I would point out, and I ask that my observations be handed on to the Minister of Mines, this item calls for an expenditure of $10,000 mainly for purposes of further research into mineralogy and metallurgy. The only way the mining industry will be able to keep on paying the increased taxes imposed on it by different governments is by the development of further uses for base metals. The mines in Ontario, per ton of ore milled in 1931, paid a tax of 43½ cents per ton, in 1932, 59 cents per ton, and in 1933, 81¼ cents per ton. Following that the bullion tax was put on and the total increased to $1.35½ per ton. This shows that these taxes have gradually increased regardless of the bullion tax. The only way the industry will be able to meet them will be by developing new uses for the different base metals. Hon. members are aware that the International Nickel Company has become prosperous through increased sales of nickel brought about by the fact that in each year that company has spent about a million dollars in research work and in attempts to find further uses for their product. I would ask the government to consider adding a considerable amount of money to the vote for research in connection with base metals, of which we in Canada have a large supply. We would thus be making an effort to find new uses for many of the products which we can produce at low cost, and the mining industry would be able to continue and to pay the increased taxation which from time to time may be asked of it. I should like to pay tribute to the metallurgists not only in the government employ but in the employ of private companies who have made it possible for the industry to carry on under the severe penalties placed upon it through government taxation. The same could be said of the mine operators. I again ask the government seriously to consider further research into metallurgical problems.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be pleased to undertake the forwarding to the minister of the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. POULIOT: What are the details of this vote?

Mr. RHODES: In the absence of the minister I have not the information, but if the hon. member desires I shall see that he receives it.

Mr. POULIOT: There is something here in regard to the dominion fuel board. Now, there has been some high pressure canvassing since the beginning of this session, and there has been lobbying in the interests of peat. Peat, it is said, is going to save this country if a subsidy is granted to a peat firm. This is most ridiculous, and we should not be bothered by any canvassing on the part of lobbyists in the House of Commons, asking for a grant for peat. Every member has been imposed upon since the beginning of the session by invitations to entertainments and otherwise, for the purpose of lending encouragement to the new industry. We have had enough of that, and I hope the government will be sensible enough not to give any consideration to such interested propaganda.

We do not know anything about it. The gentleman says he represents some Scotch company, but nobody knows whether it is Scotch or Danish or Nordic. It is a real imposition for members to have these fellows running after them and, as I say, I hope the government will be sensible enough not to pay any attention to such a request.

Mr. BERTRAND: I cannot allow the remarks of my hon. friend to pass unchallenged. I do not intend to refer to any company whatever, or to discuss lobbying or canvassing; but to say that we should not study the peat situation because something of this sort might have been done is absolutely contrary to common sense. Peat is a natural resource of this country; it is a fuel to be found in the central provinces and it might be utilized by the people to great advantage. It would probably result in curtailing importations of fuel, and it would give work to local men in the processing of it. I would recommend very strongly that further investigation be made into the possibilities of this natural resource. I think the government should carry on investigations in the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. POULIOT: The committee is perhaps under the impression that my hon. friend from Prescott disagrees with the remarks I have made. As a matter of fact, I fully agree with him, and what I said was not intended to discourage experiments on the part of the government in connection with peat. It is a natural resource and I think the government should continue those experiments and choose the best fields in order to secure the best sort of peat available. But that is a very different thing from saying that a subsidy should be granted to a private concern. My hon. friend from Prescott has not said anything that conflicts with the views I have expressed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Annuities Act—further amount required, $65,000.

Mr. EULER: The sale of government annuities is, I understand, pretty well in the hands of certain officials throughout the country who have offices in the larger towns and cities and who do their work on the commission basis. I am informed that at the beginning of this year the commission was cut approximately forty per cent. Offhand, I would say that this is a very drastic reduction in the remuneration which is allowed these agents, and I am impelled to ask—I suppose it would be the Minister of Finance under the circumstances—whether this reduction is made in the interests of economy or in order to discourage the sale of government annuities, and also whether similar reductions have been made in other phases of this particular branch. Either we have allowed too much in the past or we are not allowing enough now. What is the explanation of the reduction?

Mr. RHODES: Until my hon. friend said that there had been a reduction in the amount of the commission paid, I had not heard that there had been, so that I shall have to make inquiry of the officials of the department to ascertain whether it is a fact. I shall endeavour to have the information if at all possible before the committee rises. I cannot answer the question offhand, but I can say that there has been no diminution in the applications for annuities; on the contrary, there has been a very marked increase in the demand. If I mistake not, the occasion for this vote, although I have not the details before me, arises because of the additional expense incurred as a result of the very largely increased demand for annuities which has been apparent throughout the year. However, I will endeavour to have the exact information before the committee rises.

Mr. EULER: I am satisfied with the reply which the minister has given in the meantime. I wonder whether he would say anything as to the attitude of the government towards annuities? Are they really in favour of extending the sale of annuities or would they prefer to see it gradually die out? I had the impression years ago that the annuities business of the government was not a remunerative one, and one would hardly blame the government if they did not encourage the sale of annuities.

Mr. RHODES: There has been no change in the policy which has obtained hitherto, not only under this government but under the preceding one as well; we have pursued the same policy. The sale of annuities has increased year by year, and that in itself is evidence that there has been no intention of discouraging it. I have no hesitation in frankly saying to my hon. friend that I believe that a government another year would be well advised to review the rates paid for annuities, because they are below the actuarial requirements.

Mr. EULER: Is not that probably the reason the business is increasing?

Mr. RHODES: That might very well be a contributing factor. As a matter of fact I believe that they fail to carry themselves to the extent of $450,000 per annum, apart from the overhead. The carrying charge involves that annual drain upon the treasury, and I think the price of annuities might properly be increased to the point where they would carry themselves, apart from administration.

Mr. EULER: It might also be one of the reasons why the commissions have been cut.

Mr. RHODES: I shall have to inquire with regard to the question of commission.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the total amount of annuities in force at the present time?

Mr. RHODES: I have none of the data here, but I will endeavour to get it before the committee rises.

Item agreed to.

International Labour Conference—further amount required, $5,000.

Mr. POULIOT: This is a rather small amount. The government had some forms of convention through this organization, and the mistake that was made was to contend that these forms were binding like contracts. It was a great mistake of the government, though I see some of my hon. friends opposite smiling—one of them particularly on the treasury benches. He knows that I am right and he knows that these so-called conventions are not binding upon Canada and were merely an attempt to justify the new era and the new social legislation which was passed in an effort to save Canada economically. It was a great mistake and everyone regrets it. We find a vote of $1,000 for the administration of hours of labour, weekly rest and minimum wage acts. In addition there are other large amounts being provided to grease the wheels of this new machine. It is regrettable that a complete study of this whole matter was not left to the minister whom I saw smiling a minute ago. I know that with his profound knowledge of the law he would have told the government that they were mistaken. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) had been asked to look into this matter I am sure that with his great experience as a lawyer he would have said that it was no good. If the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) had been asked to make a special survey of the whole thing I am sure he would have said that it was no good. If my friend the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) had been asked to report I am sure his report would have been against all this. If the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) had been asked to look into this legislation I am sure he would have said: We cannot go on with this. As it was, this was made up by third rate clerks and imposed upon the government by someone whom we all know. They were told they must accept it as it was, whether good or bad, just because it looked nice. This legislation was not drafted as a means of doing good, it was simply made to look nice. And it is going to cost a lot to pay for it all. I do not believe this legislation will work out and my deep conviction is that as soon as it is brought before the courts it will be declared to be void. We will then be no better off than we were before while those who have been appointed as members of these boards will join the ranks of the unemployed. Perhaps that is the only satisfaction we will get from the legislation.

Item agreed to.

Administration of hours of labour, weekly rest and minimum wages acts, $100,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government seems now to be showing some concern about the constitutionality of its measures and in view of that attitude I should like to know if the minister does not think it might be wise to consider testing the validity of one, two or three of these acts before entering upon their administration on too vast a scale?

Mr. RHODES: There is nothing I can add to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has said on one or two different occasions when similar questions were put to him by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). I shall direct the Prime Minister's attention to this question in the event of his desiring to enlarge upon what he has said previously.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The trouble is that in the early part of the session the Prime Minister did not seem to care much about the matter of constitutionality but during the latter part he has seemed to be greatly concerned. We should like to know just where the government stands now.

Mr. RHODES: If I possessed the necessary legal background I might attempt to answer the question myself, but not having that I prefer to leave it to the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can quite appreciate the fact that no member of the government feels himself able to give an answer.

Mr. POULIOT: This so-called social legislation was the main issue in the provincial campaign in New Brunswick which ended yesterday and I think the answer was loud enough.

Mr. YOUNG: Will the minister give us the particulars of this expenditure?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will appreciate that this vote is under the Department of Labour and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) is not present. I have offered to give information in answer to one or two questions and before the committee rises I shall endeavour to answer the question of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young).

Mr. YOUNG: The item will stand in the meantime?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Indians—
To provide for expenses connected with the administration of Indian affairs, including salaries, supplies, relief, medical attendance, hospitalization, dwellings, agricultural activities, surveys, roads, bridges, irrigation, dyking, education, etc.—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Could the minister give the number of the Indians who have received relief since 1929? If he cannot give that information immediately will he furnish it before the end of the session?

Mr. MURPHY: I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand that quite a substantial portion of this item is to be expended upon roads in the Indian reserves; am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. MURPHY: This item is made up as follows: For Indian education $154,000 is being provided, made up of $67,000 for an increase in the per capita grants to residential schools; $40,000 to cover the final payment towards the cost of construction of the Beauval Indian residential school and $47,000 to provide furnishings for Indian residential schools erected from funds provided under the Public Works Construction Act. A sum of $21,000 is being provided for medical services, to provide for furnishings and equipment for buildings erected under funds provided under the Public Works Construction Act. An amount of $25,000 is being provided for aids to Indians, to cover the construction of thirty new houses for Indian families forced to move through the raising of the water level of Lac Seul.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Nothing for roads?

Mr. MURPHY: Not under this item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then why are roads mentioned?

Mr. MURPHY: This item follows the wording of the item in the main estimates; that is the only reason I can give.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is misleading as it stands. Apparently it was easier to copy the old item and in the meantime the Indians on the reserves, instead of travelling along the roads which are practically impassable will have to continue to go through the fields.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister supplement the information he promised to give me by giving the number of dependents?

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 27, respecting the Canadian Marconi Company.—Mr. Sullivan.

Bill No. 96, respecting the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company.—Mr. Gray.

Bill No. 113, for the relief of Dora Eleanor Mathieson Campbell.—Mr. Vallance.

SUPPLY

INDIAN AFFAIRS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Indians—
To provide for expenses connected with the administration of Indian Affairs, including salaries, supplies, relief, medical attendance, hospitalization, dwellings, agricultural activities, surveys, roads, bridges, irrigation, dyking, education, etc.—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. REID: I would like to ask the minister a question on behalf of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Munn) who is not present. Is there anything in this appropriation for river bank protection on the Squamish river?

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): No.

Item agreed to.

Department of National Defence

Radio Services—
For the maintenance and operation of the Northwest Territories radio system—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the government whether the proposal contained in the speech from the throne for the establishment of a department of communications during this session has been put into force and, if so, when and to what extent?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will not proceed with that until next session.

Mr. POULIOT: I am very glad to hear that, because it is one of the social measures that have been dropped.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Administration of hours of labour, weekly rest and minimum wages acts, $100,000.

Mr. RHODES: This item stood. There was first a question submitted by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler). I find that there were reductions in commissions, that is in the maximum commission payable, in only two classes of annuities. The maximum commission in the case of single payment deferred annuities was reduced from $100 to $50. In the case of deferred annuities on an annual payment basis, the maximum commission was reduced from $125 to $75. All other commissions were left undisturbed. I am advised by the department that the reason these commissions were reduced was that there was a drive by the representatives to secure the purchase of annuities by moneyed men, whereas the object of the act in the first instance was to make annuities available to a more humble class of our citizens, and in those classes the commission was not disturbed.

Mr. EULER: Has the act been successful in that direction?

Mr. RHODES: I have not an analysis of the figures as to the extent that it was an inducement to the agents to go after that class of business. I presume there must have been at least some success. Then my hon. friend from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) inquired as to the amount received for annuities. I have the figures dating from the inception in 1923-24. In that year the amount received was $1,458,818.92. It ran along for succeeding years at about that sum until 1927-28, when it amounted to $3,843,087.96. It remained at approximately that figure until 1932-33. In that year there was received $3,547,345.03, representing contracts purchased to the number of 1,375. That figure jumped perceptibly in the next year, 1933-34, when there were contracts issued to the number of 2,412, and the amount paid in for the annuities in that year was $7,071,439. For 1934-35 there were contracts issued to the number of 3,931 and the amount received in that year was $13,376,400.02.

The total number of contracts issued to March 31, 1935, is 22,737 and the total receipts amount to $56,661,889.69. I have not read the detailed figures, but if the committee is interested and there is no objection I will place this tabulation in Hansard:

Statement re Canadian Government Annuities for Fiscal Years 1923-24 to 1934-35, Inclusive

Fiscal year:	Cost of advertising	Number of contracts issued	Receipts
1923-24	$21,915 65	409	$1,458,818 92
1924-25	19,922 94	486	1,606,822 03
1925-26	60 00	668	1,938,921 17
1926-27	9,361 89	503	1,894,885 29
1927-28	8,529 14	1,223	3,843,087 96
1928-29	5,203 91	1,328	4,272,418 87
1929-30	19,359 18	1,257	3,156,475 24
1930-31	27,388 12	1,772	3,612,233 88
1931-32	129 26	1,726	4,194,383 81
1932-33	836 85	1,375	3,547,345 03
1933-34	.....	2,412	7,071,439 00
1934-35	.....	3,931	13,376,400 02

Mr. HEAPS: What I would like to get from the minister is information as to the value of the annuities outstanding at the present time.

Mr. RHODES: The actuarial value?

Mr. HEAPS: No, the value of the annuities bought by the purchasers.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. RHODES: Does my hon. friend mean the yield to the recipients?

Mr. HEAPS: Yes.

Mr. RHODES: The figure I have in mind is a little over two and a half million that we are paying out as yield.

Mr. HEAPS: Do I understand that the government are paying out two and a half million dollars per annum?

Mr. RHODES: That was the figure last year. No doubt it is larger this year, but I have not the amount.

Mr. HEAPS: Have we no idea of the gross value of the annuities purchased?

Mr. RHODES: The amount paid in I have given.

Mr. HEAPS: No, not the amount paid in. For instance, I might buy a $1,000 annuity; I would like to know the value of those annuities to-day, the amount in which the government is indebted to the purchasers at the present time.

Mr. RHODES: That question cannot be answered in the form in which it is put. Suppose an individual purchases an annuity, paying in a lump sum; if he dies the next year the annuity ceases and the amount paid in goes to the consolidated revenue fund. I can only give a figure which represents the amount of cash paid in and the amount which the government pays out to the annuitants in a given year.

Mr. HEAPS: That would not show whether the scheme is solvent or insolvent. Just before recess we were told that there was a loss of about $460,000 per year. Am I correct?

Mr. RHODES: I have stated that on an actuarial basis the annuities are not self-sustaining. It costs the country in the neighbourhood of $450,000 a year to carry these annuities, apart altogether from the cost of administration. But no doubt the fund is solvent; we must assume it is, because it has behind it the guarantee of the dominion treasury.

The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) put a question with respect to the division of the amount of $100,000 as mentioned in the item for administration of the hours of labour, weekly rest and minimum wages acts. At best, inasmuch as we are exploring new ground, it is only an estimate as to actual requirements. But the set up which enabled the department to arrive at that figure by way of estimate was as follows:

Three advisory officers with their necessary secretarial assistance, $25,000.
Officer in charge, $4,000.
Twelve inspectors at $2,100, $25,200.
One clerk, $1,800.
One stenographer, $900.
Travelling expenses of inspectors, say, $250 per month for twelve inspectors, $30,000.
Printing and stationery, $2,100.
Allowance and travelling expenses of committee members under section 4 of Bill No. 40, $10,000.
Sundries, $1,000—Total, $100,000.

Mr. YOUNG: My hon. friend said "at best." What does he mean? Does he mean that is the least or the most?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend may take his own interpretation. In dealing with a new piece of legislation, exploring a new field, at best the department can only make an estimate, and be guided by experience in future years.

Mr. YOUNG: I take it that this $100,000 is the least expenditure we shall ever make in the enforcement of these laws, that this amount will increase from year to year as the staff employed increases, and what is $100,000 to-day will be $200,000 next year, and before many years will be a million dollars.

Mr. POULIOT: Have any of the officers just mentioned by the minister been already appointed?

Mr. RHODES: I believe not.

Mr. POULIOT: In January it was very important to pass this legislation in order to have a new era, but up to the present, although six months have elapsed, no one has been appointed. The legislation has been passed for some time, and now we have estimates of salaries and so on. Either this legislation is important or it is not. If it is, the appointments should have been made a long time ago; if it is not, there should be no vote.

Mr. RHODES: If I mistake not, a part of the legislation was assented to only to-day. Certainly a government would be ill-advised to set up machinery to administer an act which is not yet law.

Mr. POULIOT: I see the minister's point; it is that it took such a long time to present that legislation to the house. The minister says it is just out of the oven; it took a long time to raise the dough.

Mr. EULER: If I might return for a moment to the matter of annuities, I gather from what the minister said that the purpose of cutting down the commissions was to discourage the sale of the higher annuities. I think the maximum is $1,200 or $1,400?

Mr. RHODES: It is $1,200.

Mr. EULER: At one time it was $5,000, and I think under the present government the maximum was cut to $1,200, which was a pretty substantial cut. Could the minister give any idea—perhaps he may not be able to answer now—as to the number of annuitants who have qualified for the $1,200 annuity? Is the number much in excess of those who take the smaller amounts?

Mr. RHODES: I am very sorry I have not the details, but I can get that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. HEAPS: Concerning the item for the enforcement of the Hours of Labour act, the Weekly Day of Rest Act and the Minimum Wage Act, it appears from what the minister has said that it is the intention of the government to appoint a staff of inspectors and others to enforce the legislation recently passed by this house. All the measures mentioned come to a certain extent under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. I should like to see the officials appointed under these acts work in close cooperation, so far as that is possible, with the officials of the provincial governments. It would be most unfortunate if we should have within any province two sets of officials attempting to enforce similar legislation but working in opposite directions. I am sorry the Minister of Labour is not in his place to-night; he might be able to give the committee some idea as to how it is intended to appoint the officials contemplated by this vote and how they will go about their work. I do not know whether the minister who is now in charge of this item can give that information, but I should like to know if it is the intention of the Department of Labour to have these officials work as far as possible in conjunction with the officials of the provincial governments.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will appreciate that I am not familiar with the details of the operation of this department; I have not had an opportunity of conferring with my colleague, nor do I know just what has been the practice of the department. But I have no hesitation in saying that I think it would be sound policy on the part of any government to work in the closest possible cooperation with provincial governments having officials dealing with matters in a similar field. I know that in the Department of Fisheries, while I happened to be head of that department, as well as in the Department of Finance, I have been at pains to endeavour to work in the closest cooperation with the officials of the provincial governments, and indeed with the provincial governments themselves, where our objects have been in common. I think I should be safe in saying that it will be the policy of the Department of Labour, where it can do so to the advantage of the common cause, to work in the closest possible cooperation with the officials of the various provincial administrations.

Mr. POULIOT: The government will accomplish marvels if they work in cooperation with the provinces in matters concerning which the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction. They will put their nose into the business of the provinces, and it will be a great mistake. They have nothing to do with this matter; it belongs to the provinces. The only thing to do is to urge the provinces to enact legislation such as this, if possible, by orderly compromise, and I for one do not believe much in that.

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry to differ with my hon. friend from Témiscouata. I may say to him that in the province from which he comes, to which the fisheries have been transferred, we work in the closest possible cooperation with the provincial government. Indeed, our officials not only exchange views, information and knowledge; on occasions when we could be of mutual assistance the province and the dominion have pooled their resources for the purpose of serving the Department of Fisheries of that province to greater advantage. I think it is all to the good that there should be the closest possible cooperation between the province and the dominion covering the common field.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, but this is entirely different. I do not contend that there should be war between the federal and provincial governments; that is not my point of view at all. I am telling the committee that when one body, whether the dominion or the province, has exclusive jurisdiction the two bodies cannot cooperate because one has full power and only one can have full power. That is the contention I humbly submit to the committee. It is altogether different from cooperation in matters which may be considered from various viewpoints. For instance, the fisheries belonged to the dominion for a long time; they were transferred to the province of Quebec. Well and good; there must be cooperation to a certain extent between the dominion and the province. On the other hand it is entirely different to say that the dominion will take charge of something exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provinces, and that is what I am saying.

Mr. HEAPS: In reply to my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Pouliot), may I say that it would not have been a bad thing at all if the federal government had maintained one or two fair wage officers in the province of Quebec, paid by the federal authority. The federal government let quite a large number of contracts in the province of Quebec, according to the evidence given before the price spreads committee, and if some of the fair wage provisions of those contracts had been enforced by the federal government certainly it would have done no harm to the province of Quebec.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say in reply to the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), and it is this: The hon. member for Témiscouata looked into the matter of minimum wages in this house long before the labour members from the west began to deal with it, and he pointed out a way to redress some wrongs with regard to wages a long time before my hon. friend and the members of his group took up the matter in this house. He did so because he knew the conditions that existed in that province. Here is the point: When my hon. friends of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation group want something they want it by any means, whether it is right or wrong and whether or not it is done in the right way. They want it; they are just like children who want jam. This is not the right way. When we want something we must get it in the legal way in order that what we ask for may be endorsed by the courts should the occasion arise. If this government has no jurisdiction at all, when it sends inspectors to the province of Quebec, the province of Nova Scotia, the province of Manitoba, or the province of New Brunswick—I do not suppose that will happen now—to look after provincial business, the province may object and tell the inspectors to go back to Ottawa, that they have no business in that province. That is why it is so important to have this matter submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada in order that we may have some lead from the court in the matter. I do not object at all to the views expressed by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, but this is altogether different. My hon. friend from North Winnipeg must remember that whatever we may put in any federal enactment with regard to minimum wages in practice is only applicable to the extent that it is sanctioned by the courts which have to interpret the laws of this country according to the constitution.

Item agreed to.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Salaries—departmental staff—further amount required, $30,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: One or two members on this side who are also members of the committee that is sitting at the present time wish to discuss this item, as well as the two following items, and I was asked to have them held over if possible.

Item stands.

National Health—
The administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, including the laboratory of hygiene — further amount required, $4,860.
Public health engineering—further amount required, $3,665.

Mr. MITCHELL: The other day I noticed a statement in the press to the effect that a commission was to be appointed to consider the advisability of bringing in a national health insurance scheme, if I understood the item correctly. I should like to ask the minister if he can give the committee any information in that connection. I believe the statement was made to a meeting of druggists held in Ottawa not long ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: During the recess of parliament there convened in Ottawa a meeting of the ministers of health of the various provinces, and at that time it was considered that it would be desirable to appoint a royal commission to investigate health conditions in Canada. That was the opinion of the meeting of ministers and my personal opinion, and as a result a resolution was passed to that effect. I made a statement indicating that in the autumn such a commission would be appointed to go fully into health matters and to make representations as to the best way to carry out proposals for the general health of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL: Is it to be a one man commission, or one composed of the various interested parties?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Although the details have not yet been arranged, undoubtedly it would not be a one man commission. When the time comes for the appointment the personnel will be carefully considered. I hold the view that representatives of labour and of other bodies should be on the commission.

Mr. NEILL: Will chemists be included?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There has been no definite decision on those points.

Mr. MITCHELL: It would be best to have the cooperation of all those interested in such a scheme. While I appreciate the fact that the minister has indicated labour will be represented, I would point out that druggists, the medical profession, and possibly people interested in hospitals should be represented. I can remember the difficulty experienced in Great Britain, and I believe it would be well in the formation of the commission to have representation from those people interested in or vitally affected by the development of such a scheme. I make that suggestion and also should like to congratulate them upon the step they intend taking.

Mr. POULIOT: Have we a health insurance commission or board of some kind?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, there is nothing of that kind.

Mr. POULIOT: That was promised by the Prime Minister in his January broadcasts.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I join the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) in congratulating the Minister of Pensions and National Health upon the conference of provincial ministers held during the Easter recess. There were three important developments, the first being the formation of a cabinet of health to be composed of the Minister of Health of the dominion and provincial ministers sitting in periodic conferences; second, the establishment of a royal commission, as already indicated by the minister, and, third, the formation of an advisory council on health, to be composed of various interested agencies. I believe that is what the hon. member for East Hamilton had in mind. May I congratulate the minister upon taking this very important step.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association, $500.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not sure of the extent of the work of the Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association, but I must say that $500 seems a very small amount, especially when we look farther down the list and find an item of $15,000 "to provide for the expenses in connection with the departure of the governor general and for the reception and installation of his successor." It seems to me that these two votes are out of proportion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The sum of $500 appears, because that is the amount for which the Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association asked.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

To provide for the administration of the Royal Canadian Mint—further amount required for equipment, $110,000.

Mr. EULER: I am curious to know whether the Minister of Finance has received complaints, as I have, with regard to what we call our five cent piece, to the effect that it is too large, too cumbersome, and not at all of a fine design. It is too near the size of the twenty-five cent piece. I have heard many criticisms of this coin, and I should like to know if the minister has ever considered changing it to something a little better and a little smaller.

Mr. RHODES: I have not had as many complaints with respect to size as I have respecting the design. I have no hesitation in expressing my personal opinion, for what it is worth, that our five cent piece is one of the most hideous coins in the world. I should like to see something more distinctly Canadian in design and something of which we could be proud.

Mr. EULER: And a little smaller, too.

Mr. RHODES: The difficulty in that respect has been that there are many slot machines, not of a gambling type, but used in various places for purposes of convenience, in telephone booths and so on. It would be decidedly inconvenient for tourists from the United States to have to substitute their coins for ours. I believe that was in the mind of the Minister of Finance who selected the present coin. At one time I had in mind a coin with a hole punched in the centre so that it would be lighter and more easily distinguished from the more valuable coin.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: A Chinese coin.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, quite so. Such a coin could easily be distinguished from the twenty-five cent piece. If our minds had not been so much engaged with other matters some designs might have been prepared and a coin issued in design similar to that of the new silver dollar, which I believe has artistic merit. It is distinctly Canadian in design, it is unique, and the comments we have received both as to design and execution have been uniformly favourable. I hope the day is not far distant when not only our five cent piece but the rest of our coinage may be more in keeping with the artistic tastes and ambitions of the Canadian people.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would like to remind the minister that this is not the first time a minister has got into difficulty over a five cent piece.

Mr. POULIOT: If there is a hole in it it will be a picture of the reform program.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I notice the vote contains the expression "further amount required for equipment"; is the amount solely for equipment?

Mr. RHODES: Yes; I have the complete details, if the committee would like to have them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No; I just wished to know if it was for equipment only.

Mr. RHODES: Yes. Much of the machinery in the mint is twenty years old. The major item is for what is known as Cottrell equipment. As a matter of fact there has been an escape of gases from the melting furnaces carrying precious metal to an extent of not less than 1,000 ounces of gold per year. We are putting in an apparatus which will wash the gases from the melting furnaces and it is guaranteed that we will recover not less than 1,000 ounces of gold per year. The net result will be that the whole expenditure will be covered in a little over three years' time.

Mr. REID: The minister has had a request for help from the silver association of British Columbia. I wonder if he has considered granting them some assistance. I have a second question. How many silver dollars have been issued to date?

Mr. RHODES: We have had several communications from the silver association of British Columbia, and we feel that we have made a start in our assistance to those who have special regard for silver. There have been issued up to the moment $284,000 worth of silver dollars. It has not begun to meet the demand, but there is a limiting factor. We have only one machine in the mint capable of being adapted to the striking of the dollar coin, and at the same time there has been a tremendously heavy demand for the five cent and one cent coins, arising largely from the fact that sales taxes and amusement taxes have been imposed in various provinces and the demand for small change has been enormous. Since there is no substitute in coinage or notes for these smaller coins we have had to give the preference to them as against the silver dollar, which is comparatively a luxury coin that can have a substitute in the form of a note. But as rapidly as the limiting factor to which I have referred is obviated we shall endeavour to meet the demand. I visited the mint this morning and they were striking dollar coins at the rate of sixty a minute.

Item agreed to.

To provide for salaries and expenses of the tariff board, including additional provision by reason of the increased jurisdiction under the Dominion Trade and Industry Act—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. YOUNG: This vote is in addition to the amount that has already been provided. I take it that this is due to the new duties imposed on the board. Am I right?

Mr. RHODES: This will provide for additional expenditures in connection with the administration of the Dominion Trade and Industry Commission Act, and it will also cover the cost of investigations which are now taking place with regard to the automobile and gasoline trades, which are of a major character and have involved much heavier expenditures than could have been anticipated at the time the main estimates were submitted.

Mr. YOUNG: How much of this vote is required because of the new duties imposed on the board by constituting them a trade and industry commission?

Mr. RHODES: There is not an exact computation, but it is about half and half.

Mr. YOUNG: About $100,000. But that is only as regards what we might call the head office staff. What provision is being made for the staff of inspectors who will be employed by the board to go round to see that the commission's rulings are enforced?

Mr. RHODES: This will be the whole of the cost so far as we can make estimates for this year with respect to the activities of the board.

Mr. REID: Is it possible to get a copy of the report of the proceedings before the tariff board in Vancouver in the gasoline investigation?

Mr. RHODES: There would be no copy of the proceedings, in any event, under existing legislation. There will be a copy of the report when it is made to parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would point out that in the main estimates, item 230, we have already appropriated $120,000 to provide for salaries and expenses of the tariff board, payments to be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or its regulations. Now we are asked to vote $200,000 to provide for salaries and expenses of the tariff board, including additional provision by reason of the increased jurisdiction under the Dominion Trade and Industry Commission Act. I imagine that the government must have included this item in the supplementaries to replace the one in the main estimates; otherwise it would mean $320,000 to be asked for the tariff board.

Mr. RHODES: The auditing costs in connection with the gasoline and automobile investigations will run into very substantial figures which could not have been foreseen at the time the main estimates were brought down. It is a major inquiry involving heavy expenditures.

Mr. POULIOT: What is the difference between the duties now imposed on the tariff board, especially with respect to the investigation into the automobile and gasoline trades, and so on, and the tariff board as it existed in 1930 before the general elections? Is there any difference between the duties performed by the 1930 board and those which are performed by the board at the present time?

Mr. RHODES: If the board as it existed previously had undertaken a dominion-wide investigation involving the employment of auditors and a careful analysis of costs and accounting and an investigation of the books of these great industries, and moving about as it does, with heavy expenditures becoming necessary, I have no doubt that it would have cost as much as it does to-day.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the hon. gentleman, but he has not answered my question. I tried to make it as lucid as possible. In 1930 there was a tariff board, as the hon. gentleman knows, and that board had certain duties to perform. Now there is another board which is supposed to be entirely different from the board as it was constituted in 1930. I should like to know whether the duties imposed this year on the new board are not exactly the same as the duties performed by the tariff board in 1930.

Mr. RHODES: I should not care to go into a comparative analysis of the respective merits of the old board and the new tariff board. It is true the legislation setting up these bodies differs in detail, but I still adhere to the original answer I gave the hon. gentleman, which I think is fair, namely, that any tariff board which carried out an investigation as exhaustive as the inquiry which has been going on in connection with the automobile and gasoline trades, necessitating heavy expenditures, would cost just as much.

Mr. POULIOT: My question was straight and direct, and the answer culd have been straight and direct—yes. In 1930 at the special session and during the session of 1931 we heard the Prime Minister telling about this great invention, the new tariff board, which was to do this and that. As the minister knows, it was appointed in February, 1933, but what happened in the meantime? No information was gathered from proper sources, as now, but the government went ahead and made changes in the tariff. Now they should be commended for the investigation being made by the tariff board, but it is too late; parliament will soon be prorogued, and all the legislation from 1930 to 1933 was passed without proper information because the government changed the situation with regard to the tariff board. And now, after the failure of their experiments, they see that the Liberal policy was right and they are trying to go back to it. But it is too late.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid there will be considerable confusion in the accounts of this body. At one stage it will be known as the tariff board and at another stage it will be known as the dominion trade and industry commission. How are these two bodies to be distinguished? The trade and industry commission is under the tariff board, the chairman of the tariff board being also chairman of the commission. It seems to me there ought to be some distinction between the accounts of these two bodies.

Mr. RHODES: I have not had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the chairman of the tariff board, because before he went away I was ill, and he has been away for some little time in connection with the automobile and gasoline investigations. There will however be little question with regard to the accounts; there is no doubt that the accounts will show the respective activities of the two bodies. It is purely a question of accounting as to whether it relates to the sittings of the tariff board or to the sittings of the trade and industry commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose we will have to let the matter pass with that somewhat lame excuse. I do not think the absence of any one should be accepted by the committee as the reason for the government not being able to give an explanation.

Mr. RHODES: I beg my right hon. friend's pardon. I would have discussed the details of this very fully with the chairman in order to give a complete answer, but I think my answer is a fair one. It is purely a matter of accounting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I want to stress at the moment is that in the next parliament there will be considerable interest as to what the social legislation passed by this government is costing. It is important that accounts should be separate and distinct.

Mr. RHODES: I quite agree.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it is understood that this vote is for the tariff board and the trade and industry commission, it should be further understood that the actual statement given to this house of the expenditures should distinguish, in amounts paid out, as between the two bodies. If that is understood, we will let the item pass.

Mr. RHODES: I quite agree with my right hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses in connection with the silver jubilee of King George V, including allowances for extra work and overtime, subject to the approval of the treasury board, $19,500.

Mr. REID: Will this vote cover payments to full time officials of the government?

Mr. CAHAN: Arrangements for this jubilee required considerable night work and clerical assistance was obtained from other departments. I am proposing that the treasury board shall have the right to appropriate $500 as gratuities to those employees temporarily taken over from other departments for this work after their own work had been completed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister is creating a precedent. In the past any gratuity or emolument paid to anyone receiving a regular salary was shown with the name of the person receiving the payment. This $15,000 is to be paid out by the treasury board to officials already in receipt of regular salaries.

Mr. RHODES: Without discussing the merits of this practice, I would say to the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset) that I can give him a number of instances under the regime of my right hon. friend where a similar procedure was followed. I agree with him that it is preferable that the name should be shown, but the practice followed in this instance is by no means new.

Mr. POULIOT: Were there any anonymous workers?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Secretary of State put in considerable overtime on this matter; will he not get anything extra?

Mr. CAHAN: I have done a great deal of extra work during the past five years, but I am not asking for any gratuities. I believe it was necessary to have some twelve or fourteen temporary employees appointed by the civil service commission, and it was also necessary to have temporary assistance from some of the other departments. The extra appropriation for the temporary employees and those brought in from the other departments is only $500, so the amount to each will not be more than $20 or $25.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am not criticizing the vote; I am criticizing the manner in which it is being expended.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend has suggested that there is no precedent, but there have been a number.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I have never seen them.

Item agreed to.

To provide for salaries and expenses of the bureau for translations—further amount required, $22,735.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does this vote represent the economies which were to be effected by the creation of this new bureau?

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend is rather satirical. The work of this bureau has increased enormously. I cannot remember a session of parliament when there was so much work in the way of translations. It must be remembered that the evidence and report of the price spreads commission involved a large amount of work. For instance, the translation required 5,400 printed pages, while the type for both editions of the report weighed 46 tons. I thought it unfair to impose all this extra translation work upon men who were working under a strain at times, and I asked the civil service commission to make a recommendation to the treasury board for temporary assistance. I can give my hon. friend all the details of this item if he desires.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not concerned with the details. In connection with the previous vote the minister stated that it was to cover remuneration for extra work, and I should like to know if any portion of this vote will go to the translators for the extra work they have done.

Mr. CAHAN: This vote is to provide the additional translation services which were necessary to take care of the extra work. In this connection I should like to refer to a question asked on June 12 by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Fafard). This question reads:

Does the government intend to have a French translation made of bulletin No. 72: "Birds of Canada," by P. A. Taverner, also memoranda numbers 126: "Botanical Exploration of the North Shore of the St. Lawrence," by H. St. John; 146: "Retreat of the Last Ice-Sheet in Eastern Canada," by Ernest Antevs; 154: "Geology of Anticosti Island," by Twenhofel; 162: "Peat Bogs in Southeastern Canada," by Vaino Auer?

I replied that the translation of such departmental bulletins was within the discretion of the department issuing the bulletin and that up to date we had received no requests for the translation of the documents referred to. Before making my answer I inquired of the bureau for translations and I was told that they had received no requests for the translation of these documents. I had thought that possibly under the stress of translation work these might have been overlooked. After making that reply, on June 14 one of the journals passed a very severe stricture upon the Secretary of State for making a reply such as he did, but I believe its article was due to a complete misunderstanding of the facts. For instance, bulletin or memoir No. 126 by Harold St. John, on Botanical Explorations of the North Shore of the St. Lawrence, was, I find on inquiry, published by the director of the Department of the Victoria Memorial Museum on March 25, 1922, and it has been distributed since that date. No translation of this memoir into French has been published. I do not conceive it to be my duty at the present time to go back for fourteen years in order to look over all the bulletins to find out whether or not they have been translated into French. Bulletin or memoir No. 146, by Ernest Antevs, on the Retreat of the Last Ice-Sheet in Eastern Canada, was published in 1925 by the director of the geological survey of the Department of Mines, and no translation was made into French. Of course I have not been going back into all these memoirs, of which there are hundreds, to find out whether, antecedent to the formation of the bureau of translation, they were translated. The same may be said of bulletin or memoir No. 154, on the Geology of Anticosti Island by W. H. Twenhofel, which was published by the director of the geological survey of the Department of Mines in 1928. No translation of this into French has yet been made, and there has been no demand for one. Bulletin or memoir No. 162 by Vaino Auer, on Peat Bogs in Southeastern Canada, was published in English alone as a bulletin prior to the formation of this government.

There is one point however to which attention might be given. There has recently been published by the acting director of the National Museum of Canada bulletin No. 72 on Birds of Canada by P. A. Taverner which has just been issued to the public and is now available in English at the price of $2 per volume if requests are made either to the Department of Mines or to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. No request has yet reached the Department of the Secretary of State with regard to the translation of that bulletin into French. I can well understand a suggestion being made in the French journals that it should be translated into French, but upon inquiry I find that the decision whether that bulletin will be translated and published in French will depend to a considerable extent upon the probable demand for a French edition. So far there has been no special demand, due probably to the fact that in 1922 there was published by the director of the geological survey a splendid edition in French, which is still available, of Mr. Taverner's memoire No. 104, Les Oisseaux de l'est du Canada, which reached a second edition in that year, and which largely forms the basis of the English edition which was published this year. Moreover in connection with this recent English edition now available there has been provided an index in the French language as well as in English with the idea that those who wish to make cross references to the two volumes might readily do so. But if there is any considerable demand for a French edition of this later work, which includes not only the birds of eastern Canada but some birds of western Canada as well, I have no doubt, the Minister of Mines will ask for an appropriation for its publication. The minister has been absent for a few days, and since this question arose I have not had an opportunity of speaking to him. I did speak to him when it came out in English just a few weeks ago, and he told me that he thought an edition of it in French might be required. But upon investigation the fact appears that those two French editions of the same author's work on the birds of eastern Canada have largely gone to the province of Quebec for study there. If there is any considerable demand for a French edition of Mr. Taverner's recent work, though it is a very expensive one, I have no doubt the wishes of my French Canadian colleagues would receive favourable consideration. I thought I would like to make that statement for fear there might be some misunderstanding in regard to the matter.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not intend to continue the discussion on that point because I do not think this is the proper time for it, but may I say that in the Department of Mines there are many most interesting publications in English. A large proportion of the population of Canada feels, and I think quite properly so, if a work is important enough to be published in English, it ought to be sufficiently important to be published in French. I am not unmindful however of the fact that French translations of many of those publications are not asked for, but that portion of the population nevertheless takes the attitude—and I think it is a proper one—that if financial conditions permit, one should not even have to ask for or to insist upon a French edition, but that both editions should be published concurrently. If a publication in English is important enough to be distributed throughout foreign countries in universities and museums, it should be important enough to be distributed in French. Probably when the proper time comes to discuss that question, I shall speak at greater length. I just wanted to make these remarks at the moment.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend will, I am sure, agree with me that this is not my duty as the minister having charge of the bureau for translations. The bureau for translations is prepared to do its work, but it is for the national museum, the Geological survey or others to ask for the necessary appropriations for publications and to request officially that a translation be made.

Mr. POULIOT: May I tell the Secretary of State that a great mistake made last year was in not paying attention to my colleague, the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier), who had a wonderful plan to submit to my hon. friend with regard to translations. Had the minister been more conciliatory at that time, he would have received excellent suggestions from the senior member for Ottawa.

Mr. CAHAN: I thought the Secretary of State was one of the most conciliatory members of the house.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): In connection with this item of $22,735 to provide for salaries and expenses of the bureau for translations, further amount required, the the Secretary of State mentioned that this was due partly to the price spreads investigation. It would be interesting to some of us to know just the total cost to the country of that investigation. It is cropping up here and there, and we have no idea what the total cost has been. I wonder whether the Secretary of State or some other member of the government would undertake to give us the full details.

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot give those details. They are not in the Department of the Secretary of State; they would have to be gathered from several departments, and I am afraid the time is a little late for that.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): It is of importance that the people of the country should know just what the price spreads investigation has cost, particularly because it has been such a washout so far as legislation is concerned.

Mr. POULIOT: Not only that, but we must know where to put the report. It is so tremendous that one needs a special room to put it in and it serves no purpose, it is no good.

Item agreed to.

Chief electoral officer—salaries and contingencies of office—further amount required, $40,000.

