THE far famed Duprez and Benedict's Minstrels will appear to-night in the Town Hall. They have come again, as they say, with new attractions and fresh novelties. The company is a large one, and have met with much success in the cities and towns of Canada which they have already visited during their first sixteenth tour. The press has invariably spoken of them in terms of the highest commendation, not merely while they have remained and been performing in any particular place, but even after they have departed, when no profit could accrue from undeserved flattery.

The Montreal News asserted that Duprez and Benedict's Minstrels were the best pair excellence that had ever visited that city, and, in short, it seems to be admitted on all hands that they give a splendid entertainment, in which wit never gives place to baldness, and mirth is not produced at the expense of good taste.

THE GUELPH POLICE COURT. Before T. W. Saunders, Esq., Police Magistrate. THURSDAY 1st.—Wm. Bell was up again this morning for being drunk and disorderly. He was allowed no more chance, and dismissed.

The editors of the Paris Magazine, a very able, but not very prosperous, Paris weekly, applied recently to Henri de Rochefort, editor of the Lantern, and the most successful French journalist of the day, for advice as to the steps they should take in order to make their paper financially successful. He told them to shun, above all things, long articles, and never to publish anything more than one hundred and fifty lines. 'Formerly,' he says, 'people went home with a magazine, put on their dressing gown and slippers, and read until dinner time, but now they keep their boots on and read in walking.' Publish plenty of small items, enfiletes separated by considerable spaces. The public do not thank you for giving it more 'copy' than it demands. Our readers, it is true, like good editorials; but most of them, as soon as they open their journals, look in the local columns, in order to see if Mademoiselle Marie Rose has found her little dog again.'

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. BOYLE.—The friends of Mr. Boyle of the Irish Canadian are getting him up a testimonial in the shape of a power press of the value of $1,000 in consideration 'of the hardships and pecuniary loss which he suffered through his late incarceration for his many defence of freedom and upholding of Irish nationality in this Province.'

Pavia of the royal army, who had been marshalling his forces for several days has been utterly defeated by the insurgents in the province of Ciudad Real; his army is dispersed, and himself a fugitive. Marshal Serrano of the rebel army is marching on the capital unopposed.

Girgenti has been captured by the insurgents. A provisional junta has been formed. Perfect order prevails everywhere.

A Drunken Man Driving a Locomotive at full Speed. The Troy Times, September 23rd says—We learn from an engineer on the Hudson River Railroad the particulars of one of the most exciting scenes probably that ever occurred on the line of that road. On Saturday last the locomotive Arctic was standing on the track at Poughkeepsie, awaiting the arrival of the 9.45 a. m. train from this city, which it was to conduct to New York. The fireman of the engine was a recent employee of the road, and, jumping off the locomotive repaired to a neighbouring saloon, where he became, not drunk, but utterly wild and ungovernable with liquor. The time for the arrival of the train was fast approaching and the engineer, becoming alarmed at the absence of his fireman, got off the engine to look for him. During his absence the fireman returned, and, influenced by the devil, mounted the engine, and with one desperate clutch opened the throttle which was to set the ponderous machinery in motion.

Away the Arctic sped with the speed of the whirlwind. For a few moments all was consternation and excitement among the lookers-on. In a moment the engine of his maniac driver was out of sight, bounding along over the track at a rate utterly fatal to contemplate, and suggesting most terrible disasters to such unlucky trains as might be proceeding it on the track.

What to do—how to stop the mad career of the engine—were the questions which presented themselves for solution to the minds of the railroad officials at Poughkeepsie. There was but one recourse, and that was to telegraph to the station master at New Hamburg to throw open the switch at that point and run the flying locomotive of the track. But before the agent at that place could execute the order, the Arctic came tearing along at its greatest speed, passed the station in safety, and was flying on its course like a demon of destruction. Orders were sent ahead for the track to be torn up, and it was determined that if possible no one should be harmed by the freaks of the madman but himself, neither his life nor the value of the engine being considered of the least account when so many others were depending on the result. Fortunately the engine was stopped by causes within itself, rather than by any of the measures suggested for its overthrow and destruction. The engineer at Poughkeepsie, when he left the engine to look for his absent fireman, had both pumps at work filling the boiler with water. The fireman either did not know how to shut off the flow of water, or had overlooked in his pump and excitement the fact that the pumps were at work and neglected to shut them off, and after running about a dozen miles the pressure of water on the boiler was so great as to cause an overflow, the fire went down, steam was exhausted, and the engine stopped for the want of the necessary driving power.

