> The rule which requires a specific adherence to the order paper is assumed to be necessary to prevent surprises, so rigorously is it enforced in the imperial parliament that, even when it has been admitted that a day has been named by mistake, and no one has objected to the appointment of an earlier date, the change has been permitted. It is quite irregular, even if a member proposes to conclude with a motion, to introduce an attempt to debate a subject which stands on the order paper for another day.

I was approached this morning in regard to one of those Bills, and asked to make no objection. I said the only thing I could promise was that I would call the attention of the House to those facts, and the House would decide for itself. If there is no surprise, nothing to be feared in the course we are adopting to-day, the House may decide as it likes, but I think if they decide to adopt the motion it should not be regarded in any way as a precedent.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I think the Bill, if read a third time early on Monday, would reach the House of Commons in time to be presented there on Monday night.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It is a matter of very great importance.

The SPEAKER—As there is an objection the matter cannot proceed further, unless the objection is withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—In future we will not suspend the rules if one member in this House objects. We suspended a dozen rules yesterday for various Bills, and each measure should receive the same treatment.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—This is a different matter.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I think we ought to consent, but for the future we should be very careful. Yesterday, and days before, rules were suspended. In this case there is no surprise, and we might allow the motion to be carried, without establishing any precedent.

JENKINS DIVORCE BILL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER introduced Bill (E 3) An Act for the relief of William Alexander Hunt Jenkins.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved that the rules be suspended in so far as they relate to this Bill. He said: There are some three or four of these divorce Bills that it is necessary to pass without delay. Last year in one case a Bill passed through this House, had its second reading in the other House and was hung up. It is a great hardship to these people who come here at great trouble and expense to apply for a divorce when such a thing occurs. They bring their witnesses, the case is heard and reported on and a Bill introduced, and it cannot be put through except under a suspension of the rules. When it is hung up it necessitates the duplicating of all the expense and loss of time in having the case dealt with again the following year. It is to save the parties this unnecessary trouble and expense and inconvenience that I move for a suspension of the rules.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Mr. Speaker, I object.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—This is a different matter from the other case.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I do not care. If one case is to be treated in that way all cases must be.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—But this is an order of to-day and not of Monday.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. member wants to have the rules suspended on Monday he should give notice immediately.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—I give notice that I will move for a suspension of the rules on Monday next.

DUFFY DIVORCE BILL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER introduced Bill (F 3) An Act for the relief of Edith Harriet Duffy.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved that the rules be suspended so far as they relate to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I object to that.

DISMISSALS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRIES.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY:

1. When was W. H. Dubé dismissed from the position of district superintendent of the Intercolonial railway?
2. Was an investigation held before his dismissal?
3. Who is his successor, and who is his assistant?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The following are the replies:

1. January 20, 1912.
2. Yes.
3. Donald McDonald. No assistant appointed.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY:

1. When was Dr. C. T. Purdy dismissed from the position of medical officer at the port of Moncton, N.B.?
2. Was an investigation held before his dismissal?
3. Who is his successor, and what is his salary?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The replies are as follows:

1. Dr. C. T. Purdy was dismissed from the position of port physician at Moncton on the 15th February, 1912.
2. No.
3. Dr. R. L. Botsford, at a salary of $200 per annum.

RAILWAYS IN MANITOBA, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS:

1. What is the total mileage of railways constructed in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta between the years 1896 and 1911?
2. What is the estimated cost per mile of railways?
3. What are the total subsidies granted in cash and lands by the federal government for construction of said roads?
4. What amounts of mileage were bonds guaranteed on by federal government in said years in said provinces and to what roads?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The following are the answers:

1. 5,849 miles.
2. Railways in these provinces cost from $16,000 to $37,000 per mile or an approximate average cost of $26.500 per mile.
3. $1,769,442—No land subsidies granted.
4. 915 miles in which bonds were guaranteed by the federal government to the Grand Trunk Pacific and 757.43 miles to the Canadian Northern railway.

THE SPEAKER OF THE SENATE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of this honourable House to a very serious statement made in one of the leading papers of Montreal, 'La Patrie.' It has all the appearance of being semi-official. I hope that it is not official. It relates to our honoured Speaker. It says that the honourable Speaker is about to resign his position as Speaker of this House for certain purposes, one of which is in order to have his freedom in regard to certain public questions which will come before this House in a very short time. I hope the statement is not based on fact, because I, for one, would very much regret the disappearance of his honour the Speaker from the chair. He has been about one of the best officers, and one of the most capable in the Senate in my experience.

The SPEAKER—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is addressing himself to the government or to myself.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am in a quandry. I knew the hon. leader of the House would not be in a position to answer with his honour, the Speaker, in the chair.

The SPEAKER—I am not in any better position to answer than the government. This is the first time I have heard of it, and I will ask 24 hours to make up my mind.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is nothing decided?

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Will the hon. leader of the House please state when I may expect to get the papers with respect to the boundary claim of Saskatchewan? I should like to have them before discussing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall hurry them up in every possible way.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (88), An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.

Rt. Hon Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is not very much concern to me, but there are amendments to be moved which perhaps my hon. friend would like to consider. We might go into committee, and I could state to the committee the amendments which I propose to move. I believe some other amendments may also be proposed, and the matter might be left over till Monday or Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I should prefer to go into Committee of the Whole to-day and dispose of the Bill as far as we possibly can. It is very desirable, if amendments are to be made, that we should be apprised of them at once, because they will probably merit some consideration.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There may be a difference of opinion on that, but I think I can promise my hon. friend that they will have some consideration.

The motion was agreed to and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee).

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I suppose my right hon. friend will be able to let us know what these amendments are?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, I have them with me.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I want to say a word with reference to this clause, which provides for the appointment of three tariff commissioners. The other day, when discussing this proposition, I made the statement that some indication ought to be given by the government as to who should be placed on this commission. I do not wish to go so far as to say that I should know the name of the man, but I do say that certain interests should be looked after. The hon. member from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) in discussing this question, alluded to the fact that I had made some statements that were dangerous, and that the members of this side of the House, in discussing this measure, had not made any suggestions for the improvement of the Bill, but that we simply made wildcat statements. I want to say that I did make suggestions. I suggested to the House that one of the three commissioners to be appointed should be selected by the labouring classes, through the advice of the great labour unions from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Labour is organized and should have something to say in the nominating of a man to represent the labouring interests. Secondly, the great agricultural interests of this country should have something to say about the appointment of one of the men who should represent the agricultural classes. I would be quite satisfied that the manufacturing interests of this country should have the third commissioner. That is nothing but fair. Whenever the government bring down a measure with reference to the tariff, they always claim that it is to protect the great labouring interests of this country. They have a chance to try their ingenuity on that question at once, because they can go out to the Pacific coast and protect the labourers there against the Orientals that are coming into the country. We have heard little of that lately, but we heard a good deal about it during the three or four years. I also made the suggestion that great care should be taken in the selection of these commissioners, for the simple reason that there was a suspicion in the minds of people of western Canada with reference to it. They have got it into their heads that this commission was to be appointed simply to secure an increase of duty for the manufacturer. The Hon. Mr. Bell poo-pooed the idea and stated that I did not represent the feeling of the west. No longer than two or three days ago one member of parliament representing the west, the only conservative Pelican in the wilderness of Alberta, Mr. Bennett, took the same grounds in addressing the Canadian club at Montreal, that I have taken here. He said they would have to go very slow in dealing with the western people because there was a feeling arising out in that country that they were not getting justice and that it might lead eventually to serious consequences, by which he meant, I suppose, the separation of the east and the west. If I am to be accused of making speeches for the purpose of stirring up sentiment of that kind in western Canada, then I am glad to know that I am in good company, because I have a Conservative gentleman who is honest enough to tell the people down here the actual truth, that that sentiment does prevail and that it has to be taken into consideration. I am satisfied that the government should select the men for the commission, but I think organized labour and the organized agricultural interests, because they are organized all over the country, should have some say in this matter. Is the commission to be loaded up with partisans and high protectionists? A short time ago, Mr. Ames made the statement that the commissioners had to be in sympathy with the protectionist government, and only last night I heard a very eloquent gentleman in another place saying: 'At one time we had eight barbed wire manufacturing establishments in this country, but because the government put barbed wire on the free list, six of them have been wiped out and only two left; but I hope when the tariff commission is appointed we will have them all back again.' What does that mean?

It makes the people of the west suspicious. If the government wish to remove that suspicion from the minds of the western people, and make them a little more contented than they are at the present time, they should adopt the system I have outlined, and give the agriculturists of the country representation. It may be that they will select some agriculturist who calls himself a farmer. There are two classes—the agriculturist and the farmer, one living in the town and the other in the country. They may appoint a farmer on the commission, but that will not satisfy the agricultural interests. They want to have a voice in the selection of the man, and so also do the representatives of labour. If the government would adopt this suggestion, they would find it to be very beneficial. I will move an amendment to that clause later, if my hon. friend will defer its consideration for a short time.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 4.

4. In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the commission shall, under the direction of the minister, make inquiry as to—

(a) the price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use or consumption;

(b) the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere;

(c) the cost of transportation from the place of production to the place of use or consumption, whether in Canada or elsewhere;

(d) the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour in Canada and elsewhere;

(e) the prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere;

(f) all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada;

(g) generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries, and report to the minister.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—These provisions are very wide, and it is quite likely that everything I am about to propose to add to them could be done under them, but I would like to have a little more specific statement on one or two points. When the Bill is again considered in Committee of the Whole I will move that clause 4 be amended as follows: By inserting immediately after paragraph (g) of subsection 1 the following paragraphs:

(h) the grounds, if any, for believing that articles in question can be produced in Canada or elsewhere within a limited period;

(i) what other industries would be affected by increase of duty;

(j) the effect of any employment in question upon the health of employees.

Those are three points entering into these matters on which information would be desirable, and although I think they could all be covered by some of these provisions if the gentlemen desired to do so, still they are not specifically stated.

The CHAIRMAN—Your suggestion is that they should be added after (g).

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There are other amendments which are somewhat lengthy, but they contain items which I think should be given. I am supposing that the commissioners will be more disposed to increase than reduce the duties.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know that my hon. friend is justified in assuming that. Of course he has the right to do it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I mention that as my impression. It may be entirely erroneous—I should be delighted to find it so, but I do not think

I am mistaken. In all cases where application is made to the commissioners for an increase in duties and I am putting it on that supposition. I propose to insert immediately after the word 'Minister' at the end of subsection 1. the following:—

Provided always that in all cases where the commissioner reports in favour of any increase of duty, or where any application for an increase is made the commission shall, in addition to reporting upon the above matters, make a special report which, in the case of any industry already established, shall state—

(a) the number of factories now existing and the number of hands now employed, giving in each case the number of men, women and children respectively;

(b) the amount actually expended in cash in erecting and equipping the same;

(c) the nominal capital amounts of bonds and liabilities, also whether any mergers or combines have taken place and the amounts of watered stocks issued.

(d) a list of the shareholders and the number and amount of shares held by each shareholder;

(e) the dividends paid during each of the preceding ten years;

(f) the wages of hands and number of hours' work per diem;

(g) the total amounts of goods of the kind produced in each factory consumed in Canada, whether home-made or imported.

I need hardly tell the House, or the hon. gentlemen opposite, that, in my judgment, very great and gross abuses have been committed in the way of issuing bonds and quantities of watered stocks, which stocks are expected to pay dividends after a little time, and are used extensively in stock exchange gambling. If we are going to have an investigation into the industries of the country, the tariff commisioners might do some service in bringing such matters to the notice of the public. My amendment calls for a list of shareholders. Now, when people come before us asking to be allowed to levy a tax on the public for their own private benefit, I am opposed to secrecy. Let us know who –I will not say pick our pockets— but who levy a subsidy on us. That is a thing which should be insisted upon. My amendment calls, also, for a statement of the dividends which have been paid. My hon. friend will know the established industries which are asking for more protection, a class we found to exist in very large numbers in the case of the tariff commission on which I sat in former time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

We should have a statement of the dividends paid the preceding ten years, also wages and number of hours per diem. This refers, of course, to old factories. I also ask for a statement of the quantity of goods produced in each factory consumed in Canada, whether home-made or imported. As I said, some of those things would no doubt be brought under the clauses that have been read to us, but they are not specific. I should like to have them specified in detail, and I do not think there is any of the information that I asked for here which my hon. friend, on looking into, will see serious ground to object to, but, of course, I do not expect him to give an answer, particularly to this last, off hand. I place them before him to be considered at a later date.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that my hon. friend's amendment calls for a list of shareholders.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that information is to be given, would it not be well to add the amount subscribed and the amount paid in.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am quite willing to accept that suggestion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it is to be adopted at all, that information ought to be given, because then we would be able to form an opinion as to the justice of the claim.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —A very good suggestion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman might include also a statement as to the effect a certain procedure might have upon other industries. It strikes me that it might be as well to add whether there might be in existence any other industry.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I have stated what I intend to deal with. Of course this can be amended in any way my hon. friend, or any hon. member may suggest, if deemed expedient. There are two classes of cases which will inevitably come before these commissioners, and which, I suppose, they will be specially likely to pass judgment upon. One is a class of industries not now existing in Canada but which are desirous of establishing themselves here, and who ask for a certain measure of protection at the hands of the government. Then there is the class of industries already established who come before the government asking for further protection, or, if there are any, who come before them asking for less protection.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There will not be many of those of their own motion.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The two classes differ in some respects, and it is very desirable that we should have information, particularly regarding the first class, those which are readily established. I am speaking in that respect with a vivid recollection of the demands which were made upon the two tariff commissions which existed in 1897 and 1907. These are points on which we found it difficult to get information. There was a great deal of hesitation and uncertainty, and in a good many cases, as my hon. friend will see if he likes to look over the excessively voluminous reports, the commission were unable to obtain anything like satisfactory information. These commissioners, with the powers that it is proposed to give them, might obtain the information. At any rate, it is information which we ought to have.

The CHAIRMAN—I would suggest to my hon. friend that instead of moving these amendments, as is generally done, he should put them in as notices of motion so that they will be printed in the minutes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That may perhaps be a more convenient mode. That would of course presuppose that we will have to rise before the Bill is concluded.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was going to suggest, without having looked over this critically, that if the amendments are not in the form of amendments which might be adopted without further change, the law clerk might put them in such shape as to avoid further delay if we adopt them.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That would be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I assume my right hon. friend has simply drafted out his ideas as to the further scope of the Bill.

The CHAIRMAN—They will stand as notices of amendment and can be discussed at the next meeting of the committee.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This clause declares that they shall report to the minister. I think in addition to reporting to the minister they should furnish a copy of the evidence upon which their conclusions were based. There is a good deal said about that in other clauses, I observe, but it should be made specific. However, we can discuss that after the other matters are taken up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The report, together with all the evidence, is to be laid upon the table of parliament, so that in any event we would have the evidence.

On subclause 3,

3. The commission may be empowered by the Governor in Council to hold an inquiry under section 12 of the Customs Tariff, 1907, in the same manner as the judge of the Exchequer Court or any other judge therein referred to may be so empowered, and the said section shall include and apply to the commission as if it were therein expressly named.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does this give to these commissioners the same power as is possessed by a judge sitting en banc?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a clause in the Act which places the commission precisely in the same position, with regard to the inquiry, as judges occupy under the Act—simply as to the inquiry.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They would have power to summon witnesses?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, whatever jurisdiction the judges would have.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —And they would have power to commit them for contempt of court?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Whatever power a judge in a court has, these commissioners will have.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Giving three presumably unlearned men —I use the word in a legal sense—the same powers as judges is going pretty far.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I refer to section 12 of the Customs Tariff Act. It has been considered more desirable to empower the commissioners to do this than to take up the time of a judge or to make a reference to a judge. It is very undesirable that the judges should be involved in cases of this kind, and, furthermore, the time of the judges is so occupied as to render it undesirable that they should be engaged in making a long inquiry.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am not going to suggest that judges should be employed on a tariff commission. I can understand that the difficulties would be great, but my hon. friend must be aware that to grant to three laymen the same powers which are conferred on a judge on the bench is going pretty far. The judges have occasionally exercised powers considerably in derogation of the liberty of the subject. You must remember that in the case of judges there is generally an appeal to a higher court, but these gentlemen would have absolutely arbitrary power.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would not be prepared to say that in a customs tariff inquiry the judge would have that authority. The section of the Act reads:

> The judge may compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them under oath, and require the production of books and papers, and shall have such other necessary powers as are conferred upon him by the Governor in Council for the purpose of such inquiry.

That is the extent of the authority granted to a judge, and those commissioners would exercise the same jurisdiction.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Giving a private party the same power as a judge is going a long distance, and am I not correct in saying that these worthies might send these men to prison if they saw fit?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A commissioner is not a judge. He is only acting in the capacity of a commissioner to make inquiry and to report to the Governor in Council. He does not use the same discretion as a judge on the bench.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The words used here are pretty large.

Hon Mr. LOUGHEED—It refers to section 12 of the Tariff Act.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It says 'In the same manner as the judge in the Exchequer Court, or any other judge.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the judge of the Exchequer Court or any other judge acting in the capacity of a commissioner under the tariff commission.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—With the same powers as a judge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, not necessarily. The judge has no greater power than given him under section 12 of the Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot help that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is another point. The commissioner is holding an inquiry on a charge of fraud against the customs. There the commissioner and the judge, acting as commissioner, has full power. The inquiry under the Customs Act would be against an importer who had acted fraudulently in regard to the customs. Any power given to the judge in that case would be perfectly legitimate, but this is simply an inquiry where there is no charge of fraud or anything of the kind. The difference is quite essential. I quite agree with the right hon. leader of the opposition that to give practically judicial power to three laymen is going beyond the limit. I certainly would not clothe them with judicial power.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In order that my right hon. friend may not exercise undue solicitude for the parties who would come before the judge in such case, I point out that this inquiry is limited to an inquiry into conspiracy, combination, arrangement of any kind among manufacturers or dealers to unduly promote the interests of the manufacturers and dealers at the expense of the consumers. It is only for that purpose, so that the consumer will not be in jeopardy, it will only be the manufacturer, and my hon. friend's sympathy will not go very far with the manufacturer.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Of course I am aware of the difficulties that stand in the way.

On subclauses 3 and 4,

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We will accept that provisionally.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I give this as a notice of motion, that the following words be added in continuation of section 1 of clause 3, namely: 'One of whom shall be acceptable to the labouring interests as expressed through their organization in Canada, and one who shall be acceptable to the agricultural interests as expressed through their organized bodies in Canada.'

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Who is going to enforce an order of that kind?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If it is in the Act it will have to be carried out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is an abrogation of the whole principle of responsible government.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The government have taken the responsibility of appointing the commission and this amendment would take a great deal of responsibility from the government.

The CHAIRMAN—Inasmuch as Sir Richard Cartwright's amendments are being sent up to the law clerk, I would suggest that the amendment of Hon. Mr. Davis' should go through the same course.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This is an amendment that is easily understood, and it does not require to be revised by any lawyer.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Let it be revised.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the leader of the House is prepared to accept that amendment, there would be very little other objection taken to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We will pass the Bill if he will accept this one amendment. It will take the sting out of it.

Sir LYMAN JONES—I wonder the hon. gentleman would not suggest as a further amendment, which one of these representatives should be chairman.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think I would prefer a farmer.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I think we should put in a cheeseman.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—The fishermen ought to be represented.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The coal heavers.

On subclause 3, of clause 3,

3. Each commissioner shall hold office for a period of five years from date of his appointment, but may be removed by the Governor in Council at any time for cause.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—To this I take a rather serious objection. You are proposing to put these men virtually in the same position as judges, and to make them absolutely irresponsible. A succeeding government may have a different line of policy and may justly desire to put an end to this commission and remove these people. It is my opinion that this practice of putting persons in authority for a term of years, only removable for cause, is most decidedly objectionable, per se, and I will give notice that, at the proper time and place I will move that these officers shall hold office during pleasure.

The CHAIRMAN—You can do it right now.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Probably the hon. gentleman prefers not to have the debate at the present moment, and that we adopt these things together. I will put it in the shape of a notice of motion, 'that these parties shall be appointed during pleasure.' I do not mind their holding office for five years.

The CHAIRMAN—Your amendment will come in after the word 'office.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, 'shall hold office during pleasure,' that would be my amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then subclause 4, which provides that the commissioners shall be eligible for re-appointment, would come out.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They might remain in, if my hon. friend's expectations are fulfilled, for twenty years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not necessary to make provision for their eligibility for re-appointment if they are appointed at pleasure.

On subclause 2 of clause 5,

2. The commissioners shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses, and to compel them to give evidence, as is vested in any court of record in civil cases.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Would not that give them power to commit for contempt of court ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, that simply deals with enforcing their attendance.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Suppose they refuse to attend.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are not given the power of a court.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Would it not give them power to commit for contempt?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it would for contempt in the face of the court. The only way they can compel a witness to give evidence would be by exercising some class of restraint upon the witness.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—How far does that go?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a very rare thing. The knowledge of the witness that he is in jeopardy invariably compels him to give evidence.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think we have an hon. gentleman here who could give some evidence on that subject. I think my hon. friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) is a martyr to that subject.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, he ought to move an amendment.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think my hon. friend had to spend a matter of two or three months in jail, in St. John, during which time he was visited and apologized to by every respectable member of the community, including the Lieutenant Governor, and thereafter was elected member for the city.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I recall that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The powers of the judges are somewhat carelessly exercised in some of these cases.

On subclause 6,

6. One commissioner shall have power to conduct any inquiry under subsection 1 and subsection 2 of the next preceding section and may, for the purposes of such inquiry, exercise the powers conferred upon the commissioners by subsections 1 and 5 of this section.

Hon. Mr. JONES—This is deciding a question that has not yet been passed by the committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not proposed to amend this; it is proposed to enlarge these powers.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It may be so changed that this would not apply. In passing the subsection 6 you are deciding upon a principle with reference to the preceding clause.

The CHAIRMAN—We have passed the whole of four. We have passed from one to five of this clause.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We can always reconsider.

On subsection 9 of clause 5,

9. Should evidence or information in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person, firm or corporation, be given or elicited in the course of any inquiry, the evidence or information shall not be made public by the commission in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively, but this subsection shall not apply to an inquiry under subsection 3 of section 4 of this Act.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Now a question arises here. Where we are dealing with the case of parties who are conducting an ordinary business in an ordinary way, that is a very proper clause, but if you are dealing with the case of persons who come to the government, or to this tariff commission, saying that they desire power to levy taxes on the rest of the community for their special and individual benefit, I do not think they are entitled to any confidential communication, or any protection of the kind. If a man comes to the authorities and says: 'I cannot carry on my business unless I am subsidized heavily by the state,' everything in connection with his business ought to be made public.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This is a question of principle. If he is carrying on business without any assistance from the state, his communications by all means ought to be respected; but if he comes demanding a subsidy, then he has no sort of right or justification for keeping anything back, or for refusing to allow it to be made public.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I think the clause as it stands must appeal to every member of this House as being necessary in the best interests of the country. It might be possible to include a clause covering the subject suggested by the right hon. gentleman who has just spoken, namely, that if people come to the government asking for subsidies—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Increased tariff.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—It may be increased tariff, or subsidy or bounties; they should be treated in a separate clause, and it should not be attached to business men, having business interests in the country, whose business would be injured by making public what would be private information. I think the clause goes further now than it should go.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Who is to be the judge as to whether it is to be confidential or not?

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I presume the minister to whom it is to be submitted, or the government, will decide upon that. It is not to be put in a manner so that it will be available for the use of any business competitor or rival. If it is made public at all, it must in the end reach rivals or competitors, and not only rivals or competitors, within the country, but rivals or competitors without the country. Because it cannot be made public without being made use of in a way that might, and doubtless would, inflict serious injury on the individual who had been obliged, under the Act, to give evidence of a private nature in connection with his business. I submit that that class of evidence should, under no circumstances, be made public. No one desires that any interests in Canada should be injured by this legislation, but they want to enable the government to frame the law in the best interests of Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—To enable parliament—not the government.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—This says it shall not be made public by the commission.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—If you stop at the words: 'shall not be made public' you include the whole world.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—The government are responsible to the people, and will enact such laws as are in the best interests of Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend would like that the government should hear only one side, and that is the practical result of it. In the hearings before the commission to which I have referred, while the interests of certain special classes were admirably presented, and constantly kept before the commission, the interests of the consumers were simply nowhere. They were not represented and did not know what was going on, and it was not until after the statements were made public in the newspapers that we got information as to the effect of certain changes. I agree that where parties are examined who are not seeking for special benefits, then the provision is a good one, but my remarks were addressed to the case of persons who come before the commission, or before parliament or the country, asking for certain special privileges for themselves, which privileges amount to a power to tax the whole community for their benefit. In such case I say no concealment is justified or should be permitted. They should be compelled to make a clean breast of their whole business before they apply for subsidies, bounties or tariff increases.

Hon. Mr. JONES—In order that there may be no misunderstanding of what I said, I desire to explain that I take no exception whatever to the case as made by the hon. gentleman. I was dealing with the case and accepting the principle he laid down.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand my right hon. friend to move to insert as an amendment a provision that the evidence of people who go to the tariff commission, or to the government, seeking a higher tariff or a bounty, shall not be held secret? I think it is necessary to move an amendment, if that is the object.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This covers such a variety of spheres, so to speak, that I fail to see how it could be made practicable to further amend it. I cannot say what particular class of case the draftsman had in view when this was framed, but let us instance the case of the manufacturer who possibly may be competing against the importation of foreign manufacturers, and he approaches the government with a view of saving himself from disaster by having a tariff framed to build up that particular industry in which he is interested. His very financial existence may be contingent upon his disclosures to the commission. Would it be fair to give publicity to the representations made by such a manufacturer?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot in any way influence the mind of my hon. friend upon such subjects.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman might influence my pocket.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It should appeal to every reasonable man that, where disclosures are made of the character to which I have referred, made in confidence to the commission, for the purpose of saving the manufacturer from financial disaster owing to foreign competition, and particularly with reference to a line of manufacture or industry which may be built up in Canada profitably if the tariff is so framed as to take into consideration the interest involved, that that information should be kept private. It would come within the class of cases mentioned by my right hon. friend, where such a man has asked for a favour, or for an increase of the tariff, or has asked for a tariff, because it must be kept in view that there are cases where industries are not really protected by the tariff—industries upon the free list which might be built up in Canada to the general advantage of the public interest. Therefore I say that so many interests might possibly come under a clause of this kind that to begin to make provision by excepting any particular class would probably result in an abuse. I think, under the circumstances, the commissioners must exercise some discretion. The government must exercise discretion. They are charged with these very important interests, and it is utterly impossible before hand to make provision for every unlooked-for condition that might arise.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Take the case where a man is not seeking any revision of the tariff, not asking for any increase or anything of the kind. When this commission goes around I can imagine that they have a power to make him disclose his business, the cost of raw material, the prices he receives and what profit he makes, and everything of that kind. In that case he should be protected and his evidence should not be made public. But that is not the case referred to by the right hon. leader of the opposition. I agree that where a man goes to the commission and demands protection or a bounty, there should be no surrender, and he ought to be able to make a case that would stand on its own merit, and the world should be made aware of it. But there are thousands of manufactures going on through the country. In my own case I should not want to publish to the world all my business. I do not ask any protection and am ready to stand on my own footing. But the difficulty is to frame a law, and who is to decide whether the information is confidential or not? It is very difficult to decide how far we shall go. I can see a good many difficulties.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the case put by the hon. leader of the government is just a case where it is most desirable that there should be publicity. The case he puts is that some one who is engaged in manufacturing in this country finds he is not able to compete with people outside, or he wishes to establish a new manufactory in this country, and he wishes to have so much duty imposed as will enable him to compete with outsiders.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman will pardon me: If he will look at the remainder of the clause he will see that the information is not to be made available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the firm or corporation. I have reference to one in a particular class of business. If financial disaster is facing him, he certainly should have the right to make his representations to the commission, and surely his unsatisfactory financial position should not be taken advantage of by the commissioners for the purpose of ruining him.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Suppose you apply that a little further; are you prepared to say if a farmer's crops are destroyed by any accident, such as has occurred on a large scale in my hon. friend's own province, that he is prepared to advise the government to indemnify him to some extent for his loss? I recognize fully that in the case of parties who are not applying for an increase of the duties, or protection of any kind, this provision is right enough.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This only applies to an individual of a class; it does not apply to the class. If it applied to the class I could understand the objection. Something may transpire in the disclosures which may take place as to one individual. I cannot understand why the public interest should be aroused in such a case as that. That man's disclosure should be protected, because the commission shall have made a sufficiently comprehensive inquiry into the conditions of the whole class as not to warrant disclosing the evidence of a particular individual of the class who cannot afford the information to be made use of by his competitors.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Evidently the hon. leader of the government does not wish to see the point made by the right hon. leader of the opposition. The right hon. gentleman does not want any manufacturer to disclose his business to the country if he is facing financial disaster, but if that manufacturer comes to the government asking aid through the tariff, he has no right to keep his affairs secret, and it is the duty of the government to make the information public.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are not discussing that class at all.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the class mentioned. I understand that the information should not be made public unless the manufacturer is seeking further aid. The hon. leader has great sympathy for the manufacturer who is in financial distress, but he seems to have very little for the consumer, who will want to know why the article he consumed costs more after the manufacturer gets aid from the government. Supposing a manufacturer, who has a protection of 20 per cent on the article he produces, meets with disaster and asks for an increase of duty from 20 to 30 per cent, the consumer has to pay the difference, while the manufacturer gets the advantage of the increase. Now that is not fair. If the government were getting the benefit of the increase I would say all right, but as I stated before, the manufacturer does not contribute one cent to the national treasury. All the money he gets out of the protection he puts into his own pocket. It is the consuming classes that pay the revenue. No man should get a favour for himself without the consuming public knowing why.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—As worded, this clause gives the commission considerable latitude, making them the judges as to what is confidential information or not, and it is very proper. The law cannot reach all cases, and the commissioners must be left to exercise their discretion. They will have no object whatsoever in divulging secrets of any kind that might injure any one. Evidence of that nature which may be laid before them will be only of a strictly confidential nature, because further on in the clause it is said that this subsection shall not apply to an inquiry under subsection 3 of section 4 of this Act. Now subsection 3 refers to the commissioner sitting as a judge does while holding his court. Therefore, the number of cases to which this clause applies will be necessarily limited. I believe that we should leave this clause with all the elasticity it possesses, and that in the very best interests of all who may come before the commissioners.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me we are travelling a long way beyond the cases we are providing for in this clause. If I understand this measure, it is for the purpose of appointing commissioners to ascertain facts on which the government may be in a position to act. As I understand the point made by the right hon. the leader of the opposition it is this: if a manufacturer wishes to have the tariff increased, or to receive a bounty, the information which is obtained with respect to that by the commissioners should be made public. A moment's reflection will convince the right hon. gentleman that if he were Finance Minister again, and had to deal with the tariff, he would consider a proposition of that kind improper, as it would hamper him a great deal in framing the tariff. If I understand the object of this clause and this whole Bill, it is to provide that if a person desires to receive aid by way of subsidy, or bounty, or increased duty, the reasons which he gives to the commissioners should be reported to the government, and upon that information the government would act. They might come to the conclusion that the reasons advanced by the manufacturer were not sufficient to justify either the granting of a subsidy or increasing the tariff, or they might go further and say that it is not in the interests of the consuming community, considering the prices at which these articles have been manufactured and put on the market, to justify any increase in the tariff. That, it seems to me, would be the result of an inquiry of that kind; but to make public the whole facts connected with it, particularly if the government did not intend to accede to the request for aid, would be not only ruinous to the man himself, but would be of no possible advantage to the community. If, however, the government of the day comes down to parliament with a proposition to increase the tariff upon any particular article, or to grant a subsidy to any industry, then it would be the duty of the Finance Minister to give full and ample reasons to parliament why he proposes to grant the aid. That seems to me to be the object of this clause, and the object that the government has in view in appointing this commission. The information can be of no interest to the public, while, on the other hand, it might be injurious to those carrying on that particular line of business. The only good result which could be attained by it would be in case the Finance Minister desired to ascertain public opinion on the subject before introducing his Bill or changing the tariff. I need scarcely say to my right hon. friend, with the experience he has had in tariff and customs matters as a member of former governments, that that would aid a minister very little. Because of the differences of opinion amongst people on all matters affecting trade, it would be impossible for him to form a correct judgment from the diversified views which might be expressed. He will have to take the facts laid before him as the result of this investigation, and then say to his colleagues: 'I am of the opinion that we should not interfere in this matter'; or, if he took the other view, say: 'Under the circumstances, if we desire this industry to be established, or continued in the country, these changes should be made'. That, to my mind, is the object of the Bill, but to say that information obtained under the circumstances to which my right hon. friend has alluded, should be made public is to destroy the whole effect of it, and render it utterly impossible for any government to carry on the business of the country.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I might say to my hon. friend, who is an old hand, and so am I, that I dare say he has had recourse in his time, to an expedient which I have tried, and which some of my successors have tried, and some of my predecessors tried; when gentlemen came to us desiring an increase in the tariff, we succeeded on several occasions in having other gentlemen, whose interests were affected, present in the same room. The only difficulty was that we had considerable trouble in keeping them from flying at each other's throats, but we got at the truth.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I have experienced the same thing.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think you have in all probability. The difficulty that I see here, putting party views and questions of free trade or tariff aside, is that this tariff commission will act, to a certain extent, with the government, and the government will, largely, act upon the recommendations of the tariff commission. It is certain that one side will be presented more effectively, and very much more fully than the other side, and it is for that reason that I am anxious to secure as much publicity as possible. I have explained the amendment, and that it is only in the case of parties who are desiring of obtaining increases that I would desire the required publicity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend will admit that when the government is about making a change, after having received all the information that they can receive from one side, they will seek information from the other before making up their minds. They will do this in order to justify the position they take in the House

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It is exceedingly difficult to get the other side into the court, where that side consists of consumers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All you have to do is to ask for it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I have done that without success.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I assume the government have borrowed this idea of a tariff commission from the President of the United States.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Impossible. They have no truck with the Yankees.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is my impression.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—No doubt about it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to ask a question in connection with that. As I understand, Mr. Taft's commission is a non-partisan one; that is set forth in the provision for their appointment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It ought to be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is a non-partisan commission.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—A good country to get one in.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Unless I am mistaken in the case of the United States tariff commission, which is a non-partisan commission, there is provision for publicity. There is no secrecy For that reason I think it is perfectly clear that some such amendment as has been suggested by the right hon. leader of the opposition to sub-clause 9 is necessary.

Now that sub-clause does not confine the confidential nature of this evidence to competitors in Canada. It applies where the parties propose to compete with outsiders. For instance, there is the Massey-Harris concern. They compete, I understand, in the United States with manufacturers of the same article in that country I know they compete successfully in Europe and Asia, and it does seem to me that if this tariff commission is making an inquiry, and, we will say, the Massey-Harris representative says 'the giving of the details about our business is likely to interfere with our business in the United States, or in Russia, or somewhere else,' then where is parliament at ? You will find that every corporation, and every manufacturer who is looking for an additional amount of protection, or for a bounty, will be able to put himself in that class, and then the provision in the Bill that the evidence shall be submitted to parliament in order that parliament may judge as to whether the action of the government, with respect to the duties, is reasonable or not, will be of no effect. The evidence will not be there for parliament, but will be shut out under this clause. I think the clause should not pass in its present form. I assume that the right hon. the leader of the opposition, will be prepared, when we go into committee on the Bill again, to submit an amendment to this clause. I have taken no part in the discussion of this measure, but I do think that an amendment of this clause is absolutely necessary.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—It appeals to me that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has made an unanswerable argument why the information gathered under this clause should not be made public. He has spoken of a Canadian company which, he says, is doing business in Canada and in the United States. I happen to know a good deal of the affairs of that company, and I want to correct the impression that the hon. gentleman has made. They have no business in the United States. They never have had any business in the United States. They have never been competitors there; that condition is impossible from their standpoint.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not wish to misrepresent the Massey-Harris concern——

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I am only correcting the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If you will allow me, I read in the newspapers some months ago that the Massey-Harris Company were about establishing a branch in some part of the United States. Is that correct ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—That the Massey-Harris Company are doing what?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Are proposing to establish a house in the United States

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—The Massey-Harris are interested in a manufacturing concern in the United States, the Johnston Harvester Company, which is partially owned by the Massey-Harris Company. It is not nice to have to talk shop, but it has been brought up and I want to answer it. I am doing this for the purpose of pointing out the serious difficulty that would arise by publishing the evidence. The Massey-Harris has a very considerable business in foreign countries—Australia, New Zealand, South America, France, Germany and Russia—in practically all the countries of Europe that grow wheat.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does that company sell any of its implements at cheaper rates in these countries than in Canada?

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I will give the hon. gentleman an answer to that, because he is specially interested in this question, that is evident. I know what I am speaking about, and I will say that the Massey Harris Company do not sell in any of these foreign countries where their machines are sold, as cheap as they sell in Canada. I make that statement on the floor of this House, and I challenge anybody to contradict it successfully. Now this is a Canadian company doing business in Russia, or Australia if you like. This commission will have power to summons the officers of that company and make inquiry with reference to their business, the cost of production, the price in Canada, the price in Australia, the price in Russia, or Germany or France, in every country in which there is a larger price obtained than in Canada for these implements, and when it is made public it goes into the hands of every Ameri an and European manufacturer who comes in competition with this company. Does any gentleman here suppose for one moment that that condition of things would be in the interest of Canada? If a Canadian institution can go out into the world and get a successful business, bring that business to Canada and give work to Canadian workmen and to Canadian railways and use up Canadian material, and if there is any profit in it does any gentlemen here think that that is not the best possible thing that can happen to Canada? Does it not follow, if that is the case, that that enlarged output will materially decrease the general cost of production, and that that will be to the benefit of Canada? I make this statement in order to have one concrete case in which the proposed amendment would inflict a serious injury to Canada without any possible good coming from it. Canada is interested in the business of Canadian industries in foreign countries in so far as that business affects their own business. No one can look into a matter of that kind for five minutes without seeing that, if it is a manufacturing industry, it must bring back to the country not only the advantage derived from the outside business, but the advantage arising from an increased volume of business helping the home business. Every gentleman in this House who has considered this question for a moment knows that in these days when competition is so keen, for the purpose of competing successfully, the great question to consider is volume of business. Get your volume of business and you can compete with anybody. Canadians need be afraid of the Americans only in so far as the Americans have a greater volume of business. They have one hundred million consumers to take care of their product, as against seven or eight million consumers in Canada. These are reasons why, if Canadian manufacturers desire to succeed, they are forced to go out of Canada for volume of business, to enable them not only to get profits out of that business, but to enable them to reduce the cost in order to be able to compete successfully at home with those who come in from foreign countries where raw material is much cheaper and where the cost of production is a great deal less than it is here. These are facts that any one may know without looking for them through a commission. Hon. gentlemen may know from their own general knowledge of the world's supply of labour and material, and no good in the world can come from such a condition as that. Nothing but injury to the interests sought to be benefited by this condition can be brought about by such a publication. I may say that I have no interest in this question, and, as my particular industry has been mentioned, I say further, that no living politician—no dead politician, if he has left a record of what he knew—can say that the Massey-Harris representatives, either the company, or officials, at any time in twenty years asked the government for an increase of tariff. I would appeal to the right hon. gentleman, if that is not true. I can appeal to the Minister of Customs, if that is not true. Therefore, I am not discussing this question from the standpoint of one who is asking for a tariff. I have never been in that position. I hope the government will give to Canada just such a tariff as is in the best interests of the whole of the people of Canada, and if I cannot conduct business in Canada along lines that will progress satisfactorily under those conditions, then I have a line of business that was never intended to succeed in this country. The right hon. gentleman suggested seriously that, where a citizen of Canada asks the government for an increase of tariff, his request shall be made public and shall go broadcast over Canada, and his business laid bare, so to speak. If we had a uniform tariff and uniform conditions in Canada, probably that would be a practical suggestion to make, but you have to keep this in mind, in connection with that clause. We have manufacturing industries of var ious kinds, and when I say manufacturing industries I do not wish to draw the line between the manufacturing of farm produce and the manufacturing of implements, because the people of Canada are all manufacturers and consumers. There should be no such division as is indicated sometimes on the floor of this House, as to there being two sets of people, so to speak, in Canada. We are all producers and all consumers. Many lines of industry are carried on in Canada with no protection whatever. Some lines have been, and possibly are now—I am not prepared to say—not only under conditions where no tariff whatever applies, under an absolutely free trade situation, and others have a bounty paid to them—a bonus so to speak. Others have a customs tariff of ten per cent. Other lines of business 15 per cent, others 20, 30, 40, 50 and 60 per cent. And these are conditions which the government of Canada have considered in the best interests of Canada, and I refer to that as a principle laid down by both political parties in Canada. No substantial difference has appeared in the actual carrying on of the affairs of the country under the tariff between the two great political parties, and both have apparently recognized that there could not be, in the general interests of Canada, a uniform condition, and there must therefore be various degrees of tariff to carry on the various industries in all lines, more or less. The man who wants to establish a business in Canada, if he does so without going to the government and getting the government to agree that there should be a tariff of, say, ten per cent, is in free trade. It does not follow it would be in the best interest of Canada that such an establishment should grow up in Canada, that such an industry should not begin in Canada until such tariff should be agreed upon, and yet if he comes and makes a statement to get a ten per cent tariff, everything he states will have to be made public, while another man already enjoying a 25 to 40 per cent tariff can come to the government and suggest that it should not be changed and not a word of his statement would be made public. I appeal to members if it is not absolutely impossible, in view of the conditions under which we labour, to lay down a principle which can be carried out in practice and made to apply with reason and fairness to the different people. Then, further, the government of Canada have no power to find out the cost of things except in Canada. They cannot go to the different countries which export goods to Canada and learn from manufacturers there what it costs them for the raw material for the different lines, and what it costs for the labour for the different machines, what a yard of cotton, or woollen, would cost them.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Why not ?

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—Because they have no power outside Canada.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They can collect information.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—They can collect it, but cannot compel anybody to come and give information. When they are importing goods into Canada, the Customs Department may ask them the cost of production and so on, to ascertain whether it corresponds with the invoice price; but, the commissioners cannot go into any foreign country, and obtain information that would give Canadians the advantage which, under this Act, might be given to any manufacturer in the world, thus placing our manufacturers under a disadvantage, which no one desires. This country wishes to have the tariff so framed as to give to the people of Canada such protection as is needed to carry on the affairs of the country, and no more. The tariff should be so levied as not to bear unduly on any particular class of the people of Canada. The late government—and so far as I know, all governments in the past—have undertaken, through the members of the government itself, to get the information needed to enable them to come to such conclusion as they thought would be right in the framing of their tariff. What difference is there between that principle and the principle that the government of the day propose ? Instead of their going individually into the various avenues of trade and commerce, from one end of the country to the other, and getting that information first hand, they propose, as the work is very heavy and difficult, and takes a good deal of time, to have the commission obtain it, and submit it to them. That is the only difference. Members of the late government, Messrs. Fielding, Paterson, Brodeur, and probably one or two others, from time to time went from one end of Canada to the other, meeting the various interests in all the provinces, so far as I recollect, or substantially so, and got at first hand what was needed. That took a long time. It is now proposed that it should be obtained through the commission, who will bring reliable information to the government that will warrant them in making a tariff such as they suggest I submit that the greatest care is necessary in the taking of this evidence, either directly or by a commission, and if the evidence becomes public it will put Canadian manufacturers at a disadvantage with each other, and particularly with the competition that comes from outside countries. It is a well known fact that in the principal lines of business in Canada competition from abroad is very keen. In some important lines in this country the larger part of the business in Canada is done by foreigners, by people who import the goods. No one believes that that is in the best interests of Canada, if we could produce them in the country at a price not exceeding the price which we have to pay for them and bring them in. Every one believes that if we could have a great consuming public in Canada, to use the larger portion of the products of Canada, that would be materially in our interests, and I am sure no one intends to do what will harm any interest in Canada. Sometimes people get in their minds that conditions exist that are unfavourable to certain existing situations, or certain classes, if I may use that word in the sense in which I intend it, different peoples of the country. In so far as the government need the information to enable them to know what to do, they ought to have it, but it ought not to be made public, because it will inevitably be to the detriment of the general people of Canada, and especially will it be so to the successful institutions of Canada, and we must all bear in mind that one successful institution is worth fifty unsuccessful institutions to any country.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I fully agree with every word which has dropped from the hon. gentleman from Toronto. One of the great difficulties with manufacturing in Canada is that what is one man's raw material is another man's manufactured product. I am simply acquainted with the carriage business, having been interested in it some thirty odd years. Every person is not acquainted with the fact that the carriage maker is simply assembling the parts of another manufacturer. We have to go to 68 different manufacturers in Canada to obtain our supplies.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Why does the company not make them?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Because there is no institution in the country big enough to make them. I have got down a few items in regard to the carriage business. We have to go to the carpet manufacturer to buy the carpet to put in the bottom of the carriage, and we have to go outside to get the cushions for the sleighs. Could a carriage manufacturer run a carpet factory? We have to go to the oilcloth manufacturer to buy oilcloth, and to the India rubber manufacturer to get the rubber. We must go to the leather manufacturer to purchase the leather for the top of the carriage. We go to the spring manufacturer to buy the springs. What carriage manufacturer could start a spring factory to make his own springs, and be successful? We must go to the axle manufacturers to obtain the axles, and to the wheel manufacturer to obtain the wheels, to the clip manufacturer to get our clips, to the screw manufacturer to buy the screws, to the bolt manufacturer for the bolts, and to the nut manufacturer, the paint manufacturer, the oil manufacturer, the varnish manufacturer, the sand-paper manufacturer, to obtain these different articles. I could name 68 different articles which enter into the construction of a carriage which we must obtain outside of our factory. True, the manufacturer makes the body of the carriage of wood. Some of the wood is imported from foreign countries, and some of it is not. We have to go to the shaft manufacturer to obtain the shaft. It is the same with the Massey-Harris Company. There are fifty articles which go into the manufactured article which they do not manufacture, and they are a big institution. The carriage-maker's manufactured article is made from raw materials which are the manufactured product of some 68 other industries in the country. So that in framing a tariff to give protection to all the industries that go into the manufacture of a carriage, hon. gentlemen can see how many trades are affected. All these articles are being now produced in the country, but it requires a large consuming population. No farmer can buy a carriage cheaper in the United States of the same quality than the farmers buy them here. That has been proven time and again. There are the lamps, the whip-sockets, the steps used to get into the carriage. What manufacturer could have a plant big enough to make all these articles. I have quoted from a list of 68 different articles that we have to buy to complete a carriage, and we are turning out one carriage every ten minutes supplying the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and exporting in addition to that. Is it not a benefit to the town to have 400 men there turning out these carriages and selling them to farmers of the country, who are selling their produce to the people employed? It will require a great deal of investigation by this commission to ascertain just what protection shall be given to these different industries which have been built up in Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to say a word in reply to my hon. friend from Toronto (Hon. Sir Lyman Jones). My observations were confined to the sub-clauses before the committee. The hon. gentleman from Toronto did not confine himself to that, but went into a disquisition on the tariff generally. He gave us a good deal of useful information, but contented himself with saying that it was not desirable that the details of the business of a given company should be made public. I say that when the hon. gentleman's firm undertake to sell farm implements in Australia, South America, or Russia, or any of the other numerous places where they do sell, the people to whom they sell will not make any rigid inquiry into the details which are made known by this tariff commission, if they should be made known. They will say, 'The Massey-Harris Company of Canada manufacture a good article, as good as any other company in the world, and they sell it a little cheaper than any other company.'

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—No, they sell it a little dearer than any other company in the world, because it is better.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then it must be a good deal better. The fact that the tariff commission here has learned some of the particulars of the way in which the company do their business, will not affect, in the slightest degree, the sale of the goods of the company in other countries, and I am surprised that a gentleman of the astuteness of the hon. gentleman from Toronto should undertake to influence the minds of this Senate by using such an argument as that. There is no harm in talking about the Massey-Harris Company, and nothing indelicate about it, because it is a well-known and most successful company, and a company which, I suppose, does not object to being advertised, even in the Senate. He told us that the company never looked for anything, and I gathered that they never proposed to look for anything.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—From what did the hon. gentleman gather that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—From the observations of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I said we never had.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman said he never went to the Conservative or Liberal governments to ask for anything. Does he mean to say he will go to a Conservative government to ask for anything?

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I do not want to be misunderstood, and I did not want to be misunderstood when addressing the House; therefore I said I had never gone to any government and asked for an increase of tariff. I thought it was a fair, plain statement to make to the House. I want to say one word in reply to the statement of the hon. gentleman, that other countries will not be interested in this commission. Let me just refer to the situation in Australia, and if the hon. gentleman knew anything about the business he would know that what he said was unfair in that regard.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman undertook to say that this tariff commission could not get information as to the cost of production in other countries. How does it happen that in the United States Mr. Taft's commissioners are appointed largely for the express purpose of finding out what it costs to produce goods in other countries; so that having ascertained that fact, the commission will be in a position to say how much protection the United States manufacturer requires? Is what is true of the United States manufacturer not true of the Canadian manufacturer? Our commission is going to cost enough, and can it not ascertain, just as well as Mr. Taft's commission, the cost of manufacturing the various articles in other countries? I think that is what the commissioners are there for. If they are not going to give us any information for which they have to look outside of Canada. I do not think there is any object in appointing a commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think that statement was made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have no objection to the commission, if we are going to have tariff changes. I think the commission is as good a way as any.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It seems to me that if the evidence to be obtained by the commission is not made public, they are not going to perform the duties for which they were appointed. I do not take for granted that, simply because a manufacturer does not ask for increased protection, as put by the hon. senator from Toronto (Hon. Sir Lyman Jones) his business should not be investigated. His suggestion was that if a man was willing to 'stand pat' and not ask increased protection, the commission should not inquire into his business. I trust this commission is appointed to inquire into manufacturing industries which have undue protection, and that the evidence in these cases should be made public. The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Sir Lyman Jones) has told us that for the last twenty years he has never asked any government for increased protection. He did not tell us that he never went to a government and asked them to continue the protection they already had; because twenty years ago his company enjoyed an average protection of 35 per cent. It has been cut in two since, and reduced to 17½ per cent. I can understand the statement that he did not ask for increased protection, but he was very much interested in the protection they enjoyed not being taken off. Twenty years ago we had a very high protective tariff, which was a protection for the manufacturers existing in Canada to such an extent that it kept the United States manufacturers out of the market, and the result was no revenue. This country sailed along for years with large deficits, although the expenses were only thirty or forty million dollars a year. Tariffs were changed, and the result is that now we have an immense surplus in the revenue, with no more taxation than we had twenty years ago. I trust this commission is not only to ascertain what protection should be given to any new industry, but that they should inquire into the existing industries, and see if they are unduly protected. We have the cement merger, which should be inquired into. I do not think the cement company will ask for increased protection on cement. But the fact that they do not ask increased protection is no reason why we should not inquire as to the profits they are making out of cement. If the commission does not inquire into these matters it will be of very little use to the great mass of the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman says the commission cannot possibly obtain information in a foreign country.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—I said they had no power to obtain information from abroad.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They have no power to go outside of Canada and examine people under oath, but they have power, so far as the purposes of the commission are concerned. If they had not that power, I should like to ask how it is the Customs Department sent a commission to the United States to ascertain the cost of goods which entered into competition with the goods of the hon. gentleman's firm in the Northwest—to inquire as to the cost of binders, and what they sold for—with the result that a duty was placed on the binder which came into competition with the article sold by the Massey-Harris Company in the Northwest. The duty on the binder was raised a few years ago, as the result of that investigation. The House knows very well that a very important clause was introduced into the legislation of Canada a few years ago, known as the 'dumping clause.' If it could be shown that United States manufacturers were shipping goods to Canada and selling them below cost, the clause would be brought into operation, and such sales prevented.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not below cost, but below the price at which the article was sold in the country from which it was imported.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, and below cost. If there were a surplus of goods and they were to be sacrificed at less than cost, this 'dumping clause,' would apply.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not necessarily less than cost. It applies equally if the goods are sold in this country at a price lower than the selling price in the country from which they come.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If they are sold below the retail price in the United States, but these goods might be sold at less than cost price.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That might be. That has been done.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—But the idea was that the Canadian manufacturer should not be subject to competition from goods which were brought in to be slaughtered. That information was secured, no doubt, by the commission appointed by the Customs Department, and with the object of keeping out those very goods that were coming into unfair competition with the Canadian manufacturer.

Now, our hon. friend from Gananoque (Hon. Mr. Taylor) has gone into a detailed statement as to the production of carriages, or sleighs. He says there are some sixty-eight different firms or institutions interested in the manufacture of that carriage, and whose goods he has to buy. There is no question about that. He has also told of the difficulty we have in this whole system of a protective tariff; he has told us that what is one man's manufactured goods is another man's raw material. That is one of the great troubles in drawing a tariff. The moment you protect an industry by a protective tariff you have difficulty in arranging that tariff, for the reason that you do not give a manufacturer an opportunity of importing raw material for his industry without taxing him unduly. I am inclined to think that there is one institution that the hon. gentleman forgot. It is an institution that he is probably more interested in, and has been the means of causing greater success to the manufacturer of carriages than any other institution in Canada that he has referred to, and that institution is the government that gives him protection. The institution that furnishes the protection is probably the most profitable part of the whole industry. I certainly think that this commission should be appointed for the purpose of securing evidence and of laying that evidence before parliament, and that it should be made public. I cannot see that any man who is doing a legitimate business, and is protected, should object to the public knowing exactly how he is doing his business and what his profits are. There is no question that during the last few years, under a government that was supposed to be a low tariff government, mergers have been created in Canada and that interest and dividends have been paid on a great deal of watered stock. What will happen when a high protective government is in power? They will still further encourage the growth of these mergers in Canada. In my opinion, every publicity should be given to any industry that is protected in Canada in order that legislation may be framed and placed on the statute-books to govern our industries, not only in the interests of the manufacturers, but in the interests of the great mass of the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that the committee should rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, so as to permit of our completing the order paper.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again on Tuesday next.

THE LOYAL ORDER OF MOOSE BILL.
MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES.

The Orders of the Day being called.

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to (Bill P 2), 'An Act to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose in the Dominion of Canada.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Gibson, moved that rules 24a and 24b and 61 and 129 be suspended as regards this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—No, we cannot agree to that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think the hon. gentleman is making a mistake.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I do not think so.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

MONDAY, March 18, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have a sad duty to discharge, and I think every hon. member present, as well as those that are at the funeral, will join with me in the performance of that duty. I ask this hon. House, in view of our sad and sudden bereavement in the loss of one of our esteemed colleagues, the Hon. William Ross, to rise during pleasure, while the remains of the hon. member are being taken from the city he loved so well to be removed to that land which he probably loved better. Several of our colleagues are at this moment at the funeral, and I desire to give those who are now present here an opportunity to attend also until the train leaves the central station.

The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned during pleasure.

At 3.45 p.m., the House was resumed.

CLOSE SEASON FOR WHALES.
INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) inquired:

If the attention of the government has been directed to that part of chapter 45 of the statutes of 1906 relating to whale fishing.

That no time is prescribed for a close season when whales should not be killed, and no restrictions as to the number of whales killed and landed by the company or companies licensed to manufacture oil and other products.

He said: My object in bringing this matter to the attention of the government is to preserve this great industry. There is a Bill before parliament at the present time with reference to the fishing industry, and in my opinion there should be a clause fixing the close season for whales, in order to prevent their wholesale slaughter. A certain number only should be allowed to be killed. The government do not charge a license for fishing, but they charge a license for the factory. I trust the government will look into this very important industry.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot speak with any authority upon this subject, not being familiar with the whaling industry, except to say, from general knowledge, it is becoming a very important industry in Canada. I quite appreciate the value of the remarks which my hon. friend has made, and shall be very glad to suggest to the government the necessity of taking his suggestion under consideration.

THE JENKINS DIVORCE BILL.
MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER moved:

That rules 24a, 24b and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to Bill (E 3), 'An Act for the relief of William Alexander Hunt Jenkins.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is the object of the suspension of the rules?

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—From year to year Bills have passed this House and gone to the other House too late in the session to be passed. The people who make application for divorce have to bring their witnesses to Ottawa generally at great expense, and unless the Bill is passed that evidence is no use for the next year. I am simply making this motion in order that this Bill may not be hung up.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is a matter of expense to the applicant, but of no consequence to the morals of the country.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

THE LATE SENATOR ROSS.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to direct attention to the loss we have recently sustained by the somewhat sudden and unexpected decease of our hon. friend from Halifax. Those of you who sat in the House with Hon. William Ross will not require to be told that he was a man of very considerable force of character, and that he had been at various times, I might say, rather conspicuous in the local politics of his own province. He was, I think, one of the very last survivors of the Mackenzie cabinet formed in 1873, and if I am not mistaken he was amongst the oldest Privy Councillors now living in Canada. I observe that in the account of his life in our 'Parliamentary Companion', the late Senator Ross, for a considerable period before he entered public life in the Dominion, represented his own county in the legislature of his province, and everybody who remembers anything of the history of those times knows that, although politics did run pretty high in Nova Scotia, the late Senator Ross had the almost unique distinction of having been elected three times in succession by acclamation, a very convincing proof of the high esteem in which he was held in the region where he was best known. Our late friend, as everybody knows, was a very fine specimen of that rugged, indomitable genius which marks the Scotch character in many ways, and those who knew him know that he was a stout enemy, and also a staunch friend.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am of opinion that in his past history he may have been once or twice rather hardly dealt with by his political opponents, but of that we will say no more. He died at a very advanced period of life; I think he was 87 on the very day he died.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He would be 87 day after to-morrow.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —At any rate, he died at a very advanced period of life, and his death, though sudden, can hardly be said to have been unexpected. I am sure my hon. friends opposite will join with me in regretting the loss we have sustained, remembering that Senator Ross was always to be found in his place and always ready to announce his opinions, whatever they might be, with a pleasing frankness and precision, which did considerable credit to his determination and character.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sure that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House will join in the expressions of regret to which my right hon. friend has given utterance touching the death of the late Senator Ross. The grim reaper has been exceedingly busy since the last session of parliament amongst the representation from Nova Scotia. This is the fourth death which has taken place among the representatives of that important province since parliament last assembled. The late Senator Ross had lived to a ripe old age. He had passed the allotted span of life by nearly a score of years. His life was rich in years and rich in political events. As long ago as 1859 he was elected to the parliament of Nova Scotia, and seemingly hod been actively identified with the public life of Canada since that early date. I quite join with what my right hon. friend has said as to the very great tribute of regard which was paid to the senator in Nova Scotia, through his being elected by acclamation during three successive terms of parliament—a tribute very seldom paid to a public man. I noticed that he was a member of the administration of the late Mr. Mackenzie, and had the honour of introducing the Bill for the establishment of the Royal Military College at Kingston, an institution which has made itself famous throughout the empire, and of which we are justly proud. Although he came into this Senate late in life, yet hon. gentlemen will agree with me when I say that no man showed a greater desire to interest himself in the activities of this Chamber than did the late Senator Ross during his lifetime. We certainly appreciated the very great interest which he took in the public business transacted in this chamber. I am sure hon. gentlemen in this chamber will all contribute their deep sympathy in the sorrow which his numerous family has been called upon to sustain; and we likewise desire to express our acknowledgment at this time of the valuable services which the late senator had rendered during his lifetime to his native country.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As a desk mate of the late senator, I feel compelled to add a tribute to his memory. For the past seven years I have known Senator Ross. He was my neighbour; my desk mate. History records the services he rendered to his country during thirty or forty years, both in provincial circles and in the broader lines of federal politics. I have only to speak of him as I know him personally, and I may say to this honourable House that in contact with the hon. gentleman I always found an inspiration to do better than I was doing. I found in Senator Ross a man who was conscientious to a most delicate degree; a man who wanted to be fair, and who was fair; a man who wanted to be just, and was just; a man who wanted to be charitable, and was charitable; a man who wanted to be sociable, and was sociable. I observed him, during the seven years that he was a member of this House, never to act or to speak with any ulterior or hidden motive, never with any self interest attached to the measures which he proposed, or endorsed, or accepted, or approved of. He was a model to me as far as that line of public conduct goes. The hon. Mr. Ross was old; he was just in his old age; he was charitable in his old age; and he was good. Not later than two weeks ago, when one of the severest storms that we have had this winter in Canada, was blowing he left his desk, where the flowers are this afternoon, to go to New York because he had given his word that he would attend a banquet of his fellow countrymen in that city. I told him he would be snow-bound, and advised him not to go. His reply was: 'My word is given and I am going', and he took the train for New York. Two weeks ago he was invited to a political banquet that was given to celebrate the victory of the return of the Hon. Mr. Graham. He remained at that banquet until the wee hours of the morning. He was the life of that banquet of brilliant men, and sang some of his Gaelic songs. The next function he attended was similar to that which we had the sad duty of attending to-day, the funeral of Senator Miller, a man whom he did not love, and it was probably at that funeral that he got a chill which finally resulted in his death. Last Friday he was sitting here in this House, but he told me he was getting feeble. I happened to be addressing the House on a certain question that he was interested in, and he had to leave the Chamber. When he came back he said to me: 'Do not for a minute imagine that it was out of disrespect, or want of consideration, that I left the Chamber; I had to because I was getting weak.' You can understand the feelings I had for a man of that kind, who, at the age of 88 years, could fill his walk in life in regard to social and political events and also his senatorial duties. He was a man of wisdom, justice and charity. He has departed from the land he loved best to a happier land.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I should like to inquire from the leader of the government as to whether there is any foundation for a rumour that is going around in the city of Quebec that the bridge is in danger. On Saturday a story was published in a Montreal newspaper that the engineer in charge of the bridge had expressed the opinion that, according to the specifications and contract, the bridge was not strong enough, and that there would likely be another collapse. I should like to know whether the government has had any notice to that effect from the engineers, or if there has been any disagreement among them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot give my hon. friend any information on the subject. I have no knowledge whatever upon the matter to which he makes allusion. In fact, this is the first time I have heard of such a rumour.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am very glad to hear that.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I would like to inquire of the leader of the House if he has the return which I asked for on the 15th of February, relating to the quantity of wheat of different grades stored in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—At the same time the hon. the leader of the House might make inquiry as to the return asked for on the 5th December, regarding steamship companies carrying mails between England and Canada. I do not think that the return has been brought down, and it was asked for nearly three months ago.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (9) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (O 2) An Act respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Power.

Bill (H 2) An Act to incorporate The Guarantee Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (23) An Act respecting the Harbour of Hamilton.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (83) An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Hon. Mr. Young.

Bill (P 2) An Act to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose in the Dominion of Canada.—Hon. Mr Power.

Bill (35) An Act respecting the Architectural Institute of Canada, and to change its name to The Royal Architectural Institute of Canada.—Hon. Sir Lyman Jones.

Bill (70) An Act to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin.—Hon. Mr. LaRivière.

BRITISH AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY BILL.

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. POWER, in the absence of Hon. Sir Richard Scott, moved the third reading of Bill (T 2) An Act to incorporate the British American Trust Company.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Some gentleman who was present at the Committee on Banking and Commerce this morning has suggested to me that there should be, in this Bill, a clause similar to the one to be found in several similar Bills of the province of Ontario. The Ontario Companies' Act provides as follows:

(1) Where a trust company is authorized to execute the office of executor, administrator, trustee, receiver, liquidator, assignee, guardian, or committee, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council approves of such company being accepted as a trust company for the purpose of the High Court, every court or judge having authority to appoint such an officer, may, with the consent of the company, appoint such company to exercise any of such offices in respect of any estate or person under the authority of such court or judge, or may grant to such company probate of any will in which such company is named as an executor, but no company which has issued or has authority to issue debentures or debenture stock, or which has received or has authority to receive, desposits, shall be approved.

I desire to have inserted the words 'Or has authority to issue debentures, or debenture stock, or which has received or has authority to receive deposits,' so as to comply with the Ontario law. I therefore move that the Bill be referred back to the committee to insert those words

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (77), An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —My hon. friend, of course, is going to give us some explanation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Inasmuch as some explanation is asked as to this Bill, I desire to say that it is somewhat meagre in the matter of details, and necessarily so. The general principle, or policy, of the Bill is simply this, that the federal government is anxious to co-operate with the provinces in the construction of main highways. They may be of a provincial order, or of an interprovincial character. It is, therefore, proposed that generous assistance should be given by the Dominion government to the provinces, for the carrying out of this very laudable undertaking, provided always that the provinces will co-operate with the federal government in carrying out such a scheme, or undertaking, as may be mutually agreed upon. The departure is somewhat new. I might say, and I think I am justified in saying, that the relations between the provinces of Canada and the central government are drawing very much closer together than they were for some years after confederation. It is being recognized that movements which are in the interests of the provinces are likewise in the interests of the Dominion as a whole. The question of transportation has occupied a great deal of attention for years past. In fact, since confederation it has been one of the main subjects to which the central government has been called upon to direct its attention. Very generous grants have been made from time to time by the Dominion government towards the construction of highways by water, and by land. Of late years the provinces have directed more or less attention to carrying out provincial schemes of transportation, but, owing to the interchange of traffic, and the relations between the different parts of Canada, it has become evident that it is impossible to carry out any isolated scheme of transportation, confining it within the boundaries of any one province. Therefore, it should not be an unexpected proposal that the federal government makes to the provinces to co-operate in the building of highways. I venture to say that there is no particular class of public work in the Dominion of Canada, either provincial or federal, where so little energy and so little enterprise has been shown as in the construction of rural highways.

I think I may venture safely to say that for many years we have been most backward in taking up this important question. This session we have been discussing in this Chamber the reason of the diminution of population in the provinces, particularly in the rural districts. We have been discussing the important problem of how to get the people back to the land. I need not say to hon. gentlemen that, except we make the country sufficiently attractive, it is impossible both to keep the people on the land and to get them back thereto. Until the automobile came to stay as a factor in civilization, the question of roadbuilding seemed to remain in abeyance. But the man in the machine, and the aggregation of capital behind the machine, wakened up the public of Canada to the importance of solving this very important problem of improving our highways. There seemed to be, for a time, more or less conflict between the advocates of the motor road and the advocates of the ordinary highway for rural and urban purposes. They did not require long to discover the fact that what was in the interest of the one was in the interest of the other. For many years past the farmer was more directly interested in the building of roads than any other individual in the community. He seemed to lack organized movement, and that co-operative action so absolutely necessary for the carrying out large enterprises. The farmer dreaded taxation. The municipal corporation dreaded to impose taxation for the construction of highways. Finally the provinces were induced to take it up but the question of taxation seemed to be so formidable that the provinces, for a long period, hesitated about carrying out any well conceived plan of public road building. Of late years, with all these factors brought to bear upon awakening public opinion as to the necessity of road building, we find the provinces now vieing with each other as to which will adopt the most forward movement in the construction of highways. The attention of the federal government, as I have said, has for many years been directed to the improvement of transportation by way of railways, canals and otherwise, and it was thought high time that their attention should be directed to this very important problem. Consequently, at the last general election the party now administering the affairs of Canada made it one of the cardinal planks of their platform, and said that the question of public highways would receive the attention of that party should the confidence of the electors be expressed in their favour. Upon that taking place, they brought down to parliament this session the Bill which is now before us for consideration and which, I observe, met with a considerable amount of hostile criticism from the opposition in the House of Commons. Provincial factions seem to be introduced or imported into the question. I cannot appreciate wherein this can, in any sense, be regarded as an invasion of provincial rights, or an aggression, to any degree, upon the constitutional rights which pertain to the provinces. It seems to me high time that the provinces and the central government of Canada should get away from these technical lines, looking apprehensively upon the one invading the sphere of the other, particularly with reference to these questions which have in view the development of the public interests, which will be equally advantageous to both. I said a few minutes ago that the Bill will probably be subject to the criticism that it is meagre in its details, but when I point out that it simply involves a question of policy, it will then be understood why the details have not been furnished. The government is desirous of placing upon the statute-book a general proposition. They declare the policy that the federal government is prepared to cooperate with the provinces in carrying out some comprehensive scheme of road building throughout this Dominion at large. It proposes that an annual grant shall be made by parliament, and that the money shall be distributed on the basis of population throughout the provinces of Canada. As I have said, the scheme must be worked out between the federal government and the provinces. It would be looked upon as probably an impertinence on the part of the Dominion government if an elaborate scheme were brought down, and the provinces might very well challenge the right of the federal government to crystallize into statutory law a scheme entirely irrespective of their wishes. It must appear to every hon. gentleman for politic reasons, that it is very much more desirable that the provincial government and the federal governments should come together and work out between them a scheme for the carrying out of this very laudable object in such a way as will appeal to the common sense and to the good reason of both governments.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That provision is not in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, but that is what it is proposed to do. It is a matter of detail, but the central government propose that whatever fund is appropriated by parliament for this purpose should be distributed on the basis of population. I think that is a very reasonable distribution to make of such a fund, and for such a purpose. Any other distribution, as hon. gentleman can appreciate, would scarcely receive the support of the various provinces.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—In distributing the money between the provinces, based on population, is it the intention that it shall be made at one and the same time? Would the money be paid over to the provinces at the same time?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would be a matter of detail. There are two methods proposed in the Bill. One proposes that a scheme of road-building shall be jointly carried out, and the other is, under clause 6 of the Bill, that the Governor in Council may approach a province, and say, 'Should you not be content to join with us in the building of any particular road, upon consent being given we are prepared to go on and construct the highway in accordance with whatever arrangements may be entered into.' We therefore have the two propositions. Until the provinces take up the question, and elaborate a scheme that will be mutually satisfactory to their own government and the central government, it will be impossible to put the machinery in motion. I, however, did point out that the relations between the central government and the provinces have, for some years, been of so agreeable a character as to permit this being done. We come together for negotiation almost every year. We find the provinces meeting with the central government and discussing various problems which are of mutual interest to them, and it is thought that by such meetings machinery may be provided and details worked out, and a plan evolved which will appeal to the good sense of all parties concerned. It was with that in view that this Bill was couched in the general terms which I have pointed out.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the hon. gentleman consider this a money bill?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My excellent friend opposite has skated over some very thin ice with commendable agility.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Here, here; that is what I was thinking.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Now, I do not, in the very slightest degree dispute his major proposition, that good roads are a right good thing, a very desirable thing, a thing we would all like to get, a thing that would probably benefit a great many of us individually, as well as collectively. But I will remind him that even good roads may be too dearly purchased under certain conditions. There is such a thing as buying gold too dear. There is such a thing as buying good roads too dear, particularly if it were to involve, as I shall presently show to my hon. friend that it may involve, very serious inroads indeed on the whole constitution of this country. My hon. friend argues—and I am not disposed to dispute that either—that this scheme is popular, and is likely to be received with favour by a great many persons scattered all over the Dominion. That is perfectly true. It is a popular scheme; and I may remind my hon. friend, also, that a great many other schemes are popular to-day, but I doubt if he would support them if they were brought before him. I have not the slightest doubt that it would be a most popular scheme with a very large portion of the people of this community if parliament were to declare that from and after this time all wage-earners should be paid a minimum wage of, let us say, $2 per diem, whether they were employed or unemployed. I have not the slightest doubt, in fact I know of my own experience, that there have been many occasions on which it would have been a very popular thing to introduce an unlimited issue of paper money, although it is a scheme that I think my hon. friend would hardly recommend. I have not the slightest doubt that a very large measure of popular support could be obtained for a Bill which would deal with the multi-millionaires who are now springing up among us that, if parliament should fix a minimum wage for all wage earners, there should be a maximum wage for the capitalist, as well as a minimum wage for the labourer, which the capitalist should not be allowed to exceed. All these things, I do not doubt, would be exceedingly popular; and I can say this to him, that particularly where the multi-millionaires have acquired their money through the aid of a protective system, I am not prepared to say that there would not be a great deal of rough justice in a scheme which, directly or indirectly, should compel them to return to the public chest a very large proportion of the moneys they have acquired. Now there is one point which my hon. friend made on which I beg to differ from him. He says that they have a mandate for this particular matter. It may be perfectly true that this question of good roads was alluded to on several occasions during the last election. A great many things were alluded to during that contest. If I am correctly informed, when the present leader of the government went out westward he declared, almost in so many words, that if they would only let reciprocity alone he would give them everything—everything that they chose to ask for, or desired, or words very nearly to that effect. But I tell my hon. friend that, so far from having a distinct mandate from the people to bring in a measure of this kind, in a very great many constituencies, and in the major provinces, this question was hardly alluded to at all; the issues were totally different, and the elections were fought on those issues. This scheme was alluded to, if at all, as a very subsidiary matter, and I do not believe that it carried a single constituency one way or the other. Now, hon. gentlemen, this question is a peculiar question, one in which the House of Commons are hardly free agents. I know the House of Commons well, having been a member of that House for more years almost than I care to remember, and I know that on a question of this kind, where every man is aware that there may be several hundreds of people in his particular constituency who are interested in any special question, there are very few members who will dare to imperil their election by advocating their convictions too vigorously in the face of a popular wave. The other day one member of the House of Commons proposed that there should be a ballot vote occasionally taken in the House of Commons; it did not state on what class of questions, but I dare say questions of this particular class were in his mind. If a ballot vote had been taken, I doubt exceedingly whether there would have been anything like the apparent unanimity that seemed to prevail upon this question in that body. Now, our system has provided two safeguards for dealing with that particular danger. One is the well known safeguard that, under no circumstances, shall a member of the House of Commons, or the Senate, be allowed to introduce a Bill for a money grant. That, must be done on a message from the Crown. That is not a perfect safeguard, but still it is, to a great extent, a safeguard against the undue pressure which is apt to be brought upon the public body in the case of a popular movement like the one my hon. friend has just described. There is another safeguard which, on this present occasion, may perhaps be invoked with more success than the first one, and that is the safeguard of an upper Chamber which is not exposed to the same pressure as the House of Commons is, and which may be supposed to be able to take a larger and more impartial view of these questions that it is possible for a popular assembly to do. Now, I tell my hon. friend that no graver proposition has ever been advanced than that which he has now submitted. It is not merely a new departure, but it is a complete reversal of those fundamental principles on which the present confederation was founded; and I think my hon. friend ought to have explained to this body—what was very imperfectly done in the House of Commons—all that is involved and the consequences that are likely to follow from this measure if it should become law. There was one point on which my hon. friend had nothing to say, and that was the total amount of expenditure which might be involved in this proposition. That expenditure may be extremely large. I have noticed in the discussions that took place that the Ontario legislature talks already of devoting $5,000,000 to this purpose. Another legislature talks of devoting $10,000,000, and other legislatures in proportion. There is no limit, there is no bound to the expenditure which may be incurred under this measure at the caprice of the government if they so see fit, and the language used here is, to my mind, of an extremely suspicious character as regards what the government proposes to do.

In clause 3 they declare that the government may, in any year, grant to any province, in aid of the improvement of existing highways and bridges and so forth, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may be voted by parliament for that purpose. Was ever before such an unlimited power asked for or proposed to be vested in any government? What could the government grant them? It could grant them this: that at any conceivable time, when there was an election going on, either of their own or their friends in the local assembly, they might deluge any particular province with any amount of money with which they could get parliament to entrust them, and every one knows that there is no more insidious or dangerous form of corruption than that of being able to offer the voters of any particular constituency a number of roads in places where they desire to have them, free of charge, at the federal expense. I do not know whether I shall violate propriety by stating that I am told that, in a recent election in which both parties took a great interest, the electors of a certain constituency, not far from here, were told that if they elected the government candidate they would get good roads, and if they did not they would not get roads at all.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—True.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What was done there can be done on a larger scale all over the other provinces of the Dominion. This will open the door to every imaginable sort of demand If you permit the government of the Dominion to come forward and allow its finances to be mixed with the local finances for the purpose of constructing good roads, what is left to the local legislatures which the general parliament may not interfere with? Good roads are a good thing. So is a good education. There is no reason that I can see why the government of Canada, if this Bill be passed, should not, in another session, propose to largely aid and assist in procuring good education for the people of the provinces, or provide a good police, or a good administration of justice, or, for aught I can tell, pay the salaries and indemnities of the members of the local legislatures, and all the members of their government. One is as fair as the other, and one is as just as the other. One is as perfectly inconsistent with the terms of the British North America Act as the other. I regard this measure, I confess, as one of a very dangerous character. It is opposed to our present constitution, both in the spirit and the letter, and as regards the provinces themselves. I say that, as between province and province, it is hopelessly unjust, as I shall explain to my hon. friend later on. Here is a case which, as I have shown, is peculiarly liable to abuse, and the hon. gentleman disregards all safeguards that have ever heretofore been imposed. His colleagues want us to put this money at their absolute disposal, to use when and where they please, in the best way they can conceive to advance their own political interests. I might sum up this measure in brief by declaring that it is bad in principle, worse in detail, and the motive, I believe, to provide a huge fund for corruption, is worst of all. Were I to suggest a short title for the Bill, I would recommend the following—that this should be declared a Bill to make the British North America Act so much waste paper, and to provide a permanent corruption fund for the use of the government of the day. As to the constitutionality of the measure, I say that, if words means anything, if there is sense in the English language, if the English language is capable of conveying a distinct idea, nothing can be plainer or more distinct than the language of the British North America Act, which declares that local works and undertakings shall be absolutely and exclusively under the control of the local governments, and the very exceptions that follow go to show clearly and distinctly how utterly unconstitutional the proposition of my hon. friend is. What are those exceptions? Lines of steam and other ships, lines of steamships between the provinces, and lastly, such works situated within the province which are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. I know how easily legal gentlemen of experience can drive a coach and four through any Act of parliament that was ever drafted, and I suppose that it would be technically possible for the hon. gentleman to declare all these small roads, wherever they may be, to be works for the general advantage of Canada. Very possibly the courts might sustain that view, but I submit that no greater abuse of the provision could possibly be imagined than declaring local works of that kind to be for the general advantage of Canada.

My hon. friend spoke of the desire of promoting closer relations between the local legislatures and the federal government. I am an older politician than he, and I know what that means. Confederation was initiated for the express purpose of keeping the local legislature and the Dominion legislature apart. What would result if it were otherwise? One of two things, of necessity either the local legislature would become mere donkey engines of the government of the day, or the federal government would have to be converted into a mere machine for the collection of taxes, a thing of the worst possible policy. I can conceive of nothing more opposed to the true principle of representative government than that one body should collect the revenue and another body should have the expending of it. I speak on this subject with some knowledge, as well as with some warmth. I was present when confederation was brought into being. I remember perfectly well when this question of the separation of federal and local finances was under discussion by the men who framed the Confederation Act. I can tell my hon. friend and this House, that if there was one subject more than another on which all these men were agreed, it was that it was a serious defect in our confederation scheme, and a thing they deeply regretted, though one which they could not avoid, that they were obliged to allow the provinces and the Dominion to come into contact in that way. I know what were the opinions of Sir John Rose, Sir Alexander Galt, Sir John Macdonald, Mr. Brown, Sir John Abbott, and Sir Alexander Campbell. All of these men I knew well. With one exception they continued to be my friends until the day of their death. There was not one of these men who did not deplore, in my presence, again and again, the necessity, even in one single point of having federal and provincial finances mixed. I very well remember how Sir Alex. Galt, shortly after confederation was put through in 1867, when it appeard necessary to make some alteration in the financial provisions battled long and manfully, with the object of introducing certain safeguards, which would prevent the departure which was then made from being made a precedent of, and, as he alleged, a permanent injury to confederation. Unhappily, he was not successful. I do not desire to reflect on anybody, but we know from that time to this the relations of the local government with the federal government may be defined as one long howl for better terms. This is the culminating point. Up to this time there has been some little regard shown for the constitution. Now that appears likely to be thrown to the winds altogether. That brings up a certain very disagreeable question, a question which I approach with extreme regret, a question which I would rather not deal with if I could possibly help. I myself had hoped all along that this question might be settled quietly. I had looked forward to the growth of the northwest provinces to bring about a more wholesome condition than has existed for some time back. I regret extremely what I am about to say. I have never hesitated much about expressing my sentiments for fear of anything that my enemies could say or do to me, but I am not ashamed to say that I do regret, if in the memorandum which I propose to lay before you, if I should happen to do anything, or say anything which might give offence to any of my friends in this Chamber, or elsewhere, I have said that it is absolutely impossible that there should be a just distribution between the provinces if one should go outside of the borders of the British North America Act. Everybody knows, who knows anything at all about the financial conditions of Canada, that the disparity of contributions to the revenue made by the several provinces is extremely great, and also that the difference in the expenditures made in the several provinces is likewise extremely great but I doubt if they know to what extent these things have gone. I have here a memorandum on the subject which I venture to say is well worth the attention of the House and country. I am going to show by comparison the receipts and expenditure at the extreme east and extreme west of the Dominion.

It appears from the public accounts that the net revenue received from the maritime provinces in the year 1910 amounted to $2,580,542 after deducting subsidies and cost of collection.

In the same year the net revenue received from British Columbia was $5,628,113 and from Manitoba $5,332,384, in all a net revenue of $10,960,507.

In 1911 the net revenue from the maritime provinces was slightly under $2,900,000, and the net revenue from Manitoba $7,095,000, and from British Columbia $8,171,000, being a total of $15,236,000 on a population as per census returns of 847,000. The population of the maritime provinces being given at the same time as 937,000.

Apart from the annual expenditure on capital account the outlay for local purposes in the maritime provinces is much in excess of the total net revenues, the estimates for 1911-12 being as follows:

(a) For public works chargeable to income, $4,083,822.

(b) For judiciary and penitentiaries, $250,000.

(c) Allowances for members and Lieut.-Governor, $160,000.

(d) For lighthouses and fisheries and Marine Department generally, estimated $2,000,000.

(e) For deficit in carrying on post office, $250,000.

(f) For steamship subsidies, $600,000, at lowest.

Total, $7,343,822.

It will be noted that no portion of the other charges of government are paid by the maritime provinces. The entire cost of Indians, Militia, Naval Service, Civil Government, and a variety of other services are defrayed solely by the remaining provinces, including interest in the entire national debt of the Dominion.

The net amount per head contributed by the maritime provinces is therefoire as nearly as possible $3 and by Manitoba and British Columbia, $18 per head.

In both cases something may be added for goods imported into Montreal on which duties are collected there, but which are consumed and paid for in the above named provinces, but there is no reason to believe that these would materially affect the proportions as heretofore stated.

I desire to be distinctly understood on this matter. I have not the slighest wish that any addition should be made to the taxation of the maritime provinces. On the contrary, had I had my way, their taxation would have been reduced, and I would desire and we tried to increase their income in the only way in which it could be permanently increased by securing to them the only market which was likely to be a permanent and growing market for their products. If it can be shown that I am in error in this matter, I shall be delighted to make any corrections in the fullest and most public manner, but if these figures, and facts which I have now laid before you are correct and I believe they can be proved to be correct, in substance, then I say distinctly and plainly, to my hon. friend, that by no possible hocus-pocus, by no possible financial jugglery can he go outside the limits of the constitution and make an honest division which shall be just to all the provinces of the Dominion. I said I did not want to increase the taxation of the maritime provinces one straw; and more than that, I admit frankly that in their case, great allowance ought to be made. I know well that Nova Scotia, was dragged into the confederation against her will, and I know that she and the other maritime provinces have had but small share in the general prosperity which the rest of Canada has enjoyed for some years past. I am perfectly willing that the federal government should deal generously in such a case.

I am perfectly prepared for my own part to enter into what may be called a working agreement, or a gentleman's agreement—call it what you will—that everything paid by the maritime provinces should be spent within their limits, on something that may be fairly called for their local advantages. I would be prepared to say also that all the rest of the expense of government might very well be paid by the rest of the provinces. I make no complaint whatever of the fact that other provinces pay much more largely per head than they do. That, I think, is perfectly fair and just. The richer provinces should pay in proportion to their property, but I am not prepared to say, after that has been done, that large subsidies should be paid out of the funds of the other provinces in addition to these that I have already mentioned. I do not know whether my hon. friends are fully aware of it, but it is something which they will have to be aware of very shortly, that certain important sections of this Dominion are at this present moment among the most heavily taxed portions of His Majesty's dominions wherever they may be. I have here the details of what two, at least, of our western provinces have been paying for some years back, and a very remarkable series of details they are. Some forty years ago I remember when the civilized world was almost appalled when it was found, after the close of the bloody war between Germany and France, the German Emperor chose to exact a war indemnity of one thousand million of dollars from the impoverished people of France. Within our own time a great deal has been said of the frightful cost of the Boer war to the people of England, though it was spread over three or four years. It amounted to twelve hundred million of dollars. I want to call the serious attention of my hon. friends here and elsewhere to a few figures on this point. A few weeks ago I obtained from my hon. friend opposite a statement of the customs paid for nine months in British Columbia and in Manitoba, amounting for the nine months to $14,050,384. The excise duty for the same term amounted to $1,566,945, making a total for the nine months of $15,617,329. Add a proportionate sum for three months and it means that on the first of April next these two provinces, with a total population certainly not exceeding 900,000, have paid into the Dominion treasury for customs and excise alone $20,825,992. These figures may not convey, possibly, to an ordinary audience all that they really mean, and I will put it in another way. If that statement be correct, and it is a statement furnished to me by my hon. friend, then for every 15 months, or thereabouts, the people of Manitoba and British Columbia are called upon to pay into the federal treasury a sum of money equal to the entire indemnity, per head, which was paid by the French at the conclusion of the Franco-German war, and to the entire cost of the Boer war, to the people of the United Kingdom per head. Hon. gentlemen may think this is an exaggeration. Well, I advise them to take pen and ink and calculate the matter and they will find that in the case of France which, in 1872, had a population of 36,102,921, the payment per capita amounted to $27.50. In the case of the United Kingdom, which in 1902 had a population of 42,000,000, the cost per capita was $28.60. In the twelve months that I have just referred to, the payment per capita for Manitoba and British Columbia, would be $23.14 and for the fifteen months it would probably exceed the total payments made by France to Germany, or made by England during the entire period of the Boer war.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman, when he mentions Manitoba, include Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, I am simply referring to the official returns given me which deal with Manitoba. I will refer to Saskatchewan presently. I might remark that this does not, by any manner of means, wholly cover the question, because there is no doubt whatever, and the researches which have been made by the committee presided over by our honourable friend Sir George Ross, who is not present, would prove to a demonstration that these provinces, over and above what is credited to them in the public accounts, pay a considerable amount of the taxes collected in Montreal on goods which are afterwards consumed and paid for by the people of these provinces, I may add, further, that if the statements made by the manufacturers of Canada are correct, if the amount they allege they produce every year, after making deduction for the amount that is exported, probably not quite, but nearly as great a sum, over and above these direct taxes, is likely to be taken out of the pockets of the people of Manitoba and British Columbia for the purpose of satisfying the greed of certain Ontario and Quebec manufacturers.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They, I believe, are much averse to having any truck with the United States, but at the same time, they would not object to know what the United States pay for federal purposes. In 1911 the entire customs duty collected in the United States was $314,497,000, and the excise duty was $289,306,000. Their population was estimated to be 94,000,000; and for all federal purposes the United States contributed in 1911 $6.42 per head as against $23,14 contributed by my friends from Manitoba and British Columbia, and you will remember that the United States has a big navy and army, and a huge pension fund besides to provide for. This situation has only lately become acute. It was not so a few years ago. It is only within the last two or three years that these huge figures have accumulated at all, and that this thing has become, as I believe it to be, a very great evil, to be grappled with under peril of serious consequences to us all. I do not think there was much ground for complaint in 1900, or, for the matter of that, for a few years thereafter. I want to ask my hon. friend—and nobody ought to be able better to answer the question than himself—what he thinks of the position of the Northwest to-day. In my opinion, the Northwest is outrageously overtaxed for federal purposes directly. The Northwest is paying besides a huge tribute to the manufacturers of the eastern provinces, and, more than that, the Northwest has recently been deprived of the natural market which it ought to have had, which it would have had, if our policy had been carried out, and which as my hon. friend behind me said, and I believe is perfect truth, would have been worth tens of millions to them to-day.

I say nothing of their having to pay heavy municipal taxation. Unfortunately, the evidence on that point is not sufficiently detailed to enable me to go into it minutely; but this much is known, even on the very meagre evidence which the government have been able to produce—and here let me say that they ought in all conscience to have acquainted themselves minutely and in detail with the entire amount of municipal and local taxation in every province of this Dominion before they entered on this path of theirs. But we find this, in Ontario the municipal taxes—not the local taxes, which are a thing apart—are put down from twenty-five millions to twenty-six millions a year. We find that in Manitoba they are put down at something like seven millions. In British Columbia, though there I fancy they are chiefly urban, they go to something like four millions, and so on; whereas in the other provinces, and in many of them I am told —I speak merely from the information I have received—the taxation outside of that levied in certain large cities was almost infinitesimal. With respect to this last item that I spoke of, the enormous tribute which has to be paid to the various manufacturers whose goods we are compelled to purchase, under a penalty of 20 or 25 or 30 per cent, as the case may be, once more I say it may be possibly true that in the case of Ontario farmers there is some compensation for the huge tax that is levied upon them. There, if our protectionists do steal a goose, they at any rate give back the giblets; but no such compensation exists in the case of the northwest provinces. There everything is taken from them and nothing is returned to them. Here we have an enormous surplus—the largest surplus our history records—and, at the same time, with that surplus, the government recently brought down a budget in which they did not say a word about lightening the burden of this enormous taxation. Let me go over the case of Manitoba and British Columbia a little once more. Here we have in those provinces a huge amount of taxation paid in 1910-11, an amount of something like $16,000,000. This had risen in 1912 to about $20,000,000. What their loss has been by refusal to trade with the United States we can barely guess. If the committee which has been appointed to deal with that subject had time to make a full examination, I believe a very remarkable state of affairs would be revealed; but for that we must wait, I fear another session. What their loss may be by the protective tariff I have only ventured to guess. What the amount of their municipal taxation is I know moderately correctly in the case of British Columbia and Manitoba. It would apparently amount to something like $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 on that account alone. Now, those provinces are rich, but they are not rich enough to stand this long; and the government, with those facts before them—because these are facts culled from their own public documents, and are facts which they ought to be as well acquainted with as I am—the government come down and propose to mulct them further; because I tell you, hon. gentlemen, that it is utterly impossible, under the conditions that I have detailed, to suppose that the eastern provinces can contribute anything towards this expenditure which you propose to make; it must come very largely out of the western provinces. There have been things said here which I do not want to dwell upon. It has been asked, 'How long will the Northwest submit?' But hon. gentlemen will do well to consider it all the same, and what makes it peculiarly improper that this new departure should take place now, and that this matter should be attempted to be dealt with now, is that this present parliament, so far as the House of Commons is concerned, does not fairly or honestly represent the people of Canada.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The northwest provinces have scarcely half the representation there to which they are entitled. Even in this House the northwest provinces, with a population which is very nearly two millions to-day, have a far smaller representation in proportion to their numbers than the maritime provinces, or the provinces of Ontario, or Quebec. Under those circumstances, I say that it is doubly and trebly improper that a new departure should be made, that the basis of our federal arrangement should be torn up as it is being torn up, and that those provinces should be let in for expenses which were never contemplated when they entered the confederation. Let us consider where these things will lead to. In two years the Northwest, if it continues to grow as it has been growing during the last few years, will have a population equal to that of the province of Quebec. In five years it will have a population equal to that of the province of Ontario, and be entitled to an equal representation. Recollect that these things to which I have referred are taking place in a community which is geographically isolated from us to a very great extent, with which we have only a slender connection of two or three railroad lines, and I warn my hon. friends that it is not prudent under those circumstances, to press those people too far. I have not referred to Ontario, my own province, for two reasons. One is that the finances of Ontario and Quebec are considerably intermingled, and that unless it were possible to have a pretty accurate idea of what proportion of the importations in the great port of Montreal belong to Ontario, and what proportion to the other provinces, I could not give an equally accurate statement. But there is another reason, and I admit that here my friends in the maritime provinces stand on firm ground; they may, with very great justice, say to the people of Ontario—the majority of the voters of which province, I am sorry to say, are mainly responsible for the present state of things as far as the refusal to deal with the United States is concerned. 'You will not allow us a market in which we can prosper, in which we can dispose of our produce, and therefore it is but right that you should be obliged to pay for works of a local character undertaken by us.' If they bring forward that argument I do not know but I would be obliged to admit that there was a great deal of force in it. I will say this further, as a citizen of Ontario, knowing how fertile, how great a province Ontario is—for I know it well; few men better; few men have traversed it from end to end oftener or longer than I have done—but nevertheless I say that the present prosperity of Ontario is due mainly, if not entirely, to the prosperity of the Northwest; and I point to the result of the census of 1901, when, after twenty years of a National Policy, in the decade that had elapsed between 1891 and 1901, Ontario presented to the world the most miserable spectacle of a great, rich, fertile province reduced to a state of atrophy.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Why hon. gentlemen, between 1891 and 1901 the total growth of the great province of Ontario was barely 68,000 souls—from 2,114,000 it had grown to 2,182,000. A viler record I never saw for a country of such resources and of such natural wealth. One-third of one per cent per annum was the growth of Ontario from 1891 to 1901, and almost the entire of that paltry growth took place after 1896, as the census records will show. But I say that in all Ontario there is scarcely one factory, or one town, which is not to a very large extent dependent for its prosperity on the trade that it carries on with the Northwest, and to an enormous extent for the profits that they may make. Now, how has Ontario repaid the Northwest? By lending itself to the silliest and most foolish prejudices of race and religion that I ever heard brought up in any contest, and by allowing itself to be made the tool of a set of selfish scoundrels who cared nothing for anything except further lining their well-filled pockets. For these purposes Ontario turned down the best offer that had ever been made from one nation to another.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But what did it care, or what did those people care—I speak of the majority of the electors, not of all, thank Heaven; but what did those people care for the prosperity of the Northwest? What did they care for the prosperity of the maritime provinces? The selfishness of those people is even less extraordinary than their stupidity, because if there be one thing more than another that Ontario should desire, that Ontario should lay itself out for, it is to promote the prosperity of the Northwest on which its own prosperity is so largely dependent.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I warn the House against this measure on every possible ground. I say it is at once impolitic, unjust, and in the highest degree, unconstitutional. It is the most ostrich-like policy that we should go on refusing to recognize these patent facts. A most unwholesome condition has arisen, and this measure is likely to aggravate it in a very high degree. We committed, unhappily, one act of supreme folly on the 21st of September, 1911—I do not mean in turning the old government out, that, of course, was the people's prerogative, but in refusing the offer then made of free trade with the United States in natural products, and since that time we have had as sharp an object lesson as any country ever had in the present condition of affairs in the Northwest. If they choose to crown this with another blunder of the same description, if they choose to heap one unjust tax upon another, I know what they will deserve, but I shall not say it. Parliamentary etiquette must be preserved. I have stated what I believed to be actual facts in this case, and if it should turn out I am wrong, I am prepared in every possible way to retract and to apologize, but if I am right, if these facts are correct—well the government should consider their course carefully. Never was there a position that required it more. I appeal to my hon. friend—I do not ask him to admit what I think he must feel, if he takes the trouble to study my figures—I appeal to him that now is the time to redress the wrong which has been done to the Northwest; now is the time to make what little compensation can be made for the injury which has been done to them. Now is the time, at any rate to reduce the hugh burden of taxation, which I believe is heavier than that imposed on any other part of His Majesty's dominions. My hon. friend, I have no doubt, is a diligent student of the Holy Writ.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—He will remember what the evangelist seems to have thought of those sons of perdition who, when a child asked for bread, gave him a stone, and when he asked for an egg gave him a scorpion. The Northwest has been asking for a remission of this excessive taxation. My hon. friend's colleagues are tendering it to-day, in the Bill now before us, a protective tariff, to be constructed on the most scientific principles, for dividing the plunder among the creators and proprietors of the present government. The Northwest asks for some compensation for the loss they have sustained by the loss of their natural market. My hon. friend's colleagues are offering to them in this Bill the privilege of paying for the roads and bridges of other provinces at a distance of 3,000 miles from them, which provinces do not find it convenient to raise any money for their own purposes by means of municipal taxation. I am sincerely sorry that I have to say what I have said about this Bill, but since the death of our late lamented colleague, Sir John Carling, I believe I am the last survivor of the sixty-five members from Ontario who assisted at the initiation of this confederation. I know right well—and if those men could be called back to this earth every one of them would confirm my statement—that the one thing of all others which induced Ontario, at any rate, to enter confederation was to avoid that very admixture of federal and local finances and taxation which my hon. friend is proposing to us in this Bill. That was the rock on which the union of the two Canadas all but split in 1864. Now, if these hon. gentlemen choose to deliberately and most needlessly, with very little consideration, to set to work to undo what has been done with pains and trouble during the last fifty years, I verily believe that the next fifty months will see the whole of this confederation from one end of it to the other in very much the same position that the two Canadas were when I first took my seat in parliament in 1863. I would regret and deplore, as everybody will deplore such a thing. But I think that of all the measures proposed to us during the last fifty or during the last thirty years at any rate, there is none which is so likely to bring about that end as this Bill which we have now under consideration.

Hon. Mr. KERR moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNDARIES OF MANITOBA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (115) An Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.

He said: In the session of 1908 resolutions were brought down by the late government with a view to extending the boundaries of Manitoba. I need not say that this has been a question which has excited the deepest interest for many years, not only in the province of Manitoba, but at Ottawa. There have been negotiations extending over a series of years with a view to the extension of those boundaries. The present government have practically adopted the resolutions which were passed by the House of Commons on the 13th of July, 1908, with reference to those boundaries. It is also proposed that in the financial terms, Manitoba shall practically be placed upon the same status as the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan enjoy. The negotiations which were taken up between the government of Manitoba and the federal government in 1908 were abortive, so far as arriving at a mutual agreement was concerned. It seemed impossible for both governments to agree upon what the terms would be, but I need not point out to hon. gentlemen, because it seems to me it will appeal to the reason of every reasonable man, that where the conditions were practically the same as those which obtained in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, those same terms should be extended to the province of Manitoba. Consequently the policy of the present government has been to equalize those terms so far as possible, and therefore the financial terms of the Bill are practically the same as those enjoyed by these two provinces. The conditions of those terms have been made retroactive to the 1st of July, 1908. It was pointed out at that time that the late government had practically agreed to the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, as embodied in the resolutions of the House of Commons of that date. It would not be unreasonable to suppose that the late government should have placed the province of Manitoba in the same position financially as her sister provinces Saskatchewan and Alberta. Consequently the financial terms now proposed have been extended back to that date. The terms of the resolution brought down to the House of Commons touching the financial terms are as follows:

> Resolved, that it is expedient, (a) to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba northward to the sixtieth parallel of latitude and northeastward to the shores of Hudson bay, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the legislative assembly of Manitoba and by parliament; being the equivalent of interest at five per cent in $7,631,683.85, the difference between a principal sum of $8,107,500 and $475,816.15 heretofore advanced by the government to the province for provincial purposes; such annual sum to be paid as and from the first day of July, 1908, but subject, however, as to payments due upon the coming into force of any Act founded upon these resolutions, to the deduction of certain sums received by the said province by way of interest on capital allowance in lieu of debt;

(c) to authorize the Governor in Council to pay to the said province, in lieu of ownership of public lands, an annual sum based upon the population of the said province as ascertained by each quinquennial census thereof, such annual sum to commence with $562,500 (less certain deductions in respect of what are known as swamp lands and university lands) and not to exceed the annual sum of $1,125,000 (less equivalent deductions); the same to be paid as from the first day of July, 1908, but subject, however, as to payments due at the time of the passing of any Act founded upon these resolutions, to a deduction of the aggregate of certain sums received by the province on and after July 1, 1908, on account of indemnity in lieu of public lands;

(d) to authorize the Governor in Council to pay the said province one-half on July 1, 1912, and one-half on July 1, 1913, the sum of $201,723.57 towards the construction of public buildings.—Mr. Borden.

This was the subject of the resolutions brought into the House of Commons and embodied in the Bill which is now before us for the second reading. As the Bill is very largely of a financial character, and therefore uninteresting so far as this discussion is concerned, I propose that, when in committee, we might discuss it to much better advantage than by debating it at any length at this stage of the Bill. The boundaries, as I have said, will be shown upon the map which is now before the Chamber. I, therefore, move the second reading of the Bill and ask your best consideration on its behalf.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Is it understood that the principle of the Bill can be discussed?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am quite willing that the principle of the Bill should be discussed before the committee.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—On a motion that the Speaker leave the Chair is a convenient time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I assume that the principle of the Bill is involved in the extension of the boundaries, and that was part of the policy of the late government, so that I do not think there is any principle to consider before going into committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think there is a principle involved in the Bill. It was voted on in the other House. The hon. leader of the government has explained the material aspect of this Bill. I have no objection to Manitoba getting all the polar region, but there is a principle in the Bill which affects the rights of the population in regard to the school question. Does the Bill protect the rights of the people who are now in that territory, and will they have the same rights that they now have when they are annexed to Manitoba? If that is the case, then I am willing to vote the second reading right away. If the Bill does not protect the rights of that portion of the population then I am opposed to the second reading.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will have to read the Bill and come to a conclusion from the reading of it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman has given an interpretation of the financial aspect and the territorial side of the question; why does he not add an explanation as to the school rights?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Because the Bill does not touch that. It is silent on that question.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—The subsidy given to the province of Manitoba is to be retroactive. In 1908, Manitoba asked for an extension of its boundary and the subsidy is made retroactive to that date. Saskatchewan and Alberta asked to be formed into provinces in 1901. Why should not the subsidy be retroactive in that case, and why should not these provinces get the subsidies from 1901 instead of from 1905?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Saskatchewan and Alberta had no rights previous to 1905. In 1905 the government of the day organized the Northwest Territories into two provinces. Before that period they had no provincial status whatever, and were not in a position to make a demand on the federal government for subsidies or anything else. It became a question of policy for the government of that day as to whether they would convert these territories into provinces. They did so. From that day these provinces had a status, but not before. On the 13th July, 1908, the late government brought down a certain resolution in parliament, deciding that the boundaries of Manitoba should be extended in the way we propose to have them to-day. That was in anticipation of the financial subsidies being increased. It happened that the negotiations between the two governments proved abortive; they did not see eye to eye, consequently the negotiations resulted in nothing being done. It is not unreasonable to suppose that, as recognition was given to Manitoba on the 13th July, 1908, touching the extension of the boundaries, and having in contemplation increased subsidies, once negotiations were satisfactorily concluded between the two governments these subsidies should be retroactive from that date. That is the principle which has been recognized in the Bill.

The SPEAKER—If you want to discuss the Bill you had better wait until it gets into committee. I am taking the names of those speaking now; you are only entitled to speak once.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is quite in order to discuss the principle of the Bill at this stage and to discuss anything you like when in committee. My hon. friend says that resolutions were submitted to the House of Commons in 1908 with reference to the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba. That is very true. These resolutions were not acted on and I cannot understand why they make these payments to the province of Manitoba retroactive. If Manitoba is entitled to that, the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta are entitled to the same. It does not make any difference what was presented in 1908. This is 1912, and we are now discussing a measure that is before the two Houses of Parliament. I propose discussing that measure on its merits at the present time, and not what was done in 1908. Now we have before us the proposition to extend the boundaries of Manitoba. I am not going to say whether the late government was right or wrong. I have nothing to do with that. I am going to discuss the proposition as it was submitted to this House to-day. It is not a proposition that commends itself to the people of Saskatchewan. It is a well known fact that a large portion of the territory which is being so generously handed over to Manitoba formerly belonged to the old territorial district of Saskatchewan. I represented a portion of that territory in the House of Commons some years ago. When the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were formed they cut off a considerable portion of what was in the original territories and they threw it into No Man's land.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—When the House rose at six o'clock I was just starting to demonstrate to the House the claims of the province of Saskatchewan to a great portion of the territory that is included in the proposed extension of the province of Manitoba. I might say, in passing, that I am very sorry to observe that the province of Saskatchewan has not been treated, to my way of thinking, in a proper spirit in connection with this matter. At, or shortly after, the time that the province of Saskatchewan was formed, we put in a claim to this territory, and we never released this claim, or agreed to anything that was done under the resolutions that were submitted to the House in 1908, but have maintained our rights to this territory as set forth in the memorial which was submitted to the government. But before proceeding to this, lest there might be any misunderstanding with reference to the wish and desire of Saskatchewan to be heard at the conference which took place during this session of the House between the representatives of the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, I want to read some correspondence which I think will go to show that the province of Saskatchewan, through their representatives, asked to be heard at that conference, asked to have something to say about the boundary question. They had a claim to this territory, and they wanted to be heard?

Hon. Mr. POWER—What claim?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I will proceed shortly to explain our claim. In the first place the territory was made up of a part of Keewatin and a part of the old Northwest Territories that had been cut off part of Saskatchewan, and thrown into No Man's land. It has been stated in some speeches made by gentlemen who are not very well posted with reference to the present population in that territory, that there is a total population of something like four hundred or less white people in that territory. From that I assume that the gentlemen who are talking in that way thought there was no person in that country that had a voice in the affairs of this country, or in the arrangement of affairs in that country except the people whom they were prepared to call white people. But there is a class of people there who are citizens in that country, who have all the rights and privileges belonging to any other citizen, who have the right of franchise and everything else, and who are tax-payers. I allude now to the gentlemen whom we call the half-breeds of the country. I suppose when those speakers assumed there were only four hundred, or less white people in the territory, they did not take into consideration the large population of half-breeds who are scattered through that territory down to Churchill, Nelson, and all through there, who have just as much right to be heard as the four hundred people whom those speakers talked about.

Now I submit that the government went to work without consulting these people at all. They arranged to extend the boundaries of Manitoba and to hand over the territory that these people lived in, where they were born and where, in many instances, their fathers were born. The Dominion government saw fit to undertake to hand that territory to Manitoba without consulting these people in any way. There is a flourishing town in this territory called La Pas, where there must be a population of about one thousand people. Were they taken into consideration? Were they asked to come to any conference? A great many questions affecting their welfare and rights should have been considered. We find the province of Manitoba desirous of taking this territory within their boundaries. The people living in the territory never asked to be taken in. It was Manitoba that wanted the territory. They are being taken in without their rights being considered. The province of Manitoba is pretty heavily mortgaged; it is loaded down with bonds of all kinds for the purchase of telephone lines, for the bonding of railways, for stations at Winnipeg, and for all kinds of wild cat things. Are these people to be brought into Manitoba without receiving any compensation? Are they to be thrown holus bolus into Manitoba without their interest being considered, and will they have to assume all these liabilities without being consulted? Then the rights they have to their educational system in that portion of the territory should have been taken into consideration. The least that could have been done was to have heard what they had to say. The government did not do that; they simply said: we will put you in there whether you want to go in or not. Why all this hurry and haste? This thing has been going along for the last three or four years, and another year would not have made much difference. I notice in the correspondence between the government of Saskatchewan and the leader of the present government, that he pleads that his government has not been in power for a very long time, and that they have not had time to look over these different matters, and that the session is on them and that they would not be able to consider them fully. Why could not this matter be left over to another session, and let the people of Saskatchewan have a plan of this territory submitted to them, and invite the people who live in this territory to the conference? The province of Saskatchewan should also have been invited to the conference. A minister representing Manitoba was invited. I presume he did not come down without having some intimation that he would be received. The Manitoba representative came down here, but the Saskatchewan people were not invited to the conference, and the people living in the territory to be annexed were entirely ignored.

Then, the government of the province of Ontario, who set up some kind of claim to territory, are notified and attended the conference and because, to use a vulgar expression, they happen to be at the trough, they got away with a good deal of territory. They took five miles of territory, a large portion of the shore line of Hudson bay, including what will be the city of Nelson. If Ontario has a claim to the territory, I can prove that Saskatchewan has a better claim. I have in my hands documents which the leader of the Senate sent me after the debate began this afternoon; I have not had time to go through them, but I think I can prove that Saskatchewan has a much better claim than Ontario, which province has a visionary claim. They had their territory there, and anything given them was a gift from the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would the hon. gentleman take the territory given to Ontario as a gift?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes, I would. In the near future, with the growth of the western country, with the opening up and development of the Hudson Bay road, perhaps a larger city will be built at Fort Nelson than any other city in the Dominion. It is a reasonable proposition to suppose that there will be a large city there. My hon. friend from Halifax laughs. Does he not know that there are large cities in Russia much further north than that—cities larger than Toronto or Montreal—and why should we not have a large city there?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is not any Hudson strait outside those large cities in Russia.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That does not make any difference. We heard the same story with reference to the straits of Belle Isle. The Hudson straits are easier to navigate than the straits of Belle Isle. There is not as much fog, no snowstorms and no more ice, and with proper telegraph and telephone communication there is no doubt that the time will come when Hudson straits will be navigated five or six months of the year. The Minister of Railways has outlined another scheme, which my hon. friend forgets, to run a line of steamers across the bay, and run a railway across Ungava to the Labrador coast.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a little more ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The Minister of Railways says it can be done. I have heard the two greatest railroad builders in Ontario, Mackenzie and Mann, say that it will and can be done. Against that we have the views of some hon. gentlemen not very well posted in this matter. The time will come when we will have a very large city at Fort Nelson, and we have handed over to these gentlemen a large portion of the shore line that may be worth hundreds of millions in the near future, and for what reason? Are they obliged, by anything they can show us, to build a railroad to operate in this way? They need never build a railroad at all, and they can survey it and cut it up into town lots, and take millions out of it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It should belong to Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Surely it should. If they wanted to do anything for Ontario, the proper thing would have been to extend the boundaries to the bay, and let Ontario have jurisdiction over its own territory. To show that our people have not been treated with courtesy in this matter, I want to read from some documents given to me in the return which was brought down, which shows that correspondence has been going on continuously between the government of Saskatchewan and this government with reference to the claim Saskatchewan has made for this territory. I have a map here showing a piece of Saskatchewan cut off and placed into No Man's land. We have a better right to that piece of territory than Ontario. I have a letter dated Regina, 8th November, 1911, from the Executive Council, Regina, to Mr. Borden, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Borden,—

On the question of extension of provincial boundaries the Saskatchewan government observes that the Minister of the Interior said at Winnipeg on October 31, that before many days passed Manitoba's representatives would be invited to Ottawa and he was satisfied that then and there a basis of settlement would be arrived at.

In view of the probable early consideration of this question by your government it becomes my duty to draw to your attention the fact that the province of Saskatchewan is interested in this settlement. Our interest was recognized by the late administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier by its invitation to the Saskatchewan government to attend and present the province's claims at a conference held at Ottawa, November 12, 1906. We there submitted a memorandum setting forth the grounds upon which Saskatchewan claims the right of extension of boundaries to Hudson bay. Inasmuch as a recital of the main facts in support of our claims is contained in the said memorandum which doubtless will be found on your files and of which I attach a copy herewith, it will be unnecessary now for this government to do more than remind you that Saskatchewan has entered a claim and to draw your attention to the fact that the government and people of Saskatchewan believe that the conditions set out in the memorandum furnish an exceedingly strong claim on the part of this province for the inclusion within its boundaries of territory and inhabitants that until 1905 were associated with and under the jurisdiction of the Northwest Territories government at Regina, and for a new boundary to give the grain producers of the premier grain producing province of the Dominion their own direct access to the seaboard on Hudson bay. You will observe on page 6 of the printed memorandum the declaration of this government's opinion that our claim to 'that portion of the territory which was formerly part and parcel of the provisional district of Saskatchewan and Athabaska is absolute and paramount and no other province has or can have any claim thereto.'

Being apprised that it is the intention of your government to deal with the question forthwith and in view of the fact that you have only assumed office and may not be fully acquainted with the history of the negotiations in respect of the matter, I deem it due to you as well as to this province whose people have a strong interest in it to call your attention to Saskatchewan's claims.

(Signed) WALTER SCOTT.

This was written on the 11th November, last year, so that the government could not claim that they had not been notified by the Saskatchewan government that they had a claim to present. Therefore, I say they had been treated with courtesy; I submit that they should have been invited to have taken part in the conference. We find here an answer to this other correspondence:

Ottawa, November 14, 1911.

Dear Mr. Scott,—

Your letter of the 8th November with enclosure is before me. The considerations which are thus set forth will receive our attention.

If convenient I would be glad to be furnished with some further copies of the printed memorial.

(Signed) R. L. BORDEN.

Hon. Walter Scott,
Premier Saskatchewan,
Regina, Sask.

Regina, 18th November, 1911.

Dear Mr. Borden,—

I have yours of Novmber 14, acknowledging receipt of my communication of the 8th inst., on the subject of the extension of provincial boundaries and stating that you would be glad to be furnished with some further copies of the printed memorandum. I regret to state that our supply of these is somewhat limited, but I am sending you herewith half a dozen copies which, I trust, may be sufficient to meet your requirements.

(Signed) WALTER SCOTT.

Hon. R. L. Borden,

Regina, December 30, 1911.

Dear Sir,—On the 13th ultimo, Mr. Scott wrote you on behalf of the Saskatchewan government representing that you fix a date for a conference with you in reference to the question of natural resources and certain other questions affecting Saskatchewan. As no answer appears to have been received to Mr. Scott's communication, and as our legislative assembly is to meet about the third week in January, I shall be obliged if you will let me know at your earliest convenience when the conference referred to can be arranged for.

(Signed) J. A. CALDER.

Hon. R. L. Borden,

Ottawa, January 6, 1912.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 30th December is before me. Mr. Scott's letter of the 13th November was acknowledged immediately after its receipt. The very incessant and imperative demands upon our time in connection with the present session have hitherto rendered it impossible to arrange any date for the proposed conference. I am not sure that any date can be arranged in the immediate future. However, I shall bring the matter to the attention of my colleagues to-day, after which I shall write to you again.

(Sd.) R. L. BORDEN.

Hon. J. A. Calder, M.P.P.,
Acting Premier,
Regina, Sask.

Ottawa, January 9, 1912.

Dear Sir,—In further reply to your letter of the 30th December, I find after consultation with my colleagues it will be quite impossible to fix any date for a conference before the end of the present session. Owing to the many matters which have pressed upon our attention and the necessity of holding a session almost immediately after we assumed office, we have been obliged to defer, by reason of absolute necessity, consideration of matters which are of the highest importance.

(Sd.) R. L. BORDEN.

Hon. J. A. Calder, M.P.P.,
Acting Premier,
Regina, Sask.

This went to show that they were so busy they could not have any conference. Still the conference took place.

The next is a letter dated Regina, January 23rd, 1912:

Regina, January 23, 1912.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th inst., in which you intimate that it will be impossible for you to arrange for the conference asked for by the government of Saskatchewan until after the close of the present session of parliament. On behalf of this government it is my duty to convey to you the regret which we feel at your inability to deal with the matter earlier. The resolution passed unanimously by the Saskatchewan legislature nearly one year ago assumed, as its wording will show, that this question should properly be disposed of simultaneously with the question of the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, which it is generally understood will be settled by legislation at the present session. Moreover, your attention had already been called since you assumed office, to the claim of this province for an extension of its boundary to Hudson bay. These facts coupled with the further fact that your own declared policy is to convey to Saskatchewan the natural resources within the province, make it a matter of deep regret to us that action in the premises should be delayed and that consideration of our claims should be postponed until after the Manitoba question has been disposed of.

We still hope that you will find it possible to reconsider this matter and arrange for the necessary conference in order to deal with the whole question of the partition of the Northwest Territory and the disposal of the natural resources of the western provinces at the same time.

(Signed) J. A. CALDER,
Acting Premier.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister, Ottawa, Ont.

This was followed by a letter dated, Regina, 27th January, 1912:

Dear Mr. Borden,—

My letter to you dated November 13th last, Mr. Scott called your attention to several matters concerning which resolutions were adopted by the legislative assembly of Saskatchewan at its last session. One of the matters referred to in Mr. Scott's letter, namely, the question of the control of the provinical resources, has since been the subject of correspondence between you and me, but no reply appears to have been received from you as to the other matters mentioned by Mr. Scott. The resolutions referred to deal with the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's exemption from taxation, the control of school lands and the contract between the Dominion government and the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamboat Company.

The first two mentioned matters will doubtless require a little time and consideration, but I would respectfully suggest that there does not appear to be any reason why the resolution of the assembly concerning the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company might not be dealt with at once, if action has not already been taken by your government. In the opinion of this government the relief asked for should be granted immediately if at all. Our legislature is now in session and I would like very much to be in a position to inform the assembly of your decision in the matter at an early date.

(Signed) J. A. CALDER,
Acting Premier.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister, Ottawa.

Now, I submit, here is enough correspondence to show that as far as the communications between the federal government and the government of Saskatchewan are concerned, with reference to this conference, there cannot be any question that Saskatchewan asked time and time again to be represented at the conference that was held between the province of Ontario, the federal government and the province of Manitoba. Now, any province in this Dominion that has a legitimate claim to be present at a conference of that kind surely should not be ignored. Their claim to that territory was better than the claim of Manitoba today.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Why is Alberta silent?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Alberta is away off to one side. It never owned this territory. Our claim to this territory is better than the claim of Manitoba, because this territory at one time belonged to us. We administered the laws in that territory. Our legislative assembly had jurisdiction over it, we policed it; through our legislative assembly, and lieutenant governor we appointed all the magistrates in that territory; we took care of the administration of justice, the arrangements of educational questions—everything in connection with that territory. It was represented in the legislative assembly at Regina at one time by a gentleman named McLeod, and I cannot go over the names, but three or four different times three or four different parties represented that territory in Regina. I have the honour of representing that territory, and had polls in that territory when I was a representative of the House of Commons.

Now I claim that being the case, Saskatchewan had a pretty good claim to that territory. A large and generous donation is dealt out to the province of Ontario by the government in power, because, I suppose, naturally they have a friendly feeling to Ontario; but justice should prevail in this country no matter what support a government gets from one province or another. If the free and independent people of Saskatchewan did not see fit to vote for the policy which our friends submitted to them, that is no reason why they should not receive justice. The government hand over to the province of Ontario 500 miles of the shore of Hudson bay which is worth one hundred million of dollars. They gave this to Ontario with no reason except that they demand it. Just the same as they turned over Ungava to the province of Quebec. Now they propose to hand over this portion that is behind Manitoba to Manitoba, and I submit they have no right to hand over something that other people have a claim on. If there was a mortgage on this territory it would not be right to hand it over until that mortgage claim was adjusted. It is all humbug to say that our claim was not properly submitted, because I have evidence that it was properly submitted. I have here a number of telegrams and letters which have passed between the parties lately. Here is a telegram dated March 9, 1912, setting forth the facts of the case. It is a telegram sent to the Hon. R. L. Borden, the Prime Minister of the Dominion, and is as follows:

Telegram of the 8th received. The government of Saskatchewan does not now and never did consider the resolution of 1908.

This is in answer to a telegram sent by the Prime Minister, Mr. Borden, trying to assure them that because Sir Wilfrid Laurier had not dealt with this question he could not deal with it either. I do not know what kind of logic to call that—because one man may have made a mistake, therefore justice should not be rendered by another man. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a mistake and did not deal out justice to these people, that is no reason why the Hon. Mr. Borden should not deal with the matter on its merits. The telegram proceeds as follows:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement referred to in your telegram as a final disposition of claims for partition of Hudson bay territory. In point of fact notwithstanding said resolution conference have been going on showing proposed settlement of 1908 not considered final by you. Again urge justice of Saskatchewan's claims upon your consideration as set out in our memorial and my telegram. As to access given Ontario to Port Nelson, I note that press despatches state that your government has declared its intention to transfer to western provinces the public domain within their respective limits. In that case if your government has finally decided not to give effect to our claims set out in our memorial at very least, question of right of way should be settled now. Owing to increase in our population and in our grain production our people have a direct interest in Hudson bay ports. Before long it is likely that several railways will be built to bay. One or more of which may be state owned.

(Signed) J. A. CALDER,
Acting Premier.

This is in answer to a telegram which I need not read, which was sent by the Prime Minister to Mr. Calder giving reasons why they had not taken the matter up. Now with reference to the claim of Saskatchewan, which is set out in the memorial, anybody who will take the trouble to read the memorial will find that Saskatchewan's claim is fully stated. It sets out the history of the territory as it has been dealt with. I will not take up the time of the House reading it. There is something at the end, however, that I wish to place in our Debates. Six copies of this memorial was sent to the government long before the conference was held, and if the members of the government would take the trouble to read this memorial, they would find that Saskatchewan has a very strong claim which was made years ago. They have never given up that claim and they do not propose to give it up now.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Hang on to your claim; that is all you will get.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I have in this memorial a statement that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made speaking on this question, which was as follows:

Manitoba has asked to have her territory extended to the shore of the Hudson bay, and this is a prayer which seems to me to be entitled to a fair hearing. But the province of Manitoba is not the only one whose territory could be extended towards the Hudson bay. The province of Ontario would have the same right; the province of Quebec would have the same right; and the new province of Saskatchewan would have an equal right to have her territory extended to the shores of Hudson bay.

Recognizing the right of each province to have access to Hudson bay and recognizing the paramount claim of Saskatchewan to these portions of the old provisional district of Saskatchewan and Athabaska lying north of the province of Manitoba, it is confidently contended that that portion of the Northwest Territory bordering on the Hudson bay and lying between the Nelson river and the 60th parallel of latitude would be awarded to the province of Saskatchewan. If this were done a natural boundary line between the province of Saskatchewan and Manitoba would be found in the Nelson river.

This territory is tributary to Saskatchewan rather than to Manitoba. The rivers flowing through this territory flow from Saskatchewan. In the very near future it is expected that this territory will be connected with the province of Saskatchewan by a railway, one terminus of which will be in Saskatchewan and the other at Fort Churchill.

In summing up the same memorandum shows:

(1) That those portions of the old districts of Saskatchewan and Athabaska, not included in the province of Saskatchewan have been for the past twenty years and should continue to be united with the area forming that province.

(2) That the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Manitoba are both entitled to have their boundaries extended to Hudson bay.

(3) That granting to the provinces of Saskatchewan those portions of the old districts of Saskatchewan and Athabaska, the Nelson river forms a natural boundary, and the only reasonable boundary between that province and the province of Manitoba.

(4) That the territory north of the Nelson river is tributory to the province of Saskatchewan rather than to the province of Manitoba, and the interests of the people are more closely allied with Saskatchewan.

(5) That the province of Saskatchewan has a much greater interest in a transportation route via Fort Churchill and Hudson bay to the European markets than has either the province of Manitoba or the province of Ontario.

Then we find in the supplementary statement submitted on behalf of the province of Saskatchewan with reference to the claims of the province for an extension of boundaries to the Hudson bay:

That in their opinion the boundaries of Manitoba should be extended northward and eastward so as to include all of the present Northwest Territory lying south and east of the Nelson river, and

That the remainder of the territory lying between the province of Saskatchewan and Hudson bay and between the 60th parallel of north latitude and the Nelson river be allotted to the province of Saskatchewan.

I observe in this correspondence a petition was sent to the government of the Northwest Territories, signed by nearly all the people in that territory, to the effect that they did not wish to go into the province of Manitoba at all, that they wished to be connected again, as they had been in years gone by, with the province of Saskatchewan. I might further say that this territory we are talking about, represented by me at one time in the House of Commons, was also represented by Dr. Cash in the House of Commons.

The residents of this territory did not rest content with simply giving expression of their views through their accredited representative. They petitioned as follows:

To the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, K.C.M.G.

Sir,—We, the undersigned electors of Mackenzie district, Northwest Territories, and residing at or near The Pas, Saskatchewan, having learned but recently that an effort is being made by the government of Manitoba to have that portion of the territories lying north of Manitoba, joined to and included in the province of Manitoba, and such annexation being repugnant to us, and as we believe, detrimental to the best interests of this portion of the country, we therefore humbly petition that our political affiliations may be with the territories and not with Manitoba, and in case of provincial autonomy being granted the territories our destiny may be in or either that portion of the territories of which we form an integral part and for such, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Forty-eight electors of the district signed the petition against being included within the boundaries of Manitoba and prayed to be continued in political affiliations with the province of Saskatchewan. There we have a petition showing that they do not want to go in there, but want to come back to where they were before, under our jurisdiction, under our laws, where they had a right to everything we had. We know very well that in reference to the school proposition, which I do not wish to deal with, but some other gentleman will deal with that——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No; give us your view?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That territory was a part of the old province of Saskatchewan. We had a separate school law in Saskatchewan that was not exactly the kind of a school law you have down here in the older provinces, but a school law and a separate school system that satisfied everybody.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It provided for teachers that had to have normal school training. It provided in another place for government inspection of the schools, practically the same class of text-books and everything else; and certain things to be taught up to half-past three, and after that religious exercises if the people of the district wanted to hold them in the schools. It satisfied everybody. When the constitution was given to Alberta and Saskatchewan by the late government, the rights of the people were recognized, and respected, and those people in Keewatin enjoyed all those rights under the very same ordinances. The school law that we have to-day embodied in the constitution of Saskatchewan is exactly the school law that we had under the old Northwest Territories ordinances, passed by the legislative assembly—the very same law that the people that you propose to join to Manitoba enjoyed. How could they imagine what was going to happen when they were cut off and thrown to one side that way? They petitioned to be taken into Saskatchewan, where they naturally belonged, because they felt that if they were taken into Saskatchewan they would enjoy the same rights that their fellow-citizens are enjoying. But they were thrown off into No Man's land, and it is proposed to attach them to Manitoba without giving them any rights in regard to educational matters. I do not consider that fair. Those people that belonged to Saskatchewan, and should be in Saskatchewan, should now be dealt with in the same spirit as the people of Saskatchewan were treated under the constitution of that province. In place of that they have been railroaded into Manitoba without any one consulting them. I venture to say that the government has never sent anybody there to consult their wishes in this matter; and those are free men. Surely we have as good a right as Ontario to fair treatment. If Ontario is to get a five mile strip and a shore line of five hundred miles, and the east side of Port Nelson, why not give Saskatchewan the west side of the Nelson river and a shore line as well, so that we can get to Hudson bay? I do not know what reason Ontario had to get to the bay any more than she had to get to the coast of Maine, if you come to that. She is considered in conference; the thing is passed; our people are ignored, and we are told that we cannot get anything. I do not wish to discuss this matter any further at present. When the Bill is in committee I may have some amendments to move along the lines of the statements that I have made, and I shall then, probably, be able to give a little further consideration. This correspondence was only placed in my hands after six o'clock. Anybody can see I never saw it before, and that there is a lot of material for anybody to go through. I asked for it about a week ago, but did not get it. I would not have it to-night only the leader of the House kindly told me he had it in his desk, and handed it to me.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I only got it this evening.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I may have time to go through it further at a later day, and I will have something further to say on this question.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—Hon. gentlemen, will you permit me to call your attention, not so much to what is contained in the Boundaries Bill, as to what it does not contain.

The school question of Manitoba has for long been discussed by the ablest lawyers in the country. They have crossed swords pro and con and in our day the legal tourney still goes on.

I do not propose to advance any opinion as to the constitutionality of the stand taken by one side or by the other. Until the crack of doom the legal profession may be hopelessly sundered on this point.

While it may be claimed that provincial rights are a sacred thing—that there should be no interference with these rights by the federal parliament—it should also be borne in mind that there may be, and there actually is, such a thing as provincial wrongs, and when it is felt that such a condition prevails, where is the remedy?

The minority in Manitoba feel deeply on this question. They have reasons in plenty to complain that they have been harshly dealt with, that their dearest rights have been trampled upon by a majority that seems regardless of the appeals of natural justice.

The fathers and mothers of the minority feel it incumbent upon them to give their offspring a religious as well as a secular education. This they deem a duty they owe their God, their country and their children. The State steps in and tells them they will be permitted to do this, but, if they so elect, they must also contribute of their means to sustain other schools they cannot use, other schools from which is excluded the training which fits them for the life beyond. They will have to support two sets of schools—those which they use and the schools of their neighbours which they do not and cannot in conscience use.

This is the condition that faces us in Manitoba, up to the present a comparatively small but important province in the federal family group.

In other provinces—I have now in mind those down by the sea—there was a time when feeling ran high on the school question, but at long last a settlement was arrived at. There was a compromise—there was a spirit of give and take—there was on the part of the majority a willingness to be just if not generous, and a peaceful solution of the trouble was achieved.

Not so, however, with Manitoba. It still clings to the motto that in school matters at least the minority has no rights which the majority may concede or respect.

We will be assured that in certain sections of the province the Catholic people have been permitted to establish and conduct schools which are practically separate schools.

They cannot in the true sense be recognized as such because they are forced to conform to certain regulations laid down by an education department which merely tolerates them, but ever looks at them askance.

Let us consider the conditions prevailing in a section composed entirely or almost entirely of Catholics. These people establish a school. It must be deemed a public school. All the money used in its erection and maintenance came out of the purses of the Catholic people, with the exception of a pittance called a government grant.

Regulations were laid down whereby religious training is cut down to the minimum. It is barely tolerated. Catechism may be taught, but only for a very brief period, and this, if I am not mistaken, after school hours.

Just here some one may put the question: Does not the teaching of religion in the schools lessen the efficiency of the secular studies? To this I would answer that in nearly every province of the Dominion where Catholic parents are given fair play—where their schools are placed on the same footing as the public schools—where they are not hampered in their work by vexatious restrictions—they not only hold their own in secular studies, but in many places are far in advance of the public schools. But to the proof, which I think will be a revelation to many who imagine that Catholics make a mistake in not taking advantage of the public school training. In the city of London at the last entrance examination, 382 pupils from the public schools went up for this test. Of these 285 or 74½ per cent passed. At the same examination 43 candidates from the separate schools went up for examination and 42, or 97½ per cent, passed. Let me say too that this is not an isolated or exceptional case, for like results are obtained by nearly every other separate school in the province, and London's separate schools employ only nuns as teachers.

Catholic people are told also that they must have no religious emblems in the schools, because the law will not permit it. The inspector may not deal harshly with the conditions as he finds them. He may tolerate these practices, but if so he is not doing his duty as an officer of the law.

Catholics feel deeply on this matter. The sense of wrong cuts as with a sword. I am sure many of my non-Catholic friends do not fully realize the depth of the wrong inflicted upon their Catholic neighbours. Yes, Catholics feel aggrieved and abundant reason have they to so feel. Their faith is dearer to them than aught else. The little catechism they place in the hands of their children is a classic. It is not much to look at, but within the covers of that small volume is the story of Christ, and the law he laid down to guide souls to Himself, and Christians tell their fellow Christians that instruction in the Christian precepts contained in this book must be discontinued or carved down to a degree which would render it well-nigh useless. We are all Christians. This is a Christian country and I am of those who believe that if our great Dominion is to achieve the grandeur and the glory which an all wise Providence has destined it should achieve, Christ should be the corner stone and a Christian atmosphere should be with us and about us in all our strivings to attain for Canada its great destiny.

I may be met here with the argument that the school should confine its work to secular training and that the home and the Sunday school suffice for religious instruction.

There has never been a contention more fallacious, for experience has proved that, while these methods are excellent as far as they go, but a mere fringe of the work can in this way be accomplished. A very large proportion of our rising generation do not attend Sunday schools, and another large proportion of the parents are more or less indifferent. While they are solicitous about the things of time—while they are anxious their children should be well equipped in the race for the golden goal—the thought of eternity, and the thought of character building on Christian standard give them small concern.

Pardon me, hon. gentlemen, for taking up your time with this phase of the subject. I would not do so were it not in my mind that our country's future will in due time be in the keeping of the little ones who are now in life's springtime. Their future is now in the moulding. Will it be for good or evil? Will our boys of to-day be noble men of to-morrow? Will they carry a conscience into their life work, or will all their ambition, all their thoughts, all their energies be directed towards the acquirement of wealth?

It is but wasting time to antagonize the purpose of the Catholics to establish separate schools. No matter what the law may be, Catholics will everywhere, and at all times, establish religious schools, or, rather, schools in which religious training and secular training go hand in hand. You may compel them to pay the double tax if you will, but that will not stay them in their purpose. With them it is a matter of conscience. They cannot and they will not relinquish their right. Nowhere in the world are we furnished with a more striking illustration of this fact than in the great American republic. In that country Catholics pay the double tax, and while meeting the exaction of the public school tax gatherer, they pay each year for the maintenance of parochial schools the enormous sum of $25,000,000.

Nothing would please me better than to note that my friends who do not believe as I do, the great Protestant body of the Dominion, established Protestant separate schools in every section of the country where conditions would permit such a departure. In centres of population it would please me to see a Protestant separate school in the shadow of every Protestant church.

The condition in Winnipeg is a reproach. The pity of it. The shame of it. When another generation will pass away, the men of the future will wonder that the injustice done their Catholic neighbours was permitted to continue even for a short period —will wonder that the separate school question had for so long a time been cast about, particularly in Winnipeg, like a hockey puck by the practical politicians, who cared much for the sweets of office and were as adamant to the plea of justice. How long it will continue we know not, but some means should be taken to force the hands of those who value not fair play, whose shibboleth of equal rights for all comes but from the teeth outwards. Lawyers may tell us that it would be unconstitutional to take drastic measures. Well, be it so. Then let the constitution be altered, even if we have to appeal to the mother of parliaments and our gracious Sovereign.

We are all Canadians. Would that a kindlier spirit were abroad. Would that there were fewer rancour-mongers plying their unlovely trade in our midst. Would that we had amongst us more really great Canadians whose noble purpose is to build up a united Canada, united in heart and soul, dealing out measure for measure of kindly consideration, each for each, irrespective of race, or class, or creed. With such men Canada will become truly great. Such men are a benediction amongst us. May they be multiplied over and over again, until it may come to pass that we are as one people, under one and the same old flag, loving our country with a great love and our neighbours as ourselves. Let the Senate of Canada then, the champion of the weak, the defender of the minorities, the court whose decisions are above and beyond all that is petty and mean, issue a mandate that may be reckoned with by those who continue without cause that scandalous violation of natural justice in the province of Manitoba. That province is entering upon a new era. She will be broadened and enriched under the new order of things; may it be that the minds of its majority broaden also. A fitting time would this be to throw down the barrier of oppression and give the Catholic minority that meed of justice and fair play which should be the portion, for it is the birthright, of every subject of King George.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish to make a few general observations at this stage. In the first place I am very sorry that the school question has been introduced in this debate in the speech of the hon. gentleman from London. I had hoped that the Manitoba school question was settled a number of years ago. I was rather pleased when both sides in the other chamber conceded that a settlement had been made and could not be changed. I am inclined to think those gentlemen who made that settlement have sized up the situation very accurately as far as Manitoba is concerned. I do not think they should exist, or would exist there were it not for the fact that half a dozen men keep the agitation alive in order to keep themselves before the public.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I come from that province and think I know what I am talking about, and I say with reference to the school settlement which was made in 1897 between the Manitoba and federal government, that if all parties were favourable to carrying it out in its entirety, no such conditions as have been portrayed by the hon. gentleman from London would exist. One thing Manitoba has decided upon is that, so far as the state is concerned, every child in the province shall have a secular education to fit him for the duties of this life. They permit of religious instruction being held in the public school between half past three and four. They came to that conclusion because it was found that portions of the population were growing up illiterate because qualified teachers could not be found to teach pupils in schools that were drawing grants from the province. I do not think any religious body should find fault with a school law that permits them to have religious instruction between half past three and four, one-half hour a day, and these provisions are made in that Act. From the onslaught that was made on the Manitoba government and the Manitoba school law by my hon. friend, I am sure if some of the hon. members of this House had been impressed by the statements made by him, they must have forgotten the conditions of that settlement. The conditions are that where there is a minority, be they Catholic or Protestant, they have certain rights in the school. Any religious denomination can withdraw when the religious exercises of any other denomination are being held. That freedom is given. There is no objection to Catholic teachers. They can be employed so long as they are qualified. So that I think altogether, if the people were agreeable to go along the lines of the school law of Manitoba, there should not be any complaint of insufficient time to give instructions to children in their mother's faith. The extension of the boundaries of Manitoba has been a very live question in that province for a great number of years. A number of years ago we agitated to have the boundaries extend further west than the present boundaries. When the province was first formed it went only to range 13, west of the first meridian. After that it was extended to range 29, west of the first meridian. The province has been known in that large area of country in the northwest as the postage stamp province. The agitation was created to extend the boundary west of range 29 to Regina or Moosejaw.

That was objected to by the people resident in that district west of range 29. Their claim was that Manitoba had a very heavy debt, and they did not wish to be attached to it. They preferred to throw in their lot with Saskatchewan. Consequently the boundary was not extended west, because the people living there objected to be taken in. Then an agitation arose as to the boundaries of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. A Bill was passed in 1905 giving autonomy to those provinces. When that was done, Manitoba naturally wished to extend the boundaries, but the difficulties in doing that have been explained, inasmuch as the province of Manitoba wished to get the same area, as nearly as possible, as the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, about two hundred and fifty thousand square miles. To do that, a part of the hinterland of the province of Ontario would have to be given to the province of Manitoba. There is also the difficulty explained by the member for Saskatchewan, that the portion of the hinterland north of Manitoba was under the control and jurisdiction of Saskatchewan, or the Northwest Territories.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It had been.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It was at the time of the formation of the two provinces. At that particular time that territory was a portion of the Northwest Territories and under the Northwest Territories government; and those people, as has been stated by the member from Saskatchewan, felt that they had a just claim to have a choice as to location. They did by petition, as stated by the hon. gentleman express preference to remain in the Northwest Territories as they had been for a number of years. However, the government and the members for Manitoba, I might say, using their influence with the government, claimed that as far as the hinterland of Manitoba was concerned, that particular portion of the territories should belong to Manitoba or should not belong to Saskatchewan, and should belong to Manitoba when the Manitoba boundaries were extended. That prevailed, and the result was that the western boundary of the province of Manitoba was extended north and that formed the eastern boundary of the province of Saskatchewan. At that time, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, Saskatchewan claimed that they ought to have acces to Hudson bay—they ought to have a port at Churchill However, the government did not see fit to accede to their request, and extended the boundary up to the northern boundary of the province of Saskatchewan as formed now, leaving all this territory vacant for the purpose of extending the province of Manitoba. Then the question came up as to the boundary between Ontario and Quebec, and to give Manitoba an equal mileage with Saskachewan and Alberta it was found that they would either have to extend the boundaries of Manitoba eastward to make up that territory. Ontario objected to the taking of any portion of old Ontario. It was finally decided by the government of the day to extend the boundaries in a north-easterly direction from the north-easterly boundary of Manitoba to Hudson bay, making the provincial area practically equal to the area af Saskatchewan or Alberta. That was passed in 1908 by resolution of the House of Commons, and transmitted to the Manitoba government, but they did not see fit to accept that boundary until March, 1911. They claimed that the government should state the financial terms along with the boundary. It was contended by the government of the day that the financial terms would be a matter for a conference. It was not starting a new province. Manitoba had her swamp lands and university lands, and had an allowance on account of public lands. Mr. Roblin wanted to have a grievance against his political opponents for a purpose, and it has been made a football from that time to the present. The very boundaries proposed by the government in 1908 were accepted in 1911, and these are the exact boundaries as laid down in the present Bill, with this exception, that there is a proviso which allows the province of Ontario to have a right of way to Port Nelson or Fort Churchill, for the purpose of building a railway. That seems to me to be the most childish proposition ever submitted to parliament. It is simply juggling for political effect. We might as well ask that we should have a strip five miles in width from Manitoba down to Fort William over which we send nearly all the freight of the northwest provinces. I had not a great deal of sympathy with my hon. friend when he asked for a port at Fort William. Of course, when you speak of a townsite, or valuable property, that is a different thing, but a port for shipping purposes makes no difference to a province so long as it is in Canada. This provision is merely given as a sop to the government of Ontario. I suppose they have demanded the price, and the government say we are going to give you anything you ask. Ontario said: 'We are determined to have a port on the Hudson bay,' and the government say, 'we will give you a strip five miles in width from the eastern boundary of Manitoba up to Port Nelson, and if that is not the port selected, then a strip of land 200 feet in width up to Fort Churchill.' Now, as has been stated by the hon. member for Saskatchewan, the province of Ontario have five years to make that selection. They are not required to build a railway, but they get possession of the land, which is under the jurisdiction of the province of Manitoba, and Manitoba has got to bear the expense of administering the law over that five mile strip although Ontario owns it. The province of Ontario can take that strip along the shores of Hudson bay from the boundary of the province of Manitoba right clean up to Nelson, and if Nelson is not the port, can take 200 feet of the fore shore from there up to Churchill. That practically gives the province of Ontario all the value there is in the foreshore of Hudson bay, because there is only a small portion north of Fort Churchill. It seems to me that it is a very unfair proposition to give Ontario that strip through Manitoba. For all time it will be owned by Ontario, ostensibly to build a railway. I doubt if they ever will build a railway, because if Ontario extends its railway, then the moment it crossed the easterly line of Manitoba, Ontario will lose control of their provincial railway, and it will be under the jurisdiction of the federal railway commission. One reason that I think it is a very unfair arrangement, as far as Manitoba is concerned, is that Manitoba receives very little financial assistance. I believe that the territory that is added to Manitoba contains minerals and other valuable resources, and they should be handed over to the province of Manitoba so that they may enjoy some of the rights over the hinterland the same as Ontario and Quebec does. For the small concession of some $315,000 a year, the government of Canada are taking back some 8,000,000 acres to which the province of Manitoba has the right to-day. They have taken it back for the paltry consideration of some $315,000 a year. That seems to me to be a sacrifice on the part of the people of Manitoba. Some details were given by the Minister of Finance in addressing the other chamber. The swamp land that Manitoba was entitled to up to the end of 1909 is approximately 2,900,000 acres. Sold by the province as per statement furnished by the province, January 12th, 834,481 acres; balance reconveyed to the Dominion under the Bill, 1,170,800 acres odd. The estimate of the swamp land in Manitoba still available is about 1,170,000 acres. The estimated swamp land in the unsurveyed part of the province is 4,870,000 acres. There is a total estimate of swamp land of 8,232,000 acres. These swamp lands are to be taken back. The province agrees to barter away that 8,000,000 acres for the paltry consideration of $315,000 a year. I think it is an improvident bargain for Manitoba to make, and a bad arrangement as far as the Dominion are concerned. These swamp lands should belong to Manitoba, because they have to be drained, and who is going to drain them? The Dominion government will not do so.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—They will have a Bill to drain lands.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They have a Bill to make roads; they may have a Bill to drain lands. These lands will have to be drained because the province is anxious to have them occupied. The province will not drain these lands for the benefit of the Dominion government. If any land should belong to the province it is the swamp land, because they have to be drained, and that is work for the municipality or province to do, and when they are drained they will be of enhanced value. It has been well said by a gentleman in another place that the government of Manitoba, after this, will be known as the Esau government. They bartered away some 8,000,000 acres of land for a mess of pottage. These lands ought to be worth $3 per acre, and would be worth a million and a half a year to the province. For the purpose of relieving a prodigal government by giving them some ready cash they hand over these 8,000,000 acres for the paltry sum of $315,000 a year. There is no doubt they need it. They have a deficit on the government telephone, and government elevator, and they are in need of ready cash. It is a pity that such a deal should be put up to them when they are hard up for ready cash. We are paying too much for the privilege of securing it. Manitoba has a right to her swamp lands to-day, and should receive those in the newly added territory. From the nature of the country, at least half of that area would be handed over to Manitoba as swamp lands. The difference between the political parties in the province of Manitoba is that the Liberals in the legislature demand that the whole territory should be handed over to Manitoba, the timber, lands, fisheries and minerals. These would be of greater value to the province than the paltry consideration which they are receiving to-day, or any consideration that they are being given in cash.

That country is going to be opened up by railways, and it is very hard to estimate the great wealth that is in that country. I may as an illustration, take the experience of the province of Ontario. When the local government very wisely undertook to build a railroad up through the Cobalt country, they had no idea there was any mineral there. In fact geologists said, when they found silver at Cobalt, that it should not be there. They said it was the wrong place; but notwithstanding that, millions of dollars worth of silver have been taken out; and I have no doubt that when railroads are opened up through that territory north of Manitoba, immense mineral wealth may be discovered there. A railroad is being built, and others will be constructed to Hudson bay, and there is no question about development in that country. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan has referred to the Hudson bay route for navigation purposes. I say that has to be demonstrated, but whether it is demonstrated successfully or not, we have a large territory there that warrants the government in opening it and building railroads through it. A number of the gentlemen who now hear me have examined witnesses, notably Mr. R. E. Young, unfortunately deceased, a gentleman who probably had more information collected as to that northern country than any other man that was living in his day; and I am sure from our examinations of that gentleman, we have satisfied ourselves that that territory north of Manitoba is capable of maintaining a very very large population. The government is justified in building the railroads for the purpose of opening up that immense territory. I do not propose to take up further time discussing this matter at present, but I may make further remarks on the Bill in committee, I think, on general principles it is a bad deal, so far as the settlement is concerned but I would not feel disposed to attempt to defeat the Bill. It is a bad measure, but it has been kicking around so long like a football that I think it is better to be settled. We have a vague promise that some time in the future, distant or not distant as the case might be, this land will be handed over to Manitoba. I care not when it should be, but I should think now is the time to hand it over, when the boundaries are being extended. I do not think the federal government can make as good use of it in the interests of Canada generally as the province of Manitoba can. It would be better administered, better handled, and made of more use for the general advantage of Canada in the hands of the province than in the hands of the federal government.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—In order to induce the hon. leader of this House to accept the motion made by the hon. member from Grandville to adjourn the debate till to-morrow, I must remind him of what took place between us, I must ask him to remember that the hon. member from Central York made a motion three or four days ago to lay before this House the correspondence between the federal government and the Manitoba government. I was waiting for the production of those documents in order to be in a position to be able to say a few words on this question. Those documents not having been produced, I think that the hon. leader of this House will consent to postpone the discussion till to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Before that, perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell me upon what principle it was that, in this distribution of land, the district or territory known as Ungava was given to the province of Quebec. I understand it was on the principle that it was the hinterland, the land lying north of the province, and on that account should belong to the province of Quebec. If so, why then was land which lay north of the province of Ontario not given to that province? Why was this tangent line drawn from the twelfth range in the province of Manitoba on its eastern boundary over towards the coast of Hudson bay, and the land north of that tangent line taken from the province of Ontario, and given to the province of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That subject might be discussed more advantageously when the Quebec and Ontario Bills come down, which I expect will be some time this week; but I might say it was for the purpose of equalizing the territory of Manitoba, and also, I have no doubt, for the purpose of including the harbour at Nelson. The eastern boundary running in a north-easterly direction, striking the shore of Hudson bay, equalizes the territory so as to place the three provinces territorily on an equality with each other. Now the mileage of Alberta is 253,000 square miles; that of Saskatchewan 250,000 square miles; that of Manitoba 251,832—an equality about as close as can be approached.

Hon. Mr. KERR—But I do not think that quite meets the point I want to understand. If that land belonged equitably where it has been given I could then understand that you might draw your line where you liked about it; but the land north of Manitoba is given to Manitoba as belonging to that province, and if that principle is right, then the land north of the tangent line of which I speak, clear to the shores of Hudson bay, would belong to the province of Ontario. The eastern line of Manitoba is a parallel of longitude. All east of that line belongs morally and equitably to the province of Ontario.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do you mean north of Hudson bay?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, not north of Hudson bay; between Hudson bay and the old territory of the province of Ontario along on the eastern line of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. The province of Ontario to-day extends to the line of Manitoba. Now, all the land north of that is Keewatin.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That part of Keewatin that lies north of the province of Ontario equitably belongs to Ontario. By many person the reason suggested is because they wanted to give access to Manitoba by way of a harbour or harbours. That does not necessarily cover the matter, it seems to me, because if the land was given to the province of Ontario, then a roadway ten miles wide which is talked of, but which is not contained in this Act, might have been given to the province of Manitoba over lands belonging to the province of Ontario, and so give Manitoba, all Manitoba then, access to ports on Hudson bay. In other words, they would have got to Hudson bay over a right-of-way, instead of Ontario going there by a right-of-way through Manitoba, but the land and all that goes with the land would have become vested in Ontario, and it seems to me, on the principle on which this has always been administered, and which is recognized in this very division north of Manitcba, that all such territory should be given to Ontario.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to refer to part of the land now within the proposed extended boundaries of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is quite logical that the boundaries of Manitoba should be extended to Hudson bay, embracing that part of the territory between Hudson bay and the old northern boundary, so as to give it the amount of territory possessed by the other two provinces.

Hon. Mr. KERR—How does it give it the amount of territory?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a matter of distribution by the government owning the land.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Is that not taking it away from Ontario?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from Prince Albert said they took it from Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. KERR—He referred to the part north of Manitoba. On the same principle that the land north of Manitoba is given to Manitoba instead of being given to Saskatchewan, why is the land lying east of Manitoba and north of Ontario not given to Ontario? You take from it what seems to me equitably belongs to it, and if Manitoba wants access to the bay, why not give it the right of way through that territory in the same fashion you are doing now with Ontario?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a matter for this government to exercise its jurisdiction as to the transfer to any particular province. Of course we cannot all have the same conception of what constitutes equity, but it is manifestly fair that Manitoba should be placed territorially upon an equality with the other two provinces, and it is only in that way it can be done.

The SPEAKER—Hon. gentlemen are forgetting that we are not in committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This matter might be discussed when the other boundaries Bills comes down.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My view about this matter is perhaps a little different from the views expressed by some other hon. gentlemen. It is contended on behalf of the province of Manitoba that Ontario should have more than she has got. It is contended on the part of Manitoba that Manitoba should have more than she has got, and now we have the claim put in by Saskatchewan that she is entitled to quite an important consideration in this arrangement. With respect to the province of Saskatchewan, I do not think that the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan has put the case from a judicial standpoint, if I may use that expression. The hon. gentleman claims that because in old times, before 1905, when there was what was called the Northwest Territories, which territories had a legislature that met at Regina, the Northwest Territories were divided into four territories, and a portion of Saskatchewan ran eastward to the north of the existing province of Manitoba. Saskatchewan had an unquestionable claim to be considered now in connection with the proposed extension of the boundaries of Manitoba; but the hon. gentleman leaves out of sight altogether the fact that various things have happened since then. In the first place, the old Northwest Territories were practically done away with. The new province of Saskatchewan comprises a large portion, the greater portion of what was then the territory of Assiniboia. It contains the greater portion of what was then the territory of Saskatchewan. It contains a considerable portion of what was then the territory of Arthabaska, and in 1905, when the new province of Saskatchewan was constituted out of the old Northwest Territories, what had gone before was practically wiped out. As far as I remember, I did not pay any very particular attention to the expressions of feeling of the representatives of Saskatchewan and Alberta at that time, but I do not remember that there was any serious complaint made, in this Chamber at any rate, with respect to the boundaries then given to the province of Saskatchewan. I think now it is to be regretted that when the new boundaries of Saskatchewan and Alberta were constituted in 1905, the boundaries of the old province of Manitoba had not been extended to the 60th parallel of latitude. I think it would have been better to have made one piece of work of the whole business, and settled it then, instead of which we have it now for about seven years a sort of running sore, which made the relations between Manitoba and the Dominion government exceedingly disagreeable. So far as respects the province of Saskatchewan. Then as to Ontario, the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Kerr) must remember that the boundaries of the province of Ontario were fixed in the famous arbitration which took place about twenty years ago, and unless I am mistaken, were fixed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England. That was what Ontario was entitled to, and when you consider the very great extent, and the great wealth of what is now called New Ontario, which is within the boundaries of the province of Ontario, there does not seem to me to have been not only any absolute necessity, but any very special reason, why the province of Ontario should have got more territory. However that may be, we find that the province of Manitoba is not quite satisfied. Gentlemen who represent the interests of Manitoba are not satisfied. The province of Ontario—if we listen to gentlemen who voice the sentiments of the opposition—is not satisfied. But, as a matter of fact, the boundaries which are embodied in the agreement between Manitoba and Ontario were embodied in the agreement between the late government and the government of Manitoba. As I understand, the government of the province of Ontario is now satisfied with the arrangement which has been made by the Dominion government and my feeling about it is this: that whether a member of this House feels this settlement is one which would have met his own approval or not, still, as the parties who are more or less directly interested, the governments of Ontario and of Manitoba, are satisfied, and the Dominion government is satisfied, I really do not think there is any particular reason why we should make any trouble about it. I am a man of peace, and I think there is no very good ground for making an outcry about this boundary question. With respect to the school question, on which my hon. friend from London has spoken so feelingly and truly, my view is that if we begin to deal with that question in an aggressive spirit we shall be laying up, probably, a very great amount of trouble for ourselves in the future. We know that over this same Manitoba school question in the past there arose a most unsatisfactory condition of things. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from London in saying, in my humble opinion at any rate, notwithstanding the views taken by some very prominent legal gentlemen in another place, that the people of Keewatin have rights with respect to separate schools. I do not think the population is very large. The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie intimated that it was larger than was supposed, but it is not very large. Hon. gentlemen will remember the old story that you could not coerce Manitoba. I think the right tribunal to settle the dispute, and to remove the injustice from which the Catholics of the province suffer, is the legislature of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend says hear, hear to that. I am not quite sure that he will say 'hear, hear' to everything I say about the subject. As I understand it, the government of Manitoba have so administered the school law of that province in some sections as to give no reasonable grounds for complaint on the part of the minority. In other places the law is not so administered, and it seems to me the law should be so modified that in every portion of the province it should be administered so as to give no reasonable ground for complaint. It should be modified, even where there was a disposition not to modify it, so as not to leave it open to those administering the law to deal harshly with the minority.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think I am safe in saying that there is no part of Manitoba where the school law is administered harshly. There are a few who will not accept the law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When I say harshly I mean strictly. My view is that the law should be so administered that these people could come under the law, and the people who should so alter the law are the legislators of Manitoba. The present Minister of the Interior is anxious that peace should reign throughout the Dominion, and I think he and his leader should have sufficient influence with the present government of Manitoba to induce them to take the steps necessary to remove the grievances which the minority now complain of, and the whole thing could be done by a very simple Bill, and that would end the business altogether. I feel, hon. gentlemen, that the school question is one which is better not in politics, and I feel that now when the Dominion government and local government of Manitoba are in cordial sympathy, there is an opportunity to take that question out of politics for good and all. It is a bad thing for the whole country—bad for the government, and in my humble opinion, bad for the opposition. It is not the sort of question we should be fighting about, and I trust that when another session comes around the hon. leader of this House will be in a position to come down and tell us that, owing to the tact and judgment shown by both parties, by the government of Manitoba and the federal government, this question has been ultimately and finally removed, from the sphere of politics.

The motion was agreed to and the debate was adjourned.

THE GRAIN BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (32) An Act respecting grain.

He said: It is not necessary for me to enter upon any lengthy explanation of what is known as the Grain Act. We spent a very considerable part of last session in dealing with this very important Bill. It was sent to a select committee, and that committee gave the closest possible attention to the preparation of the Bill, which afterwards went down to the Commons. That Bill has been very largely, if not altogether, accepted by the Commons, so that upon its return to us this session, very few important amendments will appear. True there have been a number of minor amendments made, but when we come to discuss it before committee, it will be observed that probably the principal amendment to the Bill will be found in section 57, which deals with the establishment of a sample market. Then there is another section, 207, dealing with car distribution, which is a departure from the Bill of last session.

Hon. gentlemen are doubtless familiar with these particular sections, inasmuch as they received some lengthy discussion and consideration at our hands during the present session. Certain amendments were brought in involving discussion which will only be repeated when we come to consider these particular sections. With these two amendments I may say that the Bill is substantially, barring certain details and particulars, which do not affect the question of policy, the same Bill which we passed last session of parliament. Without occupying your valuable time at this late hour of the night, I propose moving the second reading with the view of its reaching the committee stage, when we can enter into details more fully than at this time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not wish to delay the House by discussing this measure. I agree with the hon. gentleman that this is practically the same Bill that was so well considered by the Senate during last session. It went over to the House of Commons and they have made some half dozen changes which I do not think are minor. They have really changed the whole principle of the Bill. In one particular, with regard to car distribution, they have made material changes. The sample market is entirely a new feature and permits mixing, and that was never contemplated in the Grain Act. I received a communication to-day from the executive of the Grain Growers of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, complaining about some changes that have been made in this Bill in the House of Commons, and they ask that the Senate should take some action, particularly with reference to the two amendments. They consider them of such importance that they are willing to sacrifice the whole of the Bill rather than submit to these two amendments. I would suggest that, as these gentlemen will be here this evening or to-morrow, they should be given some opportunity of laying their views before the Senate. I do not know whether you want to refer this Bill to a committee or not, but I do think that, as this Bill is for the purpose of dealing with the commodities of the farmers of the Northwest, they should be considered. This Bill is not introduced by the government for the purpose of facilitating trade; it is for the purpose of protecting the Northwest farmers and their representatives should be heard before the Bill is finally dealt with.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—When this measure was first submitted to the House it was very nearly a copy of the Bill that was put through the Senate last year, and which went to the House of Commons. On account of the dissolution it did not become law, and the present Minister of Trade and Commerce took it up and, after consulting with the farmers, practically introduced the old Bill. After the Bill was printed the government must have had some other representations made to it, and amendments have been introduced. As the Bill stands to-day it is simply a farce to present it to this House or to the House of Commons. All you have to do is to draft the Bill providing for the appointment of a grain commission, define their duties and fix their salaries. All the principles the farmers have heen fighting for years to secure have been taken away from them by this Bill. For years they have been fighting for the distribution of cars, and they have sent their delegates down here to face the railway companies, and at last they got a little freedom, but this Bill takes it away from them. This is a very serious thing for the farmer, because it means that he will not have competition in the sale of his grain. The handling of grain in the west at the present is in the hands of a monopoly, the Peevey and one or two other companies. These large companies form four or five small companies, one they call the Saskatchewan Elevator Co., another one the North Star, and another the British American. Four of these companies will locate in a town, and the people think they are getting competition in the sale of their grain when, as a matter of fact, the four companies belong to the one combine. When the farmer had the loading platform, he could send his grain to the market himself, but if he went to these four companies they would all tell the same story, and would all grade his grain about the same and offer him the same price, and he had to take it or leave it. After the farmer got a share of the cars granted them by legislation, if they were not satisfied with the price offered by this combine, they could load their own car and sell their grain at the highest price they could get. By placing this matter in the hands of the commissioners and giving them power to place the cars as they please, the farmers are not likely to receive justice. They claim that the commissioners are more liable to incline to the Grain Exchange in Winnipeg than to the farmers of the west. They claim that the Grain Exchange will plug them with all kinds of statements with reference to congestion and that the farmers will get the worst of it. It has been proven by the farmers that the congestion was more the fault of the railway company than of the farmers tieing up the cars at loading platforms. It has been proven time and again that the railway companies have taken four times as long to send a car of wheat from a loading platform to Fort William than they should have taken. Another thing the farmer does not like is the mixing of grain. He likes to keep up the reputation of his grain. And those same gentlemen I tell you about, most of them from the other side, have got into the habit of buying grain and mixing it up and shipping it out. It is a well known fact that a year or so ago several of them were prosecuted for mixing grain contrary to the statute, which goes to show that even a law on the statute-book would not keep those gentlemen straight. Now, they propose to take away those rights to a certain extent and prevent mixing; in other words, to hand over everything to this commission. You might just have a Bill with one page appointing a commission and fixing their salaries and let it go at that.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL—CUSTOMS OFFICIALS.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (116) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the committee.)