Mr. CAHAN: This is a new item. At previous general elections such expenses as the salaries of temporary employees, printing, stationery, et cetera in connection with approaching general elections were charged to elections and paid out of the consolidated revenue fund. But the comptroller of the treasury has recently ruled that they are not properly chargeable to election expenses as such and must be paid out of some special appropriation provided in the estimates. We have no appropriation in the estimates except the ordinary contingency fund of the chief electoral officer. Therefore in order to comply with the requirements of the treasury department I have asked that this sum of $40,000 be provided for this purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When do these general election expenses begin?

Mr. CAHAN: So far as I am concerned the sooner they begin the better.

Mr. NEILL: There is a matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister, which ought to be remedied under this vote, even if we have to increase the amount. Last fall the list was made up of people entitled to vote. Each member of parliament and certain other people were given, I think, three copies, either typewritten or handwritten, of the list as made up at that date.

Mr. CAHAN: I did not know that.

Mr. NEILL: Well, they were. It was, of course, of great value. One of the first essentials of an election is to get on the list, and the second is to know whether you are on or not. Some months later, after the lists had been printed, we each got twenty-one copies of the list of each polling division. Up to that date we knew exactly where we were. When a man came to me and asked if he were on the list I could tell him. Now we have had a revision, which is just completed, and according to the advice I get from the department I have no means of knowing whether I am on the list or not, whether I am qualified to be a candidate or not, because to be a candidate one must be on some list. The procedure to be adopted apparently is that we are to be furnished with no list when the revision is completed but after the revised list is printed we will get the twenty-one copies as before. Those lists may be furnished to us perhaps a week before the election.

Mr. CAHAN: Oh, no.

Mr. NEILL: It may well be; and in scattered country districts it will be impossible to get those lists out to the polling stations in time. As I said, one of the first essentials is to know who is on the list and who is not. A man is entitled to know whether he is on or not. Under the plan that apparently has been adopted, or the regulations, it is not possible, unless by the courtesy of the registrar who may tell me, perhaps illegally, that I am on, for me to know whether I am on or anyone else is. I suggest the procedure should be followed that was followed last fall, that every member of parliament and others who are entitled to get it should be furnished with, say, two copies, typewritten or handwritten—it would suffice if they were only of the corrections. We want to know the people who have been added and those who have been struck off, and we want to know it soon after the revision is complete. It will be grossly unfair to a great many people if they have to guess whether they are on the list. We should get two copies, one for our own use and one to send to our representative in each polling station. I think the house will see the need for that, especially in the country. The cost would not be great, especially if it were limited to the corrections; let us take the expense of correcting our lists ourselves.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. CAHAN: The typewritten lists which were given out, to which the hon. member refers, were not given out by the dominion franchise commissioner. Each registrar was instructed to give information to each candidate with regard to the preparation of the lists. I have no doubt that the registrar in the district which my hon. friend represents prepared for him these copies—

Mr. NEILL: He was compelled to do it by law.

Mr. CAHAN: I know no such law. I think it was done simply as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. NEILL: No, pardon me; it was done by law—it is part of the act.

Mr. CAHAN: Then the same law will probably apply—

Mr. NEILL: No; I am advised by the head of the department that that is not to be the rule, and that is what I am kicking about. I shall be perfectly satisfied if the same system is to be carried out as was carried out before, not by courtesy of any individual but by law, but I have been advised by the head of the department that the law is that we are not to be given any lists until they are printed, and they may not be available until perhaps within a week of the election.

Mr. CAHAN: If my hon. friend will see that the electoral lists from his district are sent in in proper time, they should arrive by the tenth of July, and if so they will certainly be printed by the fifteenth or twentieth.

Mr. NEILL: Of July?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, certainly, July. We have on the lists of last year—they say I carry these figures about with me for the convenience of the leader of the opposition—5,800,000 names. Those names are all in type. We have on hand 350 tons of type for these names. The suggestion has been made by some newspaper correspondents that there are 250,000 new voters coming on the lists. I doubt that very much, but suppose there are 250,000 coming on and 250,000 removals and changes. I am told that the changes in the country districts are limited chiefly to those who have passed from this earthly sphere, and they are not numerous.

Mr. YOUNG: And some are coming of age.

Mr. CAHAN: We have a well organized printing establishment; I think it is the best organized and most efficient anywhere in Canada. When we were printing these names, working sometimes the whole twenty-four hours in order to comply with the wishes of the right hon. leader of the opposition and enable me to fulfil my promises to him, we printed 100,000 a day. So far as printing the new lists, is concerned, if we get the names in, setting the new lines on the linotype for 500,000 names will be done in ten days. This talk in the newspapers about the election being long delayed because of delay in the printing bureau is due to the imaginative qualities of some newspaper correspondents.

Mr. NEILL: If that statement is correct—of course I do not doubt the hon. gentleman's veracity—and he is able to deliver the goods, my complaint falls to the ground. I do not like to say it when he is absent, but I think the Prime Minister himself said it would be late in September before these lists could be printed.

Mr. CAHAN: There is no possibility now at this late stage of changing the law to which the hon. member refers. But the dominion franchise officer is an officer of this house and reports to the house and the government through the Secretary of State. I shall therefore take the earliest opportunity of consulting him, and suggesting that instructions be given that every facility be granted to candidates or prospective candidates to obtain the former printed lists, with such corrections as have been made, for use in their preliminary work in connection with the election.

Mr. GRAY: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has raised what in my opinion is a very important question. From the remarks of the Secretary of State I take it that the same procedure will be followed that was adopted by the registrars in our various ridings when the enumerators completed their lists, in other words that we will receive not a printed but a typewrtten list of the names added in the revision that has been going on since April 1. That is, the list will show the names struck off during the month of April, the names added during May and June, the names transferred and matters of that kind. Will all members and defeated candidates receive typewritten copies immediately the revising officers report to the dominion franchise commissioner at Ottawa? Will the same procedure be followed that was followed during the preparation of the lists in 1934; is that what I understand?

Mr. CAHAN: What I have said is this: The dominion franchise officer is an officer of this house, and those registrars who are appointed by him are also officers of this house. I will convey to the dominion franchise commissioner the view that has been expressed as being the general view of the house, and I have no doubt that the suggestion will be carried into effect.

Mr. NEILL: Let me tell the hon. member for West Lambton that I can answer his question better than the minister can answer it, apparently. I have in my possession a letter from the head of the department, dated within the last two days, stating exactly what I have said, that we will not get the lists for which my hon. friend has asked but that we will have to wait until they are all printed. The minister says that can be done by July 20. If that can be done it will be entirely satisfactory, but I beg leave to express doubt as to that. I certainly have that letter, in which I am told that the revised lists will not be furnished, as they were last fall, but that we will have to wait until they are all printed, which in some constituencies may mean a delay of months.

Mr. GRAY: That is exactly what I understood, and I object very strongly. When that list is eventually printed the names that have been added will simply appear in alphabetical or geographical order, and unless one has an organization as efficient as the Secretary of State has in the riding of St. Lawrence-St. George one will not be able to tell exactly what names have been added. I strenuously object; if I have to hunt out the names that have been added I cannot possibly see them all in a week or ten days and convert them to the proper way of thinking. I want to know what names have been added to the list in this revision, and I think every member, every defeated candidate and every nominated candidate is entitled to that information. As I understand it, that is all the hon. member for Comox-Alberni desires, and I think that is all any hon. member desires. I think in fairness we are entitled to know what names have been added, what names have been transferred and what names have been struck off the list since the establishment of the basic list in 1934. As I understand it the Secretary of State simply says that we will be given a list, and if we have efficient organizations we will be able to check off those who were on the list in 1934, so we will know what names have been added since that time. Surely the hon. gentleman sees the point we are urging. Surely it would be a very simple matter to have extra copies made when reporting to the franchise commissioner. It is not too late; the revision does not close until to-morrow, so it should be a simple matter to strike an extra copy or two. If the Secretary of State will say that he will so instruct the franchise commissioner—

Mr. CAHAN: He is not under my instructions.

Mr. GRAY: I am sorry, because I feel sure the Secretary of State would do so. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has expressed the feeling that the franchise commissioner would follow a suggestion made by the house I again urge that when the revising officers report to the franchise commissioner they send a copy to the candidate, and I think that will meet the situation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the Secretary of State if it would not be possible for some member of the ministry to bring this request to the attention of the franchise commissioner?

Mr. CAHAN: I offered to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then if my hon. friend will do that I think he will meet the situation.

Mr. POULIOT: There is more to it than that. Some names have been struck off and others added to the basic list that has been supplied to us. May I ask the Secretary of State if a new basic list will be printed, without the names that have been struck off and with the names that have been added, and if each member will be supplied with twenty-one copies of that list, or whether we shall receive only a partial list containing the names that have been struck off on the one hand and those that have been added on the other?

Mr. CAHAN: As I understand the law, and I am speaking from memory, as a retiring member of this house my hon. friend is entitled to receive twenty-one copies of the new print, and certainly he will receive them. The commissioner will do that; under the law it is his duty to do that. I understand further, though I may be mistaken, that the procedure followed will be for each registrar to send to the dominion franchise commissioner the old basic list, that is the list anterior to May 20 of this year. Through those names struck off a line will be drawn; for those names added new lines will be inserted. When the commissioner approves that list one copy will be sent to the printing bureau for the revision of the list in the composition room, and that will be carried out. I think it would meet the desire of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni if the registrar were instructed to give each member who desired it a copy of the revised list which he sends in to the dominion franchise commissioner.

Mr. NEILL: Two copies.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, I will suggest to the dominion franchise commissioner that this appears to be the view of the house. That is as far as I can go. It would be a very delicate matter for me to interfere, but I will convey to him the view of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sure if the Secretary of State does that the franchise officer will be only too ready to meet the wishes of the hon. members of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the item is carried, may I ask the minister the cost of preparing the lists for the last general election, and what will be the cost in the present year, including the cost of printing and purchasing those tons of lead for galleys?

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot answer that. Those matters do not come under my department, and I have no charge of such expenditures in any way, shape or form. I have charge of the printing, in connection with which I have made full returns to the house which are available to the hon. member. As to the printing of the lists for the last election, the house is fully informed. I cannot give any other information because it does not come under my department.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister states that the house is fully informed. He tells us nothing; how can we know? The lists were prepared in a certain way to effect economies, and now the minister cannot tell us what economies have been made. I remember distinctly that when the minister rose to submit certain legislation he said, "Here, we will save money this way." I ask him now, how did you save money that way; if the records are in the house, look after them.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member is evidently suffering from an hallucination induced by the exuberance of his own imagination. I made no such statement to the house. In the statement I made I dealt only with the cost of composition and printing.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not a somnambulist, and I am not dreaming; I remember what was said, and you must remember it yourself. We heard about saving money; I heard it, I think every hon. member heard it, and it is printed in Hansard. That is the reason the lists were made in a certain way. The legislation providing for the manner of preparing the lists was absurd. It has taken too much material; it has taken a long time, and not only that, the names are wrongly printed. The collection of the galleys has been badly done. Further, there will be a waste of paper because of revision of lists and because the government has waited too long to bring on the election. When I support the rights of the people and the policy of economy the minister states that I am suffering from hallucinations. Is he not ashamed of himself when he speaks that way? Did I ever go back to Lord Atholstan to receive my instructions? Never. Perhaps the one who went there suffered from hallucinations, and perhaps the one who suffered from hallucinations was the one who told the house that there would be economies when in fact there is such a waste that he cannot afford to tell the amounts to the committee. He does not give us the information, but simply tells us about the huge quantity of lead. Is it 5,000 or 50,000 tons? The building might crumble. It is like a mine; it should be picketed.

Item agreed to.

To provide necessities for George Black, M.P., $500.

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to know as a matter of information if in these circumstances an hon. member would receive his full indemnity?

Mr. RHODES: As has obtained in every session, a sum has been provided in the estimates allocated to hon. members who are passing through illness. In this instance I have no doubt the treasury board will take the usual course.

Mr. HEAPS: Do I understand that in this instance the hon. member will receive his full indemnity?

Mr. RHODES: I would expect that full indemnity would be provided for the dependents of the hon. member. This item has to do with hospital necessities.

Item agreed to.

Expenses of wheat advisory committee for 1935, Canada's assessment, $1,955.

Mr. YOUNG: Is this the committee which advised the government in drawing up the wheat agreement we heard so much about a few years ago?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like this item to stand.

Item stands.

Grant to the committee on arrangements for the meeting of the national conference of social work, 1935, $3,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is this a conference called by the government?

Mr. RHODES: I shall see if I have a memorandum in connection with it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe the item has to do with the international conference held in Montreal last week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Item agreed to.

Loan to the Halifax harbour commissioners with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council, for such period and upon such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine, to retire the obligation incurred in connection with settlement of the claims of J. P. Porter & Sons, Limited, $118,985.80.

Mr. HEAPS: What was the claim in this instance?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In connection with the completion of the construction of one of the piers at the ocean terminals at Halifax certain difficulties arose between the commission and the contractor. The contract was awarded in 1929 by the previous administration, and the company had a claim against the commission of $521,025.59 for additional quantities at contract rates and extra work for which no contract rates had been stated. A lawsuit was instituted against the commission. Last year I thought it would be in the interests of the public to have a settlement made. The matter was studied thoroughly by our engineers and eventually they made the report that if the company was willing to accept $105,235.20 it would be in the public interest to pay that amount.

Mr. HEAPS: Was that the engineers' report?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, the engineers' report.

Mr. HEAPS: Did you obtain a legal opinion?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was an engineering matter.

Mr. HEAPS: Was not a question of law involved?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Of course some question of law would be involved. It was done after reports were duly received from the engineers, and I am not sure whether or not the legal department has considered the matter.

However, we thought that under the circumstances it would be better to settle than to attempt to defend a claim of more than $521,000.

Mr. HEAPS: Why did the company put all the extra material into the work? Who gave them authority to do that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was not extra material; it was a difference in measurements made by our engineers in Halifax and those made by the engineers of the contractor. The main amount was for that difference. Our engineer was Mr. MacDonald who as hon. members are aware is now living in England. With the help of two other engineers we went over the figures, measurements and so on and finally they made a report that a settlement in the amount named in the vote would be in the interest of the department.

Mr. HEAPS: How did it come about that there was this great discrepancy between the figures of the government engineers and those of the contractors? A final claim of $500,000 is enormous.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This contract was for a very large amount.

Mr. HEAPS: How much?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not the figure before me, but I believe it was between two and a half and three million dollars.

Mr. HEAPS: If it was two million dollars there was a difference of twenty-five per cent in the amount of yardage as between the engineers of the government and the contractors.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was not all yardage. There was a claim for extra work; the foundation was deeper than had been expected. There are a good many details in the company's claims, and the ultimate claim would have been a great deal more, so that we thought it was in the interests of the department to make the settlement after the engineers had so reported.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps I may be allowed to say a word; I happen to have some knowledge of the item, having been at pains to make particular inquiry regarding it. As a result of a contract entered into some years ago in connection with Halifax harbour, J. P. Porter and Sons were paid in the neighbourhood of $3,600,000 for contract work. On the completion of the work there was a difference of opinion between the engineers of the government and those of the company with respect to measurement. There was no quarrel as to prices or terms.

Mr. HEAPS: On what basis was the contract let?

Mr. RHODES: On a yardage basis—measurement. It was not for a fixed sum. The company made a claim for something like $500,000; I believe it was in excess of that. It is not uncommon, in fact it is a very common experience, to have a minimum variation of ten per cent in a firm contract price and a larger variation in connection with measurement prices. This settlement is much less than ten per cent, and I had the fear myself—I wish to take the full responsibility so far as I am personally concerned—that if action were brought by the contractors they would succeed, and instead of a settlement of $118,000 they would be paid a much larger sum. Inasmuch as it was passed upon and approved by two independent engineers selected by the department, men of high repute who made the finding that this would be a fair settlement, and seeing that the contractors agreed to take it, I have no hesitation in saying that in the public interest we were wise in settling the claim and closing for this sum the contract with respect to this particular piece of construction.

Mr. REID: Are the harbour commissioners of Halifax and Quebec meeting interest on loans?

Mr. DURANLEAU: From the government?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate grant to Joseph Wilson, Halifax, $7,500.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understand what the item is, but I do not know that I am the one to explain it. It is a compromise on a judgment which was obtained in a suit by Joseph Wilson against a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The judgment was something like $12,500. The incident arose in this way. A bullet was fired from the pistol of a mounted policeman who was performing his duty, watching for rum runners in Nova Scotia. A car was ordered to stop at night and did not do so, and on the running board there was a man who was not engaged as one of the rum runners, but had been trying to fix the car, which had broken down. When the car would not stop the policeman fired, and instead of hitting the occupants the bullet hit the man who was on the running board. He was hit in the head and very seriously wounded. Action was brought against the crown, but of course the action did not lie against the crown and judgment was given against the individual member of the police force. The man has been very seriously injured, in all probability for life. It is a question whether his mentality will ever be restored, and this represents a settlement of the action in which he recovered judgment for $12,500 damages, and which of course he cannot recover against the individual.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate grant to Captain Aimé Dion, Montmagny, P.Q., $7,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is a most unfortunate matter. It is another claim for damages by reason of the action of a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who seemed suddenly to have become mentally deranged. There was a boat belonging to the forest reserve of the provincial government and which was going down the St. Lawrence. It was directed to call at a certain wharf for the purpose of delivering a summons that had to be served. When the forest reserve boat landed at the wharf, where there is a detachment of mounted police, a member of the force named Duranleau boarded the boat immediately, drew his pistol and charged the boat with having contraband liquor. He did not give the captain time to explain at all but drew his revolver and fired three or four bullets into him. It was seen at the time that the policeman was not in normal condition; some people thought he was intoxicated. He was promptly arrested and put in prison, and in due course brought to trial, but at the trial he was found not guilty on the ground of insanity, and is now confined in one of the provincial asylums. The unfortunate captain of the boat was very seriously injured, probably maimed for life. He has been in hospital for twenty-three months and it is doubtful whether he will ever recover the use of one of his limbs into which three bullets entered. His hospital and medical bill now exceeds $3,000, and his wages, which he has lost, $1,500. He has presented a claim for $10,000 additional for damages. Settlement has been offered in the sum of $7,500, which his representatives are prepared to accept.

Item agreed to.

To provide for payments of interest under, and to hereby approve of the terms and conditions of orders in council P.C. 1462 and P.C. 1533 of June 7, 1935, respecting orders of steel rails for the Canadian National Railway Company, $30,000.

Mr. EULER: Will the minister explain this?

Mr. RHODES: It will be recalled that a provision was made whereby contracts could be entered into to provide equipment, rails and rolling stock for the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. This vote is to provide for the interest carrying charges which the government may be called upon to pay as a result of that agreement.

Mr. EULER: To the banks?

Mr. RHODES: The provision was that the government would carry the interest upon the money invested by the companies in the purchase of equipment up to a given date. This is to provide for the interest for this year.

Item agreed to.

To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for salaries, reclassifications and increases and to authorize payment of the salary of any employee, who is made permanent, from the appropriation under which his salary as a temporary employee has been provided—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Will the minister kindly explain the words, "subject to the approval of the treasury board"? I should like to know what reclassifications and increases are contemplated and in what manner they will be effected.

Mr. RHODES: It is estimated that the statutory increases will require $750,000, and the balance of $250,000 will provide for other increases, reclassifications and promotions which may be effected as a result of regulations to be laid down by the treasury board.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Am I right in assuming that increases and promotions will be left entirely in the hands of the treasury board?

Mr. RHODES: Subject to regulations which will be provided by order in council.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This will be a complete departure from the procedure which obtained hitherto when promotions and increases were recommended by the civil service commission after investigation, or by recommendation of a deputy head, certified by the head of a department and ratified by the treasury board. The civil service commission is to be eliminated completely in connection with reclassifications, which term is used instead of promotions. The civil service commission is to be eliminated also in connection with increases.

Mr. RHODES: No, that is not right. There will be some variation in the practice which has obtained hitherto, but there is every reason to expect that when the regulations are promulgated they will prove generally satisfactory to the service.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not intend to enter into a lengthy controversy with the Minister of Finance, but I am satisfied that all the work which was done previously by the civil service commission in connection with promotions and increases will be taken away from the commission and placed within the exclusive jurisdiction of the treasury board. The minister states that the statutory increases will require something like $750,000, and I should like to know if he means that everyone entitled to an increase is to receive one. The Prime Minister made it quite plain the other day that hereafter promotions would be made and increases given for merit and efficiency only. That is not a departure from the previous procedure because the Civil Service Act states that statutory increases are made for meritorious and efficient work and granted upon recommendation of the deputy head, certified by the minister and approved by the commission subject to ratification by the treasury board. I am afraid that the civil service commission is to be left out of things. The deputy head will choose his pets and make recommendations to the treasury board which will probably be sanctioned.

The civil service commission is there for a particular purpose and we either need it or we do not need it. If the government is honest in its purpose, why does it not say that the civil service commission should be abolished? All during this session we have had departures from the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and the estimates are replete with promotions made outside the provisions of that act. I am not quarrelling with those who have been fortunate enough to receive promotions, but the fact remains that there has been a tremendous amount of discrimination in these matters. I am sure that the promotions and increases which have been made would have been given to others had the civil service commission been handling the matter. I protest most vigorously against this departure from the provisions of the Civil Service Act. The Civil Service Act is on the statute book, and I resent the insinuation that heretofore a large number of promotions and increases have been given to those who did not deserve them and that hereafter only those who are entitled to them will receive them. I noticed an article in the press which I am afraid has created a wrong impression. An official of the Department of Finance was asked if these would be statutory increases, and he said that they would not be automatic, they would be given for efficiency. That is the way the statute reads. He continued and stated that the government believes in efficiency and businesslike methods, so that the increases will be given entirely on merit. The insinuation there is that the increases and promotions of the past were not based on merit, but were purely automatic. That is not a fair statement. I do not want to prolong the discussion, but I would point this out to the minister: in the session of 1932, I think it was, when the ten per cent deductions were made, I indicated to him—and he realized the importance of the statement I made then—that when the deductions were to be terminated, steps should be taken not only to compensate the employees for the injury suffered by reason of the ten per cent deduction during the years it was in force, but also to place them in the position they would have occupied with reference to promotions and statutory increases had the changes then proposed not been made. I could give the Minister of Finance the page in Hansard where I said that steps should be taken, when the time came for the restoration of the ten per cent deduction, to make these compensations and adjustments. I am very much afraid that in this item of $1,000,000 there is nothing that has the slightest bearing upon placing civil servants in the position they would have occupied in respect of superannuation and with reference to promotions and statutory increases had the salary deduction not been made. That is what I want to urge upon the Minister of Finance. I understand during the recess this matter of promotions and statutory increases will be taken up by the cabinet and rules or regulations will be made in regard to the granting of them. I hope when the matter is under consideration the important factor will be taken into account that these civil servants must be placed with reference to superannuation in the position they would have occupied had these deductions not been made and had the promotions and statutory increases been granted. I protest against this most radical departure from the present system, this cutting loose from the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. RHODES: I think the senior member for Ottawa is hardly warranted in making the statement that the estimates are replete with examples of promotions being made outside the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There were seventy-two given out in the return brought down the other day.

Mr. RHODES: I think the record of the government in that respect has not been exceptional, and I do not think there has been any expansion of the practice. Regulations are required because of the peculiar nature of the conditions that have arisen by reason of the circumstance that deductions have been made over a period of years. My hon. friend knows full well that superannuation has never been interfered with; the ten per cent deduction has no bearing upon superannuation. The only question which may arise is, if I may put it in this way, the amount of increased salary that a certain employee would have received had he received the statutory promotions in the ordinary automatic course. In view of the fact that there have been deductions over the last three years, we have to have special regulations to deal with that situation. I may assure my hon. friend and the committee that there is no intention on the part of the treasury board to lay down regulations so far as the letter of the law will permit with regard to these civil servants, but we feel in the public interest there can be a better class of administration if there is a closer check held by the treasury board over expenditures.

My hon. friend has said that there are no cases in which promotion has been given except on merit. I may say to him that I take second place to no one in my admiration of the civil service as a whole, but there are in the service some cases, not numerous, where men have received promotions who did not deserve them by any standard of measure, efficiency, qualification or otherwise. So far as the person is concerned who is entitled to promotion, his rights will not be interfered with in the slightest degree. We will address ourselves to this matter as speedily as possible after the house rises, and I hope it will appear to my hon. friend that the course taken will be satisfactory.

Item agreed to.

To pay to the estate of the late General Sir Arthur William Currie, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., LL.D., in recognition of the eminent services rendered to his country by the deceased general during the great war, $50,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think this item should not pass without some word being said in parliament concerning it. I am not objecting to it; I am rising to support it. The item is:

To pay to the estate of the late General Sir Arthur William Currie, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., LL.D., in recognition of the eminent services rendered to his country by the deceased general during the great war.

This is a belated recognition of the services of one of the most distinguished of Canada's sons. It is, I think, unfortunate that after the war there was no vote of thanks on the part of this parliament to the forces that served overseas on land, on the sea and in the air, and that no recognition whatever, so far as I know, was given by parliament of the distinguished services of eminent generals and others who participated in the war. There is in Great Britain an honoured tradition that such should be done, and it is a tradition which I think we might well follow in this country. There is the further tradition that exceptional rewards should be given to those who render their country exceptional services in exceptional conditions with exceptional success; that the services rendered Canada by General Currie were of that class is well known.

The British government at the close of the war voted to General the Honourable Sir Julian Byng the sum of £30,000 as the one who had been in command of the Canadian corps for a time and later of a British army. General Currie was the only Canadian who rose to the command of the Canadian army overseas, and it is due to his memory that this House of Commons and parliament should take recognition of his distinguished services. Personally I think it would have been preferable had the government asked parliament to vote a life annuity to Lady Currie in recognition of the services of her late husband rather than ask us to vote this lump sum to his estate. There must be some special reason why the government have adopted the latter course. This recognition, as I have said, is rather late in being made but it is a recognition that is greatly merited. I believe it is one that will be appreciated by all surviving members of the Canadian corps and by the people of Canada generally.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I regret to have to register a protest against this grant. The late Sir Arthur Currie may have tendered eminent services during the war; into that matter I do not intend to enter, but I would say that there were tens of thousands of Canadian officers and private soldiers who did their best during that period and who rendered in their own spheres just as great service as that of Sir Arthur

Currie. I would say that the late Sir Arthur Currie and his family were well taken care of during the war and since. I think of the large numbers of the rank and file who have had no such tribute paid to them and no such material care, although they are sadly in need of it. In my own city a few days ago there were hundreds of men camped outside the hospital, urging that they, as returned men, should be given at least as large an amount of relief as the ordinary civilians of Winnipeg. Only to-day I was stopped on the street by two men wearing returned men's buttons, who claimed that they could not obtain relief from the city of Ottawa and that for various reasons they were turned down even at the legion shelter here. Anyone who is up and down this country must come across no end of cases of that sort. Until such time as we feel that we have enough to provide for the rank and file of the returned men as well as for the large numbers of younger men who are coming along, I think it is quite improper that we should make such a large grant as this to one individual. We say we do not stand for class distinctions in this country, but in passing a grant of this kind we are setting up certain class distinctions that in my judgment are injurious to the best interests of this country. I differ from the right hon. leader of the opposition, and suggest that there are large numbers of Canadians who will deeply resent special treatment of this kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would mention just two points in reply to my hon. friend. One has reference to his remark that the late Sir Arthur Currie has been well cared for. I might remind my hon. friend that Sir Arthur Currie has been in his grave for some time, and he is in his grave because of broken health resulting from the service he gave his country overseas. May I remind my hon. friend also that this grant takes nothing away from any other returned man. If it took anything from any living soldier, any private in the ranks, I would be the last to support it. But there are times when individuals, even members of parliament, stand for communities as a whole, and the recognition of their services is looked upon as the recognition of the service of the community they represent. General Sir Arthur Currie represented the Canadian army corps overseas; he represented the people of Canada in the great war; in his service overseas, he represented what Canada stood for, and I for one believe that that service was part of a service to humanity rendered at a time of the world's greatest need.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sorry that my right hon. leader is not in his place at this moment, but in his absence I desire to say that I entirely agree with the remarks of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition. I am very glad that at last we are recognizing to some extent at least the great service performed for this country by the late Sir Arthur Currie. I only wish it had been done during his lifetime.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is not a very nice thing to have to oppose a grant of this kind, particularly after the man for whom it is made has passed away, but I think I must take exception to it. I cannot agree with the statement of the leader of the opposition that it does not take anything away from anyone else. If it does not; if there is sufficient for every returned soldier in need and the widow of every returned soldier who passed away because of injury received during the war, why do they not get it? I have before me an item that I clipped from the Vancouver paper that came, I think, yesterday. This is what I find:

> Many returned soldiers and their families are urgently in need of clothing and shoes. If donors will telephone the returned soldiers' club, contributions will be called for.

Why should one man's family receive $50,000 and the families of other soldiers who gave their all—gave their life, and no man can give more—have to do with other people's cast off clothing? I protest against this grant until every returned man and every soldier's widow has at least a decent standard of living.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I say to my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) that he is mixing two entirely different questions. I think there are some in this house, I say it with all respect and deference, who have done more than he has done—

Mr. MacINNIS: I ask the hon. gentleman to retract that. There is nothing against me as a citizen of this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If my hon. friend will allow me to finish my sentence, I mean in the solution of soldiers' problems.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, I did my share, whatever was called for.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was not casting the slightest reflection on my hon. friend; he took me up too soon. I say many of us in this house have devoted many years to the solution of soldiers' problems; I think I may claim that I am as conversant with those problems as my hon. friend, and if I thought for one instant that this grant would interfere in the slightest degree with giving full justice to every widow, orphan, and dependent of a Canadian soldier or every disabled soldier in Canada I would not support it. But I do not think so. I think it symbolizes the effort of the Canadian army in the great war. This house has at all times unanimously and regardless of party supported the utmost efforts to care for the widows, orphans and dependents of those who served overseas. I am sure this House of Commons will continue to do so, and to see that every Canadian pensioner or soldier who deserves a pension will get the utmost that can be given. That is not a party question in this house; we are all for it. I agree with my right hon. leader that by this act of justice we should indicate to the widow of the late Sir Arthur Currie our recognition of the services of the man who was privileged to lead our gallant Canadians overseas.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then as this is not going to take anything from any other returned soldier or returned soldier's widow or family, I suggest that we make a contribution to every other returned soldier or returned soldier's widow, not of $50,000 but, since we have enough, of $1,000, and see that that grant is paid as long as they need it. I should like my hon. friend to support that.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I must say that I cannot favour this vote. There are hundreds of returned men among the two thousand assembled to-day in Regina who are protesting against a pittance of twenty cents a day in the relief camps. When they see that not a returned man but the estate of a returned man is being paid $50,000 a year—

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, not $50,000 a year.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Well, $50,000 to his estate. There are plenty of returned men in the constituency I represent who are in real distress to-day. All they want is a chance to earn a living, and it is not provided for them. If there is any real necessity for a vote of this kind, why not grant a certain amount yearly? We all know that Sir Arthur Currie rendered great services, but if there is any real distress in his family why not grant a yearly allowance to his estate? I am entirely opposed to a grant of $50,000 to the estate of any man, no matter what may have been his reputation in the past.

Item agreed to.

To provide for expenses of the comptroller of the treasury's office — further amount required, $80,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This had better be held.

Item stands.

Allowance to the representative of the Department of Finance as a member of the Canadian Farm Loan board, during tenure, $1,500.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister if the farm loan board is operating now in the province of Quebec?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. POULIOT: And Mr. Baillargeon is in charge in that province?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. REID: I wonder if the minister could give any information as to what the government are paying those who have been appointed in the various provinces. I know in the province of British Columbia a new appointee, Mr. Hellmer, has taken charge. I wonder if the minister has that information.

Mr. RHODES: I am afraid I have not the exact salaries here; if I have not I am content to let the item stand.

Mr. REID: Perhaps the minister could send me the information.

Mr. RHODES: I am content to let the item stand; I will obtain that information.

Item stands.

Grant to l'Association Canadienne-Française des Aveugles to assist in work with the blind, $4,050.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise not to oppose this vote but to ask why other similar associations are not given grants as well. There is an association that appeared before our committee dealing with the question of pensions for the blind, the Canadian Federation for the Blind, which I think has been doing very good work right across the country. I understand it has some twelve branches; I know it has been very active in my own city as well as in Toronto, Montreal and elsewhere. It would seem to me highly desirable that this association should have a grant as well. I know there is an item here for the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, but as I understand it the type of work carried on by the Canadian National Institute differs very materially from that carried on by the Canadian Federation for the Blind. I regret exceedingly, as I feel a great many members of this house regret, that apparently we are not to have any legislation providing for pensions for the blind. I wish, even at this late hour, the government could see its way clear to reconsider that decision, but especially in view of that fact it seems to me that the blind ought to be given some encouragement to carry on the type of educational work they have been carrying on in order to improve their condition. I hope the minister will consider the possibility of making a similar grant to this other organization.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Spotton): Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just a moment. I have asked whether the minister will not consider the claim of this other organization. A few moments ago we were told that an item had been put at a certain figure because no other figure had been asked. Have there been no requests for a grant on behalf of this Canadian Federation for the Blind, or is there any reason why they should not have a similar grant?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I cannot recall offhand whether or not there was a specific request from the organization to which my hon. friend refers, but if they missed making a request it would be unique, because I may say to my hon. friend that one of the great difficulties of a minister of finance is the preparation of miscellaneous items for either the main or the supplementary estimates. The requests come in not by the dozen but by the hundred, requests of every conceivable kind, and while in the winnowing process there may be an injustice done here or there I am sure not only this government but all governments do the best they can to hold the balance fairly even and to deal with individual compassionate items on their merits.

In the case of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, that was an old institution, in good standing and country wide in its operation, and because of the difficult times through which we have been passing the sources of private donations, which hitherto have been if not ample at least reasonably sufficient to meet the needs of the organization, to a large extent have dried up. The result has been that unless somebody came to the rescue of the organization and assisted it in connection with its debt loan, its work would be very seriously impaired. This special item was therefore put in the estimates for the purpose of endeavouring to enable that very worthy organization to carry on. It by no means follows that because this or any other organization is given special consideration in the estimates there are not other worthy organizations which might be included, but we must try to keep our sense of proportion and do the best we can in the circumstances. I should be glad to make further inquiry more specifically with respect to the organization which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has mentioned, and I may say to him that we certainly will give sympathetic consideration to it, as we have endeavoured to do in connection with all these compassionate items. I think that same statement could be made with regard to any minister of finance or any government we have had at any time.

Item agreed to.

The Economic Council of Canada Act, 1935, $20,000.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister if the members of the economic council have been appointed and, if so, who they are and when they were appointed?

Mr. RHODES: I do not think they have been appointed.

Mr. POULIOT: This is most extraordinary. I remember very well when the right hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) rose in his place and said that for the assistance of the Prime Minister the appointment of an economic council, a super brain trust, was urgent. The enactment was passed; nothing has been done. The Prime Minister seems better than ever; he appears to be in good health; he is in the house more than he was before, and there is no economic council. We do not need it. Moreover, sir, I strongly object to that economic council because it is a direct insult to every member of the cabinet. Either the members of the government are competent or they are not. If they are competent we do not need an economic council; if they are incompetent let them say good-bye to us. I want to defend the dignity of the members of the cabinet; I am acting on their behalf, and I find this legislation extremely stupid. There was some talk in the press that this and that gentleman would be appointed to the economic council to advise the government —to advise the government now that all the legislation has been passed. It has been said already that the government is eating soup for dessert; I see every minister with a toothpick in his mouth before luncheon and before dinner. It is most extraordinary; it is incredible; it is inconceivable. This legislation was to save the country; this council was to improve the legislation, and all the legislation was baked—I mean half-baked—before any member of this economic council was appointed. Sir, it is a farce; it is a joke. In the United States there was a brain trust which turned out to be no good, and the president appointed a super brain trust. He left the brain trust that was no good underneath and put on top of it a super brain trust, instead of dispensing with the first.

The only reason for this economic council is to give these hair-splitters who try to put their dreams into operation a chance to see what they can do. I should like to ask the present leader of the government to drop this vote. The taxpayers of Canada will have to pay this amount if this item is passed; they will have to pay taxes in order to keep that economic council going when it is an insult to each and every member of the cabinet, including the Prime Minister. It is a crutch which is half broken before it is used. I am asking the government to drop this vote, because it is a waste of money.

Mr. YOUNG: When the bill to establish an economic council was before the house I understood that this body would not cost the country one cent. I thought it was to be composed of men already in the civil service who would act on the council free of charge and would receive no additional remuneration. How will the $20,000 be spent?

Mr. SPENCE: Your understanding was wrong, probably.

Mr. RHODES: I have no details of the item, because it does not come under my department. The hon. member will realize, however, that there would be certain expenses to be met.

Mr. YOUNG: What for? They live in Ottawa, and they meet here once in a while in a room paid for by the government.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member would not expect them to stay here all the time. However, if there is any question about it, I am content that it should stand.

Item stands.

Amount required for compassionate allowances to farmers who have suffered loss on account of shipments of cattle made through the Richelieu Corporation, during the fiscal year 1933-34. Payments to be made only on the specific authority of the governor in council, $42,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this vote?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is to provide compensation to farmers in western Canada who consigned goods to the Richelieu Corporation under the mistaken belief that that corporation was bona fide and carrying on under government auspices. There is no legal liability on the government, but it is felt that the expenditure is justified on compassionate grounds.

Mr. GARDINER: How did it happen that these people consigned goods on the assumption indicated by the minister. Did they act on an advertisement of the corporation?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My information is that, without knowledge of the department, the Richelieu Corporation went through a portion of western Ontario and stated that the department had assisted in providing stalls for the two ships fitted out by the corporation and used this statement as evidence of the good faith of the Richelieu Corporation. In this way they induced farmers to consign goods to them.

Mr. GARDINER: I assume that the corporation was made up of individuals. Was any action taken against the individuals to recover the property so consigned?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My recollection is that the corporation went into bankruptcy. A criminal charge was laid against the officers of conspiracy to defraud; I understand the charge failed.

Item agreed to.

To provide hereby, notwithstanding anything contained in The Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to the present Canadian Minister to France of an annuity at the rate of $3,000, to commence upon his retirement and to continue thereafter at the above rate during his lifetime, $3,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like the item to stand. The hon. member for Quebec East, among others, wishes to speak on it.

Item stands.

To enable the governor in council for and as one of the purposes of section 9 of the Supplementary Public Works Construction Act, 1935, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans to the railway companies for the betterment or repair of railway equipment out of any sum authorized by subsection 4 of said section 9 to be expended for the purchase of railway equipment, any such loan to be in reduction of the sum so authorized to be expended, $1.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the minister explain this vote? It looks more like an act of parliament than an estimate.

Mr. MANION: This is done for the purpose of permitting the Minister of Finance to advance moneys for repairs, rather than to guarantee securities. It does not increase the expenditures in any way, but it does permit him to advance moneys.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This seems an odd way to do it. Should it not be part of an act of parliament?

Mr. MANION: It could have been done as a modification of Bill No. 93, but it was thought preferable to do it in this way

Mr. RHODES: The bill was passed. This action was taken at the instance of the Department of Railways and Canals, and I took no exception because the original bill had passed both houses, and to pass a second bill respecting a similar matter during one session would seem to be a cumbersome procedure. This method was adopted for the convenience of the companies and it will not cost the treasury one cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: More government by order in council?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Item agreed to.

To provide, notwithstanding the terms of the Civil Service Act or any other act or law, for payment of honoraria to members of the public service—subject to allocation by the treasury board, $10,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A few moments ago an item somewhat similar to this was called and exception was taken to it. I believe it is a dangerous procedure to give a government power to pay honoraria out of the public revenues to members of the public service without naming them in the estimates.

Mr. RHODES: Under the circumstances I believe the item should stand. It was submitted by the Prime Minister, and I believe he has a special consideration in mind.

Item stands.

Miscellaneous, including printing and stationery; subscriptions to commercial papers; flags; dating stamps; locks; instruments; express charges on samples; legal forms; legal expenses; premiums on guarantee bonds; uniforms for customs-excise officers; laboratory equipment and supplies, etc.—further amount required, $25,000.

Mr. POULIOT: As this item relates to printing perhaps I may get some information from the government about the printing of the lists. I asked the Secretary of State for the information and he referred me to returns. I wonder if the government could give any statement as to the cost of printing election lists. If they cannot do so now possibly they would let the item stand.

The CHAIRMAN: This is printing in connection with the Department of National Revenue, and has nothing to do with the printing of voters' lists.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh, well, printing is done by the printing bureau. Everything is so badly mixed up in the supplementary estimates that this vote might include something for the printing of lists. The item should stand until the Secretary of State is present to state whether or not this vote includes an expenditure for revision of lists.

Mr. MATTHEWS: It does not include any expenditure for such printing.

Mr. POULIOT: I take your word.

Item agreed to.

Printing of parliamentary and departmental publications — further amount required to provide for the Canada Year Book, $25,000.

Mr. YOUNG: In the present session we have passed many bills which have been sent to the other chamber, amended and sent back to this chamber. Some of the amendments have been accepted and some rejected. Then they have gone back to the upper chamber sometimes for further amendment. The result is that very few members know exactly how any of these bills read to-day. This afternoon we went to the other chamber at which time royal assent was given to certain bills. I do not know exactly how they read in their final form. I went to the distribution office and asked for copies of them as they are now, but I was told that they were not printed and would not be printed. We will not know how those bills read until the published volume comes out later.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member could get them from the Senate, and in the distribution office.

Mr. YOUNG: No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The clerk of the Senate would give them to the hon. member.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Why should we have to go there for them?

Mr. YOUNG: Could they not be put in the distribution office?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are not yet printed. I understood the hon. member wanted to know what was in them and what was not in them, as finally passed.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes, we wanted to know what they contained in their final form.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The clerk of the Senate would let the hon. member see them.

