this House will press on his colleagues the advisability —even the necessity of providing some legislation to prevent a recurrence of this state of affairs.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sure the government is keenly alive to the importance of the subject which the hon. gentleman has pointed out to the House.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed, under suspension of the rules.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (C 2) An Act respecting the British Canadian Loan and investment Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (D 2) An Act respecting the Alberta, Peace River and Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Davis.

Bill (E 2) An Act to incorporate the Ottawa and Lake McGregor Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (G 2) An Act for the relief of William Holloway Adams.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (H 2) An Act to incorporate the Guarantee Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Farrell.

Bill (I 2) An Act respecting the British Columbia and Dawson Railway Company. —Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (J 2) An Act respecting the Vancouver, Fraser Valley and Southern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (F 2) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL inquired:

1. In what year did the government of Canada first grant bounties for the production of iron and steel?
2. How much bounty was given per ton for each year?
3. Have the bounties been discontinued, and if so, when?
4. What was the total amount of money paid out for the production of iron and steel in bounties and the names and amount paid to each firm or individual in each year?
5. Is it the intention of the government to renew the bounty, and if so, for how much per ton?
6. If the government decide to renew the bounties on iron and steel, will they also grant bounties for other manufactured goods for export to foreign countries, such, for instance, as flour, agricultural implements, farmers' products, such as beef, cattle, grain, &c., which would greatly stimulate the production of these goods and thus bring our exports up to more nearly balance our imports?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The reply is as follows:

1. Pig iron, 1883; steel, 1894.

2.—BOUNTIES ON PIG IRON.

—	—	Per ton.
		$ cts.
1883.
Vic. 46, chap. 14	Manufactured from Canadian ore between July 1, 1883, and June 30, 1886	1 50
	From July 1, 1886, to June 30, 1889	1 00
1886.
Vic. 49, chap. 38	Amended to $1.50 per ton to June 30, 1889	1 50
	From July 1, 1889, to June 30, 1892 (Canadian ore)	1 00
1890.
Vic. 53, chap. 22	From July 1, 1892, to June 30, 1897 (Canadian ore)	2 00
1894.
Vic. 57—58	From March 27, 1894, to March 26, 1899, and in the case of the products of any furnace which commences operations hereafter but prior to the 27th March, 1899, the said bounties shall be applicable to such products manufactured therein during a period of five years from the date of commencing operations (Canadian ore)	2 00

—	—	Canadian ore.	Foreign ore.
		$ cts.	$ cts.
1897.
Vic. 60, chap. 6	From June 28, 1897, to April 23, 1902	3 00	2 00
1899.
Vic. 62-63	From April 23, 1902, to July 1, 1903	2 70	1 80
	From July 1, 1903, to July 1, 1904	2 25	1 65
	From July 1, 1904, to July 1, 1905	1 65	1 10
	From July 1, 1905, to July 1, 1906	1 05	0 70
1903.	From July 1, 1906, to July 1, 1907	0 60	0 40
3 Edward VII, chap. 68. (Amending 62-63 Vic., chap. 6.)	From June 30, 1903, to July 1, 1904	2 70	1 80
	From June 30, 1904, to July 1, 1905	2 25	1 65
	From July 1, 1905, to July 1, 1906	1 65	1 10
	From June 30, 1906, to July 1, 1907	1 05	0 70
1906.
6-7 Edward VII, chap. 24.	For calendar year 1907	2 10	1 10
	" " 1908	2 10	1 10
	" " 1909	1 70	0 70
	" " 1910	0 90	0 40

—	—	Per ton.
1907.	On pig iron manufactured from Canadian ore by the process of	$ cts.
6-7 Edward VII, (a),	electric smelting during the calendar year—
	1909	2 10
	1910	2 10
	1911	1 70
	1912	0 90
	Bounties on Steel Billets.
1894.	Manufactured from pig iron made in Canada from Canadian ore and	$ cts.
Vic. 57-58, chap. 9	other ingredients manufactured from March 27, 1894, to March 26, 1899	2 00
	And in the case of the products of any furnace which commences operations hereafter but prior to March 27, 1899, the said bounties shall be applicable to such products manufactured therein during a period of five years from the date of commencing operations. Regulations dated June 22, 1895.
	Steel Ingots.
1897.
Vic. 60-61, chap. 6	From June 30, 1897, to April 23, 1902	3 00
1899.
Vic. 62-63, chap. 8	From April 23, 1902, to July 1, 1903	2 70
	From June 30, 1903, to July 1, 1904	2 25
	From June 30, 1904, to July 1, 1905	1 65
	From June 30, 1905, to July 1, 1906	1 05
	From June 30, 1906, to July 1, 1907	0 60
1903.
(Amending 62-63 Vic., chap. 8). 3 Edward VII chap. 68.	From June 30, 1903, to July 1, 1904	2 70
	" " 1904, " 1905	2 25
	" " 1905, " 1906	1 65
	" " 1906, " 1907	1 05
	Steel.
1907.
6-7 Edward VII, chap. 24.	For calendar year 1907	1 65
	" " 1908	1 64
	" " 1909	1 05
	" " 1910	0 60
1907.	(b). On steel manufactured by electric process direct from Canadian ore, and on steel manufactured by electric process from pig iron smelted in Canada by electricity from Canadian ore during the calendar year :—
	1909	1 65
	1910	1 65
	1911	1 05
	1912	0 60
	Iron Puddled Bars.
1894.
Vic. 57-58, chap. 9.	From March 26, 1894, to March 27, 1899 (Order in Council dated March 5, 1896).	2 00
1897.
Vic. 60-61, chap. 6.	From June 28, 1897, to April 23, 1902	3 60
1899.
Vic. 62-63, chap. 8.	From April 23, 1902, to July 1, 1903	2 70
	From June 30, 1903, to July 1, 1904	2 25
	" " 1904, " 1905	1 65
	" " 1905, " 1906	1 05
	" " 1906, " 1907	0 60
1903.
(Amending 62-63 Vic., chap. 8). 3 Edward VII, chap. 68.	From June 30, 1903, to July 1, 1904	2 70
	" " 1904, " 1905	2 25
	" " 1905, " 1906	1 65
	" " 1906, " 1907	1 05
1907.
6-7 Edward VII, chap. 24.	Calendar year 1907	1 65
	" 1908	1 65
	" 1909	1 05
	" 1910	0 60

—	—	Per Ton.
	Wire Rods of Iron or Steel, &c.	$ cts.
1903. 3 Edward VII, chap. 68.	Rolled round wire rods, not more than $\frac{3}{8}$ inch in diameter, &c	6 00
1904. Chap. 39.	Amendment "or when used", to allow bounties to be paid when for use in their own factories.
1907. 6-7 Edward VII, chap. 24.	Repealing 3 Edward VII, chap. 68. Rolled round wire rods not more than $\frac{3}{8}$ inch in diameter, &c., made after December 31, 1906	6 00
1910. 9-10 Edward VII, chap. 33.	Repealing 6-7 Edward VII, chap. 24, from June 30, 1911.

Rolled Angles, Beams and other Rolled Shapes, not round, square, oval or flat, weighing not less than 35 pounds per lineal yard and Rolled Plates over 30 inches wide and not less than $\frac{1}{4}$ inch in diameter.

—	—	Per ton.
		$ cts.
1903. 3 Edward VII, chap. 68.		3 00
1904. Chap. 39.	Amendment "or when used" to allow bounties to be paid when for use in their own factories.
1907. 6-7 Edward VII, chap. 24.	Repealed December 31, 1906.

3. Answered by No. 2.

	1884.	1885.	1886.	1887.	1888.
	$	$	$	$	$
Londonderry Iron Company	38,213	31,762	33,696	53,197	7,701
John McDougall & Company	4,032	5,783	5,357	5,239	5,756
George McDougall				1,140	1,214
Steel Company of Canada (Londonderry in liquidation)					18,643
Hall Bros.	1,845	1,110	217
Totals	44,090	38,655	39,270	59,576	33,314

—	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.
	$	$	$	$	$
Canada Iron Furnace Company				2,151	12,973
Londonderry Iron Company	30,627	21,586	15,850	26,066	49,906
John McDougall & Company	5,498	3,588	2,926	2,077	3,726
New Glasgow Iron, Coal & Railway Co.					25,871
Pictou Charcoal Iron Company					1,420
George McDougall	1,109	523	1,377
Totals	37,234	25,697	20,153	30,294	93,896

—	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.
	$	$	$	$	$
Canada Iron Furnace Co	15,077	12,582	11,215	14,211	21,804
Grantham Iron Works			3,356
Hamilton Iron & Steel Co			7,202
Londonderry Iron Co	49,043	13,046	45,472	9,985	2,123
Nova Scotia Steel Company			101,970	55,017	61,171
John McDougall & Company	5,655	621			5,112
New Glasgow Iron, Coal & Railway Co	55,269	33,695
Pictou Charcoal Iron Company		3,440
Ontario Rolling Mills Company				104	5,582
Hamilton Blast Furnace Company				7,576	90,610
Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., Ltd					54,412
Totals	125,044	63,384	169,215	86,893	240,814

—	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.
	$	$	$	$	$
Canada Iron Furnace Co	20,481	18,235	75,784	98,449	87,472
Ontario Rolling Mills Company	17,511	1,201
Hamilton Blast Furnace Company	96,070	107,010
Hamilton Steel & Iron Co., Ltd		8,921	167,469	223,057	148,276
Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., Ltd	138,756	137,522	138,458	95,956	132,861
John McDougall & Company	812	5,485	2,379	3,027	5,244
Deseronto Iron Company	6,480	27,026	27,470	22,532	18,675
Mineral Products Co., Pictou, N.S		7,478
Electric Reduction Co., Buckingham, Que			1,173	169
Dominion Iron & Steel Co., Ltd			55,286	347,901	960,980
Algoma Steel Co., Ltd., Sault Ste. Marie, Ont					48,297
Totals	280,110	312,778	468,020	791,090	1,401,805

—	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907 (9 mos.)	1908.
	$	$	$	$	$
Canada Iron Furnace Co	86,905	70,321	40,256	28,793	51,213
Hamilton Steel & Iron Co., Ltd	165,445	187,994	206,839	125,678	222,490
Londonderry Iron & Mining Co., Ltd	28,666	44,696	51,525	28,506	37,442
Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., Ltd	134,099	131,246	187,693	93,711	181,436
John McDougall & Company	5,029	5,592	4,447	2,063	5,368
Deseronto Iron Company	18,409	16,841	13,664	2,599	7,299
Electric Reduction Company	730	397		235
Dominion Iron & Steel Co., Ltd	468,134	676,880	957,337	669,043	1,228,915
Algoma Steel Company, Ltd		404,956	535,190	348,292	534,026
Montreal Rolling Mills Co	1,545	1,280	7,387	881
Lake Superior Iron & Steel Co					17,501
Ontario Iron & Steel Company					252
Atikokan Iron Company					17,211
Totals	908,962	1,540,203	2,004,338	1,299,801	2,303,153

—	1909.	1910.	1911.
Algoma Steel Co. Ltd	304,789	318,815	165,124
Atikokan Iron Co. Ltd	.....	15,100	15,487
Canada Iron Corporation, Midland, Ont	49,264	31,936	17,417
" " Drummondville, Que	3,826	520	1,584
" " Radnor Forges, Que	3,742	7,692
Dominion Iron and Steel Co	1,067,529	1,029,504	766,340
Hamilton Steel and Iron Co. Ltd	252,311	238,408	101,429
Lake Superior Iron and Steel Co	45,891	54,628	15,452
Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Co. Ltd	130,375	97,346	51,529
Ontario Iron and Steel Co	6,887	4,464
Standard Chemical Co., Deseronto	.....	10,120	4,386
Totals	1,864,614	1,808,533	1,138,748

Total bounties paid on:

Pig iron	$7,707,648
Puddled iron bars	113,673
Steel	6,706,990
Manufactures of steel	2,701,373
	$17,228,684

5 and 6. It is not the custom to make any announcement in a matter of this kind except in the Budget Speech.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Can the hon. leader of the government give us any information as to when the return to an address of the Senate for the correspondence re the carriage of mail between Canada and the old country and Canada and the United States will be brought down?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am under the impression it has been brought down, but whether it has been placed on the table, or whether I have it, I cannot say, but I shall make inquiry.

LAND GRANTS TO SOUTH AFRICAN OFFICERS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) inquired:

If the claims of the following medical men who served in the South African war to land grants or other special recognition for such services similar to that of others who were rewarded for their services in the same campaign have come to the notice of the government?

Should such claims be presented to the notice of the government, will they receive due consideration:—

F. B. Carron, Brockville; Major C. A. Peters, Montreal; N. N. Blanchard, Sunderland, Ontario; C. M. Rolston, Duncans, Vancouver Island; F. C. McTavish, Vancouver; L. C. Price, Moncton, New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the cases are submitted to the government, proper consideration will be given to them. I understand they have not been submitted as yet.

REPORTS OF INQUIRY COMMISSIONERS.

MOTION.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General, praying that His Royal Highness will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all orders in council under which any persons have been appointed to conduct any inquiries, together with copies of all letters addressed to them in reference thereto, and of all reports received from them, with any evidence they may have taken.

He said: I might remind my hon. friend, the leader of the House, that the names of the commissioners were not all given to me when I moved for the return which he brought down the other day.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have made an inquiry in regard to that, and find that it involves making a search in every department of the government, and may take some little time, but I hope to have the remaining names very shortly.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—This motion asks for orders in council under which any persons have been appointed, &c. By reference to the Debates of this House, under date 22nd instant, it will be seen, by order in council dated November 30, 1911, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was authorized to appoint a commissioner to inquire into the management and discipline of the government shipyard at Sorel.

Under an order in council dated December 13, 1911, the Minister of Public Works was authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges against officials of the Department of Public Works—interference in politics and otherwise.

By order in council dated December 16, 1911, the Minister of Agriculture was authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges against officials of the Department of Agriculture—interference in politics and otherwise.

By order in council dated December, 20, 1911, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was authorized to appoint commissioners to inquire into charges of political partisanship against officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the province of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island.

I move an amendment, with the hon. senator's consent, that the following words be added to his motion:

Also the names of all commissioners appointed, first, by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries under order in Council 2740, dated 30th December, 1911; second, the names of all commissioners appointed by the Minister of Public Works under order in council 2837, dated 13th December, 1911; third, under order in council, by the Minister of Agriculture, dated 16th December, 1911, numbered 2862; fourth, by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in virtue of order in council No. 2915, dated 20th December, 1911, and, fifth, by virtue of order in council, by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, No. 2929, dated 22nd December, 1911.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it good practice to amend a notice of motion. It should be a separate motion, unless my hon. friend desires to accept it as an addendum to his motion.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have no objection to accept it as an addendum to my motion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It strikes me as unique that an amendment should be made to a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the leader of the House is a little in error. This is not a notice of motion; it is a motion now, and every motion that is made can be amended.

The SPEAKER—This is an amendment to a motion already made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When was it made?

The SPEAKER—It has just been made by the right hon. the leader of the opposition, and the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry now proposes to amend that motion by adding certain words.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My right hon. friend has made his motion. He surely is entitled to move it in whatever form he pleases. It seems to me that is another notice of motion; however, I do not wish to be technical about it.

The SPEAKER—In my opinion, the hon. gentleman is quite in order. He can make any amendment he likes to the motion, without giving notice of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to and the motion, as amended, was adopted.

THE LATE SENATOR MILLER.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before we proceed with the orders of the day, it is my sad duty to make reference to the death, within the last few days, of our late colleague, the Hon. Mr. Miller. He was the senior member of this Chamber, having served in the Senate of Canada for a longer period than any previous senator or any living senator. He was appointed to this House by Royal Proclamation in 1867, and was the last surviving senator appointed by imperial authority. The late Mr. Miller, in his days of strength and vigour, was, undoubtedly, a most useful and distinguished member of this Chamber. From 1883 to 1887 he filled the Speaker's Chair in a most distinguished manner, and with great acceptability to the Chamber. He was recognized as one of the foremost parliamentarians of Canada. His opinion upon any question of procedure, or upon any constitutional question had very great weight. I need not remind hon. gentlemen who have been in this Chamber for many years that at one time the late Mr. Miller was one of the most forceful debaters that we had upon the floor of this Chamber. He was a man of intense feeling, of great verility of thought, and spoke with feeling and emphasis, and authority upon whatever subject he discussed. Canada is undoubtedly indebted to the late senator for the very active part which he took in the early movement for the confederation of the four provinces. It is very doubtful if confederation would have been carried at that time had it not been for the eminent services rendered by our late colleague. Mr. Miller belonged to a group of very distinguished public men who came from his native province of Nova Scotia, and to whom the Dominion of Canada is very greatly indebted for the public services which they rendered, not only in the preconfederation days, but since that time. That province has been peculiarly honoured in the history of Canada for the statesmanship, the political sagacity and the public services rendered to the Dominion by its public men. I have no doubt that when the history of confederation and of the Dominion of Canada comes to be written in the near future, after party strife and bitterness have disappeared, the late Senator Miller will appear in that history as one of the prominent builders of the national edifice of which we are all proud, I feel assured in saying that this Chamber will join in this last tribute of respect and appreciation to the memory of a man who was the last of the senators appointed by Royal Proclamation, who was the senior member of this body, and who, in the strength and vigour of his lifetime, was looked upon by everybody who knew him as an eminent parliamentarian, and one of our most distinguished public men.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Death has been rather busy in this Chamber of late. If I remember right, our friend, Mr. Miller, is the fourth we have lost within the space of as many months. Two of the gentlemen, himself and Sir John Carling, were men who had played very important parts in former years in the history of this country, and I entirely agree with my hon. friend opposite in thinking that in Mr. Miller's case we have lost a man who had done very good service, indeed to the commonwealth during the time he sat in the parliament of his native province. I had not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Miller in earlier years, when he was able to take a more active part in the affairs of this House and elsewhere than he did latterly; but I saw and heard enough of him to realize that in his time Mr. Miller must have been an extremely valuable acquisition to this Chamber as a parliamentary authority. As my hon. friend has said, he is the last link, as far as the Senate is concerned, at any rate, between the men of 1867 and the present time, and I entirely agree with my hon. friend in thinking that every member of this House will unite with him in regretting the loss we have sustained, and in conveying the sympathy of this House to his relatives, both here and elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I regret exceedingly the reason for this beautiful wreath being placed on this desk beside me. I have known Mr. Miller for the last forty years. He was always a courteous and able gentleman, a good friend, a man very useful to the country and very well up in parliamentary practice, and his death is a great loss to the country. I regret exceedingly his departure from amongst us.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to say a few words about the late Mr. Miller. I think that perhaps what I say may have a little additional weight because it happens that, unfortunately, the personal relations between the deceased senator and myself were not always of the most cordial character. As has been stated by the hon. leader of the House, Mr. Miller was Speaker of the Senate from 1883 to 1887. He filled the chair, and discharged his duty as Speaker in a very admirable way. He was, as has been pointed out, a very high authority on parliamentary procedure, and also on constitutional questions. After he had passed through the chair he did not take as active a part in the business of the House as at an earlier day; and not very long after he ceased to be Speaker, the defect in his hearing, which was so perceptible in late years, became rather marked, and it was difficult and awkward for him to take part in the debates of the House. But hon. gentlemen can have very little idea of how vigorous and able a speaker he was in his palmy days. That is just the one point I wish to make, that of late years, owing to the defect in his hearing, he practically took no part in the business of the House; but in the earlier days, particularly before he became Speaker, he took a very prominent and active part in everything that went on in the House, and was a useful member and a very formidable opponent to those who happened to differ from him.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 76) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 97) An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 103) An Act to amend the Government Works Tolls Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 104) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (No. 111) An Act to authorize the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (M) An Act respecting certain patents of the Continental Can Company.—Hon. Mr. Bell.

EZRA BUTLER EDDY BESSEY BILL

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS moved the third reading of Bill (K) An Act to change the name of Ezra Butler Eddy Bessey.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time.

On the motion that the bill do now pass.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to say I do not think this Bill is of such importance as to warrant me making a motion, as it was reported by the committee. I did not happen to be at the meeting of the committee when the Bill was considered, but I must say it is a Bill which is clearly outside of the jurisdiction of this honourable House. I doubt very much if it will be a credit to the Senate to send a Bill of this kind to the other Chamber. However, I do not deem it advisable to make a motion.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—If there ever was a measure affecting civil rights it is this Bill to change a man's name. That is the sort of legislation for which the provincial legislatures exist. This Bill should certainly not pass.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The Bill was passed in the committee against my strong protest, which I have the honour to renew here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I supported the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) in protesting against passing such a Bill, which I think comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the province.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite concur with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that there is very considerable doubt as to whether it is a Bill that should come before parliament; but it happens that in this particular case there are very considerable property interests concerned both in the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec; and very distinguished jurisconsults, as I understand, have expressed the opinion that for that reason, on account of the properties being situated in different provinces, the safest course was to have an Act passed by parliament. For that reason I for one should not vote against the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I was present at the committee when this matter was discussed, and according to the will of the late Mr. Eddy, the petitioner was obliged to change his name within two years. The Bill was brought in last year; but owing to the dissolution of parliament it did not pass. The two years will be up in a very short time, before they could get an Act passed by the local legislature, and in the meantime the opinion of the late Minister of Justice, Sir Allen Aylesworth, was taken on this question, and his advice was that a Bill should be sought in the House of Commons and the Senate. Considering the large amount of vested interests involved in the matter, the fact that the time has now pretty nearly elapsed, and it would be impossible to go to the legislature for legislation, it was thought that the Senate should pass this Bill, and the committee reported it unanimously.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The difficulty with me is that this legislation is so absolutely ultra vires of the federal authority that it could be quashed before any court of justice. I wonder in what light we would appear if such a procedure were taken and it was found on a clear issue that the Senate and the House of Commons had gone beyond their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—But the Minister of Justice, Sir Allen Aylesworth, advised this course.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Did the hon. gentleman see that opinion? That statement has been made repeatedly, and I do not think it is doing justice to Sir Allen Aylesworth to make it, if the hon. gentleman has not seen the opinion. I doubt very much if he has given that opinion.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I did not see the opinion, but the hon. gentleman who was prosecuting this case was before the committee, and he assured the committee that he had seen the opinion, and that he had read it. I do not think he would have made such a statement unless it were true.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—What advantage would it be to these people to pass this Bill if it left it open to any party to say that it was ultra vires and was not any good?

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—This Bill happens to stand in my name. The young man Bessey has been left a considerable inheritance on the condition that he changes his name from Bessey to Eddy. My opinion is that it is perfectly within the rights of any man, in any of the provinces except possibly the province of Quebec, to change his name of his own motion; and the sole reason, as I understand, for the young man coming here is that it is somewhat a large matter, involving interests, as has been stated, in various provinces, and it is important that the greatest possible publicity be given to the changing of his name. It is always desirable in the case of a man engaged in large undertakings, on changing his name, that there should be some public record of the change. What possible interest can be injured by parliament, the highest authority in Canada, passing this Act? Would hon. gentlemen put the petitioner to the trouble of going to another legislature because they think he should go there? Is it worth while? He takes all the risk that has been mentioned. I venture to say he takes no risk. If he does take a risk, and if any injuries accrue as a consequence, he alone would suffer.

It seems to me that there is no civil right involved; I cannot see that he has not the right to go anywhere to have his name changed. He has a right to change his name, and he simply asks parliament, the highest authority in the country, to put on record that change of name, that is all. It does not affect or injure anybody. I ask hon. gentlemen not to throw out this Bill, but to let it pass.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think we are wasting time over this matter. Change of name, as everybody knows, occurs every day in England and elsewhere when any property is in question. Scores of friends of mine, on getting a piece of property, have changed their names and nobody makes any objection to it. If this gentleman made a mistake in coming to us, the courts can deal with it. I do not think we need refuse to pass the Bill after it has gone through all the stages, and when it will go through the House of Commons.

The motion carried on a division, and the Bill passed.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 19) 'An Act to amend the Inquiries Act'.

(In Committee.)

Hon. Mr. POWER—Although my notice of amendment stands on the notice paper after that given by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, inasmuch as it affects the earlier part of the Bill, I hope the committee will not object to taking it up now. If my hon. friend from Toronto has no objection I move to amend this Bill as follows:

Line 14—Before 'qualified' insert 'other'

Line 15—After 'into' strike out 'and report to the commissioners upon'; and Line 22—After 'inquiry' insert 'and such persons shall report the evidence and their findings (if any) thereon to the commissioners'.

If the committee will bear with me for a minute, I shall explain why these amendments are proposed. Take line 14 of the Bill: it reads 'Engineers, technical advisers or other experts, or any qualified person. Now the word 'other' is inserted so as to provide that the qualified persons shall be persons of some standing of the same class, as accountants, engineers, or other experts. And further, if we did not put in the word 'other' there, when you come down to 'such persons' in line 17, it might be held that the power to do the things, which power is given to them to do, could be done only by the persons, not by the accountants, engineers, technical officers, &c. In order to remove any doubt I propose to put in the word 'other' before 'person' and to make the other changes. Now in line 15, after 'into', strike out 'and report to the commissioners appointed. The reason for striking out these words is that they are brought in more properly at the end of the clause. Then at the end, after 'inquiry' insert 'and such persons shall report the evidence, and their findings, if any, thereon to the commissioner.' The object of this one, I have no doubt, will commend itself to the House generally; because, where an accountant, or engineer, or technical adviser, is selected by the commissioners to take evidence, it is very desirable and necessary that the evidence should be preserved, and that the parties interested, and the public should have an opportunity of seeing upon what evidence these inferior officers have proceeded. I think that must strike every one as being a desirable thing, and therefore this amendment proposes that the sub-commissioners, if one may call them so shall report the evidence, and their findings, if any, to the commission; otherwise we might have reports made as to the propriety of which we should never be in a position to judge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no objection to it so long as it goes in properly.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I desire to qualify the amendment of which I have given notice, and to make it read as follows:

Every commissioner appointed under part II of this Act, and every person engaged as accountant, engineer, technical adviser or other expert under the provisions of this Act, shall be incapable of being appointed to or holding any office, place or employment in the nomination, gift or control of the Crown or of the Governor General of Canada until after the expiration of two years after the report of such commissioner shall have been made.

I hope with that qualification and alteration the hon. gentleman will be able to see his way to accept the amendment. At the time I gave the notice of the amendment, my hon. friend, on behalf of the government, was not willing to accept it, and suggested that the Bill would be withdrawn if my amendment were adopted. I have no desire to embarrass the government in the matter, or to attempt to impose upon the statute an unreasonable or unsatisfactory provision. It appeared to me that so far from this being objectionable to the government, they would have embraced the opportunity to accept it, because it would have relieved them from a good deal of responsibility with reference to the persons who might become appointees of persons who are not their nominees, but are appointees of the commissioners appointed by the government, in other words the sub-commissioners, if one may use that name, although they are clothed with the same full authority that is given to the commissioners. While the commissioners may find it convenient to delegate their powers to what we may call the sub-commissioners, for the purpose of describing them,—to experts in various lines,—but who will be clothed with authority, it did seem to me that it would be a relief to the government, if, in appointing them, they were appointed, not from political exigency, not because of some party service they may have rendered the government for some employment, but that the commissioners would appoint them by reason of some special qualification which these persons would have for the purpose of investigating more thoroughly and completely the particulars than the commissioners themselves could do. In other words, supposing the commissioner were a professional man appointed by the government, he might have no knowledge or intimacy with the keeping of accounts, and it might put him in such an embarrassing position that he would be unable to appreciate, or grasp, the special dealing with this particular account of which it was important that he should have some knowledge, and, therefore, he would delegate the same to a sub-commissioner for investigation, or it might be to an engineer, if it became a question where special engineering skill was necessary. Now, neither one of the three commissioners appointed to do that work might be able to grapple with the difficulty, and it appeared to me it would relieve the government very much if these people selected as sub-commissioners were persons who were not looking for or pressing upon the government claims by way of reward beyond the compensation paid to them for the work. It would entirely relieve the government of responsibility which might be imposed upon them by the commissioners who were appointed by them—and for whose work, in fact, the government must assume the responsibility—if these sub-commisioners are to be selected by the commissioners from amongst a group of applicants for government situations. If there is one thing more prominent than another in the British mind—and I mean by that to include the Canadian mind—it is the desire to see fair-play and just treatment meted out to everybody. I think it is the duty of the government to see that nothing is done which may, in fact, be foul play instead of fair-play, or which may be unjust, and which may be done by persons because of over-zeal or a desire to gratify their own animosity. Under those circumstances, it appears to me that, on consideration, the government will find that if they are relieved from responsibility in respect to the sub-commissioners, they will be in a better position. The sub-commissioners ought to be people who will understand they are not working for another man's office, that they are not endeavouring to create a vacancy in order that they might themselves be appointed. They are not appointees of the government, but the appointees of the commissioners.

If they are known to be pressing claims or seeking positions, or looking for public appointment, or pressing upon the party, or public, that they should receive patronage in some way, and are appointed, the public will at once view that inquiry with alarm, and say, 'This is not British justice, and the ministers ought not to countenance such a thing'; but with this amendment the answer will be, 'These men are disinterested applicants, but by virtue of their acceptance of this position they become disqualified for appointment to another position. I am not going to take the responsibility as to what shall be done in this matter. The responsibility is with the government. They come here and say, 'We want amendments to the Inquiry Act. We desire to be in a position to prosecute this matter to the hilt, and therefore we want the power to appoint experts, and every assistance to the commissioners, and clothe them with all the authority of commissioners—not that we appoint them, but we will enable our commissioners to appoint them, and give them the same powers.' It will relieve them very much if they say when these men are employed, 'At the same time you understand that by accepting this position you are doing it with a disqualification for future appointment for a term of two years.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Does the hon. gentleman stick to the five years?

Hon. Mr. KERR—That may be too long a term. I have proposed to shorten it, and provide that they shall not be eligible for appointment for two years. I appeal to the government whether it is not an advantage to them. I am seeking it in the public interest alone. They are responsible in determining what is to be for the public advantage or gain. If they say that the passing of the amendment will oblige them to withdraw the Bill altogether, then I will not press my motion; but it seems to me that that carries with it the statement, 'There is a group of men looking for employment. We cannot give them positions now because they are filled, but we can appoint them at $30 a day, or whatever it may be, to dig a hole for some office holder, to be as a grave for him, and then we will let the sub-commissioners investigating him occupy the position. It seems to me that instead of being regarded as objectionable, it should be accepted as being of considerable advantage to the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Possibly my hon. friend's attention has not been directed to the law as it at present stands upon the statute-book. For many years the law has been as we find it in the Bill before us, so far as part 2 of the Act is concerned. The law has been the same for many years, in fact it has come down to us from a former revision of the statute, that under part 2 of the Act power was given to the commissioners to delegate authority to sub-commissioners for the purpose of taking evidence, and for such purposes as are now contemplated in the Bill. I will read the Act as it is to-day. Section 9 of chapter 104 of the Inquiries Act reads as follows:

> If, by reason of the distance at which any person whose evidence is desired resides from the place where his attendance is required, or for any other cause, the commissioner or commissioners deem it advisable, they may issue a commission or other authority to any officer or person therein named, empowering him to take such evidence and to report the same to him or them.

Then it goes on to state how and what they shall do. This was the law under the late government. I have not heard of any representations that the former government abused the authority vested in them under the Inquiries Act. Why should we, therefore, view with alarm the possibility of an unreasonable exercise of such a power? I think I have only to appeal to every hon. gentleman in this Chamber that it would be unreasonable in the extreme to say that any commissioner acting under part 2 of the Act, or any person acting as adviser, accountant or other officer, should be debarred from holding any office, place or employment in the nomination, gift or control of the government until after the expiration of two years after the report of such commissioner shall have been made. It would engraft upon the present law a disqualification of all such experts as I have mentioned. We surely must entrust the government with the administration of the public works of this country. We entrust the government with the administration of the entire revenue of the country, which now exceeds one hundred million dollars, and I do not think that any government, I care not whether it be this or any other government, is going to be so recreant to its trust as to abuse a simple power such as this, and, furthermore, I think we should have more confidence in the integrity and ability of the people of Canada who would be called to serve upon a commission of this kind—that is to say the accountants, engineers, technical advisers and experts—than to penalize (because it means penalizing) this class of men from acting upon commissions because of the fact that they would not exercise fair play in the discharge of the duties entrusted to them. I care not whether a man be a bitter partisan or not, when you place upon his shoulders responsibilities, particularly of a quasi judicial character, he almost invariably discharges the duties of the office fairly. I have the greatest confidence in my fellowman, that he will discharge these duties just as faithfully and with the same sense of fair play and justice as if he had never been in politics.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Great is my hon. friend's faith. There is a faith that can move mountains, and there is also a faith that can swallow them, and he desires us to exercise the latter in expecting that bitter partisans wil be transferred by a royal commisioner into impartial judges. I state most expressly and explicitly, speaking I believe for the Liberals in this House and the Liberal party generally, that we have not the slightest desire to hamper or impede the fullest investigation possible. We court and desire it, but I add two conditions: we desire it on the condition, first of all, that the parties who may be accused shall have full notice of the charge brought against them, and, in the next place, that they shall be tried before an impartial tribunal. I am quite sure my hon. friend, in his personal capacity, will not object to these two propositions, nor do I think he will object to my definition of an impartial tribunal. As I understand an impartial tribunal, it must have at least three qualifications. First of all, the accusers should in no case be the judges. In the next place, the judges, whoever they may be, should be persons free from bias, and I do not share my hon. friend's optimistic view that political partisans fresh from a contest are likely to be free from bias. I have had a longer experience in public life than he, and I think I can assure him that I would not entrust myself to act on such a commission, much less the gentlemen whom he is likely to appoint.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would place full reliance on the right hon. gentleman's sense of justice in a matter of this kind.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I say no political partisan is likely to be without bias in dealing with a political opponent. In the third place, no tribunal can be said to be properly impartial, if the men who form it are likely or expect to receive favours from either of the litigants before them. My hon. friend will hardly gainsay any of these propositions. I appeal to him, not in his position as representative of the government in this Chamber, but as senator from Calgary, and as such senator, I am quite sure he will agree with me, although he could not, as the mouth-piece of a set of colleagues, who are, some of them, I fear, no better than they should be—and I am sertain the hon. gentleman who site beside him (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) would heartily endorse that view, at least as regards one of them.

I have not, I admit, the most implicit confidence in what these hon. gentlemen may do. That may be prejudice on my part. Practically speaking, what are we doing? My hon. friends know perfectly well that to a very considerable extent this is an attempt to impeach the late administration. I have no objection in the world that they should impeach the late administration; but I say there is a proper way to do it. If they want to impeach the late administration, they should bring specific charges against them on the floor of parliament. After having done that, if the parties are not able to clear themselves, or if there is a dispute on questions of fact, they have two courses before them. They can refer the matter to a committee of the House, or they can refer it to a really impartial tribunal formed of judges of the land or, let us say, by parties approved by both Houses of parliament, and I assure my hon. friend that we shall not be too particular, if he will send us any gentlemen of reasonably good character, and free from the imputation of being partisans we will not be too particular in accepting them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The right hon. gentleman will be safe in the hands of whoever we appoint.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There are three courses open: there is the strictly British course, and I recommend it for his consideration. The lower House are always entitled to impeach ministers before the upper House; suppose they try that. I am afraid my hon. friend is neither disposed to bring his charges, and his colleagues are not disposed to bring charges before a committee on which both sides would be represented, or to follow the English precedents.

The singular thing about this whole matter is this; specific charges have not been preferred, and are not likely to be preferred, in my opinion. On the contrary, this Act is being abused and as the returns I think sufficiently show, a great number of fishing enquiries are being made which were not intended to be instituted under the Act. The Act was intended to provide for cases where strong prima facie evidence of misdoing was brought out and where it was desirable for various purposes that the officers of the department should be freed from the necessity of going great distances to examine witnesses. I take it that the motives of the government in this matter have been of a two-fold character. I have had experience, as well as my hon. friend, of the difficulty which governments, and particularly new governments have of satisfying the rapacious hordes of camp followers who always make their appearance on such occasions. Perhaps both things have occurred in the present case. Hon. gentlemen are desirous of giving sops to this hungry horde, so well described by Mr. Osler in certain statements which appeared at length in the government journals as well as ours; and their second object, not a very good object either, is to fish up evidence against their predecessors. If they have specific charges to make, let them be made and let such charges be referred, if they see fit, to committees or to tribunals, constituted as I have indicated.

If the late government had pleased when they came into office some fifteen years ago, they could have, without the slightest trouble, instituted a great number of inquiries, and on very much better grounds than hon. gentlemen are instituting them now. There are men in this House who, I dare say, remember the case of Mr. Thos. McGreevy; and they remember that when the late government came into power, if they had chosen, they were in a position, not on bare suspicion, but on positive knowledge, to have obtained the fullest and most perfect evidence of sins of their predecessors during a period of at least thirteen years. I am not going to pursue that matter now; but I am going to point out to the hon. gentleman that the late government, whatever their faults may have been, decided not to pursue such course; they said, 'It is the better way to take Canada out of the slough of despond in which Canada was floundering in 1896. They applied themselves in the first place to stopping the exodus. They applied themselves to developing the Northwest. They broke up the monopoly which was choking the life out of that country. They allayed or removed the causes of friction between us and our great neighbour to the south. They gave Canada fifteen years of such prosperity as it had never enjoyed before, and as I strongly suspect Canada will not enjoy soon again, unless she succeeds in exorcising the evil spirits who have, I hope only temporarily, got control of her destinies. We did not avail ourselves of the opportunities which were in our hands of making a most terrible exposee of what had occurred during that period, and we did it for very good reasons. We did not desire to see the fair fame of Canada any further besmirched than it had been in former years. What have my hon. friend's colleagues been doing up to the present time? Their record is not exactly the same as ours. They have bestirred themselves I admit. They have, in the first place, carefully shirked initiating any legislation on the famous Ne Temere business, after abusing my right hon. friend Sir Wilfrid Laurier from one end of Ontario to the other, because he would not take any legislative action on the subject; but they have done more than that. They have shuffled and more than shuffled on their naval policy in a fashion which has made the very word destestable in the nostrils of their followers. They have done something. They have had two years to hatch out a naval policy, and, I see by the last 'Gazette,' they have succeeded in devising regulations for a brass band for the Canadian navy to be operated by fifteen or sixteen performers. I fear woefully out of tune, but warranted to play no airs which would be distasteful to Mr. Henri Bourassa or Armand Lavergne. In addition to that, they have been trying to dodge the Manitoba school question, which I do not think they will succeed in doing. They are also desirous of putting up a tariff screen, behind which the Associated Manufacturers' who put them where they are, can conspire to delude and plunder the people of Canada. I suppose both parties knew what they were best fitted for. We endeavoured, as far as we could, to resuscitate and revive Canada and restore her reputation. We gave our people a chance to regain self-respect. Hon. gentlemen opposite, taking council together, have decided, as these inquiries show, and as returns brought down show, to run a detective agency as being the work most congenial to their dispositions. I say that the open and honourable course to have taken in this matter was the course which was taken by my friend Mr. Huntingdon in respect to Sir John Macdonald many years ago, which was taken by Mr. Tarte in respect to Sir Hector Langevin, and that was taken by myself with respect to Mr. J. C. Rykert, and in that, I think, I was supported by my hon. friend from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell). If my hon. friend desires to impeach, the better way is not to send out a fishing commission, which some of these commissioners appear to be; the proper way is to impeach directly in open court. If they cannot face parliament with a sufficient amount of evidence, or face the courts, I do not think they ought to set to work to manufacture evidence. I trust that my hon. friend, on consideration, will see his way to accept the amendment offered by my hon. friend from Toronto. He ought to see for himself that it is in the interest of the government, that the men that they appoint should be men who are above suspicion. Otherwise the reports that they may bring forward will be of no particular value. Unless he appoints men such as I have indicated, either judges or men approved by both Houses of parliament, he cannot expect that their reports will be received with any degree of respect or favour, even by his own supporters in the country. It appears to me that the hon. gentlemen are doing a thing which, perhaps, they had not fully weighed, and which is likely to lead to very great injury to the state. They have appointed some fifty commissioners at an average of $20 a day, $15 salary and $5 living allowance. These men, in all human probability, will not give up so good a job in a hurry. I noticed that in the post office alone some nineteen of these gentlemen are to be appointed. For what purpose? To investigate all charges that have been made against little petty country postmasters having an annual income of thirty or forty dollars a year. Why, these nineteen men, in the course of a single week, would waste, taking into account the probable cost of the witnesses they will examine, twice as much as the total income of the parties on whom they are sitting in judgment. That is only one specimen of the various matters which the hon. gentleman has brought down in the return that I have just spoken of, judging from what I see of the parties who have been appointed commissioners. The hon. gentleman may perhaps do well to remember that the Senate is a co-ordinate branch of the legislature; that this Senate has powers quite equal to those of the other chamber except in money matters, and if these gentlemen proceed, as I fear they will proceed, under the circumstances, it may become the duty of the Senate to investigate the investigators, and to give them the sensation of being hunted as well as being hunters. I hope it will not come to that; but I give a fair notice to my hon. friend that the Senate will certainly feel it it's duty to keep a careful eye on the fifty gentlemen whom his colleagues have chosen to appoint on these several commissions. As for myself, as my hon. friend has said, the government have power to do very nearly as much under the old Act as they have under the present Bill, and therefore, if the government refuse to accept the amendment, I see nothing for it but to allow the Bill to go through.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand my hon. friend is going to insist upon his motion? Of course we are in the hands of the House; but under no consideration would the government accept an amendment of this character, to cut down the present Act, a law that has been on the statute for several years. It would only result, I might say to my hon. friend, in placing the Senate in a rather humiliating position, for this reason: I have no doubt that if the matter were put to a division at the present time, the Senate might possibly amend this Bill in accordance with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman who moved the motion; but the government or the House of Commons certainly could not consent or would not consent to a vote of want of confidence such as is necessarily expressed in this amendment. It means a want of confidence in their exercising a proper discretion in carrying out the law as it is at present upon the statute-book. It would only result in the Bill coming back to this Chamber again with the inquiry whether this Chamber should insist upon the amendment. I do not know whether my hon. friend wants to drive the Senate into a conference with the House of Commons. It would mean the dropping of the Bill, because the government would certainly drop the Bill rather than be handicapped by the amendment. This confidence should certainly be placed in the government the same as has been placed in former governments, the same as it is upon the statute-book of to-day. I furthermore say that not in the whole of our statutes will my hon. friend find anything to parallel this amendment. I know of no statute which penalizes the person who will do an act in accordance with public duty. It is purely an act of public duty. Under the Act as we have it to-day the commission can issue subpoenas and call before them any expert engineer, or accountant, or any one having technical knowledge of the subject before them, because the commissioners are exercising that power already vested in them by a statute. Is such an expert to be penalized for two years from occupying a public position.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I understood my hon. friend who moved the motion to say that he had no intention of doing that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should be very sorry to think my hon. friend would wish to place upon the statute-book a provision having that consequence; yet all one has to do is to read the amendment to see what the effect of it would be. Manifestly it would be to penalize any one engaged before the commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think my hon. friend explained that his intention was only to penalize them if they acted as sub-commissioners.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As it reads, I would point out to my hon. friend, it is not an amendment, but a substantive clause, 'Every commissioner appointed under part 2 of this Act, and every person engaged as an accountant engineer, technical adviser, or other experts under the provisions of this Act shall be incapable of being appointed to or holding office. The commission has power to issue subpoenas, in fact all the powers of a court to bring before them this class of evidence and assistance, and I should be very sorry to think that my hon. friend would seek to enforce upon such a class of witnesses a penalty such as is proposed by this amendment. I can only repeat that we want the law as it is to-day, and in addition we want to extend that law to part 1 of the Act as well as part 2. My hon. friend's amendment proposes to cut down the statute as it is to-day, and as it has been on the statute-book for probably twenty years. Surely the government should be vested with confidence in administering public affairs, particularly in inquiries of this kind, and are justified in asking this House to put in their hands the fullest possible machinery for the purpose of a thorough investigation. Furthermore, is it not one of the highest duties of the state that the government should be charged with investigating every public abuse which may possibly arise? There is no government so invulnerable that it would be utterly impossible for public abuse to rise under their administration. It is no reflection upon the administration of the government that public abuses enter into departments, and into public life. We have probably nothing more clearly established to-day in the history of our public life than that the minister who is responsible for the administration of a department does not profit by the many abuses and grievances which have built up colossal fortunes for others. I think one of the highest tributes than can be paid to the public life of Canada is that very few minister's have profited financially from the administration of their departments. We know it is the contractors and the camp followers, and those who lay down distinct lines for the purpose of profit, by reason of their connection with these departments, and it is the duty of the state, and the duty of the government of the day, and the duty of the opposition to join with the government of the day to place on the statute-book the most effective machinery for stamping out corruption, for investigating abuses, and for the purpose of giving us a pure administration of public affairs. Instead of endeavouring to handicap the government in this way, the fullest and most effective powers should be placed in their hands.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I do not desire in any way to handicap the government; that is not what I am doing; but when the government say we have authority to appoint commissioners, we extend the authority of these commissioners and we desire now to authorize those commissioners to depute accountants and experts and various other persons, reporters and others, when they seek to entrust them and clothe them as they may afterwards do with the authority of commissioners, as the Bill points out. But I provide in my amendment that the persons that they so appoint should be selected from a class of people who are not asking for public positions, who are not seeking employment of that character. That is all, and I think my hon. friend agrees with me in the view that the commissioners should be above reproach. I am not reflecting upon them, but I say that when a man accepts a position as commissioner to investigate an office for which he had been an applicant, then I would be very much disposed to insinuate that he is hardly a fair judge.

No one would think for a moment that a person who was an applicant for a position would be a fair judge, or who may be looking for an appointment. The government may not know that the person is an applicant for a position; he may be an applicant through the local member, or someway like that; his name may be the one to be submitted when the proper time comes, when there is a vacancy; but the man himself knows it, and he can say,—and he is the only person that this strikes at—'I cannot accept that position, because I am an applicant.' Surely there are enough men to be found in this country, fair men, just men, judicial men of one kind and another to discharge this duty without driving the government to resort to appointing applicants for positions. I have been endeavouring to be careful that I should impute nothing either to the government or the commissioners; but it is to the men who, are to investigate, in other words, the men who are to work up a case against some man in order to make a vacancy. Will my hon. friend say that that is not a fair position? Does he say that that will be objectionable to the government? Does he say that the government desire to have liberty to employ men who are now supplicants for office?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No. My hon. friend's premises are entirely wrong. He seems to assume that because a man would act upon this commission, that he is necessarily an applicant for office, and consequently he enters upon duty handicapped, penalized, prevented from acting freely. Why should any citizen of Canada be penalized because he is going to act upon a commission of this kind? Why should not the greatest confidence be placed in him, the same as you would place confidence in any other public servant, or any other citizen?

Hon. Mr. KERR—The hon. gentleman knows that it is not one or a dozen, but it is by the hundred and thousand throughout this country they are applying for positions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I don't know that at all.

Hon. Mr. KERR—There is not a member who has a position of influence in the party that is not besieged by people asking for employment, for positions under the government in the country. When a man is asked to discharge a duty like this, he knows, by looking at the Act, that if he accepts that position he must abandon all idea of getting an appointment for, at all events, two or three years—in other words the government cannot give it to him.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—Why don't you examine every one who applies?

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is not the point. The point that I am aiming at is that the man himself will know he is a person who is ineligible to receive that appointment, and if he came to the government afterwards and saked for a vacancy, whether a custom-house in one town, or a post office in another, the answer should be, 'You knew about it; you knew the Act; you cannot be appointed.' This is strictly in the hands of the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend if he thinks that a man, even should he not have in view a government position, would act freely in a position of this kind, feeling that he was penalized should a condition arise subsequently by which he might secure a government position?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Any right minded man would say under such an amendment to the Act: 'I can accept this because it cannot be imputed to me that I am wanting to make a place or a vacancy.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but does the hon. gentleman go further and say that —because it means his condition of mind may change within two years, and then he is disqualified

Hon. Mr. KERR—Then I leave the responsibility to the hon. gentleman, if he says that is fettering the government, interfering with the administration of the Act, I will ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would ask the hon. leader of the House how many commissioners or sub-commissioners have been appointed so far?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So far as my personal knowledge is concerned, nearly all the commissioners to which my right hon. friend has referred have been commissions appointed similar to those formed in 1896, after the late government came to office, for the purpose of investigating acts of political partisanship. That was done, as my right hon. friend knows, in 1896. As yet we have not reached the number of commissions that were issued in 1896; possibly we may do so. The only commission of any importance that I am aware of is the Public Service Commission, and I might say to my right hon. friend that the object of that commission is not as he seemed to anticipate. The object of that commission, and, as set out, I think, in the order in council, is chiefly to inquire into the methods employed in transacting public business, that is, referring to systems of business and so on—that control the expenditures, the construction and maintenance of public works, the administration and alienation of the public domain, the discipline and efficiency of departmental staffs, the duplication of the same, and similar work in two or more departments. The main object the government has in view is to introduce into the departments, if at all possible, efficient business systems such as are now being introduced into all the large departmental offices of financial companies—railway companies and other large companies. I think my hon. friend will be very much disappointed if he finds that this commission has any muck-raking object in view. Such is not the design of the government nor the design of the commission, and I think every hon. gentleman will join with me in saying that it is very desirable that our departmental business, which is of an enormous and expensive character, should be placed under the most efficient system possible.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am very glad to hear the last statement from the leader of this House that these investigations, at least the principal one, is not a muck-raking and mud-slinging one, but is instituted for the best interests of the administration to secure better and safer methods of handling public goods, &c., and handling public moneys. That is a laudable object on their part, and I congratulate them on the stand they have taken in regard to it. There is no doubt that business methods are improving every day; and that the object, as declared by the leader of the government, cannot but have the approval of this House and of this country. So far as that goes, it is well; but I do not think that all the ministers of the present government are built of the same moral fibre as the leader of this House. I really don't think so. They did not show it in Renfrew, anyhow; they did not have the moral courage of good faith. They broke the word of their party; so that I am fearful—and especially if this Act is going to empower the three commissioners who, I believe, are already appointed, if I am not wrong in suggesting their names—Mr. Morine, Mr. Ducharme, and Mr. Lake. We may have something to say about these commissioners later on. We will keep our eye on them; some of them need watching. But I would like to know if, under this Act, these three commissioners have the power to vest a subcommissioner, be he an accountant, an expert or engineer, with their powers?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, in departmental investigations they have.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, I put a fair question to the hon. gentleman: Does he not think that is a dangerous thing?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It has been law for many, many years.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But isn't it dangerous to continue it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I would not say so.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The government is responsible for the acts, and actions and conduct of the three commissioners, but they will not be responsible for the minor acts of the sub-commissioners who may be any kind of under-strappers of the party. That is where the danger lies. I have every confidence that the government will do their best to appoint men in whom the people of the country will have confidence; but those men will not know, and will not be in a position to know, every soul from Vancouver to Halifax. The result will be that they will have to depend upon some politician to name a sub-commissioner.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it is done by order in council, so that the government assumes the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I know it is done by order in council; but these things are done on the recommendation of some politician in the same county, whether it be the defeated candidate or the member or some prominent worker in the party. To my mind, the clothing of these sub-commissioners with all those great powers, creates a danger. It may not, but it is pretty hard to go over 222 or 224 counties of the Dominion of Canada, and find everybody you are going to name as a sub-commissioner an impartial and a wise judge. It will be pretty difficult to do that. The danger of the sub-commissioners will not lie in the fact that they will investigate the departments and the higher branches of the administration; they will be put to do the dirty work of the party, to find out crimes of political partisanship, whether a poor postmaster in a back concession threw up his hat for Mr. Borden, or threw it up for Sir Wilfrid Laurier. We have had instances here of attention being called by members of the Senate to dismissals of officials on purely political or partisan ground. The danger lies there, and I leave it to the hon. leader of the House if I am not fair in putting the case. I don't suppose I can change the law. The Senate does not intend to change the law; but I am simply pointing out to the hon. leader of the government, and to the government itself, the danger that lurks in this Bill if not properly safeguarded at once.

The CHAIRMAN—The hon. mover of the amendment withdraws it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I don't see why we are spending so much time on the amendment after the mover has withdrawn it.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—It is all withdrawn. For God's sake sit down.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the Committee reported the Bill with amendments.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (16) An Act respecting patents of Thomas Wadge.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (52) An Act to incorporate the Pacific Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (56) An Act respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McMullen.

Bill (62) An Act respecting the Kettle Valley Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (67) An Act respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McHugh.

Bill (73) An Act respecting the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

Bill (79) An Act respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (81) An Act to incorporate the High River Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (82) An Act to incorporate the Northern Territorial Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

RAMBAUT PATENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 84) an Act respecting certain patents of Thomas D. Rambaut.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before that motion is carried, I notice there were two notices for the extension of the time of such patents on the order paper for to-day. I happened to be out when the first one was called. As the Senate knows, I have taken exception in very many cases to the renewal of patents, and I would like to call attention of the hon. mover to the last clause of this, and also of the former Bill, for which he moved the second reading, and referred it to the committee. He will see it contains a proviso—there is an exemption. It exempts all persons who have commenced the manufacture of these articles during the time that the patentee has not exercised his right; and then there is a proviso that unless the manufacture of those articles has been with the consent and permission of the patentee or the party who is applying for the patent, it is to have no effect whatever. In other words, if the inventor or the person who purchases an invention obtains a patent in Canada and fails for a number of years, as in this case, to commence the manufacture of the article, and another person finds there is a market for it and it will be of advantage to manufacture it as cheaply as possible in the country, he is exempt, ostensibly, under the first portion of the last clause; but it winds up with the proviso that the commencement of the manufacture and the continuance of the manufacture of that article must have been originally with the consent of the patentee, or the person to whom the patent has been assigned. So that virtually it cuts out every one who may have commenced the manufacture of the article, unless he has first had the written permission of the party who made the invention or the party who purchased the patent. My reason for calling attention to this is that I have been very strongly impressed with the objections taken over and over again by the senator from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson) that these Bills are introduced and get the first and second reading and go to a committee without any explanation being given to the House why the application for the extension should be granted. I venture the assertion that outside of the members of the Private Bills Committee there is scarcely a member of the Senate who knows anything about the contents of the Bill, the effect it will have upon trade, or whether we are justified in extending the privilege sought for. In cases of this kind there should be some information given to the Senate before they are asked to commit themselves to the extension of any patent. I propose to read the last clause in order that the Senate may see exactly what it means. The Bill before us deals with patents relating to the preserving of vegetables, and removing the water, &c., from the vegetable that is about to be preserved. It is a very important industry, I should judge, and from the fact that our canning industries in Canada are of so extensive a character, the widest possible liberty should be given manufacturers to enable them to produce the best and purest quality of food in the way of canned vegetables under the best system without having to pay a too extortionate price. After the parties who obtained a patent for carrying on a business of this kind have allowed it to lapse for eight or ten years until they find an opportunity of commencing business in the country, seeing that some one else is beginning to manufacture the article, they step forward and ask for the prohibition of the manufacture by any person except themselves.

The last clause of the Bill says:

> If any person, other than any licensee, has, in the period between the expiry of two years from the date of the said patents and the first day of February, one thousand nine hundred and twelve, commenced to manufacture use or sell the inventions covered by the said patents, such person may continue to manufacture, use or sell such inventions in as full and ample a manner as if this Act had not been passed.

If it stopped there it would not be so objectionable, but here is the addition:

> Provided that the exemption shall not extend to any person who has commenced the construction or manufacture of the said inventions before the expiry of the said patents, without the consent of the holder of the said patents.

It seems to me that we are tying up the trade of this country to a very great extent by the constant renewal of patents, where people have neglected to commence the manufacture under them. The moment they fail to comply with the provisions of the law as to manufacture, the article should be open freely to the whole market. There should be good reasons shown why such measures should be introduced in this House, where parties have treated the law with contempt, till they found it to their advantage to obtain an extension.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am in entire sympathy with the hon. gentleman's remarks as to not protecting the patentee if he does not manufacture. I have no brief in connection with this Bill; but on looking over it I observe that it is more in connection with the title of the Bill than the patent. I think the provision in the last clause to which the hon. gentleman from Belleville (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) takes exception is all right, because it provides that any person who has started manufacture after the expiry of the patent shall have the right to proceed, but any person who attempted to manufacture before the expiry of the patent shall not have that right. It seems to me that is perfectly clear. A reference was made to another Bill which stood in my name. As far as that Bill is concerned, the people who are manufacturing are simply applying for an extension of the patent They have been manufacturing large grain cleaners in Winnipeg. They are a bona fide concern, but owing to neglect on the part of the solicitors, the extension was not applied for within the proper time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (90) An Act respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (91) An Act respecting the Kootenay Central Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (92) An Act respecting the Manitoba and North Western Railway Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (93) An Act respecting the United Gold Fields of British Columbia, Limited.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (Z) An Act for the relief of Ethel May Stewart.—Hon. Mr. Roche.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 105) An Act to amend the Post Office Act. He said: This Bill proposes a slight departure from the present law, so far as the exercise of the Civil Service Commission is concerned. The Civil Service Commission is somewhat inflexible as to the appointment of mail clerks, and it is utterly impossible for the Post Office Department to secure that class of employees necessary to do the cheaper class of work, because provision is only made for the employment of temporary mail clerks at $500 a year. At the present time, the Postmaster General has been compelled to employ several men as labourers, where it is now proposed that power should be given to the Postmaster General to temporarily appoint railway mail clerks paying them the limited salary mentioned in the Bill, with a view to their afterwards passing a preliminary examination, and then subsequent to that a qualifying examination, and in that way rendering somewhat more flexible the examinations required by the Civil Service Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

OTTAWA, BROCKVILLE AND ST. LAWRENCE RAILWAY COMPANY.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE moved the second reading of Bill (A 2), An Act respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—This Bill was passed twelve years ago and virtually nothing has been done. No explanation has been given us. There is the further question whether parliament has the right to grant the renewal. The company was incorporated in 1900, and came back here in 1902, for an extension of time. I do not know whether they accomplished anything or not. In 1904, they were before parliament asking for renewal of the charter. Again in 1906, they felt it was necessary to renew the charter so as to permit them to proceed with the work. In 1908, they again made their bow to parliament, and my hon. friend has not stated whether that was the last bow they intended to make or not. However, they were back again in 1910. I should like to have my hon. friend explain why they have accomplished nothing and why all these renewals? We have not heard where the road is to start from or where it is to end. It is supposed to run from Ottawa to Brockville, and we know that Brockville is a very important point. We had an election in that direction which attracted a great deal of attention, and I think my hon. friend from Brockville (Hon. Mr. Derbyshire) must have grown several inches taller—and he used to be tall enough, as hon. gentlemen well know—since his friend met with the success in Renfrew. Hon. members may understand the manner in which railway Bills are put through this House; but I am not quick enough to apprehend the details. Explanations should be given on the second reading, and we should have every information as to the location of this road. The road is to run to the St. Lawrence, but the St. Lawrence is a very long stream and we should know the exact point.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—We hope to run up on the present Grand Trunk track three and a half miles to Graham's Crossing.

Hon. Mr. WILSON — Hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—We diverge from there to Manotick, where we have a first-class water-power and grist-mill today, which could be greatly enlarged, and we would have other manufacturing establishments when the water-power was developed. Mr. Dickinson, an ex-M.P. for Carleton county, has a mill there now. It is a first-class water-power about twelve miles from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. WILSON.

Rt. Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On the Rideau?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Yes, but he has to cart his flour from the mill five and a-half miles to the present Canadian Pacific railway station, which is the only station they have; but with the road running by their door, it would give them convenient rail as well as water transportation for their flour. We go from there to North Gower, in a very rich town, in the heart of Carleton county. More money is deposited in the banks to the credit of the people of North Gower than to the credit of the people of any town of that size in Canada.

I know it is a rich agricultural section all around it. We go further, to Burritt's Rapids, a first-class town, and on the west side of it is Merrickville. From there to Agusta; and it would be easier to go from here to Montreal than to North Augusta with no facilities to get there. North Augusta is a good town, has three stores, a blacksmith shop and a church. From the first day that this road is operated it will pay expenses, because it goes through a rich part of the country, where there is traffic requiring facilities to handle it in the best possible way. There is no section of the country that requires a road more than this.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Why was not this road built ten years ago?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Because we did not have the man with the money to build it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have you the man now?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—We are not sure, but we think we have.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (K 2) an Act for the relief of Isobel Isaac.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (L 2) An Act respecting the Mexican Interurban Electric Traction Company, Limited, and to change its name to Mexican Interurban Electric Railway Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. McHugh.

Bill (M 2) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Central Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

RATES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved:

That in the opinion of this House the rates on the Intercolonial railway should, like those of other railways, be subject to the control of the Railway Board.

He said: This motion may carry us back to the time when the Railway Commission was established, eight years ago, and if there is one thing for which the former government should be commended, it is for creating that board, which has certainly given general satisfaction throughout the length and breadth of the land. There is no doubt the work of the Commission has been well done. The public has been satisfied, and although the great railway companies had very strong apprehensions at first, and regarded with a jealous eye the fact that their operations would be under the control of men altogether outside of their own authority, they recognize to-day that the Railway Commission is doing good work, and that its jurisdiction should extend throughout the whole of Canada, and should include all the railways in the Dominion. The late government should be commended on account of the very good men who have been appointed. The first appointee, the father of the Railway Board, Hon. A. G. Blair, was certainly a man of marked ability, and was recognized as an authority on railway matters. He was succeeded by one of no less ability, the late Judge Killam, who was really the gentleman who put the system into operation. It may be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen of this House that the Hon. Mr. Blair was not chairman of the Commission very long, and Judge Killam, who followed him, managed, with infinite tact, to conciliate the various interests and to bring the Railway Board into such working order as to give satisfaction to the public generally. When Judge Killam was removed by death, he was succeeded by Judge Mabee, who is also doing remarkably good work, and who is well assisted by the other commissioners. The commissioners are also assisted by an able staff, not merely in engineering, but all other departments. The engineering department has nothing to do with the rates: the physical condition of the road has been carefully looked after. The chief engineer of the Railway Board, Mr. G. A. Mountain, is a very capable engineer, a practical man, and all the reports which he has made to the board, as far as I know, have not only been approved of by the board, but also have been found just and equitable to the various companies. It is a very important matter to decide, the final location of railways, the crossing of one railway by another, the crossing of highways and so on. All this has been decided by the engineering staff of the Railway Board. However, that does not appertain to the subject we are dealing with to-day. What we are after now is to see whether it would not be advisable, since it has been proven that the Railway Board has given satisfaction to the rest of the country, to put the rates on the Intercolonial railway under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Of all federal railways.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Yes. The Intercolonial railway has been a sort of drag on the government of this country for very many years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not now.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I admit that, owing to the new board of management, composed of four railway men who are supposed to be somewhat relieved from political pressure, the road has been doing a little better; but too much should not be expected of that road. We fully recognize that there is not a very large population in Quebec for that part of the road from Montreal to Campbellton, covering some 475 miles. After leaving Montreal, the first little town that you come to is St. Hyacinthe. That is served both by the Grand Trunk railway and Canadian Pacific railway. The government have some running right arrangement with the Grand Trunk railway, and I think the Grand Trunk railway manages to get a fair share, if not the lion's share, of the business that goes to St. Hyacinthe. It is only a very short distance from St. Hyacinthe till we come to the Intercolonial railway proper, and the only town of any consequence on that section is Drummondville, and then you have another stretch of 70 or 80 miles without a town until you reach Levis. Not much freight business can possibly be done at Levis for the city of Quebec, because there are no facilities, and will be none for crossing the river until the bridge is built or a railway ferry is established. After you leave Quebec, the next town of any consequence is Montmagny, and the President of the House knows very well that it is not a large business centre, with traffic to keep up a railway.

His honour the Speaker of this House knows the place well, and he knows that neither east nor west of Montmagny is there any settlement of consequence until you get down to Riviere du Loup, 120 miles below Quebec, where the Intercolonial railway shops are located and there you have a town of 7,000 or 8,000. After that, you have to go 60 miles further before you have a town of four or five thousand, Rimouski, and after Rimouski you enter the valley of the Matapedia. There the railway has been doing a thriving business, because it has no competition, either by water or from any railway, and in the valley of the Matapedia some very prosperous villages are found, such as Amqui, Cedar Hall, &c. The valley of the Matapedia is being settled, a good population taking up land there and finding employment in the lumber industry. Then you arrive at Matapedia where there is nothing but a fishing club, and after that Campbellton. From Campbellton eastward hon. gentlemen from the eastern provinces know the conditions better than I do. If that is a paying end, that paying end is not sufficient to show any dividends, or any return for the large outlay the country has made on the Intercolonial railway. I believe that it would be an excellent thing, if possible, to have the rates on the Intercolonial railway regulated by the Railway Commission, and taken away from the political field entirely. I do not want to find fault with this government, or the government that preceded it, or the one before that; but as matters are now, we know that the gentlemen who are administering the road are, of necessity, influenced to a certain extent by their friends, and when an industry such as a saw mill, manufacturing shingles or lumber, is being established along the road, the first thing is to get some favourable rate from the Intercolonial railway by threatening to ship by water, or not ship at all, unless the rates are made very low. In that way some of them have been successful in getting the benefit of low rates that others cannot secure. I do not want to mention any specific cases, because should I name one, perhaps those people would suffer for having complained against the railway management. I do not want to bring up anything of a controversial nature; but I think there is no body of men better qualified to judge, administer, and decide the rates on that railway than the Railway Board as they do on other railways, giving satisfaction to the public and to the shippers. It would not be taking a leap in the dark. This is not a new thing. Since I put this motion before the Senate, I have ascertained that the Board of Trade of Montreal were memorializing, or petitioning the government on this very same subject as far back as 1908, I believe.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—When was the last memorial?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I think on the 20th November, 1911. It was addressed to the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals in the present administration. Before the Railway Board was established, the work was done in a sort of way by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, whose members did not have the time, or—I do not suppose they will be offended by the statement—the necessary knowledge to fix rates and adjust other matters; but the men who compose the Railway Board to-day have had eight years' experience and are perfectly conversant with railway matters and able to do justice to all concerned. I have a report of the Council of the Montreal Board of Trade, dated 1909, which reads as follows:

The Intercolonial railway should be under the Railway Commission. The desirability of the Intercolonial railway being placed, as are other railways, under the control of the Railway Commission led your council to petition as follows.

You will see that this introduction, although I had not seen it before to-day, is almost exactly in the same words as my motion. This memorial is addressed to the Hon. Geo. P. Graham, a name which is rather well known just now in the country:

The memorial of the council of the Montreal Board of Trade respectfully submits:

That practically all railways in Canada, excepting the Intercolonial railway, are subject to the conditions of the Railway Act, chapter 37, R. S. C., 1906, in which provision is made that railroads governed by the Act must not discriminate between persons and localities or make unjust or unreasonable rates, &c., and this provision has resulted most beneficially to the shipping public in general.

That your memorialists are informed that the Intercolonial railway discriminates in favour of maritime provinces shippers to the great detriment of Montreal shippers, and your memorialists consider that the best interests of all shippers would be more properly served if the Intercolonial railway were placed under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, which would result in rates being maintained on an equitable basis all over that railway.

That the Intercolonial has a great number of private special rates to which the public have no access, and that were the Intercolonial railway governed by the Railway Act, these rates which have to be filed with the Railway Commission and posted at each Intercolonial railway office for the information of the public and thus shippers would know when they were being discriminated against.

That the Intercolonial railway is in competition with the Canadian Pacific railway to points such as St. John, N.B., and it seems to be an anomaly that the Canadian Pacific railway should be governed by the board of Railway Commissioners and the Intercolonial be free from such control.

That your memorialists also believe that, were the Intercolonial railway governed by the Railway Act, the minister, and the railway officials would be relieved from the political pressure for preferential treatment as to rates, &c., to which they are now liable.

Wherefore your memorialists respectfully urge upon your consideration the great desirability of taking the necessary steps to place the Intercolonial railway under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Signed on behalf of the Council of the Montreal Board of Trade.

FARQUHAR ROBERTSON,
President.
GEO. HADRILL,
Secretary.

Montreal, 27th February, 1909.

The council, reporting to the board add:

The minister, in acknowledging this petition promised his careful consideration to its prayer and your Council hopes that it may presently be granted.

You will see there that it is asserted in a memorial presented to the Minister of Railways of the late government, that they were discriminating in freight rates. The fact has not been denied and the complaint is before parliament to-day. If the Senate, by adopting this motion, should express the opinion that it would be advisable, in order to have uniformity of rates on the Intercolonial railway, that the rates should be under the control of the Railway Board, I do not know what effect it would have upon the government of the present day. However, I believe with many hon. gentlemen in this House, that the opinion of the Senate would carry considerable weight, and would encourage shippers throughout the country. It must be understood that the rate between Toronto and Halifax is divided proportionately, according to the mileage, over each road that carries the freight. Starting from Toronto, the mileage to Montreal is 330 miles and that is carried by the Grand Trunk railway. It is 834 miles from Montreal to Halifax and the Intercolonial railway would be paid for the 834 miles. The rate is divided, according to the mileage, on the eastbound traffic; but on the westbound traffic the shippers cannot obtain a rate. The Intercolonial railway fixes a certain rate and when it is turned over to the Grand Trunk at Montreal they fix their own rate.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Are not the rates identically the same on the Intercolonial railway and the Canadian Pacific railway for westbound and eastbound freight ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I will come to that in a moment, and I shall show the hon. gentleman that the rates eastbound on first-class matter are about $1.20 more per ton.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is not the question the hon. gentleman was asked.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is $1 20 a ton or six cents a hundred. The report of 1910 contains the following:

> Your committee reported last year that it had in hand with the Intercolonial railway board of management the question of rates on general merchandise from Montreal to stations on the Intercolonial railway. The situation still remains unchanged, the rates from Montreal to points on the Intercolonial railway being on a basis of 6 cents per hundred pounds first class, higher than the rates from the Intercolonial railway stations to Montreal as shown by the following instances.

Then there is a table giving the different places, St. John, Halifax, Fredericton, &c.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What are the rates from Montreal to St. John?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Fifty-four cents by the Intercolonial railway, and from St. John to Montreal forty-eight cents.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But by the Canadian Pacific railway?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I have not the Canadian Pacific railway rates here.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend must understand that there is an arrangement between these railways that, whether the rates are high or low, they will charge the same. When you are speaking about east bound and west bound freights, it is hardly a fair parallel of reasoning.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—In the report of the Board of Trade of Montreal for 1910, we find again the statement that the Intercolonial railway should be under the control of the Railway Commission. It reads:

> The council of 1909, under date of 27th February memorialized the Minister of Railways and Canals, urging upon his consideration the great desirability of taking the necessary steps to place the Intercolonial railway under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, which has control of all other railways in Canada. The Hon. Mr. Graham promised his careful consideration to this memorial, but, as no action in the direction desired has been taken, your council wrote to the minister on the 28th October, 1910, expressing its hope that the results of his careful consideration of the memorial sent him in February, 1909, promised in his letter of the 1st March, 1909, might have disposed him to favour his recommendations. It would appear that nothing but political considerations prevented the minister from subjecting this railway to the conditions of the Railway Act, in which provision is made that railroads governed by the Act must not discriminate between persons or localities, or make unjust or unreasonable rates. It seems obvious that the belief expressed in the council's memorial that, were the Intercolonial railway governed by the Railway Act, the minister and the railway officials would be relieved from political pressure for preferential treatment as to rates is correct, and the council is surprised that the government should continue to hold the anomalous position of having constituted a Railway Commission to secure just treatment for shippers, while it declines to make its own railroad subject to that commission.