The fireman then took his cushions from the engineer's seat, laid them down in the gutter alongside the track, and coolly deposited himself upon them for a comfortable spouse, unmindful of the terrible excitement and apprehension of disasters he had caused along the line of the road. The engine was subsequently brought back to Poughkeepsie, none the worse for its mad journey, and the faithful fireman was discharged from the employ of the Company.

THE INTERCOLONIAL ROUTE.

The Duke of Buckingham has once more spoken on things Colonial, and it is evident that he has lost none of his arrogance since he spoke before. It is perhaps too bad to throw all the blame of his absurd dispatches on his Grace's shoulders since he must know comparatively little, and that little theoretically, of most of the subjects on which he writes, and therefore, in homely but expressive phrase, he only shoots the balls which are made for him by others. After all the anxious speculation and discussion on the intercolonial route it is evident that the one which was first marked out by Major Robinson is the favourite. Most people have had no doubt for a long time past that it would be the eventual selection, and their conjectures became almost a certainty when Mr. Rose put the first instalment of the loan for the construction of the road on the London market. With our warlike ministers military considerations outweigh everything of a commercial nature—the latter smacks too much of business, a phrase peculiarly disagreeable to the nice ears of new fledged baronets. The intercolonial railway must be a military work, and its gratuity the caprices of a clique its location must be the most disadvantageous to the country which could have been assigned it, and the Dominion must pay for working it and keeping it in repairs, for the traffic by the Robinson route will scarcely purchase grease for the axles. But this is the way that matters are managed in Canada.

The Colonial Secretary says that the shortest of the three routes, that on the frontier, could not have been approved by the Imperial Government, even if it had been selected, because, don't you see, it got on the wrong side of the St. John river, and the road would be taken possession of instantly in case of war with the Yankees, by their troops, who are adepts at destroying railways or turning them to their own advantage. It has long been no secret that this argument, although it will not hold water, would be fatal to the frontier route. To take possession of the road if constructed by the Robinson route would be simply a question of a little longer time, and a few more men, (for the location does not render it altogether impregnable) but it is far from probable that such a contingency will ever arise, and should it, there is another road through Maine against which the Americans might have designs. There are no objections urged in the despatch against the central route through New Brunswick, but the Canadian Government is congratulated on its wisdom in choosing the other, which is remote from the American frontier and which is the only one of the three that "provides for the national objects involved in the undertaking." The greater part of which we conceive to be undiluted boah, although written by a Duke. The "national object" was to have a road of our own to the sea at all seasons, the military consideration being an afterthought of our warrior legislators. They have acquitted themselves admirably, but that is no novelty.

The Contest in Japan.

The civil war in Japan assumes a new phase. It was commenced in the name of the Mikado, or spiritual Prince, by certain ambitious princes who were anxious to overthrow the Teyoon, or temporal Emperor. The Mikado is a boy whose name has been urged by the disaffected Daimios for the purpose of carrying out their plans. It has been at length discovered, however, that this method of working a puppet will not succeed, and the boy Mikado has been set aside in favor of his uncle, a man, able, and perhaps ambitious, to carry on affairs in his own way. This may change the conditions of the war very considerably, and lead to new complications. The contest is really between rival princes, in which one party endeavored to use the name of the Mikado for its own purposes. The new spiritual ruler, instead of being the servant, may determine to be the master. In that case a failure of some of the hopes upon which this attempted revolution was based may be a final result. From the number of battles fought, and the success of the Northern Princes, who are friends of the ex-Teyoon, it is yet a matter of doubt whether the cause of the latter may not be successful. In that case there will be room for speculation as to whether the abolition of the office of Mikado may not follow. The Japanese are becoming so well instructed in the habits and systems in use among mankind that it is not likely that they can be much longer deceived by stories that any whom they know to be mortal is a descendant of the gods.