Mr. YOUNG: I want to have the bill as it is finally passed, so I may take it home and tell people what is in it. I am told these bills will not be available until the published volume comes out some months later.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That has been the usual practice.

Mr. YOUNG: Some provision should be made.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe they are published in the Canada Gazette almost immediately after their passage. If the hon. member will look in the Canada Gazette he will find them.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry, but the minister is mistaken. I must tell him that the bills are not printed in the Canada Gazette. Sometimes orders in council are printed, but not as many as we would wish. It is a fact that the bills are not so printed. I am very sorry that the Minister of Justice has to slip like that; I am very sorry for him. But what happens? The minister has made the mistake in this way: It is the official gazette of the province of Quebec which publishes a supplement in French and English of the public bills. It is bilingual, and I believe in this respect the province of Quebec has set a good example for the dominion government to follow.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They do in Ontario too.

Mr. POULIOT: That is good; I am sorry that such confusion exists.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If any hon. member desires a copy of the bill he can get it by applying to the clerk of the Senate.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not see why we should go into the corridors like messenger boys to get copies of bills. It should be the business of the Minister of Justice to see to it that every member of parliament is supplied with a complete set of the bills that have been passed, so that they can be obtained immediately after parliament prorogues.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I suggest that the hon. member bring in a bill to that effect. Under the law now and for the last sixty years these bills have not been printed.

Mr. YOUNG: There is no law against it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under what authority will you do it?

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman says that no bills are ready, but he told us a minute ago to go to the Senate. If they do not exist how can you get them?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I said you could get a copy of the bill at the Senate at any time. The clerk of the Senate will give it. I have received them the day after prorogation, certified with a big seal on them.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not care for the seal; what I want is the bill. The Minister of Justice told us to go to the Senate to get the bills, and now he says that the bills are not printed. What does his explanation mean?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I mean that you can get a copy of that bill as passed, certified by the clerk of parliament, and you will get a big ribbon and a seal on it.

Mr. POULIOT: There is no clerk of parliament. There is a clerk of the House of Commons and a clerk of the Senate, but there is no clerk of parliament. How, therefore, can I get it from the clerk of parliament?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I agree with the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) that, this year particularly, when so many new and important bills have been passed, bills that have been so extensively amended, it is difficult to know just what each bill finally contains and what the clauses mean, without having the bill as finally adopted. I am not talking about going home and spouting on the election platform, but every constituent at home has a right to ask his member of parliament what a particular bill is as finally passed. I have had numerous requests not merely for copies of bills but for an explanation of precisely what some particular bill provides, the terms of the bill, the powers embodied in it and what must be done under it. But I have not been able to give definite information; I have simply had to assure those who inquired that I should have to wait until the bill finally passed both houses of parliament, because bills are so extensively amended that you cannot tell in what form any bill will finally emerge. It is far more important this year than ever before that bills should be available in completed form to every member of parliament who wants them. Will bills be available in the Senate in sufficient numbers to enable all members of the house to receive copies? If not, then the suggestion that copies of the bill can be obtained means little. It is practically useless if they are so limited in number that every member cannot receive a copy.

Mr. POULIOT: You, Mr. Chairman, are a man of great learning, and you know the maxim, ignorantia legis neminem excusat—ignorance of the law excuses no one. But, sir, this is very serious. The reason why there are so many amendments is the fact that the legislation has been half baked. It has been prepared by third rate clerks who do not know their job and who hand out to the government such rotten legislation that they have to amend it this way and that. It is a patchwork which it is impossible to describe, and then it goes to the Senate and when it comes back no minister is able to recognize his brain child. Who can get a clear idea of the law maker's intent? In the last five years every bill has been turned upside down from the moment of its introduction into this house until the amendments have received their last reading. Something should be done, and I hope we shall be able to find out what has been passed during this session. Perhaps it is the intention of the government to prevent the people of Canada from finding out what legislation they have passed; they are probably so much ashamed of it that they do not want the Canadian people to know what their achievements amount to. But does anyone expect any member of parliament, with the vast amount of correspondence that must be carried on, and the reading of blue-books and all that, to follow every change in a bill as shown in the votes and proceedings? It is absurd. It is the more absurd because very often bills go to the privy council and changes are made at great expense to the exchequer through faulty drafting. It was proved in the committee on translations last year that there was great lack of knowledge on the part of those who drafted the legislation. It had been printed five or six times before it suited the taste of the cabinet members. If any bill can be printed so many times before it is approved by them I do not see why it cannot be printed once for all for the use of members once it has become the law of the land. The waste occurs before the bill is considered by the cabinet, and when we need the bill in its final form we cannot get it.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Weights and measures inspection service—further amount required, $35,000.

Mr. YOUNG: Is this in connection with the price spreads report—the majority report I mean?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It has some connection with it. The sum of $35,000 is required, or alleged to be required, by the departmental officers for certain expenses. I may say that the amount of this vote has been reduced in recent years and it is necessary to employ extra help to meet conditions which have arisen by reason of the administration of the Weights and Measures Act and the general policy of the department to enforce the act in consequence of the price spreads investigation, and for additional services.

Item agreed to.

Publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad—further amount required, $2,000.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think I should make an explanation of this item. It is to permit the holding of an essay competition in Australia, with a view to making Canada better known in that country. The pupils of the secondary schools in the various states of Australia will be invited to submit essays on Canada, and the successful contestant will be awarded a return trip to Canada as a prize. Recently the Australian government, through its trade commissioner, held a similar competition in Canada and the successful contestant is shortly to leave on a visit to Australia. I may say that this competition was requested to be held by the Australian trade commissioner as a compliment to his country.

Mr. POULIOT: When the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was Prime Minister, Canada was first in England, but, unfortunately, Australia has passed her because of the policies of this government. Canada now ranks second or third in London, and instead of holding competitions this government should endeavour to learn from Australia the reasons for her success. Perhaps this may be unnecessary as the government may have an opportunity of learning from the Liberal party. Two years ago, $100,000 was voted to the Department of Trade and Commerce for advertising to be carried on in England under the control of the High Commissioner for Canada. Instead of making his report to the Department of Trade and Commerce, that gentleman made it to the Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Department of Trade and Com merce asked for $100,000 of Canadian money to be given to Mr. Howard Ferguson to be used for advertising; he used that money to give dinners and so forth, but he did not make a return to the minister who supplied him with it. This shows the little care this government has taken to follow parliamentary traditions.

DOMINION DAY ADJOURNMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I beg to move:

That when this house do adjourn this day, it stand adjourned until Tuesday next at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, July 2, 1935.

The house met at three o'clock.

CLERK AND CLERK ASSISTANT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that it has been arranged that during the absence of the clerk of the house, Mr. T. M. Fraser will act as clerk of the house, and that Mr. R. P. King, chief of English Journals, will act as assistant clerk of the house, for the remainder of the session.

CANADIAN GRAIN BOARD

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) presented the second report of the special committee to which was referred Bill No. 98, to provide for the constitution and powers of the Canadian grain board, as follows:

Your committee has duly considered the said bill and begs leave to report the same, with amendments.

EMPIRE TRADE AGREEMENTS

TRANSFER TO GOVERNMENT ORDERS OF MOTION OF MR. HARRIS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That order No. 12 be transferred from public bills and orders to government orders for consideration this day.

92582—261½

He said: It does not follow that it is to be considered to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. BENNETT: There was a motion by Mr. Harris respecting the operations of the British preference, and the right hon. leader of the opposition on February 22 pointed out that we had prevented the house from voting on that motion. The effect of this motion will be to place it upon the order paper so that the debate may be concluded and a vote taken.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The effect of placing this motion upon the order paper at this time may be to prolong the session very materially. Certainly it will not afford the same opportunity for debate as if that opportunity had been given when the motion was properly before the house. Earlier in the session we repeatedly requested that we should have this opportunity but I find it very difficult to discover any reasonable ground for making the transfer at this time.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE: I wish to add my own word on this. We have now been in session for six months. We have completed the fifth year of the duration of this parliament. We are here in the month of July, and now the government wants to take the time of parliament and of the members to discuss a motion to praise something they did three years ago. Of all the foolish things that have passed at this session this easily earns the palm.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough) Under public bills and orders No. 16 stands in my name; I wonder if the Prime Minister would be good enough to treat my motion as he is treating that of the hon. member for Toronto-Scarborough (Mr. Harris).

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows quite well why that resolution stood. It was the subject matter of negotiation with the government of the United States, and it was thought undesirable—

Mr. DUFF: That was in regard to reciprocity.

Mr. BENNETT: —in the public interest that that should be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No. 11 is in the same category.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, there are three in the same category.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say a word in protest against this motion. In my judgment there are other motions standing under public bills and orders far more important than the motion being moved forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is taking down the old rusted gun which has been hanging over the fireplace for three years. This is most absurd, most ridiculous and most foolish, because nothing came out of the Ottawa agreements. The 1930 conference in London was a failure; it was the first failure.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this motion is not debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motions for or against the transfer of public bills and orders to government orders are not subject to debate.

Mr. POULIOT: Then, speaking to the point of order, I will ask you, Mr. Speaker, if I will have a right to speak when the motion comes up on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I will do so at that time.

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): I did not vote, but my pair did vote. I wish to vote. When I was asked to vote my pair was not in the house; I refer to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). He has come into the house since, and I wish to have my vote recorded as being in favour of the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I regret that the Speaker cannot recognize pairs. The hon. member did not rise in his place when the vote was called.

Mr. MULOCK: I was in my seat. Apparently there is some misunderstanding, which I regret but I was certainly in my seat.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I was paired with the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Munn). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. GOLDING: I was paired with the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Wright). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. SMOKE: I was paired with the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. CHARTERS: I was paired with the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Blair). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON: I was paired with the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Desrochers). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WHITE (London): I was paired with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. STEVENS: I was paired with the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. RYERSON: I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin (Mr. Taylor). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. CASSELMAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BURNS: I was paired with the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. GAGNON: I was paired with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WEESE: I was paired with the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Campbell). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. ST-PERE: I was paired with the hon. member for South Hastings (Mr. Tummon). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. FACTOR: I was paired with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): I was paired with the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. SPENCER: I was paired with the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Davies). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I was paired with the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. LUCAS: I was paired with the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Stewart). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Séguin). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Fortin). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): I was paired with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Dubois (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Bell). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

B. C. RELIEF CAMP STRIKERS

REQUEST FOR LEAVE TO MOVE ADJOURNMENT TO DISCUSS MATTER OF URGENT PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under standing order 31 I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the serious situation in Regina accompanied by loss of life.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would permit me, may I say that we will move to go into supply to afford him an opportunity this afternoon to discuss the matter he desires to discuss.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When do we go into supply?

Mr. BENNETT: Some time this afternoon we will make the motion. So far as that is concerned, we can make it the first order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That will be definitely this afternoon?

Mr. BENNETT: It will be the first order of business.

FREIGHT RATES REVISION

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. On February 4 of this year on behalf of the government of British Columbia I lodged an appeal to the governor in council against the decision of the board of railway commissioners refusing to grant a reduction in freight rates on grain for feeding purposes from the prairie provinces to British Columbia. When may we expect the privy council to deal with the matter?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously very difficult to deal with matters of this kind when the house is in session because arguments have to be heard. All appeals of this character have usually been sent back to the technical officers of the board of railway commissioners for a report.

EXPORT OF HAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) if the issuance of licences for the export of hay to the United States is a matter of political patronage or not?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): No.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING RETIREMENT OF DOCTOR H. M. TORY AS CHAIRMAN, TABLED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson). On June 19 last the minister tabled the correspondence with regard to the retirement of Doctor H. M. Tory as president of the national research council. There was one letter which he did not table and if you will permit me, sir, I will quote what the minister said in respect to that:

> I should like to say that in a letter to me dated March 7, Doctor Tory made certain representations. This letter was marked "personal," and for that reason it is not included in the file; otherwise it would be produced. I have not been able to get Doctor Tory to release the privilege as he is not in the city.

I would ask the minister if he has yet got the consent of Doctor Tory to release that letter.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the minister endeavouring to get it released?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No.

Mr. SANDERSON: No the second time?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Twice.

CITY MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, on May 5 a letter was addressed by myself to somebody in town. The address contained the name and number of the street, and below that there were in French the two words "en ville," which means city. That letter has been returned to me by somebody at the post office because they said there was no such post office in Ottawa. This is not the first time because a letter thus addressed that was on its way to the west was stopped in Winnipeg. May I ask the Postmaster General, who calls himself the champion of the French language, if he would teach French to such employees of the Post Office Department.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): When the member for Témiscouata will ask something proper I shall answer.

BOARD OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS

APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE W. McPHEE (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, this morning's paper contains notice of the appointment of a secretary to the board of railway commissioners. As the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) is not in his seat I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Was this position filled by the civil service commission, and if so, how many applied? If it was not filled by the civil service commission, by whose direction was the appointment made?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The position was filled by the governor in council, not by the civil service commission. The gentleman appointed secretary to the commission had been assistant secretary for some years, and with the falling off of work was released from his duties about two or three years ago. He is now appointed to the position of secretary, he having formerly been assistant secretary. The recommendation was made by the Minister of Railways, I think, in due course.

LOAN TO NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes)? On April 10 the minister stated that the Canadian government had undertaken to guarantee the repayment to Canadian banks of a loan to Newfoundland. In the report of the dominion commissioner for unemployment relief, dated March 31, 1933, at page 11, a guarantee of $625,000 is mentioned. May I ask the minister first what he meant when he declared that the government had undertaken to guarantee repayment; and secondly, if anything to that effect appears in the subsequent reports of the director of unemployment relief, and if so at what page? If not, why?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may say with all deference to my hon. friend from Témiscouata that it is hardly within the purview of the rules of the house to put a minister under cross-examination on the orders of the day. So far as his question is a proper one I will take it as a notice and be pleased to answer it.

DISTRIBUTION OF VOTERS' LISTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening the hon. Secretary of State very kindly said that he would have a word with the franchise commissioner with respect to the desire of hon. members to obtain typewritten copies of revisions as made on the voters' lists. May I ask my hon. friend if he has had an opportunity to speak with the franchise officer, and can he give the house any information as to what will be done?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I have not had an opportunity of speaking to him. As far as I can ascertain from an examination of the statute the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) was under a misapprehension with regard to the law governing the previous distribution of electoral lists. The two extra lists to which he referred were only issued by the registrars in rural constituencies and in cases where there had been a redistribution of constituencies or of parts of constituencies. Nevertheless, I shall take an early opportunity of conveying to the dominion commissioner the views which were expressed on Friday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that apart altogether from what the law may have been or any misapprehension with regard to it, it would, I believe, meet the wishes of hon. members on both sides of the house to have the request which was made carried out if at all possible.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes. I was thinking afterwards that we would have to make some provision for the payment of registrars for this extra service, which would be a very considerable service.

SUPPLY

B.C. RELIEF CAMP STRIKERS

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rhodes for committee of supply.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last when the motion was made for the house to go into supply I took the opportunity of drawing to the attention of the house the condition that was facing the government and the people of this country owing to the strike of men in the unemployment relief camps. I pointed out at that time that we had made an effort on two occasions to bring to the attention of the house the seriousness of that situation, but that we were unsuccessful. On a later occasion I again asked the Prime Minister if he would give an opportunity to discuss this matter in the house, and he promised that he would take it into consideration although he did not think it was worth while discussing. Now I am sure that not only the members of this house but the people of this dominion are shocked at the tragedy that took place in the city of Regina last evening. I believe the people of this country will lay the cause of that tragedy at the door of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPENCE: That is your own doing.

An hon. MEMBER: You are responsible.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am ready to assume any responsibility that is coming to me. I not only pointed out in this house the serious condition with which we were confronted but some two months ago I went to the Minister of National Defence and pleaded that the government should take some action in order to meet the situation. I am convinced that the government could have done this. We are all human and we act and react to conditions in much the same way. The easiest way to provoke a person into taking action which possibly he should not take is to ignore his rightful claims. I contend that these men in the camps have rightful and just claims which have been ignored by this government.

An hon. MEMBER: Communist claims.

Mr. MacINNIS: An hon. member says, "communist claims," but let me tell him that the way to make a communist is to act in the manner in which this government has been acting.

An hon. MEMBER: You ought to know how to make them.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. MacINNIS: The hon. member ought to know how to make them because his leader is making them every day and there is no protest from that side of the house.

Mr. SPENCE: Shut up; they ought to hang you first.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Dit Spence!

Mr. MacINNIS: That is a communist tactic, hang those whom you do not like. Hon. members cannot do that just yet; although their leader is acting like a dictator; his dictatorship is nearly over. Perhaps they will keep quiet until I finish.

Last Wednesday I read from the report of the royal commission which investigated the relief camps in British Columbia. I shall not quote to-day from that report, but as hon. members opposite have shouted, "communist," I should like to quote some of the statements made by a man who lived in the camps before they were investigated by the royal commission. Although this man has been branded as an agitator the report is that he gave his evidence in a very intelligent manner. The report states:

> Obviously intelligent and capable of taking a broad view of the situation, he drew praise from the commissioners for his testimony—and the manner in which he presented it.

The man is reported as saying:

> They call me an agitator because I am trying to get better conditions for the men. It is not I or other men who are agitators, but the camps themselves.

That is what hon. gentlemen do not seem to want to understand. When this man was asked for suggestions as to what should be done he was again very reasonable. The report continues:

> When asked for suggestions for improving camp conditions, Cumber stated bluntly that the men would not return to the camps "under the present setup" but admitted that he did "not see how it will be possible to eliminate the camps." "We will have to have camps of some sort, but they should be construction camps or lumber camps—where men work and are paid for it—not relief camps based on charity."

I maintain that that man who has been branded as an agitator was only voicing the sentiments which have been stated on the public platform by the Prime Minister of this country. The Prime Minister stated in 1930, that the unemployed wanted, not charity but work; not doles, but wages. The men are only asking what they asked for in 1930. When these men came to put their just demands before constituted authority the first thing they were asked was, "where were you born?" That question was asked as though any man was responsible for where he was born. I understand that our good friend Sir Herbert Holt is an Irishman but do hon. members suppose that when he comes to Ottawa he is asked where he was born? Are the members of other delegations which come to Ottawa asked where they were born? As a matter of fact we spent the good money of this country to bring those who are now in the camps into the country and when they come here to state their claims we ask them where they were born.

An hon. MEMBER: Why they were born.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, many of them are wondering why they were born. On June 24 the Prime Minister stated in the house:

> The government is prepared to maintain law and order by all the means within its power and calls upon all law abiding citizens to assist to that end.

One of the functions of a government is to maintain law and order but a government has also another function, to see that justice prevails within the country and that every reason for disorder is removed. When a government has removed all the reasons for disorder then and not till then is it justified in asking the people to support it in maintaining law and order. This government has not removed the reasons for discontent nor has it met the just demands of the people. They have not met the just demands of the men who are in the camps and who want work to maintain themselves. These men want to live their lives again, they want to take part in the natural life of Canada but this government has not made it possible for them to do so. On another occasion the Prime Minister stated in the house that there could be no trifling with anarchy, no playing with chaos. Could anything be more anarchic than an organization which forces young men in the prime of their physical manhood to live in such institutions as these unemployment relief camps? Could anything be more chaotic than the failure of our present social system, if we can call such an unplanned, anti-social organization a system, to distribute the abundance at its disposal in such a way as to permit everyone to live a full and natural life? To my mind that is the essence of anarchy and not the activities of anyone who has been denied his just rights by society and prevented from taking his rightful place in the life of the community.

What these men have said is only a repetition of what has been said in this country during the last five years. It is simply echoing what was said by the Prime Minister during his radio talks at the end of 1934 and the beginning of 1935. Referring to youth, the Prime Minister stated in his first speech:

> It is a tragedy of these times that men and women, boys and girls, whose minds should be given to constructive pursuits, find themselves handicapped and harassed by the uncertainties of life, and prevented by the anxieties of this present situation, from giving their best to the things which are most worth while.

I ask hon. members opposite: How are these men in the camps going to give their best to themselves or to their country as long as they remain there? In his fourth address the Prime Minister said:

> When I dwell upon these tragic consequences of the economic upheaval, I think more especially about the boys and the girls of the nation who were born in wartime or in the years after the war, who have never known the tranquility of the old days, who have, all of them, been born within sound of the drum. For, with brief, infrequent intervals, we have been in battle, one way or another, since 1914. A generation of strife; death in foreign lands, at home the furious struggle for wealth, the dreadful siege of adversity, the march of the bread lines, the resistance of brave hearts against the prospect of unchanging want.

Is not that a perfect picture of what the men in the camps have to put up with? Could anyone except the Prime Minister put it so clearly? And yet when these men come before him with just demands all he can give them is the reply that all the forces of the state will be used to compel them to go back to camps where they will still be faced with unchanging want. In the fifth speech he said, "I believe in the right of every man to state his case." I think that is the correct attitude to take, but I do not think he believed in the right to these men to state their case.

I suggest that there are many things which this government could do to meet the present situation, even if it cannot provide work and wages for the twenty thousand men or so who are in the relief camps. And the first approach to the problem is to deal sympathetically with those who are in that condition. As I said before, I pointed out the situation to the Minister of National Defence, who was kind enough to give me a half hour's interview in this matter on the last day of April or the first day of May, I forget which. I tried then to put before him the picture as I saw it after my return from Vancouver, but he did not see his way clear, evidently, to do anything. Let me ask the house this question, is it yet too late to do something? Cannot all parties in the house get together and try to do something for these men, men who we are quite convinced are only objecting to the very conditions that we would object to ourselves.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I do not rise for the purpose of replying to the history of the camp strikers as related in this house by my hon. friend who has just now spoken (Mr. MacInnis). I rise in order to make a statement as to the situation which exists at the city of Regina at the present time and has existed there for the past few days. The house will remember that a statement was made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) a short time ago, after these so-called strike marchers had reached Regina, to the effect that a camp had been specially opened in the vicinity of Regina at a point called Lumsden, which I believe is twenty or twenty-two miles from Regina, and that food and shelter would be supplied to all those marchers who desired to avail themselves of the opportunity of going there. There was also available to them a large camp in the province of Saskatchewan, a little further from Regina, known as Dundurn camp, and between these two camps the whole number could be accommodated and food and shelter afforded them; and transportation to these camps was offered them.

I regret to say that very few of them availed themselves of the opportunity of going to either of these camps when the offer was first made, though a very limited number did go. Recently more have gone and to-day, I believe, something like 175 are at Lumsden camp. It is not altogether unwillingness to go to these camps that prevents the men from so doing. They are prevented by a very strict picket line which has been established by their fellow marchers under the authority of their so-called leaders, and their little baggage and equipment has been taken possession of by these leaders and they have not been able to obtain it. In other words, the vast majority of them have not been permitted to go.

There are, I am informed, something like seventy group leaders in this movement, and the groups vary in size; but they average about twenty-five men per group. They are now at the exhibition grounds in the city of Regina. On Saturday last some negotiations took place between the assistant commissioner, who is in charge of the mounted police at Regina, and certain of the strike leaders. But a rumour seems to have got into the newspapers in some way that nobody was permitted to furnish food or clothing or other supplies to the strike marchers. That rumour received a good deal of currency in the press of the country, and on Saturday afternoon about four o'clock I received a telegram from the attorney general of Saskatchewan, as follows:

Your wire received and thanks for same.

That does not refer to this matter.

I note from public press that order in council has been passed by dominion government in connection with situation prevailing here. Please wire me at once citation of legal authority under which your order in council was passed and particulars of salient features of order in council.

T. C. Davis,
Attorney General.

To this I promptly replied in the following words:

No order in council of any kind has been passed in connection with Regina situation.

I have gathered from speeches I have read in the press, and which were delivered, I think, either yesterday or the day before, that the government has been charged by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) with having passed some secret order in council to prevent any person affording food or money or clothing to these destitute individuals, and I wish to repeat, chiefly for the benefit of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, that no such order in council has been passed by the government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. member allow me to say that I made no such statement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am only judging by press reports.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I presume the men in the camps were judging also by press reports.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And no law nor any order exists in any way, shape or form to prevent actions of that kind by any person or body of persons who seem disposed so to treat these marchers. Until yesterday it looked as if an arrangement would be made whereby the marchers would go to the two camps I have named in order that final disposition might be arranged so that they might be sent back to their camps, or individual cases might be dealt with in any case in which a man had a home to which he could go. The government was prepared to expedite the movement to the individual homes or back to the camps. Negotiations took place yesterday forenoon with the strike leaders to see if an arrangement of that kind could not be made, but the leaders of the movement insisted that it should be a mass movement, that they should be moved en bloc back to Vancouver or to British Columbia. The situation in British Columbia at the present moment is not as satisfactory as it might be, and I think it was very properly decided that such a movement of 2,000 men back there would not be a wise or safe thing at the present time. The negotiations were carried on throughout the day, but without result, and about four or five o'clock in the afternoon the officers of the mounted police, acting under instructions, visited a certain communist gathering held in Regina and there arrested a number of the leaders, charged with offences under section 98 of the criminal code. Later on that particular meeting seems to have dispersed and to have resulted in an open meeting held in the market square at eight o'clock last night. Prior to the opening of proceedings at the market square meeting a number of plainclothes men of the mounted police proceeded to the platform and arrested others of the leaders, making the total arrests on the two occasions about twenty-four. At the time these arrests were made the city police of Regina, who are under the control of the municipality, came up upon one side of the platform, and the mounted police on the other side. The crowd which had gathered, both strike marchers and onlookers from the city of Regina, on the arrival of the police immediately cleared the square or the space, and it was thought that the crowd had permanently dispersed. However, after the lapse of a few minutes the strikers, having armed themselves with stones, clubs and various kinds of missiles, returned to the scene and made an attack upon the city police. The attack was made in the first instance by the strike marchers, and the city police were called upon to defend themselves. Subsequently the mounted police joined for the purpose of maintaining order. Shots were exchanged. Shots were fired by the strikers, and the fire was replied to by shots from the city police. No shot whatever was fired by the mounted police. They were armed with batons. I regret to say that there were a number of casualties as a result of this fire. One city policeman was beaten to death by the strikers. Two members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been very seriously injured by missiles of some kind and, it is very doubtful whether either of them will recover. There were a number of minor casualties, probably forty or fifty, some as a result of bullet wounds, I am informed.

Peace and order was restored at about eleven o'clock last night, and the men were herded back to the exhibition grounds, where they now are. They are there, guarded by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and I think by the city police as well, and are only allowed to leave their present quarters in small contingents for necessary purposes. That is the situation as it existed last night, and as it exists to-day. Communications again have been sent forward to Regina informing the strikers that the former offer is still open to them; food, shelter and transportation are available to them the moment they will accept them—not as an organized revolutionary body—I think I may call them that—but if they disperse among the various camps to which they can appropriately go, or in the case of those men who have homes, direct to their homes, and the expense of that transportation will also be liquidated by the government. The men are not inclined to accept this offer. They are determined to have their own way. The government is just as determined to maintain peace and order in Regina, or any other part of Canada where disorder may break out.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not going into the question of whether these men had wrongs or grievances. Personally I do not think they had. I agreed with the statement made last week in the house that the movement was under communistic leadership. A very large proportion of the men now at Regina never were in the relief camps at all. It is stated that out of the 2,000 odd, over 800 were mere stragglers who joined in the march, who were never in relief camps and do not want to go into them now. I think I have given a fairly full statement of the situation as it now exists.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I think one of the sentences that fell from the lips of the Minister of Justice towards the end of his speech is extremely characteristic of the attitude of the government. It was to the effect that he was not going into the question as to whether there were any wrongs of which these men complained, any evils in the camp. But that is the point at issue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not even fair that the Minister of Justice should seek to do to-day as the Prime Minister did the other day, divert the attention of the country from the real point at issue. We have had these camps now for nearly four years. A considerable number of young men have been interned during that period.

Mr. COTNAM: Just two years.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Four years, a period as long as that of the war. It was bad to be in the war for those four years, but I submit that then the men had hopes and believed they were fighting for a cause, but these young men have been interned, some of them, for four years—

An hon. MEMBER: They are not interned, they are there voluntarily.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —without hope, and with a sense of great injustice. Someone says they went there voluntarily. Technically that is true, but what was the alternative? As we have pointed out again and again, if they would not go into the camp they were on the streets, either to starve or become criminals. Those were the alternatives for the majority of those young men. Now conditions were bad. I am not going to repeat what I said here as late as Thursday evening last in connection with the supplementary estimate for an additional amount to be granted for national defence. I quoted from the report of the commissioners who were appointed to investigate these camps; briefly they pointed out that while on the whole conditions were not so bad, there were some very specific evils that had been rankling in the minds of the men, and they said, although it did not really come within the terms of their commission, that one of the greatest evils was that these men were required to work without wages and without hope, and they could not see how the men could maintain their morale under those circumstances. So in desperation the men started to go to Vancouver to call the attention of the public to their plight. Remember that these men have no hopes of remedying their condition even by the coming election, because if they return to their camps in practice they are prohibited from voting because no voting facilities are provided. A bill to give them such privileges, introduced from this corner, was refused by the house. That is the situation.

They came into Vancouver some months ago. At that time we tried to secure the opportunity of discussing the matter as one of urgent public importance. It was declared not urgent at that time. Later on, when they reached Regina, again we tried to discuss the matter. Again it was said that the matter was not urgent, and we ventured to say there was danger of a clash if the government persisted in its policy. Unfortunately that clash has come, and I want to warn this government that if it maintains the attitude it has maintained during the last few weeks there is very great danger that future clashes may come. There is no doubt of that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You encourage it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am not encouraging it. I think it is most unfortunate that we cannot rise in this house to advocate policies that we believe are in the interests of law and order without being accused of trying to discourage law and order. I firmly believe that I am advocating those policies which will ensure law and order in this country. I think it is a terrible tragedy that on July 1 of this year, a day that ought to be celebrated with rejoicing by all Canadians, some two thousand men should be forced into a position where they cannot very well maintain their respect for the government and where they are led to feel a sense of injustice, and further than that, where the twenty thousand young men like these, who are still in the camps, must be encouraged to feel that the government is indifferent to their situation.

That is the situation that has arisen. Now I come back to the alternative offered by the government. When the delegates of these men came here a few weeks ago each of their "demands" was refused. The proposals they made were not unreasonable. On Thursday evening last I took up this matter in detail; those demands were far more reasonable than I imagined they would be, yet the government turned them down flat and simply told them they must go back. Then the government made their counter-proposition; they proposed that the men should go to the camp at Lumsden and from there back to the camps, to the very conditions from which they had come, without the slightest indication on the part of the government that there would be any improvement in those conditions or any change of policy. Do the members of this house realize how provocative action of that kind is? Surely it was no easy thing for them to come all the way down from Vancouver to Regina, hiking as they did, overcoming a great many discouragements and hardships, simply to be told to go back and forget all about it, which was practically what happened. It is quite true that at Lumsden they might have received food and clothing, but they had been getting that back where they had come from. It was against the kind of food and clothing they were getting and more than that against the lack of wages and the general policy of the government that they were making their protest.

I have no doubt the minister has put the best possible face on what happened yesterday; probably he is quoting from reports that have come to him. I have had reports from disinterested eye witnesses that do not correspond to the statements the minister made in the house to-day. I would say that these men were assembled in a perfectly peaceable way; there was no disorder whatever until the two forces of the police came upon them and ruthlessly drove into them. The minister gives us the impression that it was the strikers who started the difficulty. I say they were having a peaceable meeting, attempting to secure further funds with which to carry on their own work in their own way, because they were almost at the end of their resources, and at that legitimate meeting they had the police come upon them. That is not altogether in keeping with the statement of the minister, and on this question I do not think we ought to take a mere departmental report. If ever there was a case for a thorough investigation by a royal commission surely it is in connection with a riot of this kind in which men lost their lives, men on the government side, the police side, who were ordered by their superiors to do this job, and a dirty job it was, while on the other side some of these men were shot down.

Mr. BAKER: We prefer the report of the minister to the report of your friends.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may be quite true that the leadership of these men has largely come into the hands of communists. The other day I admitted, from the best information I could get, that this was true. I am sorry it is true; I think they would have been better led if they had followed other advice, but may I point out that only a comparatively small number of these people are communists. The great majority of the men are not communists; only a small proportion of them are, and unless there were very great grievances on the part of the men it is inconceivable to me that some sixty or seventy leaders, as I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) put it, could control these two thousand men. That statement in itself is ridiculous. If a large number of the men wanted to return to their homes; if they found that they had been misled, they would throw overboard the sixty or seventy men whom the Minister of Justice says are in a position of leadership. It is reasonable that men who endured all these hardships would allow their little bits of baggage to be kept from them by some sixty or seventy men? I cannot conceive it for a moment. The fact is that whatever their leadership they have behind them a sense of injustice which has led them to follow almost any advice they have been offered. Unfortunately I think they are more inclined to follow advice which urges them to direct action or to radical action.

That is another point in my mind, and I think this is a serious question. I should like to know how many of these so called leaders are government spies. I know enough about the labour movement to be able to say that whenever I have been making speeches among the miners of the west and so on, at which somebody has gotten up and urged violence, I have had these men come to me again and again and say, "Beware of that man; he is a police stool." That is what the men believe. We know what happened in Calgary years ago in the case of Corporal Zaneth, who sold literature which he knew to be banned and then got the men into trouble. We know of a more recent instance, the case of Sergeant Leopold, who was the informer in the case against the communists not long ago. We know how these men wormed their way into the organization, and how they stood ready to play the part of the police if necessary. Only a few years ago in this house we had estimates—under a former government; I am not blaming this government for it—covering moneys paid to American detective firms in the employ of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am told that that practice has been discontinued, but this practice of espionage has not been discontinued, and we cannot tell how many agents provocateur there have been among these so called leaders who are under communist domination. I do think the fact that lives have been lost and that a large number of people have been injured in itself is an indication that a thorough investigation into the situation should be made promptly by disinterested parties. I am not asking that my charges should be accepted, but I am not content that the departmental records should be taken as final. I urge there should be an independent investigation and, above all, I submit that the riots are a justification of the action hon. members in this corner have taken in condemning the present policy of dealing with these young men. I would like to know now who is responsible for the shooting. I think we ought to know that; who is responsible? I would like to know under what authority this was done. This is only one series of a number of events which have taken place recently. Further, I would like to know from the government under what authority men were refused permission to move out of Regina. It is quite true that at least technically they were trespassers in their use of the railways. But it is common knowledge that throughout the past six or eight years men have been riding on freight trains, and only on occasions have they been checked up. It is common knowledge that these men came from Vancouver to Regina on freight trains, and that the government did not do anything to stop them. The Prime Minister may say that they had not the necessary force; that may have been the case, but the government connived at that kind of thing, or condoned—use the word you like. Then all of a sudden, when it suits the convenience of the government we are told we must preserve law and order and must prevent trespassing on railway property. That is the kind of arbitrary action which is undermining respect for law and government.

We were told that these communists who were arrested some years ago and sent to Kingston penitentiary were dangerous men, that communists were outlaws of society. Yet, in the name of the communist party newspapers have been published all along, communist candidates have stood for election, and no action has been taken by the government. Can they escape their responsibility? Personally, as every hon. member is aware, I am opposed to section 98 of the criminal code. As every hon. member knows this house has five times in succession expressed its disapproval of and voted to delete section 98. I am opposed to it, I say it is little less than a disgrace when we find that men who are not proven to have committed an overt act or to have incited to violence should be sent to the penitentiary. That is un-British legislation, but it is on the statute books, and in that regard probably the government is acting within its legal rights. I want to say this however, that the government knowing that—knowing that they have the force—have not taken action. Personally I am glad that these communists are free, because although they are a dreadful embarrassment to us of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Although they denounce us; although the leader of the communist party has gone into the constituency of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and has put the whole organization of the communist party behind an effort to defeat him—despite all that I say that the place to defeat communism in a democratic country is at the ballot box. That is the place to defeat the communists—and not by arresting people who do not agree with our political opinions.

Mr. ROWE: Start it in your riding.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I can quite understand why some hon. members opposite seem incapable of understanding how I can plead for the rights of all men, and particularly when the liberty of communists happens to be the particular point at issue. I am pleading for their rights, not because I love communism or because I am cooperating with communism, but because I have at heart the old teaching of our childhood days, namely, that the British citizen has certain inalienable rights, and I believe that those rights should be preserved.

This has ceased to be a matter affecting only the communists, to-day it is becoming a fight for civil liberties. I am not a lawyer, I should like to know under what authority these relief camp strikers who refused to return are to be deemed communists. That is the story in the paper. I should like to know whether or not that story is true, namely, that the authorities have taken the ground that they are to be deemed as communists.

Mr. LOUCKS: They have been led by them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: All right, but I would like to know upon what authority the government has taken its action. I am glad to learn there is no such secret order in council as that about which we read in the press. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) stated that according to press reports I had made that statement. The press is very often in error, and it was in error in that respect. I never made the statement, although I knew certain reports appeared in the press. I tried to be sure of my ground. The first thing we did this morning was to see if we could get any track of that order in council.

But, supposing there was no order in council—and we have to accept the minister's word—then, by what authority was action of this kind taken? It is only a little more than a week ago since the premier of Saskatchewan urged that the dominion government should keep out of this business,—hands off. Yet the dominion government has gone ahead. A week or two ago the Prime Minister assured us that he could not interfere unless he were asked to do so by the province. That was when the men were in British Columbia.

Now that they have reached Saskatchewan he has interfered, over the heads of that province. I should like to know by what authority he has acted. Is it the authority under the unemployment relief scheme through which the government were given broad powers to preserve peace, order and good government? If that is so I believe I am correct when I state that at the time the bill was passed we were given the assurance that action would be taken only in an emergency and only when parliament was not sitting.

Mr. BENNETT: It is so written in the statute.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well then, if that is in the statute I should like to know why action of this kind—action which I believe is quite arbitrary—should be taken while parliament is in session. Again and again we asked that this matter be considered in parliament, but we were refused the opportunity to discuss it. Then, suddenly, the police presumably acting under the instructions of the government have taken very drastic action resulting in tragedy. Even if that action of the government is, in the narrow sense of the term, legal action, is it in harmony with the British constitution to find that with parliament in session the government should take action of this kind? I do not so understand it.

Communists may be a menace to democracy, but in all seriousness I submit that the arbitrary action of government is a greater menace to democracy. I repeat, it is a greater menace to democracy. Surely men have a right to meet in an assembly,—and apparently that is all they were doing the other day. They have a right to move freely up and down the country; apparently that is all they were attempting to do, but they were blocked in their efforts.

Apparently the people have a right to receive assistance. I do not know where the report in the press to the effect that they were to be given no help came from. I was not responsible for the action of the provincial council of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation which met in Ontario a few days ago, but I must confess that when they said they would forward a few dollars in defiance of any such action as that reported to have been taken I was not unsympathetic. We must maintain some rights in Canada. Above all, and more serious than anything else is the consideration that the people of Canada have a right not merely to freedom of movement, freedom of action and freedom of association, but they have the right to live,—and to live decently. That right is not being accorded to these 20,000 young men who have been placed in military camps.

Mr. SPENCE: They were not forced to go there.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have answered that again and again. There is such a thing as legal compulsion, and there is such a thing as compulsion by hunger, which is much more serious. Gentlemen who are well fed have difficulty in understanding that kind of thing.

Mr. COTNAM: You are not suffering yourself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am not suffering, and I am glad that there are some of us who are not suffering at present who are prepared to stand up for these people. I hope the time will never come when I shall be so well fed and comfortably placed that I shall refuse to fight for the under-dog. Some people say that this is poor politics. I do not care very much whether it is poor politics. I know there are gentlemen opposite who will go out on the hustings and say that we are allied to the communists. I know that we have to run the risk of that, but that does not matter. I intend to stand here and plead for the rights of these boys who are not given a fair chance in life.

Mr. COTNAM: Feed the hungry babies in Winnipeg?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is that man talking about? The price spreads report brought to light some facts of the situation which some of us had been trying again and again to bring to the attention of the house and which unfortunately have been felt in the lives of tens of thousands of our citizens.

There is one other point. I still hear people say that these men do not want to work. There may be a few who do not want to work. I would not want to work under the conditions under which they are called upon to work—no wages, and with this condition going on year after year, with no hope in life. But I submit that the great majority of these men have been anxious to work all along, and what they are pleading for to-day is work and wages. That is a reasonable thing to ask for—it is fundamental. That is what they ask of this government.

I would say in conclusion that there are two or three things I want specially to bring to the attention of the government. First of all I urge that the police should not be given instructions or permitted to ride down the people as they have been doing in the recent past. The mounted police force has either secured or is assuming to have power that ought not to be given to a civilian force. Further than that I ask of the government, because of the riots and the seriousness of the situation, that a commission be appointed to investigate the conditions that prevail to-day and the situation which cause the riot.

And thirdly, and more serious and more fundamental than all, I do again plead with the government that before this house prorogues, and I think they can do it with the support of every party of the house, they revise their scheme for dealing with these unemployed young fellows and give them work and a place in life that will be worthy of young Canadian citizens.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister was wise to have afforded an opportunity for a discussion of this particular matter, and I believe he would have been equally wise had he afforded the opportunity on two previous occasions when there was a motion before the house for its adjournment in order to permit the discussion of the situation with respect to the condition of these homeless men who were still in Vancouver and were about to come here. That opportunity was requested in the manner which the rules of the house provide but it was refused on both occasions.

Mr. BENNETT: By the Speaker.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister says it has been refused by the Speaker. May I point out to my right hon. friend that if he had had the same attitude then towards the situation which he has to-day he would have found it possible to accord the same method which he has permitted to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: One was supply, the other was not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was easy for the Prime Minister to arrange for the house to be moved into supply to-day, and it would have been equally easy to have adopted the same course on the other occasions. I believe the Speaker was reflecting the attitude of mind of my right hon. friend at the time when he gave his decision that the matter was not of urgent public importance. Certainly those of us who supported the motion believed it was a matter of urgent public importance, and that unless some action were taken by the government of a conciliatory character it was almost inevitable that sooner or later something in the nature of a tragedy would be the outcome of the situation of these men moving in large numbers east, regardless of what their particular views on social questions may be.