I had before me a report of the Board of Trade for 1911, which I have mislaid. In their memorial under date 20th November, 1911, addressed to the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways, they repeat what was sent to the Hon. Mr. Graham, and also add that the Intercolonial railway has, if anything, increased the preference shown certain localities and to certain persons. The Intercolonial railway has been, in the past, very much discussed both in parliament and the press, and every one has tried to devise means to place the road on a paying basis. The Board of Railway Commissioners seem to have succeeded in giving justice to the shippers without antagonizing the railways—giving the railways diving rates, &c. Of course we all know that material wealth, in its ultimate analysis, is but the transformation of the raw material of nature into useful commodities, and the transportation of these same commodities from the place they are manufactured to the place they are wanted. This transportation must be fair and just to every one. As I said before, I do not want to refer to specific instances; but when special points are discriminated against, and when a special rate is made for a particular locality, the railway interest may say that there is no discrimination. For instance, there may be at that particular place only one person benefiting by the rate. If in a certain place there is a shingle mill located, and only one man in that district manufacturing shingles, they say, 'any one else making shingles at that place can obtain the same rates.' But the fact remains that there is only one person at that place enjoying the special rate. This is a question of very great importance, not only to the government and the railway management, but also the public generally, and if this House would take into consideration the advisability of placing these rates under the control of the Railway Board, by voting in favour of this motion, it would not only do justice to itself, but render a public service to this country.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have heard the remarks of my hon. friend, and really I do not understand what he is driving at. We in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are not kicking about what the railways are doing in Ontario; they are kicking about what we are doing. I am willing to agree with him that a very large question could be opened up. There is nothing personal or political in this for or against either government. The only trouble with the Intercolonial railway is that there are gentlemen managing it who think they own the railway, and can do what they like with it. That is the whole point. I do not know whether we can remedy that by putting the road under the Railway Commission; we might or might not. I will give, in illustration, my own experience. I live on that line of railway, and they charge me $2 a cord to haul wood thirty miles, and I have absolutely no redress. There are men on that management whom I respect very highly, and I think they are doing their duty, or trying to, but there are others who think they own the whole road, and from such men one can have no redress. In my absence, through illness, I asked a friend to put a question about the earnings of the railway at Rothesay, quite a considerable place. They throw our mail bags off the train into the snow. The other day one was cut open, the letters were scattered, and we are getting them piecemeal—damaged and wet. We are not going to blame the Conservative government for that. I do not want to quarrel with them; there is no object in it just now; we must give them fair play. The point is that the government must bring to task those men who hold up everybody down there. If you appeal to the Postmaster General, or to the local postmaster, they seem to be afraid of the Intercolonial, and the Intercolonial officer says: 'I am boss here, I will do what I like.' That man was probably appointed to office by political influence and thinks he can do just what he pleases, but that is not the fault of the government or the commission; it is the fault of the autocrat who thinks he owns the railway. That road has been simply a football for politicians for the last thirty years; no one government has been responsible for that. As to the question of through freight rates, railway men must determine them. As to what my hon. friend has said about furthering trade and benefiting the commerce of the country, Ontario gets the benefit of it. We need the flour from Ontario and have to take it and pay the price no matter what the freight rate is; but parliament is not going to say arbitrarily that the railways must take empty cars back at the same rate.

My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has made a very elaborate speech—I did not hear all of it—but I agree with him that it is necessary to call the attention of the government to the advisability of looking into the management of the Intercolonial railway. I am not going to say whether it should go under the Board of Railway Commissioners or not. The government should notify the present management of the railway that they do not own the country. They will not stop their trains at Rothesay. I asked Mr. Brady why, and he informed me that it was too unimportant a station. Mr. Brady has his private car and takes his children and his cook to Shediac, but he will not stop the mail train at Rothesay. Mr. Brady is important.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend says 'hear, hear.' I do not like his politics, but we are good friends. It is matters such as I am complaining of that my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) should call attention to, and ask the government to investigate.

No doubt they would do so, because they are trying to do what is right. I give them credit for wanting to find out where the loose screw is on the Intercolonial railway. If my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) would withdraw his motion and recommend the government to look into the matter he would accomplish some good. The government are responsible; and now that their attention has been called to the way things are being run in the maritime provinces, I shall hold them responsible if they fail to redress our greivances. In the shipment of wood, the Intercolonial railway is charging $2 a cord for a haul of 30 miles. Is that the way to encourage commerce? Every citizen of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is against the way that road is being handled. It should be a good asset to the government, but it is not yielding what it should.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière made is: What right has the Intercolonial railway to make special rates for particular people or localities? I think the motion is well worthy of consideration, irrespective of the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) and Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville). We do not want to have the rates raised on traffic from east to west; but we want to see fair play and equal justice, especially when we consider that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario furnished the money to construct the Intercolonial railway. If the Board of Management cannot give fair play to the commercial public of the west, then the sooner the government looks into the matter the better.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—What are the Canadian Pacific railway rates on the same commodity from St. John to Montreal?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I cannot answer that question, and it is not necessary to my point. Is it true that you can ship a barrel of potatoes from Halifax to Montreal for 25 cents, and if I ship a barrel from Montreal to Halifax I have to pay 40 cents?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I do not know anything about that, but I do know that I am a large shipper from Ontario over the Grand Trunk railway and the Intercolonial railway. I can go into the Grand Trunk station in Ontario and ask for a rate to any point I desire on the Intercolonial railway. They give me a rate and I prepay the charges. I think the House should not listen to my hon. friend's proposition to place the rates on the Intercolonial under the Railway Commission, because the people own this railway. The government manage it. Why should the government delegate to the commission their own powers to regulate freight rates?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—On their own property.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They do it in other matters.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—If we put it in the hands of the Railway Commission, they have to level up the rates with the Canadian Pacific railway, and any other railway down there, and these roads are allowed by law to have a certain earning power on capital account before they can be made to reduce their rates. The nation owns this road and can make whatever arrangement it likes, and the other roads will have no power to compete; but if we put the road in the hands of the Commission this and the other roads are all on the one level. If the committee of management now in control are not performing their duty properly, the government should appoint others who will; but we have no business delegating to the Railway Commission the regulation of the rates on our own road. We should retain that control in our own hands.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. Is a Montreal shipper obliged to pay more freight on identically the same quantity of goods shipped first class from Montreal to St. John than the St. John shipper pays for similar goods shipped in the other direction?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—The Canadian Pacific railway rates are regulated by the Railway Commission, and if their rates are more than $1.10, the commission would have to raise the Intercolonial rates to the same figure.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Why should they raise them?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—My hon. friend says they are identically the same on the same commodity from Montreal. If that is so that rate is fixed by the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—My hon. friend from Leeds (Hon. Mr. Taylor) says he is a large shipper. Is he aware that a barrel of flour shipped from Montreal to Campbellton, less than five miles, pays 35 cents. If the same barrel of flour is carried on the Intercolonial railway to Halifax, nearly four hundred miles more, it only pays 30 cents.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, not in every detail, but substantially. The position of the Intercolonial railway is very different from that of the other roads. The Intercolonial railway, at the present time, is administered by a Railway Board constituted by the government of Canada. The members of the Railway Board are,—the Deputy Minister of Railways, who is here at Ottawa, Mr. Pottinger, who was formerly the superintendent of the Intercolonial railway, Mr. Brady, a railway man, who has been all his life in the railway business and who was brought in from the outside, and Mr. Tiffin, who has been on the Intercolonial railway as traffic manager for many years; and recently a gentleman has been appointed to look after the legal business of the commission. I think one can see that such a commission is a good instrument to govern the Intercolonial railway, and that it would not be seeming or fit that that government commission should be put under the control of the Railway Commission. Both commissions are subordinate to the Minister of Railways, and a pretty clear case would have to be made out before the government would undertake to make the Intercolonial Railway Commission subordinate to the general Railway Board. Application to the Railway Board has generally been made with a view to reducing the rates charged by an incorporated railway company. The truth is that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway are, as a rule, very considerably lower than the rates on the company railways, and I do not see that the people's interests are going to be very much benefited by the introduction of the authority of the Railway Board. The natural tendency of the Railway Board would be to level the rates on the Intercolonial railway up to the rates on the company roads. I do not think any of the people in the lower provinces, or even in the province of Quebec, are desirous that that should happen.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—People do not go to the Railway Board to have the rates raised; they go to the Railway Board for the purpose of having them lowered.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the Railway Board would naturally be disposed to say if they found the people of the lower provinces getting lower railway rates than the people of Ontario, 'This is an unfair condition of things, and we must raise the rates in the lower provinces.'

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Would that be wrong?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, I think it would be wrong under the circumstances. The Board of Trade in Montreal apparently lay a good deal of stress on the fact that the rates going eastward are higher than those for freight coming west. The truth is that until very recently the principal business of the Intercolonial railway in the freight department was carrying goods from Montreal to the lower provinces; and the cars which took these goods down came back empty. I assume that if the rates coming west are a little lower than those going east, that reduction was made so that the cars coming west would have something to carry. Even though the rates are not as high as those going east, it is better that the cars should come back loaded than that they should come back empty. I fancy that is the motive that influenced the governing body of the Intercolonial railway in arranging the rates as they did. This has to be borne in mind, that even when there was no competition, the government did not charge high rates on the Intercolonial railway, and of course they do not raise them now when there is competition.

Just one word with respect to this commission, and that is one point as to which

I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Rothesay. The hon. gentleman said he did not think there was any member of this House from the lower provinces who could approve of the present constitution of the governing board of the Intercolonial railway.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I did not mean to put it that way at all. What I wanted to say was that I thought it was a matter for the government of the day to arrange, and that we in the maritime provinces looked upon that railway as a public utility to be run in our interest as an offset to the Northwest having come into the confederation. The surplus of the Intercolonial railway this year, as reported in the press, was seven hundred thousand dollars, and I thought it was but fair that the government of the day should look into the matter of rates. I was not in any way stating the opinion of the whole province. It is only my own individual opinion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not aware that I misrepresented my hon. friend very much. I quite agree in the sentiment he has just expressed, and lest some hon. gentlemen who come from other parts of the country might think that the lower provinces are being unduly favoured, I wish to call attention to the fact that there are other public works which have cost about as much as the Intercolonial railway, located in Quebec and Ontario, where goods are carried for nothing. There are no tolls on the canals, and I think the gentlemen from the western provinces who are disposed to find fault with the government for carrying freight at comparatively low rates on the Intercolonial railway, should bear in mind that the same government are allowing goods to pass through public works in their own section free.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I did not mean to interrupt the hon. gentleman

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not finding any fault with the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. We are here to criticise. The appointment of this Railway Board for the Intercolonial railway was the result of a strong desire to take the road out of politics, and that effort has been almost completely successful. The result is that where formerly we had deficits year after year, during the past four or five years we have had surpluses.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Having spent forty millions on which no interest is being paid.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is very true. I do not think any interest is being paid on the cost of the canals.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The Intercolonial railway was paid for out of our pockets.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We paid some of it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the country is paying it, not Ontario.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, Ontario and West Quebec paid it in those days.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am sorry the right hon. the leader of the opposition still retains just a little of that old feeling that I know prevailed in Ontario about 30 odd years ago, that the lower provinces were to a certain extent calves sucking the Ontario milch cow. I think the lower provinces contribute a fair amount to the revenue of this country. The Railway Board has, to my mind, been remarkably successful. With respect to the fact that there are not as many trains stopping at Rothesay now as there were some time ago, that simply corresponds with the fact that as many trains do not stop at Bedford, within ten miles of Halifax.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend must not put into my mouth what I did not say. I said Halifax is an important place, and St. John is an important place. Rothesay is nine miles out of St. John, and the trains always stop there, but not long enough to take mails or to let people off. I have the interest of the maritime provinces at heart, and I contend that we in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, if we did not pay as much into the treasury as my right hon. friend says Ontario did, gave an equivalent in what we have paid for their grain.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If my hon. friend had only allowed me to go on instead of interrupting me in the way he did, he would have seen that I was not undertaking to set St. John against Halifax or vice versa. What I was trying to say was that certain through trains which had stopped until very recently at Bedford, ten miles from Halifax—had ceased to stop there, just in the same way as the trains that had previously stopped at Rothesay had ceased to stop there. The reasons given for that were that it did not pay, and that a private company operating the road would not have had its through trains stopped there under the circumstances. Whether that is a wise policy or not, I do not know; but there is this fact that, the road, taken altogether, has been well managed and the financial returns from the traffic have been better during the last two years than they ever were before. Having agreed with my friend from Rothesay as to all the substantial points, I most cordially agree with him as to the conclusion. The hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière should not on such a short notice, ask the House to give a decided expression of opinion on a matter so important as this. The administration of the Intercolonial railway is peculiarly a matter for the government, and one member of the government and the friends of the government have heard what the hon. gentleman has to say on behalf of his view, and I think that he ought to be satisfied now that the information has been conveyed to the government, and that he should withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—All this discussion does not elucidate the point made by the senator from De Lanaudière. He does not criticise the management of the Intercolonial railway one way or the other so far as I understood him. He did not complain that trains had not been allowed to stop at certain places in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. He put one point before the House, and a very plain point it was, and all the discussion up to the present moment has evaded this point: Why should a Montreal shipper pay $1.20 or $1.15 to ship a hundred pounds of freight to St. John, when a man in a similar business in St. John can ship the same amount of freight to Montreal for a dollar? There is the whole point.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—One is uphill, and the other is down.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, that is not the explanation. It is not good for the shipper. The hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière is not speaking for himself, but for the merchants of the city of Montreal, and of the west. We are not prepared to have the Railway Commission or the Railway Board raise the rate on the poor bluenoses; we would like to have them get as cheap rates as possible; but when they get them we want the same. There is the point that is contained in the hon. gentleman's motion, if I understand correctly. We are told, 'But the freight from the west going from the west to St. John and Halifax is so extensive and we have nothing to send back, and if we have something it goes into empties, and it is better to fill the empties than have them go back empty.' Well, that is twaddle.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—You have to take into consideration the water carriage. Freight can be carried down to Portland and shipped from there by water. That is not a fair argument to use. Our friends in Ontario are not paying the freight; we in the maritime provinces are paying it. If we can get freight carried at a lower rate, so much the better. I think that is an attack on the government.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have always felt that there may be good reasons why the Intercolonial railway should be placed under the control of the Railway Commission, so far as rates are concerned, and for this reason: the rates should be uniform, and in the public interest. It is an injustice if a railway, whether owned by the government, or a private individual, or a company, can give a preference to one shipper that is not given to another. If it is necessary, in order to secure uniformity in rates, to entrust the matter to a commission such as the Railway Board, it seems to be logical that the government itself should accept the regulation of that Railway Board. It is the only way to ensure uniformity and prevent differential rates being given. It seems to me that the motion is premature. This House—I speak for myself anyway—is not sufficiently informed as to the practice which prevails on the Intercolonial railway as compared with other railways, and I would suggest to my hon. friend not to press his motion at the present juncture. He might ask for information such as this, for instance: How do the rates on the Intercolonial compare with the rates on the Grand Trunk railway and the Canadian Pacific railway? Also, whether the rates are uniform, and, if not, to what extent have differential rates been granted, say during the last twelve months? If we had a return giving such information as that, we would be in a better position to express an opinion on the matter which is now before the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—When we voted to establish the Railway Commission, I then expressed the opinion that the Intercolonial railway should be under the jurisdiction of that board. I could see no good reason—and none was given to my satisfaction at the time—why the Intercolonial railway, though a government property, should not be managed under the same laws that govern private corporations. The reason given by the hon. member from Halifax, that a board of management had been created which should not be subserviant to another commission, since it is appointed by the government, does not satisfy me. The board of management simply plays the role with the Intercolonial railway that any board of management plays with large railway corporations. We have declared that a railway commission should be appointed in the public interest for the supervision of the railways in general, and no satisfactory reason has been given to me why the Intercolonial railway should not be under that control as well. I am disposed to favour the motion of my hon. friend as far as it goes. I would likewise support a motion in favour of putting the whole administration and control of the Intercolonial railway just as the other railways, under the Railway Board. My hon. friend from Rothesay complains, though he comes from New Brunswick, of the administration of the present Board of Management and says that there is no recourse from their decisions. Should he not join with those who favour putting the Intercolonial railway under the Railway Commission, because then he could have all the recourse he would want, and would have a uniform law, and know beforehand that it would apply to this road, as well as to other roads.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That was not the point I was making. I was making the point that the government having the road were responsible, and that we here and elsewhere will hold them responsible for its administration.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I was very much of the opinion expressed by my hon. friend opposite when the legislation came down. It did not seem to be the right thing in a country that seeks to be a unit, to provide legislation for the whole country and then exclude the government from its operation. If my hon. friend who brought this question before the House had argued on general principles rather than the details which he had entered into, he would have made a better impression on the House as to the justice of the cause he espouses, because it seemed to me the effect of that mode of presenting the question was we got into a dispute about comparatively trifling things, on limited lines of communication until we got down to my hon. friend's wood-pile at Rothesay. I do not think these are sufficient grounds on which to discuss a great question like this. The government should put itself in the position of a company railway owner, and allow all these matters to be taken up by the Railway Commission. It is not necessary to enter into the different questions which have been brought up. There will always be a dispute among those who employ railways as to whether they are getting a sufficient service for the money they pay. I do not think we can afford to discuss the question on that principle, and on that alone here.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE moved the adjournment of the debate. He said: I have unfortunately been away from the House for some days. I should like to inquire what has been done by the Board of Trade at Quebec? I think it passed a resolution to the same effect as the one which has been read to the House.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If this is allowed to stand, those who may have spoken should be allowed to speak again, if they get further information before the subject is taken up again. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

The SPEAKER—I cannot put the motion for two good reasons, first that the hon. gentleman has already spoken, and second because the motion which is under discussion has not been put to the House.

The motion was allowed to stand until Wednesday next.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY PENSIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY inquired:

The number of men who received pensions under the Provident Fund of the Intercolonial railway of Canada for the year ending January 31, 1911 and 1912?

Also the amount paid out for pensions under the said Provident Fund Act during the same period?

Also, the amount contributed by the employees, and the amount contributed by the government for the above date?

And also, the amount to the credit of the said fund on hand, with the names, occupation and present residence of those in receipt of pensions under the said Act for the same period?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. The following answer is furnished by the department:

1. The number of persons who were paid retiring allowances from the provident fund in the year ended January 31, 1911, was 412. The number of persons who were paid retiring allowances from the provident fund in the year ended January 31, 1912, was 411.

2. The amount paid for retiring allowances from the provident fund in the year ended January 31, 1911, was $122,727.17. The amount paid for retiring allowances from the provident fund in the year ended January 31, 1912, was $124,165.29.

3. The amount contributed by the employees to the provident fund, in the year ended January 31, 1911, was $69,818.94. The amount contributed by the employees to the provident fund, in the year ended January 31, 1912, was $80,416.84. The amount contributed by the railways to the provident fund in the year ended January 31, 1911, was $69,818.94. The amount contributed by the railways to the provident fund in the year ended January 31, 1912, was $80,416.84.

4. The amount to the credit of the provident fund, on January 31, 1911, was $251,332.92. The amount to the credit of the provident fund, on January 31, 1912, was $283,737.79.

NOTE.—In statement sent to Honourable Mr. McSweeney, on or about Febraury 12, the number of persons who received retiring allowances up to January 31, 1911, and January 31, 1912, was given as 413 and 412, respectively; this was a mistake and should have read for the same years, 412, and 411, respectively. This error was due to one name being counted twice, in the preparation of statement at Moncton.

INTERCOLONIAL AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAYS.

Employee's Provident Fund.

Statement showing the names, occupations, and present residence of persons who were paid retiring allowances during the year ended 31st January, 1911.

Samuel Thibideau, carpenter, Scoudouc
Damas Perry, machineman, Ottawa
Samuel Hamilton, carpenter, Moncton
Douglas Nichol, carpenter, Moncton
Thomas Hogan, watchman, Moncton
John H. Foley, trackman, Jacquet River
Michael B. McDonald, tankman, Harcourt
Edward Mooney, carpenter, Halifax
Isaac Fournier, trackman, Red Pine
Ivan J. Slack, track foreman, Folleigh
Ant. Barbeau, track foreman, Ste. Helene
Hugh Tait, engineman, East Providence, R.I.
Philip A. Logan, mechanical foreman, St. John
John Donahoe, trackman, Moncton
Peter G. Stevens, cleaner, Truro
Joseph Ouellet, trackman, St. Paschal
Cyprien Rouillard, trackman, St. Charles Junction
David Proulx, track foreman, St. Phillippe de Neri
Robert A. Stevens, carpenter, Moncton
Jas. R. Hayward, engineman, Wakefield, Mass.
Archibald McKelvie, car inspector, Calgary
Arch'd McNaughton, car cleaner, St. John
John McAnulty, porter, St. John
Colin McNevin, carpenter, Moncton
Richard Dibben, carpenter, Toronto
Auguste Bélanger, track foreman, Ste. Anne
James Christal, track foreman, Harcourt
Michael Ahearn, track foreman, Nigadoo
John Aikens, switchman, Stellarton
Jas. Handrahan, car repairer, Charlottetown
Joseph A. Bernier, conductor, Ste. Flavie
John Good, carpenter, Charlottetown
John Millman, track foreman, Port Hill, P.E.I.
John Fogarty, machinist, Moncton
Patrick Ashe, track foreman, Windsor Jct.
William Sleeth, moulder, Moncton
Marcellin LeBlanc, stores labourer, Memramcook

John McDonald, carpenter, Moncton
George T. Mellish, carpenter, Moncton
Laughlin O'Hanley, porter, Stellarton
Jacob Mosher, trackman, Picou Landing
Patrick McGrath, janitor, Halifax
Louis Collet, pumpman, Chaudière Jct.
Enoch Price, tool keeper, Moncton
David White, general car inspector, Vancouver
Thos. W. Prince, engineman, St. John
John E. Gooldrup, blacksmith, Moncton
George Collard, brakeman, St. John
George Gagnon, brakeman, Lévis
James Murray, car washer, Moncton
Patrick Sullivan, car cleaner, Moncton
Philip P. LeBlanc, painter's asst., Moncton
James Millican, conductor, St. John
Peleg S. Jones, tool keeper, Moncton
Andrew Rainnie, conductor, St. John
D. B. McPherson, watchman, Truro
Emile St. Onge, station master, Ste. Anne
Eugene Guay, station master, St. Philippe de Neri
William Papineau, constable, Riv. du Loup
Stanislas Bédard, trackman, St. Valier
George Costin, porter, Rivière du Loup
Eugène Blanchet, track foreman, Rivière du Loup
Jean Forgues, switchman, Chaudière Jct.
Edwin L. Perkins, storekeeper, St. John
William H. Bell, car inspector, Newcastle
John Mason, track foreman, Londonderry
Joseph H. Moore, engineman, Shediac
Howard Brown, track foreman, Painsec Jct.
Thomas King, track foreman, Painsec Jct.
John G. McDonald, engineman, Antigonish
John H. Burns, yardmaster, Summerside
Eliza Flanagan, charwoman, Moncton
Thomas McLean, carpenter, Malagash
John Good, upholsterer, Moncton
Abraham Smith, car inspector, Salisbury
Thos. Fitzpatrick, carpenter, Moncton
J. W. Cole, engineman, Moncton
Alex. Madore, car repairer, Ste. Flavie
Frank Archibald, fitter, Rivière du Loup
Joel D. Steeves, clerk, Moncton
William Hayden, machinist, Moncton
Thos. Buchanan, track foreman, Belmont
William T. Robinson, track foreman, Doaktown
Chas. C. Davison, clerk, Moncton
George Foster, carpenter, St. John
Augustin Carrier, porter, Chaudière Jct.
John Kenney, labourer, St. John
Henry Tuppen, clerk, Halifax
Alex. McDonald, watchman, New Glasgow
Alex. Oullet, machinist, Rivière du Loup
John Barnes, labourer, St. John
John McDonald, engineman, Truro
Robert Anderson, trackman, Salisbury
Etienne Turcotte, B. S. helper, Riv. du Loup
Joseph A. Moore, car repairer, Charlestown
James Mowbray, pipe fitter, Moncton
Israel Devault, fitter, Rivière du Loup
John Forbes, baggagemaster, Moncton
William Bulmer, fitter, Moncton
George Malcolm, foreman shunter, Halifax
Thomas Carson, track foreman, Elmsdale
Joseph Johnson, engineman, Truro
Hanford Palmer, station master, Sackville
Robert McDonald, engineman, Truro
Isaac B. Humphrey, station master, Newcastle
A. H. McDonald, trackman, New Glasgow
D. C. Smallwood, fireman, Newcastle
Robert M. Scott, rest room keeper, St. John
John McArthur, engineman, Summerside
Fred. A. Fradsham, machinist, Gibson
Norman Proctor, carpenter, Moncton
Alex. Morin, trackman, Chaudière Jct.
Michael Tobin, engineman, Halifax
Daniel McDonald, porter, St. John
John H. Magee, tinsmith, St. John
James Smith, watchman, St. John
Patrick Driscoll, porter, St. John
Dennis J. White, watchman, Moncton
Edward P. Shaw, checker, St. John
Philip Thibideau, fitter, Moncton
Andrew M. Leger, trackman
Donald S. McKay, track foreman, Dalhousie Jct.
Octave Valcourt, Sty. engine driver, St. Flavie
John Quinn, watchman, St. John
C. R. Palmer, clerk, St. John
John Brown, carpenter, Halifax
James Morgan, porter Charlottetown
Mary Ellen Cahill, car cleaner, Charlottetown
Samuel Buchanan, track foreman, Truro
Chas. J. Clark, track foreman, Charlottetown
Mrs. George Cleland, rest room caretaker. Halifax
William McLeod, clerk, Dartmouth
Andrew Leitch, watchman, St. John
James E. Vincent, wharfinger, St. John
Albert Clements, carpenter, Halifax
John Adams, tankman, Sackville
John Gillard, watchman, Point du Chene
John J. Crossman, carpenter, Moncton
Rufus Harrison, trackman, Maccan
Walter H. Jones, clerk, Halifax
Edward Shaw, esg. watchman, St. John
Henry Fraser, brakeman, Truro
Thos. Hibbits, carpenter, Halifax
Arthur Rogers, porter, St. John
Walter Miller, porter, Truro
Thomas Murphy, porter, St. John
George Murdock, brakeman, Halifax
Ferd. Demers, tankman, Chaudière Jct.
Abraham Duquemin, station master, Cacouna
Danile Culligan, track foreman, Jacquet River
Duncan McNaughton, trackman, Anagance
George Wilson, track foreman, Salisbury
Michel Pelletier, loco. wiper, Riv. du Loup
James Marr, trackman, Londonderry
Daniel Fraser, track foreman, Glengarry
Mary McLaughlin, car cleaner, Stellarton
James Lockhart, track foreman, Pugwash
Thos. M. Corbett, porter, St. John
Joseph Turgeon, trackman, St. Charles Jct.
Richard Wallace, fitter, Halifax
Edward Boak, freight agent, Halifax
Merritt Wheaton, clerk, Moncton
Andrew McCabe, engineman, Newcastle
Thos. Lawlor, trackman, Newcastle
Isaac Gordon, track foreman, Oxford Jct.
William Cole, trackman, Moncton
Chas. McNevin, trackman, Port Hill
Thos. F. Blair, track foreman, Truro
John Simmons, blacksmith, Halifax
George H. Pick, weighing inspector, Moncton
Henry S. Coffin, car foreman, Charlottetown
Edward Fahie, porter, Halifax
John Nash, fitter, Moncton

J. W. Pitfield, clerk, St. John
Robert Williams, brakeman, Truro
Mary Ann Whalen, car cleaner, Point du Chene
Marchall Fournier, tankman, Beaver Brook
J. W. Browneell, engineman, Moncton
John C. Perry, trackman, Wellington
Joseph Raymond, boilermaker, Riv. du Loup
D. N. Robertson, station master, Avondale
Joseph Guillemette, track foreman, St. Charles Jct.
Patrick Donahoe, porter, Halifax
George Seaman, trackmaster, Moncton
Moses F. O'Brien, engineman, Moncton
John Wilson, checker, Halifax
Allan McKinnon, sand dryer, Truro
Jacq. J. LeBrecque, uph. helper, Montmagny
John McFarlane, uph. helper, Moncton
Angus McDonald, trackman, Point Tupper
James Merry, carpenter, Charlottetown
John T. McNally, track foreman, Summerside
George T. Harrop, painter, Moncton
Bliss Lutz, engineman, Campbellton
George McDonald, hostler, Stellarton
Patrick McBride, esg. watchman, St. John
Eugene Boucher, track foreman, Trois Saumons
Michel Poitras, trackman, Trois Saumons
Paul Bourque, carpenter, Moncton
Albert Tremaine, car cleaner, Halifax
Isaac DeBoo, trackmaster, Sussex
Daniel S. Nickerson, carpenter, Moncton
Robert Connell, fireman, Campbellton
William Cooke, car cleaner, Halifax
William Large, track foreman, Hunter Riv.
J. P. McDonald, blacksmith, Truro
Neil Stewart, trackman, Kensington
John McGowan, track foreman, Memramcook
J. B. Laforest, brakeman, Lévis
Hugh Fraser, track foreman, Westville
Rufus Cole, trackman, Dorchester
E. F. Balser, machine man, Moncton
John Bell, track foreman, Royalty Jct.
William Crowhurst, boilermaker, Moncton
William McAllister, boilermaker, West Lynn
Thos. Asprey, watchman, Moncton
R. J. Lutz, carpenter, Moncton
Oliver Geldart, carpenter, Moncton
S. T. Rogers, machinist, Moncton
Edw. Leeman, track foreman, Calgary
Joseph Campbell, watchman, Halifax
Edward Hale, machinist, Moncton
William J. Conrad, machinist, Halifax
William P. Warman, fitter, Moncton
J. B. Dubé, machinist, Rivière du Loup
Donald McKinnon, blacksmith, Moncton
George Barnaby, boilermaker, Moncton
Arthur Sullivan, machineman, Moncton
J. W. Estabrooks, watchman, Moncton
David Delisle, fitter, Rivière du Loup
H. C. Davison, timekeeper, Moncton
François Desrochers, blacksmith, Rivière du Loup
David Drisdale, car repairer, Moncton
W. W. Chapman, carpenter, Moncton
Dom'k O'Brien, trackman, Memramcook
John Dryden, brass cleaner, Moncton
Jos. M. LeBlanc, boilermaker, Moncton
Samuel H. Givan, car repairer, St. John
Thos. Bauer, painter, Moncton
R. P. McNichol, carpenter, Moncton
Peter McInnis, fitter, Truro
Reuben King, machinist, Moncton
Moses Durant, fitter, Moncton
Ellen Brady, car cleaner, St. John
A. K. Thompson, track foreman, Minneapolis
Joseph Brilliant, track foreman, Bic
Joseph Janowyc, painter, Moncton
John W. Phelan, carpenter, Halifax
M. J. McNally, fitter, Halifax
L. C. Leger, painter, Moncton
W. Edmondson, machinist, Moncton
John Lamothe, boilermaker, Riv. du Loup
Daniel White, carpenter, Moncton
William Duncan, fitter, Moncton
Jeremiah Thompson, carpenter, St. John
P. J. McCarron, machinist, Halifax
Alex. Adams, carpenter, St. John
Frank Boasted, labourer, Campbellton
John Cantley, carpenter, Campbellton
William McGowan, machinist, Moncton
Felix Gagnon, storeman, Rivière du Loup
Carlos Gululin, fitter, Halifax
John Gallant, car inspector, Campbellton
Luke John Phelan, carpenter, Halifax
Duncan Gunn, machinist, Moncton
John Belliveau, clerk, Moncton
Martin Henry, carpenter, Moncton
John J. Abraham, machinist, Halifax
Joseph Sirois, cleaner, Rivière du Loup
Alex. Fraser, machinist, Trenton
Chas. Osborne, carpenter, St. John
Mrs. A. Wrightman, car cleaner, Halifax
George Fudge, labourer, Halifax
John T. Clark, track foreman, Halifax
William McLean, asst. foreman, Truro
Angus Wilks, boiler washer, Truro
John Chapman, sweeper, Truro
Nelson L. Rand, m. mechanic, Moncton
John McArdle, labourer, Moncton
Gilbert McLean, fitter, Moncton
Joseph Prince, fitter, Moncton
Andrew Davis, fitter, Moncton
Moses Garland, car repairer, Moncton
Chris. Smith, track foreman, Anagance
Alex. Patterson, boilermaker, Charlottetown
William Saunders, track foreman, Bloomfield
William Brock, engineman, Rockingham
Abner Trites, trackman, Moncton
Thomas Oxenham, watchman, Halifax
George B. Blakney, foreman, Moncton
Docity P. Bourque, carpenter, Moncton
John S. Smallwood, brakeman, Newcastle
Alex. McDonald, car cleaner, Stellarton
John Campbell, foreman, Halifax
Jas. Fitzpatrick, carpenter, Moncton
Terence O'Toole, labourer, Halifax
Michel Chenard, cleaner, Rivière du Loup
Richard Edwards, blacksmith, Halifax
William Blaikie, watchman, Halifax
Caleb Cochrane, boilermaker, Halifax
Jas. Nelson, tankman, Petitcodiac
Thos. Jones, fitter, Moncton
P. D. Happenny, brakeman, Charlottetown
William H. Hope, carpenter, Moncton
Malcolm McNeil, brakeman, Campbellton
Alex. N. Auld, machineman, Halifax
Hugh Chisholm, tool room keeper, Truro
Bernard McDermott, car repairer, Halifax
Alex. McEachern, fitter, Truro
James Wall, blacksmith, Campbellton
J. S. Lowerison, trackman, Aulac
John C. Gaston, charge hand, Halifax
John McLeod, carpenter, Halifax
Joseph A. McManus, fitter, Dorchester

George W. Ritchie, carpenter, Moncton
William Rogerson, machinist, Campbellton
John G. McDonald, stn. bag. master, Pictou
H. W. Chapman, foreman, Moncton
Walter Pirie, yardman, Halifax
Neil McPherson, trackman, Sydney
W. S. Lawrence, painter, Moncton
Alex. Love, sweeper, Campbellton
Edward Stockhall, charge hand, Halifax
Chester W. Judd, car inspector, Marion
Joseph A. Stevens, chief clerk, Campbellton
Théophile Boucher, fireman, Chaudière Jct.
Henry MacDonald, watchman, Putnam
Lauchlin McDonald, carpenter, Halifax
John Keenan, clerk, Moncton
William Ryan, boilermaker, Moncton
Adam J. MacKenzie, caretaker, Marshy Hope
Sylvan Hachey, track foreman, Bathurst
George Bird, porter, Halifax
Daniel McRae, boiler washer, Pictou
John Barnwell, track foreman, St. Charles
John H. Sproull, conductor, Sussex
Miles Hoar, track foreman, Sackville
Jas. H. Partridge, track foreman, Mt. Stewart
John Joyce, freight porter, Halifax
John Labonte, fireman, Rivière du Loup
Geo. Glendenning, trackman, Gloucester Jct.
Joseph Dibben, sr., carpenter, Halifax
Daniel Sullivan, freight porter, Halifax
D. A. Sinclair, foreman, St. John
Lewis Corbett, track foreman, Petite Rocher
Alex. Wilson, trackman, Westchester
Jas. Edgar, porter, Halifax
Angus McLellan, conductor, Moncton
Paul Arsenault, foreman, Point du Chene
Jas. W. Miller, track foreman, Wentworth
David Miller, track foreman, Campbellton
A. McN. Travis, station master, Hampton
Jas. Harriman, car repairer, Newcastle
Kenneth Morrison, engineer, Pt. Tupper
Jas. W. Langille, conductor, Truro
Alex. Edwards, trackman, Ellerhouse
Joshua Clark, watchman, Moncton
Hospice Richard, brakeman, Riv. du Loup
Jas. Purcell, track foreman, Rockingham
Jos. D. Mathieu, porter, Harlaka Jct.
John Campbell, car acct., Moncton
Geo. H. Trueman, station master, Moncton
Mathew S. Trider, charge hand, Moncton
W. H. Morgan, conductor, St. John
Ovide Bérubé, operator, Ste. Flavie
Martin Mahar, B. S. helper, Charlottetown
John B. Robinson, freight checker, St. John
David W. Johnson, freight checker, St. John
Henry Peters, trackman, Newcastle
Geo. R. Logan, engineman, Gibson
John McEachern, engineman, Mulgrave
Octave Brock, engineman, Chaudière Jct.
Nicholas Weatherston, western agent, Toronto
Mary Doyle, charwoman, Moncton
Geo. A. Laird, carpenter, Truro
Joseph Richard, machinist, Riv. du Loup
G. A. Sears, engineman, Campbellton
John J. McManus, porter, St. John
John Kerr, brakeman, St. John
Alphonse Martin, brakeman, Lévis
William Simmons, trackman, Rockingham
Abraham Wilson, track foreman, Oxford Jct.
John Robertson, track foreman, Rothesay
N. Dassylvas, track foreman, Assametquaghan
Donald Ross, track foreman, Piedmont
Samuel Colburn, track foreman, Pugwash
Daniel McDonald, track foreman, Mines Rd.
Jas. Ferguson, track foreman, Wellington
Neil McKenzie, carpenter, Charlottetown
Benj. McKinnon, trackman, Carleton village
Geo. McIntyre, tankman, Blackville
Etienne Letellier, track foreman, Lévis
Willis Gunn, conductor, Halifax
Israel Couturier, station master, Lévis
Germain Morel, freight carpenter, Riv. du Loup
Bridget Trites, car cleaner, Moncton
B. P. Crandall, painter, Moncton
Louis Auger, trackman, Bartibogue
John Brock, track foreman, Chaudière Curve
Placide St. Pierre, brakeman, Lévis
Jas. Machey, trackman, Bathurst
Hugh McLean, trackman, New Glasgow
Octave Lavoie, car repairer, Chaudière Jct.
John Mash, carpenter, Moncton
Rigobert Beaudoin, track foreman, Carrier
Simon Fee, bag. master, Lévis
John Hogan, track foreman, Charlo
J. A. Murray, brakeman, Moncton
J. H. Carrier, clerk, Lévis
Chas. St. Pierre, car cleaner, Lévis
Jean Laflamme, trackman, Carrier

INTERCOLONIAL AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAYS.

Employées Provident Fund.

Statement showing the names, occupations, and present residence of persons who were paid retiring allowances during the year ended 31st January, 1912.

Samuel Thibideau, carpenter, Scoudouc
Damas Perry, machineman, Ottawa
Samuel Hamilton, carpenter, Moncton
Douglas Nichol, carpenter, Moncton
Thomas Hogan, watchman, Moncton
John H. Foley, trackman, Jacquet River
Edward Mooney, carpenter, Halifax
Isaac Fournier, trackman, Red Pine
Ivan J. Slack, track foreman, Folleigh
Antoine Barbeau, track foreman, Ste. Helene
Hugh Tait, engineman, East Providence, R.I.
Philip A. Logan, mechanical foreman, St. John
John Donahoe, trackman, Moncton
Peter G. Stevens, cleaner, Truro
Joseph Ouellet, trackman, St. Paschal
Cyprien Rouillard, trackman, St. Charles Jct.
David Proulx, track foreman, St. Philippe de Neri
Robert A. Stevens, carpenter, Moncton
Jas. R. Hayward, engineman, Wakefield, Mass.
Arch. McKelvie, car inspector, Calgary
Arch. McNaughton, car cleaner, St. John
John McAnulty, porter, St. John
Colin McNevin, carpenter, Moncton
Richard Dibben, carpenter, Toronto
Auguste Bélanger, track foreman, Ste. Anne
James Christal, track foreman, Harcourt
Michael Ahearn, track foreman, Nigadoo
John Aikens, switchman, Stellarton
Joseph A. Bernier, conductor, Ste. Flavie
John Good, carpenter, Charlottetown

John Millman, track foreman, Port Hill, P.E.I.
William Sleeth, moulder, Moncton
John Fogarty, machinist, Moncton
Patrick Ashe, track foreman, Windsor Jct.
Marcellin LeBlanc, stores labourer, Memramcook
John McDonald, carpenter, Moncton
George T. Mellish, carpenter, Moncton
Laughlin O'Hanley, porter, Stellarton
Jacob Mosher, trackman, Pictou Landing
Patrick McGrath, janitor, Halifax
Louis Collet, pumpman, Chaudière Jct.
Enoch Price, tool keeper, Moncton
David White, gen. car inspector, Vancouver
Thos. W. Prince, engineman, St. John
John E. Gooldrup, blacksmith, Moncton
George Collard, brakeman, St. John
George Gagnon, brakeman, Lévis
James Murray, car washer, Moncton
Patrick Sullivan, car cleaner, Moncton
James Millican, conductor, St. John
Peleg S. Jones, toolkeeper, Moncton
D. B. McPherson, watchman, Truro
Emile St. Onge, station master, Ste. Anne
Eugène Guay, station master, St. Philippe de Neri
William Papineau, constable, Riv. du Loup
Stanislas Bédard, trackman, St. Valier
George Costin, porter, Rivière du Loup
Eugène Blanchette, track foreman, Rivière du Loup
Jean Forgues, switchman, Chaudière Jct.
Edwin Perkins, storekeeper, St. John
William A. Bell, car inspector, Newcastle
John Mason, track foreman, Londonderry
Joseph H. Moore, engineman, Shediac
Howard Brown, track foreman, Painsec Jct.
Thomas King, track foreman, Painsec Jct.
John C. McDonald, engineman, Antigonish
John H. Burns, yardmaster, Summerside
Eliza Flanagan, charwoman, Moncton
Thomas McLean, carpenter, Malagash
John Good, upholsterer, Moncton
Abraham Smith, car inspector, Salisbury
Thomas Fitzpatrick, carpenter, Moncton
J. W. Cole, engineman, Moncton
Alexander Madore, car repairer, Ste. Flavie
Frank Archibald, fitter, Rivière du Loup
William Hayden, machinist, Moncton
Thomas Buchanan, track foreman, Belmont
William T. Robinson, track foreman, Doaktown
Chas. C. Davison, clerk, Moncton
George Foster, carpenter, St. John
Augustin Carrier, ported, Chaudière Jct.
John Kenny, labourer, St. John
Henry Tuppen, clerk, Halifax
Alex. McDonald, watchman, New Glasgow
Alex. Ouellet, machinist, Rivière du Loup
John Barnes, labourer, St. John
John McDowell, engineman, Truro
Robert Anderson, trackman, Salisbury
Etienne Turcotte, B. S. helper, Riv. du Loup
Joseph A. Moore, car repairer, Charlottetown
James Mowbray, pipe fitter, Moncton
Israel Devault, fitter, Rivière du Loup
John Forbes, baggagemaster, Moncton
William Bulmer, fitter, Moncton
George Malcom, foreman shunter, Halifax
Thomas Carson, track foreman, Elmsdale
Joseph Johnson, engineman, Truro
Hanford Palmer, station master, Sackville
Robt. McDonald, engineman, Truro
Isaac B. Humphrey, stn. master, Newcastle
A. H. McDonald, trackman, New Glasgow
D. C. Smallwood, fireman, Newcastle
John McArthur, engineman, Summerside
Fred. A. Fradsham, machinist, Gibson
Norman Proctor, carpenter, Moncton
Alexander Morin, trackman, Chaudière Jct.
Michael Tobin, engineman, Halifax
Daniel McDonald, porter, St. John
John H. Magee, tinsmith, St. John
James Smith, watchman, St. John
Patrick Driscoll, porter, St. John
Edward P. Shaw, checker, St. John
Philip Thibideau, fitter, Moncton
Donald McKay, track foreman, Dalhousie Jct.
Octave Valcourt, sty. engine driver, Ste. Flavie
John Quinn, watchman, St. John
C. R. Palmer, clerk, St. John
John Brown, carpenter, Halifax
James Morgan, porter, Charlottetown
Mary Ellen Cahill, car cleaner, Charlottetown
Samuel Buchanan, track foreman, Truro
Charles J. Clark, track foreman, Charlottetown
Mrs. Geo. Cleland, rest room, caretaker, Halifax
William McLeod, clerk, Dartmouth
Andrew Leitch, watchman, St. John
Jas. E. Vincent, wharfinger, St. John
Albert Clements, carpenter, Halifax
John Adams, tankman, Sackville
John Gillard, watchman, Pt. du Chene
John J. Crosman, carpenter, Moncton
Rufus Harrison, trackman, Maccan
Edward Shaw, crossing watchman, St. John
Henry Fraser, brakeman, Truro
Thos. Hibbitts, carpenter, Halifax
Arthur Rogers, porter, St. John
Walter Miller, porter, Truro
Thos. Murphy, porter, St. John
George Murdock, brakeman, Halifax
Ferdinand Demers, tankman, Chaudière Jct.
Abraham Duquemin, stn. master, Cacouna
Daniel Culligan, track foreman, Jacquet River
Duncan McNaughton, trackman, Anagance
George Wilson, track foreman, Salisbury
Michel Pelletier, loco. wiper, Riv. du Loup
James Marr, trackman, Londonderry
Daniel Fraser, track foreman, Glengarry
Mary McLaughlin, car cleaner, Stellarton
Jas. Lockhart, track foreman, Pugwash
Thomas M. Corbett, porter, St. John
Joseph Turgeon, trackman, St. Charles Jct.
Richard Wallace, fitter, Halifax
Edward, Boak, ticket agent, Halifax, N.S.
Merritt Wheaton, clerk, Moncton, N.B.
Andrew McCabe, engineman, Newcastle, N.B.
Thos. Lawlor, trackman, Newcastle, N.B.
Isaac Gordon, track foreman, Oxford Jct., N.S.
Wm. Cole, trackman, Moncton, N.B.
Chas. McNevin, trackman, Port Hill, P.E.I.
Thos. J. Blair, track foreman, Truro, N.S.
John Simmons, blacksmith, Halifax, N.S.
Geo. H. Pick, weighing inspector, Moncton, N.B.
Henry S. Coffin, car foreman, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
Edward Fahie, porter, Halifax, N.S.
John Nash, fitter, Moncton, N.B.
Robt. Williams, brakeman, Truro, N.S.

Mary Ann Whalen, car cleaner, Point du Chene, N.B.
Marshall Fournier, tankman, Beaver Brook, N.B.
J. W. Brownell, engineman, Moncton, N.B.
John C. Perry, tankman, Wellington, N.S.
Jos. Raymond, boilermaker, Riv. du Loup, P.Q.
D. N. Robertson, station master, Avondale, N.S.
Joseph Guillemette, track foreman, St. Charles Jct., P.Q.
Geo. Seaman, trackmaster, Moncton, N.B.
Moses F. O'Brien, engineman, Moncton, N.B.
John Wilson, checker, Halifax, N.S.
Allen McKinnon, sand drier, Truro, N.S.
Jacob J. LeBrecque, upholster's helper, Montmagny, P.Q.
John McFarlane, upholster's helper, Moncton, N.B.
Angus McDonald, trackman, Pt. Tuper, N.S.
James Merry, carpenter, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
John McNally, track foreman, Summerside, P.E.I.
George Harrop, painter, Moncton, N.B.
Bliss Lutz, engineman, Campbellton, N.B.
George McDonald, hostler, Stellarton, N.S.
Eugène Boucher, track foreman, Trois Saumons, P. Q.
Michel Poitras, trackman, Trois Saumons, P.Q.
Paul Bourque, carpenter, Moncton, N.B.
Albert Tremaine, car cleaner, Halifax, N.S.
Isaac Deboo, trackmaster, Sussex, N.B.
Daniel S. Nickerson, carpenter, Moncton, N.B.
Robert Connell, fireman, Campbellton, N.B
Wm. Cooke, car cleaner, Halifax, N.S.
Wm. Large, track foreman, Hunter River, N.S.
J. P. McDonald, blacksmith, Truro, N.S.
Neil Stewart, trackman, Kensington, P.E.I.
John McGowan, track foreman, Memramcook, N.B.
J. B. LaForest, brakeman, Lévis, P.Q.
Hugh Fraser, track foreman, Westville, N.S.
Rufus Cole, trackman, Dorchester, N.B.
E. F. Balser, machineman, Moncton, N.B.
John Bell, track foreman, Royalty Jct., P.E.I.
Wm. Crowhurst, boilermaker, Moncton, N.B.
Thos. Asprey, watchman, Moncton, N.B.
Wm. McAllister, boilermaker, West Lynn U.S.A.
R. J. Lutz, carpenter, Moncton, N.B.
Oliver Geldart, carpenter, Moncton, N.B.
S. T. Rogers, machinist, Moncton, N.B.
Edw. Leaman, track foreman, Calgary
Jas. Campbell, watchman, Halifax, N.S.
Edw. Hale, machinist, Moncton, N.B.
Wm. J. Conrad, machinist, Halifax, N.S.
Wm. P. Warman, fitter, Moncton, N.B.
J. B. Dubé, machinist, Rivière du Loup
Donald McKinnon, blacksmith, Moncton
George Barnaby, boilermaker, Moncton
Arthur Sullivan, machineman, Moncton
J. W. Estibrooks, watchman, Moncton
David Delisle, fitter, Rivière du Loup
H. C Davidson, timekeeper, Moncton
François Desrochers, blacksmith, Rivière du Loup
David Drisdale, car repairer, Moncton
W. W. Chapman, carpenter, Moncton
Dom'k O'Brien, trackman, Memramcook
John Dryden, brass cleaner, Moncton
Jos. M. LeBlanc, boilermaker, Moncton
Samuel H. Givan, car repairer, St. John
Thos. Bauer, painter, Moncton
R. L. McNichol, carpenter, Moncton
Peter McInnis, fitter, Truro
Rueben King, machinist, Moncton
Moses Durand, fitter, Moncton
Ellen Brady, car cleaner, St. John
A. K. Thompson, track foreman, Minneapolis
Jos. Brilliant, track foreman, Bic
Jos. Janowyc, painter, Moncton
Jno. W. Phelan, carpenter, Halifax
M. J. McNally, fitter, Halifax
L. C. Leger, painter, Moncton
W. Edmundson, machinist, Moncton
John Lamothe, boilermaker, Rivière du Loup
Daniel White, carpenter, Moncton
Jeremiah Thompson, carpenter, St. John
P. J. McCarron, machinist, Halifax
Alex. Adams, carpenter, St. John
Frank Boasted, labourer, Campbellton
John Cantley, carpenter, Campbellton
Wm. McGowan, machinist, Moncton
Félix Gagnon, storeman, Rivière du Loup
Carlos Gululin, fitter, Halifax
John Gallant, car inspector, Campbellton
Luke John Phelan, carpenter, Halifax
Duncan Gunn, machinist, Moncton
John Belliveau, clerk, Moncton
Martin Henry, carpenter, Moncton
John J. Abraham, machinist, Halifax
Joseph Sirois, cleaner, Rivière du Loup
Alex. Fraser, machinist, Trenton
Mrs. A. Wightman, car cleaner, Halifax
Geo. Fudge, labourer, Halifax
Jno. T. Clark, track foreman, Halifax
Wm. McLean, asst. foreman, Truro
Augers, Wilks, boilermaker, Truro
John Chapman, sweeper, Truro
Nelson L. Rand, master mechanic, Moncton
John McCardle, labourer, Moncton
Gilbert W. McLean, fitter, Moncton
Joseph Prince, fitter, Moncton
Andrew Davis, fitter, Moncton
Moses Garland, car repairer, Moncton
Chris. Smith, track foreman, Anagance
Alex. Patterson, boilermaker, Charlottetown.
Wm. Saunders, track foreman, Bloomfield
Wm. Brock, engineman, Rockingham
Abner Trites, trackman, Moncton
Thomas Oxenham, watchman, Halifax
George B. Blakney, foreman, Moncton
Docity P. Bourque, carpenter, Moncton
J. S. Smallwood, brakeman, Newcastle
Alex. McDonald, car cleaner, Stellarton
Jas. Fitzpatrick, carpenter, Moncton
Terence O'Toole, labourer, Halifax
Michel Chenard, cleaner, Rivière du Loup
Richard Edwards, blacksmith, Halifax
William Blaikie, watchman, Halifax
Caleb Cochrane, boiler maker, Halifax
Jas. Nelson, tankman, Petitcodiac
Thomas Jones, fitter, Moncton
William H. Hope, carpenter, Moncton
Malcolm McNeil, brakeman, Campbellton
Alex. N. Auld, machineman, Halifax
Hugh Chisholm, tool room keeper, Truro
Bernard McDermott, car repairer, Halifax
Alexander McEachern, fitter, Truro
James Wall, blacksmith, Campbellton
J. S. Lowerison, trackman, Aulac
J. C. Gaston, charge hand, Halifax
John McLeod, carpenter, Halifax
J. A. McManus, fitter, Dorchester

Geo. W. Ritchie, carpenter, Moncton
William Rogerson, machinist, Campbellton
John G. McDonald, station baggage master, Pictou
H. W. Chapman, foreman, Moncton
Walter Pirie, yardman, Halifax
Neil McPherson, trackman, Sydney
W. S. Lawrence, painter, Moncton
Alex. Love, sweeper, Campbellton
Edward Stockall, charge hand, Halifax
Chester, Judd, car inspector, Marion, Ohio
J. A. Stevens, chief clerk, Campbellton
Théophile Boucher, fireman, Chaudière Jct.
Henry MacDonald, watchman, Putnam
Lauchlin McDonald, carpenter, Halifax
William L. Bulmer, track foreman, Moncton
John Keenan, clerk, Moncton
William Ryan, boilermaker, Moncton
Adam J. MacKenzie, caretaker, Marshy Hope
Sylvan Hachey, track foreman, Bathurst
George Bird, porter, Halifax
Daniel McRae, boiler washer, Pictou
Jno. Barnwell, track foreman, St. Charles
John H. Sproull, conductor, Sussex
Miles Hoar, track foreman, Sackville
Jas. H. Partridge, track foreman, Mt. Stewart
John Joyce, freight porter, Halifax
John Labonté, fireman, Rivière du Loup
Geo. Glendenning, trackman, Gloucester Jct.
Joseph Dibben, sr., carpenter, Halifax
Daniel Sullivan, freight porter, Halifax
D. A. Sinclair, foreman, St. John
Lewis Corbett, track foreman, Petit Rocher
Alex. Wilson, trackman, Westchester
Jas. Edgar, porter, Halifax
Angus, McLellan, conductor, Moncton
Paul Arsenault, foreman, Pt. du Chêne
Jas. W. Miller, track foreman, Wentworth
David Miller, track foreman, Campbellton
James Harriman, car repairer, Newcastle
Kenneth Morrison, engineer, Pt. Tupper
Alex. Edwards, trackman, Ellershouse
Joshua Clark, watchman, Moncton
Hospice Rivard, brakeman, Rivière du Loup
Jas. Purcell, track foreman, Rockingham
J. D. Mathieu, porter, Harlaka Jct.
John Campbell, car acct., Moncton
Geo. H. Trueman, station master, Moncton
W. H. Morgan, conductor, St. John
Ovide Bérubé, tel. operator, Ste. Flavie
Martin Maher, B. S. helper, Charlottetown
J. B. Robinson, freight checker, St. John
David W. Johnson, freight checker, St. John
Henry Peters, trackman, Newcastle
John McEachern, engineman, Mulgrave
Octave Brook, engineman, Chaudière Jct.
Nicholas, Weatherston western agent, Toronto
Mary Doyle, charwoman, Moncton
George A. Laird, carpenter, Truro
Joseph Richard, machinist, Rivière-du-Loup
G. A. Sears, engineman, Campbellton
John J. McManus, porter, St. John
John Kerr, brakeman, St. John
Alphonse Martin, brakeman, Lévis
Abraham Wilson, track foreman, Oxford Jct.
John Robertson, track foreman, Rothesay
N. Dassylvas, track foreman, Assametquaghan
Donald Ross, track foreman, Piedmont
Samuel Colburn, track foreman, Piedmont
Daniel McDonald, track foreman, Mines Road
Jas. Ferguson, track foreman, Wellington
Neil McKenzie, carpenter, Charlottetown
Benj. McKinnon, trackman, Carleton Village
Geo. McIntyre, tankman, Blackville
Etienne Letellier, track foreman, Levis
William Gunn, conductor, Halifax
Israël Couturier, station master, Levis
Germain Morel, foreman carpenter, Rivière du Loup
Bridget Trites, car cleaner, Moncton
B. P. Crandall, painter, Moncton
Louis Auger, trackman, Bartibogue
John Brock, track foreman, Chaudière Curve
Placide St. Pierre, brakeman, Levis
Jas. Hachey, tankman, Bathurst
Hugh McLean, tankman, New Glasgow
Octave Lavoie, car repairer, Chaudière Jct.
John Mash, carpenter, Moncton
Rigebert Beaudoin, track foreman, Carrier
Simon Fée, baggage master, Levis
John Hogan, track foreman, Charlo
J. A. Murray, brakeman, Moncton
J. H. Carrier, clerk, Levis
Charles St. Pierre, car cleaner, Rivière du Loup
Jean Laflamme, trackman, Carrier
Thos. O'Brien, engineman, Halifax
Jas. W. Grant, fitter, Pictou
Eugène Côté, trackman, Isle Verte
Emile Jobin, baggage master, Quebec
Louis Proulx, conductor, Levis
Fred. Davison, conductor, Truro
Andrew Gifford, baggage master, Moncton
John O'Rourke, watchman, Moncton
Geo. L. Blais, baggage master, Levis
H. W. Henderson, foreman, York
W. Langille track foreman, Brookfield
Théophile Morency, track foreman, Trois Pistoles
Malcolm McArthur, checker, Halifax
J. O'Malley, checker, Halifax
D. Nicholson, freight porter, Halifax
Roderick McDonald, trackman, Mulgrave
J. J. B. Guay, conductor, Levis
James Maloney, conductor, Moncton
Elzéar Lessard, trackman, St. Michel
J. A. T. Harrison, foreman, Maccan

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (23) An Act respecting the harbour of Hamilton.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (70) An Act to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin.—Hon. Mr. Lariviere.

Bill (83) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Hon. Mr. Ross, Moosejaw.

Bill (N 2) An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.'—Hon. Mr. Domville.

TERMINAL PROPERTIES, QUEBEC.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE — Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the hon. leader of the House if he can give me some information about the payment for the properties which have been taken by the Transcontinental Railway Commission at Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The return for which my hon. friend asked has been placed in my hands to-day, and I shall have great pleasure in placing it upon the table of the House. I understand the motion was for papers concerning the expropriation of the properties of certain parties in the city of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That is not the way the question is put; it was to know if the government was going to pay for the properties which had been expropriated, or to give them back to the parties, for this reason, that according to law, as my hon. friend knows, this property belongs to the government, they having expropriated after due notice had been given. They have offered certain prices for some properties and we have accepted the prices, and now they do not pay. On the 13th December last I myself wrote to the chairman of the commission, and he answered me under date of 21st December in this way:

Ottawa, December 21, 1911.
Messrs. Choquette, Gallipeault, St. Laurent and La Ferte, Avocats, 105 Côte de la Montagne,
Quebec.
Re Terminal Properties, Quebec.
Dear Sirs,—In reply to your letter of the 13th instant, I beg to say that this matter is under consideration, and until a definite conclusion is arrived at, nothing further can be done.
Yours very truly,
R. W. LEONARD.

I just wish to know whether they are going to take the properties. If so, it is only fair that they should pay the prices; if not, let them say so, and it is time to release the property, as this is the season for re-letting. The properties cannot be handled while they belong to the government, nor could the city take the property for taxes. The position is serious, as it is now two months since the matter has been before the commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would say to my hon. friend that this apparently has been the subject of certain proceedings in the Exchequer Court of Canada. I would suggest that he should look over the return I brought down, and if it seems insufficient and does not give the information my hon. friend desires, I shall be very glad to prosecute the inquiry further.

THIRD READING.

Bill (Z) An Act for the relief of Ethel May Stewart.—Hon. Mr. Roche.

THE NAVAL ACT.

SECOND READING.

The order of the day being called.

Second reading (Bill P) An Act to repeal the Naval Service Act—Hon. Mr. Choquette.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like my hon. friend from Grandville to state some reason why this very important public service should be dispensed with in this very summary way. The repeal of this Act involves the wiping out of a whole department. Possibly my hon. friend has something to say upon it before dealing with the matter so summarily.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not think it necessary to explain this Bill, because it is so short, plain and simple. I would feel that I was hurting the intelligence of my right hon. friend by giving any explanation of the Bill. It speaks for itself. It is well known to my hon. friend that it is the duty of the government to fulfil the promises they made before coming into power, and that is what I am calling upon them to do now. I do not feel inclined to take much of the time of the House in discussing this Bill. I will not dare to repeat all the things that have been said on this question, both in the Senate and in the House of Commons when the Act was passed, and especially will I not attempt to repeat all that has been said since the day it was passed. I have made this motion, first, to prove my consistency and to help to some extent the government to prove theirs, they having taken on this Act the same position that I took myself; and, further, I am giving a chance to those who by mistake voted for the Naval Act in the first place, to correct that mistake. Without any further explanation, I would just like to quote the position taken by the leaders of the government in both Houses. When the leader of the last government brought up the Naval Bill, the leader of the present government said, and truly said, that the government had no authority to pass that Bill. In reading over the amendment moved in the other House by the present Prime Minister I find that it is as follows:

> That the said proposals while necessitating heavy outlay for construction and maintenance will give no immediate or effective aid to the empire, and no adequate or satisfactory results to Canada.
> That no permanent policy should be entered upon involving a large future expenditure of this character until it has been submitted to the people and has received their approval.

That was part of the amendment to the Bill moved by the present leader of the House.

The Laurier government pretended that they had authority to pass that Bill—that the result of the elections in 1908 had given them a blank mandate, so to speak, to pass any measure they saw fit in the interests of the country at large, but my hon. friend opposite took the contrary view. He contended that this measure was useless, costly, and especially that it should be submitted to the people. Mr. Monk, one of the ministers in the present government moved a sure amendment to this effect:

> That this House, while declaring its unalterable devotion to the British Crown, is of opinion that the Bill now submitted for its consideration, changes the relations of Canada with the empire, and ought, in consequence, to be submitted to the Canadian people in order to obtain at once the nation's opinion by means of a plebiscite.

So the views of those who are now in power were that a measure of such importance ought to be submitted to the people for approval, and a denial that the government of the day had a mandate to pass such legislation. The Bill was passed in the other House and came to the Senate. What position did the present leader of the government in this House take when he was leading the opposition as cleverly as he tries to lead the government now? At that time I took the stand that the amendment in the other House should have been adopted, and such a measure should not be passed without consulting the people, not by a plebiscite, but at the general election. It was my intention to move such an amendment, but the then leader of the opposition opened fire and said, in a long and clever speech, that to his mind this measure was one of the most important introduced into parliament since confederation. He said:

> It involves Canada stepping out from its local status and entering the lists of naval powers, assuming enormous expenditure and national obligations such as two years ago, were not contemplated in the near future.

He continued:

> I presume we may attribute the genesis of this Bill to German scare.

He also says:

> I do not think the hon. gentleman will seriously contend that the so-called Canadian fleet will be of any adequate service to Great Britain in time of war. In my judgment the only nation that this fleet can be designed to repel would be the fleet of the United States; but it can only be an irritant and provocative of mischief so far as the United States is concerned.

He says further:

> The logical outcome of the Canadian navy must be to produce in Canada a severance from Great Britain. The whole result of the adoption of such a policy will ultimately cause Canada to cut adrift from the empire to which we now belong.
> It is a policy into which the government has been stampeded. It is a compromise measure. It possesses little or no virtue.

At the close of his eloquent speech he moved:

> That this House is not justified in giving its consent to this Bill until it is submitted to the judgment of the country.

The House will see that the hon. gentlemen when in opposition, the members of the present government, and their friends, were of the opinion that it was a bad measure, useless, costly, and one which should be submitted to the people. I took the same position and if the people gave it their approval we will submit to their verdict. That is the view I take now, and I ask my hon. friends to be consistent with themselves, and abide by the decision of the people. I may say that the seconder of the amendment, our venerable colleague, Mr. De Boucherville, in a clever speech said:

> The question before us is the motion that this House is not justified in giving its consent to the Bill before it has received the sanction of this country. I do not intend to give my opinion for or against, the measure; but I ask why are we taking up this measure without consulting the people?

It is always the same thing. The contention of those opposed to the measure was that the government had no mandate from the people, and that the people should have been consulted before the measure was passed. Since then the people have been consulted. I may say that the question was not submitted specifically, but the matter was fully discussed. On the 21st of September last the people condemned the late government, and one of the issues on which the election turned was the Naval Bill. We all know that the Tory candidates, friends of the present government, English and French, in different parts of the country, not only pronounced themselves against this Bill, but they issued statements pledging themselves under their signature, if elected, to move for the repeal of the Naval Bill. I cite to show that the question was before the people. I quite agree that it was not put in the same way in all the provinces. The Naval Bill was condemned because it did not go far enough going too far. In other provinces it was condemned because it did not go for enough and so according to the views of the leader of the government. But the question as a whole was submitted to the people and they pronounced against it. As a man of honour, having taken a stand that I was willing to submit to the will of the people, I feel it my duty to move for the repeal of that Act, and I do not see how the present leader of the government in this House, or the members of the government in the other House, especially those elected because of their stand on this question can now be idle and not repeal the Naval Bill. I would have preferred that this Bill should originate in the other House. I have been waiting for many weeks to see what those who took the stand I took, and who promised before the public on the hustings throughout the province of Quebec to move for the repeal of the Naval Act would do, but unfortunately in the other House nothing has been done. We have seen a resolution presented one day, at an hour of the session when it was impossible to come before the House. We have been told, and told by friends of the government, that the member who placed that resolution on the order paper was put up by a member of the government. We have seen where the government was asked to state their policy on that question. Within the last few days we have seen the member for Yamaska put a question to the government to know if they are going to move in that direction. I have kept still in order to know if the government is going to do something, because it might be said that my object is to embarrass the government. I have kept still for weeks just to know the policy of the government, which is bound in honour now to declare during this session, and bound to declare as soon as possible, what their policy is, in order to fulfil their promise. But what do we see? Every time the question is put to the government in the other House the Prime Minister has said: 'Let it stand;' and the members who pledged themselves to press the government to repeal the Act have done nothing. Well, hon. gentlemen, I am not going to keep standing, and to-day I come to ask the government seriously what they intend to do, and to declare their policy.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Vote, vote.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why does the hon. gentleman want to vote? Can't he wait till the hon. member has finished?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—There is honour in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—We know what the Bill contains, as it has been put before the public, but I just wish to make these few remarks so as to make the case as plain as possible in order that the government may thoroughly define its policy. At the time we adopted this policy we knew what had been done and said. It was argued that the government, having a majority, had the authority to pass any law that they thought was for the good of the country. To a certain extent that is true, but when we see, and when we have the proof, that a mistake was made, there is nothing inconsistent in endeavouring to repair it. I addresse myself now to those who voted in this House for the Act. I have heard many members of this honourable House say that they would be in favour of repealing the law, but that they were not going to be inconsistent and seem to reverse their votes. I would say that is a mistake, or a false interpretation of the vote given in this House. It has been said that the government had a right to pass that Act because they had the support of a majority of voters. On the measure coming to this House we had reason to believe that they had authority to pass it, and those who in good faith thought that the Bill was a good one voted for it, and did so conscientiously and sincerely. Now they have proof that they were mistaken, misinformed; they have proof that when the House passed that Bill they had not the authority necessary to pass such a measure. The Supreme Court of the people has pronounced against it. Now the question comes back before the House: It is not inconsistent now to say: 'We thought that we were right at the time; we believed that the vote we gave was a good one; we still believe it, but as the mandate which had been given to those presenting that measure has been taken away, we are now given a chance, under a new mandate, coming fresh from the people, to study that measure and repeal it. I do not see how those who voted for the Act, in voting now to pass this Bill and send it back to the popular chamber would be inconsistent with themselves. It is, I might say, like a judge upon the bench who has given a judgment. That judgment goes to the last Court of Appeal, and his judgment is reversed. He is not going to say that he would decide as he had decided before because it would be inconsistent to change his judgment. Not at all; he follows the jurisprudence. I say we have passed judgment on the case here. A minority in this House was in favour of submitting it to the people, the majority said: 'No the responsibility is with us; we are willing to pass that law'. The law is passed. It goes back to the Supreme Court of the people. The people pronounce upon it, and say parliament was wrong. Now it comes back again and we say, 'The people, who have to pay for carrying out the naval policy, have declared that our representatives were wrong,' therefore we will reconsider the measure on the judgment that is just fresh from the electors. So I should like to have this Bill passed unanimously by the House. For my part I am quite consistent with myself, and I do not see how the present government and their supporters can vote against the second reading of this Bill. As for those who voted for the Act then, I do not see why they should not support the Bill to send it back to the other House where it should be properly debated by the recently elected representatives of the people because if they were sincere in their declarations before and during the election, that they would repeal the law, they would accept this Bill; if not, well, we know what they would do, and in due time the people will judge them. But not only during the election did Tory candidates pledge themselves to repeal that law, we know that in the heat of a campaign many candidates make promises which they cannot fulfil; but when ministers of the Crown have pledged themselves to repeal that law or submit the question to the people, how can they now go on and not fulfil their promises? I have in my hand a speech taken from 'l'Evenement,' the organ of the Postmaster General, delivered at Lorette on the 28th of October last—not when he was a candidate, but when he was a sworn minister of the Crown, coming back before the electors for re-election; he then said to many thousands electors, that the Naval Bill was too costly, out of proportion to our means, no good in case of war, and that if there should be a plebiscite and the majority of the electors would pronounce against it he would submit, and that he was still of this opinion, adidng, 'I stand for the plebiscite, but if you give me something better I will not refuse it.' He was alluding to a speech delivered by Mr. Lavergne after coming from Ottawa, saying he had the promise from the Prime Minister that the Bill would be repealed, or at least that they would have a plebiscite at once. How can these gentlemen stand now before the public, claiming to have the confidence of the electorate of this Dominion, without fulfilling the promises they have made? How can they refuse to answer questions put to them on this naval question? Their policy must be well known now! The Act was put in black and white three years ago on the statute-book. It has been before the public for three years. What reason have they now to refuse to answer? During the election I heard them say all over the province of Quebec, that it was a matter for the Canadians themselves to settle, that it was a bad Bill and it would be repealed if they came to power. How can they be acting as they are now and not be told they got in under false pretenses,or through false representation? I have spoken longer that I expected, but I have done my best in a language in which I am not accustomed to speak. I reiterate that there is no explanation of the conduct of these gentlemen who are now in power, and who obtained it under cover of that Naval Bill. I ask them to be faithful to their promise and to stand like men, take their medicine, and give the country the full measure of what they promised. They have not acted straight with the people; they have done nothing since the beginning of this session to declare their policy. I am convinced that they are trying to deceive the people now as they deceived them during the last election; and in order to compel them to declare their policy and fulfil their promises if I had the power, I will not vote the supplies until they do declare their policy. According to the leader of the government, this question is one of the most important that has ever been introduced since confederation. I do not believe in the Senate trafficking with questions of dollars and cents or of general administration; but on a question of this kind, when the present government, through its leader in this House, has declared that it is one of the most important questions that has come before parliament since confederation we, in this House, have a right to say to these hon. gentlemen: 'You shall fulfil your promise; you shall give to the people what you said you would, or you will not have a cent of the peoples' money to administer the affairs of this country. You have deceived the people, and as long as you refuse to fulfill your promises of a plebiscite as long as you refuse to repeal this Naval Bill, we are justified in refusing to pass the estimates of the government.' I have tried to show that those who have stood firm on the question of consulting the people on this subject cannot now vote against this bill. I also appeal especially to those who voted for the Bill, and not to think that they would be inconsistent if they stood for the people. At the time this measure was passed, I repeat, I remember they said they voted for it because they thought the late government had a mandate to pass it. Unfortunately for the late government the contrary is true. I believe, hon. gentlemen, that you are justified in voting for this Bill and sending it back to the other House to ascertain what is the disposition of the government, and their policy on this important question.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have only a few words to say in answer to the appeal that has been made by the hon. member to those in this Chamber who voted for or against the Naval Bill. I must congratulate him upon the stand he has taken in this matter. It shows his consistency and sincerity. In order to better appreciate the position taken by the hon. member for Grandville. I think it is wise to recall what took place in connection with this great question of the Canadian navy, when the Laurier government thought proper to act in accordance with their resolution, which had been adopted in 1909. That resolution was adopted unanimously. They could not then foresee that a year after those who had voted for this resolution would change their minds and oppose the measure proposed by the government in order to give effect to that resolution. They established the Canadian navy in order to help Britain to keep up their supremacy on the sea. It was then contended that the people should be consulted. What was the cause of that change? Simply an election which took place in the county of Drummond and Arthabaska, during which the people were induced to believe that a prejudice had been raised in the county of Arthabaska and in the old province of Quebec, against the establishment of a Canadian navy, not only against the establishment of a Canadian navy, but against any scheme by which we could contribute money, or by which anything might be done in order to help England to keep her supremacy on the sea. No navy, no dreadnoughts. No contribution. Nothing unless the people of the country were previously consulted. That was the popular cry which was heard from one end of Quebec to the other, and that popular cry found an echo in this Chamber.

