Insect War on Man

(Austin Clarke in T. P.'s and Cassell's Weekly)

The hero of old slew dragons and lopped off their fiery coils. The scientist of to-day makes war, in less picturesque fashion, on the formidable insects which carry disease or destroy the labors of mankind. In his war of self-defense against animals of prey, man has defeated wolf, tiger and lion. As it is possible that the victim may eventually fall a victim to the almost invincible insect?

The picture of a desolated world infested only by myriads of insects is hardly a pleasant one, but it would be possible, should man relax his efforts. A man hunting a wild boar is impressive. Chasing a house-fly with a napkin or cautiously wlaying a wasp on the preserve at a picnic he is slightly ridiculous.

At an early age we have all collected beetles and caterpillars in match-boxes with an admirable desire for knowledge. Yet we regard the insect collector with amusement. Indeed, he is usually represented pictorially by a funny old gentleman in smoked glasses, with a green net, panting very painfully in his pursuit of a very disdainful butterfly. Yet we owe more to him than to the hunter of big game.

The vast importance of insects in the affairs of man has only come to be recognized comparatively recently. In fact, it may be said that entomology has been acknowledged as of some use not within the last fifty years. Not very long ago in a case in the Edinburgh Courts, in which a will was in dispute, the fact that the testator collected insects was admitted as evidence of weakness of intellect.

In his new book, "Concerning the Habits of Insects" (Cambridge University Press, 6s. net), Mr. F. Boulton-Brown gives us the results of his original observations of the habits of bees, wasps, dragon-flies and other insects. He proves clearly that knowledge is the only weapon which can enable us to face the menace of injurious insects. The facts are more serious than is usually recognized.

Until recently half the human death-rate of the world each year was due to malaria, transmitted from person to person by the mosquito. The material destruction caused by pests is as great. The bot- or warble-fly, which affects cattle, causes a loss in Britain alone of from $2,000,000 to $7,000,000 annually. Insects levy a toll of about ten per cent. of the value of our crops. In America the cotton-bill weevil causes damage every year to the cotton crop to the amount of about $40,000,000, and it has been prophesied that this beetle may in time ruin the cotton-growing industry of the United States.

The construction of the famous Panama Canal was held up for more than a score of years by the mosquito. Between 1881 and 1889 twenty-two thousand laborers died of malaria of yellow fever, and the failure of the successful enterprise was largely due to that insect. Success was only achieved in 1904 by the scientific work of Colonel Gorgas, who took charge of the sanitation of the zone and began at once to make war on the mosquito. He studied their habits and destroyed, as far as possible, their breeding-places. This is a signal example of the practical value of entomology.

The various methods of making war on injurious insects are of interest. In the United States, for instance, a "trap crop" is used to save the cotton. This consists of a few rows of sweet corn or maize planted at intervals across the cotton field in order to attract the pest from the more valuable crop.

The most fascinating method, however, is that known as the "Biological," which the following amusing illustration makes clear: If you are told that the amount of clover seed obtainable from a crop in any district depends upon the number of cats in that district you will have difficulty in understanding the connection, and yet Darwin made it quite clear. Only bumble-bees transfer pollen from one clover flower to another, so that bumble-bees are essential for the pollination of these flowers.

A Non-Stop Novelist

Hundreds of thousands of fiction-lovers have read "The Mystery of the Hansom Cab," of which 559,000 copies have actually been sold. Its author, Mr. Forges Hume, was saying the other day that he sold the manuscript of the story outright for £50!

The reason for writing it, curiously enough, was not to make money, but a name. He was very anxious to publish poems he had written, but the publisher told him he was not sufficiently well known—that he must first make a name for himself by writing something more popular. "The Mystery of the Hansom Cab" was the sequel to this.

Ever since publishers have discouraged all his efforts to write what he most wants to write. He has just finished his hundred and thirty-seventh detective novel!

"My long list of books has not brought me a fortune," he added, "but after thirty-three years of it, I am rather in love with my particular form of poverty!"

The Autogiro

THE LATEST DEVICE IN AERONAUTICS.

"The most important step in aeronautics since the Wright brothers flew the first airplane." This is the way in which Sir Sefton Branker of the British Air Force described the combination of airplane and helicopter, named the autogiro, invented by Juan de la Cierva, Spanish civil engineer, which has had trials at Farnborough recently. It has been announced that as a result of these tests several machines with modifications will be built for the Air Ministry. The autogiro had a fall at Farnborough a few days ago, but it was considered a minor accident, not likely to check its development. In its first test machine rose 1,000 feet almost vertically, and then descended gently at a forward speed of only twenty miles an hour. In addition to the lifting power which the new plane possesses, the reduced ground speed of which it is capable is also of supreme importance, in that it will be the means of preventing many landing accidents which are constantly sending planes to the shops for repairs. The new machine is still in process of development, but is described in reports as the most successful of its type yet tested and as possessing all the advantages of the helicopter without involving the complicated problems which have kept any helicopter from becoming a success. We read in Science Service's Daily Science News Bulletin (Washington):

"The autogiro is an airplane that has had its wings clipped, as it were, and it has a second propeller on a vertical axis above the fuselage which exerts a force downward tending to keep the craft from falling. This vertically mounted propeller is similar in shape to the conventional propeller with which an airplane is equipped, but it has a diameter equal nearly to the wing-spread of the craft itself.

Therefore, if it lost its velocity of the airplane may result in a catastrophe.

"In the autogiro, however, the sustaining lift is produced by revolving wings on a vertical shaft projecting from the fuselage of an ordinary airplane. However, although it may look like a helicopter, it does not really belong to that family, since the sustaining propellers of the helicopter are operated directly by the engine, whereas in the autogiro the wind produced by the motion of the aircraft actuates the blades. If the craft had not been christened autogiro, it might be called an airplane with revolving wings.

"It is claimed that the autogiro is not affected materially by loss of speed. If there is an engine failure, a sudden 'nose up' or a very sharp turn, the horizontal flight of the craft may be interrupted and it may be forced toward the ground, but the sustaining blades will sustain it in the air and enable it to alight at a very low speed. The stalling of the engine while in flight over rough ground, which would be fatal to an ordinary airplane, would be a mishap of minor importance to an autogiro. On the other hand, it is admitted that the autogiro will probably be unable to do any looping or other stunts such as are performed by fighting airplanes."