As I say, no one can say whether or not the failure to have that discussion has been in any way a contributing factor to what has since taken place, but we do know that the situation at the moment is as serious as any with which this House of Commons could expect to be faced at this particular time. I feel that something more is necessary at this moment than merely to discuss the question in the light of what we have in the way of newspaper reports and what we have by way of statement from the Minister of Justice of the government's position. I think the government should immediately bring down all correspondence that has taken place between the government of Canada and the government of Saskatchewan in regard to this matter.

The question has been raised, and properly raised, as to the authority of the two governments in the matter of maintaining law and order. I remember very well how emphatically the Prime Minister said at the beginning of the discussion of this question that the maintenance of law and order was a matter for the province and that the federal government could not intervene without the attorney general of the province in the first instance requesting the assistance of the police, and I have never been able to understand just how the government was able so completely to reverse its position in that matter. I recall what was said in connection with the protection of railways, namely, that there was a power given to the government in that connection which did not otherwise exist. But I have never quite been able to see just how it was that these unemployed men found it possible to leave Vancouver in such large numbers as trespassers on the trains and not be stopped before they left either Vancouver or some other part of British Columbia, not be stopped at Calgary in the province of Alberta, and then finally be stopped and landed in the city of Regina. I say I think something more in the way of explanation of that circumstance is necessary before the public mind will be satisfied that it was all just as represented by my right hon. friend and his friends opposite.

I feel that what is most important at this stage, because I do not imagine for one moment that this is the last time that this subject is going to be discussed even in this session, is that we should have all the correspondence which has passed by telegram or letter between the government of Canada and the government of Saskatchewan in relation to the situation. That correspondence I would ask the Prime Minister to endeavour to have tabled to-day if possible. I make the request for to-day because all of us are anxious not to prolong the proceedings of this parliament to a later date than may be absolutely necessary, but I do not think this house should be permitted to end its proceedings until we have before it all the correspondence that has passed between the two governments.

I think in addition, Mr. Speaker, the house should know from the government what instructions have been given to the police. This parliament represents the people of Canada. Every person in the Dominion of Canada is represented by this House of Commons. It is in the interests of all of us, in the interests of the country at large, that there should be the fullest publicity in regard to this matter. In that connection there should be no secret orders, no secret instructions whatever. Whatever instructions have been given to the police should also be tabled by the government at the earliest possible date. The advantage of discussion in a matter of this kind has been very clearly shown this afternoon by the denial of the Minister of Justice of the rumour that a secret order in council had been passed under which people, even those with the best of intentions, were forbidden to give any assistance to these homeless men whom we refer to as marching strikers, or assist in any way possible those whom they might see in the greatest need so long as they were members of that group. I am glad that no order in council of the kind has been passed. May I however direct attention to an article which appeared in the Toronto Star of Friday, June 28, and in connection with which it may be necessary to have further explanation. This is a special dispatch to the Star and is headed as follows:

R.C.M.P. to Prosecute Those Feeding Strikers.
Forbid "Lifts" as Well.
Police Halt Attempt to Leave City by Truck—Report Treckers "Army."
Hint at Own Camp.

Regina, June 28.—Royal Canadian Mounted Police have clapped the lid down tighter on the "on to Ottawa relief strikers." Colonel S. T. Wood, assistant commissioner, has issued instructions that any person supplying the strikers with food or accommodation will be prosecuted.

There is nothing there which refers to a secret order in council or any other kind of order in council. The article simply states that the assistant commissioner had issued instructions that any person supplying the strikers with food or accommodation would be prosecuted. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) will be able to say immediately whether any instructions of that kind were issued by the commissioner.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No instructions of the kind were issued that I am aware of.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am very glad to have that further assurance as it bears out what I have said as to the wisdom of getting the fullest information on all these matters which are likely to enter into a discussion of this question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the officer be disciplined?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know that the article is true; I have no reason to believe that it is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It affords one more ground for an inquiry. There should be a full investigation into all the facts and circumstances surrounding the present situation. It is evident that at least one life has been taken as a consequence of what has already taken place and there surely is need for the fullest inquiry into circumstances which brought about a tragedy of the kind. I do not think the government can escape having a very full investigation into that particular incident and of the group of incidents associated with it. Apart altogether from what has happened up to the moment, if a worse situation is to be prevented within the course of the next few days or weeks, it is important that word should go out immediately that an inquiry is being instituted which will allow the public to have the fullest light possible on the whole situation.

In connection with this investigation I should like to point out that the government at Ottawa and the government of Saskatchewan are alike interested in having the fullest particulars given to the public. The government of Saskatchewan has its responsibility with respect to the maintaining of law and order just as much as the government at Ottawa, or, I should say, more, if the statute, which governs in these matters is to be observed. I think that the investigation which takes place might will be conducted by representatives of the government at Ottawa and the government of Saskatchewan. I do not believe that an investigation carried on at the instance of one government alone would be sufficient. There is no reason why in a matter of this grave importance and consequence there should not be an inquiry carried on jointly by eminent gentlemen appointed at the instance of both governments.

I should like to read two telegrams which I have received since coming into the chamber this afternoon. I hope that the reading of these telegrams will help to establish the necessity of much more in the way of explanation of the situation as it has arisen in Regina than has thus far been given in the house by the Minister of Justice. These two wires indicate very clearly that as between the authorities at Ottawa and the authorities at Regina there has been a distinct difference of view as to who was to exercise or be permitted to exercise full responsibility for dealing with the situation that has arisen. The first telegram is from the Hon. James G. Gardiner, the premier of Saskatchewan, and refers to a telegram sent to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). In reading this telegram I submit that the representations it contains are as much entitled to the acceptance of this house as are the representations of the Minister of Justice, especially where there is a conflict between the two. The sooner the apparent difference of view is cleared up and we get an accurate knowledge of the situation the better we will be able to proceed further with what will necessarily be a subject of discussion for some time to come. The wire is as follows:

Regina, Saskatchewan,
July 2, 11.25 a.m.

Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Leader of the Opposition,
Ottawa, Ontario.

I have to-day wired Premier Bennett as follows: "Yesterday morning men indicated to your representative Mr. Burgess their willingness to disband the march and return to the points from which they came. They repeated this to Mr. Burgess and representatives of the police at 2.30. Your representative refused to have provincial representation at that meeting. The men met us at five o'clock stating that since your representatives had refused to consider this the provincial government take responsibility for disbanding men to their original camps or homes and supply them with food in the interval. While we were considering this matter police raided public meeting to arrest leaders, precipitating a riot. Men at present in buildings at fair grounds completely surrounded by police who permit no one to enter and men to leave only in twos. Police intention to force these men to Lumsden camp or starving them into submission. This will end in a worse riot than last night. These men should be fed where they are and immediately disbanded and sent back to camps and homes as they request without any attempt to force them into Lumsden and this should be done within next two hours. This government has a responsibility toward its citizens to provide them with ordinary protection against this imported trouble. We would ask you to immediately withdraw orders issued affecting the liberty of individuals within this province and affecting the law and order of this province. You might assume that we are as much concerned about law and order in this country as you can be and deal with the elected representatives of this province regarding matters concerning our people instead of through an appointed political representative. We are asking you if you are going to feed these men within the next two hours and are asking you to instruct us within two hours what plans are to be made for their disbandment."

James G. Gardiner.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) rose in his seat I was about to make an inquiry of the Prime Minister based on this telegram as I regarded it as a matter of great importance but when I saw the hon. member rising to speak I waited to hear what he had to say. What the Minister of Justice has since said has in part answered this telegram. I understand from the minister's remarks that the government is undertaking to feed the men but I have not got quite clearly the government's plans with respect to their disbandment and the government requiring that they should return to the camp at Lumsden.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To feed them, to provide shelter and transportation to Lumsden or Dundurn; to disband them and send them back to their camps or to their homes, but not as an organization such as they contemplated yesterday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad to have that further word of explanation from the minister. The other telegram which I received just a moment ago is from the Hon. T. C. Davis, attorney general of Saskatchewan. It refers to a wire sent to the Minister of Justice, and reads:

Regina, Saskatchewan,
July 2, 1935. 11.58 a.m.

Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Ottawa.

I have just wired Minister of Justice as follows:

"In connection with strikers your government instructed R.C.M.P. officials here direct from Ottawa without our knowledge or concurrence. Upon our protest you maintained you had right so to do because contemplated actions were being taken under the Railway Act, a dominion enactment. When it became apparent that men intended to proceed from province by highway police instructions indicated that again you were instructing police direct without our knowledge or concurrence. When I inquired from police authorities as to your right so to do I was advised that you were acting under relief measures act and order in council passed thereunder which had the effect of giving you control of the situation and the right to instruct police.

I have traced the history of this act and 1931 enactment expired in 1932 and 1934 enactment expired in March this year. I believe further act introduced this session but have no knowledge if it has become law and in any event if it is law as introduced it expressly provides that the governor general in council has no authority to pass order in council thereunder when the House of Commons is in session. You then instructed police authorities without our knowledge or concurrence to proceed under section 98 of the criminal code. The duty of enforcing criminal law is upon the government of this province but you are instructing police in connection with the enforcement of the provisions of the criminal code. You have appointed lawyers to prosecute and you have entirely ignored regularly constituted provincial facilities for the conduct of the prosecutions. This action on your part has gone too far now. I demand that I be advised forthwith as to whether you consider the enforcement of the criminal code in this province is your responsibility or ours and I demand that you forthwith instruct the police to take orders from me and from me alone in connection with the enforcement of the provisions of the code in Saskatchewan and I take this stand because of the provisions of the police agreement and the provisions of subsection fourteen section 92 of the Brtish North America Act which imposes the responsibility of the administration of justice in the province upon the provincial government.

That is the end of the quotation. The telegram goes on:

> You will see that action of federal government up to a few days ago has been taken under alleged order in council passed under relief measures act which does not permit order in council while house in session. Federal government is absolutely usurping the powers of the province in connection with the administration of justice.
> T. C. Davis,
> Attorney General.

The reference to the act which that telegram contains, the act respecting relief measures, which was passed at this session, is accurate in what it states as to the provsions of this measure not being applicable while parliament is in session, because section 3 reads:

> In addition to the powers conferred under the provisions of any statute or law the governor in council may, when parliament is not in session, take all such measures as in his discretion may be deemed necessary or advisable to maintain, within the competence of parliament, peace, order and good government throughout Canada; and at all times take all such measures as in his discretion may be deemed necessary or advisable to protect and maintain the credit and financial position of the dominion or any province thereof.

It will be apparent from what I have read that a question which may give rise to conditions even more serious than that of the manner in which the particular strike marchers have been dealt with is disclosed in the apparent conflict between the Dominion of Canada and the province of Saskatchewan as to their respective jurisdictions in the matter of maintaining law and order. I should like to know from the Prime Minister whether he has abandoned the view that the provinces are responsible for the maintenance of law and order—that such is the primary responsibility of the province—and, if he has not, I would ask him how he or the Minister of Justice can justify the action which thus far has taken place and is taking place at the moment, of federal officials acting under directions from the federal government, taking in one of the provinces of the dominion a course of action which is contrary to that afforded by the authority given in the statutes, and which is provoking a serious difference between one of the provinces of the dominion and the dominion itself.

As I said at the outset, I do not wish to debate this subject at this stage because I do not believe it can be debated with fairness to all concerned without our having before us the documents and the records which will help to explain the situation fully. I repeat, however, that the matter is too serious not to be cleared up before this parliament prorogues, and I hope that my right hon. friend will agree to place on the table of the house within a few hours the entire correspondence that has passed between his office and that of the Premier of Saskatchewan and between the office of the Minister of Justice and the government of Saskatchewan, and also any instructions that have been given to the police, so that we may have them before us to read and consider, that later on we may be in a position to discuss this matter further. I should also be glad to hear what the Prime Minister has to say in reference to the representations made in the wires I have just read.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I deprecate very greatly the suggestion that those who for the moment are charged with responsibility are less considerate and thoughtful of the rights of individuals than others who happen to sit opposite. I do not believe that, man for man, the men who sit opposite to me have any greater heart or finer sympathies or a greater desire to serve their fellows than those who sit on this side, and I say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that when I read his speech—it may have been incorrectly reported—in which he said that we would welcome bloodshed and use force, he did violence to what I conceive to be the decencies of life. To suggest that anyone on this side of the house desired to cause bloodshed or to use force against individuals is as false as it is possible for a statement to be. But on the other hand it is equally true that so long as we are charged with responsibility, be it short or long, we will discharge it. And I think the most unkind suggestion contained in the opening observations of the right hon. gentleman opposite, that because this house did not afford a further discussion of this matter which was at the time in the condition in which it then was, because the Speaker said that it had been formerly discussed—to say that this was a cause contributing, to what extent the right hon. gentleman would not mention, to what had happened in Regina yesterday, is in my opinion an unworthy observation, an observation unworthy of any public man who has had responsibility.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said that no one could say whether or not it had been a contributing cause.

Mr. BENNETT: I was careful to listen to what the right hon. gentleman said. Now what are the facts? The facts are that the Speaker ruled that the matter in question had been discussed in this house on previous occasions and there could be nothing urgent about the continuation of the same matter, and he ruled within the section, just as his predecessor had done, that this was not a matter that came within that provision. From that ruling a member appealed. The right hon. gentleman voted to reverse the Speaker's ruling; we voted to sustain it, and in my judgment the Speaker's ruling was correct. As a matter of principle it was correct; where in this house there had been a discussion of a matter which was prolonged, extending over many days, it would seem to me to be fairly reasonable to say that there was no such urgency as necessitated the adjournment of the house for its further discussion. And so far as I know—I have not been in the house every evening—when supply was taken there were opportunities to discuss these matters; and to-day when the hon. gentleman proposed the adjournment of the house I certainly believed that we should call supply to afford him an opportunity to discuss the matter. One cannot read what took place without a feeling of deep regret. One cannot read it without realizing that one who had sworn to protect the life and property of the city by which he was employed has lost his life, and lost it at the hands of others than the police. Two of the mounted police are lying at death's door, as a result of attacks upon them last night in the city of Regina. The question of fixing responsibility is one which doubtless a coroner or coroner's jury will inquire into; there must of necessity be an investigation. I am not in any sense going to endeavour to anticipate what the coroner may do or what the decision may be, but one thing I desire this house and this country to understand, that is that not a mounted policeman last night had a bullet in his holster; not one. The instructions were definite, having regard to what has transpired in various parts of the world in recent years, and they were obeyed. There were no cartridges in the hands of any member of the mounted police last night. Yet this afternoon there are mounted policemen lying in the hospital shot with bullets. The Minister of Justice reminds me that the question of whether they were shot with bullets has not been determined. Well, there were men injured who were shot, I will put it that way. He says that it may be that these two men were not injured with bullets, but there were men injured with bullets. Those are the naked facts.

Was the assembly last night an unlawful assembly? What did the leaders say who travelled west from here? What did Evans say? What did he say at Sudbury as reported in the public press? He said that blood would flow in the streets of Regina. What about the young men who have said they were invited into this movement as an adventure? They looked upon it as a great lark, and when they found what its true character was, they could not withdraw from it. Why? Because they were terrorized and controlled by these leaders. The Minister of Justice has mentioned the numbers of them, some seventy or so, but seventy leaders of the calibre of those who came here are capable of directing the activities of many hundreds of men, as every one knows. Let it be understood by this house this afternoon that these men, hundreds of them, were never in any camp in Canada, never received either clothing or food or shelter from this government or any other government, they were picked up as this crowd moved across the continent by appeals made to them by men who declare openly that they are communists. They have seen fit to make known their demands to little lodges scattered throughout this country, which, in turn, send on the facts as they see them; telegrams pour in upon me by dozens and by hundreds, one from New York, demanding in the name of the United States that certain things should be done. I read you one from Paris the other day. All across this dominion are gathered together little bands, which demand that we do certain things.

I am informed and I believe that this movement is, as the Minister of Justice has said, not a mere uprising against law and order but a definite revolutionary effort on the part of a group of men to usurp authority and destroy government. Those who are familiar with what happened in one city of this dominion at one time will appreciate how there may be a partial realization of their hopes and expectations in that regard, for no one who has read of what took place at that time, of the taking possession of government, the endeavour to police the city and to order its activities, to control the feeding of the people with a system of cards under allotments, can fail to realize the danger that confronts us in such a revolutionary movement as that. Some of these telegrams that come are signed with very strange names, such as the Junior Band of Communists. They now openly call themselves communists, no longer disguising themselves under some fictitious name, but glory in calling themselves communists and indicate clearly what their purpose is. Declarations were made by the leaders of this group in Regina, gathered together in the manner I have stated. I have stated as clearly as possible that they were not only those who came from the camps, with them I shall deal presently, but they were an aggregation of all those who had been attracted to this movement, some as a lark, an adventure, some for the purpose of finding opportunity to give effect to their opinions by the destruction of organized authority.

That was the position last night in Regina. Tear bombs were used in an endeavour to quiet the disturbance without injury to person. The city police were not under control of the federal power in any way, this government had no authority to direct their actions. They took their action I believe for the preservation of life and property in the city they had been sworn to protect, and one of them died in the discharge of his duty, killed by those who defy law and challenge authority. That is rather a solemn thing to contemplate. Now that a question has been asked I will ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) a question. I wonder if he has ever thought of the implied approbation of the action of these men that is involved in the speeches he has made. I wonder if he ever calmly paused to consider how much they have relied upon the voice in parliament of their spokesman to make known their opinions. And when they go to extreme action to serve their ends I wonder if then it does not occur to him, as it did this afternoon when he was denouncing them for having made inroads in the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, that it is far too late now to quell the monster, the Frankenstein he has invoked. He has conjured up a spirit that will not down. There is no thoughtful man in this country who does not know that you cannot go about Canada talking the loose sort of talk that has been going on during these months and years by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and by his colleague the hon. member for South Vancouver (Mr. MacInnis)—

An hon. MEMBER: And Bow River too.

Mr. BENNETT: —without resulting outbreaks. One realizes the extent to which this incitement has carried these young men. Listen to them, hear what they say. Misled, misguided, easily influenced, not inmates of camps at all, never were, dragged out by this insidious propaganada to do what? To be in the forefront of the disturbance while those who led them were sitting quietly in the background seeing them suffer. That has been the history of it.

Now under these circumstances let us review the situation so far as Vancouver is concerned. Vancouver's mayor led the procession one day and headed the police the next—not literally the next day, but that was what happened. All the time we were crying aloud to the premier of British Columbia, saying that we were ready, willing and anxious to do anything that might be necessary, the cry that went forth was " work and wages," the incentive to further acts of disturbance and further efforts against constituted authority. That is a solemn thought, when you think of the easily impressionable minds of younger men, governed as they are by these leaders with treason in their hearts and the destruction of our institutions as their end, and when you find those who sit in high places, those who govern and control, not using their authority but tacitly, by the demands they make, giving them encouragement to seek the ends they have in mind. I say, sir, there is not a thoughtful man in this country who has read what has transpired in Canada during the last two months who does not realize that by resolutions passed by this body and that, by resolutions and telegrams of sympathy, by expressions of good will for those nursing what they regarded as a grievance, every day these people have become bolder in their conduct because of the reception they received from those they believed to be their friends.

That is the fact. As I stated the other day, in some respects it does credit to human sympathy. Man is a sympathetic creature and when he sees his fellow less fortunate than he, if he has money he usually puts his hand into his pocket and gives him the price of a meal, as he calls it, though very often it is for a drink. He gives him assistance wherever it may be necessary for the purpose of providing him with comfort, we will say, when he lacks it, or with shelter when he lacks it. He makes contributions to organized institutions in the country, and what are the organized institutions? You can go into any great city and start with the Salvation Army, the homes of refuge, the homes maintained by the charitable organizations, the nuns and the churches of the country. Look at them; night after night they are open to receive those less fortunate than others, offering them solace, food, comfort and, if possible, some clothing; endeavouring to make life, shall we say, possible to those suffering misfortune. One of the things I sometimes feel, and that I think most men feel as they look about them, is that the effort to substitute governmental for human aids and efforts has had the effect of somewhat dampening human sympathy and the power of men to share the hardship of their fellows.

Those are the conditions to which I refer. Will anyone deny them? When the government of this country found that these young men without homes were drifting backward and forward across the country they organized these relief camps, not as long ago as the hon. member has said. These camps were organized as a temporary—and only a temporary—shelter to provide food and clothing and to enable the men to live in comfort at the expense of the state until the time should come when they could find profitable employment. Now let me read something. I sent for the report which I have on the operation of these camps, and I wish to direct attention this afternoon to a few words from that report. I have not time to deal with the matter at length; if the statements made were not so serious I should not think of dealing with them at all. Just listen to this:

Discipline

From the commencement of this scheme of relief, administered by the Department of National Defence, it has been the policy that personnel engaged on the relief projects should remain as civilians and be treated in a manner similar to that obtaining in ordinary camps such as those established by contractors for construction purposes, timber operations, etc.

A man is free to leave a project at any time and in the case of a man who desires to leave a project to accept other employment and furnishes definite proof of the offer of a position, he is provided with free transportation for a distance not exceeding the distance from the project to the point of his engagement.

No powers of compulsion have been taken by the Department of National Defence and control of personnel is exercised by an appeal to their reason and intelligence, not to their fear of punishment. If a man refuses to comply with the simple regulations which are no more stringent than those of a well conducted construction or lumber camp, he is discharged. Any man who considers that he has been unjustly treated or has a legitimate complaint, may carry his complaint to higher authority provided he acts individually. It is a definite rule that committees, combinations, or mass protests, will not be received or considered. The method of dealing with complaints is receiving attention with a view to clarifying the procedure now in force. Note: Instructions were revised accordingly on May 4, 1935.

Then reference is made to the questions of sabotage and the distribution of subversive literature throughout the camps. In other words the regulations endeavour to make it abundantly clear that the young man who behaves himself and conducts himself as he would in an ordinary camp receives every consideration that can be accorded him, and at the first opportunity for work he can go to that work and his transportation is paid. Let me go a step further. It was felt that education should not be neglected, and here are the regulations with respect to education:

When the scheme for the care of unemployed, single, homeless men in camps administered by the Department of National Defence was instituted it was realized that provision of facilities to enable these men to retain or improve their mental efficiency was of paramount importance. Steps were taken, soon after the camps were established, to provide teachers, either from the relief personnel themselves or through the Frontier College, an organization that is supported entirely by voluntary subscriptions from the public generally.

By arrangement with the Frontier College, selected men, who were taken on the strength of the projects, worked as labourers with the men during the day and held classes during the evenings. This system, within its defined scope, has produced satisfactory results but has suffered through the frequent changes in the labourer-teachers who either returned to universities to resume their own academic training, or who secured positions in industry at remunerative rates of wages.

Then I have here the number of those thus engaged, running up over one hundred at one time and lessening, of course, as the winter departed and the warmer weather began. Then take the provision made for their instruction in trades and crafts. In view of what has transpired to-day I want this house to understand something of what has been done by this country to deal with this problem. I have the regulations here with respect to every province:

Alberta: The provincial department of education authorized the director of technical education to place an educational supervisor on the projects located along, and in the vicinity of, the Calgary-Banff highway and are providing correspondence courses for other projects where desired....

British Columbia: In continuation of the system instituted in the winter of 1933-34 correspondence courses are now established under the provincial department of education in elementary, high school and technical subjects....

Instruction in Trades and Crafts

Relief personnel who so desire are encouraged and assisted to learn trades, as opportunities permit, or at least to become accustomed to the use of tools. Considerable construction of camp buildings, wood and concrete culverts, wooden bridges on highways, etc., calls for employment of men of the handy-man type. Men with no previous knowledge have gained instruction and experience in such work in considerable numbers, and to this extent are profiting by such knowledge and employment under the direction of skilled foremen. Men showing adaptability have been so trained and frequent promotions on subordinate and junior supervisory staffs of such men have been made.

Then there was a complaint with respect to compensation for injury. I wish to point out that provision was made to deal with that question in a manner that most people would regard as fair. Then I turn to the question of their spiritual welfare:

The spiritual welfare of the men engaged in the various projects is considered a responsibility of the church organizations.

Every facility and encouragement is afforded the clergy and church workers to hold services and make contact with the men on the projects. Clergymen posted to or visiting camps for the purpose of ministering to the spiritual welfare of the men are given board and lodgings in kind and are reimbursed reasonable out-of-pocket expenses necessarily incurred. Due to the location of many of the projects, distant by many miles from large, or any settlements, the visits by clergymen to those projects have not been frequent. Where urban centres are adjacent to the projects, the attention has been greater. In many of the camps, services of various denominations were held regularly, particularly in the case of some of the larger projects to which certain denominations supplied resident chaplains. The men are permitted to attend church services at their own volition.

That is the provision for their welfare, their recreation and their leisure time. I have mentioned these matters because I believe this house and country should understand that this was an effort made to care for those who had no homes during the time they were without profitable employment.

Now I turn to what perhaps is the most important point of all. I believe I should at once clear up a difficulty apparently existing in the minds of some hon. members, with regard to the numbers of men passing through these camps. When it is alleged that these men stay in the camps two, three or four years undoubtedly an erroneous impression is created. When I give figures, as I shall, as to the numbers of men who have passed through the camps I shall do no more than give them roughly. There may be many other matters to which I should refer, but this afternoon time does not permit my doing so. I shall now read the table indicating the number of men who have gone into the camps and the number who have left, so that hon. members will realize that the turnover has been very rapid, that some have obtained permanent positions and others at least temporary positions. I shall have to ask hon. members to pardon me for a few moments until I obtain the figures.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the right hon. gentleman simply wish to put them on Hansard?

Mr. BENNETT: I think it is important that I give the number, because I believe the figures would destroy the idea that these men have been kept in the camps for long terms of years. I should like to make it clear as to what the movement has been. However, as I was not aware that this matter would be discussed and as the point in the document before me is not marked, I shall have to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to consult the index and find the information for me. While that is being done I shall proceed to a discussion of the next point, namely, that being in these camps in the numbers I shall presently indicate, to my certain knowledge in many cases these men were happy and content. Who destroyed their contentment? That is the question for us to answer. Who destroyed the peace of mind and happiness of these men? Who interfered? Who must accept the ultimate responsibility for going into the camps and destroying the peace of mind and happiness of these men? It is of no use to make the complaint that these camps were not first class hotels; they were not intended to be. But they were as good as many lumber camps in Canada—I say they were better, because they made provision for education, spiritual welfare and other matters which I shall not discuss at length. Who was it who became responsible for the destruction of the morale, peace and contentment of these men? That is the real point. All the excuses and sophistry in the world do not get us away from the fact that from time to time emissaries of a destructive and subversive force in Canada went among these men. They admitted that to me the other day; Collins admitted it to me. Collins of Glasgow said, "That is what I have been doing in the last six months, and," he said, "I have a right to do it." What they were doing was organizing and agitating. First of all they were agitating against conditions and were telling the men in the camps how badly they were used and cared for, how recreant to its duty the government had been, and what an utter disregard of humanitarian instincts there had been. This is the tale they were told. Then they said, "We must organize; workers must organize; we must dictate to the government what it shall do; we must have wages on a basis we shall say—not what the capitalist shall say, not the country, not the government." I could give the particulars of the agitation, because I have them as they have been furnished from time to time. Many hon. members have seen them.

Let us be fair and frank about this matter this afternoon. First, these agitators went into the camps sowing seeds of discontent, disruption and rebellion in the minds of these men. It took a long time to do it. Why? Because the men realized that the turnover of labour in the camps was great, that changes were taking place rapidly, and that many were leaving to go out to profitable employment. They knew that was happening day after day and week after week. In the end however these agitators wore down that sense of contentment in British Columbia. As the minister has pointed out, we knew that they were going to move upon Vancouver at a given date. They deny that that is so—but in the end they moved in upon Vancouver. Did they not receive succour and support in Vancouver and Victoria? By means of a tag day $6,000 was raised for them—$6,000. That was the humanitarian instinct, to which I referred a moment ago, expressing itself in terms of dollars.

Then when they found it was no longer possible to influence and to direct public opinion either through the mayor—who had ultimately to read the riot act; no longer heading parades, but reading the riot act—or any other body, they considered what they should do next. The point was how to get rid of them. I hope my information is not correct as to the means resorted to—but this government had no idea that they were going to leave Vancouver. No member of the government to whom I have spoken about the matter had any knowledge of it. But at a given moment they boarded freight trains. The government were advised of that fact. They travelled by fast freight, and we had no force to cope with them at Kamloops; we had no force to cope with them as they came down this side of the mountains, nor had we any force at Calgary. I say to the right hon. gentleman, when he suggests that there was some ulterior purpose in the fact that they were allowed to go east as far as Regina, that the question of dealing with them was taken up by the minister just as rapidly as possible, when the moment came that the railway companies complained of trespass upon their property endangering life and property. Of course under the Railway Act these men were trespassing. As hon. members have said, the fact that they were trespassers did not constitute a very great offence. But when the numbers counted not tens or twenties but hundreds, then there was danger to life and to property and danger in the transportation of the mails. Both railway companies complained.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When?

Mr. BENNETT: The so-called marchers were then between Swift Current and Moose Jaw. On the day they reached Moose Jaw the railway companies told the government they could not longer deal with the situation.

Now I want to remind the house of something more. One of the reasons, and one of the very great reasons, why this matter was dealt with after they had come into Saskatchewan was that they had succeeded in taking out of other camps in Alberta a considerable number of men who prior to that date had been peaceably and happily employed in these camps. In other words, their propaganda was successful in taking men out of camps in Alberta on the Crowsnest line and on the main line of the Canadian Pacific, and these men attached themselves to the strikers at Medicine Hat and other points so that when they reached Moose Jaw their numbers were very much larger than they had been. Before they reached Moose Jaw the minister had taken action in consequence of complaints made by the railway companies and their statement that they were unable to deal with the matter with the limited number of constables under their control, and that they required police assistance. That of course is the explanation of what was said the other day. Ordinarily with respect to the enforcement of law and order the province, of course, must determine what action shall be taken, and the province calls upon the federal power to give them assistance whenever it is desired. But in the agreement betweeen Saskatchewan and Canada, and it was an agreement that was consummated during the administration of the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), not by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), it is provided that the dominion reserves the right with respect to the police for a breach of federal statutes. Just as soon as these men reached Regina the premier of Saskatchewan, angered at their being in Saskatchewan and stopped there—and I appreciate his feelings—sent most violent messages to the government, and I think when the right hon. gentleman reads them he will not be so anxious to see them. We will produce them, of course. Message followed message. These people, he said—I paraphrase—were brought into Saskatchewan with the connivance of the government and with the assistance of the railway companies, and therefore there was no right now to stop them in Regina.

Now I put it to the former Minister of Justice, who I see is no longer in his place: would he under that agreement of his decline to do just what the Minister of Justice did? The premier of Saskatchewan was advised of this. The legal representatives of both railways waited upon the attorney general. We were so advised by telephone—I do not think it is in writing—and what happened? No action. The Minister of Justice believed, as I believed, that this was no longer a sporadic or spasmodic uprising. This was a revolutionary movement, and as I said the other day the forces of government for the preservation of law and order must be used for that purpose, and they were. There is the story.

We have endeavoured by every means within our power to prevent just what happened yesterday. When it was suggested a few days ago that we were rather anxious to use force and that I might have been far more conciliatory with these eight men who came to me than I was, I would like to say this, and I will leave it to any person who was present: I declined to indicate the least show of temper, although heaven knows there had been good excuse for it, and I restrained myself from any violent statement of any kind despite the provocation. But when I heard Evans say what he said as to his purposes, and Collins make the statements he did, I felt I would be recreant to my duty if I did not say to them that law and order would be maintained in this country because it was the duty of the federal power to preserve peace, order and good government. I think if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) had himself been present he would have been amazed at my moderation—amazed at it; for if it had been his case, in view of the condition into which he worked himself up in this house one evening about that time I do not know what would have happened. But I make that statement unhesitatingly and maintain that it cannot be contradicted.

We told them what? I am not going to go back and repeat it all, but we told them that we would provide them with a camp, and in order that it might be freed from the imputation of military discipline the Department of Labour, which had a representative at Regina, made the necessary arrangements for providing a camp at Lumsden. The water was laid on in a few hours, tents were provided and a commissariat to take care of the men. All this was done, and the worst of it is that some of those who had been picked up on the road, who had yielded to the solicitations of the propagandists and agitators, wanted to go to Lumsden. But could they go? Their baggage, their little dunnage bags, were taken and the pickets were reinforced to prevent them from going. A few found their way ultimately to Lumsden.

With respect to the unlawful assembly last night, I say "unlawful assembly" deliberately; for in Saskatchewan there was a decision—it is true, I believe, that it was by a county court judge—following the decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and may I remind this chamber that this great province dealt with this very subject. The evidence was given to a jury, defences were made by learned counsel and by the accused themselves, and they were found guilty. An appeal was taken to the supreme court, the highest court of appeal in the province of Ontario, and by unanimous judgment, delivered by Chief Justice Mulock, the court decided that there was no question in law upon the evidence adduced that these communists constituted an illegal association. That decision it is true is not binding on other courts of Canada except in the province of Ontario. Now look at what happened at Nipigon in defiance of that decision. Tim Buck said: I am a communist and I challenge the government. Yet Mr. Roebuck has done nothing and he is the attorney general of the province. I challenge, Tim Buck said, the government to proceed against me—this man who is out on ticket of leave, this man whom the highest court in this province had determined was properly convicted for promoting sedition—for that is practically what it amounts to—and the destruction of our institutions. They know about him carrying on his agitation, defying law and order, and no one says a word. There is a case in which the federal power has no authority to drop in and assist unless we have evidence of the revolutionary character of what is taking place. Attention is directed to these things, but no action is taken. There they are and there they remain.

Let us go a step further. Mr. Buck is now running as a candidate against the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). He has fourteen organization rooms in that constituency, and he is openly challenging authority—openly; he does not offer any apologies for it at all. Here I stand and scoff at you—that is his attitude. Look at the effect of that upon this country as a whole. Look at the result upon the body politic. Look at the result upon the morale of the people of this country. That is the thing we have to consider. We were on safe ground when the railway companies were being dealt with. That was a breach of a federal statute and not of the criminal code. That was a special statute in which we were interested in the transport of mail and the safety of passengers, a matter solely within federal jurisdiction. That is the reason why we took the position which we did. What did Grover Cleveland do when he was faced with a situation almost like this one in the state of Illinois when the mails were no longer being carried? He took federal power for the purpose of maintaining law and order, in order that the mails, which were of national concern, might be delivered. Our railroads are a subject solely of national concern and come under the jurisdiction only of this parliament. When we found that condition existing, we took the steps we did. Is there any hon. member of this house who, charged with responsibility, would have done less and maintained his oath of office? That is the question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the Prime Minister leaves that point, would he mind explaining how the assembly of last night was an illegal assembly?

Mr. BENNETT: Last night's assembly was an unlawful assembly within the decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario. I shall not labour it at length but if the hon. gentleman desires to read the judgment, I shall send him a copy. This judgment was circulated widely. The assembly last night was an unlawful association within the meaning of that judgment and I do not think anyone who is informed has any doubt about it.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not quite follow the right hon. gentleman. I understood that that did not apply in the case of Manitoba. Does it apply in the case of Saskatchewan?

Mr. BENNETT: What I tried to make clear was that it would be for the courts of Saskatchewan to decide. The leaders have been arrested and their trial will be held and I shall not comment on what the evidence will be. They have been charged and an opportunity will be afforded to them to make their defence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am just trying to clear up that point. I understood the Prime Minister to say that the dominion could not prosecute in Manitoba but apparently it is prosecuting in Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: The prosecution has arisen out of a breach of the Railway Act. I want to make that clear.

Leaving that for the moment, I must apologize to the house for the delay which has occurred in giving this information as it disrupts the natural flow of the argument. How many men does the house think have passed through these camps? The total number is 116,480, and 22,365 have left to take up profitable employment while 12,601 were let out for purposes of discipline. This gives some idea of the activities of the communists in these camps and gives some idea of the propaganda which has been carried on and the methods adopted. Others have left to take up employment where they thought they could find jobs, some 60,000 having gone to unknown jobs. The largest number of men ever at these camps was 25,500; last summer this number dropped about 12,000 and last winter it rose to 20,500. It stands now at 13,000. These figures give some idea of the nature, the character and the purpose of these camps and how well they have served that purpose. One of the most distinguished labour ministers of England, who has since passed to the great beyond, when on a visit to this country stated that this was one of the most amazing ventures from the standpoint of sound principle that he had ever seen. He was referring to the provision by which these men were given shelter, food and clothing, until the opportunity arose of being permitted to go to work. When I say that the number of men in the camps dropped last year to 9,000 from a maximum of 25,500 one is able to gain some idea of what the situation was. As I have said, the number of men have dropped to about 13,000 and that number will be decreasing steadily, as I explained to these men, because of the opportunities which will be offered of work on the highways and roads in the mountains of British Columbia which cannot be undertaken until late in June. When those opportunities for work are offered they can avail themselves of them, if they so desire.

As I said, I do not propose in any sense to anticipate what evidence will be given or what may be said with respect to the tragedy at Regina. This morning I received a telegram from Mr. Gardiner to which reference has been made by the right hon. leader of the opposition. This wire reads:

You have no doubt been advised of latest developments. We wish to state that men had interviewed us at five o'clock. They stated they had advised your government through your representative they were prepared to disband and go back to their camps or homes provided they were allowed to go under their own organization. They state this was denied them. They asked our government to take responsibility for disbanding them to their own camps or homes. While we were meeting to consider their proposals and any suggestions we might make to you trouble started down town between the police and strikers without notification to us of police intentions which has resulted in at least one death in the police force and scores of citizens strikers and police wounded. We are nevertheless prepared to undertake this work of disbanding the men without sending them to Lumsden. Will you consider negotiations on basis of this proposal.

James G. Gardiner.

I replied as follows:

Your message received indicating your willingness to undertake work of disbanding strike marchers without sending them to Lumsden. Please indicate just what this means in order that there may be no misunderstanding.

That does not look like a desire not to co-operate with the provincial authorities. The premier of the province stated that these men demanded that they should be permitted to disperse but with their own organization. That is just exactly what we do not propose they shall do. We do not propose that they shall go to Vancouver, where we already have had communists taking part in activities on the waterfront, as referred to the other day by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). We do not propose that they shall go there to swell the ranks of the communists and add to the difficulties of that city. Their demand was not that they be permitted to disband and go to their homes where they had homes or go back to the camps, but, as Mr. Gardiner says, they demanded that they be permitted to disband under their own organization, and this we refuse to allow. Since I came into the chamber I received another telegram from Mr. Gardiner which may be an answer to the one I sent. This telegram reads:

Yesterday morning men indicated to your representative Mr. Burgess their willingness to disband the march and return to the points from which they came. They repeated this to Mr. Burgess and representatives of the police at 2.30. Your representative refused to have provincial representation at that meeting. The men met us at five o'clock stating that since your representatives had refused to consider this the provincial government take responsibility for disbanding men to their original camps or homes and supply them with food in the interval. While we were considering this matter police raided public meeting to arrest leaders, precipitating a riot. Men at present in buildings at fair grounds completely surrounded by police who permit no one to enter and men to leave only in twos. Police intention to force these men to Lumsden camp or starving them into submission. This will end in a worse riot than last night. These men should be fed where they are and immediately disbanded and sent back to camps and homes as they request without any attempt to force them into Lumsden and this should be done within next two hours. This government has a responsibility toward its citizens to provide them with ordinary protection against this imported trouble. We would ask you to immediately withdraw orders issued affecting the liberty of individuals within this province and affecting the law and order of this province. You might assume that we are as much concerned about law and order in this country as you can be and deal with the elected representatives of this province regarding matters concerning our people instead of through an appointed political representative. We are asking you if you are going to feed these men within the next two hours and are asking you to instruct us within two hours what plans are to be made for their disbandment.

James G. Gardiner.

That is the message to which the right hon. leader of the opposition referred a moment ago. It will be observed that Mr. Gardiner talks about disbandment but he leaves out that explanation which I requested in connection with their demands that they be allowed to go under their own organization. To that we have not received any reply. As long as they stay together, as the Minister of Finance says, they will disband.

Now let me read the last answer which I wrote while I was listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

Large number of so called strike marchers now at Regina have never been in relief camps and being homeless cannot be sent to any definite locality as being their homes. The federal government is ready and willing to feed these marchers at Lumsden and transport them to that point. Apparently leaders demand transportation to Vancouver as organized bands which we are not willing to do in view of the illegal character of their organization and avowed purposes of their leaders. Of course we have no intention of interfering with any action you may decide to take that does not involve these men in violation of the laws of the country.

That is the position we have outlined in the telegrams that have passed between us to-day. I am not going to do more than merely indicate that that being the situation we are faced with an organized attempt against the national life of Canada. This is not sporadic; it extends from coast to coast. It is not dominion wide; it extends to other sections of this continent. They started to-day at noon at Valcartier. A happy contented group of men have been preyed upon by agitators, and at noon to-day they said they were going to strike. This uprising against authority, against law and order, is in our judgment a considered and deliberate attempt to carry into effect the known doctrines of the communists. We are not prepared to yield to it; and what is more, we believe that it is not a matter of a province; it is a matter of the nation as a whole.

I will not burden you with the sheaves of telegrams that have come to me along the line, especially in the northern parts of Ontario and other parts of Canada, where the population is far better informed with respect to communistic doctrines and tendencies than it is, for instance, in the city of Ottawa, and where they make bold to say that they demand—not request but demand—that these things shall be done. They demand that these men shall continue their march upon Ottawa, these strikers, and that the police be withdrawn—"We demand that the police be withdrawn." The similarity in the language of the telegrams would seem to indicate that there was one master mind somewhere behind this movement, or several. And even the one from New York was couched in terms so like some that we have received from Toronto and other parts of Canada as to make one believe that they had a common origin.