The hon. gentleman who has just moved for the repeal of the Naval Bill was one of the three who expressed their views in favour of a plebiscite, and who were of the opinion that nothing should be done unless the people were consulted. The speeches of the hon. members were cited, and published and praised in all the Conservative and National papers of the country, and they were proclaimed the only independent Liberal members of the Senate. Their speeches were used in the election, and it was repeated everywhere that the first move which would be made, as soon as the House of Commons met, would be to ask for the repeal of the Naval law. It was said that Mr. Bourassa would have only to raise his hand, and the Canadian navy would vanish in one year. The election took place, and the government were defeated. The House of Commons met; one month elapsed; two months elapsed; three months elapsed, and nothing has been done. Nothing to abrogate that infernal, infamous law ' as it was called in the province of Quebec. In about three months a resolution was moved in the other Chamber, but it was moved when it was too late to be taken into consideration during this session of parliament. It was a resolution which meant nothing at all. The only way for the Nationalist party or the Conservative party to show their sincerity and to give practical effect to their resolution, was to do exactly what the hon. member for Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) has done, move for the abrogation of the law. Then when the hon. member for Grandville and his friends, the Liberal members of the Senate, who on this question thought proper to support their friends and rose to show that they were not in accord with those who were talking of the means necessary in order to switch the question, they decided to move, as the hon. member for Grandville has done, for the repeal of the law. They naturally had reason to believe that they had the support of the government. They most naturally thought the government of the day, who had profited by the action which had been taken and by the speeches which had been made, and by the agitation which was the result of the position taken by the hon. members of the Senate, would naturally do their duty towards them, and recognize what they had done for them, and show their gratitude by taking advantage of this motion made by the hon. member for Grandville, and vote for the repeal of the law. After the speech made by the hon. member for Grandville, and after the proof which he has given of the declarations made by the hon. members of this House, he has a right to believe that the hon. leader of the Senate, and his friends, the members of the Conservative or Nationalist party will vote to repeal the law. I do not see how they can do otherwise, in order to justify the declarations and promises which were made to the electors of the country, and especially to the electors of the province of Quebec. I do not see how the leader of this House and his friends can refuse to take advantage of the motion made by the hon. member for Grandville, to repeal this Naval law; a law which has been denounced in the province of Quebec with so much violence, and which has been denounced in the province of Ontario on different grounds, and for different reasons. I am sure the hon. leader of the House will respond to the motion that has been made by the hon. member for Grandville, and will prove that they were right when they relied upon the friends of the government to support them, and justify the action which they have taken and the speeches which they made during the last election. The hon. member for Grandville not only relies upon the government, as I understand, with the confidence, which he has a right to, but he appeals also to the Liberals who voted for the Bill. If the hon. gentleman receives no other comfort or consolation than that which he expects from the Liberal party, or at any rate from me, I fear that he will be very much disappointed. If the hon. gentleman thinks it proper, in order to show his consistency and sincerity to do what he has done to-day, and ask for the repeal of this law which he denounces, and if he thinks it necessary to show his sincerity to say that the people have pronounced on the question and have given their verdict, and if he is consistent in asking for the repeal of the law; we for the same reason have a right to be consistent and stick to the resolution which was adopted unanimously by the House of Commons. We have a right to speak to the resolution which was passed in this Chamber in favour of that Bill, and we will stick to our resolution, because we believe now as we believed then, that the most practical and reasonable way to settle that question was to do what the government has done in order to reconcile what is due to Britain with what is due to Canada. I regret to say to my hon. friend that he cannot rely upon us, but I have reason to believe that he has a right to expect the confidence of the government and to believe that the leader of this House will rise and say that he is ready to support the motion he has made. In order to have a straight vote on the question, and in order that the members of the House shall have an opportunity of expressing their views on it, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER—Moved by the Hon. Mr. David that the question be now put.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am very much surprised that a senator of his standing should move to choke off debate.

The SPEAKER—I call the attention of the hon. members to the fact that the previous question does not close the debate; the debate will go on, but it precludes any amendment.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I would ask to have some explanation of that ruling, because it is very deceiving. We may desire to vote one way and yet vote another.

The SPEAKER—I will give the House an explanation at the time of voting.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It means that there will be no amendment. In seconding this motion, I can assure the hon. member from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) that I had no intention, and have none now, of seeking the endorsation of the government or its support in regard to the measure, especially as a matter of gratitude on their part for the services rendered by myself; he can rest assured of that.

This question of the naval policy has, fortunately, faded far, far away. It is practically dead. So dead that the government is about sending it over in a coffin to the Admiralty to have it examined to see if they can revive it. I do not like sending a corpse to Downing street for the purpose of having a post mortem upon it. The government, in making that proposition, are belittleing the importance of Canada and making themselves very small. We do not want Downing street politicians to formulate a policy for Canada. They have enough to do over there looking after their own troubles. Our statesmen should be confident enough to formulate and carry through any policy that the interests of Canada demand, and I am opposed to any policy being initiated for us in Downing street. The naval policy of Canada was threshed out during the last election. In the west, they were looking for box cars, and not for Dreadnoughts, and they sent a lot of good Liberals down here to look for box cars. In Quebec, there are three or four counties where the question is still being threshed out by ministers of the Crown, one the leader of the province of Quebec, the other a gentleman from St. Jerome, and the other a bright young politician from Quebec. They gave their absolute word that this Naval law shall be repealed. The member for Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) has put that question twenty times if not one hundred times, and no answer. Will I give the answer on behalf of the government to the hon. senator? It is because the three French members from Quebec will not allow the government of the day to declare their policy.

Some hon. SENATORS—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is not that the fact? Can the hon. leader of the government deny it? Did not the present Postmaster General give his word as a minister that if he was returned he would see to it that the Naval Act was repealed, and that the question would be referred to the people and a plebiscite would be taken. The hon. leader of the House ought to be well informed in regard to the doings of his colleagues and confreres. Surely he cannot ignore that fact. Does he not know that the French leader of Quebec is deadly opposed to the policy of Hon. Mr. Borden of two years ago, and to the policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier? He had a policy all his own, which was suggested by other politicians in Quebec. The hon. leader of the House ought to know all these facts, these being facts still existing and still adhered to, and a doctrine still held by these ministers. We must not be surprised if he fails to answer the question put by the hon. senator for Grandville: 'Why don't you declare your policy?' The reason is because the government have none. The French members of Quebec have strangled your policy and have tied your hands. During the past fifteen years, Sir Wilfrid Laurier as Prime Minister of this country, the man who gave peace and harmony to every province throughout this Dominion, brought prosperity to every home throughout this Dominion, and made the name of this country respected, not only in Downing street, but in every court of Europe. I have heard it said that under the Laurier government there was too much French domination.

I have heard the statement made by Grit as well as Tory. I have no doubt during the last election there were 25 or 30 Grits in certain counties who voted against us because there was too much French domination. What would they think of the French domination to-day, under the present government, and the outside leader, the Mephistopheles of the party? I contend that the hon. gentleman from Grandville was perfectly within his rights in asking this House and the House of Commons to do what the people wished them to do—to repeal this Act. Hon. gentlemen will remember that during the election campaign the Naval Act created a hubbub and had the country all ablaze, but not a soul speaks of it now and nobody wants to hear of it. It was only in existence a few months when it was wrecked on the rocks near Halifax. Why should it not be repealed when the people do not care for it? If the government of the past had taken the money that this Canadian navy will cost the country, and applied it to effective service, it would have been much more to their credit and much more in the interests of the people at large. We are told this question should be submitted to the people. I have no objection to that. There would be no use submitting it to me, because my mind is fully made up about the Canadian navy, so-called. If the people of Canada were asked the academic question 'Are you in favour of the navy?' the majority of them may say yes; but if a plebiscite is taken on that question. let it not be an academic question but a practical one. Let the question read, 'Are you prepared to spend anywhere from two to three hundred million dollars in building torpedo boats, cruisers, coaling stations, naval stations, &c., maintaining an army of naval officers, seamen, and (as I understand) bandsmen?' Ask the people if they are prepared to pay that initial cost of two or three hundred million, and also the further question, 'Are you prepared to pay yearly for the up-keep and maintenance of that fleet anywhere from twenty to thirty million dollars a year?' What will the answer be? You would not get one out of ten to say yes. The people would say no, and with reason. The country would be made to grow twice as fast as she is growing to-day if that money were spent in large national public works, such as the construction of the Georgian bay and Welland canals, and railroads. Our transportation facilities would in that way be augmented to a considerable extent. If a part of that money were spent in establishing a consular service in all the commercial centres of the world, our trade would not be damaged as it is to-day by the British consular service. Get a British consul promoting Canadian trade when he has a Manchester, Liverpool or London firm to look after it. Take what was done in Japan, or China, I forget which, where our trade commissioner had to fight the British consul in the open press to secure respect for the rights and interests of Canadian manufacturers and shippers. If we invested that money in a consular service we would be doing something unsurpassed in the history of Canada. We would have consuls in nearly every large commercial centre of the world, and for one-tenth of what the Canadian navy would cost.

But we are told that a Canadian navy is needed to strengthen the British navy.

I do not know how many people take stock in that theory—perhaps those who may have the patronage of the navy, the building of the ships, &c.—but I fail to see where any navy that Canada can construct may be of any use to the British navy, which is independent of the Canadian navy. That leads me to another consideration, which probably will not go easily into the ears of certain people—that if Canada were not tangled up with Great Britain in its foreign transactions, we would only need a few boats to look after our lobsters and oysters, as we do to-day. The danger lies in the fact that if war were declared by the British government against any nation or by any nation against Britain, we have to go to war. That is not a bright prospect for a young and thriving country like Canada, that has won its way to the front among the nations without spilling one drop of human blood—practically the only nation on God's earth that has achieved its position of independence without a single battle, without one sword being drawn, without one drop of blood being shed. We are asked to throw aside those glorious traditions, to throw aside all our past history, to mix ourselves up in foreign entanglements and foreign wars with peoples with whom we have no quarrel. I say on that point with Gladstone and Bright, and with the leading minds of British statesmen, that the sooner Canada has her independence and is free from all entanglement the better. That is my doctrine, and I take it, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier took his politics, from England. I put myself on record with the leaders of the opposition, and vote with the Nationalists and Conservatives that this policy is useless, extravagant, and of no consequence. That being the case, I think I have done my duty in expressing these views and in seconding the motion of the hon. member from Grandville.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. MEMBERS—No! No! Vote!

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Vote!

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—You can do it if you want to.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The honour of the Senate is at stake.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I will second the motion.

The motion was declared lost on a standing division.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend has the floor; he proposes to speak on the subject.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I regret that the motion of the hon. gentleman to my right (Hon. Mr. Choquette) is too sweeping. It is absolute; there is no discrimination in it. I exceedingly regret that the government have not explained their precise position on this question, that is, to know how far the interval which has elapsed between the passing of this Act and the present time has been employed by them, and how far they are prepared to supplement and carry out the policy of the late government. There was a debate in the hearing of the gentlemen present, and though we had not the concurrence of the hon. gentlemen opposite, we flattered ourselves that we had their acquiesence in some essentials, that is, that they agreed that the country ought to be defended; that there should be some provision for the training of seamen; that there should be some provision for the repairing of ships; and that parliament should make preparation for the defence of the Dominion and for assuming its position of being an auxiliary to the mother state. What was in abeyance, and what was not concurred in, so far as I can perceive, was that we should not proceed immediately to the building of ships. That might be the evolution of the navy; it might take whatever shape it would assume later on; at any rate we thought from the remarks of the leader of the government and the gentleman who followed him, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that they agreed, in a measure at least to these essentials, and that they should be carried out. But if I understood them properly, they differed in opinion as to the expenditure of the money; that we should, instead of building ships as was designed under the Bill, hand over a money contribution to England. Now, as those initial steps could not be taken later on, because this process involved a considerable amount of delay and preparation, it was a corollary on what had been remarked, that we should proceed with the naval establishment and those arrangements now, in order that, if they should be called into utility, they would be effective and perfect. I regret that this Bill now brought in is destructive to all that has been done. I am far from saying that the Act is perfect, or that some clauses of it might not be amended, or that all that was executed under the Act and all the establishments with their details were perfect so that they might not be revised now under the light of experience and of trial and experiment; but none of that is allowed. This Bill is not discriminatory; it destroys every paragraph and every clause in the Act from first to last. It negatives everything that has been done; it roots up all the establishments which have been commenced; it renders fruitless all the expenditure which has been made, and it is utterly destructive as it throws away the money which has been expended, renders all our proceedings nugatory, and, in fine, leaves our maritime country defenceless for the future.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Poor fellows.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—Now that is a position which I do not think the mover of the Bill has contemplated. He has not run into these details and into this modus operandi, and he perhaps does not observe exactly what the passage of his Bill will effect. Previous to our little discussion in this House, there had been in Britain and on the continent, unknown perhaps to us, a prospect of a very pronounced difference with Germany, and the fleets of Britain had been concentrated in the British channel and the North sea to prevent an anticipated attack by Germany. That was the origin of the feeling throughout Britain and the colonies, that something ought to be done to supplement the defence which England could make. Since that event, it appears that there has been, unknown to us, another difference with Germany, and that Britain and Germany were on the verge of war. I do not know whether that is correct or not. Admiral Fisher said he made arrangements to prevent it. Sir Charles Beresford said the navy was in a state of dilapidation and that all their arrangements were futile. I saw in a French paper where there was a British fleet concentrated off Portsmouth, two more in the channel, one on the western coast of England, another on the Eastern coast of England, one on the western coast of Scotland and one on the eastern coast of Scotland, leaving old Ireland to be defended by the native valour of her own sons. But no arrangements provided for the defence of British shipping, in fact none of those arrangements which were imperial in their character and which one would think would be designed and be ready for execution if the designs of the British navy were comprehensive, even if a money contribution to the British government should effect the object which we had in view—imperial defence, embracing the defence of the colonies as well.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Does the hon. gentleman not know that, some ten days ago, Winston Churchill said in Glasgow that he did not want either men or money from the colonies to defend England? Can I have an answer to that??

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—Yes, I can give an answer. I am giving it now. I want to call the attention of the House to a very material change that has taken place in the western world, now under our eyes, and the nations are becoming alive to it; that is the finishing of the Panama canal. The early completion of that canal has revolutionized all the naval programmes of the European nations and of the United States. British commerce is exposed to the depredations of any hostile power. Large fleets of ships will come through the Panama canal and will go on their way to England or to other places of destination. The commerce of England is involved in this. The British government have become alive to it. They have resuscitated Jamaica, which used to be an old naval station; they have reinforced Bermuda; and it those fleets of ships are not to be attacked by a hostile power they must have a port of refuge like Halifax, intermediate, to which they can resort and from which they can be convoyed to their place of destination. Any of you gentlemen remember that at one time a fleet of four hundred merchant ships was sent out from England, and two admirals of England, Delaval and Kiligrew were to convoy them through the Mediterranean. They went as far as Gibralter and turned back, and the French navy issued out and devastated and harassed that fleet. They lost millions in the commerce of England, till the mercantile marine was nearly broken up by it. What is the fact?

Unless there is a place of refuge from which ships can issue and protect it, the whole of the commerce of England coming through the Panama canal is running a risk from any hostile power that may attack it, and as our ships proceed under convoy it is esential that these places of refuge and places to obtain supplies, should be established all along the line. What was the fact? President Taft has referred to that matter. He berated the Democratic party that they had objected to provide adequately for the building of a navy to maintain their predominance in that narrow sea, and the United States government is proceeding to build two iron clads annually, in order that their prestige in those waters may be maintained. It is well known to any one who looks into naval affairs that the collection of a fleet of dreadnoughts inshore is hazardous, and a waste of money, because the nations to-day have a secret by which a bomb can be dropped from a contrivance above which destroys large ships, and one exploding destroys a whole fleet. Naval conflicts in the future may be on the open ocean by individual ships of great size. England is departing from the dreadnought and is building these floating argosies so that they may be more powerful than other factors on the open sea. The alternative policy of my hon. friend the leader of the government here is not so attractive as it was even at the period when he made his statement. Therefore, we have a new start. The commerce of Britain is its most important asset. From it proceeds its financial power, and it is recognized as the mainstay of the country. I think it is not beyond the ken of men who have large views to suppose that the conflicts of the future will not be individual conflicts, but a conflict of groups of nations against other groups. It will not be England against Germany, or Germany against France, but it will be a combination of nations. What prize so great that could be put before a hostile nation as the whole British commerce, or to British commerce that will traverse the northern and western seas? My hon. friend spoke about the immunity of Canada. What greater prize could be placed before a group of nations than the capturing of Canada and making it part of another country? Is it on the political programme any where? Has my hon. friend ever thought of it? While Canada is in its process of development and defenceless, it may be used as a pawn in European combinations, and may be handed over to some other nation as a bribe for its neutrality or for its active intervention. This is a very important national question, and perhaps one of the most important problems with which we can deal. The other day a hurricane overtook the United States gunboats and torpedo boats in the vicinity of Bermuda. What was the object of that expedition off Bermuda? Can my hon. friend answer that? These boats were overtaken by the hurricane and took refuge in Bermuda. Why were they on the ocean in such inclement weather? They were measuring the radius of and influence of attack of torpedo and other destroyers on vessels coming through the Panama canal. Who owns those boats? Were those manœuvres carried on in the depth of winter for nothing? Is the attitude of all the nations harmonious? Are they looking at the development of Canada with philanthropic eyes? Are we never to expect any disruption or any interruption of the amicable feeling which now prevails amongst the nations of Europe? These are object lessons which we have to face, which cannot be ignored.

With regard to the turmoil that has occurred in Quebec, I regret to say that designing people made use of the feelings of the people residing inland, and persuaded them that there was danger of injury and a prospect of conscription; that the peaceful farmers in Quebec would be dragged from their homes by conscription and pressed into the navy. There was no prospect that such a thing would occur, because under the modern system these people would be of no use in the navy. They might have been made to serve in the war of 1812, or in the conscription of France, when the whole population was decimated by the Napoleonic wars, but at the present time the navy requires trained scientific men who are used to their status, and each one fits into his place precisely, where he can be the most effective, and such a condition cannot be brought about in a day, nor can it be made effective by conscripts who would only be food for powder, and would be in the way of those who would be conducting a modern scientific battle. I agree with hon. gentleman that perhaps the Act which was passed was not worked out to the very best advantage. It might be altered or modified. I do not believe it should be swept away in its entirety, and I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill, first of all on economic grounds, that we should not dismantle the material which has already been used, we should not destroy the establishment which has already been created, or undo the work which has been done up to the present, although it has been scoffed at by my hon. friend; secondly I cannot agree with this measure because it would leave the country defenceless, and thirdly I cannot agree with his Bill because we cannot stand independent of Great Britain, and we must throw in our lot with the old country. When they make their defence, which they will have to do against hostile nations, we must be with them, and by their side. Their flag is our flag. Their army is ours, and their navy is our navy. We must be part and parcel of the British Empire. The British Empire must defend us, and we must do our part to defend the British Empire.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This is a question which the people of British Columbia take a very great interest in. The people of that province for a long time wanted to see the navy pushed forward as vigorously as possible. There was some disappointment with regard to the action of the late government. They thought more progress might have been made. A few weeks ago a resolution was introduced in the local House and passed unanimously. That resolution reads as follows:

> Brewster moved seconded by McBride, that whereas Canada and the mother country are agreed that it is right and reasonable that all the partners in the empire should contribute towards the naval defence of that empire.
>
> And whereas the speedy completion of the Panama canal must enormously increase the shipping business of this coast, and whereas the government of Canada has decided that any scheme of naval defence to be effective, must be by co-operation with the mother country and the other parts of the empire: Therefore be it resolved that the Dominion government be urged that in view of the great importance for the immediate and adequate protection of the Pacific coast of Canada, the question of naval defence be considered at the earliest possible date.

I understand this resolution has been forwarded to the government here, and I presume the people of British Columbia are looking for an answer from the government of Canada as to what action they propose to take on the naval question. The question of defence on the Pacific coast is a very urgent one. We have for a number of years observed the result of not protecting the interests of our own country by the amount of poaching which has been carried on in the fishery business on the Pacific coast. It stands to reason if we do not show that we are prepared to protect and defend ourselves, we are liable to be attacked by any nation looking for territory. We are, of course, nearer to China and Japan, which are showing great activity at the present time, and are preparing to take a more progressive stand amongst the nations of the world than they have taken before. That fact causes the people on the Pacific a considerable amount of anxiety as to what is going to be done in the future. They think at the present time that this government should go forward and adopt the proposal that was made by the Admiralty at the conference in 1909, of establishing a fleet unit on the Pacific coast, a unit that would combine with the units on the China and Australian coasts; and if there were a fleet of three strong units it would be of great service if any trouble arose in those waters. I agree with what has been so admirably said by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken on the question of the Panama canal, and the alteration of the situation on the Pacific, and I hope some action will be taken by the government immediately on this question.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia), moved the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—I should like to ask one question. Last November, Italy declared war against Turkey. Italy possesses a first-class fleet and Turkey has not a single vessel. Why should Canada not benefit by the sad experience which Turkey presents to-day, through having all her seaboard exposed to Italian vessels, and having her great seaports bombarded by the Italian navy? We all know that on land the Turkish soldiers are more than a match for the Italians, but we know that Italy now holds Turkey at her mercy. Should we not benefit by this lesson and equip Canada with a fair navy, so as to be prepared for attack in the future?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—An attack by whom?

Hon. BOYER—By anybody.

The motion to adjourn the debate was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—When the hon. gentleman introduced this Bill, I thought it was a huge joke that a private member of this Chamber should try to break down the policy of the strong Liberal party, arrived at after deliberate consideration two years ago; and now that he is proceeding with the measure, I think he has been urged on by a faction of the Nationalist party in Quebec. There is a sort of mixed loyalty there. Some of these men will say, 'we are loyal to the empire, but we would not raise a hand in its defence.' What kind of loyalty is that? The only excuse offered for the present Bill is the stand taken by some of the Conservative party two years ago. The hon. gentleman from Grandville has presented the arguments of the opposition party at that time. Look at the attitude of the government now? The hon. gentleman knows that there is a conciliatory policy, to refer the matter to Great Britain. That is a wise suggestion.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—What is the attitude of the Conservative party on this question?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—As far as I know, it is to consult with the imperial government on the subject. I believe they would be as willing as any other party to have a navy. It is necessary that we should do something in our own defence. We stand in an anomalous position. We find a faction in this country opposed to lifting a hand in defence of the British Empire. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that if this Bill should pass this House—which it should not do—it could not possibly be carried in the Commons. After due consideration, and a great deal of argument for and against, the Naval Act was passed. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he was in this Chamber when the Bill was passed two years ago? If he was, he voted for it and supported it, and now he gives no reason to repeal it, except that he is forced on by the National party to take this action. The Bill is not worth considering.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from Grandville has introduced a Bill intitled an Act to repeal the Naval Service Act, and which reads as follows: 'Chap. 43 of the Statutes of 1910, entitled an Act respecting the Naval Service of Canada is hereby repealed.' He now moves the second reading of the Bill to repeal the Act passed in May, 1910. At that session the late government brought down to parliament a policy for the organization of a separate navy. The attitude of the then Conservative opposition was, that, if Canada committed itself to a naval programme, it should be along lines of approximately united action with and the centre of control in the imperial navy. The view of the government of that day prevailed, and in pursuance thereof they brought down such a Bill, and the present Naval Service Act was passed. It's scope is very wide, and with the indulgence of the House, inasmuch as my hon. friend has moved for the repeal of that Act, I should like to intimate to this Chamber its comprehensive character. The Act provides for the organization of the Department of the Naval Service, which department is entrusted with the administration of the following services, Naval branch, Fisheries Protection, Wireless Telegraph, Hydrographic Survey, and Tidal Service. A department has been organized under this Act and is now administering these various branches. As hon. gentlemen who have looked into the Act, will know, it makes provision for a new branch of the public service, for a department complete in every respect, and comprehensive to the extent which I have mentioned.

The Naval Service branch itself comprises the maintaining of two ships, the 'Niobe' and the 'Rainbow,' bought from the imperial government and used chiefly as training ships. The dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt, were transferred from the imperial government to the Dominion government on condition that they should be held for naval purposes, and maintained in an efficient condition. Under the Naval Service Act, these dockyards are maintained and administered by the Department of the Naval Service. There are in the employ of the government in these dockyards at Halifax, 182 persons, and at Esquimalt eighteen. It has also enlisted a certain number of men and boys for the naval service, and these recruits are being trained on the two ships, which I have already mentioned. A naval college has also been started at Halifax for the education of cadets who propose to become officers in the Canadian navy.

Then there is the fishery protection fleet branch of the service, which comprises eight vessels and 180 men. The vessels are occupied in protecting the off-shore fisheries of Canada.

Then there is the hydrographic survey, which has seven vessels in commission surveying the coast of Canada. The crew employed on these vessels number 186, and the survey staff comprises sixteen.

The wireless branch operates the government wireless station along the coast at British Columbia, the operation of the government owned stations between Montreal and the sea, which are operated under contract by the Marconi company.

Then there is the tidal service, which issues the tidal prediction and tide tables for the Canadian ports. That service has one vessel with a crew of thirty-one and some fourteen observers, and a technical staff of six. A summary of the employees of the naval service at the present time is as follows: Naval service, 967; fishery protection service, 178; hydrographic survey, 202; wireless, 30; tidal service, 50. Clerical staff at Ottawa, 41; a total of 1,462. The repeal of the Naval Service Act, without its being replaced by some other Act, would mean that all these services would be suspended, and would create chaos among the men who have been employed. So much for a short survey of the service rendered by this particular department. In October 1911 the present government came into office. Upon coming into office they found this branch of the public service, which had recently been organized, in full operation to the extent, which I have mentioned. They, therefore, came into office with an inherited obligation. Now, I need not say to hon. gentlemen that although the present government came into office in 1911, yet we recognize, under our governmental policy that different governments are not in reality different entities; the King's government always goes on, it is a continuous organization. Because one group, representing a political party, may succeed a group representing another political party, it does not necessarily follow that the public service of the country must become dislocated by reason of any difference of opinion in these two groups. There are responsibilities to be borne, there are obligations to be met, there are public duties to be discharged, and it becomes the duty of one group succeeding another group, though of different political complexion, to perform these public duties, and to discharge the public obligations to the same extent as if that change had not taken place, this, of course, consistent with the adoption of a policy which will not create disruption of public affairs, and which would not create a paralysis, so to speak, of the body politic. My hon. friend from Grandville surely would not suppose that immediately the present government took office in October, 1911, and met parliament a few weeks after, they at one fell swoop, notwithstanding the opinions which they may have had upon the navy, and the divergence of opinion which they expressed as to the policy of the late government, should immediately have brought down a Bill wiping out without any provision this very important branch of the public service, and thus dislocating the public business which necessarily appertains to this branch of government.

As indicative of the opinions which the present government entertain as to this particular policy, they did see their way clear, without in any way interfering with the public service, without in any way repudiating obligations which had been properly assumed, to cancel a proposed contract for the construction of six vessels which would have approximately cost, if completed, in the vicinity of twenty millions of dollars. If my hon. friend should ask for evidence of good faith as to the present government carrying out the opinions of their party expressed while in opposition, I might point to that particular act of the present government as indicating that action dealing with this subject will be taken and full responsibility assumed by the government for whatever that action may be. There have been obligations entered into by the government of Canada with reference to this navy. Very great responsibilities have been assumed, and this government recognizes, quite as fully as the late government, that the credit of Canada has to be maintained notwithstanding the divergence in views which may be entertained respecting this great public question. My hon. friend has referred to the necessity of something being done at once. He has rebuked the government for not at an early date bringing down a Bill to repeal this Act. He has referred to the enormous cost which the building and the operating of this navy will involve. My hon. friend has fixed it at a sum, I think, approximating a hundred millions of dollars. If that be the case, then the greater necessity exists for deliberate and wise action being taken by the government of the day as to the policy which they will pursue in revising or reforming the policy to which the late government committed the country. The more important this question appears, the more important it is that the most deliberate action should be taken upon it. Permit me to say, with all due respect to my hon. friend, that the government of the day would be recreant to its duty, would be recreant to the responsibility which rests upon its shoulders, if it were to stand idly by and permit a private member to assume the responsibility of introducing and of carrying through parliament a Bill repealing and abolishing an important branch of the public service such as I have mentioned.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That view of the case must have already presented itself to my hon. friend. Under no consideration could the government relieve itself of the responsibility which attaches to it. At least, if that were done, my hon. friend must realize full well that it would lead to chaos and confusion. It would lead to a repudiation of all the obligations and responsibilities upon which the government of Canada has entered. The intention of the government is to give, during the approaching recess, full consideration to these questions. It will probably consult with the admiralty authorities in Great Britain as to how this branch of the public service can be made of most value, not only to Canada but to the empire; and after due deliberation, I have no doubt that before the next session of parliament the government will in the meantime have been able to give their very best consideration to this very important question. It is to be hoped the government will then be able to bring down to parliament a policy upon this question that at least will command the confidence of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Do I understand from the hon. gentleman who leads this House that it is not the intention of the government to alter the Naval Act in any sense whatever during this session?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has stated that the opposition, during the last parliament, propounded a policy which tended to have Canada, in the matter of naval defence, work in closer co-operation with the mother country. He has not given any specific resolution or statement upon which to base that affirmation. We know that the policy of the then leader of the opposition was to offer some dreadnoughts to the admiralty, and to consult the people of Canada upon the policy of building a Canadian navy. The latter part of the policy expressed by the then leader of the opposition was in absolute contradiction of the resolution of March 29, 1909, which was unanimously adopted by the House. The hon. gentleman has not stated in what particular the naval policy of the late government is to be modified by the present government; but we all know that the principal attack of the opposition, led by the now premier, was urged against clause 23 of the Act, which reads as follows:

> In case of emergency, the Governor in Council may place at the disposal of His Majesty for general service in the royal navy the naval service, or any part thereof or any ships or vessels of the naval service, or officers and seamen serving in such ships, and any officers or seaman belonging to the naval service.

This clause was attacked by the then opposition as indicating a separatist policy, and it was urged that, instead of the government retaining the right to place at the disposal of the admiralty, in case of emergency, the ships of the Canadian navy, the day a declaration of war was made, that the Canadian ships should automatically go under the jurisdiction and authority of the British admiralty. My hon. friend says that the government will probably consult the admiralty as to the policy of be followed, as expressed by him in his opening remarks, which is to work in closer union with the mother country in the defence of Canada and of the empire. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend state that the admiralty will be consulted to that end, because the admiralty has already been consulted, not very long ago—just two years ago, and has in no uncertain sound declared its desires. I have heard it stated, and I have read in the Nationalist organ in Montreal, that since 1896 the British authorities had not expressed any decided opinion as to what the Dominions beyond the seas should do for the defence of the empire, and as to the role that those dominions should play. It seems to me that the memorandum of the admiralty, which was the basis upon which the whole discussion took place at the naval conference of 1909, is quite clear and precise as to the wishes of the British admiralty. We find in that memorandum that on March 18, 1909, statements were made as to the growing strength of foreign nations, by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and the First Lord of the admiralty, on the introduction of the navy estimate for 1909-10; that following the statement of the Prime Minister and the First Lord of the admiralty, the dominions beyond the seas thought it their duty to answer the call. The memorandum proceeds to state what the dominions thought fit to do in answer to the statement made by the British ministers, and proceed to state what the admiralty thought desirable in the interest of the empire as a whole. The first proposition laid down by the admiralty was the following:

> If the problem of imperial naval defence were considered merely as a problem of naval stategy, it would be found that the greatest output of strength for a given expenditure is obtained by the maintenance of a single navy with the concomitant unity of training and unity of command.
>
> In furtherance, then, of the simple strategical ideal the maximum of power would be if all parts of the empire contributed, according to their needs and resources to the maintenance of the British navy.

This was the ideal policy; the one which was first suggested by the admiralty; the one which the then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister of Canada, seemed disposed to support when he did offer to the admiralty some dreadnoughts as the first contribution of Canada to the defence of the British Empire.

This being contrary to the policy contained in the resolution of March 29, 1909, unanimously adopted by the House of Commons, the admiralty, when conferring with the representatives of the dominions beyond the seas, made an alternative proposition at one of the first sittings of that conference. I will read now from the report which was laid before the two Houses of parliament in England. It reads:

> The Canadian representatives explained in what respect they desired the advice of the admiralty in regard to the measures of naval defence which might be considered consistent with the resolution adopted by the Canadian parliament on the 29th March, 1909.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—When was that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This was at the Naval Conference of 1909, in which all the dominions beyond the seas were represented. This resolution of the 29th of March, 1909, excluding the contribution which was being asked or suggested in the memorandum which I have just cited, the admiralty proceeded to make the alternative proposition as follows:

> While on naval strategical considerations, it was thought that a fleet unit on the Pacific, as outlined by the Admiralty, might in future form an acceptable system of naval defence, it was recognized that Canada's double seaboard rendered the provision of such a fleet unit unsuitable for the present.

So that we have here the second alternative proposition of the admiralty, which was that Canada should maintain a complete fleet unit on the Pacific. This, being objected to by Canada, the admiralty then, recognizing that we had those two seaboards to defend, and recognizing moreover that we could only enter into a certain expenditure, suggested that certain ships be built and maintained on the Pacific and on the Atlantic. The admiralty suggested the building of ships, according to the amount that Canada was ready to spend for the beginning of our naval defence. We have, in the papers which were laid before both branches of parliament in England, the policy suggested by the admiralty. It is open to the present government, as it was open to the preceding one, to know exactly the wishes of the admiralty. They are contained in the report I have just cited. The late government thought that Canada should begin the defence of its own coast and ports by the building of its own navy in its own shipyards. It was a desire shared in by the opposition on the 29th of March, 1909, and it is the policy which was accepted by both branches of parliament in 1910. I find that my hon. friend still declares that the present government will stand by the policy that it propounded in opposition, and will consult the admiralty as to the best means of developing the Canadian defence and helping the British Empire. This is perhaps the third opinion which was expressed by the then leader of the opposition. I see—and my hon. friend may correct me if I am wrong—that the admiralty may probably be consulted according to its own statement, and probably not, but he has failed to tell us if, after the admiralty is consulted, the people will be consulted by referendum? I should like to ask him now if the government which he represents so ably in this House intends to lay before the people the proposition which the government may draft for a submission to the people of Canada by a referendum or plebiscite, after having consulted or not the admiralty? I suppose that my hon. friend has no opinion to give just now upon this question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I have said, the government does not propose at the present session of parliament, to say what course they will pursue upon this very important question. They will give every consideration to it during the recess, and next session of parliament will be able to bring down a pronouncement upon it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But there is no doubt in the mind of my hon. friend at all events—and I am perhaps repeating his own words—that the present government intends to stand by the policy laid down by the leader of the opposition, during the last parliament upon this question?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will have to wait until the next session of parliament.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—By force of numbers, or by force of respect for the interests of the country, the country is entitled to know what the policy is to be.

An hon. SENATOR—When?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Right off.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will have to wait. He will have to possess his soul in patience.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Give them time to think.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am sorry that we cannot get more light on the subject, than it pleases the hon. gentleman to give us.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Ask him about the brass band.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Apparently the government was formed without a policy being agreed upon by the diverse components of that cabinet. We went to the people on the 21st September with reciprocity as the main question. A section of the present cabinet tried to push backward that question in order to put in the forefront the naval policy of the late government. This effort was made specially in the province of Quebec. In fact, many of the most brilliant supporters of the opposition at the time favoured reciprocity. Some of the present cabinet ministers had doubtful views on the question of reciprocity, but the opposition, represented then by the three French representatives of the present cabinet, had no undecided view on the naval policy which should be followed by Canada. Their view was diametrically opposed to that of the then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister of Canada. It was so absolutely opposed that not one of the three gentlemen who now represent the province of Quebec in the cabinet was willing to go on the platform with their now present leader, the right hon. the Prime Minister of Canada. That hon. gentleman came into the province of Quebec and held a series of meetings, but never had at his side any of the three gentlemen who now adorn his cabinet as representatives ofthe province of Quebec. While the hon. gentleman was holding meetings in the city of Montreal in a certain part of the city, some of his present colleagues were holding meetings elsewhere and denouncing not only the naval policy of the late government, but the views held by the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister of Canada—denouncing them most forcibly, in terms as stern and as harsh as those which were addressed to the late premier. This was the situation throughout the province of Quebec up to the 21st of September. We are told on this day of February, 1912, after four or five months of joint administration and deliberation by those two groups, that no policy has been discussed or decided upon by the present government. What does this mean? It means that two questions were laid before the people on the 21st of September. One of them, that of reciprocity, was absolutely wiped off the board, because no further action needed to be taken by the parliament of Canada upon it. The people of Canada, on the 21st of September, settled for the time being, for this parliament at all events, the question of reciprocity. There remained but one important question, which loomed larger in the eyes and in the minds of the representatives of the Province of Quebec in the present cabinet than that of reciprocity; it was the naval policy of Canada.

And yet we are told to-day officially, that a cabinet was formed in October to which the present Prime Minister invited three representatives of the province of Quebec, and that these gentlemen entered the cabinet knowing that there was but one important question upon which action would have to be taken by this parliament. And they did enter the cabinet without asking the Prime Minister what would be his policy on the naval question, or if they could agree at all on any feature of that policy. I wonder if such a thing could be dreamed of in any other country but Canada? In any country where representative government obtains! A cabinet was formed when there was but one question which would have to be solved by this government, composed of men who are diametrically opposed to each other on this very question. Although we have from the leading representative of the Quebec section a statement made by the Hon. Mr. Monk, when he went before his constituency to be re-elected as a cabinet minister. 'That the Prime Minister was really a gentleman because he had allowed him the privilege, or patronage, of selecting his colleagues,' this is all that we have had so far from the hon. gentleman. I have heard, of course, that when the same question was put to him in another place, he answered: 'The hon. gentlemen are there, and we are here.' We will await developments. We shall see if these hon. gentlemen can agree upon some kind of a policy. They are at the antipodes, but in the meantime, they will hold office. If my hon. friend expressed really the view of the government in the opening remarks which he made, and which will be found in 'Hansard,' then surely the Tory lion has swallowed the National lamb, for the hon. gentleman has stated that the policy of the then leader of the opposition and of the government of the day was that Canada should work in closer union in development of its naval policy with Great Britain.

The hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) has asked, in view of the result of the election on September last, that those who did support the Naval Act for the reasons given at the time should now help him to repeal that Act. He may well say that there are a few counties where a majority has expressed against the naval policy. Perhaps they can be counted upon the fingers of both hands. That is all we have heard from the province of Quebec, which would justify my hon. friend in asking those who did support that Act to retrace their steps. I do not know to what extent the Naval Act has played an effective role in the other provinces. If it has played any part, it has been simply in support of the policy of the then leader of the opposition which asked that clause 23 be recalled, and that instead of 'may' the word 'shall' should appear, thus putting the navy automatically, when war was declared, at the service of the admiralty. The great majority at the back of the present government, in Ontario, perhaps, declared in favour of the policy of the then leader of the opposition that dreadnoughts should first be sent to reinforce the British navy. I do not believe that a very clear expression of opinion was had from the other provinces; and I am convinced that there are but few counties where perhaps a few hundred electors were influenced by this naval question in the province of Quebec. We of the Liberal party here stand, I think logically, by the principle which we aimed to establish, that of the unity of the empire based upon the autonomy of the Dominion, while we have reason to believe that the present government will be found supporting the contrary principle—the unity of the empire based upon concentration. We believe we were the true autonomist party during the last parliament, and when we went before the people as well, and we will stand by that policy this evening, as we shall at all times.

Hon. Mr. KERR—We learned this afternoon from the hon. senator from Victoria division (Mr. Cloran) that there are factions in the province of Quebec, and it was suggested that the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill was probably introducing it in the hope that we would have the support of some of the factions who have been dealing with the naval question. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman who represents the government here whether there are any of the members of the present cabinet who may be said to represent these factions? I would like to know from him whether there are members of the present cabinet who may be said to be opposed to the naval policy as associated with British connection? I would like to know from him whether he can give us any information on this point? We have had a statement carefully prepared, evidently under the direction of the cabinet, on this question. I think it is due to this House, in view of the gravity of this question, that we should know and understand whether the hon. gentleman recognizes the description which was given of the factions in the province of Quebec, and whether they are represented in the present cabinet? I think that is a question which we are entitled to have answered, and I think we ought to have the answer at once.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—It is a cabinet secret.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say to my hon. friend, that the government know of no factions as far as the cabinet is concerned.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Then there can be the less trouble and excuse for delaying and dallying with an important question like this.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is only excusable on the ground of there being differences in the cabinet. It is only excusable to any extent whatever, and that only to a very slight extent, because there are some members of the cabinet whom we are told, are opposed to any kind of a naval policy, and in fact who go so far as to say that they would even risk British connection rather than proceed with the establishment of a Canadian navy. If the only answer I can get is what the hon. gentleman has given, I am sure he will be courteous enough to say whether there are in the cabinet members with a declared policy opposed to the naval policy. If there are we ought to know it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend's curiosity is without limit, and I am sorry I cannot gratify it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the hon. gentleman does not know or cannot gratify, he does not say he does not know, but he says he cannot gratify it. I assume, therefore, he does know, and it is not policy to avow. Proceeding on that line, I have a word or two to say because I think this is one of the most disappointing situations that I have ever known since I have been connected with parliamentary life. We had a description of what the Act was from the hon. gentleman, but he forgot to say that the prime business of the Naval Act was the recognition and establishment of a naval service, and that naval service one in connection with and under the control and direction of officers of the British navy. It is not as if nothing had been done; a start was made and a very creditable start too, and the ships which were commissioned are officered by officers of the British navy. If ever there was anything which should have attracted Canadians, it is the treatment by Great Britain at the commencement of the Canadian navy, in which the command of the chief ship of the fleet was offered to a native born Canadian, and the son of an honoured member of this Senate. I think that has been overlooked by the representatives of the great loyal party. There is no necessity to explain the establishment of the Canadian navy. That has been made very plain by the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand). Surely if ever there was a time when a party should have been ready with a policy to propound, on which it could speak definitely, it is now, after coming from an election compaign, during which the chief subject for discussion, all through the west at all events, has been the 'old flag,' and British connection, and the Canadian navy. After all these months since October last the naval policy is left practically without a rudder. Under these circumstances it is not to be wondered at that the hon. gentleman from Grandville has introduced a Bill for the purpose of repealing the Naval Act. The hon. gentlemen of the government seem to have no more policy with reference to it, and hesitate in coming to a conclusion as to what they should say or do about it, but spend their time in hunting out where an unfortunate official can be discharged, and in issuing commissions by the score for the purpose of inquiring into the conduct of officials from one end of the country to the other. If they can do this, surely a little time could have been given to determine whether or not we are going to have a Canadian navy, directly connected with the navy of Great Britain. There being nothing from the government on this question, it seems to me that the 'old flag' is being no longer unfurled to the wind, but is now being thrown in the dust and put away to be taken out for election party purposes on some future occasion.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—What about the organization of the band?

Hon. Mr. KERR—The old flag has been thrown in the dust, to lie there until, for party purposes, it will be unfurled to hoodwink the electorate of this country as it was made use of in the last election. We have at last unmasked the fact that the party that talked and boasted of their loyalty throughout the length and breadth of this land have no British policy about them.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—We have unmasked the fact that those gentlemen who have been proclaiming their loyalty throughout the country have not grappled with the first question, and the most important question at a time when Britain was almost at the point of war with one of the most powerful nations of the world; when armies through out all the countries were disquieted and were being prepared for service; when the navies of two powerful countries are grappling with each other in the Mediterranean; and when we hear the sound of war in many countries and the talk of war in other countries. This is the time at which we are told, forsooth, that it is not necessary to prepare, or to have a policy, but we can spend our time fiddling with dismissals of public servants who have been faithful in discharging their duties, but unfortunately belong to the wrong party.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—But we have got the brass band.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think it is a sorry day for Canada when the leader of this House from his place in parliament, speaking on behalf of the great Conservative party now in power, is obliged to rise and say: 'We have no policy, we have not determined what we are going to do; we have to admit that there are diversities and different entities in our government; we have to admit——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No. Will my hon. friend be good enough to retract that remark? I did not make any such statement.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I thought—

Hon. Mr. KERR.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend must know that I have absolutely denied any such thing.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I understood my hon. friend to say that there were differences and different entities——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Which went to form up a party and a cabinet.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, my hon. friend entirely misapprehends what I said. I made no such statement. I spoke of governments as entities, not individuals who compose the governments.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I thought he said—I certainly understood him to say—if the hon. gentleman didn't mean to say it I will withdraw it, of course.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I certainly did understand the hon. gentleman to speak about the differences there were in men and the different entities in governments.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, no. I spoke of governments as entities.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the hon. gentleman does not say so, then I withdraw it; but whether he made the statement or not we have got the fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, the hon. gentleman can make his own statement.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Whether he made the statement or not, we have got the fact also that there are factions, and those factions have been warring with each other, and on that account the government has not been strong enough, has not been brave enough, has not been courageous enough, has not been loyal enough to bring down a policy on this important question.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The hon. gentleman laughs, but I think the people of this country are not disposed to put up with a laugh on this subject. I can say to him that the people of this country are in earnest about this matter; and that the great majority of them have to-day got their eyes on the cabinet as formed to-day, and they have great suspicion about some of the members of the cabinet, and their loyalty and their desire to serve the empire—and the course that has been pursued by the government I think engenders that belief. All that has been said here to-night, and the statement that has been read, confirms the judgment of the people of the country respecting the attitude of the country. I say it is a sorry day for Canada when the leader of the House, on a question of this kind, with a Bill before him for the repeal of the Naval Act, is not able to give a reason why that Naval Bill should or should not be repealed.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—In these circumstances we are left to decide upon a measure which I think it will not take long to dispose of, because the people are satisfied with what has been done so far under the Naval Act, and with the approval which it has received at the hands of the British government, who have expressed themselves so warmly as being satisfied with the course of the late government in that respect. I think we are entitled, before this question is disposed of, to have a more explicit statement with reference to whether there are differences in the cabinet on this naval question or not—whether there are differences of opinion among its members or not, and whether there has been any attempt to deal with this question, or whether it has been simply shelved?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—As I do not intend to vote for this proposition, I wish to make a few observations upon it. I do not think we can, with any regard for the public welfare, at the present moment, pass any Bill which would destroy the work that has so far been done; because, while the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is exceedingly anxious about the credit of Canada as regards its loyalty, what would be the effect to-morrow morning throughout all Europe if it were announced that this branch of parliament had passed a Bill to repeal the Navy Act, and that we had abandoned the mother country? Every part of Europe, from the North sea to the Mediterranean, would ring with such an announcement. Every newspaper in Germany would spread it forth in the most striking headlines, that Canada had cut off its support to the empire, and that is what the enemies of England would want. I have never had very strong opinions on the question, either one way or the other. I am not sufficiently informed as to what the views of the Canadian people are on this question of how we can best meet the obligations which are undoubtedly upon us; but it is clear that the late government of Canada adopted a certain policy which they pursued and which in time, no doubt, would have worked out well. I observe that the present government are building dry docks at St. John for the purpose of taking care—at least it is so alleged by people who are supposed to be well-informed—of the war vessels coming there; so in view of that I do not think there is any great need to repeal the law. But I do think, in view of the general conditions before the world to-day, that we ought not to abandon England, as the effect of this measure would be so far as public opinion is concerned.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I think it is my duty to say just a few words on this question. When the Naval Bill came before this House two or three years ago, I opposed it as strongly as I could, because the policy of the Liberal party up to that time had been the very opposite of the policy then announced by the government. The question had never been before the country. So far as the resolution of the 29th March, 1909, is concerned, the electors had never heard a word of such a policy and I thought it was not proper to impose on the shoulders of the people a burden of many millions of dollars without giving them an opportunity to express their views on the question. We know that the Prime Minister of that day had qualified such a policy as a crime, and held that the millions which the adoption of such a policy would have involved would be better spent in the construction of immense public works in this country. For those reasons I opposed that policy then; but now we have the law on our statutes, and it is quite impossible to repeal it without replacing it by some other provisions. I think, also, that my hon. friend from Grandville, who has moved the second reading of this Bill, should not be in such a hurry. He can wait until another session. The reasons given by the leader of the House are quite satisfactory to me and I am willing to wait until next session and judge the policy then put forward by the government on its merits.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Having some little stake in the country, and supposed to be a representative of public opinion, not tied down to any individual personalities, and not able to make any mark by rehetoric or strong views as to what one party or another party in the country did, with which I have nothing to do, I have but one point before me, and that is Canada, as a part of the British Empire. The question is what is our duty? The government took one view; possibly they were forced into it. They expressed their intention to aid the imperial power all over the world. If the government are not going to take any action, why dont they speak out, and say that they do not want to have anything to do with England? Let them stand by the nation or drop out; there can be no shilly shallying. The people have put the government in power, and the government is responsible for the action it takes. They are Conservatives, or Tories, whatever you may choose to call them. I was a Tory myself, until I was seduced into the Liberal ranks, and I would not hesitate to go back if I thought their policy was in the interest of the country. I have still an open mind. I hope the Senate will view this matter without bias and without being influenced by the party press of the country. The question is more important than party affiliations. What is the duty of Canada for the hour? We see by the press that millions of dollars are being sent to Canada for the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Canadian Northern railway. Has England not a right to say: 'If we are sending our people to Canada and remitting our money to Canada, to build up the nation, Canada should assume her share of our burdens in some way or another.' Do not bring up the question of nationality. My hon. friend was attacking the Cabinet and referring to differences among the ministers. The members of a cabinet are sworn to secrecy, and my hon. friend, the leader of the government here, is not supposed to divulge cabinet secrets. We should not endeavour to draw him out. Probably by next session the government will have thoroughly considered the question of their duty in this matter. Are we to abandon England? Are we to say that because we are a small nation with a small amount of money, we are going to do nothing? The idea is absurd. The late government did what they thought best. We should look at the matter from the standpoint of Canada and should not talk of French or English. We must be united, and must remember that we are imperial to the core, and must take our part in the defence of the empire. The government of the day may be right, and the building of battle ships in Canada may be ridiculous. We may build merchantmen. I think the government would be justified in bringing down a measure to implement the construction of iron ships. We had in the past a wooden navy in St. John, but it has disappeared. We cannot build men-of-war in this country at present. New engines have lately been invented. These vessels are worked by internal combustion engine and they use oil. They would destroy the old ships quite easily but if the government want to capture votes in St. John all they have to do is to announce that they are going to build ships and they will be sure of election. It will be time enough for us to criticise when the government bring down their policy, if it is opposed to our rendering assistance to the empire. In the meantime we should reserve our decision.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—If I understand aright the policy of the government as expressed by the leader of this House, it is that the government have as yet no defined policy as regards the navy, and that in the meantime they will correspond with he admiralty at home, and next session will present their policy. I do not think the hon. gentleman himself is opposed to the building of a navy at all, and I am not at all satisfied that the policy will be to abandon the proposition to build a navy. It is out of the question to say that we cannot build a navy in Canada. We have steel works down in Sydney which would furnish most of the material required in the construction of ships, and, after they are constructed we shall have cargoes ready for shipment to any part of the world. I hope the government will be prepared next year with a matured scheme for the construction of a navy. I am afraid that at the present time there is a lack of harmony in the government in that respect, and that some of the members of the cabinet are opposed to the building of a navy under any condition.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The country is looking to the men now in power, to announce that they will fulfil their pledges to the electorate, or to state that they will refuse to do so. In order to cover his retreat, my hon. friend has just read to the House a statement to the effect that if this Bill were repealed it would disorganize completely the fisheries fleet, the hydrographic survey, the Marconi service, and would throw out of employment fourteen hundred servants. Does the hon. leader of the House believe such a statement? All that is necessary to be done is to recall the Naval Act and put a stop to all the expense which the hon. gentlemen have hitherto condemned as absolutely useless and detrimental not only to the country but to the empire. If my hon. friend thinks that a Bill of this character should not be introduced by a private member, I am quite willing to let him take the Bill, amend it, and improve it, and put it in such a shape that it will fulfil his promise and satisfy the country that his party have not come into power under false pretenses. I speak in earnest, not merely as a senator, but as an elector of this country, which has had some faith in the promises of hon. gentlemen on this question, and I am ashamed to say now that, on one question. I kept company with them, thinking they were manly enough not to leave me alone on a question which is of such vital importance. This is not a trifling question. When the Naval Bill was before the House they proposed a policy of their own. First they said that it was no good at all. In a general way, they stated that it would be of no benefit to this country, or to the empire; and secondly, they stated that, whether the policy were good or bad, it should be submitted to the people before being adopted. My hon. friend speaks for the Postmaster General, the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister of Inland Revenue, each of whom denounced the present Act. If they are willing now to accept the proposition of the leader of the government that the Naval Bill did not go far enough we could understand it. If they wanted a plebiscite, perhaps we could wait; but when I see my hon. friend, speaking in the name of all his colleagues, the Minister of Public Works, and the Postmaster General, I naturally ask what promise have they made to the Prime Minister, or what promise has the Prime Minister made to them? Because they do not intend to do anything they do not propose to resign. When the Postmaster General went back for re-election, he stated that a plebiscite would be taken. We, at least ought to know, because the law is on the statute-book, and the promise was made, that the plebiscite would be taken. Is the government, with the consent of the French ministers, willing now to renounce the policy of submitting the Bill to a plebiscite or repeal the law? We have a right to know that, and if the government do not know what to do, they do not deserve to be where they are, and are occupying their positions under false representations.

My hon. friend said that they are to continue in some way the policy of the late government. Will they continue the policy of the late government because they have done the best they could. On the Ne Temere question, which was in no special hurry, they put aside the policy of the late government. The Minister of Justice of the late government gave an opinion that that was a matter for the provincial government; but my hon. friend, acting I suppose on the voice of Ontario, has put aside that opinion and goes before the court. Why? Are they obliged, or have they decided to continue the policy of the late government on the naval question, which was so bad, so iniquitous, so contrary to the interests of the country and the empire? They do nothing about it at all. They dismiss officials and appoint a lot of commissioners to investigate the service so that they can earn some living. They are satisfied; they are laughing at the public; they are laughing at the electors; they keep their place, and say: When we will be prepared to do something we will do it. You are there, and we are here. I do not think that they will stay long in office. Under the circumstances, I think this House and the country have a right to expect something more than that. I will venture to look into the daily press to-morrow, especially into the 'Devoir,' and see what it will say about the position of the government. I am anxious to see what Mr. Bourassa, Mr. Lavergne, and all those Nationalists who were partners with the hon. gentleman in fighting the Liberal party,—I am anxious to see if they will now fight the policy of this government, for the partnership will be dissolved. The government will say to those people follow or get out. Not later than a few days ago, 'Le Devoir' had an article signed by Mr. Bourassa who did more than anybody else to put the present government in power, and that they ought to have some respect for his opinion, saying that the Naval Act was bad and that it should be repealed 'Delenda est Cathargo.' Now we will see what it will say to-morrow. I will see if the explanation or the silence of my hon. friend will satisfy him as it satisfies my hon. friend from Maskinongé. Perhaps there are some inducements to wait, I don't know what they are; but I am anxious to see to-morrow what the Nationalist party who have been fighting this battle, will do. As far as I am concerned, as an elector of this country who has been deceived, I shall expect an answer, and will try to have it one way or the other. As I said this afternoon, if I had my own way I would find an easy means to get an answer, or I would send those gentlemen back to the people and have them declare their policy. Under the circumstances, I am not going to withdraw the Bill; but will insist upon a vote.

The Senate divided on the motion for the second reading of the Bill, which was rejected by the following vote.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE.

CONTENTS.

The Honourable Messieurs

Choquette, Cloran—2.

NON-CONTENTS.

The Honourable Messieurs

Baird,	Kerr,
Béique,	King,
Beith,	Larivière,
Belcourt,	Lavergne,
Bell,	Legris,
Bostock,	Lougheed,
Boyer,	Macdonald
Campbell,	(Victoria),
Casgrain,	McLaren,
Costigan,	Mitchell,
Dandurand,	Poirier,
David,	Power,
Davis,	Prince,
Derbyshire,	Prowse,
Dessaulles,	Ratz,
De Veber,	Riley,
Domville,	Roche,
Edwards,	Ross (Halifax),
Ellis,	Scott (Sir Richard)
Farrell,	Talbot,
Fiset,	Taylor,
Frost,	Thompson,
Gibson,	Watson,
Gillmor,	Wilson (Elgin),
Godbout,	Yeo,
Jaffray,	Young—51.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I remark, Mr. Speaker, that you did not vote. You have a right to vote.

The SPEAKER—I vote against the motion.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 61) An Act respecting the Gatineau and Ungava Railway Company, and to change its name to The Ottawa and Ungava Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Tessier.

Bill (B 2) An Act to incorporate the Montreal Transcontinental Railway Company—Hon. Mr. Beique.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 29, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (O 2) An Act respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters of the Dominion of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Power.

Bill (P 2) An Act to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose in the Dominion of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Power.

PEACE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

1. Is the government aware that a committee has been organized in the United States to arrange for the celebration of the anniversary of one hundred years of peace amongst the English-speaking people?
2. Has the government had any communication from the said committee? If so, what is the nature of the correspondence?
3. Is it the intention of the government to take part in aforesaid celebration? If so, what action will be taken?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This subject has not yet reached such a stage as to enable me to give a satisfactory answer to the questions. I should be very glad if my hon. friend would repeat his inquiry at some later date, when possibly the question will be somewhat more advanced.

The notice was allowed to stand.

RAILWAY MILEAGE WEST OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

How many miles of railway were in operation on the 1st of January, 1912, west of Lake Superior, and how many in same region in course of construction?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend would desire it I could give him the number of miles both east and west of Lake Superior?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Do that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then the answer is: There were, on the 1st of January, 1912, about 11,280 miles of railway west of Lake Superior, and about 14,800 miles east of Lake Superior officially regarded as being in operation. On the same date there were about 4,800 miles of railway officially regarded as being under construction west of Lake Superior, and about 2,200 miles east of Lake Superior.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 19) An Act to amend the Inquiries Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The purposes and effect of this Bill are to extend to the harbour and coast waters of British Columbia the provisions already contained in the Criminal Code with regard to fraudulently appropriating timbers, &c., such as are found adrift or cast ashore on the banks or beaches of rivers, streams or lakes in Canada. It furthermore gives to the marks affixed under the British Columbia Timber Marks Act the same effect of constituting prima facie evidence of ownership as is by the law as it now stands, attributed to the marks registered under the Timber Marks Act. It appears that there is a great deal of fraudulent appropriation of timber floating in these British Columbia waters, and, at the instance of the lumbermen of British Columbia, it has seemed advisable to amend the criminal law to give them the protection that the Bill proposes to afford.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does the hon. gentleman remember what the penalties are?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The first clause of the Bill reads:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years imprisonment, &c.

Of course that would be the maximum punishment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Judges are sometimes severe.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In all cases we fix a maximum penalty, the imposition of which we have to leave to the discretion of the court.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is, at any rate, one feature is this Bill which deserves a little consideration. One can readily conceive that a log of timber may become almost a nuisance in front of the land of a riparian owner. It might be just in front of a factory, or something of that sort, where it would be an obstruction which should be removed, and there should be some qualification of the provision of this Bill, so that if a man innocently removes a log of that kind he shall not be liable to any penalty. There should be an option of paying a fine. To have no penalty, but imprisonment for an act, which may really be comparatively harmless, is going rather far.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have looked into the statute, and find that it makes no change in the penalty which may be imposed for violation of the Act. The present law for a similar class of offences gives authority to the court to impose the same penalty of three years imprisonment for violation of this provision. Of course, such an offence would have to be feloniously committed.

Hon. Mr. DAUDURAND—The clause itself begins with the word 'fraudulently'.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Does the Bill define the character and size of the log? Many people living on the St. Lawrence depend for all their fuel on driftwood, and the size of the log should make a difference. Of course, it is for the legal gentlemen in this House to elucidate the point. If a log is drifting down the St. Lawrence below Quebec, and people save that log, bring it ashore and cut it up for fuel, that should not be an offence. A great many people gather their fuel on the shores of the St. Lawrence every year. Would these people come under this Bill? I have gathered driftwood myself.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—You can gather driftwood so long as it is not marked; but it is a felonious act to take possession of any logs stamped with the mark of the registered owner. Very many instances similar to the case referred to by the hon. gentleman from Halifax have arisen. A log will come up in front of a house, or on the grounds of a private citizen, and all you can do is to roll it into the water. If you move it away, or cut it up for fuel, you are liable to be brought up under the Act.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I am not so sure that you would not be liable for rolling it into the water under this Act.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—No, because that is the highway for it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend says that the log is supposed to be marked. There is nothing in this Bill which says so. One man might claim to be the owner of a log and dispose of it to another, and if the party selling the log did not prove to be the owner, the purchaser would become liable.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—He is not liable unless it is marked. The marks are all registered, and recourse can only be against parties taking logs which are marked.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I do not interpret this clause in that way. If a man takes possession of a log, even if it is not marked, under this clause he would be liable.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—From a criminal point of view, I look on this as a one-sided question. Logs that are not marked may drift down the river, and may be lodged on my property. Such a thing has occurred for sixteen years along a mile, or three-quarters of a mile, of river shore on the Ottawa. The logs drift upon the rocks, and what law is going to force me to take a team of horses and drag them back to the water so that they may float? If they remain on my property and I take them I will be held liable. They have no right on my property at all, and it is up to the lumber firms, and not the individual to see that they float down the stream. The penalty is all in favour of the lumberman and against the individual owner of lots along the shores of lakes and rivers. This law, as far as it goes, may be correct, but it does not go far enough, because it does not protect the rights of the individual owners of lots along the shores of lakes and rivers. It is not fair to compel private individuals, whether they be farmers, cottagers or sportsmen, who own property on the shores of lakes or rivers, to haul logs from their shore and dump them back into the lake or river; yet if they keep them there they are liable, under this Act, to prosecution. That is not a fair proposition. The hon. leader of the House will understand what I mean. There is no authority to compel an individual to dump back logs that have drifted on his land. The logs come down and in some cases remain on the land all summer, and become dry and rotted wood. If the owner of the land uses them, he is liable to prosecution, and to three years in the penitentiary. True, the hon. leader of the House says that a man convicted under such circumstances will not get three years. It is in the discretion of the court; but the hon. leader of the House, as a lawyer, knows that judges frequently give the extreme penalty of the law without any reason. That thing does happen, especially in murder cases. Not later than last autumn, in one of the counties on the St. Lawrence river, a verdict of murder was brought in against a man, and the jury made a strong recommendation to mercy, expecting that the prisoner would get one or two years, but what happened? The judge on the bench ignored the recommendation of the jury, and sentenced the poor old man, the reeve of the county, to penitentiary for the balance of his life. These are things that parliament should provide against, and I insist again that the law should be made so clear, and so precise, that the judges on the bench shall have no right to interpret what parliament means. Let parliament say what it wants to say. We have had the case I have just referred to, and it is a standing outrage on justice to see that old man, a reeve of his county, 75 or 80 years of age, condemned to penitentiary for life, when the jury said he should have all the clemency the Crown could exercise. Coming back to the subject under discussion, I am not going to find fault with the provisions on behalf of the lumberman, but the Bill should contain a clause to protect individual rights. The leader of the House, as a man having a legal mind, and a man who is familiar with the criminal courts of this country, knows that sometimes an offender can get fair play, and even clemency, while at other times he will get the most rigorous treatment. I know that the hon. leader of the House will endorse most of what I have said.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has repeated often in this Chamber that clauses should be made so precise that by no possibility would the law be misinterpreted. The hon. gentleman knows that Acts have been made very clear, and that the Civil Code has been made very clear, and copied mostly from the Roman laws, and yet the very same article has been interpreted differently by different tribunals. There are one hundred things cropping up which show different aspects of a case, and that leads to litigation, so that the very same article may be interpreted differently one hundred times. Of course, the duty of the legislature is to try and make the laws clear, but so long as there are two men on this globe there will be difference of opinion as to the language used in legislation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There can be no doubt that the principle upon which this law is based is correct, that is, to prevent the stealing and appropriating of property which does not belong to parties who take it. But there is the question, to my mind, as to how far this Bill will reach cases where timber has lain for years in the bottom of a lake or river, as has occurred and does occur, particularly with the heavier kinds of timber. Take logs of oak, for instance many of them, after lying in the water for a short time, sink to the bottom. There are many cases where such logs have lain for years, having the distinct mark of the owner upon them. People who are fishing, or for other reasons, hunt them up and take them ashore. How far would this law make it a penal offence in cases of that kind? That is a point that is worth considering. Would a person who would fish them up and bring it ashore be liable under the law?

Hon. MEMBERS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the law applies only to cases where timber has been intentionally and fraudulently removed, there could be no harm in it; otherwise, there should be some protection for such cases as I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest to the hon. leader of the House that it would be well that the provisions of this Bill should be confined to logs which are marked.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I point out to the House that this is the principle of the law as it stands to-day. The provisions of the Bill have in contemplation an extension of the law, as it stands to-day, to the waters of harbours and sounds and streams such, for instance, as the local conditions present on the long coast of British Columbia. The present law, as well as the law involved in this Bill, only refers to logs that are found adrift or cast ashore, and so the law would not apply to sunken logs. It seems to me we could very much more advantageously discuss this in committee, and I should be very glad to have the fullest discussion of the measure in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I think this Bill would apply, without question, to sunken logs, but it could not apply in any sense to unmarked logs. No lumberman would claim an unmarked log; it is the property of whoever gets hold of it; there is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Of course this law is not a new one, and there is a safeguard which appears from the first word of the article—'Every person is guilty who without the consent of the owner thereof fraudulently takes, holds, keeps in his possession, collects, &c. This law has been in operation for years, I do not know how far back it dates, but I am quite sure that it is a very wise one, and we are now simply seeking to extend it to British Columbia, as I understand; so my conviction is that no one can suffer from the passing of this law if he is acting in good faith.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would like to ask the hon. member from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) whether he thinks that logs properly marked which drift on the land of any individual along a river, or lake shore, are to be taken off by the owner of the logs, or to be cast back into the lake or river by the individual owning the land? It cannot be his duty to cast those logs off unless he is paid for it; and how long are those logs to remain there before they become a nuisance and he has a right to dispose of them?

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I am sorry I am unable to answer the question; it is a little beyond me. I have never known a case where such a condition was involved. It is true that logs drifting down a river stick along the banks, and as the water falls they may be on the property of the proprietor of the land. It is my opinion that the owner of the land might require the owner of the logs to remove them, or prosecute him for not claiming his property.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—That is true so far as the river St. John is concerned, because logs get all over the islands in the river and remain there, and the owners would be liable for damage to a man's grass land if they were not removed, and the owner would be liable for damages caused by their removal. No man would have the right to use an unmarked log that would come down the river St. John and get on his land, it would pass into the incorporated booms and become the property of the joint lumbermen and be sold for their common benefit, and the proceeds divided between the operators. There are thousands of feet of logs unmarked that come into the river from operations by negligence and carelessness. A man living along the bank of a river would be liable to be prosecuted if he took an unmarked log and cut it up and used it for his own purpose.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—While the statement made is quite true, perhaps, as applied to the St. John river, I know that on the Ottawa river it is the custom that an unmarked log cannot be claimed by anybody. It is the practice, however, in so far as lumbermen's operations are concerned, to allow these logs to go into the booms and they are separated and each lumberman gets his share of the unmarked logs. I would like to ask this question: if an unmarked log should go into possession of such an individual as has been mentioned, who could take the action against the individual holding an unmarked log? No one could claim that it was his; therefore, how could any one take action? It would be absolutely impossible. What is held on the Ottawa river is that if a lumberman overlooks marking a log he cannot claim the property, because he cannot designate it as being his property.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—In passing legislation of this kind that must be interpreted by magistrates, who are generally not lawyers. it is wise to make the language as plain as possible. We are now legislating for the whole Dominion, not for the Ottawa river, where some of our hon. friends have limits. I have in my mind a stream on which two parties are doing business. One party brands his logs; the other does not. Now, unless there is something specified in the Act. we do not know whether it covers unmarked logs or not. It is very easy to add the word marked;' make it plain, and then the magistrate will have no difficulty in interpreting the law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When the Bill goes before the committee, we can discuss it to better advantage than at the second reading.

The motion was agreed to.

BRITISH CANADIAN LOAN AND INVESTMENT COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved the second reading of Bill (C 2) an Act respecting the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company, Limited.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. Under the rules of the House, this Bill should be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and I ask the Speaker's decision.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman say why?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The uniform practice has been to send Bills respecting loan, investment and insurance companies to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I do not believe there is any such rule.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—That is the practice.