The First British Gold Coinage

When Mr. Churchill decided to revert to the gold standard, of which we have heard so much lately, he was following a precedent far older than his. The first gold coins, suspended, for the very first coins minted in Britain were struck in gold. This ancient currency is older than the Notman Conquest, older than the Saxon kings of the Heptarchy, older even than the Roman Conquest itself. For when Julius Caesar invaded Britain in the year 55 B.C. the Britons had so far advanced in civilization that they had a coinage of their own, not of silver or bronze, or of lead or tin, both of which metals have been tried, but of gold. And these gold coins were not copied from any Roman model, nor from the currency of the rich Greek merchant colonies of the Mediterranean, as were the primitive currencies of the South of France and of Spain. The ancient British coinage came by the overland route from distant Macedonia.

Alexander the Great succeeded in the year 323 B.C. to the throne of Macedonia, which had already been raised to position of power and wealth by his father Philip. Under his rule Macedonia became strong and wealthy; he established the country on a well-organized basis, and among other things reformed the coinage, and actually tried bimetallic. He struck a very handsome gold coin called the stater, with a beautiful head of Ares on one side, and on the other a very elegant prancing horse, ridden by a diminutive cavalier. Philip was rich, and his staters spread far and wide. Now, Macedonia was not a maritime State like Greece, and although the stater was in free circulation in Athens and elsewhere, it spread also towards the barbarian north, inland, up the trade routes of the Danube and the Elbe—regions unknown to the Greeks—among the white tribes who were then in the Iron Age, and so across Europe down the Rhine into Gaul.

And the Gauls, who were of similar blood and language to the Britons, after their great military raids into the south and east of Europe, brought back with them as loot bagfuls of these staters, which passed into circulation in their own country, and soon spread across the Channel to Britain, where the natives set to copy them. The first attempt was successful, though the coins were some fifteen or twenty per cent less in weight than Philip's, but it was not long before the stater degenerated; the horse and his sprightly cavalier, becoming backed, and gradually his legs apart, and in the later ones a horizontal line is all that remains of the body.

The Roman Conquest took this slight influence from the stater and soon after Caesar British coins appear with the names of native but copied on the Roman model inscriptions in Latin.

Argymen Give Evidence at Coal Probe

of Employment Causes Discontent and Depression Among Miners.

ST. JOHN'S, N. S., Nov. 26.—(By Canadian Press)—The Royal Commission investigating the coal industry of Scotia, Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, man, will hold its first night on to-night. The official statement follows:

This morning the Coal Commission in evidence by Father M. A. McAvoy, Reverend Dr. MacAvoy, of St. John's, and Reverend A. J. McDonald, of Dominion No. 6. Father McAvoy, stated among other things that of employment, especially at Nos. 2 and No. 4, caused some content and depression among the contributing causes were the feeling of mistrust and at times there had considerable agitation on the part of the men.

"The remedy for the difficulty was to have mutual goodwill and to foster a proper understanding between the men and the Company. He felt over the circumstances were examined, the men would abide by his decision.

He described as an honest and generous people, who easily moved, do not get angry and followed wise counsel. The cost of living was high in the mining districts, and if the men got employment, the wages might not be so high.

"He saw very few copies of the Times Labor Herald, from which he thought the effect of the strike was to work effective. He stated the company should be more generous when it was necessary, and when they were more inclined to accept any statements made to it. He believes if the public should be informed more was done in the past, should have been into confidence with the operators.

McAvoy, Baptist clericman of St. John's, stated his impression of conflict was caused by mutual suspicion, which could be removed if the men were given more information of the state of the industry. He was convinced by his there is no trouble.

Bad Living Conditions

Following official statement the evidence heard this morning was given to the following:

McAvoy, in closing his testimony this morning he stated

He felt that the Company should not have the houses or the stores. He stated that in his opinion every man should own his house. While the rents might be raised under private owners, the house would be placed in proper repair.

"Rev. A. J. MacDonald, of Dominion No. 6, also gave evidence at this morning's session. He stated there was much distrust and suspicion of the Company held by the men, caused in part by actions of the Company, instancing the case when it stated it would effect a reduction and later, receded from that position. He felt a third party should come in with the company and the miners at any time when conflict arose.

"This afternoon Hugh Rennie, a shooter and leader of Reserve, was the first witness. Mr. Rennie placed before the Commission some local grievances, and testified to some degree concerning housing conditions and the attitude of the Company officials towards encouragement of sport among the men.

Sanitary Conditions Poor.

Dr. D. J. Hartigan, who practised at New Waterford since 1913, stated that sanitary conditions there were not good, and that as a remedy a sewerage system should be installed at once. The open drains in the town were a menace to the public health.

"The New Waterford hospital was built at a cost of $80,000, of which $35,000 was contributed by the Company, the upkeep being looked after by the Province, the County, the Town and the Company and the men.

"The people now were impoverished, and before the strike some had found it hard to struggle along, though as a general rule they could not be described as impoverished.

"During this year the health conditions were fairly good. Poor health conditions had something to do with the feeling of unrest which prevailed in his town. Some actions of the Compensation Board were contributory factors to that feeling. As far as he knew there were no Communists in New Waterford.

"Dr. Sullivan, Health Officer of the town of Glace Bay, stated the death rate there this year was 110 per 1,000 persons. The rate of Canada was 27 per 1,000. Housing conditions and the absence of sewers were two factors which demanded remedy immediately. The houses were small and congested, and the witness suggested there should be a toilet and bath added to all of them. The death rate was abnormal this year owing to the warm summer, the stagnant water, and a very bad supply of milk. He stated also that the men should own the houses in which they live.

"Dr. Kendall, recalled to-day, was proceeding to give a review of events leading to the formation of the Dominion Coal Company and the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, when the Commission adjourned to sit this evening at 7.30.

"It is expected that all other witnesses called by the men will be heard to-morrow."

Viscount Rothermere ON BRINGING THE CONSERVATIVE PARTY BACK TO CONSERVATISM.

"Although the Conservative Party won the last General Election, we have not a Conservative Government in office," says Viscount Rothermere in the Daily Mail. He cites the Pensioners Tax, the Coal Subsidy, and other decisions of the Government in proof of this statement, and goes on to assert:

"For my part, I should much prefer a Government of frank, avowed Socialists. Mr. MacDonald, Lord Haldane, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Snowden, and Mr. Hodgkin to this Government of underhand Socialism. And I am sure that this is the opinion of the British electorate.

"The fact is becoming almost daily clearer that, unless the Conservative Party can be brought back to Conservatism, there will soon be no Conservative Party.

"It is to survive as an effective power of the party must be brought back to the principles which guided the great leaders of the past. This can be done by the local associations. Every local association ought to ascertain for itself what are the exact views of its local member or candidate.

"If they neglect their duty in this matter all indications go to show that their financial resources will rapidly disappear and their organization dwindle to vanishing point.

"The responsibility for the state of alarm and confusion which now prevails within the Conservative Party rests with no one but the present Government. They were placed in office to carry a well-defined mandate. The message from the country was unmistakable. It was to combat Socialism; to restore British industry; to lighten the burden of taxation by a ruthless reduction of national expenditure; and to do away with all dangerous and costly over-sea commitments.