It is not easy for me to speak at such length about a matter of this kind to-day. If I say that my night has been saddened and my day as well by what transpired yesterday, I suppose that will afford an opportunity for jeers—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: —from the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre. And when they talk about an order in council having been passed by this government dealing with these matters, I say that any man who said that and who was a member of parliament insulted his own intelligence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have already said that I did not—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say you; I said any member of parliament.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice made that statement with regard to me and I denied it. It is not worthy of the Prime Minister to try to leave that impression.

Mr. BENNETT: I will put it this way. According to the hon. gentleman's own statement he was present at the C.C.F. provincial gathering at which a motion was made that a message be sent to the Prime Minister that help be sent to the strikers in Regina, and condemnation was made of the government of the day, naming the Prime Minister by name, for the passing of such an order in council.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was present at the meeting of the council, but I was not present at the time that motion was made.

Mr. BENNETT: I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that. But I do say that when anyone suggests that an order in council could be passed by this government dealing with a matter of this kind, he does violence to his own intelligence. I do not think there is any doubt at all about that, because this house a few weeks ago passed a statute that provided it could not be done; and no one with intelligence would pass an order in council knowing that it had no value as such and would not be worth the paper it was written on and would not furnish a defence or excuse for any action that might be taken under it. That, I think, is so clear as not to call for comment. I repeat, I find it difficult to speak at all about this matter; but it is of such importance that even though it has greatly inconvenienced me to do so, I have endeavoured to place some of the facts before the house and the country.

When I think of that courageous officer of the law who was employed by the city of Regina and who is now lying stark and dead in the city whose welfare he was interested in and whose safety he defended, I cannot but think of the tremendous responsibility that rests upon each of us lest it should be said that by the course we have pursued we have led men to believe that they might resort to the most violent means to accomplish their ends and have with them the support of decent law-abiding citizens. I know it is not so. I know that the Canadian people do not believe that; and, weak as some of our institutions are, and failing, as they must have failed at times, to meet all the demands that might be made upon them, we are still convinced that the people of Canada are not prepared to substitute for those institutions the rule of the commune and the guidance of the soviet.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to thank the Prime Minister for his undertaking to bring down the telegrams that have passed between the Prime Minister of Saskatchewan and himself. May I ask whether that assurance will include all the messages between the federal government and the government of Saskatchewan. May I also ask whether the right hon. gentleman will kindly consider the request that the instructions, if any, given to the police be tabled.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as correspondence is concerned, there is none except the telegrams; they will be produced. My present view is that it has never been the rule to permit instructions given by officers commanding to those charged with enforcing law and order to be brought down in the House of Commons. I will look into the matter further, but that is my present conviction.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

INSURANCE ACTS

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT—FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT—BILLS NOT TO BE PROCEEDED WITH

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): If I may have the unanimous consent of the house I should like to make a statement regarding two bills which are on the order paper in my name, Nos. 13 and 14. Hon. members will remember that when Bill No. 13 was before the house the first time the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said he had received assurance from the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association, which includes Canadian, British and foreign companies, registered with the federal insurance department, that if these bills were not proceeded with they would see that no rate of interest in excess of six per cent per annum was charged on any policy loan after the first of January, 1936, this to include automatic premium loans and all charges of every kind in connection with such loans or other loans. I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) since that time to confirm that by letter, and I have a letter from the Minister of Finance dated June 28, in which he says:

> I have pleasure in writing to advise you that the department of insurance and the government will be at pains to see that the undertaking given by the Hon. N. W. Rowell, K.C., counsel for the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association, as to the rate of interest that will be charged after January 1, 1936, will be carried out in strict conformity with the undertaking, the terms of which you have before you in the copy of Mr. Rowell's letter, dated the 24th of June, addressed to Mr. Finlayson, the superintendent of insurance.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to proceed further with these two bills at this time.

SUPPLY

B.C. RELIEF CAMP STRIKERS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rhodes for committee of supply.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (East Kootenay): I question very much indeed if there has been before parliament during this session a subject of greater importance or fraught with more serious possibilities than that which was under discussion this afternoon. I might remind you, sir, that the motion to go into supply has always been considered the most suitable occasion for members of the House of Commons to place before the house any subject that is considered to be a grievance or is regarded by the people generally as containing the germs of a grievance. In other words it has been a time-honoured practice and habit, as well as a very high privilege, to use this opportunity to discuss matters of importance to any section or to the country as a whole. This subject which we have been discussing I choose to define as the plight of youth. The immediate matter, of course, that is of grave concern is certain outbreaks and disorders that have occurred in regard to the plight of youth.

This afternoon we had a number of addresses. It is not my intention to analyze or reply to them or deal with them to any great extent. I should, however, like to point out one or two things. We had an address by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), and the house will recall that he closed his remarks with the observation that perhaps the subject of gravest concern was whether or not the federal government had invaded the rights of the province. To me the statement of the right hon. gentleman seemed rather strange. I am not very much concerned about whether or not the government of Canada has infringed to a certain degree upon the narrowly interpreted constitutional rights of the provinces in this respect. The thing immediately before the government of course is the disturbance in Regina. Certainly the government ought to act constitutionally and carefully within its right. But after all the thing of immediate concern is that the government should discharge its duty, which according to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), it is amply demonstrated it has done. Therefore I could not understand the attitude of the right hon. gentleman, because to me the matter of supreme concern was not even the riots, although that certainly is of great importance, but rather what lies behind all this, what is the cause of all this. Is there anything that parliament can do to remove the causes of these disturbances and riots? I hope before I shall have finished, to indicate at least what in my opinion might be done to correct the situation. At the very outset, therefore, I suggest that we do not waste very much time discussing whether or not the government is doing its duty, because as far as I can gauge the matter the government had no choice. It had to preserve law and order within its constituted powers and rights. This it has done. But has it done in that respect any more than its duty? There is nothing about that which should call for either encomiums or condemnation; it is the plain simple duty of the government to maintain law and order in the country—of course I always interpolate this; subject to its constitutional right and power. So all I have to say on that subject is that apparently the government has done its duty, a distasteful duty. But there is another point that ought to be canvassed and canvassed carefully, that is, what are the underlying causes of the disturbances that forced the government to discharge a most unpleasant duty? It is with that phase of the subject that I intend to deal.

Let me first ask what was the origin of all this trouble. It will be recalled that a few years ago, I would say from three to four years ago, we found literally hundreds, yes thousands, of the youth of Canada wandering up and down, particularly in the summer time. As I went westward to my own province of British Columbia I counted on a single train one morning a hundred and twenty-seven of them. I have counted fifty and sixty just as trains were passing, young men riding to and fro on the freight trains. Sometimes I talked with these boys. I talked to one young chap who said he had made three cross-country trips in one season. I talked to others who boasted of how far they had travelled. That is a condition that prevailed three and four years ago this summer. The provinces told us, particularly the province from which I come, that young men were pouring in there from other parts of Canada, constituting for them a very serious problem in addition to their own local problem of relief. This complaint developed. The federal government offered, freely I think and of its own volition, to undertake the care of destitute, homeless, unemployed young men. I should like the house to bear that fact in mind, that the federal government undertook to care for that class of the unemployed. When they undertook to do so they laid down certain rules, certain principles if you like, one of which was that these young men had to be healthy. I stand to be corrected by the minister who is in charge if I should inadvertently mistate the case, but I understand that one of the conditions was that they must be healthy; indeed, sir, I think they passed a physical examination before being admitted to camp. They had to be young; they had to be homeless; they had to be destitute and they had to be single.

Well, sir, that is rather a disturbing condition which I think should challenge the sympathetic consideration of every member of this house, as I am sure it does. But here is where I think we are somewhat failing: we are at the end of the session, and so far as parliament is concerned we have done little or practically nothing towards the solution of the problem of caring for this great number of young men. It is argued by some that by providing these camps we have discharged our duty. It must be borne in mind that when this was undertaken by the federal government it was not done as a permanent measure; it was looked upon as an emergency. That at least was the impression that was made on my own mind; I cannot speak for others. It was the expectation and hope that we would carry these young men through a winter and that probably in the following summer, or at least in the not too far distant future, they would be absorbed into the ordinary life of the country. Certainly no one to whom I mentioned the subject considered that it would go on for three years so far, and possibly for another year or two as well. It was never looked upon as a condition with which we should ask young men to bear a period of years.

Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, and I say this with great deliberation, that it is asking a great deal of youth to remain docile in camps where they receive subsistence plus a very small remuneration in the nature of an honorarium of $5 a month. I say that is asking a great deal of youth. I do not wish to be told later that I am getting sentimental, because I do not think that can be said, but surely we are not going to ignore the fact that in the veins of the youth of Canada are still pulsating ambition and the desire to get somewhere and be something. To my mind parliament cannot consider that it has discharged its duty unless it has made some provision for the satisfying of that very human and legitimate desire on the part of these young men.

Then, sir, what occurred next? There was a strike in some of the camps and the young men trekked into the city of Vancouver. I have resided in British Columbia now for forty-one years, with the exception of the unfortunate periods of time I have had to spend in this house during the last twenty-five years. Last summer and the summer before I personally visited many of these camps, and I should like to say a few words as to what I saw there and the impressions I received. I visited quite a number of the camps; on each of these visits I had several meals at different camps. Generally speaking I found the food to be good; I do not think there was very much to take objection to in connection with the food, so far as I could judge. It was plain; it was wholesome; there was a reasonable variety and on the whole I would say it could not be the ground for very much complaint. The clothing the men were given certainly was of a kind that should be satisfactory; on the whole I would say it was perhaps better than the men would obtain themselves if they were buying it. I do not think there could be any reasonable complaint in that connection. In regard to housing—outside of some possible inconveniences that might have crept into some of the camps by being brought in with the men themselves, in the way of vermin and so forth, which I think was rare—I should say it was quite in keeping with the normal camp life we have in British Columbia in the mining and logging camps. So on the whole I would say the physcal convenience and comfort of the men was reasonably well looked after, and as far as I was able to judge there were no sound grounds for complaint.

I saw something else, however, which impressed me tremendously. At one camp the young men were employed in the construction of or preparation of the ground for an airport. Hon. members know what that means; there was a considerable area of, I should say, sixty or seventy acres or thereabouts. The camp of which I was speaking was in a valley in the mountains, what we out there would call a "wash"; that is, a flat of the valley which had been filled up with the wash from mountain streams, consisting of great boulders some larger than a man could lift and others commonly called by the men working among them "niggerheads," large coarse gravel and boulders. When the discussion was taking place this afternoon I noticed that some hon. members referred to these young men as though they were all men who did not want to work, loafers and so on. Apparently that thought was seeping through the minds of some hon. members. I saw these young men in the month of August, working under a blistering sun with the temperature, I should imagine, close to 100 in the shade. I observed them over a period in the neighbourhood of at least ten days, working away day after day at, perhaps, one of the hardest, most discouraging and most disagreeable tasks that any man could undertake. I do not know of a harder or more disagreeable job than working under a blistering sun taking boulders out of a gravel wash. If anyone can tell me of a more difficult or disagreeable task I should like to know what it is. The point is this: I visited that camp; I sat among the men at their meals; I talked to the men, and I never heard a single word of complaint. I saw them working in the middle of the morning and in the middle of the afternoon; apparently they were doing what would be normally expected of men receiving a full wage. That made a very deep impression upon my mind, the fact that it was possible to get young men in an unemployment camp on a subsistence basis to do that sort of work.

I went to another camp that I recall; this one was in what we call the sand hills, in the dry belt district. These men were cutting the curves out of some of these mountain roads, faced with the blazing sun on the banks which they were cutting away. They were working in dry, dusty, fine silt, another very disagreeable job. These young men did splendid work. I had not an opportunity of measuring it in any way; they may not have done as much work as they might have done working by the day for a contractor, but I will say that they appeared to me to be doing more work than is done normally by those employed at road work at full pay by provincial governments. Whether or not that says much I do not know, but I will add this: These young men seemed to be giving a good day's work. At the two camps I have mentioned there was peculiarly difficult hot, hard work. I visited other camps where the work was hard, but conditions not quite so severe. There I saw men working in the same way—young men, many of whom had never worked before; they were not trained in work and not hardened to it. Many of those young men in the camps who have worked in that way in the hot summer months are not Canadians whom we should treat lightly or disregard. It is because I saw their efforts to play the game that I have been so deeply concerned about the so-called strike.

My next point is this: The young men came down to Vancouver and went on strike. It is stated by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice—and I am not disputing their word in the slightest—that they were led to go on strike by communists, agitators or other persons evilly disposed. I am inclined to think that that suggestion is perfectly true; I have not had the opportunity personally to examine that phase of the matter, but from the reports one receives and the statements made in the house I believe we may accept that as correct. But does it follow that these young men, many of whom have been working under circumstances such as I have described for periods ranging between one and three years, are communists and law breakers of a destructive turn of mind? Does that follow simply because they went on strike and walked out in an effort to have improved conditions? I say the House of Commons ought to be extremely lenient in its judgment of the action of the boys. I am not talking about the agitators; I am not talking about the leaders. Those men may be dealt with by the law officers of the crown properly appointed to enforce the law. If they have broken the law, if they have agitated or if they have indulged in seditious utterances and that sort of thing, the law officers of the crown can deal with them. I am speaking of the rank and file, the young fellows who through the statements of agitators have been led astray. Knowing what I do know about the way these young men have worked I am not prepared to accept the statement that they are a bunch of law breakers, disturbers of the peace, destructive and communistic. I say I am not prepared to accept that statement.

I hold in my hand a letter I received from a farmer in one of the districts in which a camp is established—one of the remote districts, in fact. I shall quote only one or two of his observations:

> We find the camp boys on the whole a pretty good bunch. We have some of them down to our home now and then, give them an evening, lend them books. And Christmas eve and New Year's night we as residents gave all who wished to come parties at the school, and we sure had a good time. They sure did appreciate it.... We have social evenings and dances at the school and get lots of the boys present.

These farmers to whom the letter refers are perhaps among the poorest financially in the whole of British Columbia. They live in one of the more remote valleys where there has been great difficulty to get along; yet they have brought the boys into their homes and treated them well. From other sources I have been advised as to the pleasant relations that existed between the boys and the local farmers. That is an attitude which I believe it quite right and quite commendable, and one which we should certainly endorse. I read from that letter merely to emphasize the point—and I shall emphasize it further from another letter in my possession—that these young men are not a bunch of scalawags or destructive individuals impelled only by seditious impulses. I think on the whole the great mass of them are splendid young men.

I should like now to refer to an observation made by the Minister of Justice. This afternoon and a few days ago the minister stated—but before I come to that perhaps I may be permitted to retrace my steps for a moment. The strike occurred and young men went to Vancouver. There they remained for a very considerable period. I would say that before they left on the trek east they were there nearly two months. I shall read to the house two letters I wrote the government on this subject. I do so not for the purpose of embarrassing the government but simply in justice to myself and also briefly to express my own views in a constructive way as to how we might have solved the situation before it reached its present critical stage. My first letter was inspired by a telegram I received from two churches in Vancouver, churches I know very well. One was from St. Giles church and the other from Chown United church. The official boards of these two churches met and sent me the telegram to which I shall refer. I notice it is dated April 28, quite a time after the young men had gone to Vancouver and there had been some disturbances at that point:

> We fear that the strike situation here becoming extremely dangerous. Please urge federal government to immediately send some assurance through Premier Pattullo or Mayor McGeer that if possible camps will be abolished by work program. With such assurance men might quietly return to camps meantime.

It may be said that these two churches were impertinent in making these observations or suggestions. After all, however, it is not far from a very sane suggestion, as I shall show in a minute. I draw the attention of hon. members to this expression, "with such assurance men might quietly return to camps meantime." That I think would have happended, had the assurance been given then. I am sorry indeed that it was not given. Upon receipt of that telegram I wrote the then acting Prime Minister, Right Hon. Sir George Perley, under date of April 30. I ask the house to note the date because I feel I owe it to myself and to others who made representations to me to make clear the point that I did lay the matter before the government in ample time. This letter reads:

Dear Sir George Perley:

> The enclosed telegram which comes from the official board of two churches in Vancouver, namely, St. Giles United church and Chown United church, is enclosed for your information and will form the basis of a brief statement by myself regarding the situation in Vancouver.
> I can justly claim to have some knowledge of the situation precipitated in Vancouver by the strike in certain unemployment camps and the concentration of these men in that city.
> I do not for a moment wish to condone the obvious willingness of Mr. McGeer, mayor of Vancouver, to lay at the door of the federal authorities the responsibility for the trouble. On the other hand I regret to say that I cannot agree with the attitude of the federal government as indicated by your utterances as reported in the public press.

It will be remembered that the right hon. gentleman Sir George Perley took the ground that it was not constitutionally the duty of the federal government to intervene, and that if these young men left the camps it was their own business; he indicated that the camps were there and that they could return if they wished. I questioned the soundness of that position. To continue quoting:

> I frankly question the position taken by the federal government in disavowing all responsibility in this and similar matters on the ground first, that relief is constitutionally a local matter, and secondly, that the federal authorities can only move when requested to do so by the provincial authorities.
> With all respect and, I hope with reasonable moderation I submit that such position is no longer tenable and is, in fact, provocative.

I took the stand then, and I think I was right, that it was not conducive to peace, order and good government merely to say that the constitutional responsibility rested upon the city and upon the province, because the federal government had previously of its own volition taken responsibility for establishing these young men in camps. I proceed to quote:

> It is not reasonable to expect thousands of young, healthy men, many of them well educated, to submit indefinitely to confinement to camps on a subsistance basis. It is not natural, and in my opinion the federal parliament and the federal government must recognize that simple truth.

I lay that now before parliament, that it is not a natural situation. Indeed it is unnatural, and I think parliament owes it to itself to recognize that that condition ought not to be allowed to continue. I proceed:

> Furthermore, it should be borne in mind that when this system was inaugurated about three years ago it was considered only as a temporary measure. With due appreciation of your perplexities, I wish to ask: What has been done in the meantime to seriously combat this problem of hopeless inadequacy of opportunity for young men to obtain work?

I ask parliament—I do not think it is sufficient to lay all the blame on the government—and I ask myself, what have we done in the last three or four years to overcome this inadequacy of opportunity for young men to obtain work? I proceed:

> Your public works program in my opinion is pitifully inadequate, and if this confederation is to remain intact and survive these crises then leadership to take us out of them must originate within the ranks of the federal government.

I believe, sir, that that is a sound position. There must be some leadership and I know of no other place whence that leadership can come under present circumstances than the federal government.

> To ridicule a mayor of one city for his inability to absorb, in addition to his local unemployment problem, thousands of young men that are suddenly poured in upon him will not adequately discharge federal responsibility, and my object in writing you is to plead with you to give this problem that consideration which in my opinion it merits and which, I am convinced, has not up to the present time been given to it by the federal authorities.

After I had dictated that letter I received a letter from a prominent business man in Vancouver, a former president of the board of trade and former president of the manufacturers' association, containing a paragraph which I am now going to read. This business man says, and I attached it to my letter:

I am also enclosing you a copy of the Strike Bulletin, the first issued by the young men who are in from the camps. They are tagging on the streets to-day. It is a sad situation. They are on the average bright, healthy, clean looking young boys, and might be either your sons or mine, and it is just too bad the buck is passed between the three governing bodies to the extent it has been. If something is not done, there is going to be trouble. These young men will not stay in camps and be deprived of taking their share in work and wages with others.

That was the opinion of a sane business man, as I have indicated, and I passed that opinion on to the right hon. gentleman largely because this sane individual, and he is in every sense that, made this observation: "If something is not done, there is going to be trouble." I felt myself that he was right, and I felt so much concerned about it that I passed the information on. I received a brief answer from the right hon. gentleman which I will read:

I duly received your letter of April 30th, enclosing a telegram signed by the board of St. Giles United church and Chown United church. A similar message had already come to me and had been given careful consideration.

Although there is practically no trouble in the other relief camps, the only suggestion put forward by the British Columbia government is to provide "work and wages" for everyone. If this were done, it could not be confined to those now in the camps, but would bring in thousands of people who are not now on relief, and, in my opinion, it would be beyond the power of the people of Canada to support such a policy throughout the dominion.

Thanking you for writing me so fully and frankly,

And so forth. That was signed by the right hon. gentleman who was acting Prime Minister (Sir George Perley). I thanked him for his courtesy, and I have no complaint to offer in that respect. But, sir, it strikes me that that is not good enough for the people of this country. We are not going far enough in merely dismissing the matter in that way.

Well, the days passed and the trouble in Vancouver was quite serious at times. On one occasion these young men walked through one of the big department stores and destroyed considerable property, five or six thousand dollars' worth. There was a good deal of trouble but not nearly as much as one might expect when fifteen hundred men from the camps were gathered in a city where there were already a lot of idle men. But on the whole there was not very great trouble until after the longshoremen's strike broke out, which was an entirely separate matter and had nothing to do with these young fellows.

On May 23, after the Prime Minister's return, I felt it was my duty to write again because in the meantime I had received a letter from the mayor. I therefore wrote to the right hon. the Prime Minister in these terms, and I ask hon. members of the house to do me the courtesy of listening to this because I make some suggestions in it which I wish to make again to-night. I wrote:

I received a copy of the letter of the mayor of Vancouver dated May 17th, which was sent to yourself, several others, and to myself.

It was a letter that was sent to a number of persons.

This is too serious a matter to allow personal criticisms of the method of approach by the mayor of Vancouver to interfere. May I therefore, with due respect but with great urgency, write you as follows.

First, will you kindly read a letter I submitted to Sir George Perley, Acting Prime Minister, on April 30 last (copy of which I attach hereto).

That is the letter I have just read.

Second, without labouring or arguing the matter, may I make the following suggestions toward the solution of this problem:

(a) That the federal government immediately discharge its promises to complete the trans-Canada highway by energetically undertaking that work throughout British Columbia.

This in itself would absorb a large proportion of those young men who are now housed in these camps.

(b) That the dominion government should institute a program of road construction from the great national parks in British Columbia and Alberta to the international boundary in cooperation with the provincial authorities.

At present you have many millions of dollars tied up in these parks with only the most atrocious roads approaching them from the international boundary. I have fully discussed this with several of your ministers, and urge it as a practical and ultimately remunerative program.

(c) Many of the great watersheds of Canada are becoming rapidly denuded of their forests with danger firstly, to the watersheds, and secondly, the loss of timber without provision for reforestation.

I therefore suggest a program of reforestation which will take many years to complete, absorb a great many men, and will ultimately amply repay the country for the money expended. This would be healthy, useful work on a sound economic basis.

(d) I suggest to you again, as I did more than two years ago, that you call a conference of those leaders in finance who control the credit of Canada and submit to them the fact that new housing and general construction in Canada (replacement, maintenance and repairs) is approximately three years behind normal.

There is an abundant supply of material, skilled workmen, engineers and architects.

There is an absolute need of housing. The only thing lacking is an intelligent application of the credit of the country, now in private hands, to the solution of this problem. It is therefore not unreasonable to submit to those who control the private credit of the country this problem and require from them a declaration of their attitude toward the same.

It is my considered opinion that if they refuse to discharge this responsibility then the state is justified in stepping in and organizing a great building and construction corporation financed by a public issue of bonds and make these advances for construction purposes at a very low rate of interest. This whole matter would be self-sustaining and ultimately amortize itself.

I make these four suggestions to you because I am deeply concerned about the terrible seriousness of the situation and am convinced that adequate leadership can only emanate from the federal government.

I received no answer to that from the Prime Minister but I did receive the following letter from his secretary:

I have for acknowledgment your letter of 23rd May, and regret that owing to the fact that the pressure has been so great recently the opportunity of dealing with the matters therein set forth did not present itself until to-day.

The questions raised in your communication have been brought to the attention of the ministers, whose departments are affected thereby.

Yours faithfully,
A. W. Merriam.

I am reading these letters to place myself clearly before the house. Both letters were written before this difficulty arose and this trek to Ottawa commenced, the first letter on April 30 and the next on May 23. I wrote those letters because I was convinced that the situation was serious and I was mortally afraid that if these men started to move towards Ottawa, as they later did, there would be trouble and tragic results. It is a most disturbing thing that we are here in parliament while 2,000 men, not all of them from British Columbia by any means, are gathered in the very centre of the country. Yesterday there was bloodshed and trouble. I cannot press upon the attention of the house too strongly the solemn words uttered this afternoon by the Prime Minister when he referred to the officer who lost his life and the others who are at death's door. This is a most serious thing. The lives of many of these young men are being risked in these disturbances and I am convinced that if parliament will frankly face the situation and give the government its unlimited support, a program of this kind can be adopted without impairing at all the financial structure of this country.

92582—263½

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. STEVENS: I was not nearly finished.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. STEVENS: I should like to add a few things if I might be permitted.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may proceed with the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. STEVENS: I had not noticed the rapid passage of time. I believe that parliament could give the government its mandate, shall I say, to undertake something of this kind. I am not saying that this is the only way, but may I just refer to what I said? It is not very complex. First, I suggest utilizing the services of these men on the federal highway. A few moments ago I was figuring out what the demands of these young men amounted to. I am not going to split hairs over who made the demands or who drafted them. They ask for fifty cents an hour, and that is not an unreasonable thing to ask for. Six hours a day for five days a week amounts to $60 per month. I understand that it is now costing the government—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—somewhere between $45 to $48 per month to support these men.

Mr. STIRLING: Thirty-nine dollars.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister says $39 but I do not know whether that covers all the police activities and the other expenses which are necessary; I doubt if it does. Suppose it is costing us $30 or $40 a month; for a difference of $20 a month we can secure from these young men a full day's work. It is true that the day will be a short one of six hours, but these men will be given reasonable contentment and their self respect will be saved. At the same time parliament will be saved the terrible embarrassments to which it is now subjected. We can put thousands of these young men from British Columbia to work on the highway and the other roads to which I referred.

May I draw the attention of the house to the fact that we have invested millions in our national parks but we still have a barrage between the parks and the international boundary which prevents tourists from entering the parks. They can come up but when they go back they tell their friends about the awful roads in British Columbia. It is true the provincial government is trying to patch up these roads but they cannot do very much. If these roads were put in condition I venture the statement, with which I believe the minister will agree, that we would multiply the number of tourists by ten. Every tourist pays $2.50 to enter our park and our revenue would be increased which would salvage some of the cost.

I suggested reforestation also. I say to this parliament as earnestly as I can that there is an area of several thousand square miles north and west of here which will be a wilderness in a few years unless some authority takes hold of the question of reforestation. It is not sufficient to say that that is a provincial duty, the duty of parliament is first to formulate a national policy utilizing the national parks and other forest reserve areas and then enter into cooperation with the provinces for a reforestation scheme. We could thus absorb twenty or thirty thousand of these men quite easily. The other suggestion I made was in connection with housing; I think this offers wonderful possibilities, and there are other suggestions which could be made. I implore parliament to give consideration to the putting into force of constructive efforts to put these men to work.

I should like to conclude by making one or two references. This afternoon while listening to the debate there was brought to my memory an essay of Lord Bacon which I read many years ago. One of the most important things where seditious disturbances obtain is to remove the causes of sedition, and I think that was the view held by Lord Bacon a couple of centuries ago when he said:

> Concerning the materials of seditions, it is a thing well to be considered; for the surest way to prevent seditions (if the times do bear it) is to take away the matter of them; for if there be fuel prepared, it is hard to tell whence the spark shall come that shall set it on fire. The matter of seditions is of two kinds; much poverty and much discontentment.

I pause there for a moment to emphasize that seditious disturbances can arise only where there are underlying causes which form a fruitful ground for their growth. "For if there be fuel prepared, it is hard to tell whence the spark shall come that shall set it on fire." These young men have been labouring under a sense of injustice, not injustice from the government but injustice from the state and from society. As one young boy said to a lady who was interviewing him when he was asked what should be done to improve the camps, "I do not want to improve the camps; I want work." Was not that a reasonable request? Lord Bacon also said:

> The first remedy or prevention is to remove, by all means possible, that material cause of sedition whereof we spake, which is, want and poverty in the estate; to which purpose serveth the opening and well-balancing of trade; the cherishing of manufactures; the banishing of idleness; the repressing of waste and excess by sumptuary laws; the improvement and husbanding of the soil; the regulating of prices of things bendible; the moderating of taxes and tributes; and the like.

An hon. MEMBER: And the tariff.

Mr. STEVENS: Someone says to amend the tariff, and it is quite possible that they might do that. But there are some very good suggestions there, and the point they demonstrate is that it is the duty of parliament within the next few days to address itself to the task of finding some remedy for the conditions which prevail.

I wish to quote briefly from Lord Bryce's work on Democracy, because it is well sometimes to keep in mind some of these old principles:

> The earlier steps towards democracy came not from any doctrine that the people have a right to rule, but from the feeling that an end must be put to lawless oppression by a privileged class.

That is well worth conning over at the present time. Someone asked, what about the price spreads commission report? I submit to the house that if it wants to find, as Lord Bacon says, the causes of seditious utterances, if it wishes to find the causes of such utterances in this country it will have to find them in the evidence given before the price spreads commission of things that have developed and grown on the body politic, conditions that have grown up in the industrial and economic structure of the country which, to say the least, are inequitable and unjust. And it is the presence of these conditions in the state that has caused many to be resentful. The author continues:

> No one is good enough to be trusted with unlimited power. Unless he be a saint—perhaps even if he be a saint—he is sure to abuse it.

The argument therefore is that it rests on parliament to administer the affairs of the country in the interests of all; and that is the reason I make this plea to-night—not that we should criticize the government for the difficult task it is now confronted with. Let us stand by the government. I noticed the other day that hon. gentlemen opposite applauded the Prime Minister when he described the difficulties and the manner in which the government was facing them. Hon. gentlemen did well.

Mr. POULIOT: I was not here.

Mr. STEVENS: No, my hon. friend was not here, but hon. gentlemen did well. But that does not discharge the duty of parliament; it is merely saying to the government that in so far as the discharge of its duty is concerned parliament is behind it. The other problem, however, the problem, namely, of removing the causes which have led up to the disturbances, is a responsibility still undischarged by parliament, and what I ask is that before this parliament prorogues we offer to the young men of this country who find it so difficult to get a job some hope for the future. Let me say to the Minister of Justice, who has left his place, that when he says, as he said this afternoon, that a camp has been opened for the marchers to go to and where they may obtain shelter and food, that is all very good. But would it not be infinitely better if we sent a messenger to these young men, offering them some hope for the future, some hope of getting employment and earning a living? If we did that we should quickly witness the dissipation of the seditious disturbances which have caused so much unrest and trouble and anxiety.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I very much appreciate the address made by the hon. member for East Kootenay (Mr. Stevens) and I am also pleased to have observed the excellent order which hon. members of his own party preserved as he delivered his speech, because it was in such decided contrast to the reception which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) had this afternoon. I hope that what the hon. member for East Kootenay did say struck a receptive chord in the hearts and minds of hon. members of his own party. There is one thing which he has done which hon. members ought to appreciate, and it is this. An attempt has been made to associate everything in connection with the camps and the young men on strike with the communist agitation in the dominion; everything connected with the camps is represented as part and parcel of that agitation. So far as the communists themselves are concerned, I do not wish to say very much about them to-night. Probably in the next couple of months there will be no other member of the house who will have the same opportunity of discussing them as I shall have in my own constituency of North Winnipeg, because I know of no member in this house whom the communists would prefer to fight and fight more strenuously than the members of the Labour group in the House of Commons. I do not wish however to deal to-night with that aspect of the question, but I do want to say a word or two with regard to the situation in Canada.

The hon. member who has taken his seat made a very moving plea for the twenty thousand young men unemployed at present and for whom work ought to be found. With that I am in hearty accord. But I believe also that while we should find work for the twenty thousand young Canadians now without employment, these are hundreds of thousands of older people out of work for whom work should be found, and it is just as imperative to find work for them as it is to find work for these younger people to whom the hon. gentleman referred. The problem of the twenty thousand young men is part of the whole problem of unemployment which the government must face, and you cannot dissociate that phase of it from the rest of the situation that prevails from the Atlantic to the Pacific. However, I wish to say a few words particularly with reference to the Regina situation.

It is indeed unfortunate that the young men from the camps came under the control of leaders who are part and parcel of the communist movement in Canada. There is no doubt there was bad leadership so far as the young men were concerned, but I cannot say that the government have shown good leadership in the way they have handled the situation, because they are to blame to a certain extent for the way in which they have managed it. In regard to Regina, and especially the situation that developed last night, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) this afternoon made a statement in which he gave his version, which we must accept as the official version of the government, of the unfortunate occurrences there last evening. The statement made by the minister does not seem to tally with the press dispatches from the scene of the trouble last night. It is said in the newspapers of this morning that the police, mounted and city, swooped down on a meeting otherwise peaceful—that there was no trouble until they took that attitude. If that was so, then the statement made by the Minister of Justice this afternoon was at complete variance with the public statements of the newspaper correspondents who happened to be present at the riots last night. Secondly, I should like to know why it was that the mounted police found it necessary last night, when going to a peaceful meeting, to wear steel helmets. I do not understand that aspect of the situation; for if there was going to be no trouble, if they were not out to disperse a peaceful assembly, I do not see why steel helmets were worn. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said this afternoon that the meeting was unlawful in its character. I would say that the proper way to have handled the situation last night, assuming that it was unlawful—and I am not sure whether it is unlawful to hold a public meeting in the market square in Regina—was to arrest those who were responsible for the calling of the meeting, but to allow the meeting to take place and to finish in a peaceful manner. The audience, consisting of two or three thousand men, women and children, had assembled believing that it would be a peaceful meeting. If the police were going to take action against those who were peacefully assembled there I think the least that might have been done was to give warning to these people that they were in an unlawful assembly, and they should have been allowed to disperse quietly and peacefully. Evidently, according to the newspaper dispatches, this was not done.

Then may I go a step further. I do not like the use of force if it can be avoided. After all in circumstances such as these force is no remedy. Force never was and never will be a remedy so far as young people like these are concerned. I read in to-night's papers that these young men in the exhibition grounds at Regina are surrounded by mounted police who are armed; they are surrounded by an armed force. I do not know why these young men should be made to feel the full effect of the force of law in this dominion. Both in my travels on the continent of Europe and in my early life in Great Britain I learned the difference between the continental and the British attitude towards law. In Great Britain you find respect for the law; on the continent you find fear of the law. I would far rather see the British idea of respect for the law prevail in this country than to instil into the minds of our younger generation a fear of the law which as they grow older will cause them to have a grudge against the state, which they should not have if they are given a proper opportunity in life.

What do we find? These young men are described by the hon. member for East Kootenay as young men who might be our own sons. Through no fault of their own but owing to economic conditions for which they have, of course, no responsibility, they are compelled to go into concentration camps. I know it has been said by hon. members opposite that they are not forced to go into these camps. But may I inform the house that to my own knowledge young men who were the recipients of civic relief were cut off such relief and told to go into these work camps so that they would be less burden to the municipalities. If that was not forcing them into the camps, I do not know what it was. With the hon. member who has just spoken, I think that this parliament ought not to adjourn until something is done to deal with this problem. After all, if there is one thing that this parliament was elected to do almost five years ago it was to grapple with the problem of unemployment; yet here we are further from a solution than when we met in September, 1930. In July, 1935, we are facing one of the most difficult situations that the parliament of Canada has ever faced. I know we may all have our share of responsibility either individually or collectively for the lack of action by this parliament. It may be difficult for me to say at this moment and in the present discussion what we should do. I do not know whether what the hon. member for East Kootenay has proposed is a solution; I doubt very much if it is. But so far as the young men in the camps are concerned, either in the east or in the west, I would like to see the government adopt a far more sympathetic attitude towards them than they have shown in the past few weeks; for after all these young men are the rising generation. Some of them have recently left school; some are from the universities, and, as the hon. member who has just spoken said they are a fine, clean-cut body of young men. I know several who have been compelled by economic necessity to go into these camps to eke out an existence. Giving these young men $40 or $50 or $60 a month for work in the camps as proposed by the hon. member for East Kootenay would be a much better method of dealing with them than the subsistence measures adopted by the government. But there are other methods that could be followed for dealing with the situation. Personally I would like to see these camps abolished. Second, I would like to see them taken from under the control of the Department of National Defence, and the military character of the administration entirely done away with. If these young men were given an opportunity they might become men that the country could be proud of, but given the conditions under which they are living to-day there is no telling what their future may be.

I do not know that there is much more that I can say at this time. I have asked the government to deal more sympathetically with these men; in fact we in this corner have taken that stand for quite a length of time. I believe that these camps ought to come under the Department of Labour. This afternoon we heard statements in connection with conditions in these camps, taken from the official records of the government, which do not altogether tally with the report of the royal commission that investigated camp conditions in British Columbia. May I quote from page 12 of the report of the Macdonald commission, the section entitled Forgotten Men. It says:

> A growing conviction seems to have entered the minds of most of the men that they are a forgotten group. The isolation of many of the camps renders it impossible for men to keep in touch personally with former employment or with new work opening up. It is true that the provincial labour bureau does seek to bring men in camps to the attention of employers, and that the department will furnish transportation to men going to bona fide positions, yet the employment of men from the relief camps is so rare that a fixed idea prevails among the men that they are deemed unsuitable for employment, and are shunned by those seeking workmen. We did not find evidence to substantiate this opinion, but are convinced that such a feeling exists in the minds of the men, and adds very greatly to their unrest and dissatisfaction.

And again, quoting a further section of the same report, at page 13:

> When one remembers that during the long winter months most of the camps are almost completely isolated, and that weather conditions leave very many days with no possibility of work, it is easy to realize the large part that better recreation arrangements play in the contentment of the men. Some of the camps have radios—many have not. Some of these have been donated, but others have been bought by contributions from the men and canteen profits. Tubes and batteries wear out, and there are no funds to replace them. The installation and maintenance of a radio in each camp would be a worthy attainment. Lectures or entertainments, except in a very limited way, were not provided.

This goes to prove that everything is not quite as rosy in these camps as some hon. members who have spoken have attempted to make out. What I wish to impress upon the government is if only these young men who to-day find themselves the victims of economic conditions over which they have no control were given a decent opportunity they would grow up to be good and useful citizens. Under the present circumstances there is no saying what may happen to them. They find themselves the unwilling victims of a certain class of agitator for whom no hon. member of this house, I think, has very much use. Yet there is no more fertile field for the dissemination of communist propaganda than in those camps in which the outlook of the men for the future is so dark and hopeless. If the government want to stamp out that kind of propaganda let them do as the hon. member for East Kootenay suggests; let them go to the root of the trouble, deal with causes and not so much with effects. If they do that, hon. members in all parts of this house will give support to any suggestion which the government have to make for dealing with this extremely difficult and complicated situation. Some few years ago we in this corner of the house suggested that the men who find themselves in these camps might be established in self-contained, self-sustaining units throughout this country. We believe that could be done. It has been attempted in some parts of the world with a certain amount of success, and there is no reason why the same thing should not be done right here in Canada.

In conclusion may I say that I do hope our government, instead of using force towards these young men, will show a more conciliatory spirit and do something which will allow them to become the type of Canadian citizen of which future generations may be proud.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (East Toronto): Mr. Speaker, the riots and unrest in the west are bringing very vividly to this house and to the country the greatest problem Canada has to face, namely, that of unemployment. I agree with much of what was said by the hon. member for East Kootenay (Mr. Stevens) as to the immediate necessity for the adoption of a vast reconstruction, housing, building, land settlement and reforestation policy for the people of this country; the quicker it is done, the better.

What are the insurance companies doing about the unrest and unemployment that exists throughout the country? You must look at the causes and effects of the riots that have occurred in the west. There is unrest caused by unemployment all through the country. The universities have closed; the high schools are closing, and this is aggravating the unemployment situation in the industrial centres. In my opinion, the banks and insurance companies should do something in our support On the other side of the line the New York Life Insurance Company at Gravesend Beach, Brooklyn, has lent $25,000,000 for the construction of houses at cut rates in order to get people off the dole and back at work, and they have lent that money for reconstruction without municipal, state or federal aid, and have come to the support of the government. Why not here? The insurance companies of Canada, which are hoarding a great deal of money, should do something for housing and reconstruction in this country. In addition, as I said the other day, the high interest rates charged by the mortgage companies, the high bank rates, and the high rates on insurance loans, chattel mortgages and liens, together with the shark loan companies, all are helping bring along the unrest and unemployment that we have to-day, and it is the duty of parliament to do something. Only last Saturday I was approached by a number of unemployed in the industrial city from which I come. Some of them wanted to march to Ottawa. They said, "We have had two hundred and forty-five marchers in Ottawa,"—meaning the members of this house—"you among them, since January 17, and what have you been doing?" I could not answer that argument.

The housing policy that has been adopted is not my proposition. My proposal was placed before the house three days after parliament met on January 24; it included a gigantic reconstruction, housing, building, land settlement and reforestation policy, adapted to Canada's financial circumstances, to get people off the dole. I agree with what has been said by the hon. member for East Kootenay with regard to a reforestation policy. In Italy to-day they are getting people off the dole and back at work by means of a vast building and reconstruction policy. They are building municipal, state and federal institutions for the future; they are carrying on reforestation; they are constructing schools, hospitals, houses both city and rural, trunk sewers, breakwaters, harbour improvements, reforestation projects, and many other gigantic public works. They are building for the next fifty years, and that country is recovering very rapidly. During the past week I have received one hundred and four letters and several telegrams from the industrial district from which I come complaining about parliament having sat here since January 17 without doing anything to reduce interest and mortgage rates. I tell you the day of high money is gone. I have here a letter from a returned soldier with five children, living in northwest Toronto, who pays 7½ per cent on a first mortgage and 12½ per cent on a second mortgage, and he is working only part time. In connection with the housing policy it seems to me that parliament is more concerned with the mortgage companies than with the people of this country. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, parliament should do something. They are doing something in England; in the past twenty years they have voted some £400,000,000 to aid in housing, and they have had unemployment insurance since 1907. That is why they are recovering more rapidly than we are, though Canada has a similar problem. If Canada could only get half a million men off the dole and back to work by the end of the year most of our difficulties would be overcome. That could be done by a proper policy, such as I suggested on January 24. Under the resolution I introduced at that time it was not proposed to spend money like water. The policy would have to be adapted to our circumstances, but under it we would have reconstruction in this country from Vancouver to Halifax, in all the larger centres of population, in order to get the people off the dole and back to work.