The SPEAKER—Rule 78 refers to the committees of the House; but I do not see anything in the rules requiring that a particular Bill shall go to a particular committee. At all events, I will leave the matter to the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move in amendment that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There can be no question as to the practice and precedent of this House upon questions of this kind, and if there is any good reason why we should depart from practice and precedent, the mover of the resolution should inform the Senate of it. Where there is no rule to govern us, we always act upon practice and precedent.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I have had some experience in the House of Commons, and the practice in that Chamber is to send Bills of this character to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. I have not been long enough in this Chamber to speak with authority in regard to the practice. I have no particular reason for sending it to one committee more than another, except that I have found it rather strange in this House that Bills of this character should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee, which already has quite enough work to do. My idea all along has been that the Private Bills Committee in this Chamber has been ignored altogether too much. The Senate has not taken the advantage it should have taken of that committee. That is my only reason. This committee meets two or three times during the session, and very few Bills are referred to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They meet much oftener than that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—This is not a banking or insurance Bill. It is simply a loan company, and I see no reason why it should not be sent to the Private Bills Committee. The practice in the House of Commons is entirely different.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—In discussing Bills of this kind in committee, the officials of the Finance Department and Insurance are always in attendance. Naturally they expect that when the Bill gets its second reading it will be referred to the committee at whose meetings they are always present. You might as well refer this Bill to the Divorce Committee, because they have not much to do.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Is it any more difficult for the representatives of the Finance Department to attend the Committee on Private Bills than it is to attend the Committee on Banking and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Except that we have the rule and we should abide by it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—We have no rule.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Yes, I never saw a Bill of this nature, during the time I have been in the House, referred to any other committee than that of Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—As seconder of the motion of my hon. friend to the right (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) I feel inclined to take the view that he takes on this matter, that it is a private Bill. I do not see why he should be compelled to send the Bill to any other committee. As I understand, the Committee on Banking and Commerce deals with matters of Banking and Commerce, and things of that kind. We have a Private Bills Committee, and this is a private company, and I see no reason why a Bill of this kind should not be sent to that committee. I have an open mind, and if my hon. friend will move an amendment and will give good reasons why the Bill should be sent to another committee, I may vote with him; but supposing there is no rule here, then I see no reason why this Bill should not go to the Private Bills Committee. That committee will be responsible and can take care of this Bill. If there is a rule compelling this Bill to be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, then, of course it should go there. The Private Bills Committee is just as competent to deal with this Bill as the Banking and Commerce Committee.

The SPEAKER—I stand in this position: a motion is made by the hon. member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) asking to refer the Bill to the Private Bills Committee. His motion is in order, if it is not against one of the rules. If it is against one of the rules, I would ask the hon. gentleman to find the rule. Otherwise I will put the question as it has been moved. The hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) moves an amendment that this Bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. It is for the House to decide.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It is the right of any hon. member of this House, if he so desires, to have a Bill referred to any committee that he likes, notwithstanding that it has been the practice to refer such Bills as this to a certain committee. When you look at the character and title of the Bill, one must come to the conclusion that it is a Bill for the Banking and Commerce Committee to deal with. They are charged with that particular work. Anything relating to banking, insurance companies, lending money, or anything of that kind, and also investing money, should go to that committee. The British Canadian Loan and Investment Company is the title of the Bill, and certainly a Bill of that character ought to go to the committee that has charge of that particular class of work. It is to amend the Act as follows:

> The company may purchase or otherwise acquire, sell, lease, mortgage, exchange, or otherwise dispose of real estate of any tenure and may deal with the same in any way calculated to enhance its value.

We would have to see what this meant, and what powers were granted under the old charter. I think I am right in saying that it was the Banking and Commerce Committee that first reported on the original Bill, and therefore it is only natural that this amending Bill should be referred to the same committee.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The Act was passed in 1876

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The hon. mover of the Bill has not given any reason why it should be referred to any particular committee, and unless he has some special reason the Bill should certainly go to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I find that in 1891 this company's Bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The arguments advanced by the hon. member for York (Hon. Mr. Campbell) have not very much weight, as far as referring this Bill to the committee that dealt with the company's Bill in 1891; because I understand it was originally passed in 1876, and it is not very likely that many of the gentlemen who were conversant with the passing of that Act would take part in the proceedings to-day.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It was amended only a few years ago.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If a member of this House had the right to direct a Bill to any committee he sees fit, I do not think the intention of the House would be carried out. I have been a member of the Striking Committee for a number of years, and the Striking Committee nominates the standing committees in the early part of the session, and in doing so, as nearly as possible, select members to serve on the several committees who are most familiar with the particular work assigned to such committee. The fact should be recognized in referring Bills to committees. Another reason why Bills should be so directed is that we have certain committees of importance. We consider the Banking and Railway Committees the most important committees of the House. We have other, committees, not composed of so many members, and it would not be fair that we should break away from a practice that certain legislation should go to certain committees. This Bill, from the title of it, should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I have no doubt the Private Bills Committee would be quite capable of handling it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—One of the older senators in this House, who is now absent, and one of the best authorities in regard to this matter, the hon. member for Montarville (Hon. Mr. De Boucherville) told me that very often the Private Bills Committee was practically one of the most important committees of the Senate, as well as of the House of Commons That was the case for a long number of years, and he said that the Banking and Commerce Committee was simply an off-shoot of the Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours Committee. The Private Bills Committee was the master of legislation in this honourable House. The hon. gentleman for Montarville (Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville) has been in this House for forty years, and evidently knows what he is talking about. I venture to say that in 1876, when this Bill was first passed, there was no Committee on Banking and Commerce in existence.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—This Bill was amended in 1906.

Hon. Mr CLORAN—I am talking about the original charter which was granted when there was no Banking and Commerce Committee in this House The hon. gentleman from Montarville is an authority on these matters. The objection taken by the hon. member from York (Hon. Mr. Campbell) that the charter was considered and reported upon by the Banking and Commerce Committee cannot hold water. I am speaking simply from memory, and without the records before me. I think the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) is perfectly justified in having any Bill he presents to this House sent to the committee he chooses. The fact that a half dozen certain members are put on the Banking and Commerce Committee, does not mean that the 54 that are left off know nothing about banking and commerce. Because 15 or 20 members are put on the Private Bills Committee it does not follow that the 60 who are left off know nothing about private Bills. This thing of practice and rule grates on my nerves, and on my spirit of advancement. Because a thing has been in practice 50 years is no reason why it should be in practice to-day. I respect my grandfather and grandmother, but I am not obliged to follow their practice. If it is necessary to change the rule and practice, let us change it. The hon. gentleman from Ottawa is justified in asking that this Bill go to the Private Bills Committee

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I regret that my views did not meet with more approval in the House. Why should we load all the work on one or two committees and leave the Miscellaneous Bills Committee without work? I do not like to divide the House on a motion of so little importance, but I think my hon. friend might withdraw his amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Divide the House.

The House divided on the amendment, which was adopted by a standing vote on the following division:

Contents 25, non-contents 11.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Why is it that a member is asked to which committee he desires to refer his Bill?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It has never been the practice to ask a member.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—He is always asked.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not at all.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (D 2) an Act respecting the Alberta Peace River and Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Davis.

Bill (E 2) an Act to incorporate the Ottawa and Lake McGregor Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt

Bill (G 2) an Act for the relief of William Holloway Adams.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (H 2) an Act to incorporate the Guarantee Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Farrell.

Bill (I 2) an act respecting the British Columbia and Dawson Railway Company. --Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (J 2) an Act respecting the Vancouver, Fraser Valley and Southern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: This Bill proposes to amend the Civil Service Act placing the private secretaries of ministers in a better position than they at present occupy. It proposes to permit the minister to appoint his private secretary to a division higher than the Act would now permit. I may say, when it was before the Commons it received the support of both sides of the House, and particularly that of the leader of the opposition. Difficulty arose upon the government going out as to the status of their private secretaries, and this Bill has been introduced largely to meet that difficulty, as well as to prevent such a difficulty arising in the future.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Could my hon. friend state the amounts that would probably be payable under this?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 39 of the Civil Service Act, which this Bill proposes to amend, provides that a private secretary may, without examination, and irrespective of age. be appointed for a period not exceeding one year. and paid as a clerk in subdivision 'B' of the second division. Now subdivision 'B' of the second division places the salaries of those appointed under it at eight to sixteen hundred a year. This proposes to give discretion to the government to appoint secretaries in a higher division; that is in subdivision 'A' of the second division, with salary ranging from sixteen hundred to twenty-one hundred, or subdivision 'B' of the first division, from twenty-one to twenty-eight hundred.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —He would receive $600 in addition to that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—$600 in addition thereto while acting as private secretary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT --There is a good deal to be said, no doubt, for some of those private secretaries receiving a larger salary. If I follow the hon. gentleman right, the salary would considerably exceed $3,000. There are some secretaries that it would be properly applied to; but we have, in my opinion, far too many cabinet ministers. That is the opinion I have enunciated over and over again. My idea is that we should have far fewer cabinet ministers, and a much larger number of private secretaries, after the English pattern. I understand we have fourteen ministers at present, with portfolios.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would not like to restrict my hon. friend. I think he is worth two or three of them. He might have as expensive a secretary as he liked, but I doubt the wisdom of the whole fourteen gentlemen having in their gift the right of appointing a secretary at a salary of over $3,000, which is what they can do, if I read this aright.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it would be possible to appoint a secretary in subdivision (B) of the first division at $2,800, and he would, therefore, receive $3,400 as long as he acted as a private secretary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That was more than a deputy minister received a few years ago.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But I might say to my hon. friend that I am not aware of any of those secretaries being appointed at that figure. I think most of them would be appointed at less.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There are secretaries and secretaries, as there are ministers and ministers. The Prime Minister and several of his colleagues are entitled to the services of a well paid secretary; but I greatly question the propriety of allowing the whole cabinet the right of making appointments of that kind. If I remember rightly at this present moment, most of the private secretaries in former times were appointed at a salary ranging from $1,200 to $1,500, with the additional $600. Under ordinary circumstances, you can get very well qualified men for the ordinary duties in most departments for $2,000, with a prospect of increasing it to $2,500 or thereabouts. Looking at the great number of cabinet ministers, the figure named here strikes me as decidedly too high for all of them.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I suppose we cannot change it. It is a money Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, it is not a money Bill in the strict sense of the term.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I, of course, appreciate what my right hon. friend says, and yet reasonable discretion must be given to a minister charged with the administration of a very large department as to his securing the efficient services of a private secretary. As my right hon. friend knows very well, the minister's private secretary in a large administrative department has almost as much work to do as the minister himself. He is almost invariably a man who would command a very much higher salary than that which is contemplated under this Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I did not object in the case of certain ministers. but it is the whole group that I was taking into consideration.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The ordinary chaps.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When these salaries come to be voted, they will appear in the estimates, and my right hon. friend will find that a very reasonable discretion has been exercised by the different ministers as to the expenditure which will be made in this particular direction. That is to say, it is not contemplated that the minister who is administering, say, one of the minor departments shall pay his private secretary anything like the amount which shall be paid by the minister of one of the major departments; but, of course, it would be very difficult to discriminate or differentiate in a Bill such as this.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should say it would.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I accept my hon. friend's statement, but I warn him of this, that he will find, and his colleagues will find—it will not affect him perhaps so much—that when you give to one man a certain salary, with the exception perhaps of the Prime Minister's secretary, you will find no peace in the world until all the gentlemen get the same.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The strongest objection I see to this is that it leaves the door wide open to the appointment of any number of private secretaries to the inside service. I entirely agree that when a change of government takes place the men who have been in the service as private secretaries to ministers should be retained in the government service. It would be a hardship for a man who had been secretary to a minister for a number of years to be turned out in the cold, and not be a member of the service; and I think it would be better to pass legislation naming the men whom you take into the service so that the public might have some knowledge of them. If you read this Bill, section 39 is new. It reads as follows:

Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be appointed a clerk, for a period not exceeding one year, in subdivision B of the first division or in subdivision A or subdivision B of the second division, and shall be paid a salary not exceeding the maximum salary of the subdivision to which he is appointed. and after one year's service as such secretary he shall be deemed to be permanently appointed to the Inside Service at the salary which he is then receiving as such clerk and with rank in such subdivision.

He has simply to be secretary for one year. Now I can quite understand that a great many people would like to be taken in under that class drawing a salary from $2,800 to $3,400; and a minister might appoint and qualify some person to take a position of that kind in the civil service every twelve months.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think there should certainly be some limit to it, and a person should be a certain number of years a private secretary to a minister before he could be qualified. I notice in the press that the Civil Service Association of Ottawa have discussed this matter, and I do not think it should be left open to ministers to qualify friends of theirs, or a person taken as a private secretary, and found unsuitable, and who, could not otherwise qualify for appointment as a civil servant. But he could, under this provision, be assigned a position and the Minister would apply for a new private secretary. This Act is open to qualify an individual for the inside service at a salary up to $3,400 a year every twelve months. I do not think it should be left open.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have not the Civil Service Act of 1898 before me, but from the quotation that the hon. leader of the House has read, I understand that the latter part of clause 39 is new.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No; the present Act reads as follows:

And after one year's service as such secretary he shall be deemed to be appointed to such rank.

That is, the rank to which he was appointed when he was made private secretary. That is the present law, so far as chapter 15 of 1908 is concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—So that the alteration in the law simply qualifies him to enter the civil service in a higher grade?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Without examination?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And of course there is no examination at the present time under the present law.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My only fear is that the members of the civil service, who are entitled by promotion after a certain number of years, to get into the class in which we are now putting the private secretaries, will consider themselves handicapped by a number of appointments that will be made from such persons holding secretaryships. Of course, I understand that it has been the practice to appoint private secretaries of outgoing ministers; but I wonder if the point made by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) is not well taken—that one year is, perhaps, a very short period to allow a private secretary to enjoy the benefit of that provision.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like to ask the hon. leader of the House if he is aware of the fact that this legislation is due to the action of one of his colleagues from Ontario—one of the fighting ministers—the Minister of Railways. I believe. who brought down two, if not three, of his secretaries or amanuenses from Toronto, and wanted to force them on the government and the department, but was blocked by the Civil Service Commission? Is not that the fact? I am so informed, and, I think, well informed. That did not tend to placate the fighting minister, and the result is this Bill. That is where this thing originates. When those ministers came down from the west, without any experience in parliament, they thought they could bring the whole outfit and foist it on the government, but the Civil Service Commission blocked it. Now we have a Bill to facilitate and make easy the path of their ambition for their friends; and I think the hon. member from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) has pointed out to the House and country a grave danger. Those ministers will appoint whom they please—a power which they have under the present Act, but this Act goes further and gives them the right, and gives their secretaries a right to a higher preferment without any examination, without any control, from the Civil Srevice Commission. That is an evasion of the law. If I remember rightly, when the Civil Service Act was before parliament the Conservative party was strongly in favour of making it very stringent. Now they do not hold office for five months before they try to evade it. and evade it in the most extravagant manner. I am sorry to see that they do not evade it in an extravagant manner as far as our honoured colleague, the leader of this House is concerned; for they offered him a paltry $1,200. I think it is mean. They are asking for themselves, for their secretaries and their clerks, $2,800, $3,400 and $4,000, if they can get it, and all they put in the budget and estimates for our honoured leader here is a paltry $1,200. That is not fair, for I believe the hon. leader of this House is doing more work than any individual member of the cabinet. Before this legislation is passed it ought to be looked into, and safeguards put around that clause which gives the minister or the government of the day the right to advance a man against the express provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that this whole Bill is in a nutshell. There is no change in the principle of appointing a private secretary. The principle has prevailed for some years, and is continued under this Bill. The only new provision is that when a secretary ceases to be a secretary, he can be retained in the service and advanced to class (A) instead of class (B). There is the whole Bill. There may be a point made in the remark of the hon. member from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson).

If there is a point in that, it has been the practice ever since the law was placed on the statute-book. The only provision in this Bill is simply to provide that when a private secretary retires from that position, he may be placed in the civil service under class 'A' instead of class 'B'. Whether parliament is justified in placing these men at a higher salary under the circumstances is a question for parliament to decide. There can be no question that the remark made by the right hon. gentleman from Kingston is true, that when a man is moved to a higher grade all the rest will be pestering to get there also. Experience has taught every minister the force of that remark. I do not see at present any necessity for discussing the general principles of the Bill. All we have to consider, unless you intend to amend the Civil Service Act in its entirety, so far as it refers to private secretaries, is simply whether we should permit a private secretary to be advanced, when he retires from that position, to class 'A' instead of class 'B'.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The object of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 was to, as far as possible, eliminate political and personal favoritism from the civil service.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You can never do it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This Bill is going directly in an opposite direction. The statement made by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) deserves the most careful consideration on the part of the hon. gentleman who leads the House. If this Bill becomes law, a man can be taken on, without examination, and kept in the service for perhaps a year, and if it is ascertained that he does not make a satisfactory private secretary, there is nothing to hinder that officer, who is not qualified to be a private secretary, from being put into the service in the first division, over the heads of men who have been twenty and more years in service. That must strike every one as being unfair, and calculated to cause a great deal of dissatisfaction and ill feeling in the service. My hon. friend says that both parties in the House of Commons appear to have agreed to this Bill. I noticed that there was a good deal of discussion, though I did not read the official report of the debate. It must be borne in mind that there were two or three ex-ministers in the House who would only be too anxious to see something handsome done for the gentlemen who had been their private secretaries.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—They were excluded.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see why they should have been. If it was good for the incoming ministers, I do not see why it was not good for the out-going. This is a measure that the Senate should scrutinize carefully when it comes up in committee. Subdivision 'A' of the second division is the highest point to which a private secretary should be promoted when he ceases to be a private secretary.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Could not the hon. leader of the House from now until we take it up in committee, examine into the advisability of making a sliding scale? Of course, I realize that this Bill is on the same lines as the present law. But since you are putting these private secretaries into a higher class, could not this Bill be modified so as to put the private secretary into the class to which he would belong now, under the old law, if he were but one year a private secretary, and put him in a higher class if he had served three or four years. It seems to me that there is room for considerable injustice to be done to the civil servants who are in line for promotion, if a party who had served just 12 months could get ahead of them and take one of the higher positions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite appreciate the value of the suggestion made by my hon. friend. The only difficulty that presents itself to my mind is as to the way it can be carried out. Of course the experience of ministers who have had to do with private secretaries, and who have been confronted with the difficulty of getting efficient men, would have a great deal to do with the solution of the difficulty. For instance, the late Prime Minister, in referring to this Bill, said that: 'The object of the measure was simply to give the private secretaries of ministers rank and status which they cannot have at present under the law. I have no fault to find with that and will give the matter consideration. I know by experience that it is impossible to get the service of private secretaries properly qualified to discharge the duties unless we give more salary.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—So far so good.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can say to my hon. friend that from the contact I have had with ministers who administer the large departments, this has been one of the greatest difficulties they have had to face, the getting of private secretaries.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not objecting to that part of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The matter may be thought out in the interim. In the meantime, I move the second reading of the Bill, and when it goes before the committee I shall be very glad to have any suggestions on the subject.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I intended to have spoken on the motion for second reading, and I was on my feet and addressed myself to the House, but the Speaker paid no attention to me. I think I spoke loud enough so that any one could have heard me.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will pardon me, I am sure the House will be very glad to hear what he has to say on the Bill.

The SPEAKER—Certainly he has a right to speak to this motion.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I want to know why this special privilege is to be granted to a minister of the Crown. To me, as a private member, it seems very unreasonable that this should be allowed. The country pays the salary of the minister's private secretary. It comes out of the pockets of the people, and the people have a perfect right to inquire into and to see that the ministers' private secretaries are what they ought to be. If the government of the day act as they do very frequently, they will take the heads off of every one. If there is a private secretary who does not comply with the wishes of the minister in charge and control, he will be dismissed. What I want to know is why this special privilege is to be granted to a minister to select a man to put into the service without passing any examination? He may be fifteen, twenty, or seventy-five years of age, if the minister, through kindness, should happen to take him. If the minister paid the salary, I could understand that he would have the right to take any one he liked; but I cannot see why he should have the right to unload him on the country after he gets through with him. That seems to be an unreasonable proposition. While I do not desire to detain the House, or to be harsh, or hasty, I feel that I cannot justify myself in supporting a measure of this kind, because I think it is wrong. The country has a perfect right to insist on the employment of qualified men who have passed an examination for the position. As the right hon. member from Kingston has well said, it will create jealousy among the servants of the government. Men who have passed the examination, and who occupy positions will not be satisfied to have others placed over them without any examination, or without regard to their age or other qualification. I, therefore, feel that I should vote against this proposition. It is not treating the country fairly. If I had been given an opportunity to vote I would have voted against the second reading of the Bill.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 76) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

He said: This Bill proposes superceding the late commission charged with the building of the National Transcontinental railway, and appointing one commissioner to perform the duties formerly discharged by the entire commission. I do not think it admits of any other explanation. I hope my right hon. friend will regard it as an economy in the proper direction. The present commissioner, or the gentleman who will constitute the commission, Major Leonard, will be generally recognized as a very capable man, and a practical builder.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—How did the government get rid of the other commissioners? Voluntarily or otherwise?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Some of them voluntarily, and some of them otherwise. They were only appointed during pleasure.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am aware of that. It pleased the government to get rid of them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand no difficulty arose upon that point. In all probability the late commissioners recognized the wisdom of the step which has been taken. I think my hon. friend will appreciate the fact that the construction of that road had reached a point when it was very desirable to call in a practical man who thoroughly understood the character of the situation which should fall upon the shoulders of the commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am bound to say that on one point I agree with my right hon. friend. I think the gentleman chosen is well qualified, and I am glad to be able to say, waiving the question as to how the government dealt with the other gentlemen, that they have made a good selection in the case of Mr. Leonard. I have no objection to his appointment. As to economical practice, if they will only be consistent in not creating any more officers than are needed to carry on the service, I will not find fault with them. I am afraid, as the business of the House proceeds, and as the business of to-night proceeds, we shall find that they have been lapsing from that rule, and are going to add to instead of diminish the number of ministers in a certain quarter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not know that this Bill was coming up for second reading to-day, and I assume that the hon. leader of the House will have no objection to my making the observations I might have made to-day on his motion to go into committee next week.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certainly not.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

GOVERNMENT WORKS TOLLS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 103) An Act to amend the Government Works Tolls Act.

He said: This Bill is to correct a clerical error in the Revised Statutes of 1906. Formerly, the collection of these tolls was under the Department of Inland Revenue, but by subsequent statutes the collection thereof was transferred to the Department of Public Works. The interpretation clause of the Revised Statutes of 1906 states that the word 'minister' means Minister of Inland Revenue, whereas in conformity with previous legislation, it should be Minister of Public Works.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does this refer to what are known as hydraulic rates and tolls?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it is tolls on the works for the transmission of timber—slides and booms.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 97) An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not disposed to object to the motion, but I should like to know who are to be the commissioners of the harbour of Montreal, if it is not a cabinet secret?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am entirely unaware of any change in contemplation in the Harbour Commission at Montreal.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am glad to hear that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And I am unaware of anything that will lead to any change. This Bill has in contemplation the carrying out of an arrangement which had been entered into between the Montreal Harbour Commissioners and the late government. A scheme was adopted which will involve the expenditure of about $18,000,000. Six million dollars was advanced by the late government and this makes provision for advancing another six million.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—How much have they borrowed already?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This will make twelve million.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—They will take three years to expend it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes. The provisions are of a comprehensive character. and when we go into committee I shall give a general statement of what is proposed to be done. I have no doubt I will have the support of the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Certainly. The government is simply loaning the money—that is all—and the government gets every cent of the interest. There is not a dollar of interest due to the government from the harbour to-day.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on Tuesday next.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This measure involves the expenditure of a pretty large amount of money, for which the harbour is responsible in the first instance, and for which the government will be responsible ultimately, and we would like a general statement showing what is contemplated to be done with the money.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hope to be in a position when the matter comes up on Tuesday next to furnish that information.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—If the hon. gentleman will bring the statement furnished by the Harbour Commissioners it will answer all purposes. They state that they are going to erect some freight sheds and so forth. They are taking advantage of the land they have obtained in the east of the city and have erected a high level track for the use of which they charge a toll and obtain a revenue. They will transfer cars from the Canadian Northern in the east end of Montreal to the Grand Trunk railway station, performing the work that the company which appeared before the Railway Committee this morning intended to perform. The right of way having cost nothing, it is a good investment. It would replace the proposed road which is being asked for before our Railway Committee, but which may possibly be withdrawn.

COLLINGWOOD SHIP BUILDING COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 111) An Act to authorize the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Limited.

He said: This Bill deals with the subsidy applied for and worked out under the Subsidy Act of 1908. The work was begun and an agreement was to be signed, when the Act of 1910 was passed repealing or doing away with the Act of 1908. The subsidy conforms absolutely to the conditions of the Act of 1910, except as to the depth of water on the sill. The Act of 1908 provided for sixteen feet, whereas the Act of 1910 provided for eighteen feet. Before the dissolution of parliament, there had been an arrangement entered into between the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Limited, and the government of the day as to the passage of this Bill. The agreement will be found in the Bill itself.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—Is it for a dock, for shipbuilding?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a dock which is already built.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is not a floating dock, it is a graving dock. It is a masonry dock, I understand.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it is a dry dock.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I suppose this one we might let pass, but it would be very advisable for the government not to subsidize any more of those graving docks, but to have floating docks instead. They are more economical and do much better service. This is an antiquated kind of dock which is being discarded altogether the world over. Now the floating docks are being built, mainly, for the British Admiralty. When the hon. leader of the House was in Newcastle on Tyne, he may remember that in the great works of Swan and Hunter he saw a floating dock with a lifting power of thirty-two thousand tons being built for the British Admiralty. This antiquated system costs more to construct and operate, because in order to put a ship in a graving dock, you must let the water in to the full draught of that ship, and afterwards pump out the whole of that water, no matter if the ship is much smaller than the dock, but you have simply to let the water enter the floating dock; it sinks, the ship is pulled into the dock as the hon. member for Hastings saw also during our trip on the other side, and then simply a sufficient number of tons of water have to be pumped out of the floating dock in order to lift the tonnage of the ship that is put on it. There is not a ton of water pumped for nothing, whilst in the old system the whole dock had to be emptied, however small the ship might be. When the late government introduced the system, I think they were ill-advised in confining the subsidies to graving docks built of masonry. I remonstrated personally with the Minister of Finance before he went into the House, and got him to consent to have this subsidy applicable only to floating docks, which cost 50 per cent less than the others and do better work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no probability of such a dry dock as this being constructed, because the Act under which this was constructed was repealed; but it just happened that it was not completed in time when the Act of 1910 was passed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend know whether the floating dock system is applicable to waters where there is no tide as well as where there is a tide?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Really I could not say anything upon that subject.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The tide has absolutely nothing to do with the floating dock. The right hon. leader on our side of the House lives on lakes where there is no tide.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is the reason I asked the question.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The tides have absolutely nothing to do with it. He is quite right about the tides in the graving dock, for advantage is taken of the high tide to let ships in at Levis, where the tide rises eighteen feet, and in a northwest, or northerly wind over twenty feet. Advantage is taken of that high tide; when it is high enough, water is allowed to enter the dock, the ship is pulled in, then the tide goes out and a certain quantity of the water goes out of itself. The rest has to be pumped out; the doors are closed, and when the next tide comes, the doors being closed, the ship has the benefit of whatever the difference of the tide is. But in the other system the floating dock has absolutely nothing to do with the tide. It is simply a large pontoon. The water is allowed to enter the bottom of this pontoon and it sinks to the required depth, the ship is placed on it, the water is pumped out and as the water is pumped out the dock lifts the ship out of the water.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—It requires a greater depth of water.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Certainly; you must have one and a half the depth of the ship. If a ship draws thirty feet, you must have at least forty-five feet of water right there.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Has the engineering profession made up its mind pretty well to accept the sunken dock instead of the other?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Oh, there is no difficulty at all now. The British Admiralty are adopting all floating docks. They cost about 50 per cent less and they work better. The only question was whether they would be permanent or not, and they have now devised a means by which they can be painted to protect them from rust.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SALE OF BREAD BILL.

DEBATE ADJOURNED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the hon. Mr. Casgrain for committee of the Whole House on (Bill D) intituled: 'An Act respecting the sale of bread,' and the motion in amendment thereto of the hon. Mr. David, that the said Bill be not committed to the Committee of the Whole House, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would ask the leader of the House if, considering the lateness of the hour and the comparative thinness of the House, he would put off the debate on this very important Bill till Wednesday next?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Wednesday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose the hon. gentleman has no objection to that?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I have very strong objections. I see that the hon. member for Halifax seems to have a grudge against all my legislation. I am afraid it will endanger the passing of the Bill, because there are no more private Bill days in the other House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to postponing the debate, but I hoped the hon. gentleman, considering its vast importance, would have dropped the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN--Oh no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice there is legislation being introduced at the present moment in some of the provincial legislatures, Ontario in particular, on this same question; and I have a letter from the Deputy Attorney General of Ontario declaring that it is the opinion of the Attorney General's Department that this Bill is ultra vires. I will read that letter to the hon. gentlemen when the question comes up. It would seem to be about time we got through dealing with these municipal matters, because they are very little beyond that.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I regret that I cannot concur in the motion of the hon. member for Halifax. I am interested in this Bill. It has been postponed half a dozen times, and we are waiting for a declaration that is to be made by the hon. leader of this House. I do not know what the declaration may be, but if it is what I expect it to be, I intend to withdraw my amendment and replace it by another, that the House do not form itself into committee now, but that it do so this day six months.

The order was postponed until Wednesday next.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Bill (No. 106) An Act to amend the Post Office Act—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed)—was reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

PEACE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS rose to inquire:

1. Is the government aware that a committee has been organized in the United States to arrange for the celebration of the anniversary of one hundred years of peace amongst the English-speaking people?
2. Has the government had any communication from said committee? If so, what is the nature of the correspondenec?
3. Is it the intention of the government to take part in aforesaid celebration? If so, what action will be taken ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I ask my hon. friend to allow that notice to stand for a week at least. By that time I may be in a position to give an answer.

The notice was allowed to stand.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (T) An Act respecting the Rainy River Radial Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (29) An Act respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited, and to change its name to the Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (63) An Act to incorporate the Premier Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (72) An Act to incorporate the Sterling Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Taylor.

Bill (89) An Act to incorporate the Bank of Saskatchewan.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (27) An Act respecting the Security Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Owens.

Bill (G 2) An Act for the relief of William Holloway Adams.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (105) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (L 2) An Act respecting Mexican Interurban Electric Traction Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'Mexican Interurban Electric Railway Company, Limited.'—Hon. Mr. McHugh.

Bill (No. 23) An Act respecting the Harbour of Hamilton.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

SASKATCHEWAN CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK moved the second reading of Bill (M 2) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Central Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This is a Senate Bill, and the proposition is one of interest to the province of Saskatchewan. A number of Bills, in which the people of the province of Saskatchewan have an interest, are introduced in this House, but we never see any of them appear in the name of a representative of that province. I have not the Bill on my file, and I think we should have an explanation.

The order of the day was discharged and placed on the orders of the day for Tuesday next.

ROMAN CATHOLIC EPISCOPAL CORPORATION OF KEEWATIN INCORPORATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 70) An Act to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The powers of this corporation are very wide and extensive, and I do not think it is quite safe, at the present time, that they should be granted. Therefore, the promoter of the Bill should give us an explanation. If all members of the Senate were on the committee we might obtain the information. I have no feeling in reference to this measure, but I desire to be in a position to cast an intelligent vote.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE (in French)—The hon. gentleman is perfectly justified in asking for an explanation of this Bill, as it is his privilege to do so. On the other hand, it is my privilege to answer him in my mother tongue. This Bill is simply to give a legal standing to the Roman Catholic Corporation of Keewatin. A new diocese has been created in the northern part of the Northwest Territories, that of Keewatin, and a bishop has been appointed, and this Bill is to have his corporation confirmed by Act of parliament.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN (in French)—The explanation given by the hon. member from Provencher is lucid and entirely satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Hon. gentlemen, that may be all right enough—

The SPEAKER—I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that he has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I merely asked the promoter of the Bill to explain the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE (in French)—I call the hon. gentleman to order. He has already spoken on the question and has no right to speak again.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If the Speaker——

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Order.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I have the floor.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—No.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then I will put myself right.

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If I have not——

The SPEAKER—The point of order is this: The hon. gentleman from Provencher (Hon. Mr. Larivière) has, in answer to the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas, (Hon. Mr. Wilson) given certain explanations of the Bill that he is asking to refer to the Private Bills Committee. These explanations were given. After they were given, two members stood up, the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran), and the hon. member for Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette), and spoke, following remarks made by the hon. gentleman. I think the hon. member for St. Thomas, (Hon. Mr. Wilson) in asking for an explanation exhausted his right to speak again.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am not going to speak upon the Bill. I am going to speak in reference to your ruling.

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that he is out of order.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I know my rights pretty well, and I refuse——

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that, having given my decision on the point of order, the hon. gentleman has no right to discuss that decision. If he thinks I am wrong, he has a right to appeal to the House.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If I am to be governed, Mr. Speaker, by your ruling, I shall have to move the adjournment of the House and then I will put myself in order.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman, having spoken once, has no right to make such a motion.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If you rule——

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Apart from the ruling, he cannot move the adjournment of the House.

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to this rule of the House, that when one member stands up to speak the other shall sit down. I decide that there is no motion. You cannot move the adjournment of a debate when there is no debate.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am going to move the adjournment of the House. I said I would move the adjournment of the House and not of the debate. I object to you, Mr. Speaker, putting words into my mouth that I did not use, and that I did not intend to use. It is not fair to coin words to place in my mouth. If this objection is raised on the present occasion, the Bill will come before the House again, and you will not facilitate its progress by the course you are taking to-day. I move the adjournment of the House and I give notice now that when this Bill comes up for third reading, and when it is before the committee, I shall seek the information that I have asked for on the present occasion, and it will be presented to the House. I have no feeling against the Bill.

The SPEAKER—I have just ruled that the hon. gentleman was not in order in speaking the second time on this question. If the hon. gentleman wants to observe the rules of the House, he must accept the decision of the Chair, and behave in a manner that will prove that he accepts my ruling. As I have ruled he is not in order he has only one course to take, and that is to sit down or appeal to the House against my decision.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I have had a discussion with the Speaker and will have an opportunity of referring to it later on.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is rather unfortunate that the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas is not as familiar with the French language as he ought to be. The hon. member from Provencher (Hon. Mr. Larivière) gave, at the second reading of the Bill, at the request of the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas, a lucid and satisfactory account of the reasons for the introduction of this Bill. The two languages stand on exactly the same footing in this House, and the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson) has no ground to stand upon; but perhaps with a certain amount of friendly feeling for the ignorance of the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas

——

Hon. SENATORS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is nothing disorderly in that; I might be allowed to explain the Bill. The objects of the Bill are practically set out in the second clause. It provides that the new corporation shall be called the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin, shall be vested with all the lands, tenements, and hereditaments and property, real and personal, and all burial grounds, churches, schools, colleges, chapels, seminaries and other buildings now belonging to the church. I want the hon. gentleman to be satisfied that this corporation is not taking anything.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I object to the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) discussing the whole nature of the Bill, when the motion before the Chair is to refer it to a committee. He should have availed himself of his opportunity when the Bill was up for the second reading.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—He is entirely out of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is nothing out of order in my addressing the House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I should like to know what motion is before the Chair?

The SPEAKER—The motion before the Chair is to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have a right to address the House on that subject. I admit, hon. gentlemen, that I am departing from the usual practice, but then I have the example of the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas who, within the last two days, made quite a little——

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I have raised a point of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is nothing in the point of order. This Bill proposes to vest the property, which is now the property of the Vicar Apostolic of Keewatin and of the Catholics in the Diocese of Keewatin, a new corporation which is called the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin. Parliament has, on various occasions, passed Bills substantially identical with this, and not very long ago we passed a Bill for the Salvation Army, another for the Baptist body, and I think Bills for every religious denomination in the country—all Bills of a similar character.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 83) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Power Company.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I should like to have an explanation of the reasons for the changes which appear in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—It is to increase the power of the power-house.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Judging from the question which was asked the hon. gentleman from British Columbia a few minutes ago, I expected the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan would question me in regard to this measure. I do not know why my name was attached to this particular Bill, and I do not know why some member from Saskatchewan is not looking after the legislation from that province.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is not my Bill, it belongs to the power-house.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not know what the original Bill is, but certain changes are asked for, and I think these changes should be acceptable to members of this House. Clause 1 of the Bill substitutes the following for the section in the original Act.

> Provided that, either during or after the construction of such dam or dams, such arrangements shall be made and maintained free of charge by the company for the transmission of timber, saw logs, or lumber, and for free navigation by vessels of all kinds, as may be required by the Governor in Council.

I think those changes should commend themselves to every hon. gentleman as being in the right direction.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—As far as it goes, the information is all right, but there are amendments to several clauses of this character. I should have liked some information as to how it would affect the Act as it stood. The last clause asks for an extension of time, to which there is no objection, but other sections in the original Act are changed, and no reason given. Surely under the original Bill arrangements were made for the transmission of saw-logs in the rivers. There must have been some object in amending the Bill, otherwise the amendment would not have been proposed.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (R 2) An Act to incorporate Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company. —Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I should not have spoken on the motion to adjourn if the hon. senior member from Halifax had taken a proper course when he was called to order, and if the Speaker had ruled that he was out of order in discussing the whole Bill when the motion was merely to refer it to committee. I submitted to the Speaker's ruling with a very strong feeling of the injustice of it. I was willing to forego anything I desired to say with respect to the measure if the hon. member from Halifax had submitted quietly and had not discussed the whole Bill, but, under the circumstances, I feel that I was not treated fairly. When I asked for information in reference to the Bill, I expected that my request would be granted. However, not having received the information, and being called to order, I avail myself now of the opportunity to reply to the hon. gentleman from Halifax and to give him to understand that if he is cantankerous I can be equally so, and if he is unfair in his manner of treating a senator in this House, I can respond to him and meet him fairly and squarely. I had no desire to hold up the Bill or to do an injustice to any member. I was told that I was out of order because I had spoken, when I simply asked for an explanation, and when I found the Speaker against me, and the senior member for Halifax, who was once a Speaker, opposed to what I conceived to be my just rights, I felt that I should not occupy that position, and withdrew my opposition at the time, but I desire the hon. gentleman to understand that I have certain rights and intend to defend them. Nothing will be accomplished by the opposition which has been offered to me today. I know what my rights are. I treat the statement of the senior member from Halifax with the respect which it deserves, and if I am in order, I say it does not deserve any respect. I feel that he gratuitously offered opposition to the course I was pursuing, without justification. I have a right to ask for information, and in future shall continue to do so. While I bow to the ruling, and submit to the decision of the Speaker, I am not going to bow to the rules propounded by the senior senator from Halifax. I would not go to the hon. gentleman to ascertain my rights.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I sympathize with the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas and think his grievance against the senior member from Halifax is pretty well founded, but he has mistaken his proper recourse. He should have asked the Speaker to call in the police, or the sergeant at arms, which was the favourite method of the senior senator from Halifax a few years ago.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 5, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS AT PRINCE ALBERT.

INQUIRIES.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

Is it the intention of the government to erect an armoury at Prince Albert? If so, has an estimate been made of the cost? Will the work on same be started this year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This matter is under consideration.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

Does the government intend to complete the wharf at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.

What is the total expenditure on same to date?

Does the government intend to let a contract for the completion of this wharf this year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The replies are as follow:

1. Yes.

2. $6,433.31 to 31st January, 1912.

3. No; work is to be completed by day labour.

THE NAVAL POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the orders of the day are called I would respectfully call the attention of the House, in general, and particularly the attention of the leader of the House, to what I consider a peculiar, if not an unfortunate condition of parliamentary affairs. Four or five days ago, in conjunction with my honoured colleague from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette), I had the honour to move in regard to the naval policy now existent, or that was to exist, in Canada under the present government. We were met by the declaration of the hon. leader of this House that there was no new policy to announce, that the status quo was to be accepted and respected until the next session of parliament. Under the influence of that statement, the entire House, with the exception of two, voted to maintain the declaration of the leader of the government. The two who voted against the vast majority felt that they were in the right. Not only did they feel that they were in the right, but they were assured by many of the members in this House who voted the other way, that they were in the right. Political and party exigencies, I suppose, required them to vote the other way. What I find strange in the situation is that the leader of the government in this House, the echo of the cabinet, makes a statement on the floor of parliament, which is contradicted three or four days afterwards in another place by another member of the cabinet on behalf of the government. Now, either one of two things has happened: the hon. the leader of the House, in this Senate, on behalf of the government, wilfully deceived us, or the cabinet, his colleagues, wilfully deceived him in not giving him the necessary information.

The SPEAKER—I call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that there is nothing before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The only thing before the Chair is calling the attention of the government to a serious and grave state of affairs in the country.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to call the attention of the minister to a question of that sort without putting himself in order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I move the adjournment of the House, seconded by the hon. gentleman from Grandville, and that will bring something before the House.

The SPEAKER—Before the motion is put I will call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that when he makes a motion of adjournment of this kind he must state, before making the motion, the object of discussion. Subsection 'G' of rule 25 says:

> One day's notice must be given of a motion for the adjournment of the Senate for the purpose of bringing up a question of urgent public importance which the mover shall state on rising to speak before the House proceeds to the orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am in a position to state that it is most urgent. The position is one of public policy, of great interest to the nation at large—the question of the naval policy. I was about to state, when interrupted, that the hon. leader of this House has either wilfully deceived the Senate, a branch of parliament, or was wilfully deceived by his colleagues in the declaration he made to the Senate and the country at large. I am not going to admit for one instant that the hon. leader of this House wilfully or wittingly deceived this House. The only conclusion I can come to therefore, is that when he made his declaration of the policy of the government of the day in regard to that matter, he was not fully informed, or was wrongfully informed, by his colleagues in the cabinet, or that they have changed their minds in the past forty-eight hours, or three days. He is on the horns of a dilemma. I have taken him off one horn. I disclaim any charge of wilful deceit on his part, but I do charge his colleagues with keeping him in the dark to the very last moment, or, if they did not keep him in the dark, they changed their attitude at the very last moment, and at the request of whom? What has occurred to change the policy of the government within the past three days? The hon. leader of this House solemnly declared to parliament on Wednesday last that this government had no new policy to announce in regard to the naval question. The House accepted that, and I regret very much that he had strength and power enough to entice all the Liberals in the House, except two, to vote with him. That is the big mistake my Liberal friends made in voting with the leader of the government on that question, and they must have had their eyes opened by this time.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Of course I am right. What do we find? In the face of that solemn declaration of the leader of the government we have had a declaration by the responsible minister of the department in the other Chamber, that, after due inquiry and consideration into the naval policy, and after they had studied the situation in order to satisfy themselves, they would necessarily have to introduce a Bill which would repeal the present Act.

The SPEAKER—I call attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that I think he is not putting himself in order by referring to what took place in the other House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, call it down in Griffintown, or any other place. A gentleman in another place declared the policy of the government in these words:

> That after due inquiry and consideration, new legislation would be introduced which would repeal the present Act, but——

And this is where the Nationalist faction got their work in:

> But before anything would be done by parliament the whole matter would be submitted to the will of the people.

Does the hon. gentleman who leads this House not consider that a flat contradiction by the responsible minister to his own statement? What does all this mean? How is the government run? How does the cabinet formulate its policy? Is it the judgment of parliament, as voiced by the hon. leader of this House and voiced by many members in another place, or is it formulated and based on the dictates of a certain faction coming from a certain province? That is what the country has to face. If the Conservative party had an open policy on this question, I would be prepared to debate it on its merits, but we know and feel, without their saying it, that their policy is decided by a very small faction in one province of this Dominion. Is that a condition of things that is to be tolerated by the country and smiled at by the honourable Senate? The hon. gentleman is able to secure every Liberal vote in the House on his policy except two, and they are the only two who are to be the champions of fair-play in the political field.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Ha, ha, ha.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the Scripture says something about the laughter of fools. I have two points to urge: one that the hon. gentleman is just now reflecting on the action of all the members in the House except himself and one other. It is improper and contrary to the rule that there should be any reflection on the action of the House. The other point is that the hon. gentleman's speech is not within the rules. There is nothing at all urgent about this matter. It has been settled, and if the hon. gentleman were to talk from July until eternity he probably would not be able to alter the decision which the government have come to. I raise those two points of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER—No one wants to discuss the point of order. I think it is well taken. The hon. gentleman has not proved that the question he wants to put, or the remarks he wants to make, are of an urgent nature. I fail to see the urgency of the case. He is allowed to make a motion only when an urgent question presses itself upon this House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I bow most respectfully to the decision of the Chair. I beg pardon of the hon. senior member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) if I cast any reflection on the majority. I was not doing so. I was casting reflection on myself and the hon. member for Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette). The senior member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) is entirely out of order himself. The hon. Speaker says it is not an urgent matter. If a navy on the rocks that has got to be pulled off is not an urgent matter, then I do not know what is urgent. I think it is urgent that the country should know to-day, and not to-morrow, what the government intends in regard to its policy. The leader of this House told us what the policy was three days ago——

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that I have given my ruling and if he wishes to ignore it he must appeal to the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not wish to ignore your ruling. I would like the hon. Speaker to point out where it is not urgent. His views and my views as to urgency may be different, but I have this to say, that the government of the day have no right to deceive parliament.

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman to order. It is my right to call the orders of the day immediately.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—As seconder of the motion to adjourn, I should like to ask if the Speaker decides that the question is out of order because it is not urgent?

The SPEAKER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Cannot we go on with this matter?

The SPEAKER—You may go on if it is a subject of urgency. It has not been proved to the House that there is any urgency in the matter.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is a matter for the House to decide.

The SPEAKER—I would ask the hon. gentleman not to get excited. Only one at a time.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Do you rule as a matter of fact that the question is not urgent ? I maintain, with all due respect to your ruling, that when the leader of the government says one thing, and another member of the cabinet says another thing, it becomes an urgent matter for the country to know which is right. I think it is very important that the public should know whether the naval policy of the government is to go on or not. I may to-morrow have a further motion to make on this question, and I maintain, with all due respect to your ruling, that it is a most urgent matter, and that we ought to proceed with the motion.

The SPEAKER—There is one way in which the hon. gentleman can get what he requires, and that is to make an inquiry. If he makes an inquiry he will receive an answer. I do not know that the country is in any danger if that answer should be put off until to-morrow or the next day.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I asked the question and I was told that the answer would be given when I made my motion. We have the answer of the leader of this House, and now I am told that it is not the answer of the government, and I feel it is very urgent that I should now ask who is right on this question, and I think we ought to be permitted to go on with the discussion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Perhaps it will terminate the discussion if I point out to my hon. friend that the answer given in the House of Commons in no way conflicts with the answer I gave in this Chamber. It may be a little more elaborated.

The SPEAKER—Is it your pleasure to adopt this motion—lost.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, it is not lost.

The SPEAKER—Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well no. I appeal.

Hon. MEMBERS. Yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER—Call the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—There is a demand for the yeas and nays and the House is not granted the privilege of having the yeas and nays taken; therefore, I do not think you have a right to declare the motion carried. The members of this House have the same rights as you have in saying whether the motion should or should not be carried. It is true, you declare a motion carried by merely saying the Bill is read the second time or third time. You give no opportunity for a member to discuss it. I think my hon. friend is right in asking for an explanation.

The SPEAKER—The hon. member is quite out of order. If he wants a chance I will give him an opportunity immediately.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am speaking to the motion.

The SPEAKER—There is no motion before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—When you put the motion——

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. member to order. If he does not accept the ruling of the Chair there is only one thing to do, and that is to appeal from my decision. In other words, I have decided to keep the order of the House.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I suppose—

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman must sit down. There is a rule of the House which prevents two members being on their feet at one time, and I am on my feet now.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I wish to point out—

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. member to order. If he presses me to the end I will proceed to the end.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Gave notice of a motion.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I complain of the treatment I have received from the Speaker. I had the floor, and sat down when I was told I should. Then you, Mr. Speaker, allowed another member of this House to rise and give notice of a motion during the time that I was trying to explain to you that my hon. friend was in order. I contend that the motion you moved was not properly moved.

The SPEAKER—I would call the hon. member's attention to the fact that he is quite out of order, and I hope that he will be kind enough to accept the ruling of the Chair.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then I shall move that the House do adjourn.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to make a motion under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I shall avail myself of the first opportunity to speak, if I am going to be dictated to and deprived of my rights and privileges as a member of this House. You have full authority——

The SPEAKER—I ask once more that the hon. gentleman obey the order of the House.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—What rule of parliament have I violated?

The SPEAKER—Half a dozen rules of parliament.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Tell me the rules of parliament I have violated.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to speak when there is nothing before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—But there is——

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman does not sit down I will call the sergeant at arms to take him in custody. He must comply with the rules of this House. His conduct is a defiance of the rules of the House.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.
FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (77) An Act to assist the Improvement of Highways.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman has no right——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be read the second time on Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I want to poimt out—

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I was on my feet when a motion was before the Chair, yet Mr. Speaker, you ignored the right of a member of this House. You may think yourself justified in so doing, but when a motion is moved by the leader of the House and I am on my feet to speak on that question, you have no right to shut me off. Do you call that fair-play?

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the Chair.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (88) An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (99) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Company. —Hon. Mr. Davis.

Bill (113) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (S 2) An Act to incorporate the International Guarantee Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

THE NAVAL POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I should like to direct the attention of the leader of this House to the following in this morning's papers:

> In the House yesterday, in reply to a question by Mr. Mondou as to whether the government intended to propose the repeal of the Naval Service Act, the Minister of Marine said: 'After such consideration and inquiry as may be necessary the government will present its naval policy to parliament and to the people. That policy will undoubtedly require legislation which will involve the repeal of the present Naval Service Act. In the meantime that Act will remain on the statute-book for purposes in connection with the fishery protection service and otherwise. Before any permanent naval policy is put into force the people will be given an opportunity to pass upon it.'

I should like to know if that means that the Naval Bill, which the government retained on the statute-book, to their shame, will be repealed next session, and when the new Bill is brought in if it will be submitted to a vote of the people?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The only reply I can give my hon. friend is the information which I gave him the other night, and which is not at all inconsistent with the statement made in the House of Commons. I then stated that no measure would be brought down this session dealing with the Naval Bill, and that in the meantime due consideration would be given to the question by the government, and that is yet the intention of the government.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A further question was put as to whether it was the intention of the government to submit the question to a vote of the people.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did not assume to answer that question. I was not called upon to give a categorical answer to all questions.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We insisted on that. We were not told if the measure was to be submitted to a vote of the people, but the answer of the government in the other House goes further than the answer given here, and that is what I find fault with.

BRITISH AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY BILL.
FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Hon. Mr. WATSON introduced Bill (T 2) An Act to incorporate the British American Trust Company.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved a suspension of the rules. He said: I ask for a suspension of the rules because the petition was presented regularly on the 22nd of February, and the Bill has been held up somewhere.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is it absolutely necessary to get this legislation before the House now?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As I have already explained, the petition was presented regularly on the 22nd of February, and the Bill has been held up in the Printing Bureau, or in this House. It is a Senate Bill, and in order to give it a chance to be passed this session, I am obliged to move the suspension of the rules in order that the second reading may take place to-day.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is strange that a Bill can be held up in this way. It must be the fault of some official of the House. If some official has been guilty of negligence which obliges us to suspend the rules, the matter should be investigated.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (16) An Act respecting patents of Thomas Wadge.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (84) An Act respecting certain patents of Thomas D. Rambaut.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. WATSON (in absence of Hon. Mr. Gibson) moved the third reading of Bill (V) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I regret that this Bill has reached a stage which it should not have reached without more mature consideration having been given to it by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, to whom it was referred, and by whom it apparently was passed without fully considering the effect of the measure, in view of certain facts not then being before the committee. I was not in the committee at the time the Bill was passed, inasmuch as I was called away before it was considered. But hon. gentlemen will observe, looking at the Bill, that it permits the company to make an issue of debenture stock representing $25,000,000. It was proposed that that stock should be placed upon a parity with the issue made some time ago by the same company of a like amount. The fourth clause in the Bill is somewhat involved in language, but the promoters of the Bill, when before the committee, moved a change, which will be found on page 358 of the Minutes, which makes decidedly clear the object of the company that this second issue of $25,000,000 of debenture stock should rank pari passu with the issue made some time ago. This should not be done. There is no protection afforded in the Bill to the present holders of the debenture stock already issued, or for which provision has been made, and hon. gentlemen will very clearly see that to make another issue of $25,000,000 of debenture stock would degrade the first issue.

It would dilute the stock to the extent of the second issue, and surely the investing public must be protected to the extent of having security proportionate to what they have already obtained, and which undoubtedly would be a factor in the purchase of the stock. Not only was that done, hon. gentlemen, but it is permitted by this legislation which passed the committee to give priority to an issue of debenture stock, of ten million dollars of bonds now in the vaults of the government, held as security for a loan of ten million dollars made to the same company, and yet we propose to empower the company to issue $25,000,000 of debenture stock and to make that rank pari passu with the issue already made, and give it priority to an issue of the ten million dollars of debentures held in security by the government of Canada for a loan made to the company. Of course, I need not point out to the House that this must have been unwittingly done by the committee. The information was not before the committee which would permit them giving proper consideration to the subject. Furthermore, inasmuch as the government of Canada is so much interested in the Bill, not only as to protecting the security which they themselves hold, of ten million dollars, but to protect the investing public, as I have already pointed out, it would be supposed that the promoters of the Bill would have consulted with the government of the day with reference to this legislation being adopted, but such has not been done. Now, it will be obvious to the House that this Bill must be taken up between the promoters and the government before it can reach another stage. I would simply point out to the House the desirability, in the future, of our giving closer consideration to these Bills which come before our committees. Unfortunately, on that particular day a surfeit of work was thrown before committee, and proper consideration could not have been given to the very numerous Bills which they were called upon to consider?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I raised that very point in the committee, not about the ten million in security held by the government, but allowing this new debenture stock to rank pari passu with the other issues. The matter was discussed in the committee, and an amendment proposed by the solicitor of the company was carried. I drew the attention of the committee to the point, and it was not overlooked by the committee, as the leader of this House is inclined to believe. Whenever anything about debentures comes up in this committee, I always look particularly after it, because I have had experience in such matters, and when it was decided that these new debentures should rank pari passu with the other ones, I asked if consent had been obtained from those who held the first debentures. I think we were informed in the committee that there were no debentures issued at the time, and therefore no harm could come to any one. No allusion was made to the debentures held by the government. I think the proper thing to do would be to send the Bill back to the committee.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Senator Gibson has charge of the Bill, and in his absence I move that the order be discharged, and put on the order paper for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman think the delay long enough? The important point raised by the leader of the House was partially discussed in the Senate when the Bill was before it. Would it not be better to leave it over for a longer time?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The matter was very fully discussed in the committee in the presence of the representatives of the company, and the committee were satisfied with the explanations given, that no harm would be done to any one. I would suggest that the order be discharged and placed on the order paper till to-morrow. In the meantime, communication can be held with the Grand Trunk railway people, and they can be heard to-morrow forenoon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that the attention of the promoters of the Bill has been directed to this difficulty. It will involve the promoters of the Bill having an interview with the government as to their getting legislation of this character that gives priority to securities held by the government of Canada. That cannot be settled in a few minutes; consequently, it would be very much more desirable to postpone the order long enough to permit a proper conference being held with all parties interested.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Should the conference not take place before to-morrow, a further postponement can be had.

The motion was agreed to.

ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (O 2) An Act respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.

He said: This Bill simply proposes to enable the Ancient Order of Foresters to invest its funds as provided in sections 58 and 60 of the Insurance Act of 1910, and gives the company power to hold property not to exceed $5,000. There is nothing remarkable in it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ORDER OF MOOSE INCORPORATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (P 2) An Act to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose in the Dominion of Canada.

He said: There is nothing remarkable about this Bill except the name of the society. In order to remove any misapprehension which might be caused by its peculiar name. I shall read to the House the purposes of the society. They are as follows:

(a) To unite fraternally all persons entitled to membership under the constitution and by-laws of the society.
(b) To improve the social, intellectual and moral condition of the members of the society; and to educate them in integrity, sobriety and frugality, and to give all moral and material aid in its power to its members and those dependent upon them;
(c) To establish a fund for the relief of sick and distressed members;
(d) To establish a benefit fund—
(i) for insuring a sum of money, not exceeding one thousand five hundred dollars, payable on the death of a member;
(ii) for insuring a sum of money payable for the funeral expenses of a member;
(iii) for the relief or maintenance of members in old age;
(e) To secure for its members such other advantages, other than insurance benefits, as are from time to time designated by the constitution and by-laws of the society.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (9) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who,—
(a) without the consent of the owner thereof,
(i) fraudulently takes, holds, keeps in his possession, collects, conceals, receives, appropriates, purchases, sells or causes or procures or assists to be taken possession of, collected, concealed, received, appropriated, purchased or sold, any timber, mast, spar, sawlog, shingle bolt or other description of lumber which is found adrift in, or cast ashore on the bank or beach of any river, stream, or lake, in Canada, or in the harbours or any of the coast waters (including the whole of Queen Charlotte sound, the whole of the Strait of Georgia or the Canadian waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca) of British Columbia, or,—

Hon. Mr. POWER—When this Bill was before the House at its second reading, it was pointed out that the paragraph we are dealing with now was, to a certain extent, open to abuse, and it was suggested by more than one hon. gentleman that this paragraph should be confined to timber which was marked.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I think the clause in the Bill making it a crime to secure any logs adrift is not proper. On the sea-coast where I live thousands of logs, which have broken adrift from the mills, float along the shores, and the mill owners make no effort to take possession of them. Sometimes they are piled up on the shore, and the poor people cut them up for firewood. If these logs were not so cut up, they would be lost or destroyed, and it would be a hardship if we prevented the poor from using them for firewood, because the owners make no effort to secure them.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It is a singular fact that in the lumber operations carried on by the companies on the rivers in Canada large quantities of logs get from the stump to the river and into the boom without a mark on them. It costs a great deal of money to handle these logs—just as much as if the owners had put the mark on them. The provisions of the local Act in Nova Scotia with respect to the river St. John would make it as much a crime for a man to take an unmarked log as to take one that was marked. There are on the river St. John, two or three hundred thousand feet of unmarked logs, which have actually passed through the employees hands. The owner is not able to follow every log which goes into the St. John river and into the incorporated boom. This lumber is taken by the boom company and rafted by itself. It is advertised in two or three newspapers, and the lumbermen who are interested in all the larger quantities of lumber sent down the St. John river hold a meeting, and buy that unmarked lumber, and the money is divided between the people operating on the river in proportion to the quantities of lumber each handles. If we eliminated unmarked logs, and people were permitted to go up and down the St. John river and take all the unmarked logs it would be a large task, but it would pay them to do it. I think we should be careful in that respect. A man would know a log that was cut for the purpose of marking, and he would have no right to take it out of the stream, or from the coast, unless it had gone beyond the confines of milling operations entirely.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—The description seems rather curious. It says 'including the whole of Queen Charlotte sound, the whole of the Strait of Georgia, or the Canadian waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, of British Columbia.'

The question arises whether the whole of the waters of the coast are covered by that. What does that description mean?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object of that, as far as I can ascertain, is this: The present Act simply extends to the banks and beaches of rivers, streams and lakes, and does not include the class of waters with which the Bill now deals. It is proposed to extend the law beyond those waters that I have mentioned, and to make it apply to harbours and coast waters in British Columbia, and I suppose for convenience they have mentioned Queen Charlotte sound, the Strait of Georgia and so on. Inasmuch as the suggestion has been made by lumbermen in the province of British Columbia, who are lumbering in those particular waters, I suppose it is properly worded.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Have they considered what the effect of this clause will be?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The effect of it will be to extend the protection given by the present law to inland waters, to those waters on the coast.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—It looks as if these particular waters which are specified might not be considered coast waters. Then the question comes in whether the description should not include the whole coast of Vancouver island.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not sure that mention of those particular parts might not take them out of any controversy as to whether they come within the waters described in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Then would come up the question as to whether something further should not be said with reference to the waters along the coast of Vancouver island. The Queen Charlotte islands are specified, and it occurred to me that it might be necessary to specify Vancouver island also.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would not the waters along the coast of Vancouver island be coast waters?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Not any more than the waters along the coast of Queen Charlotte islands.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I find I was under a misapprehension when I spoke a little while ago. I see by the wording of this paragraph that it does not apply to the coast waters of the Atlantic, so I have not any special interest in it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend's suggestion had been carried out, it would amend the present law and permit any one to fraudulently take timber which was not marked, which would be a very undesirable position in which to place the law. I was about to say to the hon. member from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Bostock), that before the third reading is reached I will make further inquiry as to the reason for specifically mentioning those particular waters to which he has referred.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia). The object of the amendment is to compel millmen to keep their booms more secure. They are a menace to navigation. Ships break their propellors and get wrecked among those logs, and lumbermen should be compelled to make their booms more secure.

Hon. Mr. KERR, from the committee, reported the Bill without any amendment.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The orders of the day being called.

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (76), An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The leader of the House was good enough to say, when this Bill was read the second time, that he had no objection to saying at this stage what I might have said if I had been ready then. Therefore I trust the House will pardon me if I say a few words about it to-day. In the first place, I direct the attention of the House to the Act under which this commission was constituted —that is chapter 71 of the Statutes of 1903, section 9, which says: 'The construction of the Eastern Division' that is from the city of Moncton to the city of Winnipeg,' and the operation thereof until completed, and leased to the company pursuant to the provisions of the agreement shall be under the charge and control of three commissioners' afterwards increased to four, 'to be appointed by the Governor in Council, who shall hold office during pleasure, and who and whose successors in office shall be a body corporate under the name of the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway, and are hereinafter called the commissioners. The Governor in Council may from time to time designate one of the commissioners to be chairman of the commission.' If one reads that section carefully, it will be seen that these commissioners were appointed to do a certain work, which under the original contract would have been completed about this time. I think it was generally understood that these gentlemen would continue in office until the work was completed. One would naturally, therefore, be surprised to find when the change of government took place, action was almost immediately taken to remove all of these gentlemen who happened to be appointees of the former government; and one is more surprised because the hon. gentleman who leads the government at the present time had always, while in opposition, been a very strenuous advocate of the permanency of government employees. Now, the question ought to be whether any very serious fault was to be found with the commissioners. It seems to me that unless that was the case the natural thing would have been that the commissioners should have been allowed to go ahead and finish their work. Of course, if it were shown, or if it were suspected that they were acting improperly, an inquiry should have been had, and, if it were established that the commissioners were guilty of any improper conduct, they should be removed from office. The course adopted by the government was not what one would naturally expect; the government, in a way, put the cart before the horse. They arranged to dismiss the commissioners first, and now they propose to try them after they have been dismissed.

In connection with that point I do not think the government have treated these commissioners altogether fairly. There was a statement made in another place that went to show that this road was to cost $258,000,000. The statement submitted to the House of Commons does not show that. It shows that on the 31st of December, 1911, out of a total line of 1,805 miles, the grading was completed on 1,588 miles, or 87 per cent of the whole length of the road. Track was laid on 1,379 miles or 76·82 per cent of the whole, and 279 miles of siding were laid as well; 983 miles of telegraph was completed, or over 50 per cent of the whole, and 82·75 per cent of the bridges had been completed. That is the point to which I direct the attention of the House, because the minister's statement showed that while eighty million dollars had been spent on grading, thirty and a half millions would be needed to complete. Ten and a quarter million had been spent on rails, three millions are needed for completion, and four and a half millions had been spent on bridges and one and a half millions would be needed to complete. That is to say, with thirteen per cent of the grading and 23 per cent of the track-laying, 17 per cent of the bridges and 50 per cent of the telegraphs to be complete; 37 per cent of the expenditure on actual construction of the road-bed was still to be made. No satisfactory answer was given when questions were asked in another place as to why there was so great a disproportion between the estimated cost of completion and the amount of work to be done. The engineering expenses to December 31, 1911, were placed at $7,681,700, from December 31, 1911 to December 31, 1913, $3,850,300. A road within 13 per cent of completion as to grading and 23 per cent as to track, and within two years of being finally handed over, should not cost half as much for engineering during these two years as in the preceding six years of construction. That, it seems to me, is a thing that is plain on the face of it. The amount estimated and spent by the late government for terminals at Quebec was half a million, and the present government propose to now spent over nine millions on terminals at Quebec. The item of headquarters' salaries and expenses is also a remarkable one. Three-quarters of a million had been spent by the late government from 1905 to 1911, and the present government proposes to spend one and three-quarter millions in two years. Up to the 31st December, 1911, a total of $114,000,000 has been expended, and even accepting the very exaggerated estimate of the Minister of Railways, the expenditure alleged to be required to complete would be $58,000,000. That brings the whole cost of the road to completion up to $172,000,000. That is a considerable distance short of $258,000,000. That vast difference between $172,000,000 and $258,000,000 is made up largely of bonuses and interest and things of that sort, which would be largely met by the rental from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. I am not very much given to figures and I shall not go into that. It comes to this in the end, that of the total estimated expenditure of $172,000,000, two-thirds was spent by the late government in seven years and one-third is to be spent by the present government in two years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What paper is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Hon. Mr. POWER—From the Ottawa 'Free Press', but I am reading what are facts, and I am reading them from the paper because it saves the trouble of making them up for myself. The position of the government when this Bill was introduced in the Commons was this: They claimed there was no necessity for having four commissioners to do the work, that the one competent man they had secured was quite capable of doing it all. If that statement had been correct there would have been something in it, but we find that almost immediately upon the appointment of the new chairman who, inasmuch as he represented the government, could exercise a wholesome control over his colleagues on the commission, this gentleman, who was, according to the statement of the government, able to do all the work that the four commissioners had been doing, and to do it better, selected an assistant at a salary of $7,500 a year. That is more than the individual commissioners were each receiving and does not indicate very much economy. And, further, the gentleman, Mr. Leonard, is a very experienced contractor and engineer, and it does not seem to me that it was necessary to appoint any more engineers. The late commissioners had a comparatively full and capable staff of engineers, and there was no necessity for Mr. Leonard taking one of that staff and making him an assistant commissioner.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Who is that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Macpherson. It was not alleged that Mr. Grant, who was then engineer of the commission, was not a capable man, and was not discharging his duty faithfully. Further, there is very little work for engineers, certainly not for high priced engineers, to do in connection with this work now. It has all been laid down. The road has been located from one end to the other. The only engineering work which is really necessary is the work of the district engineers, under the supervision of the chief engineer. I think that Mr. Grant, supervised by Mr. Leonard, would have been quite capable of seeing that those district engineers did their duty properly. People talk in a loose way about engineers being the right men to superintend work of this kind.

Take any great railway—the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern railway, or the Grand Trunk railway—the engineers are not at the head of the enterprise. They are not the people who superintend the furnishing of supplies and the financing of the undertaking. They act under the direction of the gentlemen who are appointed directors of the company; and while the Transcontinental Commissioners may not have been very skilful engineers, they were, I think, fairly good business men, and it has not been shown that they failed in any way in transacting their business. No doubt the road has cost a good deal, but it is such a road as has never been built in Canada before, and although the first cost may be considerable, the result of the method in which it has been constructed will be that the future expenditure on the road will be comparatively small. We have not reached the end of the inconsistency, if one may use the expression, of the government yet. They dismissed the railway commissioners, and then, after they had been condemned, appointed a commission to investigate their conduct. I find, in the return laid on the table of this House on the 22nd of February, a provision with respect to carrying on this work. At page 297 of the Senate 'Debates' I find the following:

> Appointment of F. P. Gutelius, C.E., of Montreal, and George Lynch Staunton, K.C., of Hamilton, who shall be chairman of the commission, commissioners to make investigation in respect of the construction of the Transcontinental railway between Moncton and Winnipeg, covering all matters bearing on the actual construction of the railway, the expenditure theron, whether direct or indirect, the system adopted for such construction, and the management of the undertaking generally.

Mr. Gutelius is an engineer, but, as I said before, it does not seem to me there was any necessity for more engineers. I think Mr. Leonard, and the staff under him, would be quite capable of making any inquiry that was necessary to be made from the engineering point of view. Mr. Staunton is a lawyer, and the government have taken the ground that, in a work of this kind, lawyers and business men are not the right people to deal with. Looking at the pay that is provided for Messrs. Morine, Ducharme and Lake, I am satisfied that these gentlemen will be paid not less than $40 a day each. Morine is to be paid $40 a day, and his two assistant commissioners are to be paid $30 a day, in addition to their incidental expenses. Mr. Gutelius is a gentleman who stands very high, I understand, in the engineering world, and Mr. Staunton is a gentleman who certainly would naturally expect, being a leader of the bar in Ontario, to be paid rather more than Mr. Morine, who has not had, in the recent past, a very large practice. So that we are safe in saying that these two commissioners will draw, at any rate, something like $100 a day between them; and the amount of work that is set out for them by the commission will take them probably two years. Where the economy comes in, arising from the dismissal of the present commissioners and the appointment of Mr. Leonard, with an assistant who is paid more than one of the present commissioners, and the appointment of those two commissioners to investigate for a couple of years, at a considerably higher figure than the present commissioners are getting, does not seem clear.

I think what happened was this: there were some rather strenuous followers of the government, who saw that there were three or four Liberals who were drawing respectable salaries, who were not protected by statute, and who could be got rid of, and they decided to get rid of them, and, in so doing, provide a means of furnishing comfortable pay for a considerable time for some gentlemen whose politics were of a different stamp, I am not given to using strong language, I hope, and I think also, that I am capable of looking with a reasonable amount of fairness at the acts of the government, but I must say that I think, in this particular matter, the action that has been taken is not creditable to the government.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If I understood the last speaker correctly, he said the railway commissioners were dismissed. I have most positive information, from the highest sources in the land, that such is not the case, that these very railway commissioners sent in their resignation, and consequently, were not dismissed. I should like to know whether the statement of my informant or the statement of the hon. gentleman from Halifax is correct.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My recollection is that Mr. Parent, who was chairman of the commission, resigned his office before the present government came into power, or about that time.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The very day after.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And I understand the other commissioners sent in their resignations.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Since the hon. gentleman has chosen to interfere in this way, I should like to ask the leader of the government if the other commissioners were not asked by the government to send in their resignations.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot give my hon. friend any information as to what may have taken place between the ministers and these gentlemen. All that is necessary to say is that they sent in their resignations.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all I want.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I should like to ask his honour the Speaker what was before the Chair, after the motion was put, seconded, and declared carried, when the hon. gentleman from Halifax took the floor?

The SPEAKER—The motion was that this House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, and it has not been carried yet.

The motion was declared carried, and the House resolved itself into a Committe of the Whole on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I desire to obtain information. The Speaker declared the motion carried before the hon. gentleman from Halifax spoke. The hon. gentleman then talked for nearly half an hour. He is in the habit of declaring out of order members not as wise as he, or perhaps with not as big a head as he, and he calls them to order. I should like to know whether he was not out of order in speaking after the motion was carried. Other members of the House have not the privilege of speaking to a motion after it has been declared carried. I should like to know upon what grounds the hon. gentleman from Halifax claims that right.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

The CHAIRMAN—The House is now in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am speaking on the motion. I want an answer to my question before I vote on the motion to go into committee.

The CHAIRMAN—The Speaker has left the Chair and the House is now in Committee.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I have a right to speak half a dozen times in committee, if I wish to do so. If there is any rule by which the Chairman can prevent me speaking will he kindly quote it. I was trying to obtain the information from the Speaker, and, failing to obtain it from his honour, I was going to refer to my hon. friend from Halifax.

The CHAIRMAN—If the hon. gentleman will persist in interrupting, I shall have to ask the Speaker to take the Chair. The hon. gentleman is out of order, and is delaying and obstructing the proceedings of the committee.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—What rule am I violating? If he will show me the rule I will desist. Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Halifax will refer me to the rule.