"For these plain purposes the country furnished them with a majority so overwhelming that the Government needed nothing more than ordinary diligence and devotion to discharge their task.

"Instead, they set up a Government

"Interrogated as to whether or not he thought the press generally treated the strike fairly, Dr. McAvoy stated he thought it did, and he did not believe the strike was used as a political advantage for any party.

Storm and Stress in the Arctic Hudson Bay VESSEL'S TRYING EXPERIENCE.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Nov. 26.—Fog, mirages, faulty soundings and stormy weather played cruel tricks with the Hudson's Bay Company trading vessel Baychimo during its long voyage in the Arctic, and it was only through a strange turn of fate that she was able to reach here safely after being imprisoned for twenty-nine days in the ice off Herschel Island.

After being caught in the ice late in August, twelve attempts were made to buck the heavy fields without success. The strongest gales roaring down out of the North, failed to break up or shift the huge pack, and the Baychimo was helpless in its grip. Several times the vessel worked its way clear of the floes only to be held

82 P.C. Attendance in B.C. Schools

VANCOUVER, B.C., Nov. 17.—British Columbia has more than 96,000 children in her schools, with an average daily attendance of 82 per cent. This proportion has been growing from 56 per cent, when British Columbia joined Confederation. There were only about 1,000 pupils in 1871.

The cost to the Provincial Government of its department of education is a little over $3,000,000 annually covering 760 school districts.

Cities of the first class, such as Vancouver, now receive $400 from the department for each teacher employed; those of the second class get $320; of the third class $265, and in rural municipalities and organized rural schools, the grant is $250 for each teacher.

brated and frequent epitaph on the landlord of the Lion, whose son 'keeps on the business still.' At St. Mary's, Cheltenham, there is an epitaph on John Higgs, pig-kilner, which begins:—

Here lies John Higgs, A famous man for killing pigs, For killing pigs was his delight. Both morning, afternoon, and night.

At St. Michael's, Eastcheap, there is an epitaph on Bob Preston, 1730, drawer at the renowned Boar's Head, which recommends his virtues to other potboys: at Great Waltham, Worcester-shire, this:—

Here old John Randall lies Who counting from his tale Lived three score years and ten. Such virtue was in Ale. Ale was his meat. Ale was his drink. Ale did his heart revive. And if he could have drunk his Ale He still had been alive. But died January 1699.

At Edwallon, Notts, is a similar but briefer one on a sociable old lady, Rebecca Freeland, 1741:—

She drank good ale, good punch, and wine, And lived to the age of 99.

The most famous epitaph mentioning liquor may be the one in Winchester Cathedral to the Hampshire Grenadier who died from drinking small beer, the passer-by being recommended to take it strong. On the frontiers of civilization this naive candor persisted later.

Our own land is not entirely overlooked in this collection:— "She done her best," is on a child's stone in New York. I doubt the authenticity of the American dentist's epitaph:— Stranger! Approach this spot with gravity! John Brown is filling his last cavity. But this from the Far West has the right ring:— To Lem S. Frame, who during his life shot 39 Indians, whom the Lord delivered into his hands, and who was looking forward to making up his hundred before the end of the year, when he fell asleep in Jesus at his house at Hawk's Ferry, March 27, 1843.

Really offensive epitaphs cause Mr. Squire a measure of astonishment. Those "abusing the dead, or other people, or even the parson, exposing faults and satisfying grudges" are not absent from this curious assembly!

"There is a depressing prudence about the remark on John Guley's tomb at Crofton Hackett, 'in expectation of the last day. What sort of man he was that Day will discover.' But there is no prudence about this, at Potterne, Wilts:—

Here lies Mary, the wife of John Ford, We hope her soul is gone to the Lord, But if for Hell she has changed her life She had better be there than be John Ford's wife.

On some stones hell is even indicated as deceased's destination! There is an epitaph at Bideford which reflects on the lady in the next grave; there is one at Wolverhampton which says that the dead died from over-eating; there is one in Devon which abuses the parson for neglecting the deceased in his last illness. As Mr. Beale mildly says, 'Some of the epitaphs are by no means eulogistic, and would, of course, not be tolerated in these times.' It is not only the abusive which would not be 'tolerated' now. At Eastingwold there is this really fine, and obviously just, tribute to a woman:—

Anne Harrison, well-known by the name of Nanna Ran Dan, who chaste but no prude; and her free was no harlot. By principle virtuous, by education a Protestant; her freedom made her liable to censure, while her extensive charities made her esteemed. Her tongue she was unable to control, but the rest of her members she kept in subjection. After a life of eighty years thus spent, she died, 1748.

Here is a complimentary candor; the most terrible example of the other kind is to be found at Horsley Down, Cumberland. The woman's brother, who had survived her husband, put it up. He admitted all her virtues, but stated her vices at great length. I can not quote it all. Here are extracts:—

Her husband and child; whom she loved, Seldom saw her countenance without a disgusting frown. Whilst she received visitors, whom she despised, With an endearing smile. The talents in which she principally excelled Were difference of opinion, and discovering flaws and imperfections.

He had not, in the whole, enjoyed two years Of matrimonial comfort.

This was put up as a warning to wives. Warnings used to be quite common. On one city stone there are instructions about preventing fire, deceased having been burnt to death.

"Mr. Beale does not classify the epitaphs which say something they do not mean but there are several of them. Quite rightly the most striking is Irish. It is to be found at Moncknewton, near Drogheda:—

Erected by Patrick Kelly, of the town of Drogheda, Mariner, in memory of his Posterity. No source is given for this:—

In memory of 'Who died of cholera morbus, Caused by eating green fruit, In the certain hope of a blessed immortality. Reader, so thou and do likewise.

But his one is in Woolwich Church-yard:— Sacred to the memory of Major James Brush, Royal Artillery, 'who was killed by the accidental discharge of a pistol by his orderly, 14th April, 1821. Well done, good and faithful servant!'

The evidence of John Murphy was taken, after which T. A. Hall, Chairman of the Highroads' Commission, was examined by Mr. Cramm, Counsel for the Crown. Further adjournment was taken until Thursday next.