Then what about protection? As a Conservative party we should be consistent protectionists; we should have protection for all the people, not for just some of the people. We have boards in connection with agriculture and farm loan boards and in connection with fisheries, but what about the industrial workers in cities and towns who constitute about forty-six per cent of our population? Many of these strikers were formerly industrial workers; we should have protection for them. We are providing long term twenty-five per cent loans to fishermen on their lands, boats, nets and gear. We are providing that the Canadian farm loan board may pay for their taxes, their insurance and everything else, and we have the same principles in connection with agriculture. Then in the name of all common sense if we are protectionists let us have protection for all; let us have protection as a principle, not as a privilege. Let us have protection for the masses, the industrial workers of this country, not simply protection for the high interest rates charged by the mortgage companies. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that some of these mortgage companies' officers and lawyers have more influence to-day down here than half the members who sit on this side of the house. If this is all the timber we have for a housing policy in this country then I say the sooner we have a reforestation policy the better.

In my opinion communism will have no chance in this country if only the two old parties will do something, but unless the two great parties open their ranks to new men, and their minds to new ideas, and unless they follow new ideals, we will be letting in the socialists five or six years from now. This is the time to do something. We have been sitting here since January 17. The greatest problem in the country to-day is unemployment and distributism, and the sooner we realize it the better. There is unrest through unemployment in the city from which I come, as well as in East York and West York. People cannot pay the interest on their second mortgages. Some of these shark loan companies are charging 35 and 40 per cent, and unpaid interest is added on, as the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) indicated in connection with another bill last year. I have the utmost sympathy for these people, but I have no sympathy for those who are charging these high interest rates and causing this unrest throughout the country and preventing building and housing development. I sympathize with these young men who are on the road; I believe a great many of them come from good homes. I know some of them left home because they did not like to hang around and sponge on their fathers any longer. I was talking to some soldiers about this question only last Saturday. They have had some of their children of high school age around home for some time; now some of these children are out on the road looking for work, no one knows where. These boys of high school age are from some of the finest homes in the country, but they can get no work. They go out on the road; then they get into trouble and land in the law courts, and we are filling the penal institutions of this country with the flower of the land while parliament meets and does practically nothing at all to aid or help solve the problem of unemployment and youth and the cause and effect of it all. I say we should adopt the policy along the lines I proposed in this chamber on January 24. A committee was appointed, but with its report I cannot agree. If we are to have a housing scheme, let us have one; but do not let us have all scheme and no housing. Let us do all that is humanly possible to help get people off the dole and remunerative employment. A reconstruction policy will help.

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no hon. member who was not alarmed when he read the account of the riots in Regina last night. For some time many people have been asking themselves what right the federal government had to stop Canadian citizens riding in automobiles or trucks or walking along the highway. What right has a government to stop any group of Canadians from coming to Ottawa? In 1932, the year of the imperial conference, four thousand farmers came to Ottawa. It is true that no member of the government met them. That was an act of discourtesy which it is hard for the government to explain. But the fact remains that no attempt was made to stop their coming to this city.

An hon. MEMBER: Law abiding citizens.

Miss MACPHAIL: Someone says they were law abiding citizens. Certainly, but no proof has been offered that the twenty thousand men in the camps are not law abiding citizens. Then, during the war five thousand farmers came to Ottawa, and I am not so sure that they were particularly law abiding. I do not think angrier farmers ever went anywhere than those five thousand farmers who came to Ottawa during the war, nor indeed the four thousand who came in 1932, after the very courteous invitation to any hon. member of the government to address them had been refused. They were angry enough to do anything. If they did not riot it was simply because leadership did not appear at the moment directing their actions in that particular line. Certainly their lack of action was not through their lack of disgust with the government.

Without even pretending to know anything about constitutional law, a fact which probably places me in a position different from that occupied by some other hon. members, I question very much whether the federal government has the right to go to the city of Regina, take the attitude it has taken and act as it acted last night. I think we need not depend altogether on press reports, because some private messages have come through from middle class, highly educated people corroborating the stories carried in the press. The indications are that the meeting was being conducted in an orderly way, and that it was the police who broke it up. They were the instigators of rioting and disorder.

Mr. LOUCKS: It was the city police who did that.

Miss MACPHAIL: I would not be so sure about that. I think the point raised by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) is an astute one. He points out that the police came out wearing steel helmets; people who come wearing steel helmets expect trouble. In all probability they knew what their part was to be, and expected that anything to be found would be thrown at them.

I believe the leaders who made their representations here in Ottawa are and were at that time communists; there is no doubt about it. But I believe it is also clear that the bulk of the men in camps are not communists, and I believe each one of us sitting in the House of Commons, regardless of politics, when he read of the interview between the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the eight delegates, felt that the right hon.

gentleman had been particularly unfortunate in his treatment of them. I would say he is rather unfortunate in his treatment of most delegations. His treatment of the farmers in 1932 is something not easily forgotten. On this occasion he threw in the face of the man Evans the fact that he was a ticket-of-leave man, while Evans, communist that he is, had until that moment remained courteous. I am not so sure that anyone could justify that method of procedure, and the fact that he drew attention to the suits they were wearing and fountain pens. Have we ever asked ourselves why we can buy fairly good clothes and fountain pens? That did not seem to me to be a proper way to meet the delegates who came to Ottawa representing a very large body of men. I think each of us was struck by the orderly conduct of the men from the time they left Vancouver until the eight delegates left to come to Ottawa—and I am not condoning their conduct while in the presence of the Prime Minister. One could not do so any more than one could condone his conduct.

From the point of view of the future of Canada in my opinion it is much healthier to find that twenty thousand young men are restless to the point of revolt, after having been kept in camps from one to three years, than it would be if they were content. Why should we expect young, virile people, whether they be men or women, to be content with a life which at best gives food, provides work which may not be interesting and for which there is no pay, and houses them in camps where all natural living and interests are denied? It is not reasonable to expect that they would be content with such a life, nor would it be healthy for Canada if they were. What outlet is there for the ambition, imaginations and energies of these approximately twenty thousand young Canadians? What does the future offer them? What hope have they of founding a home and making the natural contacts with members of their own or opposite sexes, if they are to be kept in camps from year to year?

I think the exhibition offered by members on the government benches—not by all, it is true, but by many of them—when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was speaking was one which should not have been made in the chamber of any governing body in at least an English speaking country. One member distinctly called out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre: "What are you grouching about? You have enough to eat." If that is not a low plane upon which to consider this whole matter, then I have never heard of one. Surely we who have enough to eat, who have reasonably good clothes to wear and some security—at any rate until about September—should be willing to consider the well being of these young men who have not that which they as much as we deserve, but which we have and they have not.

Do hon. members in this chamber think they are better than these men? I think not. I do not think I am any better. I believe they have the same right as we have to Canadian life and the best that Canada can offer. If we are going to continue indefinitely keeping 1,350,000 people on relief and twenty thousand of them in relief camps we had better take turns. If we have not brains enough to distribute the plenty that exists, then I say that at any rate we should be sporty enough to take our turn at living the sterile life which these twenty thousand are called upon to live.

I think, and I have thought it a good while, that we could have a very extensive program of public works of one kind or another, and that if we were willing to think of money as an expression of wealth we could finance it. I do not know how long it will take us to get round to that, but surely some time we will get to it. Not because I am not a member of the government but because I am a Canadian, I resented the attitude shown this afternoon by government members. I resented, further, the exclamation hurled at the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I appreciate the speeches made by the hon. members for East Kootenay (Mr. Stevens) and East Toronto (Mr. Church). The observations of these hon. members indicate that even in the government party there are people who realize the true facts and the possibility of very great trouble unless we come to our senses.

It is altogether too simple to say that this was a communist uprising. The government have played that little trick too often. Every time they get into a jam one of them, and particularly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), begins to shout about the communists. But it is like the old story about crying "wolf, wolf!" after a time it becomes outworn and does not get the expected result. I felt sure when I heard that the explanation was to be given this afternoon by the Minister of Justice that the government were certainly in a tight corner because there is no one on the government benches who can sound so plausible as the Minister of Justice, and none who can so effectively raise the bogy of communism, with the possible exception of the Prime Minister. Let us admit that Evans is a communist; let us admit that Collins who came here is a communist; I think there is no doubt of it.

An hon. MEMBER: Then why are they leaders?

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not know. They are not my leaders; I did not choose them. I suppose they are leaders because no one on the government side or any members of the government offered any leadership to these twenty thousand young men, and they were desperate and were looking for leadership. Let us admit, I say, that these two young men are communists, but at the same time let us be reasonable and sensible and admit that among these twenty thousand men who are in camps throughout Canada there are just as fine young men as are to be found anywhere; and if the present economic condition continues as it is, in another two or three years there will be turned out of our public schools, business colleges, high schools and universities another vast army that will have to go into these unemployment camps, or go on relief I was going to say, but it seems that it will be into the unemployment camps. So we might very seriously consider the matter, and no longer say over and over again the word communist, communist, communist, thinking we are forever going to frighten thinking people in Canada by such methods. I say that as creators of communism the Prime Minister takes the cake. I think he has done more to create communists in Canada than any other ten men, and that would include Evans and Buck and Collins or whoever they were. The one speech he made the other day in meeting these men and the speech he made to-day will before to-morrow morning have created communists out of people who before have thought sympathetically with communists.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member who has just taken her seat (Miss Macphail). It would seem that one of the purposes of her speech was to make it appear that the guilty parties in this riot at Regina were the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Miss MACPHAIL: I did not mention them at all.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): You mentioned steel helmets, if I remember aright. I do not think the hon. member could have read her newspaper very closely to-day or she would have a different opinion from that. I hold in my hand a copy of the Ottawa Evening Journal of July 2—

Miss MACPHAIL: I read the Citizen.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): All I can say in reply to that is that the hon. member is misguided. On page 13 in the first column I read this:

> First warning of the raid on the meeting called by the strike leaders to explain their negotiations with authorities and ask for funds for food was a quick rally of police from the vicinity of the police station.

That is the city police station:

> The station abuts on the market square. Carrying batons, city police moved into the crowd and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police followed. A few minutes later additional Royal Canadian Mounted Police were brought to the scene in trucks, and about fifty came on horses.

So the city police were the first to move into this crowd, not the mounted police at all.

Miss MACPHAIL: Did they not have steel helmets?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I think it is just possible that in discussing this afternoon this tragedy at Regina some hon. members allowed themselves to be carried away. Some of the speeches certainly contained more heat than light. Some of them went so far as to attempt to make political capital out of what happened. So far as this party is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think we are only doing our duty as we see it. That is what we were sent down here for, to maintain British institutions and to preserve this empire which I think we all love and revere, and so far as possible to better the conditions of our people. I think the people of this country, those whose minds and eyes are not blinded with prejudice, will admit that we have done a pretty fair job. It is true that we have not been able to keep all our political promises which were made in the heat of the election campaign.

An hon. MEMBER: That is true.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): But that is not confined to the Conservative party. Let the Liberals go back and read their 1919 promises and they will see that they did not keep all of their promises either. People who live in glass houses should not throw stones.

I think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is to be congratulated rather than condemned for the stand that he has taken on this question. Communism is running riot in this country. It has even gone so far, I think I am not unfair in saying, that it has almost gained control of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation.

Mr. SPENCER: Explain.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I can do that too. I will explain it as I know it. I had in my constituency last year one of the most serious industrial strikes that had occurred in this country for years. At Flin-Flon, Manitoba, fifteen hundred miners were called out by communists pure and simple. Communists like Ross, Mabel Marlowe, and Coleman, with a long criminal record, all out and out communists, were out there organizing that strike. Who was the leader? Alec Stewart of Flin-Flon. If he is not a communist he runs in very dangerous company. He was certainly running with these communists. What happened? Only a couple of short weeks ago Alec Stewart, the leader of the Flin-Flon strike, was nominated as the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation candidate in my riding. If communists are not getting control of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation I miss my guess, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) had better look to his laurels. I believe he realizes that at the present moment.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party was elected to maintain our institutions, to endeavour to improve the conditions of our people, and to preserve our empire, but we have a further duty. As a matter of fact we have two duties to perform: (a) to honourably and courageously live up to our ideals and traditions, and (b) to fearlessly and earnestly tear the mask of moderation from the bolshevik features of some of these socialists organizations that are running around this country, and I am not excepting the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation when I say that, not as I know them in my constituency at any rate. As far as the Conservative party is concerned we intend to do our duty. At least I hope we do, and I certainly will press for it myself as long as I am in this party. Our party may be defeated at the polls, we may go down to defeat, but it will be with our flag flying, defeated but not dishonoured.

I have spoken on former occasions against these camps. I have expressed dissatisfaction with them. I remember that when the minimum wage act was introduced in this house I went so far as to say that I hoped the first place the government would apply it would be in these relief camps. I reiterate that statement. I am not in favour of these camps. I go still further. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Stirling) made the statement here to-night that it cost $39 a month to maintain the men in these camps. If that is so, I say there is something rotten in the state of Denmark; it is costing too much for administration. I am not saying there is anything dishonest about it, but it is costing too much for the value received. It would be far better for this country to give these men in the camps this $39 per month and take a day's work from them.

I wish in conclusion to congratulate the Prime Minister on the stand he has taken on this whole matter. We cannot let mob rule run riot in this country. I am one who went overseas in order that the peace, happiness and security of this country should be preserved. I am one returned soldier who will again take up a rifle to defend my home in my own country.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, as I am not interested in the fate of parties I shall not attempt to follow the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Stitt, Nelson). I rise this evening because of the very fine sentiments expressed by the hon. member for East Kootenay (Mr. Stevens). I want to say that I appreciate the attitude which he showed in his remarks so far as the young men of Canada are concerned. I was quite struck with the quotation he made from the letter of the then acting Prime Minister (Sir George Perley), that he thought this country could not support a program of work and wages for the men in the relief camps and all other people on relief. I disagree heartily with that statement. This country can afford a program of work and wages. During the war we raised an army of 500,000 men; we fed and clothed them and furnished them with tons of supplies including guns and munitions. We kept that up for over four years and we could have equally well, financed a program of work and wages during the last four years. We could have put all the men in Canada on relief to work and paid wages. That has been our duty for the last five years and we have neglected our duty.

There is plenty of work to be done, and I do not think any hon. member can dispute that statement. The hon. member for East Kootenay has indicated what work can be done, as has the hon. member for Toronto East (Mr. Church). During the last four years I do not think I have missed an opportunity during the debates on unemployment relief bills of pointing out that this country should give work and wages to its people. The only thing that stands in the way is an obsolete financial system. We have the materials, we have the men, and we need the work done, but we are suffering from an obsolete financial system which fails to reflect the actual realities of physical production. These young men who have got into trouble in Regina are the victims of this financial system and their very lives are being sacrificed to the system. As a matter of fact I think it is quite proper to describe the system as a golden crocodile. For my part I want to protest again against the policies of false economy which have been followed. We have been saying that we cannot afford to give work to these people. Communism thrives on a feeling of injustice and the way for the government to relieve itself of its fear of communism is to give the people a chance to work. If they will not work, let them go, but I know they will work if given a chance.

I do not want to let this opportunity pass without saying that I believe that Canada can well afford to give to every one of these young men work with decent wages, and if we do not do it we are failing in our duty. So far as I am concerned, I cannot accept responsibility because at every session of this parliament I have urged the government to do that very thing. I am deadly in earnest about this thing; I know it can be done. It is our allegiance to an obsolete financial system which stands in the way, and for my part I refuse to accept responsibility.

Motion (Mr. Rhodes) agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Salaries—departmental staff—further amount required, $30,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This to to provide a further amount required for departmental staff. It is to provide for more nurses for departmental hospitals, for orderlies and hospital utility men, for investigators and stenographers. Included in this item is an amount of $9,000 to provide for the investigators recommended in the Hyndman report.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Which portion of the Hyndman report refers to that matter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The sixteenth recommendation in connection with the present staff of the department.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment relief — further amount required, $500,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How much of this amount is to be used for the ordinary purposes of the department and how much to implement the recommendations of the Hyndman commission?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Practically the whole amount is to be used to implement the Hyndman report. Possibly a certain amount would have been provided for had that report not been issued, but practically the whole of this amount is to implement the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister will notice that practically all of page 15 and the first portion of page 16 of the report deals with the recommendation for the establishment of a commission. Is it the intention of the government to appoint this voluntary commission?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is the intention of the government to appoint a commission to be known as the veterans' assistance commission, but the commission will not be named immediately. It is intended to leave this until the autumn when it is expected that the men to be appointed will be freer to serve.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister will notice that on page 16 of the report there are some 16 recommendations. The minister on the previous item referred to recommendation No. 16, but I should like to know if he can allocate this amount to the various recommendations?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Paragraph 5 on page 16 deals with the basic rate. It is the intention to increase the basic rate for a single man from $15 to $18.75. This rate will be increased according to the size of family up to the point where in the case of a man with a wife and six children the rate will be increased from $42.50 to $51. It is expected that to effect that the sum of $180,000 will be required.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does that mean that the recommendations are being more or less carried out?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How will the remainder of the $500,000 be expended?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In connection with paragraph 6, page 16, it is expected to implement (b). If a member of the veteran's family is employed only the earnings of such member in excess of $40 shall be considered as income. It is not a substantial amount involved. Under (c), cash earnings up to $10 shall not be considered income. That is not new. Under (d), with respect to the months of December and January, cash earnings that also will be implemented. Altogether it is not a large sum, only $7,500.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is for (b), (c) and (d).

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes. Then on page 17, paragraph (8), with regard to the year in which dependent children come off pension, it is the intention that the age limit of dependent children shall be extended beyond that set forth in the Pension Act when deemed necessary. That is not taken in absolutely every case, but the department will have a good deal of leeway in dealing with it and it is expected it will require about $35,000. On page 17, paragraph (9), it is proposed to take all reasonable steps to obviate the possibility of unemployed pensioners who are home owners losing their homes through non-payment of mortgage interest or taxes where the owner has a reasonable equity in the property. It is proposed to allow in lieu of rental an amount to cover the current mortgage interest and taxes, and it is estimated that the amount will be about $20,000. Under paragraph (11) on page 17, with regard to clothing, it is intended to provide clothing for issue at the expense of the department to meet the increasing demand. During the first two or three years of this government the need for clothing had not become so acute; everyone had enough. It has been gradually increasing, however, so that more and more is necessary. We have been issuing a considerable amount and it will increase, and it is expected that this will take about $210,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): More or less following the recommendations of the paragraph?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes. Under paragraph (12), which is part of the same thing, clothing, provision is also made. Altogether the amount will be $452,500—that is, the items I have mentioned—leaving what might be called a contingency amount of $47,500 which will be used to implement any particular cases in addition to any of the amounts I have indicated.

Item agreed to.

War veterans' allowances—further amount required, $300,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How much of this amount is to be used in the ordinary work of the committee under the existing legislation, and how much will be used in connection with the work that will be necessary if the minister accepts the recommendations of the Hyndman commission?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The commission's recommendation in that regard will be found on page 18, paragraph 13:

> That the war veterans' allowance committee be requested to arrange for periodical visitation of various centres throughout Canada, by one or more members of the committee, in order personally to interview applicants for war veterans' allowance, who are under sixty years of age and who cannot be classified as permanently unemployable from a medical standpoint, but appear to be so from an industrial standpoint, in order to determine whether or not such applicants shall be awarded war veterans' allowance.

It will be noted that the Hyndman commission does not recommend legislation to change the age, but I have discussed this matter very thoroughly with Mr. Woods, chairman of the war veterans' allowance committee, and he is perfectly prepared, as is the department, to have this implemented in full as far as it goes, and the committee are prepared to accept that suggestion and move around the country more. They realize that it is possible that if they come in closer contact there may be some extra cases that will come under the act. It is impossible to segregate the items. They have gone into the matter pretty carefully and it is estimated that this amount of $300,000 will be used to take care of cases that automatically come in from the class of over sixty, and it will afford a rather more liberal interpretation in connection with the under sixty.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the committee have considerable discretion in regard to those who are industrially unemployable?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes; they practically have control under the act and there has never been any interference with them. They have a free hand.

Mr. GRAY: I think we should commend the minister, first, on the appointment of the Hyndman commission, which has done excellent work and has brought down a splendid report, and secondly, because he has implemented the report as far as he has been able to do so at the present session.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Natural Products Marketing Act—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Mr. POULIOT: This is a very large item. At Maisonneuve during the last campaign, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) spoke about his future plans, a lady asked him how he would pay for it all, and he replied, by taxation. That is how we shall have to pay for the operations of the marketing act. In the evening Journal of January 27, 1933, there appeared this large headline:

Tax Burden of Country Near Limit, Says Bennett

And in the Montreal Gazette of Friday, February 9, 1934, another headline:

Credit of Canada Has Reached Limit, Premier Declares

There is another word which was said by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) in April, 1933, according to an article published by Mr. Olivar Asselin in Le Canada on April 24, 1933. The minister is quoted as having declared to a delegation of caterers: "The country itself is bankrupt." I wonder if a bankrupt country can spare a million dollars for a marketing act which is no good. But, sir, there is more—I will ask the hon. gentlemen to be so kind as to listen to what is going on, because if what I say does not interest them it may instruct them. The following information was given to the house by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Matthews) on April 3 of this year as reported on page 2375 of Hansard, and by the Minister of Finance on April 10 as reported on page 2595.

The total revenue of the Department of National Revenue for the twelve months ended September 1, 1930, the last year of the Mackenzie King government, was $369,194,448. For the succeeding years it showed decreases according to the figures below:

Calendar year
1931	$278,842,453
1932	253,453,619
1933	262,778,442
1934	303,471,091

There is a decrease each year in the gross revenue of the country since this government came into power as compared with the last year of the Mackenzie King government.

Now, sir, there are three classes of revenue collected by the Department of National Revenue, that from customs, that from excise tax and that from income tax. The respective proceeds since 1930 are shown by the following figures:

	Customs revenue	Decrease	Excise and income tax
Year ended Sept. 1, 1930	$176,380,895	$	$192,813,552
Calendar year 1931	120,192,964	56,187,930	158,649,488
Calendar year 1932	86,260,527	90,120,367	187,193,091
Calendar year 1934	82,882,922	93,487,972	220,588,168

It means, sir, that when the revenue from customs decreases owing to the shrinkage in external trade there is an increase of taxation by means of the excise tax and the income tax. The private individual under the worst conditions has to suffer the burden of taxation on account of the decrease of trade owing to high tariff policies. I shall deal further with that later on. But now let me give you a summary of the taxation imposed by this government when the Prime Minister tried to implement the promises he made during the last campaign. Let us take first the year 1931. Sessional paper No. 277F, reference No. 214, April 1, 1935, shows:

1. Sales tax increase from 1 per cent to 4 per cent.

Answer by Department of National Revenue: "Unable to state increase on sales tax collections."

2. Postage, one cent more on all letters.

Answer by Post Office Department: "Figures as to the revenue derived from the increase of 1 cent on letter postage are not available as letter postage is not segregated from other postal revenue in the department's accounting records."

3. Half cent increase per pound postage on newspapers and periodicals.

Until February 28, 1935, increase in revenue: $952,251.

4. Two cent tax stamp on all cheques irrespective of the amount.

Answer by the Department of National Revenue: "Information not available, as tax on sale of stamps for all purposes kept in one account, and the use of postage stamps is permitted for the same purpose."

5. Two per cent increase of income tax on corporations.

Answer by Department of National Revenue: "Information not available."

6. Special excise tax of one per cent imposed on all goods imported into Canada.

Answer by Department of National Revenue: "June 2, 1931, to March 31, 1932: $4,982,216.83. Unable to give up to date fiures as rate changed—April 7, 1932."

7. One per cent tax on the net premiums received by insurance companies in Canada.

Answer by Department of Insurance: $2,273,034.86, including a small amount for a 2 per cent tax paid by certain mutual companies and exchanges, to February 28, 1935, inclusive.

8. Fifteen per cent tax on Canadian property owners who have insured their property with British or foreign companies which are not licensed in Canada.

Answer by Department of Insurance: "None, as this tax was never imposed."

9. Increased duties on a number of agricultural and fruit products including live hogs, fresh meats, bacon and hams, shell eggs, cheese, hops, hay, seeds, canned fruits, vegetables, and oranges.

Detail of revenue given by Department of National Revenue.

10. Increased duties on automobiles priced at more than $1,200.

Fiscal year 1932..	$354,807
Fiscal year 1933..	77,850
Fiscal year 1934..	55,108
April 1, 1934, to Feb. 28, 1935..	49,361

11. Increases on certain manufactured steel products.

Answer by Department of National Revenue: "It is not possible to answer this question in its present form. Amount of duty collected under any particular item can be given, but not returns due to tariff changes."

12. Specific duty of 15 per cent per pound on magazines and periodicals.

Answer given by Department of National Revenue.

13. Increased duty on wood products, including furniture, veneers, golf clubs, tennis racquets, frames and baseball bats.

Answer given by Department of National Revenue.

14. Increases on linen and pure silk fabrics, leather, watches and clocks, tea and other goods.

Answer given by Department of National Revenue. The tax on tea has averaged $1,500,000 per fiscal year.

15. Imposition of excise duties upon the products of a manufacturer who used the customs tariff rates to increase prices to the consumer.

"This question is not clearly understood, but if it refers to section 17 of the customs tariff, its provisions have not been invoked." (Answer by Department of National Revenue).

16. For the forfeiture of goods imported from a country not a signatory to the Treaty of Versailles.

Answer by the Department of National Revenue: "Nil."

Sir, there were sixteen items for which taxation was provided in the 1931 budget speech in order to make both ends meet on account of the decrease in customs revenue resulting from the reduction in external trade following the high tariff legislation. The year 1932 was not any brighter; that was the year of the Ottawa agreements. Here are the tax increases passed during the session of 1932, with the revenue derived therefrom; I read from sessional paper No. 277, reference No. 216, of March 25, 1935.

1. Sales tax increase from 4 per cent to 6 per cent. Answer by Department of National Revenue: "Unable to state increase in sales tax."

2. Increase by 2 per cent of excise tax on all goods imported into Canada. Answer by Department of National Revenue: "Special 3 per cent excise tax collection from April 1, 1932, to February 28, 1935—$41,530,871.47."

[Mr. Pouliot.]

3. Reduction of personal income tax exemption for those with dependents, from $3,000 to $2,400, and those without dependents, from $1,500 to $1,200.

4. Discontinuation of 20 per cent reduction until then allowed from tax payable under established schedule of rates.

5. Five per cent surcharge on the amount of tax payable, imposed on all taxpayers, personal and corporate, with net incomes in excess of $5,000.

6. Increase of corporation rate to 11 per cent. Answer by Department of National Revenue: 3, 4, 5 and 6: "Information not available inasmuch as while the tax changes and exemptions took place it was not possible to record statistically how much extra revenue was obtained by these changes, for the simple reason that the extra revenue in greater or lesser amounts was also affected by general business conditions as to profits and losses, likewise increases and decreases in salaries, professional incomes, etc."

That was the answer of the Department of National Revenue in the official return tabled in this house. Now I quote from sessional paper No. 277G, reference No. 217, April 1, 1935:

7. Tax of one per cent on premiums received by insurance companies. Answer by Department of Insurance: "$2,273,034.86 including a small amount for a 2 per cent tax paid by certain mutual companies and exchanges, to February 28, 1935, inclusive."

8. Tax of 15 per cent on gross premiums. Answer by Department of Insurance: "None, as there was no 15 per cent tax provided for under the Special War Revenue Act, 1932."

9. Tax increase from 2 cents to 3 cents on cheques, money orders, and on promissory notes, bills of exchange, etc., on amounts up to $100 and 6 cents over $100. Answer by Department of National Revenue: "Information not available, as tax on sale of stamps for all purposes kept in one account, and the use of postage stamps is permitted for the same purpose."

Answer by the Post Office Department for money orders: $906,405.33. "Separate figures are not available for the extra revenue derived as a result of the increase from two to three cents."

10. Five per cent tax placed on telegrams, cables and radio messages and long distance telephone calls. Answer by Department of National Revenue: "From May 2, 1932, to February 28, 1935, $2,737,810.83."

11. Ten per cent tax on railway sleeping car berths, with a minimum of 25 cents and 10 cents on chair car tickets. Answer by Department of National Revenue: "From May 2, 1932, to February 28, 1935, $1,129,017.55."

These, sir, are the figures for 1931 and 1932. The most unpopular tax imposed on this country by this government was the tax on sugar.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order. The item before the committee is a vote of $1,000,000, further amount required for the Natural Products Marketing Act.

Mr. POULIOT: But can you say, sir, that this will not be paid out of the tax imposed on sugar, and all the other taxation that has been imposed by this government? I do not see how you can deny any member the right to give the history of taxation since this government has been in power, on any item in the estimates. If the minister tells me that he will not receive a cent—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Just a moment; in my judgment the subject matter of the hon. gentleman's remarks is not related in any way to this item.

Mr. POULIOT: May I explain?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I have no objection to an explanation.

Mr. POULIOT: Sir, each member here takes his duties seriously and each of us is the guardian of the public exchequer. We must tell the people where the money comes from, and when I say that I only repeat what was said by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition and later from his place in this house as Prime Minister. If the Minister of Agriculture will give his word that he will not receive one cent from the Department of National Revenue to make up that million dollars, I will speak on another item. But the minister cannot give that assurance; he knows the money will come from the Department of National Revenue. That department is rightly named, because it supplies the money for most of the other departments of the government. I have a right to tell this committee where the money comes from when an expenditure is made, the more so, sir, because of the statements made by the Prime Minister to the effect that Canada had reached the limit of her credit and the further statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) quoted in Le Canada of Montreal, to the effect that two years ago Canada was bankrupt. Therefore, it is my right and privilege to tell the people of this country where the money comes from that is spent so carelessly by this government. As a man of learning and high attainments at the bar of your province, sir, you cannot deny this right to any of your colleagues in this chamber.

I have given the figures for 1931 and 1932. Now let us come to 1933, one year after the Ottawa agreements were concluded; let us see the burden of taxation imposed on the people of this country because of the decrease in trade which resulted from the illogical, inconsequential, unwarranted and uncalled for changes made in the tariff by this government. What was the revenue derived from the sugar tax, which was imposed in spite of many protests that came from all over the country? From March 22, 1933, to June 30, 1934, the receipts were $17,149,159.85, and from July 1, 1934, to February 28, 1935, they were $7,517,851.39. There was a special excise tax of ten per cent imposed on cosmetics and toilet preparations which, from March 22, 1933, to February 28, 1934, brought in $1,561,926.72. The next is a special excise tax of five per cent on automobile tires and tubes, yielding $1,593,871.20 for the same period. Then we come to cigarette papers and tubes in connection with which there is a special excise tax of two cents per one hundred leaves of cigarette papers and five cents per fifty tubes of cigarette tubes, yielding $1,558,526.55. The next is a special excise tax of twenty-five cents per gallon of unfermented wort, yielding $303,346.15. Then there is a note attached to the return indicating that the tax was repealed on malt products and unfermented wort as from July 1, 1934. Then, we have indicated a special excise tax of fifty cents per pound on malt syrup or powder, extract of malt or other malt products for the brewing of beer, yielding $27,161.02. In connection with that item the same observation applies as in connection with the preceding one. These two returns to which I have been referring are sessional papers Nos. 277A and 277B, references 218 and 219 of March 25, 1935.

But that is not all. There were more taxes imposed upon the Canadian people. An order for return of March 20, 1935, contains the following:

> What were, from 1933 to date, the total returns of each of the following changes of the 1933 budget to taxation:—
> 1. (a) Increase to 12½ per cent on incomes of corporations; (b) removal of $2,000 exemption; (c) 13½ per cent tax on corporations filing consolidated returns;
> 2. Reduction of personal income tax exemption; (a) from $2,400 to $2,000; (b) from $1,200 to $1,000 and (c) in the case of dependent children, from $500 to $400;
> 3. The new schedule of rates of taxation on personal incomes, commencing at three per cent on the first $1,000 of taxable income?

Here are the answers given by the department to questions 1, 2 and 3:

> Information not available inasmuch as while the tax changes and exemptions took place it was not possible to record statistically how much extra revenue was obtained by these changes, for the simple reason that the extra revenue in greater or lesser amounts was also affected by general business conditions as to profits and losses, likewise increases and decreases in salaries, professional incomes, etc.

But, sir, that is not all; there is more. I find another sessional paper before me containing this question:

What were from 1933 to date the total returns of each of the following changes of the 1933 budget to taxation:—
1. Five per cent tax on non-residents;
2. Five per cent tax on interest or dividends cashed at a premium.

The answer indicates that under the first item the amount is $9,236,957.70 as at March 19, 1935, and for the second item $1,326,386.66 as of the same date.

Then, turning to the last return I have in my hand I find that still further taxation was imposed. It is sufficient to show the burden of taxation placed on the shoulders of the Canadian people during the sessions of 1931, 1932 and 1933. In this instance the questions were:

What were, from 1933 to date, the total returns of each of the following changes of the 1933 budget:
(1) Removal of three cent stamp tax exemption on cheques of $5 or under.

In connection with that question there is no answer from the Post Office Department, and the Department of National Revenue states that it is unable to determine the amount. Then, the second question refers to the increase of tax on postal notes from one cent to three cents. The same answer is received from the Department of National Revenue, and the Post Office Department gives the following answer:

2. Fiscal year 1933-34.. .. .. ..$143,712 46
Fiscal year 1934-35.. .. .. .. 109,982 00

Note: It may be pointed out that the above figures represent the total amount collected as revenue tax on postal notes. Separate figures are not available for the extra revenue derived as a result of the increase from one to three cents.

Then, question No. 3:

3. Increase to $2.50 per proof gallon of excise duty on distilled spirits used in the manufacture of proprietary medicine, extracts, essences, perfumed spirits and pharmaceutical preparations.

The Department of National Revenue answered: "Unable to determine the amount." Then, question No. 4:

4. Excise duty of $1 per proof gallon on spirits used in the fortifying of native wines.

The answer indicates a return of $38,660.23 on that item. I have indicated the taxation for three years, and although it is not complete it is sufficient to give an idea of what has been going on. Trade has decreased and taxation has been increasing. What is the most noticeable factor? It is this, that the government is unable to say—not to figure out—unable to say or to declare what the revenue from certain taxes has been.

Each year in his budget speech the Minister of Finance states that the revenue from a certain tax will be so and so. He makes a guess, but when we ask for figures in a return, there is no answer. Under the department's accounting system it is impossible for them to say how much money has been derived from certain impositions on the Canadian people. This is wrong. While acting as Minister of Finance in 1931 the Prime Minister told us that he would tell the House of Commons and country how a budget speech should be made. Now we find, however, that the government cannot tell us the returns from half of the taxes they have imposed since 1930. This is all wrong, and a great mistake. Where does it lead? They do not know. It is about the same condition as we find in connection with the unemployed; they do not wish to know, and they close their eyes. They try to get all they can from the pockets of the people.

It is hard to play with millions of dollars. Of course the minister may feel like a million dollars because he is going to spend a million dollars in connection with the marketing act. Oh, it is sad when we think of the suffering of our poor people who have not enough to live on and who, in order to pay the taxation imposed by this government, have to take the bread from the mouths of their children and deprive them of sugar.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: And, sir, an hon. member laughs. Did he not have to pay a contribution of $400 a year towards the expenditures made by this government? If the government were thrifty I would not say anything about it; I should not mind if they tried to economize, and so on. But what silly expenditures they have made from coast to coast—millions of dollars for no one knows what. Over a million dollars for radio broadcasting. The salary of General McNaughton is increased, in defiance of the law of the land. Then, there is the scandal of the stove pipe letter boxes. Let us consider the expenditures in connection with the trip to Egypt, and the trip to Madrid which radio fans will not forget. Let us consider how the pets of this government are treated. When it comes to a consideration of tenders the highest is accepted, provided it comes from a pet of the government. We have an example of that in the Department of Marine where a tender of $30,000 was submitted, as my hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) can bear witness, and yet the minister accepted a tender for $49,000 in order to give the contract to one of his pets at an exorbitant price. That may be considered a trifle, but an accumulation of trifles makes a mountain of trouble.

I am opposed to this vote, Mr. Chairman, because it is just a bluff in view of the election in order to deceive the people of this country again as they were deceived in 1930. But, sir, they have had five years to think over that. When the people were promised that they would be led into the garden of Eden they never thought that the so-called garden of Eden would be hell. Think of that guarantee that was given to Newfoundland and which was mentioned this afternoon. The government took advantage of the relief act, of the peace, order and good government clause to guarantee bonds for Newfoundland to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and now that Newfoundland has a surplus over expenditure I wonder if this government will collect a cent of that money. The Prime Minister said that it was a guarantee. Yes, a guarantee that never will be paid. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) said one day that the sixty million dollars which was borrowed by the railways was not to be paid back. We heard that from a minister of the crown. Think of a guarantee of sixty million dollars to the Canadian Pacific Railway under the signature of the Prime Minister before he had consulted his colleagues or parliament! Think of all those concerns which have been favoured by this government at the expense of others.

One cannot be too careful about taxation. As I have already stated, the Minister of Finance in his budget speech spoke of the possible revenue from taxation, but far from being comforting the returns which have been tabled in this house by the government show that the government are unable to say how much they have got from the Canadian people in taxation. It is unbelievable. What kind of accounting system do they have under the treasury board this so-called efficient treasury board, this brain trust which is supposed to control expenditure and to tell the government what they are to do with regard to estimates? Is the treasury board so efficient after all? No other prime minister would tolerate such a state of affairs in this country. I am sorry that the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches cannot enjoy my freedom to tell whom it may concern what I have already stated to this committee. But I shall not insist in the matter because what I say goes into deaf ears on the other side of the house. In the country, however, it is different, and from the records that have been tabled in this house the people of this country will know the real story about taxation, not the story told by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition or when he was Minister of Finance, but the true story as told in the official returns tabled by this government in the house.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Mr. Chairman, after listening to the eloquent oration by my colleague from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) I shall bring this discussion down to a more commonplace basis by asking the minister if he will kindly break down this item of $1,000,000, being the further amount required for the administration of the Natural Products Marketing Act, bearing in mind that a few days ago we were asked to vote $500,000 to take care of the expenses of different schemes under that act. I think we are justified, when asked to vote this $1,000,000, in wishing to know exactly how the minister contemplates that this money shall be spent.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): As hon. members of the committee will know, the most complicated branch of the whole industry of agriculture perhaps is that of the dairy industry. The value of the dairy industry from year to year has been roughly estimated to run from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000. There are three or four features in which the greater part of this industry finds itself in operation. First we have butter. That takes perhaps the leading place. Then we have the fluid milk market of the great cities; then evaporated and condensed milk factories. But next to butter perhaps should rightly be placed cheese. One of our difficulties has been this, especially during recent years. Because of the fact that we have been able to hold the price of butter above the world market price there has been a greater tendency to send the milk or the fat from the milk from the cheese factories to the creameries. If that continues at the same rate as during the past number of years, even as far back as 1920, the result will be such an increase in the production of butter that we shall be on the world market with reference to butter. That is to say, our farmers will have to compete on an equal footing with the farmers of New Zealand and other countries which have very great natural advantages.

In April, 1933, the world price of butter was a little over eleven cents a pound. That was the price in London, which is taken as the world price. That is comparatively the same as the price would be at Montreal if it were not for the tariffs that we have against butter entering Canada from other countries because the cost of laying down butter from New Zealand and Australia at London is practically the same as laying butter down at Montreal. Had we been on the world price at that time the dairy farmers of this country would have received only about half the amount they did receive for their butter fat.

How can this great dairy industry with all its complications that arise from the flow between one product and another be equalized to give a greater assurance that butter will not find itself, over a long period at least, on the world market with the disastrous effects that would have for our dairy farmers? The purpose is that the greater part of this vote shall be used to equalize the dairy industry by giving assistance to the farmers who are having their milk processed into cheese to prevent them as far as possible from sending more and more of this milk to be made into butter, which would thereby bring us more and more on to a world market basis with reference to our butter. As I have stated, for a number of years there has been a decrease in the production of cheese and an increase in the production of butter. In 1925 we manufactured in Canada 177,139,113 pounds of cheese. The next year there was a drop of almost six million pounds; in 1928 it went up to 144,000,000 pounds; in 1929 it dropped to 118,000,000 pounds; in 1930 it went up to 119,000,000 pounds; in 1931 it dropped to 113,000,000 pounds and in 1934 it went down to 99,754,500 pounds. From 1920 on there was a regular increase in the production of butter. Those interested in the dairy industry anxiously awaited the publication of the figures to see if this increase would continue. The first information we have had completed is for the month of May and it shows that there has been a decrease of a little over 18 per cent in the production of cheese with an almost corresponding increase in the production of butter. The result is that in pounds of butter fat there have been 57,000 odd pounds more go into the manufacture of butter than has come from the manufacture of cheese. Farmers who are vitally interested realize the danger if this is allowed to continue.