Hon. Mr. BELL, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (97) An Act to provide further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this Bill received its second reading I said that when we reached the committee stage I would state to the House the objects for which this $6,000,000 was being advanced to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and how it would be expended. It is proposed that the application shall be made as follows:

1. During the next three years they intend to pay off $600,000 of debentures, that is to say $200,000 this year, $200,000 in 1913 and $200,000 in 1914.
2. They propose a further extension of elevator No. 2, adding 1,500,000 bushels capacity, at a cost of $550,000.
3. Rebuilding Victoria pier and market basin, for river business, $640,000.
4. Sheds and equipment Victoria pier, $1,000,000.
5. Construction of high level wharfs, eastward of market basin to section 30, $350,000.
6. The diversion and alteration of the lower end of the Mackay pier and works required to lessen the St. Mary's current, $400,000.
7. Then lengthening of the present pier, $500,000.
8. Provision for the permanent paving of the wharfs and railway extension, $500,000.
9. General improvement and plant, $500,000.
10. Tarte pier, permanent sheds, $250,000.
11. New wharfs, $300,000.
12. Commencement of construction of new pier No. 1, up above Alexandria pier, extension of Bickerdike pier, with lift bridge connections, $710,000.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What rate of interest are those debentures bearing?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand that they are three per cent debentures, but they will cost about 3½, as money cannot be borrowed for less than that.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Is that in addition to the $6,000,000?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, this is the proposed application of the $6,000,000 advanced.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It pretty well covers it. Those are what you may call works in the interior of the harbour.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Apparently.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They have no general plan of deepening or extending the channel, have they?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, not in that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Apparently not in this. I do not know whether, in the entire scheme, they have been looking forward to possibly deepening the channel.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I suppose all these works would not cover three-quarters of a mile frontage. It is all within the distance from the canal basin down to the Bonsecours market, which would not cover a mile and a quarter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The payments are all to be spread over a number of years, and possibly they may look forward to doing something of that kind, but I cannot answer my right hon. friend's question.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend, the leader of the House, or my friend in the rear (Hon. Mr. Cloran) happen to know the present depth of the Montreal harbour?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Of course the ice is there now, and I do not know whether they take measurements every day or not, but in the springtime it measures 28 to 32 and 35 feet, and in the fall goes down to 22, 21 and 23 feet.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—23 feet is low water?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My impression is they are 3½ per cent debentures. Those debentures are being paid by arrangements entered into some years ago, evidently, by the commissioners and government, but, I apprehend, when it was entered into, money was cheaper than it is to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Would the hon. gentleman mention that the interest has been paid, and that there are no arrears.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand that there are no arrears of interest.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—So that the country is losing nothing by advancing the money.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Is that advanced at 3½ per cent?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot speak of that positively, but before the Bill reaches the third reading I will make inquiries on that subject. I understand they are 3½ per cent debentures.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It will cost us 3½ to 3¾ per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the probabilities are in favour of that. The information is obtainable from section 6 of the Bill, as my hon. friend from St. John has pointed out. That section of the Bill makes the provision that the debentures:

shall bear interest at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, such interest to be payable half-yearly, on the first day of July and the first day of January in each year.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

COLLINGWOOD DRY-DOCK BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on Bill (No. 111) An Act to authorize the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Limited.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—On the second reading I think I explained to hon. gentlemen that this was a subsidy applied for and worked out under the Act of 1908. Upon the repeal of the Act of 1908, and the passage of the Act of 1910, it was found that there was a difference of two feet of water depth on the sill—that is the Act of 1908 permitted the dry-dock to be constructed with 16 feet of water on the sill, but the Act of 1910 required 18 feet on the sill. In the meantime, the work had been proceeded with, and an arrangement was entered into between the late government and the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company by which the work which they had done would receive the confirmation of parliament.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What are they going to do about it? Do they propose to increase it to 18 feet?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, they propose to leave it at the 16 feet. It was entirely too late. The work had been substantially carried out, apparently, when the Act of 1910 was passed, and had it not been for the dissolution of parliament when it did take place last year, this legislation would have been put through.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I merely wanted to know whether any sort of understanding had been come to with the company as to future deepening.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I understand that no arrangement of that kind has been entered into between the company and the government, but it is simply carrying out what was practically the agreement entered into under the Act of 1908.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am aware of that, but I thought perhaps some understanding had been come to with them. Sixteen feet is going to be rather a shallow dry-dock I fear.

On clause 1,

The agreement between the Collingwood Shipbuilding Compnay, Limited, and His Majesty, dated the twenty-seventh day of July, one thousand nine hundred and ten, set out in the schedule hereto, is hereby ratified and confirmed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What is the total cost?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A subsidy of $9,128 for 20 years, being based on the 3 per cent basis.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

SECOND READING.

Bill (M 2) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Central Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 6, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

CLAIM OF MESSRS. BOULANGER AND SON.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for the production of all documents, contracts and correspondence, in relation to the claim of Messieurs Boulanger & Son, Montmagny, Quebec.

He said: I might be permitted to say a few words on this motion in order to state the facts before the leader of the House brings down the papers, and a settlement is made of the matter. This refers to a claim made by Boulanger and Son, of Montmagny, who had a contract to build a wharf there. They submitted a tender, which was successful, and signed the contract, which was in English. They did not understand English, but the resident engineer there, Mr. Tremblay, a good man, told them it was the same as in the French version; so they built the wharf. In the French version of the contract it was said that they were obliged to clean up the bottom of the river or basin at Montmagny, to put in a new wharf. They built the new wharf, but when they had it completed they were told that by the English version they were obliged to clean everything off the wharf. They took legal advice and their lawyer told them that they were not obliged to do that, according to the French version. The engineer told them to do the work under protest and later on, if they had any complaints against the government, they might make a claim. It was understood with the engineer that that was the proper course to take, and they did the work under protest, and filed a claim of $500. The resident engineer reported that there was a little difference between the French and English version, and according to the French version he thought they were entitled to something, but not to the amount of $500. The department refused to pay the amount some eighteen months ago, and then the claimants took action before the Exchequer Court, and the decision was to have been put in the hands of a judge who, though most honourable and learned, did not understand French, so the same difficulty would arise again. I therefore proposed a compromise to the Department of Justice in the name of the Boulangers, and said they were willing to accept $350, each side paying its own costs. At the same time I advised the claimants that a compromise settlement is always better than a suit and they accepted my advice. Some negotiation took place with the Department of Justice, and the Solicitor General, who handled the case for the department in the province of Quebec, said it was all right. The claimants thought the matter would be settled, and awaited payment, but a little accident happened to the government that was then in power, and since last fall I have tried, without success, to have that settlement carried out. Mr. Newcombe, of the Department of Justice, said that the contract was pretty plain in both languages, and he thought the claimants had no claim. We discussed that point, and we referred the matter to the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, Mr. Lafleur, who made a report, collaborating with Mr. Tremblay, the resident engineer, that it was only fair that the claim for $350, as agreed upon, should be paid. I then wrote to the department, and the minister replied that he had referred the matter to the deputy minister to be settled. The deputy minister told me that he should like to have the opinion of Mr. Newcombe, as the matter was in their hands, as to whether they could settle in that way. I saw Mr. Newcombe, and he said it was very easy for the department to settle that, and that he would write them to that effect. He wrote the letter to the Department of Public Works telling them that they were at liberty to settle the claim for $350, and that it was their own affair—something like that; so I thought the matter was finally settled, and that Boulanger had nothing to do but wait for his cheque; but, to my great surprise, I received some ten days ago a last letter from Mr. Desrochers, the secretary of the department, written in French, under date of 24th of February last, to the effect that he was charged by the department to tell me that there was no ambiguity in either the English or French version of the contract, and that the department could not entertain the claim. I do not know what happened to change their opinion. Until recently it was understood in the Department of Public Works that if the Department of Justice would inform them that they could settle the claim, as it was in their hands, they would settle it.

I am greatly surprised, therefore, to see this last letter. There must be a misunderstanding somewhere. Perhaps when the facts are laid before the government the matter will be amicably settled. Possibly if the case goes to court it will cost the government more than $350, and if the matter is ventilated in public, facts which are not pleasant about French and English employed in the departments, may be disclosed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very glad to direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the remarks of the hon. gentleman.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOYER inquired:

Has the government considered the opportunity of sending a delegate to Rome, to represent Canada at the International Institute of Agriculture?

He said: I desire to give a short history of the International Institute. The institute owes its creation to a Californian, David Lubrin, a retired merchant, the possessor of large estates, who realized that all trades but one throughout the world were organized. Agriculture alone was allowed to drift, and he was convinced that if a central bureau of agricultural statistics could be created it would greatly benefit the farming industry. The French saying 'No one is a prophet in his own country' proved true in Mr. Lubrin's case. He offered his idea to the United States government, and his offer was rejected. He next crossed the ocean and addressed himself to England, but England, busy with the Boer war, did not see fit to adopt the idea. He drifted into France, and from France to Germany, and from Germany to Austria, and was finally referred to the King of Italy, who received him very kindly, told him to call again, and give him time to consider the idea. A short time afterward, Mr. Lubrin was sent for, the International Institute of Agriculture was formed, and has been in existence ever since. The King then addressed a letter to the president of the Italian government, asking him to invite all the nations of the world to help him in the formation of this institute. Forty nations responded to the call of the King of Italy, and laid down certain resolutions with the understanding that all colonies, on their own application, could henceforth become members of the institute. The King of Italy, to show his good will to the institute, endowed it out of his private purse to the amount of 300,000 francs. The financial instute, thus constituted by a gift of 300,000 francs from the King of Italy and contributions from the different nations of the world, was divided into five groups. Nations of the first group contribute sixteen times 1,500 francs, or 384,000 group contribute eight times 1,500 francs, or 48,000 francs. The two nations in the third group contribute 12,000 francs. Twelve nations in the fourth group contribute 36,000 francs. The thirteen nations in the fifth group contribute 19,500 francs, making a total contribution of 499,500 francs, plus the 300,000 francs contribution from the King of Italy, making a grand total of 799,500 francs which is the annual budget of the institute. The vote of the institute is thus divided; the nations of the first group had five votes, nations of the second group four votes, nations of the third group three votes, and nations of the fourth and fifth groups two votes. The institute was started in 1905, and in 1908 the first annual meeting was called, and notices giving the programme of the annual meeting were sent to all the nations adhering to the institute.

Unfortunately for Canada, England had forgotten to notify us that we could belong to the institute, and it was only in 1907, two years after the institute was founded, that Canada was invited to join. Our first representative at the International Institute was Dr. J. G. Rutherford, head of the Veterinary Department of the Dominion of Canada, who went to prepare the work of the first annual meeting to which the Hon. Mr. Fisher went, and I had the honour to accompany him. At that first meeting the Hon. Mr. Fisher was unanimously chosen as president. The vice-president was the Russian Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Yermoloff. At that first meeting the rules were laid down that are in force to-day governing the institute work. It was divided into three great divisions. The first division is presided over by Mr. Miklos, the delegate from Hungary, who has charge of the finances of the institute, of the building, of the archives, and of the paying in of the money, and the disbursements. The second division, which deals exclusively with agricultural statistics, diseases of plants and so forth, is presided over by an eminent German, Dr. Muller. Dr. Muller stands very high in Germany as a great statistical officer, and he willingly took charge of this department, which had to be organized from top to bottom. The third division governs the work of the institute relating to co-operation, and your humble servant was chosen as president of the third group. One has to go into the work of the institute to get a grasp of its magnitude. One hundred and seventy-two countries, or the majority of those are to-day sending to the International Institute of Agriculture all their statistics, relating not only to trade and commerce, but giving prices of products, and all these agricultural statistics have to be sent to Rome. These statistics are sent in twenty different languages, every nation having its own system of weights and measures, almost all of them differing one from another. Having reduced this enormous amount of statistics into a few lines, they publish the information in a bulletin issued monthly, before the 20th of each month, so as to give the world a reasonable prospect of what crops will be in the immediate future. As I have already said, twenty different languages are spoken at the institute. We had to ransack almost the whole of Europe to get a sufficient number of men learned in the different languages to translate the statistics, and to reduce the various weights and measures into standard measurements, so that they might be given to the world in a comprehensive way. We have found amongst the translators a gentleman who had never set foot either in Japan or China, and yet he proved a thorough Japanese and Chinese scholar. He was so efficient in these two languages that for the last two years he has been the official translator for the Japanese ambassador at Rome, and also the Chinese ambassador. He was asked one day how long he had remained in either China or Japan, and to my astonishment he told me that he had never been to China or Japan. He said: 'I never was rich enough to go to China or Japan.' I asked him how he had learned the languages so well, and he said it was a natural gift. Amongst the translators that offered their services were people from northern Europe, five of whom could speak in no less than sixteen different languages, and could read them faultlessly, such are the people who are entrusted with the work of translating this enormous amount of statistics sent once a month to the International Institute of Agriculture.

The King of Italy, following his gift of three hundred thousand francs, granted in the historical ground of Villa Borghese, a magnificent site, on which is erected the building which serves the purpose of the International Institute of Agriculture. I would strongly urge all my hon. colleagues of this House, if they ever go to Rome, that they should not fail to walk into the International Institute of Agriculture. By merely mentioning the fact that you come from Canada you will receive a most hearty welcome. Although the library has been only lately founded, within the past three years, no less than 2,500 publications dealing with agriculture are received monthly. If I tell you that these 2,500 pamphlets, or agricultural treaties, are carefully selected and once a month the institute publishes a volume of no less than 250 pages, called agricultural information, in which all information, useful or new to agriculture, is put down in this volume and distributed the world over. I am sure you must be surprised.

One does not realize the enormous importance of co-operation until one has seen the work of it throughout the countries of Europe. In 1911, in Germany alone the enormous sum of $1,634,268,989 was used by co-operative banks in fostering agriculture. In the agriculture of Germany, France, Belgium, Austria, and Italy co-operation exists to an enormous extent. Not only do they co-operate for the selling of produce, but also for the buying of everything required by agriculture. They also co-operate as far as insurance is concerned, and the figures are simply baffling. When you think that from a chair in a poor farmer's house up to the most valuable head of cattle, everything is entered into the register when it is insured in the co-operative system, you will realize the magnitude of the work. This co-operation has got to such a pitch that it has done away with one of the curses from which our country suffers, that is to say, usury. To-day every farmer throughout the continent of Europe is in a prosperous state, owing to the enormous spread of co-operation amongst them. These annual meetings are called for three months ahead, and a programme is sent out. At the annual meeting of 1908, the question of the protection of birds useful for agriculture was one of the subjects discussed. Have the hon. gentlemen of this House any idea of the importance of birds as relating to agriculture? The convention was called in 1907 at the instigation of my dear friend Mr. Miklos, president of the Board of Agriculture for the Kingdom of Hungary. He drew the attention of the nations of Europe to the enormous destruction of birds useful to agriculture, that was going on throughout Europe, and the harm it was causing the country by the multiplying of insects and other pests. The different governments willingly sent their representatives to this convention. Certain nations demurred. They said that birds are no respecters of boundaries, and fly from one country to another going wherever they please or wherever food is most abundant. Unfortunately for our friends, the birds, they were unmercifully snared in some countries, though highly protected in others. Would you allow me simply to give you some statistics concerning the usefulness of birds as far as agriculture is concerned. I take my information from an American book called 'The Birds of North America,' by Chester A. Reed:

The native birds are one of our nation's most valuable assets. Destroy them, and in a comparatively few years the insects will have multiplied to such an extent that trees will be denuded of their foliage, plants will cease to thrive and crops cannot be raised. This is not fancy but plain facts. Look at the little chickadee: she was photographed while entering a bird box, with about 25 plant lice to feed her seven young; about 200 times a day, either she or her mate, made trips with similar loads to feed the growing youngsters.

It has been found, by observation and dissection, that a cuckoo consumes daily from 50 to 400 caterpillars or their equivalent, while a chickadee will eat from 200 to 500 insects, or up to 4,000 insect or worm eggs. One hundred insects a day is a conservative estimate of the quantity consumed by each individual insectivorous bird. By carefully estimating the birds in several areas, I find that, in the province of Quebec there are not less than five insect-eating birds per acre. Thus this province with its 8,000 square miles has a useful bird population of not less than 25,600,000 which, for each day's fare, requires the enormous total of 2,560,000,000 insects. That such figures can be expressed in terms better understood, it has been computed that about 120,000 average insects fill a bushel measure. This means that the daily consumption, chiefly of obnoxious insects, is 21,000 bushels. This estimate is good for about five months in the year, May to September, inclusive; during the remainder of the year, the insects, eggs and larvae destroyed by our winter, late fall and early spring migrants will be equivalent to nearly half this quantity. It is the duty, and should be the pleasure, of every citizen to do all in his or her power to protect these valuable creatures, and to encourage them to remain about our homes. The author believes that the best means of protection is the disseminating of knowledge concerning them, and the creating of an interest in their habits and modes of life. With that object in view this statistic is prepared. May it serve its purpose and help those already interested in the subject, and may it be the medium for starting many others on the road to knowledge of our wild, feathered friends.

This is as far as it relates to birds useful to agriculture. Another instance was given at this great meeting. Frederick the Great, King of Prussia, having created great gardens planted with very valuable plants and flowers, found his garden eaten to the tune of ten per cent by birds, either useful or obnoxious to agriculture. An edict was published ordering the destruction of every bird throughout Prussia. What was the consequence? Two years after the publication of his edict nothing was left of his garden but the bare ground, everything having been eaten up by caterpillars and insects injurious to agriculture, to flowers and to plants. The edict was recalled, and Frederick the Great made this remark:

> Better pay ten per cent to birds useful to agricultural than to give everything to insects that will destroy and leave nothing but the bare ground.

Germany from that day, taking her cue from that great King, has strictly protected her birds; and when I come to tell you that the crop alone of Germany to-day is valued at ten billions of francs, it will give you one instance of the enormous growth of agriculture in that country. Now, to come down to recent meetings, the last annual meeting was called in May, 1911. Amongst the interesting questions then brought out was a new one altogether, that is to say, insurance against hail storms; and one has to go to those meetings to realize the importance of such an insurance. Certain countries in Europe suffer very severely from disastrous hail storms. In England alone three counties are severely affected--Lancashire, Hertford and Norfolk. In the northern part of France, experiments have been going on in the last four or five years, subsidized by the federal government, to discover some means of destroying the clouds that produce hail storms. Mortars have been very successfully used at over 600 different stations, but unfortunately, as in the case of all new ventures, opinions are divided. It has been proven so far, however, that the firing of a mortar, loaded even with gunpowder, has a most beneficial effect in dispelling storms, and very often saving the district from destructive hail storms. Kite flying is also very favourably considered, and so far has been a great success in dispelling storms. The English government, picking up the point, brought out the fact through the head of the meteorological service in London, Dr. Shaw, that it was impossible for the stations, numbering already over 8,000, dispersed all through England, Scotland, and Ireland, sending daily reports, to report all hail storms, because such storms sometimes affect a spot not one hundred feet wide, and will lay that spot bare, whilst within a few inches of it nothing is destroyed. Dr. Shaw stated that no fewer than 25,000 stations would be required in England alone if every hail storm was to be reported upon. The question was left to the good will of each municipality, and is in a fair way of being solved. Another very interesting question that was very thoroughly studied at the institute was the question of dry farming.

Mr. Campbell's system, which took root in Nebraska, is now gradually spreading, not only through the desert of Sahara, but has reached Europe, and is very successfully used in the dry parts of north Europe. The question was thoroughly studied and explained by experts. It has a great foothold in South Africa, and is in a fair way to become successful. My question is more important than the simple wording of it would indicate, and let me tell my hon. friend the leader of the government, that what we want in Rome is a thorough scholar, a man speaking both French and English, because the official language and all discussion is in French. A member speaking in any assembly has a right to speak in German, Dutch, Chinese, and Japanese, but immediately the speech is over a French translation has to be put in. If a man desires to make his weight felt at the Institute, he must be a thorough French scholar, because all documents are translated and issued in French. The Institute, following up its good work, decided later on to publish all its statistics and all its information as to disease, &c. in five different languages, English, French, German, Spanish and Italian. It is proposed later on, as the revenues of the Institute increase, to publish this enormous amount of statistics in twenty different languages, so that every nation throughout the world may benefit by the enormous resources placed at the disposal of, not only the agricultural classes, but the commercial classes, the railway and steamship classes, transporting freight and buying and selling the natural products of the world. The success of the statistics issued by the Institute compared to the great crop reporting houses of Europe such as Broomhall is simply wonderful. The institute issues no bulletin but what is compiled from official government statistics. These great reporting houses have agents the world over, reporting on the state of the crop, but within the last year it has been found that the statistics furnished by the Institute are so accurate that they are being quoted on the Liverpool Corn Exchange, and Berlin Corn Exchange, and in several large corn exporting, and importing centres of Europe. So far so good for the institute. The world institute requires to go still further. The institute has published these statistics, concerning wheat, oats, barley, maize and corn. It has since gone into the statistics of grapes, rice and cotton, publishing the most reliable information, which is thoroughly official, and which today ranks very high amongst the nations. The countries represented at the institute in Rome have this advantage; Rome being the capital of Italy, every nation has there an ambassador, or chargé de affaires, or a consul. Each one of these nations has either an ambassador or consul to represent them at the municipal institute. Canada is in a different position. We have no representative in Rome. What we require is a man who would take an interest in the matter and go into it thoroughly. One has no idea of the emulation that is created among all these different nations represented at the institute, to bring their statistics up to date; so that the information supplied to each government participating will be of the latest. The greatest emulation reigns, and, in consequence, the institute has attained a very high standing, and it is the duty of a growing agricultural nation like Canada to be thoroughly and fittingly represented there. I ask the hon. leader of this House to seriously take the question into consideration. Do not delay in sending a man to Rome. Canada will benefit by it. Canada's name which is thoroughly known throughout Europe will become still better known. Canada desires expansion. The markets of Europe may be open to us through the information we get. Let us not lose the opportunity. I sincerely hope my hon. friend will place this matter before the Department of Agriculture, and insist upon a fitting and proper representative being sent to Rome.

Hon. Mr. BOYER.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I feel assured in saying that the Senate is very much indebted to my hon. friend from Rigaud for the very interesting description that he has given us of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. I am further assured in saying that we have been more than pleased with the very instructive remarks that he has made upon the more scientific methods and system of agriculture. I am sure when the very interesting speech which has been given by my hon. friend appears upon the pages of our debates, it will be widely distributed and read with very much interest and much more instruction throughout the country. The only regret I have is that my hon. friend does not more frequently favour this Chamber with his views on such very important questions as this to which he has directed our attention, because there is no public question before the people of Canada in which we can be more deeply interested than this, the greatest industry which we have within the boundaries of our Dominion. I regret to say that possibly the interest which my hon. friend would naturally expect to be taken in such an important institution, and with reference to such a very important subject, has not been heretofore manifested by the government of Canada, and the answers which I am called upon to give to his question may not be satisfactory to himself, but I have no doubt that had his remarks been made some years ago, so as to have more deeply impressed the government of Canada with the necessity of giving close attention to this subject, the answers which I am about to read might be more favourable. The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows:

1. Yes, and it is not the intention of the government at present to send a delegate to Rome to represent Canada at the International Institute of Agriculture.

The Dominion for some time has been and is now represented at the Institute by Mr. H. G. Dering, of the British Embassy at Rome.

I shall take great pleasure in directing the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the interesting and important remarks made by my hon. friend, and it is to be hoped that they may leave a sufficiently deep impression on the head of that department to impel him hereafter to see that Canada is more directly represented in that institute.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—Our representation in Rome was entrusted to Mr. Percy Wyndham. On Mr. Wyndham being appointed minister to the United States of Columbia, Mr. Dering consented to take charge of the interests of Canada, but that interest is only as far as our votes are concerned. I regret to say that England is not represented except through Mr. Dering of the British embassy at Rome. The embassy sends us all the information furnished by the association. The only interest we have is our vote entrusted to the embassy. As far as the voting is concerned, Mr. Dering is the cock of the roost, because we have our share of the votes. But Mr. Dering is not going to take charge of our interests, and when we have a representative there, we will be the first colony to have proper representation at Rome.

MONEY EXPENDED UNDER THE INQUIRIES ACT.

MOTION.

The order of the day being called:

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return stating the amount of money expended under the Inquiries Act?

(a) As salaries of commissioners, and

(b) All other expenses incurred under the said Act during the year ending the 1st July, 1897.

He said: Before making the motion which appears in my name, I wish to point out that, owing to defective punctuation, the notice does not satisfactorily express the object, which is to obtain information respecting the amount expended under the Inquiries Act during the year ending July 1, 1897. From the way in which the notice is punctuated, it might be thought that something more was required. I suggest that I be allowed to make the motion, having first transferred the last three words, making it read as follows:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return stating the amount of money expended under the Inquiries Act during the year ending 1st July, 1897.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (54) An Act to incorporate the Quinze and Ottawa Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (94) An Act respecting the Windsor, Chatham and London Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Pope.

QUEBEC TERMINAL EXPROPRIATION.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Before the orders of the day are called, I should like to draw the attention of the hon. leader of the House to an urgent matter. The other day he put upon the Table a report about some properties in Quebec that had been expropriated by the government and not paid for. The last letter in the report, from Mr. Leonard, the new chairman of the commission, is dated 25th January, and states that he has communicated with Mr. Doucet about the payment for the properties, and that he will endeavour to make arrangements. Since then nothing has been done, and we have learned nothing about it. Mr. Doucet says he knows nothing about it. I would be very glad if my hon. friend would ask the chairman of the commission if they are going to take these properties. If so they should pay for them; if not they should restore the properties so that we can do something with them, because my hon. friend can easily understand that it is now nearing the 1st of May, and these properties must be re-let or something done with them, so I hope we will have some final information soon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will call the attention of the department to the observations of my hon. friend, and endeavour to secure the further information which he wants.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (76) An Act to amend the National Tarnscontinental Railway Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (103) An Act to amend the Government Works Tolls Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (97) An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (111) An Act to authorize the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (J) An Act respecting the Methodist Church.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 104) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

He said: The object of this Bill is to amend the Civil Service Act, to authorize the government to appoint a third commissioner. The Civil Service Commission is now made up of two members, and very frequently these two members of the commission do not see eye to eye upon subjects which come up for their discussion and attention; hence very awkward situations have arisen in determining such subjects as those upon which they are not able to agree. It is proposed to appoint a third member to the commission. It does not necessarily follow that the third member will be appointed at once. Section 2 of the Act provides that the Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council. I apprehend that my hon. friend from Halifax, who criticised the government yesterday for doing away with commissioners and reducing a commission to one, will support this Bill, inasmuch as we are increasing the number of the commissioners. I, therefore, move the second reading of the Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—On the contrary, I think that, as the government considered it necessary in the interests of economy, to reduce four commissioners to one, the obvious inference is that this Bill might attain every object that the hon. gentleman desires, by reducing the two present commissioners to one. That would be genuine economy, and that would remove all difficulty of deadlock, unless the party happened to be one of those dual personalities, Jekyll and Hyde fashion, who occasionally quarrel with each other. I should like to know from the hon. gentleman, in the first place, what ground there is for creating these three commissioners. Have the present commissioners found that they are unable to overtake the work? Because, if so, the need for a third commissioner must have arisen very recently. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to state whether the commissioners have represented to the government that they cannot do the work that has been assigned to them?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand, as I have already said, that owing to there being only two commissioners, very awkward situations have arisen where the two commissioners could not see eye to eye, and consequently there is no determining factor as to which view should prevail.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That does not quite answer my question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is my right hon. friend's question?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What I want to know is, have the commissioners complained that they were unable to overtake the work assigned to them?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not prepared to say it has been owing to their not being able to do the work that is thrown upon their shoulders, but I might say to my right hon. friend that the government has in contemplation the extension, as expeditiously as possible, of the Civil Service Act to the outside service. The government propose taking up that question at a very early day, and, of course, dealing with a question of so comprehensive a character as that would entail greater labours on the commission than they at present have to assume; and if the embarrassing situation has arisen between the two commissioners which I have already pointed out, it is to be presumed safely that even greater difficulties will arise when they come to deal with so large a question as that of including within the Civil Service Act the outside service of Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman remarked that they had come to a deadlock very frequently.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not say very frequently; there have been occasions.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Well, my hon. friend may be better informed about it than I am. Once or twice some difficulty has occurred. If they have come very frequently into collision it has been very lately. Another thing I notice here is that the government take power to appoint a chairman. That means, I presume, that they will supersede the gentleman who is at present virtually the head of the commission, Professor Shortt, who has done his work well.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not necessarily. It would not necessarily follow that the new man would be the chairman.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The hon. gentleman says he is not going to appoint a commissioner immediately; that means, I take it for granted, that the aforesaid commissioner occupies a seat in the other chamber, in all probability, and it may not be convenient just yet to vacate that seat.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware that that is the situation.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —You guess it is likely.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have not even heard it intimated.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —We can discuss this better in Committee of the Whole. I think my hon. friend ought to be able to inform us as to whether there is really at this present moment any need for a third commissioner. I think the two are amply able to do all the work thrown upon them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have not any doubt as to their ability to do it, the difficulty is as to whether the present machinery of the Act is such as to permit it being done without friction. However, before we go into committee I shall be very glad to make that inquiry and give further information to my right hon. friend.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —And, if the commissioners have asked for assistance?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is just this one point to which I should like to direct the attention of the hon. the leader of the government, before the Bill is read the second time; that is, as to the choice of the third commissioner, the kind of man he should be. I think the civil service, perhaps, have had some reason to complain that the gentlemen who have been acting as commissioners, while in every way qualified, have not had actual experience in the civil service. If the government wish to make this commission more satisfactory to the service, great care should be taken when selecting the third commissioner and some gentleman should be appointed who can be regarded as thoroughly understanding the manner in which the public business is transacted, and who is perfectly familiar with the work of the inside civil service.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I would make one suggestion to my hon. friend. I think, if the third commissioner should be a sine qua non, that he should be thoroughly competent to speak and read in both languages.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not know if my hon. friends on the other side of the government will be able to select a man of such undoubted superiority as to fit him for the chairmanship of this commission. It seems to me that the two officials who now form that commission deserve the encomiums of both Chambers. They have given satisfaction and their standing in the community is such as to command the confidence of the people. Unless the government select a superior to these two gentlemen, I am quite sure they would rather select as chairman one of these two gentlemen, because it would not do to show any tendency to partisanship in a commission which was appointed to eradicate partisanship from the civil service.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—My hon. friend has just said that the third man should be familiar with both languages. There is no doubt that in this country, not only for the civil service, but for every public service, a man, in order to be qualified completely, must know both languages. If a man is going to deal with all public services in Ottawa, and if he is going to examine the papers of those who make application to enter the civil service, he ought to be competent to write and speak both languages. Especially is this true of heads of departments. If an applicant is a French Canadian and wishes to write in French, the commissioner should be in a position to understand him and to answer him in French.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The position of the Civil Service Commission is one of very great importance and entails heavy work and responsibility. It was very timely that such an institution should be created to relieve the ministers of the very unpleasant task of seeing to the appointments of civil servants. The present incumbents have performed that very delicate duty to the satisfaction, if not of everybody, at least of the general public, and of both parties. I have the pleasure of knowing both commissioners; they are able men, and the selection was a good one. I would rather have one than two, but I would rather have three than either one or two commissioners, because of the magnitude of the work to be performed, and which is soon to be increased. These gentlemen have to be at their offices early in the morning and must remain there until late at night. They have frequently to be interviewed. Patronage is of great importance to the applicants, and is also of importance to both sides of the House. I believe that great care should be taken in the selection of the third commissioner, and that he should be a competent man. If, in order to find a competent man, the other House, or even this House, should be ransacked, I would have no objection. I do not believe the government contemplate appointing a commissioner until the outside service is brought under the jurisdiction of the commissioners, and then they will appoint the third man. I am sure they will take notice of what the leader of the opposition has said, that for such a position, where the applicants come from all parts of the country, that commissioner should be conversant, not only with the requirements of the civil service, but also with the two official languages and should be a man of very high standing and knowledge.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (Q 2) An Act to incorporate The Interprovincial Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Choquette.

Bill (R 2) An Act to incorporate the Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 7, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (U 2) An Act for the relief of Alvena Bell Leaitch.—Hon. Mr. Baird.

RIGHTS OF THE MINORITY IN KEEWATIN.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to direct the attention of the leader of the Senate to an interview published in 'Le Devoir' a Montreal paper, on Tuesday last. The interview affects important and grave public and political questions—important from the fact that it comes from the Speaker of this Senate, and grave because of the declarations therein made. The interview occupies nearly the whole of the front page of 'Le Devoir.' It is in French, and I will hand it to the reporter so that it will appear on the 'Debates.' It distinctly states that it emanates from his honour the Speaker, and makes declarations diametrically opposed to the policy of the present government on the school question, and the annexation of Keewatin to Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—What does it say?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is as follows:

LES DROITS DE LA MINORITE DU KEEWATIN.

Une déclaration expicite de l'hon. Philippe Landry, président du Sénat.

Il affirme sa "croyance inébranlable" aux "droits imprescriptibles" de la minorité.

A l'heure ou se discutent les droits scolaires de la minorité du Keewatin, il nous a paru particulièrement intéressant de connaître l'opinion de l'honorable M. Philippe Landry, président du Sénat, qui a depuis de longues années fait une étude spéciale des questions scolaires de l'Ouest. On verra que, pour M. le Président du Sénat les droits de la minorité sont au-dessus de toute discussion.

Voici, aussi fidèlement que possible, la conversation qui a eu lieu, entre notre représentant et l'honorable M. Landry:—

Le Journaliste.—Avez-vous vu la "Patrie" du 29 du mois dernier et celle du 2 du présent mois, au sujet de la situation, et qu'avez-vous à dire?

L'hon. M. Landry.—D'après ces doux articles, la députation à Ottawa serait divisée en trois camps, ou plutôt, comme dit le journal, partagée sur trois théories, que l'on peut en définitive réduire à deux.

1o.—Les députés qui croient que la population du Keewatin a des droits réels.

2o.—Ceux qui s'imaginent qu'il n'y a pour elle aucun droit quelconque.

Je n'ai pas l'intention de traiter cette question bien au long; mais je ne puis m'empêcher de vous dire sur quoi je fonde ma croyance inébranlable que la population du territoire que l'on veut annxer a des droits imprescriptibles.

Le Journaliste.—Comment l'établissez-vous?

L'hon. M. Landry.—Voici: Tous les territoires du Nord-Ouest sont régis par une loi fédérale, que chacun peut trouver aujourd'hui dans les statuts revisés de 1906, chapitre 62. Ce chapitre commence par définir ce que l'on doit entendre par territoires du Nord-Ouest, et voici textuellement la définition que la loi donne:—

2.—En la présente loi, à moins que le contexte n'exige une interprétation différente.

(a) "Territoires" signifie les territoires du Nord-Ouest qui comprennent les territoires antérieurement connus sous le nom de la Terre du Rupert, et le territoire du Nord-Ouest,—sauf les parties de ce territoire qui forment les provinces du Manitoba, de la Saskatchewan et d'Alberta, et le territoire du Yukon,—ainsi que tous les territoires et possessions britanniques de l'Amérique du Nord, et toutes les îles qui y touchent, excepté Terreneuve et ses dépendances.

Par cette clause, il est évident que le Keewatin tombe dans la définition ci-dessus, et fait partie des possessions britanniques de l'Amérique du Nord, sans en être expressément excepté par l'énumération que contient la clause elle-même des parties de ces possessions qui ne tombent pas sous l'acte des territoires. C'est la loi aujourd'hui, elle fait partie des Statuts revisés, et ces Statuts ont été mis en force par proclamation en date du 21 janvier 1907, fixant leur mise en vigeur au 31 janvier du même mois.

Donc, depuis le 31 janvier 1907 au moins, le Keewatin appartient aux territoires du Nord-Ouest. Or, au 31 janvier 1907, la loi disait dans la clause 10 du Chapitre 62 de ces même statuts revisés, que, dans les territoires du Nord-Ouest, par conséquent dans le Keewatin, comme dans le reste des territoires:—

Le Commissaire en conseil, s'il est autorisé à rendre des ordonnances concernant l'instruction publique rend toutes les ordonnances à ce sujet; mais, dans les lois et ordonnances concernant l'instruction publique, il doit toujours être décrété qu'une majorité des contribuables d'un district ou d'une partie des territoires ou d'une partie quelconque moindre ou sub-division de ce district ou de cette partie, sous quelque nom qu'elle soit désignée, peut y établir les écoles qu'elle juge à propos, et imposer et percevoir les contributions ou taxes nécessaires à cet effet; et, aussi que la minorité des contribuables du district ou de la subdivision, qu'elle soit protestante ou catholique, peut y établir des écoles séparées, et qu'en ce cas les contribuables qui établissent ces écoles protestantes ou catholiques séparées ne sont assujettis au paiement que des contributions ou taxes qu'ils s'imposent eux-mêmes à cet égard.

Telle est la loi qui régit aujourd'hui les territoires du Nord-Ouest (le Keewatin compris).

Elle est claire, et elle établit péremptoirement que la majorité dans un arrondissement scolaire quelconque a le droit d'avoir les écoles qu'il lui plaît, confessionnelles ou neutres, et que la minorité a également le droit d'avoir des écoles séparées, c'est-à-dire, différentes de celles de la majorité, évidemment des écoles au goût de la minorité. Pour prétendre aujourd'hui que les catholiques du Keewatin n'ont pas de droits suivant la loi, il faudrait prouver que les Statuts revisés du Canada de 1906 ne contiennent pas la loi du pays, que le chapitre 62 de ces statuts ne vaut rien, que la clause 2 de ce chapitre n'existe pas; et je défie qui que ce soit d'établir ou de tenter d'établir que les catholiques n'ont aucun droit, avant qu'il ait pu mettre de côté la clause, le chapitre et les Statuts revisés que je viens de mentioner.

Le Journaliste.—Mais on prétend que l'acte des territoires de 1905 chapitre 27, 4-5 Edouard VII, mettait le Keewatin au nombre des exceptions, comme le Manitoba, la Saskatchewan et l'Alberta.

L'hon. M. Landry.—Cela est possible; mais je dois vous faire remarquer que cet acte, chapitre 27, 4-5 Edouard VII, a été sanctionné le 20 juillet 1905. Or, le 24 juillet, c'est-à-dire quatre jours plus tard, le gouverneur en conseil lançant une proclamation qui se trouve dans la Gazette du Canada, numéro du 19 août 1905, qui déclare que le Keewatin, depuis et après le 1er septembre 1905, formerait partie des territoires du Nord Ouest; et lorsque l'année suivante, en 1906, a eu lieu la révision des Statuts revisés du Canada, on a dû nécessairement prendre en considération cette proclamation; et la consolidation des statuts a fait disparaître l'ancienne législation pour adopter la nouvelle. C'est ainsi que les Statuts revisés, dans la table de concordance qui en fait partie (voir Vol. 4. appendice 2, page 81) nous montre que la clause 3 du chapitre 27, 4-5 Edouard VII. est entièrement absorbée par le chapitre 62, clause 2.

On trouve une preuve additionnelle de la disparition de cet acte des territoires, 1905, chapitre 27 dans l'appendice 1, des mêmes Statuts revisés, page 39, qui contient l'historique de cette législation et nous dit que l'acte a été consolidé, c'est-à-dire, fondu dans le volume des Statuts revisés.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I hope that the hon. leader of the Senate will give this matter his attention, and I should like to know if his government intend to take action on it. I have every assurance that the interview is correct. At all events, the Speaker is here and can state whether it is true or not. It is headed 'the rights of the minority in Keewatin; important declarations by Hon. Senator Landry in regard to the matter.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to know what answer my hon. friend desires from me?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am asking whether, when the government becomes acquainted with this interview, they propose to take any action.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Who is right on this question, the government or the Speaker?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The Speaker.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The Speaker should know his business.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not think he does.

ACCESS TO PORTS ON HUDSON BAY.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I wish to call the attention of the leader of the House to an article which appeared in the 'Citizen' of this morning, being a telegram from Regina, where the legislature is sitting. It reads as follows:

SASKATCHEWAN ASKS USE OF PORTS ON HUDSON BAY, AS ITS RIGHT.

Regina, Sask., March 6.—In the legislature this evening acting Premier Calder gave notice that he would on Friday introduce the following resolution:—

That whereas on this day the following telegram was despatched to the Right Hon. R. L. Borden, Premier of Canada, namely:

Regina, March 6.

To Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden,
Premier of Canada, Ottawa, Ont.

The government of Saskatchewan understands that legislation now before parliament contains provision whereby the province of Ontario will have the rights to secure access to Ports Nelson and Churchill on Hudson bay. On behalf of the people of Saskatchewan we deem it our duty to again call your attention to the claims of this province as set forth in the memorial now in your hands. We desire to protest in the strongest manner possible against the provisions of the Bill now before parliament which ignores the just claims of Saskatchewan for access to the bay. We wish further to point out that if there is a single valid reason why the province of Ontario should be given access to the ports mentioned, there are many reasons which are made apparent in the memorial referred to why Saskatchewan should have its claims recognized.

In view of the fact that you did not grant the request of the government of Saskatchewan to be represented at the conferences held with the governments of Manitoba and Ontario we desire to take this means, the only course open to us at present, to notify the government of Canada on behalf of our people that if the legislation now before parliament regarding an extension of the boundaries of Manitoba and Ontario become law without proper provision being made therein for a recognition, not of the claims, but of the rights of this province, the citizens of Saskatchewan for all time to come will have just cause to complain of the treatment received by them. In dealing with the matter referred to our people have the right to hope and expect that your government will be guided by the principles of justice and equality, thereby ensuring that the various provinces in the confederation of Canada will have no cause to complain of unfair treatment.

And whereas it is desirable that this House should place itself on record as approving the principles and sentiments expressed in the said telegram.

Therefore, be it resolved that in the opinion of this House the said telegram expresses the views of the people of Saskatchewan respecting the matter dealt with therein.

(Signed) J. A. CALDER,
Acting Premier of Saskatchewan.

I would like to ask the hon. leader of the House if the government has received this telegram and the memorial, if so, what action do they propose to take thereon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman has upon the order paper for to-morrow a series of questions, practically including everything embodied in the telegram which he has just read. I hope to have the answers to this question to-morrow, and at the same time will make allusion to the telegram which is now in my hon. friend's possession.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (V 2) An Act for the relief or Isabella Helen Horncastle.—Hon. Mr. Roche

THIRD READING.

Bill (X) An Act to incorporate The Canadian Public Health Association.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Second reading of Bill (77) An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I presume my right hon. friend would desire this matter to stand until the information for which he asked yesterday is forthcoming.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I, in that connection, ask what is the purport of the notice of motion given? It is somewhat ambiguous. My right hon. friend makes this inquiry:

> That he will inquire of the government what are the amounts of the local and municipal taxes levied in the several provinces during the year 1911, or to such other dates as they can procure?

Do I understand this to be the municipal taxes levied by each municipality upon the local property within the boundaries of the municipality?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Or taxes imposed by the province?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Also the taxes imposed by the province; I meant them to gather both.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course any taxes that may be imposed by the province we undoubtedly could get by telegraphing the provinces; but there is very little probability of our being able to get the information touching the taxes imposed by municipalities, except in any one province, or in all the provinces, where there may be some machinery by which returns of those amounts are made by the municipalities to the provincial authorities.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —They have them in most of the provinces. They have very complete statements in Ontario, and I believe in Manitoba, and British Columbia. I am not sure about Quebec: but they are obtainable. They may not be in existence for the year 1911, and therefore I asked for such information as they had.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the information is obtainable from the provinces, I presume the government could secure that information, but it would be utterly impossible to obtain it from the municipality, as my right hon. friend can understand.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It is only in provinces such as Ontario, where they possess the returns, that I would desire to get them. I suppose we must trust to faith in the other cases; but I know, because I have more than once inspected them, that in the province of Ontario very full returns of the kind I ask for are given, covering all the taxes by the municipalities; and I understand that the same thing is the case largely in the northwest, especially in the province of Manitoba, and I believe in British Columbia. As for the eastern provinces, I am not so sure, but that, of course, the hon. gentleman could ascertain. I assumed that the government, for their own information, would have obtained these figures before they brought down this particular measure. Of course, I can only ask for such information as they can get, and if my hon. friend will communicate with the treasurers of the several provinces, that is all I can expect him to do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We shall exhaust all reasonable means to get the information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the province of Ontario the assessment upon the railways might differ every year, because the assessors vary in their valuation of properties from year to year, and the rate of taxation is levied upon their assessment.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Quite true; but I only asked for the latest information that can be got.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fancy the better way to get that, so far as Ontario is concerned, would be to send to every municipality, and they would be able to state the amount of property assessed, and the value put upon it, and the rate of taxation.

The Motion was agreed to.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (88) An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission. He said: It is almost unnecessary for me to make any observations on this measure, as it has been discussed at such length, both in the press and in the other House, and has, in other ways, come under our attention. I shall, therefore, not occupy your time in pointing out the purport of the Bill, except to say that the object is to appoint a commission of three competent persons to make all due inquiry into matters touching the tariff. The specific duties of the commission are clearly set out in clause 4 of the Bill, so that hon. gentlemen may, by a perusal of that clause, appreciate the scope of the measure. Clause 4 reads as follows:

> 4. In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the commission shall, under the direction of the minister, make inquiry as to—
> (a) the price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use or consumption;
> (b) the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere;
> (c) the cost of transportation from the place of production to the place of use or consumption, whether in Canada or elsewhere;
> (d) the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour in Canada and elsewhere.
> (e) the prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere;
> (f) all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada;
> (g) generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries.

The necessity for a tariff in this country is a question that will not admit of any two opinions. We are a new country, entering upon very large schemes of development, covering practically a continent in geographical extent, and the demands made from the various sections of Canada for the carrying out of public works, and all the other requirements of a rapidly developing country, are such as to make it absolutely necessary that Canada should be possessed of a very substantial revenue. That proposition will admit of no controversy. This revenue can only be obtained through a tariff. No matter to what extent there may be a sentiment in the community in favour of free trade, or revenue tariff, yet I fancy that no hon. gentleman will be sufficiently optimistic to fancy that the revenues necessary for the purposes of Canada can be raised by any other system or method than a tariff. Whether you call it a revenue or protective tariff, of course, affords a very large field for discussion and difference of opinion. Suffice it to say that if Canada ever passed through a stage when the opinions, or the sympathies of the dominant governing party were in favour of free trade and a reduction of the tariff which we now have, it would have been the period during which my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House were in power. They came into office in 1896, and the expressed sentiment of the Liberal party at that time seemed to be in favour of a very substantial reduction of the tariff and the adoption of a free trade fiscal system, if it were possible at all to develop the fiscal system of the country along those lines; but, notwithstanding the fact that the Liberal party administered the public affairs of this country during fifteen years, from 1896 to 1911, they found it utterly impossible to give practical effect to the professions of sympathy with free trade or revenue tariff, which they had so freely indulged in before their accession to office. Therefore, we have to take it for granted that no more favourable conditions could present themselves to the people of Canada for the adoption of such a fiscal system, than those which prevailed when the Liberal party were in office. Both political parties stand upon the common platform that a tariff is absolutely necessary for the public requirements of Canada, the requirements of revenue, the requirements for the building up of the industrial life of the country, and for the other purposes of government and administration incident thereto.

Though with some of the Liberal party there may be no sympathy with it, yet it is to be generally concluded that we have to make provision for the retention of our tariff walls. The question arises as to how this can be done most efficiently, with the greatest possible justice to the greatest number of the public, and yet consistent with the promotion of all the public interests of the country. There has been, for a great number of years, a very strong demand, both expressed and otherwise, that the tariff should be taken so far as possible out of politics, and I think every hon. gentleman in this House will concede the wisdom of that proposition, so far as it can be carried out.

Hon. Mr. GILLMOR—Are you going to do it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not prepared to say that the tariff can be wholly taken out of politics. I do not think it can, but steps may be taken to remove, as far as possible, from political pressure the framing of the tariff, or the amendments that may be made from time to time to the tariff, so that we may have a tariff of the most scientific nature that we can reach. I need not point out to the hon. gentleman that a tariff is very largely evolved from the different sources of pressure that are brought to bear upon the government in making that tariff, no matter what that tariff may be, whether high or low.

Hon. Mr. GILLMOR—The commission does not propose taking the tariff down I understand?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is desirable to eliminate as far as we possibly can, in the building up of our tariff, all the sympathetic pressure that can be brought to bear upon the framing of tariffs. It is very desirable that the tariff should be made in the public interest, with the view of promoting the best interests of the public, due regard being had to all the necessary interests that are involved therein, and to remove it, as far as we possibly can—which I say cannot be done altogether—from the sphere of political influence. Now, I need not say to hon. gentlemen that, for the purpose of intelligently making a tariff, it is necessary to secure that information from those reliable sources, from which alone we can promulgate a proper tariff. This can only be done through human agencies, and the closer we can approximate such agencies to those of a disinterested character, the more favourable that tariff will be in the public interest and the more eliminated will be political influences which are bound to creep in, and have considerable to do with its promulgation. Now, it is proposed, instead of the government making inquiries into all these facts, which must be elicited for the purpose of shaping a tariff, that these facts shall be ascertained by a commission that will be removed from the sphere of political influence, just to the same extent as the other commissions that are expected to carry out, or administer such public trusts as may be assigned to them by statute. It is proposed that three commissioners shall be appointed. The government of the day must necessarily be responsible for the character of the men so to be appointed. It will be manifestly in the interest of the government of the day to appoint the most efficient and competent men that can be secured for that purpose. I think I am safe in saying that the government of the day does not profit by reason of being able to hold within its hand the power of patronage, to assist its friends, and to be coerced or induced, as the case may be, to grant these favours which from time to time are sought from the dominant party governing the affairs of the country for the time being. This commission will have the scope assigned to it under this Act. Hon. gentlemen who have perused the contents of the Bill I think will agree with me that it is as comprehensive as it can be fairly made, and covers a scope of inquiry which, if properly exercised, will go far towards placing the government in possession of facts by which a more scientific tariff may be framed. It will certainly be more satisfactory to the public than the experimenting through which we have passed in the building up of our tariffs. The government of the day will be responsible for the character of the men who make this inquiry, and it will be manifestly to their advantage that that inquiry be made in as disinterested a way as it is possible to make it; that it shall be as free from political pressure and political influence as it is possible for the commissioners to conduct their inquiry into the various spheres of investigation outlined in the Act. So far as public security and publicity can be given, that has been provided for; the reports of the commission will be brought down from time to time and placed on the Table of parliament. There is nothing of a concealed nature, except these confidential investigations which are provided for in the Bill and as to which, hon. gentlemen I think will agree that that confidence should be maintained.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —We are indebted to my hon. friend for the candour with which he has presented this measure, in two or three respects. Practically speaking he has advised us that this is intended to help to build the tariff wall a little higher and as far as may be—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my right hon. friend pardon me just at this moment. In using the word build up the tariff, I had no reference to increasing the height of the tariff.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Nor to diminishing it, I swear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think they can, just as much as building it up.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am not going to waste words on the question as to whether the tariff can be taken out of politics or not. I regard the idea of taking the tariff out of politics as the veriest clap-trap that ever was talked of by any utterly ignorant person, in parliament or out of it. The tariff is in politics, and will be in politics, and stay in politics, so long as there is a tariff, and will be a burning question therein so long as Canada is Canada. Of that I have no doubt. As to the measure itself, I may say that I would be in favour of creating such a bureau as might be necessary, in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, or the other officers charged with the construction of the tariff, for obtaining information for them, and that it should be permanent, as for example the Department of Insurance is for the purpose of investigating these matters.

But this question of creating a Tariff Commission itself appears to me to be at once unnecessary and mischievous. I can regard this as in no respect anything else than the interposing of a screen between the proper responsible parties, the ministers, and the public at large. I have not the slightest faith whatever in the gentlemen who are going to be appointed being of any service for any other purpose than as a screen. I have no doubt whatever that they will be, as to my knowledge former tariff experts and commissioners were, the agents and tools of the manufacturers of this country, to whom, as my hon. friend and everybody in this House knows right well, the present government owes their existence, and to whom they are bound, I suppose, to pay obedience and tribute. That is what the Tariff Commission will be and nothing else. I entirely agree with my hon. friend that we are going to have tariffs for a long time to come, in all probability for more than the lifetime of anybody whom I now address That is perfectly true. I also entirely agree with him that these tariffs will require a great deal of consideration and care. I cannot agree with him in what he did not so much assert as insinuate, if you will pardon me for saying so, that the Liberal party had made no progress at all towards a freer tariff than that which they found in existence. I may remind him that the measure which we introduced in 1897, specifically referring to manufactures imported from Great Britain, had a very powerful effect in reducing the total amount of taxation levied under the tariff. I noted in the last return that out of $280,000,000 worth, or thereabouts, of manufactured goods paying duties, $82,000,000 came in under what is knwon as the preferential tariff, and about $12,000,000 under special treaty, and that by no means represents (although it shows a large reduction) the real total effect of that tariff, because it must have been obvious to my hon. friend, and everybody who gives the matter consideration, that those articles which are manufactured in Great Britain and sold in our market, would necessarily displace any manufactured goods coming from other countries, unless they were reduced to the same price at which the British manufacturer would sell them. I do not think the British manufacturer, for a good many years, took at all the advantage that he might have taken of the preference we granted Britain, and I have no hesitation in saying that, if anything like a similar preference had been granted to United States or German manufacturers, very little British goods would be sold in Canada. As to whether the late government went far enough, that is a matter of opinion. I am not going to raise or discuss that point now. We are no longer responsible for the administration of the finances, but I may remind my hon. friend that we went out in an attempt to reduce the tariff on a considerable variety of articles. It was perfectly true, and no man is better aware of it than myself, that a tariff requires careful consideration, but I beg to tell my hon. friend that a revenue tariff is not at all necessarily of a very complicated character. Once you have settled certain broad principles, a revenue tariff requires very little more than a reasonable amount of intelligence and consideration.

Our revenue tariffs when we entered confederation under Sir John Macdonald were not at all of a complicated character, and did not require any very great or elaborate preparation. I grant, on the other hand, that when you attempt to draft a protective tariff you engage in a totally different business. Why, hon. gentlemen, in the case of a protective tariff your first business, almost of necessity, results in this—that whenever you attempt to help one man under a protective tariff you hurt another, and perhaps twenty others, as I have very frequently seen.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What is one man's finished product is, almost of necessity, the raw material in other trades. It is a perfectly endless chain. Over and over again, when I have sat on Tariff Commissions, it has been demonstrated, and demonstrated with perfect truth, that if we altered one apparently trifling item it would extend through a great number of other articles in the tariff, and that to do justice to them, all these must be altered to correspond. I need not say usually altered for the purpose of adding very considerably to the duty. Now, there are one or two principles which I am afraid have been very much lost sight of by a great many people, both inside and outside of parliament. One fundamental principle which I have always advocated and felt is this, that you cannot by any possibility increase the wealth of a country collectively by imposing taxes; but I tell you what you can do, you can enormously alter the distribution of that wealth and you can give ten and twenty times as much to one man as to another under your protective tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I may tell my hon. friend this—and I do not speak either lightly or unadvisedly—that you will just as easily succeed in making ropes out of the sea sand, as in drawing a just protective tariff. I do not think that the thing is possible, or ever could be possible. How are you going at one and the same time to protect the producer and the manufacturer, and compensate the consumers? There is no treasury in the world that can stand it. You may delude the consumer to a certain extent by giving them a mock protection, as has been done in our tariffs time and time again, but you certainly cannot compensate them for the additional taxation inflicted upon them. I say the thing is a contradiction in terms. You cannot by any possibility reconcile justice and protection together; they are natural enemies, and always will be. It may come to pass in the dim and distant future that the lion shall lie down with the lamb, but there is no such assurance as regards wolves and lambs, and I am perfectly certain of one thing—that the reason why wolves were were not mentioned, is because they will be exterminated long before the millenium, particularly if they appear in sheeps' clothing in the guise of tariff commissioners. I tell my hon. friend that the attempt to construct a just or fair protective tariff is one that Solomon would have despaired of.

The thing cannot be done; it never has been done; I don't believe it ever will be done. All that can be done is to devise plausible explanations for the purpose of deluding the public and persuading them that they are not really being hurt as much as appears on the face of it by the tariff. The whole object and end of this tariff commission will be simply to provide excuses. They will not be there for the public interest. They will not be there for any other purpose than acting as a screen and shield between the government and responsibility. In this matter of tariff the utmost publicity is needed. To a certain extent I believe the amendments introduced by the opposition have given some sort of publicity, though not as much as is necessary. But I tell the House that the utmost publicity that can be given by these commissioners, or any commissioners, will afford but a poor defence. The men on the one side who come applying for aid and assistance in subsidies from the government—because that is what it amounts to—of necessity have a very strong personal interest, and will make the most of their case; they will be constantly beseeching these commissioners, but the ordinary consumer is nowhere. He is not represented, he is not going to be represented, he will have no chance of being represented. His only possible hope is that the government of the day, who are responsible in the long run for these matters, may perhaps take his case occasionally into consideration, particularly if it turns out that the consumers have a reasonable number of members in both Houses to back them, although I am afraid that this commission will greatly interfere with their doing so. I have my doubts whether this Bill can be amended at all so as to make it really useful, but as it is a government measure, it may possibly be well to let it go to the committee and we will try what can be done. I may tell my hon. friend that our experience, when we sat on tariff commissions, was simply this: we found that although very great publicity was given to our proceedings, and although we did our best to have all parties represented, we found that the representatives of the special interests were always in evidence and had a better chance of making their views heard, while the general consumer had very little opportunity. I may tell him further that two things were brought out very clearly; in a great many cases I am bound to say that they proved tolerably clearly that the manufactures in which they were engaged were so ill-suited to the condition of things in Canada, that they could not be profitably carried on without a large state subsidy in the shape of a heavy protective duty. That, they did demonstrate on a great many occasions. But, hon. gentlemen, there they stopped, and they failed entirely—and I am afraid that the parties who come before this commission will fail entirely, to show that the state was likely to receive anything like adequate benefit from the subsidy granted. On that point they fell down altogether, and the nearest approach they made to anything like a philanthropic view of the case was a suggestion, which they were free enough to make, that if a certain additional taxation was granted to them a certain additional taxation must be granted to a considerable number of other parties, whom they sometimes specified and sometimes did not. On that point I admit that they sometimes did show a little consideration. For the general consumer they showed none. For the general consumer they had no sort of sympathy or concern. All they wanted was simply to get the advantage for their own particular selves, and for their own particular interests, and that would be the case with this commission. As I have said, it is a matter of some detail. It may be possible so to amend the Bill, when we have it before us in committee, that we may, to a certain extent, mitigate the dangers that I foresee are likely to arise from it, and perhaps more fully ensure a proper amount of publicity. There is one point on which I may say to my hon. friend that I think he is decidedly in error, and that the government are decidedly in error; I think they have no right whatever to attempt to impose on the community a commission of this kind, except holding office as the commissioners for constructing the Transcontinental railway did, during pleasure. I object entirely to this idea of putting men for a long period of years practically outside the jurisdiction of the government or parliament. That point, I think, ought decidedly to be amended. There are other matters with respect to the instructions given them, and the mode in which they report, on which, at a later stage, I shall have something to say. As the Bill has come up to us from the lower House, however, I shall reserve to myself perfect liberty of action at a future time, I do not object to it going to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not altogether enamoured of the appointment of this commission; but while I say that, for some reasons that have been advanced by the right hon. gentleman who has addressed the House, I am not in a position to allow the statements made by the right hon. gentleman to go without at least some reply. That the tariff question can ever be taken out of politics, I look upon as a totally absurd proposition. To my mind it is one of the highest branches of politics, using that word in its true sense, and giving the word its proper meaning. When I say that, I do not mean party politics, but a system of raising revenue which, in all countries, partakes to a greater or less extent of what we may call the politics of the country. Apart from that, I cannot forget that during the late contest in September, the government of to-day made positive promises over and over again to the people, more particularly in those portions of the country where manufactures existed to a larger extent than others, that a tariff commission would be appointed. But I must be permitted to differ entirely from the right hon. gentleman, when he says that that tariff commission is to be considered as a tool of the manufacturers. The object of the government in view in the appointment of this commission, as I understand it, is simply to make inquiries, as set forth in the Bill itself, to ascertain in what way an equitable tariff can be prepared. If that should be done, I take it for granted it can be a little better done by a special commission whose duty is confined to inquiring into matters brought before them. If in that inquiry those who are engaged in manufacturing industries take more care and more interest in bringing under the notice of the commissioners, the particular state of the trade of the country, how it will affect the industries of the country, that is something which they would be perfectly free to do; and those who are termed the consumers should take precisely the same care. The right hon. gentleman who has just spoken, has referred to the policy of the late government, and has claimed that the adoption of a preferential tariff was a part fulfilment of their promise to adopt free trade. That preferential tariff was inaugurated by first raising the duties upon a large number of imported articles; some from 25 to 30 and 53 per cent. It is true that a provision was made that, after a certain length of time, that duty should be reduced to the extent of 12½ per cent; but any one who has studied that tariff and made a calculation must know that the increase of the tariff, a lowering of the duty by 12½ per cent, made it still higher than the original tariff which had been adopted by the Conservative government and was upon the statute-book. It is true, also, that after the expiration of the second year, it was to be reduced 25 per cent; but even with that reduction the duty upon imported articles was still higher than under the original tariff; and not until the 33⅓ per cent preference was adopted, was the duty brought down one or two, and in a single case, three, per cent lower than it was in the Conservative tariff. Those are points to which I have given a good deal of attention, having had something to do with the adoption, and if I may say so, the making of tariffs; so that all this boasting about the reduction of the tariff under the preferential system, amounts to very, very little indeed.

Apart from the preference, the increase made when the tariff was first adopted still remained upon imports from all countries other than Great Britain and her dependencies. So that when you take the whole tariff and consider it from its inception until its practical working, the reduction scarcely amounts to more than one or two per cent at most. I admit the duties upon some articles were reduced, but that has been the case ever since the inauguration of the National Policy. Every year the Conservative government, as they found articles were being produced in Canada which could be produced in competition with other countries of the world, reduced the tariff upon such articles greatly. That was going on every year. Some hon. gentlemen laugh at that. I am stating facts, and the tariff of this country will prove the correctness of my statement. I have no sympathy with the assertion that this tariff commission is to be appointed for the purpose of being the tools of the manufacturers. Most people who have watched my political career know very well that I never hesitate to express an opinion in favour of protection. If I thought for a moment that this tariff commission was to be inaugurated for the purpose of assisting in the establishment of industries of this country, even at a higher rate of duty than the one which prevails to-day, it should have my most cordial support. I have never hesitated to express my opinion on the effect which a protective policy has upon the industries of this or any other country. Look at those countries in which protection has prevailed for a number of years, and what do we see? Turning to the United States or Germany or any other country where the protective policy has been in force and carried out to a much greater extent than in Canada, what is the result? Prosperity has followed it. In no country in the world has that fact been established to a greater extent than in Canada. My hon. friend stated that when they came into power they removed the country from a slough of despond and restored prosperity. He forgets the depression of 1878 when soup kitchens were opened all over the country, and when the revenue had sunk to an enormous extent. After the inauguration by the Conservative party of the National Policy the country began to prosper. But we know that in all countries, as the history of the world tells us, after ten or fifteen years of prosperity, there is a reversal of trade, such as was the case in 1875-76, the time to which my hon. friend referred. I have not the slightest doubt that that will be repeated as time rolls on. My hon. friend talks about the taxation imposed upon the consumer. Upon whom would the taxation of the country fall if you had what is termed a revenue tariff? What does it mean? If I understand it a revenue tariff means the imposition of duties upon articles which go into general consumption. If a heavy duty is placed upon tea, it falls upon everybody, the great mass of the people being consumers of that article. My hon. friend says the Conservative party never did anything in that respect. I say that they did. They took the duty off tea and a great many of other articles to which I might call attention. Every one who has studied the tariff knows that that is correct. My hon. friend says it requires no particular amount of brains to inaugurate a tariff for revenue only. I admit it does not require the same amount of thought and consideration as the preparation of a scientific protective tariff demands. My hon. friend gave us the very best illustration of that we have had in Canada. He referred to the time after confederation when the tariff of this country was a general one of fifteen per cent. During the time my hon. friend was in office under the Mackenzie regime, the people asked for an increase of the tariff. Referring to that period in our history of the tariff, Sir Wilfrid, at a banquet in the restaurant a short time ago, said to my right hon. friend who has just addressed the House, that he was willing to sacrifice his own individual opinion on the great question of free trade and consent to a tariff of twenty-five per cent.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —No such statement was ever made. It is a misapprehension.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am speaking from memory just now, and I accept the hon. gentleman's denial He furnished the best possible evidence that can be given of a revenue tariff not requiring much thought. He does not deny that Canada had adopted a tariff of fifteen per cent after confederation. He does not deny that while he was Finance Minister he raised it. How was it done? It did not require a great deal of brains to raise it all round from fifteen to seventeen and a half per cent, and that is about what was done. There was no question of investigating whether the seventeen and a half per cent would be an excessive tax on one article, and might destroy the industry which produced another article. If the government desired to raise a large amount of revenue, and follow the example of my right hon. friend when he was Finance Minister, all they would have to say would be: 'We will make everything thirty per cent instead of twenty-five per cent.' What is required is a fair and equitable tariff, based upon scientific principles, and that can only be had after a thorough investigation, such an investigation as is indicated in the Bill. That investigation must be as to the cost of an article from the production of the raw material until it is manufactured. Take iron as an illustration. It requires considerable study to decide what duty should be adopted. You must first consider the first cost of mining the ore. Then what it cost to transform that into bloom, or billet, and then into bar iron, or any other kind of iron. If you adopt the principle of free trade, or revenue tariff, all you have to do is to say we require a certain amount of money and we will put a certain duty upon all these articles, no matter how they are produced.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—A blind tariff.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you like a moderate protective tariff, a tariff which will increase the industries of the country, and that is what we should have in a new country that is being developed, then that tariff should be properly and scientifically arranged. If we are to judge from the results of the different elections, and from the policy of the late government as carried out from the time they assumed office until the 21st of last September, when they lost office, that principle of moderate protection, or extreme protection, is one which is held by the vast majority of the people of Canada. It will continue to be so until Canada becomes sufficiently wealthy to enable it to act, as England has done in the past, and abandon protection. We are told that in all protective countries tariffs are imposed in order to encourage the different industries, and that it falls heavily on the consumer and that everything is raised in value. If that is true, tell me how it is that in a highly protected country like Germany they are continually pouring their goods into England and competing with the free trade products of that country. We need not go to Germany for an example; go to the United States. Even in Sheffield, we find cutlery from the United States competing with cutlery manufactured under a free trade policy. If we desire to return to the unhappy state this country was in before the adoption of the National Policy, all we have to do is to act upon the principles enunciated today by my right hon. friend, and we shall soon find ourselves again in the soup kitchen position in which we found ourselves in those days.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We have got railroads now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—From an experience of thirteen of fourteen years in administering the customs duties, I am not so enamoured of the proposed commission as others are, but if they confine themselves, as I take it for granted they will, to the duties imposed upon them by the Bill itself, it will enable the government to adopt a tariff which will be equitable in its character. It will justify the government in dealing with each article on its merits. The very fact that the raw material out of which an article is made may change so greatly in price and value as to render it necessary to make changes to keep up an equitable tariff, is an argument in favour of this Bill. I am somewhat of the opinion that the duties which are to be imposed on this commission are those which have been in the past exercised by the minister, although they will be under his control. It has been said that this commission is to regulate the tariff. Nothing of the kind; there is nothing in the Bill to justify any such view. They are simply to inquire and to report to the ministry of the day, and that report will be the basis of the tariff. They can, therefore, be of great assistance to the minister and relieve him of immense responsibility. They will enable him to obtain accurate information as to the cost of any article from the time of its original production until it enters the manufacture of any particular thing. It is true, as the right hon. gentleman has said, that a duty which protected one manufacturer may be a tax on the raw material of another manufacturer; hence the necessity of knowing exactly what it costs to produce the one article as well as the other, so as to protect both manufacturing industries, and the consumer. I have never been able to arrive at the economical conclusions which my right hon. friend has reached. We know that when Cobden desired to remove the duty from breadstuffs in England, one of his principle arguments was that the freight which would be paid for carrying the wheat from the wheat-producing countries to the people of England would be a sufficient protection to the home grower. Cobden at that time little thought that wheat would be carried from Canada to England at 3 or 4 or 5 cents a bushel. It used to cost about two shillings and six pence per quarter. The protection which he anticipated would continue no longer exists, and that applies to almost every article. It requires constant study and thought in order to so regulate the tariff as to make it equitable in character, protecting the industries of the country and at the same time not imposing too great a burden upon the consumer. The elections during the last fifteen or twenty years have proved to us that the people of Canada approve of the principle embodied in what is known as the National Policy, and unless I am very much mistaken it will continue to do so for a long time to come. There are certain sections of the country where free trade in certain articles, I admit, would be of advantage. In adopting a tariff in a country like Canada, where the eastern interests are different from those of the west, there must be a compromise in some way. I do not share, I repeat, the sentiment that has been expressed over and over again that this commission is for the purpose of bolstering up and becoming a tool in the hands of the manufacturers. That is impossible if the government has anything to say in the matter. The commission will not regulate the tariff; they will merely report on the facts which are presented to them as to the cost of producing certain articles. It has been urged that their reports should be published to the world. This proposition is absurd.

That would destroy the benefits which are expected to be derived from the appointment of the commission. The commissioners should not be hampered in the discharge of their duties. If it is found that it has the effect, even indirectly, predicted by those opposing the commission, and which has been so plainly indicated to-day by my right hon. friend in his speech, the country will soon put an end to them, or I am very much mistaken in the good sense and judgment of the people of Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I should like to correct one statement my hon. friend has made; probably he is not as well aware of what was done in 1897 as I am. The average increase on certain articles was two and a half per cent as against a total reduction of thirty-three per cent. If the hon. gentleman wants to know how the thing has worked out, I see in the very last custom returns that on eighty-two million eight hundred and ninety thousand dollars worth of goods imported under the preferential tariff, the duty was only seventeen millions, which is a very small trifle over twenty per cent, while on those imported under the general tariff the duty was nearly thirty per cent.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I am not going to discuss this measure from any partisan standpoint, but from the standpoint of the part of the country from which I come, the western country. It is safe to say that 90 per cent of the people in western Canada are in favour of no tariff at all, and perhaps 10 per cent are in favour of some kind of a tariff. That being the case, when anything is done by way of introducing any new legislation of this kind our people naturally become suspicious, and they are suspicious of this measure that is before us to-day. We know that the only people who have asked for a tariff commission in this country are the members of the Manufacturers' Association. We are quite well aware that in the election recently held, this was made a plank in the platform of the Conservative party, and that they travelled through the country advocating the appointment of a tariff commission. I want to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that there were several other things which they advocated that they are not so anxious to carry out. But people were naturally suspicious from the fact that the assistance which the Conservative party received at the last election that enabled them to carry the country, was given them by the manufacturers of this country. If it had not been for that assistance my hon. friends would not be in the position they occupy at the present time. If they are in the saddle they can thank the manufacturers for it, and, that being the case, we may assume that these gentlemen are prepared now to demand their pound of flesh.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do not assume too much.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We know the facts of the case. The manufacturers have done a great deal to put the present government in power, and they are now in a position to demand that the government deliver the goods.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We know as a matter of fact that the majority of the gentlemen described as manufacturers in this country were going around parading their loyalty last year, and that these gentlemen were too sensible to believe in the clap-trap they talked themselves. They were quite willing to take advantage of the spirit of loyalty to the empire which prevailed in this country, which enabled them to obtain an advantage whereby they would be in a position to feather their own nests. Who has asked for this tariff commission It is stated that this commission will protect the labourer, the artisan, the agriculturist and everybody.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Did the manufacturers ever ask for a tariff commission to be appointed??