Epitaphs of a Past Age

Epitaphs are perhaps a better index to the common thought and feeling of an age than the more carefully wrought literature. "Most of the loveliest epitaphs in the language," says Mr. J. C. Squire, "are to be found in books, not on monuments." "Spoon-River Anthology" is hardly admired for the beauty of its thought or the comfort it administers to bereaved relatives. What Masters did for the little mid-Western hamlet of his imagining we find that our British ancestors really did for themselves. A new anthology, "Epitaphs: Graveyard Humor and Eulogy," compiled by W. H. Beale, proves this. A taste of its quality is given us in The Observer (London) by Mr. Squire, who observes that "our ancestors, when speech was freer and acceptance of the social order more general, and candor was less embarrassed by snobbery, hypocrisy, sensitiveness, good taste, and other virtues and vices let themselves go in a manner completely foreign to us." Perhaps nothing brings us nearer the real heart of these ancient peoples or shows us the distance we have traveled from them. Mr. Squire asserts—

"Their frankness achieved sometimes a pathos, sometimes a humor, sometimes even a ferocity completely absent from modern epitaphs, in which discretion has effaced differences. We write 'In loving memory,' and leave it at that. The idea of deliberate waggery on the tombstone of a dead friend or acquaintance appals us. We don't mind cherishing his memory in conversation by recalling his delightful peculiarities, but we would not dream of putting them on his tombstone. Even a gentle wit we

Mr. North Wind was blowing across the Pleasant Pasture, scattering before him the withered leaves. All the Little People of the Sunny Meadow and Shady Forest had scurried down for a log's winter's nap. On the south side of the Old Duck Pond at the edge of the marsh the muskrats' mud house-tops rose above the blue water. Down in the warm ground Woody Woodchuck was snoring away, his nose folded between his two front paws.

"Dear me," sighed Little Jack Rabbit as he hopped along a narrow path that led from one clover patch to another, which in the happy summer time the little sleeping woodchuck was wont to follow. "Most all my friends are asleep in their snug quarters. Soon the ground will be covered with snow. Then I must be careful not to leave footprints for Danny Fox to follow," and away hopped the bunny boy, clippety clip, tipptery lip, his little knapsack bouncing up and down on his back and his red-striped candy cane swinging from his left paw.

As he stopped beside a clump of dwarf goldenrod whose leaves, once a vivid green, but now a sombre brown, still clung to the stalks, he heard Professor Jim Crow call from a near-by tree:

"Hello, little bunny, what do you think When the snow fills each hollow and cranny and chink. The small feather people will gather to eat. And maybe some folk who have four little feet?"

"I don't know," answered the little rabbit. "But I suppose Loving Mother Nature will take care of them."

"Yes, Mother Nature will take care of them," answered the wise old black bird. "First she sees that the dead stems of the goldenrod are closely packed about with dead leaves to help them stand up against the whirling clouds of snow when winter comes. See the ostrich-like plumes, full of seeds, that hang from the stalks. Here the goldfinches and chickadees will gather in January to find food. With their eager beaks they will pluck the seeds, or rather those that the winter wind has scattered over the fallen snow."

"I used to feel sorry for the winter birds," exclaimed the amazed little rabbit, "but now that I have learned how well Loving Mother Nature takes care of them, I'm quite happy," and he would have hopped away, maybe right home to the dear Old Bramble Patch to tell Lady Love all that he had heard, if Professor Jim Crow had not suddenly exclaimed:

"Wait a moment. I have more to tell you of the winter store. That Mother Nature lays away For little people day by day."

He heard Professor Jim Crow call from a near-by tree:

and opening his Wisdom Book to page 23, the wise old bird began:

"Every tree has a thousand cones That are packed with tiny seeds, Which the wind will scatter here and there For little people's needs."

"Goodness me, how wonderful," laughed the bunny boy, and in the next story you shall hear what happened after that."

Newfoundlanders Abroad

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir.—In looking through the columns of your widely circulated paper the words Newfoundlanders Abroad or Another Successful Newfoundlanders at times meet the eye, and to any Newfoundlanders in foreign climes it affords a thrill of pleasure to take up the home paper and find one of his countrymen proving his worth. It argues well for the ability and determination of Newfoundlanders abroad, and it is still a greater pleasure to meet and know some of them. I have been in the States something over 12 months and have met many of my countrymen, some of them very successful. Recently I has been my pleasure to meet a few of our boys on Fisher's Island on the big development project here, who are proving a credit to this country. Their ability and faithfulness are highly appreciated by the company they work for, The F. S. Ruth Co., gulf course construction, of 120 Broadway, New York.

Mr. Will Rees and Mr. Gus Galgay, it may be remembered, left St. John's with the first lot of Newfoundlanders for Bermuda in October, 1922. They started with the F. S. Ruth Co. as laborers, but their ability was quickly noted. After a short period they were appointed foremen. They gave the best of service there and in May, 1925, they were sent to Fisher's Island, N. Y. Mr. Rees on golf course construction and Mr. Galgay on road construction. Mr. Galgay, as he is generally called, has full charge of the new 18 hole course as assistant Superintendent. Quite a job in the U.S.A. for one of our boys.

Mr. Galgay is in full charge of all road construction. They are well thought of by all classes of workmen, and they sure do get the best out of their men. Hustlers? Yes I should say they are. Mr. Thos. Christopher has been appointed foreman with the Northern Water System Co. here. It speaks well of Newfoundlanders out of a total of 4 on the Island.

We have Mr. Rees on the golf course, Mr. Galgay on construction and Mr. Christopher as foreman. Does it show Newfoundlanders have ability? I should say it does. Thanking you for space, Mr. Editor, and wishing your esteemed paper every success.

Yours sincerely,
NEWFOUNDLANDER,

Criminals "Who's Who"

SCOTLAND'S YARD'S ONLY NEWS-PAPER

The greatest foe of the criminal is the inter-communication. Thus, in the first half of the last century the electric telegraph did more than anything else to reduce crime making the capture of the criminal easier and surer.

Slowdays, by wireless, the world can be informed in a few moments of the commission of a crime, not quite often, of the personality of the criminal. His escape from the clutches of the law becomes ever more difficult.

At the same time, were it not for the "Who's Who" of the most meticulous registration, even these modern scientific aids to capture would be less effective.

A Record of Misdeeds.

To know what and whom to look for is half the battle, and it is not unusual when a crime is committed in Scotland Yard to be in prior possession of information which narrows the field of search to very small limits.

In other words, they recognize a man's style, just as the art critic or the book reviewer may "spot" the anonymous artist or author by certain unmistakable signs in his work.

To this end the police press is a vast aid. Many a man who things as it were, wearing the shoes of invisibility, and walking about in perfect safety, is, in fact, treading on volcano every day of his life.

Take the case of Patrick Mahon, the book-keeper, smartly-dressed, plausible ruffian who murdered Edith Kaye, whose doings and misdeeds filled the columns of the newspapers for weeks.

The police had had his doings and misdeeds recorded in their newspapers, certainly for months, if not years, before Mahon attracted the attention of the general public.

For Police Eyes Only.