On clause 1,

1. The Civil Service Act, chapter 16 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by inserting the following sections immediately after section 39:—

39a. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, a person who has served seven years as a chief clerk in the outside service of the customs, may be appointed a senior chief clerk in such service, subject to such examination on the duties of office and other qualifications as is prescribed by the deputy head in a report to be concurred in by the head of the department.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That, as I understand it, applies to a clerk in the outside service the same rules as apply to a clerk in the inside service. Is that what it means?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might say that this is a Bill that was introduced at the last session of parliament by the late Minister of Customs, Hon. Mr. Paterson. It proposes to increase the salaries—

Hon. Mr. POWER—That may be something in its favour, but still it is not everything.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I mention that for the purpose of facilitating its passage. Hon. gentlemen will appreciate that part. The Bill proposes to increase the salaries of some of the officers in the outside custom service, such as collectors of ports and chief clerks. It is proposed now to establish a senior chief clerkship with a salary ranging from $2,200 to $2,800, who will be employed only in large cities like Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. The present system is to have a chief clerk for each department at these ports, but the business is so increasing that it has been found necessary to have a senior official over those clerks, who must be a man of experience in the service and be the very best officer that can be found in the port.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

39b. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, a person who has served over three years as a clerk in the outside service of the customs may be apointed a senior clerk in such service, subject to such examination on the duties of office and other qualifications as is prescribed by the deputy head in a report to be concurred in by the head of the department.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell us what the increases are here. He probably has a list of the salaries as they are now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It will be found in the schedule attached to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No; this is the new schedule, but I wish to find out how they compare, what the increases are, how the new salaries compare with the old.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I could not tell you that offhand. It proposes to pay the senior chief clerk $2,200 to $2,800.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand it, the schedule sets out the salaries that are to be paid in future, but I wished to know, for information, what the existing salaries are. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will inform himself between now and the third reading.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will on the third reading, be very glad to give the figure.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Is not that period too long—seven years and three years? I put the question to the hon. leader of the House in view of the fact that in the other case he only required one year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is getting facetious now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The salaries now paid differ materially at the different ports. While I know that we have no power to change this Bill, I desire to call attention to what the Minister of Customs must have overlooked when he arranged the salaries. I find among the technical officers Dominion appraisers, and appraisers at the different ports; they commence at $1,200 and the maximum is $2,200. Those who know anything of the working of the Customs Department know that the most important officers, more particularly at the larger ports, are the appraisers. They deal with almost every item that is imported into the country, and they ought to be men of superior ability and talent and practical knowledge; consequently, in making the selection to fill those offices, they should be made from men with large practical experience, and paid accordingly. I notice in this schedule they are not placed in the class where they ought to be, and I have no doubt when the minister's attention is called to it he will rectify it.

The CHAIRMAN—Are these figures right, from $300 to $4,000?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Examining officers, including preventive officers, are put down at from $200 to $1,000. I think there must be an error. It may be probably $500, or $600 to $1,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No; those men are located at small places.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And often they occupy other positions, such as post offices.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—For such officers the salaries laid down in this schedule are ample, when you consider the character of the men who fill those positions, for it requires no particular talent to be a packer, or messenger, or what is termed a preventive officer. That phrase preventive officer has been utilized very improperly in the past, to my mind, because when they desired to appoint an official outside, and in contravention of the Civil Service Act, they appointed a preventive officer. That is supposed to be one of the lowest positions, those officers being just placed along the shores to prevent smuggling, and the office requires no particular attention. The salaries offered in many cases are from $100 to $200, or $300. I think the schedule here is quite large enough.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But in that list you have lockers, and I understand that those men get $700 or $800; in Montreal, at all events, they do.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Of course they have no lockers at those small places.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All the lockers have to do is to take charge of a warehouse and see that it is locked up, and that nobody steals the goods. Surely $1,000 is enough for that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes, but those lockers in Montreal are no longer appointed under $700.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But this does not extend to lockers; it says 'including preventive officers whose duties are not chiefly clerical and lockers.'

The Bill was reported without amendment.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL—POSTMASTERS.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (124) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The intention of this is to make provision for increase of assistant postmasters at Toronto and Montreal. They are now given salaries running from $2,800 to $3,500. It is to be pointed out that these are two of the largest offices in Canada, requiring a class of official that should receive a salary represented by the amounts mentioned in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Is there any maximum?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, $3,500.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL —PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

IN COMMITTEE.

The order of the day being called House went again in Committee of the Whole on Bill (60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is our old friend on which we had considerable discussion. I should like to finish the discussion, if we can possibly do so, by pointing out to the House that this being a money Bill, we should not again go into committee on the subject, but should follow the practice which has always been observed in this House of simply giving a money Bill a third reading. Of course I know some of my hon. friends on the other side of the House will differ from me on this point; but assuming it to be a money Bill, I would like to raise a point of order and have the ruling of the Speaker upon the point, and we probably could reach the conclusion of it very much more satisfactorily in that way than by further discussing the subject, which was discussed at very great length as to increasing the term from one year to three years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Could my hon. friend tell me what is the difference between this Bill and the one he has just passed increasing the salary of custom house officials?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a money Bill also. I simply suggest that we pass it over the committee stage and have the ruling of the Speaker on the point. Of course the House may appeal from the ruling of the Speaker and then we go back to the committee. I think it better just to leave it at that point in view of the fact that it has been treated as a money Bill in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not, as a rule, in favour of compromising. In this particular case it would be a good plan to compromise and say two years, and if that is acceptable to the hon. gentleman, probably the members on this side would agree to it.

The SPEAKER—All in favour of the motion for third reading.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This is a very extraordinary way of dealing with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend pardon me. I had intended to refer to several cases which are cited in the Journals of the House in which the same procedure was adopted. I will put the cases on record so that we may afterwards have them for reference. In the Journal of III Edward VII, Bill (256) pages 462, and 465; with reference to Bill (258), volume 38, page 462, with reference to Bill (269) volume 38, page 508.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Will the hon. gentleman give us one ruling?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Bill (270) volume 38, page 511. Bill (271) volume 38, page 5512; Senate Journals of 1903:

> Bill (256) An act to provide for advances to the government of the Northwest Territories, was read a second time. On motion of Hon. Mr. Scott, seconded by Hon. Mr. Templeman, it was ordered that the said Bill be committed to the Whole House to-morrow.
> When it was reached on the Order Paper on the following day, it was moved : On motion of Hon. Mr. Scott, seconded by Hon. Mr. Templeman, it was ordered that the said order be discharged and that the said Bill be now read a third time. The said Bill was then read a third time accordingly.'

I simply point this out to show that where a Bill is a money Bill it is futile to go into committee, and although it may appear on the order paper for reference to the Committee of the Whole House, the practice has been to discharge the order for the day on it being pointed out that it is a money Bill and to give it a third reading. All the cases I have cited are on the same line. Of course, I quite admit that the measure must be a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The reason which actuates the hon. gentleman in making this motion is that it is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it is a money Bill; there is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman makes this motion in order that we may test the question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I raise the point and challenge the claim of the hon. gentleman that this is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Was it introduced on resolution in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This Bill simply pretends to amend the Civil Service Act of 1908, which contains a qualification of the employees and officers of the various departments of the House of Commons and the Senate. The Civil Service Act, although dealing with the status of employees and officers and their salaries, does not vote money to these parties. I have taken for granted that this Bill was not passed on resolution in the other House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was, and had I had that information the other day I should have given it to my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Why does not the hon. leader of the House accept the suggestion of the hon. member from Portage la Prairie?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am prepared to let the Bill stand until to-morrow, and consider his proposition.

The SPEAKER—I hold that this Bill is a money Bill, and I base it on these facts. It was introduced in the House of Commons on resolution on the 10th day of January, 1912. Mr. Borden moved, 'That the House do go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow, to consider the following proposed resolution: That it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing that the private secretaries of the minister, may be appointed clerks in division B of the first division, or sub-division A or B of the second division, and be paid the salary of the maximum in the subdivision.' Whereupon Mr. Borden informed the House that His Royal Highness the Governor General having been informed of the subject matter of the said resolution recommends it to the House.'

The following day, on the 11th January, the following resolution was adopted, that is the resolution I have just read. Then the said resolution was reported, read a second time, and agreed to. Mr. Borden then presented Bill (60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act, which was read a first time, and ordered for second reading at the next sitting of the House. I have in my hand the discussion which took place on this Bill, and I see that everybody assumed that there was no resolution presented in the House of Commons. The Hon. Mr. Kerr said:

> Ordinarily the rules applied with reference to the resolution upon which a money Bill has to be founded. Apparently the government did not recognize this Bill to be any such thing, and did not present any such resolution.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was my fault. I have no doubt the question was asked me, but I was unaware of the resolution.

The SPEAKER—Further on, the Chairman said:

> You want me to decide whether it is a money Bill or not? I decide it is not a money Bill, and I base my decision on the fact that this Bill was not introduced in the House of Commons by way of resolution, the consent of His Excellency the Governor General having been previously obtained.

So we see by the discussion that the information should have been given to this House and then the hon. members would not have taken that stand. A money Bill introduced by resolution of the House on the report of the committee is a money Bill. Accordingly I declare it to be a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That should not affect the offer that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie has made. That if it is made two years instead of one he will accept the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie had made the suggestion when the matter came up I should have been very glad to accept it; but I fancy, notwithstanding the merit of the suggestion, the Senate would be reluctant to place itself in conflict with the Commons in seeking to amend a money Bill no matter how desirable such an amendment would be, and it seems to me it would not be in our interest to consider such an amendment.

The SPEAKER—The motion is that this order of the day be discharged and that the Bill be ordered for third reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. KERR—We are getting into an inconvenient practice in this case. The Bill simply provides that certain persons who are not now in the civil service can be placed on the civil service list on a certain status. The fact that this Bill may give them the right to be paid out of the treasury does not make this a money Bill. I hope the Speaker will understand I am speaking with all deference. I simply desire to say that I do not think it follows, that it must necessarily be a money Bill because the Bill was founded upon a resolution that has been introduced.

In other words that a Bill founded on a resolution must necessarily be a money Bill. Hon. gentlemen will see what will happen. For the purpose of preventing a change or to prevent the Senate dealing with it at all, it might be founded on a resolution, and that would in effect cut out the jurisdiction of the Senate to deal with it according to that rule. It seems to me, therefore, that this might be open very well for further consideration, because we must look at the Bill to see whether it is actually a money Bill. If this Bill had provided that certain persons should be paid a certain sum of money, that would be one thing, but it is quite another matter to say that persons who are in the public service and in receipt of salaries now, are to be entitled to be placed upon the civil service list of a certain status is necessarily a money Bill. It strikes me that it is open to a good deal more consideration than we have been giving it as yet, and I would like, before we pass the Bill, to have an opportunity of discussing it again.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me, out of courtesy to the other House, when a Bill comes down preceded by a resolution of the House, we are bound, out of courtesy to the Commons, to accept it as a money Bill. To assume otherwise would be to presuppose that the presiding officer of the House of Commons would be a party to an attempt to deceive this House, with a view to lead us to believe a Bill is a money Bill which really was not. We can scarcely assume the House of Commons, in the first place, and the Speaker, in the second place, would resort to that form of evasion for the purpose of securing any advantage to which they would not be entitled by hampering the Senate in passing upon such a measure. With reference to the period of time mentioned in the Bill, I would regard that as one of the terms of the hiring, so to speak, and it seems to me it is germane to the payment of the money itself. It is one of those terms, and if we can alter a term, of payment, which is of the essence of the contract, it seems to me we can amend any money Bill so long as we keep our hands off the actual amount mentioned. However, I defer to the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The matter of the Bill itself is not of sufficient importance, for myself at all events, to decide to challenge the decision of his honour the Speaker, and I let the matter rest there, although I would not like that it should be cited as a precedent some day when we would feel like going more deeply into the same question. I take it that his honour has given mature consideration to the matter. The question as to all Bills which are preceded by resolution being declared to be money Bills that we could not amend is a proposition which would require to be more fully examined.

The motion was agreed to.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD OF CANADA BILL.

The House resolved itself into committee of the Whole on Bill (118) An Act to create the Biological Board of Canada.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In connection with this Bill I might say that it is proposed that two officers of the Marine Department shall act upon this board gratuitously, together with representatives from the various universities of Canada who take up the question of biology. The intention is that the board should be a kind of honorary one, and the only charge against the revenue of Canada will be their actual expenses.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—What sort of check is kept upon them? The number may increase to eight or nine at least.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am going to ask for an amendment to clause 4 when we come to it. There are certain universities mentioned in clause 4 but it has been ascertained since the third reading of the Bill in the House of Commons that other universities in Canada have taken up the study of biology, and they regard it as unfair that certain universities should be named in the Bill and others not mentioned. Class 4 reads as follows:—

4. The board shall consist of two members appointed by the minister, one appointed by each of the Universities of Dalhousie, Laval, McGill, New Brunswick, Queen's and Toronto, and one appointed by each of such other universities (to be named by the minister) as may engage in the work of biological research.

I move that this clause be stricken out, and the following substituted:

The board shall consist of two members appointed by the minister and one additional member appointed by such universities (to be named by the minister) as may be engaged in the work of biological research.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 5,

5. The board shall have charge of all biological stations in Canada, and shall have the conduct and control of investigations of practical and economic problems connected with marine and fresh water fisheries, flora and fauna, and such other work as may be assigned to it by the minister.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—What is the meaning of the phrase, 'marine and fresh water fisheries?'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Marine Department, I suppose, are partial to the term and seem to have passed it. However, I shall make inquiry before the third reading.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—Marine has nothing to do with the fisheries.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To what extent they would make inquiry into salt water fisheries I do not know. They would, I suppose, into the waters that are territorially our own, but I should say they would not have authority to go beyond the three mile limit.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—That is understood, but the expression I object to is 'Economic problems connected with marine and fresh water fisheries, flora and fauna.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. The board shall meet annually at the city of Ottawa, and at such meetings shall elect one member to be chairman and another to be secretary-treasurer, who shall hold office until the next annual meeting.
2. Other meetings of the board shall be held at such places and at such times as are necessary for the work of the board.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—There is no proviso in the Bill for the appointment of a secretary-treasurer. Who makes the appointment?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The board will regulate its own proceedings, I presume.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Under clause 7?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They may make their own by-laws.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. DAVID, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (E 3) An Act for the relief of William Alexander Hunt Jenkins.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (F 3) An Act for the relief of Edith Harriet Duffy.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

Bill (G 3) An Act for the relief of John Angus Kennedy.—Hon. Mr. De Veber.

BRITISH AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish to correct an error. The hon. member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) moved that Bill (T 2) should be referred back to the committee for further consideration, to insert a clause, and the order was passed to make it comply with the Ontario Trust and Loan Companies Act, with reference to the power to issue debentures on debenture stock. The mistake was made by the gentleman who spoke to the hon. member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) looking at Bill (T 2) as originally printed. That particular clause referring to debenture stock was struck out of the Bill entirely, as passed by the committee and reported to the House, the reprint of Bill (T 2), and I move that the proceedings of this day on Bill (T 2) An Act to increase the British American Trust Company, be read.

The proceedings of the House being read,

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that this entry be rescinded and expunged from the 'Minutes.'

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 19, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (68) An Act respecting Queen's University of Kingston.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

Bill (69) An Act to incorporate Queen's Theological College.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

DAVIDSON DIVORCE CASE.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK, from the Committee on Divorce, presented their report on the application of David George Davidson for a Bill of Divorce, and moved that the report be adopted presently. He said: It is getting close to the end of the session and as there is nothing unusual about this case, there is no reason why it should not be put through at once. The petitioner's wife left him shortly after they were married, and he did not see her again for eighteen months. She afterwards came back from Winnipeg, and when he saw her again she had a child with her. The child did not belong to him. The House will agree that the evidence is plain.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

THE SEELEY DIVORCE CASE.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK, from the Committee on Divorce, presented their report on the application of Keitha Seeley for a Bill of Divorce, and moved that the report be adopted.

The motion was carried on a division.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (B 3) An Act respecting the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal Company.—Hon. Mr. Gibson.

Bill (C 3) An Act respecting the Mexico and Northwestern Traction Company, Limited, and to change its name to the Mexico and North Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (D 3) An Act respecting the Alabama Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (H 3) An Act for the relief of Keitha Seeley.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (I 3) An Act for the relief of David George Davidson.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (140) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (38) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

Bill (98) An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Watson.

RATES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved:

That in the opinion of this House the rates on the Intercolonial railway should, like those of other railways, be subject to the control of the Railway Board.

He said: I have already spoken on this motion. Since it has been on the order paper, I think most of the members of this House have received a letter, and also a resolution, from the Board of Trade of the city of Montreal. I have received this morning another letter from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It is as follows:

Montreal, March 15, 1912.

Hon. J. P. B. Casgrain,
The Senate,
Ottawa.

Honourable and Dear Sir,—I beg to enclose herewith copy of letter which I have forwarded to the hon. Minister of Railways containing a resolution favouring the placing of the Intercolonial railway under the Railway Commission. This resolution is practically the same as that of the Montreal Board of Trade.

We have heard of the keen interest which you are taking in this matter and trust that your efforts will be successful.

Yours faithfully,
H. T. MELDRUM.
Montreal Secretary.

The letter addressed to the Minister of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, reads as follows:

Montreal, March 15, 1912.

To the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Hon. and Dear Sir,—I beg to advise you that at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Montreal branch of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the representations which had been made to your department to have the Intercolonial railway placed under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, were considered, and the following resolution was unanimously passed.

Resolved, that the best interests of all shippers would be more properly served if the Intercolonial railway were placed under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, which would result in rates being maintained on an equitable basis all over that railway;

That the Intercolonial railway has a great number of private special rates to which the public have no access, and that were the Intercolonial railway governed by the Railway Act, these rates would have to be filed with the Railway Commission, and posted at each Intercolonial railway office for the information of the public, and thus shippers would know exactly what rates are being charged;

That the Intercolonial railway is in competition with the Canadian Pacific railway to points such as St. John, N.B., and its seems to be an anomaly that the Canadian Pacific railway should be governed by the Board of Railway Commissioners and the Intercolonial railway be free from such control;

That in the opinion of this committee, were the Intercolonial railway governed by the Railway Act, the Minister and the railway officials would be relieved from the political pressure for preferential treatment as to rates, &c., to which they are now liable.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) H. T. MELDRUM,
Montreal Secretary.

I do not think it is necessary to take up the time of the Senate discussing this question. I find it is the unanimous desire of the shippers of this country that the rates on the Intercolonial railway should be placed under the control of the Railway Board.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—What is Mr. Cochrane's answer?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The Minister of Railways has not, so far as I know, given any answer. The matter has been shelved. It is a long-standing grievance, and it is time to have an opinion expressed by this Chamber, which might do something to relieve it.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—On the last occasion when I had the pleasure of hearing my hon. friend from Montreal, I do not think that he set out sound reasons for the proposed change. The reasons which he did give were not acceptable to myself, or, I think, to the members of the Senate. What is aimed at? What is complained of? The complaint seems to be that there are certain special rates given to certain industries and certain occupations which are not given, as through rates, apparently, acceptable to the Board of Trade of Montreal; in other words to bring it down to plain English, that the whole trade of the country should be governed from Montreal, and that there should be no other interest considered but that which will bring money to the pockets of Montreal merchants and Montreal managers.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That's right.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—In this connection it is necessary to review what the Intercolonial railway is. I remember very distinctly that prior to confederation, there was an arrangement between Canada and the maritime provinces for the building of the Intercolonial railway. The arrangement almost reached maturity, and was to this effect: That the province of Nova Scotia should pay two and a half twelfths; that the province of New Brunswick should pay two and a half twelfths, and that the Canadas, Upper and Lower Canada, should pay seven twelfths of the construction of the Intercolonial as then projected as a mercantile project. For some reason or other, although the lower provinces were disposed to adhere to the arrangement, the Canadas receded from it. I heard the question debated in the House of Assembly in the old province of Nova Scotia, and there were some severe strictures made both upon the honesty and the good faith of the parliamentarians of Canada for receding from the bargain made and arranged between the various provinces. Why was the Intercolonial railway made a stipulation in the articles of confederation? It was from the opinion held throughout the country generally that the Intercolonial railway would be a bond between the various provinces, and also that it would help material interests in various sparsely populated parts of the country, and thus the Intercolonial railway was made expressly as an implement for aiding those private industries, which could not afford to pay full or through rates, in order that they might be started and have the assistance of the whole country through the Intercolonial railway in carrying on their business.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—At the expense of the country.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I believe that there are industries which have been established and maintained in the lower part of Quebec and the northern part of New Brunswick only through supplementary rates and by allowances made by the Department of Railways to those industries; and therefore carrying out the proposal of my hon. friend, might strike a serious blow at such industries which depend upon favoured treatment by the Railway Department to enable them to carry on their business, and without which their business might be overthrown and might fail utterly.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The hon. gentleman states that the business of these people would be ruined if they had to pay rates on the Intercolonial railway the same as they would have to pay on other roads.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I have been told so.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Their business would be ruined if they paid the same rates as other people have to pay ?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I have been told that the rates on the Intercolonial railway were fixed so as to be an assistance to these really struggling industries, which are located in sparsely populated parts of the country, where the ordinary passenger and freight rates would not pay, and where the industries could not afford to pay the average rates. I do not think it is right to throw the whole business of the country into the hands of great cities like Montreal and Toronto. In my opinion that would be a retrograde movement. It is likely that the controlling department of the railway at Moncton has well considered this proposition, and has considered the requirements of these industries, and has fixed discriminating rates so as to assist them. Until I can hear some good and substantial reason from my hon. friend from Montreal, whom I am desirous of helping with every measure of his, (but not this one), I shall be inclined to relegate this question to the Department of Railways, which at present makes these rates in order to help these struggling industries.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) said the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) has not made out any case why the rates on the Intercolonial railway should be put in the hands of the Railway Commission. The hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) has not made out any case to the contrary. That railway should be put under the Railway Commission because their rates are not uniform and discrimination is practised. The rates are not fair to the different parts of his own province and to the province of Nova Scotia. The fact that the Intercolonial railway was built to bind confederation together should be no reason for allowing them to make rates that are unjust and that discriminate.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—For the reason given by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, I wish to say a few words on this question. The hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) said the manufacturing industries in his province would be ruined if the tariff of rates on this railway were put under the control of the Railway Commission. That, I think, was the best proof that discrimination in rates is practised on this railway. I am told that some parties get rates that are only a third of what other people have to pay. I know that in Quebec we have been asking for a uniform tariff on the Intercolonial railway for some time, and I have been given examples of the discrimination prevailing in the rates between the different cities in the provinces on goods carried both east and west. Why should the people in the maritime provinces be favoured in the matter of rates on this railway? In my opinion, the tariff of rates on this road should be put in the hands of the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When this matter came before the Senate some time ago, I suggested to the hon. member from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) that he should ascertain from the reports of the Intercolonial railway whether his premises were exact or not, whether there was discrimination in rates. Since I spoke in this House on that question, I have received from the Board of Trade of Montreal a statement which gives in detail cases where, to their knowledge, discrimination in rates is practised. As far as I am concerned, I am satisfied with that report, which shows that there is ground for complaint against that railway. One of the objects of creating the Railway Commission was to prevent that state of things, and I think it is neither fair to the public, nor to the railways, nor to the different localities, to allow a government railway to follow rules which cannot be followed by other railway companies that are in competition with that railway company. One locality should not be treated differently from another. For these reasons I propose to support the motion.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—While I live in the maritime provinces, I do not reside on the line of the Intercolonial railway, so that any views I may have with respect to the road would not be of a personal character. I do not think the presentation of this matter before the Senate to-day has shown that a grievance exists. Even this memorial from the Board of Trade of Montreal does not point out any one thing definitely. It simply says that they are 'informed.' No grievance has been laid before the House which you can place your finger on in respect to discrimination on the Intercolonial railway as it runs through the maritime provinces, as compared with the freight rates on the other railway systems that go through the same provinces. The hon. gentleman from Gananoque, who has shipped a great quantity of goods over many roads to different portions of the maritime provinces, said the ohter day, in the discussion, that there was no grievance as far as he knew, and that there were no discriminating rates as between terminal points. But this House must remember that the Intercolonial follows the coast line, and that they compete with vessel trade. It would be a question whether the Intercolonial railway should not carry lower on that coast line than, perhaps, the Canadian Pacific railway would carry it in the centre of the province, because of the competition of vessels at almost every station.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The Railway Commission has dealt with that question in other provinces.

Hon Mr. THOMPSON—I understand that. There is no disposition on the part of the Railway Commission, nor do I learn that the public have demanded that this matter should be dealt with by bringing the Intercolonial railway under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. The only evidence we have before this House, and upon which we are asked to determine by a vote that the Intercolonial should be placed under the Railway Commission, is this memorial from the Board of Trade of Montreal, which represents a disgruntled shipper; but they do not themselves take the responsibility of saying that these grievances exist. They say: 'We are informed.' Before this House acts definitely in respect to a matter which can be dealt with by the other branch of parliament very much better than by the Senate, and whose advice naturally would be taken with respect to these matters in preference to the advice of the Senate, so far as the Railway Department is concerned, because the Minister of Railways is a member of that branch of parliament, we should have definite information. We should be able to say that such and such is the case. There is not in this case anything more than a pinhead grievance. The matter has not been placed before this House in such a manner that a member can exercise real sound judgment in voting on this motion.

Hon. Mr. BELL—There has always been a tendency, in dealing with matters in relation to the Intercolonial railway in parliament, to regard it as a property that was built entirely for the benefit of the maritime provinces. I know that is the case in the other Chamber, and I think it is the case here to a considerable extent, and in the west also. That is a great mistake. The Intercolonial railway has undoubtedly been of great importance to the people of the maritime provinces, but it has been of even greater importance to the people of Quebec and Ontario and, though not to such an extent, to the western provinces, but certainly it has been to the great merchants of Quebec and Ontario. One of the results that was feared in the east at the time of confederation was that the business of merchants in the maritime provinces would be interfered with as a result of confederation. That was realized, and I think almost all, or a great many business men in Ontario and Montreal, will admit that the one best market they have is the maritime provinces. That has always been the case and is the case to-day. The result of confederation was to transfer the wholesale business that had formerly existed in the maritime provinces, to Montreal, Toronto and other western ports, so that to argue that all the advantages derived from the Intercolonial railway are derived by the people of the maritime provinces is absolutely incorrect. The most that can be said is that it is a mutual advantage, and if any loss were incurred in the management of the Intercolonial railway, it should be made good by the people of the country. It is not for the maritime provinces alone, but quite as much for the benefit of the people of the larger provinces, Ontario and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Very much more.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The fact of the matter is that they derive greater advantages. It is now proposed to take a vote on this question and to commit this Senate to a proposition of this kind when it is manifest that we are absolutely without knowledge of the subject. What do we senators know about the details of this matter? What do we know about the innumerable small arguments that have induced the management of the Intercolonial railway to make their rates what they are to-day? We know nothing at all, and when you propose to place the Intercolonial railway in exactly the same position as all the other business railroads of Canada, you are undertaking to do something which should not be done, because the Intercolonial railway stands in a class altogether by itself. In the first place, the Intercolonial railway was a political road, built in order to bring together the scattered provinces which went into confederation. In the next place it is a political road because it had to be constructed over a route which would be made as secure as possible from attack by the enemy, and therefore it had to pursue a route which would not be adopted by a line constructed for purely commercial purposes. It was built through a part of the country and placed in such a position that it would be a difficult matter to make it pay. That is not the fault of the maritime provinces, or the fault of the people of Canada. The consideration that had to be kept in view was to place that road where it would serve the purpose of uniting the provinces together, and where it could be kept as secure as possible from any chance of attack.

Now, what is the result? The result is that in the Intercolonial railway we have a line with two productive ends and a non-productive middle. So far as the maritime provinces are concerned, they supply a business to the Intercolonial railway which makes it a very profitable road; but there is a long haul across the province of Quebec through an undeveloped country, which is a tax, and always will be a tax upon the resources of the road, preventing it from becoming a money making line. We have had two increases in the rates upon the Intercolonial within the last ten years, and the people of the maritime provinces are now, I think, paying enough for the freight that is being carried for them on that line of railway. They are not favoured; they do not consider themselves favoured; and they do not see any reason why they should be compelled to pay excessive rates in order to make up a loss that is due to another part of the system. The centre of the system was not placed where it is at their suggestion; the location of the line where it exists to-day was regarded at that time as a political necessity. Another important fact was pointed out by the hon member who spoke last; at almost every point in the whole length of the Intercolonial railway it is in competition with water carriage. Well, it may be said, if that is the case the Railway Commission would take those things into consideration. I presume they would; necessarily they would have to take them into account; and the chances are that if they did they would find it quite impossible to apply the ordinary tariff, and the ordinary regulations to the operation of that road. There are points where water carriage makes such strong competition that you must adopt lower rates or go without business. Then again, there are considerations which probably induce the management to make different rates between the east and the west on that line. For a very long time in the history of the Intercolonial railway it was simply a means of carrying manufactures, flour and supplies of various kinds to the maritime provinces. Year after year the cars of that road had to come back west empty because there were no freights for them; and what would be more natural, or more necessary, than that the railway management should endeavour, by lowering their rates westward, to secure in some way freight for their cars? They have done that, they have been compelled to do that. They have made all sorts of efforts to make that road profitable by securing freights for the cars coming west. They have gone to the expense of filling box cars with coal and cleaning those cars out at the end of their journey in order to get some freight west; and in that way, and in that way alone, they could hope to get some business. We cannot pronounce judgment satisfactorily or safely at a moment's notice here upon those matters. We would require to be put in the same position as the board of management, of the Intercolonial railway, or of the traffic manager. Probably if we had time enough to spend with him we could see the reasons why the tariff rates on the Intercolonial railway are what they are to-day.

The principal grievance seems to be in the city of Montreal. No one else is here petitioning with reference to this matter. Montreal is a very important centre, yet I do not think we are warranted in taking hasty action upon representations coming from a place even as important as Montreal, unless it is supported by the rest of the community. What do these complaints amount to? They say they have to pay a higher freight rate sending goods one way than they pay sending them the other. If there is a higher rate from Montreal, the people in the maritime provinces have to pay it. If there were discrimination on the freight going east between Toronto and Montreal, there might be some ground for complaint, but if the people who are shipping from the west to the east get the same rate, then there is no hardship at all. The freight rates have to be paid by the people of the maritime provinces and not by the merchants who make out the bills of lading and ship the goods. I have not had anything presented to me showing that they are subject to unfair competition. And we are called upon to take a hasty vote on a subject upon which we have very little information. We have no schedule produced. All we have is a memorial from one institution in the city of Montreal, and they do not make an affirmation. They merely repeat a report that they claim to have heard. There is no material on which we can act. What are we asked to do? We are asked to interpose between the government of the country and the management of this railway. The government has had this railway in its hands since it was built, and we are asked to take it out of the hands of the government and place it in the hands of the Railway Commission. It is manifest that there is no advantage to be gained by such legislation as this. If this is not a government measure, then it must be a measure that undertakes to dictate to the government as to the manner in which the Intercolonial railway is to be controlled. It would be an idle thing for us to invite a rebuff by undertaking to take a snap vote on a resolution of this kind, instructing the government of Canada that it should give up the control of the Intercolonial railway and pass it over to the Railway Commission. What was done by the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier when the Railway Commission was formed? The Intercolonial railway was deliberately excluded from the operation of that commission. It has never yet been placed under its control, and if at any time it should be considered necessary to place the Intercolonial railway under the control of the Railway Commission, then it is for the government to do so. We are not being treated fairly in this matter, and I want to protest against any idea that the people of the maritime provinces have been exceptionally dealt with as far as the Intercolonial railway is concerned. They have paid ample rates. It was not constructed specially for them. It was constructed for the general advantage of Canada at that date, and we should relieve our minds entirely of any impression that the people of the maritime provinces are getting any advantage.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—If a vote is taken on this motion it will not be on a sectional question, or a question of rates, or anything of that kind, but it will be a question of principle, as to whether one railway is to be singled out for exceptional control. Those who are advocating that these rates should not be placed under the Railway Commission might just as well argue that the Canadian Pacific railway, running through British Columbia should also be removed from the control of the Railway Board. That railway was also built under an agreement—an agreement with British Columbia when it came into confederation. That argument, therefore, falls absolutely to the ground. I have no sectional feeling, and have nothing against the maritime provinces. I wish them well in every respect. I cannot understand why they object to a condition by which every grievance that they may have with the Intercolonial railway shall be referred to the Railway Commission just as is the case when they have a grievance with any other railway company. It is not a question of rates; the question is, shall that railway be exempt from the control of the Railway Commission. Because it is a government railway, and owned by the people of Canada, is no good reason why it should be exempt. I do not think any argument has been adduced by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the question. They have discussed it far afield. It is a question of principle as to whether this railway shall be placed under the Railway Board the same as other railways.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—This question affects us considerably in the maritime provinces. I do not like to have this discussion about the Intercolonial railway coming up all the time, and to have hon. gentlemen saying that it was built for the benefit of the maritime provinces. Some people say it would have been better if we had never been joined with Canada at all. I do not say that. The Intercolonial railway has been a political football from its inception. I am not blaming one government more than another. I have no reason to doubt that if this present government have a strict eye on that railway they will make it pay, but if you make a political football out of it, as it has been made, graft from one end to the other, then you cannot expect the road to pay. I say every credit is due to Mr. Pottinger. He has had to steer a course between the different governments and has done well, but he has been handicapped right along by political and other influences. The rates on the Intercolonial railway are not low. I might quote the case of cordwood, the rates on which are prohibitive on that road to-day. Cordwood is a great source of revenue to the farmers, and the reason cordwood cannot be shipped on the Intercolonial railway is because the rates are too high. I agree with the hon. member for Pictou; I think he is perfectly right. We do not use the Intercolonial railway at St. John; we use the Canadian Pacific railway, and will continue to do so. Ships are loading and unloading there, but the goods are not shipped on the Intercolonial railway. My friend referred to the commission and said that they should have but one object in view. I might join him in that, but I might not vote for his motion. I think arbitrary conditions on the Intercolonial railway should be wiped out, but if arbitrary conditions are imposed, then we should hold the government responsible. Take the commission we have to-day; I do not know how many private cars they have not got to take their families around, and that all goes to the debit side of the account, and you cannot get any satisfaction out of them, because you have placed in their hands an arbitrary power to do whatever they like without any appeal. I do not wish to make a statement that I cannot substantiate, but I think some statements might be made that would open the eyes of this honourable House and the country with regard to the management of that road. I am not talking of any particular party. If I were talking I should say it was within the last ten years, but I am not talking as a partisan, I am talking as a New Brunswicker, and I protest against the railway being thrown in our teeth all the time. It is a good asset. The government were offered three or four per cent on one hundred millions by a company who were willing to take over the road. I am not in favour that the power should be given to three men to make rates and do what they like. I agree that there should be an appeal, if possible, to the Railway Board, or that the people should have something between them and the government. But then I cannot hide my eyes from the question, Why cannot the government do it? They are able to do it; they are only just in power, and I presume they will do justice to New Brunswick; therefore, it is for them to take into consideration all the arguments made by my hon. friend and others as to the best position in which to place the Intercolonial railway. It is up to the government to do that. I cannot join with my hon. friends who find so much fault with the Intercolonial railway. It is a good railway; it has a beautiful roadbed; there is plenty of work; and what we want is not to milk that country at the start, or bleed it to death by graft, but to so run it as to develop all the industries in accordance with the conditions; then we will have a paying line. The Intercolonial is a magnificent road, and it is very well run, but the arbitrary board of two or three men placed there should be controlled and curbed in some way.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—We will see that they are curbed.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The rates are high enough, but we should not allow rates to be put there in order to save five hundred thousand dollars or a million dollars and have two or three hundred locomotives tied up at Moncton as assets that are not worth the snap of a finger. We will ask the government to look seriously into the whole management of the Intercolonial, and while doing justice to the whole of Canada, to do justice to the maritime provinces, and look into the rates that the farmers have to pay, into the conditions of the country, and see how they can make that road build up the country. They should make it pay by good management and not by starving us here and there in order to show an apparent surplus or improvement for the benefit of officials who want to make a reputation for themselves. The government cannot ignore representations such has been made in the Senate by the hon. member for Pictou and others, and I have no doubt that they will look into the administration and see how far the rates can be so adjusted over the country as to make a working proposition of the railway.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I was struck with the manner in which this resolution was received, especially by the members from the maritime provinces who spoke. My hon. friend from Fredericton (Hon. Mr. Thompson) was quite excited, and spoke with a good deal of warmth and feeling. His principle point was that the mover of the resolution had shown no reason why this railway should be placed under the Railway Commission. On the other hand, what reason did he give that it should not be so placed? It does seem an anomaly that a road twelve hundred miles long running through the maritime provinces, competing with the Canadian Pacific railway which is now under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, should not be placed in the hands of the commission the same as the others. What are my hon. friends afraid of? Are they afraid that the Railway Commission will not do justice to them, and to the Intercolonial railway? It is quite true, as the hon. member for Pictou pointed out, that a portion of the Intercolonial railway runs through a barren country; that it has to compete with water communication at very many points; that the rates on the Intercolonial railway must necessarily be low, which we all admit. These things, however, would be all taken into consideration by the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think the Intercolonial railway is a great benefit to the maritime provinces, and also to the other provinces of the Dominion. If the rates on flour to the maritime provinces are very low, they enable the millers of Ontario to send their produce down there in competition with the world, while the maritime provinces get the benefit of that by reason of the low freights, and consequently the low price of the products. For these reasons, I cannot see why my hon. friend should get so excited over this matter. It is a simple proposition to place this road in the same position as all other roads in the Dominion. I remember when the Railway Commission Bill was first introduced in the House of Commons, a few years ago, a very strong protest was made to the then government, by a number of members of the House of Commons, against the proposition to put the Intercolonial railway under the Railway Commission. I supported the government at that time in not placing it in the hands of the Railway Commission, and for myself, I am disposed to give the new government a little further trial. I believe that eventually this road must be placed in the hands of the Railway Commission the same as every other road, and I believe that the Railway Commission is composed of men of experience who are thoroughly impartial, who have better knowledge, owing to their dealings with all the other roads, of what is right and wrong than any other party that can be put in charge of it. Therefore I believe that sooner or later this road must be placed under the Railway Commission, and I am satisfied that the commission having control of this road, as they have of all the other roads in the Dominion, will deal fairly and justly and rightly with the people of the maritime provinces and the rest of the Dominion. At the same time, I think we should not be hasty. Let us wait another year or so and see how the new government develop their policy, and if we find that it would be better then to put it in the hands of the Railway Commission, we will take the question up. In the meantime, I think it is only fair that the government should have a chance to see how they can manage the railway.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—It is only an expression of opinion.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Of course, I know it is only an expression of opinion.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We are likely to be called upon to vote on this question, which I consider a momentous one, and before casting my vote I would ask my hon. friend from Montreal if, before bringing this matter into the Senate, he held any consultation with the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I read before the Senate, and I placed in the 'Debates,' all the correspondence that passed between the various boards of Trade and the Minister of Railways, not only under this government, but under the late government. Memorials were presented to the Hon. Mr. Graham, and other memorials have been forwarded to Hon. Frank Cochrane, the present Minister of Railways, stating reasons why the Intercolonial railway should be placed on the same footing as other roads. One of the main objects was to give the people of the maritime provinces, and of Quebec, through which that railway runs, a tribunal to which they can appeal. As the hon. member from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) said so well, there are very often arbitrary rules on the Intercolonial railway from which there is no appeal; but under the Railway Commission the people in the provinces would have an appeal to an impartial tribunal in order to secure their rights and redress.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Those points I knew, and so far as they go they are all right. So much has been said about the maritime provinces deriving almost the entire benefit from the building of the Intercolonial railway that I will ask my hon. friends if the boards of trade of St. John, Moncton, Amherst and Sydney have been consulted? I ask this, not to put any obstacle in the way, but in order to move slowly on a question that is possibly more momentous than some of us may imagine. I have my own reasons for saying that. I ask my hon. friend if those boards of trade have been consulted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am not in a position to answer that.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—While by no means condemning a move which, I believe, will eventually crystallize, my own impression is that at this present moment it would be premature to vote this resolution and urge it upon the government. Much has been said about the management of the Intercolonial railway; that the commission is a tribunal of last resort and no appeal from it; that the Railway Commission is a body from which adequate justice always emanates. I beg to differ a little from that view.

I know instances in my own district where anything but justice could be had at the hands of the Railway Commission. It is useless to mention those cases here, but I wish they had been left to the Intercolonial Railway Board, and I am sure the decision could not have been any more biased or worse. The chances are ninety out of a hundred that it would have been more satisfactory. It being known to us now that the interested parties in the maritime provinces have not been consulted, and coming back to the purposes for which the Intercolonial railway was built, I say that Ontario and Quebec derive a larger benefit from the building of the Intercolonial railway than other provinces, just as the western provinces derive a greater benefit from the building of the roads out west than we in the east. The roads built in the west are constructed for the whole Dominion, but primarily the western people get the benefit. Ontario and Quebec have received the greatest benefit from the building of the Intercolonial railway, because from confederation—and it is still continued—they have shipped to us exports and merchandise in the proportion of three to one in comparison with the merchandise that we ship back to them. I would ask my hon. friend not to press his motion to a vote just now, but rather to get in touch with the Department of Railways and Canals, consult the cities on the border, and then, when he has all his documents in hand, and possibly better information than he possesses at present, probably next session, he could bring the matter up, and if the municipalities and boards of trade are favourable to it, I for one, while not unfavourable just now, but hesitating to vote for want of time for consideration, will record a favourable vote.

The House divided on the motion, which was defeated on a standing vote, yeas, 22; nays, 25.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Why should we not have a recorded vote on this question?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman should have asked earlier.

The SPEAKER—I think it is too late to ask for a recorded vote after the decision is given.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This voting by rising is not usual or customary when a vote is taken in the Commons or in the Senate. When a vote is demanded the members should be called in and the names recorded. In committee the voting is by rising. I merely mention the regular practice of parliament. I know we have been in the habit of asking members to rise without recording the names. I have not taken objection to it in the past, but I think we had better return to the old practice and have our names recorded pro and con.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—All right, call in the members.

The SPEAKER—The practice is, when the yeas and nays are called for, to take a vote by asking the members to rise, and when a recorded vote is desired a request is made to call in the members.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (118) An Act to create the Biological Board of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (60) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The order of the day being called:

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—With reference to the amendments which the right hon. gentleman proposes, I am not prepared just at present to discuss them. I am endeavouring to have them harmonize with the scope of the Bill. With reference to some of the proposed amendments, they would not be in harmony with the scope of the Bill, because my right hon. friend seems to pre-suppose that the right is given to the tariff commission to deal with the tariff. The distinction must be drawn between that and the fact that they are simply a board or commission, to make inquiry. They have no authority to deal with questions of tariff.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We can discuss those a little better, probably, later on, I think the hon. gentleman is a little in error in saying that any of the amendments deal with the question of increasing the tariff or imposing a duty.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The proposed amendments would seem to pre-suppose that it is the duty of the tariff commission to recommend an increase of duty, or a decrease of duty, as the case may be.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The tariff commission has to make a report.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To make a report as to certain facts. They have nothing to do with pronouncing on the question of duty.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It must, of necessity, when it is sent to report on the demands of certain manufacturers for increased duties, approve of them or not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They would have no authority to consider the demands of any manufacturer, and the demands of other manufacturers would not necessarily come before the commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not exactly follow my hon. friend. The tariff commission would take pretty much the attitude that the tariff commissions issued by the late government took. That is to say, it would have all these parties who choose to appear before them state their grievances, or what they want to have done for them. Invariably they discussed the amount of extra duty they would like to have put on. The man who wanted to reduce duties did not trouble us.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This distinction must be kept in view; the late government was practically its own commission, as far as making inquiry was concerned. Certain ministers of the cabinet made inquiry into certain conditions recognizing that they had the widest scope possible to make inquiry and to deal with the subject before them, and that they assumed responsibility for whatever would be done. A distinction must be drawn between the commission and the government. The government must set the commission in motion for the purpose of obtaining certain facts. It is then for the government, upon the report that may be made as to the existence of certain facts or conditions, to exercise the responsibility which attaches to the government of determining whether there shall be an increase or a decrease of duty. It is with a view of endeavouring to harmonize the suggestions made by my hon. friend that I am having that phase considered. I am not ready at the present moment, in committee, to make any suggestion as to the proposed amendment.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT --What do you want me to do about it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To-morrow I will be in a position to state the extent to which the government might accept some of the suggestions made by my right hon. friend.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The Bill will stand.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Bill (J 3) An Act for the relief of Henry Greek Wills.—Hon. Mr. Young.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading (Bill 77), 'An Act to encourage and assist the improvement of highways.'

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This Bill deals with the general principle of building good roads throughout this country, and I do not suppose that any member of the Senate opposes it upon that ground; but I think there is a great deal to be said against the proposal as it is made in this Bill. The hon. leader of the House said the other day that this question of transportation was one that is affecting the country very largely, and one that is very important to the country. I quite admit that from one end of the Dominion to the other the people are interested in this question of transportation, but more largely as it relates to railways than in building highways. So far in the discussion in this House I have not heard anybody attempt to give a definition of 'highway.' It is a very broad term as I understand it. It may apply to a public foot path, a carriage road, or a highroad. What I think is intended by the title of this Bill is that its object is to improve the main roads throughout this country. The government has taken power, under this Bill, to provide for carrying out this work. In the first instance, they provide that the money may be turned over to the provincial government and an agreement may be made between the Dominion and provincial governments for the purpose of arranging as to the expenditure of this money. It seems that the Dominion government is not satisfied with the work being done by the provincial governments, for they go further, and in clause 6 take upon themselves the power to deal with this question offhand and to build these roads themselves. We all know that the provinces have been, and are at the present time, doing a great deal towards the building and improvement of roads throughout this whole Dominion.

And it seems to me that this Bill is a strong reflection cast by this government on the provinces, although they do not say it in so many words. Practically they say that they do not think that these provinces are going far enough, or doing sufficient towards the improvement of the roads, and therefore they come forward with this Bill and propose that they should take this power out of the hands of the local authorities. The province from which I come has for years been doing good work and spending a large amount of money in opening up roads, but I think it is quite possible that if the government should try to put this Bill in operation they would come into considerable conflict with the province in arranging the work. The province of British Columbia has laid down certain lines on which they carry out the development of their roads, and the government here might not see eye to eye with the government of British Columbia in the matter of building these highways across the Dominion. What the farmer wants to-day in British Columbia—and I think this is the case in the other provinces—is that the road from his farm to the nearest railway station shall be put in good order and kept in that condition.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—And if they have good roads from the farms to the railway stations, they want good railway service to carry the produce to the market. In western Canada we are nearly always placed in the position of being a long distance from our market, and it is an important question that all fruit and all farm produce, especially fruit, which is a large part of the produce of the province from which I come, should be transported as expeditiously as possible from the farmer to the point of consumption, and therefore in this matter I think the question of building better roads from the farms to the railway stations is an important one. That, of course, is entirely a provincial matter, and I do not think this government has any right to deal with it. When the British North America Act was passed, as was said the other day by the right hon. leader of the opposition, one of the great objects of the fathers of confederation was to keep the work of the provinces and the work of the Dominion as distinct as possible. One section of the British North America Act states that local work shall be kept distinctly under the control of the province, and it seems to me that the government should not have attempted to deal with this question of building roads in the provinces. I think at the present day it is a very serious matter for the government of Canada to be attacking the constitution of this country in the way proposed by this Bill. This constitution has now been in force for a number of years and has been held up before the civilized world as a model constitution, which should be followed by other countries throughout the world, and I think it has largely been followed in the formation of other commonwealths and dominions throughout the empire.

Now if Canada is to show to the world that when it suits our convenience on the least provocation we are going to annul and destroy a constitution that was so well framed, and that has been held up to the people of the civilized world as a model constitution, it is a very serious step indeed for this country to take. The government are dealing with a matter that is entirely within the domain of the provinces; and doing it at a time when, as we are told, the members of the government have more work on their hands than they are able to attend to, so that it would be necessary to increase the number of members of the government for the purpose of overtaking the work of the different departments. If such is the case in regard to the work that each minister has to deal with, and the work of the government generally, I think it is rather a curious thing that they should bring down a measure of this kind, and try to increase the work of any one department, and deal with it in such a way that the time of the department, as well as the time of parliament, will be taken up with matters that should be dealt with in the legislatures of the provinces.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Hon. gentlemen are aware that one of the strongest arguments used in England to-day in advocating a measure of home rule for Ireland is that it will help to decentralize the business of the imperial parliament, which has gone on increasing so tremendously, that it is claimed, the business of the country cannot be attended to as it should: and one advantage of a proposed measure when extended to Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and England, would be to confine the local work of Ireland, Scotland, Wales and England to be dealt with by a government or legislature that would relieve the imperial parliament from being tied up with all those smaller details of work which are really only local in character. Those arguments seems to me very strong as showing why the Dominion government should not deal with this question in the way proposed. Of course, it is quite easy to understand that the Dominion government, having come into power on the 21st of September last with the country in a very prosperous condition, found a larger surplus to deal with than had been the case in this country before, for when the Conservative party went out of power in 1896 they had had a series of deficits, and had experienced great difficulty in finding money to run the country. It is natural to suppose that when they returned to power they should say: 'What is the best thing we can do with this money that has come into our hands?' Being a government is a good government.' Of course no course they would not take the view that would have been taken by a government in favour of a low tariff, and try to remit duties and thus lighten the taxation of the people; but they say, 'We are getting this large sum of money into our hands; we have been placed in a position where we have large sums of money to deal with, and the best thing that we can do is to turn around and distribute this money, or hand it over to the various provinces as best we can in order to give them an opportunity of saying that this Dominion government is a good government.' Of course no government, and no individual, can become popular in any part of the world quicker than by distributing money; and that appears to me to be one reason, at any rate, why the government have brought down this measure. The hon. leader of the government stated in his speech that this question of good roads had been made one of the principal planks of the Conservative platform. That may have been the case in the east, but as far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, I do not think the question was ever mentioned. It certainly was not in the upper part of that province, where I had an opportunity of hearing a considerable number of speeches made on both sides during the late campaign. Therefore, I do not see that there was anything on that ground, to be said in the way of urgent necessity for the government bringing down this Bill. It was pointed out by the right hon. leader of the opposition yesterday that British Columbia pays a larger proportion of taxation according to her population than any other part of this Dominion; and I certainly think that if the government do not know what to do with the surplus to which they have fallen heir, they might devise some means whereby they could remit that taxation that is now falling heavily on the Pacific province, and meet the Hon. Richard McBride to some extent in his cry for better terms for British Columbia.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—For a number of years we have heard this cry of better terms for British Columbia, and I understand now that the government have under consideration the question of a commission to deal with this matter of better terms. They could not do better than apply their power and consideration to the problem of how they can meet this matter of taxation in British Columbia and not let the proportion of taxation there be so heavy on the people as it now is. In regard to the co-operation between the provinces and the Dominion, we have had some experience in British Columbia over this question in the matter of fishery rights. To a certain extent there is a joint jurisdiction over the question of fishery regulations and, so far as my experience goes, I do not think that co-operation of the Dominion government and the provincial government in this matter has been nearly so unanimous as the leader of the government may possibly have led hon. gentlemen to think the other day when he talked about the Dominion and the provincial governments coming together and co-operating so much better than they did soon after confederation was formed. I do not think this is a right way to set about dealing with this question of the roads. If the government want to help the building of roads throughout the provinces, they should have found some means of handing this money over to the provinces and allowing them to deal with the matter themselves. Dual control, and the dual arrangements that have to be made, the drawing up of agreements between the Dominion and provincial governments, would not, in my opinion, work out at all satisfactorily, and I think the whole matter should have been dealt with along constitutional lines and not in the way proposed in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I think there is very little danger of the Dominion government forcing on any province money to build roads. It is to be entirely a mutual matter, and the first motion must come entirely from the province. Is it likely that this government would go into any province and commence building a road without the full consent of the corporation or corporations? Not the least likely. It is entirely a matter of what I might almost call benevolence on the part of the Dominion to help any province which desired the opening up of the roads. Many parts of the country, no doubt, require opening up, but there are some other parts that I hope will not be touched; that is to say, inaccesible parts of the Rocky mountains and of the Selkirk pass. Roads there would be perfectly useless for the greater part of the year. They would cost a great deal to construct, and might cost as much every year to keep it open. Whatever may be done in opening up agricultural lands, I hope the government will not think of doing anything of that kind. The right hon. gentleman yesterday, in speaking of this matter, referred to the danger of the Dominion and the provinces mixing their finances.

I have never known—and I do not suppose that anybody in this Chamber has ever known, of the provinces refusing aid from the Dominion, and as far as mixing the accounts is concerned, that is an impossiblity. If money received by the Dominion is placed to the account of the province, that is an end of it. I hope —and I desire to emphasize the statement —that the government will not think of building a road through the Rockies in British Columbia on account of the cost and the supreme uselessness of it during the greater part of the year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should like to state that I have considerable doubt, in conjunction with my right hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) as to the constitutionality of this Bill. It strikes me, that this aid to the provinces amounts simply to an increase of the per capita subsidy which was agreed upon at confederation. When the provinces came together they decided that, inasmuch as they were giving over their customs and excise to the federal power, they should be entitled to a compensation, and that compensation was fixed at eighty cents per head, based on the census of 1861. When I went into politics about 1879 or 1880, and saw in what state the finances of my province were, and found that, at the time the only means that seemed to be in view for an increase of its income was direct taxation, which was very objectionable to the people, though perhaps the most honest of all modes of taxation It seemed to me that this arrangement was somewhat unjust to the provinces, inasmuch as they retained the same fixed amount from the federal chest, while the population increased. The increase in population increased the income of the federal government, but increased at the same time the charges which the provinces had to meet, without any corresponding return from the federal government which benefited through the increased customs and excise collections. This grievance which I thought existed against the federal authority has been cured, and now the provinces will have the advantage of an increased subsidy proportionate to the increased population, But this seemed to be a settlement under the form of a contract between the federal authority and the provinces. The obligations of the several provinces were defined in the constitution, and those obligations were to be assumed by them, and met out of their own resources, and of the subsidies they received from the federal authorities. Now the federal government decide upon a new policy, and will advance money to help local works in the provinces.

This, in my mind, is outside the intentions of the statesmen who framed the Confederation Act, and who agreed upon the Quebec resolutions. It may vary the conditions of that contract which was entered into in 1865-66. Yet the federal powers which can be exercised in relation to public works are so wide, and have been used so extensively since 1867, that I shall not undertake now to quarrel with the House of Commons on the policy which is now being inaugurated, of increasing the subsidies to the provinces under that form. But, if we are to close our eyes to this feature of the legislation which is offered us, it seems to me that the Senate should, at all events, safeguard the principle of equality between the provinces. The Bill does not speak of the distribution of this money and how it will be divided. I find, on looking over the discussion which took place on this Bill when it was presented to the other House, that the government and opposition alike agreed upon the principle of the distribution of this money to the provinces in proporton to their population. My only surprise is that this principle is not embodied in the Bill. I may be allowed to cite the expression of the right hon. leader of the government when the second reading of the Bill was moved on the 23rd of February, 1912, to be found on page 3711 of 'Hansard':

When these subsidies are brought down we propose to vote a specific amount for each province which cannot be appropriated to any other province, and we propose to proceed on the basis of population or amount of subsidy.

So we have, from the leader of this government, the fact that this sum will be divided, practically, on the same basis as the provincial subsidies. We have the same statement repeated by my hon. friend, the leader of the government in this Chamber, that these are the intentions of the government. Why is not this principle, which is most important, and which underlies the whole financial fabric of the constitution, embodied in this Bill? I cannot understand or comprehend why it is not. I have the statement of the government; so far so good, but how can we be assured that this policy, which is not a policy to be maintained for a year or two merely, but which is to be on our statute-book, and may be taken advantage of for years to come—how are we to be assured that the declaration and promise of the present government will be followed by the next government, and that the declaration that this money will be distributed among the several provinces according to population, will be followed from year to year? It seems to me that this point is of such importance that it should be insured by making it a provision of this Bill. I draw the attention of my colleagues to this fact, that this Chamber would not, perhaps, vote this Bill if it were not assured that this promise would be implemented. Yet, when this Bill is passed on this verbal declaration made by the government of the day, it may not bind the government to follow it. The Senate is deprived of the right to see that this declaration is implemented, because what will follow when this Bill is on the statute book? Subsidies will be voted which will be in the Subsidy Bill over which we will have no control, except by creating a crisis and rejecting the Supply Bill, a thing which I suppose this Chamber would be slow to do. Therefore, I reserve the right, when this Bill goes into committee, to try and have this principle, which is admitted by the government as the one upon which they intend to act, incorporated in this legistion.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THE MANITOBA BOUNDARIES BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Orders of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill (115), 'An Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.'

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Hon. gentlemen, in rising to oppose, for the present, the second reading of this Bill, I am not going to make any long argument or speak of its provisions. These conditions are financial arrangements between the governments at Ottawa and Winnipeg, the exchange of land, the payment of money to universities and different things which I think we can leave to the government of the day to deal with. The Bill is lacking in that there is no clause for the protection of the minority, either Protestant or Roman Catholic, in the district which is to be annexed to Manitoba, by this Bill. I am not going to discuss the legality of the existence of parish schools, or the rights of the minority in that province. These questions have been debated in another place by very able men. Opinions have been given on this question by eminent lawyers, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, and all have come to the conclusion that the Roman Catholics have rights as to their schools. I am not going to load up the 'Debates' of the Senate on this point.

I am supposing that the reasons given for the claims of the Roman Catholics to separate schools are correct, and I am not going to try to convince those who hold the opposite view, that they are wrong. They can form their own opinion. Prominent lawyers, and members of the government have differed on this question. The government do not like to see lawyers give their opinions, especially lawyers who are not in either House.

I remember the Minister of Justice, a very able and eminent man, said he did not care much for the opinions of those who wrote for the papers or spoke on the hustings, or who gave their opinions on public questions without being asked for them. This is a matter to be settled by the Minister of Justice with Mr. Cahan and those he referred to. I am not going to discuss the legal side of the question. I shall only discuss the amendments which were proposed in the other House, and which I am about to offer here in view of the declarations which have been made in the other House by ministers, and which I read in the public press. If these declarations are true—and we are entitled to know if they are—the government is bound to open negotiations with the Manitoba government. My first inclination would have been to move the six months' hoist, because on a question like this everybody who has reason to oppose the Bill might vote for such a motion. Last night I heard the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert oppose the Bill because Saskatchewan was not well treated, and I heard my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie say that Manitoba also was not well treated. But I am not inclined to harass the government by killing the Bill. I would like to move the amendment which was proposed in another place by the hon. leader of the opposition, that although favourable to the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, the terms under which it was proposed to make said extensions, as set forth in the Bill, were unfair and unjust, both to the people of Manitoba and to the people of the other provinces of the Dominion. I should be inclined to move that amendment, but I have been told that my object in doing so would only be to assist the Liberal party in the other House, or to enhance their chances in the country. I like to avoid all such matters and look at the question in the best way, and try to follow the line suggested by the government, that the Roblin government has decided, and is willing, to deal fairly and justly with the Catholic minority. I should like to give the government a chance to go to the Roblin government and see what they are going to do. On second thought I considered it better not to move the six months' hoist, or the amendment which was moved in the other place by the leader of the opposition, but to move an amendment in order to reopen the negotiations with the Manitoba government, in order to know what they are going to do, and I do make that motion in the face of the declarations which have been made by the Postmaster General and the Minister of the Interior in the other place. We read in the Winnipeg papers the statement that we would have to go to Winnipeg to get justice. We find papers like the 'Montreal Star' and the 'Montreal Gazette' appealing to the Manitoba government to give justice to the Catholic minority. I would refer the leader of the government to a speech delivered elsewhere by Hon. Mr. Rogers, his colleague. He says:

> I recognize that he (Mr. Borden) stands to maintain and to uphold that grand old traditional policy of the party, that has ever stood in the past, and that I trust, ever may stand in the future, to uphold equal rights and equal justice to all and all parts of our country. That, to my mind, is exactly what this Bill undertakes to represent. It promises nothing more and it promises nothing less.

So that hon. gentleman will see that the minister coming from Manitoba says the party stands to give justice to all. What does that mean? Does it mean that they are asking the members from Quebec to accept their assurances that they will remedy the wrongs from which they have been suffering for long years? Then we have the Postmaster General also speaking in another place, as follows:

> I am not prepared to leave the rights of any minority, either Protestant or Catholic, to the tender mercies of the leader of the opposition and his friends. I would rather leave them in the hands of the Roblin government. If future facts show that in doing this I have erred, I will stand the consequences. I am prepared to do so because I believe from the bottom of my heart that I am right. I shall have to again refer to that later.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has my hon. friend any understanding with the Roblin government.

Mr. PELLETIER. That is too thin. I am going to answer the question fully by and by.

He never answered the question, but he left his friends with the impression that he had such an understanding. In a caucus called the Postmaster General, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of the Interior, for the Nationalists, or the Tories, as you like to call them, they gave all the supporters of the government from the province of Quebec, and to all those of French origin and Roman Catholic religion, their word of honour that they had the authority of the Roblin government to say that they would re-establish separate schools, or present a law so that the Catholics would not have to pay double school taxes. The twenty-two members all informed the government that they were prepared to vote against the Bill, but after this declaration only five voted against it, the others supporting the government. If this statement is true, these ministers and the Roblin government are deceiving the public. If it is not true, they obtained the votes of the Quebec members on false pretenses and false representations. The only way is to refer that Bill to a conference to ascertain what was the understanding. When asked if there was an understanding, the man who gave his word that they had the pledge of the Roblin government said: 'That question is too thin,' and he would not say a word about it. This Senate was created for the protection of minorities, and it is very fortunate that the Senate exists. I do not care about the financial part of the Bill, but there is a question of conscience and a question of right, which is entirely omitted from the Bill. It is our duty to ascertain exactly the state of affairs and find out if those promises were made. For fifteen years the Laurier government has been accused of betraying the faith of their compatriots in Quebec. We know that Archbishop Langevin has been travelling through Quebec denouncing the Laurier government for betraying Laurier's co-religionist compatriots. How is it we do not hear his voice now? If they have a promise from the Roblin government why not declare it like men?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Did the hon. gentleman raise his voice when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in power, against the Greenway government, which passed the first Manitoba Act, at the time when Sir Wilfrid Laurier refused to obey the mandate of the Privy Council?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Certainly he did; and also Mgr. Langevin who went through the county of La Prairie and elsewhere denouncing the Liberal candidates in 1896 and since.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is all a question of politics.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—For the hon. gentleman and the government. I may draw the conclusion from the declarations of the ministers of the Crown in the presence of their leader in the other House, and His Grace Archbishop Langevin, not saying a word, that Roblin made some promises. I am glad that it is so, and I hope they will be carried out, but we have a right to know if it is true. Now read the 'Manitoba,' the organ of Mgr. Langevin. It is as follows:

Nous n'avons, certes, ni le droit ni le désir d'admettre qu'Ottawa, n'ait plus jurisdiction; mais les événements nous indiquent Winnipeg, comme, l'endroit où nous aurons à traiter.

In English it means that he is not going to say Ottawa has no jurisdiction, but he says we have to go to Winnipeg to negotiate about our rights. He says further in French:

Jusqu'aujourd'hui M. Roblin, et son gouvernement, méritent d'être traités en amis, aveo lesquels on doit sans doute conférer, mais à qui il convient de faire crédit pour un passé honorable.

That is, Mr. Roblin has been a true friend so far, and it is with him that we are to negotiate. Negotiate what? This is from the 'Manitoba,' published in Winnipeg, and reproduced in 'L'Evenement' the organ of the Postmaster General, yesterday, 18th of March.

Now, here is more than that. I have in my hands 'La Patrie' of Montreal, a paper very friendly, to the government, which fought the battle of the government at the last election, and what does it say? It goes further than the Postmaster General, and says this:

Malgré la déclaration de l'hon. M. Borden et de ses ministres qu'ils n'ont reçu aucune promesse, écrite ou verbale que le gouvernement du Manitoba remédierait aux griefs de la minorité catholique et établierait un système scolaire satisfaisant pour la minorité dans le district de Keewatin, des personnes qui ont des raisons pour être bien renseignées, affirment que le gouvernement Roblin a bel et bien donné de solides assurances au gouvernement fédéral.

Qu'un accord de cette nature soit intervenu entre Winnipeg et Ottawa, cela est d'ailleurs vaisemblable pour plusieurs motifs.

Confirming that the Roblin government have given assurances to the federal government that they would re-establish separate schools, or do something for the Roman Catholics of Manitoba, and it says it is only fair to take that from the words of the ministers, because the Roblin government is one of their friends and is going to help them out of the difficulty. Now what do we see in the 'Star' of Montreal? It says, as cited by 'La Patrie':

Assurément, l'attitude de la minorité de la population canadienne envers la minorité doit être une attitude généreuse. Cette minorité est destinée à déclainer proportionnellement chaque année, à cause de l'immigration. Nous ne pouvons concevoir qu'il existe une rivalité, même si nous nous sentons enclins à nous quereller à propos de religion. Par suite, l'action de la majorité a cessé d'être une action militante, et est devenue de la persécution. La conciliation devrait être maintenant notre mot d'ordre.

It says that the action of the majority now is persecution, and the by-word must be concilliation with those people. What does the 'Gazette' of Montreal say?

Le règlement de 1897 de la question scolaire du Manitoba à fixé le status des écoles de la province, en ce qui concerne le parliament, et toute tentative de le faire modifier par Ottawa, ne saurait avoir aucun bon résultat. Le bon sens et le bon vouloir de Winnipeg judicieusement exercés, peuvent cependant accomplir beaucoup.

The 'Montreal Gazette' says that the good sense and good will of Winnipeg will do more to satisfy the Roman Catholics. And what is the conclusion of 'La Patrie'

Comment le Gouvernement fédéral et ses organes inspirés prendraient-ils une attitude si conciliante et si curieusement sympathique aux droits de la minorité, s'il n'existait une assurance de M. Roblin que la législature du Manitoba se départira de sa sévérité et rendra la vie tolérable aux catholiques du Manitoba et du Keewatin.

Now, the federal government and its organs have been inspired by somebody to come to the rescue of the rights of the minority; and it could not do this unless they have the assurance of the Roblin government that they are going to give the Roman Catholics of Manitoba and Keewatin their rights. In view of all this; in view of the declaration of the ministers themselves; in the face of the statement of the leader of the House; in view of the articles in papers sympathetic with the government; in view of the confirmation, by those papers, that they must have some assurance from the Roblin government that we are going to have justice; in view of the silence of His Grace, Archbishop Langevin; in view of the article of the Manitoba paper published at Winnipeg saying that they have to go to Winnipeg, to the Roblin government to get justice; are we not in this House justified, before this Bill is read a second time or before it becomes law, to ask the government to reopen negotiations with Mr. Roblin to know what he is going to do for the Protestant or the Catholic minority. Because, hon. gentlemen of the Senate have been appointed here to protect the minority; that is practically one of the reasons why we are here; and it is the Senate that is asked to protect the minority. We all know that in 1867 it was the Protestants themselves who were asking protection for the minority in Quebec, and, thank God, Quebec has kept its word. I never raised a finger to do anything to injure the rights of the Protestant minority, and Catholic members would be the first to stand up and defend those rights in the province of Quebec, because they are entitled to them. We do not approve, as a rule, of their schools, though very often they are very poor schools. But now, there is the right, there is the constitution, and I would be the first to stand up in this House to oppose any one who would attempt to take one iota of right from our Protestants in the province of Quebec.

It is the Protestants themselves who asked for the rights in Manitoba, because at the time they thought that Manitoba would be a French and Catholic province. At that time the population was nearly all Catholic. There was a Catholic bishop there and Catholic missionaries and it was thought that it would be the same as the province of Quebec, and the minority asked to be protected. Why should we have to beg now to have our rights respected? I have heard it said that the opposition to separate schools is not because they are Catholic schools, but because they are not good schools. A few days ago I was told to read the report of Dr. Merchant about the Catholic separate schools in Ontario. I quite admit, hon. gentlemen, that there are Catholic schools in poor centres that may not be up to the mark. We have the same thing in Quebec where we have Protestant schools that are not any better, and only last week we had a report from the inspector of these schools saying that they were so bad that the Protestants were sending their children to Catholic schools. We must not judge by special cases. I say that our schools in Quebec are just as good as the Protestant schools, even better. Hon. sirs, I can give you examples. Take the men who have studied in these separate schools, and who are now here or in the House of Commons. Do they not speak eloquently and well in both languages? I was proud the other day to hear two French Canadians in the House standing up and receiving the attention of the whole House, and speaking better than many of the English members and these French members speaking in English. I am pleased to see the same thing in this House. I do not say it for myself, because I am not a fluent speaker in the English language, but I know that other French members in this House can speak very fluently in English and these men were educated in the separate schools by the priests and friars, and they can stand up in this House and show that they are more educated than the Englishmen who have been educated in Protestant schools. I do not say that for the purpose of boasting, but it is a fact. How many Englishmen can speak in both languages?

I was glad to hear the Postmaster General and the ex-Postmaster General having a wordy war in the English language and speaking better than many of the English members of the House of Commons can speak in English. I merely say these few words by way of digression in order to defend the separate schools. I have been told that Ontario is spending a great deal of money on public schools. That may be true, but why do they spend so much money? Because they have to pay their teachers such high salaries. In Ontario they have to pay big salaries in the Protestant schools, whereas in Quebec our children are taught by the nuns, priests and friars who educate the people for love and practically do not receive any salary. An English friend of mine told me that they were spending two or three times more in Ontario, for education, than we were in Quebec. That may be true, but in the face of what I have told you, as to the large salaries paid the Ontario teachers, that is not to be wondered at. The French members of this House are just as well educated and better educated than the English members, and I might even add that it takes two or three times as much money to educate an Englishman as it does to educate a Frenchman, and that is the reason it costs so much more for education in Ontario, than it does in Quebec. I suppose I can say that without boasting, or without injuring the feelings of anybody. This is a question on which I feel strongly. The rights of the minority should be protected; they should be allowed to educate their children according to their conscience. I do not see why we should have to beg for rights which we already have. I do not wish to kill the Bill, and I do not wish to make any political capital out of it. I am not even going to move an amendment which, if carried would kill the Bill, because I do not wish it to be said that I tried to embarrass the government, but in view of the declaration of the minister that the rights of the minority will be respected, and that the Tory members who assisted in the caucus said they were going to support the government because they would gain more than by opposing the Bill. I think I am justified in moving:

That this Bill be not read now a second time, but that the second reading be suspended in order to reopen negotiation with the government of Manitoba, by way of conference, in order to define in an amicable way the situation of the minority, either Catholic or Protestant, that they occupy in the light of the law in relation to the educational rights in the proposed annexed territory.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I intend to support the motion which has just been submitted, and I move that the debate do adjourn, until to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 20, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (116) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (124) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

THE GRAIN BILL.

COMMITTEE STAGE POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (32) An Act respecting Grain.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Before the motion is put, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. leader of the House to the fact that there is a delegation of farmers here at the present time. Although we do not expect that the Bill will be referred to a select committee, I would ask that it be delayed for a day until these gentlemen have a chance to meet some of the senators and discuss the matter with them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In answer to my hon. friend I would say that it is very desirable that we should proceed with this Bill at once. The clause in which the delegation referred to may be interested can be held in suspense, but in the meantime we had better proceed with the other clauses. I have had an opportunity of interviewing the delegation, and they have pointed out to me two clauses, to which I drew the attention of the House when introducing the Bill, on which they desire to be heard. There is nothing to preclude these gentlemen from addressing such members of the Senate as may wish to hear their views this afternoon, or at any time. I have a telegram from representatives of the grain section of the Toronto Board of Trade desiring to come down here and be heard. It will be quite obvious to hon. gentlemen that, if we delay this Bill until there can be a mutual agreement of all the conflicting interests, we will never get through with it. The public interest will be quite well served if we proceed with the Bill this afternoon, reserving a final disposition of the clauses objected to until an opportunity is given to hear these gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—There is another objection to proceeding with the Bill to-day: it is not printed in French.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The Bill is not printed in French, and it must stand over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is for the House to say.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The House does not agree to go on with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. Speaker himself is one of the most ardent advocates of equal rights in this House, and now a member from Quebec has asked that this Bill be printed in French, and it is the duty of the Speaker to declare that he is entitled to have his request granted.

The SPEAKER—If the objection is raised it is well taken, because it is not a matter that can be dealt with like a rule of this House. The rules of the Senate may be suspended by a majority of the House, but the right to the use of the French and English languages is given by the constitution, and no rule of the House can supersede the articles of the constitution.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If at this very late hour in the session this objection is taken, I doubt very much that the best interests of those concerned in the Bill will be served by taking advantage of the technical objection. It is very desirable that the greatest possible consideration should be given to this Bill. It consists of 248 sections; surely it cannot be said, or expected, that the sections which are objected to will be recklessly dealt with, between now and, say, a couple of days hence. The Senate can very well spend its time to-day and to-morrow in dealing with the many sections of this Bill that do not infringe in any way on the views of the delegation that desire to be heard.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I was going to inquire from my hon. friend whether he has in his Bill shown any new clauses differing from the Act that passed this House last session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, they are not shown. I might say, however, that the only radical departure from the Bill is in the last two clauses, one dealing with the distribution of cars, and the other dealing with the sample market.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is clause 57 in the first case, and 207 in the second?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—We might proceed with the non-contentious clause and leave the other clause till to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 57 deals with the sample market and 207 deals with the car distribution.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Owing to the anxiety of my hon. friend to proceed with this Bill, I should like to tell him that the people who are directly interested in the measure—that is the gentlemen from the west—do not desire the Bill at all, and would rather have the law now on the statute-book than the present Bill. I think it would be wise to postpone the order till to-morrow, so that they can be heard.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

The SPEAKER—Objection has been made that the Bill has not been printed in French, and unless the objection be withdrawn I cannot proceed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I suggest that the Bill be placed at the foot of the order paper. That might meet the requirements of the situation. If we dispose of the Orders of the Day, we could then proceed with the non-contentious clause.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman persist in his objection?

Hon. Mr. BOYER—I withdraw the objection.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It does not make any difference whether a member happens to be French or English, I have just as good a right to raise the objection that the Bill is not printed in French as my hon. friend behind me. In order to meet the views of the hon. leader of the House, the Bill may be placed at the foot of the orders, but I will not let it proceed, even then, unless I am further advised.

The Bill was placed at the foot of the order paper.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the further adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill (115) an Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Hon. gentlemen, it may not be amiss for me to preface what I am about to say in support of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) by giving the House the assurance that I shall approach the subject in a calm and dispassionate manner, in a spirit of fair-play and conciliation, and with a desire to give full consideration to the rights, the beliefs, the scruples, and even the prejudices of the parties interested. I have not stopped to consider for one moment whether there is any party advantage in this matter whatever, having regard only to the interests of the Dominion, of the province of Manitoba and the territory of Keewatin, as they impress themselves on my mind and on my conscience. It is well to recognize at once that this Bill is in the nature of an agreement; it is a bargain, and in dealing with bargains and agreements it is always well to bear in mind that it takes two parties to make a bargain, and that if you want to arrive at a just, fair and permanent agreement, proper consideration has to be given to all the interests, to all the parties concerned. There should be nothing in an agreement, especially an agreement of this kind, which would justify anybody, or any party to it, in being too insistent in having all its own way. There should be no question here for either side to insist upon the pound of flesh. If the Bill, or agreement, or bargain if you will, is approached in that spirit, it is quite evident to me, as it must be quite evident to any parliamentarian, that we will not only not solve a difficult question, but will bring about more trouble for the future.

Now, I think it well that we should define exactly what are the constitutional and legal relations between the Dominion of Canada and the parties interested. We must remember that the territory of Keewatin forms part of the Dominion of Canada. We assumed jurisdiction over that part of Canada, and because we assumed jurisdiction and have exercised it for years, that territory is part of the constituency of the Dominion of Canada. In assuming jurisdiction we assumed a duty towards all the people inhabiting that territory, and it is that duty which we are called upon to discharge in dealing with this Bill. When the question of extending the boundaries of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba arose, the government of Canada were necessarily called upon to look at the constitutional relations between the central government and the provincial governments, and the territorial government as well. Under the Act which governs the matter, that is the amendment to the British North America Act, 1871, parliament could have done. in reference to this territory, one of three things—continue to administer the territory by giving it such additional authority as the development of the present day requirements need, organize it into a province by itself, or, thirdly, annex it, or part of it, to Manitoba or to any other province. These are the three things which the parliament of the day have to consider in dealing with this measure. The law which governs the matter is quite clear. Parliament has to administer that law as it is found. With reference to these three alternatives, there is really only one of them which is obligatory on this parliament, and that is the one to which I have already referred, that is, the duty to continue to administer that territory. The other two, to create this territory into a province, or annex it or part of it to Manitoba or any other province, are both permissive. There is no compulsion on the part of parliament to annex this territory, or any part of it, to Manitoba. There is no compulsion to create it into a province. There is an obligation on the part of this parliament to administer that territory in the manner prescribed by law. I think it is important that that distinction should be made at the outset. I am free to admit that the time has arrived when this territory should very properly be annexed to the province of Manitoba. I do not wish to dispute that for one moment. The reasons are many and obvious why the territory of Keewatin should, in the future, form part of Manitoba. I am not going to argue to the contrary.

But in order to annex that territory, the whole thing must be the subject of an agreement, or a bargain, and we must not lose sight of that. This agreement and its terms should be acceptable, in so far as possible, not only to the people of Canada at large, but to the people of Manitoba, and to the people living in the territories, and I might point out that, in seeking to make that agreement to-day, there is upon Canada particularly the duty to see that its own constituents who live in that territory of Keewatin, and their rights, whatever they may be, are properly protected. If an agreement with Manitoba cannot be made satisfactory to Manitoba and also satisfactory to our own constituents in the territory of Keewatin, then there is nothing else for this parliament to do but to continue to administer the territory of Keewatin under the law as it stands to-day, and wait until such time as the province of Manitoba and Keewatin can, through our own intermediary, secure terms which can be satisfactory both to Manitoba and Keewatin. Manitoba can to-day refuse to take this Bill. She is not bound to accept its terms, or any portion of it; and Canada is not bound to annex any part of Keewatin to the province of Manitoba. For my part, it seems obvious that, in trying to make terms mutually satisfactory, the terms should be thought out in a broad and generous spirit, not with the idea of being too insistent, or having the pound of flesh. It is quite clear to me, as it is to most hon. members of this House and the other branch of parliament, that so far as the financial terms are concerned, and so far as the territorial limits of the territory to be annexed are concerned, we have dealt in a most generous manner with Manitoba. I think it will be the common verdict that Manitoba is receiving far more generous treatment than Quebec or Ontario are going to receive when the time comes for the extension of their own boundaries. I am not disposed to quarrel with the financial and other terms which are now proposed to us; they may be, in the opinion of many, far too generous. Many might say that granting such terms to Manitoba is an encouragement to the other provinces to come and make raids on the Dominion treasury. That may be, and I believe there is reason for saying so. For my part, I am not quarrelling with the financial terms embodied in the Bill, and shall take no objection to them. Evidently the question which is giving some of us, at all events, more difficulty and more concern is the question involved in the amendment submitted by my hon. friend and which I have seconded. What are the claims of these parties? Are there in the territory of Keewatin rights, or claims, which are not being protected, and which should be protected? If there are claims of that kind, I submit it is our duty to continue to administer those rights. If there are legitimate rights on the part of those people which should be safeguarded, I say the duty primarily and essentially rests on this parliament, and perhaps more so on this branch of parliament, to see that those rights are protected, or at all events, that every possible means of securing and protecting those rights should be resorted to before this Bill is finally passed by parliament. What is the position? In the province of Manitoba there are no separate schools; in 1890 the provincial legislature abolished the system of separate schools which, up to that time, had been in existence in the province. Hon. gentlemen will remember as well as I do what followed. The Act was attacked as ultra vires and not constitutional, but the Privy Council declared the Act to be within the powers of the province, and so far as legislation goes, the separate school system in the province of Manitoba became, in 1890, and has been ever since, abolished and gone for ever. To-day there are no separate schools in Manitoba. That is the legal position. It is well to remember, also, that by a subsequent judgment of the Privy Council it was declared that the minority of Manitoba have a very serious grievance which should be remedied by this parliament under the provisions of the British North America Act. The elections were fought out on that issue. The Conservative government of the day, as everybody knows, attempted to enforce upon the province of Manitoba remedial legislation. The attempt was made to compel Manitoba to restore the separate schools, or to give the Catholic minority of Manitoba the rights to which it was entitled. I believed, and I have believed since, and believe now, that it was impolitic, that it was not a proper course to adopt, and that a very grave mistake was made by the government of the day in trying to impose that legislation upon the province.

I did not then believe, I have not since believed, and I do not now believe in coercion, in compelling, or in trying to coerce the province of Manitoba, or any other province, in educational matters. I believe that was the great defect of the Bill of 1896. There was another thing which affected the minority, a defect, to my mind, rendered that measure utterly useless, and it was this: that there was no provision in that Act which would have enabled the Catholic minority of Manitoba to have its own taxes for the support of its own schools; so that the Act of 1896 was absolutely futile. I do not want to characterize it with a stronger word, though I could, but I say it was absolutely futile. I do not propose, for my part, that legislation of that kind should be attempted again, and I would be the last to support it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks the parliament of Canada would have had any power if the Remedial Order had passed, to enforce any Act on the province of Manioba which would afford relief to the Catholic minority.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—No; I have already said so. I have just said that the Act of 1896 was absolutely useless, so far as protecting the rights of the minority in Manitoba was concerned, inasmuch as it made no provision by which that minority could have had its own taxes, for the use of its own schools. For that reason, I opposed then the Bill of 1896. I was a candidate in the city of Ottawa at that time, and I opposed it on the hustings and afterwards. I believed then, and I believe now, and have believed since, that if in 1896 the government of Manitoba had been approached in a proper spirit, that question would have been settled, and settled without the great turmoil that was then caused throughout the length and breadth of this country. I believe that the province of Manitoba to-day, if appealed to in a proper spirit, and a proper way, by the government of the day, would find some solution to this question which would for ever take it out of politics, and save us from spending time and energy and efforts in discussing a question which should have been disposed of and settled many, many years ago.

A law of that kind will, or will not, produce an effect according to the manner in which it is administered. I do not think any one will question this proposition, that if a law in educational matters is imposed upon a province which is objectionable to the majority of the people living in that province, that law would be administered istered in a way to give to those for whom it is intended the protection which it purports to give. Educational law is effective. or defective, not according to the letter of the statute, or the spirit of it, but in the way it is carried out. I say that if we attempt to compel Manitoba to have a separate school system for any portion of the province, that law would be administered in such a way that it would not serve the purpose for which it was intended. That is another reason why I think we must ever give up the idea of imposing a law on any province which the majority are not prepared to carry out faithfully and loyally. But I do say, and I repeat it, that if we appeal to the common-sense, the justice and the sense of fair-play of the majority of Manitoba, I am sure that such an appeal will bring about a settlement of this question which will for ever remove it from politics. That is what happened in 1897, when negotiations were opened between the federal government and the government of the province of Manitoba resulting in a settlement, which may not have been wholly satisfactory to everybody, but a settlement which, being received in the spirit of give and take, has produced general results which have been accepted pretty generally. The result of the settlement of 1897 is far better for the minority than any remedial legislation imposed upon that province would have been. That is what happened in 1905 when the parliament of Canada was creating the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The government of the day introduced a measure in which was embodied the statute of 1875, and which is now section 10 of chapter 62 of our revised statutes:

10. The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto, but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic may establish separate schools, shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

That is substantially almost word for word, excepting the first two lines, which were changed for the purpose of the altered conditions, the statute of 1875. The government of the day in introducing this Bill for the creation of the two provinces embodied that Act word for word in section 16, which was discussed at such length. We all know what happened, one of the gentlemen representing the west, the leading representative of the Protestant majority of the west in the cabinet of the day, resigned because he would not support this legislation. What followed? Negotiations between the representative of the majority of the west and the government of the day, and the substitution for clause 16 of a clause embodying the legislation as it now exists. That is the law of 1875 as modified by the subsequent ordinances. There again we have a striking proof of what may be accomplished if people will only try to get together, and deal with these matters in a fair, broad and generous spirit. The result was that every man in the House of Commons, Protestant and Catholic, supported the agreement arrived at between the Hon. Mr. Sifton, then Minister of the Interior, and the government of the day. The result was an honourable, and I think satisfactory compromise, because to-day in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan there is no school question. Why is there no school question? Simply because these gentlemen of opposite views got together, with a spirit of give and take, and made a settlement which for ever removed from these two provinces the troublesome question of education.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Does the hon gentleman want us to understand that they have separate schools in Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Of course they have.

Hon Mr. McMILLAN—What is the law with regard to separate schools?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—They have not got separate schools in the sense that we have them in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Let us know the kind of separate schools they have.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend wishes me to explain the whole of the ordinance. It will take some time to do that.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I say they have no such thing as Roman Catholic separate schools in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I say there was no compromise at all, the whole thing was a giving away of the right.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—No.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Act of 1905 shows that there are separate schools in these provinces.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—If my hon. friend will only take the statutes of 1905 he will see there exactly what are the rights of the Catholic minority in the way of separate schools.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I want to impress on the hon. gentleman the fact that there was no compromise, and that they gave away the rights they had under the law of 1875.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—No, they did nothing of the kind. What they did was this: The law of 1875 provided for separate schools. That was an absolute right to all intents and purposes. There had been subsequently introduced into the Northwest Territories, before the creation of these two provinces, ordinances which modijed to some extent, separate schools. The law of 1905, adopted by this parliament as a result of the compromise, was to make that the provision for religious education in the schools of these new provinces, as modified by these ordinances.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes, but that is not carrying out the law of 1875.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I say it is.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I repeat it is carrying out the law of 1875, subject to modification. Of course my hon. friend knows that law has not been disallowed. If my hon. friend thinks it should be disallowed, he should try to prevail upon his friends to disallow it. That is the law to-day.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I want to be clear upon this point; does the hon. gentleman mean to say that that is the law in Keewatin?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend surely must be fair. I was discussing Alberta and Saskatchewan, and he asked me a number of questions. Now that I have answered him he asks me if I confine that to Keewatin; I never said anything of the sort.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I understood it in that way and I ask the hon. gentleman if he means to say that the law in the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan is the law as amended from time to time by the Northwest Council.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The law where?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The law in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I say the law of 1905 which evidently my hon. friend has forgotten——

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No, I know all about it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Then he mistakes its meaning. If he will look at the law of 1905 he will see that it is exactly as I state, and I repeat that that is the law which has been in force since Saskatchewan and Alberta were formed into provinces, and it has been exercised as to Keewatin. My hon. friend from Glengarry (Hon. Mr. McMillan) may not agree with me as to its exact meaning, but there is one thing as to which he and I can agree, and that is that that settlement of the school question was satisfactory. Surely he will not deny that there was a settlement in 1905. Surely the hon. gentleman remembers the resignation of the then Minister of the Interior, and surely he remembers what it was about.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes, I remember.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend will remember that it was because the Hon. Mr. Sifton opposed the adoption of the law of 1875, and resigned from the Cabinet, and that there was a compromise made. He knows that that compromise——

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No, I do not know that there was a compromise made at all. I know the whole question was given away.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—If my hon. friend will give me a hearing I will take the trouble—not that I am going to convince him, I suppose, because it is quite evident he is not open to conviction—to read the Act.

17. Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with the substitution for paragraph (1) of the said section 93, of the following paragraph.

(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.

2. In the appropriation by the legislature or distribution by the government of the province of any moneys for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the said chapter 29 or any Act passed in amendment thereof, or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in the said chapter 29.

3. Where the expression 'by-law' is employed in paragraph 3 of the said section 93, it shall be held to mean the law as set out in the said chapters 29 and 30, and where the expression 'at the Union' is employed in the said paragraph 3, it shall be held to mean the date at which this Act comes into force.

If that does not satisfy my hon. friend it is quite evident there is nothing that will satisfy him. Now, what is the situation which confronts us in dealing with the matter? I have said that in Manitoba they have no separate schools; the majority in Manitoba objects to separate schools. I believe, however, that the majority in Manitoba is not unprepared to give to the Catholic minority in Manitoba rights, perhaps not amounting to the right to separate schools, but very close to it. On the other hand, they have in the province of Keewatin a number of people to-day, small or large I could not say, who have conscientious scruples and who have come to the point that they will not permit an encroachment on their right, if it exists, to separate schools. What are we going to do? Are we going to endeavour to impose on the province of Manitoba the duty of establishing separate schools in Keewatin? I have said no to that question, and I am quite firm about my opinion in that respect. If the rights of the people of Keewatin are not to be respected I submit, since the Bill does not contain any provision concerning the rights of the people of Keewatin, that it is our duty to see if we cannot, in some way or other, protect those rights. I have pointed out before, and perhaps I may be permitted to repeat, that the duty of protecting those rights rests mainly upon our shoulders, because in this matter the parliament of Canada is acting as the agent, the attorney as it were, of those people, and we have no right to hand them over to another territory and thereby attempt to discharge our obligation. Perhaps I might be permitted to give a homely illustration of that point. Suppose the case of a father who, by the laws of nature and the laws of the land, to say nothing of the law of God, is bound to educate his children: Can he relieve himself of that duty by handing that child over to his brother, say, or some other relative who does not believe in education? Can he relieve himself of that duty? We are exactly in the same relation to the people of Keewatin that a father is to his children. By the law of nature, by the law of God and by the statute law we are to-day bound to give the people of Keewatin a certain sort of education. They have a right to ask for it, and they have a right to get it. Are we going to relieve ourselves of our constitutional duty by simply taking those people and handing them over to the province of Manitoba and saying to them, 'You can go to Manitoba; they will look after your rights'? We all know that Manitoba is not prepared to-day to grant to the people of Keewatin the rights to which they are entitled under the statute. I say that the case is an absolutely parallel one to that I have cited; we are in no better position than would be the father who would attempt to do what I have described.

One thing which struck me forcibly all through the discussion in the House of Commons, as well as in this Chamber, was that whilst we may have good reason to believe, or hope at all events, that the majority in Manitoba is inclined to do justice to these people, we have had absolutely no evidence that the government of the day in Manitoba is disposed to do that. I ask every hon. member in this House, who is willing to approach the subject with absolute impartiality, if it is not the bounden duty of the government of the day, which, after all, is but a committee of parliament, to make inquiry and ascertain from the cabinet of Manitoba if there are not concessions which they would be prepared to grant to-day to the Catholic minority in Keewatin, which that minority would be prepared to accept, and put an end to this matter. Should we not, before passing this Bill, make every possible attempt to remove that difficulty, to get the province of Manitoba to say what they are prepared to do for the minority in Keewatin, and then ask our constituents in Keewatin to consent to these concessions and come to a final agreement? We have in the House of Commons the statement of the Postmaster General and the statement of the Minister of Public Works, both to the effect that they had received absolutely no assurance whatever from the government of Manitoba that there would be any concessions made to the Catholic minority of Keewatin. In view of that, it is our duty, and the duty of parliament, to insist upon the government of Canada asking the government of Manitoba what are the concessions of which we have heard that they are prepared to make. I do not believe Manitoba can be so refractory, and so regardless of the spirit of justice and the interests of Canada at large as to refuse to enter into negotiations for the purpose of settling the matter. At all events, we must assume that the government of Manitoba is disposed to do something on these lines, and until we know it has refused to do anything we cannot believe that it will not do something. Some people will say, as my hon. friend from Glengarry did, that the people of Keewatin have no rights under the law. I have read section 10 of chap. 62 of the Revised Statutes, and I say that that is the law which to-day governs the matter.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN. I did not say that they had no rights.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I accept the correction, and am very glad the hon. gentleman makes the statement. It has been argued elsewhere that the law of 1875 was not enforced in the territories of Keewatin, that for a year or so it did not apply to Keewatin. That may or may not be. It is unnecessary to enter into that, but one thing which must be convincing to everybody is that it is now the law. It is the statute of 1875 copied word for word. The arguments advanced by the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General received no approval from the right hon. Premier. He took no stock in their argument, and in clear language he stated, as I am now stating, that the law of 1875, as reproduced in our Revised Statutes of Canada, is the law of Canada, applicable to the territory, and is the law which governs in this matter. At page 4579 of 'Hansard' the Premier spoke as follows:

> Let me say that the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, were proclaimed and came into force on the 31st day of January, 1907. I pass by the question alluded to by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works and will simply allude to the fact that in July, 1905, an order in council was made by the late administration which, in so far as I have said, was entirely beyond their powers, inasmuch as it exceeded the authority that the statute had bestowed upon it. However, when the Revised Statutes were placed before this House in the following session that order in council was made good in terms by the Revised Statutes, and these statutes are undoubtedly the law of the land to-day.

—'and these statutes are undoubtedly the law of the land to-day.'

I am quite satisfied to agree with such an able constitutional lawyer as the right hon. Premier is. I am satisfied to take my law from him and be guided by him, and I say that any lawyer who has given the matter any consideration must necessarily come to the conclusion that, whatever may have happened in 1876 with reference to the orders in council in relation to the Act of 1875, the Revised Statutes of 1906 contain the law and the whole law. Section 10 reads as follows:

> 10. The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto, but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

That is the law, and I am quite content to be exactly in accord with the Premier responsible for this Bill in saying that it is the law to-day. It is not the law as it exists in Alberta and Saskatchewan, because the law in Alberta and Saskatchewan, which is the law I have read, was modified by subsequent ordinances: that is, the rights to-day in Keewatin in favour of the Catholic minority are far wider than the rights of the Catholic minority in Saskatchewan and Alberta. There can be no question about that. I am sorry to have to differ from the Premier when he interprets that law. The right hon. gentleman says that to-day there are no vested rights. He would not say that there are no rights. He has too much respect for his legal reputation to say that, but he says there were no vested rights, and how does he come to that conclusion? Because, he says, under section 10 no Commissioner in Council has been appointed, and no Commissioner in Council has been authorized to pass ordinances in reference to education. It is not necessary to be a lawyer, because I think anybody's common sense will tell him that there is a wide difference between a right and the exercise of that right—between a right in posse and a right in esse. I have a right to my property. If my hon. friend to the left comes and builds a house on my lot, and I simply sit by and let him build it, do I lose my right? Have I not the right to put him off? I may be good natured enough to let him sell my property, but I do not lose my property. The law in every civilized country says that that right is not destroyed, but may be lost by prescription. There are statutes of limitations which say, that if a right is not exercised within a number of years it is gone, but in the meantime that right exists. Can it be said that the people of Keewatin have no right to-day because that right has not been exercised, because the schools have not been created and the school houses have not been built? My hon. friend reminds me that they have refused to grant these schools. I do not say they did refuse to grant them, but we have a proof that the demand was made. We have the proof that in one section of Keewatin there are thirty-five or forty children who have the right to a school, and they asked for it, but because the government have not appointed a commissioner and authorized him to pass the ordinances, it is said these people have no right. I stake my legal reputation that, as a matter of law, the people of Keewatin to-day have a right to exercise the educational rights conferred upon them by section 10, chapter 62, of the Revised Statutes, and this parliament cannot relieve itself of its obligation to give to these people the opportunity of exercising those rights by handing them over to somebody else who is not prepared to recognize that they have such rights. I do not suppose any one would dare argue that the government of Canada could indefinitely postpone the appointment of a Commisisoner in Council or the giving of the authority to a Commissioner in Council to pass school ordinances. Surely we cannot, by simply saying 'We will not appoint a commissioner and we will not authorize you to pass school ordinances,' deprive them of their right. If we do not annex this territory to Manitoba we should appoint a commissioner and authorize him to make the ordinances. Is that not the test? Does that not show conclusively that these people have rights which they can exercise, which the government of Canada would be bound to allow them to exercise to-morrow if they made the request? In the other House an amendment was proposed by which it was sought to include in this Bill the provisions of the Manitoba Act. I do not wish to criticise too harshly that amendment, but I cannot help thinking that those who proposed it, either did not seriously consider the effect of it, or that they did it for a purpose. The Mondou amendment meant absolutely nothing. Not only would it not have given the minority their right, but it would have placed them in a worse position than they are at present. It may be argued—and we heard the statement made within the last few days—that there can be no good purpose served, and no object attained, in asking the government of Manitoba to reconsider the matter and to make concessions to the minority on the ground that any arrangement and any concession that would be made by the government of Manitoba to-day would not be binding on the province, inasmuch as that agreement, whatever it might be, would have to be ratified by the legislature. There can be no doubt about that proposition. I do not dispute it for one moment, but that argument applies with equal force to every provision in the Bill. It applies with equal force to the provision by which the government of Canada is giving them this territory. We are making a bargain, and that bargain is being negotiated, up to the present time, by the cabinet of Canada, a committee of this parliament, with the cabinet of Manitoba. The agreement made between the two cabinets must, of necessity, receive the sanction both of the federal parliament and of the legislature of Manitoba, and it is quite possible, if the government of Manitoba made some concession on the school question, that the legislature might not ratify it, but it is equally true the legislature of Manitoba might refuse to ratify the pecuniary terms which we are now making and putting in this Act. The whole agreement must be ratified by the government.

So that it is no answer to this motion to say that there is no object in asking the government of Manitoba to make these concessions because, forsooth, these concessions would have to be ratified by the legislature. The whole Bill would have to be ratified by the legislature, otherwise there would be no Bill. It is simply, as I stated in the beginning, that it takes two to make a bargain, and so far as Manitoba is concerned there would be no completed bargain until the legislature approved of what its cabinet may agree upon with the cabinet of the government of Canada. That, I think, is a complete answer to that objection. I repeat that the attitude of my hon. friend and myself in proposing the opening of negotiations with Manitoba is quite consistent with what was done in 1897 and in 1905; and I have no doubt whatever that if the government of Manitoba is approached in the same way as the government of Manitoba was approached in 1897, and as the Protestant majority in the Northwest Territories were appealed to and approached in 1905, at the time of the creation of the two provinces, exactly the same result will happen as happened then—we will find that in Keewatin there will be an arrangement made which will be satisfactory to Manitoba and satisfactory to the territory of Keewatin. At all events, if we cannot make an agreement which will be satisfactory to those people, this parliament will at least have discharged its duty to its own wards, to its own constituents, in making an effort to secure for them the protection of the rights which we ourselves granted them and of which we are the sole custodians and guardians to-day

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—And if the attempt fails, I suppose that this Bill will pass without any protection to this minority. The majority rules; the majority governs; if the majority in this country has not sufficient generosity to recognize the religious scruples and the religious beliefs of a minority, I have nothing more to say. I, for one, shall have done my duty in urging upon the government of the day to try and take this miserable question out of politics, to try and prevent these interminable discussions upon what are, perhaps, in some respect, trifling matters, but matters to which myself, to a large number of gentlemen in this House, and in the other House, and to at least three millions of people in this country, are of a very serious nature. Again I say, if the attempt fails, if Manitoba is obdurate, if Manitoba will make no concession whatever, we at least will have done our duty; and I conclude by simply quoting the conclusion of a newspaper article with every word of which I agree. It is not something said by a Roman Catholic or by a French Canadian, but by one of the great newspapers of Canada, probably the newspaper having the largest circulation in Canada, a paper which is a supporter of this government, which has always consistently been a Conservative paper, a friend and adviser of this government, and if the majority must rule, if this Bill must go through without any protecton, I would ask hon. gentlemen in this House to seriously ponder the words of the 'Montreal Star,' which, after discussing the vote in another place, said this:

Still we may be permitted to say that peace which we may desire for Canada will not be furthered by too many repetitions of these 'victories' of the majority over the minority. This country has been built up on the most generous and constant recognition of the rights and even the peculiarities of minorities. On no other foundation could it have been built at all. The most important of our minorities should certainly not be made to feel that it must be always 'en vidette,' It should never be put in the position of holding securely only such rights as it is able to defend, and having to sleep under arms if it is to defend them. This is not a case for aggression, but for brotherly kindness. We should be more than just—we should be generous. The cold constitution should not be our final court of appeal—that should be found in the big heart of a growing people. Canada will make a colossal mistake if it scars the memory of a compact minority with an indelible sense of grievance. It will make another great mistake if it stamps as something alien the beautiful language of France which might so easily become one of the cherished birthrights of every Canadian citizen. It will make still another most mischievous mistake if it drives one of the great Christian churches into an attitude of hostility towards the State. The whole tendency of development in the mother country has been in the opposite direction. There is nothing that leaders of British thought are more ashamed of to-day than the 'No Popery' movements and the persecutions of minorities —of whatever race or creed, for their conscientious beliefs. Let Canada keep clear from such memories. Let us honour the man who is loyal enough to love the language of his mother, and has something in his conscience which is not for sale!

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen, after the very able and lucid address to which we have listened from the junior member for Ottawa, there is little left for me to say on this subject, as he has gone so fully and with such fairness into the proposition he is submitting to this House. All I can say is that the very corner stone of confederation was the rights of the religious minority. Without that concession we would not have confederation to-day. The language used is as positive as words can express it, that the religious minorities in regard to education shall have the same privileges that they enjoyed at that time. In reference to the proposition I may say this, that the liberal contribution now made by the federal government to the province of Manitoba leaves them a debtor to a very large extent, and that the government of the day certainly have it in their power to attach to that liberal contribution such conditions as are reasonable and proper. Manitoba is getting a subsidy dating back four years, while the jurisdiction over Keewatin during those four years rested with the federal government; yet they are getting this large contribution on the assumption that they had been governing it, and it is to date back that long term. Many of the leading members of the government of the day are quite conscious of the unfair way in which the province of Manitoba has acted towards the minority, and of the violation of the terms under which they entered the union. No one can question the fact that Manitoba, in going into the union, accepted the terms that were laid down under the British North America Act. The subject was fully discussed in the parliament of Canada in 1870. I am glad to see present an hon. gentleman who took part in that discussion. The Manitoba Act was submitted to the parliament of Canada in 1870.

The subject was fully discussed by Mr. Chauveau, when the amendment was offered to throw the Bill out. If the population were to come from over the seas, then the Protestants would be in the majority, and if the Roman Catholics were in the majority, it would be quite unfair to the Protestants, and, therefore, the conditions set forth in the British North America Act should be fully carried out with regard to Manitoba. Mr. McDougal moved that the clause be struck out. A vote was taken upon that and resulted in a majority of 47, 34 as against 81, a very large number of Protestants voting for the proposition. I might mention some of the important names that appeared there. John Hilliard Cameron, Mr. Carling, Crawford, of Brockville, Brown, Burton, Archibald, Campbell, Gibbs, Cayley, Grant, Grey, Grover, Hincks, Macdonald, Morrison, Hatcherd, Hauley and others. A large number of leading Protestants of the day considered that in making arrangements with Manitoba this extract from the British North America Act should be made part of their constitution. My hon. friend opposite (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) knows very well that what I say is true, because he advocated a different proposal. He voted for the amendment to postpone. Afterwards, by his noble conduct when he became Premier, he certainly made ample condonation for that mistake. The Roman Catholics of Canada will for ever owe him a debt of gratitude for the zeal he displayed in endeavouring to obtain for them the rights that he generously considered they were entitled to under the Act that brought them into the union.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I acknowledge that I made a mistake in 1874?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Oh, no, you acted on your judgment in both cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The constitution was there and you obeyed the constitution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And you voted against it.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No, I beg your pardon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, you opposed the settlement we attempted to make.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I shall be glad to explain that fully when we come to it. I took then the course that I should take again, and that any sensible man would take. Reference had been made to the convention of 1897 in which representatives on the part of Canada and Manitoba met together with the view of having an arrangement. What was our position? By a great blunder of the Privy Council of England, Manitoba had obtained an extraordinary advantage, which they were determined to maintain. When we met together the assumption was that we would obtain some substantial right that would be worked out satisfactorily for the minority. Our position was like Hobson's choice: We were the beggars, they were in possession under the law, and would only concede a certain proportion. We sat for hours in dumb show, we demanding something they would not yield to us. We could only accept what they were prepared to grant, and that, I do not hesitate to say, was a very minimum share of what the minority of Manitoba were entitled to. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) I think was rather in error in saying that the Privy Council, in their judgment, stated that the powers of the legislature had not been exceeded in passing the Act which took away from the minority their rights. They did not decide upon the constitutional point at all. The point they decided on was that they could not see where the grievance came in. You can scarcely understand that six gentlemen, assuming to be lawyers, had so little understanding that they could not comprehend the grievance the minority were suffering from. I will just read you the conclusion of their judgment. They recite the facts and then they say:

> Such being the provision of the Public School Act of 1890, their Lordships have determined whether or not the Act prejudicially affect any rights or privileges with respect to denominational schools which any people had by law or practice in the province at the Union.

That is the point. What do they say?

> Roman Catholics, or members of the church of England, who are taxed for public schools and at the same time feel themselves compelled to support their own schools, are hardly in any less favourable position than those who can take advantage of the free education provided by the Act of 1890.

That may be, but what right or privilege is prejudicially affected by the law? It is not the law that is involved, it is owing to a religious conviction, which everybody must respect, and to the teaching of their church, that Roman Catholics and members of the Church of England find themselves unable to partake of the advantages which the law offers to all alike. Their lordships could not see where the grievance came in. It was not that they were not willing to settle it, but they could not comprehend. They got a little light a few years afterwards, when a member of the Privy Council was appointed at the same time we appointed Sir John Thompson to attend the Paris convention as to certain trade relations. Sir John Thompson explained to the members of the Privy Council the blunder they had made. When the matter went back to them in another form, they contradicted everything they had said on the former occasion. They said there were rights and privileges, and that these rights and privileges were being destroyed by the legislature, but they said, 'You must apply to the parliament of Canada; we have no power to right the wrong.' They could not reverse their former judgment, and they threw the responsibility on the parliament of Canada. They said the minority could appeal to the parliament of Canada under the British North America Act. That appeal could not properly be carried out. Some fifty years ago I passed a Bill in which an appeal lay from the Superintendent of Education of Canada; Egerton Ryerson was then the head of the public school system in Upper Canada. He was not a member of the government and he was adverse to separate schools, and there was an appeal from him to the Governor in Council. That appeal could be easily carried out, because Egerton Ryerson was an employe of the government of Canada. They thought the same appeal ought to be taken in the Manitoba case, but it was absolutely impossible to carry it out. When the second judgment was given, and when the Privy Council of England discovered they had made a blunder on the former occasion, they attempted to rectify it by throwing the responsibility on the parliament of Canada. My hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Bowell) at that time was Premier, and introduced remedial legislation. The effect of that was that three members of the cabinet resigned. Two of them returned, and the crisis occurred, and nothing was done in that year. In the following year, 1896, when a proposition was made to bring in the Remedial Bill, seven of the ministers resigned.

Mr. CLORAN—The nest of traitors.

Mr. SCOTT—They resigned and remained out for some time, and it was not until March of that year that the Bill was brought up in the House for the second reading. It passed the second reading with a fair majority. The following month, it was before the committee of the House on the 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th of April. The Bill consisted of 144 clauses. During the time it was in committee fifteen of these clauses were passed with 44 amendments. When I tell you that the life of parliament ended on the 24th April, and they had only ten days to put that Bill through, you will understand it was impossible to pass that law during that session. The main objection to the Bill was that the government of Canada could not compel the legislature of Manitoba to allot to the separate school fund any proportion of the education money year after year. As the hon. gentlemen know, in the provincial assemblies a vote is allotted for school purposes, and therefore it is impracticable, because Manitoba had obtained an advantage, very improperly. It is a foul blot on the history of Manitoba, and it will never be erased until justice is rendered to the minority under the constitution. I would like to draw a contrast between the conduct of Manitoba and the conduct of another province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the hon. gentleman proceeds any further I would like to correct a statement that he has made, that the resignations which took place in 1896 were on account of the introduction of the Remedial Bill. That was not why they resigned. If he will look at the records he will find they state distinctly that there was no difference of opinion as to the policy of the government upon that question.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Was that in 1895 or 1896 ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was in 1896 when the resignations to which the hon. gentleman has called attention took place. It was not for that reason at all.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows better than I do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I think I do.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—In 1895 it was said that the three ministers resigned on account of the Remedial Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, no.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—When the British North America Act was framed, and these clauses were prepared in reference to the educational question, it was assumed that the denominational schools in the four provinces were recognized by law, and therefore the Act read in this way: That wherever denominational schools existed by law they were to be preserved and continued, and provincial legislators could not prejudiciously legislate against them. After the convention had agreed to these terms, it was discovered that in the province of Quebec the dissentient schools had been carried on entirely by courtesy; they had no legal recognition, and therefore they were not protected under the British North America Act. What was the effect? Sir Alexander Galt resigned, as a protest. His colleague assured him that no injury would arise, and that the province of Quebec would do what was fair and right. Sir George Cartier gave his pledge that the dissentient schools would be properly protected. Sir Alexander Galt said 'No, it is my duty to see the dissentient schools properly protected before I give my consent to the British North America Act.' He resigned. Sir George Cartier assured him that, at the first meeting of the provincial legislature, the mistake would be rectified, and it was rectified the following year, and the following year Sir Alexander Galt became a member of the government. Contrast that conduct with the conduct of the government of Manitoba. Manitoba availed itself of its opportunity to renounce the separate schools. Had Quebec availed itself of the opportunity of not recognizing the dissentient schools, the charter of confederation would have been torn to atoms. Do you suppose that the Protestant majority over Canada would have permitted it? Not for one minute. Yet there are many persons who justified the Act in Manitoba, in solemnly entering into a contract on entering the union, and afterwards violating it. I cannot understand how any gentleman can for one moment defend or approve the action of the province of Manitoba. They passed the Act conferring the rights and privileges of separate schools in 1871, and for nineteen years it continued. It so happened that a Mr. Martin, who is now a member of the British parliament, and who is rather an eccentric individual, off his own bat repealed the Act. The Dominion government of the day was to blame very largely for the trouble we have now, because they did not disallow the Act. An application was made to the government but they said 'no, it is ultra vires and the courts will set it aside.' It came before the Supreme Court. Four of the judges were Protestants and two Roman Catholics. The six judges were unanimous that the law was ultra vires and contrary to the constitution, yet the Privy Council of England swept aside that judgment of these six judges who were familiar with the question. Several of them had taken part in the formation of confederation, and knew what was intended and had a knowledge of the law. With these facts staring us in the face, it is very hard to understand why any government at the present day, conferring a vast financial advantage on Manitoba, would not couple with it a remedial measure necessary to put the Roman Catholic minority on the footing it enjoyed at the time Manitoba came into the union. The members of the government fully appreciate the provision is made clear, because in another place I notice that Mr. Monk is reported in 'Hansard' of the House of Commons as attacking Sir Wilfrid Laurier because he agreed to the memorandum that was settled in 1897. He said:

> On every occasion that it has been discussed by me in public I have declared that the time for our interference was passed. The right hon. gentleman said that the agreement brought down and placed on the table of the House bore no signature. The duplicate of it was brought down before the House in Manitoba, and upon that document the signature can be found.
> I will not comment upon it at length but I will say this as a man who represents and believes in British institutions after all the boasts of my right hon. friend it results in this: That the minority at the present moment in Manitoba who have their voluntary schools and for conscientious reasons cannot attend the public schools, are obliged to pay taxes for the support of the schools to which they cannot send their children, and at the same time to support their own voluntary schools. I say if you call that a fair agreement and the result of conciliation, the right hon. gentleman had very good reason not to place his signature upon the agreement when he brought it down to the House.

That shows what Mr. Monk thought of it. Now, the Minister of Justice, in discussing it, rather intimates that the time is favourable for Manitoba making the proper concessions to the minority. He thinks it can only be done by conciliation, and he hopes the result of the negotiations that have been going on recently, in reference to the subsidy and the concession of Keewatin, will have the effect of inducing Manitoba, of its own mere motion, to restore to the Catholic minority their rights, of which they have been so unfairly and improperly deprived. In the same debate he said—I am reading from 'Hansard':

I may perhaps venture to say to my friends from Manitoba that it would be a not unfitting recognition on their part if, on some future day, on giving thought to the situation in that province, they came to realize that those with whom those who have acted as we have acted especially sympathize, are not enjoying the full liberty which they are entitled to and to which they aspire. Not that we ask for any promise or any guarantee from them. They should, in dealing with that question, so act as to show themselves not less generous in recognizing the rights, or the claims if you do not choose to call them rights, of the class of people with whom we are particularly in sympathy, then I think we may claim to have proved ourselves in our present action in their regard.

That is the Minister of Justice, evidently in the same line recognizing that the minority are entitled to privileges of which they have been improperly deprived. But, of course, the strongest point is the one to which I referred in opening, that the very corner stone of confederation is the recognition of those rights. When it was found that there were three provinces that did not come within the Act it created a very great deal of excitement over the country. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in New Brunswick an appeal was made to the parliament of Canada on two different occasions. I believe that has been satisfactorily settled? In regard to Nova Scotia the same condition existed, but Sir Charles Tupper and Archbishop Connolly got together and drew up a memorandum which has been respected by the majority in that province, and I believe no further trouble has risen. There is friction only in the province of Manitoba, where we supposed that we had made the terms so plain and so clear that it would be utterly impossible for the province to violate them. They only accomplished it by violating the provisions under which they came into the union. Now, I would like to say a word or two as to why Catholics feel so strongly upon this question. They regard religion as part of their education. If education is confined to the three R's it does not build up character, does not add to the strength of morals, or honour, or propriety. We have an illustration of that in countries outside. There are only two countries where religion is absolutely excluded from all education under the constitution of the country; those are France and the United States. France now is drifting into infidelity. The United States is not a paragon, I think, from which we should copy. It would surprise the pilgrim fathers, and the men who founded the United States constitution, if they were alive to-day, to discover what the effect of the public school system had been in the one hundred years. Egerton Ryerson borrowed the public school system of Canada from the United States. If we are travelling in that direction, and if the lines will lead to the condition existing in the United States, it will be a sorry day for Canada. As you all know, the United States by law, under their constitution, excluded religion from the schools, and what is the consequence? There are more murders, more crimes of every description in the United States than in any other country in the world. Last year the number of murders was over nine thousand. It is estimated that in Chicago a murder is committed about every thirty-six hours. Hon. gentlemen cannot take up a morning paper without finding crimes of every description happening day and night in the whole of that country. I would like to recall to their minds the trial that has been going on at Los Angeles, where the evidence has disclosed that the Amalgamated Steel Union workers have, in the last six years, blown up nearly one hundred buildings, offices and factories, simply because they were open shops. What did the trial of the McNamaras at Los Angeles disclose? That a fiend blew up that building simply because it was what is called an open office. A printer need not necessarily be a member of a particular union to obtain employment there, and because of that, the miscreant sets a bomb under the building at seven o'clock in the evening and goes off to a distant city. The bomb had attached to it clock machinery by which it would explode three or four or five hours afterwards. People were coming and going in that building during the evening, and innocent men were working there, but the miscreant had no thought or consideration for their lives. Nineteen men were blown up in that one particular instance. I just menton that as an illustration to show the condition that things have reached in the United States. I do not think it is necessary to go on and paint the school system that prevails in that country. It is estimated to-day that there are between thirty and forty million of people in the United States who have never entered a church.

In the leading colleges and universities of the United States we know what is called the doctrine of modernism has taken possession of the professors. They have ignored God. Their reason and their views of right are what prevail. Hon. gentlemen reading the United States papers will know that the statements I make are not in any way exaggerated. They have institutions in the United States where a clergyman is not allowed to enter. I know of one particularly which I visited. Take the Girard college in Philadelphia, a large institution finely endowed, and yet if you get a card to enter you will see on the card 'No clergyman of any denomination is allowed to enter this building.' A few years ago Carnegie, in order to get rid of some of his millions, announced that he was prepared to grant pensions to teachers of particular leading colleges and universities, but he attached this condition to it, that it must be an institution where religion has not been taught. Just imagine a man attaching a condition of that kind, making a gift, but declaring that it must not be to a God-fearing institution. It must be entirely independent of religion, and not an institution in which the worship of God is tolerated. Is it desirable that Canada should drift in that direction by ignoring religion in the schools? A few days ago some seven or eight hundred teachers of Ontario met together, and the chairman of the body stated that he was sorry to say that immorality prevailed in the public schools of Ontario to a very great extent, and called attention to it, made a number of comments on it which were also discussed. I read an extract in the Toronto 'Globe' headed in large letters 'Immorality in the Public Schools.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We do not have to go outside of Ottawa for that.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—That is the consequence of ignoring religion, and, therefore, in discussing a question of this kind, the moral influence should be an element governing our views. No one for a moment can doubt but what the influence of religion is good. Surely we have not reached that stage that we cannot recognize that Christianity helps to make men better, that the object of our lives ought to be to prepare for another world, and if religion is entirely excluded from schools boys and girls grow up without any religion, immorality prevails, and the human race, of course, deteriorates very rapidly. That is one reason why, in a case of this kind, if one's mind is just on the balance, he should lean rather towards favouring the teaching of religion in schools. I am not speaking in reference to any church particularly. All churches should recognize that denominational schools are very much better than public schools. In my early days denominational schools prevailed to a much larger extent than to-day. All the various churches for higher education established schools. The Methodist church had Victoria College, the Church of Scotland had Knox and Queen's College. In the early days, at the head of Toronto College there was always a clergyman, Dr. Strachan at that time, I think. I know in my early days there was a clergyman at the head of Toronto College, and therefore, it is a very unfortunate thing that we should drift away from the position Canada occupied years and years ago, by our objecting to denominational schools, and rather favouring public schools. Confederation would have been almost impossible unless the rights of the minority in regard to education had been an absolute provision of the contract, and in regard to Manitoba, that province had accepted the condition at the time she came into the union, and for nineteen years had carried it out, and there was no justification for the repeal of that Act. I may say, further, that it is quite evident in Manitoba that the arrangement we endeavoured to make in 1897 has failed, inasmuch as in Winnipeg and in Brandon, my attention having been called to them particularly, the Catholics pay their taxes to the common school fund, and also have to support the Catholic denominational schools. I cannot say that I favour the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Ottawa. I do not think it is a wise one. I do not think we can obtain anything by interfering in this matter. You might attach a condition in regard to Keewatin going in, but in so far as the proposed change in the terms with Manitoba itself is concerned, it does not seem to me diplomatic or expedient. The members of the government may have some, I will not say promise, some intimation that later on as has been foreshadowed by the Minister of Justice, and partly by Mr. Monk, something will be done. I do not think we can extort anything by adding to the present Bill a provision of that kind, even as far as the territory is concerned. The minority of Manitoba have to trust in the future to the generosity, fairness and liberality of the government of Manitoba. No one is in a position to-day to say that, if a proposition is made to enlarge the terms of the school Bill in Manitoba, the legislature would adopt it. On the contrary, I should say, by our interfering with it, we would only create a hostile attitude, and therefore, where we are dealing so liberally and generously with Manitoba, I would prefer that any change would be a voluntary one on their part, and not extorted by the parliament of Canada. An amendment in that direction would not really be advisable or prudent. I am quite agreeable to the amendment, in so far as Keewatin is concerned, that the law, at all events, shall not be abridged in reference to that portion of the territory, but on the larger question, with the statement made by the two leading members of the present government, I do not think it would be wise for us to attach any condition to the Bill now passed, but leave it entirely to the generosity and liberality of the people of Manitoba to reconsider the case, and in the hope that a change may take place which would improve the position of the minority in that province.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I intend to move some amendments, but before doing so I wish to make a few remarks, which I have written, because the question is very important, and I do not wish to say any more than I need. There are certain facts that cannot be denied. It cannot be denied that the Laurier government has been denounced with a great deal of violence for the last fifteen years because they have not settled the question of the Catholic schools of Manitoba and the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta in such a way as to give satisfaction to the Catholics of this country, and especially the province of Quebec. No one can deny that the chief of the late government was denounced everywhere on the hustings, in the Conservative and Nationalist press, in public institutions, colleges, and even in schools for being more or less a traitor to his race and to his religion because of the settlement of the school question in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. It was said, and repeated, that it was a misfortune to to have at the head of the government a Prime Minister who was a Catholic and a Frenchman, because he was obliged to make concessions with a Protestant, an English Prime Minister, would not be forced to make. I do not like to say too much on this question. But I cannot help asking those who dared to make this statement, if they have gained by the change? I have a great respect for the Prime Minister of the present government, but I should like to know if those who have contended that it was a misfortune to have a French Catholic for a Prime Minister can see that any benefit has arisen as a result of their campaign of denunciation. They not only denounced the policy of conciliation and of mutual concessions of the late government and of the Liberal party, as a crime, but they declared and promised solemnly on the hustings and in all their newspapers, that if the Laurier government were defeated justice would be done to the Catholic minority and to the French population of the province of Quebec, that all the injustices which were committed by the Laurier government would be removed. Nobody can deny those facts. But there are other facts which are equally true. They repeated that they would, at the first opportunity which might be offered them after the assembling of parliament, proceed to remedy those evils. We know that one promise was that the naval law passed by the late government would be repealed—but let us not deal with the question of the navy, let us stick to the school question. In all the newspapers and on the hustings during the last election, and since 1896, they promised the people that they would do their duty in this respect. They even denounced as a crime the policy of conciliation and concession adopted by the Laurier government. What are the facts? What have they done? In vain I look through the Bill to see if there is something which justifies there denunciations and fulfils their promises. I read between the lines to find something, but I see nothing at all—I do not see even anything similar to the school system which was established in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, which have been denounced with so much violence, and which is now so well appreciated that a few days ago at a meeting of the Catholics of Vancouver, it was declared that they would be happy in the province of Manitoba to have the school system which is in existence in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—My hon. friend knows very well that half a loaf is better than no bread.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Yes. It is incredible, after the denunciations which have been uttered, the solemn promises which have been made in the whole country, which are the cause in a great measure of the success of the Conservative and Nationalist party in Quebec, that these promises were not fulfilled by inserting something in the Bill in accord with what they have preached for the last fifteen years. We must suppose that they are men of honour who desire to keep their reputation and not be considered as impostors in the eyes of the country, and their conduct is incredible, unless they have been promised that something would be done to satisfy the Catholic minority of Keewatin and of the province of Manitoba. They must be in possession of some assurance, if not a positive and final promise. Something must have been done to persuade the members of parliament to vote as they did, and to induce the public to think that something would be done to remedy those injustices which they have so violently denounced. I feel sure that members of parliament and others have been influenced by such promises and declarations, as stated by the hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) and there is reason to believe that the declarations will perhaps have some influence in this House, and that some members of this House may be induced to do what others have done in another Chamber under the same impression, and that is why it is important to know what is true or false in the declarations and the allegations made by the hon. gentleman from Grandville. It is in the interests of the country and parliament that we should be assured as to the extent to which those declarations are justified. This is the justification of the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Grandville, seconded by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, and so ably supported by the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken. But it has been said, and it will be repeated, that the object of the amendment will be to defeat the Bill; and as we want to show our sincerity, and show that there is no such object or design, I have decided to move the following sub-amendment:—

That all the words in said amendment following the word 'postponed', in the second line, be struck out, and that they be replaced by the following words: 'Until the 27th of March, instant, and that in the meantime the government be invited to communicate with the Manitoba government and ascertain to what extent the said government would be disposed to guarantee to the minority a system of schools which would be satisfactory to such minority.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is just a week.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—A week, because I think it is a reasonable delay which will allow the government to do what is indicated in this sub-amendment. I think the government ought to be happy to seize such an opportunity, by accepting this amendment, to give the hon. members from the province of Quebec who represent that province in the government, a chance to be faithful to their promises and to justify their conduct in the eyes of the whole country and especially in the eyes of the province of Quebec. There is here no coercion at all. Within eight days the government will be able to communicate with the Manitoba government and be in a position to see if the government of Manitoba is disposed to give effect to the declarations made by the Hon. Mr. Rogers in another place, by the Postmaster General, and more or less by the Minister of Public Works, which have been supported to some extent by some newspapers, and especially 'La Patrie' of Montreal. I say it is the duty of the Senate to vote for such an amendment, and to show that they are disposed to be faithful to their mission, which consists especially in the preservation and protection of the rights of minorities.

The SPEAKER—I call your attention to some missing words in the amendment of Hon. Mr. Choquette as printed in the 'Minutes.' It should read: 'With a view to the amicable definition in the light of existing laws.'

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—I am not approaching this subject with any paper clippings, or even with any statutes. I only want to speak on the facts as they exist, and as they have existed, but I must say that I listened with a great deal of interest, in the first portion of the debate, to the remarks made by my old schoolmate, the hon. gentleman from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey), and I also listened to the good advice given to us by the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), as well as by the revered old gentleman who is the father of the separate school system of Canada—the senior member for Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott).

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—But, at the same time, I was surprised that my hon. friend the junior member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) and the member for Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) assaulted us with statutes and clippings from newspapers to convince us that there is a grievance about the school question in Manitoba; and all this after boasting for fifteen years that the school question was settled by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—The school question will never be settled until justice is rendered to the minority of Manitoba; and it is not settled yet. My hon. friend, the junior member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has stated that in Alberta and Saskatchewan the minority are satisfied—that they have separate schools. Yes, the law gives them the power to have separate schools; but there are so many——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put a question?

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—I am speaking, and when I have done the hon. member can speak all he likes. My hon. friend from Ottawa has stated that the minority in Saskatchewan and Alberta are satisfied because they have separate schools. Well, they have separate schools under the law, but there are so many loopholes in that law that the existing regulations make the separation disappear. That is to say, they have no religious instruction during school hours; they have no school books of their own, they have no separate schools except in name, and the people are not satisfied. My hon. friend from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr.

David) has told us that the people of Manitoba, at a large meeting held a few days ago, said that they would be satisfied if they had just a law like that of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Yes, because they did not expect to get any more than that, and as I said a little while ago, they were satisfied with the law because 'half a loaf is better than no bread.' That is the position to-day. I do not wish to come here to make a political fight. We should get that question outside of politics.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—Do not let us go into party lines. My hon. friend has said that we have been clamouring for fifteen years because of grievances in Manitoba. Yes, and we are clamouring yet; we are insisting yet on justice being done to the minority of Manitoba; and I am glad to see that now we find a large number of friends that never joined us before. Is it for party politics sake? I do not know, but to-day they admit that there are grievances in Manitoba. Well, there are grievances in Manitoba. If this amendment that has been proposed should be adopted by this House what will be the consequences? The Bill would be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Why would the Bill be withdrawn? Is it because Manitoba refused to do anything according to promise?

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—The hon. gentleman said that; I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—But your chief, the Postmaster General, said so.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—Well, the Postmaster General is in the other House; he is responsible there for what he says. We have nothing to say in this House about what is being done in the other House.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We have no right to.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—It is just repeating what you said yourself for fifteen years.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—As I said when I began, I did not come here with newspaper clippings, books or anything like that. I am discussing the facts as they exist. I did not take any notes, and those gentlemen purposely want to mix up my ideas on this question. I said this: That if this Bill is amended as proposed, the government will not accept such an amendment, not because they think that Manitoba will not do the right thing this time——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This time.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—This time, yes, and you will find it out too soon, perhaps, for what you expect. I believe that the legislature of Manitoba will this time open their eyes to the consequences of their misdeeds in the past. This amendment demands that the government here approach the government of Manitoba. The government of Manitoba has no more to say on this question than the government here; it is the legislature of Manitoba that has all to say about it. It is the legislature that will change the laws that are in force there to-day, and therefore this amendment is perfectly worthless because it directs an appeal to a body which is not responsible. Of course, the government may lead the House, they may even instruct the House, but that is not sufficient. They must have the support of the House as well. And if my hon. friend the member for Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) has anything to say in the matter, the House will not approve of any such settlement as is proposed by my hon. friend. After all the agitation that has taken place both in Manitoba and in the eastern provinces, I say unhesitatingly that the legislature of Manitoba will have their eyes opened and will offer a remedy for the present situation. If they fail to do that, if they do not acquiesce in the request of the minority of Manitoba, I for one will introduce remedial legislation in a future session of this House. We still have the right to pass remedial legislation. The order in council ordering the modification of the school laws in Manitoba is still in force. It never was repealed. The so-called settlement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and by Mr. Clifford Sifton, does not stand; it is no settlement at all. It was never accepted by the minority, and therefore it rests with this parliament here to settle the question. In 1875, when the constitution was given to the Northwest Territories, as the Bill passed the House of Commons there was no reference to the school question at all. It was in the Senate here that the clauses respecting education were embodied in that measure.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—My friend the senior member from Ottawa says yes. I remember very well that the then member for St. Boniface, the late Senator Girard, made the proposition, and he was supported by my hon. friend from Ottawa, (Hon. Sir Richard Scott) and it carried here and the amended Bill went back to the Commons. It was admitted that a mistake had been made by the House of Commons, and they accepted the amendment by the Senate. This House is the guardian of the privileges that the minority possess, and it is the duty of the Senate to remedy any grievance that may exist. I, therefore, ask you once more, and I call upon all friends around me, whether Grit or Tory, to see that justice shall be done for the minority of Keewatin, and later on, if necessary, I will ask you to adopt remedial legislation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When the hon. leader of the government introduced this Bill, my voice was the first raised in regard to the absence of this very contentious clause. I asked the honourable the leader of the government, if there was any provision, veiled, or unveiled, in the Bill to safeguard certain rights. He very politely told me to look through the Bill and see for myself. The answer was as polite as he could give, but it was not suited to his ministerial dignity. I knew the contents of the Bill, but I wanted the leader of the government to state if this Bill did contain, in some way, a provision to protect certain rights. I have gone through the measure and I find an absolute lack of any such provision. I rise, therefore, not to protest against the Bill, or to attempt to block its passage, because I am in favour of the principle of giving to Manitoba more territory than it has; but to ask the government to make provision in the Bill, in black and white, in good printer's ink, to maintain the existing rights of the people now residing in Keewatin. I am not asking for anything outside the bounds of reason. I am simply putting a plain proposition before the government, that a proviso shall be made part of the Bill that all rights now enjoyed by the people, civil or otherwise. shall be maintained after Keewatin is annexed to Manitoba. Can the hon. leader of the government in this House object to that demand? Can the government of the day refuse to grant it? Does the government of the day wish to hand over territory to another province, and deprive the people who reside in that territory of their existing rights? Is that the object of the government? It cannot be, but it will be the result if this Bill is passed, as it now stands. The object of the government is to extend the boundaries of Manitoba. We are looking after interests in land and cattle, but we are paying no attention to the rights of the men who live in this territory. Do not let us treat them as slaves, as men were treated in the olden times when they were tied to the chariot wheels of the conquerors. Do not let us throw these people into the jaws of the Manitoba wolves, who will eat up all their rights inside of twenty-four hours. I venture to say if the matter went to the Supreme Court, where I hope it will go some day, that they would hold that no government has the power to hand over this territory and its people unconditionally. I believe the Privy Council will hold that it is unconstitutional and against freedom, liberty and justice. If this amendment does not carry, an amendment should be made to this Bill whereby the Supreme Court, or the highest court in the empire, shall declare what are the rights of the people in that territory. There is the position clear and plain. I am not appealing on religious, or secular, or any other grounds. I heard my good friend from Provencher (Hon. Mr. LaRivière), dilate, with tears in his throat, about the grievances of the Catholic minority in Manitoba. Their grievances have nothing to do with this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Let it be well understood that we are not here to upset the existing condition of things in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—What about the amendment?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We are not here to dispute the right of Manitoba as it stands to-day, but we are here to dispute the right of Manitoba to take over a new territory and to put upon the people of that territory the yoke that the minority of Manitoba have endured for the past fifteen years.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (106) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (143) An Act to amend the Can ada Shipping Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (144) An Act respecting aid towards the construction of the Canada Northern Alberta railway.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

MANITOBA BOUNDARIES BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When the House rose for recess I was about to call attention to the remarkable speech made by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. LaRiviere). For a maiden effort it was most acceptable in a way, but the point he desired to make was not so acceptable. He attacked several speakers who had preceded him, for what reason, or from what motive I do not know. It is plain he has not forgotten the past fifteen years. The members who have spoken up to the present have had different views, but they have spoken to the question, while the hon. member from St. Boniface confined himself to Manitoba and the grievances of the people there under the School Act. Why that subject was brought in I do not know, unless it was to raise a prejudice against the men who are supporting this amendment. I do not think he was justified in the course he pursued, because a man who stood by a certain policy seventeen years ago might stand by a different policy to-day. That would be no reason for attacking him on ancient grounds. We have had enough antiquity in this House without importing it into the discussion. One of the first senators to speak was the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Davis), the doughty champion of the people of the Northwest. He found fault with the Bill because it was unfair to the people of Saskatchewan, and proved conclusively to my mind, and to others in this House, that his objection was well founded. The best evidence of its unfairness in that respect lies in the very correspondence that passed between the Prime Minister of the Dominion, and the Premier of the province of Saskatchewan. The Prime Minister of the Dominion cut off all negotiations most abruptly, and said he had not time to deal with the matter, just as if the province of Saskatchewan had not the same rights to recognition with regard to that territory as Manitoba, Quebec or Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—No comparison.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is no comparison, but comparisons are odious often, as the old poet said. Comparisons are odious especially when they expose injustice and unfairness. The senator from Saskatchewan made his case clear that Saskatchewan was not fairly dealt with in the conferences and in the negotiations that went on, and that led up to this Bill, and he declared that he was prepared to vote against the Bill and to move a six months' hoist. There is one gentleman that spoke to the point on the Bill. Then he had the senator from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey), who declared the Bill to be unjust, and in his learned essay, or pronouncement, on the question I think he proved up to the hilt that this Bill would eventually involve injustice the same as had been practised in Manitoba since 1899 or 1890. That was one good reason for opposing the Bill. Then we had the senator from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), who found nothing good in the Bill, absolutely nothing—found it unfair towards Manitoba, unjust in many respects; and he wound up his remarkable statement by saying that the Bill was a bad one. He repeated the declaration several times, but strange to say, as a legislator addressing his peers, representatives of millions of people in this country, after telling them that the Bill was unfair and unjust to his province, and that it was a bad Bill, yet declared that he would vote for it. Where can you find a parliamentary institution in the civilized world where a legislator will get up and say a Bill is rotten and bad; still he will vote for it. That is a remarkable statement to make. Then we had other senators who lamented the fact that this school question was still in politics. Well, I do not lament the fact at all. Education is one of the most vital interests that can come before any body of men, and it is no reason to support a Bill to say that it is a pity to drag education into politics, or into public discussion. Education is a live interest and always will be in one way or the other. I intend to discuss this Bill from one or two points of view, those of honour and honesty that ought to exist between man and man; that fair-play and justice should be handed out by the governing authorities to the governed. Now, what is meant by honesty and honour between man and man? It means that one man shall not take the other's property for his own use and benefit; that is honesty and that is honour between man and man. Under the system which this Bill proposes to place Keewatin in, that is the Manitoba system, you force them to accept a worse position than they occupy now If this Bill goes through without being improved—I do not say amended, but improved—you place the people of that new territory, who are enjoying certain rights to-day, in a perilous position, in a position of unfairness, in a position taking away their right. This cry of separate schools is to my mind a simple one. It has puzzled me all my life, at least since I have taken an interest in questions of public polity and public issues, to find such bitterness against separate schools.

When the majority of the people, probably 90 out of 100 were Catholics, the Catholics granted separate schools to their non-Catholic friends. I contend that there are to-day in this country three classes of population—Catholic, non-Catholic, and non-Christians. I venture to say there is not one Catholic in the Dominion of Canada who would demean and degrade himself by taking a dollar from a Protestant fellow man to educate his Catholic child, and then force the Protestant to educate his Protestant child at his own expense afterwards. We find communities at large, men who ought to know and act better, be more honest, and have more honour, go to the poor Catholic father of eight or ten children, take his one, two, three, four, five or ten dollars and appropriate it for the purposes of his Protestant school to educate the Protestant child, and then force the poor Catholic to bleed himself once more to secure the education of his own Catholic child. Is that not a thing to be ashamed of? Is that fair and honest between man and man? That is done to-day in Manitoba, but I am glad to say not throughout Canada. We would disdain to do that in Quebec, and I am glad to say that under the guidance of men like Mowat, Ross and others, the province of Ontario has time and again refused to do what Manitoba has done, and the Catholics of Ontario have the same rights as the Protestants in Quebec. Why should the same system of honour, fair-play and justice not exist in Manitoba? Why should that province take from the poor Catholic people money to educate their children? This Bill gives them power to do that in regard to Keewatin. Is there a gentleman among us who is prepared to say that Manitoba shall be given a chance to bleed the Catholics of Keewatin, the same as she has bled the Catholics in Manitoba for the benefit of Manitoba and against the welfare of the nation? Remember that the men who do this are the rich men, because the Catholic portion of the population of the Dominion is much poorer than the non-Catholic and non-Christian. By non-Christian I refer to Jews, Mahommedans and others. The non-Catholics are the wealthy classes. Those wealthy classes take the miserable dollar from the Catholics and prevent them from having their schools. Then they turn around and say: 'Your education is no good, your schools are no good '. Legalized robbery is the lowest, meanest way of stealing money, because the person robbed has no recourse. There is no process of law against legislative enactments, whereby officers of the government are authorized to collect money unfairly and unjustly from certain classes of the population. As far as education is concerned, our separate schools, as so ably and eloquently pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) do not turn our ignoramuses or men unfit to earn their living in the world. Probably they produce men more honest than the other schools, because they are obliged to bring into their daily life the principle of obedience to the law of God.

That is what the separate schools do. What we want in our separate schools is not merely a half hour, or an hour, of teaching of the catechism, but we want the religious atmosphere of the Catholic faith. We want the children to understand that the law of the gospel must be obeyed from nine in the morning till four when they leave, and also in their homes and in their play. It is not necessary to have the children sitting in school under the catechism and answering questions; the sign of the finger is enough to make the child understand what he ought to do or ought not to do. It is not so much teaching catechism as it is having histories that will record facts and not fiction and fable. We want in our schools poetry that will not pollute the minds of the young maidens. We want in our schools the careful religious supervision that will prevent the young generation from practising the arts of race suicide. I say that advisedly. I know right here in the city of Ottawa there are parents who have been obliged to take their children, seventeen and eighteen years of age, from some of the biggest schools in Ottawa, on account of the immorality that exists there, because they are under no moral restraint. These are facts that confront society to-day. We do not want these things introduced into our schools and that is the reason we want control of our own schools, which we have and which we will hold. We are prepared to give the same control to other bodies, whether they be Christian or non-Christian. We do not object to the Jews having their own special schools. We insist on our rights to educate our children according to the laws of the Catholic faith. Let others do as they please, they will find out the results later on. Now, I ask the hon. leader of the House to see that his government plays the game fair and gives justice. His government is strong enough to be decent in a matter of that kind, strong enough to be fair, and strong enough to secure justice. We have no objection to the Bill on other grounds; we are glad that Manitoba is going to have an extension of territory. The Bill would go through without amendment and without discussion if it contained a clause stating that the rights now existing, civil or otherwise, in the territory of Keewatin will be maintained after the territory is annexed to Manitoba. If the government do not see fit to insert such a clause, what inference must we draw? It simply means that the present government wishes to destroy the existing rights, civil, educational and otherwise, by handing these people over to the Manitoba government, bound hand and foot. If that is the intention of the government, it is a dastardly one; a most contemptible one, and one that ought to be fought to the bitter end. I do not believe that is the intention of the government, but I will only believe it is not their intention when they introduce into this Bill a clause whereby the existing rights of the people of Keewatin shall be safeguarded and protected. Otherwise I shall brand the government as the most disreputable one in the history of Canada. They are giving away the rights of a free people and making them worse than the slaves in the days of Rome, bartering away their rights without consulting them. That is not the part of a strong government that desires to be fair and just. We are simply asking to have a two line clause stating that the existing rights of the people of Keewatin shall be safeguarded and protected after annexation. If the government refuse that, then there are a couple of ministers that ought to be beheaded to-night. The hon. senator from Grandville, (Hon. Mr. Choquette) pointed out, reading from ' Hansard,' that two of these ministers saved the life of the government on the distinct, declared promise that if the twenty Nationalists of Quebec voted with the government that the rights of the people of Keewatin would be maintained, and, further, that they would make the amendment which we are asking for here. That is what the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Monk, and the Postmaster General, Mr. Pelletier, promised on the floor of the House. If that is the case, why not put it in black and white now, and not wait until we are dead and gone? Are the government going to remain in power under false pretenses? Surely not. I assure the leader of the government that all we ask is to have an amendment much less than two lines long such as was promised by these ministers from Quebec.

Now what hon. member is going to stand by transactions of that kind? Stand by a Bill which, though I do not like to use a harsh expression, the government seem to be trying to put through parliament as a thief would put his hand in the pocket of his neighbour to steal without being perceived, trying to get this Bill through and leaving the public under the impression that everything is going to be all right with the people of the Northwest Territories. Surely that is not a fair policy to follow; it is not a wise one; it is not a just one; and I say to the hon. leader of the government here to-day that the government is strong enough to stand up and do justice and give fair-play, and then have more credit for it, not only in Keewatin, but throughout the Dominion. There is not a fair-minded man in the country that would not give them credit for that, probably more than they would for their other policies. Now, hon. gentlemen, I have given my views on this matter, on the Bill itself, and I have had to allude to the school question as far as Manitoba is concerned, because the Bill, as it stands, hands these people over, as I say, to the tender mercies of the Manitoba legislature, government and majority. We all know—at least we do not all know for history has not yet written it, but it will be written—the origin of that contest, by, through and under which Manitoba brought about its present system of schools. There are not many in the country who know and appreciate that contest. It began in 1889—under a Liberal government at that, too, which is the worst part of it. In 1889 the Liberal party had come out of the province of Quebec with a notable victory; not a large majority, for we won by five. We had been long in opposition, and long under the heel of the bishops and the clergy in that province. We had been denounced between 30 and 40 years from every pulpit and every altar throughout the province of Quebec as bad Catholics, as men who had no right to represent the people. When we won, and carried the province of Quebec in 1886, which was the first Liberal victory of any account in that province, though Mr. Joly had carried it for a year and a half in 1878, the Liberal party started to undo the reputation it had with the clergy. We used our influence and our power to prevent them from denouncing us as unworthy of public confidence and as enemies of the church.

In 1888 or 1889, Greenway came into power, and he had in his cabinet a colleague named Joseph Martin. He started an agitation for the abolition of separate schools. Mr. Sifton, in his own office, told me he was opposed to Martin's Bill. Mr. Greenway was also opposed to it, and the mayor of Brandon, which was at that time a seething mass of Orangemen, where a priest or nun dare not go out on the streets even in open daylight, was not in favour of the measure. I was there at the time. The torch was lit, a pile of Catholic school books were burned and Martin succeeded in having his legislation passed in spite of the goodwill of the best people in that province. However, we have nothing to do with that ancient history when dealing with this measure, as the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface tried to make us believe we had.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I simply mention it to contradict the statement, and later on I will try to prove that he was the initial cause of the trouble in Manitoba, and it will not be difficult of proof. I can assure the hon. leader of the government that we are not hostile to the Bill as far as it goes. All that we ask is the insertion of a proviso for the protection of a people who have no defenders, in a territory which is without representation, and not expose them to the danger of being trampled on by a foreign province and foreign people.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I desire to shortly explain the reasons for my vote on this measure. Since I spoke the other evening an amendment, and an amendment to the amendment have been moved in this House. In the first place, I was very much surprised at the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Lariviére). He seemed to be skating on mighty thin ice for a gentleman of his proportions. I could not ascertain whether he was in favour of separate schools or against them. He told us that the people he represents have a grievance, still he would vote for the Bill. Although my hon. friend made a speech today, I do not think he represents the opinion of his co-religionists in the western provinces, and I do not think that Mr. Bernier who spoke the other day, represents the views of the people of Manitoba. Another gentleman took issue with reference to the schools of Saskatchewan and Alberta. He made the statement that there were no such things as separate schools in those provinces. I desire to draw attention to the fact that a few days ago some 1,300 Roman Catholics, of different nationalities met in the city of Winnipeg and passed certain resolutions, a copy of which I have in my hands. I should like to know whether these people are right or whether Mr. Bernier, who spoke in the legislature, is right in his statement. I will read portions of these resolutions. One reads as follows:

> In 1905, in the formation of the two new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the Dominion parliament embodied in the constitution of these provinces the principle of separate schools, as provided by the Northwest Territories Act of 1875.

Further on the resolution says:

> Whereas the province of Manitoba has been for years urging its claim on the government of the Dominion for equality of treatment with the other provinces of the Dominion and particularly with the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, &c. . . .
> We demand at least equal rights with our co-religionists in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

I think that ought to satisfy my hon. friend that he is wrong, because surely the people who are living in Manitoba know the system of schools that is in force.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—Does the hon. gentleman say that I made the statement that there were no separate schools?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—No, it was another gentleman who took exception to this proposition. I am in favour of this amendment and opposed to the Bill. I oppose the Bill for three reasons: First I am opposed to it on account of the manner in which Saskatchewan was treated in connection with this negotiation. I think I have proved to the House—and it is in the 'Debates'—that certain correspondence took place between the government of Saskatchewan and the government of the day at Ottawa with reference to this matter, and many letters were passed. I find that the Prime Minister, in one of his letters, led the people of Saskatchewan or the government of Saskatchewan to understand there were to be no negotiations at all this year; that the cabinet here had to face a number of propositions and problems, and it would be impossible to take up so important a question this session. But, a little while after that, we find that the minister from the province of Manitoba is invited down here, and the minister from the province of Ontario is also invited here, and they met together and divided up the Keewatin territory, without considering the rights of the people in the province in which I live. For that reason I am opposed to the Bill. Again I am opposed to the Bill because they have not taken into consideration the wishes of the people of that territory. There is a large population in Keewatin who had a right to be represented in any conference held between the Dominion government and the government of Manitoba. Those people did not ask Manitoba to take them in, and they did not want to be taken in. They asked, by petition, to be taken into Saskatchewan. As they were being forced into Manitoba, surely it was not too much for them to ask that they should have a representative at this conference to see that fair-play was meted out to them in any arrangement that was to be arrived at. The financial terms of the Bill do not satisfy a great many people in Manitoba as I think my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) suggested the other evening. Take it all through, the Bill is a bad measure. I do not see anything wrong with the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Grandville. All it asks for is delay. What is the haste about this matter? It has been under consideration for years, and if it were postponed until next session no interest would suffer. We wish to bring about a state of good feeling in this country. We have people of different races, and religions, and if we can do anything that will conciliate and bring the people together, I am sure it would be well worth waiting for six months to attain so desirable an object. We have the fact that 1,300 of those people consider they have a grievance. Would it not be better to let the leaders of the party see if some arrangement cannot be arrived at. They are told to trust Mr. Roblin. Why should they be asked to trust him? If he intends to do anything, if he has promised to do anything, why can he not come out of the bush and say: 'I am going to do so-and so?' Then we will know where we stand. Why all this secrecy? What my hon. friend asks for in his resolution is not unreasonable. I would not have worded the amendment in the same way if I were moving it from the standpoint of Saskatchewan. I would have suggested that the Bill be laid over for six months until we could approach the government and be permitted to take part in the conference. These people, we believe, were ignored, and were not treated with courtesy. For these reasons I do not intend to vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I did not suppose that the Manitoba school question would be introduced into this debate by means of an amendment and a sub-amendment, such as are now submitted. The amendment is in exactly the same terms as the one placed before the other House by Hon. Dr. Beland. I venture to say, there may have been some reason for placing such a motion before the House of Commons, where members are often obliged to take into account the susceptibility of some of their constituents—as all men in public life know—but I fail to see why it should be introduced here. It sometimes happens that men in active politics resort to strategy for the purpose of placing their opponents in an embarrassing situation, and in the present case the object may have been to keep certain members of parliament upon the horns of a dilemma. But such manœuvring seems to me to be out of place in the Senate. Few of those, I believe, who supported this motion in the House of Commons supposed that it could ever be carried. Had they really thought so, as does my friend the hon. member for Grandville, they would probably have refused to support any such proposition.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I call the hon. gentleman to order. He has no right to impute motives to members of the other House, or of this House, or to say that they voted for a motion that they supposed would not be carried. That may be his own opinion, but I do not think he has a right to say that about any members.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—My hon. friend is utterly wrong. I imputed to him no motive at all.

The SPEAKER—The point of order is taken, and that point of order is open to discussion.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—But he is continuing his speech.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I was saying that they would probably have refused to support such a proposition. Most of them, I presume, having voted quite sincerely—

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER—The point of order raised by the hon. gentleman is this: That the hon. member has no right to impute motives to persons who have voted for that motion in the other House.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—Well, on this point, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I impute no motive at all, neither to my friend, nor to any other member, and he is utterly wrong in supposing that I do.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Well, withdraw what you said, then.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I have nothing to withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Go on.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I presume most of them voted quite sincerely and honestly when they approved of the Laurier-Greenway settlement fifteen years ago. And we stand by it since that time. I am convinced that they, like myself, were sincere in defending the settlement at each subsequent general election and every time when occasion offered.

It appears to me that to adopt the motion now before the Senate, asking that negotiations be re-opened between the Dominion government and that of Manitoba, would be equivalent to declaring that the settlement of the school question agreed upon in 1897 should be replaced by some other settlement, and to this I cannot agree.

I believed then, and I still believe, that the settlement of 1897 was the very best that could have been made under the circumstances. No other government than that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I honestly believe, could have done better—I doubt if any could have done as well.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I also believe that were the Liberal party in power to-day, and the very same Bill before the Senate, my hon. friend from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette), and for Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) would not have submitted their amendments any more than those who supported the same amendment in the House of Commons would have done had the Bill been brought down by a Liberal government.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I call the hon. member to order. He may give his own opinion, but he has no right to say that we are doing this just for a political purpose—either my amendment or that of the member for Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David). I call upon you, Mr. Speaker, to ask him to withdraw what he has said, not only for myself but for every member of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Honestly, I do not think that the hon. gentleman who was addressing the House was out of order. He did not attribute any improper motives; he simply said that if the hon. gentlemen were on the other side of the House, perhaps their views would be different. I am disposed to agree with him.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—No; the hon. gentleman said if the Liberal party were in power. He said that I moved that resolution because, as a partisan, I would not take the same position about the legality of the question, but I would have acted as a Liberal member only. He has no right to say that. I ask your ruling on that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is a free country, and this is a free House.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I think, Mr. Speaker, that on the point of order my hon. friend is the only member in this House to see the matter in that way.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Because you named me.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I am not imputing motives to the hon. gentleman. We have had enough of his speeches to know what he means, but I have the right to state in this House what I think, and I have a right to remember what we did in the past.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—If my hon. friend cannot understand that I am right, Mr. Speaker, I await your ruling.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Mr. Speaker, I raised that point of order because he said that I myself——

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—He has spoken three times on the point of order. He must have enough.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I have a right to say this; I raised the point of order because the member said, confining it to myself, that I moved that amendment because the Liberal party is not in power—so imputing motives of partisanship, if nothing else. He may feel that way; that is his own affair; but I protest against his imputing motives to other members and to me.

The SPEAKER—What I understood the hon. member who has just closed to say is this: It was merely an argument, he was supposing that if things were altogether different from what they are now, that such a thing might happen; but he does not say—I did not hear him say—that what took place was on account of that change.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I should like to know if my hon. friend has another speech to make on the point of order? Questions of education and schools, belong to the provinces, and they cannot work satisfactorily or constitutionally otherwise than under the authority of the legislature of each province.

My hon. friend from Provencher (Hon. Mr. LaRiviere) has stated this afternoon that he is willing to wait; so am I. I agree with him.

Consequently I shall vote against both the amendment and the sub-amendment. I find nothing commendable in either of them.

I have very little more to say to-day concerning these amendments submitted by my hon. friends, except this: Does not the hon. gentlemen think that the representatives of the province of Quebec, who have been giving so much attention to the schools of Manitoba and Keewatin, might more usefully apply their critical powers and energies to the schools of their own province, where the system of primary education appears to be very far from perfect? As I have said, I am not prepared at present, neither is it the proper time to enter into any details on this subject, but, it strikes me that whereas in the district of Keewatin, there are very few people, so few in fact that in most places it would be impossible to establish now, and for years to come, any school at all, in certain portions of Quebec, as for example, in the upper part of the St. Maurice river, also the Gatineau regions, there exists a really large poulation, yet no attempt whatever is being made, nor has any ever been made that I know of, to establish schools there. The children seem to be growing-up quite uneducated. I am informed that the same condition of things exists more or less throughout the northwestern portion of Quebec, and in many other regions of the province as well. Unfortunately, there can be little question as to the condition of the people of the province of Quebec in respect to education. Does it not occur to hon. gentlemen that if the province of Quebec showed better results as to schools and education generally, her representatives would be in a position to speak with greater authority when they demand as a constitutional right the establishment in western Canada of the school system obtaining in their own province.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I have very few comments to make on what has been said by the hon. member who has taken his seat (Hon. Mr. Legris), who is not well able to discuss the school question of his own province. I am not surprised at what he has said about the question before us. He has a right to change his mind, but he has no right to impute motives to any members of this House or of the other House, for the stand they take on the subject. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has not referred to the amendment, it is evident he has not even read it; if he had he would not have said what he did. He said that if we voted for the amendment we would be condemning the settlement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier some years ago. We do not refer to that settlement in the amendment. We do not refer to the schools of Manitoba. If my hon. friend, instead of throwing mud at the schools of his own province, had looked at the amendment he would have read in the last part of it that it is desired, by way of conference, to define in an amicable way the situation of the minority, either Catholic or Protestant, in relation to educational rights in the proposed annexed territory. We are now speaking about Keewatin. There is not a word in the amendment about the Manitoba schools or the Manitoba settlement. My hon. friend has spoken outside of the question and has brought in a matter that is not referred to at all. My hon. friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Larivière) tried to throw some ridicule on those who came before this House with some preparation, quoting from the statutes and making legal arguments, as my hon. friend to my right (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has done, and he referred to myself as repeating a speech that was made in the other House. He said he came into the House without any preparation, and nothing in his hand: I think nothing in his head either, on this important question. Looking at my hon. friend, I can quite understand that he must have swallowed a lot of stuff at different times, but I never thought he could have swallowed his principles, and the speech that he made in the House of Commons on this very question. He now says that he is satisfied to wait and that he will get justice. I also am willing to wait if justice will be secured to those for whom we are fighting. According to a resolution passed last week in Winnipeg, the people there are claiming the same rights that the Catholic minority have in Alberta and Saskatchewan. I would be quite satisfied with that. If we are going to have a settlement why not say what it is now, and satisfy everybody, in the interest of peace and harmony? My hon. friend says the question will be settled sooner than we expect. I hope it will be settled to-morrow, and then we shall be satisfied. Instead of keeping the agreement in their heads and trying to catch a few votes for the government of Manitoba by promising this and that, it seems to me it would be more fair if the government would state their intention before the Bill becomes law. My hon. friend from Mille Iles proposes another amendment, to suspend the Bill six or seven days. I have no objection to that amendment, and I will vote for it, though I think it would be better to leave the time in the hands of the government. I have been told that the Manitoba legislature is in session and they may make some compromise in a very few days, and my hon. friend from Mille Iles may be right in asking to suspend the Bill for a few days. I shall, therefore, vote for the sub-amendment, and if it is not carried, I will insist on my amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not going to make a speech, but I wish to take the House into my confidence to a certain extent. I have been a good deal puzzled as to how I should vote at the present time. I am a strong believer in the fact that the Catholic people of Keewatin have rights, as the hon. gentleman, the junior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has said; and while he was making his speech I really felt very uncomfortable indeed. The hon. gentleman made as clear and convincing a case as well could be made from a legal standpoint. I do not think there is any doubt about his law, although that law happens to differ from the law of the Minister of Public Works, and that of the Postmaster General. I listened with a great deal of attention to the speech made by the hon. gentleman who sits beside me, the senior member from Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott) and to a certain etxent my mind was relieved when I found that that hon. gentleman, who had very strong feeling in connection with this subject of separate schools, after he had expressed these feelings in the clearest way, before he sat down declared his intention to vote against the amendment. That rather fortified me in the view I had been disposed to entertain. Having said that much, I should like to call the attention of the House to two or three points that I noted as we went along. I have already stated that I find myself in an awkward position. I wish to do the thing which is best for the country and best for my co-religionists in the Northwest Territorities, in Keewatin and Manitoba. I understand the population of Keewatin is not more than about one thousand. The Catholic population of Manitoba is over 50,000, I suppose. I would ask the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface if the Catholic population of Manitoba is not over 50,000?