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The Manufacturers' Association.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Sure.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—No.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—They claim that they are going to protect the artisan, the labourer, and the agriculturist. How can they protect the labouring man? He has to sell his labour in a free market. We have an immigration policy which brings people from all parts of the earth, and our labouring man competes with a man who is selling in an open market. The only thing you can do for a labourer, or artisan, is to enable him to buy the commodities he has to consume as cheaply as he can possibly purchase them. With reference to the agriculturist, I am quite willing to admit that perhaps in some places in Ontario, and possibly in some isolated districts in Quebec, a few farmers residing close to a manufacturing town may derive some benefit from the so-called home market which the manufacturers talk so much about. The farmer may sell a few carrots, beans or eggs, but the price he receives for the greater portion of the products produced on his farm is fixed abroad, and it makes no difference whether he sells his produce here or outside, he receives the same price. The home market for the agriculturist is simply a myth. I do not think anybody, in this House or out of it, would for a moment claim, by the greatest stretch of the imagination, that there is any such thing as a home market for the people of the west. We have a large surplus which has to be exported. It makes no difference to our people whether their products are consumed in Ontario, Quebec or any other province, the price that they receive for them is fixed by the export price abroad, and they receive no benefit from it. Therefore the home market is simply a myth, and as far as the people of the west are concerned, every time they purchase a dollar's worth of goods they put their hand in their pocket and take out a dollar to pay for the goods, they hand 20 cents to some gentleman in the east, from whom they receive no benefit, and he puts it in his pocket and smiles and tells them how loyal he is. Hon. gentlemen can understand the feeling of our people. They say: 'It is bad enough for you who have control of things in the east to dictate to us where we shall buy the commodities we have to consume, but when it comes to dictating to us where we shall sell the products of our farms, we think it impertinence, and you are going too far.' I want to warn the gentlemen who have control of matters at the present time, and the manufacturers of the country, that they should go mighty slow, because they are straining the cable that is attaching the west to the east to the breaking point, and some day they may hear it snap. I would prefer that nothing of that kind should take place. I believe we have a great federation, and we should all work together to build up a great country, but there must be give and take in this country. The whole thing must not be all on one side. As the tariff is fixed to-day you have everything and we have nothing.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Who fixes the tariff?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Its the same old story of 'You're another.' They say, 'You were in power for fifteen years.' I am not defending the tariff made by our friends. I am quite willing to admit they did make some reduction, but they did not make the reductions I thought they were going to make. If they made a mistake is it a reason why the gentlemen who are now in power should follow in their footsteps? I desire to point out that our people did make some material reduction and tried to make more. The British preference has been referred to. There was some dispute as to the result, but I assume it must have been of great value to the people, because from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the producers of this country—and when I speak of producers I mean agriculturists, the men who are making the country, producing the wealth from the soil, the class of men who have something to gain by this—are asking for an extension of that preference to fifty per cent; but I am afraid they are not going to receive what they are asking for. I have made the statement that the late government did something. I assume some of my hon. friends are aware that they made a great deal of reduction in the tariff. There was, as I remember, something which is known as specific duties in the late tariff, introduced by Mr. Foster, and under these specific duties the poor man was obliged to pay about 33⅓ per cent more than the rich man. They had a duty of one dollar a dozen on cheap shirts, or so much a pound on grey blankets, or on the raw material, and the poor man was paying 33⅓ per cent more than the rich man for the commodities he required, and that was wiped out. They also made reductions in other lines. I do not want to allude to what has been done; I am talking about what is going to be done. We assume you cannot take the tariff out of politics. The tariff commission is to be appointed, composed of three men, for the purpose of securing information. I understand the Minister of Finance is not very well satisfied, and he wishes to obtain information. If he wishes to obtain information, he can take other ways of getting it without appointing three partisans, because after all they will be protectionists. A gentleman very largely in the confidence of the government in another place made the statement that they would have to be protectionists. If you are going to send out three gentlemen the length and breadth of this country to obtain evidence, these gentlemen will select the evidence the government want. We naturally assume that the evidence will be along the lines which are suitable to their own views, and the government of the day. That is the kind of information you are going to base the tariff upon. I assume if the Minister of Finance is going to have any use for these gentlemen at all, he must be prepared——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am satisfied my hon. friend would not wilfully misrepresent the provisions of the Bill with reference to that particular phase with which he has dealt. The Bill makes the widest possible provision that all parties may be heard at the meetings of the commission. It is not the intention that the commissioners should exercise their discretion as to the information that they should collect, but that the widest possible opportunity should be given to the public to give the commission the information they may possess, touching whatever facts may be under investigation. If my hon. friend will look at clause 5 he will find that that provision is made.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I quite understand the point my hon. friend is trying to make, and I quite understand also that if there is such a provision, it is because a couple of amendments moved by the opposition in another place were inserted in the Bill which should partially relieve the situation, but to my mind it does not. As I read the Bill, I do not understand that they are obliged to take any and all evidence that may be offered. If my hon. friend opposite reads it that way, it is a different matter. They may separate the sheep from the goats, and select the parties they desire to hear. I do not say that they will do this, but they can do it, and if three protectionists are appointed by a government in sympathy with protection, we must remember that human nature is human nature, and assume that they will try to advance arguments to bolster up their own case. The commissioners are to receive very large salaries, I understand, very much larger than the salaries of some of the cabinet ministers, and if their salaries are larger than those of the gentlemen they represent, they must intend to accept their advice. If not, why is the government appointing them? In the western country we are suspicious of this measure, coming on the heels of what took place last fall. They think it is put up as a screen to enable these gentlemen to get a little more than they are getting at the present time, and the Lord only knows they are getting enough.

As far as our people are concerned, they are getting a little too much. We find that Mr. Cockshutt is selling his ploughs for less in the United States than he is selling them to the Canadian people. Still he is one of the gentlemen who waved the old flag last fall and told us how loyal he was. The noble 18 in Toronto waved the flag. They are very patriotic when it comes to getting something for their own pocket, they were so-called Liberals. I want to say here now that the ordinary people of this country must recognize that partyism has been worked too much in this country; so has the loyalty cry been worked too much by designing people who are seeking their own benefit; and I hope the time will come when they will not be able to work either the loyalty or the political cry, and that the people of western Canada will send men to parliament who will stand shoulder to shoulder and fight for western interests irrespective of party. When that comes about, together with the natural growth of our country, we are going to have something. The people in the country last fall were blindfolded, carried away in bypaths and highways with all kinds of stories and stuff, so that we never had a fair trial of the proposition that was submitted. If we had secured reciprocity we would this year have been able to market the produce that we have in the west; we would have got a market to the south of us for our wheat; but now our people have to stand and see the wheat rotting on the ground. Just think what brought about that state of affairs. A good many are so avaricious in the east that they were not willing to recognize that there are two parts of this country; they think they are the whole thing. Those of them who live in Ontario will tell you that Ontario is the milch cow; and I suppose the people in Quebec will tell you that Quebec is the milch cow. If we ask for anything in the west that we consider at all fair they say: 'Why, you belong to us; we furnished the money which bought the country; we sent you out there; we made it; you are there for the purpose of being hewers of wood and drawers of waters for us'. But we object to that, and I want to say here now that from my standpoint this talk about Ontario being a milch cow should cease. A certain class of men in Ontario had the benefit of the National Policy since it was in force up to 1896, and they kept the rest of the country as a milch cow for their benefit. Up to 1896 very nearly all the manufacturing in this country was done in Ontario. They had a protective tariff of thirty per cent and over. There was a wall built around this country, for whose benefit? For the benefit of a few manufacturers in Ontario; and those are the men who will tell you that they are the milch cow at the present time. Those men had the National Policy passed; it came in force, and what was it supposed to do? What was their own argument in favour of it? They said they wanted to protect the infant industries so that they would be able to build them up.

Well, the Conservative party was in power for eighteen years, and they claim that our people kept the same policy in force for fifteen years; surely in thirty-one or thirty-two years those poor struggling infants ought to be able to walk. Is it necesary to keep a sucking bottle still up to their mouths ? Will they ever reach such a stage of development that the sucking bottle will not need to be used ? I should like to find that out. Further, we were told that the farmers, the artisans and the people of this country generally need not be in fear about this policy raising the price of the commodities they have to consume, because competition would regulate prices; we would have competition because we were going to build factories all over this country, and competition would keep prices down so that nobody would be taxed more than he should be in the way of high prices. Where is your competition ? What has developed? Mergers and trusts and combines all over this country until it is getting pretty nearly as bad as the high protection country across the line. A few men control every line of business in this country. Half a dozen of them can sit around a table and arrange prices, and if they can get the government of the day to put a high enough wall to keep anything from coming in, they can simply put their hands in the pockets of the people and take out anything they want as far as the tariff wall will allow them to do it. That is the condition of things. We were also promised when the National Policy was introduced that we could have reciprocity. Sir John Macdonald promised that. He said: 'Of course you may have to submit to a little taxation for the benefit of our poor struggling infant industries, but as an off-set to that, we will give you reciprocity in natural products as soon as those bad fellows across the line will agree to it.' That was the policy of the Conservative party. They have gone back on the whole of it and now what do they promise ? A tariff commission of three men, junketing around the country to enable the manufacturers to put their hands down a little deeper in the pockets of the people. They tell you that they are going to protect the artisan, the labourer, the agriculturist, and all that; but, if they want to do any such thing why don't they appoint an industrial commission representing every interest in this country that should be represented, to see that justice and fair play are done to everybody in this country ? We want to investigate those mergers and combines. We may want to go down to Valleyfield and find out how those people down there come to earn such dividends as they do upon their capital.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This makes provision for it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes, but I should like to see an independent man get at the facts of the case as one of the commissioners—a man whose heart is in the right direction; but if you are going to take a man whose heart and whose sympathy are with the manufacturers and the combines, it is very little information we will get. Would it be wrong for us to ask that the labouring people of this country, who are organized from the Atlantic to the Pacific, should have a representative man on this commission? Surely they should be asked to nominate one man to look after that interest. Is the great agricultural interest of this country not of sufficient importance to be recognized by putting a man on a commission of that kind, when it means the very life blood of taxation? I say that agriculture should be represented. Has it come to this, that there is only one class of people in this country that is to be recognized—those gentlemen who call themselves manufacturers? If that is the only class of people, and all the rest of us have to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for them, it is pretty nearly time that the people of this country should know it. What argument can there be against giving the labouring and agricultural people representation on that commission? You would then have a commission that would be a commission; and you would get information that would be information; you would get facts that would be facts; you would get right to the bottom. If you had three gentlemen sitting there, one representing the labour interest, one the agricultural and one the manufacturing industry, to investigate any of those trusts and combines, rest assured that, if they put the right men on there, they will get to the bottom of these things; but I must say that I have very little faith in the commission that it is proposed to appoint, and I do not think the people of our country have very much faith in it. The time is coming when our people will wake up, and when the partisan cry cannot be worked as it has been in the past. They will refuse to send men to this House who are going to stand up and furnish arguments that will lead to the spoilation of their constituents. Such men will be put on the scrap heap, and men, whether Grit or Tory, will be sent down who will look after the interests of the people of western Canada. You talk about a scientific tariff. That is a very fine word; that is a new word that they have coined. I have a suggestion to make in connection with this scientific tariff. You would imagine that nobody had any interest in this great country of ours except the few men who happen to be manufacturing rakes, wagons, and other things of that kind. You would imagine that all the rest of the great consumers of this country and all the producers of agricultural wealth had no interest in the future welfare of this Dominion; that only one class of men were loyal, and only one class had the interest of upbuilding this great country. Now, those gentlemen claim that we must have a wall around the Dominion, because we want to keep our trade for ourselves; we want to have the trade of Canada for the Canadians. But how many Canadians? Not a great many. Is it just a few Canadians who are manufacturing things, or is it for the whole of our country? That being the case I submit that the western country should have a fair deal just as well as the men who are crying 'Canada for the Canadians.' Now, if it is true, as those gentlemen say, that it is necessary to build a wall around this country so as to keep the trade of Canada for ourselves, and everybody agrees that we must in some way have a revenue to develop this great country—how would it do to submit a proposition of this kind, that if necessary to protect those industries those gentlemen—who are not avaricious at all, who are great patriots, who do not want that protection for the purpose of making more money, but who want a tariff wall built to keep Canada for Canadians and not for profit. Supposing we say to those gentlemen, assuming your argument is right, we will raise a tariff wall around this country so that the trade can be kept for the Canadians, but as we want a lot of money for developing this great country we will put a twenty per cent duty against goods if you will allow an excise of ten per cent to be put on what you manufacture here, thus giving you a clear ten per cent on the goods?' That would go into the treasury; we would have money to put into railroads; we could build them out of the revenues of the country. If those gentlemen are patriotic, why should they object to a scientific proposition of that kind, if we enable them, by building a tariff wall so high, to get 20 per cent more for what they manufacture than they could get if that wall were not there? Surely it would not be too much to ask that an excise be put on their products of one-half the amount of the duty, and that would go into the treasury of the country for the benefit of the country. Do you think they would agree to that? They are very loyal. They go to the English people and wave the flag, and play 'The Soldiers of the King' at every public meeting; but are they willing to give a little more to Great Britain in the way of a preference on her goods coming into this country? They will tell you that the woollen industry will not stand it. Why will not the woollen industry stand it, or why will the cotton industry not stand it? My hon. friend has alluded to the fact that what is one man's manufactured product is another man's raw material. That is very true. Take the item of shirts. Those people in Valleyfield manufacturing cotten and cambric, &c., have free raw material, and have a protective duty of something like thirty per cent on the manufactured goods brought in here. The man who manufactures shirts gets 30 per cent on his manufacturing shirts, but the man who manufactures shirts has to go to the other man who manufactures cambric, and it does not matter whether he buys it from him or Great Britain, or any other place in the world, the price would be the same. How much benefit would the shirt man get out of that? Or is it not the gentleman who manufactures cotton who is getting the whole of it? Woollen goods are in the same position. You can take a manufacturer of furniture, on anything that enters into the cost of the article he produces, except raw lumber, he has to pay a duty; but wool comes in free, and the woollen man is put in a better position than any other man. Now, the two main industries in this country which have always been advocating higher duties—the cotton and woollen industries—are afraid that if we have a little extension of the British preference it will injure them. I should like to see us give a little more proof of our loyalty than merely shouting from the house tops. That is about as far as it has gone at present—the waving of the old flag and so on. The Liberal party did give evidence of it not only in the Boer war, but when they introduced the British preference. Those two occasions gave evidence of wishing to do something for the mother country and British connection. Surely they did something also in their naval policy towards showing that our hearts are in the right place. Now, if our friends will only give us an increase of the British preference to 50 per cent they will show that they are doing something to assist in bringing in a better state of affairs between us and Great Britain. They might also go on with the navy and build a few more ships to show that their hearts are right, and so on down the line. When the ledger is balanced up to date the balance is in favour of the Liberal party, as far as loyalty is concerned, for they have actually done something while the other gentlemen have talked and waved the flag. Now we ask them to stop talking and do a little something to give evidence of their bona fides, to show that they expect and want to do something for British connection in this country. That is a fair proposition, and it would be so easy by just advancing the British preference and having more British goods coming here. I dont go round waving the flag, but I long and hope to see the time when we will be able to give the same preference, and up to 50 per cent, not only to the British Isles, but to every country that floats the British flag. Why should we not have it? Why is it that we have not got it? A few gentlemen, like the noble eighteen in Toronto, parade their loyalty at such times as they think their pockets are a little in danger; but the great mass of the people in this country will be willing to go that far and a little further. This tariff commission will not be agreeable from the standpoint of western Canada. We would have favoured the appointment of an industrial commission, on which all classes of people in Canada would be represented; but a tariff commission of three partisans will not be acceptable to our people in the west. I do not use that word 'partisans' in an offensive sense, as applied to men who are Conservatives; I do not care if the government appointed three Liberals, if they were protectionists, or took them from the 'noble eighteen' in Toronto, they would be just as much partisans as the three Conservatives who might be put on the commission. What I mean is that if you put people on the jury who have already made up their minds what the verdict is going to be, what kind of a trial are you going to have?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—But they are not going to render a verdict.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I have already pointed out that if the Minister of Finance is not going to take the advice of this commission he had better not appoint them at all. What is he sending them out to get information for? He is paying them big salaries to get information, and I assume that he is going to get information, but my point is that the information that he will get will be biased, one-sided, and such as will lead to an uplifting of the duties in place of a lowering of the duties, and as a man from the western country I protest against it in the name of our people up there, because I think it is an unnecessary expenditure of public money in the first place. What is the use of talking about taking this tariff out of politics? The people are not going to allow the tariff to be taken out of politics. They are not going to be taxed without representation. Trouble has arisen in many places in the world because of that; but if you are going to take it out of the government's hands and put it in the hands of other persons, you have no remedy at all. The people are going to hold the government responsible, therefore you cannot take the tariff out of politics. That being the case, we want to get the right kind of information, and in order to secure information I say that we should appoint a commission representative of all parts of the country. I warn those gentlemen who are at the head of trusts, mergers, combines and everything of that kind that western Canada will not submit very much longer to high protection, more particularly if you come up and dictate where we shall buy and where we shall sell. We will not submit to that sort of thing. Are we hewers of wood and drawers of water, or are we freemen, that we cannot go and sell the produce we get off our farms where we can get the highest price? Do you think it is a nice thing for a man to see his neighbour getting 50 cents more for his barley across an imaginary line than he could at home? And for whose benefit? Not to diminish the revenue of the manufacturers, for there was nothing that interfered with their pound of flesh, but simply that they were afraid that it would be the thin edge of the wedge and that it would lead to the freedom from slavery in the western country. Now, I say that our people will not long submit to that sort of thing. We are patriotic enough, and want to see this country hang together. The new people that are coming into the Dominion want to see us all united as one great country, and the humbug that we hear about annexation was an insult to the intelligence of the people of Canada; it was merely a myth in the minds of the people down in this part of the country, and interested gentlemen used that cry for their own benefit. There is no such sentiment as annexation in western Canada. Our people want to sell at the highest price. You might as well say that because England has the largest trade with Germany they will become Germans. Cannot we trade with the United States without becoming Americans? If a man has ten or fifteen steers in a pasture why should he not sell to the man who offers him 15 or 20 per cent more than a man from Toronto? Can he not take that larger price without being an American? The thing is ridiculous. We traded with the United States last year to the extent of four hundred million dollars without any sentiment of annexation or disloyalty. Where are we going to stop? If we trade to the extent of eight hundred million, is that the breaking point? Is the loyalty of this country to be measured by dollars and cents? I say it is an insult to the people to put up such a foolish argument as that. The people of our country, no matter where they come from are perfectly loyal. Those men who have taken the oath of allegiance to the British Crown want to live under the British flag. They came to this country because they preferred our system, and our laws to those of the United States and other countries, and they come here to make their homes and bring up their families here as good Canadian citizens, and I say that there is no annexation sentiment. The suggestion is thrown out that because a great mass of people have come from the United States the sentiment of annexation exists in this country; but I say there is no truth in that statement.

I never heard it expressed at the election, before the election, or since the election. We want to stay in this great confederation, but we want a square deal. I want to point out to you gentlemen down here the great growth of population and the great growth of wealth that is taking place in the western country. History is repeating itself. The United States started with thirteen little colonies on the rockbound coast of the Atlantic ocean, and from that came the settlement of the middle and western states until you travel right through to the Pacific ocean. To-day the greatest influence of the United States is in the western and middle states. The same thing is going to take place here, because we have the soil and climate and we can produce the wealth. Inside of ten years we will be selling more wheat than will feed England, and a couple of other countries. We must look for a market for that wheat. We cannot allow it to stand and rot. Yet I want to say this to my hon. friend who represents the government in this House, that it is their duty when they bring people into the country, to provide means for the transportation for their product, and the next thing they should do is to provide a market for that produce. The late government has gone a long distance in providing transportation facilities but they are not sufficient. I am glad to see that this government is going on with the Hudson bay road. We must come back to the fact that we have to provide a market for our grain, and in order to secure that market, we must sell the grain to anybody who comes along to buy it, and our best market is in the United States. I say our people are satisfied, that we have a great confederation, and every man in that country wants to take part in building up this country, but we want a fair deal, we want a fair show. It is all right to canvass the men around the mills who may have their own houses and tell them that if a certain thing comes in force it will mean that their property will become of no value and the mill must be closed. It is all very well to tell a farmer who sells a little truck to the manufacturing towns that it is going to ruin him. It might do these people a little harm, I do not believe that it would, but supposing that it did. This is a great big country. Look at the stretch of land and rock that we have between eastern and western Canada. Look at that stretch of country. If anything is done in this great country it must be as a matter of compromise; you must give and take. If the manufacturers imagine that they can go on taxing our people 20 cents on the dollar—and the duties are up to that—for every dollar's worth of goods we buy, and if these manufacturers also wish to interfere with our right to sell, then they will find that they are digging their own grave. The time will come when they will not get anything at all, because just as sure as the sun rises the west will control the destinies of this country in a very few years. We are going to have 21 more seats in the west according to the last census, and eastern Canada will get ten less. What does that mean? I ask my hon. friend to study the immigration figures, and see what they started with in 1897 and follow the figures up and see the little streams of immigration starting to get bigger, and coming up and up year after year, until last year it was close to 400,000 souls coming into this country. That small stream will continue to enlarge until it becomes a great river. The time is not far off when we will be getting one million, yes, two milions of people into this country in a year. Most of these people settle in the west and we are going to control the Dominion. The west is making Canada. The national policy did not do it, the development of the west did. We have three crops a year, one of grain, one of money brought in by immigrants and one of money borrowed on our own securities to develop transportation and build railways and towns. All this vast amount of money is flowing into eastern coffers, that is what has made Montreal and Toronto, that is what has built up Canada. We are not talking about taking a broad axe and cutting this country in half at Port Arthur. I would rather wait until we get control and then put these gentlemen in the place where they belong. I ask you to consider whether it would not be better to be magnanimous, and show a good spirit, and say we know what is coming. The day is coming when we will not be able to take so many plums off the tariff tree, good fat plums at that, and we will recognize that the people in western Canada have some rights. If you will do that you will find that you will have a better sentiment in the country, a more contented people, and a more prosperous country. I am not speaking of this from a partisan standpoint. I believe partisanship, as far as our country is concerned, is pretty well played out. The man who does not stand for the sentiments I have expressed, in western Canada will have no chance at the next election of getting back into parliament.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (99) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Company. —Hon. Mr. Davis.

Bill (S 2) An Act to incorporate the International Guarantee Company.—Hon. Mr. Pope.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL—AUDITOR GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (113) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: The object of the Bill is to permit the Auditor General to appoint temporary clerks for a longer period than six months, which is the limit now fixed by the Civil Service Act. It is pointed out that invariably it takes longer than six months to deal with the various matters that come before the Auditor General after a general election, and it is, therefore desirable that those clerks should be appointed for a period not exceeding two years.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BRITISH CANADIAN LOAN AND INVESTMENT COMPANY BILL.

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved concurrence in the amendment made by the Standing Committe on. Banking and Commerce to Bill (C 2) An Act respecting the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company, Limited.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I move in amendment that the report be not now adopted, but that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I make this motion for the following reasons: This Bill was read a second time on the 29th February, 1912, and it was considered and reported on by the Committee on Banking and Commerce on the 6th of March. Rule 119 of the Senate has been completely ignored. The Bill has not been posted, and was considered before the expiration of the time during which it should have been posted. I should not avail myself of the rule were it not for the fact that the parties interested in the Bill had no opportunity of appearing before the committee, and were greatly surprised to hear that the Bill had been dealt with by the committee, and they had declared the preamble not proven. I think that objection is amply sufficient, but there is another objection which I might perhaps mention.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am sure, under the circumstances, there will be no objection to a reference of the Bill back to the committee.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I am quite satisfied.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (B 2) An Act to incorporate the Montreal Transcontinental Railway Company. —Hon. Mr. Beique.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (46) An Act to incorporate the British Trust Company.—Hon. Mr. Young.

Bill (80) An Act to incorporate the Dominion Trust Company.—Hon. Mr. Young.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

PEACE CENTENNIAL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

1. Is the government aware that a committee has been organized in the United States to arrange for the celebration of the anniversary of one hundred years of peace amongst the English-speaking people?

2. Has the government had any communication from the said committee? If so, what is the nature of the correspondence?
3. Is it the intention of the government to take part in aforesaid celebration? If so, what action will be taken?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The first answer is, the government understand that such a committee is being organized in the United States. The reply to the second is, no, and to the third, the subject has not been considered by the government.

I might say to my hon. friend that this matter has been taken up, not officially, but rather by individuals.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT--Has not Mr. Andrew Carnegie expressed a desire to aid in the matter?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand this movement is being promoted by individuals. Our government have not yet taken it up officially. Whatever individual action has been taken has not yet resulted in anything officially being done. If the government should take it up I shall be glad to report it to my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I suppose my hon. friend knows that a Bill is before the state legislature of New York asking for an appropriation of five hundred thousand dollars as the expenditure to be made by the state of New York. I saw a Bill that was moved by Senator Burton, at Washington, asking for the organization of a federal commission which would get in contact with the citizens' organizations throughout the United States, Great Britain and Canada, and in which an appropriation of seven million five hundred thousand is asked as the contribution of the United States towards the celebration of the centennial. Of course, that is a very large sum. I do not know what Canada will do. We must not forget that this celebration is one which is sought to be made between Great Britain and the United States. I know that a committee has been appointed in Great Britain, which is presided over by our late Governor General, Lord Grey. I also know that Great Britain intends, according to the formation of that committee, composed of very influential citizens, to take part in the celebration. I suppose if Canada does something it will be in conjunction with Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certain public men in Canada responded, to a certain extent, to the communications which have come from the United States. In fact, some similar action is probably being taken now as that indicated by my hon. friend, that may possibly result, and will probably result in the government taking it up officially, but as yet it has not reached that point.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As far as the matter of expense is concerned, the United States contribute about seven and a half million. We have no objection to Canada paying its fair share.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I notice that the hon. leader of the House has not said anything to commit the government in connection with this matter, and I am very much impressed with his prudence, because I think, after the tone that was adopted by the supporters of the present government during the recent campaign, they would really feel certain qualms of conscience in undertaking to celebrate 100 years of peace with a country with which they have expressed a desire to have no truck whatever.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government does not view the situation as my hon. friend from Halifax does.

TERRITORIAL CLAIMS OF SASKATCHEWAN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

1. Have any representations been made to the government at any time by the people of Saskatchewan through their representatives or by the provincial government of that province claiming rights to certain territory formerly in the provisional division of Saskatchewan, and running from the present boundaries of the said province to the shores of Hudson bay? If so, what were the character of the representations?
2. Were the claims of Saskatchewan taken into consideration when the decision to extend the boundaries of Manitoba was arrived at?

3. Was the Saskatchewan government notified to attend the conference supposed to have been held by the representatives of Ontario and Manitoba with the government to arrange said matter?

4. Will the government grant to Saskatchewan the same terms as are given to Ontario with reference to giving right of way to the bay?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend yesterday read a telegram sent on behalf of the provincial government of Saskatchewan to the government of Canada touching this question, and in answer thereto the following telegram was sent by the Prime Minister:

Ottawa, March 7th, 1912.

Hon. J. A. Calder, M.P.P.,
Acting Prime Minister,
Regina, Sask.

I beg to acknowledge your telegram of yesterday. Legislation now before parliament does not contain the provision alluded to. The province of Ontario considers it desirable to extend its state owned railway to a port on Hudson bay. For this purpose the Governor in Council has passed an order granting to that province a strip of land five miles in width from the western boundary of Ontario to the mouth of the Nelson river. This grant is made by virtue of the federal ownership of the land within the extended boundaries of Manitoba. In case the province of Saskatchewan should undertake the construction and operation of a state owned railway to the shores of Hudson bay this government will be glad to give to its proposals the most careful and earnest consideration. May I point out, however, that apart from this the claim of Saskatchewan was disposed of by the late administration. On the 13th July, 1908 Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed the decision of his government with regard to the claim of Saskatchewan in the following words: Begins 'after giving due consideration to this claim on the part of the province of Saskatchewan it seemed to us that, as between the claim of the province of Saskatchewan and of the province of Manitoba to have the territory which lies north of Manitoba and east of Saskatchewan allotted either one way or the other, the weight of argument was certainly in favour of Manitoba and we could not grant the prayer of Saskatchewan. We therefore had to ignore it.

I think this fully answers the question of my hon. friend which appears on the order paper to-day, with the exception of the third inquiry, and the answer to that is that no such conference, for which this government is responsible, has been held. If there was such a conference between Manitoba and Ontario, it was owing to the joint action of both provinces and not at the instance of this government.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to ask if the same answers with regard to Saskatchewan not having any right on the bay, which was disposed of by the late government, does not apply to Ontario, as well as Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No. I would suggest to my hon. friend that if he will look up the 'Hansard' of 13th July, 1908, he will find Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in the House of Commons, made a speech dealing with the rights and claims of both provinces.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The three provinces --Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The boundary line on the east side of Ontario has been interfered with.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact, with regard to the statements which Sir Wilfrid Laurier made at the time when discussing this proposition, that no definite action was taken in regard to extending the boundaries of Manitoba at that time; but at the present moment it assumes a concrete shape, because we are dealing with it, and it is, therefore, proper for Saskatchewan to send in its claim.

It seems to me that the telegram sent by Mr. Borden will not, and should not be satisfactory to the people of Saskatchewan. He says that the province of Ontario is building a state owned railway to the same place. There is no intention of the kind expressed by any one in Ontario, and we must assume that the province of Saskatchewan will have the same rights, with the idea in the future, if Ontario should extend a state owned railway to Port Nelson, of getting similar rights. Ontario is getting a strip of territory along Hudson bay which in the future, when towns and cities are built upon it, may be worth hundreds of millions of dollars. Saskatchewan is more likely than Ontario to build a state owned railway, being the great grain raising province. Saskatchewan has been the prime mover in the construction of a railway to Hudson bay, and we are entitled to the same consideration as Ontario has received in getting a strip of territory alongside of the Nelson river. If Ontario has it on one side we should have it on the other, especially as that territory was formerly subject to our jurisdiction in the days of the territorial council.

The SPEAKER—I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to rule 39, which provides that no debate is in order on a mere inquiry, but explanatory remarks may be made by the senator making the inquiry, and by the minister, or another senator answering the same. Observations upon any such answer are not allowed.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I have just one word more to say; I wish to get information with reference to question No. 3—was the Saskatchewan government notified to attend the conference? I submit there must have been a conference, because it is so stated in the press, and the representatives of Manitoba and Ontario were here in connection with it. This government knowing that Saskatchewan had put in a claim should not have ignored that great province, but should have invited them to take part in the conference. It is not treating Saskatchewan with proper courtesy.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return of all memorials, petitions, letters, telegrams and documents relating in any way to the claim of the province of Saskatchewan to certain territories running from the present boundaries of the province of Saskatchewan to tide water on Hudson bay.

He said: The Manitoba Boundaries Bill is now before the Commons and is likely to be dealt with finally, probably to-day or Monday. I want to get these papers for the purpose of drawing the attention of the leader of the House to the matter, and so that we can intelligently discuss it when it comes to this House. There are certain memorials, documents, telegrams, &c., that have passed between the government at Ottawa, and the government of Saskatchewan in reference to this matter. I want to be prepared to place the position of Saskatchewan before this House if the matter is not dealt with fairly by the other House. I need not go any further into the matter now, because I will deal with it when I get the papers. I am satisfied that Saskatchewan has a good claim. We owned this territory which is now so generously handed over to Manitoba without consulting our people. It was under the jurisdiction and controlled by laws passed by our legislature, which granted certain rights and privileges to the people in that territory. When the territory was cut off and thrown into 'no man's land' to be disposed of later on, I assumed that the rights of the people there would be respected. They were respected in the province of Saskatchewan when it was given a constitution, and we expect that the people there will have their rights and privileges guaranteed to them. I am not going to discuss the matter further, until the proper time. We expect we are going to be treated, if not with courtesy, at least with justice, and we expect that we are going to get the territory that belongs to us.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (W 2) An Act to incorporate the Capital Trust Corporation, Limited.—Hon. Mr. McSweeney.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (K2) An Act for the relief of Isobel isaac.—Hon. Mr. Talbot.

Bill (W) An Act to ratify and confirm certain agreements between The Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commission and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (L 2) An Act respecting Mexican Interurban Electric Traction Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'Mexican Interurban Electric Railway Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. McHugh.

Bill (56) An Act respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McMullen.

Bill (N) An Act to incorporate the Dominion Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Bill (82) An Act to incorporate the Northern Territorial Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (67) An Act respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. McHugh.

Bill (R 2) An Act to incorporate the Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

Bill (F 2) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (E 2) An Act to incorporate The Ottawa and Lake McGregor Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (D 2) An Act respecting The Alberta, Peace River and Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Douglas.

Bill (I 2) An Act respecting the British Columbia and Dawson Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (J 2) An Act respecting the Vancouver, Fraser Valley and Southern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (36) An Act respecting the Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Beith.

Bill (50) An Act respecting the Ontario and Ottawa Railway Company, as amended.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (79) An Act respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (81) An Act to incorporate the High River, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (73) An Act respecting the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (54) An Act to incorporate the Quinze River and Ottawa Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (94) An Act respecting the Windsor, Chatham and London Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Pope.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONERS.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (104) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I promised, when this Bill was read a second time, to make the inquiry which my right hon. friend suggested as to whether the third commissioner was being appointed at the request of the present commission. I might say that it practically has grown out of the situation which has arisen, which makes it, in the interests of the public business, in fact absolutely necessary, that a third commissioner should be appointed. Differences have arisen from time to time between the two commissioners which render the intervention of the government absolutely necessary, hence this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

SALARY INCREASE FOR MR. LE MOINE MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the memorandum from the Clerk of the Senate and the recommendation of His Honour the Speaker in re increase of salary to Mr. J. de St. Denis Le Moine, &c.—Hon. Mr. Power.

Hon Mr. POWER—This memorandum of the Clerk and the recommendation of His Honour the Speaker simply carry out the decision to which the House came last session, on the report of the Committee on Internal Economy, and consequently there is no object in referring it to that committee again. I, therefore, move that the recommendation of the Clerk and His Honour the Speaker, with respect to the case of the Sergeant-at-Arms be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL—AUDITOR GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (113) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —This simply affects the Auditor General's office?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I explained to the hon. gentleman, previous to the passage of the Civil Service Act it was possible for the Auditor General to appoint clerks for a period of six months, and then to renew that term. Under the Civil Service Act that authority is not given to him, and consequently at the end of six months he is called upon to discharge these clerks. Now, it is pointed out that upon the returns after a general election, it takes a longer period than six months to perform the duties necessary to conclude the work incident thereto.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Yes, that is true.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And those clerks have to be broken in and it is very desirable in the public interest that they should be retained until the work of that branch of the public service is fully concluded.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The only possible objection that I see to this Bill is that after a man has been employed as a temporary clerk for two years, it will probably be felt that it would be cruel to dispense with his services, and in that way we shall get back to the condition of things we had in 1908, when the Civil Service Act was passed, when there were hundreds of temporary clerks who were really not supposed to be in the Civil Service, but who had to be so considered. I trust the government will see that that condition of things does not occur.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government does not ask for any authority to continue them or give them any status in the service after the work is concluded.

Hon. Mr. POWER—All right.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (188) An Act to create the Biological Board of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (X 2) An Act respecting the Imperial Loan and Investment Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Kerr.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

SCHOOLS OF KEEWATIN TERRITORY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General, praying that His Royal Highness will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all correspondence between the government and persons or corporations since the first of November last in connection with the schools to be esablished or maintained in the Keewatin territory to be annexed to Manitoba.

He said: My object in moving for these returns is that we may have full information to enable us to intelligently discuss the Bill which will soon come before us.

The motion was agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ANGLO-CANADIAN CHEMICAL COMPANY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for copies of all correspondence between the Anglo-Canadian Chemical Company and the Department of Inland Revenue from the first of January, 1911, to date.

He said: My object is to obtain information, and more especiailly to call the attention of the government to what would be a very desirable amendment to 'An Act respecting Agricultural Fertilizers.' I am not making a motion with a view to casting slurs on the department, the government or anybody else, but in the interests of the trade generally. It is merely a business matter. It is very late this session to introduce a Bill to amend the Act, but between now and next session the government might very easily look into the matter, and if they are of the same opinion as those interested in the trade, possibly they will comply with the request of this company. I have a letter from the Anglo-Canadian Chemical Company, of the 29th February, calling attention to a mistake in a bulletin on 'fertilizer' pages 8 and 9. This is from an English concern operating in St. John, N. B. The letter reads:

In reference to the mistake in Bulletin on Fertilizers, I am sending you a marked copy of the Bulletin, and you will note on pages 8 and 9 that our special odourless potato phosphate, is given as No. 51, with a guarantee of 12 per cent phosphoric acid, 5 per cent potash. This is entirely wrong, as our special odourless potato phosphate should be No. 142, with a guarantee of 7 per cent phosphoric acid, 7 per cent potash, 2 per cent nitrogen.

We called attention to the error, and the result of the correspondence is summed up in the letter from the deputy minister which we forward you herewith, to the effect that 'the necessary correction respecting this matter will be made in the next Bulletin published, which is all that it is possible to do in connection with the case.

The trade of the manufacturers of these fertilizers depends on the character of the fertilizer, which should be up to standard, and the department should publish such reports as would place them on a proper footing, so as not in any way to lower their position before the public generally. As I have just stated, they claim that there was an error in the bulletin. They say:

We think a bulletin containing such incorrect and damaging statements should be suppressed.

Why should it be suppressed? Because it goes all around the country and rival manufacturers can point to it as proof that the fertilizers manufactured by this company are not up to the standard, and it is almost ruinous to a company. The letter proceeds:

And publicity given to the correction for which we and our English house are in no way whatever to blame.

They say they are not to blame for the mistake made in the department. I am not blaming this government for the error, because it occurred before they came into power, but the mistake should be rectified. The letter continues:

We think that a bulletin containing such incorrect and damaging statements, should be suppressed, and publicity given the correction for which we and our English house are in no way whatever to blame. This misleading statement can be used by every fertilizer agent in Canada as a strong canvass against these goods, and backed up by a bulletin issued by the government, warranting the assertion that we are placing goods on the market not up to guarantee in one ingredient, and by implication also that this fertilizer does not contain any nitrogen whatever.

Now the department under date of 14th of February, 1912, wrote to the Anglo-Canadian Chemical Company, of St. John, N.B., as follows:

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your further letter of the 7th instant respecting an error made in Bulletin No. 227 'Fertilizers 1911.'

In reply I quote the following from the report thereon of the Chief Analyst:—

In the first place the fertilizer bearing registration No. 51, is guaranteed to contain 12 per cent of phosphoric acid and 5 per cent of potash. Fertilizer registered as No. 142 is guaranteed to contain nitrogen 2; phosphoric acid 7; potash 7. It must be remembered that under section 7 of the Fertilizers Act, the registration number constitutes an identification of the brand. On the 8th of May last, Mr. Inspector Ferguson sent in a sample (45486) stated to be registered as 51, which was analysed, finding total phosphoric acid 8·45 per cent, potash 7·12 per cent. These results are published in Bulletin 227, page 9. Naturally comparison was made with the claims of registered fertilizer No. 51, and a deficiency of 3·5 per cent phosphoric acid noted. This is the report published in Bulletin 227. Later correspondence shows that Mr. Inspector Ferguson was incorrect in reporting this sample 45486 as registered under No. 51. He should have given the registration number as number 142. In this case the results of our analysis show that, as far as phosphoric acid and potash are concerned, the sample fully meets requirements. I shall, of course, make necessary correction in our next published Bulletin.

You will note by the concluding sentence of Mr. McGill's report to the department that the necessary correction respecting this matter will be made in the next bulletin published which is all that is possible to do in connection with the case.

Yours very truly,
W. J. GERALD,
Deputy Minister.

Now, what these people complain of is that the Act is imperfect, or the bulletin could not have got out in this way. They say that they have been damaged right and left by this report. By bringing this to the attention of the House, we may assist them in having the position they have been placed in rectified. Every hon. gentleman must know that such an important commodity as a fertilizer, to the agricultural population, who depend upon these manufactured fertilizers for a number of their crops, is of considerable value. This inspector admits that he was wrong, and therefore these people should be put right. All they ask is to have the question brought up in order that they may have something to point to. They ask that the Act should be so amended that such a thing will not occur in the future. I do not intend taking up the time of the House at any great length. I only want to bring the matter up so that these people will receive proper consideration. They suggest that the Act should be amended that something to the following effect might prevent such trouble to the responsible dealers, who may wish in every way possible to carry out the provisions of the Act—that is to insert as subsection 3 to section 12, the following:

3. Provided always that within.....days after taking of any such sample, and before the result of any such analysis shall be published as above, each manufacturer or their accredited agents, shall have been furnished with a copy of the result of analysis of any fertilizer registered by them under this Act.

They complain that the Act is so worded than an error may creep in, and they claim that before a report is sent out their attention should be called to it, and if there is any error the matter could be rectified before the report goes to the public. They also suggest the addition of another section, number 19, for the purpose of preventing, if possible, the misrepresentation which is so general in the sale of fertilizers:

19. Every person who by misrepresentation sells or attempts to sell any fertilizer under the registration number, name, brand, or trade mark of any other fertilizer, shall be liable on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding.....dollars, and in default of payment to imprisonment to a term not exceeding.....months; and further no action at law shall lie to recover the price of any fertilizer sold under such misrepresentation, and proof of such misrepresentation shall be a good defence to any action at law to recover for such sale.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.

These companies put the analysis of the fertilizer on the bags. A sample of that fertilizer is sent to the government, and the manufacturer of the fertilizer is held strictly accountable for any misrepresentation. We all know that fertilizers were sold years ago for $30 and $40 a ton, and some of them were only worth $4 or $5 to the farmer. The government of the day brought in an Act compelling the manufacturers of fertilizers to do certain things in order to substantiate the value of the fertilizer they were selling to the farmer, and in order that the farmer might be protected. What these people in England now ask is that the Act should be amended in the direction that they have pointed out, and to which I have called your attention. They say that they submit the matter to your consideration, and suggest that the proposed clause might be submitted to the law courts before they are made law.

I hope this may be the means of clearing them, by showing that there was a mistake and that their manufactures will not be misrepresented, on the strength of an erroneous report. They will now be able to point to the fact that they brought this matter to the attention of parliament and asked for legislation. I move for the papers as in this motion.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (30) An Act respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (39) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Tunnel and Terminal Company, Montreal, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (Y 2) An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited, and to change its name to the 'Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.'—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (116) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (124) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think this is the fifth Bill which has been introduced this session in this House with the same title —' An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.' That is a practice which may lead to confusion, and there should be something in the title of the Bill to indicate its special subject, so that when we refer to an Act to amend the Civil Service Act we have some idea of what we are looking for.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might suggest to my hon. friend that when these Bills come into committee, if he thinks it would facilitate ready reference to the statute, we might insert something indicative of the particular Act which it is proposed to amend.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (104) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (52) An Act to incorporate the Pacific Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Bostock.

Bill (113) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading (Bill 88), 'An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In resuming the debate on this very important question of the tariff commission, I deem it proper and justifiable, under the circumstances, to pay a tribute to the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Davis), on the very noble pronouncement he made in this House last Friday in regard to this matter. Listening to his speech I felt proud of him, and proud that he came from good stock and good ancestors, who had, in by-gone days, put up fights similar to the one he advanced recently on behalf of the people of the Northwest. His grandfather was one of the Nationalists of Ireland who stood with Dan O'Connell, O'Brien, and all those gentlemen who advocated fair-play, truth and justice. We have had examples of what these men were able to do in the past. The speech of the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan had the right ring about it. There was no soup kitchen play in it. His speech was plain and eloquent—plain, because he had nothing to hide, and no personal object to serve, and eloquent, because it was a most forcible plea on behalf of truth, and justice for the people of the Northwest—that their condition should be known and justice obtained for them. This House and parliament, and the country at large had better take heed of the warning given the other day, that if the people of the Northwest, and especially the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta, do not obtain favourable conditions, now that they have settled in these large territories, the people of the east might well halt and consider what consequence might result from the western country being bound down too close to the ground. That warning is not new. Some 22 years ago, when on a special mission to Manitoba, it was my privilege to interview the Prime Minister of the day on certain questions. At that time Saskatchewan and Alberta were not very much in evidence, but Manitoba was. The Premier declared to me that if the east did not look out and allow Manitoba to have free and favourable access to the south, the day might come when there would be secession. That is the declaration of the hon. senator from Saskatchewan 22 years later, that if the people of the Northwest are not fairly dealt with by parliament, through their laws, that the day of secession may arise sooner than we expect. These are warnings that must be heeded. They are given with a heart full of regret that they are obliged to say these things to obtain justice at the hands of parliament. What was the complaint of the hon. member from Saskatchewan? It was that the people had toiled night and day and torn from the bosom and bowels of the earth its richest wealth; that they had no means whereby to ship this wealth; that they had not sufficient and adequate markets. These were his two complaints. Is it not a fact that the facilities for transportation for that wealth are not adequate? Is it not true that the Conservative party have done all in their power to block the foreign markets to the Canadian producer? The member for Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Davis) warned this House and parliament that the object of this tariff commission is purely and simply to increase the difficulties of the Northwest, by increasing the taxation on what they need on their farms, and by blocking their access to foreign markets. Hon. sirs, I put you on your guard here to-day. The vast majority in this House are of the Liberal party. Many of us are disappearing from the scene. I give you fair warning that this tariff commission is nothing more or less than a means to strangle the Liberal party for the next 25 years, the same as the Liberal party were strangled in the red chamber during 18 years. If you allow this to go through in its present form and give to the tariff commission power to form a scientific tariff, if you please, then you put in their hands a halter by which they will strangle you. I certainly would not, as a Liberal bound to take care of the national interests of the country, allow this thing to be done. That tariff commission is simply a blind to take the responsibility from the shoulders of the government. If it is not a blind, they would accept my proposition, which is a very simple one. If they want a commission to secure information, let them have it. I believe such information is very often necessary, and a commission would be a useful means whereby to obtain it, but the majority of this parliament should not allow them to establish a commission of three protectionists—I wont call them Tories, because we have Liberal protectionists in our ranks, unfortunately one or two, or a half dozen. The government of the day will not take three staunch Tories, they will manage to get one or two interested Liberals, to go on that commission. If the government of the day want a fair commission, in which the country will have faith, let them appoint an avowed protectionist, and let them appoint an avowed anti-protectionist who would act with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or the Minister of Finance, who could be the third commissioner. Supposing the commission was composed of an avowed protectionist, like Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and an avowed anti-protectionist, like Sir Richard Cartwright, they would get all the information that the government would require and submit it to the minister, and then the responsibility would devolve upon him to make his selection and choice and give the programme to the people. But to allow the government of the day to establish a commission, as they propose to do under this Bill, is simply for the Liberals to walk into a nest of—I won't call them traitors, we have heard of some before—but into a nest of manipulators of the public wealth. If the words steal and rob are too strong let us use the word manipulate. We have been given to understand in this honourable House that the manufacturer is a producer of wealth. I say he is not a producer of wealth, not by any means. The manufacturer, to my mind, is a man who takes from the country and gives little back. My proof is this: The national treasury is not filled by the contributions of the manufacturer. It is the consumer alone who pays into the national treasury and who furnishes the fifty, sixty or seventy million of dollars of custom duties. The importer is the collecting agent of the consumer. The manufacturer is the robbing agent of the consumer, and how? Here is Smith who is a manufacturer in Toronto; he produces and manufactures an article which costs him $10. Take for instance a plough. It is worth $10. Across the line, in Buffalo or Detroit, this same man Smith has a friend who manufactures identically the same article costing the same price. What happens? The man in the United States sells his plough for $10. What does the manufacturer in Canada do? He sells it for about $12.50 or $13, according to the duty, whether it be 25 or 30 per cent. He raises the price against the Canadian consumer and takes from him $2.50 or $3, which he puts into his own pocket. He robs the consumer. Now, if that consumer should order his plough from his friend in the United States he would have to pay ten dollars and a duty of three dollars, making $13, but the three dollars extra would go into the national treasury, and the importer who brings in the machine is collecting the duty from the consumer. To my mind that is plain as A, B, C. This high grade protection, even with the new name they are giving it to-day, is a fraud on the people. In the old days, in the red chamber days, when the manufacturer contributed his thousands, and when the policy of the Liberal party was strangled in that red chamber by the force of money obtained through fraudulent, robbing legislation, they found one fine day that the people were awakening, and the people got the promise from the then Prime Minister of the day that the mouldering branches would be cut off. His Minister of Finance at that time, however, did not allow him to cut off many of the mouldering branches. They clung; and they still cling to the protection tree. Then they found another term with which to blind the people, and that was adequate protection. It is so easy to go among a lot of people who come from the old countries of Europe and Asia, and even from the states of America, who do not know excatly what 'adequate' means, or what 'mouldering' means—not for want of intelligence, but because in early life they had not received sufficient school education to understand the whole dictionary. Well, they played their game with those words for a number of years, and now they want to start the game over again with another fine word, 'scientific.' With that word they will go into the back concessions, and over the country, and through the platforms of this land, and sing out to the people, 'Oh, we are going to give you scientific protection.' They expect to blind the people with that word. Well, they may succeed for a few years, but I am afraid that scientific protection will need an aeroplane to scale its dizzy heights if the Commission ever get it working. Scientific protection is not meant to bring down the tariff, or to chop off mouldering branches, or to reduce the protection given to the manufacturer as against the consumer and the farmer—and I use the word 'consumer' as a general term to include everybody, lawyers, doctors, and dentists, farmers, grocers and all those people who consume and produce, though some of them have produced very little.

Under these circumstances, I think this House would be perfectly within its rights and would be exercising its jurisdiction in a way that would appeal to the country, and please a large number of electors, if they took means to extract the hidden fangs that lie concealed in this Bill. If the government are sincere and desire information, let them appoint good men in whom the country has confidence, and the the leader of the government will not be able to say to the people, 'Oh, the tariff is high because our scientific investigators found it necessary to increase it.' I would not give them the opportunity to advance such an argument. They abused their privileges between 1878 and 1896, when they drove millions of people out of the country, blocked the development of the Northwest, and gave every possible monopoly to the Canadian Pacific railway. They bled the monopolies for election funds, and then permitted those monopolies to bleed the country afterwards. I should like to know the name of the manufacturer who sent a case of fur-lined kid gloves into the committee room two weeks ago in the town of Renfrew. The day before the election was bitterly cold, and election day was also very cold, and instead of having the ordinary booze doled out the Tory voters came out of the committee room all muffled up, not with the muffler of my hon. friend from Brockville, but muffled up with brand new fur-lined kid gloves. The muffler of my hon. friend from Brockville was more honest, anyhow. The manufacturer is showing his teeth already, and this Bill is nothing but an egg laid by the Manufacturers' Association of Toronto, a few weeks ago. It is quite fresh and they think they will hatch it out. They put a young spring chicken over it in another place and hatched it out there, and now they want the old hen to hatch out a chicken that will devour them if it gets a chance. Are we going to play into the hands of these men, or stand by the masses of the country? I hold that Canada has progressed during the last ten or fifteen years in a most remarkable degree, all due to the fact that the legislation was, as far as possible, designed to favour the masses as against the classes. I am inclined to agree that my party did not go far enough in reducing the protective tariff, but it was better to get a few crumbs than nothing at all. They gave to England a proof of their loyalty—not lip-loyalty such as the Tory leaders have given to the country—when they said to the English consumer, and to the British manufacturer, 'If you want our wheat free, we don't want to have it taxed for our benefit.' That is the doctrine of the Liberal party, and then the Canadian Liberal goes into the shop of an English manufacturer and says, 'come over, we will reduce our tariff on your behalf because you are members of the empire, and we want to show you what we intend to do, and what we are able to do. We will give you twelve and a half per cent off immediately, then we will give you twenty-five and a half per cent off, and still further increase the preference to thirty-three and a third per cent.' That is substantial loyalty—no waving of the British flag, no waving of the Papal flag over the Ne Temere decree. We do not indulge in petty tactics of that description. Reference has been made to the fact that thirty or forty years ago we had soup kitchens. In this honourable House stands the leading exponent of Toryism, the most protective mind in the Dominion of Canada, the minister who pounded the blood out of the brains of the importers during the fourteen years he was Minister of Customs. I do not blame him for having done it, yet all he has to throw at the Liberals is that 25 or 40 years ago we had soup kitchens. I do not consider that a very valuable or gallant argument. It was buried long ago. God knows if there were soup kitchens in 1877 or 1878 there have been many happy and rich homes between 1896 and the present day. In those days of soup kitchens there was not one farm free of encumbrance—not one farmer who could go into the bank and say that he had three or four thousand deposited therein.

The House adjourned during pleasure.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

4. An Act to amend the Quebec Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1899.

5. An Act to correct certain clerical errors in the French Version of the Revised Statutes, 1906.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

6. An Act respecting the British Colonial Fire Insurance Company.

7. An Act to amend the Juvenile Deliquents Act, 1980.

9. An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

10. An Act respecting the Erie, London and Tillsonburg Railway Company.

11. An Act respecting the Cap de la Madeleine Railway Company.

12. An Act respecting La Compagnie du Chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord.

13. An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.

14. An Act respecting the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company.

15. An Act respecting the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company.

16. An Act respecting the Alberta Electric Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The Alberta Interurban Railway Company.'

17. An Act respecting the Algoma Eastern Railway Company.

18. An Act respecting the Calgary and Ferine Railway Company.

19. An Act respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.

20. An Act to incorporate the Liverpool-Manitoba Assurance Company.

21. An Act to incorporate the Vancouver Life Insurance Company of Vancouver, B.C.

23. An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.

24. An Act respecting the Canadian Birkbeck Investment and Savings Company, and to change its name to the Canadian Mortgage Investment Company.

25. An Act respecting the Union Bank of Canada.

26. An Act respecting the Public Archives.

27. An Act respecting patents of Edmund F. Piper.

28. An Act respecting a patent of the Spirella Company of Canada, Limited.

29. An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.

30. An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.

31. An Act respecting the Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph Railway Company.

32. An Act respecting the Kootenay and Alberta Railway Company.

33. An Act respecting the National Transcontinental Railway.

34. An Act for the relief of Edna Wells.

35. An Act respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company Limited, and to change its name to 'The Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.'

36. An Act to incorporate the Premier Life Insurance Company.

37. An Act to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada.

38. An Act to incorporate the Bank of Saskatchewan.

39. An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

40. An Act respecting Patents of Thomas Wedge.

41. An Act respecting certain patents of Thos. D. Rambaut.

42. An Act respecting The Trust and Loan Company of Canada.

43. An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

44. An Act to amend the government Works Tolls Act.

45. An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.
46. An Act to authorize the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Limited.
47. An Act respecting the Security Life Insurance Company of Canada.
48. An Act respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.
49. An Act to incorporate the Northern Territorial Railway Company.
50. An Act respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.
51. An Act respecting the Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.
52. An Act respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.
53. An Act to incorporate the High River, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.
54. An Act respecting the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company.
55. An Act for the relief of Hebert Horsfall.
56. An Act for the relief of Kenneth Molson.
57. An Act for the relief of James Denny.
58. An Act to change the name of Ezra Butler Eddy Bessey.
59. An Act to amend the Inquiries Act.

The House was resumed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN resumed his speech. He said: There is one thing I admire about the leader of this House, and that is his iron hand under a glove of velvet. He can back down the Liberal majority in this Senate in a wonderful fashion. He has an iron hand and I admire him. If there were many more like me in this House, it would take a good deal of velvet to brush the hairs up and down so that we could stand the iron hand hidden underneath. You can call it partisanship or politics. I, for one, am not prepared to put in the hands of the government a lash with which to lash me and the people I represent, and the interests I speak for. I want the government to understand that the national Liberal interests of this country are just as great, and more so than the national interests of the Conservative party. The national interests of this country that we represent belong to the poor and to the consuming class. The national interests that the Conservative party try to protect, and that they put before parliament under a blind, are the robbing class. I point out that it is an act of robbery for a man to sell an article, worth only $10, for $13 and to pocket the difference. The result of the system is that after the manufacturer pockets three or four hundred thousand dollars annually for a few years he is able to start banks and insurance companies. He is able to build palaces and live at the rate of two hundred thousand or three hundred thousand a year. I remember the day in Canada when the millionaires could be counted on the fingers of your hands. Canada was never more happy than in those days. I am speaking of the period from 1860 to 1868. A man that was worth one or two hundred thousand dollars was looked upon, in Montreal, as a nabob. Manufacturers are now not content unless they can pile up two millions, five millions, ten millions or even twenty millions of dollars. All this wealth that they accumulate must come from somewhere, and it comes out of the workers. It comes from the labouring classes; whether they be on the farm, or in the workshops, the doctor's office, or the lawyer's office, they all have to pay their share and contribute to the national treasury. I say that the manufacturer contributes nothing. He takes all and gives nothing back, except to the Tory election fund, for the purpose of creating a new scientific tariff. I wonder if he is going to furnish aeroplanes to scale the heights when the tariff will go up? My honoured friend, the leader, said the tariff commission was designed to upbuild the tariff, but he afterwards withdrew the word 'upbuild' and said it was to construct the tariff. I would like to know whether the tariff is going to be constructed up or down. Construction generally means upwards. The choice of either word does not veil the intention of the government. I am prepared to state here that practically the sole intention of that commission is to act as an instrument of torture for the Liberal party, in the first place, and gather bags with which to collect the money from the poor taxpayer. That is the object of the Bill. For instance, would that commission report to the House that there are manufacturers in this country who sell their goods at a higher rate in Canada than they sell them in Australia, Japan or the United States? Would the government authorize the commission to recommend that the protection given to people who sell at a higher price to outsiders than to the home consumers, should be wiped out by the tariff?

That would be a proper recommendation to make; that is what these manufacturers are doing. They are sending their products out of this country to foreign markets and selling them for lower prices abroad than they are exacting from the home consumer. Is that the way to protect our home market? I am with the hon. member from Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Davis) and I hope all his colleagues in this House will stand shoulder to shoulder with him in regard to this question, and demand that, instead of a scientific tariff, we shall have a still further lowering of the duties.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As some of the speakers have said, the manufacturers are no longer infants. They are ghouls, and I regret that our party could not see its way clear to reduce the tariff more than they did. But it was better to accept a small reduction at their hands, than to return the Tories to power and have the duties still further increased. They have now obtained power through the meanest and lowest kind of false pretenses. They captured the province of Ontario, thirty good Grit seats, on the meanest kind of appeals to race and religious prejudices, and they know it. They captured ten or fifteen seats in the province of Quebec—they have not got them solid yet—on directly opposite lines from those launched and given forth by the Tory statesmen in Ontario. Now, why under heaven should the Liberal majority in this House, under these conditions, give to the Tory party the means whereby to strangle us for the next twenty-five years? That is the question. Not only in this Bill, but during the entire session the time has been passed in concocting measures to block future Liberal progress. Their Highway Bill is nothing else than a nest of the worst elements in the Ontario Conservative party, hatched out, at least mentally hatched out, to deceive the people. By what right does that party pass its time in concocting schemes of that kind instead of introducing useful legislation? All their amendments to the civil service and other Acts are more or less in line with their determination to pull up, root and branch, any vestige of Liberalism they find in their path. No later than yesterday I was informed that every single employee on the Welland canal was fired, dismissed without any notice. I wonder if that statement is true? I believe it is. I do not blame the Tories; it is what we should have done when we came into power in 1896. That is where our party made a mistake, in allowing all those Tory wolves to remain in the fold, who afterwards devoured the children that we brought forth. There is the condition of things under this Tariff Commission. When the time comes I may have some amendments to propose to this Bill, and I trust I shall find a certain backing. I do not wish to destroy the Bill, or to have it blocked, but I want to take the fangs out of it; I want to put honesty into it; I want to put fair play into it; I want to put justice into it; I do not want the control of that important branch of public life in this country, the tariff, whether it be protective or anti-protective, put in the hands of manipulators—for that is what they are. This Tariff Commission is nothing but the result of the manufacturers' agitations during the last election in Ontario. They are now getting their reward in this measure, and it is up to us to say whether that reward shall be the punishment of the Liberal party and a punishment that may last for years.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not intend to speak on this question, but lest I should be considered as one who sympathizes fully with the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division (Hon. Mr. Cloran), I desire to repudiate some of his statements. He commenced by talking about the Northwest Territories, and one would fancy, from his remarks, that they were the worst used lot of people in the empire. I would like any person in this House to point out any portion of the British Empire which has been better or more liberally treated than the Northwest Territories have been by the Dominion. We have built railways and mortgaged the resources of the older provinces to help the development of our western country. We have erected public buildings, we have built railway and telegraph lines, and made other improvements. We surveyed the country, and did not even charge the settler with the cost of the survey. We gave him a homestead of 160 acres without charge, and yet, after doing all that, we are now charged with treating them unfairly and unjustly. That is something which the older provinces do not deserve. It is true that this year the settlers have been unfortunate with their crops. They had a frost which largely injured a considerable portion of their wheat. It appears to be the habit of incomers in the Northwest to try and break up large sections of the prairie, sow it in wheat, get reapers, take it off and stook and thresh it, and then they begin to yell loudly for cars to take it away. The railways endeavour to supply all the accommodation they possibly can. I do not think there is a railroad on the continent of America which has done more for the district to which it runs, in the way of supplying rolling stock for the convenience of the people, than the Canadian Pacific railway. They have furnished an immense quantity of cars for the purpose of removing the crops of that country, and they are increasing their accommodation from year to year. They cannot, in five or six weeks, supply all the cars necessary to carry away the immense crop of wheat produced in the west. The difficulty this year has been that it was neither wise nor prudent to send that wheat to elevators. I know what frozen wheat is. We had experience of it in Ontario 50 or 60 years ago. I can remember in the province of Ontario when we had to bring in corn meal from the United States to feed our people. They did not grow and save from the frost enough to keep them alive. These conditions have been overcome. The people of the Northwest are having their experience in the same line. They will have to provide storage accommodation, as they should do, for the crop when it is harvested. They should erect granaries on their homesteads where they can store their grain. They they should do their ploughing before the winter sets in, and when the winter comes they could team away their wheat and sell it, when they can do nothing else. That was the course adopted by the farmers of Ontario in the early settlement of the country. By and by they began to realize that they had to build larger barns and granaries in order to provide the necessary storage to save their crops. The Northwest will have to adopt a similar course. They cannot expect that every year the railways will be able to supply within a few weeks the enormous quantity of rolling stock necessary to transport the wheat of that whole district. They might have obtained a better price for their frozen wheat by sending it to the United States, or grinding it up and feeding it to the cattle, but you cannot put that wheat into storehouses. If you do it will form a solid cake, and you would have to chop it out. It is better outside. They might have obtained a better price for it this year, if they could have shipped it to the States. The hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) spoke about the price of barley, and pointed out that it was thirty cents a bushel more in the United States than in Canada, but the United States is a protected country as far as barley is concerned. Is the price at which barley is quoted in the United States the world-wide value of barley? It is not. My hon. friend would like very much—and I do not blame him—to sell his Canadian barley in a protective country, where he could obtain thirty cents a bushel more for it, and then, when he got the money, he would like to buy in a free trade market what he requires for his every-day use. He is wise in his day and generation, but that condition of things cannot be realized. If Canada is ever to become a great country we must aim at developing along at least five lines —agriculture, manufacturing, lumber, mining and fishing. The several lines of industry must assist each other like partners, and one must contribute to the welfare of the other. We have to the south a country which has grown to enormous proportions in wealth and population, under a protective tariff. They have an average tariff against us of something over forty per cent on everything we send to them, while our tariff is about half that amount. While we are met by them with a high tariff it would be the grossest folly on our part to open our ports and let them send their products here and slaughter the institutions which we are endeavouring to build up. I do not wish to see our manufacturing institutions pampered and fed at the cost of the consumers, but we must give them an opportunity to live. If we opened our markets to-morrow the United States would wipe out of existence three-quarters of the manufacturing institutions of this country in three years.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What class of manufacturer would they wipe out?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Many classes. You cannot name a class that they would not wipe out—the manufacturer of agricultural implements, buggies, boots and shoes, would all be wiped out of existence. You cannot afford to allow that to be done, because, after ruining our industries, they might turn around and form a combination and charge us more than we are charged even by those we think are robbing us by the excessive price they are charging us under protection. We had a little incident illustrating that. Some years ago it was thought that it would be well in the interest of the farmers to put binder twine on the free list, which was done. The result was that every factory in Canada was closed down. They could not compete with the United States people in the manufacture of binder twine. Even the binder twine factory in the Kingston penitentiary was closed down, and what was the result? Two and a half years later binder twine was higher in Canada than it had ever been before.

When the manufacturers made a move to reopen their factories what was done? By some means—I do not know whether we ever got to the bottom of it—the Philippine islands were persuaded to pass a law imposing an export bounty of 2 cents a pound on manila going to any other country than the United States. That, of course, would increase the price of binder twine wherever that manila went except in the United States. Now we have had experience in those things, and we cannot afford to go on, or even expect to go on and prosper unless we have manufacturing institutions. I have not the slightest doubt that this commission, if prudently and carefully worked, may be of benefit to this country. I admit there are combinations that have been formed in Canada under the tariff, and I should like to see those combinations broken up. To-day I believe we have a combination whereby all the oatmeal of this country is sold by one or two agents. All the mills have entered into a combination and issued stock to each mill owner, and have also issued watered stock. That is a practice that this commission should aim at putting a stop to—that of allowing watered stock to be issued when combinations are formed. It enables the combines to exact from the consumers prices that will enable them to pay dividends upon that watered stock. The commission should aim at reporting to the Finance Minister every instance they find of a combination of that sort, and in every case where combinations are formed in restraint of trade, and for the purpose of increasing the price of an article, that article that they produce should be put at once upon the free list. In that way such combinations could be stopped. I am not an out and out protectionist in the same sense that I want to make millionaires of manufacturers at the cost of the consumers of this country, but I do want to see our manufacturers get a fair opportunity of living and successfully competing with the manufacturers in the United States. We can not, as a country, live and allow them to wipe out of existence those institutions that we have amongst us. We want our manufacturers to produce goods and place them in the hands of the consumer at the lowest possible price. I hope that the commission will look carefully into these matters and that such changes will be made from time to time as will enable our manufacturers to supply the wants of the people reasonably and well, and not merely to make themselves millionaires.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I am sure that members of the House will be pleased and amused with the wide range that this discussion has taken. It is a discussion on a proposition of the government to appoint a tariff commission, but we have had a very great divergence from that, and all subjects have been brought in, in reference to protection and free trade; the hon. member for Hastings even went back to the supposed soup kitchens in 1878, and traced the present prosperity of the country to the fact, as he said, that in 1879 the National Policy was introduced.

Any one who has read the history of this country knows that, after the introduction of the National Policy in 1879 there was a period of considerable expansion in this country, but as the years went around and the Conservative government of that day kept tinkering and tinkering with the tariff, constantly raising it higher and higher, we had a period of the greatest possible depression in this country in 1896. At that time, in the city of Toronto there were no less than six thousand empty houses. Men were running around seeking work and could not get it. Manufacturers in this country were standing idle. Many of them were not making money at all. This was under the so-called National Policy. The hon. gentleman stated that it always takes a few years after a policy like that is introduced before it begins to work. They had eighteen long years of the influence of the National Policy, and it was getting worse and worse all the time. In 1897, when the Liberals came into power, they introduced a new regime. They revised the tariff, largely downwards. They took the duty off woollen goods, they took the duty from that prime necessity of life in this cold country. The duties had stood at 60 to 70 per cent; they reduced them down to 30 or 35 per cent. The hon. gentleman took up the average of the tariff. It is true that when you take the percentage of the tariff the reduction does not appear to be so great. That is because the Liberal government, very wisely, in the interest of the people, largely increased the duties on what are called luxuries. They put an increased duty on whisky. They raised the excise duty from $1.70 to $1.90 a gallon. They put a very heavy duty on cigars and cigarettes. They put a duty of 15 cents a pound on tobacco. All these things were in the interest of the country. The duty on tobacco was put on to encourage the production of tobacco in the eastern and western portion of Ontario and it has proved very beneficial to the country. The point I make is this: that it is not fair to say, because the percentage is 20 per cent now and it was 21 per cent up to 1806, that one per cent is the extent of the reduction we made in the tariff. We reduced the tariff largely on things that were necessary for the comfort and convenience of the people, and increased the duty on the luxuries. It is not a fair thing to say the average is not much lower. The reduction in the duty amounted to nearly 2 per cent, which represents a reduction of 15 per cent on the whole tariff. That was the policy of the Liberal party. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat was kind enough to read a lecture to the hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Cloran) for some of his allusions to the people of the Northwest. I consider that those allusions were quite justified. It is an undoubted fact that the farmers of the Northwest, this year, are losing millions and millions of dollars on their crops which they cannot market, and which will rot upon the ground. The lecture that the hon. member from Mount Forest (Hon. Mr. McMullen) read him might very well be read to himself. He claimed that the people of eastern Canada had been burdened by the development of the Northwest. Every dollar that we invested in the Northwest has been repaid two dollars in return.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What keeps the manufacturers going from one end of this Dominion to the other? What keeps up the city of Toronto and the vast manufacturing establishments that are there? If it were not for the market that we have in the Northwest they would not be able to exist. The fact that we have surveyed the land free and given each settler 160 acres for nothing was a good thing. Did we do it for their benefit, or for the benefit of the whole people of Canada? I would be glad to be able to say to-morrow that there was one settler on every 160 acres of land in the great Northwest. It would be a great thing for Canada and for our manufacturers in the east; this Dominion would flourish as it never flourished before, and the farmers would be benefited thereby. The hon. gentleman also gave the farmers of the Northwest a little advice as to what they should do. He said they should build granaries and store their grain, and that it was impossible to expect any railway in five or six weeks to be able to move the crops of the Northwest. The fact is that five or six months have passed by and there are millions and millions of bushels of grain lying on the ground rotting. I am told that there are plenty of farmers up there now who have had judgments recorded against them because their crop is lying on the ground rotting and they cannot sell it. When the hon. gentleman says they should build granaries and that they should not expect to move their grain in six weeks, he is giving them advice that is very easy to offer, but, the farmers of the Northwest know their business as well as the hon. member for Mount Forest (Hon. Mr. McMullen). Then he announced that he was a protectionist and was in favour of protection.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He was not always that way.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—He said our manufacturers could not live, that they would be wiped out of existence, and he instanced the case of binder twine. I remember when binder twine was put on the free list, and the farmers' binder twine factory at Brantford paid the next year a dividend of 100 per cent, and the next year 60 per cent. It was only when the Spanish American war took place and manilla went up so high that they had to raise the price. The higher price was not because binder twine was put on the free list. If binder twine were subject to a duty of one or two cents upon it to-day, the price would be just that much higher to the farmers of this country. When you consider the millions and millions of pounds of binder twine that the farmers have to buy, we should make it as free as we possibly can. Now I do not believe our factories would be affected so very much. Many probably would be inconvenienced a little. Many of them probably would not pay such big dividends. The owners would not be able to live in such style if they had the free competition of the United States. While there are immense factories that have enormous capital, and that have been established for years and years in the United States, yet you will find in that country little factories growing up year by year and becoming stronger and stronger, and they are competing with these great manufacturing establishments that we fear so much. So it would be in Canada. We have the same raw materials here, our labour is as cheap, and our people are as intelligent and enterprising as they are in the United States. I, as a manufacturer, have no fear in my particular line. I can compete with any Yankee that ever set foot on top of the ground.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—My hon. friend referred to combines. He referred to the oatmeal millers. I am not interested in oatmeal, but I happen to know something of the oatmeal industry. While there was a merger, and several oatmeal factories joined together, yet there are a great many large independent oatmeal mills in this country, notably the Quaker Oats Company at Peterborough, that are not in the combine. There are other large companies competing with those that are in the combine. They all complain that, owing to the high price of oats and the low price of oatmeal, they are not able to make anything like a fair and reasonable profit. I believe every hon. member of this House recognizes the fact that in this country, with such enormous opportunities, and so many ways of developing industries, we require for a great many years a large revenue. It is admitted that we will, for many years to come, require a tariff—a reasonable tariff. I am in favour of a reasonable tariff, a revenue producing tariff. If you raise the tariff as high as they have it in the United States, then you have combines and the fact can be seen to-day. In the United States they have made millionaires by the thousand, but the condition of the workingman is worse than it was twenty years ago. The great success of the Democratic party is due to the fact that they are exposing the truth that the high cost of living and the enormous profit that these manufacturers are getting, are due to the combines and the high tariff.