Probably he would have been as much surprised as anybody had he been allowed to peruse the close-kept files of "Informations," formerly the "Hue and Cry," a paper issued daily by Scotland Yard, or "The Police Gazette" in which the fullest information regarding his activities was recorded.

Needless to say, the general public gets even a peep at these things. For a civilian to possess a key to an offence under the Official Secrets Act. Printed at Scotland Yard, "Informations" is distributed by color-cyclists to all police stations in London metropolitan area, and is responsible for many a capture which seems miraculous to be unaided.

The zealous policeman makes this part of his daily reading. It consists mainly of details of current events in summarized form, and only information is given as will be helpful to capture. Everything else is ruthlessly expunged.

"Who's Who in the Books."

The Police Gazette is much more expansive, and is issued only twice weekly. There the deeds of criminals down to the police are set forth, and get into its pages a criminal must be "somebody," a criminal with possibilities—one who may any day rob or commit a murder. The editor has no space for the sneak-thief who steals a sick man's grapes, the washing of the line, or the dog from the doorstep.

In fact, a sort of "Who's Who in Crime" and many residents in a street neighbourhood would be surprised to find therein the portrait, birthplace, convictions, and most important of all, the well-known misdeeds of some quite respectable-looking and even attractive neighbour from the police have long had "on the books."

SMITH—COX.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, 19th inst., when Mr. William Cox was united in matrimony to Miss Martha Smith in a ceremony being performed at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, South Side, Rev. A. B. S. Stirling officiating. The bride, who looked charming in a dress of peach charmeuse satin with pearl and sequin trimming, with black picture hat and carrying a bouquet of white chrysanthemums and maiden hair fern, entered the church leaning on the arm of her father who performed the duties of father giver. The duties of best man were ably performed by Mr. J. Smith, brother of the bride. After the ceremony the bridal party drove to the residence of the bride's parents where a reception was held. After supper, names and dancing were indulged in by a large number of guests. The presents received were numerous and costly showing the popularity of the bride and groom. May their married life be full of joy is the wish of their many friends.—COM.

The Downfall of Caillaux

One of the biggest political sensations known to France in a generation is predicted by the New York World's Paris correspondent if Joseph Caillaux, former Minister of Finance, carries the fight to his opponents and brings into the French Senate the names and records of certain French bankers who are accused of speculating in francs and of transferring funds abroad, which is contrary to law. According to this writer, the resignation on October 27 of the French Cabinet, including M. Caillaux, was a nip-and-tuck affair, and might not have happened if France's Finance Minister had been able to take action against certain French bankers before they caused his downfall. "Beneath the battle of politics resulting in the resignation of the Painleve Government, following the refusal of M. Caillaux to resign alone," adds The Wall Street Journal, "lies a battle between banks." The powerful Banque de Paris, we are told, "has undoubtedly been working for the overthrow of Caillaux, who on taking office last April transferred to the State's exchange operations, formerly executed through that institution, to Lazare Freres." Thus for the second time within six months, a French Cabinet has been wrecked on the rocks of finance. Raymond G. Carroll, Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, informs us that "one of the first steps of the new Cabinet will be to reopen the debt negotiations with the United States." Continues Mr. Carroll: "Joseph Caillaux's is a name that will live long for its many political deals. In the last generation no public man has had a career so varied, so shot through with sensational episodes.

"The Finance Minister's Waterloo came when he began to circulate 'Informations' concerning a leading banker. At first the banker did not believe that M. Caillaux was his secret enemy. Then came the revelation, based upon conclusive evidence. "Things began to come out wrong for M. Caillaux. His audacious mentality at last had found its master; he was always outnumbered. His debt mission to America ended in a deadlock; his attempt to gain the ears of his own political party at Nice cost him its political backing; and, finally, his own Cabinet associates demanded his resignation, and when he refused, they collectively resigned and forced him into isolation.

"France is not going to crash because M. Caillaux has fallen. France is a nation where high intelligence is the rule, rather than the exception, and dropping M. Caillaux is clearing the atmosphere."

The immediate cause of the Cabinet upset, says an Associated Press dispatch from Paris, was Caillaux's refusal to adopt his party's plan for the restoration of the country's finances, based upon taking 10 per cent. of the acquired wealth of the country—a capital levy—for the Treasury. In other words, while the previous Cabinet was overthrown because Premier Herriot championed a capital levy, the Painleve Cabinet resigned because its Finance Minister rejected such a plan.

M. Caillaux, writes Hugh O'Connor in the New York World, hoped to remain long enough in power to balance the budget by increasing taxes. Instead, he was compelled to raise the salaries of all government employees, and the French Government added to his troubles by carrying on expensive wars in Syria and in Morocco. While no Paris correspondent ventures to say how much direct influence M. Caillaux's failure to make a debt settlement at Washington had on his fall, Edwin L. James, Paris correspondent of the New York Times, declares that "a successful imaginable event, would have kept him in office for some time." At the moment, adds Mr. James, "Caillaux is definitely 'out,' but national politics has not heard the last of this most romantic of all French statesmen. He now returns to the Senate perfectly free, and not without friends and supporters."

Did You Dread the Dark?
FEARS THAT IMPERIL HEALTH.
(By A DOCTOR.)

It is not surprising that children should be afraid of the dark. The dread of unseen dangers is a racial instinct, and is common to both young and old. True, there are many children who are quite indifferent to darkness, but most of them people the enveloping gloom of night with "hallucinating and beckoning shadows/dims"—with the most vivid reproductions of those images which to them are sufficiently terrifying by daylight. There are many grown-ups who retain for the whole of their life the fear of being alone in the dark. Many parents of the timid, unimaginative kind seem to be under the impression that their children's natural fear of the dark is a sign of cowardice, and seek to subjugate this dread by the most ill-advised, often cruel, and always disastrous methods.

BRILLIANT COMEDY WELL ACCEP AT CASINO LAST NIGHT.

Despite adverse weather conditions, a fairly large audience was in evidence at the Casino last night to witness the Balfour Stock Co.'s offering of that popular comedy "Baby Mine." The story of the play hinges around a young married couple. The laughs are provided at the rate of two a minute. The leading roles are in the capable hands of Loreta Nicholson and Charles D. Hiser, who give finished performances of their roles. Billy Phillips as the much worried Jimmie Jenks was seen to good advantage. His comedy is real and original. Lillian Hampton is particularly good. Minor roles were taken by Fred Shaver, Valmore Balfour and Marie Fischer who give good account of themselves.

Everybody's Friend
TO THE CIVIC ELECTORS OF ST. JOHN'S.

LADIES & GENTLEMEN:—As you were kind enough to give me your valued support on the many previous occasions I sought election at your hands, I have decided to again solicit your esteem and confidence for four years more as one of your civic representatives.