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—25,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not as great as I thought it was. There are two or three points about this Bill that sufficient attention has not been paid to. The Bill does not profess to deal with schools. It is a Bill to extend the boundaries of Manitoba, and to make some changes in the financial relations between Manitoba and the Dominion. I do not mean to say that the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) is out of order, because I suppose one can just as well move against the Bill because it does not contain something as on account of anything it does contain. I have taken the liberty of stating that I do not agree with the Minister of Public Works or the Postmaster General, and I do agree most cordially, as a matter of law, with the hon. the junior member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt). Then comes the question, even though I think that the hon. gentleman from Ottawa has given us good law, am I bound as a matter of conscience, desiring to give the best vote I can, to vote for the amendment? Before one can answer that question, he has to look at the actual position. This is a question which has to be settled between the legislature of Manitoba and the government of Canada, and the question is, if by passing this amendment we will help to bring about a satisfactory arrangement. It seems to me it would have just the reverse effect. This amendment, although said to be for delay only for a few days, means a hanging up of the Bill for this session. We are now within a fortnight of prorogation, and every one knows that such negotiations do not move very rapidly. If either the amendment or the sub-amendment is passed, it means that the Bill will not go any further this session. Will the passing of this amendment help the cause of separate schools in Manitoba and Keewatin? I do not think it will. The effect of our holding up this important measure, a measure which is so important to the people of Manitoba, would be to irritate the people and the legislators of Manitoba and make them much less ready to enter into friendly arrangements with respect to this question. There is more or less a sort of crisis.

We must bear in mind that the gentlemen who are now members of the government, and their friends, during the late election campaign, and for years before that, proclaimed that if they came into power they would settle this Manitoba school question in such a manner as to remove the grievances of the Catholics of Manitoba. I do not say they all said that, but that was the ground taken by a great many of them. It seems to me it is better to give the government a chance to settle the matter. Why should the Senate, at a crisis like this, when we are perhaps within a few weeks of a settlement of this question, intervene and prevent the settlement? No one has given any reason why we should do that. I take it that this is the acceptable time. If the government of this country and the government of Manitoba get together while they are in sympathy over most things, I think it highly probable that they will be able to settle this question in such a way as to remove the grievances of the Catholic minority in Manitoba. Suppose the Senate break in and prevent the bringing about of that desirable result, what shall we think of ourselves? It would be exceedingly unwise, unstatesmanlike and impolitic to take any such action. We are not responsible just now. It is a question for the government, and we had better leave it with them. Why should we interfere between the government and the legislature of Manitoba? The government is doing something. We did something in 1897, but I honestly think there remains something to be done yet, particularly when Manitoba is to be enlarged; and I think this government should be allowed a free hand, just as the Laurier government was.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia). I think the amendments now before the House are irrelevant to the Bill. Amendments must be germane to the measure and I submit to his hon. the Speaker that these amendments are not in order.

The SPEAKER—The main motion is for the second reading of the Bill. On a motion of that kind any member is permitted to move as an amendment a declaration of principle or anything of that kind.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—When the constitution of Manitoba was framed in 1887 a clause was introduced which, in the eyes of the legislators of the time and of all those interested, was intended to protect the rights of the minority in the province of Manitoba, either Protestant or Roman Catholic. We know the result. Acts were passed by the province of Manitoba creating a system of schools, and from 1870 to 1890 the legislature of Manitoba succeeded in getting around that clause of the constitution of the province, and passed the Act with regard to education which is in force now. If that clause could not protect the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba, I have come to the conclusion that no amendment, and no clause that could be introduced in the Act before us, would hold that province and secure the rights of the minority any better than the section in the provincial Act did. I believe any negotiation of the kind which is proposed after this Act was passed would amount to nothing. Therefore, it would be a loss of time. I shall vote against both amendments when they are presented.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—A great deal has been said during this discussion by the different speakers of the attitude of the Roblin government; in fact, the attitude of the Roblin government towards the Catholic minority is practically the subject of discussion. Suggestions have been made that the late Liberal government did not give the Catholic minority the treatment they should receive in the province of Manitoba. My hon. friend from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. LaRiviere) referred to me, I suppose, because I was a member of the government at the time this arrangement was made between the federal and Manitoba governments. I want to make one point clear, and to place the Roblin government in the proper position. That government for years, to my mind, had been inducing the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba to support them in local politics, and the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, (Hon. Mr. LaRiviere) is aware that Roblin has had the solid vote of the Catholic minority, on the understanding that he was willing, if permitted by the federal authorities, to grant the relief which the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba asked for. On the occasion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's visit to the city of Winnipeg, on Monday, 5th of September, 1910, a large delegation was organized by Archbishop Langevin, and Father Coffey was entrusted by the Archbishop to head that deputation to interview Sir Wilfrid, and on that occasion the grievances of the minority were placed before him, particularly for the purpose of inducing him to discuss the situation with Mr. Roblin. As Father Coffey states, in this interview, he was assured by Mr. Roblin, that if Sir Wilfrid would pledge himself not to interfere with Mr. Roblin in changing the school law of Manitoba, that he would grant relief to the Catholic minority.

I will just read from a report of the interview that took place.

His Grace organized a deputation, which was composed of the parish priests of the nine city parishes, including the cathedral parish, with Rev. John Coffey, S.K. of St. Ignatius parish as spokesman, and a few lay members of each parish. Among the latter was Joseph Bernier M.P.P. for St. Boniface.

By the way, Mr. Bernier is the gentleman who delivered himself in the local House in Manitoba the other day, taking the same stand as was taken by hon. gentlemen in the other House, notably the Minister of Public Works, when he stated that he considered the Manitoba school question settled, and that the Catholics lost their opportunity when they refused to support Sir Charles Tupper on the Remedial Bill. The interview proceeds:

Father Coffey was the spokesman of the deputation having been charged with this responsibility, it is said, by Archbishop Langevin, before his departure for Montreal. Father Coffey addressing Sir Wilfrid said that the deputation had reason to believe that Hon. R. P. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, was prepared to make substantial concessions to the Roman Cothalic minorities in the province of Manitoba, if assured of the sympathetic co-operation of the Dominion authorities, and he asked Sir Wilfrid to call upon Mr. Roblin and discuss the matter with him.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied that his information as to the inclination of Mr. Roblin in this matter differed from that of Father Coffey. He judged Mr. Roblin in this matter by his public actions, and statements, and he was well aware that, on a number of occasions within the last ten years, Mr. Roblin had made appeals to the electors in Manitoba to oppose that bad man, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, on the ground that he was seeking to force separate schools upon the province of Manitoba. He did not, for these reasons, think that Mr. Roblin had any desire or intention of extending the educational privileges of the minority. If, however, Mr. Roblin wishes to discuss the matter with him, he would be very willing to see him, either in Winnipeg, on the occasion of his present visit, or at Ottawa.

Father Coffey than asked Sir Wilfrid if he would put any difficulties or obstacles in the way of the Roblin government if it sought to relieve the educational situation in Manitoba, so far as it affected the minority.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied that, under the circumstances he would do nothing to embarrass the Roblin government. His policy, Sir Wilfrid said, was well known to be one of conciliation, and, for his part, he would be glad to see the minorities, everywhere in Canada, treated with the greatest amount of generosity by the majorities.

There was some further interchange of opinion between Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Father Coffey on the question, and the proceedings then terminated, Sir Wilfrid leaving the hall and proceeding to government House to call upon the Lieutenant Governor.

It is understood that Sir Wilfrid's clear-cut and emphatic statements created a decided sensation, and that his departure from the hall was followed by lively interchange of views by members of the deputation, in which Sir Wilfrid was both assailed and defended.

The episode was the chief subject of discussion in Catholic circles in the city last night, as is likely to be for some days to come.

Now I have no doubt that the last two paragraphs are perfectly correct because, as I stated in this House a few days ago, the Roblin government had been, as I would say, jollying the Catholic minority in the province of Manitoba as to what they would do if this bad man Laurier would allow them to do it, but that he stood in the way. Now if Mr. Roblin was sincere in his statement, and the statements he has made for years,—and I presume my hon. friend from St. Boniface knows more than I do of those promises and good intentions that Roblin has expressed to the Catholic minority,—then Roblin has a free hand. He had a free hand all the time, as was expressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. There is no question about it that Mr. Roblin can give to the Catholic minority in the province of Manitoba any privileges he sees fit in his legislature without consulting Ottawa at all; and I fully agree with the hon. member from Halifax, who has just stated that it is an inopportune time to bring this matter up. The school question should not be discussed in this legislation at all, so far as the Senate and House of Commons are concerned; we have nothing to do with educational matters in the province of Manitoba. That should be clear-cut and settled, and so far as Sir Wilfrid Laurier is concerned, he stated that he wished that they should have a settlement; that it was entirely in Mr. Roblin's hands; and the Catholic minority was so informed. So far from Sir Wilfrid Laurier making a football of this matter, he has not done so. I think the delegation in Winnipeg came to that conclusion two years ago, and now it is up to Mr. Roblin, the gentleman who professes to be a friend of the minority in that province, to do such justice as he may see fit, or as his political friends of the Catholic faith feel that he is pledged and bound to give them. I thought it well to put this interview on the records of the House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I had intended to defer the remarks I proposed to make on this Bill until after the vote had been taken on this sub-amendment, but, on further considering the question, I think it is well that I should place myself before this House as I intend to do on the present issue. I propose to confine myself to appreciating the position in the usual way. I do not propose to be carried away by any political consideration, and one of the main objects I have in view is to try to determine what the rights of the Catholic minority are in the province of Manitoba as well as in the new territory In the interests of that minority it is well that they exactly understand their rights, and that those rights are not exaggerated, because if they are exaggerated they will be claiming more than they are entitled to receive, and they may antagonize the party from whom they are expecting to receive justice. In order to do so one has to make a summary review of the school question in the province of Manitoba. I propose to do so as briefly as possible, but it is necessary at the outset that I call attention to section 22 of the Manitoba Act. The terms are well known, and I cite them merely for the purpose of constituting a foundation in my remarks for those who may do me the honour of reading them. Section 22 says:

22. In and for the said province, the said legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have, by law or practice, in the province at the union.

2. An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of the legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority, affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

Then follows the third paragraph:

3. In case any such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then, and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

Then a remedial Bill may come in. You will notice that under this provision, as contained in section 22, which is practically a copy of section 93 of the British North America Act, except the provisions in that section which apply exclusively to Ontario and Quebec, that there are two rights which are intended to be preserved. The first by subsection 1, which are the rights or privileges belonging to the minority, Catholic or Protestant, at the time of the union in 1870, when the Act was passed. The second right, which is covered by subsection 2, is not any right existing at the union, but rights which may be acquired subsequent to the union by reason of legislation on education being passed by the legislature. In other words, although in Manitoba the minority might not have had any rights at the time of the union, if the legislature of Manitoba deemed it proper to legislate on education and to grant rights to the minority, or establish a system of separate schools, in virtue of this section 22, it had the character of constitutional legislation which could not be removed by the legislature except subject to appeal to the Governor General in Council. Now, let us see what was the application by the Privy Council of this section 22. It is well known that after the union, that is, subsequently to 1870, an Act was passed in 1871 in regard to education. Under that Act separate schools were established. That Act was further amended until 1881, and always in the same sense establishing a complete system of separate schools practically as we have it in the province of Quebec. But in 1890 those Acts were repealed, the separate schools were abolished, and the Catholic minority was taxed for the purpose of paying for or maintaining public schools.

It was then that one Barrett, a Catholic, in one case, and one Logan, a member of the English Church in another, took an appeal for the purpose of asking that the by-law, which had been passed for the purpose of levying these taxes, be quashed. Barrett succeeded in the Supreme Court, and Logan succeeded in the Queens' Bench of Manitoba. Both judgments were reversed in the Privy Council, on the ground that the Act of 1890 was constitutional and was a valid Act. In other words, it was in the power of the legislature of Manitoba to repeal the Act of 1871, because at the time of the union there was no acquired right in favour of the minority to separate schools. I have only to quote a very short portion of the judgment of the Privy Council as rendered in the Barrett and Logan cases. Their Lordships first approached the question of the meaning of the word 'by practice' which had been introduced in section 22 of the Manitoba Act, and which was not in section 93 of the British North America Act, and they said:

It is not perhaps very easy to find precisely the meaning of such an expression as 'having a right or privilege by practice.' But the object of the enactment is tolerably clear. Evidently the word 'practice' is not to be construed as equivalent to 'custom having the force of the law.' Their lordships are convinced that it must have been the intention of the legislature to preserve every legal right or privilege, and every benefit or advantage in the nature of a right or privilege, with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons practically enjoyed at the time of the union. What, then, was the state of things when Manitoba was admitted to the union? On this point there is no dispute. It is agreed that there was no law, or regulation, or ordinance with respect to education in force at that time. There were, therefore, no rights or privileges with respect to denominational schools existing by law.

Then they go further:

Now, if the state of things which the archbishop describes as existing before the union had been a system established by law, what would have been the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholics with respect to separate schools? They would have had by law the right to establish schools at their own expense, to maintain their schools by school fees or voluntary contributions, and to conduct them in accordance with their own religious tenets. Every other religious body which was engaged in a similar work at the time of the union would have had precisely the same right with respect to their denominational schools. Possibly this right, if it had been defined or recognized by positive enactments, might have had attached to it as the necessary or appropriate incident, the right of exemption from any contribution under any circumstances to schools of a different denomination. But in their lordships' opinion it would be going much too far to hold that the establishment of a national system of education upon an unsectarian basis is so inconsistent with the rights to set up and maintain denominational schools that the two things cannot exist together, or that the existence of one necessarily implies or involves immunity from taxation for the purposes of the other.

It will be seen that this judgment proceeded on the ground that, although schools had existed before, they were schools which were maintained at the time by the different religious denominations, and so far the question had not arisen as to any system of taxation, whereby the amount of taxes would be devoted only to the Catholic schools if the taxes were levied on a Catholic, or to the schools of the Anglican denomination, if the taxes were levied on members of that denomination. Their Lordships came to the conclusion that as things had been in operation up to that time no rights had been acquired. It was stated by the hon. the senior member for Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott), that this judgment did not really settle the question. One must take issue with that statement. One may differ with the holdings of the Privy Council. It is the right of everybody to criticise the judgment of the highest court, but we are bound by it. This country is bound by the judgment of the Privy Council, and it cannot be suggested that the question can be re-opened. I must say that, on considering the question and giving it some attention, I have come to the conclusion that not only the judgment has been rendered in that way, but it has been supported by the judgment rendered in 1895 in the Brophy case as I will show in a moment.

It was therefore, established by the highest tribunal that although there existed a system of schools which was in operation in 1870, under which the Catholic schools were supported by Catholics, and schools of different Protestant denominations supported by their members, that this did not give an acquired right to the maintainence of these schools, and did not prevent the legislature of Manitoba from establishing public schools and calling upon Catholics as well as Protestants to maintain them. One has to apply that judgment to the condition of the territories to be annexed to the province of Manitoba, and one has to inquire, in applying that judgment, how it will act in regard to the new territory which is to form part of the province of Manitoba. I desire to call attention to my understanding of the effect of this Bill, if it passes in its present form. I think it will be admitted that the moment the new territory is annexed to Manitoba, the law of Manitoba will extend to the new territory, and that, therefore, the new territory will occupy the same position exactly as the province of Manitoba at present constituted, and that they will be entitled to the same privilege and will be affected by the same disability as the present minority in Manitoba. Let us ask further what will be the effect if the Bill is amended, for instance as was suggested by the Mondou amendment. That amendment is to be found at page 4934 of 'Hansard,' and reads as follows:

That Bill (No. 115) be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House in order that the following clause be inserted therein, after clause 7 of the said Bill:—

7a. Section 22 of the Manitoba Act, 1870, 33 Vic., chapter 3, shall apply to the territory added to the province under the provisions of this Act, with the substitution for paragraph 1 of said section 22, of the following paragraph:—

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational or separate schools, which any class or persons have, at the date of the passing of this Act, by law or practice, in the territory added to the province under the provisions of this Act.

Hon. gentlemen will notice that, whereas if the Bill passes in its present form the minority in the added territories will be governed by the rights of the present inhabitants of the province, it was sought by this amendment to establish a right to denominational schools at the time of the passing of this Act, and I will show in a few minutes the great difference that would have been made. But let me say at this juncture that I quite agree with the law, as mentioned by the hon. member from Ottawa this afternoon, that under section 10 of chapter 62 of the Revised Statutes, the territory in question is practically governed by the provisions of the Act of 1875, which was almost in the same wording, incorporated in the Revised Statutes in chapter 62, section 10. I do not quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Ottawa that that Act has the effect of giving vested rights to the inhabitants of the territory in question.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend is not doing my argument justice. I did not use the words 'vested rights.'

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I must retract that expression, because the hon. gentleman did not use it. He said: 'Rights in posse.' But rights in posse and vested rights are quite a different thing. The rights which they possess have not come into existence, and are conditional upon a state of things which has not yet taken place. These rights, under the wording of the statute, are that they are to be entitled to separate schools if certain things are done, if a commissioner is appointed, and if other conditions take place. But these conditions not having yet taken place, these rights have not come into existence, and, more than that, I claim that chapter 62 of the Revised Statues is not a constitutional law. It is a law that is governed by section 18 of the Interpretation Act, as contained in the Revised Statues, that every Act shall be so construed as to reserve to parliament the power of repealing, amending, revoking or restricting any power or advantage thereby vested or granted to any person whenever such repeal or revocation is deemed by parliament to be required for the public good. I claim it is not a vested right: not only is it not a vested right which can come into operation, but it is not a vested right which could, in law, be the foundation of any claim on the part of the minority, and my appreciation of the Mondou amendment would be that it would have placed the minority in a very inferior position to that which they will occupy if the Bill is passed in its present form. If that amendment were adopted, it would mean that they could claim no other rights but the rights which they actually possess at the time of the passing of the Act. They would be deprived of any rights which the minority of the province of Manitoba may have possessed, whether moral or otherwise, at the time of the union, and of any rights which they may have acquired subsequently to the union, by reason of the legislation which has been passed in Manitoba, and therefore they would not participate in any shape or form in the rights which have been secured by legislation of Manitoba. Their rights would be confined to such rights as they could claim under section 10 of chapter 62 of the revised statutes, and as existing at the present time. Now, will it be claimed that the conditions of those inhabitants who have had so far, I understand, a school or two supported by themselves in a country which was not under any system of taxation, a stronger position, or even a position as strong as the minority in Manitoba occupied in 1870? Evidently not, and therefore, to my mind, there can be no doubt that they would not be able to make any claim which would commend itself to any court of justice.

Now let me refer to the judgment of the Privy Council in the Brophy case, as found in the law reports, 1895, page 215. Here is their appreciation of the judgment in the Barrett case. The judgment was referred to by the Lord Chancellor in the Barrett case:

> So the sole question raised was whether the public schools Act of 1890 prejudicially affected any right or privilege which the Roman Catholics by-law or practice had in the province at the union. Their Lordships arrived at the conclusion that this question must be answered in the negative. The only right or privilege which the Roman Catholics then possessed, either by law or in practice, was the right or privilege of establishing and maintaining for the use of members of their own church such schools as they please. It appeared to their Lordships that this right or privilege remained untouched and therefore could not be said to be affected by the legislation of 1890. It was not doubted that the object of the first subsection. . . .

I call special attention to this part:

It was not doubted that the object of the first section of subsection 22 was to afford protection to denominational schools or that it was proper to have regard to the intent of the legislature and the surrounding circumstances in interpreting the enactment. But the question which had to be determined was the true construction of the language used. The function of a tribunal is limited to construeing the words employed, it is not justified in forming into them a meaning which they cannot reasonably bear. Its duty is to interpret not to enact. It is true that the construction put by this board upon the first subsection, reduced within very narrow limits the protection by that subsection in respect of denominational schools. It may be that those who were acting on behalf of the Roman Catholic community in Manitoba and those who either framed or assented to the wording of that enactment were under the impression that the scope was wider and that it afforded protection greater than their Lordships held to be the case but such consideration cannot properly influence the judgment of those who have judiciously to interpret a statute. The question is not what may be supposed to have been intended but what has been said. More complete effect might in some cases be given to the intention of the legislature if violence were done to the language in which their legislation has taken shape; but such a course would on the whole be quite as likely to defeat as to further the object which was in view. Whilst however, it is necessary to resist any temptation to deviate from sound rules of construction in the hope of more completely satisfying the intent of the legislature it is quite legitimate where more than one construction of the statute is possible, to select that one which will best carry out what appears from the general scope of the legislation and the surrounding circumstances to have been its intention.

I see there, I think, an admission on the part of their Lordships that they were satisfied that the intention of the framers of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, had been to protect the rights of the minorities to separate schools, but on account of the wording that had been used, they could not go to that extent, and they had to comply strictly with the wording. I have called attention to that for this purpose: although we had to submit to the judgment which had been pronounced upon the text of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, which had the effect of depriving the minority in Manitoba of their rights to separate schools, at that time, I say without any hesitation, and I appeal to all fair-minded men, that that minority in Manitoba have the strongest moral claim to their separate schools, not only because as was admitted in that judgment, it was very likely the intention of the framers of the Manitoba Act, but also because it was a part of the Bill of rights which had been promised by the Dominion government to the people of the Red River valley, when the Red River valley was brought into confederation. Although it was not a legal right, and has so been held, I say it is a right which maintains its value and entitles that minority to urge again and again upon the legislature of Manitoba, and to claim as a right to which they are entitled, an amendment to the legislation of that province. I add that any amendment which would define the rights of the territory to be annexed as being confined to the rights which are now possessed by the inhabitants of that territory would have the effect of excluding them from the benefit of the moral claim to which I have called attention. It would have the effect of excluding them from the benefit to be derived from the legislation which was passed by the province of Manitoba in regard to legislation in 1871 to 1881. It is well known, as I have already stated, that in that legislation separate schools were created practically as we have them in the province of Quebec. Each denomination supported its own school, and was taxed only for its own school, and they could not be taxed for any other school. The question raised in the Brophy case, was as to the effect of that legislation, and the last judgment in the Privy Council to which I referred held that the Act in 1890 had been passed in violation of the rights acquired by the minority, by virtue of the legislation on education from 1871 to 1881. The Privy Council held that the minority was entitled to a remedial order. I cite from page 224:

The Manitoba School Act of 1871 provided for a board of education of not less than 10 nor more than 14 members, of whom one-half were to be Protestants and the other half Catholics. The two sections of the board might meet at any time separately. Each section was to choose a chairman and to have under its control and management the discipline of the schools of the section. One of the Protestant members was to be appointed superintendent of the Protestant schools and one of the Catholic members superintendent of the Catholic schools, and these two were to be joint secretaries of the board, which was to select the books to be used in the schools, except those having reference to religion or morals, which were to be prescribed by the sections respectively. The legislative grant for common school education was to be appropriated, one moiety to support the Protestant, the other moiety the Catholic schools. Certain districts in which the population was mainly Catholic were to be considered Catholic school districts, and certain other districts where the population was mainly Protestant were to be considered Protestant school districts. Every year a meeting of the male inhabitants of each district summoned by the superintendent of the section to which the district belonged, was to appoint trustees and to decide whether their contributions to the support of the school were to be raised by subscription, by the collection of a rate per scholar, or by assessment on the property of the district. They might also decide to erect a school house and that the cost of it should be raised by assessment. In case the father or guardian of a school child was a Protestant in a Catholic district, or vice versa, he might send the child to the school of the nearest district of the other section, and in each case he contributed to the school the child attended a sum equal to what he would have been bound to pay if he had belonged to that district, he was exempt from payment to the school of the district in which he lived.

Acts amending the educational law in some respects were passed in subsequent years, but it is not necessary to refer to them as in 1881 the Act of 1871 and the amending Acts were repealed. The Manitoba School Act of 1881 followed the same general lines as that of 1871.

The scheme embodied in this Act was modified in some of its details by later Acts of the legislature, but they did not affect in substance the main features to which attention has been called. While traces of the increase of the Protestant relatively to the Catholic population may be seen in the course which legislation took, the position of the Catholic and Protestant portions of the community in relation to education was not substantially altered, though the state aid which at the outset was divided equally between them had, of course, to be adjusted and made proportionate to the school population which each supplied.

The sole question to be determined is whether a right or privilege which the Roman Catholic minority previously enjoyed had been affected by the legislation of 1890. Their lordships are unable to see how this question can receive any but an affirmative answer.

These schools receive their proportionate share of the money contributed for school purposes out of the general taxation of the province, and the money raised for these purposes by local assessment was, as far as it fell upon Catholics, applied only towards the support of Catholic schools. What is the position of the Roman Catholic minority under the Act of 1890? Schools of their own denomination conducted according to their views will receive no aid from the state.

They go on to show the grievance caused to the minority by the passing of this Act, and it is by virtue of that judgment that the minority were entitled to a remedial order. We know that the government of that time presented a draft Remedial Bill. I have my own opinion as to the effect of that Remedial Bill. In the state of mind which existed at that time in Manitoba that Remedial Bill could not have been properly applied. It would not have been received and would not have been obeyed by the people. The only way to deal with the question was, as was done at that time, by way of compromise. The Canadian government, after calling upon Manitoba to remedy the grievance, that the Catholic minority of the province had, effected a settlement with the government of the province. That, to my mind, was as far as the legislation up to that day was concerned, a settlement which satisfied the requirements of the constitution. That settlement is to be found in the Statutes of Manitoba for 1897, chapter, 26: as follows:—

1. Religious teaching to be conducted as herinafter provided shall take place in any public school in Manitoba;

(a) If authorized by a resolution passed by a majority of the school trustees in the district in which the school is carried on, or,

(b) If a petition be presented to said school trustees asking for religious teaching and signed by the parents or guardians of at least ten children attending the school in the case of a rural school district, or by the parents or guardians of at least twenty five children attending the school in the case of a city, town or village school.

2. Such religious teaching shall take place between the hours of 3.30 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and shall be conducted by any Christian clergyman whose charge includes any portion of the school district, or by any person duly authorized by such clergyman, or by a teacher when so authorized.

3. Where so specified in such resolution of trustees, where so required by a petition of parents or guardians, religious teaching during the prescribed period may take place only on certain specified days of the week instead of on every teaching day.

4. In any school in towns and cities, where the average attendance of Roman Catholic children is forty or upwards, and in villages and rural districts, where the average attendance of such children is twenty-five or upwards, the trustees, shall, if required by a petition of parents or guardians of such number of Roman Catholic children, respectively employ at least one duly certificated Roman Catholic teacher in such school. In any school in towns and cities where the average attendance of non-Roman Catholic children is forty or upwards, and in villages and rural districts where the average attendance of such children is twenty-five and upwards, the trustee shall, if required by the petition of parents or guardians of such children, employ at least one duly certificated non-Roman Catholic teacher.

5. Where religious teaching is required to be carried on in any school in pursuance of the foregoing provisions and there are Roman Catholic children attending the school, and the school room accommodation does not permit of the pupils being placed in separate rooms for the purpose of religious teaching provision shall be made by the regulations of the department of education (which regulation the board of school trustees shall observe) whereby their time allotted for religious teaching shall be divided in such way that the religious teaching of Roman Catholic children shall be carried on during the prescribed period. And one-half of the teaching days in each month, and the religious teaching of the non-Roman Catholic children shall be carried on during the prescribed period of one-half of the teaching days of each month.

6. The Department of Education shall have power to make regulations not inconsistent with the priniples of this Act for carrying into effect the provision of this Act.

7. No separation of pupils by religious denominations shall take place during the secular work.

8. Where the school room accommodation at the disposal of the trustees permits, instead of allotting different days of the week to different denominations for the purpose of religious teaching, the pupils may be separated when the hour for religious teaching arrives, and placed in separate rooms.

9. No pupil shall be permitted to be present at any religious teaching unless the parents or guardians of such pupils desire it. In case the parents or guardians do not desire the attendance of the public during such religious teaching, then such people shall be dismissed before the religious exercises are begun, or shall remain in another room.

10. When ten of the pupils in any school, speak the French language, or any language other than English, as their native language, the teaching of such pupils shall be conducted in French, or such other language, and English upon the bi-lingual system.

Although it did not accord to the minority the full measure of the rights claimed by the motion, and to which they were entitled by the judgment of the Privy Council rendered in 1895 in the Brophy case very substantial concessions were made. It has always been claimed, and I think rightly, that under that settlement the question was settled. It was legally settled but the moral claim remained all the same and it was admitted by all parties concerned, and always conceded—by Sir Wilfrid Laurier as well as other members of the Liberal party—that it was not the full measure of relief to which the minority was entitled at the time, and that it was accepted as a compromise, and the hope was all the time expressed that when public opinion was in a better mood to deal with the question, a further measure of relief would be given.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—Was there not part of that settlement stating that this was the finality of the whole thing?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The settlement was announced in the speech from the Throne by the Canadian government, and it was stated that it was a settlement of the case; but it was, as I have stated, a settlement as far as the legal side of it was concerned, and I not only admit, but I claim that it would not now be open in law to the Canadian parliament to impose a Remedial Bill on the province, and to impose upon the province, by reason of the passing of the legislation of 1871, further legislation on the subject. I call attention again to the fact that if the minority in the territory to be annexed were limited to their rights as they exist under chapter 62 of the revised statutes, they would be deprived entirely of the benefit of the legislation contained in chapter 26 of the statutes of Manitoba for 1897. In other words, it would be open to the province of Manitoba to take that course, although the province of Manitoba is bound to respect that statute and is unable to repeal it, because that statute has the character of a constitutional Act. They would not be obliged to apply the provisions of that statute to the new territory, and the new territory might be left without any remedy at all, without the benefit of any legislation of 1897. I come now to another point. My contention is, that not only an amendment of that kind would be much worse than the Bill as it is, but that it is not in the power of the Canadian parliament, in this Bill, to make any stipulation in regard to schools in the territory to be annexed, which would be binding on the province of Manitoba. I think that is a point which has not received as yet the attention of anybody who has spoken on the question.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That point has no bearing on the amendment at all; that is why we did not discuss it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But I am not speaking of the amendment; I am speaking of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—But my hon. friend has not discussed the amendment at all yet; we have not heard a word about it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am taking my own course. The hon. member may not be satisfied with the course I follow. If I have anything to state on the amendment I will state it by and by, but I am stating the law as I understand it to-day, and my proposition is that it is not open to this parliament to amend this Bill, to declare that a system of law contrary to that contained in chapter 26 of the Manitoba Statutes for 1897 shall be applied to the territory to be annexed. It has been taken for granted that this could be done because of the constitution of the Imperial Act of 1871 which says:

> The parliament of Canada may from time to time with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

And the further provision is contained in section 6:

> Except as provided by the third section of this Act, it shall not be competent for the parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last-mentioned Act of the said parliament in so far as it relates to the province of Manitoba, or of any other Act hereafter establishing new provinces in the said Dominion, subject always to the right of the legislature of the province of Manitoba to alter from time to time the provisions of the legislative assembly, and to make laws respecting elections in the said province.

For the claim that in this Bill a provision may be incorporated determining what system of schools shall obtain in that territory to be annexed, one must rest on these words: 'Upon such terms and conditions, as are to be found in section 3.' But my contention is that those words cannot control, and have no reference to anything which may relate to any constitutional law; in other words, that when the province of Manitoba was created it received its constitution in virtue of an Imperial Act, and that constitution applies to the whole of the territory—to the new territory as well as the present territory—and that it is not in the power of this parliament to change the constitution in any shape or form.

It is not in its power to change it as regards education any more than in other respects. Suppose that this parliament should try to make it a condition of the present Bill that the legislative council of the province of Manitoba should be abolished, would it be in their power to insert a clause of that kind? I say evidently no. I say that parliament having been given the power to extend the territory of Manitoba, implies that the territory is to fall under the constitution of Manitoba as it exists to-day, and that no separate constitution can be created for the territories which are to be added. Therefore, I say, that if a clause of that kind were inserted in the present Bill, determining that in the territory to be annexed, the people would be entitled to separate schools, and although the province of Manitoba would accept that, they would not be bound by it, because it would be contrary to the constitution, and would not be in accord with the Imperial Act. The Dominion parliament is functus officio as regards anything that pertains to the constitution of Manitoba, and next year, or at any time after the passing of the Act, a clause of that kind could be disregarded by the province of Manitoba and treated as a nullity. I do not claim, however, that it is not in the power of the province to amend, and that it is not the duty of the province of Manitoba to further amend the legislation on schools from what was passed in 1897, to supplement it in order to render full justice to the minority, but I say that it must be done, not in an Act of this kind, but it must be done by the legislature of the province, and that the moment it is done by the legislature of the province, then it will partake of the nature of a constitutional Act, as the Act of 1897, which they will not be able to repeal. Having given my opinion on the law, as I understand it, governing the matter, I propose to add a few words to say where I stand on the amendement which is now under consideration. The Liberal party deemed it its duty in 1897, when there was a Liberal government in power in the province of Manitoba, to try to obtain as great concessions as possible from that government. The question, I repeat, legally was settled. Legally the parliament at the time, having accepted the concession which was made, was not at liberty to adopt any remedial order and enforce it on the province, but the Liberal party expressed its wish and its desire to have the concession as obtained supplemented, and now that the present government is in sympathy with the government of Manitoba, it is but logical to ask this government to put itself in communication with the friendly government of the province of Manitoba, use their influence with them, and ascertain if they cannot induce them to render justice to the minority. I go further and claim that the people of Canada are entitled to ask the present government, if they have not already done so, to adopt that course.

Although I am not prepared to vote for the amendment as presented by the hon. member for Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette), because it might go too far and have the effect of killing the Bill, and, for the reason I have just mentioned, I have to support the sub-amendment, because I think we are entitled to consideration from the present government. Either they have exhausted their friendly influence with the government of Manitoba, or they have not exhausted it. If they would have asked for concessions let them say so; if not we are entitled to ask that they make an attempt to obtain from them further concessions in order that the old grievance may be fully remedied. For this reason I propose to support the sub-amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

The SPEAKER—The question is now on the motion for the second reading.

Hon. Mr. MONPLAISIR moved that the debate be adjourned.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned till to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 21, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Bill (H 3) An Act for the relief of Keitha Seeley.—Hon. Mr. Derbyshire.

Bill (140) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved the adoption of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I would like to move that the matter be adjourned until next Tuesday. I only received the report a short time ago, and there are a few points that I would like to look into.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not desire to be thought discourteous to an hon. member who makes a request of that kind, but we have adjourned the consideration of this report several times. It has been on the order paper for four or five days, and I do not think it contains anything that can be objected to. If it is the wish of the House that the report should be still further adjourned, considering the congested condition of legislation, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What is the object of putting it off?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not see how we can deal with a certain part of the report. I do not know how a secretary can be appointed to the Speaker, and whether he has a right to have a secretary or not. I do not know whether the House of Commons will put a sum in the estimates to provide for the payment of a secretary for the Speaker. I should like to have some information from the other House as to what stand they will take on this matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Delaying the consideration of the report can really do no harm, especially as one or two of the senators desire to have it delayed. I have no objection to the report, and am only speaking on behalf of some others who desire to study it more closely.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One can readily understand that the Chairman is not in favour of having the consideration of this report further postponed, because the probabilities are that this House will be prorogued by the end of next week, and if we continue putting off the consideration of this report it may not be dealt with at all this session; but I think the chairman of the committee is willing to accept the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Grandville division (Hon. Mr. Choquette), that this order of the day should be discharged, and that it should be put down on the paper to be taken up first after third readings on Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is it to be discussed with closed doors?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—No, open doors.

The order of the day was discharged, and placed on the Orders of the Day for Tuesday.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (77) An Act to encourage and assist the improvement of Highways.

On clause 3,

3. The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways or bridges, or the construction of new highways or bridges, in such province, or for all or any such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have to take the wording of the Bill as it is submitted to the House, to understand what may be done under it. If hon. gentlemen will read this clause carefully they will see that it is possible, under this Bill, for the Governor in Council to select any particular province, and make a grant to that province under such conditions as the Governor in Council may prescribe. There is nothing in the clause to provide that this appropriation shall be made to all the provinces. It is possible, under the wording of this clause, that the grant should be made to only a single province. I believe, as a rule, this House should not interfere unduly in the administration of the public affairs of the country.

The government of the day are entrusted by the people with the administration of affairs for a certain time, and unless there were some very great reason for doing so, we should not undertake to interfere with the way in which the government propose to carry on that administration. On the other hand, if a measure is submitted to us which appears to contain dangerous elements, or which threatens to work injustice to any province, or to any number of provinces, then it is the duty of this Senate to act; or if the legislation is crude and incomplete, to try and make it perfect and to complete it; and it has always been understood that it is rightly the duty of the Senate to protect the interests of the provinces, more especially of the smaller provinces. Now, let us consider what might be done under this clause. I do not say in the hands of the present government, because members of the present government have committed themselves, in a general way at any rate, to the principle that the help to be given to the provinces in aid of the construction of roads shall be divided amongst the provinces in proportion to population. If that provision were contained in the Bill, I, for one, should not object to this clause; but there is no such provision; and while the present government, who, as I have said, are committed to a certain extent to fair-play, might abuse their powers, we have to consider what might be done by some other government—a government which came into power and found this instrument in their hands. Hon. gentlemen will see that, in the hands of an unscrupulous government, this measure might be used as a means of coercing the provinces. If the government of Canada wished to compel the government of a province to do something which, in the interests of their own constituents, the government of the province did not think should be done, this is, in effect, a club in the hands of the government of Canada to enable them to compel a local government to do that which they should not be compelled to do. Road building is a work which peculiarly belongs to the local legislatures; and if the government are, as they propose by this Bill, to take the exclusive power of dealing with their roads and bridges out of the hands of the local governments, there should be at least some provision in the measure to protect the provinces from injustice.

Under the provisions of this Bill, it is in the hands of an unscrupulous government, which might be in power in this country, to offer a large bribe on the eve of an election to the people of any one province. It is in their power, if they are making these grants to several provinces, to except any one, or two, or three provinces from the grant. That is a most dangerous power to place in the hands of any body whatever, and I do not think we here, in the Senate, representing the interests of the provinces, should allow a measure to pass in such a form as would allow of action of that kind on the part of any government. In addition to that, it will be remembered that, before the election, an intimation was given by the leader of the opposition, and by numerous other gentlemen, his followers, that grants would be made to the provinces in aid of the construction of roads. The people of the country were not told, when these promises were made, that it was possible that the grants would be made only to such provinces as the Dominion government thought fit. It was not said in Ontario that the government might make grants in aid of the people in Nova Scotia, but that they would not make any grants to Ontario. Nor were our people in Nova Scotia given to understand that a grant might be made to Ontario, or Manitoba, or British Columbia, but not to Nova Scotia. If the promise of this measure had any influence with the electors, then it had an influence with the electors of the whole country, under the supposition that the grants were to be made to all the provinces. I do not think it is necessary to labour with that clause any further. I, therefore, move to amend the third clause as follows: Page 1, line 17, strike out 'any province' and substitute 'the several provinces of the Dominion.' Line 19 after 'bridges' strike out 'any such province.' Line 20, after 'purposes' strike out 'a subsidy' and substitute 'subsidies.' In the same line, after 'expending,' insert 'in the whole,' after the end of the clause insert the following as subclause 2:

The sum of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act shall be apportioned among, and paid to the several provinces of the Dominion in proportion to the respective populations of such provinces, as shown by the next preceding census.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While my hon. friend very probably has no desire to prevent this Bill going into operation, yet an amendment of this kind, without necessary qualifications, would certainly have that effect.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, not at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For this reason, the fundamental principle of this Bill, is to act as an incentive to the province for the building of main highways. There must be some machinery in the Bill by which each province shall contribute at least a pro rata amount to that contributed by the central government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The Bill does not provide anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While it does not provide that, as I explained to the House on the second reading, the Bill embodies a broad policy, the machinery of which must be worked out between the central government and the provinces, the object being that there must be mutuality and co-operation between the central government and the provinces as to contributions to the building and maintaining of public highways. It is, therefore, very obvious, that if one province should contribute, of its own motion, a like amount to that contributed by the Dominion government, under this proposed amendment of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, it would be obligatory upon the central government to grant to a province, that absolutely refused to contribute, a like amount for the building of highways.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I say yes. So long as my hon. friend keeps in view the fact that the fundamental principle running throughout the Bill must be that of mutuality and co-operation on the part of the province in contributing a like amount to the sum contributed by the central government, then possibly the Bill may be improved.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is nothing to that effect in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—How would you apply clause 6 to the doctrine you are advancing?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 6 is distinct from the other clauses. Some of my hon. friends appear to regard this matter as somewhat humorous, but I am not susceptible to that view.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The idea is, that the hon. gentleman himself is rather humorous and facetious about it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 6 has in view, as I explained the other day, and as will appear to any hon. gentleman who reads the section, that the Dominion government may enter a province and construct a highway, with the consent of the legislature of that province.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This amendment does not interfere with that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This amendment would affect that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But clause 6 deals with an entirely different class of cases from those dealt with by the other clauses. The other clauses presuppose a province and the central government coming together and agreeing mutually upon the building of highways in the province, and accordingly mutually contributing towards that particular end.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—The provinces must first suggest what they want.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Both the provinces and the central government must come together. The hon. gentleman from Halifax, before introducing the amendment should have given notice of it, particularly in dealing with a matter of this kind, which should be weighed somewhat carefully and considered at length.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think probably, I should have done that, but there have been so many committee meetings and so much work of that sort in the Senate, that I have had not had time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What I ask the committee to do is to consider it in that particular light, and whatever amendment is made to the Bill, that should be kept in view—that whatever is contributed by the Dominion government should be contributed by any particular province that seeks to take advantage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How much per cent?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say that during the present session of parliament an estimate will be brought down of a substantial character which would be made divisible among the various provinces on the basis that I have already indicated, namely, based upon population; so that, as far as this session is concerned at any rate, there will be evidence of good faith on the part of the government in making this distribution of the appropriation upon the basis of population. But, as I explained a few days ago to my hon. friend, until the government and the provinces came together and evolved some scheme by which this principle, or this policy, could be mutually carried out, it was deemed undesirable to embody in the Bill such details as possibly some hon. gentleman might think should be introduced.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend mean, then, that the government could make a bargain on different principles with different provinces? For instance, could they agree with one province that they would build the roads on receiving a contribution of 20 per cent, and require 30, or 40, or 50 per cent in another case?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No; the intention of the government is that the provinces should contribute a like amount; that there should be no preference given to any province.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—A like amount?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is dollar for dollar?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, a pro rata amount; that whatever the Dominion government contributes, the province should contribute.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That would be a like amount, dollar for dollar.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, dollar for dollar.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Carnegie principle?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That, in a word, is the policy of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is no good.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I think if the hon. gentleman will read the amendment he will find that it is simply embodying what he himself declared was the intention of the government, and not only what he declared, but what the Bill purports to have in view. Now, what is the preamble of this Bill?

Whereas the highways of Canada constitute an important part of the facilities which are necessary for any efficient national scheme of transportation and inter-communication: and whereas, with the increasing progress and development of the country it is desirable and expedient to improve and extend the existing highway facilities, and for that purpose to give assistance to the various provinces of Canada.

Now the hon. gentleman said it is the intention of the government to divide the lump sum that will be voted among the provinces according to population.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Provided they contribute likewise.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It does not say that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman did not say that, and if he wants to put it in the Bill, I shall vote for it, and I think he will find that it will receive the unanimous approval of the House. So far we do not disagree. Now, this amendment of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, as I read it, simply embodies this declaration of the government that it shall divide this money and pay it over to the provinces according to population; but the hon. gentleman says this amendment makes it imperative on the government to give it, nolens volens, to each province without any bargain. I say no, because the hon. gentleman will notice, when he reads this amendment, that it does not vary in the least the first part of clause 3, and I intend to vote for the maintaining of clause 4. Clause 3 provides that:

3. The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council——

This is not varied

—grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways or bridges, or the construction of new highways or bridges, in any such province, or for all or any such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

Now the addition is:

The sum of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act shall be apportioned among, and paid to the several provinces of the Dominion in proportion to the respective populations of such provinces as shown by the next preceding census.

That is all there is in the amendment to this clause. It is a declaration that the lump sum voted by parliament in any year shall be on such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, paid over to the several provinces.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but does not my friend see that the very objection raised by the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) is the saving grace of the clause? That is to say, it is optional with the Dominion government to contribute to any province. If another province does not contribute, the Dominion government is in a position to say we shall not contribute to your province. That is what my hon. friend from Halifax seeks to remedy. He remedies it by making it obligatory on the central government, if it make a grant to any one province, that a relative grant shall be made to every province in the Dominion

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT--Upon such terms and conditions as are provided by order in council.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is obligatory on the central government, the moment they have made a grant to one province, to make a pro rata grant to every other province in the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Provided they will agree to the terms and conditions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 3 in the Bill provides that the Governor in Council may, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed, grant to any province.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, it does not say so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED--I am reading the Bill. Power is given to the Dominion government to grant to any province such amount as may be determined upon. That places in their hands the right to say whether another province shall correspondingly participate in the fund. My hon. friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) said this would permit the government to differentiate between the provinces, and to remedy that condition of affairs, he says the subsidy shall be distributed amongst all the provinces, and he proposes to accomplish that by this amendment.

> The sum of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act shall be apportioned among and paid to the several provinces of the Dominion in proportion to the respective populations of such provinces as shown by the then next preceding census.

That makes it obligatory on the government, irrespective of pro rata contribution, to pay to the other provinces who may not have contributed to highways at all. It must be quite apparent to the hon. gentleman that the basis of this Bill is mutuality; the provinces must contribute a like amount to that contributed by the central government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I was pointing out that the total amount to be voted in any year shall be, under this amendment, divided pro rata, according to the population in each province, but upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council. Now, these terms and conditions are based upon a general principle and are offered to the several provinces, and then these provinces will be on an equal footing, and it will be for the provinces to accept or refuse them. If among these terms and conditions the federal government says that the provinces will have to pay dollar for dollar for what the federal government contributes, it will be for the provinces to decide whether they will accept the grant on these conditions. I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the further advantage that the federal government retains and may exercise. He will find it in clause 4:

> Any highway for which aid is granted to a province shall be improved or constructed, as the case may be, according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the minister, and specified in each case in an agreement between the minister and the government of the province, which agreement the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is simply the amount voted by the central government. There is nothing in this clause that compels the provincial government to contribute a like amount.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is stated in clause 3: 'on such terms and subject to such conditions as prescribed in order in council.' Leaving out the amendments that are suggested to this clause, the argument my hon. friend makes could be as well made against the Bill as it stands without the amendment. There is nothing outside of those terms to allow the federal government to impose the condition that dollar for dollar should be contributed by each province. The powers which the government retain are exactly the same as those which are in the Bill, and there is only in this amendment the declaration that the money shall be divided and paid over according to population. It is the very principle which the hon. the leader of the government, has admitted to be the one which is behind this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To shorten it, will my hon. friend give this as a notice of motion, so that we may consider its legal bearing in the sense in which I have mentioned, and we will take the Bill up to-morrow? I would suggest to my hon. friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) that the principle that I have attempted to lay down is one that will be readily recognized as fair, that all the provinces shall equally participate, provided they agree to the conditions. Let my hon. friend from Halifax make that perfectly plain, that there must be mutuality between the provinces and the central government, I do not say dollar for dollar.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—In order that we may avoid disagreement I should like to make a suggestion. So far the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Halifax simply carries the idea into the Bill that this will be apportioned among the provinces at so much per head per population, as a federal subsidy is paid.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think it exacts anything from the province. That is what I find fault with.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—When the hon. gentleman laid this Bill on the table of the House we found nothing in it either. If it is the intention of my hon. friend to embody this principle, and this discretionary power, in the Bill, I would suggest that he himself draft the amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is a question of policy. I draw attention to the unfair position he takes. I am disposed to let the Governor in Council exercise all those powers and dictate those terms and conditions freely. My hon. friend says 'You are suggesting an amendment to this clause. Why do you not go further and say what the province will contribute?'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I thought the hon. gentleman said we could draft an amendment indicating that the province should give dollar for dollar with the federal government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I said that the province which derived a benefit from the scheme must comply with the general conditions so far as contribution is concerned, and all the other conditions which will be incident to the arrangement. I want to make it clear that the province must contribute. If one province contributes, and others do not, the contribution of the federal government will not be distributed over those provinces which do not contribute.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I claim the federal government has absolute jurisdiction in dictating the terms and conditions under which this grant will be made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have under the present Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My hon. friend is afraid, by adding that this sum is to be distributed pro rata, that it will tie the hands of the government. If the hon. gentleman will read clauses 3 and 4 with the amendment, he will find the federal government retains absolutely the same authority as it has under the present draft Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the suggestion of the hon. leader of the government in this House is quite fair, that he has not had time to consider the amendment, but I draw his attention to the fact that if he thinks the amendment does not reach the point that was raised, it might be further amended. I think when the hon. gentleman considers clauses 3 and 4 he will see that it will be open to the government, under the amendment as worded, to apportion in favour of the several provinces an amendment according to the population and to impose, for instance, as a condition that the amount shall be paid to each province as each province shall contribute such-and-such proportion—a like amount, or twenty per cent of the amount for the same purposes. It seems perfectly clear that it would be open to the government to impose that condition, or any other condition. There is nothing specially directory as to what conditions the government may impose, but in the spirit of the Bill I understand that there should be conditions that are in principle alike, and if conditions of that kind are imposed, provided they are imposed on all provinces alike, and one province is not willing to make a contribution, it will mean that that province shall be unable to receive its share, until it is ready to contribute.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman the leader of the House wishes further time, he had better move that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would like to have one or two assurances from the leader of the government. Under the Bill it is open to the central power to make the terms and conditions upon which this money shall be given to the several provinces, or none of the provinces. The government should be in a position to-day to state what the terms and conditions are upon which this money shall be given or may be given. It is open now to the government to make terms and conditions with one or all the provinces. It may make terms and conditions with Manitoba to give it a dollar or ten cents. If the province put up ten cents they get a dollar. If the federal government put up a million, all they have to contribute is $100,000. Then it is open to the government to go down to Nova Scotia and say, 'You cannot get the money unless you pay twenty cents on the dollar.' This is the condition of things which may exist under the present Bill. That power lies in the hands of the government. I want no such privilege given to the administration. The government should make it plain now, and when the leader of the government brings down his amendment he should make it plain that should five or ten million dollars be voted by this parliament for the use of highways, the terms and conditions upon which the money is to be allotted to the several provinces shall be distinctly stated in the Bill. There should be no power left in the hands of the government to discriminate between provinces—not even the suspicion of a power. They should state emphatically that if the parliament of Canada votes five, ten or fifteen million for highways, it shall be allotted to the provinces upon condition that they pay so much pro rata, or so much according to the amount allowed to the provinces. I would not allow the government to control that matter one minute. That is a point on which the leader of the government would do well to consult his colleagues, and bring down the necessary information. It is only fair to the country that it should be known upon what ground this money will be allotted to the several provinces. The power in the hands of the government under the Bill is a dangerous one. It says the terms and conditions mutually agreed upon between the federal and provincial power that it shall be allowed. What does that mean? The federal government may go to Quebec, and put up a proposition which Quebec cannot and will not accept. The government has then the power to turn around and hand it over to Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Not under the amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not under the amendment, but under the Bill. If Canada votes ten millions of dollars for highways, and the government of the Dominion can come to a satisfactory agreement with only one province, then the central government has the authority to hand over that ten millions to one province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Impossible.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But it is under the Bill, and I say that it should not be left in their hands. It is not only an absurd thing, but it is outrageous. This money should be controlled by parliament, and not by the government, and the expenditure should be controlled by the provincial legislatures, and not by any federal office, or this government. That is the principle upon which I stand. If this government is willing and able to give ten, fifteen and twenty million dollars a year for the purpose of highways, I am prepared to have that amount voted; but I am not prepared to allow this government to go into the several provinces and expend that money, under any condition, or any consideration. I know too well what would become of that money in time of stress and necessity, especially electoral necessity.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—If my hon. friend will refer to the debates of the House of Commons on Monday, January 22, he will find that the Hon. Mr. Cochrane, in introducing this identical Bill, said:

> The money will be decided the same as our subsidies for the different provinces, and the object will be to work in with the different local governments. We shall have to get their permission in any case before going on, either with them or alone, and in deciding what roads shall be improved or where the work is to be done.
> Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I ask my hon. friend to tell us upon what principle or basis is the division to be made amongst the provinces?
> Mr. COCHRANE. Either with what they choose to grant, or if they do not like to grant anything at all, we will go on, with their consent, to fix a standard of roads to be constructed and then the Dominion can go on either with or without the assistance of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, that is why clause 6 is there.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—Then Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

> Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I was asking the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) to tell us if there is any basis of allotment as among the provinces. The provincial subsidies are based on population; is this based on population?
> Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, I explained that it was to be on the same basis as that upon which the subsidies are granted to the provinces.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—Well, it strikes me that that is the object of this amendment, simply completing the object Mr. Cochrane had in view when introducing this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have said that that is the intention of my hon. friend from Halifax in bringing in his amendment, but the only thing is I disagree with him as to the effect of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—It strikes me that was Mr. Cochrane's idea, only he forgot to put it in the Bill, and we intend to remedy it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. leader of the government tell me, according to the statement of the Minister of Railways, that this government will go into a municipality and construct a road in spite of the provincial law? Does he hold that constitutional? Mr. Cochrane states that here—that they will enter into a mutual agreement and if the province does not agree to allow the Dominion government to construct the road, the Dominion government will go in and construct it alone. Will the leader of the government tell me if that is constitutional ground to take?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman will read clause 6 he will find—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, but there is the statement of the minister.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is not for me to answer my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would prefer that you should answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My hon. friend will find clause 6 says:

> 6. The minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council and upon such terms and conditions as are prescribed by order in council, may undertake the construction of any new highway or the improvement of any existing highway in any province, and may expend in such improvement or construction the whole or any part of the sums voted by parliament for such subsidy to that province. Provided, however, that the minister shall first obtain the necessary authority from the legislature of such province and the consent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not discussing the Bill, I am discussing the statement of the minister, and we know in what spirit this law will be administered. There is the statement of the minister against his own Bill. I am not making the statement, but here is a Bill which provides against it, and here is the minister declaring formally to parliament that if the provincial or municipal body do not undertake the work, the government will go in and do it, and I believe Mr. Cochrane is bully enough to do it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When? To-morrow?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Before the committee rises I would ask my hon friend, in order to better understand this statement, if he would tell us, not in too many details, but generally, what his understanding is of the terms and conditions which are mentioned in clause 3? I would like, for my own information, to have an idea of the nature of the 'terms and conditions' which are there in contemplation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is what I asked him.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The terms are very vague. I do not really know that I understand what they mean.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For instance, such a term as I have mentioned, that of contribution. Location might be another term. The class of a road might be a condition. The burden of maintenance might be a condition—upon whom should fall the burden of maintenance—and many other factors of this kind would necessarily enter into the discussion of such an arrangement I think this is all I can say about it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend, as I understand him, lays down two propositions. If I am not correct, of course, he will set me right—first of all, that, other things being equal, the distribution will be made according to population.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—In that I understand him correctly?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—And in the next place, that the intention of the government now, although it does not appear to have been so described in the speech of the minister who introduced the Bill, is that no money will be spent unless the particular province in which it is to be spent contributes in proportion either a like amount, or whatever sum may be fixed, and that that sum will be the same for the various provinces?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is what I understand, yes. A case might possibly arise under clause 6 where it would be manifestly the duty of the Dominion government to construct a road through a province, say something having to do with the development of a public work. In such a case, of course, the province would participate in all the advantages of the construction of such a road, and yet the burden of it might fall upon the central government and they alone could carry it out with the consent of the legislature of the province. I simply cite that to illustrate the class of work that might fall upon the central government under clause 6.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But that would be exceptional.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, of course clause 6 is intended to deal with exceptional cases, with cases in which the central government might not naturally expect the provincial government to contribute.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I take it for granted that all those works, being provincial and municipal works, wherein the municipalities owning the roads and doing a part of the work are naturally called in to participate, that such works are to be carried on as a general principle by the provinces under terms and conditions and specifications laid down in the contract of agreement. That is what I understand?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In all fairness, the amendments submitted by the hon. member from Halifax should be left to the leader of the House for consideration. It is a fact that the government are going to make an attempt to give back to the people a portion of the very large revenue which they have taken from the people. They have decided that a good excuse for giving it back would be to build improved roads. It appears to me that, as the people have contributed that money, they should get it back, without having it ear-marked for the purpose of building roads. Some provinces require much more money for the purpose of road building than others. We do not require as much money to build roads in the prairie provinces as they do in Ontario and British Columbia. But our people have to contribute towards making this great surplus, and they certainly ought to participate in any money that is paid back to the provinces, and they should be entitled to receive their share of this surplus without having it ear-marked. Why should they not have the money for the purpose of relieving themselves from any kind of taxation? The province of Ontario have very excellent roads, and they vote large sums of money for that purpose. The province does not spend the money, it is handed over to the municipalities. It seems to me that it is an absurd proposition to say that the federal government shall undertake the expenditure of money in the provinces for the purpose of building highways. Some gentlemen have been agitating for an all-red route through Canada, from east to west, practically an automobile road through Canada. The people interested in automobiles, owners and manufacturers, have become very much interested in such a highway. I do not think the government is justified in ear-marking the taxpayers money for the purpose of building any such road throughout the Dominion Our main roads now, for through traffic, are railroads, and if we are spending money for roads, we should do it by way of assisting in building roads in newly settled districts, and not for main highways leading from one province into another. The road the farmer wants, is a road to enable him to get his products to the market in an easy way. The provincial government should be allowed to direct how this money should be spent. I was pleased to hear the explanations given by the leader of the House. He seems to be inclined to the idea that the people should have this money paid back to them pro rata. If that principle is adopted, and the money is handed back to the province pro rata, without being ear-marked, I think it will be a good plan, and this House should approve of the measure, but it should be distinctly understood that this money would be handed back to the provinces without being ear-marked by the federal government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Some of my hon. friends seem to be very suspicious as to the ultimate application of this money. The government is making this expenditure in deference to a public sentiment which has been expressed from the Atlantic to the Pacific on this important question. I think every Board of Trade from Cape Breton to Victoria has memoralized the Dominion government to enter upon this very important undertaking.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is that for a main highway, the all-red route?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Main highways through Canada. My hon. friend from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) was president of the Canadian Foresters Convention, which is one of the most representative institutions in Canada, and during his presidency, I think it was, they held a convention, in 1911, and made the following pronouncement, upon this important subject:

We should build a national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the cost of which should be borne by the federal government. This road, so far as this part of Canada is concerned, might run from Ottawa to Montreal, from Montreal to Quebec, from Quebec to Fredericton, then another road from Quebec to the Labrador coast. The latter road would open up immense areas for agriculture, facilitate the development of our water-powers, fisheries and forests, in that part, and would precede the railway which must one day be built to Labrador to open a door to be used by Europe for trade with America.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Did you hear whether the member for Russell subscribed to that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend should have resigned the presidency at once, when he found the convention was against him.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend think Boards of Trade high constitutional authorities?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They represent public sentiment.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No, they do not, by no manner of means.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I want to say that we had a few very visionary people at that convention. I do not hesitate to say that I think it the most insane proposition that ever was put before a convention.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not in accord with my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) when he suggests that this money should not be earmarked. I think it should be expended for the improvement of highways.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The fear that my hon. friend expressed that an automobile road from the Atlantic to the Pacific might, under the terms of this Bill, be undertaken is one that will be controlled at the proper place. The right hon. the leader of the House of Commons declared in another place that after the close of this session he will call the representatives of the various provinces together at Ottawa and discuss with them a general plan for the improvement of the highways in their provinces. Each province will state what its wants are, and the sentiment of that province will prevail in the application of the money voted to it by the federal government. That is why I do not fear leaving absolute discretion to the federal authorities to fix the terms, conditions and specifications under which this money shall be expended.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Under clause 6 they can do it without that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have not yet understood the usefulness of clause 6. If the money is to be made payable to each province, I still less see the usefulness of clause 6. The leader of the government in this Chamber suggests that it may be utilized for special work carried on with the consent of the province and municipality by the federal government. It seems to me that this clause has nothing to do with the general scheme of improving the highways through Canada. I am convinced, when I read this Bill, that clauses 3, 4 and 5 are all that are necessary to carry out that scheme. I quite realize that this Bill has been prepared in a hurry, and the federal government will know better where it stands after it has had a conference with the representatives of the various provinces. I should like to give the authority of the Prime Minister who said in another place, at page 3713 of 'Hansard':

> I do not claim that this Bill is a perfect Bill. It has been prepared in the hurry of a session, by a government which had to meet parliament within five weeks after it assumed office, and the Minister of Railways and Canals, who introduced the measure, stated that it was introduced as the best method of dealing with this matter that could be devised by the government in the short time at their disposal for its consideration. It is very likely that on the next or the following session, a more elaborate measure may be introduced, but it is considered desirable by the government that no time should be lost in implementing the pledge made by the Liberal-Conservative party in the last election that it would call for aid from the federal treasury of Canada towards the improvement of highways throughout the country.

I feel that the government will know exactly where it stands when it has had that conference, and I am convinced that a general plan will be agreed upon by the representatives of the provinces and the federal authority. The hon. gentleman may not be in a position to go into the details and give an explanation as to the advantage of retaining clause 6. I do not see the utility of clause 6 in view of the fact that the money will be apportioned and paid over to the various provinces according to population. Probably after a conference takes place conditions may evolve which will justify supplementing this Bill by further legislation, but up to this moment it seems to me you will find in clauses 3, 4 and 5 all that you will require to reach the object which is contained in the preamble.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (143) An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: This Bill deals with rather a technical subject, and possibly the House would be better pleased if I read a memo. which has been furnished me on the subject, rather than explain. The memo. reads as follows:

The reason for the amendment is that many of these auxiliary propelled ships are not employed solely in fishing. If they were, they would be exempt under the present law from having to have a certificated master in charge. They engage in fishing for three, six, or nine months only, and after that they carry cargo between the small ports in the maritime provinces.

Without the installation of the gasolene engine, sailing boats are also exempt from the provisions requiring a certificated master to be in charge, if they are under 150 tons registered tonnage. (See section 5 of chap. 65, Statutes 1903, raising such tonnage limit from 100 to 150 tons). But the usual custom to-day is to install a small gasolene engine in boats which are to all intents and purposes sailing boats so as to aid their movements in calm weather. As soon as a gasolene engine is put in they become steamships under the provisions of section 743 of the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act, which reads as follows:

743. Any provisions of this Act applying to steamers or steamships shall apply to ships propelled by electricity or other mechanical power with such modifications as the Board of Trade may prescribe for the purpose of adaptation.

The board of trade have advised the Department of Marine and Fisheries that it is their practice to classify gasolene propelled vessels as steamers. The reason why reference is made in this matter to the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act instead of to the Canada Shipping Act, is that the Canadian Act is silent in part 1, which relates to registration of shipping as regard such ships. The department is advised that in these circumstances the provisions of the Imperial Act would govern. Unless therefore some provision is made to exempt these sailing vessels with their small gasolene engines on board from the operation of Part II of the Canada Shipping Act, every one of them will require, under section 96 of the Canada Shipping Act to have a certified master in charge. There were 4,588 boats with gasolene engines engaged in the fisheries of Canada in 1910-11, (See answer in 'Hansard,' February 8, 1912, page 2722).

The Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee).

Hon. Mr. BOYER—This clause refers to steamships of not more than five tons. Is the word 'steamship' a proper word to use for boats of five tons?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is one of the difficulties of the Imperial Shipping Act. Anything propelled by gasolene, or steam, is a steamship, and it is to overcome that difficulty we are amending the Bill. Then my hon. friend will have to keep in view that we have to work in the Canada Shipping Act together with the Imperial Shipping Act so that they will harmonize as much as possible.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia), from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill as amended was then read the third time and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (144) An Act respecting aid toward the construction of the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (88) An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a proposal to amend clause 3. My right hon. friend has suggested that the appointment of a tariff commission should be during pleasure. The difficulty that presents itself to the government in accepting this suggestion is that capable men would hesitate about taking office under such a tenure. It is desirable they should feel that they would be secure in their office during at least five years. It will probably involve men abandoning such positions as they may at present occupy and accepting this office, and it would be very difficult to secure such an official unless he felt he was absolutely sure of employment for five years.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not exactly follow my hon. friend. All other government officials, with one or two exceptions, are appointed during pleasure, and there is very little difficulty found in filling their places, especially on such salaries as my hon. friend's colleagues propose to attach. I see serious objection to making these gentlemen independent, as they virtually would be, of parliament or of anybody. They can only be removed on an address of both Houses of parliament at any time for cause. Practically speaking we know that that means that they cannot be removed at all. These parties should not be made independent of the ordinary tenure of office. My hon. friend I think can point to no other case, except it may be such as the Railway Commission, in which men are appointed in that fashion, and I do not think a precedent should be established in this matter. I think the Railway Commission hold office during good behaviour.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are appointed for ten years, and this office is scarcely analogous to that which would be occupied by an official in the civil service. The civil service is a permanency; my hon. friend would not be prepared to concede that this is a permanency. From the observations made by my right hon. friend, it is quite apparent that, if there were a change in government, the tenure of office by those commissioners would be very uncertain. If they are going to accept office under, practically, a threat of that kind, it will be very difficult to get a satisfactory class of men, not that I think for a moment that the officer appointed should have any doubt as to his continuance in office for five years at least.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What would happen if the Act were repealed in three or four years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There would be vested interests.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it will be agreed by all parties that Canada must have a tariff for years to come.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But not a commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There must be some source from which to obtain information necessary to the proper framing of a tariff, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that, though the fiscal policy of Canada would change, a body of this kind would be eminently useful in securing such information as might be desirable from time to time in the framing of a tariff or giving information as to how a tariff should be maintained.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have already pointed out to my hon. friend that there is no objection on our part to attaching a bureau to the Department of Finance, or any other department who may be charged with that duty. That does not involve making the officers absolutely independent of us. It does not affect my case, because at my time of life I do not look forward to bothering myself in office again. I think, as a matter of principle, you should not introduce clauses giving these men a vested right for a particular time. It is quite possible that, within four or five years a change of government might take place. I will not say a change of heart is likely to take place, because my experience renders that extremely improbable, and I cannot hope for any improvement in that respect, but within four or five years if there is a change, and say these gentlemen stay in after five years, they would probably be re-appointed for a further term of five years, and with this clause in the Bill, we would be stuck with them for a matter of another five years' term, and I do not think it is a fair proposition to submit.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let me instance a case such as my right hon. friend has just mentioned, a bureau of information in the Department of Finance. There would be nothing to prevent the government, if there should be any fiscal change, to legislate this same commission into the Department of Finance, and constitute them a bureau of information.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This mania for giving very large salaries to gentlemen of that class should not be encouraged. You are providing three men with salaries equal to, or greater than that paid to ministers of state, and very much greater than the deputy heads of departments who are charged with as important duties as those to be assigned to this commission. I do not think we should be tied down to pay $7,000 or $7,500 to these men. My experience, and it has been a pretty extensive one, is that agents of manufacturing associations, or experts of that class, are very far from being the best persons to be consulted about the necessities of the tariff. They are very much more likely to be affected in the direction of helping forward the parties whose representatives we know they will be, and are, to all intents and purposes. As to the effect on the general public, I am sorry to say my experience has been that there are no men more utterly indifferent to the public weal than the parties who desire to increase the taxes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Has the government any idea of what the cost of this commission will be when it is completely equipped and in running order, apart from the salaries to be paid to the three commissioners?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Seventy-five thousand dollars a year.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That will scarcely pay for the ink, pens and pencils. I would like to ask whether the government has any idea of the cost when the staff is fully equipped.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Give notice of that for an inquiry to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They ought to know it now. These officers are empowered to take evidence in Canada and elsewhere, and that means anywhere from Australia to the moon. They will send experts to take evidence in different parts of the world, and it will cost the country a considerable amount of money. I want this information, not only for myself, but for the country, and if the government cannot give it I shall vote against the Bill. The government is in duty bound to tell the country what this commission is going to cost.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot at the present time tell my hon. friend what this commission is going to cost.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is a fair admission. If I can find a seconder I shall move that the committee rise and report progress, and not sit again until the government is in a position to tell us what this commission is going to cost the country.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It is with satisfaction and pleasure that I second that motion. I am not anxious that there should be any unreasonable haste in this matter with regard to getting information from the government, but I do think you ought to have some idea as to what the commission will cost. Before a commission of this kind is appointed the government should have an idea of somewhat near what it will cost. We do not ask for a definite statement, but we feel that we are entitled to some definite information on the subject. I do not think it is unreasonable, therefore, that the committee should rise and report progress, and that the government should delay proceeding with this Bill until the leader of this House can ascertain what the commission will cost. We are quite well satisfied that it will cost enough. The way things are going on, with millions to be expended on the improvement of highways and everything else, can we look forward to the annual expenditure not exceeding thirty-nine or forty millions of dollars in the future? We should call a halt. The leader of the House should give the government to understand that in the Senate, we are not supposed to be merely beasts of burden carrying any load that the government of the day may feel disposed to impose upon us. The country will hold us responsible if we fail to ascertain how much is likely to be expended on this commission. I therefore feel that we are demanding nothing unreasonable when we ask that this matter be delayed for a short time. Why should we pay large sums of money without information? My hon. friend here says it will cost seventy-five millions.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—No, seventy-five thousand a year.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Well, I think he could multiply it by ten and come nearer to the truth.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—No, I have gone into it carefully.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Seventy-five thousand will not cover the expense. I see no estimate made by the government in the Commons, though they must have some idea. Are they running recklessly into this commission without having any idea what it will cost the country? Has not the country a right to know something about it? We have been able to get along many years without a tariff commission, and we had a good tariff and a good minister who gave us a wholesome, overflowing revenue. Will we get as good in the future? Bear in mind that every particle of duty by which you increase the revenue costs the poor labouring man that much more, because it is more costly to live; and is it not hard enough for the labouring man who works day in and day out to live upon his salary? Is it not hard enough for him to be able to earn sufficient to maintain his family? Are you going to increase the burdens to such an extent as to drive the people out of the country? The government is spending money to bring them in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman from St. Thomas is almost in as good a position as the government to say what the probable cost of such a commission would be. The cost of the commissioners would be $21,500. There would be a clerical staff to be maintained and officers to be secured, and there would be the cost incident to inquiry, but I should say the amount mentioned by my hon. friend from Victoria division would be ample to cover it—in fact would exceed the sum.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is too ample. I am not prepared to vote that amount. If the tariff commission is going to cost anything over $50,000, it should not be tolerated for a moment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is that not the amount you mentioned?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, I said $500,000. Just see what the Civil Service Commission cost. It was supposed to cost a few thousand only. Then look at the cost of the Railway Commission. There is not a single commission appointed by the government that does not cost two or three hundred thousand dollars, and there is no need of this commission. I do not blame the hon. leader, nor do I blame his colleagues for not knowing what the cost will be, because under this Bill they can send commissioners to any part of the globe. Investigations can be made in Canada and elsewhere. The commissioners cannot be everywhere. They will remain in Ottawa and sit in their cushioned chairs, while they send experts to the four corners of the earth, and it will cost a great amount of money. These people will travel in private cars. I say $500,000 would not be sufficient to toe the mark in five years. If the people of the country knew it was going to cost that amount of money, they would not tolerate it for a second. It is very easy to introduce the thin end of the wedge and keep hammering until the treasury is split in two. I think my question is a fair one. The government can be in a position to circumscribe the work and leave it to three members, but if they can appoint several commissioners where it will end? I am not making these remarks to embarrass the government; it is to keep them out of trouble so that at the next election we cannot throw in their face the allegation that they have been spending money lavishly. I am doing a kindness to the government and putting them on their guard.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are much obliged.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—All the information this commission will get can be obtained by the department. Half a dozen, or twenty clerks could be employed and the cost would be much less than the expenses of these three commissioners. My position is a fair one; it is not merely a criticism of their action, it is simply demanding information which the people, whose money they are expending, are entitled to. The people pay their money to keep the government going, and when representatives of the people ask for information it is the duty of the government to furnish it and to give the people's representatives the assurance that they will not spend too much. This Bill should not be adopted in committee. My motion is seconded by the hon. member from St. Thomas (Mr. Wilson). The Bill should not be proceeded with until this information is given or until we have a guarantee from the government that it will not cost more than a certain sum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that no money will be expended for the purpose of this commission until it is voted by parliament. A specific sum will be put in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I generally agree with my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Cloran), but I do not agree with him on this point. If he will look at clause A, he will see what the commissioners are going to cost, and also what the secretary will be paid. The government cannot say how much it will cost for witnesses, or for the stenographers, or travelling expenses. When the lump sum is put in the estimates, we will have some information. I think we had better go on with the Bill, and I would ask my hon. friend from Montreal to withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I understand fully what the hon. senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) has stated that the initial cost of this commission will be twenty-five thousand dollars salary for the three commissioners and the secretary. I want to know what will be the final cost for the full equipment of the bureau.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The government cannot give that information.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They will know whether this commission will require a whole building, and the cost of expert evidence and what salaries will be paid to the sub-commissioners. They should not go into this thing in the dark. We ought to be able to get some information on these points.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend surely does not expect that the government should embody in this Bill what will be the cost of office expenses.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We have already provided for the cost of the commissioners and secretary, which is something less than twenty-five thousand dollars per annum. Then there will be expenses incidental to the maintaining of the commission, office expenses, travelling expenses, etc., which should not amount to a very large sum.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am aware of that. What I want the hon. gentleman to do is to fix some sum that it will cost, so that five years from now I can confront him with those figures. If he says it is going to cost one hundred thousand and it costs five hundred thousand dollars, I can say that he deceived the country. I want a straight estimate from the government today. There is nothing behind that Tariff Commission but to strangle Liberals in regard to their tariff stand. Everybody knows that and I want, as a Liberal, to know the position of the government with regard to this.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—This clause seems to be contentious, and I think we had better let it stand and take up some other matter and give the government a chance to study it out.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The suggestion of the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Derbyshire) is a satisfactory one as far as I am concerned, and I have no doubt it will be quite satisfactory to the mover. I am old enough to know that when a Conservative government was in the House of Commons in years gone by there was perhaps nothing that afforded as liberal a spring-board as government by commission. They denounced it. Have they changed it? Have they in their older years reformed or retrograded? Where are they now as compared with where they were then? We do not want definite information, but why is it necessary that they should claim and have a freedom of hand to run into as great an expenditure as possible? The country does not desire it. The country has strong objections to this or any other government administering affairs by commission. We know what the government will do, and we can understand that they are responsible, but give them a commission and have we any restraint upon them? Have they any desire to curb and keep down expenses? They are not responsible to the people; they are only responsible to the members who supported them, and therefore we would not expect them to be as economical or careful as we would desire in administering the affairs of the country. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, you should suggest to the committee that they rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again to-morrow. The leader of the House can get the information we desire to-morrow, and, if not, he can ask leave to sit on Monday or a day or two ahead. All we want is to let the people, through their representatives, feel that we are trying to do the best we can in the interests of the country. I therefore feel that it would be to the best interest of the government and parliament that we should have the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the hon. gentleman persist in his motion?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is what the seconder says.

The CHAIRMAN—Then I will put the motion in this form—that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. In my opinion it is lost.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved the following amendment to subsection 3 of section 3:

Page 2, line 1.—Leave out all the words after the word 'office' and substitute therefor the words 'during pleasure.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is the intention of the government to make this a permanent commission?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not quite satisfied with the reason given by my hon. friend, that it will be difficult to get people to abandon their positions and sit on the commission if they are not given a fixed number of years. A government which has just come into power with a large majority should command sufficient confidence to induce people to sit on a commission for at least four years; so that it seems there is a moral guarantee on the part of any one who is approached to sit on that commission that he will have a tenure of office nearly as long as that which is mentioned in the Bill. I have not heard of any other reason than that given by my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I simply mentioned that as the reason given for making it five years.

The amendment was adopted.

On subclause 4,

4. A commissioner on the expiration of his term of office, shall be eligible for re-appointment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This clause should be struck out now.

The subclause was struck out.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As to paragraph 'h' in the proposed amendment:

(h) the grounds, if any, for believing that articles in question can be produced as cheaply in Canada or elsewhere within a limited period;

I consider that is entirely unnecessary. The commissioners are empowered and required, under the preceding parts of the subsection, to make inquiry as to the actual cost of production in Canada and elsewhere. That is in the Bill under 'b.' The duty of the commission will be to make an extended inquiry into the facts of the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, and the facts that will appear from the evidence which they will obtain, would certainly be much more satisfactory than the grounds of their belief.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —You may have all that evidence besides.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My right hon. friend will see that if they elicit facts and report on the facts, those facts will indicate what the grounds are.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —No. It will save my hon. friend's time if I just mention what is actually the fact. On various occasions applications have been made to the government of Canada on behalf of a new manufactory about to be started, and it is very desirable to know if there is any reasonable ground for believing that such new manufactory, or whatever it may be, will ultimately be able to produce goods as cheaply as they could be produced elsewhere. That point is not covered by the instructions given to the commission, and it can do no harm, I think, to request that they should state whether there are good grounds for believing that the industry would be able to produce goods cheaply. As a matter of fact, over and over again things have been started, to my certain knowledge, in Canada which it was utterly and entirely impossible could ever be produced as cheaply here as they could be produced elsewhere. I know of cases in which parties have engaged in occupations, and it has turned out, owing to the conditions, that their money was absolutely and utterly thrown away—over and over again. The commissioners, who are presumably supposed to be experts and men of information generally, might give valuable suggestions to the minister when an application is made to him by parties who desire to start a new manufactory, whether there were any reasonable grounds for believing they could ultimately manufacture as cheaply in Canada as elsewhere; and the point is of importance, because nobody knows better than my hon. friend and his colleagues beside him that once a thing gets a footing on the list as a protected article, it is the hardest thing in the world to get rid of it. The permission should not be granted rashly, or without some time to ascertain whether any given industry of the kind will ultimately tend to the production of goods cheaply here. It is not covered by the preceding section. I do not think it can do any possible harm, although I do not care a great deal about it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I desire to impress on my hon. friend as well as I possibly can the fact that the commission is not a commission to express their belief or opinion, but simply to elicit facts. They make an inquiry into certain conditions, and report to the government, and eventually to parliament, what the facts are concerning those particular conditions. Now, to open the scope of the inquiry and permit of the commission stating what their belief is, would be importing a very unsatisfactory factor into the matter.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Do I understand my hon. friend to tell us that this tariff commission will not state to the minister whether they think it would be advisable or not, to impose any additional duty?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Of course the ultimate decision would rest with the minister, but they must report to him their opinion on the matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not the intention of the government that the tariff commission should have any opinion on these subjects. That is something for which the government must assume full responsibility.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —You will greatly limit the utility of your commission if you lay down a rule like that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My right hon. friend would be the first to criticise entrusting this commission with the right to give an opinion, or to interfere in any way with these responsibilities which constitutionally must fall upon the government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I certainly would not give them any power.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend must appreciate what the difficulty would be if they expressed an opinion as to an increase or a decrease of duty, if they were in conflict with the government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —They are subordinates of the government. If this commission is going to be any good at all, it has to inquire into the working of the tariff, and the innumerable applications which are constantly being made to the government, for alterations to the tariff —out of regard to my hon. frined's feelings I will not say increases. I cannot conceive it possible that, in the discharge of that duty, they can avoid expressing an opinion. I think they will have to express an opinion to the government and also to the country, through the meeting of parliament. Of course, neither parliament nor the government will be bound to take their opinion. I cannot see how you can make use of your tariff commission and at the same time render it impossible for them to express an opinion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let me illustrate it in this way. Let me call to mind a case which may be submitted to a judge for trial, and he referred certain findings of fact to arbitrators. The arbitrators make inquiry into certain facts. They do not express an opinion to the court as to what the court should do. The court takes the findings of the arbitrators, and upon these findings pronounce judgment. My right hon. friend will observe at once that if such bodies have the right to express an opinion, they will necessarily come into conflict at one time or another with each other. If they had the right to express an opinion, then the government would simply be a kind of appellate court, to pass upon the opinion of the commissioners. Can my right hon. friend imagine a report being brought down to parliament by this commission expressing an opinion which would not be followed out by the government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I can imagine the government refusing to accept an expression of opinion. I cannot imagine this tariff commission fulfilling the objects that we expect to attain by it, unless they express an opinion. They may get around it by a curious presentation of evidence, but they undoubtedly will have to give an opinion. In England, over and over again, they have got officials, very closely answering to the tariff commissioners you propose to appoint. It is constantly the case, as every English politician knows, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer will ask these gentlemen for their opinion, and he will expect to get their opinion, but in a great many cases, he follows his own opinion, after hearing what they have got to say, and that I presume is what these men would do. However, I do not care a great deal about that; let it stand for the moment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will compare his proposed amendment with the paragraph already modified and particularly paragraph ' b ' he will find that it is almost in the same language. The paragraph reads:

Cost of production in Canada and elsewhere.

My right hon. friend's amendment is: ' The grounds, if any, for believing that articles in question can be produced as cheaply in Canada or elsewhere.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —' As elsewhere.' That is an error. I did not write ' or elsewhere.' No doubt if you provide for ascertaining what the condition of things is, presumably the existing condition of things would be to show that the goods cannot be produced in Canada at this moment at all as cheaply as they can elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, it involves an inquiry as to the cost of production elsewhere.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Almost invariably parties who came to us asking for an increase of duty—I am speaking of the actual facts—admitted as a ground work of their application that they could not, for a considerable space of time, produce the articles as cheaply in Canada as they could be produced elsewhere. That was the reason why they asked for a certain amount of protection, so that they might have power and time to build up what they were pleased to call their infant industries, some of which, to my certain knowledge, are fifty years old, a great many 33 years old, a great many of very nearly equal standing. But that is a distinct point. It is not a question as to what the cost is to-day, but whether there is any reasonable ground for believing that in the course of a few years they could produce their products as cheaply as they could be produced elsewhere. It is a practical point that comes up constantly before the Finance Minister of the day, or the Minister of Customs, or whoever may be charged with it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My right hon. friend will observe that we provide that the inquiry shall be made, not only in Canada, but elsewhere.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But that is not quite meeting the point that I made. However, I am not very wedded to that. I am afraid that the information I would get out of the tariff commission on that point would scarcely be what I would call satisfactory, though I should like to have it.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Clause 4 states that the commission shall report to the minister. Would that report be confidential, or a report which would have to be put on the table of the House within ten days of the opening of parliament? Because, if the report is confidential, I can quite understand it will facilitate the inquiry, but if the report is published, do not you think it would be pretty hard to get all the information you want as to 'a', 'b', and 'c', and all other points of the amendment?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They are very desirable to be got, though. If you look a little further on you will see that reports are dealt with in clause 6. It is to be laid before parliament, evidence submitted, &c.

The CHAIRMAN—We will take up the amendments.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Are we to understand from the discussion that has just taken place between the two leaders that that report is going to be limited to simply furnishing a copy of the evidence taken by the commissioners, without any recommendations or any opinions? Because the Act calls for a report, is it to be simply a report of the evidence taken, or is it to be anything else or anything more?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would call the attention of my hon. friend to subsection 5 of clause 4 which says that the respective reports: 'Shall succinctly state the results thereof.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the findings. The commission will make certain findings upon certain conditions, upon making inquiry into certain conditions; but that is an entirely different proposition from their expressing their belief, or their opinion, and I should say it would be entirely different from their making a recommendation, because a recommendation would be equivalent to their expressing an opinion.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—But I fail to see what they are going to do; they are either going to simply report the evidence, or they are going to do something more.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There may be a great volume of evidence. There may be a conflict of evidence, as there undoubtedly will be. The commissioners would make a finding upon that conflict of evidence, and consequently that, I apprehend, would be in view when subsection 5 of clause 4 was prepared.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I have no doubt that would be the result, and I was led to ask the question of my hon. friend because I gathered from his remarks that the result might be different. It does not seem to me that it is possible for those commissioners to hear all the evidence and make a report without expressing an opinion. I do not see how a report could be made without expressing some opinion as to the nature of the evidence?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I draw a distinction between an opinion and a finding. There is a certain conflict of facts before us. That conflict comes in by reason of contradictory facts or contradictory positions being taken by the persons who may be examined by the commission. They must make some finding; they must make some report upon the situation or upon the conflict itself that confronts them, but as to expressing a belief, the Department of Finance, which will administer the Act, is very desirous that the belief of the commissioners, in contradistinction to findings of fact, should be eliminated—that they should not express a belief, or should not express an opinion. Their office and functions peculiarly are to make an inquiry into facts; then the government of the day has a certain responsibility, and must assume that responsibility, and so has parliament. The report containing those findings will be laid upon the table of parliament, and the responsibility of the government is, and the responsibility of parliament will be, to say what will be done as the result of those facts.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—In other words the government will retain supervision as to the policy, and the commissioners will not suggest the policy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Precisely.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, but still what is the objection to the commissioners being entitled, or empowered—whichever way you like to put it—to ascertain whether there were reasonable grounds for believing that certain industries could not, in a reasonable space of time, be carried on as successfully here as elsewhere. What is the objection to that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Now my hon. friend goes on to another factor. My hon. friend eliminates then the question of belief, or grounds. I have been discussing that part of the amendment in which he speaks of the grounds, if any, for believing; that is, in the earlier portion of the amendment. To that we object, because we have something superior to grounds for believing; we have facts elicited after an extended inquiry.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—You can have no facts until the thing has been in operation for a certain length of time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh no, we are now dealing with the inquiry as to the cost of production, and with respect to paragraph (a), to make an inquiry into the 'price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use, or consumption'; and then we crown that by making a further inquiry as to the cost of production, having obtained all those factors of information—the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere. Now, having reached that point, we have a superior vantage ground to the commissioners stating their grounds of belief as to the cost of production in Canada.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not asking for their grounds of belief as to the cost of production; I am asking for their grounds of belief as to whether, within any reasonable space of time, the cost of production in Canada can be so reduced that it shall not exceed the cost of production elsewhere. That is a plain point, and one that comes up constantly.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am not satisfied with all this explanation; I am not clear on the point, and I wish to be clear about this report. Clause 4 says that the commission shall report to the minister, and section 5 of clause 4 says that inquiries shall be conducted in such a manner, and the respective reports to be made pursuant to its provisions shall succinctly state the results thereof; and each report shall be accompanied by a copy of the evidence,

&c. Well, I wish to know, as I put the question already, if this report will be confidential, or as other reports which are put on the table of the House when they meet. Secondly, I wish to know if the reports mean only this, that the commissioners from time to time make reports without any comments or any recommendations on the evidence; because if they make no recommendation whatever, or no report as to their views on the evidence, there is no harm, and everybody would do as he likes on the evidence—he may read the evidence and choose what he thinks of it himself. But suppose that by this Bill they made a report and the three commissioners agree, for instance, that the duty on such an article is too high or too low——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The commissioners have no authority to do that, and it is not intended that they shall have anything to do with the increase or decrease of the duty.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Perhaps they may not say straight that the duty is too high or too low, but suppose they indicate that the tariff is too high or too low, do you not think that trade may be disturbed, and speculations encouraged by this? Suppose they say that the production of steel and iron is such that the tariff is not as high as it should be, or that the bounties ought not to be given, or ought to be restored? Do not you think there is room for speculation there—speculation in futures? There is a great danger. So I should like to be clear on that, if the report to the minister will be a report giving their opinion and their recommendation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Just an open report with the evidence put before the minister; and if they make a report how far have they a right to go on this point?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The modus operandi would be this—the commission would report to the minister in pursuance of the instructions as to the scope of the inquiry which they should make. Then it is for the minister to report to the Governor in Council as to what should be done touching the matter of duty.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—What will they do with the report? Is it their views or just their investigation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have to report on the facts of the inquiry. They are not going to make a recommendation; they are not going to express an opinion.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am satisfied with that.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Do I understand my hon. friend to say that they are going to report the evidence? Will they report the evidence to the minister without expressing their opinion on it? They will have to report their findings.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps it would save time if my hon. friend would run loosely over those amendments and see what he objects to, if any, and what he accepts, if any.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the suggestions proposed by the right hon. gentleman are accepted and embodied in the Bill it will be in direct conflict with those who opposed the Bill in the House of Commons, because the contention there was, that these commissioners would be appointed for the purpose of giving opinions and recommending to the government an increase of duty. It has been alleged that the commission was for the purpose of aiding and abetting the Manufacturers' Association. As I understand it, the commission is simply for the purpose of exercising similar duties that have been performed in the past, of sending an official to inquire into the facts pertaining to an industry, in case an application is made for an increase in duty, as the right hon. gentleman has said. An officer is sent to ascertain the facts as to the cost of production in this country, the cost of production in the foreign country from which the goods are imported, and the expense of laying the goods down in this country. It can be ascertained from the facts laid before the minister by the officer who has made the investigation, whether parliament will be justified in increasing or reducing the duty, and if the article can be produced in Canada and still enable the industry to exist, should the duty be decreased. The commission should have no power or right to express an opinion.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Should that opinion be laid before the House and the decision of the government be in opposition to the recommendation of the commission, then there would be a conflict between the government and the commission. The duty which this commission will have to perform, will be to ascertain the facts in connection with every industry existent, not only in Canada, but elsewhere, and report these facts to the government. The government then assumes the responsibility of increasing the duty or decreasing it, or putting the articles on the free list. I would not give the commission authority even to express their opinion, or to make any recommendation to the government. What would be thought of an official sent out to ascertain the facts that these commissioners are to obtain, who should come back and even recommend to the government what should be done, or should not be done, and have that placed upon record?

He comes back to the minister, as my hon. friend must know from experience, and lays before him the facts which he has obtained, and from these facts he forms an opinion as to what course should be pursued. There should be no shirking, directly or indirectly, of the responsibility of the government in making suggestions to parliament. When they increase or decrease the tariff it is their duty to give to the House a statement of the reasons for the position they assume, and those reasons would be based upon the facts obtained by the commission. A moment's reflection will show my right hon. friend that his suggestion embodied in this Bill of an instruction to the commissioners to give an opinion as to what should be done or should not be done, would mean, to a very great extent, the destruction of the object which the government has in view. The government should take the responsibility of acting upon their report, in the same manner as they would if they made the investigation themselves. During my occupancy of the position of Minister of Customs, I found it necessary often to go to the quarter from which complaint came and make an investigation into the fact, and very often I met a dozen merchants who had a discussion pro and con as to the tariff, and before they had been together fifteen minutes they were at loggerheads, and then the minister would have to come to a conclusion as to what course to pursue. That not only applies to the merchant who imports, but also to manufacturers. You have first to obtain the facts before you can adopt any policy upon which to base a tariff upon anything like equitable principles. I hope my hon. friend, on reflection, will not insist on having that clause added to the Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is quite clear that my hon. friend does not believe in a tariff commission at all, and that he would like very much that this should be done by a bureau of the Customs Department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I propose to amend subsection 2 by adding:

And inquiry into such matter may include inquiry as to the effect which an increase or decrease of the said rate of duty upon a given commodity might have upon the trade.

With regard to 'j', inquiry as to the health of the employees is involved in 'd', but to put the matter beyond doubt, 'd' might be amended so as to read:

The cost, efficiency and conditions of labour, including the health of employees in Canada and elsewhere.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is very good.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might say, in the first place, so that my hon. friend might give it some consideration, that this amendment is made under a misconception, apparently, of the functions of the committee. The amendment reads:

Provided always that in all cases where the commission reports in favour of an increase of duty, or where any application for an increase is made the commission shall, in addition to reporting upon the above matters, make a special report which, in the case of any industry already established, shall state—

The premises are misconceived, because the commissioners have no such authority they will not report in favour of any decrease or increase of duty, and will not receive any application for an increase of duty, and therefore can make no report upon that subject.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That, I think, is almost an impossibility. The application may not be made to them, but it will be made to the government, and the government will direct the commission to inquire.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The commission will inquire into it. All the spheres of inquiry are set out in clause 4.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —My hon. friend knows that, from the very nature of the case, a great portion of the commissioners' time, if it is to do any good at all, will be employed in making inquiries into the application to the government for increase of duty.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it is not employed in that way it is no good at all. In that way it may be of some use. You may vary the phraseology as much as you please. The first two lines may be struck out. A, b, c, d, e, f, g, of the proposed amendments will involve so much discussion as to the wisdom of instructing a commission to make inquiry into the private circumstances and conditions of an individual or company as to make it a debatable point. I would suggest that some consideration might be given to that part before we go into committee again.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I have not put this on the table at all with a desire to embarrass or to impede my hon. friend, but with an honest desire to improve the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I know that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That if the commission goes to work, information should be obtained upon which a reasonable opinion could be formed, and most of these things, I think, he will find are, or ought to be, obtained by the government more or less through their bureau of statistics.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (100) An Act for the aid and encouragement of Agriculture.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 22, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

SITTINGS OF THE SENATE.

MOTIONS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved:

That when the Senate adjourns on Friday next it do stand adjourned until Saturday, and that there be a sitting of the Senate on each succeeding Saturday during the remainder of the session.

Hon Mr. POWER—Do I understand that the hon. leader of the House takes the view that this motion means next Friday and not to-day.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is dated March 20th and would mean to-day and would cover to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The better way would be not to pass the motion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let the motion be put as of to-day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Then I understand we are not to sit to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved:

That commencing on Monday next, until differently ordered, there shall be two distinct sittings of the Senate every day, including Saturday, the first sitting to commence at 11 o'clock, a.m., until 1 o'clock, p.m., and the second sitting to commence at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—How will that affect sittings of the committees?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would ask the hon. leader of the House to amend his motion so that committees will have permission to sit during any sitting of the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should be very glad to add to that:

And notwithstanding any rules to the contrary, committees of the House be empowered to sit.

The Motion was agreed to as amended.

COLONIZATION RAILWAYS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

1. Can the government give the names of the colonization railways which have been granted the privilege of constructing their lines over unoccupied lands in the Railway Belt, in the province of British Columbia, by order in council passed 2nd day of December, 1911?

What is the date when such privilege or privileges were granted?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answer is:

1. The Revelstoke and Arrowhead branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, The Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Railway Company, The Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company, Vancouver Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company, Vancouver Power Company, Limited. Such privilege was granted by order in council of the 2nd of December, 1911.

TRANSFER OF WATER RIGHTS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

When does the government intend bringing down the legislation which they declared to be necessary to supplement the order in council passed the 20th day of December, 1911. Transferring the administration of the water rights in the Railway Belt of British Columbia, from the Dominion government to the provincial government of British Columbia?

What form will the legislation take?

Is the government aware that the provincial government published in the British Columbia 'Gazette,' of the 10th February, 1912, a notice for both the Yale water district, and the Kamloops water district giving the names of the lakes, streams and rivers in each of these districts which are supposed to be wholly or partially within the Railway Belt in each district, calling upon any person, partnership, company or municipality having any claim to water rights in the Railway Belt; to file a statement of claim to water privilege according to a certain form?

Can the government state what authority the provincial government has to deal with this question as it stands at the present date?

He said: Since I placed this notice on the order paper, a Bill has been brought down in the other House dealing with the question, and I should like to ask the leader of the government if it is the intention to press through this Bill at the present time?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot give any information upon that subject. It has been introduced in the House of Commons and it is entirely in the hands of that House.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Under the circumstances I would like to let this mater stand for a day or two.

The notice was allowed to stand.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I wish to direct the attention of the House, and more particularly of the hon. leader of the government in this Chamber, to an unsatisfactory condition of things in the administration of the parliamentary affairs of Canada. In the first days of this session I asked the leader how and why it was that a very important section of the population was without adequate representation in the ministry of the day. I pointed out to him at the time that since the province of Quebec was ceded to the British Crown, the English Protestant minority of that province had always enjoyed at least adequate representation in the council of the nation. The hon. gentleman then replied to me that the matter would be looked into and was under consideration. Evidently it has been under consideration and nothing has resulted from it. I do not want the hon. gentleman to answer me immediately, but I should like to know how it is that the government, after having been in power six months, remains incomplete. It has been exercising its powers under the constitution for six months without adequate representation in the cabinet. Why is it that one of the important positions in the government is not filled? It appears to me to be a bobtailed administration. The hon. leader would not wish this government to go down with the name of a bob-tailed government The position of Solicitor General is a very important one in the government, but it is not yet filled, and the government can either do without the Solicitor General or they cannot. Evidently they have succeeded in getting along without a Solicitor General for six months, and if they can get along for six months, they can do so for twelve, and so on. In that event, the office is unnecessary, and I ask if the hon. leader of the government in this House will advise his colleagues to abolish it. Further, I ask, how, and why is it that the demands of the former leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister of Canada, are not respected? Why does he not respect his own opinion? Heretofore he desired that all vacancies should be filled at once, especially in the Senate and on the Bench. The country desires to understand the solution of these questions. I am putting these matters before the hon. leader so that he will be able to give us an answer the next time we meet.

How is it and why is it that the French Canadian population of this country have no representative on the floor of this House? I know that the hon. Speaker of this House persistently put that question to the government of the day for the seven years I have been in this House—how was it and why was it that no French Canadian minister was in this House to represent that important portion of the population. That is the fourth question. Of course I may point out to the hon. leader of this House that within the past month or so he has had several accessions to his party who would be fit and proper candidates for a position, even one equal to his own, that is, minister without portfolio. Take our friend from St. Boniface (Mr. LaRiviere), he might be an aid to the government in introducing his Remedial Bill next year.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then my next question is: How is it and why is it that the present government ignores the Senate? In the olden days of Sir John Macdonald, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Sir John Thompson and all the others, the Senate was honoured to have the services of at least one, and sometimes two or three, active ministers of the day. The present government has been in power for the past six months and we have no responsible minister, though we have a very good active one without portfolio, and I think that the Prime Minister is overlooking the ability and capacity of the present leader of this House in not putting responsibility upon his shoulders. The Conservative party, which is supposed to uphold the institutions of this country, should look more to the dignity and the usefulness of the Senate by having some of their colleagues in this House in the ministry. I suppose that is a delicate point for the hon. leader of the government to answer; but I stand here to say that there is not one man in the cabinet to-day who is more worthy of bearing the responsibilities of office than our present leader in this House.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—All I have to say to him in closing is that, I won't say I sympathize, for the word is too vulgar, but I commiserate him on the fact that he has to stand here alone for the interest of the government against a phalanx of antagonists. I think the hon. the leader of the government ought to be surrounded by the warriors bold who have just come from the Commons. We have some good fighters from the old place, and they ought to gather round him and stand shoulder to shoulder with him in fighting for the interests of the government. It is not my taste to have to badger and banter one man. I would rather fight a whole crew. Why should not the Hon. Senator Pope be the Protestant representative of Quebec? Why not take the hon. members Taylor, or Bell, or LaRiviere?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Put Taylor in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am talking from the bottom of my heart. I do not want to see ten or fifteen fighting one man who stands alone. Under the circumstances, I do not expect an immediate answer to my question, but I hope this matter will be brought to the attention of the government. If they would be strong in public opinion, and if they wish to have an active, and responsible representation in the Senate, they should fill the vacancies. They would be stronger before the public by putting a French representative on the floor of the House. Why not take the Speaker, he is one of the strongest men in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—How could we spare the Speaker?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not in any spirit of hostility that I make these remarks.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I can well imagine that the leader of the government in this House is too modest to reply. I can sympathize with him in a different way. Everybody is satisfied in this House except the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Hon. Mr. Cloran).

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not like to fight one man.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I presume my hon. friend from Victoria Division (Hon. Mr Cloran) acts on the idea attributed to the Irishman, that wherever an Irishman sees a head he should hit it. If there is anything obligatory about appointing a member of this House to the government, the duty of calling attention to it should be upon the leader of the Senate. If he fails in his work, he has only to say to the government that he has too much to do. While I have been in this House I have failed to observe any one occupying the position he fills to-day, who has succeeded better in commanding the respect and doing the work in a satisfactory way than the hon. member from Calgary.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—He is easy to approach, everybody can see him, and everybody loves him.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I would not have risen had I not known that he was too modest to do so himself. I think it ill becomes our friend on the opposite side to name anybody for his position. It ill becomes him to suggest that he requires assistance. It ill becomes him to say the hon. gentleman is incapable of conducting the affairs of this House. All the complaint that my hon. friend has is that there are not two or three ministers in order that he might make speeches to every one of them. Thank God for that. That is our earnest prayer.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am glad to see my speech has brought forth fruit. I never expected a Liberal would stand up to defend a Tory leader.

THE LATE SENATOR A. A. MACDONALD.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before we proceed with the Orders of the Day, it is again my duty to say to the Senate that we received the sad and unexpected news yesterday of the death of another of our colleagues. I refer to the late Senator Macdonald of Prince Edward Island. During the last few months death has been more than ordinarily busy in reaping its harvest among the members of this Chamber. The late Senator Macdonald had been a sufferer for the last four or five years, and during that time we were deprived of his valuable services in this body. He had arrived at a ripe old age, having passed four score by some few years. He led a useful, busy and honourable life, and was a member of the Senate since 1891. While we have been called upon during the last few months to mourn the death of many members of this body, on account of their long public service in the Dominion of Canada, I doubt if any of our late departed colleagues, during the present or last session, had been in public life for such a long period, as the late Senator Macdonald. He entered the political activities of his native province in 1853, nigh to 60 years ago, and apparently was actively engaged in that long period promoting the best interests, not only of his native province but of this Dominion.

He served his native province as Lieutenant Governor. He entered this Chamber over twenty years ago, and is, with one exception, the last of the fathers of confederation. The only surviving member of that very notable body, Sir Charles Tupper, is living today, having reached a ripe old age. It is unnecessary to say anything of the personal attractions of the late Senator Macdonald during his lifetime. He was one of the most courteous gentlemen that we have had in this Chamber, and endeared himself, I think, to every one of its members. Few men had a higher sense of that honour and justice and of all the virtues which should appertain to humanity than the late Hon. A. A. Macdonald.

He was respected, honoured, and beloved in his own native province, and those who knew him best will certainly miss him most. I am justified in saying that he was one of nature's gentlemen. I further feel assured that this Chamber will sympathize, not only with his native province in losing so prominent a son as the late Senator Macdonald, but with the friends of his immediate family, in the loss and bereavement which they have been called upon to suffer.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I had not the pleasure of an intimate acquaintance with the late Senator Macdonald, but what slight acquaintance I had fully bore out the remarks made by my honourable friend opposite. In any case he was one of those men who invariably, in his own person, lent dignity and weight to the deliberations of this body, and from all I have heard, I believe he was for a very long time a most useful and conspicuous public servant in the province to which he belonged. It was, in point of fact, in the Island of Prince Edward, I believe, that the first conference—having at that time in view the union of the maritime provinces—took place. I think it was to Charlottetown, in the first instance, that the delegation from Quebec and Ontario, headed by Sir George Cartier and Sir Alexander Galt and Mr. Brown, repaired in the first instance. Later on I believe Mr. Macdonald took part in the deliberations of the general conference, and although at that time Prince Edward Island did not choose to enter confederation, no doubt he paved the way for its ultimate absorption by the Dominion. I entirely concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman in regard to the loss we have sustained in the death of the late Senator Macdonald, and I have no doubt his remarks will be conveyed to the friends of that gentleman, and to the people who knew him so well, and whom he represented so long.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (123) An Act to amend the Yukon Act.—Mr. Lougheed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (140) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.—Mr. Lougheed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (77) An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways.

(In the Committee).

On clause 3,

The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways or bridges, or the construction of new highways or bridges, in such province, or for all or any such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am still of the opinion, which I expressed yesterday, as to the unsatisfactory character of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Power). I regard it as open to all the objections which I pointed out yesterday. With all due deference to the contrary opinion which has been expressed, section 3 should be accepted by this Chamber. The preamble of the Bill sufficiently indicates that the intent of the government is that this aid should be distributed amongst the various provinces. I refer to line 8, in which the statement is made 'And for the purpose of giving assistance to the various provinces of Canada.' I need not go over the remarks which I made upon the second reading of the Bill as to its object, and the desirability of reasonable confidence being placed in the administration of this law by the government of the day. The country is fully safeguarded by the fact that every province is represented in the House of Commons, that House having charge of the supplies, and the amounts being voted for this particular purpose. I mentioned yesterday that a subsidy would be brought down during the present session, made divisable amongst all the provinces upon a basis of population, and whatever aid is granted to the provinces will be entirely in the hands of the representatives of the people in the House of Commons, representing every province in the Dominion. The government feels that its hands should not be tied, and a want of confidence expressed by a hard and fast line being laid down as to how this Act should be worked out. I pointed out, when introducing the Bill, that it was simply a declaration of policy, and would have to be developed in its being worked out between the various provinces and the central government. Inasmuch as during the present session of parliament the estimates will make provision for a proportionate distribution of whatever sum is voted, on the basis of population, this chamber should accept this Bill in its present form.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I wonder why we should quarrel over this amendment of the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) when we all agree to the principle which it carries into the Bill. My hon. friend says it is in the preamble. The preamble does not bind the government; it is the enactment that binds the government. Yesterday I pointed out to my hon. friend that we may take for granted that the policy, as expressed by himself and by his leader in the House of Commons, will be carried out by them. I have in advance stated that I fully accept the declaration that this principle will be adhered to.

But it only binds the hon. leader of the government and his representatives in the Chamber, and unfortunately they are human beings with an ephemeral political life, and here we are with a law which will be embodied in our statute-book, which will remain as long as it pleases parliament to maintain it there, and my hon. friend says, 'Take our word as to the way this Bill will be carried out.' My hon. friend speaks of the possibility of members of this Chamber doubting the good faith of the present government. How can he say that when we leave the present government, absolutely master in dictation of the conditions which will surround every contract with each province? Absolute discretion and a free hand are given to the government. We only say, 'You will apportion the appropriation among the provinces. You shall not pay it to each province absolutely and without condition. If any province does not accept the conditions the government imposes upon it, that province goes without subsidy. If it happens, for instance, that the federal government declares that not one dollar will be paid by this treasury to any province that did not put in any similar amount, then the province which could not afford to make that payment would go without a federal subsidy. Absolute discretion is left with the government to surround the grant with any kind of conditions it may lay down. The only limitation, or the only safeguard, is contained in this amendment that those payments, when made to the provinces shall be paid according to population.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let us assume for a moment that the government did not introduce this Bill, but simply stated to the House that it was their intention to introduce, session after session, in the Supply Bill certain amounts for distribution amongst the provinces, and made those amounts divisable. Would not that be accepted?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would hon. gentlemen in this House have anything to say about it—I mean to say, if it were simply put in the Supply Bill? My argument is that the government has authority vested in it by the House of Commons to put in the Supply Bill the amounts which will be voted this year for distribution amongst the various provinces for several purposes, entirely irrespective of this Bill. That could be put in the Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes, the government could do so. There we would have the distribution to each province according to a certain principle and in proportion to the population. I consider that it would be simply increasing the federal subsidy to the provinces without any explanation and without any safeguards. This legislation is of very doubtful constitutional authority. I will not go over the ground that has already been covered so ably by the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition in this House, but when this departure is made and the Bill is brought down, it seems that it is the duty of this Chamber to see that the principle of equality shall be maintained as be-between the provinces.

Hon. Mr. BELL—It is quite evident that there is a great deal of importance attached to this measure by the gentlemen who are opposing it and seeking to amend it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And by the government, too.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And by the government as well, of course, and it is a little difficult to understand why such solicitude exists as to this particular measure.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Because it is spending our money.

Hon. Mr. BELL—This year the government will have estimates amounting, I suppose, to upwards of one hundred and fifty millions, possibly one hundred and seventy millions. They have voted some twenty-five millions or more in railway subsidies. I do not know what the total vote will amount to in connection with this Bill, but it may be seven hundred thousand or eight hundred thousand dollars—comparatively insignificant in proportion to all the estimates of the year. Yet, while the gentlemen in this House do not seek, and would not consider it practicable, to dictate to those who control the government of this country the manner in which they shall expend the one hundred and seventy or the one hundred and seventy-five millions of dollars, they single out this comparatively small vote and seek to establish a control over the government of the day which they do not propose to themselves to set up in any other matter. Now, why is it?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is outside of their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Why is it that in this one matter alone, apparently, the opposition, and the opposition in the Senate, undertake to control the government of the day?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is outside their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. BELL—There is nothing more familiar to us—that is those of us who have been in public life for a long time—than the fact that the government cannot be controlled by an opposition; that the administration of the government cannot be carried on by an opposition; that, in so far as the finances of the country are concerned, the government, by our constitution, is made absolute. This body could not amend——

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Does the hon. gentleman mean that we are not allowed to criticise this Bill?

Hon. Mr. BELL—Not for a moment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Then what does his language amount to?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I do not suggest that for a moment, but I say as far as a money Bill is concerned——

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—This is not a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. BELL—It is not, but it involves the expenditure of money.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They all do.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And so far as that is concerned, the opposition is seeking to control, absolutely, the manner in which the government is going to proceed with that expenditure. Now, that is a perfectly futile attempt, as far as I can understand. The hon. gentleman who spoke a moment or two ago, suggested that by the language of the Bill, the government of the day are in a position to determine absolutely, the terms and conditions upon which this money shall be expended.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman object to the principle that it is to be divided equally in proportion to the population of the provinces?

Hon. Mr. BELL—No, I do not, and I think we have reason to infer, from the language of the representative of the government here, that that is the principle that is going to be adopted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Then what is the objection to incorporating that principle in the Act?

Hon. Mr. BELL—Because that is not a principle; it is merely a matter of practice; it is the manner in which it shall be distributed. Now, let us consider the extraordinary attitude of the opposition in that respect. Here is the government voting over twenty millions of dollars in railway subsidies.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is its function, and under the constitution it is right.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Has the opposition here told the government that it shall vote those subsidies to the several provinces in proportion to the population of those provinces?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. BELL—No, not for a moment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But the government measures show just how they are going to spend the money.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And you cannot criticise it, but in this measure you want to come in and dictate to them beforehand how they shall do it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is what we propose to do.

Hon. Mr. BELL—That is what you cannot do, and nothing can do it. The government can do just as it likes. It can make such terms as it pleases—the Bill says so—and it would be just as sensible for half a dozen shareholders to undertake to control the directors of a bank in which they held stock as for us here to direct the government how they shall make certain exepnditures.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Then we had better go home.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Not at all; we have a right here to discuss this matter as much as we please, as we are doing now, and I am taking part in that process. What I feel is that it is absolutely ineffective to seek to control and tie up the hands of the government in any manner whatever. It never has been and cannot be done. Now why should we confine this to a certain money vote? In the course of construction, millions of dollars will be voted for all sorts of public works, public buildings, wharfs, dredging of rivers——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And that is to be apportioned to the several provinces and to the several constituencies in those provinces precisely as the government shall determine.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is all voted for certain works.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Why do we not start in here at once, if we are going to assume the job of controlling the government, and tell them that they have to apportion their grants to the several works in the several provinces in proportion of the population of those provinces?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Does my hon. friend think that, if they voted a million dollars in the other House for a public building, that they could go and put it where they liked?

Hon. Mr BELL—What would the Senate have to say about it? Since my hon. friend is so fond of asking questions, let him answer that. The Senate would have to pass it if it came here. If the government had the confidence of the House of Commons and succeeded in putting its vote through that chamber, and that measure came over here, you would have to vote for it, or reject the whole Subsidy Bill. That is your only choice.

Our friends have given this matter very little attention and consideration. They seek out this one particular vote and discriminate it from all the other expenditures during the year, and undertake, in reference to this comparatively insignificant vote, to dictate to the government the manner in which it shall apportion this money among the different provinces of Canada. To my mind that is an extraordinary procedure. We have a right to express our opinion about everything the government does. Now we are asked to dictate to them what they shall do with the moneys to be apportioned under this Bill. The government are in the majority in the House of Commons, and rely upon that majority for their existence, and by that majority they proceed to do the business of the country. It would be quite proper if there is anything unconstitutional or improper done, that the whole Senate should stand up as one man in protest. I presume the Senate would do its duty in a case of that kind. We have allowed all the appropriations of the year to pass with the exception of this one item, and with respect to this item we are undertaking to say to the government: 'We won't trust you'. We disregard the fact that the government is controlled by public opinion, that all the provinces are represented in the House of Commons, and that all the provinces are represented in the cabinet. We disregard all these features of the protection which every province enjoys, and we say to the government: 'We have no confidence in you, and we insist that, as far as this particular Bill is concerned, the money shall be distributed in proportion to the population of the provinces, and it shall be paid to every one of them. The Bill says it may be paid to any province, and if to any one province why not to all the provinces?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—It does not say so.

Hon. Mr. BELL—It says it may be paid to any province, therefore it may be paid to all the provinces. The language of the Bill gives the government the power.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Or it may be paid to any one province.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Or it may be paid to any two provinces. There is no reason in the world why the government should discriminate against any province. Why should we think the government is not going to do right in respect to this matter, or why should we expect that any government in Canada should submit to dictation in respect to a matter of this kind which in itself involves an insinuation that the government is going to act in an improper manner, and to favour one province at the expense of another? Why should we put upon our proceedings such a charge of want of confidence, and why should we do it in respect of this particular Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman think this law is made simply to be applied by the present government, or is it to be administered by the government of Canada whatever it may be ?

Hon. Mr. BELL—As long as it is not repealed, it may be in the power of every government to proceed with the expenditure. It is only in the first instance that this government will proceed to make the appropriations. If the experiment is found satisfactory, I presume it may be continued. It is well known that the government of the United States has adopted this mode of promoting the construction of good highways. It has been in operation a good many years. Any one who knows the condition of things in the smaller provinces realizes that some assistance is required. For instance, Nova Scotia has voted some $200,000 for road purposes. It has a deficit of $170,000. It has evidently borrowed all, or nearly all, the money which is to be devoted to road purposes. It is quite evident that the financial condition of the majority of the smaller provinces is such that they must obtain assistance. Our treasury is abounding and overflowing.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The cuckoo song.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Why should the federal government not come to the assistance of the provinces when they require it ?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Give it to the provinces and let them do what they like with it.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Shall we add to the subsidies of the provinces per head ? That would simply be to increase those subsidies. It might be done equally and fairly. It may be necessary to do it; we do not know as to that. But here the government desire to afford a certain amount of assistance to each of the provinces, and they limit its application to roads. Instead of paying $100,000 to the provincial government of Nova Scotia and letting them put that into their general fund and appropriate it as they please, the government of Canada takes the power to give them, say, $100,000, and to provide that that shall be applied to highway building and nothing else. What is the objection to that ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is all right. The amendment does not hinder that.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The amendment is a deliberate charge that the government of the day is not going to do this thing fairly. It says 'We cannot trust your efforts in regard to this six or seven hundred thousand dollars. We do trust you in respect to everything else. You can spend $170,000,000 this year and we shall not dictate to you, but when you come down to this apparently small appropriation, we cannot trust you.' Why should we do that ? Is it worth while? If you make that change in the Bill, what have you added to it ? Nothing to give it any force. The government has the absolute power to do precisely what the amendment asks for, and the representative of the government tells us precisely what the government is going to do.

Mr. DANDURAND—Then why object?

Hon. Mr. BELL—Then you say : 'We wont trust you, we want an instrument signed, sealed and delivered, binding you to a certain course of action.' There is no doubt at all the Bill takes power to grant the money to the several provinces, even if those provinces fail to implement, on their part, the expenditure, because in the last section of the Bill the central government is enabled to go and do that work in the various provinces after arrangement has been made with the provincial government. There is every guarantee that the provinces will get fair play except this one humiliating signature to a dishonouring bond which you are asking us to hand to the government, and why should we demand it? I know, and my hon. friend from Halifax knows, how our province is situated, and how important it is that our railway system should be supplemented and made complete by highways—most important of all things in the world to that farming population about which our neighbours appear so solicitous, and here is a tentative experimental measure, the first step ever taken in this direction by a government of Canada, and the Senate endeavours to attach a humiliating condition to the Bill, and to hamper the hands, and impede the action of the government in administering this most important measure. Therefore, I say, to my mind we cannot effect anything by continuing the discussion. If the opposition are determined to put this limitation on the action of the government they may do it, but it does not coincide with my view that the opposition, which merely looks on while the government expends an enormous amount of money without any such condition being attached to it, should seek to control the power of the government in reference to a comparatively small item. Our friends on the other side are in a mental attitude which I cannot understand; no opposition can govern any country?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not govern, but direct them.

Hon. Mr. BELL—And no government can be prevented from governing a country in the manner in which it is justified in governing it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The doctrine laid down by the gentleman who has just spoken is the most extraordinary that has ever been preached in a British parliament. He undertakes to say to this House that they are bound to accept any decision that the government may come to.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is just what the hon. gentleman has said. He said the opposition cannot control.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I was speaking of the administration of the government—the administrative and executive acts. That is what I was talking about. We can discuss everything that is done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am certain the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House felt just as clearly and as fully as hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that the amendment proposed yesterday to the third clause of the Bill was a right and proper one. Every one must have been struck by the weakness of the reply made by the leader of the government. That hon. gentleman when he has a good case, is perfectly well able to make it clear to the House, but the hon. gentleman failed completely to show any reason why this amendment should not pass; and if any further evidence were needed to show that this is a right and proper amendment, it is the extraordinary speech delivered by the hon. gentleman from New Glasgow. It must be borne in mind that the hon. gentleman repeated the declaration, made more than once by the hon. leader of the House, that the intention of the government was to divide this money amongst the provinces in proportion to population. Any man of common sense would feel that if that were the honest intention, the government could have no objection to an amendment which simply embodied what they declared to be their intention. What does the hon. gentleman want us to do? He simply wishes us to give the government a blank check, to sign that check, and let them fill it in just as they please.

The hon. gentleman talks about showing want of confidence in the government. I was rather careful, when I moved the amendment, to intimate that I had no doubt the intentions of the government were good and honest, but that another government might come in, a king might arise who 'knew not Joseph,' and might make very improper use of this power. Hon. gentlemen know what Burns says:

> For oh, mankind are unco' weak
> And little to be trusted,
> If self the wavering balance shake
> 'Tis rarely right adjusted.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—We should not be led into temptation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Speaker prays every day that we may not be led into temptation. The object of this amendment, to a certain extent, is to keep the government out of temptation. This amendment simply carries out the intention of the government. It was stated in another place that the measure was crude, and hastily prepared. The peculiar function of this House is to prevent the passing of measures in a crude and unsatisfactory condition. We are simply trying to put this Bill into the shape in which I have no doubt, it would have been framed by the government if they had had time to devote to the work. Hon. gentlemen have said that we have to trust the government in the expenditure of the untold millions which appear in the Appropriation Act. The hon. gentleman must remember that in the Appropriation Act we get all the items. It sets out how every dollar has to be spent, and where it has to be spent. There is no blank cheque about the Appropriation Act. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) admits that under this Bill the government could select one province for special favour, or two or three provinces. We should be wanting in our duty to the various provinces if we allowed this measure to go through in such a shape that it would be possible to favour one province as against another. I think there are a number of hon. gentlemen sitting on the government side of this House who will find it very difficult indeed to vote against this amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The doctrine laid down by some of the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken has been rather a surprise to members in many respects. The question of want of confidence strikes me in this manner: The government proposes to make an appropriation of money for certain purposes. They have announced their intention of distributing that money in a certain way. The amendment which is proposed is tantamount to saying: We have no confidence in the declarations which have been made, both in the Commons by the Premier and by the gentleman who introduced the Bill, and by the leader of the government in this House. You have told us that you propose to distribute this money in proportion to the population of the different provinces. We do not believe you. We will bind you to that declaration for fear that you may be misleading the public and misleading the House. Hence we will attach to that Bill a proviso compelling you to carry out what you promise. I am quite sure in the other House it was accepted as a vote of want of confidence. Apart from that I am not in accord with some remarks that have been made on this subject. The hon. gentleman who moved this amendment says that every one in the Senate approves of the Bill, and the manner in which it proposes the money should be distributed. I differ from that position altogether. There may be, in the distribution of this money for the purpose of improving the roads in the different provinces, a greater disposition in one portion of the Dominion than in another to expend a larger sum. Perhaps, being a representative from Ontario, I should not take that position; it having the largest population of any province it would necessarily receive the largest amount of money. We hear a great deal of the necessity for having roads and railways in the great Northwest to enable the producer of grains to reach the depot by which these commodities can be sent to market. We were told the other day that some have to drive fifty, sixty and one hundred miles before they can reach a railway station. If we are desirous of developing that country in the way it should be developed, the government should not be restricted as to the manner in which they should dispose of this money, so long as it is done equitably. If it is not distributed equitably, the government become responsible to the people and can be condemned by them. I am giving my own individual opinion upon these points. I am not discussing just now the propriety of appropriating any amount of money. Supposing the Senate should so amend this Bill as to render it impracticable in its working, and supposing the government, after considering the whole question, should decide to abandon the policy involved in this Bill, they can then do precisely as the late government did in dealing with the Drummond County railway scheme. The Senate, by a large majority, rejected that proposition, because they thought it was extravagant in its character, and for many other reasons. Notwithstanding that, the government carried on negotiations with the Drummond County railway directors and placed a sum in the estimates sufficient to enable them to carry out heir project and it came to this House, and in order to reject the whole Supply Bill, not having the power to amend the Bill, we had to accept it in its entirety. The government proceeded with their scheme just as if the Bill had not been rejected by the Senate, only in another way, by putting a sufficient sum in the estimates in order to enable them to carry out their policy. After consideration, and after a year or so had passed around, another scheme was evolved and the Senate accepted it and the original scheme under different circumstances, provisions and terms was adopted. The present government can do precisely the same thing, if this Bill is so amended as to render it in their opinion objectionable, or destructive of what they consider their policy. All they have to do is to drop the Bill and put a sufficient sum in the estimates to carry out the purpose which this Bill is intended to accomplish.

Now it does seem to me that, unless the Senate in its wisdom has no confidence in the declaration of the Premier and other members of the government, both in the Commons and in this House, they might allow the responsibility to remain with the government in order to carry out a policy which they believe to be in the interests of the people generally. I should not be very much surprised, in view of the manner in which the amendments propose to tie them down, if the government decide to adopt the policy that I have indicated. If I were a member of the government, I certainly would recommend them to do so. I am pointing out to this House how the government can carry out their policy so long as they have the confidence of the representatives of the people in the House of Commons, and so long as the Senate permits the passage of the Supply Bills which may be laid before them. So that it is for the Senate to say whether they will persist in the proposed amendments. I remember distinctly the cautious manner in which my hon. friend from Halifax introduced his amendment, but that does not change its effect at all. It may be that a succeeding government, which is in the far distant future—I hope it is, and I think there is every probability of it—may not be so honest as this government, and may be disposed to expend moneys in an improper way; but I cannot conceive it possible that any government intends to make this an annual grant. It must depend in a great measure, indeed altogether, upon the resources of the country. You may have a large surplus to-day and the revenue may continue to increase for years, then the time may arrive—past experience justifies what I am saying—when there will be no surplus, but a deficit. It is not at all probable that a government with a deficit would come down and ask for the appropriation of a sum of money for purposes that are not absolutely necessary, and are only given under certain circumstances for certain purposes to aid the different provinces. I must beg to differ from my hon. friend who has just spoken as to the constitutionality of this measure. The government of the day have the right, and exercise it every session, of placing in the estimates a sum of money for any purpose they please, with the intention of handing it over to any province, or any individual, for expenditure and disposition. It is for the House of Commons to say whether or not they will consent to that, and it would be for the Senate to say whether they would reject a proposition of that kind or not. The whole thing is in the hands of the people. The government are responsible for whatever they may propose; if the Senate have no confidence in the declaration of the government that they propose to expend the money in a certain way, they may defeat the Bill.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—This measure involves interests very important to the several provinces of the Dominion in respect to a matter which comes very closely to the people who do the work of the country and produce the revenues of Canada. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has just stated, that if they put an appropriation into the Supply Bill and it comes to us in that shape we would hesitate about throwing the Supply Bill out to prevent the passage of the grant for the purposes they named.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—But when it comes to us in this shape, and it is not in the Supply Bill, it is open to us to express our judgment, and opinion, and change any features of the Bill that, in our judgment, do not do justice, or serve the purpose for which the measure was intended. We are not attempting to tie the government up, as my hon. friend who has just sat down said. If I understand the situation at all, and I think I do from having read the discussion in the other House, the very amendment that is suggested to be placed in this Bill originated with the government itself, and if there is a duty for this Senate to perform, it is not so much to care for governments, or protect the interests of governments, or of the party in power, but as a judicial body to protect the common interests of the people.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—In a matter of this kind, when it is not proposed to build all the roads, but just as a matter of assistance to the several provinces towards road construction, I think there is no fairer way that this matter could be dealt with than that the money be divided on the basis of population. I am not aware that this government understands the building of roads any better than do the people in the provinces. I do not know that governments are made particularly for taking charge of highways, or the making of highways and the setting out of conditions and plans on which this money should be spent. I think the people of the different provinces would feel that, in a measure, they were receiving something in the way of charity from the federal government, as though the Dominion authorities understood how to construct roads better than the people in the several provinces. In our province of New Brunswick we have had, for sixty years, municipal councils and all the machinery necessary to take charge of and construct our roads, and I venture to say that there is no experimental knowledge in the hands of the government of Canada, individual members of the government or of the departments of the government that enables them to better understand the construction of ordinary country roads than is possessed by the people in the several maritime provinces.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—We have some good roads there. You must not think that we travel on horseback in that country now. Our roads, in a measure, are in fair condition; all we need is more money, and there is no reason why any appropriation of money should not be devoted towards assisting roads, as suggested by this amendment. We do not interfere with the expenditure of the money. The second, third and fourth clauses of this Bill provide that the government shall make the conditions, and enter into an agreement to treat with the members of the government of the several provinces, and the money is to be expended under such arrangement or agreement. All we ask is that when the appropriation is made by parliament that money shall stand to the credit of the several provinces of the Dominion on the basis of the population. My hon. friend from New Glasgow (Hon. Mr. Bell) would open the door to governments to do practically as they pleased without comment or consideration. In respect to the public buildings that are being constructed all over the Dominion, he said that money was not divided on the basis of population. But we know that that money is appropriated by specific vote, and every dollar that comes to us, except in the contingent account, comes to us named for a specific service. The doctrine he lays down would permit of us meeting in parliament and saying to the government of Canada· 'How much money do you want?' '$170,000,000.' 'Put it in a lump and get out and spend the money as you like.' That certainly is not the doctrine of responsible government, and the members of the House of Commons would not support any such doctrine as that. In this amendment we are asking nothing more than has already been stated by the hon. leader of this House to be the intention of the government to carry out in respect to appropriations under this Act. In doing that we are not expressing any want of confidence in the government, but only giving to the people of the several provinces an assurance that the Senate is discharging its duty, and wishes to protect the interests of the several provinces. The representation of the Senate is not based on population, and if there is a body that should be responsible for seeing that the people are properly cared for in matters of this nature, I think it is the Senate. In amending this Bill in so far as has been suggested by the amendments proposed, we are practically saying to all the provinces that when the appropriation is made, the assistance will be given to each of the provinces based on population. Personally, I have no disposition to hamper the government. I do not think we are here for that purpose, but rather for the purpose of expressing our judgment, and in so far as we believe it to be our duty, to so assist in the framing of measures, passed through this branch, that we will feel that we have discharged our duty to our county and the responsibilities of the position we hold.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I cordially and heartily agree with the member from Halifax in regard to the strictures he passed upon the very remarkable statements and pronouncements of the new hon. member for Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) in regard to the responsibility of parliament and of the government of the day. If we were to take the word of that senator as parliamentary gospel, the Senate might as well pack up its valise and go home, and the House of Commons likewise. In his judgment, the fourteen or fifteen men who compose the cabinet of the government of the day, are the only ones responsible for the conduct and administration of affairs in this country. Surely when the hon. gentleman wakes up to-morrow morning and reads these remarks, he will conclude that he was in a dream, or that he knew nothing of constitutional history under the British Empire or under any other constitutionally governed country. Neither branch of a legislative body, such as the parliament of Canada, composed of a lower House and upper House, such as that of the United States composed of a House of Representatives and a Senate, such as that of Great Britain itself composed of a House of Commons and a House of Lords, and such as France, composed of a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate—nobody ever asserted on the floor of any of those assemblies that we were to be tails to the administrative body of the day. Still the hon. gentleman has the courage to come here and tell us that we have to be wagged. Well, we won't stand the wagging. We intend to wag the head. We are here to give directions to the administrative body. They are there to receive our opinions, our counsels and our votes. We are not here to receive their dictation; and the hon. gentleman will find out his mistake before he is long in this Chamber. He talked about the majority ruling. There is no doubt about that. Unfortunately, sometimes the majority is not right, but as a rule we have to obey the dictates of the majority; but he forgets the role of the minority, which is to guide, and direct, and warn the majority against certain dangers and perils. That is what we are here for. We are not here to dictate the policy of the government of the day, but we are here to direct it, and in a sense to control it in a way that will be advantageous to the general welfare of the country. The hon. gentleman thinks that on this side of the House we are opposed to the Bill, because it is a government measure. In that he is absolutely wrong. We are no more opposed to this measure than to the tariff commission, or any other measure that the government has brought down. All we ask on this side of the House is to ameliorate these measures, to improve them; and if the hon. gentleman, or those who think like him, and with him, think that a suggestion of improvement means opposition, then his place is not here, but down in New Glasgow. Because the opposition suggests an amendment, that does not imply opposition or hostility to the Bill. Let the majority be sensible and reasonable, as well as the opposition. We are here to make suggestions in the interest of the country, and that is what we have been doing here for the past two weeks. Take the Manitoba Boundary Bill, as an example. No one of those who spoke on that Bill on this side of the House was opposed to the measure, but we were all in favour of improving it, which does not mean hostility or any intention to kill the Bill. Now let the hon. member from New Glasgow be cool, and take our attitude into calm reflection and consideration.

When we propose a certain thing in this House, it does not follow that we are doing it out of animosity. We are here to look after the general interests of the country. I agree with the right hon. leader of the opposition in this House that this Bill, from its very inception, is an infringement of provincial rights, and, as framed, is unconstitutional and ultra vires. But we have not moved to reject the Bill. In spite of the opinion of the right hon. leader of the opposition, the government desire to force it through. There is a clause in the Bill which provides that if a provincial legislature or municipal corporation decline to accept aid, the federal authorities have the right to go into any such municipality and construct roads. I say deliberately that no more outrageous declaration could be made against provincial rights than for the federal government to say to the country or the municipal council of any municipality, or to the provincial legislature: If you do not accept our terms we will go in and do as we please. What does that mean? The destruction of confederation and the annulling of the decentralization principle. The government has the audacity to say to the municipalities of this country, 'If you do not do what we desire we will go in and do it in spite of you.' That is getting pretty near the limit. Hon. gentlemen may arise and plead generosity on the part of the federal power in giving money away. They do not know what to do with it, but the principle is there, and I contend, with many, that the government has no right to do so, and it is simply audacious in the face of the constitution to say that it has a right. Under these circumstances the critics of the Bill are charged with trying to bind down the government of the day in regard to the control and expenditure of money, and they say, 'What right have the critics to bind the government to any action?' I do not say the hon. leader of the government has gone that far, but the new recruit in his ranks has made that statement, and it is a most untenable position for any public man to take. We are here to say how that money shall be spent.

I entirely disagree with the hon. member for Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) in regard to the constitutional rights and the legislative rights of the representatives of the people. I want him to understand that we cannot be tied to the chariot wheels of any cabinet. We are here to direct this expenditure. They get the money voted and we will tell them how to spend it. They cannot spend one single dollar without stating how it is to be applied. Is it not right that the representative of the people should say how this five or ten millions should be distributed between taxpayer and taxpayer throughout this broad Dominion. What right has Ontario to five millions and Quebec only one million? Or what right have they to give one hundred thousand to Saskatchewan, and fifty thousand to Alberta, and the balance to British Columbia? That is what we must control. Notwithstanding the declaration of Mr. Borden, and Mr. Cochrane, that money must be divided by enactment of law, and not by their declaration, because, as the old Latin poet said, 'Words pass away, writing remains.' Do not let the hon. member for Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) imagine it is a vote of want of confidence in the government. Mr. Borden is here to-day, but he may be gone to-morrow, and his word will not amount to anything. Mr. Cochrane is here to-day, and he may be gone to-morrow, and his word will not amount to anything. We want their declarations put in black and white. They ought to be proud to have their declarations embodied in the Bill. We never know when death, or some other cause, may take them from office. I cannot see why any objection should be taken to this amendment. I have no confidence in certain members of the present government. I will not go so far as to say I have no confidence in the government. I will not allow this sum of money to be put in the estimates or the budget and be put under the control of certain persons in that cabinet. That is plain and there is no use going behind the bush.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—It is plain enough.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Plain enough, and I have reason to say so, because I have felt the sting of some of these men, and I do not want to feel it in parliament. I think it is absolutely necessary that this amendment should be passed. I have very little more to say. I think the constitutional aspect of the question has been dealt with by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and he has given a full and complete explanation in regard to that matter.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I read with a great deal of pleasure the announcement made in the Commons the other day that we were to have an appropriation for roads in the provinces. The question seems to be how it shall be dealt with. At first blush one would think the amendment offered by the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) was a very reasonable one. I had the honour of being in the local legislature for many years. In our province the government build the greater part of the roads and bridges. If I had applied the principle that is embodied in this amendment I would have had to appropriate the money in my county proportionate to the population in the different parts. I often found it necessary to spend all the money in one part of a county, or in two parishes, in which there happened to be a very great rush of immigration; the other parishes were deprived of that expenditure. They did not need it so much and the roads were in pretty good condition.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This amendment would not hinder the money being spent in that way.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—We have immense forests through which the National Transcontinental railway runs. If one hundred, or two hundred, people were to suddenly come into that country a great deal of money would have to be spent for roads and bridges. Under this amendment you would tie the government down to apportion the money to each province according to population. If a large immigration were to come into Quebec, it might be necessary to give Quebec a much larger amount than they would receive according to population. These immigrants would require roads and bridges, and it might be necessary to make a very large appropriation for that purpose, but under this amendment it would be impossible to give that aid. Ontario is a very old province; its roads and bridges are in good condition, and it might be that Ontario would not require a very large amount, but Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, on the line of the National Transcontinental railway, where it runs through the forest for 250 miles, might have a rush of people from the old country rendering it necessary to give New Brunswick a large amount. It would only get a small amount if they received it according to their population.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Have not the government already said that it was their intention to divide this money on the basis of population ?

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I do not approve of that statement. I claim that the government should have a free hand to place this money where it is most required. It might be necessary, in case of a large population coming into a new portion of any province, to spend a larger amount than that province would be entitled to according to their population, and I claim the government ought to have a free hand in that respect. as to what roads and bridges should be built, while in an older country they should not require such a large expenditure. A few years later it may be necessary to expend more money. I think it is a mistake to tie the hands of the government in this case. It shows we have very little confidence in them. We might just as well say that the railway subsidy shall be apportioned pro rata each year among the different railways. The money is apportioned where it is most needed. They should adopt the same principle with regard to roads and bridges and apply the money where it is required, and perhaps in five or six years each province might get its proper proportion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Hon. gentlemen may be aware of the fact—perhaps some hon. gentlemen are not—that this amendment was moved in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not just the same.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Substantially the same. It is very desirable that there should not be conflict between the two Houses if we can possibly avoid it. I am perfectly aware that if the amendment is carried it will result, of course, in a conference between the two Houses. My own view is—there can be no two opinions about it—that the Senate has a right to amend this Bill in any way it pleases. I most freely admit that. It is not a money Bill, and is entirely in the hands of the Senate, but it seems to me, on a question of this kind, where the government has come down to parliament with a policy, and has introduced a Bill embodying in general terms its declaration of policy, and in pursuance of that has further placed in the estimates a certain amount of money made divisible upon the pro rata basis amongst the various provinces of the Dominion and in harmony with the statement which they have made upon the floor of parliament; and in further view of the fact that the House of Commons has authority, and the only authority to vote supplies upon a question of this kind, that this Chamber should accept the solemn declaration of parliament, as represented by the House of Commons upon a subject such as this. To say that the Senate, upon a Bill which looks to the voting of, and distribution of, public money, should pass clauses tying the government of the day into as hard a knot as possible, and not accepting the statement which they have solemnly and deliberately made in parliament, and have shown by good faith in the Supply Bill, is to express, certainly, a want of confidence in that government, and you cannot take exception to a self-respecting government objecting to that class of legislation, particularly keeping in view that it relates to a branch of public expenditure over which the House of Commons alone has control. It seems to me it would be in harmony with the constitutional practice of this Senate to either accept or reject the Bill. I quite admit the authority of the Senate to amend it, but it would be very much better constitutional practice to reject or accept it in its entirety.

Some hon. MEMBERS—No, no.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the view that I with all due deference, desire to express. Hon. gentlemen must foresee conflict between the House of Commons and this Chamber if we pass an amendment which was rejected by the Commons before the Bill was sent up here.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that if a motion is made in the House of Commons and rejected there, that it cannot be renewed in the Senate?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I made no such statement. My right hon. friend surely cannot have construed my remarks as warranting that conclusion. I said, and I repeat, that the Senate has the fullest authority to move any amendment it pleases to any Bill of this kind, notwithstanding that amendment may have been rejected by the House of Commons, but let us carry it out to its logical conclusion. What is the logical conclusion? That on all Bills the Senate would be the dominant and governing party. The Senate has a constitutional right to amend any Bills along the lines I have indicated, and to adopt the amendments rejected by the Commons, but let us carry it out in its detail. Every amendment moved by the opposition in the House of Commons against the government could be introduced into the Senate and carried. That would mean that the House of Commons would have to accept the amendments of the Senate as against the expression of its own body. That could be applied to every Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They can reject our amendments?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If this is accepted as a precedent, that the House of Commons, notwithstanding their rejection of the amendment, must accept after it goes from this Senate to the House of Commons, it means that it may be applied to every Bill. There is no question that that is the constitutional right of the Senate, but the two bodies are made up of human beings, and if they once come into conflict along the lines I have indicated, there must necessarily be a deadlock. It is for hon. gentlemen to say whether the good sense and sound judgment of this body in dealing with a Bill of this kind, which virtually pertains to the expenditure of money, shall be carried to the extent and to the constitutional extremity which I have pointed out, and which must result eventually in this body having to conform to public opinion, because the House of Commons undoubtedly expresses, in its legislation and in all its acts, the popular will of the people.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not always.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And although we cannot view, possibly, every matter which comes up here in the same light as the House of Commons, yet eventually, if we follow it out to its logical conclusion, we certainly will have to bow to the popular will. My own impression is that our better sense and judgment should be exercised with reference to this particular Bill, and if hon. gentlemen desire to further think over the matter, I am perfectly willing that the committee should rise and report progress and sit again; but under the circumstances I regret very much that I cannot see my way to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is quite right when he says, that if all the amendments moved by the opposition in the Commons were taken up in this Chamber, and tacked on every government Bill, it would be practically the minority in the Commons who would be governing the country. I admit that if that general affirmation were made, and found true, that would be the logical conclusion to be drawn from such a state of affairs, but I have not looked through the Commons 'Hansard' to know what amendments were moved to the various Bills passing through that Chamber, and introduced here. I am content with taking the Bill which is before us, which is admitted to be a complete departure from legislation since confederation, which adds to the subsidies to the provinces for work, which has been up to this date, carried on by the several provinces, which are local works in the provinces which have been paid out of the proceeds voted by the federal government, and by the taxes collected in the province by the provincial Budget. We are having a new departure which pretends to help the province in local works in the province. The government says: 'our policy is, under this Bill, to divide that money among the provinces in proportion to population.' I understand my hon. friend to argue that the policy of the majority of the Senate should not prevail over the policy of the government, supported by a majority in the Commons. but what are we doing in this instance? Simply embodying in the Act, the policy expressed by the government in the other Chamber and repeated by the representative of the government in this Chamber. Is there anything heterodox in that? My hon. friend asks: 'should the word of the government not be accepted?' I am asking another question. 'What guarantee does he give this Chamber that the successors of the present government will feel bound by the policy of the present government?'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This being an Act of parliament, it can be repealed any year. If there are any successors to this government, as there possibly may be in the dim and misty future, they can repeal it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The answer is not satisfactory, and I shall draw the attention of my hon. friend to the point where it is weak. Either branch of this parliament can withdraw its own legislation, but it takes the two chambers to repeal a law and another government, composed perhaps of members of the dominant party to-day in the Commons, and represented in this Chamber by the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick, who have expressed very divergent views from the policy of the government, then where is that assurance that the policy will be carried? I am convinced that this position taken by my hon. friend is untenable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then you had better reject the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, because we are simply carrying on the policy expressed by the government in bringing down the legislation in this Chamber, and repeated here by my hon. friend. He says it is unfortunate that this amendment has been proposed, as it was proposed and rejected in the other Chamber. He fears a conflict with the majority in the other House. It seems to me that if we have common sense, equity and good legislation on our side in this one instance. it should not be inconsistent with the dignity of the Commons to accept the amendments this Chamber makes to this Bill. I hope the majority in the Senate is prepared to treat fairly and equitably all measures that come from the other Chamber, but, on the other hand, there should be a little reciprocity in that treatment. They should treat the opinions and conclusion reached by this Chamber as we treat the legislation coming from the other Chamber. I desire to repeat that we simply embody in this Bill the policy of the present government, which has been challenged by some of the supporters of the government, and if my hon. friend will allow me to draw his attention to what has taken place in the other Chamber, I will tell him that I think this amendment was only carried by two of a majority there.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I wish to point out the weakness of the argument advanced by the hon. leader of the government. He tells us we should not adopt this amendment, and he has appealed to our better sense and judgment on the ground that if we do adopt this, it may result in a conflict between the two Houses. That is an extremely weak argument, because if we are to be deterred from adopting this or any other amendment to any government measure which comes to us for fear of a conflict with the other House, we will never adopt any amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a concrete case in which the House of Commons has already rejected this amendment, and I say that we cannot expect the Commons, once having rejected the amendment, to stultify itself by accepting it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That is obvious. If we cannot expect the House of Commons to stultify itself, the House of Commons cannot expect us to stultify ourselves. If, after bringing our best consideration to bear on a measure, either government or private, we think that, according to every rule of good legislation, we should propose some amendment, are we going to be deterred from doing that because we may be in conflict with some other gentlemen, and should we not appeal to their better sense and judgment? I think that when the Bill goes to the Commons, with the discussion which has taken place in the Senate, and with the arguments which have been advanced, which, I may be permitted to say, with all respect, are absolutely sound, the Commons may adopt our amendment. The arguments in favour of amendments proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), in the judgment of every person in the House who will give it consideration, are very sound.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No sounder than when made in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That is all right, but if we are not, in this House, going to adopt an amendment which to us appears sound and logical and good legislation because in the other House it did not appear to them in that light, we shall never adopt any amendment, and we shall have to stultify ourselves and say the House of Commons thought better than we did and we will have to go the way the House of Commons went. I have no doubt that when the House of Commons has before it the arguments that have been advanced in this House, their judgment will accept this amendment. I protest against the doctrine that this House should not adopt an amendment because it may be in conflict with the decision of the other House. If that doctrine is to be admitted, then, as has been said, we had better pack our traps and go home and let the House of Commons run the whole show.

Hon. Mr. KERR—In the first place there is not a single word in the proposed amendment which is in conflict with the proposal of the government as expressed by the leader of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why put it in?

Hon. Mr. KERR—There is nothing which will prevent them from carrying out what he says they are going to carry out. In the absence of words declaring their intention, we have to take a blanket Bill and justify legislation which leaves the door open for them to change their minds. Any one who reads the Bill will see in the first section that this may or may not be an expenditure in more provinces than one. The whole of clause 1 contemplates the expenditure of money in any province, and leaves it open to do it in any way they please. The principle has been accepted by the other House that it must be in proportion to the population in each province and that it must be done in each province. All this amendment provides for is to put in writing this declaration which might, or might not, be repudiated by some members of the party on the opposite side who have already voted for the Bill, or it might be repudiated by some members of the government, because it is argued that they had a right to change their minds and were not precluded. This is a plain proposition and, as a matter of sound legislation and as a matter of preserving the dignity of parliament, and as a protection which the Senate is specially charged to provide in the interests of the smaller provinces, which may need this aid more than the larger ones, I say if there is a duty to amend any Bill it is to amend this Bill. We are doing it in accordance with the expressed declarations of the ministers as to their intentions. Under these circumstances, I submit it would not only be the height of folly, but it would be a great impropriety on the part of the Senate, to pass this Bill in the form in which it is presented, instead of in the amended form. As to the course the Commons may take, that is a matter we cannot anticipate. I should be sorry to think that, over a matter of this kind, we should be put into the position of adopting such a course as has been hinted here. If that is an indication of a threat, if it is something going beyond what is reasonable argument, if it is an assertion of power, or if it is an assertion of an intention to carry out something against a chamber which is specially charged with the revision of these Bills, then I say our course is only made doubly clear. It appears to me that the hon. gentleman will, on reflection, withdraw anything in the shape of an intention on his part to indicate anything like coercion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is not justified in making any such statement. He has no right to impute any such motive to me from any statement I have made. I appeal to the Chamber if I have not made a fair statement of the case without making any innuendos, much less without expressing a threat. I simply pointed out the fact that we cannot expect the Commons to stultify itself, after having once rejected this amendment.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have great pleasure in accepting the assurance of the hon. gentleman that his statement was not intended as a threat. In view of the statement which is made by the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell).

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not responsible for what other hon. gentlemen say.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I might be pardoned for drawing the conclusion that he spoke as voicing the views of the party, if not of the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then I must hereafter hold my hon. friend responsible for any statement my hon. friend from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Cloran) may make.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the hon. gentleman means to say that the statement of the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell), and the hon. member from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Cloran) are to be treated in the same way——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend has no right to draw that conclusion.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I will leave these gentlemen to say who shall be entitled to invite criticism of the government. That does not get away from the point I was making. I did not say that it was a threat. I said I hoped it was not a threat. I accept the statement that it was not a threat. Now, we come down to a reasonable way of dealing with the matter. A man makes a proposition to you and he says 'I will do so and so,' and when he is asked to put it in writing he sits down and writes something what is only half the bargain. You state to him 'You said you would do so and so.' He says 'Yes, I am to do that.' Then you say to him, 'Put that in there also and express the whole of the bargain.' That would be a reasonable proposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Go a little further and say that such a bargain has been made, and one gentleman says to the other 'Put that in writing.' Does not that mean to say I do not trust you?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, it does not. It is for the purpose of preventing a misunderstanding. It not only binds the government, but it binds the parties behind the government. And any government that may be in power in the future.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was at the head of an institution, and I made a proposition for a settlement. The gentleman had known me for 22 years. He wrote back wanting me to put it in writing. I told him to go where it would be a good deal warmer than it is here.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I cannot account for the choleric disposition of my hon. friend who takes offence at what is a very simple proposition. If he had some person acting for him instead of acting for himself?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my word had been taken it would have held the directors, and they would have been bound to carry it out.

Hon. Mr. KERR—If my hon. friend had some person representing him and the people for whom he was speaking, they would have said, 'Certainly this whole bargain must be put in writing.' So now, when this government is speaking for the people of this country as well as for its party, I think it is only fair to say: 'Put the whole of the bond in writing, and then there can be no misunderstanding.' I think the illustration the hon. gentleman gave me is a very good one, showing what is the every day practice, that people do not put half a bargain in writing and leave the other half expressed in words open for any kind of dispute hereafter. It appears to me if ever there was a case in which the parliament was called upon to amend an Act so as to express the declared intention of those who introduced the Bill in another place, and who sent that Bill here for us on the strength of such endorsements and statements as that, this is a case in which we should be careful to see that those words are expressed in the bond.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I must get even with the leader of the government, who made a rather personal statement on the floor of the House that the hon. member from Toronto was no more responsible for what I said than the leader of the government was responsible for his new raw recruit, very raw. Now, the leader of the government cannot cast any reflection on me without getting it back, and getting it back thick and good. I want to offer the leader of the government this proposition: that he will take the 'Hansard' from the day I entered the Senate nine years ago, and find up to the present time one sentence against public policy, against public interests, against national rights, against the honour of any hon. gentleman in this House, and I will apologize to him, and more than that, I will give him my indemnity of this year so as to enable him to engage a staff of secretaries to go through the Debates, and I will pay all their expenses. I am talking to the leader of the government, and I do not want anybody else to be talking.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Go on, I am listening.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If you cannot find anything of that kind in my record, then it is up to you, as a gentleman, to apologize to me and take it back.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend had paid proper attention to what was being said, he would not misconstrue the remarks that were made. What I said was this, that I would not think of holding my right hon. friend responsible for all that my hon. friend from the Victoria division of Montreal said. I fancy that I am justified in that, am I not?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then am I to understand that my right hon. friend is responsible for all that the hon. gentleman says?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, that is not what the hon. gentleman said. What he said was, that he was no more responsible for the statements of the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Bell) than the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Kerr) was responsible for mine. That is what you said.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I did not.

The CHAIRMAN—I beg to call the attention——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is no point of order.

Some hon. GENTLEMAN—Order; chair.

The CHAIRMAN—The rules forbid hon. gentlemen on either side of the House from talking directly across to the other.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I will speak to the Chair. Mr. Chairman, I have been told by the leader of the government that he was no more responsible for the expressions of opinion in this House by the hon. member from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) than the hon. member from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) was responsible for mine.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is a statement made in the hearing of myself and other senators here. Of course if he did not say that, then I have nothing more to say.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I would not intervene again in this discussion were it not for the fact that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Kerr) has stated that I made a threat in the course of my speech. Well, I shall be very much surprised if on reading my speech he can discover anything like a threat in it, or anything that could be construed as a threat.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I beg to state that I did not indicate anything of the kind in reference to anything that the Hon. Mr. Bell said. I was addressing that observation to the leader of the government. I wanted a declaration from him that he was not making a threat.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I understood, first of all, that the hon. gentleman charged the leader of the House with having made a threat, and then when the hon. gentleman repudiated that, he said: 'Then the hon. member from Pictou said so, and you are responsible for his utterances, because he spoke from the seat adjacent to you'; and furthermore, he undertook to say that I spoke as expressing the government policy in the matter. Now, I want to say that I am not a member of the government, I am responsible, as a supporter of the government, for their policy, of course, and I am responsible for every expression of opinion that I utter here as a man and a senator; but it would be unfair to the government that they should be held responsible for what I say, any more than they are responsible for what is said by any of their supporters in this Chamber, and I certainly had not the slightest intention of making a threat. I think I should be very foolish to utter a threat against the Chamber of which I am myself a member; it would be an absurd thing to do, and I had no intention of threatening, nor do I understand that the leader of the government had any intention of making a threat. What he did was to point out the situation that would arise if, after the House of Commons had rejected an amendment, the Senate subsequently adopted the same amendment. Now, can any one dispute the fact that in that case there would be an affirmation and a negation by these two bodies in reference to a definite statement? Consequently, it is very easy to be seen that if that is the case the two Chambers would be brought into conflict.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Is there not a possibility of that situation arising on any amendment that this House proposes?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I think unquestionably there is; in every case where one Chamber has affirmed yea and the other nay to the same statement they are in conflict.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Might not that arise on any matter at any time?

Hon. Mr. BELL—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Yet my hon. friend says that we should be debarred from making an amendment for fear of such a situation arising.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I never dreamed of saying so for a moment. The Senate has power to deal with every measure that comes before it with the exception of a money Bill, which it cannot amend. It can move any number of amendments to any measure that comes here; we all know that. Why, then, should we ask any further assurance on that score? We have our rights and our powers in this Chamber.

The amendment was adopted, contents 35, non-contents 11.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a slight amendment I wish to propose to clause 4, to which I assume the hon. leader of the government will have no objection. It is in the first line of clause 4, after 'Highway' insert 'or bridge.' It will be noticed that in clause 3, the phraseology is 'highways or bridges,' and inasmuch as in the new parts of a country particularly, the construction of a bridge is a very important matter and very expensive, and just the kind of matter where the resources of the Dominion government might naturally be called upon, I asume that the hon. gentleman has no objection to insert 'or bridge' after 'highway.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have nothing to say.

The amendment was agreed to, on a division.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have another amendment. In the first line of clause 5, insert the words 'or bridge,' after 'highway.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman not think that a highway which crosses a river is a part of the highway, and the bridge would be necessary in order to complete the highway?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not going to undertake to enter into a discussion on that question, but I simply call attention to the fact that the government in the 3rd clause took care in two places to insert the words 'or bridges' afterwards, and we are simply following their example.

The amendment was agreed to, on a division.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The last amendment which I have the honour to propose is to strike out clause 6. Under this clause, the Minister of Railways,

> With the approval of the Governor in Council and upon such terms and conditions as are prescribed by order in council, may undertake the construction of any new highway or the improvement of any existing highway in any province, and may expend in such improvement or construction the whole or any part of the sum voted by parliament for such subsidy to that province. Provided, however, that the minister shall first obtain the necessary authority from the legislature of such province and the consent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

If it was necessary to do all that in advance, the probabilities are that there would be very great delay in connection with a comparatively small expenditure, and the rights of the government of Canada are sufficiently protected by the preceding clause.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Carried on a division.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Before that is done, I would invite the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec there is a plan for the improvement of highways by a special Act of parliament, and the work has to be done by the county councils.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, not always.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think it is in the Act of 1907. By that plan the greatest care is taken as to supervision and the preparation of the plans, and these are obtained by the provinces and submitted to the councils for consideration. Under that the work is carried out by the councils, and the government supply half the money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When was that Act passed?

Hon. Mr. KERR—In 1907. What I want to submit for the consideration of the ministers is, that there being a complete system there, which calls for the greatest care and attention on the part of the local authorities for doing this work, that this Bill should be carried out through that plan. The money should be voted to the province to be expended in accordance with that plan. It is in view of that that I think section 3 should have an additional subsection to it. I would provide at the end of clause 3:

> That in case a plan for system for the improvement of highways, has been or may hereafter be adopted in any province under any Act of such province, the amount apportioned to any such province as hereinbefore provided shall be applied and expended in the same manner as the moneys provided in such Act.

This is the people's money and it is going to the provinces and the people will see that they get value for their money and will contribute towards the work. I move, therefore, that clause 3 be amended by adding this as a subsection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I trust the committee will not adopt this amendment, because it is importing into a Dominion measure conditions which are right enough in provincial measure, but which are altogether out of place in a measure passed b this parliament. Why should we inser in this Bill a provision which can operate only as to the province of Ontario? I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has thought proper to interpose with this amendment because it is calculated to defeat the object of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You have done that already.

The CHAIRMAN—The question is on the proposed amendment of the Hon. Mr. Kerr.

It being six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The committee was resumed.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I wish to draw the attention of the hon. leader to the fact that there is a good deal to be said in favour of the amendment, inasmuch as I notice by clause 4 of this Bill that the government is undertaking quite a large contract, and I think the hon. leader will agree with me, coming from the province he represents. Clause 4 says:

> Any highway for which aid is granted to a province shall be improved or constructed, as the case may be, according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the minister, and specified in each case in an agreement between the minister and the government of the province, which agreement the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make.

Does my hon. friend think that the Governor in Council here can get up specifications, descriptions, &c., with reference to a road in the Peace river country, or in reference to a road away back in British Columbia, or Saskatchewan, or any of those new provinces? If we are going to construct roads all over the country, I must say that I think the people who know more about the roads of the country are the local government in each case; I know I am speaking for Saskatchewan. We have a first class road system, and our government this year have come down with a proposition to expend in the next few years $500,000 on the roads of Saskatchewan. We have a first class road system there, and I am quite positive that the provincial government is in a position to spend any money which the Dominion government may be willing to appropriate for roads in that province, to much better effect and much more economically than the government here could do it. I would like to see this money spent; we all want to see good roads in the country; nobody objects to good roads. If we can get a million or two millions we would be very glad to take it, and I understand that the government have an overflowing treasury—which by the way, they might get rid of by lowering the taxation instead of adopting these means. But I submit that the local government, knowing all the conditions with reference to their own province, knowing everything in connection with the building of roads, having a system established for the building and improving of roads, are in a much better position to handle any money which the government wish to donate to them than the government here at Ottawa. That is my impression, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the government have assumed a serious contract when they undertake to get out specifications and plans, &c., for all the roads which they propose to build in the nine provinces of the Dominion. I think it would be much better to leave it to the provinces themselves, and give them the money. I am sure that there could be no objection to placing the money in the hands of all the provinces, as the people of Canada as a whole are paying this money.