The whole tendency of legislation in the United States is to lower the tariff. For the last few years we in Canada have had a very fair tariff. It may be too high in some things and low in others. It is impossible to have a perfect tariff. The tariff we have had in Canada for the last fifteen years has been a fair and reasonable one. It is enormously increased the prosperity of the country and that is one of the best evidences of its reasonableness. It is a tariff that has increased our foreign trade enormously, has built up our manufacturing establishments all over the country, and has brought prosperity to the farmer. In the province of Ontario the farmers are in a fairly prosperous condition but they are not making anything like the profit that they ought to make. They are not making any such profits as the manufacturers are making, but they are certainly making fair profits and better profits than they did under the National Policy that existed from 1878 up to 1896.

Now, that being the case, one great thing about the late government is this, that they did not tinker and tinker, and tinker with the tariff. There was a certain amount of stability about their tariff, and that, I think, above all, is what the people of this country want. I remember that from 1878 to 1896 every single year the Finance Minister brought down changes in the tariff, and owing to this uncertainty manufacturers did not know what they might expect, and it unsettled business, and caused a certain amount of discontent, because they were afraid to expand and grow as they should. The Liberal government revised the tariff in 1897, and did not touch it again for ten years: hence the manufacturers knew during those ten years that there was a certainty that the tariff was fixed, and although it did bear heavily on some, and probably too lightly on others, it was better to bear the ills we knew of than to fly to others we did not know. That tariff was in existence for ten years, and was one of the greatest features of the Liberal government. It contributed to a greater extent than anything I know of to produce the great prosperity that existed in this country. Now we find these conditions—a country enjoying tremendous prosperity, and making more progress in the last fifteen years than any country in the wide world, with everybody settled and satisfied, the manufacturers sending their goods to all foreign countries and increasing and expanding their businesses, the people and the farmers fairly well satisfied —and this government now propose to make what? A radical departure from that policy. They are creating a new department. Under the pretense of seeking information as to what is required, they are appointing a vast department composed of three men with salaries equal to those of cabinet ministers, with secretaries, and adepts, with all the clerks and paraphernalia of a department, which I am satisfied will cost the people of this country at least $75,000 a year. These men are appointed for life—for five years, and are eligible for reappointment—what for? To tinker with the tariff again; to tinker next year with the tariff, to revise it the second year, to revise it again the third year; unsettling business, creating dissatisfaction in the minds of people, and unhinging affairs generally. And to what end? For the sake of providing a new department and three officers. I know that the Prime Minister, before the elections, spoke about a tariff commission, but I am satisfied that very few, not even himself, conceived the idea of appointing such a vast concern as this is to be. One man could get all the information just as well as three. They have plenty of men in the departments that can get all the information that is required. We have the experience of fifteen years of remarkable prosperity and wonderful progress without a tariff commission, and during the time of the Conservatives, under the National Policy, they did not want a tariff commission to encourage that which led to the National Policy, according to the hon. member for Hastings—nor did they want a tariff commission all along the line for the eighteen years that they guided the destinies of this country, although they were revising and tinkering with the tariff every year. The recent government went about this matter in a businesslike way; they consulted not only the manufacturers, but the consumers and the producers as well, and found out what was in the interests of the country, and, without any tariff commission, they brought down a tariff which, as I have said, and everybody admits, created the greatest area of prosperity in Canada that has ever existed in any country in the world. With these facts before them I think our government should have hesitated to load upon this country the enormous expense that this tariff commission will involve.

If it were to be appointed for one or two years it would not be so bad, but the term is five years, and the appointments may be renewed, which means that the commissioners will be in office for life. I venture to say that the tariff commission will cost this country $75,000 per year. We have not only the salaries of the commissioners, but we have rents, and payments to clerks, stenographers and experts in the different trades. All these people will have to be employed and paid. The commissioners can go anywhere in the country, and with the consent of the Finance Minister, can travel the world over. It will be necessary for them to go to Europe, to Germany, to the United States if they want to get the information which they specify in this Bill. Therefore, I say that a roving commission, such as this, travelling all over the world will cost $75,000, if not a good deal more. This tariff commission is totally unnecessary. All the information which is sought to be obtained could have been secured by one or two of the numerous officials of the Finance Department, and I regret that the government has seen fit to introduce such a drastic measure as this. With regard to the tariff commission, my hon. friend says it is to be appointed in the interests of the manufacturers of the country. I have no doubt that the object of the tariff commission is so to present the evidence and information to the Finance Minister as to warrant him, if necessary, to raise the duties on many manufactures. But I warn the government that the people of this country will not tolerate it; that the tariff which has been in force for fifteen years has produced such prosperity in the country that the people do not want to go back to the old days between 1878 and 1896 when there was depression all over the country. The powers of the commission are very drastic. Enormous powers are given to them. To show that one man might have done the work, they have provided that one of the commissioners can obtain all the evidence required. They can go to a man's place of business, and I venture to say that many of our manufacturers of Toronto are getting a gold brick when they ask for a tariff commission. Many of them will not be so infatuated with it when the commissioner visits their place and demands the production of their books to ascertain what they pay for the raw material, what the labour costs them, and what they receive for the manufactured goods. This information is supposed to be confidential, but how can it be kept confidential when twelve or fifteen people must necessarily know all about the commission and the evidence submitted to them? I venture to say the tariff commission will yet be a very unpopular thing with the manufacturers throughout Canada. I believe the tariff commission is to be appointed first for giving jobs to some faithful men in the party, and, secondly, for the purpose of securing such evidence that the government may be able to raise the duty on certain manufactured articles if they so desire. I do not believe they will venture upon that. The people of this country will not tolerate a further raise of the tariff, because they are in favour of lowering the tariff, if anything. The prices of the necessaries of life, and the cost of living in the great cities have been greatly increased, and there are thousands of men in the city of Toronto, and I venture to say in the cities of Montreal and Ottawa, who are finding it very difficult to make both ends meet. The whole effort of the government and parliament should be to devise ways and means to reduce the cost of living. In the recent negotiation for reciprocity with the United States, I was strongly in favour of that agreement. I believe that this country committed the greatest mistake it ever made, when it rejected the agreement that was obtained so unexpectedly—an agreement which we had long been looking for, and which would have enabled our farmers, in Ontario, the Northwest, and along the shores of the Baie des Chaleurs, and the Bay of Fundy, and those who reap their harvest from the sea, to sell their goods in the best market of the world, and our manufacturers would not have been touched by the reciprocity pact to any appreciable extent. It is true automobiles were reduced from 35 to 30 per cent, but I think they could stand a ten or fifteen per cent reduction still. Some agricultural products were reduced from 17½ to 15 per cent, but the reduction, so far as manufactured goods were concerned, was almost nil. The treaty enabled our consumers and producers to sell their raw products in the best possible market. We have at present two markets for our goods, the home market and the free market across the ocean. This agreement would not have closed one market, while it opened another door to the markets of the United States, and if prices were better there than in England, we would send our goods across the border. If they were not any better, we would send our goods to England. I think this Bill is unnecessary, useless and highly expensive, and that it will produce no good to the country. The government have always obtained this information through the department, and I do not think this Bill is at all necessary.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—Taking my cue from the hon. gentleman from Hastings, who, speaking on this motion last Thursday, said that he was not enamoured with the measure presented to the House, we on this side, following his argument, are not enamoured with the Bill. Following further the argument of my hon. friend who, being in favour of a highly protective tariff, could not help having a dig at England, because a few knives from the United States or perhaps Germany had been sold to England, I desire in this connection to read three lines of statistics to show that free trade England is still at the head of all nations as far as trade is concerned, defying competition the world over. There is not a nation on the face of the earth to-day that can borrow a dollar without going on the English market. How is it that a country, laying down as the first plank in its platform free trade, has defied competition the world over, and is to-day the greatest producing market the world has ever seen. Speaking at the last election, Mr. McKenna, M. P., dealt with the arguments of tariff reformers. He said that in 1908 the value of the exported manufactured goods per head of population in the United States was £1 15s. 9d., in France £3 2s. 4d., in Germany £3 7s. 5d., while in the United Kingdom it was £6 13s. 4d., more than double the trade of any protective country in the old world. Such a state of affairs is possible in England, but in this country free trade is impossible, owing to the powerful neighbours to the south of us. We have had, in the last sixteen years, unbounded prosperity. During the election of 1896 I remember well the cry that was sent forth throughout the length and breadth of the country, that, if the Liberals came into power, all factories would be closed. In my own constituency large posters were displayed, warning 600 and 800 men that if the Liberals were returned to power this factory would be closed the day after the election. What has been the outcome? That identical factory in the county of Jacques Cartier, has since increased its capital from $500,000 to $5,000,000. It was employing at that time between 500 and 600 men; to-day it is employing more than 3,000 men. We Liberals simply answered that cry by saying that we had no idea of destroying industries in this country, but, on the contrary, our aim was to foster them, by giving every body a chance, by protecting, within the lines of our tariff, whatever industry might spring up throughout the country. What has been the consequence? The Liberals came into power in 1896. Mr. Fielding, in the second year of his term, lowered the duty on certain articles, and with what result? Unbounded prosperity. In 1905 Mr. Fielding, accompanied by Mr. Paterson, then Minister of Customs, and by Mr. Brodeur, then Postmaster General, commenced an inquiry through the length and breadth of Canada. They travelled over 11,000 miles, held over 90 public meetings. No secret meetings were allowed. It is stated in their report that whenever anybody desired to whisper in their ears their own particular grievance, it was not listened to. They held an open inquiry and listened to every one who had anything to say, either for or against the tariff. We should insist upon an inquiry open to all Canadians, whether producers or consumers, so that we could ascertain the real wants of the country, and discover how we could better our tariff, either by lowering it or increasing it. All should be done for the welfare of the Canadian people. What was the result of the inquiry of 1905? Unbounded prosperity throughout Canada. The Minister of Finance last Friday issued a statement, which was given out to the newspapers, that he was going to have the largest surplus of any year in the history of the Canadian government. Is that not the best sign of the present prosperity of Canada? Our opponents in late years always said that our surpluses were fictitious. We have not seen this year a single word, in the Tory press, about this enormous surplus of $35,000,000 being fictitious. Nor has the late Liberal government been given credit for this enormous surplus. Taking the figure of $35,000,000 as the surplus for the fiscal year ending on the 31st of this month, is it not time that the country should be relieved from a certain amount of taxation, and that the government should apply itself to the task of cheapening the cost of living throughout Canada? It is a fact that, whilst in 1906 the cost of living was $77 per head, it has since risen to $100.50 per head of population. Is it not, therefore, the duty of every government, in view of this state of affairs, to endeavour to relieve the people of Canada from a certain amount of taxation? The industries could well stand it. When we look east and west, north and south, and observe the number of manufacturers that are highly, not to say scandalously prosperous, is it not time that a certain amount of the protective duties through which they have prospered, were removed, so as to cheapen the cost of living throughout Canada?

What is the result of high protection? High cost of living. Take Germany to-day, which is groaning under the cost of living. The population has risen en masse there asking the government to find some way of reducing the cost of living. Take France, which for years had the reputation of being a cheap country, under a protective tariff the cost of living has been increased over 50 per cent, and riots have taken place within the last two years, housewives, and other people who ought to know, calling upon the government to reduce the tariff so that everybody could live as they used to live when the tariff was lower. Coming to this country, we are asked to sanction the appointment of three commissioners to go through the length and breadth of this country to inquire into trade conditions throughout Canada. In my estimation this will be second hand information; it will be a repetition of what these commissioners will hear; and I venture to state that this commission will not be a success, for the very simple reason that people having reasons to give would rather give them at first hand than second hand. The best way was adopted by the late Liberal government in selecting three of its ministers to go through the country. They got information first hand. They listened to the wails and plaudits of the people, and then came before their colleagues and give viva voce a report of what they heard, and on their testimony a tariff was framed which brought to Canada success and prosperity. We are told that three such commissioners are going to be appointed. How will they be selected? Will they be chosen from the governing classes of this country? Will the friends of the party now in power be requested to furnish the necessary number of commissioners? For instance, will the banking class and the manufacturing class be requested to appoint one commissioner; will the consumers and the working classes of Canada be requested to appoint another commissioner? And lastly will the great producing class of grain growers and farmers throughout Canada be consulted in the appointment of this commission We have been told that three such commissioners would be chosen, that the banking and manufacturing interests should name one commissioner, that the consuming and working classes should chose from among themselves another, and that the grain growers and farmers of Canada should appoint one of their number as a third commissioner. You would have in that case an ideal commission, one in which we would have unbounded confidence, because one class, that is to say the consuming class, is everlastingly complaining about the high prices it has to pay for daily necessaries, while the producing class, or the grain growers and farmers, are complaining that they do not get enough for their produce. This would be an ideal commission; it would be a trinity representing all the great interests of this country. In that commission we would have full confidence—confidence that those people would look after the best interests of this great country. How are these three commissioners to be appointed? Who are they going to be? Will they be of one class only? Will they be all of the manufacturing class, or all of the banking class, or all of the grain growing class? We are told nothing. We are asked to vote blindly for the appointment of three commissioners. I say that there is enough of the best material in the present government to choose commissioners from among its members—imitating in that respect the commission sent forth by the late Liberal government. Take the Minister of Customs; is there a man better able than a doctor to feel the pulse of this country? Is there a man better qualified to find out what is necessary to make his department prosperous? Take the Finance Minister—a gentleman, we are told, of unbounded knowledge in the financial world; is he going to be compelled to read over and pick out from this mass of evidence that will be taken by those three commissioners and find out the points that will most attract his attention, to aid him in relieving this country of taxation without lessening its budget? It will be work done twice over; and we on this side of the House taking our cue from what I have said—that the ideal commission would be one I have just named—are opposed to this measure, because we see no good result to spring from it, but that certain highly protected classes will, as in the past, still maintain their rights—pretended rights we say—which have increased the cost of living in this country one hundred fold. Taking our cue from manufacturers who seeking their pound of flesh for services rendered to the Conservative party, not only in the last election, but in previous elections, will require the present tariff to be maintained, we have no confidence in this measure. What we should love to see is a commissioner taken from the great manufacturing classes, appointed by themselves; a commissioner appointed by the agricultural interests in this country; and a commissioner appointed by the consuming element in Canada. We are told, further, that great benefits will result from this commission, in what way is left to the future to prove; but we say that the course pursued by the late Liberal government was the true and only wise one, and the best proof of it is the prosperity which Canada is to-day enjoying, the strong position of our finances, and the high state in which the credit of Canada stands to-day.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (Z 2) An Act for the relief of George Mackay Sutherland.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (U 2) An Act for the relief of Alvena Bell Leaitch.—Hon. Mr. Baird.

Bill (46) An Act to incorporate the British Trust Company.—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

Bill (80) An Act respecting the Dominion Trust Company, Limited, and to change its name to Dominion Trust Company.—Hon. Sir Richard Scott.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 13, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

THE HUDSON BAY RAILWAY TERMINUS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN inquired:

1. Has the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway been located?

2. Is it to be at Churchill or Port Nelson?
3. If at Port Nelson, upon whose recommendation?
4. How near in miles can vessels drawing twenty feet of water approach Port Nelson?
5. What is the depth of water at one mile from shore—2 miles, 3 miles, 4 miles, 5 miles, 6 miles, 7 miles, 8 miles, 9 miles, 10 miles, 11 miles, 12 miles, 13 miles, 14 miles, 15 miles, 16 miles, 17 miles, 18 miles, 19 miles and 20 miles?
6. What are the names of the naval experts who have recommended Port Nelson?
7. If there are none, is it the intention of the government to appoint naval experts to report on this harbour?
8. Are there any naval experts in the present cabinet?
9. Is it not a fact that for 300 years ships of light draught have been obliged to anchor —many out at sea—opposite Port Nelson and discharge their cargoes in lighters?
10. Is it not a fact that it is muddy bottom, offering very poor anchorage?
11. Could there be better conditions for a shipwreck anywhere on Hudson bay with a north wind?
12. Is Churchill not a better harbour?
13. Will the government place on the Table any reports in their possession, printed or otherwise, concerning Port Nelson?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The replies are as follow:

1. No.
2. Not yet decided.
3. Answered by No. 1.
4. Vessels drawing twenty feet of water can enter the inner harbour of Port Nelson at high tide.
5. Measuring from a point in Nelson harbour which was proposed for the location of piers, the depths of the channel are as follows, at low water: 1 mile 19 feet, 2 miles 15 feet, 3 miles 22 feet, 4 miles 20 feet, 5 miles 24 feet, 6 miles 24 feet, 7 miles 50 feet, 8 miles 70 feet, 9 miles 90 feet, 10 miles 40 feet, 11 miles 36 feet, 12 miles 30 feet, 13 miles 20 feet, 14 miles 22 feet, 15 miles 21 feet, 16 miles 17 feet, 17 miles 20 feet, 18 miles 22 feet, 19 miles 25 feet, 20 miles 30 feet.
6. Port Nelson not having been decided upon, until the question is decided the information will not be given.
7. Until decision is rendered, not at liberty to state intentions.
8. Modesty forbids stating accomplishments of minister.

An hon. MEMBER—Have they any?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, many.

9. The departmental records do not give any information at that distant date.
10. The C.G.S. 'Minto' rode out a heavy northeast gale with the wind at 60 miles per hour in the deep hole about nine miles from the site of wharf, and reported good holding ground and fair protection from the sea.
11. Yes.
12. Subject of consideration after investigation.
13. Not at present, until a decision has been reached as to where the terminus will be.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN — Perhaps the House will forgive me if I say that soundings showing only 17 feet of water at mile 16 corroborate the information already possessed by a great number of people, that there is a bar outside of the harbour. If there is only 17 feet of water on that bar it is not safe for vessels. I speak more particularly now, when I see the hon. member in this House from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell); he understands navigation and knows that a bar with only 17 feet of water over it is not safe, and that a vessel could not stay there in a storm. It is also evident that only at high tide could vessels get over the bar. That the 'Minto' could have ridden inside of that bar in a northeast wind may be possible. The 'Minto' is a very staunch little vessel and these government steamers have special anchors and other facilities. I am credibly informed by sea-faring men that it would not be safe for ordinary vessels, and that nowhere on Hudson bay could conditions be better for a shipwreck than at the mouth of the river at Port Nelson. I have no motive in saying this: we are all here to give any information we may possess for the benefit of the country. I believe that is what senators are for. I might be allowed to say to the government that before deciding which port they will select, they should look carefully into this matter. I know that the late government were at fault just the same. I understand that the hon. Mr. Graham did pronounce in favour of Port Nelson on the report of an engineer. I claim it is not a matter for civil engineers; the government of the day ought to send a naval expert there to find out whether it is a suitable place for a port. Civil engineers are able to go there and take soundings in summer or winter; that is all right, but that secures only part of the information needed. The government should have, in addition, a report from a naval expert, and I think that report would show Churchill to be infinitely the better harbour. Possibly it may be closed earlier in the season, but the season is short at either place. The government should also, during the coming summer, send a ship to Hudson bay and ascertain whether it could ride safely at Port Nelson. It would be well to see if they could find a single company, either the Allan line, the White Star Dominion line, the Canadian Pacific railway, the McKenzie-Mann's line, the Donaldson line, the Reford line, or any steamship company, that would trust a steamer in Hudson straits. I have often addressed the House on this point. I have read all the reports and they agree as to the navigation of the straits. Captain Wakeham stated that in the month of July his ship was lifted bodily out of the water by the pressure of the ice, and that if it had not been a ship of special design, it could never have stood the strain. If hon. gentlemen will read Garneau's history of the famous expeditions of D'Iberville, they will find that one of his ships was crushed before his eyes, and the men just had time to get across the ice to safety. It was the only ship commanded by D'Iberville that reached Port Churchill. If hon. gentlemen read later reports they will find out that the seasons have not changed. The weather is similar now. Then we have the expeditions of Mr. Lowe, who states that they got caught in the ice every month. Earl Grey happened to get favourable weather, and during the first week of August or the last week of July, managed to get out of the bay, but we have Commander Wakeham and Lieutenant Gordon reporting that they were crushed in the ice every year, though their ships were specially constructed for that navigation. Ordinary ships could not live in those straits. The tide runs at a rate of some nine miles an hour, with the ebb and flow, and the navigation is most dangerous. I am not against the Hudson Bay railway. I think it is a good thing, if they can only get to a decent harbour like Fort Churchill; then come down 700 miles to the mouth of the Nottaway and connect with the road which is to be built by the province of Quebec, and thus make connection with the Transcontinental. The navigation of the bay is quite feasible in summer, but the navigation of the straits is difficult. I should like to challenge any one to find a single company that will send an ordinary ship up there this summer.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—How many months will navigation be open?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The bay itself will be open five or six months, but you cannot navigate those straits. The reports are in the library, and accessible to hon. gentlemen in this House. The earliest period at which anybody has ever entered those straits is the 10th July, and the latest they have been out is October, and according to reports in the library they have had terrible snow storms in the middle of August.

MILEAGE ON TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. What is the estimated distance in miles via the Transcontinental railway between Winnipeg and Quebec?
2. What is the estimated distance in miles via the Transcontinental railway, Cochrane Junction, North Bay, Scotia Junction, between Winnipeg and Montreal?
3. What is the distance in miles via the Canadian Pacific railway between Winnipeg and Quebec?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The reply furnished by the department is as follows:—

1. Mileage between Winnipeg and Quebec via the Transcontinental railway is 1,350·95 miles.

2. Winnipeg to Cochrane Junction via Transcontinental railway is 776·42 miles; Cochrane Junction to North Bay, by the T. & N. O., 252·80 miles; North Bay to Scotia Junction, by G.T.R., 65·90 miles; Scotia Junction to Ottawa, by G.T.R., 213·35 miles; Ottawa to Montreal, by the G.T.R., 116·20 miles; mileage between Winnipeg and Montreal is 1,424·67 miles.

3. The mileage between Winnipeg and Quebec by the Canadian Pacific Railway is 1,587 miles.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—When I entered the Chamber I heard my name mentioned in connection with a report. Since taking my seat I learn that I was one of those on a list of senators who had not signed the roll. I beg to inform the House that I have signed the roll and taken the oath, and that on Friday next I will move that the report be amended in that particular.

The SPEAKER—I understood that the list contains the names of those who have done so.

THIRD READING.

Bill (Q 2) An Act to incorporate the Interprovincial Fire Insurance Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I give notice that hereafter, when the Senate adjourns on Fridays, it do stand adjourned until Mondays at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I should like to ask my hon. friend if he is in a position to state what Bills of any importance, other than those now in our hands, are likely to be brought forward by the government? I may point out to him that it will be as well to give reasonable time for any Bills of importance, anxious as we are to see, I won't say the last of him, but the last of the session. There are several measures which will undoubtedly require some discussion. Perhaps he could tell me what other measures than those on the paper the government are likely to bring forward?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We shall have in this House the Grain Bill and the Manitoba Boundaries Bill at a very early day. I am unaware of any important measures that will be brought down by the government, other than those that are now before parliament, that is, measures involving discussion at length.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I suppose in connection with the Manitoba Boundaries Bill, there will be Bills submitted as to the boundaries of Quebec and Ontario; those are a sort of adjuncts, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think in all probability that will be the case, and yet I cannot say with definiteness. I have not made inquiry into that, but that subject has been discussed very much with the other two Bills.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Then the only important ones——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Those are the only ones of which I am aware.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will inquire and let us know to-morrow if the government have any other important measures in store for us.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I will inquire.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Did the hon. gentleman state that the had a doubt as to Bills being brought down for the extension of the Ontario boundary as well as that of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, but I understand the boundaries of those will be likewise dealt with.

THIRD READING.

Bill (U 2) An Act for the relief of Alvena Bell Leaitch.—Hon. Mr. Baird.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL RELATING TO PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. POWER—When this Bill was being read a second time I made a few obvious criticisms on it, and I propose to say a few words more on the Bill at this time. It differs, in the first place, from the existing law on the subject in this respect; the existing law provides that a person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may be put into subdivision 'B' of the second division. This Bill provides that he may be put into subdivision 'A' of the second division, or into subdivision 'B' of the first division. The provision I have just mentioned, is a provision of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908. The object of that Act, as stated at the time, and as we understood it here, was to take the civil service, as far as practicable, out of politics. This Bill is intended to steep the civil service, as far as the Bill goes, in politics. It is practically driving a coach and four through the Civil Service Act. We have to consider what might happen. Under this Bill a gentleman comes in as private secretary of the minister. He is not required to pass an examination such as all others who come into the civil service have to pass. He is liable to be placed immediately above the heads of men who have long served the public faithfully. After the lapse of a year he can be made permanent in that position. It must strike every hon. gentleman that this is a measure which is unfair in itself. It is contrary to the Civil Service Act; it is contrary to every dictate of fair-play, and it is most unfair to the existing staffs. Here you have outsiders placed over the heads of men who have been in the civil service, and who passed an examination to show their fitness and qualification for office, men who have served the country in some cases for 20 or 25 years. It must strike every hon. gentleman that it is exceedingly unfair, and this Bill, if it should become law, may lead to very gross abuse. I do not wish it to be understood that I am at all opposed to placing the private secretaries on a satisfactory footing. The conditions with respect to private secretaries at present are undoubtedly not quite satisfactory. There is a provision that a private secretary, in addition to the salary which he gets under the wording of the Civil Service Amendment Act, shall have a yearly allowance of $600, and when the civil servant ceases to be a private secretary, the payment of $600 is supposed to cease also. That no doubt is rather a grievance to the gentlemen who have been receiving the $600. Considering that these gentlemen are to be exempted from the obligation of undergoing an examination it strikes me that it would be quite sufficient, if we are going to pay them larger salaries than they have been paid in the past, to provide that they should have these larger salaries without the $600. You put a man who just comes in, without any necessary qualification, into subdivision A of the first division. He receives about $3,400 a year, and then you give him $600 more, which brings him up to $4,000. That is a larger salary than the deputy ministers were receiving ten years ago. Considering that there are about fifteen private secretaries, one could see to what abuse the carrying out of this measure, if it becomes law, may lead. I feel that there is no urgency about the matter. The passing of this measure is not urgent, because the Bill itself provides that a year shall elapse before the civil servant shall be permanently in this advantageous position, and if we defer action for a year, it will not prevent the civil servant being placed in a proper position a year from this. The government have taken power to appoint a third member of the civil service commission. I may say, speaking for myself as an individual member, that I have not as strong an objection to that measure as some other members have felt; and I think that this civil service commission should, during the coming year, consider carefully the whole subject of the organization of the civil service, and that when we meet again the government should be in a position to lay on the table of both Houses a report from these commissioners setting forth the manner in which in their judgment, the civil service should be organized. Any such report would naturally make well considered provisions for the case of private secretaries, but if we pass this measure now, and the civil service commissioners do undertake to consider the organization of the civil service as a whole, they will be met, when they come to deal with the cases of private secretaries, with this enactment, and it will be claimed that parliament is not at liberty to deal with the private secretaries in a way that is fair to the public service and to the other members of the civil service, because these private secretaries will have, during recess of parliament, acquired vested rights. That is one of the strong objections to our dealing with the matter now. During the interim between this session and next session the private secretaries of the present ministers will not suffer very seriously. They will be in just the same position as were the private secretaries of the ministers who have gone out of office, and I think, take it altogether, these gentlemen did not fare too badly. The private secretary is generally a comparatively young man, and a salary of $1,600, with $600 additional, is very fair pay for a young man who is just beginning his career in the civil service. It may be thought that we should do all that we can now; but the hon. leader of the government stated, in reply to a question from the right hon. leader of the opposition just now, that it was not proposed to pass any further important measure with respect to the civil service. That was involved in the answer which the hon. gentleman gave. It will be remembered that the most urgent matter in the interests of the public, and also of the civil service is the placing of the retirement of civil servants on a proper basis. There should be a respectable superannuation system, and some provision made for the families of civil servants who die.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This House two years ago considered this subject with a good deal of care. A committee sat on the question, held several meetings and presented a report which, with one slight amendment, made on a motion of the hon. gentleman who now leads the government, was adopted unanimously by this House. The House committed itself to the Bill, and commended the measure to the favourable consideration of the government. I regret to say that the late government, whilst they were in favour of the measure, did not deal with it as promptly as they might have done. The right hon. gentleman who leads the present government expressed himself on more than one occasion as being in favour of a measure of that kind. It was expected by the civil servants, and I think too by the public, that when the present governement came in they would deal with this question of the retirement of public servants. As I say, it is a much more urgent matter than the addition to the salaries of private secretaries; but the government have not done that. They propose to let that matter stand, and there is this to be borne in mind; that there was a Bill in existence which had been approved by the Civil Service Association, and which, while it might need amendment in some particulars, was, as a whole, a measure that might very well have been adopted. If the government had taken hold of that measure they could, without any difficulty, have had it become law during the present session. If they propose to deal with the civil service as a whole there is something to be said in favour of deferring action, but the same argument applies with greater force to the Bill now before us. I am speaking now as an independent member of this House, and not because this Bill is a government measure, but I should be anxious to see this question of the private secretaries settled, and settled in a way that would be fair to them and not unfair to other members of the public service. If the measure had been introduced by the political party with which I generally act, I think that I should probably have taken just about the same line that I take now. I, therefore, move that the committee rise.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the fears expressed by my hon. friend as to this involving the civil service in politics are entirely groundless. This does not furnish a new condition or a radical departure from the law as it stands upon the statute-book, except as to giving private secretaries an advanced status over that which they occupy under the Act. It was ascertained by the late government, and readily acknowledged upon the floor of the House, that the Civil Service Act did not make satisfactory provision for private secretaries. Even Sir Wilfrid Laurier supported this Bill upon its introduction, and said he regarded it as necessary, using these words:

> The object of the Bill is simply to give the private secretaries of ministers rank and status which they cannot have at present under the law. I find no fault with that, and am ready to give the suggestion of the government favourable consideration. I know by experience that it is impossible to get the services of a private secretary qualified to discharge the duties unless we give them sufficient salary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Can the hon. gentleman tell us whether those remarks were made before or after the government had declined to make the Bill applicable to all private secretaries?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When the Bill was up for second reading.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I have reason to believe that the Bill was modified to meet Sir Wilfrid Laurier's own views, to do justice to the secretaries of the old ministers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why my hon. friend, who usually exercises very great exactitude in what he says upon subjects of this kind, should say that the design of this Bill is to place the civil service in politics, or to take the civil service outside of the scope of the commission, I really cannot appreciate. It simply proposes giving permission to the ministers to advance their private secretaries from subdivision 'B' of the second division to subdivision 'A' of the second division, or subdivision 'B' of the first division.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is quite a lift.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend seems to assume that the private secretaries will receive the maximum salary. That does not necessarily follow. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that there are very important departments of the public service that require private secretaries of a higher standing, and of greater ability, than the private secretaries of what I might term the minor departments. I further say, with the greatest possible confidence, that it would be utterly impossible for business and financial men to secure the services of such men as are required to perform the duties of private secretaries, even at the advanced salary proposed by this Bill. My hon. friend compares a private secretary enjoying a maximum salary, which this would afford, with a deputy minister before the passage of the Civil Service Act. I say a private secretary of a minister performs much more important duties, very frequently than the deputy minister, and it is utterly impossible to secure the service of such men without reasonable compensation. It is not in the public interest that inferior men should be selected for the performance of very important and high-class duties. My hon. friend has said this could be deferred for a year. The late government met the same difficulty as this government is experiencing, and it is unreasonable to suppose that private secretaries can be secured, who often times have to sacrifice very good positions to enter upon an uncertain tenure of office. There must be a certainty before you can secure men who will sacrifice good positions to become servants of the government. As to this becoming the subject of abuse, I quite confess that it could be. There is a possibility of its being subject to abuse precisely the same as the law which is at present upon the statute-book. It does not follow, and it cannot be reasoned out logically, that it will be the subject of greater abuse than any other legislation upon the statute-books. There is not a law within the four corners of the statute-books that cannot be the subject of abuse. We must place a fair amount of confidence in the administration of public affairs by ministers of the Crown charged with the performance of these duties. It certainly would be a very paltry thing to suppose that a minister of the Crown, charged with the administration of very important affairs, is going to to use this power for the purpose of thrusting into the public service an official who otherwise would not act as private secretary. We must take these chances. I am not aware that any charge was brought against the late government of abusing the Act as it has stood upon the statute-book. I have a higher conception of public men on both sides of politics than to think they are going to resort to petty tricks of the kind that have been intimated for the purpose of giving status to a public officer.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Will the hon. gentleman tell me why the Bill is retroactive, coming into force on the 10th October, 1911?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For the reason that the private secretaries who were then secured by the Ministers, some of whom had abandoned very important positions to accept these offices, had to receive some assurance, I apprehend, from the Minister that their status would count from that particular date. The law up to the present time would not permit this salary being paid, and except the law be made retroactive they would be under a disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Would that cover the private secretaries of the ex-ministers?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Why not?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Because this would simply go back to the date of office upon which the present private secretaries entered the service.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Why not say the 1st October instead of the 10th?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My recollection is that it was the 10th day of October the government came into office.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Was there not an understanding with some of the ex-ministers?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I cannot say that, except that this Bill received the support of the late government and the House of Commons, and the commendation of the ex-Prime Minister in the language which I have read. Such provision as could be made within the law has been made for the secretaries of the late government.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I asked the hon. gentleman if these observations of the ex-Prime Minister were made before or after the Minister of Finance announced that this Bill would be applied to the secretaries of the ex-ministers?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—These remarks were made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when the Bill was in committee, and the Bill came from the committee just as we have it.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am in favour of the Bill as far as it goes, but I would like to have it apply to the secretaries of the ex-ministers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not see how that could be done by this Bill. In the first place, it is a money Bill and this House could not amend it. In the second place, the conditions would have to be especially provided for. The conditions are entirely different. This simply amends the Civil Service Act so that, from the date upon which the private secretaries, who would get the advantage of the Bill, enter upon their duties, the increased salary would come.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not see why the Senate could not amend the Bill, by just changing the date, and make it date ten days back. That would not make much difference, and I think this Bill has a right to do that. I should like to support the Bill, but there is something that I do not understand, and that is putting the Bill into force, when the new private secretaries would be affected. I am favourably impressed by the remarks of the ex-Prime Minister, in whom I have the greatest confidence. I do not understand why he should support a Bill in which his own private secretary is not included. I should like to support the Bill, but I do not find my way very clear to do so as it is at present.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) will readily appreciate the fact that we could not originate a Bill dealing with finance. We could not amend this Bill so as to make provision for the payment of any money out of the public treasury. Besides we have no knowledge upon that particular point. And, furthermore, the proposition which my hon. friend suggests, would not meet the conditions to which he has referred. This looks to a private secretary giving a year of his services before that could be done. In order to act on his suggestion, we would have to go back over a year or a year and a half. That is a condition that I am satisfied the government and the members of the late government have an understanding upon.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—If there is an understanding it is quite different.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The ex-Prime Minister gave his strongest support to this measure, and spoke several times upon it, because he was confronted with the same conditions and the same difficulties which I have pointed out. There was no amendment moved to that, no hostile criticism offered; but I say the support of the ex-Prime Minister was given to it, and also that of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I suppose we may take it for granted that there was an understanding.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think that the matter of which my hon. friend speaks has been satisfactorily adjusted. The attempt of my hon. friend from Halifax to couple this Bill with a system of superannuation at this time seems unreasonable. The two subjects are entirely distinct the one from the other.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I simply made the point that this was not an urgent measure, that it was not as urgent as the other Bill, and it was thought proper to let the other Bill stand over till next session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In answer to that I would say, it is because the other is a question of policy, and it is for the government to consider very gravely the question as to whether the country shall be involved in a system which would necessarily result in the payment of a very large sum annually to the civil servants, and it would be unreasonable to suppose that this government, coming into office just on the threshold of the session of parliament, should be able to give mature consideration to a superannuation measure and bring it down at this session. While I am not giving expression to any opinions on the subject, yet I am bound to say it is one which must necessarily demand a great deal of information before anything is done about it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Whilst I am not going to support the motion that the committee rise, or any other amendment, because the chances are that any amendment of that kind would not receive the sanction of the other House and possibly might be unconstitutional for the reasons mentioned by the leader of the government—that we cannot amend a Bill which deals with money matters—I must say I think there is an invidious discrimination here which I do not like. Why cannot a private secretary, who has acted as such in the past, be eligible for appointment to this subdivision just as well as a secretary who is now acting, or who has been appointed since the 10th of October, unless this government is prepared to say that because a private secretary acted as such for a minister who was a member of a Liberal government in the past, he is not eligible. Why this distinction? My hon. friend says that apparently there has been some understanding with the late government. Well, we do not know that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. I understand the late ministers made due provision for their private secretaries. I am not prepared to say how it was done, but I think the private secretaries of all the ministers have been duly provided for.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think my hon. friend is in error there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may be, in saying that all of them are, but I know that some of them are.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am quite certain that if it was done it was only done in a few cases.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may be in error in saying all, but I am not aware of any isolated case in which such was not done, and yet I do not speak with authority on the subject.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend admits that if any case of that kind exists it will be impossible to provide for it here, and he will see that I am quite right in saying that there is a discrimination under the Bill. While I am not going to propose any amendment, I am going to suggest to the hon. leader of the House that the only right thing to do would be to let this Bill stand and amend it so that every gentleman who was chosen by a minister to act as his private secretary shall be eligible under this Act. I hope my suggestion will commend itself to the leader of the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not very much concerned with the late secretaries, who went out of office with the late cabinet, because it would seem to me that it was for their superiors, who are now sitting to the left of the Speaker in the other House, to attend to looking after them. I simply rose to say that I feel somewhat hampered by the information of the hon. leader of the government when he states that this is a Bill which could not be amended by this House. I would not be disposed to concur in the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax, because I still cling to the idea I suggested the other day on the second reading, that the one year mentioned in the Bill is too short, and my intention was to move to replace the word 'one' by the word 'three,' as the minimum time which a secretary would have to serve before he would be entitled to get that very high salary which is now mentioned in the Bill. It is because of a conviction that we can deal with this Bill in committee and amend it if we desire, that I intend to act on the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, who declines to vote that the committee rise.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not wish to go on record as admitting the position of the leader of this House that this is a money Bill and that we cannot touch it. If we cannot touch it, what is proposed by my hon. friend from De Lorimier coud not be put either, because in nearly every Bill there is a question of money involved, and therefore, it would be useless to ask us to study this Bill. I have in my hands a Bill which is to come before us in reference to the improvement of highways. That is all a question of money, and is it to be said that the Senate cannot amend a Bill like that? It is not only a money Bill, but it goes further and says that money is to be granted to the provinces.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would draw attention to the fact that the Speaker of the other House has specially declared that this Bill has a reference to money, but is not a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not care if he declares that; I say this is not a money Bill any more than the other one, and I say that if this Bill is a money Bill we could accept the few words suggested by my hon. friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) just as in this Bill (77) about the improvement of highways. I am not going to vote for the amendment, but it is not because I think this is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the hon. leader of the government in this House should reconsider his opinion with regard to this being a money Bill. If this is a money Bill, the Civil Service Act would be a money Bill. It is a Bill to amend the Civil Service Act, and surely this House was competent to deal with that Act when it was presented, and to amend it, and I think this House did exercise its power in that respect in dealing with the Civil Service Act. The money part of it is a mere incident to the Bill itself, which is intended to deal with a class of persons occupying positions in the civil service, and therefore I think it is quite plain that it is not a money Bill which is outside the jurisdiction of this branch of parliament. Let my hon. friend from Halifax correct me if I am in error, because I have not had occasion to pay any attention to this Bill until a few minutes ago. My understanding as to the effect of the Bill as presented is that it is merely increasing the salaries of private secretaries to the ministers. It provides for them being placed in a higher rank than they could have been placed in under the Act as it stands on our statute-book. The latter portion of the clause says

> And after one year's service as such secretary, he shall be deemed to be permanently appointed to the inside service at the salary he is receiving as such clerk, and would rank in such subdivision.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I pointed that out quite distinctly.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Then it escaped my attention. My mind was not perfectly clear as to whether the change in the last portion of the clause from what it was and what it is in the statute, has the effect of making any change. I do not think it has. What is the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not suppose it did.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As far as I am concerned, I think that a good deal of latitude should be given to the ministers in the appointment of their private secetaries, and the latitude should extend to their being able to demand persons properly qualified, and of course to pay them proper salaries, and, therefore, I would not be disposed to challenge the Bill in that respect, but when my attention is called to the effect of this law as it stands, and as it will stand on the statute-book if this Bill is passed, I think the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier is a wise one, that the delay of one year is too short, and especially when we are going to increase the salaries of these private secretaries in a very large measure. It might be the means of placing in the civil service a great number of persons who would be passing through the secretaryship mainly for the purpose of reaching the inside service and receiving exorbitant salaries compared to the other members of the civil service, and therefore I think this House should be guarded in dealing with that part of the clause. It seems to me, also, that we should be further enlightened as to whether provision has been made for the secretaries of the late ministers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I direct my hon. friend's attention to the discussion which took place in the House of Commons. The point was raised by Mr. Lemieux, who said:

> Was it not the intention of the right hon. gentleman to do that?

Referring to Mr. Borden, and Mr. Borden answered him:

> No, that did not occur to me, for I had understood that the secretaries of ministers of the late administration had been provided for, except in one case, which was brought to my attention, and for which I undertook to make some provision.

So that they have apparently been provided for.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—When this Bill was read a second time I called the attention of the House to the fact, which has been referred to just now, that the period was too short. This Bill leaves it open for a minister to practically appoint a gentleman to a good position in the civil service without examination, and without any particular qualifications after twelve months. As a matter of fact, if a minister was anxious to do a good turn to a friend, who was not competent and who could not pass an examination, he could appoint him to a position.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The present law is the same.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The salary is not so excessive under the present law.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I expressed myself a few days ago that I believe in providing for the private secretaries. I believe it is right and proper. I think any man who gives up his time as private secretary to a minister should not be thrown out in the cold on the government going out of power, but should be provided for. Do I understand that those gentlemen who are provided for and taken into the civil service are on the same footing as the civil servants who have passed an examination; or are they engaged in employment outside the service, drawing their pay? I do not understand that the government can give them any employment without their passing an examination and being taken on in the regular way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Perhaps my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie did not catch my observation. That question came up in the House of Commons, and Mr. Borden stated in answer thereto that all the secretaries of the late ministers had been provided for with the exception of one, and Mr. Borden has given an intimation that he will make due provision for him.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—But they had the same status as the civil servants?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot say as to that. Under the Act as it is to-day, they could be given the status of civil servants, and doubtless they were, after serving as private secretaries.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think when you are making a provision in an Act of this kind that you should let it extend back further. Instead of making it the 10th of October, make it the first day of October; then all would come in and be treated alike

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh no, that would not do.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There are two or three points on which this House should be well informed before passing the Bill. I consented to second the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax that the committee rise, which of course, would kill the Bill for the session, but I an inclined to think that the hon. gentleman would be satisfied that the committee should rise and report progress, if the leader of the House would undertake to give some information to clear up points which are now in dispute. I rather favour the idea that we should rise and report progress, and get further information. We should have some assurance as to what position the late private secretaries are going to occupy before the Bill is passed.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The hon. leader of the government should take my suggestion into his serious consideration. I do not think it is quite the thing to have to discuss the position of this or the other private secretary, and I do not see what harm my suggestion would do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the suggestion?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That everybody who has acted in that capacity should be treated similarly, thereby avoiding unseemly discussion as to this, that or the other gentleman, and you enable the government to treat private secretaries of the past as you treat those of to-day.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be glad to bring down any further information I can obtain. It seems to me extraordinary, both sides of the House of Commons having agreed upon this Bill, that we in this House should disagree in regard to a subject which does not concern us except in a very public and general way. All the ministers with portfolios having secretaries are in the House of Commons. A condition arising under this Bill could not arise in this House until there is a minister with a portfolio in it. I desire to meet the views of hon. gentlemen here, I shall be very glad to permit the Bill to stand, and shall bring down further information on the subject.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I am asking the hon. leader of the House to look at my suggestion on its own merits, irrespective of what has been done in the other House. If he does not approve of my suggestion I do not propose to insist, but I should like to know if my suggestion is not a fair and reasonable one under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The only criticism to which that suggestion is open would be that the private secretaries of the late ministers entered upon their duties with the full knowledge of the law, and the full knowledge of the compensation which they were to receive; consequently it cannot be said that their position has been in any way prejudiced.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It is the same with the present secretaries.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—They came in under the old law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, because the present government represented to the secretaries who had entered upon their duties when this government came into office that they would change the law along the lines of this Bill; consequently those secretaries have entered upon their duties with practically an undertaking, or representation from the government that they would be placed in an advanced class. Futhermore let me say that if the secretaries of the outgoing ministers have been satisfactorily provided for, is it good policy that we should pass legislation placing them in an advanced position—a position which they are not anticipating, and not expecting—because new conditions have arisen. It seems to me it is not a good policy that that should be done. However, I shall make every inquiry into the subject, so that to-morrow I may be able to tell my hon. friend what was really done with the secretaries.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Formerly private secretaries were not on the same plane; some were in the first class, some in the second, and some in the third class.

That is my own experience. The principal secretary in my department was only advanced after eight or nine years service into a higher grade. It depended upon the capacity of the private secretary. They would not be all on the same plane.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Do I understand the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie is that my amendment be withdrawn, and that there be substituted for it a motion that the committee rise and report progress, and that when we go into committee again the hon. leader of the House will give the information asked for?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With the consent of the committee I ask leave to withdraw my motion, and substitute a motion that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND — Before the question is put I should like to draw the attention of the hon. the leader of the House, to the fact that I intend to move that one year be changed to three years. I do this in order that we may be prepared to express an opinion upon it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What reason is there that the law should be changed to that extent except the one, that you have no confidence in the present ministers? Under the old law, as I understand it, all that is required is one year's service in order to enable promotion to be made to a certain class. As I understand the present proposition, you give an opportunity to a minister to recommend the promotion of his private secretary, after serving one year, to a higher grade than he occupied under the old law. Under the Act as it stands, a minister could recommend that his secretary be advanced to a higher grade after serving the same length of time. My own view is that under the old law, three years would be a short enough period of service, unless the secretary was appointed with the distinct understanding that at the end of the year he should receive promotion. While my own individual opinion would be in favour of the three year service, I have heard no reason given as yet, by the gentlemen who have discussed this question, why the same regulations and privileges should not be extended to the ministers of the present day, which the ministers had and exercised under the old law.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Reverse the proposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Your reason may be that you have no confidence in the present ministers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—No. Treat the others in the same way that you suggest these should be treated.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I will candidly answer my hon. friend and say that I never noticed the form of this enactment, and if it had come under my review I would have suggested to increase the term from one year to three years. Seeing it now, and finding that the salary is a larger one than a secretary would be entitled to under the old law, it seems that it is an additional reason why he should serve longer as secretary before he is entitled to that very large salary and that exceptional privilege which is contained in the law as modified by the present Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps the House will allow me to say just one word; in my humble opinion this is a money Bill and we cannot amend it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—From the committee, reported progress and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The orders of the day being called: resuming the further adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill (88) An Act to provide for the appointment of a tariff commission.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Before addressing myself to Bill (88), I wish to refer to some remarks made by the Hon. Mr. McMullen yesterday afternoon. Representing the people of the Northwest, we like to take care of their good name, their good character, their intelligence and business capacity. I want to inform the House that we have the choice of the old provinces with us in the west. They have come to us after having been educated in the colleges and in our wonderful system of national schools, which cannot be surpassed in any country. We have the young men and maidens from these old provinces, who have cast their lot in the Northwest Territories, and they are, I must say, our best settlers and most progressive people. It was said yesterday that they had been treated better, or as well as any other people in the British Empire. The people of the Northwest are not complaining of their treatment by the late government. They have not been asking special favours from the present government. These statements were uncalled for. It is here stated how much has been done for them; building railways and developing the western country, erecting buildings and improvements and so forth. I want to say that nothing has been done for the people in the west that has not been done in other provinces and other portions of the Dominion. No special favours have been conferred upon them in reference to public buildings. If the late government adopted an immigration scheme that brought such a large number of people into that country, it was the right of the government to provide for these people. They could not be cast on the prairies without due attention and care. Where people settled in remote places, I am happy to say that the late government in a very few weeks provided post-offices for them, and saw that they were provided with means of communication with their friends in the old world, or wherever they may have lived. Everywhere there was satisfaction on the part of our people with the kind treatment they had received generally at the hands of the government. There is no complaint to be made, nor are there any charges that can be laid against them as grumbling or fault finding unnecessarily. It has been said here that there are certain reasons for dissatisfaction, such as the prevalence of frost and losses in connection with the late harvest. Such statements are made in defence of the corporations who should provide means of transportation. I want to make a statement which perhaps has not been made by any person as yet; to my knowledge, the unique position of the whole question in the Northwest for the last year's harvest is a condition of things that may not occur again. I have been some thirty-two years in the country, and I never saw anything equal to it. The cause was climatic; no government could anticipate such a condition of things. No railway corporation might be able to cope with things under these special circumstances. Whilst it is disastrous and the people have sustained a great loss, yet we must look at it from a proper standpoint. We know that the means of transportation was not at all equal to the demand. I would not lay the whole blame on the Canadian Pacific railway. I know the arguments that they used in connection with it, that it is impossible to expect any company to have such an equipment of rolling stock that they would be able to move the large crops that are now produced within a few weeks after the harvest. In this case it was not the want of rolling stock that gave rise to a great deal of the trouble. The rolling stock was piled up in the south of Manitoba; it was largely for the purpose of distributing coal to the people. It was not the want of rolling stock tnat put a stop to communication between the head of the lakes and the interior last autumn in the months of December and January. It requires usually about twenty days for a train of wheat cars to reach the lakes from the centre of the wheat growing country in the interior. It requires about ten more days for them to return on their trip. I have heard from the officials of the Canadian Pacific railway at meetings in this city, two or three years ago, that the most they can expect of any car in one season was three trips. Therefore, you can see it would require a very large number of cars to meet the necessities of the case. This season it was not so much the want of rolling stock as the want of good weather. If we grumble and complain we have to address ourselves to the clerk of the weather and see that another year we get, and deserve, better things. In the month of December, and especially during the month of January, it was almost impossible to run an engine through that country with a load, for the simple reason that the extreme frost interfered with the flues of the machine and they became leaky, and often died out in transit towards the lakes. They were unable to reach their destination, and then they were run into some side place until something could be done in the way of getting them repaired. The traffic was almost entirely stopped from the middle of December until the end of January. I like to be honest. We must give corporations, and every party concerned, their due, to be just in our criticism. In the early days, when the freight rates of the Canadian Pacific railway were very high, and when they called upon the productive parts of the country to make up for the unproductive parts, such as the barren pieces of road north of Lake Superior and further west towards the coast, I said a good many things against the Canadian Pacific railway, so that it is right for one living in the Northwest and interested in its prosperity to make this statement. Those men were told by the same gentlemen that he was opposed, like them, to free intercourse with the United States. He declared himself in favour of high protection, and he told us if the markets of the west were thrown open to the United States, three quarters of the manufacturing institutions of this country would be wiped out of existence in three years. I am quite sure that nothing of the kind would take place. It reminds me very much of the speeches we used to hear from Sir Charles Tupper in 1896, when he told us that desolation and ruin must follow the introduction of a lower tariff. Nothing has happened in this country by reason of the reduction of the tariff. The people were disappointed with the late government because they did not see their way to the reduction of duty on agricultural implements. It was a burning question with them, and to-day they are exceedingly sensitive in reference to anything that may be done in connection with the raising of the tariff. Why should it not be so? The farmers in that country are not complaining; they are willing to fight their own battles; but they have to purchase in a home market—and we are glad to see that they are able to do so with such advantage—but they have to sell in the freest market in the world. As a Liberal, every one in the House knows that my principles have been for free trade largely—I do not say free trade in the fullest sense, but as far as possible, to provide a proper income if necessary to successfully carry on the business of the country and the west is ready to do and pay its share. I want to say further that the government cannot help the farmer in his markets, that is beyond the power of any government. Why? Because in raising grain we come into competition with the Orient, and have to compete with the cheap labour of the coolie of India, who is competing with our young men of the west in producing wheat for the English market. But the circumstances, and the climate of the coolie are entirely different, and his expenses are absolutely trifling in comparison with the conditions we have in the Northwest, where the cold climate requires the farmer to wear furs in order to protect his life while driving to market with grain, whereas ten yards of common cotton would clothe a dozen coolies while raising wheat in the fields of India. We also come in competition with Argentine, where they have decided advantages over us in the way of cheap labour, and a better and shorter route to the British market than we can possibly have, or ever will have. We are also shoulder to shoulder with the serfs of Russia, who work for a pittance, yet we have to sell in competition with them in the same market. What can any government do to help us under those conditions? We have to fight our own battle. We must provide ways and means of raising this grain at less cost than those people can possibly do, and so overcome a certain amount of expense and be able to cope with the world of cheap labour in the Orient. It can scarcely be said the Northwest farmers have a home market in Canada, though the Northwest is a home market for Canadian manufacturers. We are glad that they find a large market with us, and it is said that not less than seven thousand drummers, or agents, from manufacturing and wholesale houses are running to and fro on our railways in the west the most of the year, and at certain seasons, because of their numbers, it is almost impossible to get seats in the trains. Those salesmen take the best accommodation they can get in the pullman cars, and who pays for it? The farmers of the Northwest. We do not say those commercial men should not travel like gentlemen, but they are piling up expenses that come against the farmers throughout the whole country, and so the east is receiving advantages that cannot be regarded as paltry; yet we believe that the government cannot help us or alter our condition, as far as the tariff is concerned, in a foreign market which is really the market for the Northwest. Some pretty strong language has been used in the west of late, and they resent being dictated to by provinces in the east and controlled from a city like Winnipeg, declaring that the west will have its own policy, and that they know their own business better than any people in any part of the world, or of Canada. Owing to my views in reference to the markets that we have, I do not see that we can express any sympathy with this Bill (88) for a tariff commission. Our people are exceedingly sensitive along these lines, be their attitude just or otherwise, but there are a large number of features in this Bill looking in the direction of higher tariff. The members of the present government do not hide their policy; we all understand they believe in a high tariff, and, in their new circumstances, they would seek to play into the hands of those who had been their best friends. That is natural. Where we have found power we generally cultivate friendship in that quarter. I have been studying this Bill for several days, and the more I study it the less confidence I seem to have in it. Is it constitutional, to begin with? Is it just? Is it fair to the public generally? The policy of the greatest good to the greatest number is certainly the right one for any government or for any country. Well, in this case we have rule by commissions—not simply this tariff commission, but a whole galaxy of commissions, as if the government was intending to proceed to live by commission, and to prosper by commission. It reminds me of a certain gentleman in the northwest, very gentlemanly and well educated, whom I have met in discussions frequently, and when he was a member of the Northwest government he would listen to arguments of his supporters as to why a bridge or culvert should be constructed, or any other matter, and then he would say, 'well, gentlemen, I shall think of the matter more fully, and ask what Henry has to say about it.' Henry was his co-partner in business. Well, this government is looking in all directions away from themselves, and it reminds me of that remark—'we will see what Henry has to say about it.' That is to say, the commissions have to report to the government before the government makes up its mind as to what it will do. In the case of my friend, there was a lack of confidence in his own judgment, and it seems to me that the government in reference to this commission, have not had confidence in their own judgment, and do not wish to carry the responsibility of acting as the government of this country, but they want all the help they can possibly get. All the disappointed candidates will be available, and some of them will be appointed. The very one who had no confidence in his own judgment, and would not give a reply to those petty matters, has found $7,000 a year in one of those commissions. It seems to me these commissions are extremely expensive, and the people will ask, 'Why all this? Where is the talent, the judgment, the energy and the political shrewdness on business lines on the part of the government itself?' We had no such commissions like this in connection with the late Liberal government. When commissions were needed they were appointed, and we can say that they were chosen from both sides of the House. I do not remember any time that there was any lack of consideration of the party opposed, who are allowed to put their best men on any commission so that they would have fair play and the whole thing would be reported to the House. Then I am in doubt as to whether these commissions are to be secret. Apparently they are for the ministers, and not for the House of Commons or the public, as far as I can discover.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the report is to be placed on the table of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—That is after the opinion of the government has been reached.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, no.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Yes, I think so. It is not stated that it should be given in every case. It may be given occasionally, as suits their purpose, but it is to be in the hands of the minister and guide his opinions and direct his action.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Look at section 6 of the Bill. It provides that the report and a copy of the evidence shall be placed on the table of parliament fifteen days after the opening of each session.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Yes, but all this work goes on.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—After they have mussed it over.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—It may or may not be, that is all. If we use the public money for this purpose, the public have a right to know what is done with it, and if they do not know, they cannot have the confidence in the government which it ought to possess in doing the country's work. That is another reason why I hesitate to support this Bill, then another objection is that the appointment is not made on the broad principle that underlies the Railway Commission, who are doing excellent work. There is no party feeling in the construction of the Railway Commission. They are gentlemen who are dealing with questions of business that come before them, and are disinterested parties.

It is only right that both parties should be represented in the formation of any commission of this kind. It is quite natural that the government should have one or two of its own sympathizers, but there should be at least one to represent the opposite party. I have nothing to say in reference to the working of the Bill, or the directions that are to be given, more than the general criticism that it is a very expensive system. We have about nineteen or twenty commissions now under appointment, or to be appointed shortly, and it is going to be very expensive. I hope, therefore, that there will be some very decided change in this Bill before it receives the support of the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I listened with a great deal of regret to some statements made during the debate, notably by the hon. gentleman from North Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) yesterday. I thought the time had gone by when we would hear of all that eastern Canada had done for the west. I thought that eastern Canada had realized that the expenditures in the west more than justified everything that had been done for the west. I am of the opinion that the credit and good name of Canada to-day is largely due to the fact that she does possess a west, and if it were not for the west the province from which the hon. gentleman from North Wellington comes would go out of business, so far as manufacturing is concerned at the present time. He told us a great many things the east had done for the west. He might have added a few more. They gave us two rebellions in the west, and very nearly furnished us with a third, and why? Because the east was doing exactly what the hon. gentleman says the west should not do. I refer to the time the government denied us the right to trade with the United States by refusing to allow us to build lines to the south, which almost precipitated a rebellion in that country. That feeling was brought to the attention of the government in Canada. The soldiers were called out, and the place for an engagement was fixed. The men were there, fortunately it did not occur. That place is still known as Fort Whyte in Manitoba, where they objected to a railway being built. The Canadian Pacific railway blockaded the fort by dumping off a locomotive at the crossing. Practically the same thing is going on to-day, and I think this is the proper time to discuss the matter, because it is in connection with the Bill to appoint a tariff commission, and we find the people of eastern Canada are blamed by the western people for the condition which exists to-day. We are in as much need of a free market to the United States as we were of the railroads at the time I have alluded to, and the people are getting almost in the same frame of mind at the present time as they were in at that time, on account of eastern Canada not allowing them access to the United States market. The hon. gentleman from Wellington spoke of something he did not know anything about when he referred to the conditions of the frozen wheat in the west. I wish to inform him that there is practically no frozen wheat in the west this year. We had damp wheat which was good marketable wheat, provided it could be ground within reasonable season, and I have no hesitation in saying that, on account of the action of the east in refusing to give them the market to the south, the people of the Northwest have lost at least twenty millions of their crop. I have only to state that if that wheat could be got to the market and ground within a reasonable time, it would make just as good flour and almost as much as No. 1 hard wheat. The wheat would all have been ground, providing we had the free market we were offered by the late government, and the people to the south of us offered to take our wheat free. At present there is a duty of 25 cents a bushel on wheat. The mills of Minneapolis have a grinding capacity of two hundred million bushels per year. Their capacity is equal to the total consumption of bread stuffs in Great Britain, and the mills are situated within four hundred miles of Winnipeg. We have that market, and the feeling is growing very strong in the west that eastern Canada, Ontario particularly —I should say Ontario entirely—voted to prevent reciprocity being given to the people of the west.

I am not going to complain of the possible cost of this commission. If it costs ten times as much as the amount mentioned by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, and the work is well done, then I say their services will be worth that much to the country. Some people say there is no difference between the parties in this country. There is a difference. They say this commission is going to take the tariff out of politics. It will not take it out of politics. The cleavage between the two great parties in Canada to-day is: whereas the Liberal party are inclined to lower the tariff, the Conservative party pronounce themselves as inclined to raise the tariff. We have only to look at the discussion that took place on this very Bill in the other House, when a gentleman, whom we thought was of cabinet calibre, Mr. Ames, of Montreal, in discussing this very Bill, said that there was no doubt at all that the commission that would be appointed must be men who were in sympathy with the policy of the Conservative party, which was a policy of protection. I want to say to the hon. gentlemen opposite, and the government of the country, that if the government, in appointing this commission, makes claims such as have been described by Mr. Ames,—who, I have no doubt, is very close to the cabinet—if a commission of this kind is appointed and they report such evidence, the commission is intended to get such evidence as will be a justification for the government to raise the tariff rather than lower it. The consumer and the farmer will not have an opportunity of being heard. It is not the most difficult thing in the world for a commission to get the kind of evidence they wish to get, and to bar the door to evidence they do not wish to get. There is no question about that part of the matter. It seems to me that any person who suggests that is not the case are simply talking nonsense. We know the result of these commissions. Some six or seven years ago a large delegation visited Ottawa, representing the manufacturers of Canada. They came here for the purpose of interviewing Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance. They asked that an increase should be made in the tariff on a number of articles, and they stated their reasons. Mr. Fielding said: 'Gentlemen, you seem to have, according to your point of view, very good reasons; now, reduce that to writing and give it to me in a typewritten document, and I will carefully consider these matters. If I can see that your conclusion and evidence are right, then we will carefully consider the matter and probably make some change in the tariff.' What was the reply? 'No, Mr. Fielding, we cannot do that. We will give you that information in confidence, but we cannot give you that information to make public.' What was Mr. Fielding's reply? 'If you cannot give that information to make it public, you cannot give it to me at all, because I must have that evidence to justify me in making a statement to the House before I can change the tariff.' The great trouble is that these manufacturers cannot come together on these points, because one man's product is the other man's raw material; consequently, they could not make any statement to Mr. Fielding, that he could use in public, and no change was made. The hon. gentleman who leads this House states that clause 6 provides for the evidence being published. Not at all. It simply states the conditions laid down by these gentlemen to Mr. Fielding. Whenever the information is considered confidential, it shall not be made public. The only information these gentlemen would present to the government, if they are in favour of a high tariff, and the minister is in favour of a high tariff, would be such information as would justify them in raising the tariff, rather in lowering it. There is practically no publicity to be given to the information. I say the government should be very careful as to the men they appoint on this commission. I do not object to a commission. You may appoint a commission that will secure information to be given to the government that will enable them to make such changes in the tariff as would be in the best interests of the people of Canada. If they do that, then I say the money will be well spent. If the government undertake to appoint a commission to give such information as I anticipate, information that will be in favour of a high tariff, they will probably have trouble and something to confront that they are not anticipating. Some hon. gentleman said something about the west wanting to secede from Canada. There is no feeling of that kind in the west, but I want to tell this House that there is a feeling in the west that the great west will assert its right and power. The west is growing and will be more powerful in the near future. I am inclined to think that even to-day the manufacturers of Ontario, who no doubt subscribed very liberally for the purpose of the defeat of the late government and to put the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches who now occupy them, have already found out that they made a mistake, because, there is a feeling growing in the west that the eastern manufacturer is the western farmers' enemy. I noticed in the press a short time ago that a resolution has actually been submitted to a large gathering of farmers in the west suggesting that they should pass a resolution to boycot the eastern manufacturers of agricultural implements. Surely that is not a good state of affairs, yet that feeling is in the minds of the people of the west, and you cannot blame them. The very men who are asking the farmers of the west to buy their products, put up the money for the purpose of preventing the farmers of the west from getting a market for the products of their farms. I venture to say that at least fifty per cent of the paper that becomes overdue and unpaid to the manufacturers of eastern Canada is largely due to the fact that the Northwest farmers cannot get the American market for their wheat. I do not wish to take up much of the time of the House, but I just wish to emphasize this fact: if the government are wise in their generation, they will see to it that there is some member on that commission in whom the farmers and the consumers have confidence, a member who will see that the proper evidence is procured to find information for the purpose of justifying the tariff. I venture to say that if they do not, a condition will exist in the west which will not be at all agreeable to the manufacturers of Ontario. Because you know that if a farmer finds his hen roost being robbed, he will try to kill the fox, and it is just possible that some of the farmers of the west may undertake to do that, even without waiting for any report of the commission. I offer these observations to this House because I know the feeling of the west. I am inclined to think and to suspect that the object of the government in appointing this commission is for the purpose of raising the tariff. I trust they will study the whole situation and appoint seme member on that commission who will be acceptable to the great agriculturists of the Northwest.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Many hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this Bill have gone beyond its scope entirely. It is not a tariff Bill. It is not a grain Bill, nor is it a railway Bill. It is a Bill to appoint a commission to take evidence on tariff questions, and to take notice of the affairs of the country. Surely if a large majority of the electors of Canada put sufficient confidence in the present government to ask them to direct the affairs of this Dominion, we can trust them to appoint a commission of three gentlemen who will take evidence on the affairs of the country and report to parliament a certain number of days after parliament meets. I would not have spoken on this Bill at all but for the remarks of the hon. gentleman from West York (Hon. Mr. Campbell). He spoke with great contempt of the National Policy. No man who knew the condition of the country from 1873 to 1878 would speak in that way. The right hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member from Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott) know perfectly the hopeless condition of the country at that time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —No, most emphatically no.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—A very bad condition of affairs. There was no work for the people, thousands of men coming to the parliament buildings at every hour of the day demanding work, soup kitchens erected in different parts of the country to feed the hungry. There was nothing moving, and nothing doing. After the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, things began to decline in Canada. Trade was very slack, very few people coming in and very little manufactured goods going out. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but they know perfectly well that they saw these hordes of people coming up asking for bread or work. I do not blame the Liberal government for that condition of affairs at that time. Things went on like that until 1878? The tariff was a low tariff of 15 per cent. I do not think the Liberal party raised it or lowered it. They kept it at what it was.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —On the contrary, they raised it; that is a matter of fact.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Gentlemen who lived in the country at that time know as well as I do that when the Conservative party came back, and when the National Policy was inaugurated, the country jumped from despondency and from doing nothing to prosperity and confidence.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Manufacturing establishments were opened. New factories were built and from that day to this the country has been prospering. Another great thing that gave an impetus to affairs in this country, was the building of the Canadian Pacific railway. Hon. gentlemen opposite opposed the building of that railway because they said it was beyond the financial power of the country. They said that if it were built it would not be successful. They said that the province of British Columbia was useless and wanted to let it go. That was the sentiment of the Liberal party at that time. I confess that the building of the Canadian Pacific railway was a great undertaking. So great was it that a delegation came from British Columbia to arrange terms with the government, and they never dreamt of a railway. All they asked was a wagon road. I would not be surprised at any government at that stage of our development being afraid of an undertaking of such magnitude. It was the financial bogey of all governments, but when the Conservative party resumed office they grappled with the project. They formed a company and the road was built. Who will say it has not been a great link to bind the provinces together and a great factor in the prosperity of the country. They have opened up a wonderful route from China and Japan to Great Britain via Canada. The Canadian Pacific railway brought wealth to the country, millions of acres were opened up and millions of bushels of wheat have been grown and cattle have been shipped out of the country from these prairie lands. I do not wish to be unjust to any government, but the hon. gentleman cannot controvert what I am saying that the building of the railway and the inauguration of the National Policy made the country, and that tariff that was put in force by the Conservative party laid the foundation for the Liberal party to build on. They raised it a little here and lowered it there, but the foundation of the whole system of the country was the National Policy. I am sure the present government would be very careful before they touched a line or put a finger on that tariff. They are now doing what is in the best interest of the country, appointing a commission, and it will be time enough to discuss the tariff when we see what the commission will do after it is appointed.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I would like to say a few words before a vote is taken on this motion. It is with some difficulty that one attempts to make a speech on the subject, because the speeches heretofore made have not really dealt very closely with the matter under discussion. I do not know that there is any great advantage to a deliberative body, when it has a question before it for consideration, to wander so widely as we have wandered in discussing this Bill. I should resist very strongly the temptation to follow the various speakers through their wide wanderings, because in order to do that it would require a very lengthy speech and one which I do not think would be of any great profit to this House. So far as I have succeeded in taking note of what was said during the discussion, it has very largely dealt with old issues. Very extravagant statements have been made, which have been very familiar to me on the stump on a great many occasions. I did not expect to hear them made in the Senate of Canada in 1912. It seems to me that the objections which have been urged against this tariff commission are not very serious, and some of them, I think, could not really have been intended seriously. The remarks made by some of the hon. gentlemen who represent the Northwest portion of Canada, which is a great and important portion of the country, have consisted practically of nothing but threats as to what the capitalists and the manufacturers of eastern Canada may expect whenever the west is strong enough to deal with them I am absolutely certain these gentlemen are not representing the west in the House, and are not expressing the opinions of the west. I am satisfied the people of eastern Canada, who have gone to the west and built their homes there, are grossly misrepresented in the statements made in this House.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Within the last week a resolution was passed in the legislature in Regina without a dissenting voice on the Highways Bill, and the leader of the Conservative party did not even offer an objection to it. Conservatives and Liberals unanimously condemned it.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Resolutions and petitions can be easily secured, but I am satisfied that time will vindicate the correctness of what I am saying that these statements which, if true, are alarming, and these threatening statements made as to the attitude of the west towards the east will, in the course of time be found to be without foundation. The people of the west are largely people who came from the east, and they could not have left all their common sense in the east. I have no doubt the people of the west will be found to be good Canadians, wise and intelligent enough in their political knowledge to know that no one part of any country can absolutely insist upon having its own way if that country is to be great and prosperous. We are going to be a great country just so far as we can suppress excessive manifestation of provincialism or localism, and rise to nationalism. I do not wonder, after listening to the speeches that have been made to-day, that there are hasty, inconsiderate and dangerous statements made in the west to-day in some places. Why should there not be? Those gentlemen who have spoken here are assumed to be the leaders and teachers of the people.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I deny it in toto.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And if the statements made in this House furnish anything like a correct example of those that are made to these people at home, then may we not expect that certain hasty, hot-headed people might, under excitement, express themselves improperly in regard to their fellow-citizens in other parts of Canada. But I do not feel alarmed about the attitude of the west. I am satisfied when the time comes the west will prove itself to be, not only a strong, but a wise part of Canada.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear; no doubt of it.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And therefore, I think that these sagacious and kindly warnings extended to the government of this country by the hon. gentleman who spoke a while ago, repeated over and over again, warning the government to be careful in the matter, to keep in mind all the time the people of the west, were entirely unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Experiment and you will find out.