James T. Martin
EVERYBODY'S FRIEND.

3rd TIME.
THIS IS MY THIRD TIME OF ASKING.

That my actions at the Council Board the first time, were appreciated, over eleven hundred people testified at the last election, and now at the request of a majority of those electors, I have again decided to comply with their request, and to ask you Ladies and Gentlemen voters, for a continuation of that confidence at the coming election. Should I again be elected, I will pledge myself to help carry out to the best of my ability, any sane scheme that will tend to the making this my native town a brighter, better and cleaner city, having due regard to the cost to those who will have to pay for it.

A word in season, however. Should those contemplated improvements be carried out, I am convinced that extra taxation will have to be put on an already overtaxed people, for I am one with Mayor Cook who, a short time ago told the people that they cannot make brick without straw.

Thanking you in anticipation, yours truly,

Miss Genevieve was a talkative maid. Who scattered her secrets wherever she strayed: She grabbed and blabbed every tale that she heard, Repeated it all by the line and the word: She carried it back to the party concerned. And always gave out where the story she'd learned.

Now a friend of mine worked for Miss Genevieve's dad. And he needed a raise, but no courage he had. To go in with a grin on his face and demand More coin of the realm for the work of his hand. So, knowing Miss Genevieve Steve and her ways, I ventured to say I could get him that raise.

That evening I said to Miss Genevieve Steve: "Don't breathe to a soul this deep secret. I give. You know, my friend Joe. Well, an offer he's had. At double the money he gets from your dad. That's promotion he cannot refuse very well. But, remember, you've promised that you wouldn't tell."

The very next morning Miss Genevieve's dad Said to Joe: "I am told a large offer you've had. Now wait, till I state what I'm willing to do. I've decided to double your wages for you. What you're worth to another, I'll pay you, instead." And Joe gasped his thanks, but he almost fell dead.

"How did you work it?" he asked, and I grinned: "Give a gossip the story you'd spread on the wind! Comes the time it's no crime a known falling to use. And a recognized tell-tale will scatter your news. Feed the gossip with fuel. You'll find that it pays! Miss Genevieve Steve talked you into that raise."

A Crime of the Secret Service

The book which Mrs. Stan Harding has published under the title of "The Underworld of State" is of deep and varied interest, and deserves to be widely read. Mrs. Harding suffered for five months the worst tortures that could be inflicted on an innocent lady under sentence of death in a Bolshevik prison as a foreign spy. That she escaped alive, if broken in health, was due in part to the fortitude under suffering which is sometimes found even in the most fragile of women, but chiefly to the accidental turn of the political wheel which procured her release, with other political prisoners, before her strength had finally given way. Her book gives a vivid picture of her experiences in Russia. It is a picture drawn with great restraint, and, apart from its human interest, it is necessary to a due appreciation of the quality and enormity of the crime of which Mrs. Harding was the victim. Incidentally, the book shows how the vice and brutality of the Tsarist regime have reproduced themselves under its successor, in mockery of the cause of revolution. Above all, it teaches an incisive lesson—underscored by Mr. Bertrand Russell in his Introduction—on the wickedness, and also the utility, of the international spy service and the utter helplessness of its victims. It is the story of a crime perpetrated by a secret service agent, and of the struggle—fitful, up to now—of the victim to obtain justice against either agent or principals, in the face of the powers of darkness that are leagued together to protect criminals of this class. Those who read the whole story will understand, if they did not before, why journalists and members of Parliament have laboured unsuccessfully for three years past to get this crime publicly confessed and atoned for. I hope that the publishers have taken suitable measures to get the book circulated in the United States of America, where the true facts of the case are grievously misunderstood.

So much has been written on the case that there is no occasion to go over the whole ground again now, but its cardinal features cannot be too strongly impressed on the public mind. After the Armistice, Mrs. Harding had occasion to go to Berlin on private business of her own. There she made the acquaintance of Mrs. Marguerite Harrison, who was at Berlin amongst the entourage of the American Military Mission, and was ostensibly a journalist and secretly an employee of the American Military Intelligence Department. She was a lady eminently qualified to every respect for such work. In 1920 Mrs. Harding, whose curiosity to see for herself exactly what was going on in Russia, obtained a commission from the New York World to represent it in that country (she had previously acted as correspondent of the Daily News at Berlin), and by means of introduction from the "Red" elements in Germany, obtained the necessary passports from the Soviet Foreign Office, and departed for Russia as a unsuspecting of danger as a young mouse walking into the first trap it has ever come across.

A few months previously Mrs. Harrison had entered Russia in pursuit of her professional activities, had been caught, sized up, and sentenced to death, and had been relieved on consenting to remain in Moscow and give the Russian police any information they wanted about foreigners visiting Russia—one of the common tricks of this dirty trade. In her confession she has since explained that she only saved the Russians false information. As she has retained her reputation and popularity in her own country, it must be presumed that to the American mind, ignorant of the implications of this sort of work, the whole proceeding only presents itself as something particularly "cute" and entirely creditable to Mrs. Harrison. What may have happened to other foreigners against whom this lady gave false information only the Russian police can say. What happened to Mrs. Stan Harding is only too clear. Mrs. Harrison was presumably asked by the police for information about Mrs. Harding, and that lady applied for passports. She told them that Mrs. Harding was a British secret-service agent, adding, apparently, other cock-and-bull stories, the nature of which was indicated when Mrs. Harding was interrogated during her imprisonment, as may be seen in her book. The consequence was that on arrival at the frontier Mrs. Harding was met by an attentive gentleman who represented himself as on the staff of the Soviet Foreign Office, but was in fact the head of the Foreign Espionage Department of the Cheka. This gentleman—a Polish Jew named Mogilewsky—politely escorted the unsuspecting lady via Petrograd to Moscow, where, within a few hours of her arrival, she was lodged in the Lubianka gaol, without an indication of what was in the wind till the prison doors had closed upon her. The crime of Marguerite Harrison was thus consummated.

The motive on the Russian side for deceiving into Russia a supposed British spy has been explained before, but may be mentioned again, as it is necessary to a full appreciation of the character of the whole affair. The object was to catch the lady and use her exactly as Mrs. Harrison had been used.

used. For that purpose, after having been notified that her sentence was death, she was kept under the torture of solitary confinement and the vilest prison conditions month after month, with the inducement continually held out to her that she could obtain her liberty at any moment if she would act as a Soviet informer. Unlike Mrs. Harrison, she preferred death to giving false information about innocent persons, and she was not in a position to give any other kind, even if she had desired to give it. From her detailed story it looks rather as if when her gaolers last hope of breaking her spirit and reducing her to such a mental condition that she would buy release at any price, they began to have doubts as to whether she really was a British Government agent. From this point of view, it is perhaps significant that shortly before Mrs. Harding's release Mrs. Harrison herself was again arrested and imprisoned on the charge of having given false information to the Soviet Government which had led to many arrests. This explanation was broadcast by wireless from Russia and published in America in due course.