If the government agree that it is a good thing and that it should be done in that way, I do not see why they object to have it in the Bill. I might draw attention to some of the discussion this afternoon with reference to the right of this House to improve any government measure that comes before it. Some of my hon. friends have a very short memory. I have in mind a Bill that was brought in to construct a railway into the Yukon, and although it might have raised a conflict between this House and the House of Commons my hon. friends on that side of the House had then a different opinion from the one expressed to-day. Some of them spoke against that proposition, and I think most of them voted that way. To-day they have reversed their opinion. It is just a question of whose ox is being gored. There is a good deal to be said in favour of my hon. friend's amendment. If any money is to be contributed by the Dominion, it would be much better to hand it to the provinces and let them spend it. It would be more economically spent in that way, and much better results would accrue than if the Dominion government undertook it. They have enough to do here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend had looked up the records of the Senate during the time the majority of the Senate was opposed to the government, he would have ascertained that the practice which then obtained, almost without any exception, was that the Senate rejected in its entirety the whole of any measure on the ground of policy. That was done in connection with the Yukon Railway Bill, the Drummond Counties Bill, and in certain matters relating to what we regarded as a premature distribution of boundaries of constituencies before the Redistribution Bill was brought down. I recall no case in which the majority of the Senate of that day, sought to amend Bills for the purpose of limiting or restricting the government, and I think my hon. friends, by looking up the Debates and Journals of the Senate of those days, will learn that that was invariably the practice of that period. Certainly, no exception could be taken to the constitutional right of the Senate rejecting this Bill. With due deference to the action which my hon. friends have taken upon the subject, my own opinion is that this is the course which should have been pursued now. With reference to the other subject spoken of by my hon. friend, as to his adopting the machinery which may exist in the province with respect to building roads, there is nothing in this Bill to prevent that being done. I pointed out, on the introduction of the Bill, that it was a measure fraught with very great difficulties, owing to the government entering upon what might be termed a new departure, and that a satisfactory scheme would have to be evolved by a conference between the provinces and the central government.

It was for that reason that the Bill was couched in these very flexible terms when brought before the Senate, and which, in my humble judgment, it is desirable should obtain in reference to this Bill so as to work out a harmonious scheme. There is nothing to prevent the government from adopting the machinery which may obtain in the provinces as to the construction of roads, the only consideration being that there must be a mutual arrangement entered into before the operative parts of the Bill go into effect.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Some of my hon. friends opposite have said that when a government had the confidence of the country, and had a certain policy it was not right for this House to interfere with that policy. That is a statement that was made. I cannot understand that logic, nor my hon. friend saying that we should not amend the Bill, but that we should reject it entirely. We have submitted some good amendments to the Bill. We say if the government has money to spare we are prepared to have it spend that money in making better roads. I submit it should be spent by the provinces, and I think that is the meaning of the amendment that has been made.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have some hesitation in voting for the amendment of the hon. member from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr), because I am afraid that it may restrict the discretion which is allowed by clauses 3 and 4.

It may happen after the conference that will take place, when this session is over, that the money to be voted from the federal exchequer might be quite easily expended under the present provincial legislation. I do not feel like hampering the federal authorities before that conference takes place, but I will take an appeal to my hon. friend on the other side who represents the government. I for one have made up my mind from the outset—and I will refer him to perhaps the first speech I made in this Chamber, which was in 1898, that whenever I sat on this side of the Chamber I would divest myself, as far as a human being could, from any strong sentiment of partisanship, and never forget that the government of the day is in power by the will of the majority, and that this Chamber was created with the idea that it would receive the measures coming from the other Chamber, more especially emanating from the government, in a spirit of sympathy and fair-play, and would examine them and treat them in the best interests of the country, without forgetting that measures that have been submitted to the people must be received with more consideration than others which concern the ordinary administration of the affairs of the country, and which have not been submitted to the people. This was my view when I came into the Chamber, and this is my view today. In intend to adhere to it according to my best judgment. There is only one unfortunate incident in connection with this amendment which has been mentioned by my hon. friend; it is the fact that the substance of this amendment has already been discussed in the other Chamber. I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that this Chamber does not undertake to thwart the policy which has been enunciated by the government. I affirm my strong conviction that with this amendment the present federal government will be able, when this session is over, with an absolutely free hand, to meet the representatives of the provinces, discuss all the features of this policy and agree under clauses 3, 4, 5 on a scheme which will carry out absolutely the intentions of the government.

It is possible that this Bill may be found insufficient, but I claim that, without the amendments which have been passed, the same situation may develop, because of conditions which would have to be faced and which are not known at this moment, and cannot be foreseen. I cited the language of the hon. leader of this government in the other Chamber, by which it appears that the Prime Minister recognizes that this measure was introduced in a crude form, in a hurried way, and that very likely after the conference he spoke of has taken place, he will have to come before the House in November next to implement it with new legislation. If my affirmation is true that we do not thwart in the least the policy enunciated by this government, I wonder why our amendments should be rejected when the only reason which could be advanced is that they were already considered by the Commons. We have an equal jurisdiction with the Commons. We are asking nothing unfair. We assert a principle recognized by the government. If our action is considered with an unbiased mind it would lead to a more harmonious working of the two branches of parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After hearing the speech of the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) and looking at the law to which he called the attention of the Senate, it strikes me that his amendment is the most sensible one that has been made to amend this Bill. That is the light in which I take it.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And yet when the hon. gentleman moved his motion I heard a universal cry on the other side of the House of 'No, no,' and I have been informed that he could not find two of those who voted for the other amendment to sustain him in the motion which he has made.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman declares that he is agreeable to this amendment, my hesitation will cease, and he will find me voting with him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not aware that I have yet expressed approval of any amendment, and I do not know that I would commit myself by saying yes or no to any question which the hon. gentleman may submit across the floor. Probably by the time I get through he may have been relieved of the trouble of putting that question to me. I have since examined this statute, hurriedly, I admit, and I want to point out that even supposing the amendment of my hon. friend that is now before the committee, were adopted it would not materially change the policy of the present Bill, for under the principles laid down in this Ontario Act, not a single step could be taken by a municipality, whether a county municipality or a township municipality, either in the framing of their by-laws or in the selection of the routes and roads to be selected, they could not act until they received the full sanction and approval of the Board of Works of the provincial government. In other words, no action could be taken towards the expenditure of a single dollar appropriated to the purpose of the improvement of roads under this Act until it had the approval and sanction of the Governor in Council, and of the Board of Works of that province. Now, what have you done in this case? You have obliterated from the Bill the sixth clause, thereby depriving the government of the day, which is proposing to spend a large amount of money for the purpose of improving the highways, of any power or right of interference whatever with the manner in which the money shall be expended. I have heard a good deal in this House, in the press, and in the House of Commons during the discussion of the Navy Bill on the interference with the autonomy of this parliament, of this country, of this Dominion, if the government appropriated a single dollar to aid the British government in their expenditure upon the navy. If it was a violation of the autonomy of the Dominion to appropriate a certain sum of money to be expended by Britain in improving the navy of the empire, we should apply the same principle to this. By the amendments submitted by hon. gentlemen they declare that the money appropriated by the Dominion for the improvement of roads in this country shall be handed over to another government and placed altogether beyond the control of the Dominion. Is that not an equal interference with and violation of the autonomy of the Dominion?

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not admit that either proposition is an invasion of the autonomy of parliament by any means. We had a right, and have the right now to appropriate any amount of money we please to encourage and increase the power of the British navy. We can do that voluntarily without the interference with our antonomy. If this Bill becomes law the government can hand over a million, or ten millions, if you like, for the improvement of roads in the Dominion without sacrificing the autonomy of parliament, because the appropriation is made with the consent and approval of the representatives of the people in one case just as well as in the other.

But it is very easy in this, as in many other cases, to adapt your reasoning to the peculiar circumstances of the case. If the amendment which is now before the Senate is adopted, it would, to a certain extent, replace the provisions of the 6th clause which has been defeated and struck out of the Bill. I may be wrong, but I have come to the conclusion that the amendments which have been made will deprive the people of the different provinces of that aid which I think they richly deserve, considering the state of our finances, in improving our highways. The government may not accept the amendments as the late government did in the case to which I called the attention of the Senate before the adjournment—that is, put a sum in the estimates worded in such a manner as to carry out literally the provisions of this Act. They may make the terms of the appropriation of that money and the expenditure of the money in accordance with the policy involved in the statute, if they think proper. Then it will be for the House of Commons or the Senate to accept or reject such a proposition. Every senator knows that in the Commons they can move to strike out a particular clause for the reasons which have been advanced in the Senate for changing the provisions of the Act; but when it comes to this House we would either have to accept the Supply Bill in its entirety or reject it altogether because it contains that certain clause. We have had that experience in this country and they have had it also in Australia. The Upper House in Australia rejected the Supply Bill in its entirety because it contained one provision to which they objected, and that provision was the payment of the members of the Upper House. They laid down the principle—and acted upon it by rejecting the Supply Bill—that members of the Upper House should not be paid. And in order to compel the government to strike out that clause they rejected the Supply Bill, and they rejected it twice before the Lower House acceded to their request. We can act upon the same principle. We could reject the Supply Bill on the ground that it contained such a provision to which I called the attention of the Senate, and insist upon its being struck out of the Supply Bill before we will consent to give them any money. That is a practice which has been pursued in other countries. Whether the Senate is prepared to accept the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr), I am not prepared to say; but I repeat what I stated in the beginning, though I am not going to vote for it if there is a vote that it is the most sensible, reasonable, and logical amendment proposed to the House in regard to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I desire to place before the House my attitude in respect to this question. I have no disposition whatever to interfere with this appropriation being made for the roads, and no desire whatever, in my support of this amendment to cause the government to throw out the Bill, but I am willing to take all the responsibility which goes with that action, believing it is in the interest of this country that a Bill of this kind should be so plain that all the people would be aware of exactly what they might expect. We have not suggested anything, as has been stated several times, but what the leader has told us,—that the appropriation shall be so divided that each province will get its share of it. Already in this discussion we have had one hon. gentleman say that it might be that one province, in consequence of immigration, would be entitled to get all the money one year. Putting it in that way, goes to show the possible flexibility of this measure in the hands of the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While that may have been expressed as the opinion of one hon. member, yet the government of the day is unalterably committed to the principle which has already been laid down by the Prime Minister and other ministers in the House of Commons, and also in this House, and no matter what the opinion of hon. gentlemen may be as to an equal distribution—of which much that is meritorious might be said—yet the government has laid down its policy, and my hon. friend has no right to doubt that by reason of a different statement being made in any other quarter.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—If the government have already laid down their policy, surely they cannot refuse to accept their own policy in the Bill now before the Senate. Surely there is no man in the Senate who, having agreed to do a certain thing, would refuse to put his name to it if he honestly meant to do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You would demand that, because you doubted his honesty.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not think the government should refuse this Bill because we simply put in words what they promise the country they shall carry out. The Senate does not need any defence. The country will imagine that the government were unwilling to be put on record in a bond.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You struck out clause 6 also.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—So far as the flexibility of the Bill is concerned, if the hon. gentleman will read clauses 4 and 5 he will find that the government can practically do anything they like in the expenditure of the money. Clause 4 reads as follows:

> 4. Any highway for which aid is granted to a province shall be improved or constructed, as the case may be, according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the minister, and specified in each case in an agreement between the minister and the government of the province, which agreement the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make.

Now the Minister of Railways, after consultation with the government of the province, can go to the province and expend that money, and there is nothing to prevent it, with this section out. Supposing the Minister of Railways goes down to New Brunswick, and meets our Premier, and says to him: 'We have $500,000 which we propose to give you to assist in building roads and bridges,' and they enter into an agreement according to description, conditions and specifications, what then will be the conditions? I do not think they will have impaired that Bill to the extent the hon. gentleman has endeavoured to lead us to think. That 6th section has left this proposition in the hands of the government so flexible, that the expenditure of this money can be made on any condition that can be arranged between the Minister of Railways and the Premier of any province.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under section 6, as it is proposed to be amended, if the government chose to carry out federal work in the province with the consent of the legislature irrespective of the mutual work which may be carried on between the provinces and the central government, a like amount would have to be paid to every province in the Dominion pro rata.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not see it in that light.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the force of it.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Our amendment is, that when the money is included in the Appropriation Act and passed by parliament, it shall be placed to the credit of the several provinces according to population, and ear-marked as assistance this government has made to the provinces for the construction of roads and bridges. It says in section 6, instead of the minister having to go to the province and get the consent of the legislature that he can make conditions with the province in respect to such expenditure, which is still stronger than he provided for in section 6.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let us assume for the moment, that each province is entitled to $50,000 say that in the province of Ontario, in addition to the expenditure of that $50,000, it is necessary to build a road for purely federal purposes and the Dominion government should spend another $50,000 on the construction of that purely federal work; under this Act, as you now have it amended, $50,000 would have to go to every province in the Dominion in addition.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—If we divide the money equally among the provinces, I do not quite appreciate that view of it. Section 6 does not say that the government can take advantage of the consolidated funds in addition to the money specifically voted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill now reads that way under the amended section.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes there is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This 6th clause was struck out while I happened to be out of the Chamber and I did not hear the remarks that were made. If hon. gentlemen will allow me, I shall answer the arguments my hon. friend puts up now in defence of clause 6. When the government decides that it will divide the money in proportion to the population of the various provinces, then it recognizes that the construction and improvement of highways will remain, where it belongs, with the province and the municipality. The provinces will carry on this work. Clause 6 says that under an arrangement sanctioned by the legislature and the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the federal government may do it. I do not see how this can be carried out when the principle of the Bill is that the money will be distributed among the provinces. When I put the question: 'What is the usefulness of clause 6?' The leader of the House said yesterday that it may be for the construction of a special road for federal purposes. This carries us very far from the principle of the Bill which explains why this policy is entered into. If there is any special circumstance by which the federal authorities may deem it in their judgment useful to carry on such a work, then it seems to me it will be the duty of the federal government to seize parliament with such a demand and to ask a special vote for that object.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is what it involves.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—When my hon. friend is asked what he will do under that clause 6, his only answer is that possibly a condition may arise where the federal authorities may need to expend a certain sum for the building of a federal road. I have heard my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) say: 'What does that mean—a federal road.' We have no such thing as a federal road. My hon. friend cannot foresee any condition other than the possible building of a federal road which would justify the federal authorities in utilizing clause 6. When you declare that the money will be apportioned among, and paid over to the provinces, it means that the federal government will allow the provinces to carry on that work of road building. If, at the conference which will take place after this session, it appears that this legislation needs to be implemented in the sense of clause 6, the government will then be in a position to show this Chamber why it should substitute itself to the provinces in the building of roads and bridges.

The SPEAKER—I would ask the hon. gentleman if he knows the surroundings of Quebec where the forts are?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

The SPEAKER—He will find there a federal road.

Hon. Mr. KERR—A military road.

The SPEAKER—Built by the federal government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Before this Act.

The SPEAKER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The government can continue to do it after this Bill becomes law.

The SPEAKER—There are federal roads in existence.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We will build Roman roads and have chariot races.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) if there is anything in that whole Bill which permits the expenditure of a single dollar without the consent and approval of, and agreement with the local government, which is interested in it. In this particular clause 6 there is a proviso protecting the interest of the province and also of any municipality.

There is a proviso 'Provided, however, that the minister shall first obtain the necessary authority from the legislature of such province and the consent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.' So, that, until the provinces have given their consent, the expenditure of a single dollar on any road cannot be made, until it has first been approved by the legislature of that province and by the local government. Why, there is every protection to prevent the Dominion government from expending this money in the manner in which it has been repeatedly insinuated they might expend it. I am delighted to see the position taken by my hon. friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), because it strikes me, and I think it must strike every senator who has listened to him, that he is trying to square himself with the country for the vote he has given, anticipating that what he has done may deprive the provinces of receiving a Dominion grant and a subsidy for the construction and betterment of their roads. On a little further reflection, I trust that the hon. gentleman will regret the action the majority of this Senate have taken.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend from New Glasgow (Hon. Mr. Bell) said this afternoon that the government could vote money anyway and expend it without this Bill.

The SPEAKER.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not responsible for him; he will take care of himself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I simply wanted to say to my hon. friend from Hastings that under clauses 3, 4 and 5 the federal government will carry out this policy as enunciated in the preamble of this Bill and by the representative of the government in this House, and if it needs the implementing of this Act for unforeseen circumstances or conditions, as suggested by the hon. the Premier of the Dominion, then very likely the government will have to come back, after finding those conditions, to explain them to parliament. The government states that its policy is to help the provinces by voting them grants. Why is it assuming that the provinces will refuse the money and will ask the government to keep that money and to build those roads itself. The federal government surely does not want to go into road building.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope my hon. friend will forgive me for differing from him as to the construction of those clauses. Whilst clauses 3 and 4 give certain powers as to the manner of constructing these roads, clause 6 goes beyond that and gives authority to the Dominion government to enter into certain negotiations with a province to do that which neither clause 3 nor clause 4 provides for. That is all the difference.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments, as I want this matter to be understood. In the first place, I want to call attention to the fact that clause 3 provides, in very ample manner, for the grants of money to the various provinces. There is no limitation to the amount so far as this statute is concerned, and the money which goes through is to be a grant to the province, and the province will have the expenditure of it. In the province of Ontario I know there are somewhat similar proposals with reference to dealing with the improvement of highways; and my idea is, instead of a province working in one line and the Dominion working on another line—the province making one road and the Dominion making another—one on one principle and another on another—that it is very much better that wherever there has been adopted, or is yet to be adopted, a plan for the making of highways in a county or a province, there should be a uniformity of plan, or action, or system, or method of working it out. That is what I have in mind in this clause, and I was drawn to it from the fact that in the province of Ontario we have a workable system which, to my mind, is as perfect a system as you can have for the encouragement of the improvement of highways.

The province of Ontario, in 1877, set apart $1,000,000 for the improvement of highways, and have since intimated their intention to implement that by five millions more, showing that they have had encouragement in doing this work, and have seen the necessity for carrying it out, and that the plan on which they have started is one which is calculated to work out a real reform with reference to public highways. Under those circumstances, I think, it would be a desirable thing that whatever money is spent is properly expended. Remember, clause 3 is not that the Governor General is to make a road, but he is to grant to the provinces, by way of aid, a sum of money, and if this clause which was carried this afternoon is to be the law, or if the declared intentions of the government are to be carried out, that money will be distributed in the provinces in proportion to the population, and the province of Ontario will have therefore, granted to it, under clause 3 a sum of money in addition to what they themselves may expend. What is the plan which the province of Ontario has adopted? It is to be found in the statutes of Ontario, 1907, chapter 16. It is as follows:

> The sum of one million dollars is hereby set apart to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to aid in the improvement of public highways, subject to the terms and conditions herein set forth.

The plan is that the county council of the county in which the roads are to be improved is to pass its by-laws designating the highways to be assumed and improved, and intended to be formed and added to the system. It is called the plan or system, and to forward that plan the county and the province are to contribute equally to work it out. Then that may be extended into towns and villages. There is a method of ascertaining what the expenditure should be, and the manner in which it should be used under the government officials; those government officials are to determine how it is done, and the work is to be supervised by the provincial officers of the Public Works Department. I cannot conceive a better plan for encouraging the improvement of roads, or a better way of working it out. I understand the plan in Quebec is very similar, and I do not see why it should not be worked out in the same way, I have no doubt whatever, with this Bill and this offer, that other provinces will be glad to avail themselves of it, and instead of the Dominion going into a province and invading it with what they call a Dominion road, but really a local work, and starting on the expenditure with perhaps different plans and methods and interfering with plans which have been adopted and approved of by the provinces and the county council, there will be a uniformity of systems, a uniformity of work, and a more beneficial result arrived at than by any other plan I can think of.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—When a conference takes place between a province and the Dominion, if it must be had before any money is expended, would not the province which adopted these rules and regulations bring them forward and insist upon adopting them? Or they might improve upon them by suggestions made in the conference between the provinces and the Dominion. Then why tie them down to this arrangement?

Hon. Mr. KERR—My answer to that is that I am strongly convinced that a plan of this kind can be worked out better, and of course it is still open to the Dominion to impose their conditions. If there are any special conditions they can be attached, but it will not be necessary for the government to send the paymaster there; it will not be necessary to canvass for labourers to be employed on the road, nor will it be necessary for the Dominion to have a staff of officers to see how this work is carried out. There will be responsible provincial officers, as well as county officials, and after all you must remember that this money is not the money of the government, but of the people. And if you set that apart to be expended in a locality or municipality, the people of such localities will get the most out of the appropriation, and you will get rid of many evils which will creep into a system which looms up as a Dominion work, besides getting beneficial results such as will flow from an expenditure of the money of the people by the people and for the people. That is the advantage to be had out of that. It has been said that the government, if this amendment should be adopted, could not go into a province and expend money in this way without getting the consent of the government of the province. What harm is there in being required to get the consent of the province to expend money in any work of this kind? It seems to me that the mere statement of the thing is the best answer to the objection which has been taken. I move, therefore, that the clause be amended by adding the following:

In case a plan or system for the improvement of highways has been, or may hereafter be adopted in any province under any Act of such province, the amount apportioned to any such province as hereinbefore provided shall be applied and expended in the same manner as the moneys provided in such Act.

To my mind that will be a distinct improvement, and I do not understand why there should be any objection to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One of the drawbacks to the amendment is that it conflicts directly with the clauses of the Bill that we have already passed. This amendment leaves the Dominion government no choice as to the way in which the money is to be spent; it is to be spent according to the provincial law for the time being. What does clause 3 say? It says that the Governor in Council may in any year and on such terms and conditions as are prescribed by order in council do certain things. It is not according to the provisions of the Ontario or any other provincial Act, but according to the terms and conditions prescribed by order in council. Then under clause 4 the specifications &c., are to be approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the minister. That is not the provincial law at all. It is perfectly clear that this amendment conflicts directly with what we have already passed in the Bill. Then, the Bill provides further that each highway or bridge to be constructed or improved shall be defined in such agreement—that is, the agreement between the minister and the province. That is not in the provincial law now. It has been declared by hon. gentlemen who have spoken in favour of these amendments to the Bill, that they did not wish unduly to hamper the Dominion government, that they wished to leave their hands as free as possible. If, after passing the clauses we have already passed and making the declarations we have made, we adopt this amendment, we are simply showing that we do not understand the meaning of the English language.

The amendment was declared lost.

On the title,

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Might it not be better to let the Bill remain in committee in order to give the leader of the House an opportunity to examine these amendments and see if they call for any further suggestion on his part?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What object can there be in remaining in committee?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not moving to that effect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is suggesting that the leader of the government should allow the Bill to remain in committee; I suppose it is quite in order to ask why such a suggestion is made?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It struck me that, possibly, the leader of the House would likely examine the amendments more closely, and see if there is anything he would like to suggest in view of the amendments we have made. My claim is that he will find them in line with his own expressed policy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the leader of the House ought to be able to judge for himself; and, further, I do not think we need read the Bill the third time now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did imagine that I could think for myself in this matter, but apparently my hon. friends on the other side of the House thought I was not in a position to do so—at least that I could not see eye to eye with them. However, where men differ so widely as we do on this Bill, it might be better to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again on Monday next.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (106) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a Bill the major portion of which, if not substantially the whole of it, was introduced, or prepared to be introduced, at the last session of parliament, but owing to the premature dissolution of parliament is did not go through.

On clause 3,

3. No person shall be eligible for the position of third class clerk in a city post offiec unless he has passed either the civil service preliminary or the qualifying examination, or is a graduate of the Royal Military College or of a university of Canada, and, except as to persons in the civil service at the time this Act comes into force, no third class clerk, who, on appointment, had passed the preliminary examination only, shall be eligible for promotion to a higher class until he passes the qualifying examination, or unless he is a graduate of the Royal Military College or of a university of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman might tell us what the increases are. I am interested in two or three city postmasters and I should like to know.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object of the Bill is to deal with the classification in the post office outside service. It dispenses with senior and junior classes and creates new classes, namely, grades A and B. It does away with the stampers and sorters of the 4th class and junior 3rd class, putting them into the 3rd class. Grade B, stampers and sorters, under existing law receiving $500 can go up to $600 with increments of $60 a year. The 4th class commences with $500 and goes to $700 with increases of $100 a year. The junior 3rd class goes from $700 to $800. All these are replaced by grade B and the officers in this class will receive $500 and go to $800, with annual increases of $100, a very small increase in each case. I might say that another object in so classifying these officials is with the ultimate result of bringing them within the Civil Service Act, or within the inside service. They are all now in the outside service.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Has the government considered the proposition of increasing the salaries of the postmasters of the rural districts?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sorry to say I cannot answer that question; that would come under a different service. This deals with the larger cities and larger post offices.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The men who render the greatest service for the smallest amount of remuneration in the country are the rural postmasters. They receive $25 a year.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—$35.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When they are let out of office they seem reluctant to go, notwithstanding their salaries.

Hon. Mr. COFFEE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

INCORPORATION OF RAILWAYS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (B) An Act to provide for the Incorporation of Railway Companies.

(In the Committee).

On clause 5,

5. The provisional directors shall cause to be made by a competent engineer, from actual examination and survey, a plan, profile, report and estimate of cost, on such scales and for obtaining such information and in such detail, as may be required by regualtions in that behalf to be made, by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, or as may be required by special order of the Board made when necessary.

2. The plan, profile, report and estimate shall contain generally all necessary information as to—

(a) the character of the country through which the proposed railway is to pass and the feasibility of the proposed route;
(b) the proposed gradients;
(c) all existing railways and highways to be crossed and the mode of crossing proposed in each case;
(d) all rivers, streams and watercourses, to be crossed or diverted, specially distinguishing such as are navigable waters, and giving in each case the nature and estimated cost of the proposed bridge, tunnel, ferry or other means of crossing, or of the proposed diversion;
(e) the kind and amount of excavation, embankment, masonry and other sorts of work;
(f) full information as to the manner of constructing the proposed railway and the standard to be adopted therefor both as to its construction and equipment.
(g) everything necessary to enable the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada to determine whether the certificate provided for by this Act should be granted by the board.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is the incorporator supposed to have plans with all those details to file with the board before he can get letters patent?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Who will pay the expenses? They will not have any incorporation. It will cost a lot of money to make plans and surveys.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If you read the first part of the Bill you will find there a provision for the incorporation of a number of gentlemen who may wish to be incorporated, and for them getting the money, etc., before they can do anything. They have to do this work, that is all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They have to file plans.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—So they should, and they should have some money.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Who is going to pay for them?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The association they have formed. Look at the first page. I suppose if a number of parties assoicate themselves together for the purpose of building a railroad, if they are serious about it they are going to have some money; if they are not serious about it, the objection that my hon. friend takes might come up, but the country would not be hurt. If that class of men cannot get enough money to pay for a plan I don't think they should be considered as serious railroad builders in this country.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 14,

14. When any railway company is incorporated by an Act of the parliament of Canada, or its undertaking is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, any extension of the railway of such company not heretofore authorized shall be subject to the provisions of this Act with respect to notice and to the submission to the Board of the plan, profile, report and estimate provided for in section 5 of this Act.

2. Upon the Board being satisfied that all the requirements of this Act and of the Railway Act applicable thereto have been complied with, the Board may fix the amount of securities which the company may issue on the said extension, and may give such other powers provided for by this Act as it deems necessary, and may thereupon grant a certificate that public necessity demands the construction of the railway applied for, and that all the provisions of this Act and of the Railway Act and all regulations of the Board have been complied with.

3. The applicants may thereupon file the said certificate with the Secretary of State, who shall, upon the payment of the proper fees, grant letters patent under his seal authorizing the construction of the railway.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Might I inquire for information whether this Bill has been before the Railway Committee?

The CHAIRMAN—Yes, it has been before the Railway Committee, and they shoved it up to the House.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—They have dealt with it?

The CHAIRMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—And recommended its adoption by the House?

The CHAIRMAN—Yes; not very strongly, as far as I can remember.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I may tell my hon. friend, if he wishes for information, that this Bill has for three years been on the files, and I think every member of the House has read it. It has been submitted to the different people who are interested in railway building, the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway, and they have expressed their approval. The Chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons has also gone carefully through it and expressed his approval of it.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I was not a member of the House for the last three years, and not a member of the Railway Committee this year, and I wanted to know, when the Bill is being railroaded through at this rate, whether it had the approval of the Railway Committee or not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman I think would have plently of occasion to examine the Bill again, because I doubt if the father of the Bill has the faintest hope that it will become law this session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Every clause of this Bill was passed by the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—For the information of the hon. gentleman, who is not a member of the committee, I might say that this Bill was referred to the Railway Committee, and then referred to a sub-committee of the Railway Committee, who reported back to the Railway Committee that they had such confidence in the drafter of the Bill and the Bill itself that the sub-committee did not even take time to read the clauses, and the Railway Committee passed it on back to the House without reading the clauses: so you have the Bill, and it is passing through here in about the same way.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What provision is made for surveyors to go on to property and survey and make the plans required?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is mentioned in the Bill. I think if you go through the whole Bill you will find it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I want to see the clause. Under the charter they would have certain rights.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Would it not be well for the committee to rise and report progress, in order that we may have time to get information about this Bill? My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) says it has been before the Railway Committee; they appointed a special committee, that committee sent it back to the Railway Committee, and they submitted it to the House, without making any report.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The Bill has been reported in the ordinary way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The subcommittee was appointed with the view of getting the opinion of experts, such as the gentlemen sitting on the Railway Board. They could not succeed in getting that opinion. They reported the Bill to the Railway Committee which in turn reported it here. In order that I may define my own position towards the Bill, I may say, that I felt from the outset, that this was such an important departure in the work which has been confided heretofore to parliament, that I have presumed that the government should express its views upon the principle of this legislation. It seems plain to me that this Bill will not go through without the governmentt assuming the responsibility for its final adoption. Perhaps it is with a view of calling the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that this Bill has been three times before the Senate, that the hon. gentleman desires it to be sent over to the Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the report of the committee will answer the question:

> The Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to whom was referred Bill (P) intituled: An Act to provide for the incorporation of Railways, has, in obedience of the order of reference of November 23, examined the said Bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

That has been adopted by the House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—While I sympathize with the idea that there should be a general law, yet I think, in view of the progress that has been made to-night, that we should take our Easter holiday before we go any further with it. The Bill is not a measure that the government of the country could apply to railroad making. I do not think we should go through this Bill in the absense of my hon. friend behind me (Hon. Mr. Beique), who is learned in matters of this kind.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The hon. gentleman who sits behind my hon. friend has had three years to examine this Bill, and has not offered any criticism. I have given a great deal of thought to this Bill. It has been looked over by a number of legal gentlemen, by our law clerk and by three different railways, who have given their consent to it. If this measure were put into force to-morrow, it would not interfere with anybody coming to parliament and asking for a charter for a railway, provided the rules of the House allowed them. We all know that this House has been kept for nearly a month every year considering a lot of useless charters applied for by chartermongers. Gentlemen have expressed fear of a measure of this kind. They do not express any fear in giving a charter for a couple of thousand miles of railway to some gentlemen who could not buy a jacket for a flea, who have absolutely nothing. They give them power to go through your property and my property, and cut down timber and anything else, without making any provision for remuneration. I suffered in that respect last year; one of these chartermongers went through a timber limit of mine, and who is going to pay me for the damage? I say we have not been serious in the granting of charters. We give these men power of expropriation, and the right to go in and tramp over people's property without enquiring into bona fides, and seeing that they are prepared to do business. If you look at the map upstairs, you will see that it is cut up from one end to the other with railway charters.

We have over two hundred thousand miles of these paper railroads. These promoters travel to London and get hold of some people who are not very well posted, show them an Act of the Canadian parliament, signed and approved by the Governor General of this country, and on the strength of that persuade people to put up a few thousand dollars. Should that not be stopped? If this Bill becomes law and the House sees fit to change the rules, bona fide propositions will be received and these wild-cat schemes will be prevented. These people keep the law clerks of the House of Commons and the Senate busy for nothing, preparing documents which are peddled around, showing people that such an Act was passed.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—They will get their charter just the same, in spite of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If the House wish to change their rules they can close out all the chartermongers and force them to obtain a charter under this Bill. That will cost a lot of money under this proposal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Should we not impress upon the leader of the government the necessity of having a pronouncement at the opening of next session upon the policy of the government towards this legislation? I do not suppose it will be taken up by the other House at this stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was going to suggest that, as the committee has gone through the Bill, the Chairman should report progress and leave it at that.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole on Bill (88) An Act to provide for the appointment of a tariff commission.

In the Committee.

On clause 3,

There shall be a commission to be called the Tariff Commission, consisting of three members appointed by the Governor in Council.

2. One of the commissioners shall be appointed chairman and another vice-chairman by the Governor in Council, and at sessions of the commission the chairman shall preside, and in his absence the vice-chairman.

3. Each commissioner shall hold office for a period of five years from date of his appointment, but may be removed by the Governor in Council at any time for cause.

4. A commissioner, on the expiration of his term of office, shall be eligible for re-appointment.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I move that we insert after the words Governor in Council the following:

One of whom shall be acceptable to the labour interests of Canada as expressed by the labour organizations in Canada and the other of whom shall be acceptable to the agricultural interests of Canada, as expressed by the organized bodies of agriculturists of Canada.

I think that the labouring people have as large an interest in getting proper evidence to be submitted to the government with reference to the tariff as any other body of people in the country. They comprise the larger portion of the people in Canada and are the great body of consumers, and there is no way in which they can be assisted by tariff arrangements with the exception, as I have said before, of reducing the cost of living. Every proposition with reference to tariff improvement that I have ever seen presented to the people of this country contains a clause which provides that the government shall protect the labour interests. I wish to point out that you cannot protect the labouring interests of the country. The labouring man sells his labour in a free trade market. We bring immigration from all over the world, and the greater the immigration the keener the competition in labour. The labouring man in British Columbia has to compete with Hindus, Japanese, Chinese and all classes, and what protection is there for the labouring man in that province? The only thing you can do for him is to reduce the cost of living. Surely the labouring man is interested in the price of boots, and if the tariff is going to be high on boots and increase their cost, he certainly is interested in having a reduction on the tariff on that article. The same applies to the clothing for his family and the furniture in his house. There is not a thing the working people of this country have to buy under our system but has to bear a large share of taxation. Manufacturers are interested in the tariff, because they desire to get a little more for the commodities they have to sell, and they do not care who is injured by it as long as they make money. The government propose to appoint three tariff commissioners. It has been suggested during the discussion here and in the House of Commons, that the tariff commissioners are going to be appointed from among the protectionists. Supporters of this Bill in another place have no hesitation in stating that these men must be protectionists, in sympathy with the government in power. Of course they will be biased before they commence to investigate. They will lean to the side of protection; whereas, if the government appointed one man whose interest was not in protection but was with the great bulk of consumers who wished to keep down the cost of living, they would probably receive better advice from those appointed under the present proposition. No class of men have more right to claim representation than the labouring men. The labour unions possess some of the brightest men in the country. They have a gentleman in the House of Commons who is a credit to any section of the community. He made an address the other day that opened the eyes of a good many people with reference to trusts and combines. They have a representative in the House in Toronto; they have men quite capable of being placed on that commission, and I think it is the duty of the government to appoint one of them.

Under our system we have built up and developed combines and trusts and mergers in this country. Everybody knows that those trusts and combines have issued a lot of stock that is nothing but wind and water, and that to-day they are getting, and they expect to continue to get, dividends not only on the capital invested in those industries, but on the watered stock as well. The cost of living has gone up all the time, but the wages of the labouring men have not gone up in proportion. Now, if the water were squeezed out of the mergers and those gentlemen who are manufacturing in this country allowed a fair return on the money invested, nobody would object at all, because everybody wants to allow what is right; and if they took the balance, which represents the dividends that go to water and to wind—this so-called stock that we know is wind and water—and divide that money up amongst the labouring men and artisans that are working for them, there would not be so much complaint. The labouring men of this country want to see that when the investigation takes place they get right to the bottom of these things and expose all the wind and water that is now in the stock of those institutions. They want to prick the bubble, and see that those people will be allowed only interest on the money actually invested; then the labouring men will be able to get larger remuneration for their labour. As it is now, they get a very small measure of what is made by the manufacturers, the largest bulk going to the men who can control tariffs because the labouring men cannot do so. Therefore, I say, there is no class of people in this country who have as much interest as the labouring men in having a representative on that tariff commission.

In reference to agriculture, is there anybody who will tell me that the farmers, who produce the whole wealth of the country, are not entitled to some representation on that commission?? There is not one single thing that the farmers of the west place on their farms in the way of machinery that they are not taxed for. The manufacturer is allowed to bring in his raw material free, but the farmer has to pay taxes on everything. If he improves his place by hard work and industry and places on it $1,000 worth of machinery, he is taxed to the extent of 17½ per cent. Surely the manufacturer is not the whole thing. We hear of Canada for Canadians, it will soon be Canada for the number of Canadians you can count on the fingers of your two hands.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—If the manufacturer had to pay duty on this raw material, would not the consumer have to pay more for the manufactured article?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—He could not increase the price any more than the duty would allow him. I am not objecting to the manufacturer getting his raw material free, but I say the farmer is entitled to some consideration. He pays taxes on everything he uses. The wealth that is produced by the agricultural classes goes into the pocket of the manufacturer, and the farmer should have a representative on that commission so that he can see what is being done. Nobody has ever asked for a commission, except the Manufacturers' Association. The labouring people and the farmers will have to watch that commission. I do not think a farmer or gardener who lives near a manufacturing town would be a proper representative. I want a man who will represent the agricultural interests from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It has been demonstrated by the deputations of farmers that we have had down here, that we have just as good men handling the plough as any other men in this country, men of just as much ability. There would be no trouble in getting a proper person from among the agriculturists of this country to put on that commission, and the same thing applies to the labouring people. The labourer sells his labour in a free market, and he has to buy his necessities in a protected market.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I need not say we could not accept an amendment of that character.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have examined the amendment which is so vague and general in its terms that I cannot conceive how it can be carried out. I am not disposed to incorporate this amendment in the law, but I think the government might well take note of the suggestion that has been made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, we will keep it in view.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—You might put on the board a representative from the west who knows the needs of the west. When the Railway Commission was formed we made it obligatory that the government should appoint a lawyer as Chairman of the board, but I think there was some kind of enactment as to what class the other members should belong.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Was it not enacted that the farmers would have a representative and was not Mr. Greenway appointed on the board, as the representative of the farmers.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—Not at first.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This is a question for the government. It should be interested in having a man on that board who will represent the consumer as well as the producer. It may be said that men will be selected who will have greater aptitude for the position, yet the remarks made by my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) are worthy of attention.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I am sorry to have the pronouncement that the government refused to recognize the labouring classes and the agricultural class of this country in these appointments. My hon. friend said the amendment was rather crude, though it was drafted by the law clerk: but if the government wished to adopt the principle as laid down by me, the combined wisdom of this House could frame a clause that would be all right. There is no use dodging behind the phraseology of a clause in order to get away from the facts of the case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government represents all classes of this Dominion, and will assume full responsibility for any appointments made, and will have to assume that responsibility before the people of Canada.

The amendment was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again at the first sitting on Monday.

The House adjourned till Monday at eleven a.m.

THE SENATE.

MONDAY, March 25, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY TO SENATORS.

INQUIRY.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT in the absence of Hon. Mr. Davis, inquired:

Is it the intention of the government to place a sufficient sum in the supplementary estimates to indemnify the senators who suffered by the wording of the Act in which it says, that a senator shall be fined for non-attendance every day of each session instead of every sitting day, as the new statute now reads?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As yet I have not been able to induce the government to do that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I suppose that those gentlemen's names will therefore appear in default in the Auditor General's Report?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand my right hon. friend to confine his question to the matter of fines?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So far as the balance showing indebtedness on the accounts to the Crown by those gentlemen for non-attendance, of course one will never hear of that again; as to the question of indemnity I have not been able to secure the provincial vote for it as yet.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think the intention is merely to relieve them from the fine?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is more than that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Then let the question stand until Mr. Davis is here.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Would it not be well for the hon. gentleman to tell his colleagues that it is not fair or just that senators appointed towards the end of the session should be fined because they were not here before they were appointed? I believe a court of law would give a decision against the government in such a case. The government have no right to fine a man under the circumstances.

The question was allowed to stand.

MARINE INSURANCE ON THE ATLANTIC COAST.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General; praying that His Royal Highness will cause to be laid before the Senate a detailed statement of the aids to navigation that have been established on the Canadian Atlantic coast and its waters, including the Gulf and River St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy, during the last ten years; also, a statement of the rates of marine insurance between Canadian Atlantic ports, including those in Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy and ports in the United Kingdom; also, the rates of marine insurance between the ports of Boston and New York and ports in the United Kingdom; also, what change, if any, has been effected in insurance rates between Canadian Atlantic ports and ports in the United Kingdom, by the establishment of aids to navigatio during last ten years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I assume that the hon. gentleman from St. John proposes to make some observations in connection with this motion which is a very important one.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—I did not propose at this time to make any observation. I am merely moving for a return which will give the information I must have in order to carry on the future proceedings which I purpose taking, probably not this session, as it is so late; but after gaining the information which this return will give, it will put me and hon. gentlemen in this Chamber in possession of facts which are necessary in order to carry on the future action which I intend to take on the subject of Marine Insurance on the Canadian Atlantic coast.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The matter, as I have said, is a very important one, and I am sorry that the hon. gentleman from St. John has not thought proper to give the House a little information on the subject in advance. I assume, however, that he will talk the matter over with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who, I understand, proposes to go to England very shortly. This subject of Marine Insurance rates is one which the minister would be likely to take up with Lloyds, because Lloyds in England are independent of the government; still the British government might be able to influence the Insurance Association to some extent. The present system adopted by Lloyds is most unjust and inequitable. Rates which they charge for insurance from England to Canadian ports are much higher than those that they charge to ports in the United States. There may have been some excuse years ago—I do not say there is much excuse to-day—for charging a considerably higher rate to ports on the river and Gulf of St. Lawrence than to ports in United States; but, as the hon. gentleman's notice indicates, Canada has spent a very large amount of money in improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence and lighting the gulf and river and there should not be now the discrimination against St. Lawrence ports that really exists. Whatever may be the case with the ports on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the present condition of things is merely a survival of the past; but for the Atlantic ports—take the port of Halifax—the rates of insurance from England to Canada, I think, are about 30 per cent higher than the rates to Boston. Halifax is 400 miles nearer to England than Boston is. Halifax is situated on the open Atlantic, and shipping going to Boston has to pass by the mouth of the Bay of Fundy and, by Cape Sable, which is a more or less perilous region, whereas going to Halifax a ship escapes all those risks. There is no easier or safer port to approach and there is no justification whatever for the discrimination against the port of Halifax as compared with the port of Boston. The Halifax Board of Trade, the mayor of Halifax and the leader of the Nova Scotia government, when in England some years ago, did make representations to Lloyds' about this matter, but nothing was done, and it seems to me that unless pressure is brought to bear on Lloyds' committee by the government in England, or unless steps are taken in this country to establish an independent insurance company, Lloyds' are not likely to do anything. The question is a very important one, and I think it is well that the hon. gentleman has brought it up.

The motion was agreed to.

YUKON ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (No. 123) An Act to amend the Yukon Act.

He said: The object of this Bill is to make a change in the judiciary of the Yukon territory by reducing the number of judges. Under the present law a provision exists, and we are working under that provision, that three judges shall constitute the judiciary of Yukon District. These judges are entitled to a salary of $5,000 a year and an allowance of $5,000 for living expenses. Owing to the reduction in population and the corresponding reduction in all other interests in that remote section, it is now ascertained that one judge can perform all the duties incident to the judiciary of that district. It has therefore been suggested, and that suggestion is embodied in this legislation, that two of the judges who have expressed their willingness to comply with the arrangement, should accept a retiring allowance of $5,000 a year during their lifetime. The country would thus save $10,000 a year.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Is it not possible to employ these gentlemen otherwise under the law?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, because the judges were appointed for the Yukon Territory. There is no machinery of law on the statute-book by which you could compel those judges to accept positions elsewhere. It has however been provided that in the event of the government choosing at any time, owing to an increase of business in that territory, to increase the judiciary, that they should be sent back to the position they formally occupied. The Bill further provides that owing to the reduction of the judiciary, the court en banc of that territory should be the court of appeal in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This Bill marks a step in the right direction. I am sorry that the government have not taken a further step. I cannot see that there is any reason why, with a population of some 12,000, there should be all the machinery of government that we now have in Yukon Territory. The reasonable and natural thing now would be to annex the Yukon Territory to British Columbia. I suppose British Columbia will be willing to accept, and I think that is the reasonable and proper thing to do; then we need not bother making provisions with respect to the court to which appeals from the Yukon court shall go. I am pleased to see that the government sometimes, or in connection with some matters, recognize the desirability of economy.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Saving at the spigot and wasting at the bung.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Economy, as far as I can judge, has not been the general trend of their policy. Now I make this suggestion to the government: they are dispensing with the services of two judges, who will receive a retiring allowance of about $5,000 a year. These gentlemen who will, when this Bill passes, be ex-judges, would be just the men to appoint as chairman to some numerous commissions the present government are creating, and you can rely upon their being fairly judicial and non-partisan, as men knowing the law and of more then average ability. I think it would be, in every sense, wise in other ways as well as in the interest of economy, to find occupation for some of these judges as commissioners. Take for instance the commission that has been appointed to inquire into the constitution and administration of the civil service, one of those judges would be just the kind of man to appoint to that commission. The government could save a considerable sum of money in that way—the salaries of additional commissioners, or at least the retiring allowance of the judges, and I think that is the spirit which the hon. leader of the Senate seems to be filled with—of saving wherever we can. I do not wish to say any satirical thing like that said by the right hon. leader of the opposition,—that the government are saving at the spigot and wasting at the bung—even saving at the spigot is desirable.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be referred to a committee of the whole House.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

1. His Majesty may, by letters patent under the great seal, grant to each of two of the judges of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory now holding office, an annuity equal to the salary of the office now held by him, which annuity shall commence immediately after his resignation and continue thenceforth during his natural life. Provided that if, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, it becomes necessary or expedient at any time during the continuation of such annuities that there should be two or more judges in the said Territorial Court, or in any superior court of record in and for said territory, of if any judge of any such court should die, resign or otherwise vacate his office as such judge, the Governor in Council may appoint either or both of the judges receiving such annuity as aforesaid a judge or judges of such court, and if any judge so appointed, not being at the time incapacitated by illness or infirmity, does not thereafter perform the duties appertaining to such judgeship, such annuity shall forthwith cease and determine; but this provision shall not affect the authority of the Governor in Council to appoint any other qualified person to be a judge of such court.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a provision in this clause in case those judges are called back to duty, but there is no provision that if one of them is appointed, say a commissioner his salary as such commissioner and his retiring allowance as judge shall not run concurrently. It does happen sometimes that the two things run concurrently, and I think it is highly objectionable. When a gentleman drawing a pension is appointed to office or becomes a member of parliament, it is a very undesirable thing and carries one back to the reign of George III, to find a precedent. There does not seem to be any provision here for the case I have put.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We can only reasonably legislate along the line of the position which they occupy. If they should return to the bench, then, of course, the machinery of the Act would come into operation, but parliament would scarcely be justified in saying that if those gentlemen should accept other positions not akin to that of a judicial position, that they should receive no compensation. It seems to me it would be futile to make such a provision, because they would very naturally say, "We are entitled to a retiring allowance of $5,000 a year without doing anything; why then should we accept an office entailing further duty upon us and not receive compensation for it?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What is done in the case of the present Minister of Justice?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He draws his superannuation allowance entirely apart from his salary as Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is an abuse that should be remedied.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It has obtained since confederation, under all governments.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is not creditable to us that a man who has retired at about fifty or thereabouts and has been allowed a pension should likewise be allowed to receive a large salary from the Dominion. In the British service that is not allowed. I remember while Sir Francis Hincks, who received a pension as Lieutenant Governor of the Windward Islands, was made Finance Minister of Canada, the government deducted his pension at once. They said it was practically holding two offices under the Crown. He was not allowed to receive his pension and a salary. That is an abuse which should be remedied and while I am not going to bring up the question now, I think it would be a very proper thing for the government to consider it during the recess, and if they do not this House should. I object to it entirely; I think it is utterly inconsistent and a practice which is liable to great abuse. A man may be appointed at 32 or 33 and then retire with a full pension at 48 or 50. I think that is the case of the Minister of Justice, and I say that it is a scandal that he should be allowed to retire under circumstances which the Act did not contemplate. Has he a pension of $5,000 a year?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, he has two thirds of his salary, which is not more than $6,000 and probably $5,000.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—He gets $4,000 for doing nothing and $5,000 for attending to our business.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And $2,500 as a member of parliament.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I say it is a distinct abuse.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Much can be said both ways. I am not minimizing what my right hon. friend has said upon the subject; but here is a principle which has been embodied in our statute law since confederation but which has never been attacked, although it has been subjected to some criticism.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think no similar case has ever occurred.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it has.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not think there is a case of a cabinet minister in my recollection, receiving a salary as cabinet minister and a pension at the same time. I think it should not be permitted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think there are cases where judges have held office after superannuation.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think it is only gentlemen who have been appointed to the Senate; the late Judge Gowan was one, and senator Ross another. I think these two cases did occur. On consideration, my hon. friend will see it is not a proper thing for a cabinet minister to be drawing a pension. I do not want to take away his pension, but he ought not to be drawing a pension as an ex-judge and also a salary as cabinet minister at one and the same time, whether he is a judge or not. I am aware that the legal gentlemen are very fond of having plums set apart for their special use, and that it is almost impossible to wrest anything from their legal jaws once they have closed upon it, but this is a matter which should engage the attention of the government. It would be far better dealt with by them than by either House. If they do not choose to deal with it, it must be brought up in the House. We cannot interfere with the pension, but we can see to it that the salary shall not exceed a certain amount.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4,

4. Section 103 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefore:—

103. For the purpose of Part XIX of the Criminal Code, the court of appeal from the judgment of a police magistrate into a case where his jurisdiction is dependent upon the provision of the said Part with respect to police magistrates of cities and incorporated towns shall be the Territorial Court, and there shall be an appeal from the Territorial Court to the Court of Appeal of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is the exact point of clause 4?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 103 of this Act makes provision in regard to appeals from the police magistrate to the territorial court, and this clause is simply adjusting it to the new conditions which have arisen.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 5,

5. When, under the provisions of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, two judges are required for the trial of an election petition in the Yukon Territory, or for the hearing of a special case under the said Act, such judges shall be the judge of the Territorial Court and a judge of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia or of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, or two judges of the said courts of British Columbia, or either of such courts, and every such judge shall, for the purposes of the said Act, have all the powers of a judge of the Territorial Court.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Presumably it would be a matter of great inconvenience for a number of witnesses to be lugged down to British Columbia, if the trial of a controverted election is to take place, it should be held in Yukon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the balance of convenience would be in favour of a judge going to British Columbia, I think that would be done. I think there has never been a controverted election case in Yukon.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They are bound to go with the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have shown a disposition that way—a tendency in that direction.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They know where the fat lies.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Will the judges be especially appointed?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They will be appointed under the Election Act.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They are chosen by the court, are they not?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I rather fancy if a judge of the court of British Columbia, would go there he would be named by the chief justice of his court and assigned to that particular duty.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the way now in the provinces; the chief justice designates the judge to try the election petition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

The clause was adopted

On clause 9,

9. Any judge temporarily appointed to discharge the duties of the judge may, notwithstanding the expiry of the term of his appointment, or the happening of any event upon which his appointment terminates proceed with and conclude the trial or hearing at that time actually pending before him of any cause, matter or proceeding, and pronounce judgment therein, and may likewise pronounce judgment in any cause, matter or proceeding previously heard by him and then under consideration or reserved; and any such trial, hearing or judgment shall have the same validity and effect as if heard or pronounced during the said term or previously to the happening of the said event.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. This is a new section. It simply makes provision for a judge temporarily appointed, if the resident judge is prevented through illness or from any other cause from acting. An assistant judge may be appointed for the time being.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is a judge from another court?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Is that the case generally?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED: Yes, under the constitution of any court.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Suppose the case of Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In that case it would warrant the government setting in motion the provisions of the Act and sending back one of the retired judges.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. FORGET, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendement.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

HIGHWAYS BILL.

COMMITTEE STAGE POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called: House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill (77) An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Bill is somewhat akin to the Act for the aid and encouragement of Agriculture, which is on the order paper for to-morrow and I think we might let it stand till the other measure is taken up.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not see how they are akin.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The first Bill provides for a substantial sum to be distributed among the provinces on the same basis as it is proposed to distribute the money for highways, and to adopt practically similar machinery between the central government and the provinces as to the application of the money; so that they are akin so far as the voting of the money is concerned.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Not exactly; because agriculture is one of the subjects assigned to the Dominion parliament, and highways are not, unless you steel them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can very well conceive of the building of a main highway being made a Dominion work. An interprovincial highway would be as much a work for the advantage of Canada as would the building of a railway. However, I move that this order of the day be discharged and that it be placed on the order for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (88) An Act for the appointment of a tariff commission.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We substantially adopted the different amendments of my right hon. friend, with the exception of, perhaps, the amendments to subsection 1.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps I had better explain my object, because I dare say we may come together upon it. The only way we have at present of getting information as to the true position of a lot of these factories and industries which are constantly making applications for some change in the tariff, is through the Census Report. That report is only good up to the end of the particular year in which it is made, and we never succeeded in getting these census reports in our hands until two or three years have elapsed. By that time great changes take place and have taken place in the position of many of these industries. It really would be a matter of very considerable practical interest that we should have the latest intelligence that could be obtained as to these matters. I will go over the whole of the matter with my hon. friend in detail. For instance, the number of factories now existing vary sometimes, to my certain knowledge, enormously, within a period of three or four years. I suppose the question of the amount actually expended in cash in erecting and equipping the same is one of those he feels some difficulty about. We will say nothing about that. Take paragraph 'c', it strikes me that is a point upon which the government should be informed and upon which the country ought to be informed.

The question of mergers is attracting a good deal of attention, and my experience has been that very serious frauds have been committed by the issue of huge blocks of watered stock, which is afterwards made an excuse for demanding subsidies from the government in order to enable the parties to pay interest on this stock, and an argument is brought forward which I never regarded with much favour myself, but which seems to have had favour in other quarters, that inasmuch as gambling in watered stock had been extensively dealt in, and because a number of people had been induced to buy this, I won't say absolutely worthless stock, at a high price, that therefore it is necessary to protect them. In all cases where application is made for an increase in the duty we ought to know what was the real cost of the manufacture, and we ought also to have a list of the shareholders, and the amount and number of shares held. There should be no difficulty about their giving information as to the dividends or the wages of hands, and the number of hours' work per diem.

'G' is a simple matter apparently, and I think should be easily ascertained. If this commission is to do anything like the work which it is expected to, and which, from the debates in the Commons, it was apparently intended to do, these are points on which we should have some detailed information. From my hon. friend's remarks, I gather that his view was to limit this tariff commission to a very narrow sphere, indeed, as compared with that which was talked about in the other Chamber. I dare say he is right—I am not at all sure he is not right—that the tariff commission should be, if I understood him, simply a commission for the purpose of collecting facts and statistics to be supplied to the government of the day, and of course, to the public also. I dare say he is quite right in that, and it simply deals, if it is limited to that, with two things, I think, one that they should obtain as full information as possible. I am bound to say, that I do not see, under such circumstances, why all these frills and feathers should be created. I do not see why we should have men called tariff commissioners paid salaries equal to those of Cabinet ministers for the purpose of doing what I can assure him could be quite as well done as any expensive tariff commissioners that we can select may do. If we were to select, or to allow his hon. friend beside him to select a dozen competent customs house officers who had been in the habit of dealing with these matters, and whom I could select, I am quite sure they would render very good service to the state, in the shape of chiefs of a bureau of statistics. But his view, and the view laid down in the Commons, appeared to me to be diverse, and if his view is the correct one—and I think it is—I do not exactly see why we should not obtain all the information we can.

Does he object to all these amendments, or does he object to two or three in particular.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The objection comes not from the specified information to be acquired so much as the proposal to add to the scope of the commission a sphere of inquiry which was not in contemplation when the Bill was brought before parliament. My right hon. friend will observe that he presupposes, and his amendments are based upon that supposition apparently. The paragraph reads:

> Provided always that in all cases where the commission reports in favour of any increase of duty, or where any application for an increase is made the commission shall, in addition to reporting upon the above matters, make a special report which, in the case of any industry already established, shall state.

It is not intended that the commission shall report in favour of an increase of duty or a decrease of duty, or that any application shall be made to the commission for an increase or decrease. I think my right hon. friend will agree with me that adding the amendments which we did to the Bill, to section 4, that we include in that inquiry almost everything that can possibly arise so far as the framing of a tariff is concerned. It seems to me it would be very dangerous ground upon which to start an investigation, to make inquiry into the financial status of different corporations. This might require, probably, a very special qualification as to financial matters and so on. It would certainly be an innovation for which we have no parallel, so far as I know, in the statutes It would be unheard of for a commission to go into a large or small manufacturing institution and say, 'We want to know your financial position ?'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is an inquisition that in my judgment would be extremely dangerous to the existence of a corporation.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It does not involve that; but I have no objection in the world to amend the proviso in any way or fashion that my hon. friend wants to. What I want is to get the information if I can.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will observe that as far as paragraph 'a' is concerned it would be already covered, but when he comes to 'b,' 'c,' 'd' and 'e' he enters upon a class of inquiry with which, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the government, this commission should not be empowered to make, and which would not be akin to the tariff.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Just there, there is somewhat of a conflict of opinion. My idea is that any manufacturer who stands on his own feet and does not want a subsidy from the government should be let alone; but any man who comes before the government desiring to obtain a subsidy—because every additional protective duty is a subsidy levied from the people at large—has no ground whatever for refusing the fullest information, and that would apply, ex necessitate, to parties who are carrying on business which they allege cannot be carried on without a heavy protection. Those parties are bound, from the very nature of the case, to give a very full disclosure of all their affairs. There is no unfair inquisitorial advantage taken of them there. The man who comes to the government and says: 'I cannot carry on my business unless I am subsidized, unless I am permitted to tax the people,' that man undoubtedly is bound to give the fullest possible information about everything he does in the whole course of his business, and without that the government cannot judge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—With all due deference to what the right hon. gentleman has said, I fail to see what bearing the financial status of a company has upon the tariff. Neither the commissioners nor the government, if they were charged with the inquiry, would think of making an investigation into the private financial condition of a corporation. The questions are those enumerated in paragraphs 'a,' 'b,' 'c' and 'e.' Once the commission began to make an inquiry into the financial status, or alleged investment of the corporation in any industry it seems to me they go into a branch of inquiry that should have nothing necessarily to do with the framing of a tariff. I think that would be most dangerous, because they even then could not get the information necessary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I cannot agree with my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Here are two manufacturers in the same line of business, the one with nominal financial status, and the other with an inflated financial status. My right hon. friend would concede at once that it would be futile to take an intermediate position as the basis upon which to judge of the framing of the tariff on those two conditions. It seems to me a question of investment in a business is not the main factor to do with the question as to whether that tariff can be framed so as to assist the industry in Canada or not.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I have the credulity to doubt that proposition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Capital might be very injudiciously invested.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It very often is.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And if so it does not necessarily follow that the government should therefore take that as a basis upon which to make their inquiry.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The people at any rate should know what were the conditions in any particular industry which they are asked to be taxed for. That is what I want to ascertain, and also, as I told my hon. friend just now, this business of creating new trusts, which is very extensively gone into in Canada, and which, is very popular—of creating trusts and combines by which a number of institutions come together, and where numerous quantities of watered capital are floated on the public and very often floated by means of representations which do not pan out at all. This tariff commission, if it is to be good for anything, should be able to call attention to that and for that end ought to be vested with some such powers as I have named.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend not consider that under section 12 of the Customs Tariff Act, and the machinery that has been embodied in this Act so as to make these inquiries more extended than heretofore, satisfactory information should be arrived at in that way?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 12 was intended to meet cases of that kind.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I know it well, and I know how difficult it was to apply it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that as far as language is concerned it is made about as broad as it can be: that is under the existing law; and it is proposed that this commission shall be authorized to set in motion the machinery of section 12 of the Customs Tariff Act, and obtain all the information necessary, and, in fact, prosecute such combinations, trusts and conspiracies as may be discovered.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —They would go a good deal further than my hon. friend spoke of in the previous discussion. He then appeared to take the view that the tariff commission was going to be limited, and limited strictly to collecting facts and statistics for the use of the government, a very profitable object, an object, as I say and have always said, well warranting the formation of an additional bureau specially charged with that duty, but does not warrant, I think, the creation of a body of expensive men styled 'tariff commissioners,' with salaries equivalent to a cabinet minister.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let us assume that the Customs Department should be charged with such a duty as that mentioned, of assigning to several persons the duty of making inquiries. It would cost almost as much as the tariff commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If they made such inquiries as are contemplated to be made by the tariff commission the government would have to appoint first class men.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, no doubt.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the subject is sufficiently important to warrant the conclusion that the inquiry should be continuous, owing to the changes of conditions we have to face in Canada, from time to time, that they would have to abandon positions at present occupied by them and devote their time exclusively to the other inquiry.

Rt. Hon Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, but as to the question of salary, I think his hon. friend beside him (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) can tell him that officers of very considerable ability in the customs are paid vastly smaller sums of money than we propose to give these gentlemen. I think the highest paid collector in our employment is only receiving something like $2,500 a year. I think $4,500 is the maximum that you propose to give to any collector of customs.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but especial duties were assigned to them; it has been the invariable experience that you have to fix a larger salary where you create a special office.

Rt. Hon Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The doctrine that you can lug in men from the end of the earth and offer them a good salary, and that you get in that way exceptionally good men, is a very dubious one. I would rather trust experienced officers of our own than men you bring in. If it were possible for you to take the tariff entirely out of politics, that is another question altogether; but my hon. friend knows that cannot and will not be done. This business of creating a tariff commission was supposed, when it was brought in, to mean that these gentlemen would have practically the framing of a tariff. Now, as I understand it the government, speaking through the mouth of my hon. friend, entirely abandons that view. They do not want them even to make a report as to what rate of duty should be imposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am unaware of the government having made any such representations.

Rt. Hon Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman is the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I mean the Commons. I am unaware of any representations that the scope of the tariff commission was to be larger than I have indicated and is signified by the Bill.

Rt. Hon Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Then I have misread the debate in the Commons and the remarks made upon it in the newspapers and elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The suggestion made by the right hon. leader of the opposition in regard to inquiry into the financial condition of the manufacturers is a fair one. The right honourable leader of the opposition does not ask that the tariff commission should have a right to go into all manufacturing institutions and examine them; he limits the right to this point, that when any firm, corporation or individual engaged in manufacturing comes to the government asking for an increase of the rate of duty on his particular line of goods, that means that he is asking the government to increase the price of that article to the consumer. Surely the consumer has a right to know the ground on which the manufacturer asks for an increase of the duty? It is that class of cases to which the right hon. leader of the opposition has alluded, and it surely is not asking too much to give the government an opportunity to investigate on the line indicated. I would not give the authority to the commission; but the minister should have a right to say to the tariff commission: 'Go and investigate fully the entire financial and other conditions of that industry. They are asking for an increase of duty and before the government will grant it we must know the real state of that business.' There is nothing perilous or unfair about that, and I am with the right hon. leader of the opposition on that point. Where manufacturers are content with the regular tariff and ask for no especial rate, we have no right to investigate their affairs. As a legislator I would not grant the government that right at all, unless there was some special cause, such as a merger. The hon. leader of the House will see the simplicity and reasonableness of the demand.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Of course I am quite ready to amend the proviso, after what my hon. friend has said, by striking out the words after 'in all cases where the commissioners report an increase of duty.' I would undoubtedly agree with him in striking out that portion of the clause which refers to the commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course that deals with one phase of the amendment, and while the paragraphs are based on that, yet the paragraphs themselves introduce another element, namely the inquiry into the financial condition of the company. Now, a number of manufacturers in the same class may have all the variety of financial conditions that the human mind can conceive. Even suppose one of those manufacturers should have an inflated financial condition, that should not necessarily influence, and would not influence the framing of the tariff with reference to that particular line of manufacture, and yet at the same time an inquiry and a disclosure of the facts which would be ascertained as to that inflated condition might be of the greatest possible injury to the industry as a whole. As to the practice of issuing bonus or watered stock, I fail to see in what way that has an application to the framing of a tariff if the inquiry is based upon the cost of production from the raw material and transportation up to the finished product. They must not take into consideration that because a company has issued bonus or watered stock a dividend must necessarily be paid upon it. An individual might say, 'While I have invested $100,000 in this industry, I would not take two or three hundred thousand dollars for it.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The cost of production is a matter of very considerable difficulty to get at. I am not speaking at random. I know very well what devices are had recourse to in the attempt to get subsidies, and their name is legion. I remember well the class of applications made during the last fifteen years, and five years before that, for increases, and I know the kind of statements made to us and how extremely—I will not say falsified, but extremely dubious these statements were, and the government, if they are wise, will take precaution to ascertain what the facts are. My hon. friend says it does not matter what amount of dividends is paid. It does matter. Nobody in his senses, if he knew it, would allow an additional subsidy—and it is only in case additional subsidy is going to be planted to a going concern—would think of granting additional subsidy to an establishment paying fifteen or twenty per cent dividends on the amount of capital actually invested.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I notice that the government are giving a large subsidy to the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, which is a going concern and paying a handsome dividend.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Perhaps it is; I have no information about that. It is not every company that tumbles into a Cobalt; the case is well put. At present, for the purpose of getting information in discussing the tariff, we are to an enormous extent limited to the census returns. Now those returns are never up to date; they are always two or three years old, sometimes four or five. I think in the case of the census taken in 1891 it was six years before a good deal of the information was brought down to us. There was a lot of information that I wanted to get and I had great difficulty indeed, in extracting it from the government of the day, although it was there, and much the same thing I am afraid will occur from time to time. Now much, not all, of these amendments are just to enable the tariff commissioners to get information up to date to report to us. To those amendments I think my hon. friend should not object. His other objections are on a question of principle, and we can discuss them by themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. What are those?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What harm is there in obtaining the list of shareholders, and the number of shares held by each shareholder or, in the case of application for increase of subsidies, ascertaining what dividends have been paid, the wages and the number of hours' work per diem, the total amount of goods produced by each factory, consumed in Canada—a very important and a desirable thing to have, but which we have little chance to obtain in time to be of any use to us. When we do get it, it is old. I should like to get it from year to year, and these people could get it for us. As I understand, the objections are to 'b' and 'c'.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is thought that all the details from 'a' to 'g' have already been covered by the other clauses.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Several of these clauses are of an ominous kind. A great deal may be covered in them. I stated so at the time I brought down those amendments; but it is best to specify them, and they will know what information is really wanted and will give it to us.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my right hon. friend would let this stand I should like to go over those items with him in that light as long as we do not trench on the financial inquiry, so to speak.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Take 'a', 'b', 'f' and 'g'; all that information is information I tried myself to get with the aid of the government, and the machinery we had was so imperfect that I could not get it to my own satisfaction, or the satisfaction of the officers of the department. I had to go back to the census returns. To a country growing so rapidly as Canada is, census returns that are three or four years old are of little value, or nothing like the value they ought to be. The Bureau of Statistics is supposed to deal with that, but it is likely to be behind hand. Now you have a commission which could get hold of those things and ought to get hold of them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to take those up with my right hon. friend and see how far we can agree on them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

THE GRAIN BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (32) An Act respecting grain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it should be understood that the principle of the Bill is not to be discussed in committee. We should follow the rule which requires that discussion shall be directed to the particular clause under consideration at the time. I make this suggestion in order that there may be no conflict of opinion or interference with the discussion when the Bill is before the committee. Of course there would be no objection to referring to another clause in the Bill which might come in conflict with the one under discussion.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Perhaps the hon. leader of the House will tell us what difference there is between this Bill and the Bill passed by the Senate last year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no substantial difference, with the exception of two clauses, namely clause 57 which provides for a sample market, and clause 207, which has been enlarged by making provision for some emergency cases. In the Commons, it was further enlarged by adding to the authority of the board to intervene in the distribution of cars.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I suppose my hon. friend knows that I have given notice of two motions to amend two clauses of the Bill. If those amendments are accepted, it will facilitate matters.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very glad to take up those two clauses with my hon. friend after we adjourn and see what the difference may be between us.

On subclause 2 of clause 3,

2. Each commissioner shall hold office during good behaviour for a period of ten years from the date of his appointment, but he may be removed at any time by the Governor in Council for cause: Provided that when a commissioner reaches the age of seventy years his office shall, 'ipso facto', become vacant

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I think we ought to have information as to the class of men the government propose to appoint, what parts of the country are supposed to be represented on this commission, and a general outline of what their duties are to be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No matter how explanatory I might be, I could not be more explanatory than the Bill itself.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Would it not be just as well to have that period of ten years struck out? You are going to tie up the whole grain trade of this country with three men. Some of them might not be satisfactory to the people of the country or even to the government, and I think they ought to be in a position to relieve any of those commissioners from office.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That very element would render it desirable to leave the Bill as it is. An agitation could be created by a class of individuals as against the commission or any of its members and it would be extremely dangerous and not in the interests of the country or of the farmer. It certainly would prevent the machinery of the Bill from carrying out the objects we have in view. I can imagine a commission being appointed during pleasure that would come in contact with the element the hon. gentleman speaks of—that is public agitation demanding their dismissal.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This deals with the source of wealth of the whole country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No doubt it does.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The handling of that immense traffic in grain, not merely what it is now but what it will be, is a very important matter, and the gentlemen in charge of that should be safeguarded.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Any commissioner may be dismissed for cause, if he shows incompetency, interest or anything of that kind. It is very desirable in the public interest that in a commission of this kind men should be protected against any passing wave of agitation against the office which they are called upon to discharge, and which will involve very onerous duties which for the time may possibly be unpopular. They should have a fixity in office.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—An agitation may arise as to the manner in which they are discharging their duties. There are two classes to be considered, the class of people who are producing this wealth and the class who are making money out of them, the middlemen. Human nature is human nature, and these gentlemen might perhaps be inclined to lean to one side. The government could hide behind that clause which says the commissioners can only be dismissed for cause. They might say, 'We have no cause for dismissing this official,' though he might be playing into the hands of one class of people. The responsibility should be on the government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So it is. My hon. freind knows, as a practical politician, that the government cannot afford to alienate the public. They are always looking for the support of the public. They represent the public, and to satisfy an isolated few, the government would not retain in office an official who should be dismissed for cause. It will be the anxiety of the government to administer this Act to the satisfaction of the people of the west.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The hon. gentleman should define what he means by cause. So long as responsibility is on the government, I understand that public opinion will keep the government right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Cause would include incapacity, interest, wrong-doing—any number of factors might be mentioned that 'cause' would embrace, and, as I say, the responsibility is on the government, and they are not going to sacrifice the public interest and their own popularity by keeping a man in office whose dismissal for cause would be warranted.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Would the government have any objection to making the term five years instead of ten?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The office becomes vacant ipso facto when a man reaches 70. There are men who might be quite capable to discharge their duty who have passed the age of 70.

Subclause 2 was adopted.

On subclause 3,

3. A commissioner, upon the expiration of his term of office if under seventy years of age, shall be eligible for re-appointment.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my right hon. friend think that this clause modifies the preceding one? I have seen some curious legal puzzles constructed out of clauses of this kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This clause would not apply to any individual who had not been a commissioner. That is to say, in no case would the government appoint any one over 70 who had not previously acted.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Suppose a man were 69, would clause 2 apply to him? The lay mind would say that it would; but what would the legal mind say?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He would be eligible for re-appointment, and the re-appointment would be for ten years.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Supposing a man was on the commission, when he reached the age of 70 he would be out of office and could not be re-appointed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The point is this: suppose you re-appointed a gentleman at the age of 68 or 69, would he not be able to remain there in spite of your proviso until he was 78 or 79?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Do not be too sure. I have seen such Acts construed before in a very extraordinary fashion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I see a possibility of such a case arising. We shall reserve that point.

Subclause 3 was reserved.

On subclause 6,

6. The chief commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of six thousand five hundred dollars, and the other two commissioners shall each be paid an annual salary of six thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—While I have no desire to urge the expenditure of money, I fancy you will have difficulty filling those positions with the class of men you would like to select. It would be very unfortunate if the right class of men would decline to accept the position because the salary was not sufficient.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT That is a thing of constant occurrence in connection with large government employments.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is, but the cheap man is the dear man in the end.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The big salary does not always get the best man.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is one of the questions with which the government has to grapple in getting competent and experienced men for the salary fixed by statute. One might say that the government does not pay within fifty per cent of the salaries paid by large commercial companies to the same class of men.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The government will not have any trouble in getting the men at these prices.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There are men and men.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Speaking by way of illustration, does my hon. friend think that if the government chose to appoint a farmer in good circumstances in Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, that this would be an unfair salary for him?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think no farmer with sufficient intelligence and ability to discharge the duties would accept it at this salary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman states that gentlemen holding offices are greatly underpaid; this applies to his predecessors also.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The salary does not amount to very much in comparison with the interest involved. There are hundreds of millions involved in this matter, and when it comes down to a question of salary. if the proper man can be obtained, the amount should not stand in the way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear; the court is with the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If the government find the right class of man, $6,000 is not a high salary, taking into consideration the cost of living.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We might leave the salary clause in blank or we might say 'not to exceed so much.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am afraid we might come in collision with the Commons if we did that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall direct attention to the matter.

Hon. Mr. JONES—The salaries provided in Bill (No 88) are $7,500 for the Chairman, and $7,000 for the other men. The position which we are discussing now is far more important.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No comparison.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If the government are to be free to obtain the man they want there should be a maximum salary of $7,500 at least. I do not believe they will be able to secure the man they want and retain him unless they pay such a salary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We cannot increase the amount here.

Hon. Mr. JONES—We may be allowed to express an opinion. If the hon. gentleman is correct, we have no right to amend the Bill. If it is a money Bill we must accept or reject it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This is a money clause.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. The commissioners and the secretary shall devote the whole of their time to the performance of their duties under this Act, and shall not accept or hold any other office or employment.

2. No commissioner or the secretary shall directly or indirectly hold any interest in any corporation subject to this Act, nor directly or indirectly deal in or be financially interested in grain, nor hold any interest in any grain elevator or warehouse, or in any partnership, corporation or business engaged in the grain trade, or in the transportation or storage of grain.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If it is necessary to make subsection 2 apply to the commissioners, it should also be made to apply to all officers under the commission.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (X2) An Act respecting the Imperial Loan and Investment Company of Canada, Limited.—Hon. Mr. Thompson.

Bill (B) An Act to provide for the Incorporation of Railway Companies.—Hon. Mr. Davis.

THE GRAIN BILL.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (32) An Act respecting Grain.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—Does the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert know if the grain in the Northwest provinces is still lying in the fields?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—A Bill was put through parliament some weeks ago giving power to the commissioner to send cars to relieve the situation at different points, for the purpose of moving out grain liable to become damaged. The opinion of the House was that that was good legislation. I opposed it. My information since that is to the effect that this legislation has been taken advantage of by the owners of elevators who wanted to clean out their grain and make room for other grain. It has been traced to the place of inspection, and we are in a position to show that a lot of this grain that was moved was graded No. 1 and No. 2; so that the people who had the grain that was liable to be damaged suffered a positive disadvantage by it. They did not get the share of the cars they were entitled to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to my hon. friend not to go into a discussion on that very controversial question, because it will involve further discussion and furnishing evidence into the manner in which the Act has been administered.

On clause 13,

The Governor in Council may authorize the minister to construct, acquire, lease, or expropriate for His Majesty any terminal elevator if parliament has granted the money for such purpose.

2. The Expropriation Act shall, in any case, apply to the acquisition or lease of such terminal elevator and to the ascertaining of the compensation to be paid therefor.

3. Upon the construction, acquisition, leasing or expropriation by His Majesty of any terminal elevator, the board shall be charged with its operation and management, and the board may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, make regulations for its management and operation and prescribe a tariff of fees and charges for the use thereof.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is it in the intention of the government to take advantage of this clause? Has the government any policy on this subject?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand it is the intention of the government to enter into negotiations for the leasing of at least one terminal elevator.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Only one?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Possibly more, for the purpose of testing the wisdom of such a policy.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend has had a good deal of experience with the Grain Bill: does he mean to tell me that he thinks the leasing of one terminal elevator is going to better the existing condition of things? How are they going to prove that government ownership is a good thing by leasing one elevator?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They may lease more.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Suppose they lease only one, does my hon. friend think that they can determine, from the working of that one elevator, whether it is feasible for the government to operate the system of terminal elevators or not?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is the intention of the government to enter on a bona fide experiment of leasing or building one or more elevators. There is nothing to prevent the government, with the approval of parliament, leasing, expropriating or building elevators. It is intended at an early day to make this start.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the government will not feel called upon to act under this clause. I do not see why the government should go into the business of owning terminal elevators any more than any other business. I feel very hostile to government ownership, and still more to government operation of what may be called public utilities. Under the provisions of this Bill, the government have power to supervise and control the operation of elevators, and it does seem to me that is quite far enough to go. I trust sincerely that the government will not go into the business of operating or building elevators.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This is a matter of policy on the part of the government, and I would not wish to interfere with that policy. A promise was made to the people of the Northwest, that if Mr. Borden's party were returned to power the government would acquire terminal elevators. I fancy such a promise would not have been made publicly to the people of western Canada if this proposition had not been carefully considered and a conclusion arrived at that it was feasible. Since the government has seen fit to carry out its promise with reference to the appointment of a tariff commission, the people of the west do not see why they should not carry out their promise with reference to controlling the terminal elevators. My own view is that the railway companies, being common carriers, should be forced to furnish storage for anything they carry. They should own and control the elevators. If they carry any other freight to the head of the lakes, or anywhere else, they have to furnish storage for it, and they should be compelled to furnish storage for the grain they carry. If they did, the dissatisfaction on this point would evaporate.

There would not be any cause of complaint, because as long as the railway corporations operated those terminal elevators there never was any complaint on the part of the people. It was only after a lot of sharp speculators got control of those terminal and interior elevators and began mixing and manipulating the grain that this trouble arose. Now the government should either take the one or the other step. They must either purchase and control the terminal elevators, or force the railway corporations to carry out their functions as common carriers and provide means of storage for this grain at the head of the lakes. To-day what do we find? That the railway corporations have practically entered into a partnership with a lot of speculators, whose only object is to make what they can out of the farmers' grain. The railroads naturally are in partnership with those people; they want to facilitate these people in carrying the grain out to the head of the lakes; they apparently do not care what they do with it after it gets there; but I claim that the government must see that the railway corporations carry out their functions, or else implement their promises to the people of the west and let us have genuine government ownership of elevators. One elevator is not going to demonstrate whether government ownership is a feasible proposition or not. How can it, with the immense amount of grain we have in the west? Now, they propose to establish sample markets, where sample market is concerned storage facilities would be required if is going to be of any value. If the government are not going to own elevators it is useless to establish sample market without storage facilities; the idea of leasing one is nothing but a farce, to my mind. Either own them or force the railway companies to take them over.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I did not understand that the hon. leader of the House suggested that leasing one elevator would be the extent to which the government would move in respect to terminal elevators. I understood that the appropriation has been made and an experiment would be entered into probably leading to the whole of them, or leasing a number of them until the policy of operating terminal elevators had been fully tested. I assume that the proposition of terminal elevators did not originate with the government, but is a question of popular opinion in the west, and it would be well not to criticise what the government may do until we have had some further evidence of how they propose to carry out their policy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Prince Albert has dealt with this as a political question. A committee of this House last session dealt with this whole question with the utmost patience, and I think with a good deal of intelligence. That committee did not favour government ownership, and any one who considers the result of government ownership of elevators in the case of Manitoba will not be anxious to see the Dominion government going into the same business, and we should not lend ourselves to this idea of government ownership unless it becomes absolutely necessary.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I should like to ask the leader of the government if they have considered the construction of storage elevators at interior points with the view of lessening the dire results that arise from car shortage?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I think I may say not.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—With the state of affairs in the Northwest to-day, and with all the privileges given to ship our wheat to Duluth, I consider it is much more in the interests of the grain growers of the west to seriously take up the question of the erection of interior elevators for storing grain. The transportation companies are not able to move the crop at the time the farmer wishes to ship it, whereas such interior elevators would enable the farmer to get his money from the bank on a certificate, and then the crop could be handled more quickly by the transportation companies on short hauls instead of hauling it down to the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur. Conditions in the west to-day are very bad. A report from Winnipeg states that at a meeting held at Saskatoon there was stated to be a blockade now at Duluth, that the elevators are full at Fort William and Port Arthur; that there is enough grain on the cars to fill all the remaining space at Duluth. This means that the railway companies will not be able to take another car load of wheat from the farmers of the Northwest until navigation opens. That is a deplorable condition. For years I have talked the matter over with the Canadian Pacific railway officials and I was under the impression that they favoured the erection of large storage elevators in the interior where car loads of wheat could be delivered at those elevators in two or three days.

You might select points in the west, Saskatoon, Calgary, Moosejaw, Regina, Brandon, and the different points where the elevators might be placed. At the present time a farmer who has wheat in his granary cannot raise money on it, but if it were in a government controlled elevator, he would be able to get his money, the same as he would if it were stored at Duluth or Port Arthur. The government should direct their attention to that, and proceed along those lines. The present Premier made definite specific pledges in the west last summer, that he would take over and operate the terminal elevators. It was a definite policy, not an experiment—he was going to purchase the elevators, and own and control them. The hon. gentleman from Halifax does not think the government should go into the operation of elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. He gives as one reason, namely, the bad management of the elevator system in Manitoba. I should hope the management would be something better under the Dominion government. The Manitoba government, disregarding all decency, I might say, purchased elevators that are not worth 25 cents on the dollar of the price they paid for them. They purchased two or three elevators that never turned a wheel last year, and that is the way the money was invested. It is hardly necessary to refer to the means adopted by the elevator companies to sell those elevators, that they had no more use for, to the government. They were a miserable failure. I do not anticipate such a thing at Port Arthur or Duluth. The hon. gentleman from Halifax suggests that the government should not go into the elevator business at Fort William and Port Arthur. It seems to me, it is a question to a large extent of whose ox is gored in this matter. My hon. friend is opposed to bringing the Intercolonial railway under the Railway Commission, because he was afraid they might raise the rates. There is no question that the condition of affairs in the west is bad. I believe, as suggested by the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, that the railway companies ought to be compelled to operate their own terminal elevators. There is only one elevator at Port Arthur and Fort William, that has been giving entire satisfaction. That was shown by the evidence taken before the special committee which dealt with this Bill in the Senate last year. It was stated that the elevator operated by the Canadian Pacific railway was the only one about which there were no complaints. I think I am safe in saying, that the terminal elevators of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern railway, and Canadian Pacific railway, are about two-thirds of the terminal elevator capacity at Fort William and Port Arthur. If those elevators were owned and operated by the railway companies, it would not be the profits they were going to make out of the terminal elevators that would induce them to give a square deal. The main inducement to the railway company would be to get the freight. Because it must be remembered that we have passed the stage of colonization roads in the west. We have three large corporations there actually operating competing lines for the freight, and the freight is 10 to 15 cents a bushel. The profits on that freight would be much greater than the profits on the elevators, and the company that would give the best elevator accommodation, would undoubtedly get the freight. It would be a great solution of the trouble if the railway companies were compelled to own and operate their own elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. I could never see any particular reason why a railway company should not be compelled to take care of bulk freight, as well as package freight. If you deliver wheat in sacks the railway company take care of it. If it is delivered in bulk, it has to go to some other corporation to handle it, and I know that when the idea originated of granting permission to outside people to build elevators, probably the Canadian Pacific railway were not able to finance the elevator scheme, but things have changed, and the abuses in the elevator system have grown to such an extent, that the Manitoba government, by the will of the people, saw fit to purchase such a system there. It was very badly managed, but the fact of going into the elevator system at all was evidence of the necessity of doing something. If the government would compel the railway companies to operate their own terminals it would have a great effect in doing away with the trouble, and I believe that one of the best things that could be done, not only for the grain producers, but for the transportation companies, would be for the government to consider the advisability of going into the erection of large storage elevators in the interior.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 33,

33. The chief inspector and the inspectors for the division shall, not later than the first day of October in each year, select samples of the different grades of grain, which shall be known as official standards.

2. Any such inspector shall, upon request therefor, furnish a sample of any such grade of grain, accompanied by a specific statement that it is the official standard for that grade.

3. For all samples so furnished the inspector shall make such charge as is approved by the board.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The difference between clauses 33 and Bill (Q) is that in clause 33 they fixed the 1st day of October to select samples. That makes it a little earlier than Bill (Q). That will be pretty early some years, and some years it is all right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object was to create uniformity in the west.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There is no uniformity in the crop season between the east and west. Under the old Act the inspectors had one week's margin to work upon. Now on the 1st day of October they act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Western members of the House of Commons apparently thought it better to fit it on this date.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is very important that the sample sent out by the inspector should be accurate and represent truly the result of the crop, I would imagine that the earlier you fix a date to send out the samples, the greater risk there must be of making a mistake, as the result would indicate later. It is utterly impossible to change those samples afterwards, because they are the basis of the value placed upon them by the purchasers of the grain on the other side of the Atlantic. That is where the samples go, and it might happen to be very unfair to the crop of Canada if those samples were not accurate.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—We should have about eight days.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The first week in October there is a great deal of grain going forward, and there may be a great deal of difference between the receipts of grain from the first day of October up to the next eight days. We have nothing to lose by it. The inspectors in the past have always made samples at as early a moment as possible, because the dealers on the other side of the Atlantic are always clamouring for the samples. I think in the past it has worked fairly well. They have a week's time to make them and that is a great deal at that time of the year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill would let this clause stand?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There are two clauses, one dealing with the east and the other with the west. When we come to clause 89 my hon. friend might make the suggestion he has already made. This clause is the same as the Bill (Q) of last year.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 35,

35. No inspecting officer shall inspect grain being laden or about to be laden on vessels or cars after dark or in wet weather except on receipt personally, or through the office of the chief inspector, of an application from the owner or possessor of the grain or his authorized agent written upon one of the printed forms furnished by the Board and signed by such owner or his authorized agent, relieving him, the inspecting officer, from responsibility for damage which may be caused by such wet weather, or darkness, or for loss arising from errors liable to occur in an inspection under such circumstances.

2. In every case of such inspection the inspecting officer shall be personally present when the grain is actually delivered on board.

3. In such case no certificate shall be issued until the inspector's sample of such lot is examined under proper conditions.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I understand that the inspecting officer inspects grain on the cars. We had quite a bit of discussion about that last year. I do not know that this clause is going to meet the situation. I think we had evidence to show that some of the officials had their backs turned when the inspection was going on.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is seems to me that this clause is all right, because they have to get an order from the owner of the grain. If a vessel had fifty thousand bushels of wheat, No. 2 Northern, loaded in daylight and the owner wished to load the balance of the vessel during the night, samples are taken out. Of course, you cannot grade the wheat at night, but samples are taken out. The elevators would be careful to get it above grade rather than below, for this reason: a sample taken off during the night to be inspected the next morning, if it is not up to No. 2 Northern, the balance of the fifty thousand bushels in the vessel would be graded down to No. 3 Northern.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—So long as human judgment is the gauge of the measure of quality of grain there will always be room for difference of opinion. We have reason to be proud of the work of our inspection department. They have been complimented by the purchasers of grain in Great Britain, while other countries have been criticised severely. I wish to direct the attention of the leader of the House to the fact that it is time we had a different test applied to certain qualities of grain. I understand that in the Minnesota inspection they rely a great deal on what is known as the milling test. They have an outfit in connection with one of their colleges close to Minneapolis in which they make these tests. Certain types of wheat that have been weather beaten, or exposed to rain, are tested for their milling qualities and for making flour. Once that type is established it is not necessary to test every sample of the same kind if the inspector meets with the same condition. He will rely on the milling test which was given to him of the former sample of wheat. I think we should have a similar test here. Grain may be slightly discoloured and yet not injured as far as its flour making qualities are concerned.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The appointment of a commission is a new departure and I have no doubt it will result in a very extended inquiry into the advances which have been made in other countries in dealing with a similar industry. I have no doubt that an inquiry of this kind will be made and it may result in our copying the methods adopted in other countries which are of advantage to the consumer.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have seen wheat that was threshed before a slight rain grade No. 1, and the same farmer's wheat that was threshed after a slight rain grade No. 2. It was very hard to explain to that man that the slight rain should lower him a grade in the market. It was very doubtful whether the grain was lowered to that extent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Section 11 contemplates employing men having technical knowledge of this kind.

Clause 35 agreed to.

On clause 57,

57. Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person from selling or buying grain by sample regardless of its grades.

2. Notwithstanding any other provision in this Act that may conflict therewith, sample markets may be established in the cities of Winnipeg, Fort William and Calgary, and the mixing of grain permitted in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as are recommended by the board and approved by the Governor in Council.

3. The provisions of section 208, with the exception of subsection 3 thereof, shall apply to sample markets when established.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I have a motion to strike out this clause. All the grain producers of the west are opposed to it. The men who produce the grain are the men we should consider, and not the middlemen or the men who are there for the purpose of making money out of the grain growers. This clause is supposed to establish a sample market for the selling of grain at Winnipeg, Fort William and Calgary. It would be an immense benefit to the elevator combines who are always looking for an advantage, but what good would it be to the people who are mostly interested? The grain business of the west is controlled by a monopoly. We have it in the evidence that was taken by the Senate committee. I might read from the evidence of the witnesses to refresh your memory. You will find the interests represented by such men as Douglas, Heffelfinger, Serle and Morrison. They tell us that they are intertwined in one great monopoly. They control not only the terminal elevators, but the interior elevators also. Some of the companies, like the Peevey control four or five interior elevator companies.

It was supposed to be doing business and competing in the interior towns, and they controlled everything. With those gentlemen controlling the terminal privilege at the head of the lakes, what advantage would there be to anybody to go on a sample market and buy grain? What could they do with it when the elevator combine controls all the binning facilities at the head of the lakes? You cannot buy grain on the sample market and make any use of it unless you have a place to store it. Does any person think that the different members of the elevator combine are going on the sample market to compete with one another? No independent man would wish to purchase grain and put it into bins controlled by the monopoly for fear they would mix it. One of these clauses in this Bill, subsection 'e', and the other clause I opposed in this House in reference to damaged grain that went through and is incorporated in this new Bill, show that those in favour of a sample market are the combines who wish to get control of the cars. If you interfere with the distribution of cars, you will throw the producer of grain into the hands of the monopoly entirely. A sample market will do them no good. The combine will collect the wheat in the interior and take it to terminal points and mix it. The large milling interests have their own interior elevators. They can buy at street prices and get all the grain they want. The other man who cannot take advantage of the sample market is the eastern miller, and the foreign miller because they have no storage facilities and could not keep the identity of the grain passing through privately owned elevators.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The miller is opposing it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Certainly, because he is a sensible man. But can a man preserve the identity of his grain going through those elevators that those gentlemen who are so expert at manipulating control? What condition would his grain be in after it goes through all those different processes that we heard of last year in the committee? He is certainly not going to touch a sample market. There is only one way you can have a sample market—get those gentlemen out of the terminal elevators; then the other people are prepared to trust the government or the railway companies to run the elevators. After the evidence that was taken by the committee last year, I would ask you be prepared to trust those gentlemen with your grain to allow them to manipulate it. Under the statute to-day it is a crime to mix grain; but you propose to do away with that and give these people the opportunity to do by legislation what they did last year in defiance of the law and were fined for. Who is going to get any benefit from it? The men producing the grain in the west do not want this clause, which is going to be a benefit only to those other men. What does Mr. Douglas say in his evidence before the committee last year? At page 15 he says:

I represent the interest of H. F. Peavey & Co., confined largely to the Canadian Northern railway'—which went to carry out my statement that they are interested with the railway company too—and then he goes on and says: 'we have other interests represented by one of my associates.' They had other interests besides, at page 18 we had Mr. Searle's evidence; he was asked the question:

Hon. Mr. Davis.—You are connected with the Peavey Company?—A. Yes, I am.

Q. There is a list of Canadian companies mentioned by the previous witness, Mr. Douglass, and there are a lot of Canadian companies. How many of these companies are controlled by the Peavey Company?—A. The British American Elevator Company, which he did not mention, is controlled by them.

Q. How many Canadian companies do the Peavey people control?—A. Do you mean line companies?

Q. Yes?—A. They control the Port Arthur Elevator Company, the British American Elevator Company, the National Elevator Company; those are the only ones that they control.

Then Mr. Heffelfinger goes on at page 23—I want to show the connection of the Grand Trunk railway—He says:

The parties interested in these companies were first sought by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. It took considerable time to conclude negotiations which resulted in these investments, and as I was personally present during all of the negotiations I can testify to the ability of the Grand Trunk officials to make a good contract for the railroad.

That shows the connection between the Grand Trunk Pacific and those people. I just want to show that they are all tied up back and forward.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What has all that to do with the selling by sample?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I want to demonstrate to my hon. friend that selling by sample, as proposed by this Bill, is a farce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know you say so.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That the only men who control the elevator privileges in the west are this combination, which are all interwoven together. Now, who is going to buy grain on a sample market in Winnipeg when all the terminal privileges are controlled by those men?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I confess I do not understand the matter. If a person desired to purchase 100,000 bushels of wheat and went to the warehouse and was satisfied with the sample, and offered a price for the wheat, it is not for the farmer to ask the question what he is going to do with it afterward. There it is for delivery.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—But I am pointing out that nobody will buy this grain. This, on the face of it, is like all other legislation—

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it can do no harm.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes, it will be for the benefit of a certain class of men.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nobody will buy it?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—You are opening the door to mixing. If you do not allow mixing it is all right, but you allow mixing. There would be nobody buying grain on the sample market. These gentlemen will not compete with themselves on the sample market. They will bring it into the terminal elevators that they control, and there will be no competition since you allow them to mix.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—The first part of clause 57 is all right, but there is objection to subsections 2 and 3.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—2 and 3 should be struck out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The conditions in the west must be different from conditions in England. A farmer in England goes to the market with his samples of grain, and sells it. The purchaser buys it subject to the character of the sample, and if the farmer has sold an improper sample he suffers, but the purchaser takes his own risk as to when and where he shall get it. You are interfering with the right of the producer to dispose of his goods as he pleases. You might just as well say that you could go into an orchard and prevent the selling of 100 barrels of apples by samples. You own an article and you represent it to be of a certain character. Why should I be prevented from buying it, or you prevented from selling it? If I have misrepresented the character of the article, I am liable, and not you.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The illustration is not good, because in the particular case referred to the farmer is selling his wheat to the miller.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No matter to whom he sells it. It may be to the grain merchant.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Even if he does sell it to the grain merchant, it is the same thing. But in this particular case the wheat has to be handled by men operating a terminal elevator, men who are in the wheat business themselves. There is one objectionable feature in this, and that is the reason it would not work out properly. On general principles you would say sample markets are all right. As a matter of fact, most of the wheat is bought on samples. The grain dealer who buys out in the country buys by sample. He puts his judgment against it and says it is No. 2 or No. 1 Northern and takes his chances. A great deal of the wheat is bought in that way at the present time. There are probably three or four buyers, and they take their chances on it. The buyer who buys in the country has to take his chance on grading; sometimes he will win, and sometimes he will lose. On general principles, sample markets are all right. We have often quoted to us the sample market of Minneapolis. It is one of the best sample markets in the world, but there is a difference between that and our sample markets. As stated by the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, the people who are dealing in grain as a rule are those large grain companies. In Minneapolis the commission men are commissioned by country millers down in Illinois and all over the States, who want a certain quantity of wheat. The commission man is authorized to get a particular kind of wheat, and the commission man who pays the highest price gets it and ships it directly to the miller, where it is ground, and the result is there, with that ideal situation, the man who produces wheat and ships it to Minneapolis gets the best possible fraction of a cent that is in the wheat; but we have not those advantages in our western inspection. We have three companies, the Ogilvie, the Lake of the Woods and the Maple Leaf, which are practically the only companies we have, with the exception of the Western Canada. We have a few mills in the country, but we had more ten years ago than at present.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not wheat purchased by sample for shipment?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Frequently, but purchasing on a sample market, who would buy that wheat outside of the men who control the terminal elevators? There is no question about it if the sample market is established in Winnipeg or Calgary, it would reduce storage capacity for general grain at Fort William and Port Arthur one-third, because sample market means special binnage, and if the government take over one or two elevators, I venture to say they would only have them in their possession a very short time before they would all be filled for the purpose of taking the sample market wheat, and the public would have no place. I venture to say that this clause will drive the grain trade of the Northwest into the hands of a very few firms in a short time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would that end in the monoply to which you refer any more than buying it through inspectors?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, because if any person wants to go into the market and buy grain, it is inspected, it goes forward, and he is entitled to so many bushels of a certain grade of wheat inspected by the inspector. I want to bear testimony to what the hon. gentleman from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young), said as to inspection, that while in England last summer I made inquiry about the grain business. I had heard statements that people never found a sample of our No. 1 wheat over there. I found that the opposite was the absolute rule. I made inquiries at Manchester, and went to one of the largest grain importing firms there, and they showed me samples of our Canadian Hard Wheat and they were, according to my judgment, the exact sample of wheat such as is produced by the standard board in Canada, and I made inquiries as to complaints. He told me that for ten years he had never had a complaint as to a cargo of wheat that bore the inspection. He said to me: 'You have a man named David Horne, and David Horne's certificate on a cargo of wheat is A 1.' He was one of the chief importers in England, and in ten years he had never had a complaint on a cargo of Canadian wheat. I said: 'What about Duluth?' He said: 'Duluth certificate inspection is no good. We have to buy on sample, and see the stuff, and pay what it is worth. I do not think this Bill will work to the advantage of the producer of wheat, for the simple reason that the conditions are not such as they are in Minneapolis. There is not the competition for the several carloads of wheat, and I believe in two or three years you will find a great many people who are at the present time engaged in the grain business as commission men buying wheat to be graded, and sending it forward and sending it from the elevator at Fort William and Port Arthur, that those men will be put out of business, that a large portion of this wheat sent to Winnipeg, and put on the sample market will be purchased by the large grain merchant in the business, and the small man, who wants to make a living in grain, will be wiped out of business. A man would not simply buy one particular grade of wheat. He would take all his different grades, and he would take all the storage capacity that is now available for the public.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—For fear there might be some idea in the minds of the committee that a combination does not exist, I desire to prove that there is a combination. Last year, before the committee, I asked one of these men the question: 'All your companies are competing in some towns,' and he said: 'Oh, in a very few instances.' Mr. Gage said: 'Our company is fed by different companies in 110 country elevators, such elevators being in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, and in an ordinary year handle six million bushels of grain.' He said that one company owned all these other elevator companies. The Golden West Elevator Company, The Beaver Elevator Company, and so on, and these companies are supposed to be affording some competition to the people in the west. You find that the people who own one terminal elevator, own stock in the other, and they are connected with the railroads.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How does that affect the purchasing by sample of grain that has been inspected? They would exercise the same influence in one case as the other.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We want protection against the mixing of grain.

Hon. Mr. JONES—As I understand, we have passed the clause and are at subsection 2.

The CHAIRMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. JONES—We are admitting the principle that a man may sell by sample, and it is the question really of the mixing we are discussing, and the hon. gentleman's objection is to the words 'and the mixing of grain permitted in connection therewith.'

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. JONES—That narrows the consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman wants to strike out the whole clause.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Then I want to understand why we are going to pass it if we are not going to put in the machinery to carry it out.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—A great many farmers sell their wheat by samples. I take my wheat down and sell a load of it to the elevator. It is never graded till they get it. The elevator man grades it.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If clause 57 is left so that a farmer may sell by grade, the hon. gentleman desires to strike out the rest of it?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would not say a word were it not for the fact that the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan endeavoured to impress the committee that there is one huge combination in the handling of grain in the west, and that, therefore, the grain business is practically a monopoly at the present time. That is a very wrong impression. I have only to point out to my hon. friend that in the province of Saskatchewan a system of grain handling has been established with the assistance of the government, not only to store and handle grain, but to buy grain, which I am sure have not entered into any combination.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What do they do at the terminals?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There is another institution known as the Grain Growers' Grain Company. Surely the hon. gentleman would not classify that as being a company of monopolistic tendencies. I am a small living example of one of those who do not belong to one of the great combines. I am living and doing business. Sample markets are as old as the selling of produce. Sample markets started at the time when produce was first sold. It is an ideal market if it can be worked out. Remember that while there are very little differences in the value of our high grades, there is a great deal of difference between the lower grades. If a producer or dealer misses one line and has to drop down to the next, he may suffer a loss of seven or eight cents a bushel. The idea of a sample market is to pick up the cars that are between the two grades at a price half way between, and thereby the loss would not be so great, and is minimized as much as possible. As to whether conditions are right for a sample market I am not so clear. There is a great deal in what has been said by some of the other speakers. You cannot have a sample market unless you have room to bin your grain separately. One must follow the other. You must remember that while you are establishing a sample market you are still retaining the old system and part of the new. That space is now overtaxed, and if you put a greater tax on your space by a double system it will be still worse. I understand a great deal of the wheat is taken care of by the interior mills at Minneapolis. They order it forward directly in cars and it does not reach the elevators at all. So much so is that the case that their drying capacity at Duluth is comparatively small as compared to Fort William and Port Arthur. Cars that are slightly off grade, because of being damp or moist, are picked up by the mills and never go near the dryer at all. It is mixed in with dry wheat and run through the roll without any further process. Conditions are not the same in Winnipeg and Calgary. Minneapolis is the gateway of a great milling district. It may be said that unless you start you never can develop a market. I do not think a sample market should be overlooked and the doors should not be locked until every consideration is given to the facilities which may be offered to those who wish to go into business in the way of storing. If there were only a few big companies doing business, as suggested by my hon. friend, it would be different, but there are dozens and dozens of companies in the grain business that would require storage, and I question very much whether there is enough storage to go around. It would bring more trouble on the head of the government if they started the system and were not able to furnish accommodation. It would make confusion worse confounded if we have a double barrelled system. Another thing is that you have to accept the lowering of the average of the grain in the bins. You cannot take the cream out of it and still have the average high. One will follow the other as sure as day follows night. You cannot take out the cream and still keep up the qualities of the milk. If the percentage of cars between grades that now go into the lower grade and help to raise the average of the bin, are picked up in the sample market, the effect must be that the average of the bin is lower. There is no getting around the fact that if a sample market is properly worked out it will give a better result to the producer than the present system of grading.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This clause has been inserted in the Bill at the instance of the farmers themselves. I am informed that the grain growers of the west at one of their conventions, or gatherings, in Regina deliberately, by resolution, asked that provision be made for a sample market.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The farmers did?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes. This being done, upon reconsideration some time after, they concluded that they did not want, and they are now opposed to it. Where such a diversity of opinion exists, the difficulty is for the government to know exactly what is in the public interest. We all know that this sample market in Minneapolis is one of the most advantageous features prevailing in the interest of the farmer.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That is under different conditions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Different conditions, my hon. friend says; but the time will come when a sample market in Canada must be as advantageous for the farmers of the west as the sample market in Minneapolis is for the farmers there.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Free wheat in the States will make it all right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It has been proposed that some machinery should be introduced into the Act by which a sample market in the course of time might come to be developed, and all the advantages derivable therefrom be had in the interests of the farmer. Unless some declaration of policy is made on this subject by the government in this Bill it would be impossible in the future to have a sample market. It necessitates a great deal of preparatory work, terminal work, with binning and all that sort of thing, and unless such legislation looking to the ultimate establishment of a sample market it would be impossible to bring about those preparatory facilities for its establishment.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Will you lock the door until the facilities are adequate?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What I was about to say was this; looking to that end in view I would suggest that these clauses be not brought into force until the time arrives when the Governor in Council may be satisfied, after proper inquiry, that putting them into operation would be in the interest of the public, and I therefore suggest that we should put a rider to this clause 57.

4. Subsections 2 and 3 of this section shall only come into force upon a proclamation by the Governor in Council published in the 'Canada Gazette,' but the said proclamation shall not be so made unless and until the Governor in Council is satisfied that the proper conditions exist for bringing the same subsections into force.

If that be the case, we are appointing a grain commission, and we assume that that grain commission will be the best authority in the future for deciding this very important question. They will be more familiar with facts and conditions than any other class in the business. I say without hesitation they will be more familiar with those conditions and will be better able to judge as to whether a sample market should be established than the farmers themselves. And this must be taken into consideration, that we are legislating, not for one class in the community; the grain producers are not the only people interested in the production and ultimate manufacture of grain. There are many interests. There are milling interests; there are all the interests incidental to this important industry. There is the consumer likewise; the interest of the producer, and the consumer, the interest of the public, and we must harmonize all those interests and legislate in what is the best interest of all.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Put the producer first.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Where does the consumer come in?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We must keep in view that we cannot sit down here deliberately and legislate in behalf solely of one particular interest. This interest runs into every ramification of society, and it seems to me it demands at our hands consideration touching the whole of the interests involved and not the interests of any one particular class. Therefore, I suggest that we suspend the operation of this section in the way I have indicated, until proper information is forthcoming for bringing the other subsections into force. It may be one year, it may be two years, it may be a more distant time.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The proclamation should not issue before the beginning of a grain year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I apprehend that the grain commission will be sufficiently familiar with all the conditions to properly advise when this should be done; otherwise there is no use in having a commission, and we must in my judgment, foreshadow some legislation looking to the adoption of the ultimate future of a grain market. It can only be done by placing it in this way on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—The hon. leader of the House has made the statement that the farmers of Saskatchewan meeting at Regina, asked to have this clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To have a sample market established.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—How does he reconcile that with the fact that there are properly accredited officials of the Grain Growers' Association from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, that have been with us a week protesting against the inclusion of this in the Act, and who are now sitting in the gallery listening to the argument?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fancy those gentlemen are like others who change their opinions. But the question arises whether they were mistaken in the first place or mistaken now.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If they ever did make such a statement, they did it on the strength of the promises made with reference to the government taking over the terminal elevators. No doubt they thought the government were going to carry out their word, and they said, 'We want the sample market when you are going to take over your terminal elevators.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think they must have had in mind the fact that we are going to get free wheat in the United States.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—I think it is about time we should stop discussing this clause. There is no unanimity of opinion as far as this honourable House is concerned, but there was only one voice that could be heard in the meeting last Friday in the Railway Committee room, where we had four or five men of whom I was justly proud because of their education, intelligence, attainments and ability to present the whole case; and if there was one thing in which they were a unit it was that this clause must be taken out of the Bill. Why did they talk that way? Upon this basis; we are not to-day in the condition, neither have we the provision made for the establishment of such a sample market as would be a benefit to the producers of grain in that country. They did not deny the possibility of it being useful.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We concede that.

Hon. Mr. DOUGLAS—They did not deny that, but they said, 'Present conditions at the terminal elevators are not such as to warrant us in accepting that proposal, and, therefore, we wish it entirely wiped out of the Bill.' Certainly they are the people that are to be heard. They are not speaking as individuals, but as representatives of the people assembled, passing resolutions, and giving this question their very best attention, and they were sent down to deliver this message. Hon. gentlemen will remember how distinctly the individual from Calgary said, 'These are my last words to the Senate at Ottawa, as commissioned and sent to represent the people—that this clause be deleted, and that it be removed from the Bill, inasmuch as this country is not in such conditions in connection with storage capacity at the terminal elevators at the lakes that it could be made applicable and profitable in our business until such times as those elevators are owned and controlled by the government.' That was their opinion. I give them credit for their interest and for foreseeing the best interest of the producers of the west; and they ought to be the first men to be heard when we legislate on a question like this. It is not a party question, but one for the whole country to consider. It is not for me to say anything to reflect upon the ability or capability of the Senate to investigate carefully, and arrive at wise conclusions; but Bill (Q) received every attention last year, and was unanimously passed. Here, however, we have a clause that brings up for recognition a practice we despise, a practice that was a positive fraud and punishable by law, cases had been tried in the courts, and penalties inflicted, and in order to suppress it we were willing that heavy penalties should be attached, even to the extent of imprisonment for two years. Well, if we were sincere last year where is our judgment to-day? If we were right in preparing Bill (Q) and submitting it to the Commons, why are we going to take back-water? When we come to deal with this Bill that concerns the people generally, the people's interest ought to be considered. I know quite well that those grain buyers from the United States are trusting to mixing for their profits. Indeed, my namesake, J. M. Douglas, who was here as a financier for some seventeen associations, told me distinctly: 'If we lose the ability to manipulate grades, and to advance grades forward in their value, we lose all that there is in the trade with Canada as far as we are concerned, because there would not be much to invite us to invest and expend our money in this country.' Now our object is still to hold on to the facts that mixing grains is fraud punishable by law. We did not see that there was anything wrong in punishing that company to the extent of $25,000 because they were found in possession of 150,000,000 bushels, of No 1 Hard that their books showed that they had never purchased. Therefore, we are just taking back-water in this Bill, and I for one object seriously to going back upon my judgment of last year. I am sure that we were conscientious, patient and diligent and we thought we had agreed upon a Bill that was meeting the wishes of the people and the trade generally; and, speaking for the representatives of the people that appeared within the last few days to ask us distinctly that this should be removed, I do not hesitate to say that if we have any living interest in their prosperity and that of their country, we should let them have their wishes.

Hon Mr. THOMPSON—I am not interested in the wheat business to any extent beyond being a Canadian citizen, desirous of seeing the progress of all Canada. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat referred to our having passed a judgment last year which we ought to stand by. I understand that the farmers themselves were favourable at first to this proposition, and that they have changed their view. I think it is very proper and right, if a person makes a mistake in judgment, and afterwards finds that he was wrong, that he should desire to change. The government will meet the views of the common-sense farmers when they tell them: 'We are not going to put this in the Bill now, we are going to attach a subsection which will prevent its application now, but we propose to look into the whole question before we put it into force, and we will give you an opportunity of coming before the board and we will all become educated before this becomes operative.' I am sure that is fair, and I think they will experiment with it and see if they are right. If it ought to be stricken out, I am sure the government would never try to enforce it, for I am satisfied they do not wish to interfere with the farmers of the west. I am in favour of a sample market because it is nearer to the farmer than to the man who gets the grain in the elevator. It is very little interest to the farmer what bin it goes into. I think the sample market affords a better opportunity to the man who raises the grain than the man who buys. It is not compulsory; the government say they will make it inoperative.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Leave it out, then.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Why leave it out?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If the government are so anxious about getting the opinion of the farmers, what is the use of them passing this Bill at all ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The evidence before the committee last year was sufficiently strong to warrant the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique) in preparing a most elaborate resolution for the adoption of the sample market, and he embodied that in the Bill of last session. It was moved in the dying hours of the session, when there was no time for investigation. There was a very strong sentiment expressed before the investigating committee last session in favour of a sample market. I have in my desk a very lengthy article published in the ' Grain Producers' Journal,' on the great benefits of the sample market in Minneapolis, and along the line of introducing the same condition of affairs in Canada. The difficulty of the government is to ascertain what these gentlemen really want. Were they fully posted on the subject when they asked for a sample market ? Or are they duly informed now as to the unwisdom of such machinery ?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Last year I was in favour of a sample market. The farmers may have passed resolutions; I have not seen any. There was a general impression all over the western country that the terminal elevators were to be taken over by the government. Under such conditions we were in favour of a sample market.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are being taken over just as much as if the government owned them. They will be regulated by the government.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This legislation is there for the benefit of one class of people, the middleman who wants to make money out of the farmer. The people of the west are a unit as to this legislation. I want to draw the attention of my hon. friend to a telegram I have received from one of his own political friends, a gentleman who was the organizer of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan and who runs a newspaper at Swift Current. He says: ' Stand by the western farmers. Senate is their only hope. The eyes of the west are upon you.'

Some hon. MEMBERS—What do they want ?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I know very well that reflection has been cast on some members of the Grain Growers' Association by friends of the hon. member opposite. It has been said that they are political workers. The people of Saskatchewan are united, and they passed resolutions in reference to one clause in this Bill that we ask to have struck out. It was said here that there was no combination. Anybody who looks at the evidence given last year knows who controls the elevators on the Grand Trunk Pacific. There may be a little fellow here and there who is given a sop to keep him quiet. These combinations control the elevators.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They do not do anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—My hon. friend may have two or three elevators and they may have overlooked him.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What about the northern elevator ?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—These are men who learn the business of monopoly in the United States. The hon. member from Portage la Prairie had pointed out why sample markets were a success in Minneapolis and why it would not help here.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Reference was made to the discussion we had on this clause. It is an absolute unlocking of the door to mixing without seeing whether we are right for it or not. It is now proposed that this clause shall be left in abeyance until such time as a proclamation is issued, which means that the government assumes the direct responsibility to see to it that everything is ready for a sample market before they unlock the door. That alters the position of the clause. I think we will have to put the responsibility on their shoulders and say 'gentlemen you know the danger.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was prepared to vote for the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) but it seems to me from the observation made by the leader of the government and the amendment which he proposes that there is something to be said against this amendment. There appears to be a unanimous sentiment against the mixing of grain.

I think the wiser course is to accept the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the government and not to insist upon the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. We ought to strike out these words in lines 8 and 9, 'and the mixing of grain permitted in connection therewith.' We do not want mixing of grain under any circumstances, and if the hon. leader of the government will consent to have these words stricken out, there would be very little objection to his amendment.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Every hon. gentleman who has spoken on this question admits that present conditions are not favourable for a sample market. In Minneapolis they have facilities for milling two hundred million bushels per year. We have nothing of the kind at our terminal elevators and it will be years before that can be done. We have put these subsections in now with a rider that they shall not be operative until the government ascertains that conditions are favourable. This Bill will have amendments made to it from year to year; we can amend it next year if the conditions are favourable. We will then know how many elevators the government have bought or control.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

On clause 75,

75. Any person who directly or indirectly gives or offers or promises to give, or procures to be given, any bribe, recompense or reward to, or makes any collusive agreement with, any inspector or deputy inspector, or who makes use of, or threatens to make use of, any force, violence or restraint, or inflicts, or threatens the infliction of any injury or loss upon any inspector or deputy inspector, or upon any other person, in order to improperly influence such inspector or deputy inspector in the performance of his duties under this Act, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars, or to both.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A bribe to a weighmaster, or a bribe to any one who has control of the bin is just as far reaching, and more apt to be effective than a bribe to an inspector, and I think this clause should be extended in that way.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—We might add 'or other officer'.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If we strike out the words 'inspector or deputy inspector' and insert the words 'any officer', it would answer the purpose.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no objection to that amendment.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 89,

89. The chief inspector and the inspectors for the division shall, not later than the first day of October in each year, select samples of the different grades of grain, which shall be known as official standard samples.

2. Any such inspector shall, upon request therefor, furnish a sample of any such grade of grain, accompanied by a specific statement that it is the official standard for that grade.

3. The inspectors shall also supply cargo samples when required.

4. For all samples so furnished the inspector shall make such charge as is approved by the board.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The date mentioned in this clause is the first day of October.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the date mentioned in Bill (Q) of last session.

Hon. Sir LYMAN JONES—We might substitute the first week for the first day of October, if there is a difference of opinion, leaving it to the commission to say whether it is within the first day or the first week.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If the hon. gentleman is satisfied with the first day of October I have no objection.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 105,

Barley.

No. 1 barley shall be plump, bright, sound, clean and free from other grain, and weigh not less than 48 pounds to the bushel.

No. 2 barley shall be reasonably clean and sound, but not bright and plump enough to be graded as No. 1, and shall be reasonably free from other grain, and weigh not less than 48 pounds to the bushel.

No. 3 extra barley shall be in all respect the same as No. 2 barley, except in weight and colour, weighting not less than 47 pounds to the bushel.

No. 3 barley shall include shrunken barley, weighing not less than 45 pounds to the bushel.

No. 4 barley shall include all barley equal to No. 3 weighing not less than 44 pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I want to amend section 4 to read as follows: 'No. 4 barley shall include all barley weighing less than 45 pounds to the bushel.' Strike out 'equal to No. 3' also 'not' before 'forty-four.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That might be an important alteration; who has advised that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The chief inspector.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Suppose it only weighed 45 pounds would it come under No. 4.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, that is the lowest grade.

Hon. Mr. JONES—This really takes the place of feed barley, and provides for everything under 45 pounds.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am not familiar with the grades that they make in the western division.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is for the eastern division.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 107,

Spring Wheat.

No. 1 Manitoba hard wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least seventy-five per cent of hard red Fife wheat.

No. 1 hard white Fife wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of not less than sixty per cent of hard white Fife wheat, and shall not contain more than twenty-five per cent of soft wheat.

No. 1 Manitoba northern wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 60 per cent of hard Red Fife wheat.

No. 2 Manitoba northern wheat shall be sound and reasonably clean, of good milling qualities and fit for warehousing, weighing not less than 58 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least forty-five per cent of hard Red Fife wheat.

Any wheat not good enough to be graded as No. 2 Manitoba Northern, shall be graded No. 3 Manitoba Northern in the discretion of the inspector.

No. 1 wheat rejected for smut and scoured shall be graded as scoured of the grade to which it belongs.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—On page 28 the word 'Red Fife' is used in No. 1 Manitoba hard, No. 1 hard, No. 1 Northern. We have other kinds of wheat besides Red Fife that are used much more extensively than Red Fife. They are crosses of Red Fife, and should be mentioned.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There are large quantities of that kind of wheat growing in the west and I think it should be changed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is it not the practice to grade all hard wheat if it is equivalent to red Fife? These grades have been established for years and years and no objection taken, and when the thing is working well leave it alone.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—A sample of this variety of wheat took a $1,000 prize in New York. It was grown in Saskatchewan, and is now sold at $3 a bushel for seed.

Barley.

No. 1 Canada western barley shall be plump, bright, sound, clean and free from other grain and shall weigh not less than 48 pounds to the bushel.

No. 2 Canada western barley shall be reasonably clean and sound but not bright and plump enough to be graded as No. 1, and shall be reasonably free from other grain, and weigh not less than 48 pounds to the bushel.

No. 3 extra Canada western barley shall be reasonably clean and reasonably free from all other grain; shall include weather stained and slightly shrunken but sound barley free from frost and weighing not less than 45 pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We propose striking out the word 'free from frost' in the 43rd line.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Has that been well considered? The words 'free from frost' mean a great deal there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The word 'sound' covers that. We have omitted it from the other clauses dealing with other grains.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—If the grain is not free from frost it would not be sound.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would be practically the same as in Bill (Q). It was changed at the request of the grain growers.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In making these changes you have to take into consideration the effect it is going to have on existing contracts.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This section does not come into operation until the first of September next.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Are you satisfied that you are doing the proper thing in raising the grade of No. 3 barley?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is done at the request of the grain growers, and the maltsters have agreed to it. All the parties are agreeable.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me strange to say 'No. 3 extra Canada western barley.' When you say an article is extra, you mean it is something better than usual.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is employed because No. 2 has to be sound.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In clause 4 we propose to strike out the words 'equal to No. 3' and make 44, 45 so as to harmonize with the amendment which they made to barley in the eastern division.

The clause was agreed to.

On clause 122,

Terminal, Public and Hospital Elevators.

122. The proprietor, lessee, or manager of any terminal elevator shall be required, before transacting any business, to procure from the Board a license, permitting such proprietor, lessee or manager to transact business as a public warehouseman under the law.

2. The license shall be issued by the Board upon written application, which shall set forth the location and name of such elevator and the individual name of each person interested as owner or manager thereof, or if the owner or manager of such elevator is a corporation, the name of the corporation and the name of the president, secretary and treasurer of such corporation.

3. Such license shall give authority to carry on and conduct the business of a terminal elevator in accordance with the law and rules and regulations made by the Board.

4. Upon complaint by any person, in writing under oath, setting forth the alleged particular violation of law or rule or regulation, the Board shall forthwith examine into such complaint, and may require such proof as it deems necessary, and if the allegations made are proved to the satisfaction of the Board it may recommend to the Governor in Council the revocation of such license, accompanying such recommendation with the evidence upon which it is based, and the Governor in Council may thereupon, in his discretion, revoke such license.

5. The annual fee for such license shall be one hundred dollars.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—With regard to this clause is it quite right that the granting of licenses should be absolutely in the power of the commission, without any recourse in the case of refusal by the commission to grant a license?

Hon. Mr. JONES—That clause makes it compulsory that the board must grant a license.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think it is unreasonable to leave it to the discretion of the board as to whether a license should be issued.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That applicant has a right to the license if he complies with the law.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend will state in this case, whether there is an understood right to appeal to the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the revocation of the license there is, under subsection 4.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Would the recommendation of the board be final?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not necessarily unless the Governor in Council ratifies the recommendation. It is machinery that we have set in motion for the purpose of making inquiry as to whether license should issue. The Governor in Council would not know anything about it; he would have to rely on the board.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That is quite so. Is there not some general provision in the Bill under which an aggrieved party could appeal to the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG--I think we amended Bill (Q) last year to allow an appeal to the Governor in Council, inasmuch as the revocation of a license not only affected the operator of the elevator, but the owner of the grain which the building contained, because without the license he could not operate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is the duty of the board to issue the license. The proprietor, lessee or manager of a terminal elevator must procure a license before doing any business. The board has to issue the license, then the other proposition comes up, and if there be any reason for revoking the license there is an appeal to the Governor in Council.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I wanted to ascertain whether you disturbed that or not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In fact the board does not revoke the license then; it simply recommends the Governor in Council to revoke.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Would that revocation take place without notice to the individual?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should not say so; oh no, surely not.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The general principle in such case is clear enough, that the Governor in Council would cause the party to be notified.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is because it must be taken on evidence and the evidence submitted to the Governor in Council. Clause 120 is further protective; there must be a new investigation made.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What is the nature of the change in 120 between this and Bill (Q)? When that investigation takes place will it not be proper, under 120, that notification should be given the accused?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No investigation could take place within the meaning of any statute without notification. An investigation would imply that.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It would be very unfair to try any person, or corporation either, without a fair notice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can fully assure my hon. friend that notice will be given to all parties concerned.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In 121 you have an interpretation clause which extends only from 122 to 149, and in clauses 229 and 226. Now this interpretation clause is a limited one. Does it vary the interpretation clause at the beginning? It seems to be a strange way of dealing with it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is for the purpose of convenience in phraseology, so as not to require mention of a public elevator, that is, in contradistinction to a terminal elevator.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—But if you look at 2 'y' you will notice that the phrase 'terminal elevator' includes every elevator or warehouse which receives or ships grain, and is located at any point declared by the Governor in Council to be a terminal.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But, for the purpose of this section a more comprehensive term is used; that is, public elevator includes terminal elevator, whereas in 2 'y' it does not.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I see. It is a new departure which might be confusing.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Must not every elevator receive or ship grain? The definition in 2 'y' says that the term 'terminal elevator' includes every elevator which receives or ships grain. A public elevator must receive or ship grain.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A public elevator is not necessarily a terminal elevator except for the purpose of these sections. It is an elevator that receives grain from the western division after having been inspected.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is that a transfer elevator, then?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is really an eastern transfer elevator under another name.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, receiving grain from the western division.

On clause 125,

125. The person receiving a license as herein provided shall file with the Board a bond to His Majesty, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Board, in the penal sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars for each terminal elevator of fifty thousand bushels capacity and under and of a proportional sum for each terminal elevator of more than fifty thousand bushels capacity licensed by him, conditioned to the faithful performance of his duties as a terminal warehouseman and his full and unreserved compliance with all laws in relation thereto.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is the hon. gentleman clear that we have in clause 124 the door completely closed to the hospital elevator taking in good grain, regardless of grade? Having it graded out as if it had been treated in the same manner in which treated wheat is graded, might afford an opportunity to these people to mix.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—The regulations are prepared by the board. It says 'to be governed by such regulations and restrictions as imposed by the board.'

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—So long as the hospital elevator took in only the grain which quired special treatment, the grading out should be properly done. There is sent to the hospital elevator a car of grain half flax and half wheat. That properly goes to the hospital elevator and is separated there. The wheat should be graded according to quality. But supposing a hospital elevator goes into the business of receiving grain which does not require treatment could this clause not have that graded out regardless of the grading in?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there any possibility of a person shoving in a high grade of grain into a hospital elevator?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There are times when the business of the hospital elevator is dull, and they will do the ordinary storage business; and when they are doing that business they should be bound by the grades of the other terminal elevators in the same line of business. When they are doing a hospital business the grain that is treated should be graded out properly. A hospital elevator may be a double barrelled institution.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (166) An Act to amend the Prisons Reformatories Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (168) An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (169) An Act to amend the Bank Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (170) An Act to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MANITOBA BOUNDARIES BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The order of the day being called,

Resuming the further adjourned Debate on the motion for the second reading (Bill 115), An Act to provide for the extension of the Boundaries of the province of Manitoba.—(Hon. Mr. Montplaisir.)

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—I desire to make a motion in reference to this Bill, but will make a few preliminary remarks, having been pretty closely identified with the question of education in this country. It is a regrettable thing that the question has to come up so often. I think it is from a want of that spirit of live and let live that should actuate every loyal Canadian that this question should agitate the public mind again. I remember when the same question was fought out in New Brunswick, and also when the question was up in Manitoba before, and what took place at the time of confederation, because we would not be enjoying confederation now if these guarantees had not been put in the constitution of our country, and while the Catholic minority in this country is talked about and found fault with for raising the question from time to time, let me say—and I defy contradiction of that statement—that the first question raised at the time of confederation for these guarantees was by the Protestant minority of Quebec. Mr. Alexander Galt, who was leading in the minority in the province, took very strong grounds, as did also the late Mr. Holton, who was then representing Chateuaguay in the province of Quebec. I am glad to be able to say that the province of Quebec never repudiated, or tried to repudiate that clause in the constitution of the country that gave to the minority in the province the same rights that were given to the minority in the province of Ontario, and the province of Ontario only got these rights because the rights were insisted upon for the minority in Quebec, and they could not very well refuse to do the same for the minority in Ontario. That is the reason Ontario was included at the same time, but there is a stronger argument than that in favour of the old province of Quebec and in favour of that spirit of broad-mindedness which has always actuated these people. At the time of confederation, Mr. Galt pointed out—as also did Mr. Holton—that the law did not give them all they required in the province of Quebec. It was then understood that at the next session of the old Canadian parliament a law would be introduced giving a full measure according to the demands of the minority in that province. It was found later on that that measure could not be passed that session on account of the government requiring to go to England to attend to the passing of the British North America Act. Mr. Holton took very strong grounds then.

The minority had to depend on the good faith of the leaders of the province of Quebec, who pledged themselves that, at the next session of parliament they would pass a school law giving the minority of that province the rights they demanded. There is one clause in the Confederation Act that is explained by that position. You will find in the Confederation Act a provision, that if a legislative body should confer rights upon a minority, that legislation remains permanent and cannot be repealed without an appeal to the Governor General in Council. That was done in order to protect the minority in Quebec. That is the only guarantee they wanted. Those who have read the 'Debates' of that time remember that the minority in Quebec wanted to feel sure of their representation in parliament, and they got it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Thirteen counties.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—Yes, and the law was made so strong that even the local legislature could not change the boundaries of those constituencies without a majority of the representatives of these constituencies consenting to it. I think I am right in that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, you are correct.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—At the time of the agitation in New Brunswick it was stated, 'why do you fight so hard for separate schools?' Separate schools are going to last as long as the Catholic church lasts in this country, or any other country. It is a matter of conscience; every Catholic believes that it is his duty to give his children religious instruction at the schools. We, as a minority, are not blessed with the wealth of the majority. We complain that while, according to our conscience, we are obliged to provide schools for our own children, we have to contribute to the schools and taxation for the majority. This, I think, is unfair and unjust. I feel proud of the province of Quebec that they have given positive proof of their broad-mindedness in treating the minority in that province the way they did. They gave them their rights and kept good faith with the minority and granted them all that they had promised. In New Brunswick it was said, why not be satisfied with the condition in Nova Scotia. They had no trouble with their schools in Nova Scotia because, in the administration of the law there, it was administered in a broad-minded way, and left no cause of complaint, except they had no rights under the law. In New Brunswick we had a law up to 1871. We were defeated in the courts and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided against New Brunswick.

I have never raised my voice against that decision, but I have never met a lawyer who has been able to explain that judgment. Up to 1871, according to the school law of that province, we could establish, and did maintain, separate schools all through that province. We received our allotments of money under that law. An agitation was started a few years before to bring in a non-sectarian law. Our rights could not be taken from us until the old law was repealed. It was decided that we had no rights in law, but I cannot understand that decision. The law that was in existence at the time of the passing of this Act in New Brunswick gave us the privilege of establishing schools in every part of the province. We had what was called superior schools in New Brunswick, and that seemed to sway the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, because these schools were a grade under the grammar schools. Some of these schools were started by the Baptists, and some by other denominations, and some few by the Catholic people. Every session of parliament we had to ask for a special grant for the support of these superior schools, and it was a question whether parliament would vote that grant every session or not. I would like some legal gentleman to tell me why we had no rights under the law in 1871. We were able to keep our schools going in any part of the province where we wished to establish Catholic schools, and we did keep them going.

Now to-day in New Brunswick there is a very happy condition of things. I am glad to say that while our rights from the legal point of view, have been denied, the administration of the law is pretty satisfactory and we have schools now that suit very well. We have no great cause for complaint in New Brunswick, and do not complain, and I am not complaining now, except that I want to draw the attention of the House to that one point that I never could understand, that decision against us declaring that we had no rights under the law, when under the law we had our own schools and enjoyed them up to the time that law was repealed. I beg to move, seconded by Hon. Mr. Choquette, that after the word 'time', the following be added:

With the understanding, that in the proper time, a clause will be added affirming the principle that the educational rights to which may be entitled the people of the proposed annexed territory under any law, imperial, federal, constitutional or provincial, or deriving from any treaty or compact, shall be safeguarded.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—To what is this an amendment.

The SPEAKER—The main motion is that the Bill be now read the second time. It is moved in amendment as just read.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask if that amendment is in order. It is a most remarkable amendment to a motion for the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SPEAKER—Is there any objection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not object. I never heard such an amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask the Speaker if this is not a money Bill. Can it be amended in this way? I would raise that point for the Speaker's consideration.

The SPEAKER—There is no doubt that this is a money Bill, but it is not an amendment to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is it?

The SPEAKER—It is an amendment to the motion to read it a second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is proposed that it be incorporated into the Bill. As I understand, it is a clause to be incorporated.

The SPEAKER—But when that motion is made it will be time to make the objection, if it is lost, it fails. I think, on the second reading of the Bill, we may come to any declaration of principle that you like.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I would refer my hon. friend to Bourinot, 3rd edition, page 647. Note there that a motion of this kind is in order.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Where does this amendment come in? It says after the word 'time' those words are to be added.

Hon Mr. CHOQUETTE—The motion is that the Bill be read a second time. After the word 'time' there, we want that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to ask the Speaker, suppose this amendment is carried what becomes of the second reading?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—It will be read with that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This takes the place of the second reading.

The SPEAKER—If that motion is carried the second reading will take place immediately, unless another amendment is proposed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman has allowed the second reading to take place and then moves this as a substantive amendment to the provisions of the Bill, it would be much more in accordance with parliamentary practice. We declare by this resolution what shall be added to a Bill that really has not been read the second time, and consequently the principle of the Bill has not been affirmed in any respect by the House.

The SPEAKER—I understand the motion in your hand is that the second reading be proposed and accepted with the understanding that such and such a principle will be embodied in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has not the Speaker gone a step too far. The second reading has not been accepted, because it has not been submitted to the Senate for approval or disapproval. The Senate might reject the Bill altogether by refusing to give it a second reading.

The SPEAKER—The question will come on the amendment. The amendment is to add those words to the main motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to point out that an amendment and the main motion cannot stand together, and the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick moved this as an amendment to the motion for the second reading.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—No, to be added to it; it is not an amendment at all.

The SPEAKER—The main motion is the second reading of the Bill. It is proposed to amend that motion by adding these words.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I say that that is not a regular amendment. Any resolution which will stand together with the main motion, and does not contradict the main motion in any way, is not an amendment. That is the point. If it is true that you can read the Bill a second time and then make this provision, it shows that this is not an amendment to the second reading.

The SPEAKER—Bourinot says that any member may propose as an amendment a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse, or differing from the principle provisions of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw attention to the contradiction that there is in this amendment and in the statement that your honour has made, that this Bill is a money Bill which can not be amended.

The SPEAKER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I cannot see how this amendment can be acceptable if it binds this House to amend this Bill, in the face of this declaration in the committee when we are told in advance that that amendment cannot be made.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My point is that this being a money Bill, any amendment made at this point on the second reading must necessarily be included in the Bill, and is equivalent to amending the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—It will not affect the Bill at all.

The SPEAKER—This is a declaration of principle. It is enlarging the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It must amend the Bill.

The SPEAKER—No, because it is not proposed as an amendment yet. If this motion carries, the Bill will be read a second time, and an amendment being proposed the point of order can be raised.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Put the amendment and vote upon it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia.)—I have listened to the speeches made by the hon. members who belong to the Roman Catholic church, and I think they have been extremely moderate, considering they were speaking under a sense of deep wrong, although they were speaking outside the Bill and entirely apart from the Bill, yet every indulgence must be made for them considering their strong opinions on this subject, and the fact that they were impelled to say and do what they were saying and doing by the Roman Catholic clergy, and by one or two fanatical men in Quebec. I for one find no fault with them. The hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) waxed quite eloquent when he was speaking on the question, giving a black eye to the Postmaster General. The hon. gentleman from Montreal asked for something which could not be done, that clauses protecting the right of the minority in one corner of Manitoba be made a part of the Bill. The hon. gentlemen have lost sight altogether of the fact that this is an addition to the province. It is not like forming a constitution for a new province such as Alberta or Saskatchewan. These were new provinces and a constitution was prepared for them by the government of the day, acknowledging their rights to separate schools, but this is quite different and you could not have one set of laws for a corner of Manitoba and another set of laws for another part. It has to be left entirely to the province of Manitoba and anything of that kind was being done against the law of the land. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique) laid down the question very clearly. He said we were guided entirely by the opinion and judgment of the Privy Council, that Manitoba had the legal right on its side, but that the minority of Catholics had the moral right on their side. I quite agree that the Catholics of Manitoba had the moral right on their side.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then why not give it to them?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—I think all who desire peace, order and equal justice within our borders will be pleased and satisfied that the Manitoba boundary extension has been settled on conditions satisfactory to the Dominion and provincial governments. After prolonged conferences and discussions Manitoba is at last coming into its own. I could never understand why the area of Manitoba was so restricted by the government which had to do with settling the first boundary, in the midst of millions of acres of wild and unremunerative land. Every government since the first delimitation has pursued the same parsimonious policy, but now, under the present Conservative administration, the hopes and aspirations of Manitoba are brighter, and it is gratifying to find the government with a just appreciation of this question. I would like to have seen not only Manitoba, but Saskatchewan and Alberta, given full autonomy, full control of the public domain within their borders—and not kept longer in leading strings; and as to subsidies, place them in the same position as the provinces which control their own lands.

It is demoralizing to provincial governments to be spoonfed for years, and thousands of dollars thrown into their lap for which they did not toil or spin. They should be allowed to work out their own financial arrangements. In turning over a new leaf with a new Liberal government in power, the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta should have been given full autonomy and less money. I have however, noticed with pleasure that the Premier, in alluding to the new provinces in his comprehensive and masterly speech, intimated that it is the intention before long to place the land within the borders of these provinces under their own control. I noticed also that the Premier intimated that the maritime provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, would not be forgotten, but no intimation was given of considering the Pacific province in any readjustment, although it contributes three times as much revenue per head as the Atlantic provinces do. I beg to suggest a way in which British Columbia can be remembered substantially other than financially, by reconveying to the province the land it parted with under stress—although a free will stress. To aid in the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway the province of British Columbia set apart, and at the disposal of the Dominion, a tract, or belt of land, twenty miles on both sides of the railway line from its eastern boundary to the sea on the Pacific; and some years after this first concession, three million acres of land were placed at the disposal of the Dominion by the province, in the Peace River district. These lands were not hypothecated by the Dominion, but stand unincumbered, excepting such portions as may have been sold or leased by the Department of the Interior. The three million acres have not been dealt with. Seeing, then, that the present government is in a generous mood, and intends to treat other provinces liberally, will it not therefore be consonant with such a policy to reconvey to British Columbia those lands within its borders which were so generously placed at the disposal of the Dominion to strengthen its credit at a time when it did not stand in the high position in which it stands to-day?

The Dominion government has already placed the management of the water-powers within the forty-mile belt in the discretion of the British Columbia government. I admit the province had no legal claim to these lands, but in re-arranging conditions in the other western provinces, its equitable rights should be considered, particularly as such would be in harmony with the Premier's policy. To treat British Columbia otherwise would be anomalous, and not in harmony with that policy. No doubt the Premier of that province will place this question in a strong light, and give convincing proofs for a settlement in the direction indicated.

My remarks are only a sign of what is coming, and what we hope will be done.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I do not wish to reply to the remarks the other day by some of the other gentlemen of this House. We should approach this question in a proper spirit. It has been stated privately that those who have spoken in favour of the amendment which has been moved, did not have the courage to express their views on the whole question. I am not going to discuss that. The more I hear of this question the more am I convinced that the Senate, which has been established in order to protect the weak and the rights of the minority, ought, on this occasion, to do something to show its usefulness and fulfil its noble and great mission. I am convinced that a man who impartially approaches this question, without going into all its details and intricacies, but placing themselves upon a high standard cannot come to any other conclusion but that the rights of the minority should be protected. When one considers the different laws which have been passed in connection with this matter, and considers the Manitoba Act of 1871, and Northwest Territories Act of 1875, and several other statutes which have been passed in connection with this question, one must come to the conclusion that the fathers of confederation who brought these laws before parliament had the intention of safeguarding the interests and the rights of the minority. Lawyers may differ on the interpretation of statutes or certain provisions of a statute. Courts of justice may render contrary judgments on such interpretations, but they cannot change the fundamental principal which is at the bottom of our great charter, or constitution of 1867. The fundamental principle may be summed up in a few words—respect and protection to the rights of minorities. I have no hesitation in saying that the rights of the Catholics of Keewatin are more certain than the rights which we invoked for the Catholics of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. In the case of Saskatchewan and Alberta there were provincial laws and ordinances which it was necessary to abrogate in order to do full justice to the Catholics of those provinces. It was almost impossible to abrogate those laws without infringing on the rights of the provinces. Is it not true that in this case there is no provincial legislation which prevents parliament from doing what they think proper in order to safeguard the rights of the minority of Keewatin. There are no provincial laws to be abrogated; the way is clear, and we do not have to trespass on any rights, I admit there are technical difficulties. There are always technical difficulties. There has not been a law since the world began in connection with which technical difficulties could not be raised. Hon. gentlemen, there is something which must prevail over technicalties. It is right, justice and moral obligation. I contend that the Act of 1875 was passed consecrating the right of the minority to separate schools in the Northwest and the inhabitants of the Northwest Territories have knowledge of the legislation passed by parliament. I contend a moral obligation was created and parliament which is not tied up by technicalties is bound by that moral obligation to recognize these rights. One of the objections raised was that there were no schools in Keewatin at that time, and that no petitions were addressed to parliament or the Senate from that territory. We have evidence to prove that Catholic schools existed in Keewatin, and that the people of that territory have applied to the Prime Minister, to parliament and to the Senate in order to have their rights safeguarded. I have in my hand a petition to which I call the attention of this honourable House. This petition is signed by the Bishop of Keewatin and by 50 or 60 of the inhabitants of that territory. It says—

Le Pas, District Keewatin,
19th February, 1875.

To the Right Honourable
R. L. Borden, L.L.D., K.C.,
Premier of Canada.

The petition of the undersigned residents at Le Pas in the district of Keewatin, humbly sheweth that—

Whereas a Bill is to be presented before the Parliament of Canada for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba to include part of the district of Keewatin;

Whereas in the said district the minority rights to separate schools are granted and guaranteed by Act of Parliament of Canada, passed in the year 1875, establishing the 'Northwest Territories' and providing for a separate school system (sec. 2 of the Act, sec. 14, chap. 50, Revised Statues) when part of the Keeawtin district shall be included within the boundaries of the province of Manitoba;

Whereas the Catholic minority has already a private separate school established at Le Pas;

Whereas the reason why this school is not as yet lawfully established is solely the action of the Dominion government in not granting the means towards the organization of a school district where under the law, although these means have been requested by different petitions which have not been answered so far;

Whereas we cannot conscientiously accept the annexation to the province of Manitoba unless our full rights to separate schools are safely guaranteed;

We, the under petitioners beg that you will incorporate in the Bill for the extension of the province of Manitoba a clause protecting the rights to separate schools.

And we, your petitioners, do earnestly pray for your aid and influence to the end that our rights may be thus fully protected.

We your petitioners, ever pray,
Signed:
O. CHARLEBOIS, O.M.I.,
Bishop of Keewatin,
And others.

I say that one of the principal objections which has been raised has been removed by the proof which I have just read. There is another reason; the settlement of this question in Saskatchewan and Alberta convinced me that the governement of the day did everything in their power in order to obtain the best possible concession. I cannot say that in this case. No hon. gentleman in this House has been able to say that the government of the day have done everything in their power to give to the Catholics of Keewatin the rights to which they claim to be entitled. We have the right to interfere. This House, which is the champion and protector of provincial rights, must interfere. It is our duty to do so. 'Let us wait' that is the cry we have heard. Hon. gentlemen, we have heard the cry before. History tells us that we must be on our guard against that cry.

That cry was heard in 1872 when the New Brunswick school question was brought before the House and when the government and parliament were asked to disallow the provincial laws which had been passed by the legislature of New Brunswick, relating to separate schools. 'Let us wait.' It was the cry at the time, and they waited, and you know what the result was. We heard the cry in 1871, when the question of the disallowance of laws passed by the legislature of the province of Manitoba was raised before the parliament. 'Let us wait; let us have confidence in the government.' We waited, and you know what the result was. The same cry was heard in 1876, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been blamed several times for having placed too much confidence in the Greenway government. We have been told many times that we would have obtained a better settlement if he had not been so confiding in the promises made by the Greenway government. And we know what the result was in this case. When the ordinances passed by the council of the Northwest came before parliament and when the government and the parliament were asked to disallow those ordinances, the government of the time refused to disallow them. Then also we heard the same cry, 'Let us wait; let us have confidence.' And you know what the result was. Now we hear the same cry, 'Let us wait; let us be confident;' and I regret to say that I have heard those words from the lips of two hon. gentlemen, one of whom has always been considered the father of separate nchools, and the other one of the lights of this House. Naturally those two gentlemen are so respectable that I must admit that they have been acting in good faith. Well, hon. gentlemen, I think we have been deceived enough to be on our guard against that cry. The time has come when this House, and those especially who represent the Catholic sentiment in this House, must do their duty. The to-morrow policy is sometimes very dangerous. To-morrow—we know what that means in the mouths of political men. That reminds me of an old history which propably you must know. A man had been condemned to death, and an application had been made by his lawyer for the commutation of his sentence; and every day the lawyer went to jail to see his poor client, and each time he told his client, 'Wait, wait till to-morrow and everything will be all right.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was Sir John Macdonald .

Hon. Mr. DAVID—He waited, and on the last day of his life when he was going to the scaffold he met his lawyer, and he said, 'Do you recommend me to-day to still wait till to-morrow?' 'I fear it will be too late to-morrow.' Well hon. gentlemen, I think that the to-morrow policy is very often equivalent to a sentence of death, if on this occasion and in these circumstances, when we are in possession of the Bill, when we may do what we like with it if we do not insert in that Bill the guarantees which are necessary in order to safeguard the rights of the minority in Keewatin, to-morrow will be too late.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Yes, hon. gentlemen, let us wait; let us be confiding; let us conciliate; nothing can be obtained by the minority in this country under this regime. We know this policy of conciliation. Yes, let us wait; let us be confiding; let us be conciliatory, but not to the detriment of right and justice, of conscience. The members of this House especially must remember the famous controversy which took place between the great Cardinal Newman and that great man Gladstone, and you must have heard the last words of Cardinal Newman in answer to certain questions put by Mr. Gladstone—'Conscience before all.' Well, I remember these celebrated words on this occasion, and I say, conscience should be before all. Conciliation does not preclude prudence and precaution, and does not prevent us from doing what justice and the interests of the country require.

It has been repeated so many times that the Senate was established in order to protect minorities that I did not repeat it. We have the speeches of the fathers of confederation, and there is no doubt of Senate was established to protect those rights, and that the Senate should feel it its duty to show that those who had confidence in this House were right, and had reason to believe in the wisdom and in the spirit of toleration of the Senate. If I were allowed to address myself to the Liberals who compose the majority of this House, I would say: 'Gentlemen, what has been said and repeated and done by the most eminent leaders of the Liberal party. Remember the declarations which were made by that great man Edward Blake at the time of the acquisition of the Northwest Territories. He died not long ago, much admired not only in this country, but in the whole empire.

He said:

> He believed that it was essential to our obtaining a large immigration to the Northwest that we should tell the people beforehand what those rights were to be in the country in which we invited them to settle.

Continuing he said:

> He did believe that we ought not to introduce into that territory the heartburnings and difficulties with which certain other portions of this Dominion and other countries had been afflicted. It seemed to him, having regard to the fact that, as far as we could expect at present, the general character of that population would be somewhat analogous to the population of Ontario, that there should be some provision in the constitution by which they shall have conferred upon them the same rights and privileges in regard to religious instruction as those possessed by the people of Ontario. The principles of local self-government and the settling of the question of public instruction seemed to him ought to be the cardinal principles of the measure.

And Mr. Mackenzie, who was at the time Prime Minister of the government, said:

The clause provided that the Lieutenant Governor by and with the consent of his council, or assembly, as the case might be, should pass all necesasry ordinances in respect of education, but it would be specially provided that the majority of the ratepayers might establish such schools and impose such necessary assessment as they might think fit, and that the minority of the ratepayers, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, might establish separate schools, and such ratepayers would be liable only to such educational assessment as they might impose upon themselves.

Those are the declarations of two of the most eminent men in the legislatures of this country.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—They are both dead.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Does the hon. gentleman tell us that that was the law in the Northwest Territories when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were taken in? Does the hon. gentleman not know that the law of 1875 was amended and its wings clipped off completely, so that they really had no separate schools in those provinces at the time the provinces were formed?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes they had. What is the use of making a statement which is not correct?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I know what I am talking about. At the time the provinces were formed they had no such things as text books, no such things as inspectors or trustees. They had no privilege in the world except the privilege of going to the school at half-past three o'clock and teaching the Catholic religion to their pupils. That was the law.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That was not the law.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—We have nothing to do with the provincial law passed in Manitoba. I said the field was clear and there was no provincial legislation in the territory of Keewatin which would prevent them from doing what was right in the interests of the Catholics of that territory. I could cite also, not only what was said by the hon. leaders of the Conservative party, Sir John A. Macdonald, the Hon. Mr. Campbell, and I am not sure Sir Mackenzie Bowell was not at the time one of those eminent leaders of the Conservative party who acquiesced in the laws of the Northwest Territories as they were passed. I have not found remarks in 'Hansard' by the Hon. Sir. Mackenzie Bowell, but I have seen no protest on his part against the law which was proposed to be passed and against what had been stated by his colleagues Sir John A. Macdonald and Hon. Mr. Campbell. So that I am right in saying to the hon. members of this House, whether they are Liberals or Conservatives: 'You have only to follow the example and the lesson given to you by your hon. leaders, those you admire so much, and you are sure to be right.'

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—There is no principle in that.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Let us take those lessons and examples and let us not forget that the institutions which are not founded on right and justice do not last long. We love our country, we like to speak of the great destiny of Canada; let us remember that we must not in our laws sow seeds of discord and discontent which would hamper its progress and ruin its future, and perhaps frighten away the millions of people who will emigrate to and enrich those vast territories. This is the advice given us by the hon. leaders of both parties, and I hope that the members of this House will act in accordance with the advice given to them by those eminent people.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I intend to support the amendment, but it is not my intention to go over the ground which I covered the other day. I said practically all I had to say on the merits of the question. I am compelled to rise at this moment because it would appear to me that some hon.

gentlemen are disposed to vote against this amendment on the ground that it infringes the rule that this House has no authority or jurisdiction to deal with money matters. I submit in all confidence that this amendment is not open to that objection. It contains nothing which infringes that rule. The rule as laid down in Bourinot at page 626 reads as follows:

> 11. As a general rule, public Bills may originate in either House, but whenever they grant supplies of any kind, or involve directly or indirectly the levying or approbation of any tax upon the people, they must be initiated in the popular branch, in accordance with law and constitutional practice (f).
> Section 53 of the British North America Act, 1867, expressly provides:
> Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the House of Comomns.
>
> And a standing order of the House of Commons declares explicitly:
> All aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such Bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants which are not alterable by the Senate (g).

In what respect does this amendment infringe that rule? There is nothing which deals with supply or which directly or indirectly levies or appropriates any tax upon the people—absolutely nothing. It does not involve any expediture of money, and I do not think any one will argue that there may not be in the Bill monetary and other provisions. If the monetary clauses come within the provisions of the rule, they could not be altered by the Senate, but surely it would not be contended seriously for one moment that a Bill which contains other provision, in addition to the money provisions, could not be altered by the Senate. It would be absurd. Otherwise all the House of Commons would have to do would be to put all its legislation into the Supply Bill and this House would be reduced to absolute impotency. That contention, on the face of it, is absurd.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While it is a pleasure to hear my hon. friend deal with this subject, it is necessary, in view of the fact that the Chamber has accepted the ruling of the Speaker, there has been no appeal from his ruling, and for the purposes of the debate we accept it as being proper.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That may be so, but I rise for fear some hon. friend may be inclined to think that the amendment infringes the rule. If my argument is not convincing, a simple reference to Bourinot at page 629, will suffice. He says:

> It is frequently found convenient to introduce Bills involving public expenditure in the Senate, and in such case, the money causes are embodied in the Bill as presented, in order to make it more intelligible; when the Senate goes into committee on the Bill, these clauses are ordered to be left out. They are printed in red ink or in italics in the engrossed Bill sent up to the Commons and are technically supposed to be blanks. These clauses are always considered in a previous committee by the Commons, and then regularly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Bill. In the same way, resolutions imposing a tax or duty must be alone considered by the Commons, and referred to the committee on a Senate Bill.

There is the very provision which provides that a Bill may be initiated in this House containing both monetary provisions and other provisions, and whilst the Senate is precluded from dealing with the monetary provisions, jurisdiction is given to it to deal with questions that are not monetary. The whole question is whether this amendment is one affecting supply or is for the purpose of levying an appropriation for any tax upon the people. What is there in this amendment which in any way concerns supply or levies or appropriates any tax on the people? The mere reading of the rule seems to me to be absolutely conclusive that this is not an amendment of a monetary character. If there are any inclined to vote on that ground, I submit they will not be justified in doing so. The argument which has been set forth by the hon. member is based on common sense and backed by the authorities. I hope the hon. leader of the government will not insist on having the Speaker rule that it is a money Bill because there happens to be a financial clause in it. I know the calibre of the leader of this House, and he knows what he says in that regard is not founded on sense or justice. If he were not in the position he occupies he would not urge it, because if his view should prevail this House would become an empty nothing, and we would not have the right to discuss any Bill of consequence.

The SPEAKER—I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the question has been disposed of by my ruling. The question now before the Chair is the amendment moved by the Hon. Mr. Costigan.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—An opportunity may be taken to question that ruling later on. I will pass to the hon. gentleman for British Columbia (Mr. Macdonald). I wish to extend to him, on my own behalf, and on behalf of my co-religionists in Manitoba, their sincere thanks for his kind remarks. His sympathy is deep. He tells this honourable House that it was not a proper thing for the Protestant majority in Manitoba to take the money of the poor Catholics to educate their children. That is a proper statement. It is the foundation upon which rests my opposition to this Bill. I am not going to discuss the legal features. It is useless to try to convince some people by legal arguments. The only ground on which you can appeal to some people is on the question of honour. Is it not time for the Manitoba majority to be ashamed of themselves? Is it not time for that majority, composed of Doukhobors, Gentiles, Jews and Christians, to stop taking the good money from the poor class of the population to educate their children? I put that to the member from Portage la Prairie. Is not it a shame for him to go over to his confrère in the Senate and take good money out of his pocket to educate his Protestant child? Ought not he and the senator from Killarney to be ashamed? They would not do such a thing in an ordinary transaction, but they are taking it in a mean way, by law, but not with the sanction of honesty and justice. Is it not time for Manitoba to open its eyes and acknowledge the wrong it is perpetrating under the guise of law, stealing the money of the minority to educate their own children, Jews, Gentiles, Doukhobors and others? Is it not time, that the rest of the Dominion woke up along the line of honour and justice? Why should not Manitoba retrace its steps? This agitation was born in scandal and iniquity. The agitation for the abolition of separate schools was due to a rank crime in the ranks of the liberal party of the day. Mr. Greenway, then Prime Minister, said to me 'Mr. Cloran you can go back to the province of Quebec and tell them that my governement is not in favour of this agitation, and is not in favour of the abolition of separate schools. You can go back and assure your friends that the Liberal party as a whole is opposed to this agitation. It is a hard thing for a Prime Minister to say, but I have got to say it of one of my colleagues 'That man Martin is a scoundrel; he is using this agitation to cover his tracks in regard of a certain transaction in railway matters and other deals.' These are the words of the Prime Minister of the day to me, when I was on a special mission from the Quebec government to find out what was at the bottom of this agitation for the abolition of separate schools, and to find out what was at the bottom I went to the Prime Minister and that was his declaration to me. I have interviewed nearly all the prominent men of the day with regard to the matter and there was not one, with the exception of Joe Martin, who was in favour of the agitation. This was in October, 1889. Mr. Greenway said to me:—

'Is it wiser that I should be kept at the head of affairs than be swept away by the hurricane of passion and prejudice that is sweeping over the province under Joe Martin and Dalton McCarthy? I then called Mr. Martin and three or four cabinet ministers to the Queen's hotel where I interviewed them at dinner, and they were all favourable to the proposition I made, which was this, 'Mr. Greenway, if you carry on this agitation in Manitoba for the abolition of separate schools you are going to hurt, if not ruin, the prospects of the Liberal party throughout the Dominion, and you will surely ruin them in the province of Quebec, because the clergy are deadly opposed to the Liberal party, and if they can put the odium of this agitation on the Liberal banner, it will extend to us and we will be hurt by it, if our prospects will not be ruined.' Thereupon Mr. Greenway, and the majority of his colleagues, said they did not want to do that, but Martin's answer to me was, 'You can go to Hell.' That is straight over the table, 'You can attend to your own show down in Quebec, and we will attend to our own show here in Manitoba.' That is the answer of that hon. gentleman at the time, of whom his Prime Minister confessed to me, 'it is a hard thing to say of one's colleague that he is a scoundrel, Mr. Cloran, but if I tried to stem that tide of passion and prejudice I would be swept out in 24 hours, and that same Martin would be called to form the government. Now, which do you prefer?' I then went to Brandon and interviewed the now famous Sifton, who was then a budding lawyer, and had been recently elected to the legislature. He was deadly opposed to the agitation and opposed to the Martin Bill. The same Mr. Sifton, who put a knife to Laurier's throat some years ago on this question, the one who is now an ex-minister, told me directly in his office that he was opposed to the agitation, and I have given you the names of the others. I crossed from Mr. Sifton's office to the largest merchant in town, mayor of the town at the time, and I believe, as he told me, Grand Master of the Orange Lodge. He told me he was opposed to the agitations, 'for,' he said, 'there is no doubt that there are faults in the system as it exists, but that is no reason why the rights of the people should be taken away from them. Let the government remedy the faults and the errors.' I am giving you facts and names, and I think the senator from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Larivière) will remember the occasion; I am almost sure he was there.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—The hon. gentleman is calling my attention. May I ask if Joe Martin is of the same party that was introduced to the House by Sir Wilfrid Laurier?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Didn't I tell you he was a disgrace to the Liberal party. I have been saying that right along. That shows the hand; there is no sincerity in your attitude. I am sincere in saying that he was a danger to the Liberal party.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Order.