It is said there is to be no reconstruction of the Cabinet until the meeting of Parliament. Senator Aikens has in consequence left Ottawa without being made President of the Council.

The Brass of Yarrow

An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

At length Gilbert pierced him under the sword arm. The yell of rage which Ding-a-Doon gave went attracted the attention of his men, who in alarm for his safety for a moment forgot their superstitious fears and turned to his assistance.

Eddie Craig slipped from his horse, and throwing down his axe, sword in hand rushed at Gilbert. But finding his check sliced by a side sweep of the Guardsman's blade, he thought of an easier way of settling the score. He ran his sword up to the hilt in the side of Gilbert's horse.

The animal staggered, but before it fell its rider leapt to the ground, and dashing in upon Ding-a-Doon, pierced him under the breastplate.

The next instant he had placed his back against a tree to encounter Eddie Craig and Yeholm Will. The others were dismounting and advancing upon him with axes upraised, and the combat would have closed immediately in his death; but when all hope had deserted him, the light which had startled the Borderers at a distance was thrust between them and their victim.

All the men drew back with a shout of alarm, and Eddie Craig cried—
"The witch, the witch—Kirty Hyslop of Merlin's Cairn."

The appearance of the woman at that moment and in that place was startling enough; but to men accustomed to think of her as one gifted with the supernatural power of the Evil Eye, of inflicting disease and death with a glance; to men accustomed to avoid her path as they would have avoided the plague, her appearance was more than potent enough to make them pause in the execution of their dark plot.

In her hand she held a blazing torch which cast a red glare around the place and upon her own weird figure. She stood gaunt and erect, her unusually tall figure seeming at the moment actually to tower above the crouching forms of the men. As she generally walked with bent shoulders the appearance of increased height added its influence to awe the rude Borderers. The red kerchief wound about her head, a blue cloak falling from her shoulders revealing a grey short gown and striped petticoat, contrived in her present attitude to give her form a certain wild grace. All this, with the sal-low cheeks and dark eyes flashing angrily, rendered her a formidable opponent to the superstitious minds of the Borderers.

"Which of ye," she demanded, in a sharp shrill voice that was echoed through the forest, "which of you shall be the first to raise a hand against the man whom I protect? Be he the strongest amongst you he shall surely die."

For a little while there seemed to be none of them willing to test the truth of her warning. Yet only two of them began to slink away; the others remained as if frozen to the spot.

The Intercolonial Railway.

Lord Monck has received the following despatch from the Colonial Secretary, on the subject of the Intercolonial R. R. route—

"Downing Street, July 22nd, 1868.

"MY LORD—I have received your Lordship's telegraphic message that the route of the Bay of Chaleur has been selected by the Canadian Government as the one to connect Truro with Riviere du Loup, and thus complete the Intercolonial Railway. I understand that three routes have been under the consideration of the Government of Canada, namely, one crossing St. John River, either at Woodstock or Fredericton; the second in a more central direction, through New Brunswick; and the third following the line selected by Major Robinson in 1848. The route crossing the St. John River either at Woodstock or Fredericton is one to which the assent of Her Majesty's Government could not have been given. The objections on military grounds to any line on the south side of the St. John River are insuperable. One of the main advantages sought in granting an Imperial guarantee for constructing the railway would have been defeated if that line had been selected. The remaining lines were the central line, and that following the general course of the route surveyed by Major Robinson; and Her Majesty's Government has learned with much satisfaction that the latter has been selected by the Canadian Government. The communication which this line affords with the Gulf of St. Lawrence at various points and its remoteness from the American frontier are conclusive considerations in its favour, and there can be no doubt that it is the only one which provides for the national objects involved in the undertaking.

"I have, &c.

"(Signed) BUCKINGHAM & CHANDOS.
"To Right Hon. Viscount Monck."

Monck will hold its Agricultural Show at Orangeville, on the 6th October.