Readers of this journal will hardly need to be reminded what has been the attitude of the British and American Governments towards Mrs. Harrison since her release. In the first instance, the late Lord Curzon—the only prominent politician who has handled the case without discredit to himself—was able, at a price, to extract from the Soviet Government compensation to the amount of £3,000 for their share in the outrage. This amount was modest in view of the general circumstances of the case: £10,000 was obtained at the same time for a widow whose husband had been officially murdered in Russia. But it is a fair presumption that Lord Curzon was asking for no more than £2,000 for Mrs. Harding. Lord Curzon took into consideration that in their treatment of this supposed British spy the Russian authorities were the dupes of another international spy, and that Mrs. Harding's real cause of complaint lay against Mrs. Harrison and her employers. Manifestly that is the just and equitable view. Could this case be adjudicated upon by some international tribunal, like that of The Hague, competent to sit in judgment in this case could only be that the American Government, by the wrongful act of its agent, was answerable for the wrong done to Mrs. Harding, and that it ought not only to pay her adequate compensation, but to refund the £3,000 which the Soviet Government has had to pay as the result of the imposition practised upon them by the American agent.

Since Lord Curzon left the Foreign Office the history of the case is a history of ineffectual but hitherto futile efforts by the journalists' organizations and by M.P.'s of all parties to induce the British Government to submit Mrs. Stan Harding's claims officially to the consideration of the Government of the United States. In the first instance, a sort of hint was given to Mrs. Harding that she had better go to the American Embassy. She took the hint, and the result was illuminating. In carefully-worded diplomatic language she was given to understand that her case was regarded with sympathy, and that £10,000 would not be an extravagant estimate of her claim to compensation, but that the first thing necessary was that she must hold her tongue about Mrs. Harrison. The phrase was used: "America will protect her agent." Assuming that any Government has the slightest obligation to protect an agent who commits an outrage that nearly meant death to the innocent subject of a friendly country, the question remains, why should the British Government protect America's agent? That is virtually what our Government has been doing, deliberately and of set policy, and under successive Foreign Ministers of different political complexion for two years and more. In the particular case of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald it has been done in open, cynical defiance of the Minister's express election pledge.

What is the explanation of this attitude? It has been suggested that the British Government is precluded from making any representations to the American by having received for its own use information furnished by Mrs. Harrison to her own Government. A denial of this was the case, though a denial of a guarded and limited sort, was given by the Foreign Office in Parliament. Whether it was the case or not seems immaterial. We are dealing here with a question of abstract right and justice, not with any technical legality in which a plea of "estoppel" could be raised. Even if the British Government was, as a matter of courtesy, furnished with Mrs. Harrison's reports, that does not make the British Government Mrs. Harrison's principal, or make it in any way a party to, or responsible for, any wicked act that the agent might commit against a British subject. It certainly would not justify successive representatives of the Foreign Office going out of their way to speak of this abominable outrage as a personal dispute between two women with which His Majesty's Government could not concern itself. In effect, this Galileo-like cynicism has been twice uttered from the Government benches in the House of Commons.

What is the conclusion? It is that there is a tacit understanding among Governments that when they are at peace they will not raise unpleasant questions about one another's spies. In time of war it is, of course, understood that if caught, spies will be shot at sight. But as between friends spying is a recognized game played by gentlemen according to the rules—the counterpart in diplomacy of the honour which is alleged to prevail among thieves. If you catch your friend's spy at work on your ground, you must tell him to move on and pretend to his employer that you have never seen him. You can rely on your friend's honour as a gentleman to do the same if a like occasion arises on his premises. It becomes, in short, the duty of a Government not only to protect its own spies but to protect the spies of its friends, even if they go the length of Mrs. Harrison when, for her own benefit, she denounced an innocent Englishwoman to the merciless Bolsheviks as a British Government spy.

From top to bottom it is a dirty, dishonest business built on lying and treachery, and fertile in crime and even greater disasters. In his introduction to Mrs. Stan Harding's book, Mr. Bertrand Russell shows, from the unpublished Serbian documents, how the Serajevo murders—the occasion, if not the cause, of the most awful war in history—were the outcome of secret service plots and counterplots. He goes so far as to say that "The Great War was fought to protect the Serbian and Russian Secret Service from exposure." He points out that with the establishment of the League of Nations the only excuse for international espionage has been removed, which is absolutely true. It is certain that if nations unite in agreement not to make war upon one another, and in token of that agreement, abandon all preparations for making war on one another, international espionage as at present conducted will be as much a proof of insincerity and double dealing as secret arming. I hope that justice will yet be done by the United States to Mrs. Stan Harding. But whether it is or not, the story of her case should provoke universal disgust with the practices out of which it has arisen and a determination to put an end to them at the first opportunity.—Truth.

Cod-Liver Oil Freed of Bad Taste

The bad taste of cod-liver oil has been removed by Drs. Harry B. Rubin and Casimir Funk, biochemists, who are told by Science Service's Daily Science News Bulletin (Washington).
Until the discovery of vitamins, a dislike of all was good for childish ailments. When it was found that this vile-tasting oil was the richest known source of two vitamins, one preventing rickets in children and the other warding off a serious eye disease that results in blindness, efforts have been made to develop an extract of it that would be easy to take.
"The success of Drs. Rubin and Funk not only does this, but also provides a convenient starting-point for the actual chemical isolation and identification of vitamins, because it furnishes a pure, material several thousand times as strong in vitamin content as the original oil. Laboratory tests on animals and clinical tests on a large number of children by Dr. Louis Fisher, director of the Infantorium and Nursery of the Heckscher Foundations of New York, have shown that both the antirachitic and anti-ophthalmic vitamins are retained in the extract."
"The problem of making vitamin extracts or of preserving vitamins under artificial conditions has always been a difficult one, because the unknown substances are very easily destroyed. Even the simple cooking of many foods destroy a large part of the vitamin content. The success of Drs. Rubin and Funk was the result of several years' work."
"They first made an acid extract of cod-liver oil, using either acetic acid, the essence of vinegar, or formic acid, an acid found in ants. In this way they obtained from 2,000 grams, or nearly two pounds, of cod-liver oil, 60 grams of a substance that retained all the vitamins, and left the bulk of the oil behind, as well as almost all of the taste."
"The extract portion was made into a kind of soap with caustic potash, just as animal fats were once made into soap with lye from wood ashes. From this saponified portion, one-half of a gram of a crude active concentrate was obtained. It was a brown syrupy mass which crystallized into light yellowish brown needle-like crystals radiating from a central point. As a substance, cholesterol, which occurs in animal tissue, was eliminated, and the final product extract from the 2,000 grams of cod-liver oil weighed only one-tenth of a gram."
"The chemical composition of this substance has not yet been established; the experimenters found that it contains carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, and that sodium, sulphur, phosphorus and chlorine elements frequently occurring in organic substances, are absent."