As I mentioned at the outset by means of the tariff we are able to keep the price of our butter above the world market. By means of milk boards which have been established in the different provinces we have been able to stabilize to a certain extent the price of fluid milk going into the markets in the large cities and keep it above the price to which it might have dropped had these markets been utilized by all the producers. Those who are interested have been viewing the situation with alarm and have been trying to discover some means of stabilizing the dairy industry. It was thought that while this was being worked out the duty of the government was to take what steps it could to equalize this industry and it was proposed to use the greater part of this sum of $1,000,000 in order to make payments to the farmers who send their milk to the cheese factories in order that they may continue to do so rather than to flood our butter markets.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to the minister's explanation of the purpose of this vote of $1,000,000. Before asking the minister one or two questions I should like to point out to him that he is departing on a course fraught with endless danger to the Canadian taxpayer. The minister has said that part of this vote is to be used in an attempt to equalize the price of cheese with the price of butter, but, as he says, he is only making a start. This $1,000,000 will not be sufficient to equalize these prices; it will be like the little boy who has told his first lie and is forced to follow it up with about fifteen others. I suggest that the committee consider this vote very carefully, not only because it is to cost the taxpayers $1,000,000 but because it is the second, the third or the fourth step towards creating in this country an impossible position whereby ten and a half million people are to be taxed in order to help the British consumer of Canadian cheese pay for an article produced in the cheese factories of this country. May I repeat that this is a beginning of a policy of taxation of the consumers and producers in all branches of Canadian industry and consumption in order to bonus or to equalize the price of an export article which is consumed by the people of another country. We are going to pay part of the price which the Englishman pays for Canadian cheese.

Mr. MYERS: No.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Who said, "no"?

Mr. MYERS: I did.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. MYERS: Certainly I do.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Wait until we get on fish or something you know something about. I suggest to the minister that he analyze carefully the working out of similar policies in Australia and England. During the last four years it has cost the British taxpayer £35,000,000 to bonus the production of beets for sugar. When the minister refers to the disalignment of the price of butter with the price of cheese he is referring to an article which is protected in this country. I am not debating whether that protection is sound or is not sound; I am simply stating that this policy has accelerated the production of butter in this country through holding the price over the world market price. As I said, I am not suggesting that that is right or that it is wrong, but it naturally follows that when you make it possible for a class, whether it be butter producers or any other, to obtain prices over world market prices on an export article, you immediately accelerate the production of that article. That is what we have done in connection with butter. There is no method, whether it be tariff, export bounty, equalization fund or any other method of dipping into the pockets of the taxpayers by which this or any other country can prevent the working of the law of supply and demand. We who produce milk will sell that milk on the highest market, and if that market happens to be for the production of butter, that is where the milk will be sold. This is what has happened since time immemorial and it is what will happen to the end of time. The production increases beyond the consumptive power of the people whether they be behind a protective tariff or otherwise, and the result is that markets are glutted. That is what has happened in connection with butter. The minister now proposes an equalization fund of $1,000,000 to help the cheese producers of Canada whose production varies from 150,000,000 pounds to 177,000,000 pounds annually. Three-quarters of it must find a market in foreign countries. Does the minister believe that it is possible and economically sound to create a fund taken from the taxpayers' money to put an export bounty on cheese? We are voting $1,000,000 now which is only another lie in the string of lies to do something once again through the Department of Agriculture on some advice beyond my comprehension. We are taking one more uneconomic step that will not only be extremely costly to the taxpayers of Canada, but will only end in disaster to the dairy industry of this country.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I understood the hon. member to say that what we contemplate doing will increase the price of cheese to the British consumer.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): No. My statement was that the Canadian taxpayer, through the export bounty, would be paying part of the price which the British consumer of Canadian cheese would pay for Canadian cheese. In other words, as I have said repeatedly with all the vigour of language at my command, we are departing from an economically sound policy, and this is about the fourth dangerous step. Indeed, it is the most drastic step taken up to the present time, and if this policy continues—and I expect to see more of the same sort of thing if I come back here and this government happens to be in power—it will simply mean disaster to our lumbermen, our fishermen, our fruit growers and every other branch of Canadian industry. The benefit will not be derived by Canadian industry or the Canadian consumer, because what we are doing here is assisting the British consumer, through Canadian taxation, to pay for the Canadian cheese he eats. Let me say to the minister that this is all wrong; it will not work and it has never worked. It is economically unsound.

May I deviate here to advise the Minister of Agriculture to take a rainy Sunday afternoon off and read the history of the scheme whereby the British people were going to pay off the war debt to the United States through the control of raw rubber. Through the control of rubber production they were going to pay off the war debt to the United States, and rubber dropped from 18 cents to 1½ cents a pound. Once again I plead with the minister, whoever his advisers may be, to consider this question from the practical standpoint, to read the history of similar attempts in other countries, and to realize that it can only end in an additional burden of taxation on the Canadian people, with only an infinitesimal benefit, if any benefit at all, to the dairy industry of this country. I would ask the minister to take his mind back to the election campaign of 1930—and I assure the committee I do not want to interject politics here—and to a period before that, regardless of the government that was in power, when we were importing a large tonnage of New Zealand butter. I am not going to go into the ramifications of reciprocal trade or the results that followed from our financial and economic capability of absorbing that butter, but the reason that butter came into Canada was the fact that Canada, through the ability of the Canadian people to consume enormous amounts of foreign butter during a period of prosperity, was able to import butter from New Zealand . That is why Canadians could consume New Zealand butter at a higher price than butter sold on the British market.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The statement which the hon. member has made, that we were able, because of our prosperity as a people, to consume large quantities of butter from outside Canada, is not really correct. The reason we did eat butter from outside Canada was that our production at that time was not nearly as high as it is at the present time. There is one other point. We are in no way, in this scheme, paying for any cheese consumed by the British consumer. The question is simply one with regard to the price of our dairy products, butter and cheese, butter particularly; and this plan we have in contemplation means as much to the butter manufacturer as it does to the cheese manufacturer, if not more.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): It goes a little further than that. We consumed imported butter because the production of our dairy products was being consumed in this country, in other ways, at higher prices.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GUTHRIE: By unanimous consent of the house I beg to move that when the house adjourns to-night it do stand adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning and that it continue to meet, until the end of the session, at eleven a.m. each day, but that there be no sitting to-morrow night, it being Wednesday night.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. members on this side are wholly agreeable to morning sittings, with the understanding that we shall not have a lot of new legislation introduced as a consequence of our endeavour to bring the session to a close. I assume that the house will adjourn from one to three o'clock to-morrow, and that to-morrow being Wednesday the house will not sit in the evening.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are objections to sitting to-morrow night on account of some engagements made by my hon. friends in the southeast corner of the house. We will sit every day from eleven to one, from three to six and from eight to eleven.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope we shall not see new measures on the order paper or some measures transferred from the end of the order paper to the front page.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The order paper is pretty complete now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What shall we start with to-morrow?

[Mr. W. A. Fraser.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: The fisheries bill or supply.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, July 3, 1935

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIME MINISTER'S BIRTHDAY

FELICITATIONS EXTENDED ON BEHALF OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a year ago to-day, at the first of our morning sittings, I had the pleasure of extending to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) my best wishes and those of all hon. members of the house on the celebration of another birthday anniversary. This morning I should like to renew those good wishes and, if I may be permitted to do so, to renew them not only on my own behalf but on behalf of all hon. members of the House of Commons.

During the last year my right hon. friend has had I think, his full share of trials and joys. Perhaps the greatest of the former has been the serious impairment of his health in that period of time. I wish him nothing more sincerely and nothing better to-day than that in the year on which he has just entered his health may be fully restored and that he may have before him many years of service to his country and great public causes.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have so many matters to think of in these days that I have very little opportunity to think of the coming and going of birthdays. I realize that I am passing another milestone to-day and I am very grateful to the right hon. gentleman for the terms in which he has referred to my having reached another birthday. I think I can say with some frankness what most of the members of this house must realize, that the last five birthdays have not brought me any very great joy and that if the high expectations of those who sit opposite are realized my next birthday will be much happier. On the other hand, however, it well might be that the birthdays of some others may not be as joyful if that event should happen.

The greatest joy that I have had, coloured as recent days have been by sadness and sorrow, has arisen from the thought that in my older age I have been able to render what some may not regard as useful service but at least some service to a country that has done so very much for me. I am conscious also—yesterday perhaps more than I ever have been—of my impairment of health and strength, not in the general physical sense but because of the condition of my heart, which does not permit me to participate to the extent I should like in what may be called the rough and tumble of parliamentary life.

I am grateful to my colleagues and those who sit on this side of the house for this beautiful basket of flowers, which contains all too many roses, and to the right hon. gentleman and those who sit around him for the kind terms in which he has referred to my having reached another milestone in life's journey. Whether or not we are privileged to meet together on another occasion to celebrate an event so auspicious remains for time to disclose.

B. C. RELIEF CAMP STRIKERS

TABLING OF TELEGRAMS EXCHANGED BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS AT OTTAWA AND REGINA

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the promise made yesterday I now table the telegrams sent to and answers received from the premier of Saskatchewan with regard to the Regina situation, as well as those received from the attorney general of that province, including those addressed by him to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). It may be, the minister tells me, that one telegram is not included in this return; he is checking it up, and if it is not here it will be produced.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BANK INTEREST

Mr. SPENCER:

1. What rates of interest are now being given by the commercial banks to (a) deposits of individuals; (b) deposits of corporations?

2. What rate of interest is the government allowing the banks on the amount left in the note circulation redemption fund?

3. In view of the fact that the banks have reduced the amount of interest allowed to their customers, is it the intention of the government to reduce interest allowed to the banks on the above funds?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Announcement of changes in interest rates on deposits, effective June 1st, was made by the chartered banks in a statement which appeared in the press a short time ago. The personal savings rate continues at 2 per cent. Variations are made in the rates allowed on current accounts and on savings accounts of firms, institutions, corporations and organizations.

2 and 3. Three per cent, fixed by the Bank Act.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD DECISIONS

Mr. DUBOIS:

1. How many decisions have been reached to date by the Canadian Farm Loan Board with respect to the 248 loan applications received at the provincial bureau of the board at Quebec, from April 17, 1935, to May 27, 1935?

2. How many of those 248 applications have been granted and how many denied to date?

Mr. RHODES:

1 and 2. The Canadian Farm Loan Board advise that at date of last report from the Quebec office, June 25, seven of these applications had been rejected and the remainder are either awaiting receipt of additional information from applicants or are in process of appraisal.

LONDON, ONT. PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. SANDERSON:

1. How many tenders were received for the construction of the new federal building at London, Ontario; was the lowest tender accepted, if not, how many tenders were lower than the one accepted?

2. Was any additional amount of money awarded to the contractor as a result of finding quick-sand or spring pockets in the soil where the foundation was to go; if so, how much additional money did the contractor receive?

3. Do the specifications allow for any extras, or was the contractor to be responsible and abide by his tender?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. (a) Eight
   (b) and (c) Contract awarded to the third lowest tenderer at the price of the lowest tender.
2. (a) Yes.
   (b) $32,183.20 authorized.
3. Contract provides for the payment of unforeseen additional work at unit prices.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD—QUEBEC STAFF

Mr. DUBOIS:

1. What is the date of reemployment of each member of the staff of the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board at Quebec, mentioned in answer No. 1 of sessional paper 377?

2. In addition to the above-mentioned persons, were other persons employed since April 19, 1935, at the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board at Quebec?

3. What are the names, occupations and salaries of such new members of the staff of the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board at Quebec?

4. From April 19, to May 20, 1935, what persons worked at the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board at Quebec, and how many days did each such person work and what duties did each such person perform?

5. When were letters, received at the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board, from April 19, to May 20, 1935, answered?

6. When were loan applications, received at the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board at Quebec, from April 19, to May 20, 1935, considered?

Mr. RHODES: Return tabled herewith.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD—P. A. ANGERS

Mr. DUBOIS:

1. Has Mr. P. A. Angers, notary public, superintendent of the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board, been dismissed?

2. If so, what was the date of his dismissal?

3. How long was Mr. Angers superintendent of the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board, at Quebec?

4. What salary did he receive as superintendent of such bureau?

5. For what reasons was he dismissed?

6. Who replaced him?

7. What is the date of appointment of his successor?

8. On what date did Mr. Angers' successor assume office as superintendent of the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board, at Quebec?

9. What salary does he receive?

10. Who was in charge of the provincial bureau of the Canadian Farm Loan Board, at Quebec, during the interval between Mr. Angers' dismissal and the assumption of office by his successor?

Mr. RHODES: Return tabled herewith.

DUTIES ON JAPANESE GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked a question of the Prime Minister with respect to trade between Japan and Canada. He promised to make a statement to the house, and I am wondering if it could be done to-day.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the new Japanese Minister has taken office and we are exchanging views with respect to certain phases of the situation. I am afraid I cannot make any fuller statement at the moment than that I made the other day. If I am in a position to add anything to what I have said, I shall do so gladly before the house rises.

[Mr. Dubois.]

LOAN TO NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) if he will answer to-morrow my question of yesterday respecting the guarantee to Newfoundland.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Yes; I regret I had not an opportunity to peruse Hansard this morning but I shall be happy to submit an answer to-morrow.

ALCOHOL TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Matthews) if question No. 20 will be answered to-morrow?

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue): I shall try to have it done.

MORTGAGE CREDITS FOR FISHERMEN

The house resumed from Thursday, June 27, consideration in committee of Bill No. 120, for the purpose of establishing in Canada a system of long-term mortgage credit for fishermen—Mr. Stirling—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 6—Conditions for loans.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, where will we get the money for this purpose? During the campaign of 1930 the right hon. Prime Minister said there would be reforms in taxation. When the last government was in power more taxation was possible. In 1933, according to press reports, the Prime Minister stated that Canada was near the limit of her credit, and in the following year, 1934 after imposing heavy taxation he said that Canada had reached the limit of her credit. Therefore I say that is ample proof that the government has exhausted Canada's credit. That is all I have to say. I do not see how they can get more money.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I find myself more or less in sympathy with the objects behind the bill, and particularly is that true of hon. members representing shore fishermen. Hon. members from constituencies adjoining fishing grounds must be well aware of the desperate condition under which fishermen are living. But those of us who know the particular requirements of fishermen cannot, I fear, get very much hope from any of the provisions in the bill. Our fishermen do not require any large amount of money. All that the boat fisherman needs is a small amount, possibly $50, $75 or $100 at the beginning of the fishing season so that he may fit out his boat, gear and other equipment. They require, further, a ready market for their product.

In a cumbersome way this bill seeks to deal with a very simple question. Of course there is no doubt that under the provisions of the bill a large amount of money could be raised, but it is when we come to the distribution of the money among the fishermen that I see great difficulty so far as possible benefits are concerned. Evidently the bill is drafted along the lines of the farm loan legislation. Those of us who have studied the matter do not believe that the farm loan board is adapted to provide money for fishermen and the machinery set up by that board cannot be used to their advantage.

I repeat that this bill provides only a very cumbersome method of financing, and the fishermen I represent are not in a position to avail themselves of its provisions. Any fisherman who has security sufficient to enable him to comply with the provisions of the act would not have to avail himself of those provisions. He could secure any financial assistance he required either through the banks or through private agencies. Then, there is no provision in the bill for marketing. My view is that if by more simple means we can attain the objects sought by the fishermen there is no necessity for the cumbersome method provided in this measure. The ordinary fisherman wants fifty or seventy-five or a hundred dollars in the spring, and that is all he wants. That enables him to secure his boat, fix up his nets and get his plant. There should also be some provision for insurance against the loss of his little plant, which everybody knows is quite apt to happen because of the hazardous nature of the fisherman's calling. We used to have a very simple method of assisting farmers in the purchase of their seed in the spring. An amount of money was provided and placed in the hands of a responsible party who advanced seventy-five or one hundred dollars to the farmer, taking his notes, and repayment being made when the harvest came in the fall. There is no reason why such a procedure could not be adopted in dealing with the fishermen, and particularly the boat fishermen of whom I speak. I do not wish to delay the house. All I want to do is to go on record as expressing with some reluctance my own view which is that this bill will not be of any assistance to the fishermen I have the honour to represent in this house.

Mr. RALSTON: I rise to say just a word or two in regard to this bill. I do not think I can add very much to what the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton) has said. I have been disappointed in the provisions of the bill in so far as they appear to be cumbersome. The particular feature which has given me concern is that this bill makes as a sine qua non, a condition precedent to the fisherman getting the benefit of the loan, the possession of real estate. Now among the fishermen with whom I am acquainted, generally speaking if a man has a house and lot free of any encumbrances so that he can give a first mortgage on it, he probably will not find very much difficulty in getting whatever credit is necessary in order to purchase a boat or to purchase gear. It seems to me that the bill misses entirely the essential, that the security should be in connection with the property which is being purchased, in connection with the facilities that are being required.

I thoroughly agree with the desirability for something of this kind. I have brought to the attention of the house and the attention of the minister on more than one occasion the necessities of the fishermen, particularly those who have lost their gear on account of unusual storms. These men find themselves with earning capacity, with willingness to work, with ability to work, but without capital and in some instances they are young men who have no property of any kind, while in other cases they may be married men whose property is mortgaged in so far as it can be mortgaged for previous obligations. That is why we have to damn this bill with faint praise. That is why I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South has found it necessary to take the stand he did. I am going to support this bill. I will do anything I can to help make it a success, but I feel that it puts a fundamental barrier in the way of a fisherman getting the assistance that he needs when it required that in order to get the benefit of the law he must have real estate, and real estate free so that he can give a first mortgage upon it.

I agree with my hon. friend that the amount the fisherman requires is not large. My hon. friend mentioned seventy-five or one hundred dollars, but I have known fishermen to want three or four hundred dollars. The boat builder will give a man some credit if he has property, but if the government will not trust him unless he has property the boat builder can hardly be expected to do so. It is the same with regard to gear lost on account of storms. We have had terrible storms on the south coast of Nova Scotia in the last year with a tremendous loss of gear, leaving fishermen simply strapped, and there is no possibility of insurance such as a man would have in connection with a house or store or factory if destroyed by fire. These men are left absolutely to shift for themselves, and the only way they can get a living is by going shares in somebody else's boat. Naturally they can make very much more themselves by fishing independently, and naturally it means the production of fish is cut off to that extent.

I do feel that the bill lacks the assistance which should be provided for a most deserving class. I cannot forbear saying that in view of what is being done along some other lines I feel that a bill more generous in its terms, more easily applicable, more simple in its administration, and one which would impose less requirements on the fishermen, could have been devised than the one before us.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated on a previous occasion the difficulties connected with granting loans to the participants in any industry are great. The government has given a great deal of consideration to this endeavour. Is it desirable or not that loans of small amounts should be granted to fishermen? It is decided that it is desirable to do so within certain limits. The question immediately arises, what shall the security be? The government has decided that it will go so far as to offer fishermen provisions similar to those which have been granted for some years to the farmer, but that is as far as the government thinks it wise to go.

It has been suggested that the machinery which would have to be made use of is cumbersome. Well, the machinery has been set up. It has been in use for the farmers for a considerable number of years. It has been somewhat simplified by the amending bill of this year, and it is thought that with that machinery, with a chief executive officer in each province now who will represent the views of the Canadian farm loan board sitting at Ottawa, with the assistance of a loan advisory committee in the locality whose chairman shall be that chief executive officer, and associated with them shall be those from the locality and consequently knowledgeable in this matter, it should not be cumbersome in its operation. But this is as far as the government proposes to go.

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to say that I think the minister has missed the point entirely when he says that we are doing the same thing for the fisherman as we have done for the farmer. The farmer by the very nature of his calling has a piece of land which he can mortgage, but the fisherman may not have a piece of land at all, no more than he may have a diamond ring or a bond. What I am pointing out is that this bill requires a fisherman to have something which he does not need to have to carry on his calling, whereas you require the farmer to have the very thing which it is necessary for him to have to be a farmer at all. The minister may be right that it is necessary to provide some test, but the test should not be that a fisherman should have a house and lot before he can borrow money in order to buy a boat. I think the thing to be done if this scheme is to be undertaken at all is to provide for security being taken on the gear or on the boat which is being bought, with a certain provision for depreciation and the country running a certain amount of risk. I do not think this bill will assist very much although I want to see it get off to the very best possible start.

May I point out that I think there is entirely too much machinery in this act, with the number of inspectors and other people who have to inspect these properties and go over the credit situation when the most that can be loaned is one thousand dollars. It seems to me that we have cluttered it up a good deal by trying to adapt it to the farm loan act.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Privilege of His Majesty as to loans.

Mr. STIRLING: There is a slight typographical error to be corrected in subsection (3). On line 10 the word "to" should be inserted after the word "given." The clause will then read "or given to the board." I shall ask my colleague to move this amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. STIRLING: Subsection (4) will have to be corrected by deleting the word "of" in line 17 and the word "thereafter" in lines 23 and 24. This change is consequent on the necessity for removing the words after the dates mentioned in the amending acts and these two words should have been deleted at that time.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 8 and 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Local loan advisory board.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I believe the minister had some remarks to make on this section.

Mr. STIRLING: The remarks which I had in mind have since been made. I wanted to explain that under the amended Canadian Farm Loan Board Act the chief executive officer in the province under consideration will be the chairman of this advisory board of three. The local loan advisory board will be capable of giving advice with regard to land values and individuals making applications for loans and I see no reason why there should be complications in the handling of the matter. The central board in Ottawa will have its contact through the chief executive officer in the province in question who will be supported by advice from two assistants who in a fishery province would be in all probability men versed in fishery affairs.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The section reads:

The associate members of such local board shall hold office at the pleasure of the board, and shall be paid such fees as the board may by regulation prescribe.

This section does not say that the salaries or fees will be fixed by order in council and I am afraid the machinery will be cumbersome and there will be many officials nominated or appointed with no control over the salaries or fees paid. I am afraid there will be a lot of patronage extended.

Mr. STIRLING: I would point out that this section is copied from the bill which amended the Canadian Farm Loan Board Act, and that amendment was accepted.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That section may be necessary in the farm loan act but I do not think it is in connection with fisheries. It may be necessary when you are dealing with the examination of titles of vast properties but when you make a loan to a fisherman you are making a loan to a man who has hardly anything.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Natural Products Marketing Act—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Has the minister given all the information asked for by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser)?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. BERTRAND: I understand that this vote is to assist the cheese industry and to prevent too great a proportion of the milk produced in the country being manufactured into butter and thus putting us on an export basis. Am I correct in stating that the minister has decided to bonus the production of cheese?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In great part, yes.

Mr. BERTRAND: How will this bonus be paid and how much per pound will be paid?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It will be paid through the cheese factories directly to the farmers who take their milk to the factories. The first payment will be for July and will be on a basis of one and a quarter cents per pound. That is what is contemplated at the present time; it will be at least that. We shall be influenced to a certain extent, as to whether it will be a cent and a quarter or a cent and a half, by the latest reports for June with reference to the continued decrease in the production of cheese and increase in the production of butter, but it will be at least one cent and a quarter.

Mr. BERTRAND: Through what medium will the producer be paid, and what proof will he be required to give that the cheese has been manufactured from his milk?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The cheese factory will have that record and they will have to give an affidavit to that effect. At the same time the cheese inspectors of the Department of Agriculture inspect well over ninety per cent of all cheese manufactured, and that also will be a check on the accuracy of the statement submitted by the cheese factory itself.

Mr. BERTRAND: I understand that the bonus in connection with the production of milk will start from the first of July, 1935.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That is the intention.

Mr. BERTRAND: What is the estimated production of cheese for the present month, July, in connection with which the bonus will be paid?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The decrease in the production of cheese up to June 15 has been eighteen per cent as compared with a year ago. If that should continue, my information is that the quantity manufactured in the remainder of the year would be less than 60,000,000 pounds, so that it is estimated at between 60,000,000 and 75,000,000 pounds.

Mr. BERTRAND: On the entire production of cheese for the rest of the year from the first of July up to the first of January—because cheese is produced somewhere in Canada up to that date—the government contemplates giving a direct bonus of from 1¼ cents to 1½ cents to the cheese producer in Canada on the strength of vouchers produced by the several cheese factories, which bonus will be returned to the various producers through this medium.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will this bonus apply to all the producers of cheese in Canada or only to those who come in under the marketing act?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It will apply to all producers in all the provinces—that is, to cheese in cheese factories.

Mr. BERTRAND: Perhaps the minister did not hear my question. It is contemplated that from 1¼ cents to 1½ cents will be paid on every pound of cheese manufactured from the first of July to the end of the year. Is that right?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is contemplated that farmers sending milk to cheese factories will receive for the month of July and for each month thereafter in this year a bonus of at least 1¼ cents a pound on the cheese manufactured from their milk. It may be found necessary to increase it from 1¼ cents in order to divert a greater flow during the months when the volume will be greatest, but it is hoped not.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Is it anticipated that funds for the purpose of this bonus will be derived from other sources than this vote of $1,000,000? In other words, is it the intention to tax fluid milk in different milk sheds in order that the cheese producer may be bonused, or will a government bonus be adhered to entirely?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is no thought of any levy being made on other farmers supplying whole milk to their markets in the cities or on any other farmer in the dairy industry.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Is it not true that a year ago it was necessary for the manufacturers of butter, through an arrangement, a mutual arrangement I believe, to dump some millions of pounds of surplus butter on the export market at less than the internal price?

[Mr. R. Weir.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Part of it was exported at a loss and part at a profit.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Suppose we once again find ourselves in that position in connection with butter which has to be dumped on the export market and sold there at less than the internal price. I understand that this cheese bonus applies to all cheese, whether consumed internally or exported. What would be the policy of the government to meet a situation which undoubtedly will arise in connection with surplus butter for export? Is it intended to apply the bonus to the butter producer or only to the producer of cheese?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The purpose is to prevent that contingency arising. If it does arise it will have to be considered on its merits.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): There are other branches of agriculture and horticulture as well that are suffering. The fruit growers in my riding, indeed in the province of Ontario, not only lost an annual crop but in the winter of 1933-34 they lost their entire orchards after twenty-five years of planting and careful attention. These fruit growers have been absolutely wiped out; they lost their orchards. They are not in a position to produce any apples and it will take a lifetime or the better part of a lifetime to reproduce these orchards. I am strongly of the opinion that if we are to come to the assistance of the manufacturers of cheese, and if we are to do so with public funds, the fruit growers of Ontario have a justifiable case to present to the Department of Agriculture, and to submit a plan whereby the government should pay them so much a tree for every tree lost or frozen out, in view of the fact that their livelihood has been wiped out. Is there any reason why these fruit growers should not, under the precedent, ask for a bonus year by year until they can reproduce their orchards?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That is not a matter of marketing.

Mr. EULER: On general principles I am opposed to bonusing. I rise now just to ask the minister why cheese in particular is singled out for payment of bonus out of the general taxes of this country. I do not see where we are going to stop. If it is proper to bonus the cheese producers, why is it not just as proper to bonus the producers of any other product of this country whether it is a natural product or not. Man does not live by bread alone. It is just as necessary for the producers to make a living out of producing manufactured articles, for example, or any of the other products of the farm, such as beans, carrots, apples or anything else. Why is cheese singled out for the granting of a bonus? Can cheese not now be produced at a profit to the producers? I would like to have some reason given for handing out public money in this way.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the first place manufacturers are being and have been bonused for a number of years—

Mr. EULER: The hon. member is speaking of the tariff.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): —under the government of hon. gentlemen opposite just as under our own.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Much more so by the present government.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Cheese was selected, as I stated last night, for this reason. The value of our dairy industry is estimated at from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000 per annum; it is one of the greatest of the agricultural industries. The difficulty with the dairy industry I can perhaps demonstrate better by putting on record certain figures that will give a picture of it from 1920 to the present time, so that members of the committee will see what the trend has been. This statement shows the production of creamery butter in Canada by years:

Year:	Pounds
1920	111,691,718
1925	169,494,967
1926	177,209,287
1927	176,978,947
1928	168,027,039
1929	170,810,230
1930	185,751,061
1931	225,955,246
1932	214,002,127
1933	219,232,546
1934	233,047,500

There has been an almost proportional decrease in the production of cheese in Canada, and I will give this for the comparative years:

Factory Cheese Produced in Canada

Year:	Pounds
1920	149,201,856
1925	177,139,113
1926	171,731,631
1927	138,056,908
1928	144,584,619
1929	118,746,286
1930	119,105,203
1931	113,956,639
1932	120,524,243
1933	111,146,493
1934	99,754,500

It will be seen that one of the largest jumps in creamery butter production took place in 1931. The effect of the United States government raising their tariff against our milk, cream and other dairy products in the 1929-30 session of congress was such as to shut out from that country the equivalent of 52,000,000 pounds of cheese. Those products were turned back into this country and had to be marketed here because the market it had prior to 1929 and 1930 had been shut to it. The result is that the greater part of these products has gone into the production of butter.

Last night the question of consumption was raised. The following shows the changes in the consumption of butter, not only per capita but also for the whole dominion:

Year:	Per capita pounds	Total pounds
1925	27.36	256,248,609
1926	28.44	267,014,555
1927	28.72	273,431,070
1928	28.54	280,657,076
1929	29.26	293,434,036
1930	30.59	312,224,488
1931	30.76	319,191,885
1932	30.49	320,367,519
1933	30.18	322,319,672
1934	30.92	335,029,401

The year 1934 shows the highest per capita consumption we have on record.

On top of the difficulty that has arisen because of the market of the United States being closed to our dairy products, there has also been a tendency throughout the world, especially for countries marketing their products in the United Kingdom to produce more butter than cheese. For example, imports of butter into the United Kingdom during the calendar year 1934 were 9·9 per cent greater than during 1933 and 83·3 per cent greater than during 1924. That is, from 1924 to 1934 imports of butter into the United Kingdom had almost doubled. At the same time imports of cheese into the United Kingdom during the calendar year 1934 were only 3·4 per cent greater than during the calendar year 1924. It is evident that the effect of the ever-increasing imports of butter into the United Kingdom is best illustrated by the effect this had on the world price of butter. The average price of Australian butter in London during 1933 was only 1·35 times the average value of Canadian cheese, but with a 9·9 per cent greater import of butter into the United Kingdom in 1934 than in 1933, the average price of Australian butter had further fallen and was only 1·28 times the price of Canadian cheese. Anyone familiar with the cheese and butter industries will realize this spread between prices for cheese and butter is out of line. On account of the disparity in the prices of butter and cheese at London, it is desirable as far as possible for this country to export surplus dairy products in the form of cheese rather than in butter. In so doing it will not only avoid breaking the entire domestic price structure by exporting a small surplus of butter, but will avoid a break in the price of cheese.

Milk fat in cheese delivered to Montreal for export is worth about twenty-seven cents per pound as compared with twenty-one and a third cents per pound for fat in butter delivered to Montreal for export, on the basis of the present export values. That simply means that we get a greater value for every pound of butter fat in cheese we export to the United Kingdom at present United Kingdom prices than we would for fat exported in butter. As was stated yesterday, and agreed to by the hon. member for Northumberland, through tariffs we have been able to increase the price of butter to the dairy farmers of Canada. During the last year alone, taking the months of July, August, September and October, when there was the greatest production, it is conservatively estimated that the increased value to the dairy farmer due to this protection, in connection with creamery and dairy butter, amounted to $8,146,000.

An hon. MEMBER: How do you arrive at that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The price per pound received in Canada as compared with the world price for butter.

An hon. MEMBER: Tell the farmers that.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think hon. gentlemen will find that the farmers are quite aware of the benefit they have obtained. The problem before us is this: If we allow any considerably greater quantity of butter to be produced in Canada, due to the transfer of milk from cheese to butter, the result will be that the dairy industry in Canada will be on the export market for butter for a considerable period, and the price received will be much lower than it is at the present time. Take, for example, the London price per pound over a period of years as compared with the price at Montreal:

	London cents	Montreal cents
December 19, 1931..	17.78	22
December 10, 1932..	13.67	21.25
April 8, 1933..	11.41	26.50

If at those dates our farmers had been selling their butter on the export basis, western farmers would not have received half what they did receive for their creamery butter. No one will dispute this fact, that if there is any considerable increase in the production of butter we will be forced to take a lower price for our butter because we will be on the basis of the world market. This is what will happen: People will leave the cheese factories and go into the making of butter. Then they will realize that the price of butter has become comparatively lower than the price of cheese. They may then return to the manufacture of cheese, but they will find that the factories have closed and the equipment has become useless, and in addition they will find that the market they have built up in the United Kingdom has been lost.

There is another point in this connection; it is that it would fit better into the plans of the government of the United Kingdom if we did not increase their difficulties by shipping a greater quantity of butter, because that is really what is flooding their market more than anything else. They would prefer that we hold the market we have in the United Kingdom for cheese. One of the principal reasons, however, is that to export cheese rather than butter will give the farmers a considerably better return per pound of butter fat. For a number of years those interested in the dairy industry, including the manufacturers of butter and cheese, have been very much worried by the world tendency to materially increase the production of butter. So much has that been so that some four years ago we had a number of meetings with manufacturers of butter in different parts of Canada who were aiming at something along these lines, but at that time it was impossible for them to get a sign-up of one hundred per cent of the whole dairy industry in order to put into effect some system of equalization that would prevent the ruin that would inevitably follow if our farmers had to compete in the open market with other farmers having much greater natural advantages.

I repeat what I said at the outset of my remarks; the value of the dairy industry to the country is estimated at from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000. We feel that the value of this industry is so much greater than that of many other branches of agriculture that, while those concerned in it are trying to work out a solution of their own under the Natural Products Marketing Act, this assistance should be given in order to prevent an upset in that industry.

Mr. EULER: To me this seems like paternalism gone mad. In the first place I take it that this bonus is being given in order to compensate for the loss of the export market for cheese; at least that is one of the reasons. In reply to my statement the minister said that manufacturers had been bonused for many years.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: Someone says "hear, hear," but I should like to point out that after all protection to the manufacturer—and I hold no brief for the manufacturer, though I have been regarded as a high protectionist which is absolutely untrue since I have never supported high protection in my life, even for textiles as my hon. friend and colleague from South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards) would say—is not in the form of a bonus because the manufacturer has lost the foreign market. According to the statement of the Prime Minister, by which he does not always abide, I contend, this protection is intended to give the manufacturer at least a fair opportunity in his own market. With that I have no fault to find if the principle is lived up to. Apparently, however, this is a bonus which is to be given in order to compensate for the loss of the foreign market.

When I say this is paternalism gone mad it seems to me we are going pretty far. When the farmer is producing too much butter we are going to force him, or at least tempt him by a bonus of one and a half cents a pound, to produce more cheese instead of butter. Then if you do not watch him closely he may produce too much cheese, and you will have to give him another bonus on butter in order to get him back into the production of butter. I do not like to make any accusations so far as elections are concerned, but the idea is in my mind at least that the thought is not entirely absent from the minds of the government that this conceivably might have some little effect so far as the votes of the farmers are concerned. They are human; the government is human, and I imagine this proposal is not without its election aspect.

I do not see where this sort of thing is going to end. As I said before, if you are going to bonus the farmer with regard to cheese you are just as likely to bonus him with regard to butter or perhaps with regard to the production of chickens. It may be that we are acquiring too great a taste for chickens; I notice chicken dinners for tourists advertised all along the road. People may eat too many chickens and that may interfere with the production of beef cattle, or ducks or something else. Then you will have to bonus the production of cattle, ducks, geese, turkeys and so on, because the balance will have been destroyed. That is exactly what is happening here. In their ignorance the farmers are producing too much butter. By the temptation of a bonus you are going to get them to produce more cheese. What argument is there against the application of this principle to any other production, I do not care what it is? It need not be only natural products; it might well be something else. It may be said that this is only another million dollars after all, and apparently it does not amount to very much nowadays. I was going to say this government but I will say this country had a deficit last year of $117,000,000, and I will very much miss my guess if we do not have a deficit for the coming year of another $100,000,000. If you are going to extend this system of bonusing all along the line I for one do not know where you are going to end. It may be that the remedy will be what is sometimes suggested by my hon. friends in what is called the southeast corner, the extension of social credit or something of that sort, which will produce all sorts of moneys so that there will be no deficits at all. I am not yet prepared to go that far.

Mr. HEAPS: I guess not.

Mr. EULER: I have a fairly open mind, but I will not go as far as the hon. member would go. But if we are going to maintain our present system then I say the government ought to make some real effort to balance the budget, and they are not going to do it by this procedure.

Mr. MYERS: As a practical farmer I have listened with a great deal of interest to the lengthy discussion centred around the proposed bonus on cheese. To a great extent I sympathize with hon. gentlemen opposite because, to be frank, I am opposed to bonuses of all kinds. In this particular instance, however, there is an excuse for it—

Mr. EULER: Not a reason.

Mr. MYERS: —and as a practical farmer I propose to make some observations concerning that excuse. Dairying is the foundation and backbone of good agriculture in any province of Canada or any part of the world. Forty years ago in the province from which I come—and I believe the same condition obtained in other provinces—private dairying was carried on. I shall make a distinction between public and private dairying, because up until about forty years ago only private dairying obtained. Then what might be described as public dairying came in. When Professor Robertson of the Department of Agriculture, a gentleman who I am sure is known to you all, came to our province what did he teach us about public dairying? We did not hear anything about butter making; it was cheese making, and only cheese making that we were taught. Cheese factories were established at intervals throughout the different provinces.

Why did we depart from the making of cheese and go over to the making of butter? As a farmer I shall proceed to tell you why. In the first place, when we began making cheese we sent the whole milk in cans containing fifteen or twenty gallons each to the cheese factories. It was there placed in big vats; the curd was separated and made into cheese and we got back from those cheese factories a by-product known as whey. Coupled with the dairy industry in Canada is hog and poultry raising. The whey from the cheese factories returned to the farm was practically good for nothing. I believe I would be correct in saying that in connection with the raising of calves it would do more injury than good, and in raising hogs it is of very little use. That is my opinion of it, and I believe the minister would back me up.

Then we proceeded one step farther. We realized that we were finding difficulty in raising hogs and calves. At that time the making of butter in public factories came into vogue. We continued sending our milk to those factories in large cans. The making of butter however was different from the making of cheese. The milk was skimmed in the factories by means of a large De Laval separator. We got back from those public butter factories not whey but skim milk, a product which was considerably better for the raising of calves and hogs. That is why the change from cheese to butter production became popular among Canadian farmers.

Then we proceeded one step farther. About thirty years ago the hand separator came into use on farms, making it possible for farmers to separate milk each morning and evening. By that process the farmer had the by product right at hand, and they were able to feed the warm skim milk to calves and pigs. This procedure was found to be more advantageous to the farmers than the process of making cheese or butter in public plants. That is why there has been a tendency down through the years for farmers to divert more milk from the making of cheese to the making of butter; they placed a very high value on the skim milk by-product extracted on their own farms.

As the minister gave the figures he indicated that the make of butter has steadily increased until it has reached the point where it has almost become a burden. It is possible that we may be going too far, because while the output of butter has increased the make of cheese has steadily declined. As the minister indicated there is still a good market in the old country for cheese, in fact a better market for that product than there is for butter. The trouble is to get the farmer to return to the making of cheese for the reasons I have indicated. That is my excuse for supporting the bonus, a procedure which I believe will offer some compensation to the farmer for the loss of the skim milk by products. The bonus of one and a half cents per pound will enable him to buy other food for his hogs and calves. I am sorry to have taken the time of the committee, but I thought I should place the explanation before hon. members and indicate why I feel free to support the measure.

Mr. EULER: Is this a flat rate of one and a half cents on all kinds of cheese?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): On factory cheese.

Mr. EULER: It does not include Limburger cheese, then?

Mr. EDWARDS: That hits home.

Mr. DUPUIS: What is the total amount of over-production of butter in cold storage?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Does the hon. member mean the present storage of butter?

Mr. DUPUIS: Yes, the over-production.

Mr. HACKETT: It does not mean over-production.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member refers to the stored butter during the winter period when production is less. I believe I can give the information to the hon. member a little later.

Mr. DUPUIS: Would the minister—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order.

Mr. DUPUIS: I was on my feet.

Mr. BOYES: I should like to make a few observations on the item before the committee. I thank the government very much for the item of a million dollars placed in the estimates for the benefit of the cheese industry.

Mr. YOUNG: You had better thank the taxpayers.

Mr. BOYES: I heartily agree with the explanation made by the minister, but I must disagree with the hon. member for North Waterloo when he states that we may overdo our efforts. I do not think it is possible to overdo the giving of bonuses or any other possible assistance to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): You ought to get some votes for that.

Mr. BOYES: In years past governments have been more inclined to look after industries other than agriculture. But this government has taken more interest in the farmer than any previous government that has ever been in existence.

So far as this million dollars is concerned, if I had any criticism at all to offer, which I have not, I would rather see it two million dollars than one. The farmers of this country who are producing milk and cheese have been receiving from sixty to eighty cents a hundred for their milk, and I think we will all agree that it is not possible for farmers to produce milk at a profit at that price. When this bonus is paid on cheese I contend that it will not only be a benefit to the farmer who is producing milk for cheese purposes but to those who are producing milk for the purpose of manufacturing butter, and for manufacturing condensed or powdered milk. If it were not for this bonus, in view of the way that milk is being now diverted from the cheese factory to the creamery, it is possible that butter would soon be on an export basis, and if that were the case we would have to expect a lower price for our butter, possibly five or six cents a pound. But with this bonus on milk for use in the manufacture of cheese our farmers will receive both direct and indirect benefit. The creamery patron will receive a benefit from the fact that butter will not be put on an export basis, and it will also benefit the man who is sending milk to the condensing factory and the powdered milk factories which I contend have held down the price of milk just as low as possible, basing their price upon the export article, which is cheese. With a little increase to the cheese factory patron I feel that the farmer who is now supplying milk to the condensing factories will no longer continue to send milk to those factories unless the factory pays a higher price.