Hon. Mr. BELL—We will experiment, and we will find out. I have not the slightest apprehension of any danger in that direction. This is a simple measure before the House. It provides for the establishment of a certain piece of departmental machinery for one department. It is simply the use of a commission which can move about the country, comfortably and at leisure.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And investigate comfortably, and at leisure——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BELL—As to the conditions with regard to which it is necessary the government and parliament should be well versed to come to a satisfactory decision upon all the questions involved in this matter. But hon. gentlemen opposite are departing from the sound principles of argument and parliamentary procedure, when they violate the rules of parliamentary discussion in their statements. What is the whole discussion, but a mass of unjustified and absurd suggestions as to what the government are going to do, or what the government think, or what these gentlemen complain of. We know that it is utterly improper and useless, and in fact a feature which is always prevented in any legislative assembly, that we should impute motives. It is contrary to the rules of any parliament or any court, and contrary to the principle of serious discussion that motive should be imputed. What do these valuable speeches consist of? Imputation of motives, and if I were within parliamentary bounds, I would say absurd imputation of motives in regard to the attitude of the government. The United States have had a tariff commission in operation for years, engaged successfully in acquiring an enormous mass of information which has been utilized by the government of that country in preparing its tariff. Has it ever hurt anybody? Has it not been of great service? Were we not exceedingly glad, during the recent reciprocity discussion in this country, to get possession, as far as we could, of the result of our neighbour's investigation, and through them to acquire information which would guide us in coming to a decision on the question? A tariff commission is simply a body which can acquire conveniently and effectively the information which is impossible for a department to obtain in any other way.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Does the hon gentleman agree with Mr. Ames, that this commission should be in favour of high protection, as the present government are favourable to high protection?

Hon. Mr. BELL—No, because I believe it is simply a piece of departmental machinery to collect information.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is a statement with which we do not agree.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The hon. gentleman does not accept Mr. Ames as an apostle.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I take him as the apostle of the Conservative party all right.

Hon. Mr. BELL—No man controls the Conservative party. The Conservative party controls itself, and Canada as well.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I take exception to that. I think the manufacturers control the Conservative party.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The hon. member may take all the exceptions he likes. I tell the Senate that no man controls the Conservative party, and I ought to know the Conservative party as well as the hon. gentleman, who owes his seat to the fact of his having been an active member of the Reform party for a long time. The Conservative party thinks for itself.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —If so, it is the first time it ever did.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And it represents a matured opinion upon this question—the feeling of the great majority of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And that is the most important point. Why should we object to the installation of this piece of machinery to collect information? My hon. friend who has just interrupted me is very anxious that we should keep control over the government. He is very anxious we should dictate to the government and impress upon them the line they should follow out in this matter. All his remarks indicate that, and here the government has put into his hands, and into our hands, a piece of machinery that will enable us to keep control of them, and he will not have it, on account of his unjust suspicions of what the conduct of the government may be. This commission will gather information which will be placed at the disposal, not only of the government, but at our disposal, and we will have ample knowledge in sitting in judgment on the acts of the government. We will be in as good position as the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Finance himself, because we will have the very same information available to us. A point has been raised in connection with the question of confidential information. There must always be certain confidential information. You must always be in confidence when you go to a manufacturer and ask him to unfold to you the secret and mystery of his business matters which he brought, perhaps, to perfection by his sole labour; matters upon which his success over his competitors depends. If the commission goes to that man for his secrets, it must be in confidence. That is not new; it has been our rule always. In taking the census of the successive periods, confidential information has been given, and that confidence for the most part, has been respected; so that there is nothing new in the feature of confidential information, but in so far as it is not confidential, this commission is intended to protect us, the legislators of Canada, against any wrong the government might propose to do. A great deal has been said about what a bad lot and what dangerous people the manufacturers are. It is said that they are a curse to the people. I am carried back to the year '96, when my political opponents used to go about the country denouncing the combinester and the manufacturer and the capitalist. We have had these gentlemen who denounce these companies and institutions in power for fifteen years, and what have they done with them? What have they done with the combinesters? They have nurtered, fostered and developed them. What have they done with the capitalists? Thank Heaven, they have not hurt them, for those who know anything about the way in which business is conducted, know that no business can grow to proportions without capital; but my right hon. friend who sits opposite, and who occasionally used to have a harsh word for the manufacturer, knows that never to such an extent have combines, mergers and combinations of capital, and combinations of manufacturers, existed in this country as under his own government which recently went out of office. So that any one listening to this discussion will at once see that it is a futile effort to find fault with the process which the government is putting into operation to perfect its machinery on the tariff question. Hon. gentlemen have talked a great deal about the attitude of this incoming government, and have jumped to the foregone conclusion that it is bound to raise the tariff.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The hon. gentleman says hear, hear. He believes that?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Why?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Because I think the high protectionist and the manufacturer are the people who put them there, and the government are their servants.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The hon. gentleman has been in public life a long time without learning very much. The people who put the Conservatives in power in 1878, were not the manufacturers or high protectionists, but the consumers, and it was the consumers who turned the late government out of office and put the present government in power, and also turned down reciprocity. It was not the manufacturers.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The hon. gentleman in his heart does not believe that it was not the consumers. It is the people of Canada, and not the manufacturers. They do not control the Conservative party. We have had protection since 1878, but it was not introduced by the manufacturers or the capitalists. It was brought about by the consumers, the common people of Canada. They have always controlled the elections in this country since I have had anything to do with public affairs, and they control them to-day, and so long as they know it is in their interest that Canada should grow and develop its resources, just so long will the consumers of Canada maintain in force and effect in this country that protective system under which we have gone on to a marvellous development since 1878. It is rather amusing to listen to these gentlemen talking free trade. They are precious free traders. They were in office for fifteen years. Did they give us a revenue tariff in that time? Have we ever seen a tariff for revenue put on the statute-book by that free trade party? These gentlemen make statements about their hopes, beliefs and intentions—the whole thing is laughable—neither more or less. All you have to do is to take the returns of the country and see the average duty collected on all classes of importations, and you will see that the change made in the tariff of Canada since the first protective tariff in 1878 has been comparatively trifling. The tariff imposed on the country by the so-called free trade party does not differ more than two per cent from the high protective tariff of the Conservative party, which has been described as the friend of the dangerous manufacturer. These facts are open to anyone who desires to look at them. We have in this country to-day a protective tariff, and I am thankful to the right hon. gentleman and his associates in the government that we have it. Great wisdom was shown in the fact that they stood by the old National Policy—I have no objection to them calling it what they like—we have the substantial fact that they stood by the sound policy that was left them in 1896 by the Conservative party, when they assumed office. Canada has never departed from that policy, and while I should be very sorry to undertake to prophesy, and would not venture to say we never will, I will say that during all the years I have taken part in political fights in this country, beginning in 1878 and continuing until this moment, I believe that to this day the sound common sense of the people of Canada is wedded to a policy which will maintain that system of protection, develop the manufactures and enable our industries to grow in all directions, and not leave our people merely a body of farmers, or fishermen, but that they will have great manufactures in their midst and great wealth. I would not want to live in a poor country. I prefer rich neighbours—by all means. We have in this country every opportunity to acquire wealth, and opportunity is open to every man in the country. What better condition of affairs can anyone desire than that? To my mind, if there is any body of men in the whole country who would not favour this tariff commission, very possibly it would be the manufacturers. They might object to the appointment of this tariff commission. They are the men who will be routed out of their snug corner, if it can be shown that they are enjoying excessive profits. The consumer is a man who is interested in the activity and success of the tariff commission, as no one else, and I am going to say that as far as I am concerned, I am prepared to do everything in my power to see that the consumer shall have every advantage he can get, and I believe the whole Conservative party occupies the same position. It has been said in the course of the discussion, that the Conservative party were year after year raising the tariff higher and higher. That is not in accordance with the tact. It is absolutely different from the fact. The Conservative administration up to 1896 showed its weakness, if it showed it at all, in doing away with its measure of protection, and in some cases bringing it to that point where it ceased to be effective. That is where they made the mistake if they made any.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And they did make it.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Yes, and no government will continue for any length of time to favour any body of manufacturers or capitalists or special interest in acquiring wealth out of the people of Canada. Why should we continue the discussion any further? It suits hon. gentlemen opposite to call themselves free traders. Then let them do it. They are not free traders to such an extent as to hurt anybody, or to have any great effect on the policy of the country or the tariff. The right hon. gentleman going out of office leaves on his tariff duties equivalent to 100 per cent; is that the work of a free trader? The fact of the matter is that in this country, if we are wise, we will learn to develop a national spirit, to get clear of localism, and provincialism, and to avoid, as if it were a plague, any utterance of ours that will give any section of the people of Canada an impression that they are oppressed, or likely to be oppressed, that they are not as men and freemen standing up, with the ballot in their hands in a position to defend themselves against any and every enemy in this country, and guaranteed and certain of fair play and decent and honest treatment from any government whatever in this country, whether Liberal or Conservative. Let us not talk this absurd and dangerous class distinction, in this House at least; let us reserve that for the side line and the stump. It is bad enough there, but certainly out of all place here. Here is a country where, if any place in the world, man is at his highest development; where he is as nearly equal, as absolutely free, as powerful in citizenship, as anywhere in the world at any time; and to talk to any portion of these people, telling them they are injured, or oppressed, or badly treated, or enslaved, is criminal. It is not true, and the utterance of such statements in this House is dangerous and criminal, and unworthy of the Senate. We want to join together to bring our blessed and beloved country, Canada, to the front as far as possible. We have every opportunity to do it. We have a birthright and heritage such as no other people in the world have. We have now fairly entered upon a degree of development and growth which is bound in a short time to lead us to the hegemony of the great British peoples of the world, if we are true to ourselves, and have nothing of those wretched squabbles of twenty years ago or the wretched insinuations of to-day. Let us give up imputing motives to one another, or to governments, or oppositions, and let us stand for the growth of our country and honest and effective administration of its affairs. Let us have enough confidence in the government to trust it to inquire into the cost of production of products and into the cost of freights and of raw materials. For Heaven's sake, if we are going to entrust every interest that we have in the world to that government—lives and property, citizenship and everything else—let us not hesitate at the last moment to allow them to appoint three tariff commissioners.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would like to say a few words in answer to the hon. gentleman from Pictou, who seems to question the sincerity of the Liberal party in its declarations as set forth in the platform of 1893. He has lived long enough through the political contests carried on in this country for twenty-five years, to know that, neither before 1893 nor after, was there a party in Canada which enunciated a policy of free trade. We laid down in 1893, as we did before, the policy of a revenue tariff and a reduction of taxation. This was inscribed as one of the first planks of the platform of 1893; and in justification of our sincerity in carrying out that policy, I would draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the first year that the Laurier government came into power it tried, by sending a delegation to Washington, to comply at the same time with another plank of the platform by obtaining reciprocal advantages with the United States and diminishing the duties on a number of articles, if such a bargain could have been entered into.

He knows that that delegation, like the one which followed the elections of 1891, was turned down, and that the United States were not ready then to discuss reciprocity with Canada; but he should not forget that, in order to implement the promises contained in the platform of 1893, the Liberal party, finding that it could not obtain a reduction of taxation on its exports to the United States and get the advantage of freer imports from that place, turned to the country from which we had nothing to expect because it was a free trade country, and reduced its duties on British goods by thirty three and a third per cent.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This reduction represented far more than the reduction on the goods themselves that came from Great Britain. It helped to reduce the cost of the imports from other countries that had to compete with those British goods which came in under the preferential tariff; I believe that my hon. friend will find, when he goes into the statistics, that it is not merely a difference of two per cent between the tariff preceding 1896, and the tariff of the late government that will be found existing in favour of the Liberal policy, but that, if it is true that we generally increased the tariff by perhaps two and a half per cent we reduced it by thirty-three and a third per cent under the preference, and that on the whole the reduction to the tariff, looking at the customs returns, would show that there was a difference of some thirty per cent on British goods imported in 1900, compared with the same class of goods imported prior to 1896. So that I believe the Liberal party honestly stood by its declarations and its programme of 1893. Of course it could be said that, without regard for the United States refusal, we could have lowered the duties on American goods. We thought —and in that I think we carried the country with us—that that was not the proper thing to do—to give any advantages to our neighbour to the south who was taking such an uncompromising stand. Events justified the policy followed by the Liberal party during those fifteen years, because what did we see in 1911? The United States receding from its position of exclusiveness, and coming to Ottawa and asking for a reduction of the duties. Now my hon. friend questions the sincerity of the Liberal party in connection with its fiscal policy. I would ask him what was the policy of the Conservative party headed by its greatest chieftain, Sir John A. Macdonald, when he dissolved the House in 1891 for the purpose of consulting the people of Canada upon a proposition purporting to come from Mr. Blaine through the British ambassador for a discussion of reciprocity limited to natural products? We all know why we went to the people in 1891. Very likely my hon. friend from Pictou was a candidate then. The Liberal party offered the people of Canada unrestricted reciprocity. Why? Because it felt that it could not at that time get limited reciprocity, or reciprocity limited to natural products if it did not offer something more than natural products to the United States. We proclaimed to this country that what the farmer wanted—reciprocity in natural products—could not be obtained if we did not go one step further, and the great Conservative party said, through the mouth of its leader, 'No, we will not affect the industries of the country; we will not go into reciprocal relations or discussions with the United States for industrial products; but we will go into a discussion for reciprocity in natural products.' So that in 1891—just twenty years before 1911—we had this spectacle of the whole of Canada voting for reciprocity in natural products, because the Liberal party in opposition went further. The greater contained the less, and the whole Conservative party, with every elector who voted for my hon. friend from Pictou, voted for reciprocity in natural products. And yet when, twenty years afterwards, the United States declared that they were ready to enter into an understanding to allow a free exchange of natural products, we found that very same party, which had dissolved the House, and asked the people of Canada to favour such a bargain, and which had met with such a unanimous response twenty years before, rising up in its might and saying, 'This is disloyal to Great Britain.' Well, they succeeded in tricking the people. They succeeded in stampeding a majority of the people against the very policy that they had themselves laid down in 1891, and which had triumphed at the poll in March 1891. Now they are surprised because the Northwest, which produces natural products, and needs markets for those products, is dissatisfied because it is denied access to the American market. My hon. friend from Pictou should have known, and the Conservatives should have known, that the Northwest would be dissatisfied to be hampered by tariffs in purchasing and hampered by tariffs in selling when there was an offer from the United States for a free exchange of natural products. This is the situation to-day. My hon. friend says that this commission will candidly and honestly gather information for the present government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And for parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And for parliament, but primarily for the government, which will have the responsibility of introducing any changes that have to be made, or that may be deemed proper by the present government. I am not surprised that the present government would need to be enlightened on the question of the duty. For fifteen years, or thereabouts, the present leader of the government has been preaching a very vague doctrine on fiscal questions. It was to be adequate protection; this is the panacea which he propounded and which he offered to the people.

Hon. Mr. BELL—What more would the hon. gentleman want than what was adequate?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We very often asked the right hon. leader of the government, when he was in opposition, what he meant by adequate—whether he would write the tariff downwards or write it upwards?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or both.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—He simply stuck to this very vague expression, adequate protection. I observe that some hon. gentleman has been accused of remaining for a certain number of days or months within the lines of Torres Vedras. Those were the Torres Vedras of the fiscal policy of the right hon. the leader of the government, because we never knew exactly what was his position on the fiscal policy. It was a policy that would appeal to the east and to the west, because with the word 'adequate' he could go upwards or could go downwards.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Verily I believe that the hon. the leader of the government and his colleagues—for probably I should not limit the remark to himself—do not know exactly what would be best for the country, but when my hon. friend says whatever may be the doings or the reports of that commission, that it may be detrimental to the manufacturers, I would challenge his statement that the manufacturers have not asked for a tariff commission, because he will find that in practically every annual meeting which those gentlemen have held during the last fifteen years they have constantly demanded a tariff commission. I will not surmise what will be the report of that commission, nor the work of the present government. Of course, that voice from the west may still be heard. It was heard loud enough, during the last parliament, for a couple of members sitting for Manitoba, when they heard their leader speaking on adequate protection backed by their friends the manufacturers, rose in their places in the House and moved for the reduction of duties on agricultural implements. This was filibustering work which would well suit the opposition. It will be now for the government to unite on one policy, and we will judge them when that policy comes down.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (V 2) An Act for the relief of Isabella Helen Horncastle.—Hon. Mr. Roche.

Bill (W 2) An Act to incorporate Capital Trust Corporation, Limited.—Hon. Mr. McSweeney.

Bill (118) An Act to create the Biological Board of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

ORDER POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Second reading (Bill 77) An Act to encourage and assist the improvement of highways.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired of the leader of the government if the information touching taxation was ready.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have the information for which my right hon. friend has asked from some of the provinces, but from some others I have not. I would suggest that the matter stand till to-morrow.

The order was postponed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (A 3) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Central and Labrador Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (B 3) An Act respecting the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

LOCAL AND MUNICIPAL TAXES.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT inquired:

What are the amounts of the local and municipal taxes levied in the several provinces during the year 1911, or to such other dates as they can procure?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have secured, as far as possible, the information which my right hon. friend desires. It may not be sufficient, but it is all that the government can secure at the present time. I shall send it over.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What provinces do they cover?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Ontario reports that statistics for 1911 will not be obtainable for six months, and forwards a copy of the report of the Bureau of Statistics for 1909, and municipal bulletin No. 5, for 1911. Quebec reports that it is impossible to answer the question. Nova Scotia regrets that the information desired for 1910 is not yet available and will not be for about a month. We have a statement of the statistics of incorporated towns and municipalities of Nova Scotia for 1910. New Brunswick reports that information for 1911 is not available, but sends statement for 1909. Prince Edward Island reports 'taxes levied in this province for 1911 are, towns, municipal, $68,882; provincial government, $84,668; revenue for schools, $36,-648.' Manitoba telegraphs, 'taxes levied in municipalities for 1911 were $7,267,530.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That includes, of course, cities?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would assume so, using the term municipalities to cover urban municipalities. Then Saskatchewan reports, 'impossible to supply figures for some weeks.' Alberta telegraphs, 'returns for 1911 incomplete, but am advised that fairly accurate statement will be available by 25th. This would include local, municipal and school taxes.' British Columbia: 'the amount of provincial taxes is not available to 1911, but figures for 1910 are being mailed.' These have not had time to arrive. My right hon. friend might look over the information that has been supplied, and I think it may be said this is all that we may hope to obtain.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What does my hon. friend propose to do? Does he wish to proceed with his Bill this afternoon?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I propose proceeding with the second reading this afternoon, and having it come before the committee as early as possible.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Very good.

CANADIAN CENTRAL AND LABRADOR RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—In reference to the Bill concerning the Canadian Central and Labrador Railway Company, which was deferred till Friday, I should like very much, on account of the lateness of the session, to have it read a second time to-day, and move to have it discharged and placed on the order paper for to-day, and I also would move the necessary suspension of the rules to permit of that.

The SPEAKER—The demand of my hon. friend is quite impossible. The item has been put on the order paper for a certain date, and it cannot be removed, because there are private parties who might suffer by it who are not in this House.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (C 3) An Act respecting the Mexico Northwestern Transportation Company, Limited, and to change its name to Mexico Northwestern Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (D 3) An Act respecting the Alabama Traction Light and Power Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (A 2) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Young.

Bill (M 2) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Central Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Young.

Bill (30) An Act respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (V 2) An Act for the relief of Isabella Helen Horncastle.—Hon. Mr. Roche.

BETTER TERMS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

How soon does the government intend to appoint the commission to investigate the merits of the claim for better terms to the province of British Columbia, which was promised by the Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden, in his telegram to the Premier of British Columbia, dated the 25th January, 1912?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The intention of the government with regard to this commission will be announced in due course. It will be difficult to give much consideration to it until after the close of the present session.

IMMIGRATION INTO CANADA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

1. What is the total number of immigrants who came into Canada for the calendar years 1906 to 1911, both inclusive?
2. What is the estimated value in cash and effects brought into Canada by said immigrants in each of the said calendar years?
3. What number of those immigrants settled in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in the said years, and what amount in cash and effects did they bring with them into said provinces?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows:

1. 1906, 215,912; 1907, 277,373; 1908, 148,700; 1909, 184,281; 1910, 303,091; 1911, 350,374.

2. No estimate of the value of cash and effects has been made except in the case of settlers from the United States. This estimate shows the value to have been, in 1906, $51,599,638; 1907, $50,167,995; 1908, $65,806,848; 1909, $73,797,756; 1910, $132,202,722; 1911, $201,784,446.

3.	Manitoba.	Saskatchewan.	Alberta.
1906	38,382	31,774	30,315
1907	44,025	31,409	31,023
1908	20,180	22,082	26,673
1909	19,415	25,049	37,919
1910	32,669	40,970	47,403
1911	43,600	44,082	45,071

SETTLERS FROM THE UNITED STATES IN WESTERN CANADA.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to direct the attention of the House to a short article that appeared in to-day's 'Citizen' which is very important and should not be allowed to pass without notice. It purports to be a report of remarks made by a member of the House of Commons in the city of Montreal and reads as follows:

BENNETT'S SPEECH.

Remarks in Montreal cause Sensation in Calgary.

Calgary, Alta., Mar. 13.—That the speech made by R. B. Bennett, in Montreal, on Monday, in the course of which he stated that Americans were a menace to western Canada, and that while they might become good Canadians they had inherited a hatred for England and could not become good Britishers, has created a sensation in business, political and professional circles, is putting the situation mildly. Violent protests are general among both Canadians and Americans.

I call the attention of the hon. leader of the House to this matter, because it has excited a great amount of feeling in the west, and because it is from his own town, Calgary. Something should be said in this House on the question. Such a statement is mischievous, to say the least of it. The hon. gentleman who is alleged to have made this speech is a member of the House of Commons and is responsible to the government for any language of this kind that he uses, and for any public declarations that he makes. I am sure that our experience of our American friends who have settled in our Northwest has been the very opposite of what is stated here. We have had no difficulty with them whatever. They are cultivating immense areas of land, and are becoming the best of citizens. The statement which I have read is perfectly new to me, and I am sure the leader of this House will corroborate me when I say that it is entirely incorrect. I leave it to the House to say whether any notice should be taken of this article.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sorry that my hon. friend did not direct my attention to this matter before the House met. I should have been very pleased to have said to him then, as I am bound to say to the House now, that I am informed on Mr. Bennett's behalf that the statement he has read is a pure fabrication, purely a fiction of sensational journalism. It is a phantasy in the mind of some enterprising newspaper man who wanted to make so much copy. I quite agree with what my hon. friend has said as to the valuable acquisition to that western country of the American settles who have made the Northwest their adopted home.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The advent of the American settler in the Northwest has resulted in the rapid development of that country. He is appreciated for his enterprise, his energy, and his loyalty to Canadian institutions.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And I will furthermore say that the American settler in the Northwest has no greater admirer and no stronger personal friend than Mr. Bennett, who is alleged to have made these statements. His political character has been simply traduced, possibly for a purpose which whoever wrote that article had in view. I desire to deny absolutely, on Mr. Bennett's behalf, his entertaining the alleged sentiment which he is said to have expressed, and to assure this House and the American settlers in the west that no one appreciates the valuable acquisition to Canada of these people to a greater extent than Mr. Bennett.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The leader of the government has evidently not read the report of the speech made by Mr. Bennett before the Canadian Club in Montreal last month. The whole of Mr. Bennett's speech was to this effect, that in Mr. Bennett's opinion it was exceedingly dangerous to have a very large number of such settlers. He even went so far as to say that some sections of Alberta were occupied by 74 per cent of American settlers, and that these people were creating a sentiment of separation. I would advise the leader of this House to read the report of Mr. Bennett's speech before the Canadian Club at Montreal. If he does so, he will find that anything the papers say about it is perfectly justified. For years and years I have thought, and I have said to members of the late government that it would be well to mix up these American settlers with British and other settlers, and not to have them all congregated in a certain locality which would be practically a part of the United States. I have repeatedly made that suggestion to the members of the late government, but unfortunately in that, like many other things, my advice was not followed. We sometimes raise a French flag in Quebec. I am told that on the last 4th of July some Americans hoisted the United States flag. It is said that it took some people with cool heads to prevent some ultra-loyalists from tearing down that flag. Then we would have had an insult to the flag and complications. You must remember that any excuse is good enough when you want to get into trouble.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say, in answer to what my hon. friend has stated, that Mr. Bennett can scarcely be held responsible for what may appear in the newspapers. I have been told by those who heard the speech alluded to, that no such reference, and no such reflections were made on the American settlers in the west. Of course, it is utterly impossible to prevent misrepresentations being made, by sensational people attempting to produce mischievous results among new settlers. Having lived in the Northwest for a great many years, and coming very closely in contact with the community of American settlers, I may say that there is no such feeling entertained in the west as that those settlers are a menace to our institutions.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may further say this, that no class of settler has more rapidly identified himself with the institutions of Canada or so quickly and readily assimilated himself, with great advantage to Canada, as the American settler.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In view of the condition of things as outlined by the hon. leader of the House I want to ask him this question——

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Order.

The SPEAKER—The point of order is taken that there is nothing before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am asking a question; I am not going to discuss anything. If a question is not in order, then I would like to know. It is a civil question, and who raised the point of order?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would ask the House to permit the hon. gentleman to ask me the question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, I do not want the House to permit me. I want the right, if it exists and if it does not exist I will see later. I want to know if a man cannot ask the leader a question. Who raised the point of order?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I raised the point of order, because I did not think discussion should proceed upon that question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—You should not express your thought until you know what has been done. I am going to ask the leader of the House whether, in view of what has been said by himself and the other speakers, it would not be advisable to take measures to amend the libel section of the Criminal Code and make it a criminal act for a newspaper to print and publish, and for a newspaper man to write mischevious statements of that kind.

The SPEAKER—I suppose the hon. member will not press his question, because the hon. leader has a right to have two days' notice.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The need is urgent.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (68) An Act respecting Queens College at Kingston, and to change its name to Queens University at Kingston.

Bill (69) An Act to incorporate Queens Theological College.

Bill (115) An Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (32) An Act respecting Grain.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I wish to draw the attention of the House to a matter affecting one of the committees. On November 29 last it was moved that Bill (B) originating in the Senate be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and that motion was carried. Up to the present time the committee has not reported on that Bill. Rule 125 says:

> The committee to which a private Bill has been referred shall report the same to the Senate in every case; and when any material alteration has been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration and the reasons for the same are to be stated in the report.

This is a public Bill, but I contend that when it was submitted to the Committee on Railways it occupied the same position as a private Bill. The chairman of the committee to-day asks for a suspension of the rules to facilitate the passage of certain Senate Bills through this House more rapidly than they would otherwise ordinarily proceed. I should like to ask the chairman of the Railway Committee, or any other member of the committee, or of this House, why any of these Bills should have preference over a public Bill, which had priority on the order paper. I claim that that Bill, being first on the order paper, had precedence over the others, and I do not see why it was thrown aside for the purpose of allowing private Bills, which were not as important, to be railroaded through the House. I should like to know what is going to be done about it. I believe it is the duty of the committee to report on that Bill and to deal with it in some way.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have not looked up the dates of reference to which my hon. friend refers, in relation to this Bill, but no doubt it was referred a very long time ago to the Railway Committee, and shortly after its reference, when the measure was reached, it was referred to a sub-committee of the Committee on Railways at the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, to consider the provisions of the Bill, and my hon. friend was elected chairman of that committee. Strange to say, only to-day has that sub-committee's report come before the parent committee. If there is any complaint of delay, surely it does not lie altogether against the parent committee, because, during all this long interval, the sub-committee, of which my hon. friend was chairman, was not able to report to the parent committee until to-day, and when the order was called, a majority of the committee decided that the consideration of the measure should be postponed, in order to permit them to take up matters which seemed to them to be more urgent. Owing to the heavy order paper we were unable to reach it this morning. I contend that there is no censure to be laid at the door of the Railway Committee in this regard. I have given you the naked facts.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—In reply to my hon. friend, I may say that it is very true the measure was referred to a sub-committee, but that sub-committee was composed of members of the Railway Committee. I did my very best, as chairman of the sub-committee, to have meetings, and every time I tried to call a meeting I was hampered by something or other; there was a meeting of this, that or the other committee, and I never could get them together. I was surrounded by an influence I could not overcome. It was like somebody trying to climb over a 20-foot fence without a ladder. At last we had a meeting of the committee and reported the Bill without amendment. This morning, when the matter was brought up, after being on the order paper for such a length of time, and being a public measure, having just as much, if not more rights than the other Bills, and being first on the order paper, it was set to one side and the remainder of the programme taken up. Then some Bills originating in the Senate were so important that we had to suspend the rules to facilitate their passage through the House. When they suspended the rules in regard to these other measures, they might have suspended the rules to enable us to put my Bill through. I have had this Bill before the House for about three years. I think it was the first or second Bill introduced this session, and I have done my best to have it put through, because I consider it is a measure in the interests of the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—But I have never been able to do it. I do not know why it was set aside this morning. However, being a public Bill, if they are not prepared to deal with it in my hon. friend's committee.

then let it be sent to the House so that it can be considered.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Railway Committee have shown no inclination not to deal with it. They only received the report to-day.

SETTLERS FROM THE UNITED STATES IN WESTERN CANADA.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I wish to call the attention of the House to an article which appeared in this morning's 'Citizen.' The 'Citizen' quotes it from a Calgary paper.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The 'Gazette.'

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I am speaking of the other article, and the hon. leader of the House stated that it was purely a production from yellow literature, and no truth in the whole thing, and on Mr. Bennett's behalf he spoke very decidedly as to his being perfectly innocent.

The SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman is evading the rules.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I think I have a right to reply that I am charged in the House with quoting from yellow literature, However, I shall move the adjournment of the House.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman moves the adjournment of the House he must, before making that motion, show that he is directing their attention to a very urgent question.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I assure the House that it is urgent and most important—nothing could be more urgent at this juncture. The Montreal 'Gazette' of Tuesday——

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The most respectable Conservative paper in Canada.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—The article appears also in the Montreal 'Witness,' which paper does not deal in the stuff out of which they make yellow literature. The article reads as follows:

> Bennett read a document decidedly radical in its nature. He declared that the people of the west had many grievances, both in taxation, transportation, and tariff, and at the same time a majority of the settlers in the Northwest, and those pouring in there at the rate of one per minute, knew little about eastern Canada, while many of them were imbued with hereditary hatred of monarchial institutions. Under these circumstances, Mr. Bennett argued that unless the east were prepared to make some sacrifices to the west, there was real danger of a feeling for separation growing up there. There was a spirit of unrest everywhere, he said, and a desire on the part of the people to make their sovereign will felt, as was shown by the revolutions and difficulties in countries all over the world at the present moment.

I am not going to read all, or half, of his remarks, but that is enough to show that this is not merely the product of yellow literature.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend if that is not the speech that the hon. member from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) delivered in the Senate the other day.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I agree with a lot of, it but some of it I do not agree with.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—The point is this; I have nothing against the character of Mr. Bennett. In bringing this matter before the House I did so because I thought it was my duty, as a member of this House and as a representative from that part of the country, to protect the reputation of the people of the west. I hold very different views as to the Americans who have settled in the west, and who have proved themselves valuable settlers. I look upon this whole matter as a slander on our citizens of the west, and I am sure that the end is not yet. Something will be done to show that our people are loyal. If they have difficulties they will make their difficulties understood. They are loyal, energetic and a business people of the first quality. We are proud to have them in our midst and we hope that any sentiments of this kind will not be repeated in the public press of the country.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I am pleased to know, hon. gentlemen, that I have one follower, and that I am not ploughing my furrow alone. I have one gentleman who supports a great many of my views, the hon. gentleman who represents the city of Calgary in the House of Commons, and who is known to be a good Conservative. That relieves me of the charge of partisanship. When speaking on this question the other day I said that I was not talking from a partisan standpoint. I was stating that I knew of the western country. I am glad to know that I am backed up by such an eminent authority as Mr. Bennett, the member from Calgary. He differs from me in one matter. I stated that I considered there was no danger from the Americans, and that they were loyal and liked our system of government better than their own. A great many of them treked out of the United States because they wanted to get away from the system of government they had over there. Mr. Bennett, on the other hand, has different views, but still he gives a warning to the manufacturers and to the people who are trying to tax the people of the west too highly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Two of a kind.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—He warns the people of the east that they cannot strain the cable to the breaking point.

The motion was lost.

MONTREAL CENTRAL TERMINAL COMPANY.

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE.

The order of the day being called:

Third reading (Bill 49) 'An Act respecting the Montreal Central Terminal Company,' as amended.—Hon. Mr. Owens.

Hon. Mr. OWENS moved that the Bill be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman should give reasons why he asks to have the Bill referred back.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—When that Bill was before the committee two amendments to clauses 3 and 4 were inserted, but similar amendments have been refused in similar Bills since. One Bill which passed the committee to-day and another Bill which comes before the committee to-morrow are similar. I think it is much better that this Bill be referred back, and that all Bills of a similar nature should come up at the same time. We are not asking for any protection that is not given to other companies. I think that all Bills that come before this House that are of a similar nature should be treated in the same manner. Amendments were put in this Bill that were refused before the Railway Committee in the House of Commons. I think it is much better to refer this Bill back to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for further consideration than to discuss it here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has given but a faint idea of the purposes he has in mind in moving to return this Bill to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours. Some clauses have been added to this Bill by the committee, after due consideration. They are practically standard clauses. My hon. friend is right in saying that a similar clause was refused this morning in a Bill which is reported to this House to-day, but he has failed to add that the circumstances were not similar. Some of the clauses introduced in the Bill this morning were concerning a transportation company which, on the face of its Act, could not have any intention of carrying on an urban passenger business in the city of Montreal. The other charters in which our Railway Committee, as well as this House and the House of Commons, have introduced the clause to which my hon. friend takes objection, were companies which could under their charter powers, do urban business in the city of Montreal. This is a distinction that has been made by the Railway Committee. I see no contradiction in the policy followed by that committee, and for that reason I object to returning the Bill to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think it has been a common practice to refer a Bill back to a committee for further consideration. I take it that that is a very proper thing to do where amendments have been made, because they can be properly discussed and the pros and cons can be heard in the committee as they cannot be here. Therefore, I think, although I have no interest in the Bill, that the request of the hon. member should be granted, and the Bill referred back to the committee. Unfortunately, I am not a member of that committee, but I had an opportunity of being present and hearing the discussion, and I think it would be only courteous to him to refer the Bill back for further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Third reading Bill (9) 'An Act to amend the Criminal Code.'—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like the third reading to be further postponed for an amendment which has to be made. I might say that some changes are being made in the British Columbia statute to which reference is made in this Bill, and it will be necessary to harmonize the two. I would suggest that it stand over till Monday next.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—While amendments are being introduced into the Criminal Code I think it would be advisable to have one regarding the libel law. Any newspaper print, or any print whatever, which publishes mischievous statements against the character of a country or against national interests ought to be prosecuted by the public prosecutor at the demand of the individual or the corporation affected.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say to my hon. friend that while there may be some affinity between saw logs and paper, it would be rather incongruous to couple libel with the saw logs and timber mentioned in this Bill. However, I quite agree with the wisdom of the suggestion made by my hon. friend. It is a question which I suggest that he work out. I do not know but that it would be in the public interest that such should be done, but I am not prepared to express any opinion upon it at the present moment.

The order was allowed to stand.

SECOND READING.

Bill (Y 2) An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited, and to change its name to the Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.—Hon. Mr. Casgrain.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL —CUSTOMS CLERKS.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (116) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

He said: This is a Bill for the purpose of amending the Civil Service Act so far as it relates to the Customs Act. This Bill was really introduced by the late government, but owing to the dissolution of the House it did not reach its final stages in parliament. The object is to create senior chief clerks, a class of clerk for which no provision has been made. It proposes increasing the salaries of certain senior clerks by $400 a year. When we go into committee I shall be very glad to give any further information on the subject.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL —TORONTO AND MONTREAL POSTMASTERS.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (124) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —What is this for?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Bill is applicable to the assistant postmasters of Montreal and Toronto. They are two first class officers. They are given salaries running from $2,800 to $3,500 a year. The Toronto post office is the one in which there is the largest revenue of the whole country. Montreal comes next, and the revenue from that office is increasing very rapidly also. The Bill is for the purpose of giving greater recognition to the assistant postmasters of those two important cities.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —How much?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When the postage collections exceed one million dollars, $2,800 to $3,500, the annual increase to be $100. Clause 2 has a somewhat similar provision.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Quebec is not included.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When we go into committee I would suggest that my hon. friend should direct the attention of the House to Quebec.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Quebec is more important than Toronto and Montreal.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But at present this Bill only deals with the two cities, Montreal and Toronto.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SALE OF BREAD BILL.

BILL DEFEATED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Casgrain for Committee of the Whole House on Bill (D) intituled: 'An Act respecting the Sale of Bread,' and the motion in amendment thereto of the Hon. Mr. David, that the said Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.—Hon. Mr. Power.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not propose to speak on this measure when I moved the adjournment of the debate; it was simply for the purpose of keeping the matter before the House, because at the time it came up last the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) was not here, and it was just in order to keep the Bill alive that I made the motion.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I beg to be allowed, before reaching a motion, to say that the hon. leader of the House intended to make a declaration in connection with this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The only statement which I can make to the House is this, that while the government is not prepared to make a definite statement as to the constitutionality of the Bill, they desire me to point out that, owing to provincial legislation and by-laws of various municipalities, there would, in all probability, if the central government legislated also on the question, be such a conflict of authority as to result in confusion; and the opinion is that it would be inexpedient, under those peculiar conditions, to supplement the legislation on the statute-book of the provinces and the by-laws of municipalities on this particular subject.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What about the Highway Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are not dealing with that at the present time.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—My views are exactly in accordance with those just expressed by the hon. leader of the House, and I beg to be allowed to withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER—Is it your pleasure that the hon. member be permitted to withdraw his amendment?

Leave granted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the motion before the House?

The SPEAKER—The motion is to refer Bill (D) to committee of the Whole House, and the amendment of the Hon. Mr. David was to refer it to the Standing Committee on Private Bills, but he withdraws his amendment.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I thought my example would be followed by the hon. member for De Lanaudière, and that he would withdraw his Bill as I withdraw my amendment.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I understand from the leader of the House that several hon. members wanted to speak; the Hon. Mr. Coffey told me just now that he wished to speak on the Bill, but he is not present at the moment. I am entirely within the judgment of this House. I fully realize that there is no chance of this Bill passing this session. Even if it were passed by this House, as I have no doubt it would be, perhaps it would not be passed by the House of Commons at this late stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did understand that there were several gentlemen who wanted to speak. Two or three hon. gentlemen spoke to me on the subject.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I move that the order be discharged and that it be put on the order paper for second reading on Thursday week.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I move in amendment that the House go into committee on this Bill this day three months.

The amendment was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL —PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself in Committee of the Whole on Bill (60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I said to hon. gentlemen yesterday that I woud endeavour to secure such information as was possible touching the provision made for the secretaries of the late ministers. While it is not an official list, it is the result of the inquiry which I made. I can say to hon. gentlemen that they need not have the slightest anxiety as to due provision having been made for these gentlemen. Many of them have been advanced from the division which they occupied when they were appointed secretaries, and many of them are now in the first division and enjoying the maximum salary. I would be very pleased to show this list to hon. gentlemen who desire to see it. I understand that provision has been made for all, with the exception of one case, and the present Prime Minister has said that due provision will be made for him, and such is now being done. I find. on looking over the list. that quite a number of them are in the first division, so that no hardship is being entailed upon any of these gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would like to amend the clause by striking out in line 9 the phrase 'for a period not exceeding one year' and replacing the word 'one' in line 13 by the word 'three.' When we passed that Act, which was quite voluminous, if my attention had been drawn to the danger of the phraseology contained in this section, I would undoubtedly have moved as I move now. As I said yesterday, it seems to me to be a very dangerous enactment that allows, a party, after serving but one year as private secretary to a minister, to break into the cilivl service. My motion is that a private secretary will have to serve three years before he is deemed to be permanently appointed to the inside service at a salary which he is then receiving as such clerk. This being my motion, I must vary the terms of the clause by striking out the phrase, 'for a period not exceeding one year,' and then the clause would read as follows:

> Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be apointed a clerk in subdivision B of the first division or in subdivision A or subdivision B of the second division, and shall be paid a salary not exceeding the maximum salary of the subdivision to which he is appointed, and after three year's service as such secretary he shall be deemed to be permanently appointed to the inside service at the salary which he is then receiving as such clerk and with rank in such subdivision.

This will not, of course, remove the objection that the civil service may have the privilege given to a minister's private secretary,. and in which they may suffer in their aspiration for promotion. I recognize that it is most important that ministers should have the advantage of selecting competent men for the important work which is confided to them. My conviction is that the civil service, which is entitled to the natural advantages of promotion, when vacancies offer, will have to put up with this privilege given to these private secretaries.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to take exception to the position assumed by my hon. friend. It is clearly a money Bill. We have to reject the Bill or accept it. This makes a charge upon the public revenue, and, being a money Bill, I take the ground that the Senate is not at liberty to amend it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I would just point out to my hon. friend that there is scarcely any conceiveable sort of Bill that can be brought before us, which, by introducing some clause or other of that sort, you cannot put on the footing of a money Bill. This does not affect any particular sum of money, and the mere altering of the term or period, does not seem to me to affect the principle of dealing with a money question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the wording of this clause. It entitles the party to be classified in one class rather than in another class, but it appropriates no money, and when this Act comes into force a sum will have to be voted by parliament. I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the decision of the Speaker of the House of Commons, not later than two or three weeks ago, on the Highway Bill, where he will find the very same distinction that I am making. This being the ruling of the Speaker of the House of Commons, it seems to me it is not for us to question his decision on a matter which is on all fours with this, a Bill absolutely similar to this, and which will be before us in a few moments. It is not for the Senate to curtail its power, in view of the declaration of the House of Commons, through its Speaker, that this Bill does not fall under the class of money Bills which cannot be amended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill proposes making a charge upon the consolidated revenue to the extent of the amounts represented between the first and third division of the Civil Service Act. That being a charge upon the public revenue, or against the consolidated revenue fund, I fail to see in what way we can amend the Bill. True, as my hon. friend has said, we do not propose changing the amounts involved in the Bill, but we propose changing the terms which directly affect the payment of the amount, and if you can approach so very close to the precipice as has been indicated by my hon. friend, then you can make any amendment in a money Bill that might come before the Senate by simply avoiding touching the amounts in question. I submit we must accept or reject it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Take the Grain Bill for instance; that undoubtedly does impose a charge, and I think settles the amount of money that is to be paid to each commissioner. My hon. friend surely would not take the ground that it is out of our power to amend the Grain Bill when it comes to us, because out of three or four hundred clauses, one clause is introduced fixing the salary of the commissioner or of two or three commissioners, as the case may be. He will see that the position he takes would circumscribe the powers of the Senate far too much, and that it is not in accordance with the spirit, at any rate—I offer no opinion as to the latter—of the parliamentary law on those matters, but we did not hesitate, and I do not think we can hesitate, to amend the Grain Bill in certain particulars, if we deem it fit.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Objection is taken that this is a money Bill, and therefore cannot be amended in this House. Nearly every Bill which comes before us contains money clauses. Since I have held a seat in this Chamber both sides have amended very materially and effectively large money Bills. The Railway Act was a money Bill, and any amount of money has been expended under it. I think we made 85 or 90 amendments to that measure. If the declaration of the hon. leader of the Senate is to be taken seriously, then the Senate is absolutely of no further use in the public service and we are simply here to stultify ourselves. The hon. leader cannot be serious in telling us that because there are one or two money clauses in the Bill we have no right to amend it. Is he going to tell us that we cannot amend the Tariff Commission Bill, which is largely a money Bill? Is he going to tell us that we will not be able to amend the Highway Bill, or the Good Roads Bill? He cannot be serious, but if he is serious, we ought to fight him on that ground, and the Senate should make itself felt. The amendment of the hon. member for De Lorimier is not one that should impose a charge on the treasury, and that is where I make this distinction in regard to money Bills. I understand the Senate has no right to say to the Commons 'You have voted $400 for a certain purpose, we want to make it $600,' because that would be imposing a burden on the country without the consent of the Commons, but in this case we not only do not impose a tax on the country, but we relieve the country of useless expenditure. We safeguard the expenditure to that extent. Under these circumstances, surely no man with a sane mind would say to the Senate: 'You cannot touch this Bill except to throw it out.' If we were in that position we would have no right to pass anything except a few divorce Bills, and if we come down to the fine point they are money Bills, because they cost money to put them through. Railway Bills are money Bills. I think the doctrine proposed by the hon. leader of the House should not be accepted.

Hon. Mr. DANDUARND—I draw attention to the fact that if this were a money Bill, then the whole Civil Service Act should not have been amended in this Chamber, and anything affecting the classification of the civil service would be outside the jurisdiction of this House. When the Civil Service Act was passed we amended it in very many ways. This is an amendment to the Civil Service Act. It simply alters the classification and votes no money. It simply declares that private secretaries when appointed, may be appointed to a certain class under certain conditions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think the analogy pointed out in the Grain Bill would hold good, for this reason: the House of Commons, in this Bill, has expressed itself that at the expiration of a year there should be a charge against the consolidated revenue by a certain amendment. That is the point—that upon the expiration of a year a certain charge will be made against consolidated revenue. The Senate comes in and says: 'No, we shall postpone that charge against the consolidated revenue for three years.' It is not a question of classification; it is a question of postponing the payment for a longer period than the House of Commons which has jurisdiction with money matters has done. The question, therefore, arises, the House of Commons having expressed itself as to when that charge will be made against consolidated revenue, can this House step in and say: 'No, we will postpone it for three years'? If that can be done, we can indefinitely postpone that charge. I do not think that is in contemplation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My opinion is that this is simply a classification of the civil service, and that under this classification money is to be voted which will be comprised in a money Bill, but my contention is that until that stage is reached this Chamber can deal with this Bill, and I would ask the hon. gentleman who represents the cabinet if this Bill was introduced in the House of Commons after a resolution had been offered the House, with the consent of the government?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let me assume the government would bring down a Bill voting subsidies payable on a certain date. Can this House postpone the payment of those subsidies for a longer period in advance?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Undoubtedly no. But I say there is no money voted by this Bill, and my hon. friend has not answered my question. If the money were voted by this Bill it would have to be proceded by a resolution introduced with the sanction of the Governor General. Was this Bill preceded by a resolution?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me there is no question about our power. The reference to the Grain Bill by the right hon. gentleman is correct to a certain extent, but no further. If the Grain Bill comes to us for consideration, and makes provision for the appointment of certain commissioners who are to obtain salaries, we have not power to interfere with those particular clauses. That does not, however, prevent this House from dealing with and amending any other clauses which do not affect the revenue. I do not think there is a question about that. The point which has been raised here is, to my mind, a very nice point.

This Bill makes a provision for a change in the mode of promotion, and carries with it a certain salary. As has been pointed out by the leader of the House just now, the Commons in its wisdom has continued a law which has been in existence for a number of years, providing that this increase of salary to the civil servants may be paid in certain cases after an official has served one year. The proposition now is, we do not object to the promotion of the clerk, nor to the increase of salary which follows, but we say it must be deferred for three years. Speaking for myself personally, if this were a new Bill, introduced for the purpose of regulating the promotion of these servants, I would say at once it ought to be three years, but now we are attempting to change a clause in the law which provides for the payment of certain sums to a certain class of civil servant, making the term three years instead of after one year. I take the point of order that the committee should rise and the question should be put to the Speaker. I do not know whether I am understood, what I mean is that this point of order should be referred to the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN—I am quite competent to judge the point of order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not ask you whether you were or not. I have no doubt of your competency to decide any question and every question that might arise, but notwithstanding your superior knowledge to that of the Speaker, you have not the authority of the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN—At present I have.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, you have not.

The CHAIRMAN—I will have to call you to order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit you can give a decision, but that decision would not be final, because it could be appealed against to the Chair. I do not wish to deprive you of any honour, or any exhibition of your talent, or knowledge of the rules governing the House. I take that point in order that we may have a final declaration from the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN—I will read rule 70.

> The Senate will not proceed upon a Bill appropriating public money, that shall not, within the knowledge of the Senate, have been recommended by the King's representative.

It would be necessary for the leader of this House to inform the Senate that this was a money Bill before we could proceed.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I call attention to what I consider a distinction between this Bill and what are known as money Bills. The rule applies with reference to the resolution upon which a money Bill is founded. Apparently the government did not recognize this Bill to be a money Bill, and did not present any such resolution. They appear to have recognized it as being a mere amendment to the Civil Service Act, authorizing a qualification of certain persons to occupy a certain rank. Incidentally to that such persons would become entitled to the salary that might be paid. That does not change or affect the nature or character of the Bill, which provides that any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be appointed a clerk. That is the enacting part of the Act. And then it goes on to describe what kind of a clerk, whether he is to be in subdivision 'B' of the first division or subdivision 'A' or subdivision 'B' of the second division. That entitles him to rank and position permanently under the Civil Service Act. The mere fact that they go on and add words which may be superflous does not make it a money Bill. It goes on to say they may draw a salary within one amount or the other, the maximum and the minimum. If it is an infraction of the rule then the Commons should have said so when the Bill was taken up. The rule will be found laid down in Bourinot, page 628:

> That it is quite regular, however, to agree to amendments which affect charges upon the people incidentally only and have not been made with that object.

I think if the leader of the House will further consider the matter he will see that this has not been interpreted by the government as a money Bill. They have not followed the practice with regard to a money Bill. The salary is a mere incident to the object of the Bill, which is to place the civil servant under a certain status in the Civil Service Act, and that entitles him to one salary or the other, and for the purpose of defining what that is to be, it is placed here in the Bill. It does not seem to me to be the voting of the money for any particular purpose. It is dealing with a class of persons, and incidental to that, and for the purpose of preventing any possible misapprehension, it states what is to be the maximum of the salary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to call attention to the point which I raised. I should like to have that point settled.

The CHAIRMAN—There is a motion before the Chair that the committee rise in order to submit the point of order to the Speaker.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I raise the point of order as to the power which this committee has to amend this Bill and I ask that the question be referred to the Speaker.

The motion was declared lost.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must take exception to the course pursued by the hon. Chairman. I made no such motion. The Chairman has no right to put a motion in my mouth that I never made. When a question of order is raised in the Senate, or in the House, or in committee, the motion is not put to the Senate as to whether that point of order shall be referred to the Speaker or not; it is referred as a matter of course. It is for the Speaker to decide whether the point of order is properly taken or not. It is about time that we should try to adhere to parliamentary usage and practice, without any Chairman arrogating to himself the right to decide whether that mode of conducting the business shall be followed. I have taken a position that has been practised ever since I have been in parliament, over forty years, and I decline to have any Chairman put me in a position of absurdity in a matter of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN—Hand in your motion in writing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no such thing as putting in a motion in writing when one raises a point of order; all a senator has to do is to raise the point of order, state what it is, then let it be determined.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is so seldom that we have occasion to discuss certain points of order that I would ask you to pardon me if I say I am not very clear as to the rule upon which my hon. friend relies for his claim that when a point of order is raised in committee the chairman of the committee cannot decide it. I would read to my hon. friend rule 73, which says.

> The rules of the Senate are observed in Committee of the Whole, except the rules relating to the number of times of speaking, and no motion for the previous question, or adjournment, can be received, but a senator may at any time move that a chairman leave the Chair and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Unless my hon. friend can show me a rule by which we are bound, and which deprives the chairman of a committee from ruling upon a point of order, then I claim that clause 73 allows the members of the committee to reject the motion that the committee rise for the purpose of seeking the opinion of the Speaker.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope my hon. friend does not misunderstand the position I take. I stated first that the chairman of the committee has the right and power to rule if I raise a point of order, but in case that ruling is not in accordance with the opinion of the senator who raises the point of order, then the right remains, in practice, although not provided for, to appeal to the Chair. I should not have said so much had not the chairman interfered. The probabilities are that I used some remarks that I should not have used to the chairman. I think he interfered in a manner in which he was not justified. If I said anything improper I apologize.

The CHAIRMAN—Where are we at?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want this point referred to the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN—I have no power to do that at present.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We cannot do that without the sanction of the committee. The chairman of this committee is not all powerful. We are his rulers and he cannot leave the Chair without our permission unless he desires to resign. He has no authority to leave the Chair and report to a third party without the sanction of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN—Shall I put the motion that I rise? Moved by the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Lougheed, that I do now leave the Chair?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is no such motion.

The CHAIRMAN—I should like to know what the motion is?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have raised the point of order that we have no right to make this change, this being a money Bill. You have not yet made your decision; if you have, then I take my right of appealing to the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN—You want me to decide whether it is a money Bill or not? I decide it is not a money Bill, and I base my decision on the fact that this Bill was not introduced in the House of Commons by way of resolution, the consent of His Excellency the Governor General having been previously obtained.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If that be the case I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. If my hon. friend wishes to take charge of this Bill and mutilate it to such an extent and in such a way that he knows the government of the day cannot with self-respect accept it, of course he is at perfect liberty to do so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am somewhat surprised to hear the remark of my hon. friend. It seems to me that if this is a Bill which the Senate can deal with, there is no amendment which is so little offensive as the one I am proposing. I am leaving full power to the government—and when I say the government I am not thinking of the government of the day or the government of to-morrow—to appoint those private secretaries, with the full power that the government asks to place its private secretaries in the class it chooses, but I say that instead of having the right to do so after one year's service, they will have to serve three years. Surely if I had any hidden motive, or political partisan views in this matter I would act otherwise; When I name three years to apply to private secretaries appointed on the 10th October last, surely my hon. friend does not fear that the cabinet will be in danger within the next thirty-six months.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In reply to that I should like to say that it has been the settled policy of parliament that the status should be given to a private secretary after the expiration of a year. If I mistake not, my hon. friend was in charge of this Bill when it was introduced into the Senate. It was provided that that status should be given after the expiration of a year, and those private secretaries may be advanced under the peculiar circumstances which I have pointed out, and which circumstances were agreed to by the opposition in the House of Commons. My hon. friend now intervenes and suggests that the settled policy of parliament on this question should be departed from by increasing that time by 200 per cent, that is to say, extending it from one year to three years. It indicates a want of consideration for the responsibility which rests upon ministers, and upon the government in the appointment of their private secretaries. As a reasonable man, my hon. friend knows that no private secretary will accept this risk of abandoning a position which he may be called upon to sacrifice in order to accept this position contingent upon some condition happening three years hence. It is unreasonable; and I say it is not only unreasonable, but it is a departure from the established policy of parliament as applied to the civil service.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw my hon. friend's attention to this fact, that the present private secretaries were appointed on the 10th of October, or thereabouts. This Bill is intended to cover their case. Now they have the absolute assurance that if the present government remains in power 36 months, there is no danger. If there should be a change of government within 36 months, perhaps their positions would be jeopardized; but it was so little in my mind that there might be a change in the present situation which could in the least affect the present private secretaries, that I said three years. If I had said five years I could quite understand that my hon. friend would say: 'Well, there is always an element of uncertainity involved in a general appeal to the people,' but I have mentioned a term far short of the natural length of a parliament, and that is the reason why I said three years, thinking it was a period that would be accepted by everyone. The hon. gentleman who is to the right of the leader of this House (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) declared that if the Act were under review and not an amendment to the Act, he himself would be disposed to consider a limit of three years. Was my hon. friend remiss in his duty as leader of the opposition when in 1908 he allowed the Act to pass with that very short period of one year? Now that it comes here, and I see that it is only a year, it strikes me, and it struck very many senators, I believe, even my hon. friend, that a period of 12 months is too short. He may feign indignation; I am under the impression that he does feign indignation when he speaks with some warmth of the ill-advised amendment which I am proposing. When the Act was before this House, he had at the time many duties crowding upon him as leader of the opposition in this Chamber, or I am convinced that he would have drawn attention to the fact that one year was too short.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No; my point is this, as I suggested it; when the government came into office, seeing that the policy of parliament was as it is embodied in the Civil Service Act, namely one year, they gave their undertaking to the secretaries whom they employed that the right would be given to ministers to move them up two subdivisions if necessary; and in pursuance of that they bring down to parliament, embodied in that legislation, what already has been the settled policy of parliament, of which the late government took due advantage.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But my amendment would not prevent that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Just wait, if my hon. friend will pardon me; accordingly they brought down the legislation giving the government the right, at the expiration of a year, if any contingency happened by which the secretary would cease to act in that capacity, to take advantage of the status given. Now the very radical suggestion is made that we depart from that policy and make the term three years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But in the meantime a private secretary can be placed in that superior division and draw the salary.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, he cannot.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No; let me point out to my hon. friend that the result of his amendment would be this, that if the official ceased, before the expiration of three years, to be the private secretary of the minister, he would then have no status at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That I admit.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Now I ask hon. gentlemen is it fair, is it reasonable, that a private secretary should, after serving a minister in that capacity for 2½ years, and in the meantime possibly sacrificing some very good position to accept that office, find himself on the street without occupying any status in the civil service? Why, the position in which such a man would be placed would be lamentable. I don't think it is the intention of this House that a hardship of that kind should be imposed upon a man who had rendered faithful service in such a branch of the public service as he may have been called upon to serve. I think the policy of the Act is that at the earliest opportunity he should be given his status in the civil service, that he should not be kept suspended between heaven and earth, like Mahomet's coffin, for three years, and only at the expiration of three years be able to take advantage of that position.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The old government, if I remember aright, did not propose to put their private secretaries in as high positions as this new Act offers them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, no, the old government did not, for the simple reason that they were governed by the law which they found on the statute-book; but in the list which is before me, and which I shall be very pleased to show to my hon. friend, nearly all those private secretaries are practically in division 'A,' and drawing the salaries.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It would be very interesting if the hon. gentleman would add the number of years that they served as private secretaries; he would find that they had been there from five to fifteen years

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Precisely, but why should that condition of affairs be changed? Those men have already had the advantage of a government having served fifteen years, and during fifteen years of office that government of course advanced their salaries from time to time, until, upon their stepping out of office, they had an opportunity of making due provision for them. The new government, in coming in, did take some of those secretaries. In other cases they took outside men; for instance, we know that provincial ministers came in who had been accustomed to the services of the secretaries in the governments of which they had been members. They brought these men here upon the representation which I have mentioned. Such a class of men would not occupy the same advantageous position as a clerk who, possibly, might have been in a department for many years, and who would have been taken by the minister as his secretary. There are cases of that kind arising, and it is to meet those peculiar cases which I pointed out that this legislation is introduced. I am satisfied that the practical operation of the Bill would not result any differently than the operation of the old Act which I have before me in the case of those secretaries now placed.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—What would be the position of the private secretaries to the late government if they had only served two years, under the amendment which the hon. gentleman moved.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—They would not be able to enter the service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It only affects outside men.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What I want to cure is what seems to be a possible evil, that of appointing a private secretary, after he had served twelve months, to a very important position in the civil service, to the detriment of the members of the civil service generally, and it seems to me that twelve months would not be sufficient time, in the face of the Civil Service Act which now prevents the appointment of a number of outsiders, unless they begin at the bottom of the ladder, that some appointments could be made of gentlemen as private secretaries who would have sought the position with the idea of simply making the necessary stay of twelve months in order to step into the higher position. It seemed to me that twelve months was much too short. That is why I asked to have it lengthened to three years.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am glad to see that it is not a money Bill, and that the opinion I gave yesterday is endorsed by the committee. I do not see what objection the government can have to inserting 'three' instead of 'one' in the Bill, unless they are anxious to have patronage, and place a number of their friends, who are now clamouring for good situations, in the government. If they were simply going to appoint secretaries to the ministers, I would have no objection, but hon. gentlemen will see the abuse which this might lead to. A man who could not pass the examination, or who had no qualification to be in the civil service, would ask to be appointed secretary just for one year, and would not do the work. The old secretary would perform the duties. The appointee would have the title of secretary, and after the time was up, he would pass over the heads of the other employees without an examination and would be placed in a better position than those who have been there twenty-five years. I do not see why the government, if this is a bona fide measure, can have any objection to extending the time to three years, because a minister who has a good secretary is sure to keep him that long, unless the government go out before that time, and I hope and I feel pretty sure they will. You will see hundreds of men clamouring for office who would not accept the situation at $400 or $500 or $600, but under this Bill they will claim the right to be appointed as private secretaries pro forma, in order to be one year in the public service, doing nothing, because the work will be done by the other secretaries, and after the year is up they will be employed at a large salary, without examination. There is no reason why the amendment should not be accepted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Can a minister have more than one private secretary?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, sometimes two or three.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, he may have three.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And these three would have the right to go into the civil service after one year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have the right now.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The secretaries for fourteen ministers would give us forty-two secretaries. There is a danger lurking here. when the private secretary receives his salary, $1,200, or whatever it may be, will he receive at the end of the year the full salary of the division he is placed in?

The CHAIRMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And can he remain secretary and draw the salary of the higher class as well as his own salary as secretary?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Certainly, it has always been that way.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Private secretaries were never hoisted into the higher divisions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is altogether an error. There is scarcely a private secretary who desired to remain in the service on the change of ministry who has not been provided for by being retained in the service in some capacity. I know the gentleman who had been my own private secretary for a number of years was taken over by the Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Blair. He remained in his service as long as that gentleman was at the head of the department, and in no case, except where the private secretary thought proper to resign, have they dispensed with the services of the private secretaries. The hon. gentleman from Quebec, I think, has sounded the note which has actuated himself—I would not like to attribute it to my hon. friend who is making this motion—and that is that the proposition made by the government of the day is for the purpose of creating better positions for those they may appoint in the future, and to provide good salaries for those whom they have appointed secretaries. During my long period of service in the government I never knew of double secretaries in any department except that of the Prime Minister. The enormous correspondence which the Prime Minister necessarily has is almost beyond the power of any one man to accomplish. Sir John Macdonald had two secretaries, and both had plenty of work to do. My hon. friend to my left has given certain information in reference to the private secretaries, and I propose to read to the House how the remaining secretaries of the late administration have been provided for, and the positions they hold now. The Premier has not changed his private secretary, and he assures my hon. friend to the left that that private secretary will be not only protected, but will be promoted to the position which the present Bill contemplates. The present Finance Minister retains the secretary and makes no appointment whatever. The Minister of Labour is in precisely the same position, retaining the secretary of the former minister. In the Interior Department the clerk reverts to his former position as chief clerk of the department, which is one of the highest positions he could get, with a salary of $2,200. In the Militia and Defence the salary is $2,300, and in the Inland Revenue, when the late minister resigned, his clerk in the department would have been in subdivision 'B' of the second division at $1,600, with a maximum of $2,100. In the Department of Trade and Commerce the secretary of my right hon. friend opposite (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) was promoted, I think very properly, to the deputy ministership.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That was done many years ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But up to the present no secretary has been appointed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I had a private secretary when I went out of office.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not prepared to contradict the statement of my hon. friend, and this memorandum does not say what was done for the secretary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I fancy nothing was done for him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The secretary was in a position to be raised to $2,500. In the Justice Department the secretary is in receipt of $2,400 and will in time reach $2,500. In the Department of Agriculture the secretary is receiving a salary of $1,600, with a maximum of $2,100, and this applies also to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The present officer reverts to the position of clerk in the department in the second division at a salary of $1,600, with a maximum of $2,100. If this Bill passes, that private secretary, or that clerk, can be promoted to class 'A' and consequently receive a higher salary; and so it is with the Post Office Department. Mr. Beland's secretary, who was only a few days in office, went back to the department from which he had been taken. In the Customs Department, the clerk goes into subdivision 'A' of the second division at $1,600, with a right to an increase to $2,100, and the secretary in the Department of Railways and Canals is in precisely the same position. The secretary in the Public Works Department resigned. So that in no case have the services of the private secretaries been overlooked.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Were those gentlemen reappointed secretaries?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I presume those to whom I have referred were.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I doubt that. I think you will find they were just allowed to remain until it suited the minister to appoint other private sectaries.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Very likely the right hon. gentleman is right. I am pointing out where no change has been made. Whether the ministers who have not made any change propose to retain the secretaries, I cannot say.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think the rule of the service is considered to be that when there is a change of government, the private secretary ceases to be private secretary until he is formally appointed. He may continue to act as a temporary private secretary, and I dare say it would be very convenient for both the minister and the party that they should do so for some time, but I think they would require a formal appointment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He would not be temporary; he would be continued in his place until a change was made.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think the English rule is the same as ours in that respect, and a very proper rule, that the private secretaries of ministers necessarily lose their appointments when the government goes out. They may reappoint them if they like, but I do not think that has been done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No doubt my right hon. friend is correct, and for this reason: the position of a private secretary is of such a character that he should be, and would be, in all probability, one being in accord with the opinions held by the minister.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Certainly I am not objecting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—For the reason that he has to deal with so many private matters that he would not want to leave it to be dealt with by a private secretary holding different views.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was going to explain the operation of the Act to the House, because I think many hon. gentlemen are under the impression that an abuse is likely to arise as to the private secretaries of the late government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No. My hon. friend must disabuse his mind as to that. I was not thinking at all of the secretaries of the preceding government, because I took it for granted that they had been appointed under a certain law which they knew, and that they had been treated according to that law before the government went out. I know nothing of the conditions under which they were appointed. I take it for granted that they were appointed under the operation of the law which was then in existence. When my hon. friend brought down his Bill it struck me that a year is too short, and that is why I suggested three years. I may tell him candidly that it strikes me that twelve months is too short to allow a private secretary to be put into the civil service at such a high salary as that which he would receive.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But this element is entirely overlooked, which operates against the present government. When the Civil Service Act was introduced most of these secretaries, having been in the department for a number of years, were given a status, and enjoyed a status when the late government went out that would be almost impossible to give a private secretary of the new government—that is, to a new man. The new secretary would have to come in under subdivision A of the third division; whereas most of the secretaries, as I understand, had their status fixed when the Civil Service Act was introduced and were in the enjoyment of very much larger salaries than it would be possible to give to new secretaries of the present government. The new government, therefore, felt that they could not secure secretaries under those conditions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that with my amendment it will still be within the power of the government, or the minister, to appoint a secretary to subdivision A of the second division and give him the highest salary.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But he does not get his status for three years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But it will have a retroactive effect from the 10th of October last, when the three years are up, and when I say three years, it will only be two years and six months, because six months have elapsed, so that it has struck me that I was not in the least injuring the whole staff of private secretaries by giving them the full advantage of this amendment, while safeguarding somewhat the interests of the civil service by forcing them to serve at least three years from the 10th of October last as private secretaries. They have the special advantage of being appointed to the civil service at a very large salary, and it seems to me they could very well afford to take the risk of serving to the satisfaction of the minister for two years and six months.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the committee rise and report to the Speaker the point of order which has been raised in the committee, which will enable us to look into the question and permit the Speaker to give his opinion to the House whether this is a money Bill. This was the course pursued in 1903, and it is undesirable, without proper consideration being given to the question, to have any conflict with the House of Commons on the question whether this is a money Bill or not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have no doubt at all, if this question is referred to the Speaker, that it will be declared to be a money Bill. On another occasion he declared a similar measure to be a money Bill.

The CHAIRMAN—I draw the attention of the committee, and of the hon. leader of the fact that, according to my limited lights and the information I have in my hand, the motion is out of order. The first part of the motion is all right, if I may say so, to let the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, but the hon. gentleman has no right to challenge the decision given by myself, as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, except in the Committee of the Whole. I refer to May's parliamentary practice, page 385, where he says:

> Order in debate in committee is enforced by the chairman, who is responsible for the conduct of business therein. From his decision no appeal should be made to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the Chairman leave the Chair, the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again, to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If that is the decision of the House, well and good, but I will not be able to be here to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Monday.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 15, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

GUARANTEE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA BILL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved that order No. 3 for Monday March 18, relating to Bill (H 2) An Act to incorporate the Guarantee Life Insurance Company of Canada, be discharged, that rules 24a and 24b be suspended and that the said Bill be read the third time presently. He said: While I do not approve of suspending the rules generally, still Bills of this nature that come in late in the session, when the House is going to be brought to a close very soon, cannot be put through unless the rules are suspended. This is a Senate Bill and will have to go through to the House of Commons. It passed the committee of the Senate with one or two amendments. One amendment provided that the paid up capital should be increased to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, instead of one hundred thousand dollars. Another amendment was substituting the standard clause for clause 6.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is an unusual motion.

The SPEAKER—I would like to call the attention of the House to the motion that is now proposed for its deliberation. It is proposed to discharge an order of the day for Monday next, and that this Bill be put on the Orders of the Day and he now read the third time and that the rules be suspended.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is this a Bill from the Commons.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It is a Senate Bill to incorporate the Guarantee Life Insurance Company of Canada. It has passed the Banking and Commerce Committee with one or two amendments. The amendments have been agreed to, and unless the Bill gets the third reading now, it will be too late to get it through the House of Commons. It has to be read a first and second time there, and the promoters are very much afraid that they will not be able to get it through. It is a Bill that no one can take exception to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At what stage is the Bill now?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It is down for Monday next.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand, it is to be read a third time on Monday.

The SPEAKER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see that the hon. gentleman will help himself very much by having it read the third time to-day. It is a very unusual motion to make. We are undertaking to rescind a resolution which was adopted yesterday. The hon. gentleman should have given notice yesterday that he proposed to rescind. This is a very serious matter. It may not be very serious in this particular case, but it is a most unusual practice. I do not remember having seen it done before. A number of gentlemen have gone home, who perhaps might have opposed the third reading of this Bill, and for the purpose of keeping things in order, I object.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—If the hon. gentleman persists in his objection, I suppose the measure cannot go through, but when I moved the third reading yesterday for Monday, I did not know of the importance of the Bill, and the necessity of putting it through at the earliest possible date. If it is not read before Monday, it cannot receive its second reading until Friday of next week. Then it has to go to the Committee of the House of Commons, and possibly may not get through at all. No person can take any possible exception to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I proposed this very motion yesterday, and the hon. Speaker refused to put it to the House.

The SPEAKER—I call attention to the following rule laid down in 'Bourinot':