Moonshine Millions

Although the Foreign Office has announced that the Webber "Millions," the Edwards estate, and the Bogardus estate in New York are beyond the reach of British claimants, there is still evidence that unscrupulous agents are keeping false hopes alive.
British would-be claimants to the mythical fortune left by a certain William Webber—said to have struck a gold mine "out West"—to his descendants of the seventh generation are enough to fill a good-sized steamer.

Young Men, Women Are Marrying Earlier

FIGURES SHOW CHANGING CONDITION IN U. S. AND CANADA.
People are marrying younger than they have done since the beginning of the present century. Particularly is this true in the United States and Canada.
During the past fortnight a determined rush for marriage licenses has made itself felt in Toronto, and one of the features of this unseasonable hurry to the altar has been the extreme youth of many seeking to wed.
Frequently the bride and groom-to-be have been younger than 18, thereby requiring parental consent before the license could be issued. In no case this month has this consent been denied.
In 1923, the last year for which official record has been completely compiled, more men were married at the age of 23 than at any other age. In the year preceding 1923 the most popular age for men to marry was 24 in most cases and 25 in a few. In no case had the most popular age dropped to 23.
A similar situation is seen in the marriage of girls. The brides are younger than they used to be. In 1923 the age of 21 was the most popular at which young ladies became brides. Records traced back ten years show that 21 has also been the most popular age for girls to marry during that period, but second place has changed from 22 and in one case 23 to 19. Last year more girls were married at the age of 19 in Ontario than at any other age except 21.
Same in U. S. A.
The same situation is faced in the United States and is causing economists to write lengthy articles on the subject.

Although the cost of living has climbed higher than a frightened cat, statistics indicate that early marriages are actually on the increase.
"The United States census figures of 1920 show that there has been an increase during recent years in the proportion of married persons among the younger element of the population. For each year of age, from fifteen to thirty-four, the figures show an increase in the proportion married as compared with 1910. The change is especially noticeable in the younger ages."
In other words, thousands of very young couples are hopefully moving into rose-covered cottages or roof-covered flats, expecting to find music in the drip of the sink. In spite of all that has been said about the modern tendency to postpone marriage and about the sophistication of the flapper, figures prove that there are more and more of these marriages every year.
Now, just what happens to these couples who marry so soon as they are old enough to vote? According to Kathleen Norris, they stand a very much better chance for happiness than those who are hanging to the ragged end of thirty. There is no reason, she says, why a young couple shouldn't marry on $40 a week, even in New York city. All the young wife has to do to live within this amount is to give up beauty parlors, magazines, matinees and parties, and to content herself with one new dress every three years instead of one a year.
Medical men and women are almost unanimously of the opinion that the earlier a person marries the better it is for their mental and physical welfare.
Dr. C. J. O. Hastings, Toronto medical health officer, has long held this view; as has his assistant, Dr. Cruiikshank, and his colleagues in the provincial health department.
"Divorce Judge Advises Patience."
Not so the lawyers, however. Judge Salah Strong, who hears much evidence in American divorce actions, speaks for the legal fraternity, when he says:

"If I had every young man and woman within hearing distance, I'd use a megaphone to tell them that no girl should marry until twenty-six, and no man until twenty-nine or thirty. I have the epilogue of these youthful and incautious marriages before me almost every day of my life, and I have heard enough to convince me that it's the early bride that catches the decree."
"It would be gratifying to our vanity as human beings if we could believe that struggles and sacrifice are always unobtainable. But the trouble is that they're not—they're quite as likely to shatter and embitter a person as they are to trim his soul with shining virtues. That's what has happened to the young people who come before me. Some of them could give lessons in bitterness to a cord of wormwood."
"Take a young couple full of the joy of life—a girl who likes to dance and wear fancy clothes; a boy who aims to possess the world and who has life enough to want his days to sparkle a little as they go by. Not brainless, unduly frivolous young people, but the type who are what youth ought to be. Now put them in a dull and dingy flat; bind their hand and foot to monotony and penny nursing; make them economize to such a point that every bright thing is thrust out of their lives, and watch them turn into a pair of bitter almonds that all the prosperity of later years couldn't coat with a thick enough layer of sugar."
"At first Mrs. Eighteen or Nineteen find the economy fun. She covers pi-cushions with silk scraps, makes a dress over with a new collar and a new girle, and feels triumphant every time she argues a huckster out of three cents. But after a while the monotony of perpetual sacrifice wears down both husband and wife."—Toronto Star.

A firework exploding unexpectedly caused the death of Mr. Bertram Farrel, a Manchester commantraveller, at Birmingham recently.
Along with other guests at the Kings Hotel, Moor Street, Birmingham, Mr. Farrel was letting off fireworks in a yard at the rear of the hotel, when a bucket of sand, which he had used to hold a firework, failed to explode. Mr. Farrel was in the act of lighting the firework when it went off. Both his eyes were blown out and he was seriously injured that died in the hospital shortly after.

The New Chrysler Six, with Startling New Results.

Startling new results are attained in the new Chrysler Six—results made possible by the kind of engineering and manufacturing genius which never rests satisfied.

Walter P. Chrysler and his staff of brilliant engineers, with the fine Chrysler manufacturing facilities, had every excuse—every reason, some might say—to rest on the laurels their cars have won. Inevitably, the great tide of public approval would have carried the Chrysler Six to still more conspicuous success.

But Mr. Chrysler, his producing organization and his engineers have never relaxed for a moment their labors to emphasize and enhance its wonderful performance qualities.

The most surprising thing about the greater Chrysler Six is not its new lower price—remarkable though THAT achievement is.

Its most impressive feature is the amazing ability which succeeded in improving the quality and the performance of a car that everywhere had met with overwhelming public acclaim—AND WHICH MARKED A REVOLUTIONARY ADVANCE OVER ALL PREVIOUS PRACTICE AND RESULTS.

In this new Chrysler Six, the power is increased approximately 10 per cent. The 70-mile speed is more easily and quickly attained. The breath-taking get-away and acceleration are still swifter. In smoothness, this new Chrysler actually exceeds the former supersmoothness introduced by Chrysler.

The beauty originated by Chrysler—and which still belongs to Chrysler alone—is re-expressed in refined and attractive body lines and new body colors, with Chrysler-designed closed bodies built by Fisher.