Hon. Mr. LARIVIERE—I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the gentleman said there was no sincerity in what I said.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not want to discuss with a partisan, but I want to call the attention of the hon. member from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Larivière) to this other fact, if I am not mistaken about his presence. After I did go through my commission in sounding public opinion on this question, Mr. Prendergast, who had been provincial secretary and had resigned, although he held a position in the government, but owing to this agitation had resigned his seat—he was practically the only representative of the people that could address public meetings, and they had no English representative at all, while I think there were four or five members against the Bill, five or six at the most, and he called a conference of the leading French Canadians of St. Boniface, and asked me to attend to discuss the situation. I think my friend from St. Boniface, Judge Dubuque and others were there; and lo and behold, when I got there, the proposition was made that I abandon my mission, remain in the province, and take up the championship of the separate schools with our friend, now Judge Prendergast. Seeing the sentiment among the public men to be so fair and so just towards the minority, I returned and communicated my report to the Quebec government. Now, what was the object of the Quebec government, which was then Liberal, in having this mission performed, and securing this information? If I had been obliged to report to the Quebec government that the agitation for the abolition of separate schools was based on pure prejudice, pure hostility, pure animosity to Catholic rights, then the Prime Minister of that day was prepared to take the identical Manitoba Bill, word for word, for the abolition of separate schools of Manitoba, enact it in the Quebec legislature, not for the purpose of taking away the rights of the minority, but for the purpose of forcing Sir John Macdonald to disallow it, which he would have done in 24 hours, and then Sir John Macdonald would have been advised to disallow the Act of 1890. But on my report it was not necessary. From that very day we have had in Mr. Greenway always a friend of conciliation. People wonder how he could do what he did, but Mr. Greenway was no bigot, no fanatic, and was not a man who would willingly and off his own bat take away the rights of the minority. As he stated with his other colleagues, this agitation should have confined itself to a remedying of the errors and of the faults that lay under the separate schools system; and the member from St. Boniface knows well who is the guilty party in the administration of the school law at that time; he knows what gives strength and force to Martin's accusations against separate schools; he knows that while the Protestant population were educating their children at the rate of one dollar per head, it cost Catholics four dollars per head to have an unworthy education. He knows that, and he knows where that cost was brought in. That was the foundation upon which Mr. Martin secured the votes of Manitoba. Now there is the inside history of that agitation, and the province of Manitoba was then under the influence of a hurricane of passion and prejudice so that at the very time I was in Brandon it was not safe for a Catholic priest or a Catholic nun to walk the streets of that town. I know it, because I had a brother-in-law there at the time, who was a gentleman, and who dare not go out in his religious robes, but had to sneak out at nights, and a celebrated order of Catholic nuns from England, composed of the wealthiest ladies of the land, trying to do good—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would like to rise—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—You don't like the truth.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I rise to a question of order. This is certainly not relevant to the question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is relevant to separate schools. I am telling how separate schools were abolished in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are discussing the question of the right of Keewatin. We are not going into the Manitoba school question.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman should not forget what is the motion before the chair.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Separate schools.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it is not separate schools.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—One is to safeguard the rights of the Keewatin people. Now, I am telling you what kind of a law you are going to put the Keewatin people into.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That has nothing to do with it. I press my point of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The motion is that the rights of the Catholics or Protestant minority, whatever it may be in that district, be safeguarded. Safeguarded against what? Not against a lamb. A lamb would not chew them up; a lamb would not take away their rights; but we are asked by this motion to safeguard the rights of a free people to-day, enjoying free rights, enjoying religious and educational rights free; and we are asked to hand them over to a province such as I have just been describing, giving you the facts and figures that can be found in the records in the archives of the province of Quebec if you want them. Then the leader rises to say I am out of order in depicting a body of men——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I again press the point of order. Let my hon. friend keep to the amendment. I shall repeat my objection until my hon. friend speaks to the amendment. We have heard enough of the Manitoba school question, and it has nothing to do with this question.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should just like to say, on the point of order being raised, that the statements made by the hon. gentleman in reference to the situation in Manitoba never existed since I have been in Manitoba, and I have been there since 1876.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There are lots of things that exist in Manitoba that you know nothing about. You didn't know that about Brandon.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, I did not, and I am sure it did not exist.

The SPEAKER—Order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman forces me, after a denial of that kind, to set facts right. I have just made him admit now that there are several things he does not know.

The SPEAKER—No, I think the hon. gentleman did not catch the question thoroughly when he spoke of that on the point of order. If the hon. gentleman had risen on the point of order it was to discuss the point of order, and not to throw more fuel on the fire. I think the hon. gentleman should lay that argument aside.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—He should not have said a word.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, hon. gentlemen, I know the amendment is not agreeable to a large number of senators—not to a large number, but some.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Yes, they are all for it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, I do not know about that. The amendment is one that appeals to me, from the point of view of fair play and duty that this government owes to free people coming into another province, and all we are asking is that in this Bill, whereby that free people is to be annexed to a foreign province—foreign in aspiration and in system of government, especially in regard to education, foreign in religious views, foreign in nearly every thing—it is only right that this parliament should have a proviso in that Bill whereby all those rights which are now in existence should not be cut out and destroyed.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE. What is before the chair?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—You. That is what is before the chair, to safeguard the rights of those people in the territories who are free to-day as they please and as they vote. Now, I understand that the interests involved in this are more or less—I won't say political, but they are for the greater extension of Manitoba. Nobody has any objection to that. You are granting a large sum of money for the cause of education. We have no objection to that. All we are asking is simply and bluntly to prevent such occurrences in Keewatin as have happened in Manitoba. We do not want the principle extended of allowing the majority to go into the pockets of the minority, appropriate their money to spend it on their children, whether they belong to one sect or another. We want our own money for our own children. Now, that is a plain thing. If senators cannot vote for that principle, I give up guessing about honesty and honour; that is the size of it. There is nothing more in it than that very plain statement of fact. If they cannot see that going into our homes and taking the money of the Catholic children to be voted to the education of Jews, gentiles and Protestants, or whatever sects you may want to call them, I say it is a sad state of affairs; and then afterwards for the Catholic minority to be taunted that their schools are not up to date, that the children are not well educated. A pity they would not be. How can the poor pay twice; once to the majority, and then turn around and have schools equal to the public schools supported by two classes, one honest and the other dishonest. Now, that is the plain language of it, and the more this is pounded into the people of Manitoba the better it will be, and this question will not die out until the majority stop taking the last dollar from the Catholic father to educate Jews, Doukhobors and Protestants.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman has forgotten that the Jews are the progenitors of us all. We got our religion from the Jews.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—As seconder of this motion, I just wish to say a word, especially in view of what has been said by the hon. member from Mille Ile (Hon. Mr. David) about the duty of the Senate and in support of his contention. I am not going to give my opinion, but I would just like to read the opinion of a very prominent member of this House on another Bill, when it was before the Senate:

As to the member for Mille Iles (Hon.

Mr. David) has truly said, the duty of the Senate is to interfere when the rights of the minority are in question, and I am just going to prove the assertion by citing to this House a speech made the other day by the hon. member from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) on the Bill to assist the improvement of highways. The hon. member was opposed to the Bill unless there was some provision to protect, as he said, the small provinces, the weak, those who were not able to take care of themselves. Here are his words:

> If a measure is submitted to us which appears to contain dangerous elements, or which threatens to work injustice to any province, or to any number of provinces, then it is the duty of this Senate, if the legislation is crude and incomplete, to try and make it perfect and to complete it; and it has always been understood that it is rigidly the duty of the Senate to protect the interests of the provinces, more especially of the smaller provinces.

The hon. gentleman is one of the oldest members of the Senate, who ought to know what is the duty of the Senate; and if he thinks his duty is to stand up in this House and defend provinces when there is only a question of dollars and cents, it seems to me that this same gentleman ought to be the first in this House to stand up, where there is a question of conscience, of duty, of honour, and repeat the same principle that he advocated the other day, that it is the rigid duty of the Senate to make a measure complete and to see that no injustice is done to anybody.

I wish to put before the Senate the opinion of this prominent member who advocates this principle, that it is the duty of the Senate to intervene and protect, not only the small provinces when it is a question of dollars and cents, but to protect the minority when they are going to be deprived of their rights. I am glad to put these things before the Senate; I am sure that not a member will object to the motion. This is not a question of dollars and cents; it is a question of duty and honour. Now in answer to the hon. member from Glengarry, who put a question to the member for Mille Ille (Hon. Mr. David) as to the rights of the schools in Saskatchewan, I think the hon. member said that in 1875 they had no right to separate schools in Saskatchewan and Alberta. I answer it by the resolution which was carried in Winnipeg on the 13th of this month. There was a gathering of Catholics to protest against this very Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hope my hon. friend is not going into a discussion of the Alberta and Saskatchewan school law. I have not the slightest desire to interrupt, but we have to reach some conclusion on this, and it will take some time to discuss the school law of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I just wish to give an answer to a question that was put in this House. Clause No. 7 of the resolution submitted at this gathering of Catholics in Winnipeg is as follows:

> That the convention of Catholics of Manitoba declares its willingness to accept as a solution of this vexed question a settlement along the lines of that adopted in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Showing that they have rights there, and that they will be satisfied with such a settlement. We ought to do something to put the Catholics coming from the Keewatin district in as good a position as the Catholics of Saskatchewan are in, and the Catholics of Manitoba are satisfied with that position.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hon. gentlemen, at the outset I will be allowed, I presume, to read to this House a telegram I received from Le Pas. It is addressed to the Speaker and members of this Senate:

> Minority of Keewatin protest against annexation to Manitoba without its school rights being guaranteed. Demand rejection of the Bill in Senate. Petition follows, (signed) O. Charlebois, for the minority.

I will lay that telegram on the table. The circumstances under which the present confederation took the place of the former union of Upper and Lower Canada and the special conditions that brought about its inception are all well known. The union of the two Canadas could no longer survive the countless differences that daily tore it and that made a successful administration of the affairs of these two old provinces thenceforth impossible. Necessity demanded the discovery of some other political system whereby each one of the provinces might be allowed to settle for itself according to its own will and for its own immediate benefit those thousand and one questions of special interest, the solution of which, for over twenty years, had been left to an administration that repeated political crises had weakened and spasmodic political convulsions were killing.

A confederation, with a federal parliament where great questions of general interest would be discussed, and with local legislatures wherein the more domestic problems of special interest to the different provinces would be regulated, was proposed. And for that, confederation was accepted.

The provinces that then decided to form part of that confederation only consented to become members thereof after protracted deliberations in which some of the most distinguished men of Upper and Lower Canadas, of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had taken part. It was they who discussed the project of confederation and who settled, by common agreement, the basis on which the new political structure was to be raised. We had a written agreement, sanctioned by England, and to which the imperial power gave a legal existence by means of an enactment—an enactment that we cannot touch, that is the ark of our liberty, wherein our most sacred interests have been deposited, safe from all attack, from the breath of hatred, the turmoil or racial and religious contentions, under the protecting folds of the British flag.

What, then, is this Canadian confederation and what is its grand characteristic?

It is the assemblage of all the heterogeneous elements, of divers races, different creeds, varied tastes, aspirations and tendencies; who under one sky, from the fringes of the Atlantic to the mirror expanse of the Pacific, live beneath one flag, in a union of hearts and minds, and growing up with a common desire to raise their common country to the rank of a nation respected abroad and prosperous at home.

The Canadian confederation is a union of diversities, and those very diversities render still more admirable the union that blends them together.

But if that union of divers elements has constituted a confederation we may say, without giving umbrage, that their harmonizing will be the source of the country's greatness and prosperity.

It was in order to secure that harmony that, from the outset, the fathers of confederation established a division of powers between the federal parliament, on the one hand, and the provincial legislatures, on the other.

The British North America Act consecrates that division and enumerates the powers that belong to the federal parliament and those conferred on the legislatures.

There is also another principle which equally consecrates—and with like force—our constituting enactment.

It is the preservation to the minority—in each of the provinces—in matters educational—of all the privileges and of all the rights which that minority might have acquired before the entry of such province into the confederation. And it is in this way that the rights to denominational schools were for ever secured in the provinces where they were then found in existence.

The British North America Act says so:

> 93. In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:—
> (1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

The question as to whether Catholics in general have a right to denominational schools is answered by our charter, the imperial enactment, in these words: 'Yes, at all events in the provinces where such schools exist according to law, at the time of their entry into the confederation.'

And this accords with the consecrated principle of the preservation of a right already acquired.

If we apply this general principle to the territories that come into the confederation, without having had any prior provincial existence and without having had consequently any opportunity as provinces to legislate on educational matters, we are led infallibly to the same conclusion.

This is easy of demonstration.

The territories are under the immediate control and government of the federal power.

The only laws that govern them are federal laws. The ordinances after all are merely regulations authorized by the federal law, repealable at will, annullable at any time.

Not being provinces, no provincial laws could they have, nor could the territories acquire such rights as provinces create for themselves.

Yet those territories are none the less subject to laws, and if those federal laws, the only laws possible in the case, give to a particular class of people, in these territories, denominational schools, the same principle of the preservation of acquired rights which applies to provinces on their entry into the confederation, applies equally and with the same force to those same territories when they, in turn, enter the confederaion.

Now, as a matter of fact, the Northwest Territories are subject to that legislation of 1875, passed by this parliament and which, fully thirty seven years ago, accorded them separate and denominational schools.

That law has never been repealed.

It still exists, and in as far as concerns separate and denominational schools, it exists, just as it was passed in 1875, without ever having undergone any modification.

Therefore the territories come into confederation with rights and privileges recognized and given by law.

The Catholics of the Northwest, therefore, as the Catholics in all provinces, wherein separate and denominational schools exist, have an inalienable right to their denominational and separate schools.

In no other sense can the British North America Act be interpreted.

It was so interpreted in 1875 by the late George Brown when he said (I quote from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech) in 1905:

> I repeat again that Mr. Brown, on the floor of the Senate, did not want this clause providing for separate schools to be introduced in the Act. He stated that it would be a mistake to introduce separate schools, he said that he was opposed to separate schools, but he said that if at any time separate schools were introduced they came under the Act of Union, and they were there for all time.

In 1891 the same conclusion was arrived at by Colonel O'Brien and the late Dalton McCarthy during the discussion that then took place in the House of Commons on a proposition to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Speaking of the separate schools, Colonel O'Brien said:

> The subject, of course, is one that is comparatively new, for all our dealing with the Northwest Territories have been so far tentative, and experimental rather than absolute. We are now, however, going a step further. We are now giving to this assembly powers which it has not hitherto possessed; and there is one thing which may be taken for granted, that with the acquisition of the new powers given under this Act, the people of these territories will inquire why they should be restricted in this great and important particular. It is because I think such is the case, and because I do not wish on a future occasion, when this subject comes again before the House for further legislation, that those who think as I do on this system of education should be met with the objection that so many years ago this system was established by law and that, therefore, a vested right is created which the legislature should not now interfere with. Why, Sir, it would be almost fair to argue that this would come within the provisions of the British North America Act. If not in reality it would by analogy, because the British North America Act secured to the provinces which came into confederation whatever rights were enjoyed by the supporters of separate schools at the time of confederation, and if we create new provinces out of these territories it may be fairly argued that the analogy of the British North America Act will apply, and that in creating new provinces and bringing them into confederation there will be something like the same rights guaranteed to the provinces having separate schools before coming in under the British North America Act.

The present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, at that time, Minister of Justice in the Laurier's administration after a most careful study of the whole subject and with the full knowledge of the grave responsibility assumed by him in giving a legal opinion on that question of the rights of the minority, did affirm to the House of Commons, in the most solemn way, on the 10th May, 1905, that in the absence of any special enactment on matters educational, clause 93 of the British North America Act would certainly apply automatically, and such application would bring in and protect all the rights and privileges set forth by the Northwest Territories Act.

Here are the words spoken by the Minister of Justice:

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I might point out my views of the constitutional question because in my judgment this is to a very large extent a constitutional question and has to be considered from that standpoint. Section 2 would bring into effect section 93 of the British North America Act, if section 16 were not in this Bill at all. If section 16 were omitted, section 93 of the British North America Act would be applicable; but then we would meet this difficulty, a doubt arises as to whether section 93 can be considered as applicable to the Northwest Territories in view of the fact that in the first provision of that section the words used are 'the rights and privileges in force in the province at the union.' Technically while these territories may have practically all the legislative powers of a province, they are not a province now, within the meaning of section 93 of the British North America Act, and it was to avoid the difficulty that I substituted in section 16 in the first paragraph the word 'territory' for 'province.' Then the other difficulty that would have arisen is what is meant by the words 'at the date of the union.' In my opinion there can be no doubt that the date of the union is the date at which the territories came into the Dominion as a province and not the date at which these Indian territories were brought into the Dominion as territories. It was to make that point clear also that I amended the first clause in the way I did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend regard section 16 as exercising upon section 2 the restrictive effect which hon. gentlemen on the other side have contended it does?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My argument now, is that section 16, read in the light of these words in section, 'except in so far as varied by this Act'—is to be substituted for section 93; and section 93 is not applicable to the new province at all, because that section is varied by section 16.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that perfectly whether we agree with it or not. But assuming that there was no doubt about the effect of section 2, assuming that there was not that doubt which the hon. gentleman now explained, would it bring into effect the Act 1875?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would bring into effect section 93 of the British North America Act which would include the Act of 1875.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is just it. I was taking the short line. Section 93 would have the effect of perpetuating the Ast of 1875, in so far as it embodies what we call the restrictive principle. Does the hon. minister regard section 16 (which is substituted for section 2), in its amended form or in its original form as having the same effect?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In my judgment section 93 as amended would bring in all the rights and privileges which exist in favour of denominational schools in the territories at the present time or at the 1st of July coming. Those rights and privileges would include all those rights which are covered by section 11 of the Act of 1875 and any subsequent legislation up to the present time, and, in my opinion—and I must say I have given this matter most careful consideration, and it is my settled opinion—it would cover all the privileges conferred by the Act of 1875, notwithstanding the provisions of any ordinances that may have been passed by virtue of that Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN, Exactly my own view.

But that is not all.

There are sacred obligations that no country can ignore without compromising its honour.

We are to-day face to face with one of those solemn engagements which, with a full comprehension of its circumstances, our country has contracted and which it cannot, without injury to its reputation, ignore.

After having purchased from the powerful Hudson's Bay Company the rights and privileges that the latter held in those vast regions known as Rupert's Land, and the Northwest Territories, when Canada wished to take possession of its new domain and exercise its authority over the same, an insurrection broke out and the people flew to arms.

But in this, let one who was most intimately connected with those stirring events, and who was commissioned by the Crown to re-establish peace in that new land, speak.

An official document laid before the House of Commons on the 17th June, 1891, (No. 51 of the session of 1891), gives us the authentic story of the negotiations between the government of Canada and the delegates chosen by the people of the Northwest. In a letter written by Monseigneur Taché, and addressed to the Governor General, we read:

Previous to the transfer of the Northwest Territories to the Dominion of Canada, there prevailed a great uneasiness amongst the inhabitants of the said Territories, with regard to the consequences of the transfer. The Catholic population especially, mostly of French origin, thought they had reason to foresee grievances on account of their language and their religion, if there were no special guarantee given as to what they considered their rights and privileges. Their apprehensions gave rise to such an excitement that they resorted to arms; not through a want of loyalty to the Crown, but only through mere distrust towards Canadian authorities, which were considered as trespassing in the country previous to their acquisition of the same. Misguided men joined together to prevent the entry of the would-be Lieutenant Governor.

The news of such an outburst was received with surprise and regret both in England and Canada.

All this took place in the autumn of 1869.

I was in Rome at the time, and at the request of the Canadian authorities I left the Œcumenical Council to come and help in the pacification of the country. On my way home, I spent a few days in Ottawa. I had the honour of several interviews with Sir John Young, the Governor General, and with his ministers. I was repeatedly assured that the rights of the people of Red river would be fully guarded under the new regime; that both imperial and federal authorities would never permit the new-comers in the country to encroach on the liberties of the old settlers; that on the banks of the Red river, as well as on the banks of the St. Lawrence, the people would be at liberty to use their mother tongue to practise their religion and have their children brought up according to their views.

On the day of my departure from Ottawa His Excellency handed me a letter, a copy of which I attach to this Appendix A, and in which are repeated some of the assurances given verbally. 'The people,' says the letter, 'may rely that respect and attention will be extended to the different religious persuasions.'

The Governor General, after mentioning the desire of Lord Granville 'to avail of my assistance from the outset,' gave me a telegram he had received from the Most Honourable the Secretary of the Colonies, which I attach to this as Appendix B, and in which His Lordship expressed the desire that the Governor General would take 'every care to explain where there is a misunderstanding and to ascertain the wants and conciliate the good-will of all the settlers of the Red river.'

I was, moreover, furnished with a copy of the proclamation issued by His Excellency on the 6th of December, 1869, which I attach to this as Appendix C. In this proclamation we read: 'Her Majesty recommends me to state to you that she will be always ready, through me as her representative, to redress all well-founded grievances, and any complaints that may be made, or desires that may be expressed to me as Goverenor General.

'By Her Majesty's authority I do therefore assure you that on your union with Canada, 'all your civil and religious rights and privileges will be respected'.'

A delegation from Red river had been proposed as a good means of giving and receiving explanations conducive to the pacification of the country. The desirability of this step was urged upon me as of the greatest importance, and the premier of Canada, in a letter I attach to this as Appendix D, wrote to me: 'In case a delegation is appointed to proceed to Ottawa, you can assure them that they will be kindly received and their suggestions fully considered. Their expenses coming here and returning and while staying in Ottawa will be defrayed by us.'

I left after having received the above mentioned instructions, and reached St. Boniface on March 9, 1870.

I communicated to the dissatisfied the assurances I had received, showing them the documents above cited. This largely contributed to dispel fears and to restore confidence. The delegation which had been delayed was definitely decided upon. The delegation appointed several weeks before, received their commission afresh. They proceeded to Ottawa, 'opened negotiations with the federal authorities,' and with such result that on May 3, 1870, Sir John Young telegraphed to Lord Granville: 'Negotiations with delegates closed satisfactorily.'

The negotiations provided that the denominational or separate schools would be guaranteed to the minority of the new province of Manitoba. The French language received such recognition that it was decided it would be used officially both in parliament and in the courts of Manitoba.

The Manitoba Act was then passed by the House of Commons and Senate of Canada, and sanctioned by the Governor General.

I may add that since these pages were written, the highest judicial tribunal of England, in a celebrated judgment recognized in that legislation the character of a solemn pledge when it said:

> There is no doubt either what the points of difference were, and it is in the light of these that the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act of 1870, which was in truth a parliamentary compact, must be read.

The interpretation given by the Privy Council to the Manitoba Act, does not merely apply to that province alone, for the good reason that the agreement (pacte) in question was not entered into with the inhabitants of Manitoba only—Manitoba did not exist when that agreement was made—but with all the inhabitants of Rupert's Land, and the Northwest Territories, of which Keewatin necessarily formed part. This is made clear and indisputable by the letters from the Governor General and the Prime Minister of Canada to Monsigneur Taché, of the 16th February, 1870, by the proclamation of the Governor General under date the 6th December previous, by the Bill of Rights and by the preamble of the Manitoba Act of 1870 (33 Vic., chap. 3.)

I feel that I have proven that in the Northwest Territories, constituted as they are to-day, and comprising what is to be annexed to Manitoba, the minority has an undeniable right to separate schools, and that our co-religionists have a right to lay claim to the privilege of enjoying their denominational schools.

Notwithstanding the fact that those undeniable rights are well recognized by that imperial legislation which is the written constitution of this land of ours, notwithstanding the fact that those rights were guaranteed by the law of nations wherever international laws are binding, and protect any treaty contracted in the name of the Crown, the Catholics of Alberta and Saskatchewan were coolly and unmercifully deprived and stripped of their vested rights when the Autonomy Bills of 1905 became the law of the land. The spoliation was manifest. The federal laws which gave Alberta and Saskatchewan their constitution so amended the British North America Act as to restrict the rights, powers and privileges which that Act accords to a certain class of persons in all the other provinces of the Dominion

That which is granted to the minority of all the provinces in general was refused in Alberta and Saskatchewan to the minority of those two provinces.

The demonstration of this will be brief but positive.

Clause 93 of the British North America Act reads thus:

> 93. In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:—
> (1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

In virtue of this clause, a province which comes into the confederation with an established system of denominational schools, recognized by its own laws, has the undeniable right to preserve that system and any enactment that might subsequently prejudice in any way whatsoever that right is held to be unconstitutional and worthless.

So much for the general law affecting the provinces.

Why did the Laurier government deem it well to depart therefrom by imposing a totally different law upon the new provinces? His exceptional enactment formally consecrated the following clause:

> 17. Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with the substitution for paragraph (1) of the said section 93, of the following paragraph:—
> '(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right of privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.'

Such a clause upsets the entire spirit of clause 93 of the British North America Act, because it substitutes in the first paragraph of the imperial enactment the words separate schools for the words denominational schools, restricting it thereby to those separate schools only that conform to the ordinances of 1901, a protection which heretofore guaranteed the existence of the denominational schools that the law rocognized.

In order to understand the nature of this exceptional legislation which was imposed on the new provinces and to seize the full scope of the crying injustice which was perpetrated upon the Catholic and the French minority of the Alberta and the Saskatchewan, we need but ask ourselves the meaning of a denominational school and that of a neutral school and then to make evident the vast difference that exists between the two.

In regard to the instruction given therein the denominational school exists when that instruction is impregnated with the religious spirit of the denomination to which it belongs. Thus we have Catholic, Anglican, Methodist, Presbyterian, &c., schools, according as the teaching therein is impregnated with a Catholic, Anglican, Methodist or Presbyterian spirit. If the instruction given in a school is entirely divorced from all religious influence, if that instruction can be indiscriminately given to all the pupils frequenting the schools, be their differences of religious belief what it may, if that instruction, from its very nature, cannot graft upon any religious belief, that school is a neutral one, in contradiction to the denominational school.

And again, a very different thing is the separate school.

Its name tells what it is: A school detached from an already existing school, a school separated from the ordinary school of the district in which it is established; it is the school of a minority that will not or cannot accept the instruction given to the majority.

The separate school is that which faces the public school.

It need not necessarily be a denominational school.

For example, in a school district where the Catholic majority has a Catholic public school, consequently a denominational one, the school of the Protestant minority becomes a separate school which might perfectly well be, and very likely would be, a neutral school.

This is a fact that none will dispute and which the school system of the province of Quebec, moreover, most clearly illustrates. For its part, the law confirms the doctrine that I propound when, in clause 93 of the British North America Act, it mentions the powers, rights and privileges of the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant subjects in the province of Quebec (paragraph 2), and the rights and privileges of the Protestant minority in every province in which a separate school system obtains (paragraph 3).

In fine, the Northwest ordinances of 1901 upon which rests the school enactment of the Autonomy Law of 1905, ordain—(clause 14)—that the minority, Protestant or Catholic, of the ratepayers of every district (clause 45) may establish therein a separate school that will be subject to all the obligations imposed on public schools.

It is, therefore, more than abundantly proven that a separate is not necessarily a denominational school, and that, in Alberta and in the Saskatchewan such a school cannot even be a denominational school.

The iniquity of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's legislation, is now apparent in all its ugliness to eyes that will not lose sight of the distinction which has just been established between the denominational and the separate school.

The constitution guarantees the preservation of denominational schools in all provinces wherein such schools have had already a legal existence at the time of the entry of any of them into the confederation.

In 1875, by a special enactment, the federal parliament granted denominational schools to the Northwest Territories.

In fact the law of 1875 gave the majority in each school district the right to have whatever school it thought fit, consequently the right to denominational schools. Consequently this right given by law was safeguarded by paragraph 1 of clause 93 of the British North America Act, and the Catholic minority, wherever there was one in the school districts of the Northwest Territories, retained, guaranteed by the constitution itself, the privilege already obtained.

What did Sir Wilfrid Laurier do?

With a stroke of his pen he blotted out from the British North America Act the words denominational schools and substitutes therefor the words separate schools.

By that one stroke the Catholics of the Northwest Territories, in the districts in which they are the majority, have lost their right to denominational schools.

The minority alone, and only in the districts in which such minority exists, can henceforth have separate schools, but separate schools such as they are constituted by the ordinances of 1901, that is to say, separate schools from which religious instruction is banished.

This is what the Laurier-Sifton amendment gave to the Catholics of the Northwest.

That which our constitution guarantees in general terms to all the other provinces of the Dominion, Sir Wilfrid Laurier snatches violently from our charter and deliberately refused it to the Catholics of the new provinces.

And Catholics are found who proclaim themselves satisfied with this guilty deed of spoliation and who, in dust and humiliation, ask that we join freely in the sacrifice of their rights and in the glorification of that iniquitous piece of legislation.

We have no part in it. We wish to defend our rights, despite the unqualified blindness of those who have eyes and who will not see. Despoiled of their right to denominational schools by the culpable substitution of the words separate schools for the words denominational schools in the British North America Act, the Catholics have been reduced to only what the ordinances of 1901 can give them. So ordains the Laurier-Sifton amendment. And what do those despoiling ordinances give them? We will learn it from the very lips of those who claim to have made a serious study of the question.

In 1905, Mr. Paterson, a member of the Laurier cabinet, expressed himself in the following way on this subject of separate schools:

It must be borne in mind that those separate schools are formed precisely as every school district is formed. Although the name separate school appears to convey to the minds of some people the impression that they are separate in the sense in which they are established in some other province, there is no distinction between these schools as regards organization, or the qualification of teachers, or the text-books, or the right of state inspection, or in the reports they have to make. In every respect, they are under the commissioner of education in absolutely the same manner as is every other public school in the Territories.

Precisely the same course of study that is followed in the public schools is to be followed in these schools; but when the hour of 3.30 p.m. arrives, if the trustees of the separate school desire, religious instruction may then be given to the youth therein. Is that a concession made particularly to our Roman Catholic brethren? Why, the same clauses apply to every school, Protestant, public and every other. No special right, no special permission is given the separate schools which is withheld from the other.

Mr. Crawford, the member in 1905 for Portage la Prairie, belonged to the Orange order. He was at the same time one of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's most devoted followers.

Let us open our ears to what he uttered on the 14th of April, 1905:

If this Bill goes through, it will establish not what I claim are separate schools. In fact, the name 'separate' should hardly have been used in connection with them. We propose to continue in the Northwest Territories what they have already got—Catholic public schools and Protestant public schools, no matter whether they are Catholic or Protestant, which are public schools, and which are free to all classes of children, having the same text-books, the same qualified teachers, under the same control, and that control entirely in the hands of the government, and not in any way connected with the church I feel as strongly on this question, I think, as any person in Canada at the present time. I think that possibly my Orange feelings or proclivities are just as strong as those of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). And if there was anything in the nature of a prejudice in connection with it, I should have it, being an Orangeman. If I thought there was being established in the Northwest Territories what the people of Ontario have in their minds to-day, that is Roman Catholic church controlled schools, I would oppose it as strenuously as any one. I would not stand it for a minute. But we have nothing of that kind. The very opposite is the condition.

The Hon. Mr. Fielding is not less explicit when he said, in discussing the law of the Alberta and the Saskatchewan, in 1905:

What is this law which we are going to confirm and to continue in the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan? We are told that this provides for a system of separate schools Well, a system of separate schools may mean one thing in one quarter and another thing in another quarter. Whatever may be said as respects other countries, or other provinces, it would be utterly mistaken to say that we are giving to the Northwest provinces separate schools in that sense of the word. I submit to this House that the system of schools which we have to-day in the Northwest Territories is a national school system, and if it has all the elements of a national school system then I say there is no principle involved in the discussion which would justify us in having a quarrel over it. What is this system? The system of schools which prevails to-day in the Northwest Territories exists by virtue of chapters 29, 30 and 31 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories. So far as the principle of separate schools is concerned, of course that principle was to be found in the Act of 1875 and the ordinances adapted themselves to it. But if you read these three ordinances of the Northwest Territories you will rise from the perusal of them with the conviction that in that country they have a system of national schools which may well challenge the admiration of the people in other portions of this country. What then, are the essential elements of national schools? I take it for granted that if you have a school which is established by the public authorities, if the management of the school derives all its authority and privileges from a regulation of the government of the state, if you have a system of schools under which the proper authorities of the state or the province, or territory as the case may be, themselves specify the school books, establish the course of study, provide for the inspection of the schools and for the distribution of the money, if you have all those elements, then, I say you have a system of state-created, state-managed and state-supported public schools. Every one of these conditions exists to-day in the public school system of the Northwest Territories.

From the hour at which these schools open in the morning up to half-past three in the afternoon; they are absolutely alike; there is no difference; the teachers have the same duties, the same qualifications; the same examinations, the same course of study, the same books are prescribed by the government the regulations are made by the government. I repeat that from the hour of opening in the morning up to half-past three in the afternoon, there is no shade of difference in all these schools in the Northwest Territories.

But why seek elsewhere, that which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, himself, explained in such clear terms in the now historic letter which he gave to the public, and in which he said to one of his friends who had consulted him on the subject:

The impression prevails that separate schools such as they are intended by the Bill will be ecclesiastical schools. This is quite an error. What you call separate schools in this instance is practically national schools. Here is the law of the Northwest Territories at the present moment. All the teachers have to pass an examination and be certified by the Board of Public Instruction; all the schools have to be examined by inspectors appointed by the Board of Public Instruction all books in use at the schools have to be approved by the Board of Public Instruction; all secular matters are under the control of the Board of Public Instruction, all tuition has to be given in the English language; at 3.30 children can be given religious instruction, according to rules made by the trustees of the schools, but attendance at this is not even compulsory.

Do you find fault with this last clause? Do you not believe that what you call 'separate schools' in this instance, is really 'national schools?'

The great objection to separate schools is that it would divide our people, but if the same education is given in what is called 'separate schools,' as in all other schools, I fail to see what objection there is to such a system.

Everybody may now see in what an inferior position the Catholics of Alberta and Saskatchewan stand, and if there is one thing which I fail to understand it is that prayer made to us and contained in the following paragraph of the resolutions adopted in Winnipeg the 13th of the present month by the convention assembled in Manitoba Hall, and which reads:

7. That this convention speaking on behalf of the Catholic laymen of Manitoba declares its willingness to accept as a solution of this vexed question a settlement along the lines of that adopted in Alberta and Saskatchewan as embodied in the Act of 1905.

Those Catholic laymen of Manitoba are merely asking for a stone in place of bread. They are willing to sacrifice their rights to denominational schools for that kind of separate schools which Sir Wilfrid Laurier implanted in the new provinces, and which to all intents and purposes are strictly neutral, non-sectarian and condemned by the head of the church and by the Catholic consciences.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Such a demand introduced in the resolutions adopted by the Catholic laymen of Manitoba is merely clap-trap, and must have been framed by some astute politician desiring blind approval of the nefarious settlement made by the Laurier government of the school question in the new provinces of the Northwest Territories.

It can not and it should not be put forward in the settlement of the actual difficulties which surround the question now submitted to our deliberations.

What is the present question?

In 1908, the 13th day of July,

Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved, seconded by Mr. Fielding, that whereas petitions have been presented to the government and to this House (of Commons) from the legislative assembly of Manitoba, praying for an extension of the boundaries of the said province, northward and eastward, and for an additional subsidy to the said province, in lieu of the ownership of public lands in the territory to be so added.

Be it resolved:—

That it is evident that the prayers of said petitions should be acceded to and that upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislative assembly and by parliament, the boundaries of Manitoba be extended as follows, &c.

The Bill now before us is the sequence of the petition coming from the legislative assembly of Manitoba, praying for an extension of the boundaries of the said province, and of the resolutions adopted by the House of Commons on the 13th of July, 1908.

It is the province of Manitoba who is the petitioner, by the mouth of its legislative assembly.

Is not the first thing which we should consider before granting Manitoba what Manitoba asks, to ascertain what is the actual standing of that small province in the face of the Dominion of Canada?

If my memory serves me right, some years ago serious difficulties occurred in that province because the sacred rights of a Catholic minority had been trampled upon by an implacable majority. The case had been referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council in England, and that tribunal, the highest in the British Empire, had ordered the Dominion government to take up the matter and to settle it according to the enactments of our con-situtional law. Canada and Manitoba came into collision. With what effect, the official documents will answer.

Let us, in the first place, see what was the judgment given by the Lords of the Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council.

That judgment has been commented upon by Sir Wilfrid Laurier a few days ago in such a sophistic manner that it is necessary to give here the words of the finding of their Lordships.

One must not forget—as Sir Wilfrid Laurier so wilfully has done—that what was before the Privy Council in the case of Brophy was not a demand to restore to the Catholic minority of Manitoba their separate schools as they existed prior to the provincial legislation of 1890, but what was before the Privy Council was a series of questions respecting the legal interpretation to be given to the Manitoba Constitutional Act, and the authorized definition of the powers vested in the federal government acting as the tribunal selected to settle the grievances of the minority. It is in that light, completely but wilfully ignored by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that we must read the findings of the Privy Council.

I quote from pages 11, 12 and 15 of the Sessional Document No. 20 of Vol. xxviii of the Sessional Papers:

> Contrast the position of the Roman Catholics prior and subsequent to the Acts from which they appeal. Before these passed into law there existed denominational schools, of which the control and management were in the hands of Roman Catholics, who could select the books to be used and determine the character of the religious teaching. These schools received their proportionate share of the money contributed for schools purposes out of the general taxation of the province, and the money raised for these purposes by local assessment was, so far as it fell upon Catholics, applied only towards the support of Catholic schools. What is the position of the Roman Catholic minority under the Act of 1890? Schools of their own denomination conduoted according to their views, will receive no aid from the state. They must depend entirely for their support upon the contributions of the Roman Catholic community, while the taxes out of which the state aid is granted to the schools provided for by the statute fall alike on Catholics and Protestants. Moreover, while the Catholic inhabitants remain liable to local assessment for school purposes, the proceeds of that assessment are no longer destined to any extent for the support of the Catholic schools, but afford the means of maintaining schools which they regard as no more suitable for the education of Catholic children than if they were distinctively Protestant in their character.

And further on the judges of the Privy Council added the following important words, to which, hon. gentlemen, I cannot too strongly claim your attention, conclusive as they are in regard to the position I maintain:

> As a matter of fact, the objection of Roman Catholics to schools such as alone receive state aid under the Act of 1890, is conscientious and deeply rooted. If this had not been so, if there had been a system of public education acceptable to Catholics and Protestants alike, the elaborate enactments which have been the subject of so much controversy and consideration would have been unnecessary. It is notorious that there were acute differences of opinion between Catholics and Protestants on the education question prior to 1870. This is recognized and is emphasized in almost every line of those enactments. There is no doubt either what the points of differences were, and it is in the light of these that the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act of 1870, which was in truth a parliamentary compact, must be read.

Those findings of the Lords of the judicial committee were followed by an imperial order in council which said:

> 'Her Majesty having taken the said report into consideration was pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, that the recommendations and directions therein contained be punctually obeyed and carried into effect in each and every particular, whereof the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada for the time being, and all other persons whom it may concern, are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.'

This judgment of the Privy Council was followed in 1895 by the Remedial Order which Sir Wilfrid Laurier summarized in the following words (Debates of the House of Commons, March 12, 1912, page 4992):

> Three things are necessary to constitute separate schools; first of all, separate organizations; second, exemption from taxation for public schools, and in the third place, an adequate share of the provincial funds allotted for education.

These things were alluded to in the Remedial Order of the previous government. The government of Manitoba was ordered to enact a law which would give back to the minority:

> (a) The right to build, maintain, equip, manage conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided by the said statutes which were repealed by the two Acts of 1890 aforesaid.
> (b) The right to share proportionately in any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education.
> (c) The right of exemption of such Roman Catholics as contribute to Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools.

The great mistake which was made by the government of Sir Mackenzie Bowell in that Remedial Order was that they were ordering the province of Manitoba to do more than they who had passed the Order could enforce. If the province of Manitoba refused to comply with the Order, they could very well have passed a Bill, which would exempt Catholics and the minority from paying taxes to the public schools; they could very well have passed an Act giving the right to the minority to organize their own schools, but they could not by any Act of legislation or by order in council, or in any manner whatever, give away the funds of the province of Manitotba to the separate schools. And in this they made a fatal mistake; they introduced a Bill and, just as we had anticipated, while the Bill authorized the legisalture to pass a Separate School Act, to exempt from taxation the supporters of separate schools, they could not give to the schools any share in the public money and therefore, if the Remedial Bill had become a remedial law, the schools which might have been organized could not have received any funds out of the public treasury; they would be at once placed in a position of inferiority and therefore the settlement could not be satisfactory to the minority.

Such was the contention of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and I heard some day or two ago my hon. friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) affirm the same doctrine.

But, as usual, whenever he finds it convenient, Sir Wilfrid has forgotten, and very cheerfully forgotten, what is known as the Dupont amendment, an amendment which the member for Bagot had given notice to the House of Commons, the purport of which was precisely to meet the case of a refusal on the part of the legislature of Manitoba to contribute the proper funds for the maintenance of the Catholic separate schools.

That amendment read as follows:

Add the following to the 74th section:

'If the legislature of Manitoba does not annually grant such appropriation to separate schools, the Governor General in Council shall, from the net revenue accruing from the school fund, realized from the sale of the school lands in Manitoba and attributed for the support of schools and the maintenance of education in Manitoba, grant any pay to the Board of Education in each year during which such appropriation is not made to the separate schools, a proportionate sum to that voted or granted by the legislature of Manitoba, to public schools, or for educational purposes, and the 'Act respecting public lands,' Cap. 54 of the Rev. Stats. of Canada, is hereby amended accordingly.'

As stated by the Dupont's amendment and by the declarations of Sir Charles Tupper that he was prepared to submit it to the approbation of the Commons, the parliament of Canada had at its disposal the necessary funds to subsidize the separate schools without imposing such an obligation upon the provincial legislature of Manitoba, and in the face of such declarations, everybody will admit that the so-called formidable objection of Sir Wilfrid Laurier against the Remedial Order has no weight whatsoever.

At all events, Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into power and he made a settlement with the province of Manitoba. On what grounds? He will tell us himself:

The policy I have advocated ever since I have entered public life, said he on the 12th March (page 4987 of the Commons' debates), the policy upon which I fought the elections of 1896, is that all such clashings of interests, whenever and wherever they occur, must be settled and can be settled only through compromise, through conciliation, and through appeal to all interested parties to make some sacrifices of opinion, and even pretension, yes, and even of rights, in order to come to an understanding of peace, good-will and harmony in this land. I was elected on that platform, and upon that platform I stood so long as I was in office, not only upon this question of education, which came forward on more than one occasion, during the term of office of the late administration, but even on all similar matters in which their was a clashing of interests.

Let us see now to what kind of conciliation Sir Wilfrid Laurier had recourse in the settlement of the Manitoba school question.

There were two litigating parties in that difficulty: the legislature of Manitoba on one side and the Catholic minority of that province on the other side. The executive of the Dominion having been by the constitutional Act of Manitoba designated as a judge in such a case, and the legislature of Manitoba having peremptorily refused to accept the findings of the judgment rendered by the Remedial Order, nobody would have ever dreamt that a settlement of any kind could be arrived at by a monstrous agreement made between the judge in the case and one of the litigants.

And this is audaciously called a compromise.

It is nothing else than a robbery.

When have the Catholic minority been made a party to such an agreement? It was made behind their back, against their sacred rights.

Conciliation? Never. Spoliation and robbery, it was never anything else.

And politicians are found to proclaim that such a spoliation as for ever brought the final settlement of the Manitoba school difficulty. The Catholic minority of Manitoba has a judgment rendered in its favour and so long as the judgment has not been satisfied, so long as the minority has not been put in possession of the rights guaranteed by the constitution and which still remain guaranteed by that same constitution, no agreement whatsoever made with one of the litigants, outside of the other and against it, can be called an agreement or a final settlement.

When the interested parties can not agree after a judgment has been rendered what name could be given to the man who ignoring altogether the judgment and the law would intervene without authority to crush the winning party? Force may prevail and crush the rights of a minority under the weight of its might, but for God's sake, do not prostitute the language you may use in giving to that crying injustice the sacred name of conciliation and compromise.

As long as justice will not be meted out to the minority according to the Remedial Order given in 1895, nothing is settled, and nothing can be settled by compromise or conciliation without the agreement of the suffering minority.

The Remedial Order of 1895 has not yet been complied with and Manitoba to-day as in the past is still defying the constitution and trampling upon the rights of the Catholic minority.

We know now in what position stands exactly Manitoba when that province comes to us and asks us an extension of territory.

Have we not the right to tell Manitoba: We will give you what you are asking as soon as you will restore to the Catholic minority of your province the rights of which they have been deprived by your legislation? That right we have and no one could be surprised if we thought fit to exercise it.

But we do not go so far.

What we ask to-day is simply this:

We contend that the Catholic majority or minority of the territory which is proposed to be annexed to Manitoba have educational rights; those rights should be secured by the Bill now submitted to our deliberations.

Are we to be refused such a modest and conditional request?

Are we to be told, without any discussion, by a simple affirmative.

1st. That the Catholics of Keewatin have no educational rights, because Keewatin does not belong to the Northwest Territories and consequently can not come under the laws which obtain in the Territories.

2nd. That even the laws which govern the Northwest Territories can not give any educational right because the necessary machinery to put those laws in operation has not yet been created.

3rd. That by the British North America Act of 1871, which empowers the Dominion parliament to extend the boundaries of provinces, you cannot force upon a province already constituted as such, any change in its constitution.

Such are at the present moment, the three objections which certain ministers of the Crown formulate against our demands.

I will answer them in a few words. The first objection is based on the contention that the minority of the proposed annexed territory has no educational rights, because the Keewatin district having been set apart in 1876, before the coming into force of the federal legislation, which governed the Northwest Territories, such legislation could not and did not, give to the inhabitants of said districts the educational rights which enjoyed the population of the territories.

But one must not forget that outside the Keewatin district as created by the statute of 1896, there was at the west and at the north of Manitoba, a vast strip of lands, belonging to the Northwest Territories. The settlement of Le Pas for example, was in that region which did not form part of the Keewatin district, and the objection raised could not, in any way, apply to that part of the country.

And even if it did apply, nobody could now ignore, who has studied this question or followed the debate that took place, that such an objection as was raised by two ministers of the Crown, has been conclusively answered by the Prime Minister himself, when he said on the 6th of March, 1912:

Let me say that the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, were proclaimed and came into force on the 31st day of Janaury, 1907, I pass by the question alluded to by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works and will simply allude to the fact that in July, 1905, an order in council was made by the late administration which, in so far as I have said, was entirely beyond their powers, inasmuch as it exceeded the authority that the statute had bestowed upon it. However, when the Revised Statutes were placed before this House in the following session that order in council was made good in terms by the Revised Statutes, and these statutes are undoubtedly the law of the land to-day. By section 2, subsection (a) of the statute to which I refer, the Northwest Territories included all the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories except such portions thereof as formed the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Yukon Territory.

It is, therefore, plain that Keewatin is included in the expression 'Northwest Territories' as used in this statute, and we must look to its provisions to see what right may exist in any body or community of people with respect to eduactional matters in these territories. This statute was in force from the 31st of January, 1907, until the present administration came into power on the 10th of October, 1911. Now, what was necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the educational provisions which had for some years previously been existent in the Northwest Territories. In the first place, by section 6 of the statute:

The Governor in Council may from time to time constitute and appoint such and so many persons, not exceeding four in number, as are deemed desirable to be a council to aid the commissioner in the administration of the territories; and a majority of the council, including the commissioner—shall form a quorum.

Section 10 reads:

The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necesasry ordinances in respect thereto; but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever names the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein; whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Now, there were two things necessary before that legislation should become operative. In the first place: that the government of this country should appoint a council of four, to assist the commissioner. From the 31st of January, 1907, up to the tenth of October, 1911, no such step had been taken by the administration which preceded us. The next thing necessary was that the Commissioner in Council should be authorized to make ordinances respecting education, and, from the 31st January, 1907, up to the time we came into power, no such step was ever taken by the administration which preceded us. Consequently, it follows directly from that, that during the period which intervened between the 31st of January, 1907, when this law come into force and the time this government came into power, no steps, preliminary or otherwise, had been taken by the Liberal administration for the purpose of making operative in the Northwest Territories, in Keewatin, the provisions I have read with regard to separate schools.

This quotation of the speech delivered by the hon. the Prime Minister victoriously disposes of the first objection and brings into full light the second one, which is made perfectly clear by the following utterances of the Prime Minister:

So far as these statutory provisions respecting separate schools in the Northwest are concerned, they were absolutely non-existent, for the reason, in the first place that no members of the Council had been appointed so as to create a body known as the Commissioner's Council, and in the next place, because the commisison had not been authorized—even though councillors would have been appointed —to make any laws or ordinances whatsoever with respect to the establishment of schools in these territories.

In a most elaborate study of this question the Minister of Justice has sustained the same idea and endeavoured to make good that on that special ground the minority of the proposed annexed territory has no educational right whatsoever.

But the advocates of such a contention have entirely forgotten that under the pact of 1870 which took place between the government of this Dominion and the people of the whole Northwest Territories represented by their delegates 'all the civil and religious rights and privileges of that people were promised to be respected. Surely such a promise, made in the name of the Crown, should be carried through. At all events one would expect that the honour of the Crown will be maintained intact by those who are now its constitutional advisers, and that whatsoever may be the fate of this Bill, the rulers of this country will see that royal promises will be kept to their full extent.

And it is not only in that compact of 1870 that the honour of the Crown is engaged. We, the French and the Catholic people of this country, have rights that were given to us the day the French flag left us under the British Standard, rights guaranteed to us by the treaty of Utrecht and the treaty of Paris, and it is in the name of those two treaties that I claim for the pioneers of the Northwest and their worthy sons all their civil and religious rights.

My second answer to that second objection is that the exercise of a right is quite a different thing to the right itself. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has developed that idea in a very clear way. May I add that it does not become to those who endeavour to prevent the operation of the law to invoke against the rights of the minority the inaction of their own machinery.

The minority, or rather the people of the Keewatin district, have at different times petitioned the former and the present government asking, to put into movement the machinery that would allow them to have the school authorized by the laws of the land.

Here is the petition presented on the 30th November last:

To H. R. H. the Governor General in Council.

May it please Your Highness,—

The humble petition of the undersigned, resident ratepayers of Le Pas, District Keewatin, N.W.T., ask that His Majesty's government will be pleased:—

I. To create (Under provisions made in Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, chap. 62, cl. 6, in the Northwest Territories, a council destined to aid the commissioner of the said territories in the performance of his duties.

II. To grant to the said commissioner in council (in virtue of chap. 62, cl. 10 as above), authority to make ordinances respecting education.

III. To establish, or cause to be established by the said commissioner in council (in virtue of chap. 62 as above) a school district at Le Pas, limited to the defined area of 500 acres forming the Le Pas townsite.

IV. To declare, or cause to be declared by ordinance (in virtue of chap. 62, cl. 10 as above), that the majority of ratepayers of the said school district may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor.

V. That the minority of the ratepayers therein may (in virtue of the same clause), establish separate schools therein; the ratepayers establishing such separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

JOSEPH SMITH.
ARTHUR LAROSE, M.D.,
MASTAI POIRIER,

November 30, 1911.

What is now the third objection. It has been said that by the British North America Act, 1871, we have no right to impose upon a province any change in its constitution. That may be true, but I will read you clause 3 of that Act, which says:

The parliament of Canada, may from time to time with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion decrease, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature and may with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such decrease or diminution of alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

We see by this law that the government has the power to make a contract with the province of Manitoba. They cannot impose on that province a new system of schools, or a change in their constitution, but they are at liberty to ask the province to agree with them to accept such changes in the constitution, and if the provinces decline, the government is at liberty to refuse to make any arrangement with the province. It is a contract between the federal government on one side, and the legislature on the other. It thus answers the argument about imposing a new order of things. We do not want to impose anything but if the people of Manitoba want an extension of boundaries let them come to us with conditions that all will accept.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Prime Minister has admitted that Catholics had rights to education in the Keewatin district?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I thought that he had refused them the rights. He admitted that Keewatin was in the Territories.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—And they admitted that they should have rights after the council had been formed—they would have the right then?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh yes, but he says that since 1908 there was a resolution that had been passed by the House of Commons extending the boundaries of Manitoba and Quebec and Ontario, and the effect of that resolution being adopted by the Commons, was that he did not think it advisable to put the law into operation, because, as a matter of fact, that country in a few days or weeks would become Greater Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Some of his colleagues were not of the same opinion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I don't know; I am not a member of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—They said so publicly—they contradicted themselves in the House. The Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works said the contrary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—I don't know; where did they say the contrary?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—In the other House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—I know what they said about Keewatin, but they were contradicted by the Prime Minister himself.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That is what I said. But they ought to have resigned if they did not agree.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—May I be allowed to sum up the whole case in a few words.

The confederation was a compact entered into in 1867, and in such a compact, the rights of the minorities were secured.

The Manitoba Act was also the result of a compact to which the Dominion government and the people of the Northwest Territories were parties. So was the federal legislation of 1875.

In all those compacts treaties in all federal or imperial legislation, the school rights of the minorities were always the object of special enactments, made to secure their existence for ever.

At one time Manitoba violated one of those solemn and binding treaties.

A case was made which from court to court reached the judicial committee of the Privy Council, and an order was given to the Manitoba legislature to remedy the injustice it had committed.

That Remedial Order was signified to the Manitoba legislature, which deliberately, up to this date, has refused to comply with it.

On the other hand that same province, which is still in a state of rebellion against the Dominion is to-day, asking the Canadian parliament for an extension of boundaries.

The territory to be annexed is actually governed by the laws of the Dominion and its population, under such laws, claim that it has a right to denominational and separate schools.

Those rights are denied by certain ministers who contend that the Dominion laws do not apply to the proposed annexed territory, and should they apply, that the proper machinery to render them operative has never existed and, finally, that by the British North America Act, 1871, no change whatsoever could be made in the constitution of Manitoba.

We have established beyond a doubt, that the federal laws govern the proposed annexed territory, that it is not in the power of those who refuse to put the laws in operation to invoke their own faults against the existence of a right and that, under the operation of the British North America Act, 1871, the Dominion has the undisputed power to grant any extension of boundaries subject to the conditions that may be agreed by the two interested parties.

The Dominion parliament has hence the power to grant the extension of boundaries on condition, on the most acceptable condition that, if annexed, the rights of the people in the proposed annexed territory be safeguarded.

Putting aside the contention that the people of the proposed annexed territory have, or have not the rights they claim for and leaving to them alone to debate that question in the proper way, and to obtain from the proper tribunal a final decision, our duty, at all events, is to support the proposition set forth in the proposed amendment, and to safeguard conditionally at least, the rights that may exist.

Placing the question on those grounds, I believe it my imperative duty to vote for the present amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not intend to detain you very long, and as I am reaching a contrary conclusion to the one to which the hon. the Speaker has arrived, I want to say a few words.

Three provinces are in quest of their hinterland—Quebec, Ontario, and Manitoba. The territories which are to be divided among those provinces are practically vacant and unorganized. If there were no anterior legislation whatever concerning those lands it is self-evident that no sane man would rise to ask that special conditions be imposed on the annexing provinces which would set up in one province two different sets of laws—fiscal or educational. Such a demand would be too preposterous. A province—once created—is supreme within its boundaries, and any unorganized territory which is added to it must naturally fall under its system of laws. This is the natural order of things.

When there was a question of the territory of Ungava being added to the province of Quebec it did not occur to me for one instant that the set of laws enacted to date by the provincial legislature would not extend automatically to that new territory by the same Act which sanctioned the annexation. Likewise for Ontario and likewise for Manitoba.

But it is urged that some legislation affects that part of Keewatin which should be respected by Manitoba, and which should be made a condition to be imposed as a servitude upon that territory. What is that legislation? It is to be found in the Acts of this parliament passed in 1875 and 1876.

The Act of 1876 has been the only law affecting the Keewatin district between that year and 1905 or 1907, and under it, during that time the minority had no right to separate schools.

At the outset I may say that without examining minutely into every Act passed by the Federal parliament it can be plainly shown that since confederation our whole legislation goes to establish that the Dominion parliament has always had the intention and desire of granting the minorities in the Northwest Territories the rights of separate schools, and that if the proper authority had been constituted in Keewatin in 1905 or 1907 the minority would have been entitled to its own schools. This right would be based on the supposition that Keewatin had been regularly joined to the Northwest Territories in 1905 by proclamation of the Governor in Council. If it was not regularly re-annexed in 1905, it certainly was made a part of the Northwest Territories by the Revised Statutes of 1906 which came into force the 30th of January, 1907.

It is admitted on all sides that no separate schools have been to this day regularly opened in the Keewatin district. If the minority has a right to separate schools it is a right in posse only.

The federal authority which rules supreme over Keewatin has not deemed opportune to give effect to the laws now in existence to organize that territory, and no individual has to this date enjoyed any privilege flowing from this source.

This parliament has the power to change those laws. It has created them and it has stated when they would become operative. Before being put into force parliament decides that this territory shall not be organized as a separate unit under the existing laws made for the temporary government of the Northwest Territories but shall be annexed to the province of Manitoba.

It is objected that there may be—that there are—a few dozens of men who went into the Keewatin district since 1905 when that country was reannexed to the Northwest Territories who have acquired an absolute right to the enjoyment of the privileges granted to the minorities by the Act of 1875.

Between 1876 and 1905 the territory under discussion was governed by a special Act, that of 1876, which contained no enactment in favour of separate schools. The authors of that Act stated clearly why no such enactment was made. MacKenzie and Blake explained that Keewatin would temporarily be administered by the Governor of Manitoba, without the help of a council pending the delimitation of the Ontario boundaries.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie moved for leave to introduce a Bill respecting the Northwest Territory, and to create a separate territory out of part thereof.

He said—We find that there is likely to be a good deal of inconvenience from the Northwest Territories, including all that portion of our country east of Manitoba and west of the boundary of Ontario. The province of Manitoba wishes to increase its boundaries northward, westward and eastward; but until the question is decided as to where the limits of Ontario may ultimately be fixed, it is impossible to take any steps towards enlarging the boundaries of that province without the risk of having it reconsidered, probably, at the very next session. I have thought it advisable on the whole, to detach a portion of country immediately north and east of Manitoba from the Northwest Territories proper and to have its affairs administered by the Governor of Manitoba without the intervention of any council and without incurring any expense whatever.

The Hon. Mr. Blake in answer to a question by Hon. Rodrigue Masson explained more fully the object of the Bill but on the same lines as Mr. Mackenzie: (p. 194 of Hansard of 1876).

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The Act of last session has not yet been put in force. At present all the territories of the Northwest are governed from Manitoba. The Act of last session proposed, and I think rightly proposed, a system which gave rudimentary representative institutions, coincidently with its going into effect. The Bill of this session takes off a very small portion of the enormous territories of the Northwest for the particular purpose which my hon. friend the premier clearly explained. He pointed out in the present condition of that country, with its comparatively limited means of access, with its vast unsettled plains, and with a portion of the territory lying partly east of Manitoba, that it was advisable as a mere temporary measure to adopt this system of government in that country for a short time. He pointed out as soon as the boundary of Ontario and the Northwest Territory was settled the question would immediately arise whether a portion of the territory for present purposes annexed to Manitoba would belong to that province. If not annexed to Manitoba it would be under the jurisdiction of the government at Fort Pelly. If this territory is annexed to Manitoba the laws of that province relating to schools will apply to it. If reannexed through the Northwest Territories, clause 11 of the Act of last session will apply, but this cannot be done without at the same time conferring powers of taxation, and no such powers can be exercised without representative institutions.

It is clearly an erroneous statement to make that the people inhabiting the Keewatin district between 1876 and 1905 could claim any rights or privileges other than those contained in the Act of 1876 which was the only law governing them, and in that Act nothing is prescribed in favour of minorities on matters of education or otherwise.

The people who went to that part of our country before 1905 did not go there with the assurance that they would be governed by Northwest Territory ordinances or by the Manitoba law, but all indications pointed to Manitoba as being the province to which they would have to look to for their legislation.

Since 1907 no intelligent being could suppose for one moment that this part of Keewatin, now under discussion, was not to be—without any great delay—a part of Manitoba. I do not know if a single individual entered that territory since 1907. If a few dozens did enter they went there with the full knowledge that that country was as yet unorganized, and was shortly destined to be added to Manitoba.

I will not discuss at length the question formulated elsewhere: that the reannexation of the Keewatin district to the Northwest Territories has had for effect to extend to it the school ordinances of 1901. The Minister of Justice answers in the negative, and the Catholic minority in that territory holds the view that those ordinances have not yet come into operation since it has applied to the federal government for the appointment of a council which would allow them separate schools. This goes to show that those ordinances were not carried into effect in Keewatin. They were not applied. We are dealing with an unorganized territory which was temporarily reannexed to the Northwest Territories, which remained unorganized to this day pending its annexation to Manitoba. It has been conceded by all that that part of Keewatin was destined to be the property of Manitoba and as far back as 1876, Mr. Blake stated that if it were annexed to that province it would be governed by the laws of that province. Conditions of fact and of law would need to be very different than I find them here to justify me in attempting to force upon a province—in one part of its territory—a set of laws which would be at variance with its own system of laws freely voted by its own legislature.

It is urged that this territory is the property of the Dominion and that we can impose any condition we please when giving it away. This is verily true but true as well is the fact that the province can refuse to accept the gift.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Where is the compulsion on this parliament constitutionally, legally or otherwise to annex this territory to Manitoba.

Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—My hon. friend talks about it automatically falling on the province. There is no such thing as that. It is all nonsense.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I will answer my hon. friend that there is no compulsion on the part of the Dominion to give away that part of the territory to Manitoba but he will admit the principle that whatever conditions we may impose on the gift of a piece of territory to a province can be rejected by that province.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND — Then what next.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—They will have to wait until they are ready to accept the conditions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Where would the imposition of such a condition as the one suggested land us? Into an agitation where passions would be roused and inflamed, when animosities would be stirred and the most bitter because they would spring from religious prejudices and fanaticism. I ask it: is a minority likely to impose its views under such circumstances to a majority? It would be folly to attempt it and even to think of it.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Why would it be bad for the minority? The minority are asking for their rights; it would be bad for the Dominion if we were to be dictated to by the majority.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I will recall to my hon. friend the fact that we know exactly where the majority in Manitoba stands when you want to coerce it. The majority will accept in a conciliatory way to-day things which it will not do if it is driven or if it is forced.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Keep Keewatin for the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If such a policy were adopted the provincial government would dissolve the House and sweep the province with the cry of no coercion and hands off Manitoba.

This appeal was made by the Roblin government in 1905 and up to this date quite successfully in a much milder form than it would be made if this parliament proceeded to impose such conditions as are suggested.

Every one is familiar with the onslaught of Hon. Robert Rogers against the late government because the papal delegate, Mgr. Sbaretti, had had a private conversation with Hon. Mr. Campbell over the question of separate schools. This little incident helped materially the Roblin government to carry a by-election in the riding of Mountain and has been considerably used and abused ever since, in that province.

To reach the end we all aim at, to remove whatever grievance the Catholic minority actually suffers in Manitoba it is my sincere opinion that the only effective means to be adopted is by a direct appeal of the Catholics of that province to its legislature. Men will listen to reason if properly appealed to while they will resist any interference which may come from outside.

This country cannot be governed otherwise than in a spirit of conciliation and of compromise.

Tolerance is a word which is disliked by many. Autocratic governments—secular and religious—hate that expression. Tolerance means a limitation to absolutism and the men who are clothed with omnipotent powers come to think that their tyranny is a blessing for humanity. Majorities are often imbued with the same notions and tyranny often exists under democratic forms of government.

It is a very shortsighted policy because majorities provoke reprisals the day it becomes in its turn a minority. Intolerance —lay or clerical—soon becomes intolerable and the day fatally comes when it is no more tolerated. This is the invariable experience which history teaches us which despotism under all forms has never profited by. Tolerance and conciliation should be the gospel preached in and out of season by all public men as the only solution to our religious or racial difficulties.

The Laurier government did considerably towards relieving the Manitoba minority of most of its disabilities because they approached the Greenway government in a proper spirit. It behooves the present administration, which is politically in sympathy with the Roblin government to obtain complete satisfaction for that minority. It is their duty to work towards that end and the hon. the Minister of the Interior, the Hon. Mr. Rogers, can certainly restore peace and harmony in his province if he will devote his energies towards that goal. His influence is paramount in Manitoba.

No amendment to this Bill will avail in the least to the minority. I hesitated somewhat before voting for the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Grenville, because I felt that it would divide this House on lines which would not be conducive to the betterment of the situation of the minority in Keewatin and in Manitoba. I voted for it because it expressed a desire for a discussion with the Manitoba government leading toward a conciliatory settlement. My misgivings have proved to be well founded. No good will come from such a move and considerable harm may follow. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion not to support any amendment which would impose conditions on Manitoba—amendments which it is apparent will not rally the majority in either Chamber, which if voted would not be accepted by the province, and which would hamper a proper settlement by way of conciliatory methods.

This amendment would, if embodied in this Act, grant nothing to the minority of Keewatin which has to-day no constitutional rights to separate schools. It has the law of 1875 enacted by this parliament which this same parliament can repeal, and which it is now in effect repealing by annexing this territory to Manitoba, whose laws will automatically extend it.

His Honour the Speaker, has expressed his abhorrence of the Acts constituting Alberta and Saskatchewan into provinces. He is more Catholic than the Pope since he has the well-known opinion of His Grace, Bishop Legal, who declared himself quite satisfied with the school privileges which are contained in those Acts in favour of the minority. And it is the welcomed revenge or justification of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to hear the Catholics of Manitoba asking for themselves the advantages which their co-religionists enjoy in those western provinces. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government has done much for the Manitoba minority. We rely upon the influence of the Borden government to obtain full satisfaction from its political ally, Mr Roblin.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has spoken very strongly on this question, and against the amendment I had the honour to move. He points out what I would be very sorry to accept. I never was an extremist; I would not advocate extreme measures under any circumstances. The hon. gentleman is a very strong advocate of conciliation. I think that I am just as strong as he is for conciliation; but I would call his attention and that of the hon. gentlemen of this House to this fact, that sometimes conciliation is not a remedy at all. Do not many of our friends here remember that the Manitoba legislature, on a certain occasion, wanted to abolish its upper chamber, for economical reasons as it was then stated. At that time the minority in Manitoba had fair representation there. They objected for a time, and said: 'No, if we consent to abolish this Chamber, which is the only protection we have to maintain our rights, we will be at the mercy of the majority. Then this beautiful spirit of conciliation comes in, of which we have never seen a standing proof except in the province of Quebec, which I have already quoted. They persuaded the majority of the legislative council to vote themselves out of power on the ground that they would be always treated justly and their rights respected as fully, if not more fully, than their compatriots respected the rights of the minority in the province of Quebec. Have they kept that promise? No, they have not. I should have referred to the resolutions passed at that mass meeting in Winnipeg, which were sent to every member of this House. I have no doubt that they were guided by the remembrance of that case where conciliation would have done so much. The question was put by the hon. member from Ottawa, I think, and no answer given satisfactory to my mind: 'What obligation is this parliament under to annex any portion of Keewatin to Manitoba'? I have not yet heard any obligation that binds this parliament to annex a single acre of that territory to the province of Manitoba. There is a chance for conciliation if the province of Manitoba wants to acquire additional territory, of access to the ports of Hudson bay, to which they seem to attach great importance. It might be a fair question of conciliation and compromise to say: 'We are prepared to give you that, but are you prepared to recognize the rights of a little minority that you have in your province and give them certain concessions also?'

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—I do not say that you should exact the pound of flesh; make a compromise but a decent compromise; that is all we want. One of the resolutions already referred to declares that the people at that meeting assembled, representing all parts of the province, and the territories also, pledged themselves to be perfectly satisfied with a settlement on the lines arranged with Saskatchewan and Alberta with regard to that question. Now, that is not the pound of flesh. It is just a question of fair compromise. My hon. friend who made such an appeal against the amendment has simply done this—he has relieved the government from the obligation which falls upon them as far as he can do so; but they cannot be relieved of that obligation. They are handing over a large slice of territory to the province of Manitoba and getting clear of the obligation that is on their shoulders now, but will be on their shoulders no longer after they get clear of this territory. While it remains a portion of the Dominion territory the obligation rests with this parliament; once it passes into the province of Manitoba, the legislative powers will belong to the provincial legislature of that provnce, I am satisfied of that. But before it passes there, why in the name of goodness could not the government say 'we do not want to impose extraordinary conditions; we do not want to coerce the province of Manitoba; we do not want to take you by the throat; but be generous as others are generous in this country, and have given evidence of their generosity; be fair-minded; be broad-minded, because this is a big country, and you have got to live on terms of friendly feeling with your neighbours, no matter what creed or nationality they are.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the right kind of conciliation.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—There is that conciliation and I believe in that conciliation. We must all be Canadians, but we should all be treated as Canadians. A minority has no right to buck against a majority, for they will always get the worst of it; but the best citizenship in this country is made up of men, Protestant and Catholic, or whatever church they may belong to, and the better they live up to the requirements of their church the better citizens they are. A man who has not a warm corner in his memory for the land of his forefathers will make a very poor Canadian. There is nothing inconsistent between the love of the land of your forefathers and loyalty to the land of your adoption. I trust the amendment will carry.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Referring to the Speaker's decision, is seems to me that Bourinot has copied from May. I will read the paragraph:

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill to move, as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principle, policy, or provision of the Bill or express an opinion as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress, or seeking further information in relation to the Bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or in the Lords, the opinions of the judges. The principle of relevancy in any amendment governs every such proposed resolution which must therefore strictly relate to the Bill which the House, by its order, has resolved upon considering, and must not include in its scope other Bills then standing for consideration by the House. Nor may such an amendment deal with the provisions of the Bill upon which it is moved, nor anticipate amendments nor attach conditions to the second reading of the Bill.

That, I think, is exactly the present amendment.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I call the hon. member to order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I simply wanted to put on record this opinion, so that it might not be too binding upon the Senate.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division:

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved the third reading of Bill (68) An Act respecting Queen's College of Kingston, and to change its name to Queen's University at Kingston.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to ask if they have preserved the scholarships granted to that institution. A gentleman in our town donated a scholarship some years ago and I see nothing about it in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have just inquired of the reverend gentleman who is head of the college, and he says they are preserved.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the Third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (69) An Act to incorporate Queen's Theological College.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

RAILWAY RIGHT OF WAY AND STATION GROUNDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

How many acres of land have been granted for right-of-way? and how many for station grounds? to the following railways, under the order in council of the 2nd day of December, 1911.

The Revelstoke and Arrowhead branch of the Canadian Pacific railway;

The Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Railway Company;

The Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company;

The Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company;

The Vancouver Power Company, Limited;

What is the area and location of each station ground, or any other area of land granted for any other purpose under the aforementioned order in council?

What is the date of issue of the letters patent, for the right-of-way, station grounds, or land granted for any purposes, separately to each of the above-mentioned railways?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The reply furnished to me is as follows:

1. Grants made subsequent to order in council, 2nd December, 1911, none.

Grants made prior to date of order in council, 2nd December, 1911, the Revelstoke and Arrowhead branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, 158 acres.

2. No grants made for station grounds or for other purposes except grants for right-of-way, which latter grants are as follows:

Grants made subsequent to order in council of 2nd December, 1911, none.

Grants made prior to date of order in council of 2nd December, 1911: the Revelstoke and Arrowhead branch of the Canadian Pacific railway.

3. Answered by No. 2.

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY OF NEW SENATORS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:

That in the opinion of the Senate, provision should be made by parliament to indemnify senators Forget, Wilson and Prowse for their attendance at the last session of parliament, and to that end the clerk of the Senate be authorized to send a copy of this resolution to the Minister of Finance, together with a memorandum, showing the amount to which each of said senators would have been entitled for his attendance at such session under the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, passed during the present session.

He said: I do not think that it is necessary to go into any very elaborate explanation with respect to this motion, as hon. gentlemen will remember it was represented that in the early part of this session, and I think also in the latter part of the past session, certain members of this House who had been appointed during the last session were thereby involved in debt to His Majesty, as represented by Canada, instead of having anything to their credit. Almost immediately after the opening of the present session of parliament, the present government took steps to remedy the defect in the law under which this injustice was possible. The Bill was assented to some time ago. I am satisfied that the hon. leader of the Senate will agree with the other members of the House in thinking that the hon. gentlemen who came in here last session should not suffer because of the fact that the law was in a form which was not properly understood or appreciated. I assume that the hon. gentlemen who leads the government will not object to the passing of this resolution. If Canada were in particularly straitened financial circumstances, this might be a subject which would call for some discussion, but just at the present time there is plenty of money in the treasury and I think one of the first duties of the government is to indemnify those who are administering public affairs.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Why not settle it by conciliation?

The motion was agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved the third reading of Bill (V) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—My instructions are to ask that this Bill be withdrawn, and I move that the order of the day be discharged.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Who is the father of the Bill? The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) moved the third reading of the Bill and I should like to know who is the boss?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I moved the third reading in the absence of the hon. gentleman from Beamsville (Hon. Mr. Gibson), to accommodate him, but I withdraw my motion.

The motion was agreed to, and the order of the day discharged.

MANITOBA BOUNDARIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (115) An Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I desire to propose, not exactly an amendment, but a resolution, or to add some words by way of conciliation, about which we heard so much the last few days. I do not wish to force the government to do anything wrong, but I hope there will be real conciliation in this matter. I will submit the point at issue to great conciliation. We lawyers, by consent, draw a factum and submit it to the court for decision, and that is termed real conciliation, and not political conciliation. I do not oppose the third reading, but wishing to conciliate opposing interests I move, seconded by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division, that after the word 'after' in the 4th line of the last clause of the Bill the following words be added:

The rights and privileges of the Catholic or Protestant minority as to education in the Keewatin territory which is hereby annexed to the province of Manitoba shall have been defined by reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, and after the safe-guard of which will be one of the conditions and provisions mentioned in the last two lines of this clause.

So that instead of two conditions, there will be three. The Senate, by this measure, is coercing Manitoba into accepting two conditions before receiving the land they ask for. I do not see why we should not impose a third condition, which is not merely a question of dollars and cents or of a few acres of land, but a question of conscience, religion and liberty, and, more than that, a question of honour by the country to respect the rights which the minority, Catholic or Protestant, might have in the province. I suppose the two conditions imposed by this House upon Manitoba, before giving them this land will be accepted by that province. It seems to me it is only fair, especially in view of the strong points which have been made in favour of the minority in that district by his honour the Speaker last night, that this provision should be inserted. I may say in passing that I am opposed to the greater part of the hon. Speaker's remarks last evening; but as to the rights of the minority, given to them by solemn treaty and solemn pact, on the word of honour of Her Majesty the Queen, given through the Governor General of Canada and the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, he is right. These rights, religious or otherwise, ought to be respected; it seems to me, that we, in this Senate ought to respect the word of the Crown, and to try at least to have these rights recognized as a fair condition in this Bill. When we are giving away the land and the money, it is only just to impose this provision. The hon. gentleman from DeLorimier said 'We must not coerce these people'. We are doing nothing of the kind. The representatives of Manitoba have come to parliament and said: 'You have a certain piece of land in Keewatin district under your control. Will you give it to us.' We answer 'Certainly we will, but it is only fair for you to accept it with the mortgage on it.' If my hon. friend was proposing to give his property to somebody, and if there were an encumbrance on it, would it be coercion for my hon. friend to say to that man, 'I will give it to you, but you must take it subject to the incumbrance on it.' If I were not in this House, speaking with reference to the educational rights in Manitoba, I would describe the conduct by a French expression, which describes conduct like that. We say we are willing to give our land to Manitoba, but they must accept it with the charge on it. When we were discussing the Highways Bill, hon. members were willing to put coercing conditions to the government to give money to the provinces. The hon. gentleman from Halifax said, 'No conciliation there; we will coerce the federal parliament to submit to the provinces though giving them something,' —no conciliation there. It is the bounden duty of the Senate to protect the province annexed in preserving its rights, and say so to the province of Manitoba in accepting the gift. In this Bill there is political dishonesty. I cannot use any other expression. I do not wish to be harsh, but I feel very strongly on that. The minority should be protected in their rights, if they have rights.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—In looking over the debate in the other Chamber in 1875, it is quite clear, from the current of thought that prevailed, not alone on the part of the government but on the part of the opposition, that in granting a constitution to the territories in the manner we did, certain rights that were then set forth would be for ever preserved and that they could not be changed. That was the opinion, not only of Mr. Blake, but of Sir John Macdonald, and of the leading men who took part on that occasion. I have under my hand here the observations made by Mr. Blake as to the necessity for the preservation of the rights of the minority. After concurring in the opinion that the powers which were then being granted were very much larger than were then assumed, Mr. Blake spoke on the Bill introduced by Mr. Mackenzie. In the first instance it did not contain and educational clause, the intention being to introduce it in Committee of the Whole. In 1875 Mr. Blake was not a member of the government. For personal reasons he had resigned in 1874, and when he noticed the Bill that was being introduced he gave expression to the following language:

> He believed that it was essential to our obtaining a large immigration to the Northwest that we should tell the people beforehand what those rights were to be in the country in which we invited them to settle.
> He did believe that we ought not to introduce into that territory the heartburnings and difficulties with which certain other portions of this Dominion and other countries had been afflicted. It seemed to him, having regard to the fact that, as far as we could expect at present, the general character of that population would be somewhat analogous to the population of Ontario, that there should be some provision in the constitution by which they shall have conferred upon them the same rights and privileges in regard to religious instruction as those possessed by the people of Ontario. The principles of local self-government and the settling of the question of public instruction seemed to him ought to be the cardinal principles of the measure.

Referring to that particular speech, Mr. Mackenzie said:

> The clause provided that the Lieutenant Governor by and with the consent of his council, or assembly, as the case might be, should pass all necessary ordinances in respect of education, but it would be specially provided that the majority of the ratepayers might establish such schools and impose such necessary assessment as they might think fit, and that the minority of the ratepayers, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, might establish separate schools, and such ratepayers would be liable only to such educational assessment as they might impose upon themselves.

That was universally accepted in the House of Commons; not a single voice was raised in opposition to it, and the Bill went through the House without a division. It came up to this Chamber and it fell to my lot to have charge of the Bill. The Conservatives were in a large majority in the Senate and I could not hope to carry the Bill without their aid, inasmuch as we had at that time in this House probably the most formidable opponent of separate schools in Canada, the late George Brown, who through the Globe, had raised objection to the separate school system. In justice to Mr. Brown's memory I am glad to say that before he died he recanted that belief and recognized that in such a country as Canada it was necessary, if we were to enjoy the blessings of peace, that Christian charity should prevail, and it was necessary that it should not be thwarted. But in 1875 Mr. Brown made a strong speech against the Bill. Among those who helped to carry it were Sir Alexander Campbell, Mr. Allen and other liberal minded Conservatives who recognized the contract that had been made at confederation, and who stood by the Bill and carried it through. The followers of the government of the day were very few in this Chamber; you could count them on the fingers of your hand, and therefore it was solely by the alliance with the opposite side, of men such as I have named, that the Bill was carried. It is a sad thing to me that in the last fifty years the spirit of toleration has not grown with the age, that the sentiments of men fifty odd years ago were much more christian like, much more kindly to their fellow men who differed from them in religious matters. I illustrate that by just reading the division on the separate school Bill in Ontario. There were, of course, some violent opponents of the Bill. I think it took me four years before I got it through. It was in 1860 I first introduced it, and could have carried it, but hon. gentlemen know, who have had any experience of the House of Commons, that a public Bill in the hands of a private member has very little chance of getting through unless the government are behind it, because it is only on a particular day and at a particular time it can be brought up, and two or three gentlemen choosing to speak against it can prevent it passing. Mr. Brown was able to throw it out in 1862 with the assistance of Mr. Ferguson. I mention that as an illustration of the difficulty of passing a public Bill in the hands of a private member, if it is strongly opposed. The vote for the second reading of the Bill, in 1863, stood 80 to 36. On a motion for the six months hoist there were only 22 for the amendment, and 58 against it. Among those who supported the Bill were Mr. Benjamin, who was at that time the Grand Master of the Orange Order. Mr. Anderson who was the Grand Treasurer of the Order, and continued to be the Grand Treasurer for some 25 or 30 years after—a very fine man. I was a long time with him in parliament. He was a man of the highest principle and he stood by the Bill through all its stages. Then John Hillyard Cameron who was either a past Grand Master or succeeded Mr. Benjamin in that position, was among those who supported the Bill. Sir John Macdonald was always steadily, from the beginning of his life through to the end, in favour of separate schools, and always advocated principles involving toleration to the minority. At the time that a premier madcap, in 1890, moved the abolition of the separate schools, practically, by making a uniform school system in Manitoba, Mr. Ernest T. Wood, who was a member of the Manitoba legislature, wrote to Sir John Macdonald asking how he should vote on this question. I should like to read Sir John Macdonald's answer to Mr. Wood. He wrote:

> You ask me for advice as to the course you should take upon the vexed question of separate schools in your province. There is, it seems to me, but one course open to you. By the Manitoba Act, the provisions of the B.N.A. Act (sect. 93) respecting laws passed for the protection of minorities in educational matters are made applicable to Manitoba, and cannot be changed; for, by the Imperial Act confirming the establishment of the new province, 34 and 35 Vict., c. sec. 6, it is provided that it shall not be competent for the parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the Manitoba Act in so far as it relates to the province of Manitoba. Obviously, therefore, the separate school system in Manitoba is beyond the reach of the legislature or of the Dominion parliament.

That is the opinion of a gentleman who assisted in framing the British North America Act, who was present when Mr. Blake and Mr. Mackenzie spoke in favour of the Bill in 1875, and who spoke in favour of it himself. The general current of thought at the time was that those clauses could not be changed. Keewatin at that time formed part of the Northwest Territory; the law was passed and was considered to be sacred for all time to come, and it would shock very much indeed the men who preceded this parliament, had they been told that a time would come in the history of Canada when the representatives of the people in either Chamber would advocate a measure that would deprive the minority of their sacred rights. How can they hope to have peace and harmony in the country if the rights which are dearest to every man are to be taken from them violently by the force of numbers? It is a sad thought to me; it makes my voice tremble when I think that toleration is less to-day than it was fifty years ago. Could I have passed that Separate School Bill to-day? No I could not. The influence of the United States along side of us has had an effect on Canada. We are drifting in the same direction, and there is nothing that can save Canada in the future. If my voice could be preserved fifty years from now, it would show that I was right—fifty years hence toleration will be hopelessly gone. The United States, owing to the refusal of the people to acknowledge God in their schools has drifted into infidelity, and forty or fifty millions of the population never bend the knee to their Maker. They have raised the god of Mammon and the god of Reason, believing that it is unmanly to recognize anything they cannot comprehend. Faith has vanished from the land. You see the consequences of it to-day. I have here the remarks made by the leader of the Church of Scotland in Canada, speaking of the population coming from the United States. He says they are fine settlers; they make money, bring stock with them, and are enriching the country, but he says they are all against the church. Their morality is low; they recognize nothing but mammon, nothing but temporary prosperity. That is where we are drifting. I see that a convention of educationalists is to be called in a few days, and one member draws attention to the fact that unless religion is introduced into the schools they are drifting on to immorality. Why, hon. gentleman should be so anxious to take away a right and privilege belonging to the minority in Keewatin that must lead to higher spirituality, I cannot understand. Surely a man who believes in christianity is better than an atheist. He is responsible not only in this world but in the world to come. As scripture says, 'What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul.' Surely we are not going to adopt a doctrine that we are not responsible beyond to-day —that we do not look to a hereafter. Surely to a community in which we are forty-four per cent Catholics—not enough unless by the charity and kindly feeling of the non-Catholics to preserve our rights and privileges, there is an object lesson in the province of Quebec that ought to be taken to heart. As I mentioned the other day, at the time Quebec came into the confederation it was assumed that the dissentient schools existed there by law, and when it was found that they did not exist by law, Sir Alex. Galt resigned, but atonement was made. The moment Quebec became a province, most liberal laws were adopted conferring on the dissentients the right to establish their own schools. There is not a high school in the province of Quebec that is not subsidized by the Quebec government. An immense school was organized for the purpose of teaching Protestant ministers. In the face of that, how can non-Catholics in parliament take action to deprive the minority of the rights and privileges claimed by them, in view of what they see pervailing in the province of Quebec. Is that a noble example to the people? I have here the opinion of Mr. Robins, who for 30 years was the superintendent of the Protestant schools in the province of Quebec. S. P. Robins, L.L.D., Principal of McGill Normal School says:

> I would do less than justice to leading politicians of all shades in this province if I were not to state my admiration of the attitude which they maintain towards education. During an association of more than thirty years with the public education of Quebec, an association which has repeatedly brought me a suitor on behalf of education into contact with men of influence of all political parties, I have found a universal desire for the spread of popular education, a willingness to listen patiently to the view of practical educators, a wide love of fair play for the educational rights of the minority, and a determination to hold the precious interest of education aloof from the turbulent arena of political party.

Surely that example is worth following. I feel deeply grieved on this occasion at the apparent decision of this House to rob a minority of the rights and privileges that were guaranteed to it under the constitution. It is a very serious blow. It is the first time that the Upper Chamber has so acted. When my Bill came before the Upper House of the old province of Canada in 1863 what was the vote? Contents 40; non-contents 15. I could give you the votes from time to time, all in the same line. The Upper Chamber has not on one single occasion since the introduction of government into Canada failed to respond to an appeal from the minority to protect its rights. It is a discredit and will make those who come afterwards, I hope, blush that this Chamber now, with the large majority they possess, deliberately refuse to recognize rights whatever they may be that have been sacredly promised under our constitution. I am not making any reference to Manitoba; it is hopeless.

Nothing could be more sacred than the agreement under which Manitoba came into confederation. The Act passed in the Canadian parliament and the Imperial parliament, and continued during the long period of nineteen years, without anybody calling it in question, and a madcap like Martin, who now represents one of the slums of London, off his own bat took the view of the matter that he would create one school and telling everybody to attend to that particular school. Of course it has been a failure. The Catholics in many parts of Manitoba continued to subscribe to the public school and at the same time to support their own school. I saw it was hopeless for this parliament to make any move in that direction, and that is why I did not advocate any action in regard to it, but so far as making a declaration in regard to the territory we are annexing to Manitoba is concerned, it is our bounden duty to make provision for any rights they have. If they have none, it amounts to nothing, but any rights they have should be honestly and fairly preserved.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think it is seldom this honourable House has heard an utterance so remarkable as that just given to us by the senior member from Ottawa. He has, in a few words, put the glorious history of the past, when men were men, before the men of to-day, who evidently do not come up to the measure of the men of the past. In a few brief words, and with the documents in his hands, he has shown to this honourable House, and I hope beyond the limits of this House, to the people at large, that liberty was loved for liberty's sake, that freedom, honesty and honour were regarded by the public men of that time for what they meant to the people struggling to get along in the broad expanse of Canada. It did me good to hear these old facts recited here to-day. What a comparison between that speech of to-day and the speech of last night by the hon. member from De Lorimier. Oh, the Blakes, the Mackenzies, the Ross's and the Mowats, the Holtons and the Pardees have gone. They did not capitulate; they did not sacrifice the rights of the people on the false ground of the so-called conciliation, and getting up a bogy cry of coercion to make an argument all the stronger, when there is no coercion in any word the noble thirteen or fifteen who have voted for the amendments—not one assertion of coercion or dictation. We have been practically on our knees, freemen in Canada, pleading with the government of the day, and oh, so sad to see, pleading with the Liberal phalanx in the Senate, to do justice, and, if not to do justice, not to have an injustice committed. We have been on our knees in this House for the past ten years calling for mercy, not like the hon. member from De Lorimier, (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), who on one occasion voted twice for amendments that practically meant the destruction of the Bill, and then the day after turned around and tried to crush the attempt of those who seek protection for the weak and the poor, turned around and voted against a simple declaration of policy that the Bill should contain something to safeguard the rights of the minority, and he made that plea to this House on the ground that Manitoba should not be coerced and should not be dictated to. There has been no coercion and dictation on our part. He raised that bogy plea to what? To what he has pleaded to here before, and I tell him now to his face, to plead to a non-Catholic gathering. He has done it to the great disadvantage of the Liberal party in the city of Montreal. The speech which he delivered last night would not secure one vote in the province of Quebec for the Liberal party. That speech is calculated to destroy any of our prospects, and to assist the work of the men who ripped up the ranks of the Liberal party in the campaign last year. I stand for no principles of that kind. I want no craven capitulation emblazoned on the banner of the Liberal party. I want no sacrifice of the rights of the minority to be put in black letters on the banner of the Liberal party. Why, with a jaunty air he sacrificed the rights of Keewatin, just as jauntily as if he were throwing cabbage leaves to hogs. He asked us that we should, for the sake of conciliation, throw away our rights. Why, the minister from Manitoba, Mr. Rogers, was more generous than that. The Postmaster General, who evidently has betrayed his party on the question, was more generous than the hon. member. They promised their followers in the House that they would see that the Roblin government gave full justice to the minority, and on that declaration they secured the vote of the Nationalists, and have for the past two weeks maintained themselves in power. I have much more admiration, under the circumstances, for Mr. Pelletier and for Mr. Rogers than I have for the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier, and I for one, as a Liberal, repudiate the stand he took here last night. It is not in harmony with the doctrines of our old leaders who led the party onward and onward, very often to defeat, but always upholding the rights, always standing by the banner of honour, honesty and justice. Why, the Pagans of old could teach the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier a lesson. One of them said in the famous verse 'Fiat justitia ruat coelum', which translated from the Latin means, 'Let justice be done though the Heavens fall.' I say here let justice be done even though the parties go down to ruin. What a noble cry for a legislator is this so called cry of conciliation! Throw away your rights so as to get the good-will of the majority. What good will have they to give you if they take everything from you? It is like asking a dog to lick the foot that kicks him. We have heard pronouncements on the legal aspects of this question, which were as hair splitting as lawyers could possibly make them. Take the speech of the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry, (Hon. Mr. Béique) I for one, could not make head or tail of it. Then you have heard the voice of the Speaker (Hon. Mr. Landry) last night, which I must say was a most comprehensive study of the whole subject, although he was out of order three-quarters of the time he was speaking, and the hon. leader of the government never had the courage to call him to order. But the study was comprehensive, solid, based on all our legal and constitutional documents and our legislative enactments. Like the hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) I do not agree with many of the strictures he passed on the Liberal party and the Liberal leader. Of course that is his right as a partisan, but I am not prepared to accept these personal strictures. Sir Wilfrid Laurier did the best he could in 1896, but that is no reason why his followers now, and the descendants of old Liberals should not try and do better in the future. We are giving the present Conservative government the opportunity of their lives, and we are doing it by way of conciliation. Our first amendment was to have the Bill referred back, so as to give the government a chance for a further conference with the Roblin government. Was there any coercion in that? Would it not be up to the government here and the government at Winnipeg to come together and try to arrange some amicable settlement? That was not a coercive measure. It was one of conciliation and good will, but I was sorry to see the spectacle last night, when we could not get one single non-Catholic to vote for the amendment except Tom Davis from Saskatchewan. Is that not a nice state of affairs? Where is the conciliation? Is there any conciliation on the part of the majority? Did they put their hand over the chasm and say 'shake hands, and we'll be friends.' Not one of them. But we had five or six good Catholics voting with the majority each time. I suppose that was conciliation, but it does not carry the respect of their own people, and I venture to say, in the innermost hearts of the non-Catholics it does not carry respect either. It is not the legislative enactments, or the constitutionality of the question which is going to have weight with men who have preconceived ideas in regard to this matter, and who are prejudiced in regard to it. I am appealing, not on religious, national or racial cries, but am appealing to my fellow-men on grounds of honour and common honesty, and not on the low ground of dollars and cents. I am addressing a government which is strong, and which, I believe, if it had the courage, would exercise fair play and justice towards the people of the territory to be annexed. I will repeat my appeal until the people from Manitoba shall have heard it and become converted. I appeal to them not to take the money of the poor Catholic to educate non-Catholics, and compel the poor Catholic to build his own school-house, equip it and meet all the expenditure of education afterwards. Do not do it. It is not honourable, honest or just. I learned only yesterday that after the Catholic family has built a school-house, the limit of meanness is reached, because they go to work and actually tax the little school house property and all under the guise and protection of the law. If you were to go into another man's house and try to take a dollar from him, you would be put out or arrested. The majority in Manitoba have not the courage of the ordinary highway robber or housebreaker. They go to parliament and get parliament to pass a law whereby they can rob the Catholics of their goods and money. Such a state of things is not known in any other corner of the British Empire, not even in England, where Protestantism is strong. I am practically with the hon. gentleman from Ottawa when he says that the case of Manitoba at present is hopeless. It will take some years for them to open their eyes; I do not see why they should not open their eyes right off. I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Larivière) tell this House that there were only 25,000 Catholics in Manitoba. I can understand it now. Over the portals of the great province of Manitoba is the sign: 'No Catholic rights here, no Catholics wanted.' Manitoba with a population of three or four hundred thousand, if not more, has only to-day, after the Catholics starting the population of that country, a paltry 25,000. No wonder Catholics do not go into that country. Do the people of Manitoba want to keep them out? They know there is another place with a similar sign over the door, away far down, and the sign reads: 'No Catholics need apply, no Catholics admitted here.'

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Is that purgatory?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—So that we are now justified in asking the government to refer this question to the Supreme Court to define exactly what the rights of the Catholics are, especially in view of the division of opinion among the leading legal lights of this House; from the hon. Speaker down to the humblest lawyer, no two of them agree on any one point. This question should be referred to the Supreme Court, just as they referred the Ne Temere decree, and just as Sir John Macdonald referred the Manitoba School Bill for their decision. There is no humiliation to the government in this course. All that we ask is that they take the opportunity to secure from the Supreme Court and Privy Council an absolute and final definition of the rights of these people and then embody it in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman from Ottawa has given the history of the separate school question for many years. He is undoubtedly versed in the whole history of the subject, but all that he gave us was prior to the decision of the Privy Council regarding the unlimited rights of Manitoba to legislate on questions affecting education, that we have no right to attempt to restrict or fetter them in any way.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—My hon. friend is entirely wrong, they said it rested with the parliament of Canada to right the wrongs that had been done.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No, the views the hon. gentleman gave us, expressed by Mr. Blake and others, were before the decision of the Privy Council regarding Manitoba. That decision clearly pointed out that Manitoba had the right to legislate upon matters of legislation as they choose.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No, the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—What is the condition of things in Manitoba to-day? They have a common school system. Any Catholic or Protestant minority have the right to arrange with the teacher of a section to use the last half hour in the evening for the purpose of giving religious instruction. They can come in if they choose and teach the Catholic catechism or the dogmas and doctrines of the Catholic church for that half hour. The Protestant minority may do the same thing. It appears that the Catholic minority are not quite satisfied with that arrangement. Their idea with regard to instruction in schools is, apparently, that the religion should be the leading feature of education within that school. It is made the leading feature. In the common schools secular education is made the leading feature, and the school is opened and closed with prayer. In case the minority in any school section claim the right to give religious instruction for the last half hour, those who do not agree with the proposed instruction to be given have the right to withdraw from the school. I should like to know why our Catholic friends are not satisfied with that arrangement. They ought to be. Surely they can arrange to give their children in the last half hour of the school day all the religious instruction necessary. At the time the question of the establishment of separate schools was up in Manitoba I occupied a seat in the House of Commons. After studying the whole question, I came to the conclusion that if you were going to divide the very limited number of school children in Manitoba, and put them into two camps, separate schools and common schools, you would impose a very costly educational system upon that province—a teacher hired at three, or four, or five hundred dollars a year to teach three, or four, or five pupils in the common school, while another teacher would be employed in the separate school, perhaps across the way, or at no great distance, to teach four, or five, or six Catholic children. I contend that the educational system of each province should aim at giving to the children an education to fit them, in a business sense, for the battle of life. A secular education is an absolute, imperative necessity for the children, girls or boys, to fit them for the duties of life. Christian education is also necessary, but it should be given in the church, in the home, or in the Sabbath school. Our Catholic friends think that they cannot manage to educate their children in a religious sense in these three places, and they want to control the schools and make religious teaching the leading element in education. I do not think it is right that the children should be deprived of the right of a thorough education to fit them for the battle of life. I have no desire to trample upon the rights or the conscientious convictions of any Catholic or Protestant. I want to afford to them the full privileges I would like for myself, but I do not believe in attempting to force Manitoba to perpetuate any privileges that those people in Keewatin may have had. To attempt by legislation to compel Manitoba to continue those things will only result in Manitoba finding ways and means whereby they will get around any restriction or provision you may place upon that province. So far the Catholics have not been unjustly dealt with in Manitoba, although they themselves are in love with separate schools that give religious instruction from beginning to end. That is the feature of the education. I think that they are fairly well used, and while they have the right to take possession of the common school for the last half hour and give religious intruction in it, with the privileges and rights that they enjoy, as far as church matters are concerned, as far as the Sabbath schools are concerned and in the home circle, I think they should be well satisfied. They should be well satisfied with those conditions and agree that those who are going into Manitoba by the addition that is made will have the same rights and privileges that the Catholic minority have in the province of Manitoba now. I sympathize with the conscientious conviction of Catholics, but the nation should aim at a high standard of education for the rising generation, and it is better, in the interests of the Catholic minority and their children, that they should be educated side by side with the Protestant children and thus be prepared to compete successfully for the honours that an efficient, thorough education would bring them. It is better for them, and I am sorry our Catholic friends do not see it in that light, to get education side by side with the boys with whom they will have to compete in the battle of life. I regret that we have over again this never-ending fight on the separate school question. I would rather have peace and harmony. If our Catholic friends could only see it as they ought to see it, taking advantage in Manitoba of the opportunity offered them by the public schools, they would be ready to bury the hatchet on this question and take the situation as it now exists.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I think this is the most sensible amendment which has been moved to this measure. It is not a question of separate schools so much as one of rights. I have pointed out that this section of territory that has been taken into Manitoba does not belong to that province. It is Keewatin, and the people in Keewatin have not asked to come into Manitboa; Manitoba wants to take them in. If they have any rights, those rights should be settled before they are taken in. If a vote of the people in that territory had been taken as should have been done, and the majority of the people in Keewatin had voted to go into Manitoba without any guarantee of rights, I would heartily support the Bill. I submit, on broad principle, that the people who are interested in that territory should have been consulted. If there is any question, or doubt, in the mind of anybody with reference to these claims, it should be settled in some way. Eminent lawyers in the country claim that certain rights exist. We have also a certain other school of lawyers who say those rights do not exist. Who is going to settle the question between these two opinions, given by equally competent learned men? I see nothing wrong in this amendment. We should obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court. The question would be amicably settled. More can be obtained by conciliation than by force. You cannot take these people by the scruff of the neck and throw them into something they do not want. There is nothing wrong in this proposition. It is exactly in line with the proposition made in the other House when a gentleman introduced a Bill with reference to the Ne Temere decree. A question arose as to the jurisdiction of parliament in this matter. One body of lawyers said the people of Quebec had certain rights, and another body of lawyers said they had none. The government said we will get a decision from the Supreme Court and ascertain the rights of the people. If that was the proper course to pursue in one case, is it not right in the other, more particularly as the people of the territory have not been consulted? It would have been fair to have taken a plebiscite of the people who are going to be taken into Manitoba. Not having done that, a decision of the Supreme Court would have the effect of quieting the feeling in the country, because if the finding is against our friends who submit claims, I think they will loyally accept the decision of the court and everything will be settled in a satisfactory way. If you put the Bill through in its present form, you are not going to settle the matter and you will have trouble.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—I desire to ask the hon. gentleman from Wellington one question. He seems to be wedded to one great system of public education for the whole people. It is a broad question, and that presentation of the case appeals to many. Supposing we have two schools in a town, say in Manitoba, one attended by fifty or one hundred Catholics and the other a public school attended by fifty or a hundred non-Catholics, and supposing the separate school gives a complete system of secular education; supposing, as I demonstrated the other day, that school outstripped the public school in results in secular studies, what right has he, or what right has any man, to come into that school and tell me, a Catholic, how much or how little of my faith I may teach in that school? Catholics feel deeply on this question, and no matter what comes or goes, no matter how much taxes we may have to pay to our own school, or how much we may be forced to pay to other schools, we will always and everywhere have our own system of education.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—As hon. gentlemen all know, I am a supporter of the separate school. That does not mean that I do not look with a great deal of pleasure on the good work that the public schools are doing in the dissipation of mental darkness in the country. Do not think for a moment that the supporters of separate schools are opposed to the public schools, or to the noble work they are doing. We would like to see the hand withered that would be raised against the work of dissipating mental darkness, and we would like to see the tongue that would speak against it paralyzed, but we feel that when the question of secular education has been raised to the highest pitch, religious or Christian instruction should go along with it. The hon. gentleman from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) pointed out a moment ago how necessary it was to have that secular education which would enable the child to take a high place in the professional or mercantile world. The people who send their children to the separate schools are just as anxious to have their children become proficient in those matters. We wish to be your allies, we wish to emulate you, and are proud to see our children take that high position. But the hon. gentleman from Wellington places secular education above Christian education. I say that the child who receives a secular education without religious instruction is not properly educated—his education is sorely neglected. The hon. gentleman says that this work should be done in the home, in the Sunday school, and in the church. If I wished to take up the time of the House I could point out the difficulties that lie along that line. In the Dominion of Canada there are hundreds of thousands of families where the father has to leave his house before his children are out of bed in the morning. He comes home tired at night after trying to earn a pittance to support them, or to procure the necessaries of life for the children.

When he comes home for the evening meal he has to hurry to bed to recuperate and gather his strength for his next day's work. Has that father much time to devote to the religious instruction of the child? The mother, on the little pittance she has received, has to spend the day trying to prepare victuals for the maintenance of the children. She has to attend to the washing and mending till the small hours of the morning and, therefore has not much time. The child is kept at the school five days in the week; at the end of the five days he feels the time is short enough for recreation. The Sunday schools are there, but where are the children? They are seeking the recreation and play which they think necessary to keep up their strength for the next week. Their churches are there. The ministers are there but the children are absent, searching for recreation. It is the first right of the parent to see that secular knowledge is given to the child, and it is only when the parent neglects to do his duty in that respect that the state has anything to say in regard to the education of the child. It is a matter of conscience with the Catholic parent at any rate, to teach his child. While he is as anxious as any Protestant to give that child secular knowledge, yet it is a conscientious conviction with him that his child must be taught, in addition to the teaching in regard to the islands and seas and history of the world, that there is a land beyond the sky. Whilst it is all right to learn from historians of war, and all that, he must be taught that there is a land beyond the grave and a God in Heaven. If you shut these things out from the teachings of the school the whole of the time the child is at school then I say that we are allowing this country to drift into 'infidel secularism', as some hon. gentlemen expressed it. It is a sore thing to my mind to see Protestantism and Catholicism divided on this question. They are afraid Catholicism will gain a point over them if they give them the right to teach religion in their schools, and Catholicism wants to get some privileges over them, perhaps, so both playing into the hands of secularism and infidelity. I speak as a Catholic, but I would regret very much to see the day ever come when the great fundamental principles of Christianity that are taught by the Protestant denominations of this country would be swept by the blast of infidelity or secularism. I should like to see religion taught in every school in the country, for the very reasons I have pointed out before, and for the reason that it is impossible to do that work properly in the Sunday school or in the churches, and I want to see the name of God kept in the school during the week.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I feel hesitation in addressing the House a second time on this matter. I expressed my views a few days ago, and they have not been changed since; but addresses such as those made by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay (Hon. Mr. McHugh) and the hon. gentleman on my right (Hon. Sir Richard Scott) are calculated perhaps to a certain extent to cloud the issue which is really before the Senate. The question before the House now is not whether separate schools are a good thing, not whether it is a desirable thing that religious instruction should go hand in hand with secular instruction. In regard to that all we Catholics are of one opinion. The question is this: recognizing the fact that it is desirable that there should be opportunities in the schools which the Catholic children frequent to be instructed in religion, what is the best way to bring about that result, as regards the province of Manitoba and the district of Keewatin? That is the only question. On that point my views are just as they were the other day. I think the hon. gentleman to my right, and some other hon. gentlemen, have pointed out that in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where there is no legislative protection to the Catholics, the good feeling of their fellow-citizens has given them substantially what they desired. It has not done so altogether. I wish that to be understood. I regret that there is not legislative protection also. But at any rate, the good feeling has gone a very long distance. Why is it that that good feeling does not appear to have gone as far in Manitoba? It is not, I think, that the people of Manitoba are made of very different clay from the other people in the country, but it is just this: that since the year 1890 Manitoba has been a battlefield, for the education question, and every one knows, as they say, the smaller the rat pit the more fiercely the rats fight. The feeling in Manitoba has been much stronger than it would have been if this fight had not been got up, and if there had not been an attempt on the part of the Dominion government to push Manitoba into doing something that she might have done voluntarily, but that she would not be forced to do. What good result do hon. gentlemen expect to follow from impeding and preventing the passage of this measure which is of so much consequence, not only to Manitoba, but to the whole country, the settlement of this boundary question? I really do not see that there is anything to be gained by it. The utmost that can be hoped for is that possibly the comparatively few Catholics who are in the present district of Keewatin might not be subjected to the present school law. That seems to me to be a comparatively trifling matter. I do not know how many schools there are. There might be a couple of Catholic schools in Keewatin, but that would be the outside. On the other hand, I contend that if we pass this Bill as in its present shape, it is clear from the speech made by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Larivière) and from other circumstances, that there is just at the present time a very strong inclination on the part of the government of Manitoba and of the government of Canada to settle this question, to remove the grievance altogether. Suppose that that view is correct, instead then of benefiting some three or four hundred Catholics in the district of Keewatin, you benefit the whole Catholic population of Keewatin and the present province of Manitoba, whereas the passing of any such amendment will defer this Bill going into operation and could only help the very few Catholics who are at present in the territory of Keewatin. I do not propose to go into a general discussion. Hon. gentlemen should remember this: some hon. gentlemen have spoken as though any member of this House who happened to differ from themselves in opinion is a traitor to his religion and to his country. I do not propose to put my conscience into the keeping of the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Clorən) or the hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette). These hon. gentlemen have a perfect right to entertain their own opinions. I assume their convictions are conscientious, but I have a conscience as well as they, and I am guided in what I am doing now by my conscience, and I do not think these gentlemen have any right to talk as though I was acting contrary to my conscience.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—It is on account of the way the hon. gentleman spoke on the Highways Bill—protecting the minorities.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is one of these arguments which go to show just how much logic there is in the hon. gentleman from Grandville. After a good deal of consideration I have arrived at a conclusion with respect to this matter, and while I cordially endorse everything the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott) has said about the evils of mixed schools, and all that, as a matter of conscience I feel my duty is to vote against this amendment.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It might be just as well to understand what this Manitoba school law is about which there is so much controversy. We have heard some very severe criticisms on the way in which the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba were treated by the majority in that provinct. The school law of 1897 embodies the settlement arrived at between the federal and provincial governments of that date, and that Act provides for the religious instruction, and specifies the hours, the days and all such provisions that are made. It is a short Act, and reads as follows:

An Act to Amend the Public Schools Act.
(Assented to 30th March, 1897).

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Manitoba, enacts as follows:

1. Religious teaching, to be conducted as hereinafter provided, and shall place in any public school in Manitoba;

(a) If authorized by a resolution passed by the majority of the school trustees of the district in which the school is carried on, or

(b) If a petition be presented to said school trustees asking for religous teaching and signed by the parents or guardians of at least ten children attending the school in the case of a rural school district, or by the parents or guardians of at least twenty-five children attending the school in the case of a city, town or village school.

2. Such religious teaching shall take place between the hours of 3.30 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and shall be conducted by any Christian clergyman whose charge includes any portion of the school district, or by any person duly authorized by such clergyman, or by a teacher when so authorized.

3. Where so specified in such resolution of trustees, or where so required by a petition of parents or guardians, religious teaching during the prescribed period may take place only on certain specific days of the week instead of on every teaching day.

4. In any school in towns and cities, where the average attendance of Roman Catholic children is forty or upwards, and in villages and rural districts where the average attendance of such children is twenty-five or upwards, the trustees shall, if required by a petition of parents or guardians of such number of Roman Catholic children, respectively, employ at least one duly certified Roman Catholic teacher in such school. In any school in towns, and cities where the average attendance of non-Roman Catholic children is forty or upwards, and in villages and rural districts where the average attendance of such children is twenty-five or upwards, the trustees shall, if required by the petition of parents or guardians of such children, employ at least one duly certificated non-Roman Catholic teacher.

5. Where religious teaching is required to be carried on in any school in pursuance of the foregoing provisions and there are Roman Catholics and non-Roman Catholic children attending the school. and the school room accommodation does not permit of the pupils being placed in separate rooms for the purpose of religious teaching, provision shall be made by the regulations of the department of education (which regulations the board of school trustees shall observe), whereby the time alloted to religious teaching shall be divided in such a way that the religious teaching of Roman Catholic children shall be carried on during the prescribed period on one half of the teaching days in each month, and the religious teaching of the non-Catholic children shall be carried on during the prescribed period on one half of the teaching days of each month.

6. The department of Education shall have the power to make regulations not inconsistent with the principles of this Act, for carrying into effect the provisions of this Act.

7. No separation of pupils by religious denominations shall take place during the secular school work.

8. Where the school-room accommodation at the disposal of the trustees permits, instead of allotting different days of the work to different denominations for the purpose of religious teaching, the pupils may be separated when the hour for religious teaching arrives, and placed in separate rooms.

9. No pupil shall be permitted to be present at any religious teaching unless the parents or guardians of such pupil desire it. In case the parents or guardians do not desire the attendance of pupils during such religious teaching, then such pupils shall be dismissed before the religious exercises are begun or shall remain in another room.

10. When ten of the pupils in any school speak the French language, or any language other than English, as their native language, the teaching of such pupils shall be conducted in French, or such other language, and English upon the bilingual system.

11. The provisions of 'The Public Schools Act' and amendments and of 'The Education Department Act' inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, are hereby repealed.

12. This Act shall come into force on the first day of August, A.D. 1897.

I certainly think there is a misconception in the minds of some people. I said the other day, during the debate, that I did not think the question would have arisen except for the purpose of making it a football. That has been done in Manitoba, and probably tried to be used that way elsewhere in the Dominion of Canada. As far as the Educational Act is concerned, the Catholic minority should have no cause of complaint. I cannot fully appreciate the scruples they have about religion and teaching religion during school hours. It is probably a good thing, but so far as the affairs of Manitoba are concerned, I am proud to say no such condition as has been described by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division (Hon. Mr. Cloran) exists, or ever did exist, in that province. The relations between the Catholic minority in that province and the Protestant majority are very agreeable. There is no bigotry, as far as I know in the way of Protestants persecuting Catholics, and I think the representations made here by some hon. gentlemen advocating amendments to this Bill should not be quite so severe.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I had occasion to examine this question as far back as 1908, when the proposition was made to the Manitoba government by the late government to extend the boundaries on certain lines. I then studied the question to the best of my ability and came to the conclusion that, on the question of law and on the question of policy, I would support such a Bill as the one which is now before us. What I had decided I would do when sitting on the other side of the House I determined to maintain and carry out when on this side of the House. It is a question of law and policy. I will not apologize differing on a question of law from the hon. gentleman from Victoria division. And I will not apologize to any one for deciding what is the best policy to be followed. It is a question of judgment and conscience. I have felt that the best way to serve the minority in Keewatin and Manitoba was to follow the lines I am now following. A few days ago I voted in favour of an amendment to postpone the discussion in order to allow the federal government to enter into pourparlers with the Manitoba government to see if all the grievances that are claimed to exist in Manitoba could not be removed.

I stated last night that I hesitated considerably in doing so. I was ready to speak on the second reading before the amendment was proposed, but as I felt that my speech might perhaps have some influence in weakening the decision of some of my colleagues in voting for the amendment, I abstained from speaking before the amendment was voted upon. The result was just as I had foreseen. My misgivings were absolutely correct. We separated on racial and religious lines. This is what I want to avoid, and that mistake I shall not repeat this time I shall vote against any amendment.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—As a Roman Catholic, in 1897 I accepted the settlement made by the late government of the Manitoba school question as the very best that could be made under the circumstances. While holding this view, I am free to say that I have the greatest admiration for the then Prime Minister of Canada, who took the bold and manly stand which he did in trying to push through the House a measure which he thought best for the purpose of settling the grievance of the Roman Catholics in Manitoba, but which proved his political destruction. But, as I said before, in accepting as a Roman Catholic, the settlement which was made by the late government of the Manitoba school question, and believing it was the best that could be made under the circumstances, I say that, if it was good enough for 25,000 Roman Catholics in the whole of the province of Manitoba, it should be good enough for the 50 or 100 Roman Catholics who are to be found in that portion of the Northwest Territories to be added to Manitoba. I am in favour of the Bill as prepared by the government. I am against any amendment which could in any way endanger that Bill or postpone its acceptance by the province of Manitoba. I say that I am in favour of it on political grounds. as well as on grounds of good policy. The present government cannot afford to delay the passing of a Bill of this kind, and the Liberals, who form the majority in this House, cannot take the responsibility, as a party, of delaying the acceptance of that Bill. We know that in the past five or six years the late government was charged with delaying purposely, for political or other reasons, the enlargement of the province of Manitoba. Whether right or not, the charge was made against the late government, and if to-day the majority of Liberals who compose this House were to act in such a way as to defeat the present Bill, it would be regarded simply, to my mind, as a confirmation of that charge. Therefore I say for political, as well as public reasons, I am in favour of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I move in amendment, seconded by the Hon. Mr Fiset, that the following words be added to clause 8:

And to the recognition of the rights concerning education which the minority, Catholic or Protestant, may, on reference of the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada, be found to have in the territory proposed to be annexed to the province of Manitoba by this Act.

The only effect of the amendment will be that the legislature of Manitoba will be obliged to apply to the Supreme Court in order to ascertain the rights of the Catholics in Keewatin. There is no coercion. I am sure the hon. leader of this House, who has not said a word thus far, was waiting for an amendment of this kind, and that he will rise and say that he accepts it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Have we not voted on that principle already ?

The SPEAKER—No, I think not.

The amendment was declared lost on the same division.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE — I move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Cloran, that the following clause be added to the Bill as clause 9:

Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the educational rights that the Catholic or Protestant minorities in the annexed territory have, or might have, under any law, imperial, federal, constitutional, or provincial, or derived from any treaty or compact.

In the House of Commons there was a clause like that in the Bill in favour of the Hudson's Bay Company, reserving their rights. The clause had to be stricken out because there was some objection. I wish to insert these words as clause 9.

The amendment was declared lost on the same division.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I move that this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I think it is only fair to make an explanation. The statement has been made by my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that Blake, Mackenzie, Sir John Macdonald and the others who took part in the negotiations in 1875 would not have acted as they did had they been aware of the Privy Council judgment. The Privy Council judgment was not delivered on the constitutional question, but on a mere matter of fact, and they admitted afterwards that they were wrong, as appeared by the second judgment.

The amendment was declared lost on the same division.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that after the word 'time' the following words be added:

With the understanding that the government will use its best influenec to induce the legislature of Manitoba to so amend the school law in the said province that the minority, Catholic or Protestant, may be satisfied and all causes of agitation removed.

I wish to say a few words to this amendment.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock in the afternoon.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

MANITOBA BOUNDARIES BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Opinions may be divided on the question as to whether the minority in Manitoba, as well as in the territory to be annexed, have, in law, any rights to separate schools, but I fail to see that there can be two opinions on this question: that in 1869 when the people of the Red River Valley were invited to join the Dominion of Canada they were promised separate schools. It is in black and white in the Bill of rights which was granted to those people at that time. I fail to see, also how it can be disputed that when, in 1870, the Manitoba Act was passed and the words 'by practice' were introduced into that Act, anybody can pretend to say that those words were not intended to protect the rights to separate schools. It was so admitted in almost express words by the Privy Council, and any one who has followed the events and read the Manitoba Act of 1870 cannot but conclude that the introduction of those words had that object in view. The Privy Council, however, has decided that those words were insufficient to achieve that object and the minority were non-suited. But the minority remained, all the same, with a strong moral claim, not only because of the promise made to them in 1869, but also because of the passing of the Manitoba Act with the use of those words; and it seems to me that this moral claim, although it cannot be enforced by law, is nevertheless a claim which should be respected and supported by all administrations. I think I am within the truth when I say that in another branch of parliament several ministers took the same position as I now take on this question. And if I am not mistaken, not only was that position not controverted by the right hon. Prime Minister, but it was in a way supported by him, not only by his silence when his colleagues were speaking in the House, but also by expressions which he made use of. Therefore, I say, it has been recognized by the present administration that the minorities have moral claims to separate schools. If that is recognized, I say it is the duty of the present administration to try to use its influence with the Manitoba government, not by way of coercion, but by way of obtaining justice for all classes in this Dominion; and it is its duty to see that these rights, such as they may be, that those promises, such as they were made, are respected and fulfilled, and thus try to obtain satisfaction for the minority and at the same time remove all cause of friction. My amendment is not for the purpose of preventing the Act from passing; it is merely adding to the passing of the Act this expression of opinion on the part of this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understand that this amendment, which is an addition to the motion for the third reading, does not modify in the least the Bill as it came to us from the other Chamber. It is tacking to this motion, for a third reading, a resolution expressing a wish of this Chamber. Yesterday a similar procedure was adopted when the second reading of this Bill was moved. I expressed some doubt as to the orthodoxy of this procedure, and a point of order was raised. His honour, the Speaker, declared that such an amendment could be made, and I bowed to his decision; I do not raise the point again, although I am under the impression that further reading of the authorities on the point would lead his honor, the Speaker, to alter his opinion. The situation being thus, and we being confronted with this amendment, which is in the form of a resolution by the hon. gentleman from De-Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique) I am disposed to vote for it and to strongly support it.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do so because it is, in my mind, one of the ways that can be employed to press the Manitoba government to apply its best attention to the wiping out of whatever grievances remain with the minority of that province. I heard with some emotion this morning, the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Scott) stating that liberalism and broadmindedness had not gone on increasing in this Dominion and that he was convinced that he could not pass in this parliament the separate school clause which he had passed in 1875.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He is right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It seemed to me a somewhat harsh condemnation of the men of the day, and I wondered if he was expressing the fact as it really is. We are to-day facing a situation which did not obtain in 1875. This Bill has passed as it is, in the form in which it is, because it has been felt that as a question of law it was inopportune to move amendments; at all events, a certain number of members of this Chamber were actuated by that conviction. I have no doubt that there had been an apparent exhibition of intolerance in the province of Manitoba in 1890 and I would not like to compare the sentiment there with the sentiment which exists throughout other provinces. Comparisons are odious, and comparisons that I would make to-day, seemingly favourable to a province, would, perhaps, be found to be untrue to-morrow. But here we are now with an amendment which embodies a wish—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend pardon me just at this point? I should like to raise a point of order as to this amendment. I should like to point out to the hon. the Speaker, and to this Chamber that in the first place it is not germane to the Bill. It deals with a subject which is entirely foreign to the Bill; in the second place it is repugnant to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In what respect?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The House of Commons has already passed a Bill; this House, up to the third reading, has passed a Bill dealing with a certain subject. In no sense can an amendment be made on a motion that does not propose to embody in the Bill the subject matter of the amendment itself. This House proposes to pass the Bill in its present form and to tack on to the motion for third reading a statement that it is passed on a certain understanding not disclosed in the Bill at all. Well, if we can pass a Bill and attach to the motion for third reading a statement of facts, or an understanding, not embodied in the Bill, not enclosed in the Bill, then it is quite apparent that there will be no fixity in our legislation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the worst of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the third place, it does not propose in any way to affect the Bill. The only expression that parliament can make touching upon a subject upon which it legislates, must be contained in the four corners of the Bill. If that were not the case, there would be no conclusiveness to legislation. Now, I may say in the fourth place, that this proposes giving instructions to the government, and no such precedent can be found as giving instructions to the government to deal with a subject attached to a Bill and not dealt with in the Bill. I therefore raise the question of the point of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Answering the hon. gentleman, we know the ruling of the Chair at the sitting of this honourable House yesterday when the amendment, which is printed on page 600 of the 'Minutes of this honourable House, was before us. I understood that the hon. Speaker ruled that it was merely an expression of opinion, and that it was open to this honourable House to make that expression of opinion. I submit that the amendment is exactly in the same line as that of the amendment which was dealt with yesterday, which was as follows:

That after the word 'time' the following words be added, 'with the understanding that in the proper time a clause will be added affirming the principle that the educational rights to which the people of the annexed territory may be entitled, under any law, imperial, federal, contitutional or provincial, or derived from any treaty or compact, shall be safeguarded.

Here I think it is open to this honourable House, in allowing this Bill to be read a third time, to express its opinion that the government should, as a sequence to the passing of the Bill, exercise their influence in such or such directions.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I would call attention to the fact that I think there is a distinction between the amendment moved to-day and the amendment to which reference has been made by the hon. member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique). That amendment of last night proposed that certain words should be added to the Bill after the word 'time.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—At the proper time; not then.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was to be in committee.

Hon. Mr. BELL—At the proper time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes; at the proper time.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Were not those words added as an addition to a clause in the Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The amendment of yesterday was moved to the second reading by adding to this Bill that this be read a second time with the understanding that at the proper time, or in due time, an amendment would be moved on such a line.

Hon. Mr. BELL—It seems to me that in this case I would urge the force and strength of the constitution made by the hon. leader of the government in this House. It strikes me that here we are passing the Bill yet not passing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are passing it.

Hon. Mr. BELL—If we pass this Bill with this expression of opinion as to what we think the government might or might not do, it is stultifying the House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—A recommendation for mercy.

Hon. Mr. BELL—The House might come to a resolution on a subject of any kind it likes, but to my mind it is not in order to pass a Bill with any such addition on the third reading. I have never seen such a thing done in my experience.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I just had it in my mind to raise the point which has been raised by the hon. leader of the House, for I have really grave doubts whether the amendment is in order, but it was not for me to raise the point, because I was glad to see in front of me a gentleman who was, I may say, amending himself in now declaring—though he said last night he was not going to support any more amendments—that he is willing now to support an amendment which is just about he same as the one I myself proposed. I think the amendment moved by the member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique) is just about the same amendment that I had moved myself, but he moves it in a wrong moment. I wish to say that there is a great difference between the amendment I moved on second reading, in which I affirmed a principle—saying that there was no objection to having this Bill read a second time with the understanding that on going into committee one had a right to move an amendment—and an amendment moved now that the Bill has been practically disposed of although we have no committee of the House. But now to say in an amendment that this Bill is passed with the understanding that the government do this and that, practically amounts to nothing; and although I do not raise a point of order I am pretty much inclined to say the point is well taken. If the point is not well taken I will vote for the amendment because it is on the same principle as the one I moved, because the hon. gentleman seems to repent of his vote of yesterday.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think I agree with the hon. gentleman from Grandville that this point of order is well taken.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have never known such an amendment moved to the third reading of a Bill, and it is not intended to amend the third reading as a matter of fact; it is simply intended as a sort of postscript to the motion for the third reading.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A rider.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, and it seems to me the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) would attain his end quite regularly and just as effectively by giving notice of a substantive motion to be moved at some other stage of the House.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

The SPEAKER—The decision I gave yesterday was on a motion made on the second reading of the Bill before the principle was adopted, and I quoted Bourinot on that occasion. I was answered last evening by a quotation from May. Taking May on page 472:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill to move, as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the Bill.

I took it for granted that the motion made in amendment yesterday to the second reading was a declaratory motion, affirming a principle which was not really the principle of the Bill, because the principle of the Bill is merely the annexation of a certain part of territory in the northwest to the province of Manitoba; while the other principle, coupled with that one in the motion presented yesterday, was to make that annexation under certain conditions providing that the rights of the minority of that part of the territory to be annexed would be safeguarded. That was affirming the principles of the Bill and it was promising at the same time, to bring in a motion at a further stage of the Bill. I did not think that I could at that time declare the motion out of order, and for that reason I accepted the amendment. To-day the Bill has been read a second time, the principle has been adopted; and now we are come to the third reading with another motion, but made at another stage, asking the same declaratory resolution to be grafted to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Not to the Bill.

The SPEAKER—To the third reading of the Bill. Well, if the Bill was carried with that motion on the third reading it would return to the House of Commons with that resolution attached to it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No; only the Bill would go, not the resolution.

The SPEAKER—I take it in that way. If it cannot go as amended, where is the amendment? And for that reason——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The main motion——

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order.

The SPEAKER—If the Bill does not go, it is not amended.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If the amendment does not go——

The SPEAKER—If the amendment does not go back to the House with that tail you want to put to it, it is not amended. At that stage of the proceeding I think the motion is not in order.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—(Calls for the third reading).

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—Before the third reading may I be permitted to make a short amendment, seconded by Hon. Mr. Tessier:

> That Bill (No. 115) be amended by inserting after paragraph (b) of section 2 the following: (c) where the expression 'at the union' is employed in section 22 of the Manitoba Act of 1870, 33 Victoria chapter 3, it shall be held to mean in respect of the territory added to the province by this Act the date at which this Act comes into force.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear. That is Doherty's expression of opinion. Before the motion is voted on I have much pleasure in speaking to this question, in view of the fact that the Minister of Justice, in another branch of parliament, omitted this formula and this idea in regard to the present Bill, I want the hon. leader of the House to understand that distinctly, but I do not want to put him in conflict with the Minister of Justice. I think it is the duty of the hon. leader of this House to tell us what the Minister of Justice thinks on this question. If he does not, I will do it, and I will ask the Senate to endorse the action and the expression, the opinion and the declaration of his Minister of Justice, who, in another branch of parliament, has distinctly declared that the rights of the union —Manitoba or any other province—were to be respected in regard to the present annexation. That is the declaration of the policy and the principle announced by the present Minister of Justice. The leader of this House has been very silent during all this debate, like a good owl on a tree, looking wise and saying nothing, leaving it to us poor fellows, who have to make speeches every two minutes to try and protect and secure the rights of the people, to look like fools, some people say; but I hope that our speeches, no matter how frequent in this House, will bear fruit in the future, and I hope the hon. leader of the government in this House will not repudiate the declaration of its Minister of Justice as expressed, in this amendment presented by the senator from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey). That is plain English.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend pardon me just a moment? I should like to raise a question of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am always called to order, but why didn't you call the Speaker to order last night?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out that it is proposed to amend the Manitoba Act, which is a constitutional Act and which this House cannot amend. I simply point out that it is not an amendment to this Bill, but an amendment to the Manitoba Act of 1870.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Passed by the imperial parliament.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, and confirmed by the imperial parliament.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—On that point of order, like all others, I shall——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will the hon member permit the Speaker?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Taking away the right to discuss a point of order?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, if the hon. leader did not have courage to call the Speaker to order last night, where did he get the courage to-day to interrupt me in my remarks?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a question of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am asking a plain question. I say the point of order is not well taken, and I contend——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course my hon. friend can speak to the point of order, but I rise to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Who is the judge, you or I? I am the judge of what I am saying, and I want you to understand, which evidently you don't.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And I don't think anybody else does.

The SPEAKER—Hon. gentlemen will please discuss the point of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point of order is this, that the hon. member from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey) is out of order. Now, I want the Speaker to rule on that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I want to say a word on the point of order raised by the leader of this House. My hon. friend claims that the amendment is out of order because the proposed amendment would amend the Manitoba Act. I think he is wrong. That is not the fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is what it proposes to do

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That would not by the result of the amendment. The object of the amendment is merely to define the meaning of certain words to be found in the Manitoba Act as they may be applicable in the future to the territory of Keewatin, so that it does not in the slightest degree amend the Manitoba Act.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I do not see any difference.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—If my hon. friend will wait till I am through I will answer any question he may wish to put to me. The Manitoba Act of 1870 contains the words 'at the union'; those words still remain in the Manitoba Act, just as they have been all along; they will attach to them exactly the same opinion that they have had all along in reference to the province of Manitoba, so that in no respect, in no way, does this proposed amendment amend or seek to amend the Manitoba Act. It merely purports to define the meaning of certain words in the Manitoba Act inasfar as they would be applicable to the territory which they are now annexing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend permit me by way of illustration. Suppose my hon. friend from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey) said that the word 'union' should mean the province of Ontario, what would my hon. friend say? That is practically what he does.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—But my hon. friend does not read the amendment as it is put.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Read it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The amendment says that the words 'at the union' to be found in the Manitoba Act, when applied to Keewatin, will mean a certain thing. Now, in what way does that amend the Act.

It shall be held to mean in respect of the territory added by this Act.

Surely that is not an amendment to the Manitoba Act in any way. If this amendment passes, section 22 of the Manitoba Act, will remain absolutely intact, untouched. I think the point of order is, clearly, wrongly taken.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Are we going to spend all the afternoon on this?

The SPEAKER—The amendment reads as follows:

Where the expression 'at the union' is employed in section 22 of the Manitoba Act, 1870, it shall be held to mean in respect of the territory added to the province by this Act the date at which this Act comes into force.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Surely we are getting interpretations.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is, it departs from the original compact of union between the province of Manitoba and the government of Canada as confirmed by the Imperial Act.

The SPEAKER—Yes, I understand that, but I do not understand that this amendment amends the British North America Act of 1871.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It places another meaning on the word 'union.'

The SPEAKER—It places a meaning; that meaning may be good, or it may be wrong. If it is good it does not interfere with the Act. If it is wrong, as any judge will decide, they will not be bound by the meaning that we may place on certain words in the imperial statute.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But this parliament would not have authority to place a construction on that word in a constitutional Act which has received imperial confirmation.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—This amendment seems to me essential to the second clause of this Act. Under the word 'Interpretation' it says:

"(a) 'The province' means the province of Manitoba. (b) 'The government' means his Majesty the King, etc." There is no harm to add (c) 'The union' means the union at such a date. It makes no difference to the Bill at all. That is just the interpretation of this Act, and it is a better understanding of the Act. So I think, really, the point of order is not well taken.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I do not see that we have any constitutional right to define the words of an Imperial Act and say that a word means a certain thing. We are not a body here to say what the word means; that is for the Supreme court to decide; therefore I believe we are clearly out of order. If that motion is in order then we can take an imperial Bill and give it any interpretation we want to. That is clearly out of order.

The SPEAKER—I would point out to the hon. gentleman that in 1895, when the Acts of Alberta and Saskatchewan were proposed to this House and to the House of Commons, the Prime Minister, in clause 17 of the Act—that is, in clause 16 which became 17 in the law— the parliament of Canada took upon itself to amend the British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It did exactly what we are doing now.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—No.

The SPEAKER—The parliament of Canada took upon itself to strike out all the first section of clause 93 of the British North America Act and insert in its place a new clause. The words 'denominational schools' were stricken out altogether and the words 'separate schools according to the ordinances of 1901' were put in. That was an amendment of the British North America Act. It may be said that in constituting a province the parliament may have certain rights it does not have when merely annexing territory. There may be a distinction. But I say that it has been in former days by the parliament itself. I do not mean that we have a right in this case to substitute a new clause for another one. I want a little more light on that subject than I have now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it not the fact that whenever a constitutional Act affecting this confederation was changed, altered or amended in any respect, it was done by an address of parliament to the imperial government? This parliament never took upon itself power or authority to change or amend an imperial Act. In every instance, if my recollection serves me at all, when an amendment was required in order to enable us to conduct the business of this country more expeditiously and properly, an address was presented to both Houses of parliament praying the imperial government to amend it on the lines that we desired. Now, if this amendment has the effect of interfering with or changing an Act which has been approved of by the imperial parliament, it would clearly be out of order, because we have no such power. If it be desired to amend it they would have to pursue the precedents which have been set by parliament. For myself, I frankly confess, not having had an opportunity of comparing the amendment now proposed with the Act before us to see how, if passed, it would affect it, I do not understand its bearings. If my hon. friend who moved that amendment would explain to the House, and to myself, how it is going to affect this Act or what effect it has on the Act we would be better able to understand what we are voting for.

The SPEAKER—If I understand this amendment, it is a clause added to the interpretation clause of the present Act. The present Act in section 2 has two paragraphs, (a) defining what the province of Manitoba means, and (b) defining what the word 'King' means. This motion is to add a third paragraph defining in what way we should understand the word 'union' when we read it in the British North America Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the Speaker tell me whether that is an interpretation, or a meaning, given to the interpretation clause of the Act of 1875? There is no clause in this Act giving an interpretation of any portion of it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Here is the clause that parliament adopted in 1905: Section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867 shall apply—

> 17. Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with the substitution for paragraph (1) of the said section 93, of the following paragraph:—
> (1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right of privilege with respect of separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in the said ordinances.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but that is not the point at all. That is a case where the federal government is erecting provinces out of the Northwest Territories; but this is a constitutional Act, an Act entered into between the province of Manitoba and the central government, approved by the imperial government, which is an entirely different consideration. The Northwest Territories lay there, and the central government have the right to erect those territories into provinces on whatsoever terms they choose.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Of course I do not dispute that. In one case we were creating provinces; in this case we are annexing part of a territory to a province; but I pointed out the other day—and this is a matter that has been lost sight of by my hon. friend and a great many gentlemen in this House, in discussing this matter—we are making a bargain; it is a pure and simple agreement we are making with these people; and if we take words from another statute surely we can define the meaning of these words, just as we would in making, say a collateral or additional agreement to another agreement. We say 'Here are certain words to be found in the British North America Act. Surely in making this agreement we have a right to define the meaning of those words in applying to this particular territory.' There is actually no difference whatever except that in one case we were creating provinces, and in this case we are annexing part of a territory. I say we did in 1905, almost in exact words, what is now proposed by the amendment of the hon, Mr. Coffey.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to support the point of order raised by the hon. leader of the government in this House; not, however, for the reason that he has urged in support of it, but by way of calling the attention of the hon. Speaker to the point which he has raised: In 1905 when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted this parliament was acting in the discharge of its duty under the Imperial Act of 1871 which enables this parliament to create provinces and to give them a constitution.

Of course, in keeping with the principles of the British constitution, and, as was very properly said by the hon. member from Ottawa, instead of repeating word for word, or with certain changes, as a matter of convenience only, section 93 was used by way of reference, and in making certain amendments in the reading of that section 93, parliament was clearly in the exercise of its duty. Coming now to the point of order, if the laws regarding schools had not, by the Manitoba Act, which is the constitution of the province, been made a part of the constitution of the province, then I think the amendment would be perfectly in order; but, according to my understanding of the question, by the constitutional Act of the province of Manitoba, the privileges of the minority in school matters were made a constitutional question, and that constitutional question governs the whole province, not only as it may be constituted to-day, but as it may be constituted to-morrow; and I claim that it is not because new territory may be added to the province from time to time that this parliament has a right to say that part of the territory annexed shall not be governed by the constitution of the province; the constitution has to extend to the whole province.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—By way of explaining the position I have taken on this question, and which I take again, I claim that it is part of the constitution of Manitoba and that the amendment seeks to place the new territory on a different footing as regards schools from the balance of province.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman refer to the Act passed in 1887? What does the hon. gentleman call the constitutional Act?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Act of 1870, as confirmed by the Imperial Act of 1871. It is the constitution of the province, and my point is that that constitution applies to the whole province as extended from time to time, and that it is not within the power of this parliament to prevent that constitution from applying to the whole province as it may be extended from time to time.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I think the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) has answered the hon. member from Ottawa in a way that is convincing, and I shall simply answer what our Speaker has said, by saying that in this very Bill, there is a clause for interpretation. I beg to call his attention to the fact that clause 2 interprets our Act, while the amendment gives an interpretation to an imperial Act, which makes all the difference in the world.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We have the authority of the Minister of Justice and I hope to see in the Speaker a little respect for that opinion——

The SPEAKER—I cannot decide that, and I shall leave it to the House to decide.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Possibly my hon. friend from London (Hon. Mr. Coffey) will withdraw the amendment.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—No; take a vote.

The amendment was lost on division.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The amendment may be lost, but I have the floor, and I am entitled to speak.

Hon Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Did the Speaker declare that motion lost or not?

The SPEAKER—I declared the amendment lost. I remember that the hon. member said he reserved his right to speak afterwards. While the amendment was defeated, that was lost sight of. The main motion is now before the House that this Bill be read a third time.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have realized one fact in public life, and that is, that it is perfectly useless, in a public assembly of this kind, to debate a question affecting a great national issue once that body has preconceived notions. Hon. gentlemen have made up their minds, and I am not speaking so much to the 40 members here as to the seven or eight millions outside the walls of this Chamber. I am not talking to closed minds or innate prejudice or misled prejudice.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I call the hon. member to order, he is imputing motives.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not imputing motives; I am stating conditions which cannot be denied. We cannot expect to get any results from preconceived ideas, from closed minds, or from prejudice.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Are you speaking for yourself?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am speaking for everybody, and especially for myself; I have a preconceived idea that liberty is dear. I have an open mind, and I will give the Protestants in Quebec the same freedom that I enjoy as a Catholic. There has been an unfortunate conditions of things in this House for the past ten days. On the occasion of several votes we have witnessed a condition of things that ought not to exist. One hon. gentleman deplored that when the votes were taken, hon. gentlemen were divided on racial and religious lines. I want to point out that he did not see the whole situation. The vote was not taken on such lines. On one side were both Protestants and Catholics, Irish Scotch and French. On the other side, there were poor Roman Catholics all alone. We have the consolation of knowing that we did not have an English Protestant to vote in favour of the amendment except Hon. Senator Thomas Davis and Hon. Senator McKay. I was asked how it was the Hon. Senator McKay voted with us, and I said it was because he appreciated the situation in Quebec. What would you say if in Quebec they enacted a law similar to what they have in Manitoba, and put the Protestants of Quebec under the heel of the majority? What would you say and do, how would you vote? Haven't we the same right in the year of our Lord 1912 to do what Joe Martin did in the year 1890? I was almost ashamed to hear the senator from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) declare that the law was in the interests of the people. He forgets the old days. He forgets the triumphs of the Blakes and the Mowats. The hon. gentleman from Wellington is old enough to know of these men and how they fought to safeguard the rights of the minority in Quebec. Did Mowat, or Ross or Hardy lose by standing up for the rights of the people? No. They swept the province for 33 years, simply because they stood for right, justice, honour and truth. That is the record of the Liberal party in Ontario. Would to God it was the record of the Liberal party in Manitoba. Manitoba to-day is the blackest spot on the map of the British Empire. There is no other part of the British dominions where the rights of the people are trampled upon so unscrupulously. I feel that what I am saying now, and what I have said during the past days will have no effect on the judgment of the hon. gentlemen present. I remember the feelings expressed here by the noble 13, or the devil's 13, as Sir John Macdonald called those who voted against his government on the Jesuit question. I feel in my soul that when these expressions are sent out the people will be more honest, will take them to heart and live up to them. I do not expect justice at the hands of Manitoba next year, or in ten years or, probably, in 100 years. My ancestors had to wait 700 years before they got justice. My ancestors, and the ancestors of many of you were hunted like wolves. They fought for their rights; they were not silenced by the voice of the British parliament, or the dictates of the British government. They went from hedge to hedge and learned their a, b, c's from the priest or the sister, who were obliged to go to them in disguise. They fought for long years and thank God, as a result of that fight to-day the British parliament is awake to the injustice of the past, and, as Gladstone said, injustice is enough to call down the vengeance of Heaven. The British government to-day is prepared to give to those people the right to say how they should govern themselves. Now, all we are asking in this Bill is the right of a few people to govern themselves. Oh how it sounds harsh—how it sounds, I was going to say almost devilish to hear a representative of the people say: 'But they are only a paltry hundred; why disturb the relations of Manitoba on account of that paltry number.' The man who utters that has no sentiment of Christian charity in his heart, has no sentiment of religion. Why if that were applicable to national positions, what would have happened? The French Canadian race numbers to-day in the Dominion of Canada over two millions and in the United States an equal number. If the neglect of a poor minority had been enforced by Act of parliament when Quebec was ceded to the British crown with a paltry fifty-nine or sixty thousand souls—about three thousand families—would that three thousand families, ceded to the British crown one hundred and fifty years ago, number to-day four millions and over? The British Crown at that day was more open to conviction and argument in dealing with a minority than this hon. body is to-day in regard to the paltry two thousand people in Keewatin. It is the same principle which underlies the two situations, and when a representative of the people rises on the floor of this House and asks parliament to sacrifice the rights of those people because they are few and weak and of no account, I say he is not fit to represent the people in this parliament, or in any free parliament.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. There is a rule which says that no senator shall use taxing or offensive speeches. The hon. gentleman is just now using offensive language which can be intended for nobody but myself. I call on the Speaker to see that the decency of debate is preserved in this House.

The SPEAKER—I call the attention of the hon. member from Victoria division to the fact that he must confine his remarks to the question before the House. This is the third reading of the Bill, and no sharp or taxing language should be used to designate any member of this House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am sorry the hon. gentleman took the cap to himself. There are others.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am called to order by the hon. member from Halifax; I did not intend my remarks for him alone—there are several.

The SPEAKER—I call the attention of the hon. member to this fact, that what he says is a little worse than what he said before.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, gentlemen——

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Well, hon. gentlemen, in reply to this point of order I have not in view the hon. gentleman from Halifax any more than anybody else I beg his pardon, but I say expressions of opinion have been made here on the floor of the Senate on several occasions that the minority of Keewatin should not get the protection to which they are entitled because they are small in numbers and weak, and some went so far as to say that they had not petitioned to have their rights protected. On both questions those hon. gentlemen were wrong, because the people of Keewatin had petitioned this government to protect their rights. Then, as to the population of the country, it is unworthy of a representative of the people to say that because a people are small in number and weak, their rights should be sacrificed and thrown to the dogs. I hold that the government of the day has been given ample opportunity, every possible means whereby to rectify this condition of things, and all those who have spoken in support of the amendments to the Bill have done so in the best of faith, in the interests of freedom, in the name of the constitutions, in the name and on behalf of conscience, and on behalf and in the name of a poor feeble people. Now what could the leader of the government advise his colleagues in regard to our action except to say: 'Well, gentlemen of the government, the Senate is proposing amendments, not with the object of destroying or injuring the Bill, but simply to improve it, simply to secure a little measure of protection for a poor unprotected people.' That has been our attitude from the beginning. I am now coming to my last word on this subject: I heard an hon. member say, in my presence and in the presence of others, that God Almighty could not change the Manitoba law. I thought at the time when I heard the expression that it was an awful blasphemy—'God Almighty himself, could not force Manitoba to change its law.' I do not accuse the hon. member from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Larivière) of having given expression to that statement. To my mind, it was an outrage on human decency and the respect we owe to the Deity. 'God Almighty could not compel Manitoba to change its laws' in favour of justice, truth and honour. That is a sad condition of things, and this Bill, as it is, will go to preserve the present condition of things until we, the minority, are able to convince the majority of the future—not of to-day, they are too blind, too bigoted, too dishonest to-day to admit the rights of a poor, long-suffering people.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I do not rise to propose an amendment, but just to quote the words of one who might be listened to, especially by the party now ruling this country. I desire to quote a few words from Sir George Ettiene Cartier, spoken when he was about to leave for England, for the Capital where the foundations of confederation were about to be discussed. The event took place on the 30th October, 1866, at a great banquet given to him by his admirers in the city of Montreal, and that very question which has been occupying the attention of this House for so long, and which has been before this country for the last 20 years, was brought up; it will take but a few moments to read what he said in concluding his speech. That was the question uppermost in the minds of the people at that time. It particularly occupied the attention of the Protestant minority of Quebec at that period. They were the ones who were against giving a legislature to the province of Quebec because they thought the rights of the Protestants would not be safeguarded by that legislature. They wanted legislative union, one parliament, and no provincial legislature, and the reason was that they did not want to be at the mercy of the French Catholic majority of Quebec. In order to get the confidence of the Protestant minority of Quebec, as well as assuring the French, or Catholic minority in the other parts of the Dominion that they would be as fairly treated as they would be in the province of Quebec, he said:

I am also a French Canadian, as a great number of those I see around me. I love my race, I have for it an affection which is quite natural, but as a politician and a citizen, I love also the others. And I am happy to see that through this gathering of my countrymen of all classes, of all races, of all religions, my compatriots have recognized that I posses that sentiment, I have already made the occasion in parliament to say that the Protestant minority of Lower Canada had nothing to fear from the provincial legislature under confederation. My word is engaged and, I say it once more, nothing shall be done of a nature to wound the principles and the rights of that minority. I call as witness all Protestant guests who listen to me. The word I give shall be kept; it is that of a man of honour. I see here at my sides distinguished military men whose motto is: 'to die for one's country!' What shall be the motto of the statesmen? 'keep thy word until death!'

After having said that the Protestants of Lower Canada shall have all possible guarantees, I must add that the Catholic minority of Upper Canada shall have the same guarantees, and I also give you my solemn word that it shall be so. The Catholic minority of Upper Canada shall be protected as equally as the Protestant minority of Lower Canada. All apprehensions on this subject are vain and false. Do not think of that.

I will not weary the House by reading the remainder of the speech. He speaks in many places of all the provinces of this great confederation being united and in every part, no matter whether it is in the Northwest or in the provinces by the sea, that is under confederation the rights of the minority, whether they be Catholic or Protestant, would be protected. I appeal to the hon. leader of this House. This is the voice of the dead speaking to him. It is the voice of his former leader, the one who was a great leader of the Conservative party, these were the assurances given to minorities of the confederation at the very moment when he was leaving the shores of Canada to go to England to lay the foundations of confederation, and I ask him in the name of these minorities, if the government will live up to the solemn promises made at the pact of confederation.

The motion was agreed to, on a division, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved the adoption of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate. He said: This report has been before the Senate for some days. I did not anticipate when the report was brought down that there would be any objection to what it contained. The estimates were referred by the Senate to the Internal Economy Committee as they were prepared and appeared in the General Appropriation Act, and the committee have reported as follows:

That with due regard to the constitutional rights and practices of the Senate your committee would respectfully recommend that definite instructions be given to the clerk to the effect that salaries or other emoluments can only be paid to such officers, clerks, messengers and other employees of the Senate, whose appointments have been duly made or approved by the Senate, and whose salaries have been fixed in like manner, or to such employees temporarily appointed by your Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent accounts, in so far as your Committee have been authorized to act during recess in cases of emergency.

With respect to the estimate, it contained matter with which the Senate was not made cognizant. The estimate, as prepared by the House, was prepared entirely by the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. Every dollar of expenditure by the other branch of parliament is made under chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, through the Internal Economy and Contingent Account Committee, of which the Speaker is chairman. So that all the estimates that are prepared for that branch of parliament and laid before parliament, practically, are originated by the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. In the Senate, as Bourinot states, the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts has since the formation of the Senate, been the financial adviser in respect of expenditures that are being made by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I rise to a point of order. This is clearly a money Bill, and it is for the Commons to vote this money.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is the report of our committee.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I ask the Chair to rule.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It is the report of the Internal Economy Committee in respect of the payments made by the Senate to the officials and officers appointed by the Senate under our constitutional right to do it.

The SPEAKER—I am not quite ready to dispose of the point of order without having it debated a little.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I had an idea myself of raising that point. No. 1 item is all right, but when you come to speak of a salary in the estimates, which is not before this House, I think it would be out of order, and I will raise the point of order when we come to that. The first clause is in order, but others are not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is quite clear that, under this clause, the Senate would have the right to say how the money that has been appropriated by parliament shall be distributed and paid. If the point of order was raised that the Contingent Appropriations Committee had no right to deal with subjects not referred to them, then I could understand that there might be some force in that.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I will withdraw it for the present.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It is a question as to whether this Senate shall discuss domestic matters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I suggest that they take up this report clause by clause.

On clause 1,

(1) That, with due regard to the constitutional rights and practices of the Senate, your committee would respectfully recommend that definite instructions be given to the clerk to the effect that salaries or other emoluments can only be paid to such officers, the Senate, and whose salaries have been fixed in like manner, or to such employees temporarily appointed by your Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, in so far as your committee have been authorized to act, during recess; in cases of emergency. The adoption of this recommendation shall constitute such instruction.

The SPEAKER—I think this first clause is quite out of order.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The motion is for the adoption of the first clause.

The SPEAKER—I cannot put the motion if I declare it to be out of order.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—What is out of order in respect to it?

The SPEAKER—How does the hon. gentleman reconcile his recommendations with the law, which says that the employment of officers shall be made by the Speaker of the Senate on the recommendation of the clerk and be approved by the Senate. How is the hon. gentleman going to step in and put it out of the law and out of the hands of the Speaker of this House.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—This section does not in any respect abridge the power of the Speaker or clerk.

The SPEAKER—I want to know what the committee has to do during recess.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Occasionally the appointment of pages before the House meets has been referred to this committee.

The SPEAKER—I deny the authority of the committee to act against the provisions of the law.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—In support of my point of order I might ask if the Commons vote a sum of money, how can this committee prevent that sum of money be paid out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is voted to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 has really disturbed our whole internal economy and domestic affairs in this respect. It has been assumed that this law has abridged the power of the Senate. In my judgment, no part of the law has interfered with the practice that has obtained since the Senate was formed in respect to confirming appointments, and the paying of salaries, which must be done with the approval of the Governor in Council. We already have the opinion of the Justice Department that, in the appointment of pages or other employees whose salaries are less than $500, the practice that obtained in the Senate prior to the passing of this Act still obtains. That would confirm the right of this House to confer on the Committee of Internal Economy the right to make certain appointments.

The SPEAKER—Where is that opinion to be found ?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It is in the Journals of the House. This Act says that heads of the departments, in addition to the ministers, includes the Speakers of both Houses. In the other branch of parliament the Speaker is the chairman of the Internal Economy Committee, and whatever recommendations he makes to the House are presented to the House, by the Financial Committee of the House and the estimates they prepare are sent to the Finance Minister for his approval. It is not a question of what the government may do with respect to the estimates of the Senate. Constitutionally, we are an independent branch of parliament, charged with the responsibility of determining for ourselves the legal and proper expenditure we shall make and the sum we shall draw from the revenues of Canada. If you will turn to section 2 of the Act you will see that it says: 'So much of this Act—the Civil Service Act—which relates to classification and salary shall apply' not to the creation of another official who has not been part of the official staff of the Senate, but to the permanent officers and clerks and employees of both Houses of parliament. That Act gives the Speaker of this House, and the Clerk of this House, the right to determine the classification of salaries of the permanent officers then in office. It does not give any right for the creation of new officers or the expenditure of a dollar except by the consent of the Senate. If you turn to section 45 of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908, you will see that that is the section which made us subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I would also ask you to look at sections 5, 8 and 10 of paragraph 3 of subsection 1, and 21, 22, 24 and 26 of subsection 2, 32, 33, 36 and 37 of subsection 4. The power or application of this Act with respect to this House is confined to section 45, and that section does not give the right to the minister, as head of the department, power to make appointments. The section which entitles the minister to make appointments is section 39, and that section in no sense is made to apply to either branch of parliament. The committee have no desire to trench on the rights of any officer of this House, but when the time comes in the history of this parliament when the officers of this House can trench on the rights of the Senate, then it will come pretty near time for us to consider the whole question. This does not involve any personal reflections. It is simply a question of the application of the constitutional powers and privileges of the Senate, which should be exercised by the Senate with the full responsibilities that attach to it as an independent branch of parliament. We do not wish to encroach on the rights that are given to the Speaker of the House in respect to the nomination of an officer. The Civil Service Act leaves the Senate in exactly the same position it was in if the Act had not been made to apply in that respect. The first section does not interfere with the power of the Speaker, or his deputy; I cannot see that it is possible to object to its adoption.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is the same old story that we have had every session. Under the Civil Service Act, nearly all the power and privilege formerly enjoyed by the Senate have been taken from the Contingent Accounts Committee. The Civil Service Act applies to the Senate precisely the same as it does to a minister. The Speaker represents a minister of a department and the clerk represents the deputy minister. Certain rules have to be gone through with in order to make any appointment. I fail to see in this Civil Service Act that the Internal Economy Committee have any power to interfere with matters of that kind. They may recommend. The question has suggested itself to me whether the Contingent Accounts Committee of this House has any power to deal with any questions other than that which is referred to them by the Senate. They may make recommendations. This first clause lays down what they term a constitutional right and privilege of the Senate. Where is their authority, except the power given to the Committee of Internal Economy to appoint a temporary employee? I fail to find it in the Act. They have no power to act except on such matters as are referred to them by the Senate. This clause implies, if it means anything at all, that improper payments have been made, or have been instructed to be paid by the Speaker. If that be not the conclusion to be drawn from the wording of this clause, I can see no necessity for making such a recommendation. The Internal Economy Committee must have had some basis for coming to that conclusion and for making this report, otherwise it should not have been made. Say what you please, any one reading that report can come to no other conclusion than that some improper payments have been made by officials of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—That is the report in reference to the estimates which contain amounts to be paid to the officials of the Senate. The only action the committee could take was to affirm some principle of which the Senate would approve.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The explanation bears out what I have said. If the committee had stated as a fact that money had been paid by officials without the authority of the Senate, then I could understand the reason for putting it there. It simply states that such and such payments should not be made.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—You will remember that the estimate that was before the House of Commons was before our committee. That estimate contained amounts to be paid to officials of the Senate, that had not been approved by the Senate. This affirms the fact that until they are approved by the Senate, although they appear in the Appropriation Act, this Senate will not consent to the payment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the position I take, that the inference to be drawn from the wording of this clause is, that the moneys which appear in the Appropriation Act, and which were referred to the committee, had been paid to officials which had not been approved by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It has not been paid; it has been appropriated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in the spirit of the resolution, that no money should be paid to officials unless it has been recommended by the Clerk and the Speaker and approved by the Senate. The inference to be drawn from the wording of the paragraph is that such payments have not been properly made.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Would not the hon. gentleman draw his inference far more easily by reading the paragraph that follows ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reason I did not refer to that point is, that I made the suggestion that the report should be considered paragraph by paragraph.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The mover of the resolution to adopt the report has not discussed the whole report. I think the first clause is out of order, because it just declares a principle. It is declared that the Senate has a right to make the appointment, and that it is for the committee to say what the salary shall be. The committee are to make the report to the Senate on matters that have been sent to that committee. I think the clause can be accepted by this House and when the salary is asked for, then we can see if the appointment was approved by the Senate. When we come to the other clause I will take further objection.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think a certain latitude should be given to the Speaker and the Clerk of this House to make arrangements at the commencement of the session for things that are necessary. For instance, in the case of pages, they will be anxious to know whether they are going to be engaged, so as to make arrangements to attend. The Clerk of the House, along with the Speaker, should be in a position to say to these pages that they are going to be employed. It would never do to keep all these positions in an open condition until the Committee on Internal Economy meets. The Clerk of the House should have the right to fill any of these positions, and ask the Committee on Internal Economy for their approval.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think the Internal Economy Committee should have control of all the matters referred to in this report. In the past, authority has been granted to the chairman of that committee to see that the pages, messengers, &c., were provided during the recess. There has been a sort of conflict ever since the Civil Service Act has been applied to the Senate staff. I believe the best interests of the Senate and staff could be served by the Internal Economy Committee dealing with all those matters referred to in the report. I do not see how any item in this report can be declared to be out of order, for the reason that all those matters in the report have been referred to that committee by the Senate. It is for the Senate to adopt or reject a report as they see fit. The committee have dealt with the matter as their best judgment directed. The control of our staff can be best arranged by that committee. If the Clerk and the Speaker are to direct all the affairs of the Senate, then the committee can be dispensed with at once.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but unfortunately we accepted the Civil Service Bill as it came from the House of Commons, which placed certain powers in the Speaker and Clerk, and they are in the same position as a minister of the Crown and a deputy head. They, therefore, deprive the Internal Economy Committee of the powers they formerly possessed and exercised. I quite agree that that committee should be placed in the position they occupied previously, but I say that they overstepped themselves in dealing with duties which belong to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is one function of the body which has its importance and which the hon. gentleman has not alluded to. It is that of the Governor in Council, which is the Senate. I have not examined this report in the light of the powers which have been given to his honour the Speaker.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I referred to that. I said the recommendation had to come from the Clerk to the Speaker and then be confirmed by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I always understood the recommendation come from the Clerk, or deputy Speaker, to his honour the Speaker, but these matters have been returned for discussion and concurrence by the Senate. I have always held that, although the Civil Service Act stopped there, when the Senate was seized with a report coming from his honour the Speaker, it was within its jurisdiction and power to refer the matter to any standing committee, the Internal Economy Committee, the Debates Committee, or any committee which would be most likely to deal with it more intelligently. It seems to me there is a control of the action of our ministers by the Senate, which takes the place of the Council.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What seems to trouble his honour the Speaker is that he has assumed, with regard to the employees during recess, that they are to be under the control of the chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy instead of falling to the Speaker or the Clerk of this House. The Chairman may be entrusted with those duties. The first paragraph says: 'In so far as the Chairman may be authorized to do so.' So that it is open to the Senate to leave a part of these duties to either the Clerk or the Speaker of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As there are some hon. hon. gentlemen in the House who are not familiar with the practice which has prevailed in the past, I think it may be well very briefly to state what it has been. Any hon. gentleman who looks at Bourinot will find it stated there that the Senate have been most jealous to control their own staff and keep their financial affairs in their own hands, and that the Senate have appointed a committee, which is now known as the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, which looks into all these questions and reports to the Senate. When the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 was introduced, there was a feeling on the part of a good many hon. gentlemen at first, that this Act interfered considerably with the control which the Senate had before that exercised over its employees; but when the hon. members of this House came to consider the question, they found that that was not the case. They found their action was a little more roundabout than it had been, but that the control remained still in their own hands. As it is now, if anything was to be done with respect to the salary of any officer who is receiving more than $500, the first thing is that the clerk, who is the chief executive officer of the House makes a recommendation to his honor the Speaker, and his honor the Speaker submits that recommendation to the Senate, and the Senate is then in a position, just as is the Governor in Council, with respect to the various departments under the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908, either to deal directly with the recommendation made by his honor the Speaker on the memorandum of the clerk, or if the members of this House feel that they are not sufficiently informed on the matter, not sufficiently up in the details, he may refer the matter to their Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, which is a fairly large and intelligent committee. Some of the members, at any rate, have had a great deal of experience and know a good deal about the staff of the Senate, and they consider the matter referred to them and report back to the House with their conclusion. It has been the general rule, although not a uniform rule, that the House has accepted the reports of the committee, and it does seem to me that there is no reason why we should depart from that practice. The beginning of the report means that the Senate propose to retain in their own hands, and not to depute to his honor the Speaker, or anybody else, the right to deal with these matters which, in the past, have been dealt with on the recommendation, generally, of the Internal Economy Committee. The concluding portion of this paragraph of the report says:

> In so far as your committee have been authorized to act during recess; in cases of emergency, the adoption of this recommendation shall constitute such instruction.

I think the hon. chairman, perhaps, to a certain extent, exaggerated the importance of this provision. It has not been the practice to leave the payment of messengers, or pages, to the chairman of the committee. The practice has been, as a rule, that the committee, before the close of the session, in their last report, recommend the appointment of additional pages, &c., and the same way with respect to messengers, but the committee have generally embodied in their report a recommendation that, in case any emergency should arise, before the committee is constituted at the next session of parliament, then the chairman of the committee should have the right to act pro tem, and I do not think that is an objectionable provision. Here is the report of the committee adopted by the House on the 2nd of September, 1910:

> Your committee would recommend that during recess any vacancy necessary to be filled, or appointment absolutely necessary, which under the opinion of the Justice Department does not come within the provisions of the Civil Service Act, shall be made by the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts subject to the confirmation of the Committee at the next session of parliament.

That is just what I stated the practice was. The question is whether this House shall retain the control exercised ever since the Senate was a Senate, or whether it will abandon that and allow it to pass into the hands of some other party.

The SPEAKER—I would ask the hon. gentleman if he will give me till to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have spent a great deal of time over this thing.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I cannot appreciate that there is any point of order where the matter has been referred to the committee by the Senate. I have taken the point of order. It is the old fight over again. Last session the other Speaker had the same controversy going on, and we should settle it once for all, whether the Senate are going to rule, or whether the Speaker and the Clerk will rule. Both cannot rule.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There should not be any conflict at all.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not see how there can be any conflict. It has been stated by the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier that, in so far as the power of the Senate has been abridged by the Civil Service Act, it has only been in allowing the Clerk to suggest in writing to the Speaker that certain estimates should be made. The moment the Clerk has done that, and the Speaker has reported to the House, these gentlemen are all through. They can recommend the salary, and the Senate then becomes seized of the whole proposition as completely and fully as they ever were prior to the passing of this Act. There cannot be any doubt about that. Then in respect of appointments in which there is no abridgement of power of the Internal Economy Committee under the Act, the Act does not touch that class, as will be seen from the Journals of 1910, where the opinion of the Minister of Justice will be found:

> I do not think the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 has, in relation to the Senate, any application to employees such as charwomen and pages, whose work is of a temporary character, and whose rate of pay is less than than $500 per annum.

The Speaker and the Clerk, so far as the Act is concerned, do not touch that class ot employees, and as has been read by the hon. gentleman, the appointment of certain of the employees during recess—and this report only refers to that fact—is authorized by the section, and shall still continue to be made, and they shall be paid by the Clerk out of the moneys in the hands of the Senate for that purpose. We are not affirming any new principles. We are simply establishing the fact, and I think it is the absolute duty of the Senate that we should assume the responsibility as an independent branch of parliament, without having to confer with the Finance Minister of Canada, or with the members of the government with respect to the amount of money we should require. I think it is only proper we should maintain the dignity of the Senate and assume the entire responsibility. This report does not infringe on anybody's rights.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I have raised the point of order and submitted it to the Chair, and the Chair has asked the Senate if they will allow him sufficient time in order that he may decide on this point. I have never known, during the 14 sessions I have been attending here, such a request to be refused. The Speaker desires to defer judgment, perhaps to consult authorities, and this is not a matter of general moment.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—It has been standing a month.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is a new situation when we find the Speaker is in conflict with the House, and the Speaker is going to make a ruling. Personally, I am prepared to vote against the Speaker on this matter.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I always feel inclined to support the report of the committee. They have charge of certain duties. They bring down their report, and no doubt they have inquired into all matters connected with it, and surely it is worth something to the Senate to have the report before them. The Clerk has made certain recommendations to the Speaker and the Speaker has referred them to the Internal Economy committee for report.

The SPEAKER—Not a single one of my recommendations have been brought before the House.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—However, the report is before us to be dealt with, and it seems to me the recommendations have been adopted.

The SPEAKER—Not a single one.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—It is a question whether this House has the right to make the recommendations, or his honor the Speaker. We have had this matter before us for a great many years, and the Senate has always reserved the right to make this recommendation. These recommendations have been made by the Committee on Internal Economy, and I for one feel like supporting it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see how any question of order can arise in this case, but as the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudiére thinks there is a question of order, if the Speaker feels so doubtful about the question that he requires time to consider it, I think it would be discourteous not to agree that time should be given, but inasmuch as the consideration of this report has been put off already some three or four times at the suggestion of his honor the Speaker, we should have from him a statement that he will give his decision tomorrow when the House opens, at the first sitting.

The SPEAKER—It was not at my request that the item was postponed. I never made such a demand.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I made the request.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I beg the Speaker's pardon. I was otherwise informed.

The SPEAKER—I made two or three recommendations, and they were referred to the committee and they are keeping them. They are not reported to the House, and they come here and ask permission to do what? To give orders to the Clerk to pay such employees temporarily appointed by your committee. They want to have the power to name them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, I draw the attention of his honor to the fact that these matters were referred by the Senate.

The SPEAKER—Yes, but these other matters were not referred by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have expressed a willingness as one of the members of the House to let the matter stand over if his honour will give his decision at the first sitting to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—I cannot bind myself to the first sitting, but I will render a decision to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND — Since his honour the Speaker will take it into consideration, I draw attention to the fact that the principle laid down in the first clause seems to cover the case raised in this Chamber and raised in this resolution, of the appointment of a secretary by his honour the Speaker, and as to his right to do so. I mention this because there is here a question which affects his honour the Speaker, and where he may claim from the floor of this House that he has a right to appoint the secretary without consulting the Senate, and if he has that right, then his first resolution encroaches on that right if he has such right. The hon. Speaker would be, in settling this point, further affirming his right which is contested by this resolution, and I wonder if he will be put in this false position, or if he will not prefer to leave the Chair, and have the matter decided by some one in this Chamber, or have it decided by the House.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I move that the order of the day be discharged, and that it be placed on the order of the day for the first sitting to-morrow, to be the first order after third readings.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The fourth paragraph refers to the payment of employees and recites a clause of the Civil Service Act. I think, if the hon. gentleman will look at the clause, he will find it does not apply. That only applies to the payment of permanent officers, and not temporary officers.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved the adoption of the second report of the standing Committee on Debates and Reporting of the Senate. He said: The only change is that while the sum to be paid to Mr. Holland is ten thousand dollars, the reporting of the Divorce Committee is to be extra. The second paragraph deals with the appointment of Mr. Hannay, and continues him as our press reporter, and also recommends that Mr. Cinq-Mars be continued as the reporter for the French newspapers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it proposed to continue the practice in the past in regard to the reporting?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The difference is that the reporting of the Divorce Committee will be a separate charge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I was the first member of the committee to suggest the appointment of an official reporter, believing at that time that it would be the means of having the proceedings of the Senate published in the newspapers. I have come to the conclusion now, from the reports which appear in the newspapers of the country, that the proceedings of the Senate are not considered by the press of such a character as to justify the payment of a reporter to prepare press reports. I wish it to be understood distinctly that I am not finding fault whatever with the reporter. From what I have ascertained, I believe that he prepares a very good synopsis of the proceedings, but the newspapers do not consider it of sufficient importance to publish it, and if that is the case I do not see why we should be at the expense of a service from which we receive no benefit.

The motion was agreed to.

AID TO AGRICULTURE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (100) An Act for the Aid and Encouragement of Agriculture.

He said: The purpose of this measure is that a special grant be made annually by the Dominion government to be distributed pro rata amongst the provinces, on the basis of population, to aid agriculture. It has been discussed very much of late in the press and in the House of Commons, and it is not necessary for me to deal at length with it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Does it state the amount of the annual grant?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That is one of the subjects with which you are entitled to deal under the British North America Act. Practically there are only two clauses in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. leader of the government said the Bill provided the grant to be distributed pro rata.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it is the intention of parliament to vote a sum annually to be distributed in the way mentioned. I might say, for the information of my hon. friend, that clause 2 of the Bill is the same, practically, as clause 3, in phraseology, of the Highways Bill, and it is proposed to make this distribution in practically the same way as it is proposed to make it under the Highways Bill. The matter is to be taken up with the provincial governments but with that fundamental principle that the distribution shall be on the basis I pointed out—population. It is purely for the promotion of agriculture.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Is anything said about its application?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is difficult to outline what its application may be. One province may desire it applied in a particular way and another differently, but it would have to be the result of mutual arrangement between the two governments. It is to co-operate with the population in promoting the best interests of agriculture.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —There is a very great distinction between this and the Highways Bill, inasmuch as agriculture is one of the subjects assigned by the British North America Act to the federal parliament, and they have the full right to deal with it, and everybody will desire to see agriculture aided in every way and shape that it can be done.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

At six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READING.

Bill (77) An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways—Mr. Lougheed.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAY AID BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (144) An Act respecting aid towards the construction of the Canadian Northern Alberta railway.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In 1910 legislation was passed to assist the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company in the building of a certain line. After the passing of the Act, it was found in the interest of the road to divert a portion of it. The Act made provision for the construction of the line at a point at or near Edmonton or Strathcona, in a generally western direction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This was the original charter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, at or near Brazeau, and the head waters of McLeod river for a distance not exceeding 150 miles. The government was to guarantee $13,000 per mile for the first fifty miles, and for the remainder $25,000 per mile on such debentures, or securities as the company might issue. It was afterwards determined to change the route of the line, and not to build to the Brazeau coal area. The last 34 miles was, accordingly, changed in a westerly direction towards the Yellowhead Pass, and now forms part of the transcontinental line of this particular railway. The debentures, or securities, have been sold and realized upon, and a trust mortgage was entered into in persuance of the first legislation. The Act provides for the change of route so as to have these securities applied to the first 150 miles of the main line. The change has taken place with the consent of all parties interested in the securities; consequently, there is practically no change of position so far as any of the parties interested are concerned. It is in pursuance of legislation passed in 1910.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Have we anything to show that the bondholders are satisfied?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government are satisfied that all parties interested have been duly protected, and have given their consent. Notice was sent out by the British Empire Trust Company to all the debenture holders, and consents have been received from 92 per cent of them. No objection has been received from any debenture holder.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to know from the hon. leader of the House what assistance the government are giving the company. This is just one section of the Canadian Northern.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes. The government have guaranteed the securities of the company to the extent of $13,000 per mile for the first fifty miles, and from that point westward $25,000 per mile. That would practically make it part of the Mountain section. They have taken a first mortgage upon the road, so that I think no question can possibly arise as to ample security being held by the government.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Is that a guarantee of interest as well as principal?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They guarantee the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, or whatever security may be issued. If the company make default in payment of the principal, the government would be liable, but they have the security of a first mortgage on the road.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope that when the government come to have this mortgage executed, they will see that it is in proper shape. It has sometimes happened that that has not been attended to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I may say that if the word 'implement' should happen to be in the mortgage, due force will be given to it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Will this cover the stations and terminals?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it will cover the whole of the line.

On clause 6,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may be pardoned if I make a few remarks that occur to me, although strictly they should have been made, perhaps, on the second reading. The policy of the government of aiding, as they did very generously, the Canadian Pacific railway, to build a line to and across the prairie and through the mountains to the Pacific, and after that, devoting a great deal of public money to constructing a second line across the country, the principal object being, I take it, to give a back country to Quebec and Ontario, so that Canada should not be a mere fringe on the northern border of the United States, has something to defend it, but those two roads having been constructed one of them in operation, and the other one about going into operation, I really don't see any justification for the policy of this country expending money in order to help another company to compete with those two. If another company consider there is money in the business, they should be allowed to go into it, but I do not think the country should subsidize another line to compete with those we have already helped. So far as I am aware, there is no other country in the world which has adopted the policy that Canada has followed in respect to railways and other public works. We make a practice of building public works, paying for them, practically altogether, and then allowing them to be the property of companies. For instance, there is a measure now before parliament for the construction of dry docks; it is on the same principle as that which relates to the construction of our railways; substantially the country will build the dry dock, and then the company will own it.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—From the committee, reported the Bill without amendment, and it was read the third time and passed.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (166) An Act to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act. He said: This is a Bill which will only have application in the province of British Columbia. The purpose is to extend to the Industrial School for Girls, for which the British Columbia legislature has just made provision, the same privileges and rules as already are under the Prisons and Reformatories Act applied to institutions in Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba. The clauses contained in the Bill are precisely similar to clauses which are in force in the other provinces I have mentioned in relation to similar institutions, as I am informed by the Minister of Justice.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Application to British Columbia only; respecting conviction of girls under the age of 16 years, their detention, care, discharge, etc.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I see that this only applies to girls. Is there any reason why it should not be applied to boys as well?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is because this is a girl's school.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I see in Manitoba it applies to boys only.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In some cases those institutions are for boys and in others they are for girls. In a girl's institution we make it applicable.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—There is no Act applying to boys in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware of that. This school has been specially built for girls by the province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment. The Bill was then read the third time, and passed.

EXCHEQUER COURT JUDGES' ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (168) An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to appoint an assistant judge to the Exchequer Court. This is a subject which has been discussed in this House many sessions.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, I think we threw out a Bill of that kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—More particularly in view of the fact that it has been urged that a French Canadian judge should be appointed to the Exchequer Court, on account of the necessity therefor. This Bill, therefore, provides that there shall be an assistant judge appointed, and that he shall have all the powers and jurisdiction and authority of the court; it provides also that nothing in this section shall affect the power of the registrar in respect of any question. Certain jurisdiction is given the registrar now, and it is provided that that jurisdiction shall continue to be exercised by the assistant.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the Bill specify that the assistant judge shall be French?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The reason I ask is that a judge is required who at least understands French.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The present judge understands French.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not well enough.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will see the propriety of not mentioning the nationality of the assistant judge. It is understood the new judge will be French.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. leader understands that some of our colleagues have insisted on this measure for some years past. If the present judge, or any judge, on the circuit understood the two languages there would be no necessity for an assistant.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would decidedly object to this qualification being placed on the appointment of the assistant judge, because I would hope that in due course the senior judge of that court could be taken from the province of Quebec as well as from any other province, and in that case the assistant judge would be taken from another province and would be English speaking.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Is provision to be made in the estimates this year for the salary of the assistant judge in the Exchequer Court?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I cannot say with certainity, I fully expect so. I understand the appointment will be made at an early date.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Was there not something said in the other House in regard to that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I should like to ask my hon. friend whether they cannot utilize the services of some of the judges already appointed, instead of appointing a new judge to the position. I speak particularly of the province of Ontario, because I know we have a great many more judges than are needed there, particularly the junior county court judges. It is a scandalous thing that we have two judges for nearly every county, and there is not work enough for one man half the time. It is a crying shame that neither one of the county judges has work to do one quarter of the time in many cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That applies only to county judges.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The senior judge of the county of Kent told me repeatedly a good many years ago that he would a great deal rather there was not a junior judge there, because he said: 'I have not half enough to do.' That applies to Essex, Kent, Lambton, Middlesex, Elgin and nearly all the counties, and there are only one or two counties in Ontario where two judges are really necessary. In York county there is work for two, because it is a large county, and I think there is work in Wellington. I understand that in the higher courts the work is somewhat congested, and the judges of the higher courts in the province of Ontario have all the work they can do, but it seems to me a proper thing that some of the judges that are drawing comparatively large salaries, and have scarcely anything to do should be appointed to this position instead of selecting a new man and paying an additional salary.

I do not know the conditions in the province of Quebec, but I venture to say that in the province of Quebec, and other provinces, the conditions are somewhat similar to what they are in Ontario. The charge for the judiciary of this country is getting to be a serious thing. The new government ought to take some means to remedy this state of affairs. A great many of our county court judges could be dismissed without doing any injury, and some of them might be appointed to higher positions when they become vacant.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have grave doubts as to the fact that the present judge of the Exchequer Court is overworked; I do not think he is. There has been no substantial evidence to show that he has been overworked. The present judge understands French, and I do not think any serious difficulty has arisen owing to the fact that he is not a Frenchman born. Of course, the government are economical—that is one of the lines they have taken. If they wish to show sound judgment and economy, I think they will give this appointment to Judge Dugas, who has just been retired from the Yukon bench, and who is a Frenchman and a good sound lawyer. They will save his retiring allowance and get a good man for the position.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Campbell) says the judges in Ontario have not enough to do. I have often been called upon to give expert evidence before the Exchequer Court. The Exchequer Court has a lot of technical work to do. In one instance they had the case of the Quebec, Montreal and Southern railway that occupied some two years, and required a great deal of work. A great majority of their work is technical work, requiring considerable knowledge of different matters. I was an expert witness in a case before the late Judge Burbidge in Montreal. The lawyers and witnesses were French. The Registrar of the Court told the lawyers that there was no use addressing the court, because he did not understand French. One lawyer told him that he had retained the services of an English-speaking lawyer, the Hon. F. D. Monk, but that he was engaged in another case and could not be present. There were some 40 witnesses, and the judge said he had to proceed. After considerable delay, it was decided to bring in an interpreter, and that was done, and the court sat until 1 o'clock at night trying to get through. Very often the translation could not possibly be correct. Not very long ago a man named Boucher, who is the engineer in charge of the government buoys on the St. Lawrence, was called as a witness and wished to give his evidence in French. The judge asked him to proceed in English. An election was on about that time and it was considered a crime to have a judge hearing a case in the province of Quebec who could not understand French, and I was assailed for supporting a government that would do such a thing as to have a witness speak in a language with which he was not familiar. When Judge Burbidge was hearing a case in the Yukon, involving a million dollars, it had to be adjourned. He was away for two months, and the parties had to remain until he returned. The judge of the Exchequer Court goes from one end of the country to the other, and how can justice be administered here in Ottawa when he is away?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I introduced a measure of this kind looking to the appointment of an assistant judge in the Exchequer Court. There is plenty of work for two judges. I do not think His Lordship, Mr. Justice Cassels, would say that he feels himself absolutely competent to hear a case and do justice to the parties where the witnesses speak in French. I am satisfied that he will welcome the appointment of an assistant. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Campbell) that the matter of county court judges in Ontario is one which should receive the very earnest and serious consideration of the administration. There are counties where there is not sufficient work for one judge, let alone two. The matter is quite worthy of very serious consideration. I do not quite agree with him that the judges of the county courts are available to do work which would devolve upon an assistant judge in the Exchequer Court. An Exchequer Court judge is called on to administer federal laws and he must be familiar with the laws relating to patents and other subjects of federal jurisdiction, and it is very important that there should be in a court of that kind continuity of jurisprudence, and it would not do to ask the judge of the county court of Carleton to take one case and the judge of another county to take another in the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—You could take the best judge from the county court and promote him to the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I do not see any great objection to appointing one of the county court judges to the position of assistant judge of the Exchequer Court. In this particular case it could not be carried out, because they are desirous of securing a judge who is competent to hear evidence in French. I do not urge that a French Canadian should be appointed to this position, but I do submit it is absolutely necessary that one of the judges of the Exchequer Court should be fully conversant with the French language. This Bill has my hearty support. I think it is an absolute necessity, and has been for some years, that an additional judge should be appointed. I do not think the High Court judges of Ontario have any spare time, but some county judges do not try any more than three or four cases in a year.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—My idea as to the appointment of county court judges is that the federal government has nothing to do with creating the position. The local government creates the position, and the Dominion makes the appointment. You can not remove these judges without putting others in their places.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—The hon. gentleman is quite right I intended to say that it was a matter for discussion between the federal government and the Ontario government. They are friendly, and now is a good time to take up the whole matter.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The question which has been put by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay (Hon. Mr. McHugh) is quite right. The experience of Quebec has been in the other direction. Our provincial legislators some years ago demanded the nomination of three extra judges. It is well known that in the city of Montreal the judges are up to their ears and over their heads in work and it takes three years in some cases to have a case on the roll tried. That is altogether a different position from the work of the judges in Ontario. We have had that law on our statute-book for the past several years, and the late Liberal government never filled those positions, notwithstanding the absolute need of extra judges in the city and district of Montreal, and I am not exaggerating when I say that a citizen who brings suit to recover damages, or protect his interests, cannot be heard within anywhere from two to three years, and all for the want of a sufficient number of judges to hear cases. The rooms in the court house in Montreal are occupied by judges and ten to fifteen cases placed before them every day, I cite this case to show that although the legislature creates the position, the government has not decided in all cases to fill them. If vacancies occur in Ontario in future, and I suppose they will in the ordinary course of nature, it is in the power of the government not to fill them. They have followed that course in Quebec. Where business demands the appointment of a judge they have refused to fill the position. The hon. gentleman from York mentioned half a dozen counties up west where they had nothing to do. The same thing occurs in the east. Prescott and Russell are in the same position. They have two judges in Leeds and Grenville, where my hon. friend beside me resides, and they do not know what to do. They are on boards of charity and missions.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—They are a fine pair of men.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They do nothing.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—They do lots of work.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am in sympathy with the hon. gentleman from Ottawa in pointing out that they have a real duty to perform towards the public in this matter, that when such vacancies occur, and it is not necessary to fill them, they should not be filled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This whole discussion arises out of the proposition to appoint an additional judge on the Exchequer Court. The hon. gentleman from York calls attention to the fact that in many sections in Ontario—and that is confirmed by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa—the judges have not enough work to do. I have no doubt that this statement is correct. My own county is 100 miles long and 30 or 40 miles wide, and there is quite enough for the senior and junior judges to do. But I am not so sure that the government are not to blame for the appointment of many of these men. My recollection carries me back to a time when a law was passed by the Mowat government of Ontario declaring that no junior judge would be appointed unless the county to which he was to be appointed had a certain population. Immediately after the coming into power of the late government that law was repealed, I will not say for what reason, but I know what followed. They began to appoint junior judges all through the western provinces. My hon. friend has conveniently forgotten that. It is one of those events which is apt to fasten itself upon the mind of a newspaper man. Some years ago, when, as a layman, I gave some little attention to the position of judges in the province of Quebec, I found that, while the judges in the district of Montreal were overworked, and it was almost impossible to keep abreast with the number of cases constantly brought before the courts, there were a number of judges allotted to certain districts in the lower part of the province of Quebec, who really had nothing to do, and when Mr. Chase Casgrain was Attorney General for the province of Quebec, he tried to change the mode of allotting them, and to concentrate the judges in the district of Montreal, so as to avoid the necessity of appointing extra judges. I know one case came under my notice in the Gaspé district where the judge was living in the city of Quebec in violation of the regulation which governed the appointment of judges at that time, which provided that a judge should live in the district in which he was appointed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In this case the judge had but one suit brought before him, and he paid the debt himself rather than take the trouble of going down to try it. These facts were impressed upon my mind so strongly that I was not apt to forget them It struck me that if the system proposed by Chase Casgrain had been put in force and the system of local judges had been adopted, as was the case in Ontario, the country would have been saved much expense. I gave a great deal of attention and study to the question, not studying the law, but the facts connected with the appointment of judges, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from York that in Ontario there are a number of counties in which the junior judge is altogether unnecessaary and the expense should not be incurred. I hope this government will not follow the example of the government they succeeded and appoint judges where they are not required. I hesitate not to say, and the statement is confirmed by my hon. friend, that it is little less than a crime to make appointments which are absolutely unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I admire the memory of my hon. friend who recalls this case from Gaspé, which was cited when my hon. friend was in the other Chamber. That was an extreme and exceptional case, but he is right in stating that there are many judges in Quebec who have not very much work to do, while the Montreal judges are overworked. I was surprised to hear that the same situation prevailed in Ontario. Some efforts should be made to try and remedy the evil which was pointed out by my hon. friend from Montreal, because Montreal is in dire need of three more judges in the Circuit Court of Montreal, which is similar to the Ontario County Courts. There is in Montreal a very large population, but we have to face political conditions in Quebec as in Ontario, very likely. The old idea of decentralization is firmly rooted in the county rural parts, and it is hard to persuade the members who rely on popular sentiment to alter the system when they have to face the opposition of their own electors.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second and third time and passed.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (169) 'An Act to amend the Bank Act.' He said: The object of this Bill is to extend the charters of the Canadian banks, which will expire on the 1st of July next. It also provides for the enlargement of the time for the emergency circulation. As you know, between the 1st of October and the end of January the banks can now issue an emergency circulation of 15 per cent upon their reserves, or their capitalization. It is proposed to enlarge this time from the 1st of September to the end of February, in fact giving two additional months. During this time the crop is being moved, and it is regarded as necessary that this additional time should be given so as to admit of the emergency circulation being called in. I might say that it is the intention of the government at the next session of parliament to bring down legislation consolidating the Bank Act, and otherwise amending it. In the meantime, it is proposed to overcome the absence of any legislation in that direction by extending the bank charters.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Merely temporary legislation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I see in the schedule to this Act that you are renewing the charter of the Farmers' Bank of Canada. Now the Farmers' Bank is a defunct institution. The charter is dead; they have made an assignment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but it is necessary to keep the charter alive for the purpose of winding up.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I hope when the government bring down their Bank Act that they will be careful to provide that there shall be some system of government inspection.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Take all the banks that have failed in Canada since confederation, and I venture to say there is not a single one of those failures that might not have been prevented, or the suffering and loss of the people prevented to a large extent if there had been some inspection at the head office. It has been objected that a bank having 175 branches could not be inspected, as it would be impossible to visit all those branches; but the government need not inspect a single branch, only the head office, because the history of all the failures shows that the rascality was perpetrated in the head office of the bank.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The branches are all taken care of by the head office, which sends out its inspectors, and no trouble ever arises at the branches; but the head offices are never inspected except by their own inspector, who is under the control of the general manager and the board of directors, and the general manager is usually supreme in all these bank matters. It would have a very deterring effect on the general manager if he knew that an inspector might come in at any time and examine his books. Another thing that could be done is to require the banks, when they send in monthly sworn statements to the Finance Minister, to send also copies of reports sent by branches to the head office. In this way trouble in any branch could be traced, and this would greatly facilitate the care and supervision the Minister of Finance must exercise. While not speaking from experience, I venture to say that not one dollar of loss in the Sovereign Bank need have occurred if the head office books had been inspected. The trouble has always been in the head office, and a thorough system of inspection there would have saved the depositors the loss of their money.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest that the committee stage of this Bill be postponed until to-morrow, so that hon. members who are bankers, or connected with banking matters might be present.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have been asked by a prominent merchant in Montreal to inquire whether the paper twenty-five cent shin plasters, as they are called, are being issued. I am informed that these are issued without number and signature, and practically without control. If that be so, it is a serious condition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall inquire into that matter.

The Bill was read the second time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (171) An Act to amend the Militia Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (165) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (150) An Act respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (171) An Act to amend the Quebec Savings Bank Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 27, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

Has the government been asked by the government of British Columbia to take any steps towards stopping the immigration of Chinese and Japanese into Canada? If so, what steps have been taken by the government to meet the wishes of the government of British Columbia as to this matter? Have any regulations been adopted to deal with it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no record of such correspondence having been received in the Department of the Interior.

WATER RIGHTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY BELT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK inquired:

When does the government intend bringing down the legislation which they declared to be necessary to supplement the order in council passed on December 20, 1911. Transferring the administration of the water rights in the Railway Belt of British Columbia, from the Dominion government to the provincial government of British Columbia?

What form will this legislation take?

Is the government aware that the provincial government published in the British Columbia 'Gazette' of February 10, 1912, a notice for both the Yale water district and the Kamloops water district, giving the names of the lakes, streams and rivers in each of these districts, which are supposed to be wholly or partially within the Railway Belt in each district, calling upon any person, partnership, company or municipality having any claim to water rights in the Railway Belt to file a statement of claim to water privileges according to a certain form?

Can the government state what authority the provincial government has to deal with this question as it stands at the present date?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A Bill providing for the administrative rights of the Water Powers in the Railway Belt, has been introduced in the House of Commons.

TIDES AND CURRENTS OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved:

That an Order of the Senate do issue for copies of all reports in connection with the tides and currents of the Northumberland Strait, together with any data in the way of maps or tables showing the rate of currents and tide elevation, and also any reports that may have been made in connection with the condition of ice during the winter time, or the record of the running of boats between Pictou and Georgetown, or the operation of government boats between any other points in the strait in the winter time. The fullest account from a hydrographic point of view as from a navigation point of view.

The motion was agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS AT PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATCHEWAN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS inquired:

If the government intended, during this session, to grant a subsidy for the construction of a railway between the city of Prince Albert, Sask., and Spit Lake, on the Hudson Bay railway, or from Prince Albert, Sask., direct, to one of the ports on Hudson bay.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it is not the intention of the government to grant a subsidy to this company.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the fifth report of the standing committee on the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.—Hon. Mr. Thompson.

The SPEAKER—Can the hon. gentleman give me information as to the order of reference to the Internal Economy Committee of the different subjects which form part of this report? I have looked in the minutes but could not find much about it; perhaps the hon. gentleman can help me by giving me the dates. I find one: On the 14th of March it was ordered that the salaries and contingencies of the Senate, under the head of legislation, and to be found on page 39 of the estimates made before parliament, were referred to the committee.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not think there is any other motion but that.

The order was allowed to stand until the next meeting of the House.

THE AID TO AGRICULTURE BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 100) An Act for the aid and encouragement of Agriculture.

(In the Committee).

On clause 2,

The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province, for the encouragement of agriculture, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In order that the Senate may be consistent in its action, I propose to move an amendment to this clause similar to the one that was moved to the third clause of the Bill respecting highways. The government, apparently, have decided to make the appropriations both for highways and for agriculture in proportion to the population of the several provinces. That is very satisfactory, but we would better have the thing in permanent form so that, what the government have thought is the right and proper thing to do this year, may be done every year. Governments, after all, are something like ladies—they have the privilege of changing their minds, and they sometimes do. Of course, this is not a matter of such vital importance as to the Highways Bill; it is not a question upon which a very direful conflict need arise between the two Houses. I therefore move:

That clause 2 be amended as follows: line 7, strike out 'any province' and substitute 'the several provinces of the Dominion"; line 8, strike out 'a subsidy' and substitute 'subsidies'; after 'exceeding' insert 'in the whole'; after the clause insert the following as subclause 2.

'2. The sum of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act shall be apportioned among the several provinces of the Dominion in proportion to the respective populations of such provinces as shown by the then next preceding census.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am very sorry indeed that the hon. member for Halifax has seen fit to offer this amendment. I need not repeat what I said the other day with reference to the Highway Bill. What was said then is equally applicable to this Bill. As my right hon. friend opposite (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) said yesterday, this Bill is in a different position from the Highways Bill, inasmuch as the British North America Act contemplated and made express provision that this parliament should have authority to deal with matters relating to agriculture. In the exercise of that power they have the right to vote money, and have the right to exercise their own discretion as to the distribution of that money, provided parliament will sanction such estimates as may be brought down and such appropriation as may be made. The same would apply to immigration. I need not refer to section 95 of the British North America Act which deals with both subjects, agriculture and immigration, giving authority to this parliament to deal with both.

My hon friend might as well say with reference to the appropriation for immigration: 'We shall tie you down, by a hard and fast amendment of a statute, to the distribution of the immigration grants to the various provinces of Canada.' I think no self-respecting government can accept an amendment of this kind, for the simple reason that, notwithstanding the good faith shown by the government in placing in the estimates a sum to be distributed on a 'pro rata' basis amongst the provinces, this Senate seeks to make it a hard and fast rule, by way of what I might term a constitutional amendment to the subsidy Act of the various provinces, because that is about what the amendment amounts to, thus depriving the government of that discretion which they have a right to exercise at any future time. I might say to my hon. friend —and I say it with the desire that this Senate should maintain all its rights and privileges with a view of revising legislation, and of exercising within the constitution the right that it has to revise and amend legislation,—that there are occasions when we may possibly entrench upon the right and the power which should be exercised by the government itself, and not only exercised by the government, but exercised by the House of Commons, the power of having alone the right to vote supplies, and I think that when this Senate interferes with the exercise of that particular right and prerogative of the House of Commons, then a self respecting government is bound to say 'We cannot accept such an amendment.' While we recognize the right of the Senate to make the amendments, yet, for the preservation of our own self respect and dignity, while considering the responsibility thrown upon us in making expenditures of infinitely larger sums—because this government is vested with the authority of distributing the revenue of the country—that in small amounts of this kind I doubt very much as a matter of propriety—simply putting it on that ground—the wisdom of the Senate in interfering with matters of detail in Bills of that kind. I can only say to my hon. friend, with a view, if possible, of avoiding further friction between the two Houses on the subject, that the government will not accept this amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I think there is considerable difference between the Highway Improvement Bill, or the Good Roads Bill, and this Bill. The improvement of roads Bill is a departure by which this government seeks to help the provinces in a work which belongs exclusively to the provinces. This being the fact, I have tried to convince this Chamber that it was our duty to see that the amount of the lump sum that would be voted for the purpose of helping the provinces in works which are of the exclusive domain and jurisdiction of the provinces should, at all events, be divided according to population. This Bill has for its purpose the giving of money to the provinces for agriculture. Agriculture, like railways, can be worked, developed and helped by both the provinces and the federal government. The only departure in the general administration of federal affairs and of the expenditure of federal money is in this Bill. The federal government says that it may have its work done for agriculture by the province itself, by giving it an increased subsidy, practically, or the federal government can do the work directly itself in any one province, irrespective of equality between the provinces in expenditure, I do not see any special harm in the government asking the province to do the work itself, and for that reason I am not disposed to agree with my hon. friend from Halifax in the amendment which he is now proposing when he affirms that his reason for doing so is that he desires to be consistent with his action in the Highway Bill. The federal government is asking the right to disburse the money, through the medium of a province, which it could disburse directly itself.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I am very much pleased that the grant of $500,000 has been made to agriculture. I observe in the supplementary estimates that they have given the province of Ontario $175,733.32 and the province of Quebec $139,482.40 and Nova Scotia, $34,288.45.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Based on population.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Based on the population; and I am very much delighted that they have appointed Professor James, who is the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the province of Ontario, and one of the very best agriculturists we have in the Dominion. He is conferring with the province, finding out what can be done to help to build up agriculture in the several provinces, and I am satisfied this amount of money is going to do good, divided as it is equally among the provinces according to population.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It has been my good fortune to see eye to eye on a great many occasions with the hon. leader of the government in this House. I must say, however, that in the present instance I cannot accept entirely the reasons which he has given for opposing the proposed amendment. I think it is the province of this honorable House to be the guardian of the constitution, and one of the main things in the constitution is equality between the provinces as regards the subsidies. I think that that principle is underwritten in very strong letters in the constitution. I quite agree as to the distinction which is drawn between this Bill and the Highways Bill, but I would not be disposed to go so far as to agree with the hon. gentleman when he says that it would be outside of the province of this branch of parliament to try to legislate or to amend a Bill in the direction which is sought to be done by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Senate had not the right to amend the Bill? I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman did not go so far as that, but, if I understood him well, he said it would not be proper for this House to go to that extent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I said that on the ground of policy it would not be wise for the Senate to go to that extent.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am disposed to take this position: that, as far as policy is concerned, it is a good policy for this House to affirm its rights whenever any serious question arises, and I can see no more serious question than the question of maintaining the equality between the provinces in the distribution of subsidies. There is a feeling in the country that the government—not any more this government than the late government, or other governments in olden times—have had a tendency to favour the provinces where their own party is in power, and that is a practice which should not be continued. If we intend to build up a nation we should try to broaden our ideas and not be controlled as much as we are always by party consideration; our considerations from day to day should be conducted in a broad manner. I repeat that the principle underlying our constitution is equality between the different provinces, and if the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax is merely to embody in the Bill that principle that the subsidies that are to be voted should be voted in an equal manner to the several provinces, I fail to see what objection there can be, or in what way it would be out of place for the government to accept an amendment of that kind. The hon. gentleman refers to immigration. I quite apprehend that the government might be prepared to present a Bill to this House asking for an appropriation to be devoted to the purpose of helping an individual province, especially one of the western provinces, where more importance should be given to immigration; but that would not be in the nature of a subsidy. It would be on account of special circumstances, and in the interest of the nation at large, that a provision of that kind should be made, and I quite agree that in that case a special subsidy might be voted. But this is not a Bill that is intended to apply to a case of that kind at all. It is a Bill, according to the declaration of the hon. gentleman, and according to declarations made in the other House, which is by way of subsidy to the several provinces, and which is intended to be given equally to the several provinces, and I fail to see the great objection to embody that in the Bill

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am glad to hear the hon. gentlemen from Halifax, (Hon. Mr. Power), De Lorimier (Hon. Mr Dandurand), and De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), now admit that where we are doing a favour to a province we may impose conditions. When we are giving money we can make conditions; but when we are giving land we cannot impose any condition or exercise any coercion, but must give it freely. The government say that is all right. When it is a matter of honour, conscience and religion, there can be no condition imposed. Let the government do as they like and let the minorities come down on their knees and beg for favours, when they are in the right. I congratulate the hon. gentlemen on going back on their principles. I congratulate the government that they are giving money to the provinces. If the government grants a favour to one province, let them grant it to another. The Bill provides that the Governor in Council may make a grant to any province; it would be better to say, 'grant to the several provinces of the Dominion.' That was a good provision to insert in the other Bill. That proves that we are right when dealing with the other measure, and shows that some hon. members are exercising their best senses.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—This Bill (100) An Act for the aid and encouragement of Agriculture, has been passed by the government and has been sent to us for confirmation. They come down with the supplementary estimates and they provide for a payment under the Agricultural Act. Those are the Acts they have already passed. That money is to be distributed under the Act they have passed; it can only be distributed under this Act. It is proposed that we amend the Act in such a way that the government will not accept it. What will be the effect? That the government will not distribute that money this year. That is the position the Senate will place the government in; they will lock up the money so that the government cannot distribute it. If the Senate adopts such a course as that I do not think the agriculturists of the country will think so much of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would invite my hon. friend to give a better reason than than for supporting the Bill. The statement that the government will not accept it is no reason for defeating the amendment.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—The hon. leader of the government in this House says that they will not accept it, and the Senate must take the responsibility of killing the Bill. I fully agree with the hon. member from Brockville (Hon. Mr. Derbyshire) that the agriculturists of the country will be proud of this Bill, and the fact of the money being distributed proportionately among the provinces, and to be distributed by whom ? By Mr. James, who, as the hon. gentleman says, is one of the ablest agriculturists in the country, and a Liberal besides.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I am heartily glad of that.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—He is a good man, and the government can be trusted to get good men, irrespective of politics, to do their work. The Senate would be stulifying itself if it said to the government: ' We will not accept your Bill, in view of the fact that the government have appropriated money and show that it will be distributed among the provinces equally. My hon. friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) has taken the right view of it, and I trust that the majority of this House will take the same view.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This money is voted in the subsidies and the government can spend it whether we pass this Bill or not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—The estimates say no.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Have not the government the right to expend money for this purpose without this Bill ? They are voting it, and they assume that this Bill will pass. The government want to use the Senate as a rubber stamp and the leader of the House says that no self-respecting government will submit to having its Bills amended. All we ask the government to do is to state in the Bill what they have stated to the House that they will do. They ought to be willing to put in writing what they promise to do verbally.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—The Auditor General will not allow the money to be spent otherwise than as provided under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If the government intend to distribute the money proportionately among the provinces, why do they refuse to say so in the Bill? They say 'trust us.' That is all right. We might trust the present government, but this law will be on the statute-book and may remain there with other governments in power that we could not trust. We should not allow any government to vote money en bloc in this way without giving any statement as to how it will be expended. It is striking at the very basis of responsible government. In the estimates every dollar has to be voted, and is subject to criticism. We do not trust the government to make contracts without calling for tenders for any expenditure exceeding $5,000. The adoption of the amendment will not interfere with the spending of the money.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Not a dollar of the money appropriated in the supplementary estimates can be expended except under this Act.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If we amend the Bill, we do not interfere with the expenditure in any way.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—If the government will not accept the amendment, it kills the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Why will the government not accept it?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Because they will not. You have the word of the leader of the House to that effect.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That is enough to make the country suspicious.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Prince Albert evidently does not understand the wording of the estimates or the character of the Bill. I take exception to the remarks of the hon. member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique). He attributed to the leader of this House remarks which were not made. What he said was very plain and distinct, that he did not deny the right—on the contrary he said the Senate had full power, constitutionally and otherwise, to amend Bills as they thought proper; but he added that he thought it very bad policy on the part of the Senate to so amend the Bill as to risk its passing, intimating at once that if the government were to be restricted in every movement in dealing with the different provinces, they would not submit to the indignity, more particularly when approval has been given by the House of Commons by an immense majority of the policy enunciated and adopted in the subsidies which have been granted. That is the position he took. He did not give any one ground to infer that the Senate has no right to deal with this Bill as it thinks fit. I have noticed in a Montreal newspaper charges made against the leader of this House in connection with the Highways Bill, attributing to him the inference that the hon. member from De Salaberry has drawn from the remarks he made to-day. When I read that editorial, I said to myself either the reporters or the editor of the paper had misunderstood the position taken by the leader of the government in the Senate. He affirmed then precisely what he has affirmed to-day in connection with this Bill. I do not like an impression to go abroad that a representative of the government or any one else having any knowledge of the constitutional rights of the Senate should argue that the government entertained any such idea as that attributed to the leader of the House by the hon. member from De Salaberry. The hon. gentleman speaks of this vote as if it were a subsidy pure and simple for the government to dispose of in aid of agriculture. In the estimates which we have before us it is distinctly stated that a certain amount of the money shall be devoted to special purposes in aid of agriculture, in conformity with the terms of the Bill now before the House. The amendment of the hon. member from Halifax directs how this money shall be disposed of—in other words it prevents the government from entering into any detailed arrangement as to the manner in which the money shall be spent in the different provinces. The Senate is to assume the management of this money instead of leaving the responsibility with the government, each member of which is responsible to the House of Commons and to the people for a proper distribution of the money. Any one who has been a member of the government would hesitate before becoming head of any department if he had to submit to such dictation. He would feel himself responsible to his colleagues in the cabinet in the first place, and the government would be responsible to the people for the proper administration of the departments. If the amendment should be adopted, it would place the government in a very restricted position, and shift the responsibility from them to the Senate, which is not amenable to the people. Unless the Senate intend to prevent the government carrying out this laudable policy of assisting the agricultural interests of this country in the manner they have described, it will reject the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the dignity of the Senate is something which should be considered. We are a co-ordinate branch of parliament and have our rights as well as the House of Commons has, and I am surprised to hear a veteran like the hon. member from Hastings laying down the doctrine that we should practically lie down and let the House of Commons walk over us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have laid down no such doctrine.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is contrary to parliamentary practice, and, I think, to parliamentary etiquette, that the leader of the government in this House should undertake to tell the Senate that if they pass a certain amendment it will not be accepted by the government. That is a threat which no minister has a right to hold out. If we amend the Bill, it goes to the House of Commons, and it is for the House of Commons to decide whether they will accept or reject our amendment. If the House of Commons decides that they will not accept our amendment, they send us a message couched in respectful language to the effect that they do not agree to our amendment. Then it is for the Senate to consider whether we shall imperil the expenditure of this money or yield. When that time comes it will be soon enough for hon. gentlemen to talk about losing this money. This thing of telling the Senate in advance that the government will not do certain things if the Senate make an amendment to a Bill, and threatening the Senate that if this money is lost the Senate would be responsible, is most objectionable. The money could only be lost when the Commons refused to agree when we adhered to our amendment, and we need not discuss the matter just now. What are the facts? Certain sums of money are appropriated for agriculture and various other purposes. This government came into office and found an overflowing treasury—which I do not think they ought to have found, between ourselves—and out of the benevolence of their hearts they proceed to distribute this money where they consider it will do the most good. I am not finding any fault with that policy; but this money which is being given to agriculture, like the money given to roads, is a bonus, something outside of the ordinary departmental expenditure. Is it not a perfectly right and proper thing that, if this large sum of money is to be expended, every province should get it share of the good things that Providence has sent? I think so, but the government contend that because they provide in the supplementary estimates that this money shall be distributed according to population that is enough.

Why should the government be so exceedingly sensitive as to say that if the Senate embody in this measure—which is intended to cover a number of years—the principle under which the government are distributing the money for this year, that is a gross outrage on the rights and privileges of the House of Commons? The thing is absurd. I hope the members of this House will not allow themselves to be scared out of doing what they think is right.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I see in the supplementary estimates an appropriation of $500,000, of which $139,482.40 is for the province of Quebec. If they are willing to put in the Bill a clause stating that they will expend the money as they state in the supplementary estimates, I have no objection to it; but if they insist on distributing it as they like among the provinces it is too powerful a weapon to put in the hands of any government. I did not hear the hon. leader of the House say that the government would not accept the amendment. It would not be very diplomatic on his part to say that; but if he did say it that would be sufficient to warrant me in voting against the Bill. See what is going on now? The government of the day has in its hands $500,000. There will be an election soon in the province of Quebec, and if they have the right under this Bill to distribute this money as they please, they may devote whatever portion of it they please to helping their friends in the election. We know something of politics, and what partisans are disposed to do in an election. We know there are ministers from the province of Quebec who have been swallowing their principles and they might be disposed to use some of this money to fight the Liberals in the province of Quebec. I think it would be safer to amend the Bill in the manner proposed by the hon. member from Halifax. If they will make provision for expending the money in the manner stated in the supplementary estimates, I shall have no objection to support the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The supplementary estimates ought to be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Will the hon. gentleman put it in the Bill as it appears in the supplementary estimates?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It cannot be spent any other way.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The government want to keep in their hands the power to use the money as they please in any province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The money must be distributed in accordance with the estimates.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The Bill says it may be distributed in any province. For this year it may not make much difference, since the estimates are before parliament, and there can be no objection to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I do not intend to support the amendment. My principle reason is that agriculture is one of the subjects upon which parliament has jurisdiction. Another reason is that the distribution of money for agricultural purposes is not, to my mind, on the same footing as equal distribution in aid of highways. I supported the amendment of the hon. member from Halifax, that money in aid of highways should be distributed equally, in proportion to population, between the provinces. It does not strike me that that principle is applicable to this Bill. I can see reasons why a different principle would apply. There are some provinces which are essentially agricultural and others which are not. There may be justification for the government granting aid to one province more than another because it may be essentially an agricultural province. To-day Saskatchewan and Alberta are almost exclusively agricultural provinces, and it is reasonable and equitable to say that those two provinces ought to receive probably a larger share of moneys in aid of agriculture than Ontario or Quebec even, where the development is much larger in other lines than in agriculture. To-day there are some provinces receiving industrial aid from this government which is not given to other provinces. Take for instance the bounties on lead and oil, articles which are not produced in every province. Some of the provinces have none at all. I am also reminded of the fisheries bounties, which are paid almost exclusively to the maritime provinces. So it is quite clear that if the government did grant to agricultural provinces larger aid than to other provinces, it will only be equalizing what they are doing in other respects for various industries. For the reason, that parliament has the jurisdiction to deal with agriculture, placing this Bill in a different position from the Highways Bill, and for the reason that some provinces are essentially agricultural provinces, I think the government ought to be given a free hand in making this distribution in proportion to population. What encourages me further to oppose the amendment is the fact that we have evidence in the estimates of the intention of the government, for the present at all events, to make an equal distribution. It may be at present that the provinces should get equal amounts; but the time may come when they should not. At all events, fair play in the distribution of the money is evidenced by the supplementary estimates in which we find that the appropriation is distributed in proportion to population among the provinces. It would only be fair to give the government a free hand in the expenditure of the $500,000. For my part I shall not support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—Can the leader of the House tell us if the government has decided in what way the money is to be expended? This Bill is a move in the right direction, and the government will be congratulated by the farmers at all events. As my hon. friend from Ottawa has said, the government must be given a free hand in the expenditure of the money in order that it may be expended where they think it most necessary; but I should like to ask the leader of the House if the government have so far made up their minds as to tell us in what way the money is to be expended?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, that will be the result of a conference between the different provinces and the central government.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—My hon. friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) intimated that the maritime provinces would not be entitled to a proportionate amount of this money on account of already receiving considerable subsidies in aid of the fisheries.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I did not say that, or anything like it.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—I understood him to say that already the maritime provinces were in receipt of aid with respect to the fisheries.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I spoke in a general way, but I did not say that they should not receive any of this money.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE—What I wish to point out is that they do not receive anything from the government in aid of fisheries. They only receive interest on the capital sum awarded them under the Geneva award, and the federal government merely receive the money for them. It is not aid given by parliament to the fisheries, but money that belongs of right to the maritime provinces distributed in that way.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not sure that my hon. friend's argument is right.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The remarks of the hon. member from Ottawa have elucidated the point to a considerable extent. He argued that the government might deem it advisable to encourage agriculture in one province more than another. I understand that the policy enunciated by the present administration with reference to this Bill is to encourage agriculture by way of aid to the several provinces on a basis of equality. That is one proposition; it would be quite another proposition to give special aid to agriculture in a province. The hon. gentleman says he would favour a special subsidy to the northwest provinces. I cannot agree with him in that because although those provinces are exclusively agricultural provinces, and there are large and important industries in Ontario and Quebec, the fact remains that the eastern provinces require more aid for agriculture than the western provinces, for the reason, that agriculture is much easier in the northwest than in the east; therefore I would not be disposed to approve of a policy of that kind. Does he not furnish a reason why we should not pass a Bill which could be applied either in the direction announced by the government, equally among the provinces, or applied in the direction indicated by my hon. friend. Let me deal with the present measure and with the policy of the government as announced, and if the hon. leader of this House has reason to say that the government could not approve of the amendments because it tended in any shape or form to prevent the application of the principle of the Bill, my mind is wide open to appreciate any reasons he might give in support of that contention. But what was the statement we heard—and it was what prompted me to speak on the question? We heard him say that the government could not accept the amendment. Why it should be objected to I fail to understand. The amendment is intended to sanction the principle announced by the government itself; therefore I cannot see why the government should object to the Bill if that principle is embodied in it. I agree with the hon. member from Halifax that the less we hear of statements of that kind the better. Let this House deal with measures on their merits, exercising our best judgment, and if we come in conflict with the House of Commons we shall weigh their reasons, as I hope they will weigh ours, and if we are right we should prevail.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My difficulty has not yet been removed. What troubles me in the solution of this question has not been elucidated. When the federal government is exercising its powers within its own jurisdiction, I see no principle of equality governing its action. The federal government has the right to subsidize railways. It can subsidize the railway system of one province without regard to helping railways in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Has not this House the right to reject any measure of the kind if it pleases ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Certainly, but my difficulty is that we are now declaring that the federal government shall, in the matter of helping agriculture, direct that there shall be equality between the provinces, and I do not see that the constitution requires that equality should exist in the expenditure of federal money. The government does not need to maintain equality under this head. It may declare that it will help a province in building, maintaining and conducting an experimental farm. It may help to establish an agricultural college in one province, and some other agricultural institution in another province. The government has a free hand; in such matters the principle of equality does not exist. The hon. member from De Salaberry says we are standing on the principle enunciated by the government. I differ from him as to the expression. It is the policy, not the principle, of the government to distribute the money equally amongst the provinces according to population, but, I fail to see why a future government should be hampered by singling out a province for any special work. It is true in this case that the government say they will distribute to the provinces, according to population, money to help agriculture throughout the country; but I should not like to establish a hard and fast rule of equality for the future when I do not see that principle directing the exercise of the federal powers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There seems to be some misunderstanding as to the nature of this Bill. The principle of the Bill is that the government shall have discretion in any year, when this money is voted, to make a distribution of it as they think proper, subject to a vote by parliament. There is nothing within the four corners of the Bill, so far as the principle is concerned, binding the government to make an equal distribution among the provinces; but the government say it is their intention to distribute the money pro rata amongst the various provinces.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It appears to me that you do not require the Bill at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree with my right hon. friend, because if there were no Bill at all, parliament would have voted this money and made the appropriation as it has been brought down in the estimates; but the hon. member from Halifax comes in and practically perpetuates that policy. He says: 'If you do it this year you shall do it for all time.' He practically creates a Subsidy Act for every province in Canada. The principle of the Bill does not warrant that at all. It must be left to the discretion of the government to expend the money according to its own judgment. It happens this year that the government has committed itself to parliament to make the grant on this particular basis.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the Bill were passed with the amendment, it would not close the door to the government presenting another Bill at a future session, if special circumstances called for it, entitling one province to a special amendment, to enable the government to carry out that policy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but that departs from the principle of the Bill and the policy of the government. The policy of the government expressed in the Bill is not in that particular direction. The Bill says:

> The Governor in Council may, in any one year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province, &c.

The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) practically says that whenever the government brings down an amount for distribution, it shall be divided upon an arbitrary basis amongst all the provinces of the Dominion, and notwithstanding any special conditions that may arise, warranting, say, an unequal distribution. Exigencies could arise which might warrant an entirely different distribution, yet they are bound hand and foot by this amendment to make that distribution in a particular way, and if it is necessary to specially assist some province which may be labouring under adverse conditions, a special vote, in addition to this, would have to be made. It manifestly changes the whole policy, and for that reason the government cannot see its way to accept the amendment. The government is responsible for the promulgation of policy in voting public money, and, as I have said, the House of Commons is particularly the place where supply shall be voted and where the money shall be appropriated. The government has to assume the responsibility of saying to parliament, 'We want the money appropriated or voted for such and such a purpose.' My hon. friends will readily appreciate the question of the policy when I say that it would be unwise for this Chamber to say that, notwithstanding that prerogative which is properly exercised by the House of Commons touching supply, yet we will limit it and will lay down certain arbitrary rules upon which money must be distributed. Allow me to say, also, that this amendment to the Bill was submitted to the House of Commons and was rejected, and I can only foresee another rejection of it. I express my own opinion, but one may readily assume that if the House of Commons reject an amendment to-day they are scarcely going to accept it to-morrow.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend must excuse us for feeling, occasionally, a little doubt, as to the way in which the government, if trusted with full power, are likely to distribute moneys. I have just received Bill (185), by which the government propose to give to Manitoba a property known to be worth $1,000,000 for $200,000 and they call upon us to confirm it. My hon. friend would hardly say that that is not a question on which the Senate has a right to express an opinion, and perhaps to take action?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did not say that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Here is a transaction which, prima facie, without rhyme or reason, $800,000 is to be given as a free gift to a province which returns nine supporters of the government to one member opposed to the government, whilst Saskatchewan and Alberta are left out in the cold, and get nothing for their holdings. These are things which make us doubtful about extending too blind a confidence to the government of the day.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The hon. gentleman from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) has tried to impress upon the government that if this Bill were amended by this House it would prevent the people of the different provinces from receiving the assistance placed in these supplementary estimates which I hold in my hand. I want to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that these estimates have not been passed. The Minister of Finance, who submitted these estimates to the House, refers to the Agricultural Act. As a matter of fact there is no Agricultural Act until the Bill passes both Houses. But these gentlemen have imagined that because they have said there is an Agricultural Act this Senate is not to be taken into consideration at all. They say 'We have passed it and that is all there is to it.' Now they tell us, 'You cannot change it or the government will not accept it.' If we cannot amend a Bill in the direction of improvement or in the interest of the people, what are we here for? The matter looks a little doubtful when we see them handing one million dollars worth to Manitoba for $200,000, and when we see another measure giving a subsidy to a road which has already been constructed and which belongs to the province of Ontario, the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario, it is time the Senate took action. If, then, in their wisdom they are going to assume the right to spend $500,000, should the House of Commons vote $5,000,000 they could take it in a similar manner and put the whole of it into British Columbia or Ontario, if they saw fit, or wherever they had the most friends. The people of Ontario are paying taxes for every dollar that goes into the treasury, the money they are doling out so generously is contributed by the people of Canada, and, therefore, I do not see anything wrong in safeguarding the interests of the province by providing that when any money is voted for roads, agricultural or other purposes, it should be distributed on the basis of population, and that everybody should get their share. If the Senate sees fit to amend this measure on the lines laid down by the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), it will not prevent the government from putting through the estimates; they can score out the Agricultural Bill if they will not accept it, as my hon. friend says, and they can pass the amount to be spent in aid of agriculture.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In order that my hon. friend may have no misapprehension on this point, let me say that the money will only be voted subject to the Bill, and if the Bill is not passed, the grant fails.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I think if the Senate acts wisely it will not interfere in this matter. The government is making a novel move, and I believe it is in the right direction. The people of the Dominion will endorse this measure. If we were to pass an amendment to prevent the Bill going into operation from motives of suspicion, the result would be disastrous, firstly on the country and secondly on the Senate. Allow me to say that the statement of the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) that the government would be in a position to distribute all that money into one province, is at least preposterous. That might be the case in a country where there is no responsible government or where a responsible government is just coming into existence. My hon. friend must not forget that the government can appropriate the money if it is supported by the majority. There is nothing to prevent the government voting all the surplus and applying it to one province, if the proposition is supported by a majority of the House, provided they were so unstatesmanlike or so blind as to adopt such a course We must not suppose, in a country such as ours, that the government are going to stupidly distribute the money—as is alleged by some of my hon. friends as a reason for opposing this Bill. The government will be checked by the representatives of the different provinces and equilibrium will have to be established on some fair basis. Let the government, which is in good standing with the several provinces, regulate the distribution of that money, and I am sure my hon. friend will find, within twelve months, that the distribution has been equitable. At all events, before condemning the government and placing obstacles in its way, give the measure a fair trial and see how it will work, and if the result is what my hon. friends apprehend, the country will not need the Senate to check the government; the House of Commons will do it themselves.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—I should like to read the constitutional principle that will prevail in this case. May, at page 574, says:

> That all aids and supplies, and aids to His Majesty in parliament, are the sole gifts of the Commons, and all Bills for the granting of any such aids and supplies ought to begin with the Commons, and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the Commons to direct, limit, and appoint in such Bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the House of Lords.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I think the Senate has a right to amend the Bill in the way proposed. There is a great difference between the Highways Bill and this measure. But for the reasons given by the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) and Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott) and seeing that the government intends—as evidenced by the estimates which are before us—to act in accordance with the principle which is embodied in the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power), I am of opinion that the Senate must not interfere with money Bills, particularly where there is a great principle at stake, and when they are confident that the public will support it. The reasons given are not strong enough to induce me to take the responsibility of preventing the agriculture of the country from having the benefit of the money grant which is given to them by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—The hon. leader of the House made a declaration that the policy of the government was to expend the money pro rata in the different provinces. After listening to the quotation from May, read by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Sir Richard Scott), I do not feel like supporting the amendment. I find the government is very touchy on questions reflecting on their right to deal with these matters. I am a layman, but I understand it is a maxim in law that individuals can make a verbal bargain, and that bargain holds good until decided differently in a court of law. I have no doubt governments can do the same thing, but I have always understood that you could not make a bargain partly verbally and partly in writing. When you come to court the part in writing holds good and the verbal part is discarded. If I am wrong I should like to be put right. If my proposition is correct I do not see why it is any reflection on this government, to have inserted in the Bill the policy on which the distribution is going to take place.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—In regard to encouraging agriculture, I do not agree with the policy embodied in the Bill. The intention may be honest enough, but if the money is to be spent in agriculture I think it should be based only on the population of the people engaged in that industry; otherwise it would work out unfairly in Prince Edward Island. That province produces more agricultural products than Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. They produce a million bushels more of wheat, oats, &c., than Nova Scotia and 500,000 bushels more than New Brunswick. Nova Scotia receives more than Prince Edward Island and I think the distribution should be on a different basis.

The committee divided on the amendment which was lost on the following vote:

Contents 12, non-contents 32.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into committee of the whole on Bill (169) An Act to amend the Bank Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I explained on the second reading of the Bill that the object was to renew the charters of the banks for one year from the 1st July next to the 1st July 1913. The government hopes, at the next session of parliament, to bring down legislation touching the renewal of the charters of banks. Then there is another clause providing for enlarging, or extending the time for the emergency circulation. As the hon. gentleman will know, the banks are given authority during certain periods of the year to enlarge their circulation by 15 per cent of their reserve, or capital stock. It is proposed now to enlarge the time during which they may issue the emergency circulation from the 1st October to the end of January, as at present, to from September 1st to the end of February. The conditions in the west during the movement of the crop warrant this being done.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No objection to that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is another provision for the calling in of notes under $5, or in multiples of $5. That is provided for in subsection 10 of section 4.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is it for the purpose of withdrawing the $4 bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I think I may say that.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Would it not be well to insert a provision that they may issue nothing but clean notes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The notes are clean when they are issued.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend would do well to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the disgraceful state of the ones and twos which are in circulation. I think it is the fault of the banks that they will not send in dirty notes and obtain clean ones. I have seen notes in circulation which are a perfect disgrace to any community, and which, very likely, might contain the germs of many diseases.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall call attention to it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is quite true this clause was put in by the government of which I was a member, and technically I was responsible for it, but I really think that these emergancy notes which will serve a valuable purpose in facilitating the transaction of business, particularly in the northwest, should not be charged for at the rate of 5 per cent. The government should rather encourage the issue than penalize it. The 5 per cent is too much and interferes a good deal with the disposition of the banks to make those issues. The privilege is of very great value, not so much to the banks as to the agricultural community, and it is a tax in reality, on the producers and the sellers of agricultural produce that this 5 per cent should be kept up. It is very proper that some tax should be imposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will see that is the maximum. The Governor in Council might make it less.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, but the tendency of these departments is to take all they can get.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—And look for more.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I should like to see it cut down rather than have it remain at 5 per cent. To a considerable extent it militates against the advantage which would arise from the issue of those notes, particularly in the grain growing provinces of the northwest in which my hon. friend is interested.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It gave them that additional capital.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But they are not disposed to use it to anything like the extent they would if the interest were lower.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Have the banks used that privilege to any extent? Banks will not borrow money at 5 per cent, because it is equivalent to that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is equivalent to more, because properly managed banks keep a considerable reserve for all their additional circulation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot say to what extent the emergency circulation is used.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—I think the point is well taken. There should be some such encouragement to the banks to take advantage of this emergency provision as much as possible. In the case of a very large harvest, the amount used in this way would be altogether insufficient to meet the demands for circulation, and I think it is in the interests of the government and of the country to make it 4 per cent instead of 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Make it 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall call attention to the matter.

Hon. Mr. KERR, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (138) An Act to incorporate the Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (156) An Act to amend the Judges Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (167) An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Associations.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (178) An Act to provide an additional annual grant to the province of Prince Edward Island.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (179) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

GRESHAM GUARANTEE COMPANY BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS REJECTED.

A message was received from the House of Commons, returning Bill (Y 2) An Act to consolidate and amend the Act relating to the Dominion Gresham Guarantee Company, with an amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Hon. Mr. Casgrain has asked me to take charge of this Bill for him. He has been informed that at a very slim meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other House, clause 14 was rejected. The committee had not been made aware of the fact that this is a consolidation of the Acts of the Dominion Burglary Guarantee Company, which was changed by Act to the name of 'The Dominion Guarantee Company,' and which will now be the Dominion Gresham Guarantee Company; the clause of the statute which covered this being more especially 1 Edward VII, chapter 95, An Act respecting the Burglary Guarantee Company. Clause 5 of that Act was simply carried by consolidation into this Bill. The company proceeded to consolidate its Act, retaining most of the clauses of the preceding Act, and has incorporated in this consolidation a power which it has already obtained under 1 Edward VII. For that reason I would ask that the Senate do not concur in the Commons amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And also because it has been the practice of parliament to pass Bills embodying that clause.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I will draft the reasons, and a message will be sent to the Commons to the effect that we do not concur in their amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CAPITAL TRUST CORPORATION BILL.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (W 2) An Act to incorporate the Capital Trust Corporation Limited, with an amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Finance Department always insisted that a quorum shall consist of a majority of members. It has been pointed out that this is almost impossible, because many of the directors of these companies reside in different parts of the Dominion. However, I make no motion in the matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As no one seems to be in charge of the Bill, it might be laid on the table.

The message was laid on the table.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine Proceedings.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The order of the day being called,

Consideration of the fifth report of the Standing Committee on the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.—Hon. Mr. Thompson.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Does the Speaker desire to make any reference to the matter referred to him?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I do. A point of order having been raised to the adoption of this report, I am now prepared to give my ruling.

The report of the committee is supposed to contain four recommendations which it is intended to submit to the approval of this House.

First recommendation—That instructions be given to the Clerk of the Senate to pay the employees whom the Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts have appointed or intend to appoint during recess, in case of emergency.

Second recommendation — That the Speaker of the Senate, having no need of a private secretary, the salary of the latter be suspended after the 31st instant.

Third recommendation—It is not a recommendation, but simply an assertion of the fact that the committee have been advised that an item vaguely alluded to but not specified in the estimates of 1913 shall not appear in the expenditure chargeable to the Senate.

Fourth recommendation—That in the opinion of the committee, the Senate would act illegally and in contravention with clause 38 of the Civil Service Act, 1908, should they adopt the suggestion of the Speaker to pay an additional sum of $10 per month $120 per annum) to a certain R. McKay, night watchman.

The first recommendation is directly contrary to law, and more especially to clauses 22 and 23 of the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, which reserves to the Senate itself, but on the necessary and express recommendation of its Speaker, the appointment of those employees aimed at by the report of the committee.

The substitution of the committee's action to that of the Senate advised by its Speaker, is illegal, and the recommendation of the committee of such an illegality is itself illegal in the eyes of the law.

Moreover, the committee have no right whatever to make such a recommendation, because they have neither the liberty nor the power to go beyond the limits defined by an Order of this House, Order which creates their existence and gives them jurisdiction.

This Order adopted on the 23rd November, 1911, reads as follows:

> The Hon. Mr. Lougheed moved, seconded by the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell,
>
> That the senators mentioned in the report of the Committee of Selection as having been chosen to serve on the several Standing Committees during the present session, be and they are hereby appointed to form part and constitute the several committees with which their respective names appear in said report, to inquire into and report upon such matters as may be referred to them from time to time; and the Committee on Standing Orders is authorized to send for persons, papers and records required.
> The question of concurrence being put thereon, the same was resolved in the affirmative, and
> Ordered accordingly.

Committees in general have a right to report only on subjects specially submitted to their deliberations.

Or, nothing in the subjects already submitted to the deliberations of the committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, has any bearing on the particular subject now incorporated in the recommendation which is asked to be submitted to the approval of this House.

For the second reason, the first recommendation of the Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, is out of order.

The second recommendation concerning the appointment made by the Speaker of the Senate of a private secretary, is equally illegal, inasmuch as it constitutes an usurpation of power which the committee cannot have.

The Senate, and still less the Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, have no jurisdiction in the matter.

The right to have a private secretary and the selection of the same belong exclusively to the Minister.

So says the law, and I quote it:

> 7-8 Ed. VII., chap. 15, sec. 39.
> Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be appointed for a period not exceeding one year, and paid as a clerk in subdivision 'B' of the second division, and after one year's service as such secretary he shall be deemed to be appointed to such rank.

If we now consult the revised statutes of Canada, chapter 16, section 81—we find:

> 81. Any member of the civil service may be appointed private secretary to the head of a department, and may be paid an additional salary not exceeding six hundred dollars a year whilst so acting.
> 2. No salary shall be payable to any private secretary unless the amount has been voted by parliament.

What does that expression 'Head of a department' mean? The law will give the answer. The revised statutes of Canada, chapter 16, section 2, paragraph (a) says:

'Head of a department' means the minister of the Crown for the time being presiding over the department.

When the Civil Service Amendment Act 1908, was enacted on the 20th July, 1908, and became the law of the land, it contained the following paragraphs (7-8) Edward VII, chapter 15, section 2, paragraph (c):

'Head of a department' in addition to the ministers mentioned in paragraph (a) of section 2 of the Civil Service Act, includes the Speakers of both Houses.

There is no possible ambiguity in the interpretation of the law as it stands, and the committee have no right to substitute themselves, in the application of the law, to the person whom the law itself designates and empowers with the right of executing it.

The recommendation of the committee is consequently out of order because it clashes with the law and is still out of order because the subject which forms the basis of such a recommendation has never been submitted by the House to the deliberations of the committee.

I asked the chairman of that committee this morning what was the recommendation on that particular question to the committee. The answer was that it was to be found on page 258 of the 'Minutes of Proceedings.' The entry I find there is as follows:

On motion of the Honourable Mr. Thompson, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Power, it was Ordered, that the salaries and contingencies of the Senate, under the head of legislation, and found on page 39 of the estimates laid before parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1913. be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingents Accounts of the Senate.

If we look at page 39 of the estimates, we find nothing at all in reference to the salary of the Speaker's secretary. The only reference like that in any way is to the secretary of the hon. leader of the Senate, and that I suppose formed the subject of the third resolution, which says, that the committee has been advised that no such expenditure would be chargeable to the Senate without stating why.

The third reason which makes it perfectly clear that such a recommendation is out of order is because it claims to prevent, contrary to law and parliamentary practice, the payment of a sum of money submitted by the Crown to the House of Commons for their approval.

The law says: (Revised statutes of Canada, chapter 16, section 81, paragraph (2)

No salary shall be payable to any private secretary unless the amount has been voted by parliament.

All parliamentary authorities refuse to the Senate the right of selecting out of the appropriations voted by the House of Commons, a single item, and make it the subject of a rejection by the Upper House. What the Senate cannot do, its committee has no right to recommend it to be done.

For these three reasons the second recommendation made by the committee is out of order.

The third recommendation, is in no way a recommendation at all. It is simply an assertion that the committee has been advised on the subject of a money appropriation in relation to which the committee has no right, for the treble reason, that such a subject has never been referred to them, that the law cannot be laid aside by any of their declarations, and that no committee has any right to recommend the elimination of a single item of the estimates.

For all the reasons given above, I declare the report out of order and decline to ask this House to adopt it.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I presume it will be right and proper that I should take up the report, even after the Speaker's decision?

The SPEAKER—I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is his intention to appeal from my decision?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It certainly is. If the Senate is up against the Speaker in regard to financial matters, if he can dictate to the Senate what it shall do and what it shall not do, it is time we fully understand the situation.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I have no objection whatever to discuss the report, but I should like to know if an appeal from the decision of the Speaker can be discussed.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is out of order in discussing the subject. He can appeal from my decision, but without discussion.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I am going to appeal to the Senate.

The SPEAKER—I will call in the members if you wish.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—We are tied up pretty short.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand the practice to be that the hon. gentleman simply states to the Senate that he dissents from the finding of the Speaker, and, therefore, moves that the ruling of the Speaker be not concurred in by the Senate.

The SPEAKER—He has that right.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Then I make that motion.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Is the point of order taken on the first clause of the report or on the whole report?

The SPEAKER—The point of order is taken on the report as it stands.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Call in the members.

The SPEAKER—Let the members be called in.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I take the liberty of making a suggestion. We have a judgment from the hon. the Speaker and there has been an appeal from it.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No hon. member can occupy the floor, and no other business can take place, after the members are called in and before the vote has been taken.

The members being called in,

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON.

The SPEAKER—The question is on a decision given by the Speaker, declaring out of order the report of the Committee on Internal Economy. The question is now, shall this decision be sustained.

The House divided on the question, the decision of the Speaker being reversed on the following division:

Contents 14, non-contents 31.

The SPEAKER—The decision is reversed.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved concurrence in the report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was understood that the report was to be considered clause by clause.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I move the adoption of the first clause.

(Hon. Mr. ELLIS in the Speaker's Chair.)

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—The first clause of the report reads:

(1) That, with due regard to the constitutional rights and practices of the Senate, your committee would respectfully recommend that definite instructions be given to the Clerk to the effect that salaries or other emoluments can only be paid to such officers, clerks, messengers, and other employees of the Senate, whose appointments have been duly made or approved by the Senate, and whose salaries have been fixed in like manner.

To that I have no objection. The report continues:

Or to such employees, temporarily appointed by your Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, in so far as your committee have been authorized to act during recess in case of emergency.

The adoption of this recommendation shall constitute such instruction.

I contended that this last part of the report, giving the Internal Economy Committe the right to nominate persons in the lower grade, is against the law, and I will prove it. Clause 22 of the Civil Service Act says:

The appointment to positions of porters, sorters, messengers and packers and such other positions in the lower grade as are determined by the Governor in Council, may be made by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the head of the department based on the report in writing by the deputy head.

By this last clause of the first recommendation, the committee is asked to do a thing which pertains to the Senate upon the recommendation of the Speaker. This is against the law. It shall never be carried and no man appointed by the Senate under those conditions shall be paid by the Auditor General. Therefore, I was right when I said just now that it was illegal.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The hon. gentleman has called attention to section 22 of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 and has read it correctly, but if the hon. gentleman would take the law in its application to the Senate and Commons, and also to the Governor in Council, he would find duplicate words as follows:

> Appointments to positions of porters, sorters, messengers and packers and such other positions in the lower grade as are determined by the Governor in Council.

In section 32 it limits the power of the Governor in Council to deal with certain of the employees whose salaries are less than $500. It uses exactly the same terms. It says:

> For the positions of porters, sorters, messengers and packers and such other positions in the lower grade as are determined by the Governor in Council, the minimum and maximum salaries shall be $500 and $800.

This was referred to the Minister of Justice and he reported on February 10, as follows:

> I do not think the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 has, in relation to the Senate, any application to employees, such as charwomen and pages, whose work is of a temporary character, and whose rate of pay is necessarily less than $500 per annum.

There is the judgment of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Not the Minister.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—E. L. Newcombe, deputy Minister of Justice. It was brought to this House and confirmed by this House as their judgment. Believing in the opinion as expressed by the deputy Minister of Justice, your committee subsequently passed this report on the 2nd May, 1910:

> Your committee recommend that during recess any vacancy necessary to be filled, or appointment absolutely necessary, which, under the opinion of the Justice Department does not come within the provisions of the Civil Service Act, shall be made by the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts subject to the confirmation of the said committee at the next session of parliament.

This first clause practically refers to the right of this committee, authorized by this House, to act in respect of the jurisdiction which the Minister of Justice claims the Senate or committee had in reference to the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I did not vote a moment ago on the appeal from the decision of the Speaker, because, as I intimated, the Speaker was deciding on the whole report and we were only on the first recommendation. The committee disagreed with the Speaker on the recommendation. I would have voted against the point of order, but I think the other provisions are correct. As to the first recommendation, supposing the law should be as his hon. the Speaker stated, that the report is not in order, there is nothing to prevent the committee asking the House to make such a declaration; there is nothing in the declaration which deprives the Senate of one iota of its rights. Therefore, there is nothing in it to which we can object. If the report will make a declaration that all the messengers or other employees should be appointed by the Senate, it would be quite different, but as the report is simply a declaration saying that when an employee is duly appointed or recommended or accepted by the Senate, then the Senate will pay him or any other employee whom the committee may appoint. There is no harm in that, but then the question will come up, in the point of view of his honour the Speaker, if, later on, the Committee on Internal Economy shall appoint a man and come before this House with a recommendation to accept that appointment. I see nothing in this report which is not in order. I was against the Speaker on this point but not as to the other matter. I concur in the first recommendation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. Speaker will correct me if I misunderstood his contention, but I understood his argument on this question to be, dealing with the second part of the first paragraph, that the initiative is with the Speaker, and on the recommendation of the Clerk of the House. I quite agree with the hon. Speaker that the Senate can act only on the recommendation of the Speaker, but my contention is that the second part of the first paragraph has to be read as if the wording were in this way:

So far as your committee may have been authorized to act during recess in case of emergency upon the proper recommendation according to the statute.

When the report said the committee had been authorized we have to assume that the committee has been properly authorized to do it. If it is a condition, so that the committee may be properly authorized, that it must come on the initiative of the Speaker, then the meaning of the clause of the report supposes that that has taken place and that the Senate has acted on the initiative of the Speaker. The point raised by the Speaker assuming that the Senate may act irrespective of any initiative of the Speaker, is not correct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I want to answer that reference to the letter of Mr. Newcombe. He says it is not necessery to inquire into the authority of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, but he adds so far as it has not been set aside by an enactment of the law. And that is just what has happened—it has been modified by the statute. The hon. member answered me by quoting section 32. That is not a reply to my contention. Section 22 of the Act says that these nominations shall be on the initiative of the Speaker. Does clause 32 contradict the clause at all? One relates to the classification and salary of employees, and the other to appointments. We should be careful not to confound the two sections.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The hon. gentleman should ask the opinion of the Minister of Justice on that point.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I will not ask for the opinion of the Minister of Justice on that point, because I understand what the law says. The hon. gentleman tried to get an expression of opinion from the deputy minister, and the deputy minister did not give a decision of that kind. He says, so far this has not been set aside by an enactment of the law. but we have an enactment of the law, and to-day, by the law, the Speaker has a right to make recommendations for the approval of the House. If the Speaker has recommended a person where does he take his authority? He takes it from the law.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Does the hon. the Speaker deny that if the report read as I am going to read the last part of it, that it would be open to his objection?—

Or to such employees temporarily appointed by your committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts in so far as your committee may have been authorized to act during the recess in cases of emergency on the recommendation of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—My hon. friend asks me if the report was altogether different from what it is now would it be right? Certainly if it is an entirely new report, and if all that is objectionable in the report is taken out, I would not say the same thing. But I take the report as it stands, and that report calls for an order of the House to pay the employees named by the committee. I deny the right of the committee to nominate employees, and as they have no right to name the employees, nobody can give the Clerk the order to pay them.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Would the Speaker be kind enough to say whether the Senate has divested itself entirely of its power?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—The day we accepted the Civil Service Amendment Act we became bound by that law.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The minister of Justice does not say that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think his hon. the Speaker is making a mountain out of a mole hill. The portion of the first clause of the report which he objects to really does not infringe the law in any way. It simply makes provision, as has always been made, for the appointment of charwomen, and other employees of that kind, during the recess of parliament. The hon. gentleman seems to lose sight of the fact that the Senate stands above the Speaker and above the clerk. The Senate takes the place of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does his hon. the Speaker mean to say that if the government were going to separate for some months and there were some temporary appointments to be made before they could meet again, that they could not empower one of the ministers or a deputy minister to make them?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Not against the law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But it is not against the law. This deals with persons whose salaries are less than $500. The Senate has a right to deal with such cases without calling in the Speaker at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—No, read section 22; that is the law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 22 of the Act says that appointment shall be made by the Governor in Council; that is by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—And it provides for the recommendation of the head of the department.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 33 says:

> For the position of messenger, porter, sorter, packer, and such other positions in the lower grades as are determined by the Governor in Council, the minimum and maximum salaries shall be $500 and $800, &c.

Those are the only classes that the Governor in Council can deal with. Appointments carrying less than $500 the Governor in Council have nothing to do with, and we do not need any recommendation from the Speaker. But this is not the first time that this question has been brought up. This Act was passed in 1908, and after it went into operation the Senate was called upon to decide how it would operate under the Act, and it adopted the principle which I spoke of the day before. The committee at their last meeting, as a rule, make a recommendation which is adopted by the Senate to the effect that any temporary vacancy in the lower grades may be filled for the time being by the committee or by the Chairman of the committee. There is nothing in the law against it and it is the only practical way to do the thing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—No practice can do away with the law, and the law gives the Speaker that power. I would ask the Chairman of the committee to submit a case to the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I rise to a point of order. The Speaker has spoken several times, which is contrary to the rule. We are getting close to the end of the session and we should not fool away a whole afternoon on a petty question of this kind.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS (in the Chair). In discussions of this kind it is very difficult to enforce the rules.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The Speaker ought to respect the rules himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have never had but one opinion on the question we are now discussing. I have always taken the strong ground that the Speaker has taken, as to the right of the Speaker and the Clerk in reference to these recommendations. Those who have been in the Senate know that I have always contended that the committee have assumed power and authority to which they are not entitled under the law. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) laid down a very correct principle when he said that if the Speaker and the Clerk represent the Senate as ministers and deputies, their recommendation are not above the authority of the Senate itself, but neither has the Senate the power to do that which is in contravention of the statute. The statute makes certain provisions, and the Senate is obliged to conduct its business within the terms of the statute. The Senate has power to reject any recommendation, but I deny the right under the law of the Contingent Accounts Committee to assume the position they have taken. In my mind it is in direct contravention of the law. I should like to see the ruling of the Speaker on this question submitted for the consideration of the Minister of Justice during the recess and let us know exactly where we are and avoid these contentious discussions in the future. That is what I trust will be done for the reasons I have given.

Hon. Mr. KERR—This question has been very much narrowed down. by the report itself. The question, as I understand it, is this practically, if the Senate has appointed anybody and has authorized their payment, the committee shall have the power to pay them. That is what the clause is. If the Senate, being seized of the matter, appointed an official and fixed his salary, the committee are authorized to see that his salary is paid. That is not the question which was raised by the Speaker's decision. The other part of the clause is as to temporary employees, and that refers only to cases where the Senate has authorized the committee to act. It is the same thing, for if the Senatae authorizes the committee to act, it becomes the act of the Senate, and therefore the following words are subject exactly to the same interpretation I have put on the first lines. It appears to me therefore, so far as this question is concerned, that it is a question whether the Senate, appointing or authorizing an appointment to be made, can authorize payment of the officals so apponted.

Clause 1 was adopted.

On clause 2,

(2) With respect to the provision in the estimates for the payment of a salary of $600 a year to a private secretary to his honour the Speaker, your committee would observe that the Speaker of the Senate never has had a private secretary, and, as Speaker, he has no need of the services of a private secretary: They therefore recommend that no such salary be paid out of the sum appropriated to the Senate under the estimates:

They further recommend that Mr. Simeon Lelièvre devote his whole time to the service of the Senate.

Inasmuch, however, as his honour was apparently under the impression that, as Speaker, he was entitled to the services of a private secretary, and under this impression, appointed Mr. Lelièvre, your committee would not oppose the payment of the amount shown by the supplementary estimates for such services and payable up to the 31st March, instant.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved that the second paragraph be adopted. He said: The remark has been made that when the estimates were referred to the committee they were not accompanied by a recommendation from the Speaker, but we had a letter written by the Speaker himself, in November, telling the Clerk that he had appointed a secretary under a certain Act, and he wanted the salary paid in that way.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—How did that letter reach the committee? Where was the reference made by the Senate to the committee? There was no reference.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—We did not require to have a reference.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Certainly the committee required a reference. The committee has a right to make their report on questions referred to the committee, but the committee have no right to go into the office of the Clerk and the Clerk had no right to give that letter to the committee. Where was the order? If the order had been given by the Senate, well and good, but the order was not given by the Senate. When was that letter given? It was given after the committee had met and decided, but the only order of reference that has been made is the order passed in the month of March, in which it was stated that the budget, at page 39, is submitted to the committee, and those estimates contain no item whatsoever of that salary paid to the Speaker's private secretary. So I say the hon. gentleman has no right to come in and recommend the payment or non-payment of that salary. Why? Because it is not within the competence of the committee; it is not within the competence even of the Senate. A minister may choose any one he likes for his secretary, as hon. gentlemen will see by reference to section 31 of the Act. The choice of secretary is withdrawn from the Civil Service Commission. The Speaker may choose any person he likes, and that person is not obliged to undergo the examinations that the law imposes on all other employees. Why? Because it is a personal matter. The only question is, has the Speaker a right to have a secretary? He has a right by the law; nobody can deny that. The law says that the Speakers of the two Houses are similar to heads of departments, and the law gives the head of any department whatsoever the right to have a secretary, and to choose his secretary whether he belongs to the civil ervice or not. If he does not belong to the civil ervice, he goes to class 'A' of the second division with a salary of $2,100. if he is a member of the civil service, he is entitled to $600 for his service as secretary. Would the hon. gentleman prefer that I should choose my secretary outside of the civil service at a cost of $2,100, or select a secretary at present in the service at a cost of $600 to the Senate? The law gives me the alternative, and I chose the less expensive way. Why should the hon. gentleman complain? He says former Speakers did not have secretaries. Why? Because the law did not make provision for it, but under the present Act, as head of a department, I have a right to a secretary. I contend the Senate has no right to pass judgment on my action in that matter, because in doing so it is asserting a power which it does not possess. It was a personal act quite outside of the statute, though that peculiar power is given by the statute itself.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—On this point I agree with the Speaker, and really, the chairman of the committee must see the false position in which the committee has placed the House in making this report. Clause 2 is undoubtedly out of order. The reference is to salaries and contingencies of the Senate at page 39 of the estimates, but in the estimates we do not see a word about Mr. Lelievre. Reference has been made to a letter, but it is a letter which was not referred to a committee of this House, so it is quite clear that this part of the report is out of order. It is said that Mr. Lelievre should devote his whole time to the services of the Senate. There is no doubt the Senate has a right to say how its employees shall occupy their time. We know that Mr. Lelievre is qualified for his work, but there was not a word said about him to the committee and how can they make this report. They add:

> However as his honour was apparently under the impression, that, as Speaker he was entitled to the services of a private secretary and under this impression appointed Mr. Lelièvre, your committee would not oppose the payment of the amount shown by the supplementary estimates, &c.

For all these reasons I would ask the chairman of the committee to drop that recommendation, which certainly has been inserted under a misunderstanding, or because of misinformation. I am strongly with the Speaker when he says that it is out of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—His hon. the Speaker seemed to wonder how it was that the Chairman of the committee became conversant with this letter, and intimated that the Clerk of the House had no right to allow the letter to pass out of his possession or to be seen by any one but himself. The position is this: The Speaker of the Senate never has had a private secretary. The Senate takes the place of the Governor in Council. A private secretary cannot be appointed without the concurrence of the Governor in Council. When we arrived here at the opening of the session, we found that, without any reference to the Senate whatever, a permanent charge was attempted to be placed upon the revenues of the Senate, and it was very natural that the Chairman of the Committee on Contingent Accounts, whose peculiar duty is to look after the financial affairs of the Senate, should wish to know how this charge came to be made against the Senate. I assume that he went, very properly and naturally, to the Clerk who is the chief executive officer of the House, to find out on what authority this had been done, and thereupon I suppose the Clerk showed him the letter of his hon. the Speaker.

The Clerk did nothing but his duty in the matter, as I take it. I think what I have said goes to show that his honour the Speaker is completely wrong, because no fixed charge can be made on the revenues of this House without the consent of the House, and that consent has never been given. No matter whether this question was referred to this committee or not, the matter has now been brought to the notice of the Senate, and the Senate is in a position to deal with it as it pleases. Just as the Governor in Council could deal with the question of the private secretary of a member of the government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Could the hon. gentleman prove what he says? It is a simple assertion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think what I say is self-evident. The Senate takes the place of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Not for that purpose. If the hon. gentleman says so, that does not prove it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman says the Senate is the Governor in Council when it suits him, but when it does not suit it is not the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—That question is not referred to the Governor in Council

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Speaker referred to section 39 of the Act, saying he might have taken a person outside the civil service without examination, to be his private secretary, but if he had looked at section 45 of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908, he would have found that there was no authority given to the Speaker of either House to do what the minister is allowed to do under section 39.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—That is right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Section 45 reads:

Whenever, under sections 5, 8, 10 (paragraph 6 of subsection 1) 21, 22, 23, 24, 26 (subsection 2)—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I admit that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is wrong when he says he might have gone outside and brought in a private secretary. Without the knowledge of the Senate the Speaker has undertaken to appoint a private secretary. I say, having been Speaker myself, that the Speaker of the Senate, as such, has no need whatever of a private secretary. As Speaker he has no correspondence. In addition to appointing a private secretary without taking the House into his confidence, the Speaker took one of the best messengers we had and appropriated him to his own use.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I suppose if the hon. gentleman chooses to—

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—If the hon. gentleman chooses to accuse me, I will have the opportunity to answer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Of course. I shall just ask the hon. Speaker if it is not a fact that Alphonse Roy, who has been one of the messengers of the House, is acting now as his messenger. When I was Speaker I had two messengers. Now there are four employees there besides the private secretary. There is another point. Mr. Lelievre is the chief French translator, and he is also second clerk assistant, and, unless I am very much mistaken, a few months ago it was thought Lelievre had too much to do, as things stood, and that there should be some addition to the translating staff. Now his honour the Speaker, without taking the Senate into his confidence, undertakes to take one of the principal officers of the Senate and make him his private secretary. What sort of order is that? How can the Senate carry on its business if the Speaker is at liberty to do things of that sort?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The objection I have to this clause is that it declares—it may or may not be true—the services of a private secretary are not necessary, and then it declares that that private secretary having been appointed by the Speaker shall not be paid out of the appropriation of the Senate. First of all we have no official information that a private secretary has been appointed, so far as the Senate is concerned.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have the acknowledgment of his honour the Speaker.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But I am speaking of official information given to the Senate, nor has there been any application, made by the Speaker or any one else, for the payment of this secretary out of the appropriation made for the carrying on of the business.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask the question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—The hon. gentleman is out of order. He has already spoken twice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was only asking a question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I ask for the ruling.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rule of parliament is this: if a gentleman is speaking and a question is put to him, it is for him to say whether he will allow the interpretation or not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was simply going to ask the question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—If any other member desires to ask the question, all right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I will take the ruling.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS (in the Chair)—We have not been very particular in the past about observing the rule where a member rises, and simply desires to ask a question.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman from Hastings not think it was the duty of his hon. the Speaker, at the opening of the session, to have announced the appointment he undertook to make?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I frankly admit I think it would have been much better if he had done so, and, also admit that the doctrine laid down that a private secretary cannot be acknowledged or receive pay unless his appointment has been approved by the Governor in Council. In this case the Speaker, acting under the authority which I think he posesses, made the appointment. It would have saved trouble had he reported to the House. He has applied to the Governor in Council and the appropriation has been made and appears in the estimates to-day for the payment of the salary. Then why the necessity of declaring in this report that the secretary shall not be paid out of the appropriation made for the Senate, when nobody asked for it. The Speaker has not asked for it, and the Clerk of the Senate has not recommended it. With all due deference to the chairman and members of the committee, I think it would not be an infringement of their dignity if they withdrew that portion of the report because the Senate has never been asked to do that which it implies that they have been asked to do.

The motion to adopt the second paragraph was put and carried.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved the adoption of the 3rd paragraph:

(3) In respect to another item appearing in the estimates for a like service, your committee have been advised that no such change would appear in the expenditure to be made by or for the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before section 3 is adopted; I understand from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that the private secretary is a gentleman in the civil service, and this provides that Mr. Simeon Lelièvre shall devote his whole time to the service of the Senate. Now, is this gentleman a private secretary. If he is the passage of this Act deprives him of the right of acting as a private secretary, and how are you going to prevent him supposing he sets this at defiance? Then the next Senate would have to take action and dismiss him.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is provided for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You could not prevent him from being paid, because it is in the appropriation, and the Finance Minister could pay him any time he liked.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think it is a matter of choice, if the gentleman does not wish to act as private secretary to the Speaker, then we should give him the position as chief translator. I do not think the chief translator should act as secretary to the Speaker.

The paragraph was adopted.

On paragraph 4,

(4) As to the reference, submitted to your committee, of the Speaker's recommendation for an additional payment of the sum of $10 per month to R. Mackay, nightwatchman, who is an employee of the Public Works Department, and is assigned to this duty. Your committee are of the opinion that under section 38 of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908, the Senate has no power to add to the salary of R. Mackay, but would strongly commend the case of Mr. Mackay to the favourable consideration of the Department of Public Works, with the hope that the said increase map be granted to him, and your committee suggest that a copy of this resolution duly certified be forwarded to the Department of Public Works by the clerk or the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call attention to what I consider an error in this clause. The chairman of the committee has forgotten, or overlooked, an amendment made in 1910, to section 38 to which this paragraph refers, this section 38 was repealed, hence the application of the payment of that money under the amended Act applies only to those on the permanent list. In substitution for section 38 referred to in the report. The amended clause reads:

In the absence of special authority of parliament no payment additional to the salary authorized by law shall be made to any deputy head, officer, clerk, or employee permanently employed in the civil service in respect of any service hereafter to be rendered by him whether in discharge of the ordinary duties of his office or of any other duties which may be imposed upon him or which he may undertake or volunteer to discharge or otherwise perform.

That applies to all officials who are permanently appointed, from the Clerk downward to the lowest official, and it continues:

And no vote expressed to be made generally, though qualified by the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' or words to the like effect, shall be deemed to authorize such a payment.

It will be readily understood why that provision was put in this clause—because the Civil Service Act was being over-ridden scores of times, in every estimate that came down by providing a payment of money 'notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Act'. Then it goes on:

Provided, however, that nothing in this section is intended to prohibit the payment to any officer, clerk or employee in the outside service of a separate annual salary from each of two or more departments or distinct branches of the public service in respect to separate duties performed in the outside service for each of such departments or branches separately if one of such salaries is not sufficient to compensate him for the whole time, &c.

What I want to point out is, that the clause referred to in this report has been repealed by the Act I have referred to, and the services mentioned in the report have been performed not by a permanent officer, as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, he is a public officer.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—He is a permanent officer of the Public Works Department. He belongs to a staff of sorters or messengers.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—No, he is not a permanent officer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have made inquiry about that, or I would not have made the statement. He is a temporary employee, and he has been paid this $10 per month in addition to the salary which has been paid to him as night watchman, apart from the services which he undertakes. It is not necessary for me to discuss the propriety of the employment. I think it is a great oversight and unpardonable—whether or not it is a criminal one—that this portion of the parliament buildings should have been allowed for so many years, to be looked after by the ordinary messengers who pay very little attention to it, and not by a night watchman. The sudden disappearance, I will not say stealing, of articles during the night, on account of their being no night watchman, made such provision necessary in the interest of the Senate. However, that is a question that can be discussed afterwards. Notwithstanding what I have said about my hon. friend overlooking the amendment to the clause referred to in this Act, you may pass the report if you like, but if you will permit me to say it, and I do not say it disrespectfully, the whole report is a conglomerate mass from beginning to end which means nothing but an interference with that which the committee has no right to interfere with.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Before the motion is carried I will, on this clause, make a proposal to the hon. Chairman of the committee. He would see now that he is mistaken in the 4th paragraph, but I will make this proposition—to let him make a memorandum on the whole case and I will hand over the decision I gave and take the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and I will give him time to make a memorandum in answer to my ruling.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Section 38 of this Act is specially made applicable to the Senate. After that is amended in another Act I presume its application would still continue to apply to the Senate, although, of course, this amending Act does not refer to the Senate or the House of Commons at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It applies to the civil service.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—But the application is to the outside service. The night watchman belongs to the inside service.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—I beg your pardon, he belongs to the outside service.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I am perfectly willing to have this 4th paragraph referred back to the committee for reconsideration if they think proper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (The Speaker)—Let it go.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I move, in amendment, that paragraph 4 be referred back to the committee for further consideration. I think it is the wish of the Senate that this night watchman, Mr. Mackay, should receive increased pay, and if a mistake has been made the committee can rectify it.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Why not amend it now? I move in subamendment that the salary of Mr. Mackay be increased by ten dollars a month.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN seconded the subamendment, which was put and carried.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON moved the report, as amended, be adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—I give notice to the hon. the chairman of the committee that I will hand over my decision to the Minister of Justice so that he may be in a position to answer it, and I will ask the decision of the Minister of Justice on those points that I gave.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to say, as a member of the House, that the Minister of Justice is not a court of appeal from the decisions of the Senate.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY (Speaker)—If he is not a court of decision why was Mr. Newcombe's decision brought here?

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order.

The motion to adopt the report, as amended, was then put and carried on division.

CANADA GRAIN BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the House in Committee of the Whole on Bill (32) An Act respecting grain.

On clause 124

124. There may be such number of hospital elevators as are determined by the board, which shall be governed by such regulations and restrictions as are imposed by the board.

2. Any such elevator shall be required to take out a license and furnish a bond in such amount as the board determines.

3. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, but subject nevertheless to the provisions of section 99 and subsection 5 of section 115, grain which is being shipped out from a hospital elevator shall, at the request of the owner or possessor thereof, or of his authorized agent, be inspected and graded and the grade so arrived at shall be the grade thereof.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Can you declare a building a hospital elevator, anywhere that the board see fit—Winnipeg, Moosejaw, Calgary?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am informed, yes.

On clause 133,

133. Upon the return of any terminal warehouse receipt by the holder thereof, properly endorsed, and the tender of all proper charges upon grain represented thereby, such grain shall be immediately delivered within 24 hours after demand has been made, and vessels therefor have been furnished for that purpose, and shall not be subject to any further charges for storage: Provided that if it should happen that, in consequence of the vessels not being furnished until after the expiration of twenty-four hours as aforesaid, a new storage term shall be entered upon, then the charge for storage shall nevertheless be made, but only on a pro rata basis in respect of the time which shall have elapsed after the expiration of the twenty-four hours as aforesaid, and the time when the vessels actually arrive.

2. Subsection 1 shall apply to the delivery of grain to cars upon the return of any terminal warehouse receipt; provided, however, that the owner of such receipt or the terminal elevator warehouseman shall make demand in writing upon the railway company to place the necessary number of cars upon the elevator track. Should such demand not be complied with within the said twenty-four hours the owner or warehouseman may apply to the board, which shall thereupon investigate the case. If, upon investigation, it is found that the railway company is not using due diligence in providing such number of cars as can be reasonably transported, the board shall thereupon so notify the company. Should the company fail to comply forthwith, the board may make application to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, which shall investigate the complaint and may order the company to forthwith provide the cars deemed reasonable by the board. In case the number of cars ordered by the said Board of Railway Commissioners is not so furnished, the company shall be responsible for the charges for such extra storage as are fixed by the said Board of Railway Commissioners, and shall, upon demand, pay such charges to the board, which shall thereupon pay them to the owners of the terminal elevator receipt. The board shall make such regulations for application for and delivery of cars as seem necessary.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I have a slight amendment to propose. I move that clause 2 of section 133 be amended by striking out the words on line 26 after the word 'that' down to the word 'the' at the end of the said line, and insert the words 'storage on the grain shall cease as far as the owner of such grain is concerned ten days after the receipt of shipping instructions.'

I am told and believe that there are five million bushels of grain in Port Arthur and Fort William which was ordered out as far back as last December for mills in Ontario and Quebec, and it is not yet shipped. The Canadian Pacific railway are carrying the grain from their own elevators by thousands of cars right through to fill their own orders for export. Why do the elevators hold it back? Because they have storage charges which are excessive. I think that should not be allowed. If we provided that ten days after shipping instructions the storage charges should cease, they would not have any object in holding it back. Compare the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur with the eastern terminal elevators at Midland, Port McNicol, Owen Sound, Goderich and Port Colborne. The moment you surrender your bills of lading and order the wheat out the storage ceases and there is no object in holding it back. At Fort William and Port Arthur, the initial charges on grain are as much as the storage charges for two months on the eastern terminal elevators. At Port Arthur and Fort William, the moment the grain enters there is three quarters of a cent storage for fifteen days, and one-thirtieth after that, as long as it remains there. On the eastern elevators, storage is only half a cent for the first month and only a quarter of a cent for fifteen days after that. The storage at Fort William and Port Arthur is four times the charge made in the eastern elevators. The western elevators have made large sums and have paid as high as 40 per cent dividend. If I buy 4,000 bushels of grain from Carruthers, or some other firm, they do not know when they will be able to get it or what the charges will be and they have to speculate. The elevators are charging 3 1-2 cents a bushel for grain which was ordered last December, and is not yet taken out. If the railway could not ship it out there would be some excuse, but when we know they are shipping hundreds of thousands of bushels there is no excuse.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let the clause stand.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Subsection 2 of this clause is new.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—You must read 134 in connection with 133. The additional penalty is provided for anybody who defaults in delivery. My hon. friend is right as to the loss which occurs to the millers by ordering grain and not having it go forward, but I understand they have submitted the case to the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The point mentioned by my hon. friend might be made the subject of great abuse. Let us assume that the Canadian Pacific railway had certain grain in their terminal elevators, and a rival road made a demand upon them to deliver that grain at a certain point, it is not conceivable that such a demand should be satisfied in that way. They might have to carry the grain, for instance, to one of the ports of a rival road. It should be qualified.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is something in the suggestion, but surely it would require very serious consideration and some provision should be made.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There are many private owned storage elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William that have no cars and no railway and the grain might be in one of those terminal elevators, and they are at the mercy of the railway company in the matter of furnishing cars, so that you have three complications there. This clause provides that in the event of grain not being shipped forward promptly, the board may investigate and penalize, and may order the cars. They deal with the matter in whatever way it appeals to them. It strikes me there is more substantial relief in this subsection, which is placed in the Act for the first time than ever has been there before for the gentleman whose case my hon. friend has so ably presented.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 136,

136. The warehouseman of every terminal elevator shall, as directed by the board, render a weekly statement to the board of the quantity of each kind and grade of grain in store in his warehouse and of the total amount of fire insurance thereon.

2. Such statement shall be in the form of a statutory declaration, made by one of the principal owners or operators of such terminal elevator, or by the bookkeeper thereof, having personal knowledge of the facts.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This provides for weekly statements of grain in store. I raised the point before. The elevators are called upon to make a weekly statement. The inspection department makes a weekly statement. It would be well that there should be a uniformity of dates, and some of these places are a considerable distance from the centre.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That has been kept in view, and I have no doubt it will be arranged so that the returns will be of a uniform date.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 207,

207. The board may, in its discretion, order cars to be supplied contrary to the provisions of this part,—

(a) to elevators that are in danger of collapse;

(b) to places where grain is damp and thereby liable to become damaged;

(c) for the purpose of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division;

(d) in cases where the operator of any country elevator reports in writing under oath that some portion of the grain in such elevator is heated, and that in order to preserve such grain it is necessary to ship such heated grain to the terminal elevator for treatment: Provided, however, that no relief shall be granted in such last mentioned cases as long as the warehouseman has sufficient room in his building for the rehandling of such grain;

(e) whenever, after due examination, the board considers it necessary and advisable, in order to relieve congestion and facilitate the despatch of grain.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The people of the west are opposed to this clause being incorporated in the Bill. They have put up a strenuous fight to get cars. There was a time when they could not get cars. Under the existing law there is a distribution of cars and everybody gets his share, the farmer as well as the elevator man. The grain growers of the west look upon this as practically doing away with their rights in the matter of getting as fair a share of cars as they did under the late Act. They feel pretty strongly on this question. I have received resolutions from the different bodies of grain growers in the west. One reads as follows:

At a large united meeting of grain growers representing three local associations, namely, View Hill, Estevan and Bienfait, held in View Hill school house on Friday, March 15, the following resolution was unanimously carried:—

(a) Resolved, that we the grain growers in this district now in session do look with fear and alarm on the amendment passed by the House of Commons re the Manitoba Grain Act, section 207, regarding the distribution of cars, which Act was meant to safeguard the interests of western farmers from the unjust extortion of the elevator operators, and we earnestly protest against any interference or alteration of section 207 of the Manitoba Grain Act, more especially because of the proposed amendment.

I have received any number of resolutions to the same effect. Here is another:

Battleford, Sask., March 21, 1912.

To A. Champagne, Esq.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Sir,—I am instructed by the West Eagle Hills Grain Growers' Association to send you the following resolution passed at our regular meeting March 20:—

Resolved, that this branch of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association strongly protest against any changes in section 208 of the Grain Act, otherwise known as the distribution clause of the Grain Bill.

If this reaches you too late to be of use to you personally, I would request that you forward it where it will do most good.

Yours respectfully,
G. TRUSCOTT,
Sec.-Treas

The feeling of the farmers with reference to this matter is generally known. I hold in my hands some resolutions passed incorporated in a letter sent to members of this Senate. I suppose hon. gentlemen received them. This is from the Canadian Council of Agriculture, which represents all the different associations in Canada. It reads:

March 12, 1912.

Sir,—The Canada Grain Bill has now passed its third reading through the House of Commons and we cannot help being alarmed at the decision arrived at in the House, more especially that one covered by subsection (e) of section 207, relating to the distribution of cars.

This matter was fully considered at the annual meeting of this council held in Regina some time ago, and the decision arrived at, by a unanimous vote, was as follows:—

'That this council endorse the action of the delegates to Ottawa, representing the three western provinces and consisting of Messrs. Henders, McKenzie, Hopkins, Green and Fream, and the views submitted by them to the government, and again place on record our firm belief that nothing short of government operation and control, either by lease or purchase, of all terminal and transfer elevator facilities through an independent commission, will ever relieve the adverse conditions now existing; further, that it is essential that no change shall be made in the clauses of the Grain Bill relating to the distributing of cars, as any tampering with the rights pertaining to the producers in this direction will work a great hardship upon these producers and will not tend to relieve the car shortage, which shortage can be traced to the inability of railway companies to handle the business consigned to them;

'Further, it is our opinion that if any change is contemplated in this direction it will be better to drop the Grain Bill entirely and continue to administer the grain business through the provisions of the Manitoba Grain Act as it now reads.'

Hon. Mr. DAVIS.

The above resolution contains the well considered views of the farmers of western Canada, and as they are the ones who are most interested in the new Grain Bill, we think these views should receive the consideration they deserve, and we are therefore appealing to you to use your influenec in having the unnecessary and unfair amendments struck out of the Bill when same is before you in the Senate.

Another amendment has also been introduced, and passed in the House of Commons. This relates to the establishment of a sample market, and we would ask you to use your influence in getting this new section struck out of the Bill also.

A committee representing the Western Grain Growers will be in Ottawa in the course of a few days to take up this matter more fully with you, but in the event of the Bill being introduced before the arrival of this committee, we would respectfully ask you to consider our objections and to use your influence in seeing that the Bill is put back into its original form.

For ten years now the grain growers have been fighting for their rights and for a square deal in the marketing of their grain, and we believe that if the Grain Bill is allowed to pass through the Senate in the same form that it will be presented to you the result will be that all the privileges which the grain growers have fought so hard for will be lost.

Rather than have this happen we would prefer to see the Bill defeated entirely, and we would therefore appeal to you to assist us in protecting the interests of all the farmers of western Canada by either striking out these harmful amendments or by defeating the Bill entirely.

We prefer the old Manitoba Grain Act to the Bill which is being presented to you for your consent, and therefore when we present this, our most emphatic protest, to you we do so resting assured that you will carefully consider same and that the clauses which have been added to the Bill will be carefully studied by you.

We would also ask you to be good enough to receive the committee which will await on you at an early date and to assist them in having this most important matter rectified.

We consider that the Grain Bill is the most imporant legislation before the House this session, and as it is of vital importance to the farmers of western Canada, we would ask you if you find it impossible to defeat the amendments already refeured to, to assist us in protecting our rights by giving the whole Bill the regular six months' hoist.

Thanking you in anticipation of your favourable consideration.

Yours very truly,
EDWARD J. FREAM,
Secretary.

Surely these gentlemen, after having presented their views in such concise form deserve some consideration. To show our hon. friends it is not a political matter at all—because we do not want to make anything out of this politically—in the House of Commons I understand a hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe) and the hon. member from Souris (Dr. Schaffner) voted to eliminate the clause from the Bill. Both sides of the legislature of Saskatchewan passed a resolution in favour of expunging this clause from the Bill. Surely when we find the Canadian Council of Agriculture, representing the farmers all over the west presenting a petition of that kind to the Senate asking to have this clause struck out, and when we find the legislature of Saskatchewan representing the whole of the people of Saskatchewan asking the same thing, and members on both sides in the House of Commons opposing the clause——

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—How would the clause get here if they were all agreed to strike it out?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Because the minister introduced the Bill, and the hon. gentleman knows when a minister introduces a Bill it is hard skating to go against it. Are we going to legislate in the interests of the farmer or in the interests of a few people who are making money out of the grain, the middlemen? The farmers came down here about this proposition, and they were in a deplorable state before this Bill was passed. They were opposed by the Grain Exchange and the railways. It is not necessary for me to point out why? Because the grain people controlled pretty nearly all the elevators, and if they can provide cars whenever ordered they would simply shut out all competition.

Prices have gone down very little since the farmers have had the right to ship their own grain, but if you remove their rights to load from the platform, prices will go down again. They will practically have to take any prices that may be offered. When all the farmers of western Canada are a unit on this, we should give heed to their request and eliminate clause (e). I am equally opposed to clause (d) for the simple reason that when this measure came before the House I strongly opposed it. I thought it was the thin end of the wedge on the part of these people to do away with the use of cars. The reason I gave has been justified by the action of the people of the west. In place of assisting the farmers to get rid of damp grain, it has had the opposite effect. Certain elevator men have taken advantage of the clause to get out their first-class grain, and while those cars were hauling out first-class grain to the terminals, the other grain that these cars should have been used for had to lie there, and the grain, I suppose, practically rotted. Under the old distribution, every person would have got a share of the cars.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I dare say the officer of the department charged with the administration of the Act would have more information on that subject than the hon. gentleman has. I have before me a statement of the warehouse commissioner pointing out that this relief is only invoked on sworn evidence, and since it has gone into effect, from the 19th February to the 19th March, relief has been given in the matter of seed grain to the extent of 138 cars, and in the matter of damp grain 819 cars. In all 1,562 cars have been moved under this relief clause.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Was that general all over the country or from some particular point?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will read the letter:

Office of the Warehouse Commissioner,
Western Grain Inspection Division,
Winnipeg, March 19, 1912.

F. C. T. O'Hara, Esq.,
Deputy Minister,
Departmetn of Trade and Commerec,
Ottawa, Ont.

Grain Act.

Sir,—In compliance with your request of the 15th inst., I have pleasure in submitting report showing the measure of relief afforded in consequence of the special Act of parliament which was put through as an amendment to section 99b in connection with the distribution of cars.

	Cars.
Relief afforded in accordance with section 99b from 19th February to 19th March..	605
Relief afforded under new amendment—
Seed grain.. 138
Damp grain.. 819
——	957
	1,562

In connection with the above I desire to submit the following:—

In every case where cars were asked for out of turn either for the shipment of seed grain, or damp or wet grain, I have required a sworn declaration in support of the facts from the applicant. Where grain is stored in an elevator and more than one car has been required at a time, I have in most cases ordered the necessary number of cars out of turn for shipment of such grain. Where individual farmers have applied I have limited each applicant to one car at a time; any such applicant can, however, after loading his first car, by sending me an affidavit, get a second car out of turn, and so on. While many farmers have more than one car of damp grain to ship, I have only allowed them one car at a time out of turn, because few if any farmers can load more than one car in twenty-four hours, and it would only have caused serious congestion by adopting a different plan. So far I have only granted relief where grain was either damp or wet. When this class of grain, however, is worked off some latitude will have to be allowed so as to work off tough grain, as there is no question that a great deal of this class of grain, when the warm weather comes, will have to be dried to make it fit for warehousing. The drying plants at Fort William, Port Arthur and Duluth are only handling damp and wet grain at present; in fact Duluth elevators have refused to take into store tough grain until they get more ahead of the drying.

Very few complaints have been made in connection with the shipment of grain under the present scheme of relief; that is to say, dry grain has not been shipped out under improper applications for cars out of turn. Some of the applicants have already had two cars, and later on will apply for a third and fourth. We shall be lucky if the damp and wet grain is all got rid of by the first half of May. Had the special Act not been put through parliament when it was, very little, if any, of the above shipments would have been got out in time to save the whole of this grain from spoiling. The total number of cars supplied to elevators out of turn from the 1st September to the 18th March is 1,252 cars—605 having been supplied since the 17th February.

I have been watching this matter very closely all season so as to render all assistance possible in getting damp grain promptly forwarded to the terminal for treatment.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) CHARLES C. CASTLE,
Warehouse Commissioner.

I should prefer to take a statement such as this from a responsible officer who has been in the employment of the government for a number of years, charged with the administration of a very important industry, than the promiscuous statements made by the man in the street about which he has no evidence whatever. I think a law of this kind will appeal to to the House as wise legislation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Who is the officer?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The warehouse commissioner, Mr. Castle.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The commissioner says that 819 cars of damaged grain have been shipped out in a certain length of time since the Act came in force.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I said from the passing of the Act.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is there anything in that statement to show the number of cars that have been shipped out from elevators, and the number shipped out from farmers loading platforms, of damp grain? My hon. friend has read the statement from the commissioner sitting in Winnipeg. He says he has a sworn affidavit; I suppose he has. Somebody writes down and says: 'I have so many cars,' and he says he has an affidavit. Does he know that the law has not been broken?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All I can say is this: the best that any government can do is to employ as capable men as they can secure to carry out and administer the law. The government of the country has to depend on officials of that kind. In all probability we can accept the statements of officials of that kind as more reliable than the very promiscuous statements made, as I have said, by a man in the street, based on some report which proves baseless after investigation. Now, I cannot give my hon. friend the particulars which he asks, but we have to assume that Mr. Castle, the warehouse commissioner, is properly performing his duties under the Act.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Is it not found out when this wheat goes through Winnipeg, or even when it reaches the terminal elevators and is there examined? And is the statement true that it is inspected there and is reported to be all right, and not damaged? Now the grain is reported to be inspected in Winnipeg and not damp; it certainly was not damp when it left the elevator.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is that?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—When this grain is going through Winnipeg it is inspected and graded, and if statements that have been made to me personally are correct, that grain is not damp, and is examined there and passed as good grain and in first class shape. If that be so, the grain was not damp when it left the elevator, and the commissioner is wrong.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Is it not a want of confidence in the board? It seems to me the board is better able to decide. What is the use of the boards if they cannot be relied upon? You are asking this committee to decide against the boards.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—If the commissioner allows grain to go out that is claimed to be damp, and when it reaches Winnipeg and is examined and inspected there it is found not to be damp, then something is wrong.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Dismiss the boards, that is all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When the special Bill, to which reference is made, was passed some time ago, it was considered that it was to be a temporary measure to afford relief to the farmers who had damp grain. It appeared to me, as one of the members of this House then, that it was understood it would not be embodied in the permanent Bill, without the matter being fully considered. For my part I would be disposed to go a long way towards satisfying the wishes of the farmers in the west. They are the parties mainly interested; they are supposed to be the judges of their own interests; and we should defer to a considerable extent to their wishes in the matter. Had they presented a strong objection through their delegations, when their delegates were heard before the members of this honourable House last week, I would have been disposed to grant their wishes. But when their delegates were heard before a large number of members of this House last week they said that although they were afraid of the operation of paragraph (b) of section 207 and that although they were under the impression that so far it had been abused to some extent, they did not base their objection on that subsection. They said that they would be satisfied if subsection (e) were struck out. In face of the position taken by the representatives of the farmers in the west it seems to me we should maintain paragraph (b) because paragraph (b) appeals to common sense. It was necessary this year to pass the Act to come to the relief of those farmers who had wet grain, which otherwise would have been lost, and the same condition may obtain next year or at any future time. But I must say as regards section (e) taking into consideration the very strong objection made by the representatives of farmers, and their being unanimous as regards this objection to that subparagraph, I would be disposed to strike it out.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—That is all we are asking.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Then you leave (b) as it is.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Leave (b) but strike out (e).

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I quite realize that there are much stronger grounds taken against this paragraph 'e' than against 'b.' The operation of paragraph 'b' would be easily controlled, it is to be limited to wet grain, or where grain is damp and thereby liable to become damaged, therefore it is easy to control the operation of this subsection, but when one comes to subsection 'e,' that is a paragraph which could easily be abused, and it would be difficult for the farmers to control the action of the board if it were abused. A ground which was urged and which struck my mind most forcibly was that the railway companies would be interested in creating a congestion in order to obtain the operation of this clause.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Why? What good would it be to them?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—To facilitate the operation of that clause.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—A suggestion has been made to strike out the word 'heated' and insert 'out of condition.'

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Does my hon. friend from Toronto object to the word 'heated' being struck out?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Yes, I decidedly do. I think the clause is right as printed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—You object to the same expression being used as is used elsewhere ?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Certainly, because it is under different conditions altogether.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Will my hon. friend turn to clause 170 and tell this House where the difference is ?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Clause 170 provides for grain out of condition, then the owner of that grain shall give notice to the board that the grain is out of condition, and then certain steps are taken. Now, if any warehouseman gets up and says, 'the grain is out of condition, and I want cars,' he will be asked in what way is it out of condition. It may be because of a danger of heating, or that some of it got a little wet, or any of a hundred ways. But this clause 207 provides that the grain must be actually heated.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Will my hon. friend, who is a practical miller, stand up in this House and tell me what good is left in wheat after it is heated ?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—But that is not the point at all.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend apparently has not grasped the meaning and intention of section 'd.' It is intended in that section to provide relief to a country elevator where grain is going out of condition.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What is meant by 'out of condition?'

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—'Out of condition' is grain that has passed a condition fit for warehousing, just as soon as the grain gets past a condition in which it is not fit to continue in a warehouse any longer, it is then out of condition commercially; that is the meaning of it. Now, if my hon. friend knows, as he does know, about wheat, if you have got to hold it there until it is heated, the only value it has is to shove it out on the street where it is useless. Now, the object is, of course, to get it out of there before it becomes useless. In the terminal elevators the same expression is used as in the country elevator when it comes to stepping down grain? My hon. friend will not refuse the same relief under the same circumstances? And I tell my hon. friend more, that at present with the word 'heated' in there an interpretation is given to it which is applied to the very words which I am suggesting to pu in the clause —'out of condition, or becoming so.' That is the only common sense interpretation that could be given to it. But for the sake of uniformity why not have the same expression describe the same condition all over the various portions similarly?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I do not think the hon. gentleman has read the clause carefully or he would not have made that speech. Take clause (a) where it says 'liable to become damaged.' Is that not out of conditions?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Then take clause (d), and the phrase 'out of condition' occurs again. Why repeat it?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Because my hon. friend has not read the clause very carefully.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I say in the first place it provided that cars should be supplied where the grain is damp and thereby liable to become damaged. Cars can be supplied for the purpose of distributing seed grain; then you go on and add another condition: 'in case the operator of any elevator reports.. .. .. that the grain in such elevator is heating;' they have to provide cars. Now, refer to clause 170 and you find that it applies to a different purpose altogether; it is not for providing cars. If I have grain in my elevator, and have received it in good condition and I am afraid to give it out; but if I afterwards find that it is getting out of condition, or liable to do so, I give notice that the grain is out of condition, or liable to become so, then that relieves me from providing that good grain. My point is exactly this, that it is a dangerous clause to put in. If you put it in there it only accentuates this, that the people of the Northwest are afraid that cars will be distributed and given away, when it is an easy matter to see that grain is liable to get out of condition. I think the clause should stand amended as it is.

It being six o'clock the committee rose.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The memorial my hon. friend read will appear in 'Hansard' to-morrow and I will submit what he has said as to limiting paragraph 3, and we will take it up finally on the third reading. I would suggest that we clean up all the other sections and let that section stand.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I am not sure that the amendment quoted by my hon. friend is not fixed by clause (d). I think, perhaps, this word 'heated' was put there purposely. Heated grain can be removed so that other grain can be put in its place.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If you will look at clause 207, section (d), you will see that same section has been in the Act for a great many years; (b) is something new. Let me suggest what will likely be the policy of the board. Strange as it may seem, grain getting out of condition, or heated, was provided for by legislation, notwithstanding the provisions of the car distribution clause. Yet no remedy was provided for grain which might be within a quarter of a mile of an elevator or warehouse and was in the same condition as that described in clause (d). There was no provision by which owners of this grain could get any relief under clause 206. Clause (b) provides for different places which my friend has very properly said in the administration of the Act is not provided for. Surely the board will confirm that to grain outside the elevators and warehouses; that is the intention of parliament. I think that is the policy that will be adopted by the board when this legislation becomes law. It looks to me that, inasmuch as you provide especially for elevators and warehouses in subclause (b) why should you apply clause (d)? Or why should it not be applied equally to elevators and warehouses and strike out (b) altogether?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The leader of the House knows very well that the term 'grain out of condition', is opening the door pretty wide. Anybody can say that grain is 'out of condition.' How is it to be proved that it is out of condition. I think the word 'heated' should be allowed to stand. It evidently was intended to treat heated grain especially. I submit that if you use the expression 'Out of condition' it will lead to misunderstanding; that term is very indefinite, it might be said that anything was out of condition.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have no objection to the clause remaining as it is. The interpretation given by the officers so far has always been 'grain out of condition or going out of condition.' The only way to treat heated grain is to burn it up.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When it is heating it can be treated?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes. When grain starts to go out of condition it commences to get warm, but we might leave the clause as it is. Gentlemen who represent the interests which my hon. friend is champion of at present, told me they had no objections to the amendment and that they thought it was all right.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The government has evidently put this section in the Act with the express purpose of dealing with heated grain. The grain may start to heat in a bin, and naturally when it started to heat the elevator people would notify the owner, and the grain would be taken out. The hon. gentleman says you cannot treat heated grain. You can spread it out and save it. If you leave it in a bin it gets hard and is of little use.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I think it might be well to hesitate before making a change in clause 'd'. Even if clause 'e' should be dropped I should like to give the leader of the government the information I have which has caused me to oppose subsection 'e' and I think 'd' as well. If my information is correct—and I have no reason to doubt it—we have a concrete case. In a certain town in one of the western provinces, since the Bill, passed a few weeks ago, came into effect, one of the elevators get eight cars out of their order from the farmers. The farmers went to the trouble of following up those cars, took the numbers of the cars, and went to Winnipeg where the grain was inspected. They found six of those cars had passed the inspection, and the other two cars had not yet arrived. If conditions like that happen, something is radically wrong, and should be remedied.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then we can let subclause 'b' stand until to-morrow morning.

On clause 229, subclause 3,

229. For the purpose of preserving the identity of grain in transit from Winnipeg to points of consumption in eastern Canada or to ports of export shipment on the seaboard, the board may grant to any shipper permission to lease for such term as is approved by him special bins in such terminal elevators as are necessarily used in the transportation of grain eastward from Winnipeg for the special binning of grain in transit. The bin capacity which may be so leased in any terminal elevator shall be as the board shall approve, but shall not be less than sixteen thousand bushels in any such elevator. The term of the several leases shall be as approved by the board.

2. The shipper receiving such permission may, subject to its terms, enter into an agreement for the lease of special bins in terminal elevators necessary to the transportation of grain from Winnipeg to the point of destination.

3. The rates to be paid for the lease of such special bins shall be such as are agreed upon: Provided that on payment of the regular rate for the full capacity leased for the full term of the lease the shipper acting under the permission of the board as in this section provided, shall be given a lease of the bin capacity to which he thereby becomes entitled.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In this clause we are providing a very strict supervision of terminal elevators at Port William and Port Arthur. It strikes me as not being a full measure of security when you do not provide some supervision of a like character in the transfer elevators on this side of the Lakes and from there to the sea-board. It does not appeal to one's common sense that, when you are watching one link in the long chain of transportation, and sitting over that link with a shot-gun, you are leaving every place between there and the seaboard to do as they think fit. I would ask the leader of the government to kindly give that point consideration and see how he can square the necessity of watching so closely at Fort William with leaving the rest of the route without inspection, trusting that all dishonesty ceases the moment the grain leaves Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In clauses 121 and 229 there is machinery to meet the exigency of which the hon. gentleman speaks.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—All the trouble is at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We can declare a public elevator a terminal elevator and apply the whole machinery of this Act to the eastern division. Any public elevator means a terminal elevator.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If you are going to apply it that way I shall be happy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All those clauses apply to enforcing proper inspection.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Are you going to do so?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the board may regard it as advisable to do so if they find abuses of this kind.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am not charging the gentlemen who are responsible for this Bill with that particular omission. Their predecessors were guilty of the very same policy.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is the same clause exactly as in Bill (No. 2) of last session.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is not a crime which can be laid to my hon. friends opposite except that they are continuing it, but in all seriousness, if there is necessity to safeguard the producers at Fort William and Port Arthur, the same necessity must exist, the same precaution should be taken, and the same vigilance should be exercised with reference to the grain during its passage through to the vessel's side.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am told that the Department of Trade and Commerce has already taken that into consideration and the present intention is, so far as they can give consideration to it, that inspectors shall be appointed at all these eastern points to see that the law is observed.

On clause 133,

Delivery of grain on return of receipt to vessel and delivery of grain to cars on return of receipt.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from York (Hon. Mr. Campbell) made some suggestions and we have in part agreed to make some changes.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—They have agreed to amend clause 2 of section 133, by stricking out the word 'may,' and inserting 'shall' and striking out 'owner of such receipt or' and striking out the word 'may.'

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That leaves the farmer out.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The farmer is not interested in this, the grain is in the elevator. I hold that grain, and I order it down; I deliver my receipt to the elevator man. As the clause reads, the owner of such receipt, or the terminal elevator man, may make demand. The owner may be in New York or Montreal. Now, it is obligatory upon the terms of the warehouse man to make the necessary demand for the cars, and if that demand is not complied with in twenty-four hours, the warehouse man shall apply to the board, and so on. It is made obligatory upon the warehouse man to make application for the cars; otherwise he would not do it because he would be getting storage on the grain.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What is the penalty if he does not do it?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The penalty is very severe. I would rather that the penalty was the stoppage of the storage altogether, but we will take a half loaf because it is better than no bread. If the conditions warrant a change in the Act, I hope the government will make the change next year. In the meantime this will relieve the situation considerably, and for the sake of peace and harmony in the family I am willing to let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall convey to the Minister of Trade and Commerce the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Davis) and on the third reading my hon. friend can move his amendments.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

THIRD READING.

Bill (170) an Act to amend the Quebec savings banks Act (Hon. Mr. Lougheed).

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (177) an Act to amend the Militia Act.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

In the Committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILE—I would like to call the attention of the government to the effect of this Bill, the question of rank appears to be confined to men who may be on the staff and who are very well paid for it. I do not say it is being improperly done. Who are going to fight the battles of this country? There are 150 regiments and the colonel and his officers and men make the regiment. If there is any war, which I hope there will not be, who is going to do the work? The regimental officers, those who are not recognized in this Bill. I suppose I am largely responsible for making generals of Canadian officers. I brought in a Bill in the House of Commons, which was afterwards taken out of my hands, to create generals. The view I had was that we had in Canada good officers who, after taking a preliminary course, were just as good men to be commanders of the militia of this country as imported officers and that they should not be barred because they were Canadians. From what I have seen of our militia I can say that we have men of considerable ability and who make very good soldiers. Therefore I brought in the Bill withdrawing 'the bar sinster' against a Canadian to command the Canadian army. This Bill, which is no doubt well meant, is for the purpose of making a lot of generals, that was not my intention. The men who are mentioned in this Bill are really only clerks and departmental officers. Are they to be taken into consideration and not men who have served a lifetime in the Canadian militia, who have organized regiments and have commanded them, and spent their time and their money as such commanding officers in keeping the regiment up to the proper standing. I am proud of the militia of Canada. I think this Bill should be so amended that the government might, in its discretion recognize officers who have commanded regiments and who have always stood ready to fight for their country. Why should these men be debarred from the higher ranks? I do not propose to make any factious opposition. I am only calling the attention of the government to this omission that has been made in this Bill. If we are going to have a large army why should the officers be debarred from rank on account of men who hold staff rank, and who have never done anything or never do anything? General Stonewall Jackson said 'War is Hell', and so it is; if we have any trouble in this country how long would the staff last? The officers commanding regiments have to go to the front with their men. Regiment after regiment would be called out, and would have to shoulder their muskets, the cavalry have to buckle on their sabres, and do their duty in the field and at the front to defend this country, and I say, hon. gentlemen, those who do the fighting should be recognized. Therefore, I suggest that there should be some little alteration in this Bill. The men who have done service should not be placed in an inferior rank to clerks in the war office.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is to prevent appointments to certain positions in time of peace; it does not deprive any one of any rights posessed at the present time. I am fully in accord with certain remarks of the hon. member from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville). The honorary rank of lieutenant colonel and other positions have been given during a number of years past to men who never rendered any service, for the reason that they occupied certain positions, and that they are able to assist in the maintenance of the different battalions to which they are attached. I question the propriety of such promotions. I do not think either myself or the Speaker have cause to complain, for, without solicitation on our part, or on the part of any of our friends, speaking for myself, we were given high and honourable positions in the force. I attribute this to the fact that my hon. friend and myself served long enough to obtain a long service medal, but I agree with the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, when he utters these sentiments that gentlemen who have never given a single day to the country in the way of volunteering should not be foisted to the honorary position of lieutenant-colonels. It is not confined to one party, but has been done by both. In the defence of the country we should know no politics.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would suggest that the hon. leader might hold this measure over till to-morrow, to see if something could not be done. A lot of officials are going to pass out with the rank of general who never struck a bull's eye. There are colonels in this country who spend a good deal of time and money, and who have been successful in their work, and the government might amend this Bill so as to recognize their services. That it would be an incentive to the militia in the future and show them that they are not regarded as hewers of wood and drawers of water for the staff up here.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is the change? Clause 42 in the Bill says:

42. In time of peace no officer shall be appointed to a higher permanent rank in the militia than that of major-general or surgeon-general, and the number of such appointments and the qualifications for such rank shall be as prescribed.

What was the old clause 42?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—Clause 42 in the Revised Statutes, says:

42. In time of peace no officer of the militia shall, except for the purpose of assuming the command of the militia, be appointed to a higher permanent rank than that of colonel, provided that the territory rank of brigadier general may be conferred upon an officer of the rank of lieutenant-colonel or colonel, while holding any command or appointment, for which such rank is authorized by regulation.

The old law placed a higher command only on some officer of the rank of colonel on assuming the command of a whole regiment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There was to be a brigadier general.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—Yes. In the Bill before us the suggestion is that a permanent rank in the militia shall be conferred equal to that of major-general or surgeon-general in time of peace, and not confining it at all to officers in command, making it more general all over.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This Bill deserves a certain amount of attention. As the hon. and gallant gentleman from Rothesay says, we do not intend to offer any factious opposition, but it does seem to me that we shall have a very handsome supply of generals for a very small militia force when this Bill gets really to work. When the militia is called out at the present time there is to be no one higher than a brigadier-general. Now we are to have a num- of major-generals, and if the militia is called out we may have a lieutenant-general.

Hon Mr. DOMVILLE—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—About our militia I think we have too much staff, too many frills, and too little rank and file. I assume that under this Bill, when it becomes law, we shall, in a few months, have as many major-generals as they have in the United States army altogether.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Will my hon. friend consider this: Add after 'Staff Officers', 'or officers commanding corps, who have retired.' It is at the discretion of the government. That is to say, you are giving a chance to colonels who have done distinguished service; you are not bound to give it, but you are not debarring them from such promotion as the government, in their wisdom, think they are entitled to. How would such an amendment as that do at the end of clause 44?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that we put the Bill through the committee stage to-night and I will consult the Minister of Militia about it to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I hope nobody who participates in the passing of this Bill will be entitled to any such promotion?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend need not be afraid that he will receive such honours.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hope I shall see the day when I will be in a position to congratulate my hon. friend on being a major-general.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would appreciate such a high honour.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I have discovered a solution of the reason for the amendment. On reading section 44 of the Militia Act I find that it says the honourary rank of major-general may, for valuable services rendered to the country, be conferred upon colonels who have held a high staff appointment on their retirement. This prevents the conferring of rank upon any officer of the position of major-general until he retires as a colonel. The present amendment gives power and authority to the department, during a time of peace, to appoint any member of the militia a major-general or surgeon-general, and the number of such appointments, and the qualification for such rank shall be prescribed by the department. The necessity for this amendment arises from the fact that the rank of major-general has been conferred upon General Otter, but there is no authority in the Militia Act for giving him that rank until this Bill becomes law. Under the proposed amendment it can be done. I know of no officer in the service of the government, for a number of years past, better entitled for promotion than the officer to whom I have called attention, so I think we can pass the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is all right, but if we are going to offer something to incite the militia to stand up for their country, we should see that nobody is barred.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 44, subclause 2,

2. Paragraph (c) of section 64 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

(c) authorize cadet corps, or any portion thereof, or any members thereof, to drill or train for a period of not more than thirty days in each year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not object to that, but I really had hoped there would have been some more effective steps taken towards putting this country in a position to defend herself than is being done by this measure. Why do we not follow the example of Australia as regards the cadet corps? In Australia, service in the cadet corps is compulsory. The law has been in operation now for two years, so that after another year or so, Australia will have a large and comparatively well drilled defensive force. In Canada, although we do not seem to think so, we need a respectable defence force nearly as much as they do in Australia. I am disappointed; I know the present Minister of Militia is rather an enthusiast in trying to build up a defence force here, and I thought we should have had something better than this. It is a step in the right direction, but a short step. I really think service in the cadet corps should be compulsory. I do not understand how any one who calls himself a good Canadian should object to his sons being prepared, at any rate, for taking their part in defending the country if that should be necessary.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (165) An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee).

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is an Act to amend the Criminal Code so as to prevent betting where racing corporations are formed under Letters Patent, and necessitating a special Act of parliament to obtain that privilege at race meetings.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is it to prevent incorporation of such companies?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is to prevent such companies from carrying on betting. Practically it will prohibit the incorporation of such companies, because they will not have the privilege of betting.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—That only applies to the future.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What part of this clause is new?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED — The entire clause is new.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL — I think it is a misfortune that this Bill was not introduced before the present time. I think it would better serve the purpose if it were made retroactive. It is intended to prevent the racing that goes on in different parts of the Dominion at all periods of the year, where gambling is carried on of an objectionable character. I would like to see a proviso in the Bill making it come into force on the 1st of January of this year, so as to cut out certain Letters Patent which have been given to certain parties to organize racing companies throughout the whole Dominion. If the Bill is to accomplish the object the government has to prevent betting and gambling and all sorts of crimes that are being constantly committed on these unregulated race courses, it should be made retroactive. Certain Letters Patent have been granted since the 1st of January, incorporating companies for the purpose of carrying on racing. If this Bill does not affect these companies, betting will be continued. The Bill has been introduced for a good purpose, but I think it should have been made retroactive.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I quite agree with the remarks of my hon. friend. It seems to me that this Bill is very peculiar in a certain way. It says that betting shall not be allowed by any association who get incorporation by Letters Patent, but if they get incorporated by Act of parliament, then parliament will direct the conditions. Any organization that received Letters Patent before the 20th day of March are allowed to carry on racing. This is only the 27th, and these companies cannot have gone into business. Does this Bill mean to say that associations who are incorporated before the 20th of March have the vested rights to do something wrong? If so, that seems to me to be peculiar legislation. I would be inclined to think that the gentleman who rushed in and secured Letters Patent previous to the 20th of March, had some intimation of the legislation. And I agree with the hon. gentleman from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) that this provision ought to be retroactive and to go back to at least the 1st of January, because it looks suspicious on the face of it. I understand some six companies have taken out Letters Patent within the last few weeks in anticipation that the legislation was about to be enacted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not so late as that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Letters Patent were granted to two companies. The first application was presented on the 24th September, 1909, and on the 2nd and 3rd of June, 1910. Owing to the former Secretary of State, Mr. Murphy, having granted Letters Patent some three years ago or thereabouts he was subjected to a very severe criticism in the public press, the position having been taken that it was a discretionary matter with the Secretary of State as to issuing Letters Patent, and consequently, notwithstanding the opinion of the Department of Justice that the applicants were absolutely entitled to the issuance of the Letters, and that it was not discretionary with the minister to withhold them or grant them, yet those applications were held, and the matter of late has become somewhat acute. The opinion has been further given that the applicants were absolutely entitled to their Letters Patent, because there was no law to the contrary. Therefore, the government, in deliberating on the question, did issue those Letters Patent. They have been tied up, one since 1909 and the other since 1910, but realizing or recognizing that the issuance of Letters Patent for this purpose, without any discretion being exercised by the minister in granting such Letters, would be productive of very great mischief, morally and otherwise, it was deemed advisable to amend the Criminal Code as it affects parties securing Letters Patent for the purpose of carrying on racing associations and having the privilege and all the advantages of carrying on betting and reaping all the profits to be derived therefrom; so that hereafter it was thought advisable to prevent a repetition of this and this Bill has been brought down.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Is it not possible for those people to obtain incorporation in the province?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the provinces have a limited jurisdiction, but inasmuch as they had duly complied with our Letters Patent Act, and as the jurisprudence of our own courts and English courts would indicate they were absolutely entitled to the Letters they applied for, subject of course to their having complied with the Act, which they did, it was felt, and is felt to-day, that nothing else could be done but to grant them their Letters Patent, which was done. They applied to the Dominion and not to the province.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—If this Act goes into force they cannot apply to the Secretary of State, but can they not apply to the provinces for Letters Patent?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but they would be subject to the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. POWER, from the committee, reported the Bill, without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time, and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Moved the second reading of Bill (156) 'An Act to amend the Judges Act.'

Hon. Mr. KERR—Was any report made to the government as to the necessity of additional judges?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the Ontario government has made application, as is not only usual, but necessary. I need not point out to my hon. friend that this government would not act, unless set in motion by the government of the province for which the judges would be appointed. This government is not anxious that these judges be appointed, and that their good money should be unnecessarily paid out.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Would the hon. gentleman let us know exactly what that representation was. Will the papers be brought down? To my mind it is almost incredible that there should be any necessity for further judicial strife there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot personally give my hon. friend the information. I should be very glad to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact of my hon. friend's inquiry, but as my hon. friend can readily appreciate, it is not difficult to have representations made to the central government to have provincial judges appointed.

Hon. Mr. KERR—A mere request would not be sufficient. I suppose it would be reasonable to expect we would have such representation as to the present conditions and the necessity for having more judges than we have at the present to dispose of the business. I appreciate the importance of having the judicial work of the country carried on with promptitude, but have such representations been made?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The central government has no machinery for making investigation into that matter. It is a provincial matter, and if the request comes from the Attorney General of a province to demand that additional judges be appointed, and the province had passed the necessary legislation looking to the appointment of the judges, I fail to see how the federal government can cast any suspicion on the bona fides of the Attorney General of the province. The federal government has to accept the communication and act accordingly. It would be exceeding the bounds of propriety and that etiquette which must necessarily be observed between the provinces and the Dominion government that the communication of the properly accredited minister of the provincial government if it were not accepted without any doubt being thrown upon it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am under the impression that a different rule has prevailed, and that where the question came up in that way the government here went so far as to question the condition of things which would justify the amendment of the law so as to provide for additional judges, and even where the governments were supposed or understood to be friendly, there has been hesitation until a case was made out, and that has occupied some little time, before the government were satisfied on the point. That is so, particularly with reference to the institution of a court. It is only within a very short time that a new court of three judges has been established, namely the Exchequer Court Division of the High Court. I do not know whether any representation has been made from the judges as to the urgency of the matter, or as to the adequacy of the present government for the discharge of their duties. Some of the judges are acting commissioners and away from their judicial duty on what, no doubt, is important public business, but which is not judicial work, not only in the way of inquiries but in consolidation of the statutes and various other ways. If others besides judges could be employed to perform such duties, it would save a good deal of expense. I venture to think the question I am raising calls for something more than the statement that there has been a request from the local government.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have heard the question discussed in the House of Commons on more than one occasion, and I think it was pretty well conceded that the government must respond to the demand of a local government making such a request. It could not fairly be assumed from that that if the local government made an application for a very large number of judges, that the request must be allowed, but there is no doubt whatever that there is no protection of the public treasury against the demands that the local governments see fit to make upon them. It ought to be fixed in some way, so that they should not have to act simply on the demands of the local government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Minister of Justice who preceded the present holder of the office, was of opinion that, before a law was passed by a province increasing the number of judges, the federal authorities should be approached and the matter discussed between them. I suppose that there is nothing which will force the federal government to automatically put the Act in operation and bring down a vote for the salaries of a certain number of judges, but there should be some co-operation and understanding between the federal and provincial power. I heard my hon. friend the leader of the government, a moment ago declare that the Minister of Justice was bound to assent to the demand of any province for an increase of the number of judges. I do not know if that is the policy of the present government, and possibly if my hon. friend will consult the Minister of Justice he will qualify this declaration, because we have on the statute-book in Quebec, provision made for an increase of three judges in the Circuit Court of Montreal. There has been a pressing demand by the Quebec government for the appointment of those judges from year to year, and the late government, as well as the present government, has been made aware, not only of the desire of the government, but of the need of Montreal through the representatives of the bar and the public bodies of Montreal, such as the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade. The present Minister of Justice is well acquainted with the necessity of doing something to relieve the situation in Montreal. There were last year some three or four thousand cases—perhaps double that number—waiting on the list to be heard, and the situation has not improved since then. There is a general clamour for more speedy administration of justice before that tribunal. While I am discussing the question of the Circuit Court of Montreal, I might say that strong representations have been made that at the same time when those new judges are appointed the salary of the judges of that court be increased. Their present emolument is $3,000 or $3,500. It is true that the amounts involved in the cases generally are not as large as those in the cases tried before the Superior Court, which is called the High Court in other provinces, but the principles at stake are the same, it is the same law that has to be applied, and many classes of cases are committed exclusively to the care of that court. Judges, having to live in a centre like Montreal or Toronto on a meagre pittance, cannot maintain their proper station nor the dignity which should surround the occupants of judicial tribunals. I repeat what I said last session, that the salaries of those judges should be increased to at least $5,000. The work they perform used to be done by the Superior Court judges.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulty has been recognized in Quebec, with the class of judges to which my hon. friend has referred, that the work is distributed unequally. The work in the cities is largely congested and the work in the rural districts very light. I think the late government had difficulty, and the present government will have to grapple with the same difficulty and direct the attention of the provincial government of Quebec to the necessity of adjusting these matters in order that an equilibrium can be established, and so that the same number of judges can perform more evenly distributed work and meet the exigencies of the requirements in that province. I think there is a general recognition that men discharging judicial duties in the city of Montreal, of the class to which my hon. friend has referred, should receive more substantial compensation than those discharging a much inferior class of work in the outside districts. Before this Bill reaches its final stage I should be glad to take the matter up with the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That statement is not so true to-day as it was ten years ago when some courts of Quebec had not so much work to do. I might mention the district of Three Rivers and the district of St. Francis. Ten years ago one judge sufficed for Three Rivers, and one for Sherbrooke. Since then many industries have developed in these districts and a second judge has been appointed for each of these places. There are still districts where the work is somewhat light. The whole system would break down in Montreal if a certain number of judges were not called in monthly from the rural districts to help the judges of the city with the work they have before them.

The second reading was agreed to.

LIVE STOCK RECORD ASSOCIATIONS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (167) An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Associations. He said: This Bill simply provides machinery for the incorporation of live stock record associations. It is comparatively central in its machinery.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—By clause 9, not more than one association for each distinct breed shall be incorporated under this Act. Reading clause 4 with clause 9, it would appear that once a certain number of people have approached the minister for incorporation for registering a certain breed, that covers the whole ground and no other company can be organized.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would be the only way in which the records could be carried on. I would assume that the records are all kept in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Clause (j) of section 10 covers that,—'they shall be kept at the head office.'

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It seems to me that it is a much better practice to have one department and that all the records shall be concentrated at Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This whole matter was gone into some few years ago by the then Minister of Agriculture and he arranged that the various associations should keep their records at Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—In order that the Acts shall be any good these associations must be Dominion associations, and the records must be kept in Ottawa. The idea of this Bill is to have the records kept in Ottawa for the whole Dominion, and that there shall be only one association for each particular breed, whether it be Jerseys, Holsteins or Ayrshires, or any particular breed of live stock.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL —RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (179) An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.' He said: This is a Bill for the purpose of establishing rural mail delivery. Each clause of the Bill deals with nothing else except the employment of officers for carrying on a particular branch of the Post Office Department, the mail service.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Is this rural mail delivery to be extended to the whole of Canada?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That will be a matter entirely in the discretion of the Postmaster General, after making inquiry as to the various districts in which it may be desirable to extend.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through its final stages.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill 180) An Act to amend the Dry Docks subsidy Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (181) An Act to amend the Yukon Glacier Mining Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (182) An Act respecting the Government House property, Toronto.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (185) An Act to authorize the sale to the province of Manitoba of certain ordnance lands in the city of Winnipeg.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 28, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock, a.m.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHARWOMEN.

The SPEAKER—I beg to lay on the table of the House a memo. with reference to the employment of charwomen.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the recommendation of his honour the Speaker be adopted. I hope it will not be considered sufficiently important to send to the Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I think it is sufficiently important; it is one of the issues the Senate should determine now.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—If there is to be a discussion similar to the debate we had yesterday on the report of the Committee of Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, we should have the discussion with closed doors.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to say that the last report contains a recommendation for the appointment of some person, and there is no object in making it now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That being the case there cannot be any conflict.

Hon. Mr. DANDURANR—The matter can be considered at three o'clock with closed doors.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

THE CANADA GRAIN BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (No. 32) An Act respecting Grain.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I move in amendment that the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended by striking out the 2nd and 3rd sub-clauses of clause 57. This is the question we discussed the other day in regard to the sample market. The people who are supposed to be interested in this question, the grain growers of the west, do not see any advantage in a sample market for any person except the grain combine. In the first place let me say that the English miller, our greatest customer, who is supposed to be considered in the matter, does not wish to buy on sample. I will prove that by the evidence taken before the commission in Saskatchewan, by one of the leading grain buyers of England. In June, 1910, the commission was sitting at Regina, and Mr. James Begg, representing John Jackson & Co., grain and qour importers, of Glasgow, gave evidence before the commission. The chairman asked him a question and he proceeds to say:

> The Dominion certificate of inspection stands very high with us. It has the utmost confidence both of importers and millers. I mean in wheat, barley, oats and flax. We trade constantly on it and buy without any other guarantee of quality and sell to the millers without any other guarantee of quality than represented by the certificate of inspection which must be given to us by the seller on this side and must be ready to be produced to the buyer if he wishes it.
> Q. Would you not rather buy your standard grades on sample?

A. No. So long as the inspection is honest and reliable it is the easiest, simplest and most economical way of working the business. It enables us any day and in any month and every shipment in any period, to buy an article which we know will be equal to what we had before. When I say 'we' I mean both myself and the grain importer and the miller who is my customer. I give no personal guarantee, I sell on the certificate of Canadian inspection, and if for any reason there was any difficulty, I would have no responsibility under law of any other way, to my buyer. I would have no legal obligation. I sell to him so much No. 1 wheat, inspection certificate final. The document covers the thing from the time of embarkation till it goes into the hopper for flour. We know that when we have made a transaction by buying from a man on your side and sell to a man on our side what it is practically as regards quality. The miller knows that he can depend upon getting something that is of a certain milling value and the brewer in buying barley and the man who buys oats and flax.

Q. It does not vary with the crop?

A. Our experience has been that it does not. I have known millers who have kept over part of 1906 crop and then they have got the crop of 1907 and tested it through the mill. They found the difference was so slight, as to be a negligible quantity. Everybody knows there is a certain dryness in a crop of wheat twelve months old, but they are essentially the same, and are so nearly alike that they can assure themselves that the samples of flour are alike. Trading on the certificate I can buy in June for July, August, September and October delivery, and I know it will come to port when I wish it. No miller wishes enough wheat in his mill to-day to grind in October, but he wants the identical flour in October that is delivered to-day. It would cost him a great deal of money to have the whole wheat over, and therefore he buys as I have suggested for July, August, September and October as he wants. If you began the sample business, first of all the elevator man in the West has to get his wheat in and he sends me a sample. He will send me a sample saying please cable me the best you can do. I want 90 cents a bushel for it. It goes forward and is not like anything we have had before. We have not to go to one miller and instead of saying I am going to sell No. 1 wheat, I have got to say, I have got a sample here. That miller has a difference of opinion. I cable eventually to the commission man this side and he says the wheat has gone. Supposing it goes through, a man will say yes, I will take it if you give me June shipment, and another man July shipment. The wheat has therefore got to be held in the elevator, and the elevator man says, I cannot keep it till then and must ask more.

Now that goes to show that, as far as the English miller is concerned, he is in favour of buying on inspection; and it rests with us to keep the standard up to the market, because he says that the people of England have every confidence in our certificates. They trade on them; all he has to do is to say 'I sell you a million bushels of No. 1 wheat, and here is a certificate,' and that goes. But if we allow our wheat to be mixed and go fooling with it, we will lose something that it has taken years and years to build up. To the Ontario miller this is no good, because he cannot buy that wheat; he has no binning privileges, he has no bins, he is not going to trust his wheat into the hands of those men that we know have been manipulating wheat in the terminal elevators year after year. You would not expect a man to go and buy wheat in the sample market when he does not know how those men turn the cranks to mix it. The farmers are supposed to be directly interested in the wheat, but they say it is no use to them because the only men that could take advantage of the sample market are those that control the terminal elevators, and they are not going on to the Winnipeg, Calgary or Port Arthur sample market to buy grain and compete with themselves. They have elevators all over the interior, and they can get what wheat they want. So that it is practically of no value to anybody. It would be of value if there were binning privileges, if the government were to take over the terminal elevators so that everybody could go on the sample market and buy his grain and get some place to store it until they could dispose of it, but under present conditions I submit it is of no use to farmers to the eastern millers, or to the English buyer who is our customer; therefore, the only persons it will benefit will be the elevator combine. We are not so much opposed to the sample market as to the mixing of grain. Under this Act it is proposed to allow those gentlemen who control the elevators to do something that we made a crime a year ago and for which we penalized and fined them; now, we are going to open the door and allow them to carry on the same performance that was carried on in the United States. The first part of the section relates to sample markets, which I am not interfering with, but the two subsections are dealing with mixing, and I move that they be struck out.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The clauses now objected to were inserted in the Bill at the instance of the farmers themselves. No later than the present session they were recommended at a meeting held by the grain growers in the city of Regina, and a resolution was solemnly adopted urging the government to legislate in this way. This was not done without deliberation. They have been demanding the same thing for years. In 1910 the provincial government of Saskatchewan, at the instance of the grain growers, appointed an elevator commission to make inquiry with a view to carrying out the recommendations of the grain growers of that western country, and they took up the various subjects which has been strongly demanded in the way of legislation from the central government by the grain growers. Here are the charges against the present system; one of them is that the defects of the grading system—the same grading system we have had for years and that we have to-day—and the absence of a sample market to enable men to buy grain which, though slightly bleached, smutted or frosted, is of superior quality, but is bought at a price far below its value. That is to say, this particular grain is bought from the farmers by the grain dealers at a price below its value; and to overcome this difficulty there must necessarily be a sample market. Now, on page 22 of the same report we find, in dealing with the alleged system of monopoly of the grain buyers, this statement is made:

> Selling by grade alone is one main condition of their buying the grain below its value.

That has always been the complaint of the grain producers until within the last few weeks. Then we come to page 25 of the same report in which the idea is still further developed. The Commission states:

> What the farmers of the West demand is to have a sample market which would remedy the defects of the grading system and give to the farmer the actual value of his grain, whether it is especially good, poor, bleached, smutted, or frosted, as distinguished from the general grade price.

As hon. gentlemen see, that can only be accomplished by this mixing process, for which those particular sections objected to are designated.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—May I ask the year of the report?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—1910.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Was not that at the time when the farmers were agitating for the government ownership of the terminal elevators, where the mixing would take place?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That may be. It was said the other day that this demand was based solely upon the supposition that the government would enter upon and expropriate or absolutely own the terminal elevators, and the House apparently accepted the statement of my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) that this agitation of the farmers for the sample market was based entirely on that supposition, and that expectation. Now let us deal with that. Here is a further demand:

> There is a general demand among the farmers for a sample market. It arises from the belief upon their part that the general grade price does not do justice to particular lots of grain, either lots especially good, or lots that are low or off-grade. It is argued by some, in reply to this, that if the seller of a very good lot of No. 1 Northern gets over the average grade price, the sellers of a poorer lot of the same grade gets the same price.

Now, coming to that question as to whether all this agitation is based upon the expectation of the government assuming control of the elevators, what do the farmers say? On page 29 of the same report we read:

> To begin with, the assertion sometimes made to the effect that a sample market cannot be established in Winnipeg without public ownership, is simply not true

And in this report the words 'Is simply not true' are in italics, so as to emphasize and controvert the statement that the sample market must be contingent on public ownership.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is there anything in that about mixing?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why, certainly, it is the only way a sample market can be conducted.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Oh no, not at all; a big difference.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend has always been talking about the superior market or the superior prices in the United States. What does this commission say? That one reason why American farmers get a better price for grain than Canadians is that mixing is allowed in the United States and not allowed in Canada, and that the success of the private terminals in the United States, as compared with public terminals where the latter makes no provision for the mixing, proves the advantage of mixing. Now, hon. gentlemen, this is what the late government was up against; this is what the present government is up against. These gentlemen make those representations deliberately; commissions are appointed by the provincial governments there to place the recommendations of the grain producers in the shape of memorials to be presented to this government; those gentlemen in conference or in convention deliberately pass resolutions, as late as the present session, asking that this sample market be established, and the government, in deference to their wishes, has prepared the present clause. But I went so far the other day as to amend the clause so as to provide that until the government is absolutely satisfied that conditions do exist for the operation of the sample market in that western country this clause will not come into effect. I think hon. gentlemen can rely upon the government making proper investigation after the appointment of a grain commission, and after that commission makes all due inquiry into the subject. and after conditions become sufficiently developed so as to warrant the establishment of a sample market, then and not until then, the government, by order in council, will put this section in force and will take the responsibility. As I pointed out the other day it will require considerable preparatory work before this section can be brought into operation, but the government must foreshadow, by legislation upon the statute-book, that the grain policy of the government will be, in time to establish a sample market, so that those building terminal and other elevators may make preparation, by proper binning, for a sample market. It involves considerable preparatory work, and the public must be prepared to enter upon this work. That can only be done by the government intimating, in the way they have done in this Bill, by legislation, that when the proper time arrives this sample market will be given to the farmers of the west, and I think I may safely say that upon that being done the farmers will be the first to recognize the advantages to themselves in a properly constituted sample market. We voted on the question the other day, and I ask the Senate to sustain that vote.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I am opposed to the mixing of grain by the grain buyers or elevator men in the west. Any person who would look at this question for a moment would see that the elevator men and the grain buyers are the only people who are going to be benefited by it. Supposing, for example, I am a grain buyer and I alone am allowed to mix the grain or to have facilities for doing it. You bring in your grain to me, will I not manipulate it? Would not any man do so? If I can make 3 or 4 cents per bushel, am I not going to do it. It is not dishonest if it is not against the law. The leader of the government mentioned that the representatives of the farmers, even during this session, have asked for this. I would like to say a word in explanation of how that was done and compare the treatment of the representatives of the farmers by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce with the treatment of the same gentlemen by the late Minister of Trade and Commerce. When the farmers came down on former occasions to discuss the matter and obtain legislation, the Minister of Trade and Commerce met them in a body. The matter was freely and openly discussed among them and suggestions made by one and then by another with the result that Bill Q, which was framed last year, a satisfactory measure to the people, of the country at large, was passed by this House. When the farmers, or the representatives of the farmers, came down again to look after their interests during this session of parliament, they met the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He took them individually into his office, discussed with them this Bill, and I believe they did consent that this clause should go in, but I would like hon. gentlemen to bear in mind that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce is a very clever man; he has for a whole life time been skilled in making the worse appear the better reason, and it is not at all surprising that he was able to draw the wool over the eyes of those men when he had them in his private office.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What object would he have.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—He would have his friends in the combine.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—He would have the interests which elected the present government, and which no doubt he wishes to stand in with. For the past 15 or 20 years there has been a contest in the west between the farmers and certain interests. On the one side we have the farmers and on the other side we have the elevator people, the railway companies and the banking institutions. All of these are working in their own interests for the purpose of making money, and the farmer is the one they are making it out of. If this clause, allowing the mixing of grain, goes through, the farmers can expect to lose 3 or 4 cents a bushel on the grain they raise. I know these sentiments are right and I am expressing the opinion of nine-tenths of the farmers of western Canada.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—This has been a very troublesome question as everybody knows. Last year we had a great deal of discussion over a similar Bill. There are three parties interested in the handling of the grain, the farmer, the elevator man and the miller, not only in Canada, but also in the old country. As I take it from the observations that have been made by the leader of the government the farmers are disposed to agree to the sample market. We have no objection to the sample market, but I may say that every miller in Ontario and in Quebec, and in Canada as a whole, is totally opposed to the principle of mixing. That was gone into very thoroughly last year, and the position was very clearly explained to the House. A grain buyer operating elevators along the lines of the Cariboo and Rossland, or any of the lines through the west, or even in Ontario, can buy that grain from the farmer and he can do anything he likes with it. He can throw it all into one bin or keep it separate or do just as he pleases. He can mix it in any way or in any manner he pleases and it is nobody's business; he has paid his money for it. But when he loads that into a car and sends it forward and asks the government of Canada to inspect that and put a stamp on it as No. 1 or No. 2 Northern, he has no right to tamper with it. Every one has an interest in that grain. I buy my grain according to the inspector's report as No. 1 Northern, or No. 2 Northern or whatever it is. I buy it on account of the fact that the government of Canada, through their officers, have inspected that grain and stamped it as No. 1 or No. 2 Northern and I think it is a most retrograde step to say that, after being stamped and inspected by the officers of the government, anybody can mix it. It is only done for a purpose.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This legislation does not suggest the mixing after it is graded.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Yes it does. After it is mixed and inspected again, the only object of the mixing is to reduce the grade. There is a good No. 1 Northern and a poor No. 1 Northern. The object of getting the privilege of mixing is to enable them to skin the grade and sell it as No. 1 Northern.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the inspector commits the wrong.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL— No. A man may have a very good grade of No. 2 Northern, and a very poor grade of No. 1 Northern. They mix them together and make No. 1 Northern.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that mixing done after the inspection or before?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—After the inspection.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Oh no, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If so it is a crime.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It was not allowed to be done after inspection before but they were doing it right along when there was a penalty imposed on it, and now you are throwing the door open to let them do it without penalty.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It was well known and thoroughly discussed last year and it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the mixing of grain should be totally prohibited. That was agreed upon by the whole committee. I do not think there was any objection to that. Now we open the door by law, and we are allowing them to mix grain. I think we are making a very great mistake, and I hope the House will not consent to it. I admit that the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the House that this shall only take effect after a certain course, modifies its effect a little, but why not cut it out altogether. Everybody buys our grain in the old country as well as Canada, and it commands a high price. The grades are thoroughly established. A man in the old country buys a hundred thousand bushels of No. 1 or No. 2 Northern and he knows that he is getting what he ordered, but when you are mixing the grain and inspecting it afterwards, he knows that he is getting a grade and it may pass as No. 2 Northern. It is down to the last point. The only object is to enable the manipulators of that grain to so manipulate it as to make a cent or two more out of it. It is not in the interests of the farmer and it is not in the interests of the dealer, and I do not think the government should allow that amendment to go in. If you want to establish a sample market well and good, and if our experience in future shows that it is desirable we can afterwards adopt it, but at the present time in opening the door after a thorough discussion last year and an unanimous opinion of the House, and the country generally that mixing should not be allowed. I think we are making a great mistake when we permit it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Of course this is a very dubious point and I speak of it subject to correction, after having had the privilege, or the duty, of listening for many days together to the arguments pro and con a year or so ago. I don't think the House ought to be tortured about altering the Bill which you passed last year after very full discussion, and after having the benefit of full discussions before the department in which I presided and where everybody had the fullest opportunity of being heard. The balance of evidence, as far as I could judge at that time, was decidedly adverse to the mixing of grain and my department was obliged, under the law, to punish parties and to bring action against parties for mixing grain in a fashion which will apparently be permitted if the Act goes through as it stands. As I understand, the sample market is not interfered with by this amendment of my hon. friend; it is merely the practice of mixing grain which is interfered with. I think my hon. friend would do well to let that matter stand under the circumstances until we have much fuller light upon it than we have now. He probably knows that everybody who has the slightest interest, whether railways or grain exchange men or produce men or millers or farmers, they were all heard at great length by the Department of Trade and Commerce before the Bill was introduced into the Senate and passed last year.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would like to be enlightened on two points. I heard the hon. member from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Watson) say that the mixing cannot take place after the wheat has been graded. He is supposed to know and I attach a good deal of importance to his opinion on matters of this kind, but I call his attention to the first paragraph of section 57 which says:

> Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person from selling or buying grain by sample, regardless of its grade.

That implies that the wheat has been graded.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And therefore has been inspected; I think it is better that way.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That has been on the statute-book for years.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It may be, but we must take it as it stands; it implies that the section is dealing with graded wheat. The other points on which I would like to be enlightened is the meaning of the last sub-section 57 and I am now addressing myself to the hon. leader of this House. He says:

> The provisions of section 208, with the exception of sub-section 3 thereof, shall apply to sample markets when established.

I fail to understand what is the object to reference of section 208.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That gives an opportunity of having the cars stop over at Winnipeg 24 hours to decide whether they shall sell on sample or not. In reply to the statement made by the hon gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) with regard to 27, there is no complaint about 27, either from the grain dealer or farmer. That has been on the statute-book for years and no complaints. It works satisfactorily. Objection is taken to the fact that the sample market is about to be established under this Act. There is a great deal of room for argument as to the benefit of a sample market. People apparently change their opinions occasionally about sample markets. I have no doubt conditions of the crop have a good deal to do with changing the producers opinion as to sample market. Where the spread between low grades of wheat is 8 or 10 cents a bushel, it is a serious thing, and the farmers will want a sample market. The farmer will say 'I ought to get more for that, where the next grade is worth a great deal more.' He should have a sample market to get the full value. In the higher grade it does not make so much difference because there is only a spread of 2 or 3 cents a bushel, but in the lower grades it is more serious. There is no question but that there has been an agitation in the west among the grain growers in favour of a sample market. That is evident by the report just read to the House. It was discussed in the grain growers' meetings at Brandon and Regina and at all meetings of the Grain Growers' Association. This Bill came down to us and we have seen fit to amend it, by refraining from putting it into operation until the conditions are such that it will be profitable to the trade. That provision has been put in the Bill, and I am inclined to think we ought to pass it with the clause amended as we amended it two or three days ago. The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell) was arguing from wrong premises, so far as graded wheat is concerned, there is no provision in this Act to permit that wheat, after being inspected and graded, to be mixed. Apparently his whole argument was based on the fact that we were going to provide that, after the wheat had been inspected and graded, it could be mixed under this Act.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Then why is this provision required at all?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—For the reasons I have explained that if there is a large spread between two grades of wheat, it is a serious matter to the farmer. You might get a grade of wheat which would just come above the line of No. 3 Northern. You might get another grade of No. 3 Northern almost up to No. 2 Northern, and it is practically a difference in value of 3 cents. The man who has a high grade of No. 3 Northern may be able to sell it for whatever it is worth, if we had a sample market and whoever bought it would be able to mix it with two cars of extra No. 2 Northern and thus make 3 cars of No. 2 Northern, and he would get more than if he had to sell it on a grade by itself. It must be remembered that the grain growers are in the grain business. There is the Grain Growers Grain Company, out west and those gentlemen recognize the benefit of mixing, of course, before it is graded. The Grain Growers Grain Company have a house in Winnipeg in which they are doing this very business.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Let them do it before it is inspected.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is done that way. If you establish a market and have it done by regulation it would be better.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—But it is not done by regulation.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, but it is done by the Grain Growers Association who have the confidence of the people. They mix it and make money out of it. I think the dividends of the Grain Growers Company are probably higher than any dividends of any grain company in the west.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—That is probably because they mix.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Well, you say it is at the instance of the farmer? If so it must be a good business, because most of the farmers are stock-holders in the Grain Growers' Company. My hon. friend says they do not want it. Inside of the last ten days the hon. member from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) canvassed me to let this Bill pass without any amendment, and because I cannot change my mind as quickly as he can, he says that everybody who opposes him is working against the interests of the farmers.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I want to draw attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman is making a statement that is not true. He spoke to me about this Grain Bill——

The SPEAKER—Order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman did not canvas me, but he told me that he thought this House should pass the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I did not. I said I was not going to interfere with it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—But he has, and that is the best possible evidence. Because I take a different view from him now he tries to make the House believe that I do not work in the interest of the farmers. I have been living in the Northwest thirty five years and been engaged in the farming and milling business and therefore I do not choose to yield my judgment to the judgment of any delegation. I know something of the business, and I am prepared to give my best attention to anything in the interests of the grain growers of this country and have done so ever since 1883, when I first occupied a seat in the House of Commons. Some of those gentlemen who are opposing this sample market are representatives of the millers in Ontario, and the western farmers have had to fight those people on the standards. It was the custom to make the standard every year to meet the crop of that year—in other words the samples were selected for the purpose of deciding what should be the standard of one year. I always opposed that ever since grain legislation was discussed. Ten or twelve years ago we decided that the samples should not be made to meet the crop each year, but that the crop should come up to the standard, and for the last ten or twelve years we have had standards of wheat that are a trade mark of value in the markets of the world. We have that trade mark because we adopted a standard of wheat that is practically equal value for milling purposes for each and every year.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Why not let it alone then?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We are not interfering with it.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—When you mix it you are.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We are not mixing it. Formerly the Ontario millers used to come up to Manitoba and direct what the samples should be. We have got past that and for the last ten or twelve years have had standards that are known wherever Canadian wheat is sold. Every gentleman here who has spoken on this matter has stated that those standards are well known in the English market, and it matters not whether they have samples of the new wheat, the standard of the former season is sufficient to sell this year's crop on. I made inquiry last summer and in discussing the matter with one of the largest importers of wheat in Manchester he told me that for ten years he had never had a complaint of a Canadian cargo of wheat, that David Horn's certificate on a cargo of wheat was A1 at Lloyds', and that he had never had a complaint about wheat sold on a Canadian certificate. I inquired about the United States certificates? He said: 'We do not have any, because in the United States they have mixing. We are going to retain the identity of our wheat, but can any one point out to me that it will be a mistake to have a sample market if the conditions are right for it? I have sometimes had doubts as to whether we should talk about the average bin. Any wheat that will just go in over the line, and below the line goes into one bin. There is a spread of three cents a bushel in that wheat. One wheat may be worth two and a half or three cents more than the other, but all goes into the same bin. I question very much whether the buyer purchases on more than the minimum grade. He knows he is going to have wheat of a certain grade, and some of it will be over that line, and some below it.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—In other words the buyer will grade the wheat as low as possible.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—That is why he should not be allowed to mix it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the farmer is only getting the minimum price, it is the interest of the farmer to get as much over that as possible.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—It is not his when it gets over the line.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If you send a car of wheat to Winnipeg and it is almost No. 1 Northern and it is put on the sample market, if it is No. 2 Northern you get No. 2 Northern price, but if it is No. 2 on the sample market and almost gets into No. 1 Northern, you will get a premium of two cents on the wheat. My hon. friend would get it if he would take advantage of it.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I never could.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The proposition before us now is that this Bill provides for a sample market, when certain conditions exist; it does not prevent people buying on sample. As a matter of fact most wheat is bought on samples. Every buyer who purchases on the street is buying on samples; he is his own judge as to what the wheat is worth. We are providing for a sample market at different points and conducted under regulation. Now, if the conditions were the same in Winnipeg as they are in Minneapolis a sample market would be a good thing for the west. much better than anything we have under present conditions, because the present conditions are such that a man who ships wheat to the Minneapolis market gets every cent of what that wheat is worth. The milling industries around Minneapolis have a capacity of some two hundred million bushels a year; I do not think they ever run more than 65 per cent of their capacity, and, consequently, there is keen competition for wheat to keep those mills running. The miller wants the hard wheat to mix with softer wheat, and instructs a commission merchant to get a certain grade of wheat for him, No. 1, or No. 2, or No. 3, Northern.

That wheat is bought and shipped direct to the miller; it does not go through the elevator at all, and the miller gets that type of wheat, and the producer gets everything that is in it, because there is keen competition for that particular type of wheat. Now that condition is ideal. We have not got that in Winnipeg, and we cannot have it, for the simple reason that we have not the market. We have only three or four milling companies there, and I do not know that they do very much to put up the price of wheat. I do not think the whole combination of millers are competing very hard against each other to increase the price of wheat; I think the price they pay is the average price. I am one of those who believe that in the very near future we will have those ideal conditions in Winnipeg. With the statute left just as it is, when the conditions are such that the people want the sample market, they will be able to have it by proclamation, because I believe that, notwithstanding the fact that the reciprocity pact failed last September, the people of the west must have the United States market for the wheat. I am also satisfied that the United States will take the duty off in order to get our wheat, and if they do, then we have those ideal conditions for the sample market in Winnipeg. I want to have the statute left in such shape that the people of the west can avail themselves of the sample markets when the conditions are as described in that resolution. Therefore, I am opposed to the amendment suggested by the member from Prince Albert. I would have, probably, some doubt whether I should vote even for the amendment that was suggested the other day. However, if the amendment is passed, I think it is in the right direction and no harm can come of it, because it does not apply until the conditions are such that it should apply. I do not look on this Grain Bill as a party measure. I know that, for a great number of years, both political parties have been striving to frame this Grain Act. In all that time I have never known that political considerations entered into the question. I do not see why they should, and I know that they should not. I am satisfied that members of the House of Commons on both sides, and members of the Senate on both sides, have endeavoured to lend their best judgment to bringing about legislation that would meet the situation. It must be remembered that, while this Bill is peculiarly fitted to temporarily relieve the situation of the western producer, its trade aspect is secondary. There are conditions in the west that are at times, very very hard. We will have them discussed under another clause here to-day —the car distribution and all those things —but I think the House would do well to leave this clause as it stands at present.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie whether it is true that all cars are inspected and get their certificate as they pass through Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Mr. McHUGH—That wheat goes down to the elevators and is stored at the terminal elevators?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—Is it not possible, by the mixing system at the elevator, to put a low grade No. 1 and a high grade No. 2 together, and that the terminal elevator will be able to sell out more No. 1 than they bought in?

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Not according to law, no. It is claimed that that is done, but it is not according to law, because those elevators are subject to inspection. All the wheat that is graded is supposed to be put in bins under Dominion inspection.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—If you allow mixing, will it be punishable then?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The mixing is before the grading. After a car is inspected it cannot be tampered with in any shape or form, under the law.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—But it has been.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Some people say it has been.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I would like to say—

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the House yesterday expressed itself as unwilling to permit a member to speak twice on the same question.

Hon. Mr. DE VEBER—This business looks to me something like a horse race, with a number of horses in it, and the jockey of each trying to obtain the lead, and we who are not in the race are the judges, and I think we should look very closely to the question before we judge as to what we should do. In regard to the sample market, it seems good to me. I know if I were buying a horse I would like to see the animal before I bought him; I would like to look at his teeth to ascertain his age, to look down his legs to see if there were any incipient splints, and I would like to look at his hocks to see if they were suspicious. To my mind, as far as it can be managed, the idea of a sample market is ideal. Locally it would be perfect; the farmer would bring his grain in and sell it on sample and get his money and go home. As far as any individual car can be handled separately, that would hold good; but when you have to ship grain as far as we have in the west, for instance from Alberta to Liverpool, it must go through a good many hands, must be changed into a good many cars and mixed with lots of other grain, and how could you send a sample of that grain to England and be sure that you were delivering the same wheat? Whereas, if that grain is graded it goes to a certain grade, and you get your money for that grade. As to the mixing part, I am not so satisfied as I am with the sample market. The mixing is not an unlawful thing to do. If I go into certain parts of the country and buy one or two million bushels of grain, and they are of different grade, I can mix that if I like before it is graded. I can buy every bit of grain in a certain portion of the Northwest, and before it comes to be graded there is no law that I know of to hinder me from mixing that grain and putting it in any grade I like; but the very instant I have it graded I cannot mix it any more. There is nothing in the law to prevent a man from mixing his own grain to any grade he likes; and as it is unlawful to mix grain after it is graded, what is the use of putting the clause in at all? You have it right there in the old Act. That is the way I look at it, as a man in the street.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I must confess that my opinion is very far from being clear on this subject, and many of my colleagues seem to be in the same position. It seems to be a question of fact between the elevator men and the farmers. I am rather inclined to be for the farmers than for the other parties, though I have nothing to say against them. The government have declared that they are not ready to put this clause into operation; they are willing to put in a clause to suspend the operation, which shows that there is something on which the government is not very clear. Why not, therefore, let the Bill go without that clause, and next year, after they study the situation, if the clause is necessary go back and put in the clause which they are willing should come into force by proclamation. We would then be in a better position to judge, and the government would be ready to say what they want. The attitude of the government has proved to me that it would be better for this to stand at present, and to vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would ask those who are advocating the retention of the system at present in force to bear in mind that we are not abolishing it in the slightest degree. Therefore if the strong features are there—and it has strong features—it would naturally be the most popular in the trade, and the sample market would have to take a secondary place. It is simply proposed to add another system. In committee the other day I said that the sample market was the ideal market, but I questioned whether the time was ripe, that is as to conditions, for taking care of the grain at such terminal points as Fort William and Port Arthur, where innumerable dealers in the grain business would be requiring bins for a number of grades of wheat. Many of them would want special bins to handle several of those grades, thus absorbing the bins; and bearing in mind that you still retain the old system; having this double barrelled system of storage to take care of at Fort William and Port Arthur, I fear there would be some difficulty in working it out. I fancy that was the phase of the question that prompted the leader of the opposition to amend the clause in such a way as to prevent the Act coming into force until such time as those matters were determined. My hon. friend from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) has moved that subclauses 2 and 3 and clause 57 be struck out. In my opinion he should have moved only to strike out the second, because that would prevent any mixing, but the third would allow the stopping over of cars at Winnipeg, which is so absolutely necessary, mixing or no mixing, if you are to sell individual cars on the market. What will happen in practice? My friend behind me (Hon. Mr. Talbot) says that the dealer and the dealer alone is interested in this question. Quite the contrary—and I know what I am talking about. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Talbot) and my friend from Prince Albert will admit that the quantity of cars, especially of the individual farmers at both the terminal points, has increased very largely in the last two years, and is on the increase every year; therefore, all those cars can take all the benefit arising from the sample market.

In reference to the inspection and afterwards switching the cars over to a sample market, in practice a car will come to Winnipeg regardless of who the owner is, and will be inspected. If the owner of the wheat expects that car to go No. I, and thinks it should, and as frequently occurs, the inspector says: 'No, it will go No. 2, rejected for smut'—I am giving an extreme case, but not as extreme as might be given—the owner of the wheat, whether farmer or dealer, will feel that he is hurt. I have had that difference of opinion myself in actual experience. Now, a sample market will come into play in reference to that car. The sample is there on the table, and if the miller says: 'I will give you within two or three cents of the value of No. 1 for that car,' as against the price which I, or the owner, would have to take if it went into the bin according to grade, it would be an advantage, whether the owner was producer or dealer, to sell that car by sample, and he would naturally take advantage of the law and sell that car on the sample market. On the contrary, if that car graded No. 1, the best the owner would expect to get for it, then he would not bother with the sample market; that car would go forward with the grade certificate No. 1 attached to it. The only object of the sample market would be to take care of the grain between the grade lines—midway, quarterway, or whatever distance it might be from the grade line—and to get the intrinsic value for the owner. My hon. friend, the leader of the government, has read the expressions of these farmers as to a sample market. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition suggested that in 1908 he had a long conference with the varied interests on this matter and everything else in his office in the city of Ottawa here.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—And in 1909 and 1910.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I fancy my hon friend had annual visits from them, and received them very graciously, and gave them ample opportunity to discuss everything in connection with the grain business. But I find in 1908, Mr. Partridge, a very prominent gentleman connected with the Grain Growers' Association, who my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Hon. Mr. Davis) will admit is a very intelligent man, and had a great deal to do with the organization and placing the association on the successful footing which it holds at present, in giving his evidence before Sir Richard Cartwright, and the others who were present, says at page 97:

> We recognize, as very many grain men do, that it is only by a sample market that we can get the best results.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Nobody is objecting to the sample market; it is the mixing.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend says that he does not object to the sample market, but he objects to the mixing. Now I want to show you, hon. gentlemen, that if you do not allow mixing you might just as well wipe out the clause altogether. For what on earth will a man do with a car of grain above the grade if he cannot mix it to get out of it, in some way, the premium he has paid on it; or if he cannot mix it what happens? He has to pass that car into the very grade the inspector says, and any premiums he has paid on it he will only have the satisfaction of having contributed his mite to the raising of the average of the bins.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I would like to know if this proposed mixing will take place after the grain leaves the possession of the farmer, or before? That is, while it is in his possession, or after it has left his hands.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—First and foremost, let me say that every farmer that sells a load of grain on the country markets sells it on the sample market basis. He works under that principle; and he would not work under any other. Secondly, when the grain reaches Winnipeg the farmer owns it up to the time it comes to the inspector—I am now speaking of a farmer's car, He may be disappointed in the result of that inspection, and he can only get the grade price. The lower the grade the greater the spread; he gets a much less price than what he thought his cars should have graded for. He has to take the next lowest grade, say three or four cents less. He has a choice of two things—of putting his grain into the bin that similar grain has been in formerly and holding his certificate, or he could come to you and say: 'My wheat is worth three cents a bushel more than grade; will you give it to me, or will I have to send it down and take the grade value for it'?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Is the case you have instanced not an exceptional case, one out of perhaps a thousand, or is it general?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A farmer's car is no better or worse before our vigilant inspectors than a dealer's car. There is no choice, no preference. It would be on the law of averages, in proportion to the number of cars shipped by the farmer.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—But as a matter of fact, does the farmer, except in very rare cases, raise any objection to the grading proceeding?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am advised by the Inspection Department that one of the most active men in fighting his grade, if it does not suit him, is the farmer; and let me tell this House that the Grain Growers' Grain Co. felt it necessary, in the interests of its customers, to take a gentleman into their service who was formerly connected with the inspection department, to go down to the yards and take samples side by side with the inspectors, and they held judgment over it themselves to verify the inspector's decision, and if they did not think the decision was the proper one, to appeal to the Survey Board if necessary, and obtain justice for their customers. Other firms do the same thing. Let me assure my hon. friend that the farmer is not backward in making complaint, and very properly so. Now it is up to us to say whether this will be left on the statute-book under such conditions as impose a responsibility on the government to see to it that that clause is not put into effect until the conditions and circumstances are right for it. If it were not that I did not want to delay the House, I could point out that in this report of the conference of 1908 the railway men bitterly opposed the proposition of special binning at Fort William and Port Arthur. One prominent railway man, in expressing his views, said: 'If you adopt that system we will have to spread our elevators all over the place to find room,' and they made an estimate of the number of bins that would then be required. Mr. Partridge said there were about 300 dealers, and how many would require bins it was impossible to say. My only desire is to give you some practical information on the working out of it. A great many erroneous impressions have been created in connection with this whole system and method of handling grain—that it is going to be entirely for the benefit of the combine, as my hon. friend from Prince Albert has affirmed so often. That is an erroneous idea to place before this House. Advantages are in favour of the owner of the grain when it comes before the inspector in the first instance, whoever that owner may be, and who gets it at the sample market and pays a premium on his wheat over and above the grade.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Surely my hon. friend knows that the representatives of the owners of the grain are here opposing that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I take issue with my hon. friend. I should like the House to know that the Grain Growers' Association only represents ten per cent of the farmers of the west; and when my hon. friend gets up and says he represents the grain growers of the west I do not wish the House to be deluded to that extent. The commission to which I have referred made a pronouncement upon the fact that the Grain Growers' Association only represent about ten per cent of the farmers.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Not at all; the Grain Growers Association represent the men that grow from sixty to seventy per cent of the grain in the west.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Take the report of the commission appointed by the province of Saskatchewan: 'The Grain Growers' Association is an organization numbering somewhere about ten per cent of the farmers.'

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Yes, but one farmer grows 100,000 bushels and another grows ten bushels. The members of the Grain Growers' Association are the people who grow the wheat.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 'e' of clause 207. This is the clause which refers to the distribution of cars. I do not want to take up time on this, because it was discussed before. Very strong pressure has been brought to bear from all quarters in reference to this clause. The legislature of Saskatchewan unanimously passed a desolution in reference to eliminating this clause, and it has had the support of a great many of both parties in the other House.

The SPEAKER—I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has no right to speak on the amendment at all. He has exercised his right in speaking on his first amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 'e' of clause 207.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I understood from somebody that it was the intention of the government to drop this paragraph 'e'.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is not the intention. We are entirely in the hands of the House. The government has deliberately put this clause in on the representations of the farmers themselves.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I do not wish to be understood as suggesting in any way that the car order clause of the Grain Act should be ruthlessly put aside and disturbed by paragraph (e). I rather want to make some special pleading for one class, and one class alone—the men who reside at too great a distance from the loading point to take advantage of the car-loading clause of the Act. I am not asking that any increase in car supply shall be given to the elevators; if I were, I should be treading on personal grounds, because in a small way I have an interest in a line of country elevators. If I were taking any greater part in this matter than I am taking, I would move that paragraph (e) be struck out. Possibly the wording of my amendment is not just right, but my idea is that any deviation from the car order clause, as it is at present, should only be for the direct benefit of those who come in twenty, thirty and forty miles to market with their individual loads and find they are unable to dispose of them, and have to make the best shift they can. I am not wedded to the wording I would suggest, but I will read it, and perhaps in your wisdom, if you think these men can be provided for without giving any advantage in the slightest to the elevator companies, more than they have at present, which is not much, but leaving that intact, I would suggest that you might strike out paragraph (e) and say:

That whenever upon complaint, and supported by affidavit of farmers, and after due examination, it is found that grain is being offered on the market by farmers residing at too great a distance from any loading point to participate in the car loading provisions of this Act, and they are unable to market their grain, and the board considers it necessary and advisable in order to relieve this congestion, and thereby facilitate the despatch of such grain there within the terms of the car distribution clauses.

The wording may not be right, but you have my idea. This could only be applied for one purpose, to take the grain off the street. It may be objected that this may be a difficult order, and that it cannot be worked out. My answer to that is that if it cannot be worked out, then the car order clause shall remain intact and locked up as it is at present. I think that is a fair proposition. A great many cures have been suggested for the unfortunate congestion we have at times in the Northwest. Some have suggested that a percentage be given to the farmers, and a percentage to the elevators, but the idea amongst fair-minded men, grain growers as well, some of them prominent in the councils of the organization, has been that the class I have indicated have no show whatever under the car distribution clause if there is a car shortage, under present circumstances. Let me point out to you that the man outside the car-loading line very seldom draws his grain to market during the open season in the fall. Of necessity he must devote as much time as possible to farming operations before the freeze-up. The best he can do to draw his grain to market is one load a day, while the men who can take advantage of the car-loading may load a car in a day. Therefore, you can see that in order to haul so large a quantity of grain to market, he would have practically no time in the fall to attend to his farming operations. As a rule the man draws in a load or two in the fall while his farm operations are going on, because he has debts to pay for twine, blacksmithing, &c., and then he will leave the rest of his crop until the ground is frozen and he cannot go on with farm operations. Then he comes on the market to find that there may be possibly at some points sixty or seventy loads of grain there, and a car comes in and the first man on the car-order book gets that car, though he may be a man within a mile of the track, and he may have loaded one or two cars already; but it does not matter how many individual farmers are standing on the street or what distance they will haul their grain, that part goes to the benefit of one as against the disadvantage of many. Now that is not a very reasonable situation. Another unfortunate position arises, that the car-order book gets clogged up with dead orders and there is no way to clear it up. Taking it all in all, I do not think it is asking too much to devote a few minutes to consider the class of farmers indicated, and see whether or not we cannot at least try to afford them some relief.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yesterday I stated that, having heard the representations of the farmers, I was against paragraph 'e' of clause 207. They were unanimous in demanding that this be dropped; and I think it was a great concession to give to those who were advocating clause 207 as it stands, to introduce in that clause paragraph 'b,' which was to be a mere temporary application of relief in case of damp grain. But I must not lose sight of the fact that when the representatives of the farmers were heard the other day it was stated, and not denied, that the farmers from long distances were at a great disadvantage; that farmers had to wait some five, six or seven days with their load of wheat before being able to discharge their wagons; and it must be at very high expense, and if at all possible we should come to the relief of that class of farmers. They live at a long distance from the cars, some 25 or 30 miles, and they are kept from five to eight days before they can unload their wagons on to the cars.

I think there is a good deal in the idea expressed by the hon. gentleman from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young), and I think it deserves consideration by this House. It is not quite plain to my mind as to whether a proper clause could be framed to give effect to the idea, but it is worth consideration. I, therefore, move that this debate be adjourned to the next sitting of the House, to be the first order after third readings.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (152) An Act to extend the boundaries of the province of Ontario.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock this afternoon.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE CANADA GRAIN BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called:

Third reading Bill (32) An Act respecting Grain.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. member from Montreal, who had the floor this morning, has been called away, and asked me to present some matters to the House. The question had been raised as to whether it would be possible to grant relief to farmers, in the matter of loading cars, residing at too great a distance from a railway. The hon. gentleman devoted a great deal of his time during lunch hour to endeavouring to frame a clause. He had an informal conference with those representing the various interests, but found great difficulty in framing a clause either to his own satisfaction, or to the satisfaction of the House, on so complicated a question. He asked me to read to the House the clause he suggested, prepared in a hurried manner and in the short time at his disposal. He does not feel satisfied that he has, in this intricate and complicated question, properly worded an amendment to meet the views of the House. The proposed amendment is as follows:

> In time of unexpected congestion, and for the sole purpose of coming to the relief of farmers who may have come from distances exceeding 4 miles, with the expectation of being able to unload their grain, but kept waiting for several days before being able to do so, then the board may order, &c.

This is the cue of his suggestion. After a good deal of consideration and discussion, I think the nearest relief that can be given under the circumstances which are so far reaching as car shortage, is possibly the erection of internal large storage elevators, where the short haul would take place, and where, if grain were inspected at those elevators, the farmers who own the grain would be able to sell, or realize on it in such a way as to relieve their obligations. Any of us who have given the matter consideration and endeavoured to limit the action of the board to the class of settlers indicated in this amendment, must realize that the difficulties in framing a measure to fit this state of affairs multiply as we go on discussing the various features. In view of this, and in view of the fact that we are having this year an experience in car shortage which may help them out, I would ask the leader of the government to seriously consider, under the circumstances, and at this late date of the session especially, a withdrawal of clause 'e' entirely leaving that matter to be dealt with at some future time. With the experience of this year, added to the experience of other years, they might take into consideration the building of these interior elevators that I have suggested, or any other matter that in their judgment may help to ameliorate to some extent car shortage when it exists.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I was very much pleased, indeed, to hear my hon. friend from Killarney (Hon Mr. Young) make some suggestions which would lead us to believe would be favourable, or would work to the advantage of a certain class of the western farmers at least. I was not pleased because I thought that his suggestion would really be workable, but I rather thought it was a sign of a gentle prick to his conscience for the vote he had given this morning.

This question of the distribution of cars has a very long history. In the early days of wheat growing in the west, and when the elevators were first erected, the farmers had to sell their grain to the elevator people and they soon found that they were being robbed. The elevator people were putting the grade of their grain as low as possible, and paying the least possible price. It was only natural that they should do that, and they did it. The farmers began an agitation for the right and privilege of getting cars and shipping their own grain to Winnipeg and Port Arthur and Fort William, and selling the grain through commission agents. After many years of agitation they got that privilege. They came to Ottawa year after year before they got that privilege of getting cars in a certain rotation and shipping their own grain. Ever since, the elevator people have been trying to break that arrangement and to compel the farmers to ship their grain through the elevators. I want to point out the result of such a condition. In the town of Lacombe, in which I live, there are elevators. The neighbouring locality is chiefly adapted to mixed farming and not a great deal of wheat was grown. A few farmers have gradually been increasing their acreage of wheat. I know two of them particularly. One of them grew something over 3,000 bushels of wheat and had a sufficient quantity to ship by carload lots. He ordered his car and secured it. His wheat was graded No. 3 and was sold in Winnipeg through a commission agent and the owner realized 78 cents net per bushel for his grain. The other farmer adjoining him, a man whom I am particularly acquainted with, had not sufficient wheat to ship a carload lot, and he had to go to the elevator. There are two elevators in the town. He went to both of them, and they agreed that his wheat was No. 3 grade, and he sold to one of the elevators, but only received 62 cents a bushel for it. The small farmer who is not able to ship his grain by carload lots is robbed in that way continually, and I do not see any way of preventing it, because there is a combine among the elevator men and no competition. I have another case that I desire to put as clearly as possible before this House. In the town of Sovereign, in the province of Saskatchewan, since the Bill we passed a few weeks ago came into effect, a certain farmer requested cars. There are two elevators there, one called the State elevator, and the other called the Goose Lake Grain and Lumber Company's elevator. Both of these were buying grain. The farmer had asked for cars, but advantage was taken of the new law and eight cars were given to the elevator companies. The cars loaded by the State elevator were as follows: Canadian Pacific railway cars Nos. 73946, 57968, and 44869; by the Goose Lake Lumber and Grain Company, Canadian Pacific railway cars Nos. 84968, 83654, 92324, 38656, and Canadian Northern railway car No. 43744. These cars were loaded out of their order by these elevators, the alleged reason being that the grain was damp, or getting out of condition. The cars left for Winnipeg where they were to be inspected. The farmers of the locality got suspicious and sent to their agent in Winnipeg and found that these cars were graded straight, and that there was nothing wrong with the grain. What is the result? In that same town a farmer brought his grain in and went to the elevator and was told that his grain was No. 2, but that No. 2 bin was full and they would have to put it in No. 3. That would make a difference of some 2 or 3 cents a bushel to that farmer. He went down to see the other elevator company and was told the same story. After going through the town trying to secure a place in which to leave his grain, or to sell it to some merchant, he found that he could not do anything with it and he went back to the elevators and said, 'I guess I will have to take No. 3 bin and No. 3 price.' The elevator man said, 'I am very sorry, No. 3 bin is full and No. 4 bin is full, and the best I can do for you is to give you No. 5.' There are many cases of robbery like that in the west, and if this privilege is to be taken from the farmers, of having some show of justice and fair-play, so that they can ship their grain in carload lots, then I think there is something wrong. I would dislike very much to see that privilege taken from the farmers of the country. Nine-tenths of the farmers will be very sorry indeed if this Bill is passed in its present form. We want sub-clause (e) eliminated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have devoted a great deal of time and a good deal of attention to this Bill. The great contention seems to be the insertion of sub-clause (e) in clause 207. I have no desire to comment on the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, but I want to make a suggestion to the leader of the government in order to meet, as far as possible, the objection which has been taken to this clause. From my own standpoint, I should consider it was an admirable provision to meet the difficulties which have been pointed out, that have arisen in the past. I am going to suggest, in order to meet the views of those who have made some strong objection to it, that that section of the clause should be dropped. If it is found during the coming year, after harvest, that a provision of a similar character is necessary, parliamnet can step in and enact it. In the meantime, if we are to end this session before next Christmas I would suggest that the clause should be dropped.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I quite agree with that idea. I think the consensus of opinion in this House is that this section should be dropped. I quite appreciate what the hon. gentleman from Lacombe (Hon. Mr. Talbot) has said. Yet I cannot quite understand why a farmer should start from his home, 25 or 30 miles away, with a load of grain, without first having sent a postcard a week before to some of these buyers in order to ascertain what he can get for his grain.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—The vast majority of farmers have telephones and they know the price.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The hon. member from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) made the suggestion that this clause should be dropped. I understood there was going to be an amendment moved by the hon. member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Bèique).

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The leader should be ready to drop it; why do you not ask him to do so?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object of the government in inserting this clause was to meet such cases of hardship as have been pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Lacombe. It certainly was in the best interests of the farmers, they thought, to make a provision of this kind. The expressed sentiment of this House, however, may possibly be against it, and, under the circumstances, the government would have no desire to obtrude upon parliament a provision whch is not acceptable. In deference to the sentiment expressed, I will not divide the House but regard the amendment carried as on a division, as this, in any event, would seem to be the likely result. There is an amendment which I should like to make to section 41.

The SPEAKER—I suppose the hon. member who made the motion in amendment will drop his amendment?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE moved that subclause (e) of clause 207 be struck out of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

JUDGES' ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (156) An Act to amend the Judges' Act. He said: I stated that I would obtain information for my hon. friend from Toronto as to the representation made by the Ontario government to this government for the appointment of two additional judges. I saw the Minister of Justice, and he said very great pressure had been brought to bear on the department, both by the Prime Minister of Ontario and the Attorney General, and also one of the Chief Justices of the High Court of Justice of Ontario, and it was only after very urgent representations had been made that provision was made for two additional judges.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Have any steps been taken by the government to consider the salaries of County Court judges in British Columbia ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can say nothing about that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to this measure I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the increase in the number of judges has been recommended by the Chief Justice of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I said one of the Chief Justices of the High Court of Justice of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I assume, perhaps that is the same Chief Justice who is being appointed to an important commission, and consequently I think his recommendation cannot be called a disinterested one.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (167) An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Associations.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (171) An Act to amend the Militia Act.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am not prepared to move against this Bill, but I call attention to the utter and ridiculous absurdity of appointing a dozen, or a score, of generals to look after what? To look after, I suppose, about 1,500 permanent force men. Making generals of militia officers, gentlemen who have never smelt powder or heard a bullet whiz, appears to me to be making a farce of the thing and to be bringing the people of Canada and the Militia Department into considerable ridicule. It appears to me that the creation of all these generals tends very decidedly to lower us in the eyes of reasonable thinking men. One general we might have for looking after our little permanent force, but if I understand aright, the last clause of this Bill it is proposed to dub a score of gentlemen, who retire, major-generals, and for what? If I am not mistaken—I shall be very glad to be corrected—but as I read the Bill, it appears to me to be supremely ridiculous, and to make us appear supremely ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I never had any sympathy with the tu quoque argument, yet I might remind my right hon. friend that it was the government to which he belonged that introduced this conferring of high military distinction on military officers. In fact, I am unaware of the present government, except in one case, having conferred this honour on any officer.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am now free to express my individual opinion. Now you are apparently going to create a whole batch of them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, the object of this Bill is rather to restrict the conferring of the honour than to indulge in it. It appears that Major-General Otter, who was the first appointed major-general, was appointed by order in council, and the facility of making appointments by order in council seems to have appealed so strongly to the late government, or military officers, that it was repeated on several occasions, and the opinion has been given that the government had no authority by order in council to confer this distinction. The military gentlemen who have been carrying the distinction seem to have a feeling of uncertainty whether it belongs to them legally, and for the purpose of ratifying what has been done, this Bill has been introduced.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am willing enough to respect vested rights, even in the case of generalships. What I object to is that the last clause practically means you are going to create a flood of these officers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I do not think it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It gives that power, apparently. Has the hon. gentleman looked at it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did look at it yesterday. There are two clauses in the Bill, one dealing with conditions in time of peace, and the other when the militia is called out for active service.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT --You will be asking to create field marshals presently.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hope, with my hon. friend, that those distinctions will be dealt out very sparingly. It is always difficult, however, to foresee what importunities may be brought to bear on the government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —If it were in the hands of my hon. friend, we would have a feeling of security that the power would not be abused.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can assure my right hon. friend there would not be many major-generals if it were in my hands.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am quite willing that the government should take the responsibility of appointing one or two officers of Major-General Otter's rank. The chief officer of militia and the chief officer of the permanent force might have that distinction accorded to them but if you are going to bestow it on a whole shoal of retired officers, there is no question about it you would make us ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill is simply to legalize what the late government did illegally.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (88) An Act for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 4,—Duties of the commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved that clause 4 of the Bill be amended as follows:

1. By inserting immediately after paragraph (g) of subsection 1, the following paragraphs:
(h) the grounds, if any, for believing that articles in question can be produced as cheaply in Canada or elsewhere within a limited period;
(i) what other industries would be affected by increase of duty;
(j) the effect of any employment in question on the health of employees;' and

2. By inserting immediately after the word 'minister' at the end of subsection 1 the following:—
Provided always that in all cases where the commission reports in favour of any increase of duty, or where any application for an increase is made the commission shall, in addition to reporting upon the above matters, make a special report which, in the case of any industry already established, shall state—
(a) the number of factories now existing and the number of hands now employed, giving in each case the number of men, women and children respectively;
(b) the amount actually expended in cash in erecting and equipping the same;
(c) the nominal capital and amounts of bonds and liabilities, also whether any mergers or combines have taken place and the amounts of watered stock issued;
(d) a list of the shareholders and the number and amount of shares held by each shareholder;
(e) the dividends paid during each of the preceding ten years;
(f) the wages of hands and the number of hours worked per diem;
(g) the total amount of goods of the kind produced in each factory consumed in Canada, whether home-made or imported.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might say we have discussed this pro and con for such a length of time that I think the better way is to simply move the amendment, let it carry and send it to the Commons.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —By this amendment each factory is freed from the necessity of giving a detailed account.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should it not apply with equal force to those who are demanding a reduction of duty?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —My experience is there are none.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The free traders are constantly asking for a reduction of tariff, and the government should be in possession of the reasons for the desired change.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —They have the power to ask for all that under the general law.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think it is a very proper suggestion to make for the reason that very often a person who asks for a reduction of duty is asking for a reduction on an article which is another man's manufactured product, and he is seriously affected by it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The man who is asking for an increase of duty is asking for a protection which will interfere with the importation of certain articles, which another manufacturer may require.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is dealt with in another part, in which it is provided that a report must be made to the effect that any alteration on other industries must be reported on.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That applies with the same force under the law without the amendment as it does with it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT--Exactly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. It is sauce for the goose alone.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—The only goose who will suffer is the poor farmer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And the poor cheesemaker.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the Committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

WINNIPEG AND ST. BONIFACE HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on Bill (138) An Act to incorporate the Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is precisely similar to a Bill passed during the present session regarding the harbour of Hamilton. This proposes to give authority to incorporate a harbour commission for the cities of Winnipeg and St. Boniface.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I was under the impression that both Winnipeg and St. Boniface were inland ports.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Owing to the construction of St. Andrews locks, and the improvement of the Red river, and the navigation which is tributary to Winnipeg, there is considerable shipping from the city of Winnipeg, and it is necessary to build wharfs and carry on certain improvements upon the river front.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—How much shipping has passed through St. Andrews locks ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot give my hon. friend the volume of shipping. However, it entails no obligations on the government. It is simply a matter of domestic arrangement between those two cities.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What on earth do they want to do ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, it is necessary for them to make certain arrangements in what is known as the harbour, or on the river front, and it is thought that this is the most advisable way of doing it.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—They pay their own money, do they ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They raise their own money.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is expected that there will be considerable traffic to and from Winnipeg. Of course, St. Andrews locks have not been used much down to the present time, because they have been open only a year, but the whole of Lake Winnipeg is now made tributary to the city of Winnipeg.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT——How many miles is it from Winnipeg to the lake ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—About forty miles; I think they have navigation for boats drawing eight feet of water as far as Winnipeg and there is a movement on at present for improving Red river right up to Minnesota. In Minnesota there is a good deal of traffic along the Red river, collecting wheat at different points. So far as the traffic to Winnipeg is concerned, there is no doubt that city will get a large supply of its fuel, building stone, building sand, and building material from Lake Winnipeg. This Bill entails no charge, and it is thought by the people of Winnipeg to be the best plan to improve the waterfront along the Red river.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DRY DOCKS SUBSIDIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (180) An Act to amend the Dry Docks Subsidies Act, 1910. He said: I am sorry that I am not just as familiar as I should be with the particulars of this Bill. It is an amendment to the present Act. Owing to the increased size of ships, it is necessary to make provision for very much larger docks than were contemplated in the Act as it now stands on the statute-book. It is necessary to amend the Act, and I shall have certain information from the Minister of Public Works when we go into the Bill, dealing with the further details.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one point with respect to this measure as to which I hope the hon. gentleman will give the House some satisfactory information at the next stage. When the Act, of which this is an amendment, was before this House, I felt it my duty to criticise the measure, and I feel that it is still more my duty to do so now. At that date I was on the government side of the House and now I am on the other side. Briefly stated, the effect of this legislation is that the country builds the dry docks—pays for them at any rate—and then the companies own them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Canada simply guarantees the interest on the bonds for a period of years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That comes to the same thing. I do not wish to in any way raise a question with respect to the character of any of the harbours where these dry docks ought to be located. If a dry dock is not so located so that ships which come to grief on the ocean are likely to be repaired there, then a dry dock cannot pay. If I remember rightly, the Act of which this is an amendment, provides that the government may take the dock over and operate it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It just comes to this, that if the dock does not pay working expenses, then the company will drop out and the government will have a white elephant on its hands, a most expensive dry dock which they will be afraid not to operate, and which will mean a continual drain on the treasury. It does seem to me that where a company undertakes to build any work of this kind, the company should take a reasonable risk. In this case, the country takes the whole risk, and the company practically takes none. I understand the present Minister of Finance is looked upon as a good business man. I am surprised that a proposition of this kind should secure the concurrence of one whom I believe is a good business man, and I can not help feeling that the hon. the Minister of Finance has been, to a certain extent, overborne by his colleagues in the cabinet. I do not see how any business man could ever have become a party to such an arrangement as is embodied in this Bill. When the company came and asked for an increase of the amount of subsidy, there was an opportunity then to impose such conditions as would have made the bargain a little less one-sided, and I am sorry that, as far as I can judge from a hasty glance over this Bill, there is no such safeguard in it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman wish to lay down the proposition that we are not going to have dry docks until they will pay for themselves? The country should assist in the construction of dry docks to provide for the large vessels which come to our ports. The fact that a dry dock does not pay is no argument against it; we would never have dry docks at all if we acted on that principle. Let us look to the future and build up the country. I know that Halifax is asleep and has not taken advantage of the great progress of Canada. The aristocratic people there lived on the navy and military for a while, but they have gone away. True we have given them a militia to help them out. I think it would be a very short-sighted policy if we imposed on the people who came from England and invested their capital here the penalty of taking the risk of the trade of Canada. If they have erected those docks there, and they suit the requirements of the country, those people have done their duty, and it is up to us, with our large surplus, to relieve the situation and do what we can to maintain them. Canada must have the dry docks.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (181) An Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act. He said: This Bill consists of amendments to the Act which was passed by parliament some time ago. The amendments are of an unimportant character and very largely provide for additional machinery to facilitate the working of the Act as it at present stands. The Act was considered a short time ago and was found in many respects to be inapplicable to many conditions there. These amendments are for the purpose of bringing the Act into line, to meet the changing conditions which are arising from time to time.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I think this Bill is a proper one. The principal provision is to enable miners whose claims are contiguous, to group them so that the work on one claim may be applied to the others—to co-operate. I have no doubt in the present condition of mining in the Yukon this measure is very much required in order to enable miners to keep their claims and to do a certain amount of work. That is a provision which exists to-day in Ontario. Persons owning claims in the Cobalt region may form a partnership for the purpose of doing work on one claim to apply to a number of claims which are contiguous.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second and third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE PROPERTY, TORONTO, BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (182) An Act respecting the Government House property, Toronto. He said: Under the provisions of section 108 of the British North America Act this property was appropriated by order in council for militia purposes in 1871, and later in 1908 Letters Patent were issued vesting the title in the property to the Crown and the province of Ontario. The property has now been sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the province of Ontario, in making a transfer of same to the railway company, has been met by the difficulty in title. The opinion has been expressed by the lawyers who have had to do with the title, that the transfer, or deed, should be sanctioned by parliament and not by order in council of the Governor in Council, as was made to the province of Ontario. It is therefore proposed that this Act shall be passed for the purpose of confirming the title of the province to the property so as to permit of their passing it to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who bought it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Will my hon. friend tell us what this land was used for when it was appropriated for public purposes?

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Government House property.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—What was it prior to that, 1871, at the time when it was turned over to the Crown for public purposes ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under section 180 of the British North America Act it was appropriated by order in council for militia purposes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not think it was part of the Ordnance lands, though.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—No, it was government property of old Canada.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It was property expropriated by the provinces of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it belonged to the old province of Upper Canada.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It is not land we got from the Crown by the right of the Imperial authorities ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —If my memory serves, this belonged to Upper Canada, as it then was called, before the union with Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I have no doubt.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—What I want to get at is this, it was not land set aside for public purposes for all time ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It would be so if it were land got from the Imperial authorities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL — I understand this was ordnance property and when it was transferred to the Dominion it was appropriated for the use of the government of the province of Ontario. My hon. friend will remember that during the administration of the government of Mr. Mackenzie there was a proposition to allow the province of Ontario to dispose of this property for other purposes, and they were met with the difficulty that it was allotted to the province of Ontario for government purposes and could not be diverted from those purposes. The present Bill is to enable the province of Ontario to dispose of it, which they have done, as I understand, to the railway company, and intend to build their Government House in another part of the city.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is clearing up the title.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is simply a confirmation of the Letters Patent issued by the Dominion government in 1908. No other question of title seems to have arisen but the inadequacy of the Letters Patent to transfer it to that province.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second and third time, and passed.

ONTARIO BOUNDARIES BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—moved the second reading of Bill (152) An Act to extend the boundaries of Ontario.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Does this contain any reference to what is known as the strip to be assigned to Ontario by mutual agreement.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, no. That has nothing to do with the Bill. That will be the subject of a second transaction between Ontario and the Dominion government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —This is copied verbatim et literatim from the resolution which was passed some two or three years ago.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Practically the resolutions of 1908.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Is it exactly the same?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know of any difference. The boundaries of both Ontario and Quebec were defined in the resolution brought down in June, 1908.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Does this copy that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I so understand it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It does not refer to it that I can see. It only refers to the Canadian boundary of 1899.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is as to the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario. I hope to have further information to-morrow. I move that the order of the day be discharged, and that it be placed on the orders of the day for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the order of the day was discharged.

OTTAWA AND LAKE McGREGOR RAILWAY COMPANY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT introduced Bill (K 3) An Act to amend the Act of the present session entitled the Ottawa and Lake McGregor Railway Company. He said: The Bill which this amends was a private Bill which passed the Senate without any amendment. When it reached the other House some members objected to some of the provisions of the Bill on the ground that they were not covered by the notice or petition. The committee was unanimous on the point and struck out sections 10, 11, 13 and 15. Among the sections struck out was subsection (b) of section 10, which was amply covered by the petition. It was a petition in regard to acquiring lands and the notice asked for power to acquire, lease, build, own, &c., hotels, houses and other buildings. Mr. Hartney, a clerk of the committee in the other House, explained to me that subsection (b) had been stricken out by the chairman because he had struck out the first part of the section and ran his pen through this subsection thinking it was equally open to the objection which had been made to the other portions. Mr. Hartney recollected at once that it was an error. I now introduce a Bill for the purpose of correcting this mistake.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I desire to have this Bill put through all its stages to-day in order that it may become law before prorogation.

The Bill was read at length at the Table.

The Bill was then read a third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 29, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

GRADIENTS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POWER rose to Call attention to the unsatisfactory condition of the Intercolonial railway to the eastward of Moncton, in the matter of gradients and otherwise, and asked if it is the intention of the government to improve this condition and to raise the standard of the said railway at an early date.

He said: I do not propose to detain the House very long. This is a matter as to which there should not be any difference of opinion. I propose to call attention to the unsatisfactory condition of the Intercolonial railway to the eastward of Moncton. This question would not have become so urgent if the country had not built the National Transcontinental railway. The Transcontinental is intended to afford the best possible means of railway communiation between the Pacific and the Atlantic. As I understand it, the road is now approaching completion, and from Prince Rupert on the Pacific to Moncton in N.B., the maximum grade against east bound traffic will be .4. That is only a little more than a third of one per cent a mile. Inasmuch as the government own the road from Moncton east, and whatever business is done over that road helps to bring up the public revenue, I think the government should do as any enterprising company owning the Intercolonial railway would do. They should make such arrangements as will ensure that the traffic which will come to Moncton will have a chance of going over the Intercolonial railway east of Moncton without meeting with any difficulty. As I have said, the maximum grade on the Transcontinental to Moncton is .4, but when you pass Moncton and go down towards Nova Scotia and into Nova Scotia there are gradients on the Intercolonial railway considerably in excess of one per cent. The result is that an engine which will haul fifty cars on the Transcontinental will not haul more than twenty cars on the Intercolonial railway east of Moncton. That is a very serious condition of things and is calculated to drive business away from the government road. As it is now, that portion of the Intercolonial railway which lies east of St. John is the part of the road that pays; there is a large business done on the road and it pays quite handsomely. The non paying portion of the road is north of that, between Moncton and Quebec. When the Transcontinental railway commences operations, unless the Intercolonial railway east of Moncton is improved the business will not go over it. There is already a road from a place called Chipman, about fifty miles west of Moncton, to St. John, N.B. Another road is contemplated from Grand Falls to St. John. If the government do not raise the standard of their own road east, so that it will be nearly equal to the standard of the Transcontinental, the business will be diverted from the government road and the revenue will suffer. The country east of Moncton, the southeastern part of New Brunswick, the whole of Prince Edward Island and the greater part of Nova Scotia should not be placed at a disadvantage as compared with the other parts of the country through which the Transcontinental railway runs. There is no object in labouring this matter any further. I have seen statements in the newspapers to the effect that the Minister of Railways contemplated doing just the thing the desirability of which I am insisting upon. I do not, I regret to say, read the debates of the other House; but generally I have not seen anything of an official or binding character from the Minister of Railways to make it certain that the government of the day propose to adopt the business-like and fair course, and, therefore, I feel it is my duty to bring the matter to the attention of this House and to ask the hon. leader what the intentions of the government are.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no knowledge upon the subject, except to say this, that up to the present the Minister of Railways has not had an opportunity to make a personal inspection of the Intercolonial Railway. As my hon. friend knows, the present ministry came into office last October, and the session of Parliament would preclude his making anything like an investigation into the operation and administration of that road. I understand it is his intention during recess to make a thorough investigation of the Intercolonial railway, and I have no doubt that, by the next session of parliament, the minister charged with the administration of this particular road will have such a personal knowledge of the situation as to feel confident in recommending the government to adopt such a policy of administration as may possibly appeal to my hon. friend. I hope it will.

THIRD READING.

Bill (180) An Act to amend the Dry Docks Subsidies Act, 1910.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBSIDY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (178) An Act to provide for an additional grant to the province of Prince Edward Island. He said: The object of this Bill is to make a grant, or additional subsidy, of $100,000 per annum to Prince Edward Island. The total subsidy to Prince Edward Island now amounts to $281,931.88, made up as follows· allowance for government and local purposes under British North America Act, 1907, $100,000. 80 cents per head on a population of 109,078, $87,262; compensation for want of Crown lands, $45,000; 12 months interest at 5 per cent on $775,791.81, which amounts to $38,-789.55, additional subsidy granted in 1887, $20,000; additional subsidy in 1901, $30,000, making a total sum of $321,051.98, less interest upon the sum of $782,402.33, this being a net payment or a net subsidy to that province of $281,931.88. Notwithstanding the increase of subsidy to Prince Edward Island on two occasions, namely in 1887, when that province received an additional $20,000 and in 1901 an increase of $30,000, yet the statistics of the province show a continuous deficit. It might be advisable for me to go back to 1901, when the last sum was granted to that province, and point out the deficits which have occurred from that time down to the present. In 1901 there was a deficit of $51,202.; in 1902, $12,122.11; in 1903, $20,471.94; in 1904, $68,149.63; in 1905, $46,116.97; in 1906, $27,761.54; in 1907, $10,679.85; in 1908, $54,217.38; in 1909, $17,-490.58; in 1910, $28,054.33; in 1911, $41,833.-26. Notwithstanding the subsidies to which I have already alluded, direct taxation is resorted to from which the province realizes the sum of about $67,045.98, made up as follows:

Income tax, $8,586.99; land tax. $41,403.-49; road tax, $17,055.50.

Now it can scarcely be said that the administration of government in Prince Edward Island is in any sense extravagant. I understand civil government costs that province about $16,000 a year. Ministers of the provincial government receive $1,200 a year. Members of the provincial legislature receive for their services the munificent sum of $200 a year; and their departmental staff, it is estimated, will not receive more than 50 per cent of what is paid to corresponding officials under our own government. In the first place, therefore, notwithstanding the merits that the province may possess for favourable consideration of an increased subsidy, it is self-manifest that one of the provinces of the Dominion has not sufficient subsidy, or income, to meet its liabilities and necessarily must receive some assistance from this government. The debenture indebtedness of the province is a sum exceeding one million dollars; and that part has been reached when the credit of the province will not enable it to make any further loan to its advantage. Its credit has been so impaired by reason of its liabilities exceeding its revenue as to demand some consideration from the government as to the future. As I have already pointed out——

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT --What did you say was its debt?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Its debt slightly exceeds a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—That would be $40,000 annually for interest, I suppose?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know what the rate of interest is on that loan.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—It ought to be 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I have said, the point has reached on two former occasions when is has been necessary for the Dominion government to come to the relief of the province, namely in 1887 and 1901. In addition to the fact that the province has reached that state of financial entanglement when it demands relief from the government, on the general principal that the central government cannot permit one of the provinces of the Dominion to become involved to such an extent as to impair the credit of the entire Dominion, or to so handicap the——

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Does my hon. friend think that the fact that Prince Edward Island has liabilities would seriously impair the credit of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While it might be able to meet its present liabilities, it would not be able to continue discharging the functions of a province without some additional assistance being given to it, and I say that no province of this Dominion can make default in its obligations in the money market of Europe without injuring and impairing the credit of the entire Dominion. Nor would it show a commendable spirit to have any province left in that position.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does not my hon. friend see that the theory he is laying down is simply to encourage all the provinces to be extravagant and live beyond their means?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I do not think it follows at all. We are dealing with a concrete case, and with a province which occupies an exceptional position. Prince Edward Island occupies a position which has no parallel within the Dominion. Since it entered confederation it has had to face a diminishing population, a diminishing revenue and increasing liabilities. It is a province which is in no way discharging its duties of government in an extravagant manner, but, on the contrary, in a more economical way than any province of the Dominion. It is a province which has been handicapped by a physical and geographical, as well as by commercial difficulties, since it entered confederation. Upon these grounds, entirely apart from the concrete claims which such a province may present to the Dominion government for consideration on grounds that I might term patriotic equity, such a province is entitled to the most generous consideration at the hands of the Dominion. The presentation of their claims is not based upon this equitable ground merely. The province presents to the Dominion now as it has on past occasions, a concrete proposition for relief, based not only upon natural justice but what they regard as legal justice. Let me point out some of these claims so advanced by the province. I need not say to hon. gentlemen that since 1873, when the province of Prince Edward Island entered confederation, the terms of union of the other provinces of the Dominion have undergone very considerable change, thus changing, to a certain extent, the view point which the province may advance for further consideration of their claims upon the government. In the first place, they urge a claim of damage by reason of the non fulfilment of the contract of the Dominion government to furnish a proper means of communication with the mainland. I need not point out to hon. gentlemen that this is an old standing claim of the province of Prince Edward Island and has been dealt with on former occasions. In 1901 the matter was taken into consideration, and an increased subsidy, based upon this particular claim was granted. It is logical to suppose that if it was a claim in 1901, entitling the province to consideration, which consideration I think was fixed at something like $30,000 per annum as an additional subsidy, it is a naturally continuing claim. That is to say, as it was one of the terms of the union at the time of confederation, if in 1901 it was shown that damages had been sustained to the extent reported by the subsidy as then increased, it would be natural to suppose that it would be a continuing claim and that, as time went on the damage would continue and might probably be intensified. I am not going to elaborate that as a factor, but that is urged very strongly by the province. There is another claim which they advance, and which I think they can advance with very much more force than the first claim to which I have adverted, namely, compensation for their public lands.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Compensation for public lands?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Compensation for public lands in this way: When Prince Edward Island entered the confederation she did not possess public lands, but in lieu of public lands the Dominion government made a grant of $45,000 per annum, in compensation for want of Crown lands. That would represent about 50 cents per head of the population. I need not remind hon. gentlemen that in 1905 one of the terms of the admission in confederation of the two new provinces of the Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan and Alberta, was compensation for public lands represented by about $1.50 per head. If that was a reasonable allowance to these provinces at that time—and it has been repeated, also during the present session of parliament in the case of the Manitoba subsidies contained in the boundaries Bill—it is reasonable to suppose that the same grounds would exist for granting to Prince Edward Island a similar sum. We cannot lose sight of the fact that compensation of that nature is not based so much upon what the province has been deprived of, as the factor of allowing to the province a sufficiently adequate sum for the carrying on of the various functions of government. If, therefore, Prince Edward Island only received at the time of confederation 50 cents per head in lieu of Crown lands, and we have established the precedent in these three western provinces of recognizing that they were entitled to $1.50 per head in lieu of Crown lands, or in lieu of their lands, it is not unreasonable to say that the province of Prince Edward Island, upon this item alone, would be justified in coming to the Dominion government and saying: 'Inasmuch as you have in recent years established the precedent of allowing to other provinces $1.50 per head in lieu of Crown lands, the same should be done with reference to our province.'

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Allow me to ask one question, not that I desire to question the argument: in the case of these two provinces the land was there and the Dominion government retained the lands and merely exchanged values. In the case of Prince Edward Island there were no lands.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The federal government never recognized that these provinces were entitled to their lands.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The lands were there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Unquestionably, but if the provinces did not own their lands and were not equitably entitled to them, they would therefore have no legal or equitable right to say to the central government you must make compensation in lieu of our lands. If that be the case, then it is not unreasonable that Prince Edward Island, having a population of slightly under one hundred thousand, should say, on that ground alone, we are entitled to this increased subsidy of $100,000 per annum, and they strongly urge this as a consideration upon the federal government for the increase of their subsidy. Entirely apart from the question as to the province not owning its lands, which I might say is very largely accidental, should we, in making terms with one province, place that province in such an advantageous position as to result to the disadvantage of another province that does not own its lands? Let me point out some of the revenues enjoyed by the other provinces of the Dominion owning their natural resources. New Brunswick received in the year 1910 from what is termed a territorial revenue, $494,491.64; Nova Scotia in the same year received from its mines $629,000, and from Crown lands $33,600. Quebec in the same year received, in respect of its lands and forests, $1,150,000, from its mines, fisheries and game $182,132, a total of $1,332,879. Ontario in the same year received from timber lands and licenses $2,325,000 and $32,122 from lands, forests and mines, a total of $3,240,722, whereas Prince Edward Island only receives the small sum of 50 cents per head in lieu of its lands, in all $45,000. There is another factor which may be said to entitle Prince Edward Island to equitable consideration, and that is its debt allowance. When the province of Prince Edward Island came into confederation there was an allowance for debt representing $4,700,000 upon which, according to the basis of adjustment with the other provinces, she would be entitled to 5 per cent. It seems to have been one of the terms of union, or arranged at the union, that Prince Edward Island should build the Prince Edward Island railway.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Why, it was built when they came into the union, and the reason they came into the union was because they could not pay for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, they were charged up with that sum, which reduced the debt allowance of Prince Edward Island to $775,000 instead of $4,700,000. It seems to me that Prince Edward Island at that time might very well have said that the debt allowance should remain unimpaired, intact, without the Prince Edward Island road being charged up against it; because we have to take into consideration that such was not done with the other provinces. For, instance, since Prince Edward Island entered confederation the policy of this government has been to subsidize the building of railways throughout the Dominion. True, they were not strictly speaking provincial enterprises, but they were as largely provincial enterprises as the Prince Edward Island road. They contributed to the building up of the province quite as much as that road did to the building up of Prince Edward Island; and there is the further feature to be considered that that road has been an integral part of the Intercolonial Railway system and has been one of its most valuable feeders.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —An integral part of what?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of the Intercolonial railway. True it has not been paying; there has been a deficit; but that might apply to the whole Intercolonial railway, yet the Intercolonial railway has profited by the carrying trade which it has enjoyed from the Prince Edward Island road. Now, if this road had not been charged up to Prince Edward Island, that province, on the debt allowance alone, would have been enjoying an annual subsidy of over $200,000.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —And we would have paid for the road.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Well, it would be very true we would have paid for the road, but we have done the same thing with the Intercolonial railway. This is part of the Intercolonial railway, practically. We have paid for the Intercolonial railway, and we have not charged the Intercolonial railway up against the debt allowance of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick; and why should the building of the Prince Edward Island road be charged up against Prince Edward Island while the other two provinces have been exempt? That is another factor to be taken into consideration in dealing with this very important question. Then there is another factor which may be urged with considerable force, and that is the expenditure which the government of Canada might be called to enter upon to fulfil the terms of union, namely the establishment of proper communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I need not point out to hon. gentlemen the very unsatisfactory character of the partial fulfilment of this very important term of union—the unfulfilment of which Prince Edward Island claims, and possibly very rightly, has largely contributed to the diminishing population and the diminishing volume of trade and commerce in that Island.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —What sort of communication had they before confederation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Ah, yes, that was the reason, I fancy, that great importance was placed upon this being one of the terms of union—that this government should establish, at its expense, proper means of communication between that island and the mainland. I might point out further, as has been pointed out by the island government in its memorial, that the terms allowed to the western provinces upon entering the union were not only so much more advantageous to them than corresponding terms granted to Prince Edward Island, particularly in the allowance in lieu of lands, but it has been pointed out that Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta enjoy, also, school lands and the revenues therefrom, which represents practically one-eighteenth of the whole public domain. Those lands are sold from time to time and the proceeds carried to the credit, and distributed for the maintenance of schools and education in those provinces. This of course would represent a very substantial sum, and there is nothing corresponding to it in the terms enjoyed by Prince Edward Island. Under all these circumstances, the government feel, in the first place, that there is considerable force in the concrete claim which has been made by Prince Edward Island for further consideration as to an increase of subsidy, and, in the second place, that owing to the continuous deficits which have been distributed over a long number of years, and the utter inability of that province to meet its obligations, and its having reached practically the end of its borrowing credit, it is in the interests of the entire Dominion that that increased subsidy should be granted to the province so as to permit of its meeting its obligations in an honourable way and carrying on its functions of government as designed by the British North America Act. In view of this presentation of the case, and of these facts which I have advanced, I move the second reading of this Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —My hon. friend has presented, on this occasion, the spectacle of a good man struggling with tremendous difficulties, and it is very much to his credit in one sense that he has been able for fifty minutes or thereabouts to argue in favour of, perhaps, the most unreasonable proposition that has ever been submitted to a parliament of Canada. My hon. friend was good enough to supply me, in part, with the statement which I have asked for, but on examination I find that statement is of the most meagre description, and hardly embraces one half of the items to which I desire to call his attention. Moreover, my hon. friend has entirely omitted one point of very considerable moment, on which I also asked for information, and that is a statement of how the existing subsidy is expended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will possibly give me the credit of saying that I did the best I could for him. It was six o'clock last night when he asked for the information.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I wholly and entirely acquit my hon. friend of any laxness in the matter, but I do not acquit the government of which he is a representative of having gone into this question with about as little consideration, and as little regard to the enormous importance of the questions involved, as I have ever known any government—and I have known some very bad governments—to bestow on any question at all approaching to it in importance. If my hon. friend's colleagues, none of whom I believe, with the exception of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, have ever sat in a Dominion cabinet, had given five minutes consideration to this question they would have known two things. They would have known that this proposition, to a dead certainty, would bring up the whole question of a readjustment of the subsidies from one end of the Dominion to the other, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They would have known that this is one of the most complicated and difficult questions that governments can possibly handle, and they would not have presented to this House, as they have done, at a time when we are expected to adjourn within two or three days, a measure which requires more than almost any other to be fully and carefully considered. It is not the mere $100,000 involved, although $100,000 a year is about equivalent to a sum of $3,000,000 added to our debt, but when you begin to deal with this question without communication with the other provinces concerned in the arrangement for the allowances made to them, you open the door to all manner of demands which cannot possibly be ignored, and which will require very serious consideration at our hands. We ought to have all the information I asked for, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the best thing we can do now is to have a preliminary debate on the matter, and then wait until the hon. gentleman can obtain such information as I asked for. I have not the slightest desire to avoid giving due consideration to the claims of any province, and to this little province in particular. Prince Edward is a beautiful little island, and very fertile, and I believe if the proper policy were adopted between this country and the United States that Prince Edward Island would regain a great amount of the prosperity which it once enjoyed, but which it has not enjoyed, no doubt, for a considerable number of years. I have here a statement to which I will invite the hon. gentlemen's most serious attention and the attention of the House. Perhaps I had better put it in the shape of a motion and we can consider it later on. At any rate, I will give him roughly the details. I have here the estimates, supplementary and main, for the year 1912-13. Taking everything into account as nearly as I can make it out, we are going to expend in Prince Edward Island, including the subsidy, in the year 1912-13, the sum of, $2,000,000 on a population of 93,000 without charging them one farthing for anything except for sums which may be considered to be expended for the special advantage and interest of Prince Edward Island. I will give the hon. gentleman in detail what these sums are. In exchange for that we receive by the same public accounts, an amount all told in gross of $137,000, less expenses of collection which would leave about $114,000 net. I have no doubt they would be entitled to add to that a considerable sum for collections on articles which were imported for their use in other parts of the Dominion, but I very much doubt whether the sum total of these would more than equal the sum paid out in subsidy. My hon. friend must excuse me if by any chance I have over-estimated or exaggerated any of these statements. I think they ought to have been in the hands of the government and ought to have been submitted to the other House, and should have been submitted to the Senate before we are called upon to pass upon this question. In the first place, we pay to Prince Edward Island for subsidy $281,000. On that there is no dispute. I find that for public works, including dredging, and making a proportional allowance for that, according to the statement here submitted in the two estimates, we will expend in Prince Edward Island about $250,000. I think marine and fisheries, which of course include lighthouses, fishery protection, fishery hatcheries and all the rest of it, and maintenance of the steamers for preserving winter communication, cost us, as near as I can estimate—and this is a thing which we ought to have had before us, and ought to have known—about $300,000. I find that there is an annual deficit on the railway estimated at about $100,000, although it is not through yet this year. I find that there is a deficit on the post office estimated to amount to about $30,000 expenses over and above receipts. I find that for judiciary, penitentiary, customs, and indemnity to members, and expenditure of about $87,000, more or less, is incurred. For steamships specially for the island, not charging them with any incidental ones, about $31,000. The cost of their railroad will amount, by the close of 1913, to something almost equal to $10,000,000, which at the present current rate at which we are borrowing would represent an annual charge on this Dominion of about $375,000. We have the small trifle of some $20,000 for benefactions in the shape of good roads, and bridges, and agriculture. We have, likewise, a nice little item on capital account, going I presume into the railway, of $486,000 making in all something like $1,950,000 which Prince Edward Island costs us per annum. Against that there is probably a gross receipt of something like $300,000 for customs and excise, allowing for imports through other provinces and a net receipt of perhaps $280,000 after deducting the cost of collecting the customs and excise revenue. I point out to my hon. friend that, under those circumstances, the government ought to be very careful before they come down and propose a further grant of $100,000 a year to the island. Prince Edward Island does not want to tax itself. I believe if my hon. friend will get the details of the $281,000 which he has given, and their own $63,000, which I think he said they raised by municipal taxation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—About $67,000.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think you will find that a very large part, if not the whole of it goes for the maintenance of schools which the other provinces, particularly in the case of Ontario, pay for out of their own pockets. But he will find—and this is the point to which I want to call his attention and the attention of the House—if he sits down and computes, that the total amount which they choose to tax themselves is something like $1 per head at the outside. I do not believe that it amounts to that. In Ontario we tax ourselves, city and townships, indiscriminately, about $10 a head for such purposes. In Manitoba I am told they tax themselves about $13 or $14, and British Columbia something like $12 a head.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Dollars are more abundant in these regions.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Quite so, but at the same time recollect it is out of these people's pockets this money is to come. Here you have a province of 93,000 people. If you give them $100,000 additional, you give them $381,000 being at the rate of $4 a head for every man, woman and child in Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend knows—and if he does not know he and his colleagues will soon know if they bestowed upon it one minute's consideration—that if you are going to give Prince Edward Island $4 a head, while it does not contribute much more than $1 or $2 a head to the treasury, and in addition is a bill of expense as I have shown—if you are going to do that, most undoubtedly you will have, first of all, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba applying to you, and rightly applying for proportional grants. Does my hon. friend think that if something like $380,000 is paid to 993,000 people in Prince Edward Island that Nova Scotia will be content with $640,000? I do not know how much it is.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is something over $600,000. I do not know the exact amount.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend suppose that 500,000 people in Nova Scotia will sit down peaceably and contentedly with a subsidy of about $1.25 a head, or that New Brunswick, where very much the same state of things prevails, will be content, or British Columbia, where they are now contributing at the rate of $20 or $21 per head to the federal treasury—that they will be content with the one or two dollars per head that they receive? And when that is done, most undoubtedly, after those have been granted, and after Alberta and Saskatchewan have put in their little bill, you will find that you will have to deal with Quebec, and ultimately Ontario. You are not in this matter merely proposing to add $100,000 to the annual charge, but you are laying the foundation—and if that be the policy we ought to know it—for a complete revision of the whole question of subsidies, which, if carried out on the basis you are laying down here, will involve a charge of may be $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 a year for ever on the public treasury, an amount equal to two or three hundred million dollars, as the case may be, added to our national debt. Under circumstances like those, every reason and every consideration, I was going to say of decency, but every consideration of common sense ought to have taught the government that this matter, if dealt with at all, should have been dealt with after a conference with the other provinces. There is no doubt about it—no more than there is that I stand here—that claims will be put in by all the provinces. I do not propose to go over in detail the innumerable—I will not call them sophistries, but the innumerable subtleties, my hon. friend has used with reference to the right of Prince Edward Island to be paid for lands which it never possessed, and to have better communication with the mainland—I suppose he refers to the idea of constructing a tunnel at a trifling cost of about $50,000,000 in order to redeem the pledge of better winter communication.

Well, I will give him a wrinkle on that which may perhaps be of some use to him. We can now go over the sea instead of under it. I would not object to vote a sufficient amount for aeroplanes to keep up communication between the mainland and the island; and I would be very glad indeed if the respective governments of the island and of the Dominion were the first parties to make the adventure. These considerations which he has advanced will not bear scrutiny for one moment. I looked over the paper he was kind enough to send me, and I saw there, almost on the first page, a brief statement, of what the island wanted and what the island meant. What the island wants, hon. gentlemen, is simply this—that it should be understood that it is never to be called upon to pay any taxes at all. That is what it wants, and that is what it alleges. It declares, almost in so many words, that part of the bargain in going into confederation was that it should be supplied with all the things that it required without having recourse to direct taxation. My hon. friend has the paper before him, and I think he will admit that that is a fair summary of the argument in the first page or two.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, it bears that interpretation.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That is about their position.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, that has been urged. They state that at confederation it was anticipated that they would not have to resort to direct taxation.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I was at confederation. There is no doubt that some of the minor provinces would have liked to introduce such a clause, but we were most decidely opposed to anything of the kind. Subsidies were granted in lieu of any such provision, and the subsidies were granted with very great reluctance, because the men who founded confederation saw just exactly what has since occurred almost every year—that once you allow federal and local to be mixed up together, you open the door to an innumerable number of claims and demands which will never cease. We have had ample illustration of that, and there is not the slightest doubt we are going to have more illustrations of it. Before we proceed further in this matter, I think we should obtain a statement from my hon. friend, or from the Prince Edward Island people. showing how they expend this money. Unless I am greatly mistaken, it will prove that the money which is given them from the Dominion is used by them for the identical purposes for which Ontario and Manitoba and British Columbia, and I believe Quebec, to some extent, and New Brunswick—I am not sure about Nova Scotia—are taxing themselves to-day, and that their demand is virtually that they should pay no taxes and that they should receive enormous sums from the Dominion. Why, hon. gentlemen, within the last ten years, if my memory serves me, we have expended on capital account in the island for the improvement and extension of their road something like six or seven millions of dollars. The public accounts will show what it is; it is there or thereabouts; and every year, and almost every hour, a very much larger sum is being expended out of the Dominion treasury than I would like to see the island asked to pay, or than I think the island can possibly pay in. Now, if the position is such that the whole question should be opened up and reconsidered, so be it; let the government take the responsibility; but let them come out into the open and bring the whole question before the several provinces. It is only a few years since representatives of the various provinces met together and decided on what they were then pleased to assure us was the finally final adjustment of the claims of the various provinces against the Dominion, British Columbia, I believe, alone dissenting. Here, without almost a word of preparation, without a word of notice, the government of the day bring forward a proposition which will most undoubtedly reopen the whole question from top to bottom, which may involve an addition to our national debt, or annual charges equal to an addition to our national debt, in the shape of a permanent charge on our revenue, or something like seven or eight millions a year. The government ask us to go into detail and examine and pass upon that when we hope to prorogue the House within a matter of forty eight hours. When the House met I specially called my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the Senate ought to have, as he had often contended, ample time to consider these things; and most assuredly it is not giving us ample time to examine in detail these matters to which I have alluded or those matters to which he has alluded, some of which, no doubt, I would be willing to give fair consideration to as far as they went. But the broad fact remains that, if you grant $400,000 a year to 93,000 people, or thereabouts, you need not hug yourself with the delusion that the remaining provinces of this Dominion are going to abstain from putting their claims forward. I have not the slighest doubt that they will do it. If this Bill passes, not only will they put forward claims but they will get them; perhaps not exactly in due rotation, but they will get them from time to time, and the end will be that we will find ourselves saddled with an enormous additional expenditure, all on the score of a compassionate concession to one particular province which has got into difficulties. I cannot agree with my hon. friend's position that, if a province gets into difficulties, the other provinces of the Dominion should combine to help it. I think that is a totally false and fallacious view. The United States have never gone to the help of any one state that happened to be in default. Any such doctrine will undoubtedly lead to very gross extravagance and carelessness on the part of local administration. I do not want to hurt the feelings of my friends from Prince Edward Island, but it does appear to me that, although my hon. friend may have said that they pay their officials a very small amount, yet it appears to me the whole thing is run in an absurd fashion. Here we have 93,000 people, about as many as we have in the city of Ottawa, and they have six judges, three chief justices of the Superior Court, and three judges of minor descriptions. As far as my recollection goes, Prince Edward Island is a remarkably orderly, law abiding and contented people.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—About as likely to require the services of six judges as to require the services of six hundred janissaries.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Or military officers.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not believe a dozen constables are required to keep the peace. I am very sure that in the matter of judges, and in other ways, they are expending enormous sums for very little purpose. I do not know whether I will hurt my friend's sensibilities by suggesting that it is a thousand pities they are not incorporated with Nova Scotia or New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Not New Brunswick; we do not want them.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Put them in with Ontario

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Ontario cannot get hold of them very conveniently. I am told that, as a summer resort, Prince Edward Island is almost beyond compare; I hear those who go down there speak in raptures of the surroundings and the climate during the summer months. The main point remains, that this is a thing which, if done at all, should be done deliberately after due conference with the other parties who are interested, that is to say, the other provinces of this Dominion. This matter should not be brought forward within two or three days of the end of the session. It is only fair and just that we should know exactly what we are doing and where we are going to come out in this matter. I am obliged to make this statement, as my hon. friend and his colleagues do not appear to have taken the trouble to look it up. I will put the statement on record so that it may be examined. I do not want to take a snap verdict, and I will ask my hon. friend to bring forward the details that I have spoken of in respect to the way in which the money is expended, so that we may see exactly for what purpose this $100,000 is wanted. When that is done, we will be in a position to consider this whole matter. I ask my hon. friend not to press the second reading of this Bill. Is it understood we may carry on this discussion as if we were in committee?

The SPEAKER—That was agreed to yesterday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no objection to it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—In that case I shall reserve my further remarks till some later period. I call the serious attention of the House to the ultimate consequences that are involved in this. Speaking with long experience I tell them that you cannot by any possibility open up this question of grants, even to the smallest of our provinces, without invariably bringing down upon you a number of demands from other provinces. I do not say they would be unjust. If one is to be treated in this way, the others have, morally speaking, quite as good a claim, in spite of the numerous subtleties my hon. friend has interjected into this discussion as to the peculiar claims of Prince Edward Island. All I can say is that Prince Edward Island took excellent good care of itself during the negotiations which preceded its coming in, and they got a very great deal better terms than they would have been likely to get if it had not been for certain circumstances, which I do not want to allude to, but more particularly the fact that government of the day needed the six votes from Prince Edward Island, which I am happy to say they did not succeed in getting.

Hon. Mr. YEO—The claims of Prince Edward Island on this amount of increased subsidy have been so clearly set forth by the leader of the government in this House that it leaves very little for me to say. I am going to make some remarks on the speech delivered by the right hon. the leader of the opposition. That hon. gentleman is very fair in his remarks generally, but I am afraid to-day he has not been so. He speaks of this grant to Prince Edward Island as if it were something they were not entitled to, and as if we were coming here begging for a grant. We have just as good claims as can be made, and in recognizing these claims the government is only doing what is just and proper. The right hon. gentleman has said that it is opening the door for other provinces to come here and make like demands. If they have equally good claims, let them come and if they are as good as ours, I hope they will be recognized. We from Prince Edward Island think we have special claims which have been overlooked for many years, and we are now only just beginning to receive, in part, what we have been entitled to all along. The right hon. gentleman has spoken of the charges which should be made against the province. Some of these things should not be charged against Prince Edward Island exclusively. He spoke of dredging; that of course improved the harbours of Prince Edward Island, but it was not done entirely for that province; the benefit is to the other provinces that send their vessels to Prince Edward Island to carry our commerce. Then, again, he spoke of lighthouses. That is not done for the protection of Prince Edward Island shipping; it is for the whole Dominion and the world at large, in order that the mariners may sail their ships on our waters in safety. There is only one thing in which I agree with the right hon. gentleman. He spoke of the benefits which would accrue to Prince Edward Island if we had reciprocity with the United States. In that I think he was correct. It certainly would have been a great boon to Prince Edward Island. We have no manufactures there to protect. We are an agricultural and fishing people, and an open market with the United States would be of very great advantage to us. I do not know whether the decrease in our population has been caused by the fact that we entered confederation, but since that time our population has continued to decrease. Nearly up to the time we went into confederation, our population increased each year, not largely, but there was a good increase. Since that time the decrease has been quite marked. Everything in connection with the public business is conducted most economically in Prince Edward Island. If I were to tell you the salaries that are paid to officials there you would be astonished. There is no lavish expenditure in any way. It is quite the reverse, and the expenditure is quite parsimonious. We have no public lands there from which to receive a revenue. We have no minerals, or anything to fall back on but direct taxation. It is quite true that our taxation is not heavy, yet, for a farming community, it is about as much as we can stand. The right hon. gentleman referred to the taxation of the Northwest; we in Prince Edward Island think we have borne our share of the large expenditures which have been made in the west and Ontario, and in other parts of the Dominion. We have not received any benefits from these expenditures. This in itself ought to give us a claim for consideration. Our isolated position prevents us from benefiting by these expenditures. I might mention one of our claims, one which has always been a sore spot with us, and that is that we did not get what we expected at confederation with regard to improved communication. It is true that improvements have been made from year to year, yet we have nothing like continuous communication. During the past winter we had a great many interruptions, and we had to return to the old way of carrying our mails and passengers by ice-boat, hauled by men. That has been the case almost every winter. This promise of better communication is one very strong reason why we were induced to go into confederation. The present government is taking a step in the right direction by giving us a car ferry, which they hope to have in operation shortly. It may look like a large expenditure; still the Dominion government is in honour bound to carry out the terms of confederation. The hon. the leader of the government in this House did not mention another claim which we have always considered we had, and that is a share in the fishery award which was brought about very soon after Prince Edward Island joined the confederation. We have always contended that we were entitled to a share of that award. There are many other just claims which we have that demand consideration at the hands of the government. Customs receipts and internal revenue have been mentioned. Our people deal largely with Ontario and Quebec, and in return they take very little from us. We may send them a few barrels of oysters, or some other trifling thing, but the market for our products is elsewhere, and as we buy largely from Ontario and Quebec, we do not show very large custom returns. Whether large or small, however, the terms of confederation should be carried out by this government. We are losing our population. In the ten years between the census of 1901 and the census of 1911 we lost nearly 10,000 of our population. Our people have gone largely to the west, and wherever they go they are of benefit to the community in which they reside.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. YEO—The Minister of Finance, speaking to this Bill, said that in some respects the claims were, perhaps, not legal, but they were equitable. I think our claims are legal, and that we are entitled to every consideration. We may be poor, but we are proud.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. YEO—We do not come here asking for anything that we do not feel we are justly entitled to. I feel strongly on this question. I believe we are rightfully and honestly entitled to this increased subsidy. As the right hon. gentleman has just said that this debate will not be closed at the present time, I shall not say anything further, except that I am heartily in accord with the Bill that is now before the House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I intended to cover some of the things that have been said by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I do not think it is any argument against a Bill of this kind to quote federal expenditures in Prince Edward Island, or federal expenses in the maritime provinces. These expenditures are for federal purposes, for the protection and advancement of commerce and for the general welfare of the Dominion. It is not fair or proper to be continually bringing this matter up as against the maritime provinces. These are not local affairs, and should not be charged up to these provinces. I have a personal objection to a great many references which are made in this Chamber to the maritime provinces in this regard. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that we receive so much per head from the revenue and only contribute a certain sum. That is not a fair argument. We pay according to the rate of taxation that is levied. If we do not import our goods, but buy them from the other provinces, and if our conditions are not as favourable as they are in other provinces, that should not be cast up against us, as if we were poor relations coming in here and seeking to get alms from the parliament of Canada. I think that kind of argument is highly objectionable. We should consider this Dominion as one country, and although it is cut up into provinces, it should be regarded as one whole and each section of the Dominion should be treated alike. If I can carry my memory back to the time when confederation was first established, we were not very anxious for it. The province of Nova Scotia up to this day has never, as a province, given its assent to the union. It could not help but come in when its legislature carried it without a vote of the people. New Brunswick rejected it on the first election; a year afterwards, on account of the influence of the British government and various other influences, we entered into confederation. I was an anti-confederationist; I firmly believed the time had not arrived for confederation and the plan was not a good one. Ever since I have been a member of this Dominion, I have done my best, according to my light—sometimes it may have been very dim—to promote the interests of the country, and I think that is the feeling of our people generally. In regard to the Prince Edward Island claim, I would like to call attention for a few moments to the last published statement of their accounts, that is, for the year 1909. Those for 1910 may be in the library, but I could not find them. The Dominion subsidy in that year was $233,181. Well, they spent half of that money on education alone.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Exactly, for which we pay.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not care who pays for it. The money is the money of the people of that island, coming to them by an arrangement made with the government, and it is not right to say that we paid it. The hon. gentleman did not pay any of it, nor did anybody else pay any of it. Prince Edward Island got the money as part of their bargain, or arrangement, and they expended $129,000 of it in education, that is very nearly half of the subsidy for that year. Then, running down the columns of the account you will find no extravagance. Their hospital for the insane cost them $35,000. They paid in interest $34,000, which is interest on the debt incurred in the interest of the island itself and could not be overlooked. They expended on roads $28,000, a very small amount for that part of the country. The total revenue in 1909 was $375,000, including the subsidy. Well, that was not quite half of the revenue we get in New Brunswick from our Crown lands alone, and we do not get too much. So I think that Prince Edward Island has a fair case, not so much, perhaps, for any particular thing, but because the people are not able to live on the island. That is about the truth of it, and that is the condition they have to meet. They are going away at the rate of one thousand every year. It is, no doubt, a beautiful island and a good island, yet the population fell off in one decade from 100,000 to 90,000. Now, who would like to live in a town, or place, where the population is gradually diminishing, so that when you look around to-day for your friend of yesterday you find that he has gone to the United States. Hence, there is dissatisfaction amongst the people of Prince Edward Island which ought to be regarded, and to which some attention should be paid. It is no great stroke of statesmanship to deal with a sudden emergency when it arises, and to deal well, perhaps; but while the time is easy that should be done, and it should be done generously and liberally. The number of people who go from Prince Edward to the United States is very large. The great bulk of those who leave the country go there though many go to the Northwest. My hon. friend says they figure well; but they have been figuring well in the United States. I remember, not long ago, when the mayor of Boston was a Prince Edward Islander, and so they fill dignified and honourable positions, but the country in which they were born and brought up does not, in some way, fill the bill, and the managers of the public affairs of this country ought to give as much attention at least to subjects of that kind as they do to the ordinary and general subjects which press upon them from day to day. You will remember that in the last twelve years in which this decrease of population has gone on, we have had a system of taxation which, although liberal at its birth, does not seem to have grown up as liberally as it should. When the appeal was made to the people of the country recently to ratify the reciprocity agreement, the result was a disappointment to us. The effect of that would be to decrease the population of Prince Edward Island, because there is not a sufficient amount of wealth in the country, and you cannot produce it unless there is some new condition created by the genius of the government. I do not care which government it is, or how it is done, but something of that kind should be tried. I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman that there should be a consideration of the whole situation, and I apprehend the danger to which he refers regarding the other provinces should a plan be adopted which favours one province at the expense of the others. On the other hand, I hold that at this moment the needs of Prince Edward Island demand a speedy remedy, and I am prepared to support the Bill.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I went very carefully over Mr. White's speech, delivered on the 26th, and the arguments he made in defence of the Bill, and also the claim of the little province I have the honour to represent, was put very forcibly. I listened this morning to the hon. leader of the Senate, and he has put the matter very plainly. I do not see why any member of this House can object to the Bill. I wish to commend the government for the liberal way in which they have acted towards the province. If the Dominion government made a mistake in taking Prince Edward Island into confederation, I am not exactly sure but we have had the worst of the bargain. I know the province has not derived benefit in any particular. We have lost population in the last twenty years at the rate of one thousand per year, whereas I think possibly if we had remained a separate province we could have retained our population and looked after our own affairs. The leader of the opposition has made the statement that the Dominion government does not receive as much as the island gets back. Now, I can account for that in this way; millions of dollars' worth of goods is bought in Montreal, Halifax, St. John, Toronto and Ottawa, where the revenue is collected, and Prince Edward Island does not get credit for it. That is one part of the matter. One other point I am going to ask the right hon. leader of the opposition to take back. He made the remark that the credit of Prince Edward Island had fallen on account of the large debt of the island. I wish to tell the leader that that is not so; that the credit of Prince Edward Island to-day stands higher than that of any other province in the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Good ; glad of it.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—And I am going to ask the right hon. leader of the opposition to kindly take those words back Possibly the government from time to time, since we entered confederation, have done the best they could to carry out the terms of confederation. They signed a solemn ompact to give us steam communication with the mainland continuously in winter as in summer. That, they have failed to do. Possibly it is not the fault of the government. They first supplied us with a steamer, the 'Northern Light,' which did good work in her day, but failed to carry out the terms of confederation. When the government found she was not strong enough, they supplied the 'Stanley,' and she also proved to be a failure as far as the carrying out of the terms of confederation was concerned, but she did good work also. The Laurier government came into power, more claims were made and they supplied us with the 'Minto,' which was a good boat and also an improvement on the other boats. Finding that she could not fulfil the terms of confederation, they supplied us with the 'Earl Grey,' which is still better. The government have come to the conclusion that even that does not carry out the terms of confederation and they are supplying us with a car ferry, which is properly justified, and I think they have shown that they are in earnest and want to do what is right by the little island.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—Will that run in winter ?

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Well, we will be satisfied if she runs eight months in the year, and I believe she will. I believe the island will have no kick coming if she runs; and I think she may run nine months in the year with proper power. I am going to stand by the government in its action in this matter, and I think Prince Edward Island has been very liberally treated with the $100,000 bonus; I am only sorry that they did not see their way clear to make it $200,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My only complaint as against this Bill is the fact that, in the form in which it is presented, it opens the door to considerable difficulties in the future. The Prince Edward Island government has presented a memorandum containing a certain number of claims against the federal government and asking for some kind of compensation in settlement of those claims. My opinion is that if the government wanted to pay an increased subsidy to the province of Prince Edward Island it should have compensated those claims in a formal way by giving that increased subsidy, but stating that it was in settlement of a certain number of claims, or of all the claims. What I complain of in the presentation of this Bill is that there is no preamble stating under what head and for what reason this money is paid. Now, in what situation will the government of the Dominion be for the future in facing any similar demands from any other province? Four or five years ago we passed resolutions in these two branches of parliament asking the imperial parliament for a revision and increase of the subsidies to the provinces, based on resolutions arrived at by a conference of all the provinces with the federal government. After the members of that conference, representing the provinces, had agreed to the amount they were respectively entitled to this parliament solemnly asked the imperial parliament to alter our constitution and declare that this was a final settlement for all time to come. On the representations of the delegates from British Columbia to the House of Lords, an amendment was made to the Bill which struck out his declaration of finality. The Bill was returned to the House of Commons, which declared that the will of the Dominion of Canada must be carried out in toto, and that amendment was rejected and the Act was passed. Now this legislation which was embodied in the Imperial Act, and which practically forms part of our constitution, because it was an amendment to the constitution, is set at naught by this present Bill in the form in which it is introduced. That is a considerable error of which we will feel the effect for years to come, and which could have been avoided if the Bill had been brought in with a preamble stating that an increase of subsidy was given in payment of claims made, and under the form of an annuity against the federal government by Prince Edward Island. Now we are back to where we were before this Imperial Act was passed, and we will have, during our lifetime and for generations to come, clamours from the different provinces for increased subsidies. A gross blunder has been committed in thus reopening the whole question of provincial subsidies and quite uselessly so.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I have listened with considerable interest to this debate, and it seems to me that the action the government have taken in regard to this matter and the presentation of the case that was made this morning by the leader of the government in this House is one that is to be strongly recommended to Mr. McBride, the Premier of British Columbia. He has for a long time been struggling for better terms for British Columbia, and I think no stronger argument could be presented on his side of the case than the remarks of the hon. leader of the House this morning in presenting the case for Prince Edward Island. The right hon. leader of the opposition has shown the position, as far as the constitutional question is concerned, and the last speaker pointed out the evils that are likely to come upon this country by adopting the policy that is laid down in this Bill. I think the speeches made to-day will be an encouragement to British Columbia to go ahead and spend money recklessly, as they are doing to-day. At the last meeting of the legislature of the province, they passed estimates amounting to some $16,000,000, and showed that the only revenue they hoped to get was some $10,000,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They seem to have the approval of the people.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Quite true. I quite admit that spending the money in that way meets with the approval of the people, but I would ask the hon. leader of the government where this thing is going to stop. It is quite possible to go forward and arrange for the expenditure of money, and, as my hon. friend said just now, the credit of the Dominion is going to be injured very seriously if the credit of these provinces is impaired. I will point out to the hon. leader of the government that British Columbia to-day has incurred liabilities to the extent of pretty nearly $50,000,000 in the guarantees they have given to railway companies, and, in addition to that, they propose to expend some $6,000,000 more than they hope to get in the next year. That sort of thing will not go on very long, and therefore the argument put forward by the leader of the government in this House to-day simply shows that the government should consider it necessary to come to the assistance of the province of British Columbia, and help them out in order to maintain the credit of the province. It is a very serious matter we are up against, and there is a limit to that; not alone the credit of the province may be hurt, but the credit of the Dominion also. This is a very serious step which the government proposes to take.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I doubt if I shall be able to get any further information than that which is disclosed in the official reports of the province itself. So far as I am aware, the only memorials brought down to parliament on the subject were those two which I sent to my right hon. friend yesterday.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They contain very little of the information I wanted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The information which the hon. gentleman seeks is information only obtainable from the provincial authorities: that is, as to the expenditure of these subsidies within the province. However, I have sent over to the department to see if further information can be obtained.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If it is in sufficient detail I will accept such a statement as the hon. gentleman spoke of.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall make further inquiry and endeavour to meet the wishes of my right hon. friend in every way.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—For years and years we have heard the claim that the conditions on which Prince Edward Island was induced to enter confederation have never been fulfilled as regards winter navigation. What does that claim amount to?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I could inform my hon. friend if he desires, but probably we had better let that stand till this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. KERR moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF ORDNANCE LANDS TO WINNIPEG BILL.

ORDER POSPONED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (185) An Act to authorize the sale to the province of Manitoba of certain ordnance lands in the city of Winnipeg.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend has sent me a memorandum in regard to this measure, but it does not contain the information I asked for, namely the correspondence between the Militia Department and the government of Manitoba, which was specially wanted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Since we have been sitting I have just received further papers, which I understand are all the papers touching the subject in the Department of Militia, which I will send over to my right hon. friend. The order of the day may be discharged any time

The order of the day was postponed.

ONTARIO BOUNDARIES BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (152) An Act to extend the boundaries of the province of Ontario.

He said: A question was asked yesterday as to the boundaries described in the Bill. The boundaries of the added territory are those embodied in the resolutions brought down to the House of Commons in June, 1908.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second and third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (183) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the railways and bridges therein mentioned.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (187) An Act to authorize the granting of a subsidy to the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company in aid of the construction of the railway therein mentioned.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (151) An Act to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act, 1908.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (190) An Act to authorize a bounty to volunteers who served the Crown during the Fenian Raids.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock this afternoon.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine Preceedings.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBSIDY BILL.

SECOND READING.

The order of the day being called:

Resuming the debate on the second reading of Bill (178) An Act to provide an additional grant to the Province of Prince Edward Island.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am obliged to my hon. friend for the information he has given, which would require, perhaps, a little time to master. I observe in the statement which he has been kind enough to furnish me, which is for 1911, passing over the minor items, that there is a charge of $106,000 for education, and a charge of $47,000 for salaries of officials, not discriminated, but I suppose including what are known as departmental staff and all the rest of it, ministers salaries included.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should think so.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—And expenditure for Public Works, which I take to be roads, of $157,000. I am rather indebted to my hon. friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) who proved my case up to the hilt a little while ago. He was good enough to read us a statement which made it appear that the whole difficulty has arisen from the fact that they will not tax themselves to pay for their schools as other provinces do. The entire amount of the deficit which my hon. friend, the leader of the House, read averaged something like thirty or forty thousand a year. It is quite clear the deficit has arisen simply and solely because the gentlemen in Prince Edward Island will not tax themselves to pay for their schools. In point of fact, they hardly tax themselves at all. They tax themselves nothing like in proportion to what other provinces do. I may tell my hon. friend from St. John that I agree with him this far, that I do not complain because one province contributes much more largely than another to federal purposes. I raise no question as to whether a particular province has been well or ill treated, and whether it is a fair subject for generous treatment or not, then a statement of the total amounts that have been expended out of the federal treasury in that province is very much in order and pertains very much to the question. I entirely dissent from him in thinking that when taxes are paid by a province into the federal treasury, to be employed for federal purposes, the Dominion government has a right to take these moneys and apply them, as they are practically going to apply them in this case, for the purpose of paying for things which are not intended to be paid out of the federal treasury or with federal moneys. To all intents and purposes this $100,000 we are asked to pay is a grant from the federal treasury for the purpose of enabling the people of Prince Edward Island to maintain their schools without paying any taxes. I say it is a distinct infringement of the rights of the other provinces that that should be done. I say more particularly that the western provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and British Columbia, which contribute very largely indeed to federal purposes, should not be called upon to contribute money for just such purposes as it will be employed for if we pass this measure. I call attention to the fact that there are two very distinct and very important issues to-day. One is what I may call the practical issue, which I have brought before the House, that just so sure as we pass this Act, just so sure do we set the door open for an infinity of other demands which will undoubtedly be made upon us, and which may make this comparatively trifling Bill the foundation stone for demands which will cost us the equivalent of an addition to our debt of two or three hundred million. No attempt has been made to deal with that. No attempt has been made to answer it, because every man in the House, of experience, knows that I state the exact fact when I say that so sure as this Bill passes, so sure will innumerable other demands be made by the other provinces. Then, there was the other matter brought forward extremely well by my hon. friend beside me (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), and that is the fact that a very few years ago, after full and prolonged conference, lasting, if I remember right, for some five or six weeks, between the representatives of the various provinces, an arrangement was come to as to the sums to be paid to each province; that that was ratified by the Dominion parliament, and ratified afterwards, or considered necessary to be ratified, because it affected the relation of the various provinces, by the parliament of the united kingdom, and that there is now on the statute-book of the imperial parliament a statement that, at the request of the Dominion parliament, this settlement was to be final and conclusive. Thus you propose to destroy and tear up, by a measure which has been very slightly discussed indeed in the other House, and which if it passes this House will of course be, as I say, the foundation for a very serious raid upon the treasury in a very short time. I have no objection to the mode in which these gentlemen dispose of the money which belongs to them, but I repeat that I have the strongest possible objection to the money of other provinces being taken to provide for their educational system, when these other provinces are already taxing themselves very heavily to maintain their own schools.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is just one tem to which I wish to direct the attention of the House, in addition to what I pointed out this morning, and that is in the case presented by the province to the Dominion government upon this subject; the deficit for the last fourteen months is shown to amount to $120,000. I find that in education for 1911 they have spent $126,483.33, an increase of $67,288.52. This next item probably is the most conclusive argument and the most conclusive reason which I can urge upon this Chamber as to the advisability of the Dominion government increasing the subsidy, namely, that for poor houses and paupers in 1911 the sum of $51,483.12 was expended by the province.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I thought there were no paupers there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is, almost one-fifth of the subsidy granted by the Dominion government the province finds it obligatory to spend to maintain its poor; and it may be pointed out, and has been pointed out, that the increased cost in poorhouse maintenance tells the tale of the loss of population by immigration. The enterprising and hardy seek the western provinces, and prove to be the best material for developing that country, while the infirm generally are left to be taken care of by the province.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Is my hon. friend going to lay down as a principle that the federal government are to pay for the paupers in every province?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it simply demonstrates, in my judgment, the inability of the province to stand any more onerous burden of direct taxation than it is at present bearing, and in view of the figures which I have pointed out, the Dominion government feel that they are justified in granting the additional subsidy.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why not let them be annexed to Nova Scotia? They have only 95,000 people in the province of Prince Edward Island, and all the machinery of a local legislature and so on is out of proportion. That's where the money is eaten up. Fifty-one thousand dollars for a pauper system in that island—I have been there a couple of years, and I never saw a pauper; I do not think I ever saw what I would call a poor man. They must have kept them pretty well closed up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fancy they are not advertising them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Possibly those paupers are transient paupers.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—$51,000 for a population of 95,000 seems extraordinary. I know the provincial government of Quebec spend a very large sum of money for charitable purposes—for insane, for orphans, for all classes of people, not exactly paupers, but for all classes. Of course, I have no objection to the island getting all they can out of the government, but it is up to the government to see that the money is not recklessly spent.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have listened with a good deal of attention to the arguments presented in behalf of this increased subsidy to Prince Edward Island It is a very serious matter to increase subsidies to provinces and thus break the contract virtually made when confederation was formed. From time to time increased subsidies have been allowed in some cases, but I think that before the people of Prince Edward Island have a claim on the Dominion for an increased subsidy, they should be prepared to show that per capita they pay as much in direct taxation into their provincial treasury as is paid by the people of other provinces. I understand they have no municipal system as we have in Ontario, where every farmer pays taxes for roads and bridges and improvements. In Prince Edward Island this work is done by the provincial government; if so, the residents there should pay the same, or about the same, as is paid in other provinces under the municipal system. In Ontario the average tax, on cleared land, for roads and municipal purposes, comes to about 60 cents an acre. It should be proven to the entire satisfaction of this House that the residents of Prince Edward Island pay as much in the way of taxes as residents of other provinces; until they do that they have no right to come begging for more money. We all sympathize with the struggles of any province that is trying to get along, and as far as I am concerned, I would like to see Prince Edward Island in a prosperous condition. If the leader of the government can show that that is the condition of things in Prince Edward Island it becomes our duty to seriously consider their financial embarrassment. In the absence of evidence that they are doing what they should to help themselves, we should not be asked to vote money. Of course the statement I asked for would not include the duty they pay on imports, which cannot very well be reached, but it should show that, through their own direct system of taxation, the tax per capita is equal to that in other provinces.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would like to ask my hon. friend if he did not make a mistake just now when he said the expenditure for paupers was $50,000, because in the statement which he sent me for 1910-11—and apparently the same is correct for 1911-12—I see this entry 'Paupers, legislative grant $2,025; executive council grant $1,033. Total $3,060.94'.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What I hold in my hand is a memorial evidently prepared by the government upon that subject.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think they must have put on a lot. He will see that a grant of $50,000 for 400 paupers would amount to $125 a head, or $500 or $600 for a family of five. Making all reasonable allowance, there are not families, in all probability, but old people, and the amount seems excessive.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The papers which I hold in my hand contain a comparative statement between 1873-1911. The expenditure for 1873 for poor houses and paupers is $11,614.56, and for 1911 $51,483.12; an increase of $38,968.08 for 1911.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Does that include buildings?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That may include buildings.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is that an official document prepared by the government?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—In Ontario the poor houses are all built by the municipalities. Each county erects its own poor house, and the inmates are supported by county taxes. Why have not the people of Prince Edward Island a system of that kind in place of having the expense of their poor house taken out of the provincial treasury? Why do not they have a system as they have in Ontario and collect the sums required for these purposes by taxation? I fancy that the local government in Ontario make a per capita grant, but the great bulk of the moneys for building the poor houses and maintaining them is paid from muncipal taxes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I just wish to make one observation called for by something said by the hon. gentleman from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen). The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that the total population of Prince Edward Island is only about 93,000. The Island contains only about 2,000 square miles. It would be unreasonable, and I think almost absurd to expect that, in addition to the legislature and all the machinery of the provincial government, they should have municipal institutions as well. The truth is, that the business of the provincial government of Prince Edward Island is substantially the business which is ordinarily done by a municipal council, and it is unreasonable to say that things should be paid for by municipalities when there are no municipalities there. I do not mean to say that there is any reason why the people of Prince Edward Island should not, through their legislature, tax themselves for these local things which the municipalities pay in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not wish the hon. gentleman from Halifax to understand that I advocated the double system of government—municipal and provincial. The people have a right to rule themselves as they please. I only referred to the fact that we had a municipal system in Ontario by which very large amounts of money were paid towards the support of poor houses, for the purpose of maintaining roads and bridges, and for the purposes of education. The taxes are levied upon the people direct, and the farmers contribute about 60 cents an acre on cleared land towards these purposes. Do the farmers of Prince Edward Island contribute a tax equal to what is collected from the farmers of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Not a bit of it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We should know that before the Bill passes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am informed by one of the Prince Edward Island senators that this amount includes the asylum. That is the reason why it is so large.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think this measure should be carried in this haphazard fashion. No sort of answer has been attempted to the constitutional point raised by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) that the formal Act of the imperial parliament has been passed declaring the adjustment final and conclusive, and that we are now asked, to all intents and purposes, to destroy that. My hon. friend, the leader of the House, cannot ignore that, and he stated what his view was on that point amongst others. If he merely wants to take a stage in this matter, and will give time for proposing such formal amendments as I myself, or others, might choose to suggest on the third reading, giving a little time to place them on the paper and have them considered by the House, well and good. We would like to know what his view is as to the imperial legislation to which I refer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As far as imperial legislation is concerned, there is nothing conclusive in that to prevent the parliament of Canada at any time exercising either its generosity, or its sense of right, in departing from the strict letter, and voting an increased subsidy to a province. That has been exemplified in the case of almost any other province of the Dominion. The terms of union of the different provinces were established and confirmed by imperial legislation, and yet, without any hesitation, we depart from such terms, and in this particular case, although there may seem to have been a conclusive agreement entered into between the provinces and the Dominion government, confirmed by imperial legislation, yet it was never anticipated, nor would it ever be seriously argued, that that legislation is to bind the Dominion of Canada for all time to come from exercising its own free will as expressed by parliament in dealing with any province.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —All I can say is that that was not the understanding at the time it was passed. I can tell my hon. friend that when that Act was passed it was intended to be finally final, except on two conditions; if the provinces met again, and after meeting recommended certain alterations, and if the parliament of Canada agreed to those, then the imperial parliament could be applied to, for the purpose of making certain minor alterations. The imperial parliament can always do that when it pleases, but it certainly never was expected that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues should drive coaches and six through an imperial Act of parliament in the way they now propose to do. However, my hon. friend may take the second reading now if he likes, we will consider to-morrow afternoon whether we will put in certain suggestions in connection with this. Of course we cannot amend a money Bill; I am not proposing to do that but we can state out views and we can direct that it be read at a convenient time hereafter. The hon. gentleman will hardly object to that as unconstitutional. That, I think, is well within our legislative competence, and I should like that the House should have, in a matter of this moment, at least a few hours in order to consider what is involved in this Bill. I regret the conduct of the government—not of my hon. friend, because I absolutely acquit him—as showing the greatest possible want of consideration and foresight. It is quite evident from the time which has elapsed since I asked for these things that the government plunged into it with no more consideration—it is perhaps an unreasonable comparison—than a set of youngsters would apply to robbing an apple orchard, or a hen roost.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Take the second reading and put it down for to-morrow morning, and if there is a prospect of an afternoon sitting we can defer it.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I will endeavour to have my suggestions prepared in good time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I suggested putting it down for the forenoon, because possibly there will be a chance for prorogation to-morrow, and we could defer it if we held an afternoon sitting.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —That cuts us very short.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Everything is up from the House of Commons except the Supply Bill, and if we make good progress to-night very little will be left on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would like to point out to the hon. the leader of the government one or two facts in regard to the payment of this extra $100,000 to Prince Edward Island. I would like him to find out exactly the condition of the people of that province with regard to finances and prosperity. If he looks into the matter he will find that the people of Prince Edward Island are, probably, the most prosperous, in the Dominion. The manager of one of the most important banks in Canada informed me, when I was down there two years ago, that fifteen years ago, when he went to Charlottetown, there were only two banks there and that nearly every man had a mortgage on his farm and poverty was staring everybody in the face. He told me that at that time seven of the most important banks in the Dominion had established offices in the town, that there were branches throughout the rest of the provinces, and that every bank was overflowing with farmers' accounts. He said it was amazing to see the amount of money that was deposited in these banks by the farmers. There is nobody else in the province but farmers and fishermen. Some of the farmers are fishermen as well as farmers. The prosperity of that province is amazing.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I am glad of it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If they are getting all their money from the Dominion for the purpose of maintaining their poor houses and asylums, and for building their roads, and for educational purposes, there is no wonder they are prosperous. I do not think the leader of the House is very much in favour of this Bill himself, and if he had a proper statement of affairs he could show his colleagues that the province is in a very flourishing condition.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SALE OF ORDNANCE LAND TO WINNIPEG BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (185) An Act to authorize the sale to the province of Manitoba of certain ordnance lands in the city of Winnipeg.

He said: This is a Bill with the object of transferring to the province of Manitoba certain thirteen acres of land in the city of Winnipeg for the consideration of $200,000. The property was first transferred from the Hudson Bay Company to the government of the Dominion of Canada under terms of an imperial order in council dated the 23rd of June, 1870, for the admission of Ruperts Land into the Dominion; and on the 22nd of January, 1872, the Dominion government took, for provincial and federal purposes, from the Hudson's Bay Company, a block of 50 acres of land under authority of an Imperial order in council. authority of an imperial order in council. was passed granting the government of Manitoba the easterly half of these fifty acres. By order in council of 27th of June, 1898, the northern portion of the westerly part was transferred from the federal government to the University of Manitoba. Orders in council dated 23rd of May, 1874, and 16th of August, 1895, transferring the southern portion of the westerly half to the Department of Militia and Defence; order in council of the 28th of October, 1893, transferring to the city of Winnipeg certain areas for street purposes, and on the 17th of February, 1912, an order in council was passed by this government transferring from the Department of Militia and Defence to the government of Manitoba the balance of this military property, amounting to about 13·2 acres. As hon. gentlemen will see, this was vested by the Hudson's Bay Company, under imperial order in council, in the Dominion of Canada for public purposes, and the Dominion of Canada, therefore, would be precluded from diverting this property to any purpose other than public, ostensibly for the use of the federal or provincial governments.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Have not certain of these lands in the past been applied to other than public purposes with the consent of the Hudson's Bay Company?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am unaware of that. It would be entirely discretionary with the Hudson's Bay Company. Of course no question can arise as to the right of the Hudson's Bay Company to permit the grantee to derogate from the terms of the grant. We have to take the grant as we find it. It is held for specific purpose, namely public purposes. The transfer from one branch of the Crown, as represented by the federal government, to another branch, as represented by the provincial government, and the value of the property has been discussed along commercial lines. It must be quite obvious to hon. gentlemen that it would be impossible for the Dominion government to divert this property for uses other than the uses specified in the grant. It will be found that there has been a very great diversity of opinion among valuators as to the value of the land for commercial purposes. I have before me a list of many valuations by different parties as to the value of this property for commercial purposes. These valuations run from $338,000 up to $688,700.

Hon. gentlemen will readily comprehend this fact, that land of this character that is tied up for particular use must necessarily diminish very greatly in value. If a property is conveyed to the grantee by the grantor subject to certain uses or for certain purposes, and particularly if those purposes be of a public character, it is impossible to conceive the grantee, unless he can sell them for public purposes, doing anything else with the land except to occupy it himself. Now, it has been ascertained upon close inquiry that, for the purposes that this land is now being used, the government of Canada will be placed in a very much better position with $200,000 to expend upon the increased requirements of the government in carrying out the objects for which the land is now used by going some little distance from the present location and building military quarters, or military buildings for which purpose this is now used. This land is being transferred to the provincial government to use it for provincial purposes. I understand it is proposed to erect provincial buildings upon it, and I need not point out that the transfer from one branch of the Crown to another branch of the Crown still permits of the land being vested in the Crown.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Does the order in council provide that it is to be used for public purposes only?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This government could not divert it to any other purpose than a public purpose. As I have pointed out, in the original grant from the Hudson Bay Company it must be so used. As a matter of fact, it is intended for provincial buildings. Considerable negotiations have taken place between the provincial government and this government, extending over quite a considerable time, as to the transfer of this property. I understand at one time it was proposed that the provincial government should pay $300,000 for it. The provincial government would not pay that amount, and has never been willing to pay more than $200,000 for the transfer.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Does it not appear somewhere in the public documents that an officer of the government, reporting on the valuation of this property, had placed it at a much higher figure, also accompanying his report by further reference to the fact that one of the ministers of the present government, then representing the Manitoba government, conceded that they would be willing to pay a larger sum?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, I think so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend refers to a valuation made by Colonel Biggar, which valuation represents $631,795, fixing the value of the buildings at $176,799, and it is pointed out that those buildings would be of no possible value to anyone purchasing the property. They are old, dilapidated buildings, and entirely inadequate for the purposes of the government, and no matter who bought the buildings they could scarcely be considered of any value, or an asset on the property. Consequently, $176,799, in my judgment, would have to be taken out of that valuation. He also deducts from his valuation for cost of advertising, selling, and carrying charges 20 per cent, $126,359, so that my hon. friend will see——

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is a very large deduction for such purposes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why did he not take the whole of it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If we are to attach any value to the valuation of this particular official, we have to accept his whole statement. If he is incorrect, or shows bad judgment, as my hon. friend points out, in charging 20 per cent for the advertising and selling, and carrying out of the sale of the property, then we cannot place very much value upon his judgment in the making up of his valuation. In the correspondence of Colonel Biggar with the government he indicates that he had seen Mr. Rogers, the Minister of Public Works, who mentioned that he was perfectly willing to leave the matter entirely to the government, but when the government pronounced its expectations along the lines of asking a very much larger amount than the government of Manitoba were willing to give, of course the negotiations with Mr. Rogers fell to the ground.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—He thought they would wait until they got another government to deal with.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The negotiations have extended over considerable time, the Manitoba government refusing to pay the amount asked by this government, and this government insisting on what the government of Manitoba considered an extortionate amount; in fact, I understand the amount was increased up to a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I see nothing on the record about the Manitoba government refusing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Manitoba government refused to pay more than $200,000.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Where does my hon. friend get the authority for that?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My best authority for that is that the negotiations never ended in anything conclusive. There is nothing in the correspondence to indicate that there was ever any mutuality between them.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There is nothing in the correspondence brought down, I admit, but I am tolerably certain—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have seen nothing myself. True I have not had an opportunity of delving very deeply into the very lengthy and numerous correspondence upon the subject. Suffice it to say, there is a proposition which has been accepted by this government to pay $200,000 for the property, and the property is to be used for the purposes which I have mentioned. In the public interest, it seems to me that this is a very reasonable agreement—reasonable as to both parties. The land still remains vested in the Crown. It is simply transferred from one branch of the Crown to the other. It would be of no particular value if vested in the Dominion government. So far as this government is concerned, it would not be an asset representing its commercial value, because, as I have said, the government cannot divert it from its original uses.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Is it not occupied by some Dominion buildings?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is occupied now for militia purposes, but, as I pointed out, with the money which it will bring, the government of Canada can secure very much more desirable property and erect modern buildings.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not want my hon. friend to entangle himself. Does he mean to say that the government can buy a site and erect buildings upon it for $200,000?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes; I am simply taking the statement of the Minister of Militia as to the amount. Of course, they do not propose purchasing a site within the city of Winnipeg, but a site somewhat distant, which will answer very much better for the purposes required than a site within the city.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why does not the government donate a homestead to the colonel?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that Colonel Biggar made an estimate of the value of the buildings at $176,799, and they are not adequate for the purposes of the militia of to-day. Now, could they get another lot and construct buildings that would be adequate, and do that with $177,000 and not $200,000?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I pointed out, the buildings as they are at present, are entirely inadequate. They are dilapidated; so far as the government is concerned they possess no value. Whether the property was transferred or not, it is necessary for the government to erect new buildings, and I mentioned that they would not erect new buildings upon the present site.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think my hon. friend will find that, to get a decent site within the city limits of Winnipeg, it will take all of the $200,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They do not propose getting a site within the city limits.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They are going to take a homestead.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I can venture to assure him that we will be exceedingly lucky, looking at the prices there, if we get off with $500,000 for the barracks, and so on, to be erected.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Minister of Militia seems to be very confident of what he can do with this $200,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Wait until he meets the real estate agent.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

VOLUNTEER BOUNTY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (173) An Act to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908.

He said: This Bill is not printed, but I have a memorandum here in regard to the matter which reads as follows:

A grant of one-quarter section of land (160 acres) in the Northwest was made to each officer and man of the militia who served in the Red River expedition of 1870, and to each officer and man who afterwards was appointed to or enlisted in the relieving force and performed garrison duty at Fort Garry from that time until 1875;

To each member of the enrolled militia force actively engaged and bearing arms in the suppression of the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, and to some few others who were actively engaged but did not really belong to the militia, there were given by the Dominion parliament two adjoining quarter sections of land (320 acres) in the Northwest. Selections were to be made by 1st August, 1886, but the period for selection was several times extended and finally expired on 31st December, 1908.

To those who served in South Africa during the Boer War, 1899-1902, and had their homes in Canada, there have been given two quarter-sections of land (320 acres) in the Northwest. Entry had to be made by last of December, 1910, but this was extended to last of December, 1911.

The aforementioned are the only grants which have been voted by the parliament of Canada for services of the militia.

So far as can be learned no extension of time was refused by parliament.

This is to give a limited extension.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Nothing to do with the bounty to volunteers?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, simply to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908, extending the time for the application for scrip.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—How long is the extension?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Until 31st of December, 1912.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is that final?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand it is finally final.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is there any provision that the land shall be taken up, tilled and occupied?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, subject to the Dominion Lands Act. All the conditions are subject to the Dominion Lands Act.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —How many of these warrants are still outstanding?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a list given in the Bill of those who hold them; they are comparatively few.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Are you altering the law for a dozen gentlemen?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulty is the time has expired, and the policy of the government for many years was to extend the time from year to year for the application of this scrip, and in anticipation of the time being extended, the scrip apparently was not applied for. So far as communication with these parties is concerned, it is well understood this scrip has to be applied for this year.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am under the impression there is something like 400 scrip located.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —If we are asked to amend the law for a dozen or so people, it is a very dubious proceeding. If there are a large number of them, it might be another affair. While some reasonable extension could not be objected to, this has been extended to my knowledge, at least twice, and it looks more or less a dubious matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should say, with all due deference, that it would be more meritorious to extend it for a dozen men who have been negligent in not taking advantage of their right, than if it applied to several hundred.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not quite agree with that. Of all legislation, that which is passed for a dozen parties, who may or may not be deserving people, is very objectionable. If there were a large class, there would be reasonable ground for supposing there would be special circumstances rendering it impossible for those people to have availed themselves of it. That does not appear to be the case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My right hon. friend has probably in view the fact that a large part of this script was transferred to parties who purchased. Ever since the government has been issuing script it has been made use of all through the west as a matter of commerce. It is proposed that those who are assignees of this script shall not be permitted to locate. I understand that there are three or four hundred who hold scrip. Provision is made by which it might be commuted upon being returned to the government. The names that I have read indicate the actual original holders of the script, the parties to whom it was issued and who are yet the holders of that scrip, and who were volunteers and served in South Africa and certainly earned their scrip. The policy of parliament up to the present time has been to extend that scrip from time to time. That these holders should lose the advantage which otherwise would be given would be a case of very great hardship.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—What do they do with the scrip held by parties who are not the original grantees?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are not permitted to apply it on land. 'It shall be received from the bearer at its face value in payment of any Dominion land open for sale,' the Dominion government will redeem it in payment for land. The assignees of this scrip will not be permitted to locate.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Will the value of the returned scrip be determined by the holder?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, it will be accepted at its face value?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is issued at a certain value.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This scrip is good for 320 acres of land and can be applied on 320 acres of land. I think the intention of the Bill is to extend the time for the location of this South African scrip on the same conditions as for the last three or four years.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—No, I think it applies only to the actual volunteers.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There was a suggestion made that it should be extended to the actual volunteers and that where the scrip was held by a speculator, the government would take it back at a valuation of $500. The government has seen fit to extend the time, not only to the original owner of the scrip, but to the speculator who bought to the scrip. The time will be extended until next September.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Why make these schedules?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—These are the only scrip of standing entitled to the benefits of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand that there is about four hundred scrip out.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 6 only refers to this particular schedule. It in no way circumscribes any right.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not know why that number is selected from the four hundred.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before we get to the third reading I will make inquiry about that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend know whether the parties in this schedule are men who actually served in South Africa?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the Bill is read the third time I shall make inquiry about that and inform the House.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

QUEBEC BOUNDARIES BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (151) An Act to Extend the Boundaries of Quebec.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—In the interest of Ontario, I should like to know why Quebec is to get the whole hinterland behind it, and you have clipped Ontario of a large portion of the hinterland which belonged to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend should be familiar with that, because it was his government proposed doing this.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Not on the terms you granted to Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am speaking of the Quebec boundaries. We are extending the boundaries of Quebec according to the resolutions passed by the late government. We are not departing from those resolutions of 30th June, 1908.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Then they must be right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I want to make all due reservation for the consequences of these measures we are now passing increasing the territory of Ontario and Quebec. I have not consulted my hon. friend to my right as to what will be the policy of Ontario, but we have only to look at the map to see the immense responsibility and charges which will fall upon the shoulders of Quebec, and inasmuch as one province only requires to come and knock at the door to obtain an increased subsidy, I think we are laying the ground for a very large increased subsidy for Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) should not feel uneasy about that. It should give him great encouragement.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend's suggestion about more plunder requires consideration.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing there is a population of 50,000 or 100,000 in that new district, how will that affect the constitutional division for membership in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Bill provides that the population will be represented as if it were not part of the province of Quebec. It will have its representation based on the same unit as Quebec.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

FENIAN RAID VOLUNTEER BOUNTY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (190) An Act to authorize a bounty to Volunteers who served the Crown during the Fenian Raids. He said: This Bill provides for the payment of $100 to every volunteer who is resident in Canada on the date of the passing of this Act, who was called out for active service in 1866 or in the year 1870, excepting the two battalions of riflemen formed for services in the Northwest Territories. I have a memorandum from the department which reads as follows:

Memorandum for the Honourable the Minister: Fenian Raid Veterans.

According to the best information that can now be obtained, the number of volunteers called out in Old Canada in the years 1866 were:—

In the month of March.. 14,000
In the month of June.. 20,000

Of those it is probable that as many as 12,000 were out in both months.

In the same year it appears that about 1,500 were called out in Nova Scotia and 500 in New Brunswick.

In the year 1870 the number called out were about 4,000, but, strange to say, there is not the slightest reference to that mobilization in the general orders of that year.

It may be assumed that there are 10,000 Fenian Raid veterans still living. At all events, it would not be well to calculate on a smaller number than that in making a computation as to the amount of money necessary to meet the proposed claims.

That is signed by Col. H. Smith, Judge-Advocate-General.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think the colonel is a good officer, but how did he come to be a Judge-Advocate-General?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I could not tell my hon. friend.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Because my recollection is that he was retired some considerable time ago as being too old to serve.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think not. I do not speak by the book, yet I understand he is still an active official in the department, and he is regarded as one of the most valuable officials in the service.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not object particularly to the colonel being employed, because I am rather inclined to think he is a good official, but this Militia Department is going out of bounds altogether. I dare say it was the predecessor of the present gentleman who brought him back there, but if you first of all retire an officer on the ground that he is too old to be of use, and then afterwards appoint him on the staff in a very important position, a pretty curious precedent is being created. What I more particularly wanted to call the attention of the minister to is this: Are you not going very considerably outside of the record when you make the Dominion of Canada pay for services rendered to the old provinces of Canada? If I understand you correctly, the great bulk of these grants go to parties who served before confederation, for Ontario and New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No; New Brunswick was in confederation in 1866, I think.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Confederation did not take place till 1st of July, 1867.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Col. Domville was in that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I shouldered a musket about that time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) was also engaged about that time. I do not grudge him the $100. I have no doubt he would have potted a Yankee or a Fenian if he got a chance. This matter should be discussed and understood, for it received scant justice in the other House. Those gentlemen do not appear to me to be very faithful guardians of the public purse, whether ordinary members or members of the government, where there is a little popularity to be made. But passing that, a large number of men were called out. Very few, I believe, were engaged at all. If my recollection is correct, a very small number actually smelt powder out of the number that were called out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not many smelled powder.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Did any of my New Brunswick friends smell powder on that occasion?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Oh, yes, they smelled powder—a long way off

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —But there is this distinction. I entirely approve of recognizing the services of men who have ever been actively engaged, or who are called out or remain under arms for a considerable space of time, because such men did perform really good services. I am not so clear about the propriety of recognizing everybody who might have been called out for a few days service. At that time I was taking an interest in militia matters and, unless I am greatly mistaken, a very considerable number of those parties were just simply enrolled for a day, perhaps for a week or two, and then sent home again. We were not in sufficient funds to keep them very long in the field. Is there any distinction, or any rule laid down or likely to be laid down, with respect to the actual terms of service? Because, to pay one man $100 who has been out three months, and to pay the same to another fellow who was out three days, does not seem to me to be quite consistent with sound policy, or good judgment, either. I am speaking more particularly of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill provides for every one called out for active service in the years mentioned.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But some were called out for active service and sent back with great promptitude.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That was not their fault.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—So that any regiment that was called out and was only out for a week, stands on the same footing as those that were out for three or four months.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The same.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I am not sure that my hon. friend from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) had to bestride his charger and flourish his sword, for how long during the Fenian raid?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Two or three weeks in camp at Prescott, and three weeks at six and three pence per day at Amberstburg.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There should be some distinction between those who were merely called out and those who served for considerable time. You are proposing to give about a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there be about ten thousand survivors it will amount to about that.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There will be about ten thousand survivors.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Oh, yes; look at the United States.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Do not be under any misapprehension on the subject. You offer a bounty of $100. Why, it is enough to discover the lost tribes of Israel.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My right hon. friend talks about New Brunswick. I want to tell him there are just as good fighters down there as any place.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I said nothing about New Brunswick. I was confining my remarks to Ontario.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The New Brunswick's were out at Joe's Fort and they were co-operating with the 'Wolverine'; they received the thanks of Mr. Gordon, who was then Governor, for their services, and it is on record in the library. They were ready to do all they were called on to do. They were not killed, but that was not their fault. They were ready to fight if there was any fighting to be done. If you use that argument it will not encourage men to turn out if occasion should require them to do so on some other occasion. I want to enter a protest, on behalf of the soldiers that went to the front from New Brunswick, myself included. I hold a medal with one bar, and I am not debarred from receiving the $100.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I made no reflection on the valour of my hon. friend, or on the valour of the New Brunswick contingent. I entirely agree that men who were called out and remained ready for service for a reasonable space of time, should be recognized. A considerable number of men from my own province never did anything more than respond when called out, and then went to their homes again.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no doubt that what my hon. friend has said with reference to calling out the volunteers in 1866 is correct. A large number of battalions and independent companies were called out and remained at home, and were never sent to the front. They were put under military rule and were ready to march to the front if required. Other regiments were ordered to the front and served for some time. The battalion to which I had the honour to belong was sent to the front, but, fortunately, we had no necessity to fight, and all we did was to practice with blank cartridges. Colonel Smith was the former brigade-major at Cobourg, and I was his trumpeter. He was a very efficient officer. He was appointed by the late government to the position which he now holds. His particular duty, for some time, was to look after the claims of the volunteers who had served in the rebellion in the northwest, and during the Fenian Raid. Both the late Minister of Militia and the present Minister of Militia looked upon him as being one of the most efficient officers in the service, and he has been continued. Although he is advancing in years he is a very efficient man and had performed the services allotted to him with distinction. He has a good reputation both with the government and every one with whom he comes in contact. Experience leads me to believe that the present government are doing right in awarding $100 instead of giving a land grant. I shall be very much surprised if the number is limited to 10,000. I know the position the Ontario government placed itself in when the late administration allotted a quarter section to each volunteer who served during the Fenian Raid. The number of applicants was so great that the present Minister of Railways and Canals, when he was at the head of the Crown Lands Department in Ontario, in speaking to me on the matter, said it was impossible, with the land available at that time, to meet the demands that were being made, and he asked me what I thought was the best way to wipe the matter out of existence. He said 'we will have to survey other townships in the northern part of Ontario to secure land to allot to these volunteers.' I made the suggestion to him at that time to adopt the principle of paying a certain sum of money equivalent to the value of the land in that section, and subsequently the government adopted that plan. Applications have been made over and over again by the Veterans' Association of Ontario for a grant of land. I took the liberty of pointing out to them the impropriety of asking the government to make a land grant in the Northwest, for the reason that it would result in the scrip passing into the hands of a lot of speculators. The veterans were too old to go and settle in the country. The government of the day have adopted the system of paying a certain sum, $100, rather than giving a land grant, and that is the position in which the matter stands at the present time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I had an experience myself in 1875 with respect to the veterans of the war of 1812-14. That had occurred a very long time ago, and no man could come forward to claim the bounty that was awarded then unless he was over 80 years of age. Actuaries assured Mr. Mackenzie and myself that there was no possibility, looking at the then population of Canada, of more than 1,000 men claiming the grant. We gave $50,000, intending that each man should get $50. When we came to look into the matter 3,000 venerable gentlemen established their claims, and a very considerable number of them, I believe, after their claims were established, must have attained, before the thing was finally wound up, quite patriarchal years of existence. I am not quite clear, but I think in the township of Adolphustown there were some worthies who, after obtaining the pension, lived to the age of 100, and I think one is 115, and a very considerable number exceeded the century.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Are there any still living?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think not. Veterans of 1812 and 1814 are scarce these days. The point I made is one that deserves more attention than the government has given to it. I quite agree that every man who was summoned and remained in active service in any shape or form, for any reasonable time, is a proper subject for anything you choose to give, but I am not clear as to the others. I rather think you will find that, first and last, there were called out between 25,000 and 30,000 men along our frontiers in respect to the troubles of 1866. The raid of '66 was really a serious matter and I am not disposed to interfere with any recognition of men who, like my hon. friend, and the batallion to which he belonged, were really put in a position to do active service. A number of men were not called away from home more than a week.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How would my hon. friend draw a distinction? The difficulty is they were called out, and responded to the call.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If they were called out and went into active service, that would be sufficient. If they were notified to hold themselves in readiness, I would not consider that was sufficient. I think they should have served for some particular time. A very considerable number richly deserve it. A large number of them have gone to join the great majority, and you do not propose to look up the heirs.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, no, not even their widows.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend was, of course, born, but he was not in active service in 1866.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did not do much fighting then.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The Militia Department should see that these bounties are confined to men who really were called out to service, not to the class who were notified they might be expected to serve, because my hon. friend knows that amounts to nothing at all. In the case I named I do not object at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would you not consider equally meritorous a man who was notified and was willing to go out to serve his country. Would he not deserve recognition just as well as the man who possibly stood in the front of battle? It was not the fault of these men that they did not reach the front; they responded to the call, and it seems to me they could not do more.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If they responded to the call, yes, but there should be some limit of service.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is paid to men who abandoned their Canadian citizenship and went elsewhere?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—Would parties who paraded, but who never were called out, receive anything?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, only those who were called out for active service.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I am sorry about that. We paraded several times.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Once a soldier has been called out, if he has fallen into the ranks, he is supposed to receive this grant. If any distinction should be made, it would be between those who went to the front, and those who remained awaiting orders. It will be pretty hard unless you draw any other distinction between those who were called to arms. There was one question running through my mind as I heard the statement that the figure would go beyond one million dollars; that was to inquire if the right to claim an indemnity from the United Stotes was proscribed, or if this amount would be charged up as part of that claim which might be made one of these days?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think so. I think we can charge this up. I was not old enough to know what was going on when the 'Alabama' claim was made, but I wondered if this claim was taken into account at the time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Why are the two battalions of riflemen formed in the Northwest excluded from this bounty? I should like to ask also if the men who volunteered to repel the invasion of the Fenians in Manitoba in 1870 will get this bounty?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The claims of the men who served in the Northwest battalions were recognized some time ago and scrip was issued.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Will the men who turned out to repel the invasion of O'Donaghue with his band of Fenians be included in this?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh yes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They were certainly entitled to it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They may not have been regularly enrolled. I think these men banded themselves together without any orders.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand they are provided for.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I refer to the men who volunteered and went out themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If they were enrolled under the Militia Act they would be entitled to this bounty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend said that no doubt I would be ready to serve at any time if I had the opportunity. My impression is, judging from my own character and feelings, that I am not so blood-thirsty as he thinks I am; but I desire to call his attention to the fact that I belong to an order which was called out and placed on the frontier and we were there for four long months, not for the purpose of potting the Yankees, but to prevent the Yankees attacking themselves. A large number of Yankees took refuge in the southern parts of Canada, about the head of Lake Erie, and seized a steamer on Lake Erie, and the Canadian volunteers were sent there to maintain the neutrality of Canada and prevent one portion of the Yankees attacking the other. While we kept the southerners in proper order there was no opportunity offered for 'potting' any of them; but had it been so, I have no doubt that the corps to which I belonged would have done their duty.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I have no doubt at all. My hon. friend beside me asked a question of some interest, although it is not strictly relevant, perhaps, with respect to the position of the claims which Canada was justly entitled to prefer against the United States, on account of the Fenian Raid, and wanted to know what had been done about the matter. It happens that I am in a position to say tolerably correctly what was done about it. When Sir John Macdonald and his friends went to Washington—I think Sir Stafford Northcote was the chairman there—our claims for compensation for the Fenian Raid were brought up. The British authorities ruled them out; they would not present them, and the Americans would not entertain them. I expressed my feelings on the subject in a motion in the House of Commons, seconded by the late Walter Ross, of Prince Edward Island, in which I dealt with great frankness with the gross injustice that had been done Canada, and what I considered the very cowardly action of our friends in England on that subject—very cowardly action, more cowardly because we had compensated the Americans in the cause of the raid at St. Albans, and we were entitled, under all the circumstances, to have been compensated for the gross breech of international law, and municipal law and every other kind of law which was permitted on the part of those Americans who, to my certain knowledge, and the certain knowledge of thousands of Canadians, encouraged the Fenian organization in 1866 in the United States, and who put us to the expense of maintaining 20,000 or 30,000 men, more or less, in a state of readiness, a good many of them actually in the field, in order to protect our frontier from those raids. Over and over again I have brought that forward to English statesmen as an extremely strong reason why Canada's claim should have been considered in other ways, and I have always held it was a very gross blot on English diplomacy that they allowed the Americans to push their claim for the breach of international law, if it was such a breach, which led to the Geneva arbitration, while they refused to pay the slightest consideration to the plain, palpable and gross violation of international law on the part of the American authorities, including a very considerable number of Americans in high station, in aiding and abetting the Fenian Raids in 1866.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But we never got any satisfaction for it except this, that subsequent to this motion of mine, and owing to remonstrances made by the then Canadian government, the British government agreed to endorse our paper to a certain extent for the construction of the Intercolonial railway. If you call that compensation, we got that compensation, and nothing else.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a circumstance in connection with Nova Scotia to which I think it well that the attention of the leader of this House should be directed. As I understand, in the old province of Canada, at the time of the Fenian Raid of 1866, there was no general organization of militia, but in Nova Scotia we had an excellent militia law under which every man, from the age of 16 years to that of 45, was enrolled and had to turn out and drill for a certain number of days each year. Unlike my hon. friend from De Lorimier, I was, unfortunately, old enough then to turn out and drill—I mean unfortunate in the sense that, in looking back now, I am so much older than my hon. friend. It will be remembered that practically the whole male population of the province of Nova Scotia was constituted an organized militia. When the Fenian Raid threatened, those men were called out in this way: the different battalions met and drilled at Halifax, for instance—I do not know to what extent throughout the province—and in the end the artillery corps took the place of the regulars in the fortifications at Halifax, and I suppose that the survivors of those men would be all entitled to share in this bounty of $100. While I would not grudge it, I remember that the South African war, and the land grants made to the volunteers who served there started up a crop of claimants on account of those earlier difficulties, and there was an organization formed in Nova Scotia, and I think in the end it extended over the whole country, to push their claims for consideration. Their application was for grants similar to those given to those who took part in the South African war. I am glad that the government have not adopted the plan that was followed with regard to the South African veterans, but I think some provision should be put in this Bill to prevent claims from men who did not actually undergo any hardships at all, who were not volunteers, but who were compelled by the law and statute to turn out. I was one of those, and I should be ashamed to take money for having done that. If I had volunteered, and had run any risk, it would be a different thing. I was simply ready to turn out, and had my rifle in the house and all that, but I never did any actual service. I could not help it; I had to turn out, under the statute; I did not smell any powder, and why should I, after the lapse of 40 years, get $100?

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill read the second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

2. In this Act "volunteer" means any person who was regularly enrolled or enlisted in and served with any militia or of New Brunswick called out for active service in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, or which the Government of Canada called out for active service in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy, excepting, however, the two battalions of riflemen formed for service in the 'Northwest.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not know just the exact meaning of 'called out for active service,' but I think this measure should apply only to those who actually did go out. Take the battalion to which I belonged: We were, in a way, called out, and were under orders; there was rather an expectation that a Fenian warship was going to take Halifax, and we were told that if the vessel appeared during the night, the signal for our assembling would be three guns, but we did not actually do any active service.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a more difficult task than doing active service. I venture to say that any soldier called out for active service would very much prefer being engaged in the activities of war than waiting to go to the front, and I should say that the man who belonged to an organization and at least was ready to obey any call that was made upon him, was quite as much entitled as the one who stood in the front of battle.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose that, inasmuch as money is plentiful now, it is just as well that a few deserving people, such as these old militiamen are, should get a share of what is going, I do not object.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The conditions which the hon. gentleman from Halifax described as existing in his province existed also in New Brunswick. I was a member of the militia, but it would seem to me absurd to get any money for what was partly a joke, and partly a mustering of men on the hillside around St. John for a single day's work. I think the Bill ought to be more guarded.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL, from the committee reported, the Bill without amendment.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (183) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of railways and bridges therein mentioned. He said: I really regret that I cannot give the House any more information than that which is contained in the Bill itself.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —There is nothing in the Bill itself except the amendments they want. Is that the whole information you have to give?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the whole information I have to give at the present time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —What is the total.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I could not tell that even.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —You are asking us to pass a Bill for many millions and you do not tell us how many.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill came down to-day without my being able to get any information on the subject. I do not know that any information which I might get upon the subject would make it more palatable to my hon. friends opposite.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —There is some sort of reason in at least knowing how much you are going to ask for.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Sometimes it might be more comfortable not to know that.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—It would be more comfortable over here if we did not know.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It might enable us to congratulate the government, which no doubt my hon. friend would like me to do, on the extraordinary and remarkable fashion in which they have carried out the pledges of economy made by them to the electors of Canada if they succeeded in the last election.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Our very close contact with the hon. gentlemen opposite I have no doubt, has led to this generosity of voting public money.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We never were so generous as that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A great number of the items are re-votes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —A considerable number are re-votes, but in all reason and conscience we ought to know, for decency's sake, how many are re-votes and what is the total.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—On the third reading I shall be fully posted.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I would like to draw the attention of the leader of the government to item 41 of this Bill, which deals with a provisional charter. I understand the question was raised in the other House that the legislation that we have been in the habit of putting in this subsidy Act does not apply in the way we understood. If a company having a provincial charter comes to the Dominion government and asks for a subsidy, the railway does not necessarily come under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulty lies in the fact that some of these provincial roads are part and parcel of some larger system. Agreements have been made between the provinces and the roads by which they continue to be provincial roads. The difficulty is for the Dominion government to absolutely ignore such agreements as may obtain between the province and these provincial undertakings. There remains this to be said, that at any time the Dominion government can declare any railway to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and thus bring the road under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would rather think they surrendered that power by some provision of the Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is this a railway that would be a continuation of the Transcontinental?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—The clause reads as follows:

41. To the Naas and Skeena Rivers Railway Company, for a line of railway from the Nasoga gulf or some other point on the waters of the Portland inlet or Naas river to or towards the anthracite coal deposits on the Skeena river near Ground Hog mountain; not exceeding 100 miles.

It is not only the question of rates on the road, but the question of the standing of the road in construction. In this the government have some responsibility to see that roads to which they give money in the way of subsidy are constructed of a certain standard. We have a provision in the Railway Act, of 1911, which requires the Railway Board to insist on the road being brought up to the proper standard, but under this arrangement we would be giving money to the road without any control, or having anything to say about what the standard of the road should be.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CANADIAN NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY SUBSIDY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (187) An Act to authorize the granting of a subsidy to the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company in aid of the construction of the railway therein mentioned.

He said: This Bill proposes to pay $12,000 per mile to the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company to aid the construction of the railway from Yellowhead Pass to Vancouver and the mouth of the Fraser river, not exceeding 525 miles. It is estimated that the maximum cost of this road will be $65,000 per mile, a very much lower estimate than that for the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific in its mountain section. The province of British Columbia has entered into an agreement with this company to guarantee its bonds up to $35,000 per mile; so that it will be observed that the road itself assumes a very considerable obligation, and the assistance which is being granted by this government is not unreasonable, when we take into consideration the very extensive character of the work to be performed. The granting of a guarantee by the British Columbia government which, to a certain extent, will assist the road, will, of course, entail the company raising of the necessary funds to make up the difference between the $12,000 per mile and the estimated cost of $65,000. The guarantee of the province of British Columbia will only assist them in financing that difference of $35,000 per mile. This is intended to be a transcontinental system and will certainly be a great factor in the development of the country through which it will pass.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This is a very extraordinary Bill. It proposes to grant a subsidy to the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company on 525 miles of road through British Columbia. In the first place there is a difference of 25 miles between the provincial guarantee and the guarantee proposed in this Bill. The provincial guarantee is only on 500 miles.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The subsidy will be applied on whatever the distance is. It is not to exceed 525 miles.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This railway is altogether out of the hands of the Dominion government which is handing over $12,000 a mile, or $6,000,000, without any restriction or control over the railway. The arrangement made by this company with the government of British Columbia was drawn up in 1910, and the Premier of the province, when he was addressing the people of British Columbia made a great deal of the fact that the control of the rates was in the hands of the provincial government. He led the people to think he was going to do a great deal more for them in the matter of rates than could be accomplished by the Railway Commission. The agreement with the road was as follows:

> In consideration of the guarantee of the securities hereunder the Canadian Northern Railway Company covenants that the Pacific Company will agree that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may from time to time, having due regard in so doing to the position and interest of the Pacific Company, and in case of traffic destined to or originating in the other provinces of Canada, bearing also in mind the desirability of obtaining reasonable rates from points in the province of British Columbia to points in the other provinces, or vice versa, modify any rates established by the Pacific Company on the said added lines within the province of British Columbia.

There is a great deal more in this clause, but I want to point out that the rates of the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company are not to be modified without taking into consideration the position and interests of that company. The position is that the government guarantee the principle and interest of the railway, and in addition to that, if the earnings of the Pacific Company during any of the first three years of operation are insufficient to pay operating expenses and interest on bonds, the government shall pay the amount of such deficit. They gave them a grant of land for their townsite, free gravel and timber and other matters, and they want to build the railway on government land. When they come to deal with this question of rates, the rates in the province can only be dealt with, taking into consideration the position and interest of the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company. It does not make any difference what the Canadian Northern is doing, whether it is a profitable company and returning good dividends to its shareholders and making lots of money, you are not to take into consideration the position of the Canadian Northern railway, but you must take into consideration the position of the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company; and I think in the case of the Canadian Pacific railway, which runs through the same kind of country as this road is being constructed in, it was twenty years after the completion of the railway before they paid dividends. I think that clause which was put in by the Premier of the province of British Columbia is simply so much waste-paper. It does not amount to anything. It does not give the province of British Columbia any possibility of dealing with the question of rates. It was stated in the other House the other day that later on the government proposed, or intended, to bring this railway under the Board of Railway Commissioners and under the Minister of Railways at Ottawa, but that, as I understood it, was only to be done in regard to the question of through rates. I think every hon. gentleman will agree with me, as far as that question is concerned, that they are going to be fixed by competition. The through rates will be from points where the Canadian Northern railway and Canadian Pacific meet. The Canadian Northern railway will give the same rates, or pretty nearly the same rates, as the Canadian Pacific railway, or Grand Trunk, or any other road they are competing with, but when it comes to rates in the province they will not compete. Then comes the question of guaranteeing the interest of the Canadian Northern Pacific bonds.

The other day a matter that will interest the hon. the leader of the House a little, took place. A gentleman well known in Vancouver, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, in an interview with a newspaper, used these words:

> The vague clause as to rates stands out in splendid contrast with the provisions which follow: Whereby the province is made to guarantee securities for $35,000 a mile for four hundred and fifty miles, with interest at four per cent for thirty years. But that is not all. During the first three years of operation if the earnings be insufficient to pay 'the operating' expenses, and interest on securities, then the province is to make good the amount of the deficit of interest.

Then he went on and said that the province of British Columbia was practically in the hands of these railway corporations. Then, there is also the question of the character of the road. In this agreement made with the province of British Columbia, it is stated 'that the line, when completed and equipped, shall, in all respects, be equal to the standard of the main line of the Canadian Northern railway as constructed between the city of Winnipeg in the province of Manitoba, and the city of Edmonton in the province of Alberta, as the condition of that line was when first completed and ready for operation. Now, this line, hon. gentlemen, is a line through a mountainous country, and the only standard they are required to come up to is the standard of a line running through the prairie country which, in my opinion, is a totally different thing. Apparently the Minister of Railways is content to give them this money for a line of that character. I think it is a very serious condition of things that lines of that class should be allowed to be built through a canyon like that through the Fraser valley. Possibly hon. gentlemen may not know where a railway like that runs. It starts at Vancouver, and to Westminister, and then up the south side of the Fraser valley till it comes to Lytton, when it crosses over to the north side of the river. This road does not open up any country along there, because on the south side of the Fraser river to-day the farmers and the people are served by an electric road which is run by the British Columbia Electric Railway Company from Vancouver to Chippewa. The Canadian Pacific railway crosses the river just above the Mission, and the main line runs on the north side of the river, so that all through that distance the lines practically parallel one another. The same thing continues till you come to Kamloops. When you get to Kamloops the line of the railway goes north until you come to the Yellowhead Pass. The question of that Pass has been fought out in this Chamber and in the other House. The question of control and running rights over this railway was fought out in the year 1906; we had a very considerable fight in this Chamber between a gentleman who promoted this railway and other people in British Columbia who were at that time trying to obtain a charter, and who did obtain a charter for a line from Vancouver to Edmonton. The only way these gentlemen got their charter was by putting a very strong clause in the Bill in regard to running rights on their railway by other roads. The very people who stood up and fought for that clause were the promoters of this Canadian Northern Pacific railway. It occurs to me that, besides getting away from this question of control of rates, one of the objects of this arrangement is to get away from that question of the control of running rights. although the Yellowhead Pass is broad, and has room for several railways to run through it, when you turn south coming down towards Kamloops there is a very narrow canyon or gulch, through which practically only one railway can run, and this Canadian Northern Pacific railway getting through it will practically have control of the situation and, not being subject to the Railway Commissioners, there will be no power to deal with that question. It appears to me that this government should not pass legislation of this kind without properly safeguarding the situation, and they should insert a clause that would give them full control, both over the standard of the road to be constructed, and the rates and general running of the line. If hon. gentlemen take the arrangement that was made by the late government with the Canadian Pacific railway for the building of the Crowsnest Pass line, through a country similar to the country through which this road is being built, they will see at once the difference between arrangements made by the late governmnt on that occasion and the arrangement made by the present government. At that time this government gave the Crowsnest Pass line eleven thousand dollars per mile, and stipulated that the road should be according to the standard which was approved by their railway department and engineers, and the machinery they had at that time for seeing that the work was properly carried out. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper in the interview above quoted points out that the province of British Columbia to-day has no properly qualified people who are capable of giving a report to the provincial government as to the condition of the road that is being built. I think it is a very serious matter, that this government should practically hand over some $6,300,000 to this company, without any condition, or regulation, or arrangement by which they can control the work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There are just two points to which I would like to make reference. The government reserves the right to see that the road is built up to the standard provided for in the Subsidy Bill. I would remind my hon. friend that section 8 of the Railway Act applies to this company. That section provides that any road which connects with another road under authority of this parliament is subject, so far as its through traffic is concerned, to the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The Canadian Northern railway is a Dominion road and connects with this road in British Columbia. It, therefore, makes through rates subject to the jurisdiction of the Dominion Board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Did not the Privy Council hold differently in the case of the Montreal railway?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I am very surprised that the hon. gentleman should say anything against the granting of this subsidy to the Canadian Northern Pacific railway. He knows very well that that company requires communication in all directions, and it does not make any difference whether the scheme is promoted by Americans or Canadians or any one else. We cannot have too many roads in that country. If this government is willing and ready to subsidize a road of this kind, why should he object? The company would not build unless they saw some chance of doing business, and that it was going to be a benefit to the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not understand that the argument of my hon. friend from British Columbia tends to that conclusion. If I am not mistaken, and if I understood his argument, and I think I did, it seemed to be clear that he complained that the rates would not be fixed by the Railway Board of Canada, nor the standard of the road; that the company being a provincial company, would remain under the Railway Act of the province and would not fall under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board. I think that is the long and the short of his argument.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second and third times and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I beg to move that the Senate doth not insist on its 4th and 7th amendments to Bill (77) entitled An act for the Improvement of Highways.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Did I not understand that this would be taken up this evening?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was going to point out that this was the only matter of business we have before us, and having moved this resolution, I presume that my hon. friend from Halifax will move in amendment that the Senate shall insist; then that will result in reasons being stated why the Senate insists upon its amendments, and a small committee might be appointed, as my hon. friend from Halifax will doubtless suggest, to prepare those reasons. Then, when the Senate meets tomorrow morning, those reasons would be ready and the whole matter might be taken up.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have the honour to move in amendment, that the Senate do insist on their amendments, for reasons to be set forth later.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—I would ask his hon. the Speaker if that is really an amendment to the motion?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The only way to get around that is that I might withdraw my motion and let my hon. friend move his motion.

Mon. Mr. POWER—The understanding was, I think, that a committee was to be appointed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend will move his motion that the Senate do insist we will put it to a division. Then, in the event of its being carried, my hon. friend will move for the appointment of a committee. I presume, to prepare reasons.

The original motion was withdrawn, and the amendment was substituted as an original motion, and agreed to on a division.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved that Hon. Mr. Dandurand, Watson and the mover be a committee to report at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

BILLS INTRODUCED

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS BILL.

MESSAGE FROM COMMITTEE CONSIDERED.

Hon. Mr. POWER, from the Committee appointed to prepare reasons for the Senate adhering to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (77) An Act to encourage and assist the improvement of Highways, presented their report. He said: As the report is in manuscript, it may be more convenient that I should read it to the House. It is as follows:

The Honourable Mr. Power, from the Committee appointed to prepare the reasons of the Senate for insisting on its amendments to No. 4 and 7 of Bill (77) intituled: 'An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways,' presented the following report:—

Ordered, That it be received, and

The same was then read by the Clerk, and it is as follows:—

That the Senate adheres to its fourth amendment to the Bill sent up from the House of Commons and intituled: 'An Act to encourage and assist the Improvement of Highways," for the following, amongst other reasons:—

1. Because the right of the Senate to amend a Bill is not impaired by the proceedings which may have taken place during the progress of the Bill through the Commons.

2. Because the amendments made by the Senate to the third clause of the Bill and accepted by the House of Commons provide that the grant in aid of highways shall be paid to the several provinces of the Dominion, instead of to any province as was provided by the clause in its original form; and the subclause 2, proposed by the Senate, indicates the reasonable principle upon which such payments should be made;

3. Because the method of distribution provided for by the sad fourth amendment is that announced by members of the administration in the Senate and House of Commons as contemplated and has been actually adopted in the supplementary estimates for the ensuing year.

4. Because the Bill undertakes to make certain perminent provisions as to the aid to be given to the construction and improvement of highways in the several provinces; and it is only reasonable that the principle or equal distribution in proportion to population recognized by the present administration should be permanently secured by enactment in the Bill, as otherwise, if this principle were abandoned in future the Senate would have no other recourse than to reject the Supply Bill.

5 Because, if the principle upon which the apportionment of such grant is to be made is fixed by a permanent enactment, the task of deciding upon items to be inserted in the Supply Bill will be simplified; and

6. Because the administration of the day, by adopting the principle of the said fourth amendment for the ensuing fiscal year, have indicated that it is neither unnecessary nor undesirable.

That the Senate adheres to its seventh amendment, for the following, among other reasos:—

1. Because section 6 of the Bill empowers the Minister to undertake the construction or improvement of highways in any province, which would be a contravention of the letter and spirit of the British North America Act, 1867, and of the uniform practice under that Aca, for which contravention no sufficient cause has been shown.

2. Because the said amendment affirms in effect that it is undesirable that the Minister or the Dominion government should usurp the rights and functions of the provincial administrations in the building and maintenance of highways and bridges.

3. Because the said amendment will not unduly hamper the administration in carrying the funds placed in the Estimates for that object; sufficient provision being made in earlier clauses of the Bill for co-operation between the federal and provincial governments.

L. G. POWER,
Chairman.

I move that this report be now concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would regard it as entirely unnecessary to again discuss this matter, inasmuch as it was so fully debated that anything that might be said upon it now would probably not contribute in any sense towards an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses. Owing to the fact that the Commons has refused to accept the amendments of the Senate, and has disagreed thereto, it seems to me to be almost a work of supererogation, so to speak, to again go back to the Commons and ask them to agree on an amendment to which they have already dissented. I regret very much the majority have seen fit to amend the Bill to the extent mentioned, as the apprehensions which I intimated in the discussion will probably be realized in the defeat of the Bill. The Commons seems to have taken very strong grounds upon the subject, and I, therefore, do not intend to go into the merits of the question, except to say that I certainly am in favour of the Senate not insisting upon its amendments. I think it would be in the public interest that we should accept the message of the Commons, they having signified their agreement to certain of the amendments, which embody to the fullest extent, in my judgment, the principle laid down by my hon. friend from Halifax. I entirely disagree with the report of the committee, and I think it desirable we should dispose of the matter at once by having a division thereupon.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I regret very much the announcement which the hon. the leader of this House makes, that possibly the declaration of this Chamber, that it will stand by its amendment, may have the effect of the Bill being withdrawn. I regret it all the more that it seems to me, and to the majority of this Chamber, that there is no cause for disagreement with the House of Commons on the subject. The facts recited, and the reasons given for maintaining these amendments are absolutely incontrovertible. It is affirmed that the policy of the present administration, as expressed by the leader of this administration, and as represented in this Chamber, will not be thwarted or hampered in the least by these amendments. When the original Bill is set side by side with the Bill as amended to-day, it will be the conviction of all unbiased minds that there is no cause for the refusal of the Commons to join with the Senate in passing this Bill. The measure has been discussed considerably, but there is one point that I would like to emphasize. It has been stated in the other Chamber that there seemed to be some inconsistency in the policy followed in this Chamber on this Bill and on the Bill giving aid to agriculture. The Bill giving aid to agriculture does not at all pretend to invade the field allowed the provinces by the constitution; agriculture is one of the things with which the federal government can deal without any restraint whatever. The federal government pretends not to offer by that Bill aid to agriculture by voting money to the provinces under certain conditions, which money it could expend directly. I stated in the discussion we had on that Bill that I saw nothing in the constitution which bound the federal authorities to maintain an equality in expending money, as between the provinces, based on population. Seeing no such principle in the constitution I did not feel like hampering the federal authorities in spending that money through the provinces when it could itself do so with absolute freedom, without regard to population and in the manner they thought best in the general interest of the country. The construction of highways is a provincial matter which devolves on the provinces under the constitution and the help which is given to local works in the province is a help which constitutes an absolutely new departure and which is contrary to the spirit of the federal compact. That being so, it seems to me that it appertains to this Chamber to safeguard the principle that the money shall be spent and distributed throughout the country according to the population of each province. One of the reasons given in the other Chamber for their refusal to agree to our amendment is that the government has shown that it intended to carry out that principle, or policy, in the Supply Bill, by distributing that money according to population. So far, so good, and nobody in this House, as far as my recollection goes, has questioned the good faith of the present administration. It has been added in the other Chamber that there would always be a check on the government, if they did not follow that policy, because a demand would have to be made yearly for the grant and, if there was a deviation from it, it was for parliament to approve or disapprove. The answer which is made to this argument is that if this enactment is not in the Bill there will remain no other way for this Chamber to dissent from any future administration, which would try and apply a different policy, but to reject the Supply Bill. This is an extreme measure which the Senate does not want to put itself in the position of adopting, and for that reason it simply informs the present administration that they approve of its policy, and they want to insure its continuation. For these reasons I support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax asking that the report be now adopted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It would be very regrettable, indeed, if the government of the day were to conclude that this Bill is not to be enforced, but that it is to be dropped because of a difference of opinion between the two Houses. I think that the situation may be well and justly put in this way: On the one hand there is a desire to assert the supremacy of one Chamber, and on the other a desire to support the position taken by the other based on absolutely sound logic and absolutely good reasons. I appeal to my hon. friend, the leader of this House, and I ask him if the reason given for the attitude of the majority in this House is not one that is in every respect logical. There is absolutely nothing there, as pointed out in the reasons, that will hamper the government in the administration of the moneys to be voted in the Supply Bill. I have read the discussion in the other House and have failed to find, and our hon. friend has failed to give us, any good reason why the Commons should insist on refusing to adopt the fourth amendment made by this House to the Bill. The one reason given is that it is the intention of the government to apportion this money in accordance with the principle which we have laid down in the amendment which is objected to. The majority in this House are justified in saying that if we give way to the House of Commons we will be giving way to merely a desire on the part of that House to assert its supremacy over this Chamber, because on our side we have every good reason, we have logic, and common-sense, and we have embodied in the Bill a provision which merely carries out what the expressed intent of the government of the day is. So you have, on the one hand, so far the the House of Commons is concerned, an assertion of supremacy over this Chamber, and on the part of this House a stand based on logic. So if this House gives way, it is not because the reasons we have furnished do not amply justify the position we have taken, but because the House of Commons wishes to assert a supremacy over this Chamber. I submit that the majority of this House would not be doing its duty to the country or to itself if it did not insist upon the position it has taken. There was another reason given in the other House why the majority in the Senate was said to have been inconsistent, because of the manner in which it dealt with this Bill, on the one hand, and with the Bill in aid of agriculture on the other hand. My hon. friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) has already pointed out that there is no contradiction, for the reasons he gave. I may be permitted to remind the House that the majority of this House did not support the principle that aid to agriculture should be divided according to the population, not only because of the reason mentioned by the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier, because agriculture is within the jurisdiction of this parliament, but because I and others expressed the opinion that funds in aid of agriculture should not be distributed according to population. I distinctly took the ground, and I think quite a number of gentlemen agreed with me, that when you are dealing with agriculture it would be quite proper not to divide the money according to the population of the several provinces, because, as I pointed out, there are several provinces which are essentially agricultural provinces, while others are less so. I take it for granted—and I think I am perfectly correct in saying—that an amendment similar to the amendment in the Highways Bill was not made to the Bill regarding agriculture because of that very reason. So that the principle which we applied to the Bill concerning highways was one which the majority of this House did not think applicable to the other subject, aid to agriculture. I submit it would be very improper, and not to be accepted on the part of the majority of this House, that we should retract the amendments which were made to the Bill under consideration simply because the other House wishes to assert its supremacy in a matter of this sort. We have, on our side, good sound logic. Why should we give way? There is absolutely no good reason given for the stand taken by the other House, and I think the Senate owes it to itself to insist on the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I propose to support the report for the reasons which are mentioned therein, which to my mind are unanswerable, and for the additional reason that any aid given to the provinces by way of subsidy—and I take it to be such in the present case—should be distributed equally, and equally means according to population, unless special cause be shown to do otherwise. When we have to deal with a Bill which, in fact, gives a permanent mandate to the government to distribute aid of that kind by way of subsidy, and for all time to come, so to speak, I think it is our duty to see that the principle is applied, unless the government is ready to show cause to the contrary. No cause to the contrary has been shown. On the other hand, it has been stated by the present administration that their intention is to distribute this money in the manner which is embodied in the amendment adopted by the Senate. Therefore, I have no hesitation whatever in supporting the report, and I think it should be adopted unanimously by this House.

The House divided on the motion, which was adopted on the following division.

TAXATION AND TRADE RELATIONS.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. KERR, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Edwards, moved the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I am a member of the committee which has just reported, and I find it impossible to concur in the report as presented. I particularly resent the proposition that this evidence should be printed at this time. I agree with the report in so far as it says that no time was given the committee to make a proper inquiry or to digest the evidence, and therefor I see no reason why it should be printed and 3,200 copies distributed. The evidence is absolutely ex-parte, and to an extreme degree the evidence submitted was that of selected witnesses who held most extreme views on some of the subjects the committee was appointed to inquire into, while on other subjects no inquiry whatever has been made. I most emphatically dissent from the proposition to print this extreme partisan evidence on a portion of the subject matter submitted to the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Were the extreme views right or wrong?

Hon. Mr. BELL—I have already said that I concur with the report in so far as that we did not have sufficient time to digest the evidence, therefore my hon. friend will see that it would not become me to express an opinion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is their own conclusion as to the report.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Yes, and I object to the printing of the evidence, because it is absolutely ex-parte and most extreme. It means the sending out of statements which are exceedingly partisan and were secured by the activity of the chairman of the committee, and I entirely object to sending such matter broadcast to the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—You must not impute any motives to the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the evidence which has been taken before the committee is as extreme as the criticism of it, then I should say it would not be worthy of printing.

Hon. Mr. BELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am afraid, however, the cap is on the wrong horn. I think the criticism of the hon. member is most extreme, and therefore the evidence must be worthy of printing to find out who is right and who is wrong. We now have his views on 'Hansard,' and the men who gave evidence will be said to be men who did not know what they were talking about. I had no idea of supporting this motion, but I will support it for that very reason, so as to have the evidence printed and find out who is right in the matter.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I was a member of this committee, but, owing to the meetings of other important committees held at the same time, I was not able to be present at many of its meetings. I was present this morning when the chairman read the report which he intended to present to the House, and I objected to one word in that report, where the Chairman said 'A lot of valuable information.' I contended the word 'valuable' should not appear in the report. I also objected to paying witnesses who were coming here especially for the purpose of promoting the Grain Bill.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—That was a government Bill.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—They were telegraphed for and their expenses were supposed to be paid. All the secretaries of the Grain Growers Association of the west appeared, and it is principally their evidence which was submitted to the committee, as far as I heard, and I did not consider it especially valuable.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Who is going to be the judge?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I am one of the judges on the committee.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—What about the public?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I object to the word 'valuable' appearing in the report. I say that it is not 'valuable' information, and I object to its being printed until all the evidence is taken and it can be printed in a pamphlet by itself and distributed. I am sure that if I had had an opportunity of calling a few witnesses from my constituency the evidence would be quite different from that which is proposed now to be printed. The evidence should all be printed after the evidence on both sides has been heard.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am sure the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat would not wish to be unfair to witnesses who were examined by that committee. It so happened that a measure in which they were interested was being discussed at the time they were here, and therefore they did, no doubt, busy themselves to endeavour to have the measure moulded to suit their views; but it was clearly brought out and stated in the committee that, while some of these gentlemen were coming to Ottawa anyway on a mission mentioned by my hon. friend, others, belonging to the same organization distinctly and positively stated that they were not coming to Ottawa on any such mission, and had no intention whatever of coming until the receipt of the summons to appear before the committee.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—The other members of the committee ought to have known they were to be summoned.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I should fancy the committee did not know what the movements of these gentlemen in the west would be, and if, in the coincidence of having the measure here under their consideration, they devoted some time to it, it is no reflection, and should not be a reflection on the witnesses. As to the statement by the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) that the evidence has been practically all on one side of the question so far, I want to remind the hon. gentleman that the door was wide open, short though the time was, for either of those gentlemen who have spoken on the other side to have had some witnesses here to be examined, but, apparently, they did not have them there. The committee would have gladly heard them. As to the printing, there has been enough said now to lead me to think the House would desire to read the evidence, so as to see whether it is of that extreme character which my hon. friend suggests. It is printed in galley form, it is not voluminous, and the printing of it in a pamphlet will make it valuable for hon. gentlemen who wish to rebut that evidence on some future occasion, if they see fit. There is a clause in the report recommending that a committee be appointed next year having the same object. Of course we cannot bind the House to next session, but should the House then hold the same views they did this session on this important subject, I have no doubt whatever that a committee, having the same object in view, will be appointed; then both sides of the question will no doubt be presented to the House, and the public can judge the value of the evidence from its perusal.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I sympathize to a considerable extent with the feeling expressed by the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) and Leeds (Hon. Mr. Taylor). As far as I understand it, the position is that the witnesses, whose testimony is under consideration, were gentlemen who took one view of the question, and took that view very decidedly; then it does not seem on the face of it altogether fair that this evidence should go before the public without anything being said on the other side. However, there is just this to be said on the other side of the question, that this evidence has been, as I understand it, already printed, and the intention evidently is—an intention which would be carried out by the Senate I presume next session—to reappoint this committee, or another committee, for the purpose of considering this question. Then, if something is not done to preserve the records of the evidence taken this session, that work will have to be done over again, which is not desirable, or that evidence will not be available and it is desirable that what can be said on both sides of the question should be available. On the whole, inasmuch as no very serious harm is likely to follow from the printing of this evidence, I am disposed to vote for the report, but I see the objection that exists in the minds of some hon. gentlemen to its being printed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Senate has a reputation for possessing peculiar qualifications for making disinterested investigations into a public subject, and when this proposal to investigate the question referred to was before the Senate, it was thought that both sides of this very important question would be not only submitted to the Senate, but whatever publication was made to the public would be a representation or presentation of both sides of the case. When this question came before the Senate, my recollection is that the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) was amended to read: 'And also into the gain or loss sustained by the failure to secure access to the markets of the United States,' showing that both sides of this question were to be fully investigated and reported upon. Now what do we find? We find in this report a proposal to bring down to this Chamber a representation made by men who hold extreme views upon this question, some of whose utterances are nothing short of being revolutionary. I venture to say that moderate minded men, reading the statement of some of the men before this committee as to the condition of affairs in the Northwest, would regard that country as being in a state of revolution. Is it desirable that that presentation of the case shall be printed and distributed, not only to the people of Canada but to the people of this continent? I do not wish to state that the publication of 3,000 copies of this report, which is not only a one-sided report, but a report of the evidence of men who hold extreme views upon this subject, will be used for political purposes, but I think it undoubtedly will. I do not wish to say that this Senate will be a party to publishing literature which will be circulated throughout the length and breadth of the Northwest for political purposes, but I say the result of the publication of 3,000 copies of this report, which is incomplete, and which is unintelligible on account of its incompleteness, will be used for extreme political partisan purposes and published in the various journals of the Northwest Territories. Is it not fair to both sides in this Senate that every opportunity should be given to investigate impartially this very important question? Is advantage to be taken because we have reached the close of the session and an opportunity has not been given to the gentlemen who represents this side of the House on that committee? It would look very much like it. My hon. friend from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Bell) has told me that these witnesses that were brought here and examined were brought before the committee without his knowledge, and without the knowledge of the committee so far as he is aware. An opportunity has not been given to this side of the House to summons witnesses for the purpose of giving their testimony on the other side of the question.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Did the members of that committee from the government side of the House request that any witnesses should be heard?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I know that they have been preparing names. My hon. friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) is not present, but he submitted to me certain names that he proposed having called before the committee. This was not done owing to the fact that it was not an opportune time because the committee was laden with witnesses who, if they had been brought here, could not have been examined. The time of the committee was occupied in hearing evidence of witnesses who were here, and the House sitting, and it was not thought advisable to bring the other witnesses here. They are men of responsibility and business obligation and they could not well afford to kick their heels about the corridors of parliament waiting an opportune time for examination If the reputation of this Senate for investigation which will have weight with the public is to be maintained, it can only be maintained by playing this game fairly. I say that unhesitatingly.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can view with much liberality and much generosity any advantage which may be taken, legitimately, by one's opponent as to maintaining his political ground, but there is a line which should not be crossed. I say in this case we have reached the line which should not be crossed, and with the view of maintaining the reputation of the Senate this evidence should not receive publicity until both sides of the case have been heard.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is one difficulty in my mind which can perhaps be solved by some members of the committee. Can the matter that is now in type, in galley form, remain as it is until the next session? If not, would it not be better to have a certain fixed number printed and an order given that it be not distributed until further evidence shall be taken?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not object to that.

Hon. Mr. KERR—In presenting this report I did so on behalf of the chairman. I do not think there is any member of the Senate who will for one moment insinuate or impune the character of the hon. gentleman who is chairman of this committee. No member of this Senate would suggest that he would desire or have any intention of doing anything unfair in discharging his duty. No one would suggest that he would not play the game fair. He is not one who hits below the belt, and he is one who is willing and open to hear fair arguments. Reluctantly I said I would present the report in his absence. This committee was appointed rather late in the session.

The SPEAKER—I would remind the hon. gentleman that we are not in committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I hope the House will hear my hon. friend.

The SPEAKER—I have known cases where members were prevented from speaking twice.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I was just about to say one or two things about the matter which should be said at this time. In the first place, the committee was appointed and organized very late in the session. It was felt, however, as the committee had been appointed that it was their duty to try and proceed with the work. Their first meeting proved to be abortive. Many members of the committee did not attend, and in the absence of gentlemen representing the other side of the question, it was thought unwise to make any attempt to proceed. Then arrangements were made by which witnesses could be secured, and they were examined. There was no intention whatever, in doing that, of shutting out any other evidence that might be offered, and, so far as I am aware, no member of the committee requested that any other witnesses than those who were examined should be called. I do not say that it was not expected that others would not be examined, but I do say there is nothing partial about this report in the fact that those witnesses whose names appear in the report were the only ones examined. It is a fact that no other witnesses were suggested for the meetings which were held, although it was well known that there would be other witnesses examined. When this report was adopted for presentation here, this question was discussed and it was suggested that the report should be printed now, in the first place because it is, in fact, in type, the galleys are up, and if they are distributed it will involve additional expense; in the second place, because there is no recommendation and there are no comments in the report with reference to the evidence. It is a mere report of that evidence, and the report shows that more evidence will have to be taken. Therefore, it is a mere interim report of the evidence so far taken. In the next place, it is suggested that if any one should take exception to the report because it is one-sided, the answer is that it shows the kind of evidence that is wanted, and will be just as much an aid to those who are calling for evidence to rebut it, as in its favour. The idea was that a certain number of copies should be presented to each member of the Senate and of the Commons, and a considerable number to the department. Under all the circumstances, it was determined that we should recommend the printing of the report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has informed the Senate that all this evidence is in galley form. That means that the expense of setting the type has been incurred.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By whose authority was that expense incurred?

Hon Mr. KERR—On the authority of the resolution appointing the committee.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—And authorizing them to spend $1,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would suggest that this matter be suspended until the afternoon sitting so that my hon. friend might consider accepting a slight amendment on the lines I have suggested, so that the matter may be printed, but not distributed. If that is the consensus of opinion, we would save time by suspending the examination of this report.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I rise, as a member of that committee, to state what I know about this matter; as an imputation has been put upon the committee. At the first meeting the question was discussed as to who should be called as witnesses, and how we should start in the matter. It was decided that we should begin by trying to get witnesses here from the province of British Columbia. I myself proposed that the members for Victoria, New Westminster, and Kootenay should be asked to attend, and I also stated that there was a gentleman from Vancouver at that time in the city who, I thought, could give valuable information before the committee. It was arranged that these gentlemen should be the first witnesses called, and the clerk was instructed to call them. The first time there was some mistake made, and those gentlemen did not appear. The second time they were asked to appear before the committee I took the trouble myself to go and see the member for Kootenay, and he promised me that, if possible, he would come over. Of course, we had no means of compelling him to attend. He did not turn up, and I suppose he was prevented. I tried to see the member for New Westminster, but was not able to find him, and I understood that he was leaving for British Columbia the next day, and was unable to come, and that the hon. member for Victoria had left for England. So an opportunity was given to gentlemen who, I think hon. gentlemen of this House will agree, would not hold the same views as those expressed by the gentlemen who were examined before the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Were they Liberal members?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—There are no Liberal members from British Columbia. Therefore, I think the imputation on the acting Chairman was not fair. With regard to the printing of the report, I think the opinion expressed by the hon. member from De Lorimier is good.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—For my part I confess I am a little diffident about voting for the distribution of this literature without both sides being heard. I suppose it is because I am a lawyer that I dislike to have one side of the case only presented to a jury. Why not print simply the number of copies required for the members of the two Houses?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is all that was intended, ten copies for each member.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—It is not necessary to print 3,300 copies. It makes just this difference, that in printing just the number of copies required for this House and the Commons you get away from the charge of trying to distribute one-sided information.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The leader of the House asked this side of the House to play the game fairly. I can tell him straight from here that I play the game no other way. There is no unfairness in the report, and the hon. gentleman's appeal to this side of the House to play the game fair, if it went broadcast, as it will go in the debates, would create the impression that we are playing the game unfairly. I, for one, would not be a party to a game of that kind. On the other hand, I ask the hon. leader, who is so punctilious on that point in regard to a very small matter, to play fair with the parliament of Canada, and bring down very important measures involving very large expenditures earlier in the session, so that we may be able to play the game fairly, even if losingly. That is what the hon. gentleman should insist upon with his colleagues—bring down the very important measures such as we have had the past three or four days, important not merely from a federal point of view but from a local and provincial point of view, earlier in the session. We have to deal with measures here involving millions, some of which are not even before us in print. Now is that playing the game fair? I say it is not; so that when the hon. leader of the House asks us to play the game fair in a small matter of this kind, he should look to his own side and demand fair-play in more important matters.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I had not the advantage of hearing the preliminary discussion, but I would just say to my hon. friend opposite that I entirely agree with him that the Senate ought to preserve a reasonable impartiality in dealing with all these matters. I have just looked over the report, and find that it does not offer any conclusion whatever. There is not a single suggestion in it, not a line to which my hon. friend can possibly take exception, nor do I understand that he has taken exception; all he takes exception to is that such evidence as has been received should be printed. Whether ten copies per head is too many or too few is an open and not a very important question; but I must tell him that it is proper that this evidence should be placed in a correct form in the hands, at all events, of the House of Commons and of this body, for this reason—garbled reports of this, to my certain knowledge, have been very extensively circulated in the papers on both sides. Now it is not desirable that a garbled report of the evidence given should go forth. Let the evidence be printed as it was given before the committee; I think that is perfectly fair. I do not think he need be very much afraid, judging from my own experience, of any of us at this particular time reading through the very voluminous evidence that has been taken. Undoubtedly a correct statement of the evidence, so far as it has gone, should be in the hands of parliament. More than that I would not ask for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To my mind, the suggestion made by the hon. member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt), although it may not be concurred in by the House, ought to be acceptable, if only to avoid what may possibly occur, as has been intimated to me, that certain senators propose to read the whole of the evidence taken by the committee in the House so that it may appear in the debates. That would be very interesting to those who were not present, but apart from that, we might amend the report so as to place the evidence in the hands of every senator and every member of the House of Commons, who will have to decide upon the question.

But what is objected to is this: That you should examine a number of witnesses, knowing very well, as we all know, what the character of that evidence would be, because the parties who were present from the west had come to Ottawa for a special purpose in connection with the Grain Bill, claiming certain changes and certain alterations. It was suggested that these gentlemen should be examined before this committee in order to give their evidence as to what would be the result of the adoption of reciprocity as it was laid before the public. I am not going to impute any motives to the Chairman of that committee; we all know what his views are politically upon that question; we all know his character as a private gentleman. I do not believe that there is a man in the Senate who knows that gentleman who would impute an improper motive to him, but to say that he was not desirous of having evidence upon certain questions upon which he holds very strong views would be to do him a wrong. We all have strong views upon certain questions. He has them, and so have others of us, and in the enforcement of them, trying to convince the world he was right, the presence of those gentlemen in the city at the time was taken advantage of in order to get their views as to what they considered the prevailing opinion of the west upon this great question. I do not object to that, but I do object that that evidence should be sent out to the world without any evidence to controvert it by those who hold different views and who look upon the question from a different standpoint. Let me ask my legal friends what would be thought of a judge submitting a question for the consideration of the jury when only one side of the case had been heard? That is this case exactly. The report itself says there was not sufficient time given to the subject, nor was there sufficient time at their disposal to examine witnesses who were supposed to hold different views from the gentlemen who gave evidence. That is the condition. Print it if you like and let every member of the Senate and House of Commons have copies of the evidence to ponder over during recess, but you have no right to send that to the jury of the public before having the evidence on the other side taken. It seems to me that to adopt the report with the intention of circulating to the whole country one side of the evidence before the other is heard is extremely unfair. It is unfair to those who hold different views, and it leaves a false impression upon many people who will read that report without hearing the other side.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I want to assure the hon. member from Belleville (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) that is was not the wish or desire of any member of that committee to have this evidence, that was given before the committee, circulated broadcast. All that was requested was, that the evidence should be printed in sufficient numbers to be distributed among members of this House and members of the House of Commons, with a few copies for the Department of Trade and Commerce. I happen to have the evidence here, and I suppose I am within my rights, if I ask the privilege of reading it, but I do not wish to take up the time of the House; you will agree with me, I think, that I have not in the past, been given to that offence If, however, the suggestion of the hon. member from Belleville, (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) is carried out that a few copies of this be printed then I shall not ask to read the evidence. It would take me from now till one o'clock, from three until six, and, possibly, from eight until ten, before I would get through the whole of this evidence, because it is in the form of questions and answers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will send and get some pillows and have a sleep while you are at it.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—If the leader of the House will consent to publishing some copies of the report, I will not read it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the proposition my hon. friend makes?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Five or ten copies to each member; the report asked for ten copies for each member.

Mr. McMILLAN—I would suggest that he read that evidence, and we can stay here till the end of next week.

The SPEAKER—The report concludes by asking for the publication and printing of that document.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

The SPEAKER—Is not that the right of the Joint Committee of the two Houses? Why should this House take upon itself to order that printing without the authority of the other House?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The report points out that at this late date in the session it is not possible to have that done.

The SPEAKER—This House has no right to have the document published, when it should be referred to the Joint Committee.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I have not given up the floor of the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend asked me a question, and he does not seem to appreciate the point I sought to make; that immediately one copy received publicity, the whole press of Canada has it in their possession, and have the right to publish it. This committee has expended upon these witnesses the whole of the appropriation, with the exception of $75, and I ask if it is playing the game fair at this time, that that committee, having exhausted practically the whole of the grant, with the exception of $75, which will be insufficient to print the document, should have this printed and circulated to the whole world, leaving no resources for the calling of witnesses on the other side.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is not the intention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We must judge of intentions by results.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Will you consent to one copy for each member?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have nothing to say about it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Put it on the 'Hansard.'

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Will the House accept this as read:

Committee on Taxation and Trade relations, committee room No. 43, Tuesday, March 26, 1912. The committee met at 10 a.m., E. J. Fream called and examined. By the Chairman:

Hon. Mr. BELL—Has my hon. friend commenced at the beginning of the meetings?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I am reading the evidence of this man Fream.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—We want it all read; start at the beginning.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am ready to vote on the report now.

Hon. Mr. BELL—I think the hon. gentleman should commence at the beginning and read it all.

The SPEAKER—I call the attention of the House that the rules must be observed. No member can speak more than once on this subject; we are not in committee.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I beg to call attention to the fact that we have allowed all kinds of departures from the established rules, and we have allowed an enormous number of government Bills to be put through, occupying only five minutes on some of them, which, under ordinary circumstances, would require three or four days. Under these circumstances it is only fair and reasonable that due latitude should be allowed to members; if that is refused we will know how to assert the right of the Senate to full discussion.

The SPEAKER—I will call the right hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the rules have been suspended in so far as they relate to these Bills.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Surely we can vote on the printing of this without having it read.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nobody is standing in your way.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I rise to a point of order. If the hon. gentleman proposes reading the evidence in order to have it on 'Hansard,' he must begin at the beginning.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He can begin just where he likes.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I think I have the right to begin at this point. Two or three of the members of that committee were putting most absurd questions to the witnesses and presenting ideas that prevail in certain parts of the country. I want to place before the whole country the idea that prevailed in western Canada.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—With some people.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—There is no doubt that the people of western Canada, at the present time, feel that they have a grievance and they want to get that grievance before the people of the country, and these hon. gentlemen object to hearing what these men have to say.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—You want the country to pay their expenses?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I am not sure how they were brought down here, but I believe it was in accordance with rules and order; I think the order was passed by the committee. There was considerable trouble getting the committee together and the minority members of the committee were very negligent in the matter of obtaining witnesses. The committee desired to have witnesses from British Columbia; the minority insisted on having a quorum on every occasion, and caused all the trouble possible. I do not wish to read this evidence to the House, it will certainly take a few hours, but I will have to insist upon my right in that respect, unless I am assured that there will be a certain number of copies printed, because I am determined it shall go before the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that we vote on the report.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We had better dispose of the matter by voting on the report. It was suggested at the first meeting that the committee should start at Manitoba, then take Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. It was suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite they should start at British Columbia and come east. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite could not complain when the committee decided to take evidence starting at British Columbia, because the representatives of British Columbia in the House of Commons are all Conservatives. Surely hon. gentlemen could not be adverse to hearing their evidence. The hon. gentleman from British Columbia endeavoured to have those gentlemen appear before the committee and give evidence, but could not procure them. Then they came to Alberta. The interests of Alberta were represented by George Lane, one of the largest stock-breeders in Canada, a large land owner, a mixed farmer, owning the largest herd of high class horses in America and having several thousand cattle and sheep. He was subpœnaed to give evidence, appeared before the committee and stated his views, and I am sure from what I have heard that it will be very valuable evidence for the people of Canada. His evidence related not only to the operation of reciprocity and the tariff, but to the way of conducting the particular business in which he is engaged in the Northwest. Who should be selected next? Unrepresentative men? Politicians? No. Will our friends tell us the evidence given by the representatives of the grain growers of the west, from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, should not be made public The governments in the past have ignored the evidence and statements made by the Northwest to such an extent that in 1885 it caused a rebellion. The public should know, and eastern politicians should understand and be educated by this evidence which has been adduced. I can quite appreciate the attitude of hon. gentlemen on the other side, because I think it would be impossible to get any level headed business man west of Lake Superior, regardless of politics, to give any evidence as to the effect of the defeat of reciprocity which would be at all at variance with the evidence given by the gentlemen who appeared before that committee. I do not think such witnesses could be secured west of Lake Superior.

Hon. Mr. POPE—We should like to try.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman had a chance to try.

Hon. Mr. POPE—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He was a member of the committee and had a right to examine the witnesses. I do not think he will state to the House that those gentlemen came and made false statements which they could not back up with evidence. Therefore, I say that evidence should go to the public. If my hon. friend were given a chance he would say that the best men to examine on the reciprocity deal would be the manufacturers. They were not the people particularly interested in reciprocity. Reciprocity was to give free exchange of trade in natural products, and the proper people to examine were the producers of natural products in Canada, and those are the men who have been examined. I do not think the manufacturer of eastern Canada is in a proper condition to come before this committee with the duties that are given to them, to examine into the effects of reciprocity. Reciprocity would effect manufactured products to a little or no extent. The hon. gentleman from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) as Chairman of that committee, took the right and proper course in calling the right men to give evidence as to the effect of the defeat of reciprocity for good or ill. I venture to say there are no two sides to that question as to the effect of reciprocity, either in cattle, horses or grain. I understand from the members of that committee that there is no conflict of opinion in the evidence given by the gentlemen who have been examined as to the loss to the Northwest in the defeat of reciprocity, and I say that we ought to have, at the earliest possible date, the evidence adduced by that committee printed and placed in the hands of members of the Senate and House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. POPE—I have been interested in the discussion which has taken place with reference to the committee. Permit me to say that this is the first time I was ever on a special committee of this character. I do not know what the custom and rule has been in the management and conduct of those committees, but our rulings have been very irregular, and the committee has been managed in a very unsatisfactory way. Perhaps it was unavoidable. For instance, we did not receive notice. As a rule I did not receive my notice until about half an hour after the meeting was over. I got my notice this morning after the committee had held its meeting. I asked the Chairman when we were going to have the closing meeting; I was anxious that the discussion that had taken place in this House might have been avoided and if it had been there would not be this detention of legislation in the Chamber. The Chairman did not know, or if he knew he did not choose to tell me; I presume he did not know. Therefore, I did not know there was a meeting of the committee on Taxation and Trade relations until I arrived at 11 a.m., when I heard this committee had been called for 10.30.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is not an early riser.

Hon. Mr. POPE—Not this morning; I heard the birds sing before I went to bed, and I did not think it was necessary to rise and hear the rooster crow. With reference to calling these witnesses, when we had the first meeting of this committee the resolution upon which the committee was based was read, and we decided then and there that the committee would resolve itself into three parts. The first part of the resolution deals with taxation, and the next with reciprocity, and the third with regard to trade between the provinces. We thought at that time that we should take up that resolution as it was printed, and deal with the first part first; that was the incidents and demands of taxation in Canada. We came to that decision, and we were sent home to incubate. We asked the chairman of the committee what that resolution meant, and he said, ' Well, I do not know.' We said, 'Did you not write it?' He replied, 'No, I did not write it,' and then he informed us that some hon. gentleman of the Senate prepared that resolution, I said to the chairman, 'I should think very likely, because I have never been in the Senate before, and I have never been in a place on earth where a similar resolution would be prepared,' and I accepted his version that it was prepared by a senator, and probably a very old senator at that. However, we took up this question seriously from a taxation point of view, wrote the chairman that we should consider the incidents and demands of taxation, and the cost of taxation from all the various sources from which taxes are gathered together in the Dominion of Canada, from the provinces, cities, villages and municipalities. To this he agreed, and sent out through the secretary, some invitations to the different organizations which collected taxes in Canada, in order that we might get that information. It dragged along; I met the chairman and said ' Are we going to have any meeting this year?' to which he replied, ' I do not know how we can very well. We will have to call a meeting to close up.' Then we had a meeting only three or four days before these gentlemen were to be examined in No. 8, and there was disappointment felt at these gentlemen not coming from British Columbia. We decided we were not able to obtain any witnesses to examine. Some of us suggested we would not meet again, and suggested making a report that we had sent out our inquiries on the first principles laid down in that resolution, and we would make that report. Another member said somebody might turn up to-morrow. What are the facts? The facts are that on the 15th day of March, more than a week previous to that, these gentlemen unknown to me, as far as I was a member of the committee, had sent messages and assumed the responsibility of bringing these gentlemen from the west. Whether Mr. Lane or Mr. Fream, or any other gentleman, is a good man or bad man, is a matter of indifference so far as this particular point is concerned. I say as a member of that committee I either was or was not entitled to be consulted with reference to bringing any particular witness or assuming any financial responsibility in connection with that committee. Otherwise what is the use of my being a member of the committee? You may call it a minority or a majority membership, what object is there in belonging to a committee if you are not going to be consulted on very important points of that kind. We had $1,000; it has been expended, as the hon. leader of the House has said, practically on this western side. I have no particular objection to that; I have no objection to those western members coming down here, and I would not be a bit afraid to make a finding on a good deal of that evidence given there, as far as politics are concerned; but it is not a question of politics, it is a question of fair-play to the members of this committee and the people of the country, to parliament and every one else, but when you are going to publish the results of the committee, you should publish the whole results, send them to the people and let them reach their own conclusion. When the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie says we cannot bring any evidence from the west against reciprocity, I desire to say he is very much mistaken. I have had names wired me from the west as soon as the report was sent out in the press, but there is no object. I did not understand we were to have a report. The Chairman did not tell me we were to make a report of the evidence of these people and have it printed and circulated in this country, and I want to enter my protest against the selection of witnesses without consulting the committee. It is not a question as to whether they are good or bad men, it is a question of treating your committee fairly, and intelligently, and calling the committee together at half or three-quarters of an hour's notice is not a proper procedure. When the hon. gentleman said the minority prevented the committee from obtaining a quorum, I can tell him that half of that evidence was taken when there was not a quorum there. We did not prevent them from getting a quorum.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I rise to a point of order. A few moments ago, on the assurance of the hon. leader of the House that we would vote on the report of this committee, I sat down. I thought I was giving up my right of speaking again, understanding that a vote was to be taken, but I want to say if members of this committee are going to rise and take more time than I would have done in reading this report, I want to have my right reserved and handed back to me. If we are going to vote on the acceptance of this report we will vote on it, but if there are going to be speeches of hours' made it will be far better, and the House will receive far more information——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Speaker I desire——

The SPEAKER—Order.

Hon. Mr. POPE—This is another piece of evidence of the fairness of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER—A point of order has been taken. I do not understand it yet.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I was proposing to read the evidence taken before that committee, and the leader of the House said: 'We will vote on the adoption of the report.' I gave way and sat down. Then another speaker followed and the hon. gentleman from Compton (Hon. Mr. Pope) proposes going through the whole thing.

The SPEAKER—I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he took his seat because a promise was made that a vote would be taken.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Yes.

The SPEAKER—When?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—At once.

The SPEAKER—I never heard it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I merely said the difficulty could be overcome by voting on the report. If the report is carried it is published, and that dispenses with the reading of it, but I could not have said, 'A vote will now be taken,' because I have no authority.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Have I exhausted my right?

The SPEAKER—I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Does the hon gentleman assert seriously that several meetings were held with half an hour's notice?

Hon. Mr. POPE—As far as I am concerned.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is another question.

Hon. Mr. POPE—I will assure my hon. friend that I am not going to keep him all day, and I am sorry he gets so nervous under fire. With reference to the method in which these gentlemen were brought from the west, I understand three or four of them, Mr. Wood, Mr. Fream, Mr. Meharg and Mr. McGraw, or whatever his name is, were brought down on the Grain Bill, and were on the way when the message was sent to them. They received the message when they were on the train. Mr. Green, I believe, was not coming down, he was out of town.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I know the hon gentleman does not intend to state what is not right, but Mr. Maharg, and some others whose names he mentioned were not summoned here and received no remuneration for attending.

Hon. Mr. POPE—The names that were given to me were, Messrs. Wood, Fream, McGraw and McKenzie, who came down on the Grain Bill. Mr. Lane came down specially at the invitation of the committee.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—So did McKenzie and Green.

Hon. Mr. POPE—Are those three men the only men we are paying?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I think there were only four summoned here—so the Chairman told me. The others were down here with reference to the Grain Bill. That was the object of their coming here.

Hon. Mr. POPE—I should like to say, as a member of that committee, that when it was decided that these men should be sent for and this expense incurred, why should I not have been informed that they were summoned, when we had a meeting three or four days before they appeared; they had been summoned days before that; Why should I not have been notified, instead of the committee holding this closed door proceeding, as it were. I have watched the proceedings from beginning to end. Whether it is intentional or unintentional—I do not wish to impugn the character of any gentleman on that committee—I want to tell the House that the conduct of that committee has not been fair, has not been above board for many days. If the object was to get information on one side, and to carry out that object by printing the evidence and sending it broadcast to the people in the country, I can see very clearly why we were dodging around the post, and the evidence of the fact of the case was being kept from many of us who were members of that committee. It was apparent. There was a plot, a scheme, which is now to be carried out by this House printing this imperfect evidence, one side of the case only—not even half the case completed. There is no question about it, we are not going to rest with the evidence simply from three or four provinces of the west.

They are going to have the other side of the political question from ocean to ocean before this matter is completed, and then on the other side there will be evidence called from ocean to ocean; when that has been done it will be time for the publication of the evidence and not before. I protest, as a minority member of that committee, first to these men being called without the committee being made acquainted with the men that were going to be called and then when they were called that we did not have a proper notice as to who was coming to give evidence in order that we might have had the same number of men on one side as the other. I say it is not fair to have this evidence published and sent broadcast throughout the land. I take that position and I desire to enter my protest against the conduct of this matter in the committee and in the House.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—We might as well come to a conclusion. We have been discussing this matter for over an hour and now we have discovered that the evidence has been printed every day after each meeting and the printed copies are on the Table of the House.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Let it stay there until next year.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—We have been an hour and a half discussing as to whether the evidence will be printed or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The evidence may be on the Table but nobody has seen it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think that under the circumstances one copy of that report would be sufficient for each senator and each member of the House of Commons. My office is stuffed full of printed matter that is of no use to anybody. I move that the report be amended by striking out the word 'ten' and insereting the word 'one' and that one copy be sent to each member of the Senate and the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think this has been a most miserable and paltry discussion. This report is in the hands of the press already. The meetings of this committee were held with open doors and there was no objection to the press having the entire report. As a matter of fact it is now in the hands of the public. It is actually on the table of the House and I think it is a paltry thing to reduce the number of copies from ten to one. Although we were not in attendance at the committee we are entitled to copies of the evidence and why should we not have twenty copies if we want them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am in favour of the amendment, but I would call attention to the enormous waste of money to the country. We all agree that this evidence is going to be printed ultimately. Why not print a certain number of copies and limit the distribution to one copy to each member. We should now order the printing of a sufficient number so that it will not have to be reprinted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The argument of my hon. friend is not very sound, one copy of the present evidence will be printed and next session possibly one hundred copies will be printed of the evidence taken and that would not be fair. If the evidence is worth printing, surely it is not desirable that it should be held in storage until next year?

The amendment was lost on division.

The motion to adopt the report was carried on division.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine Proceedings.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN inquired:

1. What is the length in miles of the Prairie section of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway between Winnipeg and the beginning of the Rocky mountain section.
2. Has the government up to the present time granted any land subsidies to this portion of the line outside of its right-of-way over Dominion lands and for station grounds over the same?
3. Has the government granted and paid up to the present time any cash subsidy for the Prarie section?
4. How many miles have thus been constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company without cost to the treasury in money subsidies or land subsidies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED answered as follows:

1. 915 miles.
2. No.
3. No subsidies have been granted or paid.
4. 1176:5 miles without subsidies in money or land.

WELLAND CANAL IMPROVEMENTS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN inquired:

1. Has the government considered the point that the deepening to twenty-five feet to the Welland canal would lower the present level of the upper lakes?
2. Has the government considered the point that the large quantity of water necessary to supply continuous lockage in the Welland canal deepened to twenty-five feet and with locks seven hundred feet in length would divert an equal quantity of water from Niagara Falls?
3. Under the waterways agreement between Canada and the United States of America, has the necessary authority been obtained?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED answered:

1. It is not considered that the deepening of the Welland canal to twenty-five feet will lower the level of the upper lakes.
2. The amount of water required for lockage through the proposed enlarged locks is but a small percentage of the total now flowing through the Welland canal. It is not considered that any increase in the draught from Lake Erie will be required.
3. Special authority does not appear necessary.

ST. JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY—SUBSIDIES BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READING.

Bill (188) An Act to aid in the construction of certain bridges on the railway of the St. John and Quebec Railway Company, and to confirm an agreement between the company and the governments of Canada and New Brunswick.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—What is the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The object of the Bill is to provide for a subsidy for the St. John and Quebec Railway Company with reference to three certain bridges that are being constructed along the line of that railway. These bridges are being constructed by a separate company, known as the Bridge Company. It is proposed to guarantee the securities of the company on these bridges up to a million dollars at 4 per cent, extending over a certain period of years. The province of New Brunswick is guaranteeing the bonds of this particular company to the extent of $25,000 per mile, and this government is granting a subsidy of $6,400 per mile. An agreement has been entered into between this government and the company to lease the road which is proposed to be built, as part of the Intercolonial railway. This is a contract which was practically entered into by the late government; the whole matter was gone into by that government and approved of by that government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Not as to the bridges.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, but as to the construction of the railway.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Will this about exhaust the surplus? Will there be anything left?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There will be some left. We intend to put some of the surplus into the province of Quebec, as my hon. friend will observe, when we bring down the subsidies.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am inclined to think there would not be much left if we stayed here much longer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree with my hon. friend as to the danger of staying here, because the surplus is rapidly dissolving.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It is the one good reason for hurrying, and the only one. I am perfectly well aware of the agreement that was made for the road, but who is responsible to us for the payment of the interest on this one million dollars? The Bridge Company, I take it, is a party of no particular resources, per se.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A deed of trust is being prepared and signed by the Bridge Company and the federal government giving security upon the bridges. I fancy those bridges would be necessary in any event for the Intercolonial railway system, and that is about the only security. The guarantee is being advanced upon that particular security.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Why should you advance money to the Bridge Company, instead of doing the work ourselves?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I suppose on the same principle we advanced money to the late Quebec Bridge Company.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —With nice results. That is a very unfortunate precedent you are citing.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Over what rivers are these bridges to be placed?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The first bridge is across the St. John river at or near Andover, in the county of Victoria; the second across the St. John river at or near Mistake, in the county of Kings, and the third at Kennebecasis.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is more bridges than we have had in the other provinces for years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We cannot fly across the river.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Why cannot we build these bridges ourselves? What earthly advantage will the Dominion gain by handing over to a bridge company a million dollars to build three bridges.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And then pay them 4 per cent on the cost.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fancy a million dollars will not build those bridges.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —We have had some experience with respect to the bridges across the St. John, and if my memory serves me we advanced money in a similar case with the result we got no interest and finally we had to take the bridge over, and there was reason to believe it cost a good deal more than it ought to have cost, or would have cost, if it had been built by ourselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The aid to the bridges is so much additional aid, I presume, to the railway. It has been explained to the government, a fact of which the government has satisfied itself, that the class of construction may be a very expensive one, and the assistance being received by the railway company will not anything like construct the road.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is a curious arrangement you are making.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I presume this road will cost from forty to fifty thousand dollars a mile.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—Yes. This part of the road is being built exactly on the same gradients, and under the same regulations as the Grand Trunk Pacific. That is a grade of four-tenths of one per cent, the bridges are expensive bridges, and will be used, in all human probability, as a part of the Intercolonial railway, and will also be used as a branch line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, running into St. John. It necessarily requires to be built in an expensive way, and it has and will cost a large percentage per mile.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What is the estimated cost?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—I have not the figures, but it will take all of that million dollars, and more, too.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Of that I have no doubt. The explanation that my hon. friend from St. John has given is plain enough so far, but here you are proposing to give this to a company to be chartered to construct these railway bridges. What on earth is the object of having a separate bridge company in place of dealing directly with the railway company?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The bridges are to be toll bridges, and that may possibly answer the question why there should be a separate company.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—So they are going to make money out of the million in that way?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The rates and tolls are also transferred as part of the security; that is to say if any rates or tolls are to be levied, they are to become part of the security and they are to be fixed by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Are the government going to give a million dollars to a body of men without knowing whether they are to levy tolls or not? Is that the way the government are squandering the money of the people? It is time to call a halt. It is an outrage on the public and the railway companies. Every railway company using the bridges will have to pay toll. What does the government mean? They do not take the public into their confidence by bringing down this legislation in due time. If there were a few more like me, that legislation would not pass until we had further guarantees. I simply say it is appalling. Fortunately for the government, the proceedings in this House are not made public and they can hoodwink everybody.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—I do not see on what ground the hon. gentleman takes exception to the course pursued with respect to these three bridges, when it has been the usual custom of parliament to do the same thing with other companies in the years gone by. I do not understand the opposition that has suddenly arisen to the subsidizing of these bridges specially as if it were something unheard of before. It is, in fact the usual practice that is being pursued.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—To the extent of 15 per cent, but not a grant of the whole amount.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—There is perhaps not as much information as the House ought to be possessed in respect to the construction of these bridges, but from the survey and reports made it is clear that they will cost considerably more than a million dollars. They will cross the river St. John, which is navigable for over two hundred miles by steamboat, and has a width at Fredericton of half a mile; and it is between Fredericton and St. John that two of the bridges are to be constructed. This is not a speculation by the company to make money.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I would ask the hon. gentleman what object, in his view, is served by creating a special company for the construction of these bridges, in place of dealing directly with the railway company, who are I suppose, the ultimate owners?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Practically, the ownership of this road will pass into the hands of the provincial government. With respect to the claims on the bridges, the company that build them will have very little if the road is constructed the way it should be. It is simply a connection between the Grand Trunk Pacific at Grand Falls down the valley of the St. John river. There was a mistake made by the government in accepting the back route; at the time of the survey they made an error, and the government was misled by the engineers. Realizing that mistake, the government of New Brunswick has gone to the extent of guaranteeing $25,000 a mile in order that proper regard should be had to the interest of the people. The construction of this road would not have been necessary if the report of the engineers had been based on facts. This parliament was misled as to the two routes. The engineers laid upon the Table of the House plans showing that the back route to the province of New Brunswick would cost a little in excess of $6,000,000, that is, the portion of the road from Grand Falls to the city of Moncton; and that down the valley of the St. John river it would cost between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. It has developed since that the road through the back portion of the province will cost three times that amount, and it passes through a section of the country that at the time, and for all future time, will have no local traffic to any large extent. This proposition is one that the people of New Brunswick realize is necessary. That section of the country for nearly 200 miles on both sides of the River St. John was entirely without railway facilities, and the feeling, in general, of the people was very strong that they should have a railway there. The parliament of New Brunswick assumed a debt of $25,000 a mile for this road, when $3,000 a mile is the most that has been given as an ordinary subsidy. I think last session it was understood between the late government and the representatives of New Brunswick, who are taking a very active part in the construction of this branch line, that the government would assist in the construction of three large bridges that will cost nearly $2,000,000. The province of New Brunswick has to assume a large liability if they construct these bridges of the character that will be necessary in order for them to be part of the railway that is proposed to be built through New Brunswick. Why it is a bridge company that is to build these bridges I do not know; I know that these bridges cannot be used by any other road than this branch line; there is no other railway that can get on them. It may be possible that some other railway will be granted running rights by the Intercolonial railway; the Intercolonial railway is going to take over the running of this road, and they must be intending to allow other roads to run over the track and charge them a toll for using the bridges.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Any railway coming into the Bonaventure station at Montreal and crossing the Victoria bridge, does not have to pay a special toll.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is out of order; he has already spoken.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The explanation as to the Bridge Company is very vague.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—The leader of the government has stated that this was action that had been taken by the late government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not as to the bridges, but as to the road.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—That is what I find fault with, and that is one of the reasons why I am suspicious. I can very well understand the attitude of the hon. gentleman from St. John and I can understand the position of the hon. member for York (Hon. Mr. Thompson). Before the change of government and during the administration of the late government, the question of constructing a road from St. John up the valley of the St. John river was under consideration. The late government made a proposition through the Minister of Public Works, that if the government of New Brunswick would encourage the construction of a first-class road, equal to the standard of the Intercolonial railway, that the federal government would undertake to operate that road, under lease, as part of the Intercolonial railway, which would give the province a great share of the net proceeds of the earnings of that road and relieve the province of the guarantee that they had given for the construction of the road.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—It is under that same arrangement now.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—The road was to be constructed from St. John to Grand Falls, and the county of Victoria is just as much interested in that road as the county of St. John or the city of St. John, or the county of York. There is nothing in the Bill to show that the road will go to Grand Falls. I do not find any fault with the general proposition that the line should be worked by the Intercolonial railway and become a branch of the Transcontinental railway, if connection is made at Grand Falls. What I find fault with is that it provides that these bridges may be built by a company. It does not say they shall be built. This government would only be liable for their portion of the subsidy if the agreement was signed by this government for the construction of these bridges; or, in other words, the road may start at St. John, and come as far as Fredericton or Woodstock, or a little further than Woodstock and stop there. I understand that unless the road is constructed from St. John to Grand Falls that the agreement between the two governments would fall to the ground. I think we are bound to finish the whole road to Grand Falls.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—If they do not do so it will be the greatest calamity that ever befell New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN—The province of New Brunswick would be liable for that $25,000 a mile and it would be a great disappointment to the people of the province, who have acted in good faith. The hon. member for York has spoken strongly in favour of the county of York, which has been deprived for a number of years of railway facilities from Woodstock down. I quite agree with him in that. I differ with him in regard to the selection of the National Transcontinental railway. I fully agree with him that railway facilities should be provided for the people on both sides of the River St. John. The reason I would favour this transcontinental line in its present condition is that I believe it is not only a transportation scheme, but a development scheme. The northern portion of British Columbia was developed at the expense of the federal government.

The same thing occurred in Manitoba, in the Northwest and in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and unless the Transcontinental traverses the section which it does traverse now, we would have no development at all in that section of the province where development is greatly needed, and where it is not only greatly needed, but where it is of great service. I have no desire to oppose the Bill at all, but I am pointing out the difficulties, and the interests, of that part of the country that I think made the sacrifice and who are liable to be disappointed. There is no guarantee to my mind in that Bill that this road will be carried out as it was intended to be carried out by the late government with the province of New Brunswick, and failing that I do not think the Bill is a proper one.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the Bill be placed at the foot of the order paper for third reading. I have knowledge of the fact that the provincial government waited upon this government, and pointed out the impossibility of their succeeding in further financing the project, other than guaranteeing the bonds of the road to the extent of $25,000 a mile. This imposed upon that province a very heavy burden which they thought they could not exceed and maintain their financial credit.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Have they not, as against that, the rather extraordinary concession that 40 per cent of the gross earnings—not the net earnings—will be appropriated to meet the interest on their bonds.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes. I understand it will require that. It is not an unusual practice for the railway company to incorporate a subsidiary company for the building of expensive bridges. There are numerous cases of that character, where a bridge involves more than ordinary expenditure, a subsidiary company is always included now for the purpose of building such bridges. They are financed entirely separately from the railway company, and they enjoy certain tolls from the railway company for their use, and they are financed in that way and maintained. I think the large railways in Canada are now resorting to that method of construction of expensive bridges.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does the hon. gentleman think that is a good plan as between governments. This is virtually between two governments, the local and federal.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, no. True it is an arrangement of that character, but the road is being built by a private company, and the bridges are being built by a private company. Those companies have made representations that they have financed their enterprise in England, and they have received a very substantial subscription for stock and so on, and it will involve very substantial sums being put into the enterprise, in addition to the assistance which is being given by the government. So that, under the circumstances, I think it is not an unusual transaction, but follows the naturally accepted practice.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

AMENDMENT REJECTED BY COMMONS.

A message was received from the House of Commons acquainting the Senate that the Commons agree to the 1st, 2nd and 4th amendments to Bill (88) An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission, and that they disagree to the 3rd amendment for the following reasons:

Because the special inquiry called for by the amendment of the Senate relevant to the purposes of the Bill, except in so far as it is already provided for by the other provisions of the said Bill and is unnecessary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They do not quote the amendment in this message.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBSIDY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (178) An Act to provide for an additional annual grant to the province of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It was agreed yesterday at the second reading of this Bill that the principle of the measure could be discussed at the third reading. I stated at a previous stage that I felt considerable hesitation in voting on the Bill, and in accepting its principle in its present form. If hon. gentlemen have looked at the Bill they will find that it contains practically but one clause, which is as follows:

2. There shall be paid to the province of Prince Edward Island, in addition to the sums now authorized by law, an annual grant of one hundred thousand dollars, one half of which shall become payable on the first day of July and one half on the first day of January in every year, beginning with the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twelve.

The amount to which Prince Edward Island was entitled was fixed by an agreement which was embodied in an imperial Act, and when Prince Edward Island accepted the terms offered by the parliament of Canada it became bound to the federal compact as clearly and as tightly as the four provinces which accepted the British North America Act in 1867. As far as my memory carries me, I have heard complaints throughout eastern Canada as to the principle underlying the settlement which was then made and the insufficient payment from the federal exchequer to the provinces at 80 cents per head, based on the census of 1861. An agitation has constantly recurred for a revision of those terms. As far back as 1887 the representatives of all the provinces gathered in the city of Quebec and petitioned the federal government for a modification of those terms. That was twenty years before the terms were actually changed, but during those twenty years it took a considerable amount of energy on the part of the provincial governments to educate public opinion to the necessity of modification. One or two other conferences took place between the provincial Premiers of the Dominion towards that end, and in 1906 or 1907 they at last agreed, with the exception of the representative of British Columbia, upon a basis of increase which was deemed equitable to them all. This memo. in which the agreement was embodied, was presented to the federal parliament, and in 1907 the Canadian parliament voted, as far as I can remember unanimously, a resolution to the imperial parliament asking that the payments to the provinces be revised. This resolution formed the basis of an imperial Act, which is chap. 11, 7 Edward VII. This Act of the imperial parliament gives the reason of the Act in the preamble as follows:

Whereas an address has been presented to His Majesty by the Senate . . . therefore enacted.

In virtue of this Act the various subsidies which had been up to that time voted to the provinces were changed. The schedule referred to is the resolution from the two branches of parliament and is signed by the two Speakers. I find that I had the honour of appending my signature to that address to the King. The address read as follows:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We your most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, humbly approach your Majesty for the purpose of representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Acts of parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures by providing that:

Then the modifications or increases are enumerated in the resolution, which concludes with the following paragraph:

We pray that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid and substituting therefore the scale of payments above set forth, which shall be a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be paid yearly to the several provinces of the Dominion for their local purposes, and for the supports of their governments and legislatures.

Such grants shall be paid half-yearly, in advance, to each province——

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—What is the additional subsidy granted them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There was a special enactment for Prince Edward Island. I shall cite the paragraph which concerns that province:

I find it in the Act itself. In the case of the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island:

—the amount paid on account of the grant payable per head of the population to the provinces under this Act shall not at any time be less than the amount of the corresponding grant payable at the commencement of this Act; and if it is found on any decennial census that the population of the province had decreased since the last decennial census, the amount paid on account of the grant shall not be decreased below the amount then payable, notwithstanding the decrease of population.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Was not there an amendment to that with reference to the province of British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There was an amendment with regard to the payment to British Columbia in subclause 2:

An additional grant of $100,000 shall be made yearly to the province of British Columbia for a period of ten years from the commencement of this Act. It was joined to Prince Edward Island in the clause which protects it against a possible diminution of population.

This Act was introduced by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, whose words I will cite:

My Lords, I have not much to say in explanation of this Bill. It deals with payments from the Dominion government of Canada to the provinces of Canada, but it is necessary to have legislation in this country because these payments come in substitution for the payments which are provided for in the British North America Act, 1867. A conference was held at Ottawa between the Dominion government and the provincial governments, and the provisions of this Bill follow on an address from the Dominion government which represented the findings of that conference.

In the House of Commons Mr. Churchill who fathered the Bill said, in answer to a remark by Sir Francis Bambury:

I did not intend to allow the Bill to pass without making any observations on it; but I thought that it would be more convenient to postpone my remarks until I could deal with the points raised in the debate. The hon. Bart the member for the city of London asked why the Bill came here at all. The British North America Act is the fundametal Act governing the constitution of the Dominion of Canada, and the different prime ministers of Canada voluntarily entered into that union. Adherence to the union was something in the nature of a treaty, and when a altercation in the basis of a treaty is made, it is by the revised schedule of subventions proposed, it was felt desirable by all the prime ministers in conference that such a matter should be ratified by the imperial parliament in the most formal way.

The action of this parliament was, as stated by Mr. Churchill in the House of Commons, a most solemn one. It was a resolution from both branches asking the imperial parliament to enact a law changing the federal compact and increasing the subsidies for the various provinces. The federal authorities deemed that the demand was of such importance that it was essential that all parties should bind themselves to make it a finality. We had lived under the federal compact from 1867 to 1907. It was the first time that an amendment was being moved altering the financial arrangement entered into by the provinces. The Dominion authorities felt that if the door was once opened and was left unbarred that there would be no end of the demands which would come from the various provinces, and it adapted this exceptional mode of declaring that the provinces should not look towards Ottawa furthermore and should be satisfied with what had been agreed between them. We have to-day a Bill presented to us which simply asks to alter these conditions without any semblance of formality. Without consulting the provinces which entered confederation under certain terms, we are asked to pass a Bill which declares that the subsidies paid to one province shall be increased by $100,000. To me the amount is of no significance. The reasons which actuated this province in asking for this amount. I will not discuss. The reasons which have actuated the House of Commons in acceding to that demand I will not discuss either.

The only point I want to make, is that this legislation is most dangerous and is in violation of the federal pact of 1867, and of 1871 under which Prince Edward Island entered confederation, and that if it is agreed to by this Chamber, it will create a most dangerous precedent. If this demand is granted to-day under the form in which it comes to us, it means that any province will be able to come here, and to exercise all the political influence it can exercise on the federal government to obtain an increase of subsidy. I ask hon. gentlemen, who are within the reach of my voice, where will that lead us to, and where will we stop? To-day Prince Edward Island comes in with its feeble voice and asks for that increase and it is granted. When other provinces with a larger representation in the federal House come and make the demand, what will be the kind of resistance which will be offered, and if we go from the most feeble towards the stronger—and the stronger province to-day, may not be the stronger to-morrow—we will see the government assaulted by a coalition of appetites which will be most disastrous for the federal treasury. It seems if there was a principle which should be adhered to, in the most sacred manner it is that of the maintenance of the conditions of the federal compact to the day when the parties to that compact agree upon the alteration of the same. When they do agree, it is for this parliament to say if the demand is a fair one, but we should maintain this protection at all events, that there will be fair unanimity among the provinces before reopening the door to such demands as were made in 1907, and which were granted. It was agreed that those demands were equitable. The charges on the provincial treasury increased in proportion to the increased population. That increase of population brought wealth to the federal treasury and no corresponding income to the provincial exchequer. The alteration of the basis of the payment of that subsidy from the census of 1861, to the decennial census was a fair one, and this House should adhere to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend say that Prince Edward Island profited in any way by the re-arrangement of subsidies to which he refers?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It did.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have not examined closely into the working of the arrangement of 1907. The only thing I say is, that whatever its diminution in population, it will not receive less than it was receiving then.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Did it not receive $100,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman will compare the old Subsidy Act with the one which now prevails under the arrangement of 1907, he will find Prince Edward Island has benefited, but this is not the question I desire to discuss, and I do not want to discuss the value of the claims of Prince Edward Island. The claims of Prince Edward Island may be just, partially or in toto, but what I complain of is that the federal government in voting $100,000 to Prince Edward Island as an annual increase has not taken the precaution to give the reasons of the increase in a preamble which would have shown that this subsidy was given as a compensatiin of a special claim and was not purely and simply a violation of the pact entered into by Prince Edward Island and the other provinces at the time of confederation nor of the imperial Act sanctioning the agreements.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is it not in direct violation of the imperial Act?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have tried to make clear that the imperial Act which embodied the agreement between the Dominion government and Prince Edward Island is violated by this Act. I am speaking of the imperial Act which sanctioned the entry of Prince Edward Island and which has been modified by the imperial Act of 1907. If Prince Edward Island had just or equitable claims to formulate against the federal government, the federal government could perhaps have come to parliament, and asked that they be settled by an annuity of so much instead of a capital sum to be paid outright to that province. Perhaps by looking closely at the arrangement we could still have found that this was a variation of the terms of the compact. Yet the principle on the face of the Act would at all events here be safeguarded. All that we have before us is a Bill increasing the subsidy to Prince Edward Island. That province may be absolutely entitled to this sum in the settlement of its claims against the Dominion government, but there does not appear on the face of the Act anything to justify this payment, and for this reason I move, seconded by the hon. gentleman for Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr), that this Bill be not now read a third time, for the following reasons:

1. Because the right of the Senate to amend a Bill is not impaired by the proceedings which may have taken place during the progress of the Bill through the Commons.
2. Because the amendments made by the Senate to the third clause of the Bill and accepted by the House of Commons provide that the grant in aid of highways shall be paid to the several provinces of the Dominion, instead of to any province as was provided by the clause in its original form; and the subclause 2, proposed by the Senate, indicates the reasonable principle upon which such payments should be made.
3. Because the method of distribution provided for by the fourth amendment is that announced by members of the administration in the Senate and House of Commons as contemplated and has been actually adopted in the supplementary estimates for the ensuing year.
4. Because the Bill undertakes to make certain perminent provisions as to the aid to be given to the construction and improvement of highways in the several provinces; and it is only that the principle of equal distribution in proportion to population recognized by the present administration should be permanently secured by enactment in the Bill, as otherwise, if this principle were abandoned, in future the Senate would have no other recourse than to reject the Supply Bill.
5. Because, if the principle upon which the apportionment of such grant is to be made is fixed by a permanent exactment, the task of deciding upon the items to be inserted in the Supply Bill will be simplified; and
6. Because the Administration of the day, by adopting the principle of the said fourth amendment for the ensuing fiscal year, have indicated that it is neither unnecessary nor undesirable.

That the Senate adheres to its seventh amendment, for the following, among other reasons:

1. Because section 6 of the Bill empowers the Minister to undertake the construction or improvement of highways in any province, which would be a contravention of the letter and spirit of The British North America Act, 1867, and of the uniform practice under that Act, for which contravention no sufficient cause has been shown.

2. Because the said amendment affirms in effect that it is undesirable that the Minister or the Dominion Government should usurp the rights and functions of the provincial administrations in the building and maintenance of highways and bridges.

3. Because the said amendment will not unduly hamper the administration in carrying out its policy and in applying the funds placed in the estimates for that object; sufficient provision being made in earlier clauses of the Bill for co-operation between the federal and provincial governments.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—Is the hon. gentleman aware that on two former occasions we made annual grants; in 1887, some $20,000 was added and in 1901 the sum of $30,000 was added to the annual grant. So that we have violated the Act on two occasions before.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This is before the special Act of 1907.

Hon. Sir RICHARD SCOTT—But this declaration was just as solemn as the other.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—One of these grants, to my certain knowledge, was given in consideration of certain claims for services.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think it exceedingly unfortunate that the government should have permitted themselves to be coaxed into bringing in a Bill of this kind. As I said when the Bill was introduced, before that island could claim any consideration at the hands of the federal government they should be in a position to show that, per capita, they pay as much taxes into their treasury as is paid by the people of other provinces. Until that is shown, and they are found face to face with a provincial deficit, then, and not till then, they should be granted relief. In Prince Edward Island they have prohibition; who is paying the cost of prohibition? They collect no money from licenses, yet I understand that whiskey is free in the province and that there is more of it now than there ever was before. Should the other provinces be called upon to make up any loss that Prince Edward Island has sustained by adopting prohibition, cutting off hotel licenses and all revenue formerly derived from the liquor traffic? Are the other provinces to make up what Prince Edward Island should collect from property-owners in the way of municipal taxes and income taxes? Are the people of Prince Edward Island leaving the whole burden, even to the payment of their school teachers, improvement of their roads, the building of their bridges and everything else, to be borne by the provincial treasury? Are the people who have the advantage of those local works to have them paid for by the provincial treasury, when in other provinces they are paid by the municipality? I do not know whether the people of Prince Edward Island do statute labour, my impression is they do not. They appear to be free niggers from top to bottom—no statute labour, no school fax, no municipal tax, no revenue from hotel licenses—all these are cut out and the burden is borne by the other provinces. Yet in the face of that, to make up what these things would produce in the way of revenue, they come to the federal treasury and ask for an increased subsidy. I look upon it as the most unfortunate Bill introduced in this House this session, and I entirely agree with the remark that it is opening the door, in violation of the compact entered into at confederation, and still further pointing out the method by which other provinces may make similar demands.

What would you say to a province that comes now and asks an increase? Will you be able to reply that they should pay into their own provincial treasury by taxation more than they are paying? If you do, their answer will be: 'You did not talk to Prince Edward Island in that way, you did not measure the justness of their claim by taxation per capita. Why do you raise it in our case'? You are doing something by this Act that will place other provinces in the position of being able to come along and say to whatever government is in power 'We want an increased subsidy.' They will ask for increased subsidies year after year so long as there is abundance in the federal treasury. Why did Prince Edward Island come this year? Because they know there is a large surplus and they say to themselves: 'Now is the time to apply.' I contend that it is entirely wrong that these people should be given $100,000 a year more, unless they first show to this House and to the country that individually they are contributing as much in the way of taxation as the residents of other provinces, and they should show that they impose taxes for the purpose of providing funds for meeting the demands of their provincial treasury. Do they impose taxes in accordance with the methods adopted by Ontario and Quebec? If they do not they should begin and do so and they should collect from their own people, not until then have they any grounds whatever to come to this parliament and ask that their subsidy should be increased.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Some four weeks ago I ventured a remark that did not meet with the approval of the government nor, also of some of my friends on this side of the House. I openly charged the government with bringing down only measures that had a partisan aspect and political effect. The remark was made in reference to the Tariff Commission's Bill which, to my mind, is concocted and calculated to hamper the growth of any idea in favour of a reduced tariff. Then they brought down the Highway Bill which has nothing to do with federal matters and does not come under federal jurisdiction. That was another Bill concocted and calculated to build up a Tory fund that would simply crush the Liberal party four years from now. Just imagine a million dollars being placed in the hands of Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Rogers. I can see a sweep against the Liberal party, something the same as we had in British Columbia the day before yesterday, where the government are voting $12,000 a mile on a subsidy to a provincial road, which is another means of purchasing the provinces wholesale. The Manitoba Bill was a piece of legislation which was a direct snub to Saskatchewan. And she was refused a hearing in the conference simply because it is a Liberal province. Now what do we find with reference to Quebec? We find a clause put in the Bill that we were fighting to have put in the Manitoba-Keewatin Bill to protect the rights of the people of Keewatin. They have put in the Ungava Quebec Bill a clause to protect the interests of the squaws, papooses and indians and they are forcing Quebec to look after them. That is simply a knock at Quebec because it is Liberal. This government has been too busy to give Saskatchewan a hearing, they have been too busy to formulate a policy with regard to imperial preference; they have been too busy to formulate any policy with regard to the navy, and yet they have found time, in the small hours of the session, to bring down measures that have no federal aspect whatever. Money is being thrown out of the federal treasury into the hands of the provinces in order to retain votes. The constitutional aspect of the question has been ably dealt with by the hon. senator from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand). Apart from that I say it is a direct purchase of the province of Prince Edward Island. The hon. senator from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen), has made it clear that that money is not needed in Prince Edward Island. I understand that if they even put down a plank in Prince Edward Island it is charged up to the provincial government. The taxes levied on property down there do not amount to anything. They get more than the other provinces in the initial subsidy, and now this government propose to give them an extra $100,000 without any reason or excuse except the one that was given yesterday by the leader of the government, that it was to enable them to maintain their paupers. He stated that the cost of maintaining the paupers was $50,000. The right hon. leader of the opposition shows a very marked discrepency in the figures given by the leader of the House in his statement. According to his figures the expenditure for paupers is merely two or three thousand dollars. As far as I know there are no paupers on the island; there may be a few aged and infirm, but their keep should not be charged up to the federal government. The prosperity of the people of Prince Edward Island is one of the most remarkable things in the Dominion. Fifteen or sixteen years ago they were as poor as church mice, their farms were mortgaged as every registry office down there will show. There was very little money in the banks, and very few banks on the island. A change came over the situation there, as well as elsewhere. Owing to the influence of the Agriculture Department at Ottawa the farmers changed their system; they did not grow so many potatoes but went into dairying, with the results that the butter and cheese that is shipped from Prince Edward Island to the English market is beating the famous Danish butter and cheese on the English market.

That is the record that the farmers of Prince Edward Island have secured of themselves during the past ten or twelve years —they make the best butter and cheese in the world. The result is that banks by the dozen have established on the island, at places where there have been none, or very few, before. I have these facts from the manager of one of the leading banks in Charlottetown. He says it is amazing the amount of money deposited in the banks, and that instead of the farmers of the island being mortgaged up to the handle, all their debts have been cleared off and they are storing away their money. That is the fact and it is to their credit, but it is not creditable to the Dominion government to make paupers out of them when the contrary is the fact. That being the case, I am prepared, with the hon. member from De Lorimier, to vote for the six months hoist of this Bill, and I would have voted the same way in the case of nearly all the other measures devoting money to the provinces. If it was to be spent by the provinces I would not consider it so objectionable, but it is to remain in the hands of the federal government. In the case of some members of that government it would be suicidal to do that, and the people would not thank us for our liberality. The Liberals of the country are looking to the Senate to support their principles. I charged the government openly here with introducing all this legislation in the last hours of the session for political and partisan purposes, squandering the immense surplus gathered by the Liberal administration for their own ends as well as for the benefit of the public. I shall vote for the amendment in order to give the government time and opportunity to bring in legislation along federal lines.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was rejected by the following vote:

Contents—12; Non-contents—16.

The SPEAKER—The question is now on the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—I should like to know why the hon. member from Wellington has not voted?

The SPEAKER—It is too late, the question of the third reading has been put.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was paired with the Hon. Dr. McMillan, of Glengarry.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I think his honour the Speaker might have allowed my hon. friend to state that he was paired, as has been done dozens of times.

The SPEAKER—It was not the right time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I repeat that no sort of satisfactory explanation has been offered as yet by any hon. gentleman in the slightest degree justifying the passing of this measure. No attempt has been made whatever to answer either the argument of my hon. friend that this is a gross and direct violation of that imperial statute, or my own argument that you are opening the door to an enormous number of other demands, which may involve an addition to the total expenditure of Canada of $7,000,000 a year making an addition to our annual charges very nearly equal to our present capital debt. You are doing that in gross and direct violation of the federal compact. You are justifying everything that has been said from one end of the Northwest to the other as to the gross injustice which is being perpetrated on those provinces by compelling them to pay a most inordinate amount of taxation into the federal treasury and using that money for purposes which it was never intended to be used for. The excuses given by the hon. leader of the government and the hon. gentleman from St. John are the strongest condemnation of this measure which could be brought forward, when we are told that the people in other provinces are to pay for the paupers of Prince Edward Island and for the education of the children of Prince Edward Island. When those are the reasons brought forward, I say that this House and the country are disgraced by their deliberate and wanton violation of every agreement that they have entered into.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There is probably some excuse for some hon. gentlemen who voted against the amendment to-day, because the presnt government have evidently adopted a new principle in legislation; that is, without sticking to the constitution at all, a number of gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches—and it is somewhat new to them—found about $40,000,000 which they had to get rid of; they proceeded to divide it up, and I suppose that some of the hon. members who voted the $100,000 for Prince Edward Island have come to the conclusion that they, along with the other provinces, are entitled to their share, and their share is $100,000 added to the subsidy. We passed a Bill to-day which is a direct grant to New Brunswick of $1,600,000. We have had before us last night a direct grant to British Columbia of $6,200,000, to build a provincial railway, of which the federal government have no control. Manitoba, contrary apparently to all precedents, received $2,000,000 during the session, and $2,000,000 is given to Ontario out of the jack-pot of a treasury, ostensibly for the consideration of them having built a railroad some years ago, whch is one of the most profitable assets Ontario possesses. The railway is now in operation, opens up a rich portion of the country, and I understand the profits of that road are about 20 per cent. The excuse is made that because they did not get a subsidy when the road was built, it being a provincial road, and not being accustomed to granting provincial roads a subsidy, the Dominion gives them $2,000,000. We have all those items, and there is one peculiarity about all the matters in connection with the dealing out of the surplus in the overflowing treasury, that the provinces who received this aid happened all to have Conservative governments at the present time. Not one dollar which directly benefits the provinces, is voted to Alberta, Saskatchewan, Quebec or Nova Scotia. I admit that aid has been given to railways in all the provinces, but the other items for British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, all go to directly relieve the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—What has New Brunswick got?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We voted $1.600,000 to a provincial railwav in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—We have not got it yet.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The only excuse was that the provincial government had guaranteed that road to the extent of $25.000 a mile, and this money would relieve the expenditure of the province to that extent. That is the only reason advanced why we should give that sum, and apparently my hon. friend from New Brunswick, is not grateful for it It is a provincial charter, and we passed the measure only about an hour ago, and yet my hon. friend asks what does New Brunswick get? We have just been discussing it, and the only reason advanced was the fact that it assisted to relieve the obligation of the province of New Brunswick, to the extent of that grant. I think probably there is a justification for some gentleman who saw fit to vote Prince Edward Island $100,000. They thought it was only their share. The island sent three member to the House of Commons, and only one happens to be on the Liberal side. There is no question that this resolution has been voted down in mistake, because if we are going to have the treasury of the federal government depleted by the different methods, which have been adopted during this session, of bringing down legislation that is introduced into the House of Commons, by resolution, and properly so, and properly by Mr. Speaker ruled out of order, because it was a money Bill, this Senate is absolutely powerless to deal with the matter. I thought it well to call the attention of the House and the country to the method these gentlemen have adopted for the purpose of getting rid of the overflowing of the treasury.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (185), An Act to authorize the sale to the province of Manitoba of certain Ordnance Lands in the city of Winnipeg.—Hon Mr. Lougheed.

Bill (137), An Act to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act, 1908.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

THE FENIAN RAID VOLUNTEER BOUNTY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (No. 172) An Act to authorize a bounty to volunteers who served the Crown during the Fenian Raid.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When this measure was before the House at a previous stage the hon. leader of the government intimated that he would make some little inquiry as to points raised then.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am unaware of that, because my hon. friend suggested such a very difficult problem to adjust, namely, to draw a distinction between those called out who did not go into active service, and those called out who did go into active service. I know the action of the government is based on this, that having placed themselves in an attitude of willingness to serve their country, and having been called out, they are quite as entitled to recognition as those who went into active service.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All those who were ordered out, whether they went to the front or not, received medals.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That ought to have been enough. They got the honour, they should not ask for the pay.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not discussing that point.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie said that Nova Scotia has not got anything in the division of spoils up to the present time. Nova Scotia will get a rather larger share of this particular distribution than any other province.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I understand that the whole male population of Nova Scotia was called out, are all the survivors to get $100 each ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think so.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I should like to know. My hon. friend beside me pointed out with great force that, as I understood him, all the male population between the ages of sixteen and forty-five were notified, and did, hold themselves in readiness. They are not all alive now, I suppose, but are all the survivors to receive $100 each ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—From the best sources of information that the Militia Department could get, they concluded that the maximum number would be 10,000 throughout the whole of the provinces.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But what about the case of Nova Scotia ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think that the Nova Scotians rose en masse as my hon. friend pointed out yesterday.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They held themselves in readiness.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course the Bill confines it strictly to those enrolled in the militia at the time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—No scramble for a million dollars was ever conducted with so little regard for rule and order as this scramble.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The militia orders, I presume, have been preserved and it is ascertainable who were on the roll and who the survivors are at the present time—that is, the survivors of those who responded to the call in 1866 and 1870

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —My hon. friend in his remarks did not exactly meet the question which was put. We were agreed that we would raise no objection to the case of gentlemen who, like the hon. member from Hastings, had been actually called out and served, but men who were simply warned to hold themselves in readiness and never left their homes or lost a day's work, to pay them $100 is a very questionable proceeding indeed, and the government ought to be in a position to tell us, because a million dollars is involved in this matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think that class of person would come within the meaning of the Act. It simply provides for those who were regularly enrolled, or enlisted in and served, with any militia corps called out for active service.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I would like to know exactly what these words mean. If by called out he means they were actually under canvas or actually held in their own place doing duty, that would be sufficient. But called out in a good many cases would simply mean that they were notified to hold themselves in readiness.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Where would you draw the line in distinction?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I would draw the line here I think wherever a regiment or company had been absolutely or actually put under marching orders in terms, even if they did not go to the front, I am willing to recognize that, and of course a fortiori in the case mentioned by my hon. friend wherever they had left their homes and gone on service in various parts of the country. That is a perfectly legitimate thing to be recognized. I do not know whether the Bill can be amended in this Chamber; if it could I would press my hon. friend to try and make a clear line of deviation between those that might be entitled to the $100 and those who will not be entitled to it. Because if it is undefined, we may have a repetition of what is going on in the United States. Veterans of the war of 1860 and 1865 seem to go on increasing, although we are 50 years past that time. There is another principle there which seems to be a very doubtful one. There are those who have died since 1866, and those who have survived. It seems that the government holds that life is a bad thing, because it gives compensation to those who have continued to live for the past 45 years, and gives nothing to the heirs of those who have died, and this money is not distributed to the widows and children of those who have not the good fortune to live. I would rather have taken care of the widows and children than those who have the advantage, in spite of the fact that for a week or two their ambitions were raised to the point of thinking they would perhaps be called to the front and are now being given $100 after fifty years.

Hon. Mr. POWER. It has occurred to me that it was possible, inasmuch as the language of this Bill leaves the beneficiaries a little doubtful, the department or the government might make regulations under this Bill so as to prevent its provisions from being abused. I think the minister, with the approval of the government, might undertake to define what active service means, and in that way would be able to exclude persons who really have no substantial claim.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would like to say a word for the class of people who probably would not come under this list. I refer to a few people who repelled the Fenian Raid invasion in Manitoba in 1869 and 1870, and I certainly think that these earlier settlers, the pioneers who turned out and put themselves under arms, although they did not belong to any enrolled militia ought certainly to receive as much consideration as the enrolled militia, because the enrolled militia were not in the district, and could not be called out to defend their country. The early settlers in Manitoba who turned out to repel the Fenian invasion should receive some consideration.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—I do not think any difficulty will be experienced as to who are entitled to this $100. There must be in existence, and available, the muster rolls of these corps and companies that were actually called out, and who did active service. From evidence of that kind I have no doubt the government were able to distribute the medals to those who were entitled to them. The people who were entitled to medals, and who are still living I should consider would be the ones entitled to the $100. The language of the Act is clear enough; it speaks of those who were enrolled in a militia corps, and who were called out for active service.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What about the men I have just referred to who took up arms and defended their country when they were not enrolled?

Hon. Mr. DANIELS—They would not come under this Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They should.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—You can take that point up next year.

Hon. Mr. DANIELS—If there is a claim of that kind it would be a good thing to put it in and have it considered. The wording of the Act is plain enough to cover the people who are called out, and who went into active service, even if they did not engage in any active fighting.

The Bill was then read a third time.

THE RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of Bill (183) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the railways and bridges therein mentioned. He said: This is what may be said to be the Railway Subsidies Bill. I find that the total subsidies, if all were earned, and on the basis of $6,400 a mile would be $21,648,000. If only $3,200 a mile be earned it would be half of that, $10,824,000. The Subsidy Bill consists of a re-vote amounting to $11,550,200.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Does the Bill state which are re-votes?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill has been distributed. The new vote represents, if earned, $10,092,800. The re-vote represents 1,803 miles of road. The new vote represents 1,574 miles of road; in all a total of 3,377 miles.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Can you give us the several new votes?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —The new votes are what I want particularly. It is a pity they do not divide these giving the re-votes first and then the new votes by themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would have been very much more desirable. The first twenty votes in the Bill are the re-votes, and the balance are the new votes. The new votes begins at the Fredericton Grand Lake Coal and Railway Company.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Are the rest all new?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the rest are new. The bridges represent $936,000.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Look at No. 28; that is not to exceed 200 miles?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This line has been constructed from St. Lévis on the Intercolonial, and is in operation for about 35 miles. The subsidy is for a continuation of the construction from the terminus to the Gaspé Basin; it would serve the interior of the Gaspé peninsula which is at present without railway facilities, and it will open up pulp limits, &c. The estimated cost per mile is $23,564. It is also regarded as a feeder to the Intercolonial railway, and will help the freight tonnage of that road.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —We have had applications for a line there before, a good many times, but nothing has come of them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Thirty-five miles is in operation. The road is under construction; the object is to assist the construction to the terminus at Gaspé Basin.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I see another very large grant in No. 31 for 300 miles from some unknown point, mile 837 west of Moncton.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is from a point at or near mile 837 west of Moncton in a northerly and north-westerly direction to a point at or near the mouth of the Nottaway river on James bay. In the revote there is an item covering the line from Montreal to the National Transcontinental railway. The estimated cost per mile is $40,000.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —There is not a single solitary mile of it built.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—And will not be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If that be the case we shall not have to pay the subsidy.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If my hon. friend will look at the map he will see that possibly there will be within the next ten years more than one railway reaching Hudson bay from the west.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is this not the line the Quebec government strongly recommended for assistance?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But the point I want to make is that we have been slow in realizing the role Hudson bay would play in the future. The mouth of the Nottaway river is 150 miles south of the latitude on which Edmonton is situated. I understand that the land can produce good wheat as far north of Edmonton as 150 or 200 miles. If there is a belt of land 300 miles wide running from the foot of the Rocky mountains which is tributary to Hudson bay, and if it be true that Hudson bay is navigable during as many months as is Lake Superior, then the route to Hudson bay, by rail from Edmonton and by water to the Nottaway river and by rail to Quebec will be shorter by five hundred miles than the southern route via Port Arthur.

The men of my generation may see Hudson bay playing in the north the role which Lake Superior plays to the south and giving the west a much shorter route to Europe. I am not a pessimist as to the value of our northern land, new Ontario and new Quebec. I think that within the next decade or two we will find we have a very valuable hinterland which is worth a great deal to this country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has the Quebec legislature not guaranteed the bonds of this company in addition? I understand so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Or they have given them substantial aid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—All I know is that at the opening of the House some months ago the Prime Minister declared that in view of the annexation of Ungava he would hurry up the construction of a route to Nottaway river, although he was strongly of the opinion that that road should be built as a part of a National Transcontinental railway system by the federal government. He stated also that if the federal government did not choose to build that link from Nottaway river to the National Transcontinental railway the province of Quebec would make the necessary sacrifices to secure that railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did he go further? Did he not declare it to be the policy of the Quebec government, foreshadowing an easier and a shorter route to get to navigable waters?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes, I think that was the view taken by the Quebec government, that that link was a more important one, and that although grain could be shipped by Hudson straits for a couple of months of the year, probably most of the grain would find an outlet by way of the Nottaway river to Quebec.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think that a great deal of grain will go by that particular route for some considerable time. In the first place, the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) makes a comparison between Edmonton and the mouth of the Nottaway river. The hon. gentleman must know how utterly different the climates of places in the same latitude are a thousand miles west of Hudson bay and those east of Hudson bay. One might go almost to the mouth of the McKenzie river, far north of the Arctic circle, before he would get the same climatic conditions that exist on the western shore of Ungava. Then, speaking to gentlemen who know something about the character of James bay, I get the impression that the mouth of the Nottaway river is not a point which is adapted to be the terminus of a railway, that you have to go further north than that to the mouth of what they call Ruperts river, the present boundary of Ungava, before you get water deep enough for the navigation of big steamers. Then the hon. gentleman takes the ground that the wheat will go from the west to Nelson or Churchill and that the cars will be ferried——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Not the cars;. the wheat will be transhipped.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am very glad to find that that is what the hon. gentleman means. It means that grain on its way from Nelson to Quebec must be transshipped twice.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Just as it is at Fort William and Georgian bay ports.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I said before, I do not anticipate any large business going that way, but I would direct the attention of the hon. gentleman and of the House to the fact that within the last few weeks the people of the west, on whose account this Hudson Bay railway is about being built, are beginning to think that there is not so much in the project after all; it is a pity, perhaps, that they had not thought a little in advance. It is the old story, look before you leap, and it seems to me the people of the west, at any rate, have not looked into the Hudson Bay railway scheme sufficiently before pushing the government into its construction. I am not criticising the action of the government. This government and the former government were practically pushed into this scheme; I think the whole thing is a mistake, and, as I say, in the west they are beginning to realize now that the Hudson Bay railway will not be the panacea for their ills that they thought it would.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken with regard to the estimates in which the people of the Northwest hold the construction of the Hudson Bay railway.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot speak for the whole of them; I can speak for some of them.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman can speak for the small minority, because it has been demonstrated that the Hudson Bay railway ought to be a short and cheap route for the transportation of the products of the Northwest to England.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—How?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—By rail and water.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—In what kind of vessels?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Steam vessels.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Passenger vessels?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am talking of freight.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—There is a very great misconception as to the carrying of grain across the ocean. Grain does not go across the ocean in cargo lots, but goes by passenger vessels, and it goes the same way from the United States. Not a cargo goes across in bulk in three years, and can it be expected that the passenger service is going to be transferred to Hudson bay?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We are not interested so much in the passenger as in the freight service.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The wheat of the Northwest cannot be carried across the ocean by a freight service. That wheat goes now as ballast at a very low rate of freight. This country cannot afford to ship grain across the ocean in cargo lots.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is claimed by those who have made a study of the question that wheat can be carried cheaper by the Hudson Bay route than by the long rail haul to Atlantic ports. By the Hudson Bay route the rail haul from the wheat fields of the Northwest would not average more than 600 miles against 1,800 miles to Atlantic ports. Independent entirely of the advantage that may be gained by the construction of that road in connection with navigation—because that is somewhat problematical—the government are justified in building the railway to Hudson bay to open up that territory.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—That is another question.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, but the subject under consideration is the building of the Hudson Bay railway. I say that, independent entirely of any trade that may go by the Hudson Bay route, the government are justified in opening up that immense territory. We had a committee of this House, some two or three years ago, looking into this subject, and I think the evidence they adduced went to show that the territory lying north of Manitoba and east of Hudson bay is capable of maintaining a very large population. There is land suitable for grain growing and stock raising. In addition to that, from the experience in other parts of Canada of opening up new territory, particularly the territory opened up by the Ontario government, we have reason to believe that valuable minerals may be discovered on account of building the railway. If the Ontario government had not built the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, Cobalt would not be known to-day, because the geologists said that silver could not be there, and if it should be found it should not be there. The result of the construction of that railway is that hundreds of millions in wealth have been taken from that country since the building of the railway.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Wealth which should not have been there.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—But it was there. I have no doubt that great mineral wealth will be discovered in the country north of Manitoba. I believe that the mineral belt in which Cobalt is extends in a north-westerly direction and in fact it has been traced to Split lake. The late government were perfectly justified in undertaking the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. The Hudson Bay route has been a very live matter in Manitoba for the last thirty years, and the Manitoba people were very much pleased when the late government decided to undertake the construction of that railway. I may say they were very much disappointed when the present government stopped the construction of it for a few months and glad when they finally came to the conclusion that they had better proceed with the construction. Independent of the doubt that may be entertained by some hon. gentlemen with regard to the possibilities of navigating Hudson bay, the government of the country are justified in opening up the Hudson Bay route.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It may be quite possible that between some point in the Northwest and Hudson bay there is a territory which justifies the construction of a railway. If such is the case I, for one, would find no fault with the project, but in so far as our transportation is concerned it is a very serious matter for this country in view of the fact that we have one transcontinental railway in existence and two others approaching completion, and when they are completed they will carry, without difficulty, a far greater amount of grain than will find a market in Great Britain for all time to come. There is no question at all about that. I have some little knowledge of the subject from having examined the situation on my own account and I know that the northern country between the height of land and James bay is valueless for any purpose whatever, agriculture or anything else. When you get east of Lake Abitibi the country is absolutely valueless except a small portion in the province of Quebec. Coming again to the Hudson Bay route and another projected waterway, the Georgian Bay canal, I am in a position to know something of both, and I say without hesitation that if ever there were two unjustifiable schemes thought of in the best interests of Canada, it is the opening up of navigation by Hudson straits and the use of the Georgian Bay canal if it is ever constructed. Absolutely, if the canal is ever constructed it will not be used, and if it did not take up too much of the time of this House I should show the reasons why it never will be used for the purpose it is intended for. I have been asked on many occasions to support that scheme in parliament and have always refused to do so, because I am intimately acquainted with the situation and know that hon. gentlemen who have been supporting the scheme have been talking visionary nonsense. The construction of that canal will never receive any support from me. If we are to have a waterway to the seaboard, let us take the natural route—the St. Lawrence route. Measured by miles the Georgian Bay route is shorter, but in every other respect the St. Lawrence is the better route. So far as the navigation of Hudson bay is concerned, specially constructed ships would be required. The ordinary ship will never enter Hudson bay. There would be no use for such a ship except during the short period of open navigation, and ships suitable for the navigation of Hudson straits would be useless anywhere else. I have it from the men who are engaged in shipping grain that the grain of this country crosses the ocean in passenger vessels; it does not cross in cargo lots, and can it be expected for one moment that the passenger service across the ocean is to be transferred to Hudson bay? Under any circumstances it is a very doubtful scheme, and one to which this country should not be committed without thorough investigation. We have had a large expenditure of money for some years in Canada. Many of our people think it is a blessing; in so far as the expenditure is justified and useful to the country, it is, but there is another side to it. It brings about unnatural conditions in the country, and the large expenditure is more or less responsible for the high cost of living in Canada to-day. Our expenditure up to the present time, has been too large for Canada, and if the present government are seeking to continue the same condition of things I would ask them to halt and examine the situation and see if it is a safe thing to do in the interest of Canada. I do not think this country should commit itself in the present condition of things to any large expenditure until the works at present under construction, are completed. When that large expenditure ceases, it will bring about a more moderate condition of things in the country, but if this large expenditure goes on, as has been the case for some years past, I for one, do not know where this country will be landed so far as financial conditions are concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am quite sure that the leader of the House has not read this Bill, nor some of his colleagues in the cabinet, because I see a reference to three railways which run towards the International boundary. I refer to items 21, 34 and 42. I thought that after the 1st September we would see to it that we build no railways north and south, and that railway construction would proceed only east and west. I will refer to No. 17 letter B. I think that is a re-vote.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Well, let her be.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is 34 and 42 that would require, perhaps, some considerable explanation, because they are not revotes. I do not object to these roads being built.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Of course we had the approval of my hon. friend in view when we arranged the subsidies.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time, and passed.

CENSUS AND MOVEMENT OF POPULATION OF CANADA.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adoption of the second report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to consider the unsatisfactory character of the movement of population, especially in the older provinces of the Dominion, &c.

He said: There was no difference of opinion in the committee. We heard a considerable amount of evidence which was interesting and instructive, but we did not go far enough to be in a position to draw any conclusion, and we recommend that this committee, or a like committee, be appointed next session, and that meanwhile 2,000 copies of the report and evidence be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY BELT WATER BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (149) An Act respecting the Water in the Railway Belt and Peace River Block of Land.

He said: This is a Bill which has in view the administration of the water-rights within the Railway Belt in British Columbia. The province of British Columbia administers, under what is known as the Water Act of 1909, the water-rights of that province. These water-rights dealt with in the Bill are vested in the federal government, by reason of the Railway Belt being vested in the Crown, as represented by this government, and it is unsatisfactory that there should be two distinct governments administering these very valuable rights of the public domain, namely water, in the province of British Columbia where one set of machinery could do it so satisfactorily. It is, therefore, proposed to hand over to the province of British Columbia those water-rights for their administration. If there be any profit above cost in it, or any revenue above cost, that advantage would innure to the benefit of the federal government. The government also reserves to itself the right at any time to intervene, so that there can be no misuse made of vesting those rights in the province. Due protection has been made under section 3 of the Bill for any vested or existing rights.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I do not propose to object to the principle of the Bill, but of course this question has been a very burning one in British Columbia on account of the seriousness of the water question in a country where the whole of the farmers' existence practically depends on whether he can or can not get water. Owing to the decision of the Privy Council two years ago it was decided that these water-rights were in the Crown in the right of the Dominion, instead of in the Crown in the right of the province, as had been presumed up to that time. The situation has been a very awkward one, in consequence, because none of the people who held water-rights knew exactly where they stood. The question was attempted to be dealt with last session and the session previous by the late government, but unfortunately they did not succeed in getting their Bill through the House. There is one point that I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. leader of the House. First of all in regard to this question of the protection of rights already existing. It does not seem to me that is made very clear. Clause 3 of the Bill says:

> The property in and right to the use of all the water at any time in any watercourse within the Railway Belt shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be vested in the Crown, unless and until and except only so far as some right therein or in the use thereof inconsistent with the right of the Crown, and which is not a public right or a right common to the public, is established:

In an important matter like this I think it is necessary that the matter should be defined, therefore, I propose to take that up when we go into committee. There is also another matter that I would like to bring to the attention of the House; the late government, and I understand the present government are continuing the policy of surveying these creeks. A staff of hydrographic engineers were put in the field last year at considerable expense to the government and did exceedingly good work. I would like to have that work continued, as it is most important. Before you can really deal with this question you must know how much water there is in the creeks. The provincial government never undertook this work until a year ago, and as far as I know their work has not been satisfactory. I understand the Dominion government at the present time is carrying on a survey of the water-ways in the four western provinces, and in the Railway Belt in British Columbia. I would suggest that that should be continued, because I think it would be much more satisfactory to have it done that way and not to drop the work in the Railway Belt in British Columbia. I hope this Bill will settle this matter and make the conditions much better than they are.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the objection my hon. friend has to clause 3?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I do not think it is definite with regards to the words 'is established.' Apparently that part of the clause is supposed to deal with the question of existing rights, There is nothing to say what the words 'is established' mean. I propose to move an amendment to that clause when we go into committee, and I will hand that clause to my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand this clause 3 was largely modeled at the instance of the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in the other House.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I did not know that anybody in the other House knew anything about the local conditions as they exist in the Railway Belt.

The Bill was then read a second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There are two or three things in this Bill which require some consideration. There is also the message that has been returned to us from the House of Commons. We have allowed my hon. friend to get through a number of questionable measures.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can understand the sense of guilt which my hon. friend feels.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not want to burden my soul with more guilt before I get absolution from some competent authority to-morrow. I think we had better arrange to have some time to consider all these matters, and leave over some of the Bills until Monday morning. There is the Bill respecting the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway which requires some consideration, and then there is a message from the other House about the Tariff Commission, and that requires some consideration. These are the only two I am concerned in. I do not know what other matters my hon. friend will bring forward.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think anything else we have will be perfectly harmless

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Anything under a million I suppose you would call harmless.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware of any other grants. I should be very glad that the measures my right hon. friend has mentioned should stand over until Monday morning. I am informed that they are practically through in the House of Commons, and that prorogation will take place on Monday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I propose moving an amendment to clause 3. The province of British Columbia passed a Bill at the last session of the legislature which amended that Act. I suppose that can be considered.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Governor in Council reserves the right to approve of or reject any amendment.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS, from the committee, reported that the committee had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again on Monday.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAY SUBSIDY BILL.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We have practically concluded everything of consequence with the exception of the two Bills referred to by my hon. friend. The last order for the day is a Bill to aid the construction of the Canadian Northern Alberta railway.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This is a guarantee of the principal and interest on the bonds of that road, and it states that the road may run fifty miles west of the British Columbia boundary. We passed a subsidy yesterday giving $12,000 a mile, and British Columbia has also guaranteed interest on the bonds on that same road.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There must be some mistake about that. This Act guarantees the bonds of this company from a point 150 miles westerly from St. Albert for a distance not exceeding 115 miles in the Yellowhead Pass. As I understand, it does not go into the province of British Columbia. It simply goes to the boundary line between British Columbia and Alberta.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Bill (189) An Act to aid the construction of the Canadian Northern Alberta railway.

The Senate adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE.

MONDAY, April 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and Routine Proceedings.

COMPENSATION TO SEALERS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD inquired:

If the question of compensation to sealers who are, or may be debarred from prosecuting the sealing industry, has been settled? If so, when will the interested parties be paid?
Will sealing under the modus vivendi be permitted this year in the Pacific?
Will there be any new sealing regulations this year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The answers are as follow:

1. As the advance payment of $200,000 by the United States, contemplated by Article XI of the Pelagic Sealing Treaty of the 7th July last, has not yet been received, the government has not considered the question of compensation.

2. There is no modus vivendi for this year. Sealing in the area covered by the treaty will be allowed as provided for by it.

3. Answered by No. 2.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK.

MANITOBA BOUNDARIES BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT inquired:

Has the government or any member thereof received any communication, verbal or in writing, from any religious body, or from heads of any religious body collectively or individually, praying that the Manitoba Boundary Bill be not passed this session? And if any such communication has been so received, when and from whom, and will the government produce such communication or communications?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No communication has yet been received by the Premier's office or the office of the Secretary of State, and no answer as yet received from the other departments.

I would point out that if any such communication were had it would be had through the Prime Minister's office, or the office of the Secretary of State.

INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (78) An Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of the Bill.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If there is anything of importance in this Bill I shall object to its passing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think I may safely say there is not. When we go into committee there are some minor changes to be made in it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Would the hon. gentleman state what the changes are.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The law clerk is preparing them now.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is strange, moving the second reading now when the hon. gentleman does not know what the Bill contains or what amendments are to be made to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there is anything objectionable in the Bill when we go into the details it can be discussed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —If there is anything objectionable it must stand over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It must stand over; but from a perusal of the Bill, so far as I can see, it is simply a matter of departmental machinery.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It may be of no consequence, but it is not proper to bring forward such a Bill on the morning of the day we prorogue. We will consider it, of course, when it comes before us.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SALARIES OF SENATE OFFICIALS.

The SPEAKER presented a report and recommendation with reference to increase of salaries of officers of the Senate:

The undersigned has the honour to represent that when the organization and classification of the staff of the Senate took place under chapter 15 of the Statutes of 1908.

1. The chief French translator who, in the House of Commons, in first division, subdivision 'A' and who is now in first division, subdivision 'B,' was through misapprehension placed in a class which is not the one assigned to similar officers in the House of Commons.

2. That the clerk of routine and proceedings and the clerk of stationery who, in the House of Commons is placed in the first division, subdivision 'A,' and who is now in first division, subdivision 'B' was, through misapprehension placed in a class which is not the one assigned to similar officers in the House of Commons.

3. That the three French translators were placed in the second division, subdivision 'A,' and were through misapprehension, placed in a class which is not the one assigned to similar officers in the House of Commons.

4. That the clerk in the Law Department and stenographer was placed in the second division, subdivision 'B' and was, through misapprehension, placed in a class which is not the one assigned to similar officers in the House of Commons.

5. That the postmaster was placed in the second division, subdivision 'B' and was, through misapprehension, placed in a class which is not the one assigned to similar officers in the House of Commons.

The undersigned is of the opinion that those officers properly belong:—

1. The chief translator (J. Bouthillier Trudel) to first division, subdivision 'A.'

2. The clerk of routine and proceedings and clerk of stationery (J. C. Young) to first division, subdivision 'A.'

3. The three French translators, J. Bouchard, W. Chapman and L. DeMontigny, to first division, subdivision 'B.'

4. The clerk of the Law Department and stenographer (Arthur Hinds), and the postmaster (J. Choquette) to second division, subdivision 'A.'

He, therefore, recommends that they be so classified in the future and that the organization and classification of the staff of the Senate be corrected accordingly.

(Signed) P. LANDRY,
Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that this recommendation be considered at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There probably will not be very much chance to discuss this matter at the next sitting of the House, and I think that it is just as well something should be said about it now. I do not raise any question as to the presentation of this proposed change in the classification of our officers, but I wish to call attention to the fact that this memorandum proposes a very considerable increase in the salaries of the officers of this House, and being presented at this stage of the session, it gives the Senate no chance to consider the merits and claims of these several officers. The right course to pursue with respect to this recommendation would be to send it to the committee on Internal Economy, so that each case might be considered on its merits. I am a little surprised at the sweeping character of the recommendation, because we have already before the House two memoranda from the Clerk, one of which provides for an increase to the salary of the stenographer and assistant to the law clerk, who is a most deserving officer, and I supposed that that would be pretty nearly all. I had heard of one other increase which I thought was not unreasonable, but this is really a wholesale increase of salaries of gentlemen, some of whom I respectfully submit are being now paid quite as much as their services are worth, and a great deal more than they would be paid in any other employment. I make this statement because I propose, if I am alive at the next sitting of this House, to oppose this.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is a principle as old as christianity, and that is that charity begins at home. The hon. gentleman has been a consenting party to extravagant expenditures of this government on behalf of certain provinces in other works. This is picayune business. The Senate is recommending a small increase to the officers of the staff. Let us protect our own rights. We are protecting Prince Edward Island and giving that province an extra $100,000; we are giving McBride $6,000,000 for one of his roads, Ontario $2,000,000 and Manitoba another $1,000,000. Why should a hon. member rise at the last moment and object to the citizens of Ottawa, who are undergoing the expense of high living, a few paltry dollars. I think this is a small business, especially in view of the fact that we are giving away millions, and that we have a surplus of $39,000,000. Why does not the hon. gentleman protest against the extravagant expenditure of millions instead of the few paltry dollars given to officers whose families need it. I thoroughly disagree with the hon. gentleman on this question.

The motion was agreed to.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I do not think the Senate is properly treated in having the desks of those of us who take some interest in the affairs of this body removed when we are going to have considerable debate. I can carry things in my head as well as most men, but I do not choose always to go into discussions of matters which may involve serious questions without having some papers to refer to, and one of two things ought to have been done: Prorogation should have been postponed until these matters could have been disposed of decently and in order, or we should have been left in possession of the material which we may require to carry on any discussion. It does not appear to me that the Senate is being treated with proper respect in having our desks removed, particularly the desks of myself and my hon. friend opposite, until the business of this sitting at any rate is disposed of. I do not approve of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I can readily have my right hon. friend's desk brought in, and it can be afterwards removed.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I am not going to be made a single and solitary exception. Having put in a protest I waive my right to have my desk, but I do not think it is respectful to the Senate that these things should be removed. I hope nothing will occur to prevent our passing the Supply Bill this afternoon, though I am not quite sure. I desire to call the attention of my hon. friend to another matter, to which he may or may not be in a position to give an answer, but probably he will be able to furnish an answer at three o'clock. We have passed an Act recently which appears to me to be in direct conflict with an Act of the imperial parliament. Do my hon friend's colleagues propose to get that Act of the imperial parliament removed? Without venturing upon an opinion on the point of law, my impression is very strong that if the Act to which I allude, increasing the subsidy of Prince Edward Island, is brought before the courts in any shape, that the courts would have to decide that, under the imperial Act, which cannot be altered by us, is ultra vires, void and waste paper.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am unaware whether the attention of the government was directed to the point that was taken by my right hon. friend on that subject.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —Can my hon. friend obtain the information by three o'clock ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the legal obstacle which my right hon. friend has pointed out be a valid one, I suppose the parties would have recourse either to the courts or to secure such legislation as has been intimated. So far as the passage of the grant by this parliament is concerned, it stands upon our statute-books. If it can be paid over to Prince Edward Island it will be paid in pursuance of that Act. If the imperial legislation stands in the way of it being paid, it simply remains to be said that something else will have to be done. I presume whatever is done will be done legally. If the Act has the effect my right hon. friend has pointed out, I apprehend there will be no defiance of any imperial legislation such as he has mentioned.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the hon. leader of the government not think that the government of the day is the custodian, not only of Canadian laws but of imperial laws, and that the government of the day should introduce no legislation antagonistic to either Canadian or imperialistic law? He says the attention of the government was not directed to the point. It is not the business of anybody to direct attention to any point; it is up to the government to safeguard these rights and Canadian interests. I think the point raised by the leader of the opposition is well taken, and if this measure were brought into the courts of the country or before the Privy Council, it would be set aside as ultra vires, and as a violation of the imperial Act, and now the leader of the government here says the attention of the government was not directed to it.

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there is nothing before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When anybody else talks there is something before the Chair. I am answering——

The SPEAKER—We have our order paper.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We have our order paper and we have the desks away.

The SPEAKER—Orders of the Day.

ST. JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY SUBSIDY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved:

Third reading (Bill 188), 'An Act to aid the construction of certain bridges on the Saint John and Quebec Railway Company, and to confirm an agreement between the company and the government of Canada and New Brunswick.'

He said: I have made further inquiry as to the reason of the organization of a bridge company for the purpose of carrying out the construction of those two bridges. It was primarily brought about in this way, that owing to the fact of the New Brunswick government guaranteeing the bonds of the road and not feeling themselves able to guarantee the bonds of the bridges, it was felt necessary that there should be a subsidiary company incorporated for the purpose of building the bridges, and that has been accordingly done for the purpose of convenience. My hon. friend can readily appreciate that it can be carried out that way more readily than otherwise.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

STATUTORY INCREASES OF SENATE STAFF.

MOTION.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the letter from the Clerk of the Senate, recommending the annual increase to the members of the staff of the Senate, and the concurrence of His Honour the Speaker therein.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Senate confirm the recommendation of his hon. the Speaker.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This refers simply to the statutory increases?

The SPEAKER—Yes, where the statutory increases are allowed. Those that are up to the mark do not receive any more.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—How many are up to the mark?

The SPEAKER—Take the law clerk, Mr. Creighton, for instance; he receives an increase of only $50. That brings him up to his full salary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not rise to object to the adoption of this motion, but I think in future if the Senate is to have any proper control over its staff, the memoranda of the clerk, endorsed by the Speaker, should be presented at a reasonable time before prorogation, so that the Senate might have an opportunity to consider the cases. There are some items in this list as to which I think there might be differences of opinion, but I do not propose to say anything about them now. If his hon. the Speaker makes a practice of presenting these statements a day or so before prorogation, the Senate practically lose control of their staff. I speak now in order to indicate that in future sessions these classifications and recommendations should come in sufficiently long before prorogation to enable the Senate to deal with them in a satisfactory manner.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—I am but a new member of the Senate, but so far as I have learned as yet, I have come to this conclusion, that if any merchant or manufacturer conducted his business as the business of the Senate is conducted he would soon be in the hands of the Insolvent Court. No business could be run as the Senate is being run, and I do not believe in running the public business in a different way from the way I would manage my own business. A subcommittee should be appointed to investigate this matter and ask parliament next session to remove from under the Civil Service Act altogether the staff of the two Houses. Let us deal with them as a business concern would deal with their employees. Some of the salaries that are paid in connection with the Senate and the House of Commons to officials for doing practically little or nothing, are outrageous. In my employ I can get a first-class book-keeper, who works from seven in the morning till six in the evening for $1,200 a year. I have made it a rule since I started in public life to do for the public as I would do in my own business, and I cannot consent to the way this matter is being dealt with.

The SPEAKER—Those are statutory increases, provided for by law.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Those salaries referred to in the report are statutory increases, but bearing out what the hon. gentleman has just said, we have the increases suggested by your honour to-day, and it is certainly not according to law, placing men higher up than they are.

The SPEAKER—That is not the question before the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know, but—

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to anticipate a debate on another report.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think I am perfectly in order.

The SPEAKER—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have given my ruling and I will not allow him to disregard it unless he appeals to the House. I have ruled that you cannot anticipate a discussion on a subject that has not yet been before the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—On the point of order, I may say this document, to which the hon. member from Portage la Prairie refers, is a document which has been laid on the Table of the House. It is the property of the House.

The SPEAKER—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And it is a matter which is very relevant to the question now before the House.

The SPEAKER—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has a perfect right to——

The SPEAKER—I call the hon. gentleman to order. I have given my decision and he has no right to discuss it unless he appeals from my decision.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Very good; I appeal from the decision of the Speaker. I move that the ruling of the Chair be not sustained.

The Senate divided on the motion, which was adopted: Contents 17, non-contents, 8.

The SPEAKER—The decision is reversed. I will reverse it another time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has no right to say that he will reverse the decision of the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I entirely agree with the sentiment expressed by the hon. member from Leeds (Hon. Mr. Taylor), when he states that the business of the Senate is not done the same as any other business in the country. I have said before and I wish to express it again, that we ought to remove the Senate staff from the Civil Service Act. We have those changes made, and as I have a right now to refer to the changes recommended by the Speaker, I say it is placing the chief translator and three other officials in different classes not provided for in the Civil Service Act. We are placing these gentlemen in a different class altogether, which will entitle them to about $1,000 a year more than they have been receiving. I do think that the Senate would do well at its next session to introduce a Bill to have the staff removed from the Civil Service Act. We can get a better service from our staff when they are absolutely under the control of the Senate. Before the Civil Service Act was passed they did their work fully as well as it has been done since, and any man who was deserving received fair consideration at the hands of the Senate and was paid what he was worth.

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL.

COMMONS MESSAGE CONSIDERED.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the message from the House of Commons disagreeing to the third amendment made by the Senate to (Bill 88), 'An Act to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Senate do not insist upon their amendment to which the Commons object.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I should like to accommodate my hon. friend, but I must differ from him on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I make the motion for the purpose of bringing the matter before the House and having it decided one way or the other? The amendment objected to is the third amendment, and the ground of the objection is because the special inquiry called for is irrelevant for the purpose of the Bill, except in so far as it is already provided for by the other provisions of the Bill, and is unnecessary.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —I may just observe, for my hon. friend's information that these amendments were largely modified in order to meet certain objections made by my hon. friend and one or two of his supporters. The demand was that information as to the amount of money actually expended and other things which certainly do come up in the case of mergers, should be included. Some parts which were contentious and might involve more or less delays were struck out at the Table here. The other is information which is found I think in the census returns, but is practically useless for the public or for the government to form any decision upon, by reason of the fact that those census returns necessarily are two or three years after date, sometimes five or six years after date. The information wanted, which the House can judge of for itself, is information which can be very readily obtained in connection with those inquiries which these gentlemen must make, and it is simply information which the public should have when a proposition is made to increase taxation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this matter was under discussion I stated the reasons why the amendments proposed by my right hon. friend along the line indicated were regarded as objectionable by the government. They propose to enlarge the scope of the commission beyond the point that it was contemplated the commission should make inquiry into. It was thought, particularly by the Department of Finance, that making it obligatory on the commission to obtain that information would interfere with the purpose the commission has in view, namely, to obtain information strictly for the purpose of dealing with the tariff. I can quite appreciate the force of what my right hon. friend has said as to the necessity of parliament being seized with that class of information, but it should come through the Census Bureau.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT —It comes so late.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fully appreciate that fact, but it seems to me that our census machinery should be improved in some such way as to permit our having a bureau of information accessible where information such as my right hon. friend refers to can be obtained. The public service is particularly deficient in furnishing that class of information to parliament. I quite agree as to the desirability of having that information, but it is not information of that character that the Tariff Commission is designed to procure.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—All the information I asked for can be obtained in very short order, I think, by the tariff commission in connection with the inquiries which it must make.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As my right hon. friend knows there are some clauses of a general character which would permit a very wide scope being exercised by the commission, under the directions of the minister, as to procuring information of almost any character. However, we have discussed this at such length that nothing more can be decided one way or the other.

The House divided on the motion, which was lost on the following division:

Contents 11; non-contents 22.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I move that a committee consisting of Hon. Messrs. Kerr, Power and myself be appointed a committee to draft reasons which we will present at three o'clock.

The SPEAKER—The right hon. gentleman might have permission to draw the reasons immediately and send them to the House of Commons.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY BELT WATER BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself in Committee of the Whole on Bill (149) An Act respecting the Water in the Railway Belt and Peace River Block of Land.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Department of Justice has been consulted as to the proposed amendment of my hon. friend from British Columbia, and it has been pointed out that this would lead to confusion and would not be desirable for this reason: while the transfer of the grant of land of the Railway Belt in British Columbia to the federal government was formally made in 1884, there is a long standing contention as to when the transfer really took place. There were a series of negotiations between 1880 or 1881 and 1884, as to this particular belt, that is between the government of British Columbia and the federal government. It will be seen that the proposed amendment fixes it as of 1884. In view of the difficulties which I have pointed out and of the uncertainty as to when this transfer actually took place—that is as to its effect in law, namely within the period of 1881 and 1884—it would be very undesirable that parliament should pronounce upon that fact. I would also point out to the House that whatever rights my hon. friend got were obtained from the province of British Columbia, and can be in no way affected by this legislation. This only proposes to have the British Columbia government administer the water-rights on behalf of the federal government, an arrangement which is terminable at any time by this government and it does not purport to transfer to the province of British Columbia any rights, or to take away any rights which may have been dealt with by British Columbia. Therefore, I would ask my right hon. friend to accept the Bill as it is prepared, so that the province of British Columbia may administer the water-rights within the Railway Belt under the Water Act of 1909.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I am afraid I do not exactly follow the argument of my hon. friend in this matter, because my amendment provides, as I intended it, for two things. First of all it confirms any rights granted or otherwise disposed of by the Crown in the right of Canada; that is from the time it took over the Railway Belt to the time this question was settled. The latter part of the amendment provides that it does not affect any right granted by the province of British Columbia previous to 1884. It is immaterial whether the date is made 1884 or 1880, but I think it is rather an important question for the people interested in this matter in British Columbia to know just what the date is, because a large number of these water-rights have been granted, and they might be in rather a peculiar position, especially under this arrangement which the government has, whereby they can cancel this arrangement with the provincial government at any time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend cannot be interested, I presume, in the administration of the water-rights, inasmuch as all the rights he had came from British Columbia, and it is proposed to administer the water-rights under the machinery of the provincial Act. He therefore could not object and would be in no way injured. But hon. gentlemen will see the futility of this Chamber attempting to settle a very complicated constitutional question—at least a question involving possible constitutional problems to be determined—at this sitting. This is a matter possibly that the courts may yet have to determine. It has been an unsettled question ever since the transfer took place whether it took place under the statutes of 1884, and hon. gentlemen will observe that this is a pronouncement practically as to when that transfer did take place.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—The hon. gentleman spoke as if this were rather a personal matter to myself. I have water-rights in the Railway Belt; one of them was granted in 1871, and the other one some time in 1884. I speak not only in regard to myself, but also in regard to the people generally in the Railway Belt who have water-rights, and I think it is going to be a very serious, and probably expensive, matter to them if we have to go before the courts with this question, as my hon. friend admits we may have to do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Bill does not propose to affect existing rights. It simply proposes transferring to British Columbia the administration of the water-rights in the Railway Belt. We could not possibly, even had we time at our disposal, settle so important a question as that. It is peculiarly a question for the courts to settle as to the transfer of that belt between the two governments.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What are we getting for the transfer? Anything?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a dual administration at present of the water-rights in that province; that is, as to the water-rights in the Railway Belt and the waters in the province of British Columbia. It is proposed that these water-rights should be administered by the provincial government in the same way in which they administer their own water-rights.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do we get anything out of it?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there is any profit it enures to this government, and it is terminable at any time.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the water-rights are worth a million dollars, this government gets half, or is it a free gift to the British Columbia government? The water-rights are becoming more valuable every day, and the transfer of Dominion rights to provincial governments without any consideration should, I think, be held over for further consideration. They have enough already. We voted them $6,000,000 yesterday and it is time to call a halt. Why will the government not vote something to a Liberal government?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Inasmuch as a problem is involved it is not proposed to have this Act brought into force except by proclamation by the Governor in Council, and I shall point out to the minister the desirability of the department looking fully into the question raised by my hon. friend before the proclamation is made.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It should be done before the law is passed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not intended that any such rights shall be interfered with.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I object to power being placed in the hands of the Governor in Council. When a law is passed it is the law, and the time to look into it is before the law is passed. Once it is on the statute-book you cannot get rid of it, and I am opposed to the Dominion government handing over its property to another province without any compensation and justification. The hon. leader of the government has just stated that they will look into it after the law is passed; that is too late.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—On the statement made by the leader of the government, if I understand it aright, that the vested rights existing at the present time, if any, will not be in any way interfered with or impaired by this arrangement, and that they will be looked into before the proclamation is made, I would be willing to withdraw my amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand the Bill is not designed to interfere with vested rights which have been given by the British Columbia government, which they had authority to deal with. If any complication of the kind arises I shall be very glad to direct the attention of the department to it, with a view of having it corrected. The Bill simply means to transfer for the temporary administration water-rights within that belt, and it is terminable at any time, under conditions mentioned in the Bill, should the federal government be dissatisfied with the administration of those rights in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This is such a very complicated question that it is very likely my hon. friends will find that they have a very difficult situation on their hands, and one which eventually they will not be able to carry out, and it may be necessary to come to parliament again and work it out.

The amendment was withdrawn, and the clause adopted.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was read a third time and passed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN

TEMISKAMING AND NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY SUBSIDY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of:

Bill (186) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies to the government of Ontario in aid of the construction of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway.

He said: This is a subsidy Bill having as its object the granting of a subsidy to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, of $6,400 per mile for a line of railway from North Bay on the Canadian Pacific railway to Cochrane on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway; not exceeding 252·8 miles.

(ii) For the following branch lines of railway:

(a) From Englehart to Charlton; not exceeding 7·8 miles;

(b) From Cobalt to Kerr Lake; not exceeding 3·9 miles;

(c) From Iroquois Falls to Timmins; not exceeding 33·16 miles;

(d) From Nipissing Junction to North Bay; not exceeding 2·18 miles.

The entire distance falls somewhat short of 300 miles. This is a road that has been built by the governmeent of Ontario having as its object the opening of a large belt of country with which hon. gentlemen are more or less familiar. For a number of years since the construction of this road the Ontario government, as represented by the present government, and as represented by the former government of that province, made application to this government for a subsidy, contending that no distinction should be made in the granting of subsidies as between the building of a road by a provincial government or by private parties. I might say, without any hesitation, that if the building of this road had been entered upon by private parties or private corporation, or an ordinary railway company, the government of Canada would undoubtedly have granted this subsidy. I think probably hon. gentlemen who may be opposed to the principle involved in this Bill would concede that much. There is another concession, I think, which would readily be made as to this Bill, that if the operation of this road, notwithstanding its having been built by the Ontario government, should not be successful, if it should have been a failure, the central government would undoubtedly have come to the assistance of the province, as it has on other occasions, and have assisted in the building of this road to the extent of the subsidy now asked for. Because the province has made a success, I do not say a financial success—I am unaware as to whether the road is really a profitable one.

Mr. WATSON—Yes, paying 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I know my hon. friend has made that statement, but I understand that is not the case at all. It is an economically administered road, owing to the development of the gold and silver mines in that northern country. It has been able to do a very large volume of business, and therefore, for a colonization road, is undoubtedly in a successful position. But that should not be urged as a reason why the province of Ontario should not be placed in the same position as other railway corporations, or individuals, who, under the conditions mentioned by me, would have received assistance for the building of this particular road. There is another reason, and that is, it is a link, and a very important link, of the National Transcontinental railway. If it were not for the Temiskaming road and for the running agreement which has recently been entered into between the government and the Grand Trunk railway, it would be impossible, without the construction of another road, to reach the main line of the National Transcontinental railway. If it were not for the existence of this particular road, a road would have to be projected from the system of the Grand Trunk at North Bay to the main line of the National Transcontinental, and, this being the case, this government if asked by the Grand Trunk Pacific to grant a subsidy for the building of such a link would undoubtedly grant that subsidy. This government has already granted a subsidy for a similar purpose to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Therefore, I say, that as it is a necessary link in the operation of the National Transcontinental railway, bringing it into touch with the settled portions of Ontario, that alone should be a ground for the assistance which is now provided for in this Bill. Let us assume for a moment that this road was not built, and that it was simply a road projected for the purpose of developing the resources of that northern country, as it has already done, the settlemnt of the clay belt, and of the mineral resources in that northern country, and the promoters of such a road would make application to this government, would this government hesitate to place it on an equality with the other roads which have received similar assistance? Not for a moment—this government, and the late government, would have assisted. There is another consideration in addition to those which I have mentioned, and which will possibly appeal to my right hon. friend more strongly than any of the others, and that is that in the distribution of the railway subsidies the province of Ontario should not be overlooked. This is a subsidy looking particularly to the development of a railway enterprise which, possibly, may yet be in its infancy. The Temiskaming and Northern Ontario is but a small factor of the road which it will become eventually. It will eventually probably reach the shores of the Hudson bay and open up that northern country to an extent almost unlooked for. But there is no reason why the province of Ontario should not be placed in the same position in the distribution of railway subsidies as the other provinces of the Dominion, notwithstanding the fact that the government has built this road and has been operating it successfully.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—Will the subsidy apply to the new parts of the railway or to the old?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It applies to the old and to the branches. The branches are mentioned on the back of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—If we grant this subsidy to this Ontario road, will that place the road under the Railway Act, and under the control of the Railway Commission as to rates? The argument that I have used all through the western part of the country in favour of giving subsidies to railways was that by doing so we had the government control of the rates to be charged. If the Railway Commission is to have control over the rates on that road I might feel inclined to support this measure. Otherwise I doubt if I would. The hon. gentleman said that certainly Ontario should receive the same consideration as some of the other provinces do in this way, and I think it is right. Although the government has not said so openly, its actions have indicated that the provinces that are friendly to the present government are certainly being well treated. Anybody would notice that by glancing over a few of the Bills that have come through in the last few days; the province of British Columbia is receiving $6,000,000; New Brunswick, $1,600,000; Prince Edward Island is receiving an annual grant of $100,000; Manitoba, $2,000,000; and now we have the province of Ontario also asking money.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL—How many supporters of the government did Prince Edward Island return?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—One for the opposition, and three for the government. I am referring to local legislatures in these provinces. It is so plain that everybody should see it. They are showing partiality to the provinces that have provincial legislatures in sympathy with the federal government. If these grants are going to be given as bonuses to provinces who will vote in favour of Conservative legislators, I think it is wrong. I believe the people of the country have an idea of fair-play and justice, which the present government apparently does not regard.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The province of Quebec has returned a majority in support of the Liberal government and yet Quebec is receiving a very much larger subsidy than any other province.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I did not refer to the number of members elected to this parliament by the other provinces. I had reference to the politics of the local legislatures.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED — The Quebec legislature is Liberal, and yet that province is receiving $7,244,800 in subsidies as against $4,944,800 in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, the railway companies are receiving it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend, refers, I presume, to the subsidies?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—No, I refer to the special grants made directly to the provinces.

Hon. Mr. POPE—That is not under discussion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What grants?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—$100,000 to Prince Edward Island, and $1,600,000 to New Brunswick, and this grant to Ontario.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is a railway subsidy.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—All of these are by direct arrangement with the provincial legislature, and the Bill mentions that, while the other four provinces, with Liberal legislatures, have no arrangement made with them.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. leader has not answered the question asked by the hon. gentleman from Lacombe (Hon. Mr. Talbot), and that was, in view of the fact that this government was going to grant a bonus of $2,000,000 to the Ontario system of railroads, whether that system would come under the control of the Railway Commission?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, not necessarily. Ontario has a Railway Commission of its own which administers the railways in that province.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—But you are declaring this to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I presume if it is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, that would bring it within the jurisdiction of the Dominion board.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Has that enactment been made? It is not only a preamble?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have not said so. I must say my attention has not been directed to that. It simply provides that it is a work of national and not merely provincial utility.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—In that case the logical inference is clear that it should be brought under the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would involve a mutual arrangement between the two governments. It would be scarcely proper for this government to seek to forcibly bring that railway, which is peculiarly a provincial undertaking, operated by the provincial government, under the Dominion Act. In fact the government could not do it without the consent of Ontario.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If you call it a national work of national importance, it should surely come under the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—As I have had something to do with this railway and know something about it, I take the liberty of saying a few words in regard to it. In the first place, this road is already constructed. It is a paying road and has already demonstrated that the outlay will make a return to the government for all that has been spent upon it. If the road were to be put into the market now to be disposed of, I believe the government could make a very handsome profit in turning it over to the different railways who would be only too glad to get it. In the first place this road was really constructed, or laid out, as a road for developing the country and improving the condition of settlement in that country.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—A colonization road.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—Instead of that they have been charging rates that have been very much complained of and very unsatisfactory to those who are on the road, and it is not, I consider, really answering the purpose. If it had I think there would be more justification for this grant. The only reason given for the grant is that several provinces having received other grants Ontario should not be left out. I think this is the worst reason that can be given because the whole system is vicious, and calculated to bring us into a great deal of trouble, both at the present time and in the future. We seem to think that because we have an overflowing treasury there is no end to the amount we may squander—I could not use any milder word in describing the aid given to the provinces. I regret exceedingly that the reason given is altogether indefensible.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I certainly am not here, nor was I in the Commons, a hair-splitter, by any manner of means, but this goes far beyond anything of that kind. I voted for the small grant to Prince Edward Island. The plea of pauperism had been set up in regard to that province; a disgraceful plea for any province of the Dominion to make, but, on the strength of the plea that was made in that respect, and in consequence of the speech of one of my hon. friends who sat opposite, I yielded and voted for it. Here is a vote which affects my own province of Ontario, which cannot be regarded as in a pauper condition. Ontario is able to take care of its own affairs, and if this vote is clearly unnecessary for Ontario, it is an improper vote and I cannot support it. Regarding the other provinces certain pleas were set up, and gentlemen who represent these provinces are ready to explain them, but I, as an Ontario man, would feel disgraced if Ontario accepts this vote. What is the nature of the railway? It is owned by Ontario, not by any railway company, but is a provincial road belonging to the richest province in the Dominion of Canada, and it comes to this parliament and asks for assistance of this nature. I think every man in Ontario ought to be ashamed of such action. Ontario requires nothing of the kind. There is a broad feeling in the country against bonusing even independent railway companies. I for one have never been able to come to that conclusion in this sparsely settled country. I have always believed up to the present, and perhaps up to some time in the future, that railway companies, on their own basis, of their own means, cannot construct railways; but when a great province like Ontario is constructing a road the idea of a grant to Ontario is something that I cannot believe hon. members will sustain for one moment. I for one am opposed to it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I like fair debate and I like fair legislation. A very plain question was put to the government by the hon. gentleman from Lacombe (Hon. Mr. Talbot), and he was given a very plain answer. The question was that in view of the fact that parliament is about to vote a bonus or free gift of over $2,000,000 to Ontario on behalf of a certain railroad, if that railroad would thereby, as a consequence, come under the Railway Commission. The leader of the government in this House immediately stated that it would not. That was his first answer. Then the right hon. leader of the opposition said: 'But the work is declared to be of national advantage to Canada.' Then the hon. leader of the government said: 'Well, if that be the case, I presume it will have to come under the commission.' Are we passing legislation and laws on presumption? Even with the hon. leader, able man as he is, too able, his presumptions do not amount to anything. We want our laws in black and white. He has not given an answer. I think this is slip-shod legislation. The hon. leader of the government is from the west. He appealed to this House to grant to the poor province of Ontario a bonus, a free gift over $6,400 per mile on nearly 300 miles. Does the hon. leader of the government know the condition of things in the province of Ontario? Does he not know that Ontario never piled up one dollar of debt on behalf of railways? Is he not aware of that fact?

Is he not aware of the fact that the entire provincial debt of the province of Quebec was due to subsidizing railways almost to the extent of $33,000,000, while the province of Ontario never piled up one dollar of debt on behalf of its railway system—never as long as the Liberals were in power? Now my hon. friend makes a plea to us to grant to this rich province a bonus for a road which is paying actually, according to the hon. member from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Jaffray), large dividends. The government must take many of us here as people who know nothing, as long as they have friends to serve, but I am not one of that kind. I know something of the history of the country, and when the hon. gentleman makes an appeal of that kind to the House I do not know whether he does so for want of respect—it cannot be want of respect, because the hon. member is too much of a gentleman for that—but it is not according to the facts and not according to the necessities of the situation. The province of Ontario is not entitled to one cent on this road. It has made a paying investment and is not in the same position as Prince Edward Island. There is neither necessity nor justification for the expenditure. The Ontario government has been amply justified in the construction of the road by the large returns they are getting from it. As the hon. member from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Jaffray) said, if that railway were sold to-day it would bring a good profit to the province. All these measures which have been brought down in the past ten days have but one object and purpose in view, that is to fatten the fund of the Conservative party for the next general election, two or three years from this. All their donations out of the national treasury have been made to their friends in the several provinces, and I have never seen, in the history of the British Empire or the history of Canada, where a Liberal majority has helped a Tory minority to carry their measures. The hon. leader of the government may be proud of his work. He is meek when it suits his purpose and he uses the iron hand in the velvet glove when necessary. He is a most astute politician. He has pulled the wool over the eyes of the senators, just as he did in the case of the hon. member from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) who has admitted that he voted for a most improper measure, simply because the leader of the House made out that the people of Prince Edward Island were paupers. Now he sets up Prince Edward Island against New Brunswick, and says: 'If you vote $100,000 to Prince Edward Island, I will give a million towards the construction of three bridges over the St. John river.' What is the result? Representatives of one province say to representatives of the other province: 'I will vote for you, and you will vote for me.' Is that not a fair picture of the situation, according to their own admission? The point I want to make is this: if this railroad is to get two million dollars it must come under the Railway Commission, and there must be no supposition about it. It has to be a square declaration of it; and the next thing is this, that the leader of the government need not plead poverty on behalf of Ontario, because four-fifths of the debt in Quebec is made up of subsidies to railroads. These are facts which should be explained, but through the personal hypnotism of the leader of the government he is able to draw a veil over our eyes and to get what he wants. If I had a few behind me like myself he would not get one of these measures through, because they are not in the interests of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have listened with a good deal of attention to the discussion on this subject. Some of the speeches have been of a very serious character, while others have been amusing. Some of those who have spoken are not acquainted with what Ontario has done to aid the construction of railways. While it may not have given direct money subsidies, it has given millions of acres of land to aid construction of railways in the Algoma district, and about Sault Ste. Marie particularly. Ontario has not been remiss in that respect. I was somewhat surprised at the remarks made by the hon. member from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Jaffray), because he does know something about the construction of this road, having been one of the commissioners who had control of the enterprise at its inception, and I have no doubt he did his duty. The idea that prevailed and guided the government of Ontario in undertaking the construction of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, was to make it a colonization road. It was not for the purpose of reaching the mining districts, because they were not known to exist at that time. Had those mines not been discovered, it is doubtful if the road would ever have paid. I doubt, if even now, it is paying so handsomely as has been represented. It was only the other day that Mr. Graham, the member for South Renfrew in the House of Commons, stated that it was misrepresentation to say that that road was paying to the extent mentioned. That it is paying running expenses I believe, but that is because of the opening up of the mining district. My hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) has expressed his strong opposition to granting subsidies, and were it not for the sparsity of settlements he would oppose it altogether.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—That is not the position I took. I said there was a strong feeling arising throughout the country in opposition to granting aid for the construction of railways. I said that in my humble opinion in our sparsely settled country, railway companies must be aided, but the position I took with regard to this particular railway was that it is not owned by a railway company, but is owned by the province of Ontario and therefore does not require this aid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I can see no difference between the construction of a railway for colonization purposes by a government and the construction of such a road by a private company. The hon. member from Algoma says that this road should be under the Railway Commission. I fully concur with him in that, and he has evidence of the fact, when I voted for the motion of my hon. friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) the other day, with reference to putting the Intercolonial railway under the management of the Railway Commission. Whether it is defensible that there should be two Railway Commissions, I do not intend to discuss, but the railway which we are now considering, is under the management of the Railway Commission. My hon. friend from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Jaffray), says that the charges on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway are enormous. They were at one time, but that was before the development of that northern portion of the country, and when it was necessary to charge the rates in order to meet the expenditure. The rates are gradually coming down and will be reduced as circumstances justify reduction. But is it a new departure to aid railways and governments in this Dominion?

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the county in which I live, there is a railway which runs to Eldorado. An additional subsidy was given to put that road in a state of repair. In Quebec, when the Canadian Pacific railway took over the north shore road, a large sum of money was granted to the Quebec government, a million dollars, if my memory serves me. They had expended that sum upon the road and insisted on being recouped by the Dominion government. I may be told that that road was not owned altogether by the government.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may be told that it is not a parallel case, but so far as the government is concerned it is a parallel case, because the Quebec government got a portion of the money expended upon the north shore road. Then you come to the province of New Brunswick. Long years after confederation that portion of the road running down to Moncton was taken over to form part of the national railway system, and the sums which New Brunswick had invested in that road were paid back to the province. I remember distinctly that the question came before the government of which I was a member, and Sir Leonard Tilley refused to acknowledge the claim. When the late government came into power, it paid over the money to New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—But the New Brunswick government has not retained the road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said so; I said that it formed part of the Intercolonial railway, and the money invested by New Brunswick in that road was refunded. In Nova Scotia you find precisely the same thing happened when the Eastern railway was taken over by the government, Nova Scotia was refunded some $650,000 that it had invested in that road when it was taken over as part of the Intercolonial railway. Ontario comes forward to-day, and says 'we invested money in this colonization railway as the other provinces have done, and we claim that we are entitled to the same consideration that they have received.' Then there are cases in the maritime provinces where roads have been taken over and those who had invested money in them were relieved of their responsibility of the indebtedness for the loss constantly accruing in the operation of the road. Those who had built the road got a large proportion of their money back. The principle has been applied in every other province, and why should Ontario be treated in a different manner? The legislative Assembly of Ontario adopted a resolution applying for this subsidy before their was a change of government at Ottawa, and, if my recollection serves me right, the government acted upon that, but did not receive anything. The claim of Ontario is as equitable as any claim that has ever been presented from a province. It may be stated that the claim is made now, because the Conservative party is in power but the same principle has been recognized in dealing with every province, and as the leader of the House has pointed out, Quebec is receiving in the Subsidy Bill twice as much as Ontario.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not Quebec.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is the railways of the province of Quebec.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I stand corrected; I should have said companies, but what is the difference? If the government come forward and say: 'We will construct this road if we recerve aid from the Dominion,' what difference is there whether the road is built by a company or by the province? The hon. gentlemen opposite may vote this down as they voted down other measures, but that does not affect the equity of Ontario's claim. I agree with the hon. member from Rockland (Hon. Mr. Edwards), when he says that Ontario is not in a state of poverty, but that is no argument against the claim. The wealth of a company, an individual or a government, should not be a cause for refusing to recognize a just claim. A man is entitled to his just rights whether he happens to be rich or poor.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—This is an entire departure from every principle and rule followed in matters of this sort. As I understand it, subsidies are granted to railways in aid of construction. We have never departed from that, and what justification is there for granting a subsidy to a railway which is almost wholly constructed at the present moment? The term used in the proposed grant is 'in aid of construction,' yet here we are asked to subsidize a railway which is almost completed. Is not this encouraging other provinces to build railways with the expectation that the Dominion will pay for them? The hon. and venerable gentleman from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) has told us that this road when it was begun was constructed without any idea that it would open up a rich mining country, but at that time the government of Ontario knew that they could not count on getting a subsidy from the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have applied for it from time to time.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—They undertook to build it without aid, and then found valuable minerals in the country through which it passes which have made the road a profitable undertaking; yet on top of that they come to the parliament of Canada and ask the Dominion to pay for the railway. I am a representative of Ontario and my duty is for the people of this province, but we are establishing a very serious precedent in asking for this subsidy. It is the first case of the kind, notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary. In the other cases which have been mentioned where provincial governments asked to be recouped for money put into railways taken over by a company the circumstances were different; not in any case have they asked the Dominion to recoup them for building provincial roads. And what a spectacle it is for the great, rich and populous province of Ontario, the banner province of the Dominion, coming here as a mendicant and asking the government of Canada to recoup it for building a railway which is to-day a paying investment to the people of Ontario. Surely the government has gone the limit in this instance. Surely the time has come when a halt should be called. Can we find fault with the little province of Prince Edward Island coming here and asking for a paltry $100,000 when Ontario takes such a stand? What would be thought of a family if a big brother who is prosperous comes to his parents and asks for his share? Every member of the family would make a similar demand. This is setting a very bad example to the other provinces of the Dominion. If we pass this Bill we will have them coming year after year asking for special favours of this kind.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman move the adjournment of the debate? There are several messages from the Commons to be considered before we adjourn.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT—I have about finished what I have to say but I object to the Speaker interfering in this way.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK moved that the debate be adjourned till the afternoon sitting.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (195) An Act to amend the Act of the present session, intituled 'An Act respecting the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Company.'—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (194) An Act to amend the Act of the present session, intituled 'An Act respecting the Montreal Central Terminal Company.'—Hon. Mr. Watson.

The Senate adjourned until this afternoon at 2.30 o'clock.

SECOND SITTING.

MONDAY, April 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 2.30 p.m.

Routine Proceedings.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps the hon. leader of the House is in a position to give us some information on the subject which he promised to look into touching our right to interfere with imperial legislation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I am sorry to say I entirely overlooked it in the multiplicity of business, and I have not had an opportunity of seeing the members of the government.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBSIDIES BILL.

A CORRECTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to make a partial correction of a statement I made with regard to the subsidies that have been paid to the different provinces. My memory has been refreshed by the hon. member from Rigaud (Hon. Mr. Boyer), who tells me that the Quebec government did not receive any money at the time of the sale of the North Shore road.

I have a distinct recollection of what took place at the time between certain parties and the government, and I was under the impression that part of the purchase money was paid to Quebec. My hon. friend assured me that was not the case. Upon reflection I think I went a little too far when I called to mind the parties with whom the transactions took place, and I have no desire to have left on record anything which is not strictly accurate as far as I know.

MONTREAL CENTRAL TERMINAL COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called:

Third reading Bill (194) An Act to amend the Act of the present session, intituled 'An Act respecting the Montreal Central Terminal Company.'—Hon. Mr. Owens.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hon. Mr. Owens, who has had charge of this Bill during the session, has left for home, and I have failed to get in touch with the solicitor for this company, and therefore I do not like to see the Bill passed in its present shape. The Bill was passed by the Senate and went to the House of Commons, and now another Bill comes back, amending the former Bill, within two hours of prorogation, when all those interested in the Bill are absent. I move, therefore, that this Bill should be read this day three months, and if it is necessary to make amendments next session, it can be done.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This Bill, and Bill (195) which was under discussion before lunch, were amended in the Senate Railway Committee without any notice, that is, in regard to the clause affecting easements. They are both Montreal Terminal Bills, and the argument was advanced before the Railway Committee that inasmuch as the Canadian Northern had those clauses introduced in that Bill, that it was fair to insert it in these Bills. The Canadian Pacific railway asked for the same thing but was refused. These Bills were referred to the House of Commons, and in turn referred to the Railway Committee, who struck those two clauses out of the Bill because no notice had been given of them; the House of Commons moved to adopt the amendment of the Senate, paying no attention to the recommendation of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, and then the Bills came up and were allowed to pass. This Bill is to correct a mistake that was made in the House of Commons by not adopting the report of the Railway Committee of that House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is clearly an error on the part of the House of Commons, and they are endeavouring to correct it. The effect of the amendment is that the clauses struck out by the Railway Committee of the House of Commons shall not come into effect except by proclamation of the Governor in Council. The error was made in both these Bills in the other House. The Minister of Railways took a decided stand on this matter. I would ask my hon. friend from York (Hon. Mr. Campbell) whether they would not be in a better position with these Bills on the statute-book than if they were not passed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I beg to move the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If this Bill has been brought in by the government to correct errors in former Bills, I think the hon. gentleman had better consent to its going through, because it would go through next session in any event.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—All right.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF STAFF OF THE SENATE.

ORDER OF THE DAY DISCHARGED.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the report of the Speaker of the Senate on the organization and classification of the staff of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The discussion on this report would doubtlessly involve some little time. I would suggest, in the interests of the officials of the Senate who are interested, that the Speaker should withdraw the report and present it at the next session of parliament. The Senate can then take up the subject, and if any injustice has been done in classification of the officers, we could make it relate back to the date of the present report.

The SPEAKER—I think that is the best way to deal with it.

The order of the day was discharged.

TEMISKAMING AND NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY SUBSIDY BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED—BILL DEFEATED.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This Bill is very much in the same position, although not exactly on the same line, as the Bill we put through the House the other day relating to British Columbia. The same question comes up in both these cases, that the Dominion government has no control over these railways on account of the way the legislation is brought in. It is a question whether we should allow the granting of subsidies in this way to railways, over which the Minister of Railways of this government and the Railway Commission have no control. I am very much opposed to the whole matter. I regret very much that the Bill which was before the House the other day went through as it did; I opposed the matter at the time, and I should have taken other steps but for the fact that I was misled in regard to the matter, and did not move in the way I should have done had I understood it was looked upon as a money Bill, and that it could not be amended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There has been a large number of cases in which provincial roads have received aid just as in this case, although I cannot put my hand on them at present.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Roads owned by the provinces?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh no.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—This is not a provincial road in that respect.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I asked my hon. friend the question the other day with regard to one road in British Columbia under the general Subsidies Act, and he promised to look into it, but did not refer to it when the general Subsidies Act was going through. With regard to other provincial roads it was understood, I think—and I think I am right in saying that the question was argued in the other House—that up to the decision which was given in the courts a short time ago the government was supposed to have complete control over every provincial road that applied to this government for a subsidy, that the very fact of this government granting it a subsidy, made it a road for the general advantage of Canada, and brought the provincial road under the control of the Dominion government automatically. Unfortunately the courts seemed to have held otherwise, and therefore, I think it is a question for the government to see that legislation is brought in at the next session, providing that any railway that applies to the Dominion of Canada for a subsidy automatically comes under the control of the Railway Board, and under the control of the Minister of Railways of Canada. It would place the whole matter in a very much more satisfactory condition, and would, in the long run, I think, be very much for the benefit of the general public. They would then have only one Railway Board to deal with, and they would only have to consider what the findings of that board were with regard to the question of rates. In British Columbia I think we are going to have a great deal of trouble and bother over that question, and the people in that particular case have not got what they think they have, but only time will show what the result will be. I think the same question applies to this railway that is now before us, and I simply want to put myself on record that I am sorry I did not take a more decided action with regard to the Bill of the British Columbia Railway Company the other day.

Hon. Mr. BOYER—There are, it strikes me, other reasons why this subsidy should not be granted. Not later than this morning we passed a Bill giving the Grand Trunk railway running rights over this road, and the sum mentioned was $300,000 of a subsidy to this road. I have read somewhere —although I have not time to put my hand on the authority just now—that the actual cost of that road when first started was $15,000,000, and the sum of $20,000,000 was offered to the Ontario government for the road. Two million more have been spent on the road making the cost $17,000,000 and I am told they could to-day sell the road for $25,000,000. Why should the Dominion government grant a subsidy of $2,000,000 to a road that is not only paying its way but is paying a dividend? You cannot call it a baby industry; it is already established and doing a large business. Talking about provincial subsidies, my right hon. friend from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) has corrected his mistake. When the Quebec, Montreal and Occidental railway was built, it was constructed with provinicial money—not one single farthing of federal subsidy was granted to the road. After the road was in operation, the then government decided it was highly indecent for a local government to own a road, and they sold it to their own friends for $7,000,000. It cost $14,000,000, and when my hon. friend talked about the federal government being held up, I may say that those who bought the road immediately bonded it for an extra million, and sold it to the Canadian Pacific railway. They did not want to pay that extra million, and the central government was asked to use its influence so that the new purchaser should get this extra million.

Hon. Mr. POPE—I am delighted to have an opportunity of voting on the principle of this Bill. I absolutely disagree with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is strange.

Hon. Mr. POPE—Not strange—it would be peculiar if I did. In the first place, the fact that this road is a success, has nothing to do with the question. What particularly pleases me, is that it is a government-owned railroad operated by the province of Ontario. I am absolutely opposed to company owned railroads. I am in favour of government ownership of railroads, and it is a great pleasure for me to vote for any measure tending in that direction, no matter how indirectly it may come. If the people are going to have an opportunity of getting out of the hands of corporations that have held them up in the country for many years, as has been spoken of so many times by hon. gentlemen on the other side, I should think they would be delighted to seize an opportunity, small as it may be, by which they might escape from the hold-up organizations which they had denounced so thoroughly in all the legislatures of Canada. But instead of that, when the opportunity arises that a great province like Ontario has taken hold of the development of the northern country and has made some success of it, lo and behold, because that road is not a non-paying concern but is a profitable organization, because it has developed that country and is not a privately-owned concern manipulated, bonded and full of watered stock placed in the market to defraud people—because it has not all those elements about it which are associated with the general railroad development of this country, we are not to give them encouragement in that line. I am delighted to be able to vote for this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. If it was a private corporation that built the road costing $15,000,000, for which to-day they could get a price of from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000, that is making good money on the running of the road, and making large dividends, would the hon. gentleman, as a legislator, come to this parliament and invite them to give it a bonus of $2,000,000?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—It is impossible to convert the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But I want to make his folly known to the public. He would not invite parliament to give a bonus to a private corporation who had constructed a road at the expense of $15,000,000, which is worth $25,000,000 to-day and paying all expenses, and taking money out of the annual revenue for capital purposes, and now he comes here begging for a rich government $2,000,000 of our money. Is that a fair proposition to tax the country and parliament? That settles the hon. member. The hon. member from Rigaud (Hon. Mr. Boyer) has called the attention of the House to a very grave mistake made by the hon. member from Hastings.

Hon. Mr. DERBYSHIRE—He corrected that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not know whether the Speaker is regular in calling the House at half past two when the regular hour is three o'clock. I left here after one o'clock, came back before three and found the business nearly all through. I think all the proceedings at the present time are unconstitutional.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman raise the point of order?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No. I am glad to know, at the last moment, that the hon. gentleman from Hastings has retracted his remarks with regard to the building of our railroads in Quebec. I told him, and I told the leader of the government, that Quebec had indebted itself to the extent of $33,000,000 when Ontario had not indebted itself to the extent of $1, and now we have this rich province coming to the Dominion begging for $2,000,000 on behalf of an enterprise that is paying. Is that fair and proper? I see the finger on the purse—the late minister of the Ontario government coming down here and taking the money to pile it up for the next election. All this legislation is calculated to increase the election fund for the next election. I am bright enough to see it. The hon. leader of the House cannot pull the wool over my eyes, and he chuckles to himself in being able to secure votes to carry his government by measures which are not in the interest of the country, but in the interest of a separate province. I am not prepared to sit idly by at the last hours of the session and see all this done. I do not blame the hon. leader of the House for doing his duty, probably too well, as far as the interests of the country are concerned.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

The House divided on the motion, which was rejected on the following division:

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called.

Committee of the Whole House in Bill (78), An Act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.—Hon. Mr. Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—This is a very important Bill. It purports to amend the Sale and Inspection Act, an Act containing 360 clauses, and now within an hour of prorogation we have this amending Bill before us when there is no time to examine it and see what the effect of it would be upon the trade of the country. There are many clauses of this Bill that I do not think the government have carefully considered. Under the circumstances the leader of the House ought to agree to let it stand over until another session. If we go into committee there are a good many clauses of it which I will have to discuss at considerable length, because I think they would affect the trade of the country very much. I find that there is a new subsection added to section 149, which makes it imperative for every miller or dealer to mark every bag of flour, no matter how large or how small. It is the practice of the millers of Ontario, as I suppose it is of millers in other places, to sell flour or feed in bags, and when the bags are emptied they are sent back and filled again and sent perhaps in a different direction altogether. It will make it exceedingly awkward and entail very great loss—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it is my hon. friend's intention to criticise the Bill in committee it is manifestly impossible for us to dispose of it to-day. That is to say if my hon. friend is opposed to the provisions of the Bill, there is no alternative but to let it stand.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I am very glad of that.

With the leave of the House the order was withdrawn.

OTTAWA, MONTREAL AND EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called.

Third reading Bill (195), An Act to amend the Act of the present session, intituled 'An Act respecting the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Company.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like an explanation of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This Bill is on a par with Bill (194).

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is no explanation.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is a Bill which has been passed by the House of Commons to correct an error in a Bill passed during the present session. The explanation I gave of Bill (194) applies to Bill (195).

The Bill was read a third time and passed.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (193) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public services for the financial years ending respectively 31st of March, 1912, and the 31st of March, 1913.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Bill be read the second time.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is my duty, as a member of the late administration, to tender my thanks to the present government for the admirable way in which they have justified Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his government. The charges which they brought against those gentlemen have been most amply refuted by the action of my hon. friend and his colleagues. One charge was that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues had grossly neglected their duty in not moving for some legislation with respect to what is known as the Ne Temere Decree, but when these gentlemen were confronted with a Bill for the purpose of dealing with that subject, they adopted the identical course which Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Minister of Justice had declared was the only course that could be adopted under the circumstances. As for the naval policy, they more than justified my hon. friend; they complained that he did not do enough, and they proposed to remedy his misconduct, as they termed it, by doing nothing at all, and they will continue, in my judgment, to do nothing probably for another year or two at the very least, so that by the time they have made up their minds as to what they are going to do, the German peril will have gone with the Yellow peril, with the Russian peril, with the French peril and a good many other perils I have seen exploded in my time, and are in this Bill which is now before us; these men, who from one end of Canada to the other for years and years made it the main charge against Sir Wilfrid Laurier's cabinet that they were grossly extravagant in the management of public affairs, these men now come down with a Supply Bill demanding many millions more than the largest sum the late government ever asked for, many millions more both on capital account and on ordinary account. I see that the estimates which were brought down last session, all told, amounted to $156,000,000, of which $109,000,000 were on consolidated funds account and the remainder on capital account. Those were stated to be most extravagant estimates. In the supplemental estimates and main estimates asked for in this Supply Bill I find the government demands, not $109,000,000, but something much nearer $116,000,000 or $117,000,000, and a much larger increase in regard to the amount required on capital account. So that whereas, according to the statements before us, the late government would have been content with something like $149,000,000, all told these gentlemen require, in all probability, when we sum up the various items brought down, something like $200,000,000, more or less, for the service of the coming year. I give them their choice of an alternative: either these gentlemen were grossly in error—I will not use stronger language, though I might—in accusing the late administration of having been guilty in any respect of extravagant conduct, or they themselves are condemned out of their own mouths as being infinitely more extravagant than the men they condemned of extravagance. Which particular alternative my hon. friend chooses to accept I can not say. Were I in another place and criticising this Bill as I used to do on certain occasions, I would say those estimates remind me of nothing so much as a set of banditti who had captured a gold caravan and hardly knew what to do with their booty. I will deal with the plain and positive facts of the case. It cannot be entirely without interest to contrast the present expenditure of Canada with the expenditure of our neighbours. Of whatever faults the people of the United States, may have been guilty, two things they always have done for which they deserve great credit. They have always done their best to preserve intact the relations which were fixed by the constitution between the federal government and the states, and they have always, in spite of everything, succeeded in keeping down the federal expenditure to something like a reasonable limit, both matters of very great importance. I shall not apologize for reading to the House this brief statement covering the decennial periods from 1810, when their population was identically the same as ours to-day, down to 1860 before the great civil war. There are facts there which the people of Canada will do well to lay to heart, facts which, properly understood, ought to startle them. I have long been of the opinion that our expenditure was assuming far too great proportions and endeavoured to check it as far as I might, though not as successfully as I would have wished.

So when the United States had a total population four times as great as ours their expenditure was just about one-half of ours to-day and their total taxation about one-half the taxation which the government of this country tell us is necessary to carry on the affairs of the Dominion. Now, if anybody complains, as possibly he might complain, that these were old times and money is not worth as much to-day as it was then, I say it is true, but that is no sort of an explanation of the enormous disparity to which I have referred; and as I mentioned some time ago, but the thing is worth repeating to-day, the total taxation of the United States is now a little under six hundred million dollars, for a population of ninety-four millions. The annual charge per head for all kinds of federal expense, army, navy and the big pension list, is something like $6.40 per head, while our taxation amounts, according to the statements laid on the table of the House, to considerably over one hundred million dollars and our charge per head to something very like $14 or $15. Nor is that the least part of it. In addition to that, as everybody knows, in this country while taxation is extremely heavy in some parts it is extremely light in others, and the consequence is that certain portions of this Dominion are enormously taxed, perhaps as heavily taxed as any portion of the British Dominions, not excepting England itself. Now there is one other remark I have to make with respect to this measure—that is, the gross partiality with which these estimates have been prepared. As has been pointed out time and again, and is apparent in every line of these estimates and every statute we are about to be called upon to sanction, wherever the government have friends the government make donations, and generous donations too. Where the administration is in the hands of gentlemen of the Liberal party, then the government can see no occasion whatever for bestowing any portion of this huge surplus at all. What has been given to Alberta, Saskatchewan, Quebec or Nova Scotia? Turn to the other side of the picture and you find Prince Edward Island donated $100,000 a year, equal to about $3,000,000 if it were capitalized. We find New Brunswick well considered, a very, I will not say inequitable, but a very liberal allowance made to New Brunswick for the administration of a railway they are about to build, and we have lately been called upon besides that to vote one million dollars, or more, for the purpose of constructing three bridges for their benefit. We proceed now to my own province, Ontario. Well, the good intentions of the government have not borne exactly the fruit they desired, so we will say nothing about it. When we come to Manitoba we find that they are presented out of the treasury with two millions odd, and in British Columbia there is at least six millions of a free donation on the part of this generous government to gentlemen who are politically in accord with it. Now I mention that to start on. What else have they done? They have, in the first place, succeeded in absolutely tearing up the British North America Act. There is not a single solitary portion of the federal compact, as it stood a matter of six months or a year ago, which these gentlemen have not completely destroyed. They have put an end to the arrangement that was made between the provinces, have defied even an imperial Act in their legislation, and I greatly doubt if they have done that legally; I am very much inclined to believe, on the contrary, that if the matter can come before the courts it will be found that these gentlemen have grossly exceeded their legal, as well as their moral right, in what they have done. They have pretty well succeeded in getting rid of the large surplus which they did not create, but which they found ready for them, and if, as I fear, the result of some of the legislation that we have been putting through will be to bring forward a huge host of demands from the other provinces, which I see no reasonable hope of deferring or refusing if they are brought forward, they will have positively by one of these Acts made provision to increase our fixed charges in a way which will practically nearly double the national debt of Canada. I am not going to dwell further on the case of our friends in Prince Edward Island except to remark this, that I believe if I could get the exact statistics from the post office authorities I would be able to show that that excellent little island is a larger depositor per head—I believe it is—in the government and post office savings banks than any other province in this Dominion.

Having dealt with what they have succeeded in doing, I wish to say a word or two as to our outlook for the future. I have before me a very remarkable statement which was laid before the House in a report presented by my hon. friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power). It is one which I purpose commenting on more fully on a future occasion and it is one which no inhabitant of Canada, if he will take the trouble to study it and see what it involves, can fail to admit is a statement which calls for the most serious consideration on our part. The relative increase of the urban and rural poulation during the last decade is shown in the following table:

	Population 1911.		Population, 1901.		Increase.
	Rural.	Urban.	Rural.	Urban.	Rural.	Urban.

I am aware that all over the world this unfortunate tendency of leaving the country and rushing to the city is attracting the attention of economists of all classes and I am aware, too, that the best of these economists are very strongly of the opinion that wherever a country does not sell a large part of its manufactured goods outside of its own limits, the utmost proportion which should be maintained between city and rural population is two to one, and that one in three is as much as can safely be maintained. It will be seen that while the rural population in the five older provinces has absolutely diminished to the extent of 38,829, the urban population has increased by 776,846.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR—Due entirely to the mal-administration of the late government.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is due to the late government, undoubtedly, that there was any increase at all, because under the preceding government even Ontario, rich as it was, had been reduced to such a condition of atrophy that the total increase in the ten years from 1891 to 1901 was scarcely more than the increase of the maritime provinces, and what that was he can best understand from the fact, that in New Brunswick, not the worst of the provinces, they had gained only thirty souls in ten years, under the administration of our predecessors. No argument could be brought forward to show more conclusively the enormous mischief brought to Canada by the introduction of the wretched farce known as the National Policy than the condition Ontario found itself in in the year 1901. In the decade ending that year that great and rich province barely increased by sixty-eight thousand souls, and that increase, paltry and poor as it was, had taken place under the late government, and not under their predecessors. To men who know what the real condition of things is, nothing could show more conclusively the mischievous character of the policy I have characterized than the condition to which Ontario had been reduced in the year of grace 1901. Now, I say those things require consideration and I hope my hon. friend will not give up until he has probed that matter to the very bottom. The hon. gentleman wants to know why I think this disastrous and disgraceful state of things in the distribution of population has occurred in Canada? I will tell him. For three and thirty years since the Mackenzie administration was defeated, the farmers of Canada have been penalized for the benefit of certain privileged classes, as the hon. gentleman knows right well.

There is but one thing more to which I shall call attention and it is this: If there be one thing that ought to be clearer than another to every hon. gentleman who has taken a share in politics during the last five and twenty years, it is that the whole of the present prosperity of Canada—and I make that statement with all possible emphasis—is entirely dependent on the development of the Northwest, and the Northwest development was due entirely to the action of the late government. Here we have a case in which the present prosperity of Ontario—and it is very considerable—the present prosperity of Quebec, and in many parts it is very considerable, we have that due wholly and entirely to the development of the Northwest. I have shown how completely Ontario had been reduced to a condition of atrophy until after the year 1901, when it began to feel the effects of the revival in the Northwest. Then, I say, our prosperity, such as it is, is due to the Northwest, and the largest factor in the prosperity of the Northwest has been the huge influx of capital from the United States within the last six or seven years. Perhaps hon. gentlemen are not aware of the enormous amount of capital which has poured into that country from the United States ever since the years 1904-5. They will find in my hon. friend's report when it reaches us, a detailed statement showing that within those five or six years, something like six hundred million dollars of United States capital has been brought into this country and to that—though I do not say the entire prosperity of the Northwest is due to that—I say the phenomenal prosperity which has attended it is mainly due. And how have these gentlemen repaid it? I do not know a case of more selfish stupidity than that which has been displayed, I regret to say, by a majority of my own countrymen in the province of Ontario in dealing with the provinces of the Northwest. First of all, not content with exacting from them an enormous federal taxation, they have allowed them to be pillaged —no other word will describe it—for the benefit of privileged classes of manufacturers in Ontario and Quebec, and to crown all, when there was an opportunity of conferring a great benefit on the Northwest, when there was an opportunity of providing them with a market which would have broken, to a large extent, the effects of the misfortunes which overtook many of them owing to the inclemency of the season this last year these gentlemen deprived them at one blow of the market which might have saved them, and also took away from the maritime provinces the sole chance in a lifetime of recovering the prosperity which they once enjoyed and of which they have been deprived of late. What is the true course that statesmen should pursue under such circumstances? What is the course my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Lougheed) would pursue if he were leader of the government—and he would make a much better leader than the present one? Why, they ought to admit at once that they had, whether rightly or wrongly, been instrumental in inflicting great injury on the Northwest by depriving them of the right of entry to the huge market at their doors waiting for them, and they would prepare, by reducing the heavy burden of federal and other taxation now resting on them, to make such paltry compensation as it was possible for them to make for that error. That is the true course. I am quite certain if I could hypnotize my hon. friend and make him state the thoughts that he entertains on this subject, that is the course he would advise, and possibly he may succeed in bringing it about yet.

There is one thing I wish to add: Of all the absurdities that can be well crowded into a document like this, it does seem to me that the most absurd proposal is that we should expend hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of trying to extend our trade and commerce in the remotest corners of the earth and shut the door to the greatest trade we could reasonably hope to obtain with a hundred millions of the richest and best customers in the world in the country south of us.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like to endorse the remarks which have been made by the right hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) about the hon. leader of the government in this House. I hope before he meets the House next session that he will be a full fledged minister. He is worthy of the position, and I feel sympathy with him in the task he has to carry out in this Chamber.

I believe if we had three or four more like him in the present government the squandering of money would not have proceeded as it has done. I am in full sympathy with his feelings, but not with his expressions of opinion. He is bound to secrecy, and is also bound to carry out the policy of his party, and I sympathize with him for that. I hope that before the next session comes round we shall have one minister in the Senate, at least, and I think we ought to have a French-Canadian representative here. The Speaker has been crying out in this House for nine years for a French Canadian representative. I do not see why he does not see to it. I congratulate the hon. leader on the way he has conducted the business of the House, and the way he has pulled the wool over the eyes of certain members of the other party and persuaded them to vote for his measures.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

This day at 4.30 o'clock p.m., His Royal Highness the Governor General proceeded in state to the Senate Chamber, in the Parliament Buildings, and took his seat upon the Throne. To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:—

In His Majesty's name, His Royal Highness the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Royal Highness the Governor General, as follows:—

May it please your Royal Highness:

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Royal Highness the following Bill:—

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1912, and the 31st March, 1913.

to which Bill I humbly request Your Royal Highness' assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Royal Highness' command, did thereupon say:—

In His Majesty's name, His Royal Highness the Governor General thanks His Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Royal Highness the Governor General was pleased to close the First Session of the Twelfth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, with the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am glad, at this comparatively early period of the season, to be able to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament.

The diligence with which you have applied yourselves to your public duties, calls for my warm acknowledgments.

The Act to extend the boundaries of Manitoba and to make financial provision commensurate with the requirements of its enlarged area, will, I am sure, be welcomed, alike by the present inhabitants of that province, and by those who dwell in the added territory now admitted to the advantages of the Provincial status.

The enlargement of the limits of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec will undoubtedly contribute to the progress and development of those Northern territories which hitherto have been little known and which will henceforth form part of those great provinces.

Highly important and far-reaching advanages should result from the measure to aid and encourage Agriculture in concernt with the several provincial governments, which I doubt not will materially contribute to the development and progress of that great basic industry.

The Act respecting Grain—a most comprehensive measure—will, it is hoped, assist the farmer in the marketing of his produce, as well as in obtaining better prices, thus relieving him of disadvantages under which he has hitherto laboured.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you in His Majesty's name for the liberal provision you have made for the requirements of the Public Service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am happy to congratulate you on the many indications of the abounding prosperity of this country and I earnestly pray that the blessings of Providence may always attend this favoured land.