While I quite agree, Mr. Chairman, that this might have been brought down at an earlier date it seems to me that it is not too late at the present time. I contend that we are on the right road, and that this bonus on cheese is only a start in the right direction. Any other lines of agriculture where prices might be low may be given assistance in the future. I think we cannot overdo such assistance. I do not wish to delay the house. I heartily support this measure and I only hope that in the future the provision will be greater instead of less.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): In view of the statements made by the minister this morning in connection with the value and volume of the dairy industry in Canada I would ask if he is satisfied in his own mind that by using this equalization or bonusing fund of one million dollars he is going to change the trend of production, distribution and sale of $200,000,000 worth of dairy products originating on Canadian farms. Is it possible, Mr. Chairman, that by the payment rightly or wrongly of this million dollars the minister hopes to change, first, the trend of production from butter to cheese with all the ramifications that were mentioned in connection with the production of both articles by the hon. member who spoke a few moments ago, and, secondly, does he hope to change the trend of distribution of $200,000,000 worth of dairy products, because you must affect both cheese and butter to accomplish the objective on the export and internal market? If the minister is not satisfied that one million dollars will do this job will he indicate to the committee how much money he expects annually will be required to accomplish what he stated this morning?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The butter in storage on June 1, 1935, was 5,784,943 pounds—

Mr. HEAPS: That would equal our consumption for how long a period?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The consumption is roughly a million pounds a day.

Mr. HEAPS: So with five millon pounds in storage that would be five days' consumption.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Replying to the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser) it is not felt necessary to change the whole picture but that a slight change in the picture will have the effect that we desire, and I do personally think that this million dollars spent in the way that has been outlined will be sufficient inducement to more farmers to send their milk to the cheese factory so that they can hold the market that they have, and it will draw from that milk which is being manufactured into butter sufficient to keep us from going on an export basis in regard to butter. I would like hon. members of the committee to keep in mind, rather than what might be called political or economic theories, this fact, that while we are sitting here there are hundreds of thousands of farmers in the country who are having a very difficult time carrying on, and especially those in the dairy industry.

Mr. SANDERSON: You are a little late coming to that conclusion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Five years.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It boils down to this: Are we in favour of making an effort along the principles that have been adopted by both parties in the past of giving a subsidy, or assistance to prevent the price that the farmer gets for his butter and dairy products reaching such a level, because it would reach the level of the world market, that it would be impossible for him to carry on? If conditions should arise that have arisen, and there is every reason to believe that they may do so this year, it would mean that our dairy farmers in Ontario would be getting nine and ten cents a pound for their butter, and those in western Canada seven and eight cents a pound. That is the practical problem that is in front of us. Hon. gentlemen opposite have themselves voted on occasion for subsidies, protection, shelter behind which people could reap a benefit that every person in the country helped to pay for. The issue at stake is not simply a matter of bonusing cheese to help the cheese industry along but to assist the butter industry, the evaporated and condensed milk industry, the fluid milk industry, the whole dairy industry. In that this proposal differs from a straight bonus by which one product alone would benefit.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I wish to thank the minister for the explanation he has just given of what he anticipates will be possible by the payment of this one million dollar bonus, and the results that he expects not only in the cheese industry but in the diversions of milk from the butter factory to the cheese factory, affecting as the minister said the whole industry right from the production of the fluid milk to its ultimate consumption. I was very much impressed by the statement made by the minister as to the effect which this bonus will have between now and October 1, the date when he indicated it would be unnecessary to go further when the date when the desired results would be accomplished.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I desire to correct the hon. member; I did not make such a statement.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I understood the minister to say that he anticipated that by October 1—

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I stated that we believed that $1,000,000 would be sufficient to pay a bonus of one and a quarter cents per pound on every pound of cheese manufactured between the present date and March 31 next year.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): May I point out that we are now in the first week in July and June and July are the two best pasture months for the cheese industry. These are the months when there is the greatest flow of milk to the cheese factories. In most areas in Canada, particularly in the east, the pastures dry up after August 1 and the deliveries of milk to the cheese factories decrease. I think even hon. members opposite will agree that it will be impossible to get the dairy farmer to divert his milk from the creamery to the milk factory between now and the time his pasture will be dried up. The cheese factories have been open for some time and they are equipped to take care of the anticipated supply of milk which would naturally flow in 1935. As I said, we are in the first week in July and I contend that it will be impossible to divert any great amount of milk to the cheese factories.

The minister used very effective and impressive language to describe the disastrous position of the dairy industry of Canada. I am quite satisfied that no hon. member will deny the truth of that statement. I shall not go into the ramifications of international trade or of the policies which might have improved the position of our dairy farmers but I do wish to say that it seems to me to be a very belated date for the government to bring in a policy of cheese bonusing. The dairy industry has been in its present position, as far as price is concerned, for the last two or three years, so why was not this scheme brought forward before? I have stated from my place in the house that from an economic standpoint and from the experience of other countries this scheme is wrong and does not improve the conditions of the dairy farmer. I submit that it will prove a boomerang to the industry as is illustrated by the butter industry. Because we have held up the price of butter over the world market price we are now faced with a surplus and in order to readjust the flow of milk we are going to pay a bonus on cheese. This seems to be a belated policy, belated not only in the life of this government but in the year 1935. I notice the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) has just taken his seat. I always endeavour to learn from those who know more than I do and on several occasions I have heard the minister use the phrase, "rolling the pork barrel." If there was ever an instance of pork barrel rolling, it is this vote of $1,000,000. This thing is wrong in principle and is simply an example of pork barrel rolling in an endeavour to get the dairy vote of this country.

Mr. PICKEL: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct the attention of the committee to certain facts in connection with this cheese bonus which have not yet been mentioned. The production of dairy products in Canada is far in excess of what we can consume and we are faced with the problem of getting rid of our surplus. When we compete in the British market with New Zealand, Denmark and the rest of the butter exporting nations we receive the lowest grading and lowest price for our product. But when we sell a pound of cheese the situation is different, we top the market. There is not a country on the face of the earth which can compete with Canada in the manufacture of cheese.

Mr. YOUNG: Then why bonus it?

Mr. PICKEL: On May 1 Canadian cheese in London was worth fourteen and a quarter cents while New Zealand cheese was worth only eleven and a half cents per pound. Does that say anything?

Mr. YOUNG: It says that we do not need a bonus.

Mr. PICKEL: We should encourage the manufacturing of an article which we can get rid of in the world's markets. We cannot get rid of our butter so let us make cheese. The hon. member from the province down in the gulf (Mr. Myers) gave several reasons why our farmers had ceased to make cheese and had gone into the production of butter, but there is another cause which he did not mention. The commission men do not want our farmers to make cheese as they cannot manipulate the price of that product. Prices are received every morning by cable from London and they cannot regulate cheese prices as they do butter prices. For the past few years the price of butter in Canada has been higher than in any other part of the world but during the past six months prices have risen considerably in the United States because of artificial stimulation. For the past three years we have been getting from five to ten cents per pound more for our butter and from ten to fifteen cents a dozen more for our eggs.

Mr. POULIOT: This is the best dairy country for the sale of eggs.

Mr. PICKEL: It is a question of getting rid of our surplus. Since I have been in this house I have done everything I could to get the government to encourage the manufacture of cheese and I think this is the best piece of legislation which has been brought forward in the past five years. We should try to interest the farmer in the manufacture of cheese so that he will be making an article which he can get rid of at the best price in the world.

Another reason why the farmer should divert his milk from butter production is the procedure followed by city distributors. During the summer producing season these men will pay the farmer 18, 19 and 20 cents a pound for his butter and they then use the cold storage warehouses which are subsidized by the government to store that butter until next winter when they will get 30 or 35 cents per pound for it. In the west they have been buying eggs all spring at 5, 8 and 10 cents a dozen, and next December we shall be paying 45 and 50 cents per dozen for the same eggs. The cold storages were built, presumably, for the benefit of the farmer, but they have worked out to the advantage of the distributor. They have not done the farmer any good; they have done him damage. Let me tell the committee something of the efforts that were made in the eastern townships a number of years ago to encourage the making of cheese. It was in the day of the late Sidney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, and through the efforts of one man in that section, Mr. Foster, we had a cheese board established, one of the largest in the dominion. Everything was working nicely and we had legislation passed by which the distributors in the city had to come to the factory and examine the cheese and grade it at the factory, leaving an accepted cheque for it before it was moved. The minute that was done the distributors began to fight it. Fifteen or twenty of them would come to Cowansville every Saturday and meet the salesmen at the board, and they would feast them, wine them and dine them and then take them round the corner and say, "If you will sell off the board we will give you so much more." The farmers fell for that and inside of two years there was no longer a cheese board.

The farmers individually are the brightest people we have in the country, but collectively they are the greatest lot of nincompoops who ever wore shoe leather.

Mr. BROWN: That is why they fell for New Zealand butter.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman said he wanted to get rid of the markets of the world with regard to the dairy industry.

Mr. PICKEL: I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. POULIOT: I understood the hon. member to say that he wanted to get rid of the markets of the world with regard to the dairying industry.

Mr. PICKEL: You are dreaming.

Mr. POULIOT: I was listening carefully to what he said and Hansard will show what he did say. At any rate, there is a very important factor to be considered in connection with the sale of cheese, and that is the home consumption of cheese. People eat less cheese in Canada to-day, according to the official figures put on Hansard last year. I will not read them again, but last year when I spoke in answer to the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Boyes), who spoke this morning, I quoted from the government returns showing that people in Canada were eating much less cheese than they had done before. I would therefore offer this suggestion to the minister, and if he is thrifty he will accept it. My suggestion is to reduce the vote by $975,000, which will be a considerable saving to the country, and use the other $25,000 to advertise cheese. We should have a slogan, "Eat more Canadian cheese." For a time on the railways there were cards advising people to eat more Canadian cheese; it was on every menu. Instead of bringing forward plans which will never succeed, the minister should do something to advertise cheese. The minister himself, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and every other cabinet minister, in every speech they make, should advise people to eat more Canadian cheese. The result will be an increased demand with an increase in price and we shall get rid of the superfluous board. It is easy to do that. Most of the advertising would be done by the ministers themselves and by members of this house. If this were done we could save this $975,000, by which amount I suggest that the vote be reduced.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is a good deal in what the hon. member has said, but I disagree with him in one particular. The record shows that in 1934 more cheese was consumed in Canada than in any year since and including 1925. Perhaps this was due to a good deal of speaking and discussion such as the hon. gentleman suggests. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser) said that the months for the large production of cheese were May and June—

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Excuse me.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): —the important pasturage months.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I did not say May; I said June and July.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes. The information we have is this. Grading by months, for 1934-35, gives us some estimate, and in June there were graded 155,628 boxes, whereas in July there were graded 196,524. I admit that some of the boxes in this July grading would be cheese manufactured in June; we have no accurate information as to the precise production in each month. But the next month will clarify it, so far as June is concerned. In August the gradings were 219,050 boxes. The grading is supposed to be absolutely completed before the middle of the following month. In September the figure was 153,432 and in October 155,182. It will be seen therefore that the largest proportion of cheese is produced from the first of July on. There is another matter I want to discuss and that is the question as to why this was not done before. I said that in 1933 efforts were made to keep as far as possible from reaping the disastrous effects of going on the world market with the price of butter as it was then. In 1933, by a voluntary agreement, we could have got off our domestic market some of the surplus that was threatening us, but our efforts in that respect failed because some of the people who had entered into the agreement the year before did not live up to it. This year we had hoped that there would not be the falling off in cheese that did take place, and it was because of the very rapid fall in production up to the middle of June, over eighteen per cent, and the increase in fat going into the production of butter being practically the same. I was rather disappointed, particularly in my own case, that any hon. member should suggest that I above all persons should think of any political significance in connection with this matter when everyone knows that my whole aim is to help agriculture, as my hon. friend from Melville also wishes to do.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Would not the best way to adjust matters be the way that was followed in 1933? You produced too much butter and you put a certain amount on the export market, though it is quite true that some of it was at a loss. The farmers, even with the 1¼ cents, will send their milk where they choose and where they think it will be most advantageous to them to send it, as they have been in the habit of doing. Even with this bonus there will be a large surplus of butter at the end of 1935, according to the minister's own figures. And by the time the butter season is over I will vouch for it that there will be a surplus of butter in Canada of between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000 pounds.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If the hon. member gathers from my figures that we estimate a large carryover at the end of 1935, let me assure him that there will not be such if this scheme has the effect we hope it will have.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I quite appreciate that explanation, but I contend—and I think experience will justify this—that owing to existing conditions, if this what I might call vicious principle is adopted, there will still be at the end of 1935 that surplus which will have to be got rid of on the export market. In other words, the dairy industry in Canada cannot be maintained by the consumption of butter, cheese and fluid milk by the Canadian people; the dairy industry must have an export outlet. By this method of bonusing the government is simply trying to change the alignment in the dairy industry, though not satisfactorily, for this can be done in a sound economic way only by the trend of the industry itself. The government cannot by unnatural or uneconomic methods, by the expenditure of $1,000,000 on a $200,000,000 industry, change its whole alignment. If there is a surplus of butter at the end of the year, it will by arrangement or force have to find an outlet on the export market. That is the picture, and this payment of one and a quarter cents a pound on cheese will not achieve the desired result. So we are adopting a principle that is wrong; with the country confronted year after year with a deficit, we are using public funds in an attempt to realign unnaturally the dairy industry that in its different branches must depend for an outlet on an export market. The sound thing is to do as we did in 1933, and the decrease in the price of butter itself, whether we like this or not, will realign the industry; but this cannot be done by the expenditure of this $1,000,000.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If we did what the hon. gentleman suggests we would but aggravate the condition that we are trying to correct; that is, if we bonused the export of butter, the tendency would then be to increase the production of butter.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I did not suggest bonusing the export of butter.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): To get rid of it either at a profit or a loss.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): But not to bonus it.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): But some person has to take up the loss if the butter is exported, because if it is taken out of this country at a loss, we cannot expect those engaged in the manufacture of it to stand the loss.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): What about other producers or manufacturers? If I play the stock market, I pay the shot; the government does not.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member has also lost sight of this fact, that there is not any talk of withdrawing from the world market. The idea is rather to maintain our position in the world market with that product for which a market has been established, which market can be maintained to a better advantage for the dairy industry if we do not encourage the production of butter.

Mr. POULIOT: What was economically unsound?

Mr. TUMMON: It seems to me that this whole matter is one that should be considered on a fair basis and one that is not very hard to be settled if we only apply our minds to this problem. The fact is that we have in Canada a surplus of milk. The milk goes through different processes of manufacture; they have been named here to-day, for instance, evaporated milk, condensed milk, fluid milk, butter and cheese. It is a fact well known to every hon. member that those who are so geographically situated that they can send their milk into the cities or to the factories for evaporated or condensed milk and as fluid milk receive for it a far better price than do those who are so geographically situated that they must depend upon the butter and cheese industries for the disposal of their milk.

As regards the question of butter, during the last two or three years, and in fact for a longer time, the man who disposes of his milk to the butter factory has received an average of from fifteen to twenty cents per hundred pounds more for it than has the man who has been sending his milk to the cheese factory, and only about five or six per cent of the total milk production of the dominion goes into the manufacture of cheese. It has been said in the house that during 1934 the increase in the price of butter over the world market put into the pockets of the Canadian producers amounted to the sum of $8,000,000. If you take the total production of butter in the dominion for the year 1934 of 233,047,500 pounds and multiply that by the increased average price of butter over the world market of 8·14 cents, it will be seen that the amount received exceeds $8,000,000 considerably.

What do we want to do? Do we want to reduce the price of butter or the price of milk given to the producers who send it to the butter factories? We must move off the market a certain percentage of the milk or we are going to have that reduction. Those who have been producing the five or six per cent of the total milk production and sending it to the cheese factories have for the past three or four years stood the brunt of stabilizing the dairy industry in this country. I consider it is high time that the responsibility should be shifted somewhere else instead of upon those who have been sending their milk to the cheese factories.

An hon. MEMBER: The Tory policy.

Mr. TUMMON: Not as a result of Tory policy. The hon. gentleman has been talking about New Zealand butter. Let him consider the average price of butter in Canada over world price when the New Zealand and Australian treaties were in force and compare the average price in Canada over world price since and he will find that the average price is greater than the average world price of a few years ago.

An hon. MEMBER: Tell that to the farmers.

Mr. TUMMON: The fact is that it is not a fair proposition to ask the people who are supplying five or six per cent of the total milk production of this country to stabilize the entire Canadian industry; the responsibility must be put somewhere else, and I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on his attempt to do this.

Mr. POULIOT: What about the present high price for butter in the United States?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it the intention to go on with supply in the afternoon or to take up one of the bills?

Mr. RHODES: I imagine we will continue with what we are doing now.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to and progress reported.

[Mr. Tummon.]

RADIO BROADCASTING

NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the motion adopted on the 28th June, 1935, with respect to the Senate amendments to Bill 99 be rescinded and the following substituted therefor:—

Resolved, that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house disagrees with their amendments to Bill No. 99, an act respecting radio broadcasting, for the following reasons:—

(1) Bill 99 purported to amend The Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932, only to the extent that chapter 35 of the statutes of 1932-33, an act to amend The Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932, assented to on the 23rd May, 1932, should continue in force until the 31st March, 1936.

(2) The amendments proposed by the Senate would have the effect of limiting the duration of the life of The Canadian Radio Broadcatsing Act, 1932, to the 31st March, 1936.

(3) It is desirable that Bill No. 99 should be redrafted or amended so as to provide that The Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932, should remain in force indefinitely, but that the amendments made by chapter 35 of the statutes 1932-33 to such act should continue in force until the 31st March, 1936.

And this house respectfully suggests that the Senate should take the appropriate action to that end.

And that the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the Senate.

He said: Mr. Speaker, after discussion with the law officers it was found that there was a question as to whether or not the proposed amendment that left this house was inoperative to accomplish the end sought for the reason that it did not, in sufficiently clear terms, indicate that the purpose was to maintain in operation until March 31, 1936, the amendments adopted in 1932. The Senate, misconceiving for the moment the purposes that we had in mind, adopted as an amendment a provision that would have terminated the life of the main act, passed in 1932, on the 31st March, 1936. After having had the matter carefully looked into by the law officers it is believed that this motion will enable the Senate to adopt an amendment in accordance with the terms of the bill introduced here as Bill No. 99, which will remove any doubts as to the effectiveness of the legislation to accomplish the end proposed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-POLAND TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I ask leave of the house to lay on the table copies of the convention of commerce between Canada and Poland executed this day. With similar consent I would move for leave to introduce a bill without notice, for the purpose of having the bill printed so that it may be before the members of the house to-morrow. The bill relates, of course, to the convention. If the motion passes, enabling me to introduce the bill without notice, I will indicate what the bill is and what its purposes are.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I move that the bill be read a first time. The convention which I have just tabled, and copies of which I have sent to the right hon. gentleman opposite, is a convention with respect to trade and commerce between the republic of Poland and the Dominion of Canada. The bill proposed is to give effect to it, in the ordinary five-section bill, ratifying and approving the convention itself.

Motion agreed to and Bill No. 121, respecting the convention of commerce between Canada and Poland, read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Miscellaneous—
Natural Products Marketing Act—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Mr. RINFRET: I listened with a great deal of attention to the discussion of this item last night and this morning, and I feel that I must say a word in order to register my protest against this vote. The minister has been very industrious; he has striven very hard to show why the government were proposing this item, but in my opinion he has completely failed to indicate why there should be a premium for cheese rather than for sausages, potatoes or any other farm product. There is one reason, however, that he has not advanced, and the more I followed the discussion the more convinced I became that it was the real reason for this item. It is that the government feels very uneasy on the eve of an election as to the attitude it will take concerning the price of butter. I do not wish to deal with tiresome subjects, but it is known to very hon. member that in 1930 the question as to the price of butter was a very dominant factor in the victory of the Conservative party of that day. In those sections of my province in which I travelled it was in my opinion practically the only reason for the election of Conservative candidates. The city population resisted very well the appeals made to it on labour and unemployment questions, at a time when unemployment was less serious than it is to-day. But in the rural parts of Quebec the butter question was the predominant one and appeals made by hon. members opposite indicating that if elected they would raise the price of butter were in my opinion the main reasons why the Liberal party lost many seats in that part of the country. I believe the same observations would apply to other parts of Canada.

I do not wish to turn from the item before us. May I observe that the government having failed to indicate why it would place a premium upon cheese and not upon other products indicates that it wishes to have some argument to present to the farming population and to make its position easier due to the fact that instead of rising, as was promised in 1930, the price of butter has declined about ten cents per pound. That condition has obtained for the last four or five years.

The Minister of Agriculture has said that this vote offers the farming community an opportunity to make use of their milk. It is a curious attitude to take, and we are surprised to find the minister telling the farming population, "We promised we would raise the price of your butter; we have failed to do that, the price having been reduced one-third of the 1930 price, an amount of ten cents, but we are going to do something else. We will help you not to produce butter and will make provision whereby you may use milk for other purposes." For these reasons it is proposed to spend $1,000,000 to induce the farming population to use surplus milk in the manufacture of cheese. As was well said yesterday by an hon. member from Ontario on this side of the house, such action would mean that the Canadian taxpayer will have to pay part of the price of the cheese we sell on the British and other markets. I say that is a wrong policy. Not only is it wrong in practice, and would lack effectiveness, but it is wrong in its inspiration.

If hon. members would look through the supplementary estimates they would find many millions of dollars provided for no purpose other than that of putting into practice reforms suggested by this government, not for the sake of reform but for the sake of having a political program to offer the Canadian electorate. Here is a million dollars which is not spent for cheese—unless we say that the retention of power is in itself a form of cheese. This session of parliament, with its very pretentious program of reform will cost from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 not to help the farmers, not to help this or that class but, in plain words, to make it easier for the government to face the electors or at least to alleviate the defeat in store for them.

I have discussed this matter; although I am not a rural member, especially in the last few months I have been travelling, and I have learned that the farmers do not expect very much from expenditures such as this one. But they will help the Conservative candidates in Missisquoi and Compton, and in other places where promises were made to the dairymen. Those candidates will be able to say, "Well, we have not been able to help you in securing a good price for butter; world conditions have been responsible. But we are doing the next best thing: We are taking money from the pockets of the taxpayers to pay towards the cheese which you will produce." That is a very bad policy. As a matter of fact, in a general way I will say that all these artificial reforms are bad. There is only one way to help the community at large and that is to work towards a normal return to business conditions. But if you have to spend a million dollars to help one industry and another million dollars to help another part of the same industry you are simply replacing one evil by another and getting nowhere by way of social reform or improvement.

I shall not speak much longer, but after listening carefully to the explanation of the minister I must say he has not given a single reason why the money should be spent for cheese any more than for potatoes, sausages or anything else. Before sitting down I should like to make this suggestion. I suggest that he spend only $500,000 for cheese, and when the market becomes flooded with cheese he will have another $500,000 to help the farmers in another direction. We would have to go on like that forever. As soon as he has overproduced one commodity he will have to spend another sum of money to improve another branch of the industry. I say that policy is all wrong. We should have good tariff conditions and good government, and I do not believe these millions of dollars being spent to enable the government to deceive the people by a program of reform which taken all in all, will never have any very good effect, will relieve the situation. I believe the government is spending money in a very irresponsible manner and I must protest against it.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Davies) asked for information, and I take this first opportunity to give it to him. He asked for the amount of cheese produced in 1934 in the different provinces. These are the figures:

	Pounds
Prince Edward Island	340,000
New Brunswick	350,000
Quebec	21,721,000
Ontario	73,497,000
Manitoba	1,130,000
Saskatchewan	750,000
Alberta	1,286,000
British Columbia	678,900

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) has told the committee he does not like artificial methods, and among those methods he includes the stabilization scheme in aid of the dairy industry now before the committee. As to the general proposition I do not take exception to his expression of opinion, but I believe the hon. member will admit that the whole world is in a state of dislocation. There come times in the health of the individual as in that of a nation, when it is necessary that he have recourse to extraordinary means. Stimulants in times of crises are admitted by all to be not only wise but necessary. The hon. gentleman has not denied that it has been necessary to expend large sums of money in the city over whose municipal government he presided with great dignity for a period of two years. Some time back it would have been a source of astonishment to the hon. member had he known that it would be necessary to vote millions of dollars to provide for the sustenance of thousands of people in the prosperous city of Montreal. That is not the lot of Montreal alone but the lot of every large agglomeration of population throughout the civilized world. If it has been necessary to apply artificial means of sustenance to the urban population; why not to the rural? We know what has been done in England; we know what is being done in the United States. It has been necessary to resort during a period of disequilibrium to extraordinary methods. I have no particular desire, Mr. Chairman, to be drawn into a political controversy on this question. My hon. friend knows well that there has been set up in his province and in mine a dairy commission. He knows that the government of that province has fixed a definite price for milk, and he knows that, having fixed the price, that government has also fixed the quantity that may be sold at that price and has made no provision for the balance that is thrown back into the pot to be disposed of as best it may. These extraordinary measures were to meet extraordinary circumstances. We are confronted with many forces flowing from disequilibrium. To meet them the country has paid large sums on account of unemployment. Suggestions are made to the house embracing reforestation, the building of highways, housing and other works which are not immediately necessary, to help those temporarily embarrassed. Should we not in fairness to ourselves and to the nation consider whether the proposal now engaging the attention of the committee is not worthy of approval?

I shall not waste much time on those lighthearted gentlemen who tell us that butter was worth so much five years ago or that our national revenue was so much five years ago. Every gentleman who is familiar with even the rudiments of economics and current affairs—

Mr. CASGRAIN: You did not say that in 1930.

Mr. HACKETT: My hon. friend knows very well that the volume of trade between Great Britain and France which in the year 1930 was 1,300 billion francs shrivelled to less than 400. He knows that as well as all hon. gentlemen. So I am not going to waste much time in discussing what everybody who wishes to be serious already appreciates and is willing to admit.

Some reference has been made to promises about butter. My sins of omission and commission may be many, but I made no such promises. It is true that butter sold at a much higher price in 1930 than it is selling at now, but a point which I think hon. gentlemen should not overlook is that whereas in 1930 butter was selling at the world price, plus one cent duty—there was a spread of about one cent and a fraction—the spread under the present administration has been vastly increased until for the year 1934 the average price of butter in Canada was 22·29 cents, whereas in London, where the world price is fixed, it was but 15·65 cents. I draw this in all fairness to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. The price of butter has gone down but there is a substantial increase in the price of Canadian butter compared with the world price of the same commodity. I do not mention these facts to score off anybody. But I am anxious to bring home to the people who wish to deal with this matter seriously an all important fact.

Now let us consider for one moment something that has been brought up not infrequently during the debate. Something has been said about tariffs; something has been said about manufacturers. Is it not a fact that the manufacturers, the industralists, the professional men, are all organized and organized for their own benefit? I do not say that they are organized for their own benefit exclusively but they are organized so that their affairs may be conducted in an orderly way. In my own profession, for instance, rules have been enacted for its government. There are rules which discipline members of the bar and there are means of exacting a certain level of conduct from each of them. There are other rules which apply to emoluments. That is true also of the medical profession; it is true of organized labour, whether it be railway labour, the iron workers or the garment workers. Wherever we go in professional and industrial life we find organization and a measure of discipline and a measure of control. Broadly speaking it is true that the only element of our population which is not organized, the only element which is at the mercy of wind and wave, of greed and exploitation, is the primary producer. Never has the primary producer of this country been willing to yield up enough of his individuality and his so-called liberty to reap the benefits of discipline and order. I believe that this government has enacted a measure, the marketing act, which affords to the primary producer the opportunity to give himself a labour union, the opportunity to give himself a professional organization, that from it may flow discipline and the benefits which come from order and hierarchy. I submit this to the committee; if the farmers organize under this act, as already groups have done—we have been given details with respect to the producers of different commodities, apples, potatoes, chickens; the milk producers in British Columbia, who have all sought the shelter of the marketing act and are satisfied with it—if the dairymen of this country will organize, and it is a vast undertaking because this industry is represented in every province and in every section of every province in the dominion, it seems to me they will benefit and that we should afford to them while in process of organization a measure of succour and support. They require assistance, they require encouragement, until equilibrium is reestablished.

So long as my memory runs, the farmers in the southeastern counties of Quebec have shipped their dairy produce in the form of sweet cream and fresh milk to the industrial centres of New England. Without a moment's warning a dyke—the Hawley-Smoot tariff—was raised which dammed back that generous stream until it flooded out the farmers living in that locality. While we had that ready market it was possible for us to import butter from Australia and New Zealand to good advantage, but when that market was taken away it was necessary that something be done for these farmers. While some hon. gentlemen regret that tariffs in this country are so high, most hon. members —I make one exception and bow low to the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young)— admit that evil though they may be, they are a necessary evil. We have had to enact tariffs to preserve the life of our industry and the standard of living of our industrial workers. If that is a sound argument for industry, I submit that we should do something to protect this vast section of the community which is not protected. I submit further that while these changes are being brought about it is doing scant justice and providing rather skimpy generosity to vote a million dollars for the stabilization of the greatest industry in Canada.

I do not see how any hon. gentleman who is even remotely familiar with the dairy industry can question the wisdom of exporting our surplus in a form that commands a premium in the world's market. At the present time our cheese—I admit that there are certain accidents as to age and scarcity tending to raise the price—brings four cents per pound more in Great Britain than the cheese of our rivals for that market. Hon. gentlemen opposite have stated that our butter is of an inferior quality and does not bring as good a price in the world market as does the commodity produced by our competitors. If that be true, and I do not think it is questioned, is it not in the interests of the dairymen—dairying is the principal part, wheat notwithstanding, of Canadian agriculture—to make at least an effort during a moment of trial to stabilize prices and to bring about some measure of relief? I think it was the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser)) who asked if a small amount like $1,000,000 would be adequate for the stabilization of this vast industry. That is a fair question, the answer is that only a small fraction of the total production of butter goes into the export market and it is that small fraction which raises havoc with prices. Our price here is the price of our demand plus our protection until we have a surplus and then we must take the price that is offered to us in the markets of the world.

We have come to the assistance of different elements in the country. We have voted millions in aid of industrial employment; we have voted other millions for this and that activity, but because this vast farming industry happens to be unorganized it has been forgotten in the past. It seems to me that there is a promise of brighter days for the farmer if he will avail himself of the possibilities of the marketing act and is given some encouragement and stimulus while efforts are being made to bring him under that act.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Does the hon. member not remember that we shut out imports of butter from Australia because it was being exported to this country under a plan similar to that proposed and supported by the government?

Mr. HACKETT: No.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Oh yes, the Patterson plan.

Mr. HACKETT: As I recall the Patterson plan, it was one under which the producers of butter contributed to a fund a certain amount per pound produced and a certain amount per pound was taken from that fund and applied to each pound exported. Even were I to grant the premise of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore), which unfortunately I cannot, the situation is entirely different. The scheme which is outlined here is one by which assistance is given to the producer whether or not his product finds its way into a foreign market.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no desire to be supercritical of this vote and I do not intend to criticize it until I find out how it is related to the marketing act. It is usual for a marketing scheme to be set up before you pass a vote of this kind. I happened to be in Leeds and Lanark counties during the week-end and I discussed this matter with a number of farmers, but they did not seem to understand it at all any more than I did. They told me that they had asked for a bonus of two cents per pound on all cheese exported, and I suppose this vote is the answer. After reading this designated vote one could easily conclude that it was for organization purposes under the Marketing Act rather than for a subsidy to cheese. Would the minister give an anxious inquirer the connection between this vote and the marketing act? I think every hon. member is sympathetic towards the dairying industry, as that industry is so closely allied to the health of the people and the fertility of the soil. This industry means practically to the east what the wheat industry means to the prairies and it deserves our close and sympathetic attention. I have no doubt that if provision were made for a straight subsidy of one and one half cents per pound on all exported cheese the minister would not be able to find an objector, but it is a different thing when this matter is brought in in this furtive and mysterious way. I am really in a dilemma and I wish the minister would disentangle me.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is intended that a great part of this vote will be expended under the provisions of section 9 of the Natural Products Marketing Act, but a scheme would not be set up, as the hon. member will appreciate, until the money is made available. When the money is made available it is intended to set up a scheme to equalize the dairy industry and provide assistance to those farmers who send their milk to the cheese factories.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I rather suspected that was the situation although I did not know. Section 9 was one of the most objectionable sections of this bill so far as the opposition were concerned, and instead of making the bill more acceptable to us the minister is endeavouring to make it more objectionable. And the same remark may be made with regard to the amendments he brought down; two of them were very objectionable. Now we have him invoking section 9 without the farmers having taken any initiative whatever. Under section 9 the minister has authority, if he considers that any product is prejudicially affected under the marketing conditions that surround us, to take the initiative himself and work through any local board or agency he desires, and he instructs the central board to proceed as if it had been asked for. What is the matter with the Ontario dairymen that they cannot ask for something which on the face of it is so good? Why should the minister have to come to the rescue and ask for it on their behalf? That is the point I am concerned about. If he will bring down a straight subsidy to the dairy industry, especially the cheese industry, there will not be much comment upon it; but I cannot understand why he should proceed in this mysterious way on his own initiative in one of the oldest districts of Ontario. Why cannot the dairy industry in this province take the initiative instead of the minister doing so?

Mr. YOUNG: Last week the minister introduced and passed through this house a bill amending the marketing act, which provided that a fund be set up to be raised by a levy on the commodity concerned, and the explanation he gave of the use to be made of the fund was identically the same as the use to which this million dollars will be put. Is this million dollars a substitute for the fund he proposes to raise by that levy, or is it in addition thereto?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is in addition thereto, not a substitute. The bill to which the hon. gentleman refers was not introduced for the purpose of setting up a fund. When I was asked as to what use might be made of the section, I said it might be used in this way.

Mr. YOUNG: Then there will be more than one million dollars available for the purpose. In addition to the million voted by the taxpayers, all those engaged in the dairy industry will be subject to a tax which they will have to pay or go to gaol.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No; the hon. member is confusing matters. There is no levy, there is no tax of any kind associated with this million.

Mr. YOUNG: Then I must ask the minister to explain again the bill he brought in the other night, because when we asked for an example of the way in which the money would be spent he used the very illustration of butter and cheese and said that the money so levied would be used to bonus the farmers to stay in the production of cheese and not to go into butter.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If they submitted a scheme to do it that way.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I remember distinctly that the explanation the minister gave was as the hon. member for Weyburn has stated, and I expressed my lack of understanding of the whole intent of that bill. That was why I thought that this vote of one million dollars was for an entirely different purpose. I hope the minister will help me out in my understanding of it now. How is it that the Ontario dairymen do not take the initiative themselves in setting up a marketing scheme, instead of the minister stepping in himself and doing it for them. Can they not take on a good thing when they see it without waiting for the minister to do the taking on, just before an election, though that is incidental? I do not mind that; you can pack this chamber full of bills and votes of this kind and it will not save these hon. gentlemen from their impending doom, so that that does not concern me. Self-preservation is the first law of nature and we concede them the right to hang on to every straw they can get their claws on between now and election time. But I do not want to be put in the position of an unfriendly critic of this million if it is going to the dairy industry and they want it through a marketing scheme. They cannot want it very ardently or they would have organized themselves under the marketing act. They want two cents per pound straight bonus on their cheese as far as I can make out, and here under an item entitled Natural Products Marketing Act we have $1,000,000. No wonder no one understands what it is for.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I regret from what was said the other night, that hon. members should have gathered the impression that this million was to be used in addition to or in conjunction with any levy made, because I am quite certain that I did not say so, and if they will read my remarks they will see that I did not say anything that would convey that impression. The hon. gentleman asks why the dairy farmers of Ontario have not submitted some scheme under the marketing act. They have, in conjunction with the dairy farmers of every other province in the dominion. But, as I have stated, the difficulty of organizing an industry in which so many people take part, hundreds of thousands of farmers, is such that it cannot be done in a very short period. Hon. gentlemen would seem to give the impression that little advantage has been taken of the marketing act to date, and the thing I have always kept in mind, especially while in committee in the house, is the great contrast between the opposition advanced against the measure when it was introduced and what has actually been taking place among the great farming population of Canada, who have been taking advantage of it. The board was set up only in August, and already there is under the administration of the marketing act, and taking advantage of its provisions, over $43,000,000 worth of annual business. Not only that, but there are applications from farmers to have provision made to enable them to make use of the act to be extent of a further $240,000,000. In other words, the producers of $280,000,000 odd of produce have applied to come under the administration of the act without any effort on the part of the dominion government or of the marketing board to lead people to take advantage of its provisions. It is simply the natural outcome of what has been taking place, and the thoughts that have been in the minds of farmers throughout the country for years. We had men who devoted the greater part of their lives, without thought of reward of any kind, to the development of a cooperative marketing system among the farmers so that they would by voluntary effort be able to rid themselves of what they regarded as a great deal of unnecessary waste and cost in getting their products to market. Every hon. member who is a farmer must have in mind the names of some of these men. We had Mr. Morrison of Ontario, Mr. Wood of Alberta, Mr. McPhail of Saskatchewan and many others, whose great regret was that, although they realized that they had accomplished a great deal in the way of voluntary cooperation, the forces for which they had laboured so long and unselfishly were still unorganized to such an extent as to leave themselves a ready prey to those who were more concerned with their own selfish interests and who were ready to take advantage of the unorganized farming community. The fact that that work had been done and that the farmers were anxious that a further step should be taken is evidenced by the number of applications that have come in—applications to the extent of $280,000,000 of agricultural business apart from wheat.

I was the first to state in this house, when I moved the resolution leading to this act, that there would be many obstacles which we could not foresee. No one could expect otherwise in a change in the marketing of the products of the farm, and which was to take the place of a system that had been built up but was regarded by the farmers as not giving that service which it should. Therefore I maintain that it is a great and undoubted proof of the feeling on the part of a great body of farmers in this country that in this short period, especially in view of the misrepresentations by great sections of the press and also by hon. members opposite as to the benefit that can be derived from the Natural Products Marketing Act, these farmers have availed themselves to this extent and expressed themselves as being strongly in favour of it. I am not talking of men of academic minds as has been suggested here, but as I am making this statement I have in mind men not even friendly to the old pool organizations, wheat, live stock or otherwise, but men who through their own individual effort, rugged individualists as some hon. members might prefer to call them, have made a great success of farming even against the obstacle of poor markets. These men have offered the best they have and have given freely of their time during the past months, especially in the winter season, to see if they could formulate some scheme. They have finally agreed in the three western provinces, where they have the greatest proportion of live stock in this country, upon a scheme that they believe will be of use in the marketing of their products. These men are actual farmers, men who own and control up to five or six thousand head of cattle. One sheep rancher in British Columbia who at first was opposed to the marketing act because of the misrepresentations he saw in the press and heard from the platform, is now one hundred per cent behind it. This year his marketing of lambs and ewes will be up to 6,000 head.

When I stand here—and I have sat here through weeks of hostility because it cannot be described as anything else—the thing that is foremost in my mind is this great movement among the farmers that cannot be denied, that cannot be stopped, because what the farmer wants more than anything else is a greater pride in his occupation, and the only way in which he will get that is by having more power in the administration of his own business. Nothing will stop him from getting this. What has been the opposition to this measure? The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) for weeks opposed it and his opposition has been proved to be unwarranted. One of the points on which he laid the greatest emphasis was that there would be a restriction of production. There has been none. Another point he raised was that there was a great fear in his heart that the farmers, if they united and organized themselves, would injure other bodies in the community. They have not shown any evidence of attempting to do that; all they want is to be let alone, to progress quietly, to go forward and organize themselves, so that they may be able to market their products to better advantage.

Then we had the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott), the former Minister of Public Works, and I remember reading an account of some of his speeches early last fall when he ridiculed the number of licences that would have to be issued to license producers from one end of the country to the other, a statement which was very far wide of the mark.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I was just quoting the minister's statement as to the number that might be issued. It is on Hansard.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): When the measure was in its final stages, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) said that it was only a political measure; that it would never be put into effect, yet it was put into effect a month after he made the statement. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) at a meeting at Wingham—and I happened to be there that day although I was a little late to attend the meeting—made the statement that the act would never be put into effect although he must have known that it was in effect at the time he made the statement.

Yet in opposition to this great movement among the agriculturists of this country to take advantage of the act to make it possible for them to organize in their own interest, a right which has been given to other bodies in the dominion before, what have we had? Lawyers, chiefly from the cities; people who profess to be farmers and who to a certain extent are farmers but whose chief business is not farming but something other than farming. How many simon pure, bona fide farmers in the House of Commons, whose chief interest is farming, have opposed this measure? Few. The opposition against this great demand or cry on the part of the farmers themselves for this to be made available to them has come chiefly from lawyers from the cities by twisting a word here and a word there especially when they think this will be to their political advantage. To offset that we have applications from farming bodies. One of them is from the dairy industry of Canada which is composed of farmers and those specially interested in the welfare of farmers. They were desirous of coming under the act, but they were not able to organize within the short period that has been at their disposal up to the present time. The reason this vote is being given is to maintain the dairy industry as an entity, to use this sum of money to equalize the dairy industry so that there will not be the damage that is feared by those who are especially interested in the industry by reason of milk being swung from one product to another.

Before I take my seat, I cannot emphasize too strongly the discouragement that it has been to one whose sole interest is in agriculture—and I believe this feeling is shared by every hon. member who is a farmer and close to the heart of agriculture—to see the pitiable and scattered opposition that has been made to this legislation from the time it was first introduced.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not feel that I am guilty of ever having been hostile to this bill or to the farmers organizing themselves thereunder, but under this measure or vote are the farmers organizing themselves? It is the minister that is organizing them under section 9 of the marketing act and that is what I object to; as there is a vast difference. There is nothing I would like better than to hear that the dairy industry in eastern Canada had taken action under the marketing act, because I know they need it and any advantage it contains. I was associated with dairying long before my hon. friend the minister was dry behind the ears, and I intend to remain so. The hon. gentleman I consider has done himself and the marketing act an injustice by his conduct in connection with this vote. There is an element of duplicity about it. I never dreamed that it was for the purpose as set forth by the minister. I thought he was going to go on with these twenty-six marketing schemes that are now under way and to flood the country with voting contests at the same time that the election was on. I said before that that would be unwise; if any schemes were to be voted on, that should be done before the election. But the minister is taking advantage of section 9 of the marketing act to set up schemes himself. I did not hear him say anything about it until now when I asked him about the matter, although he may have said something about it last night in my unavoidable absence. This seems to be a scheme proposed and instituted by himself. I do not know whether the local boards are established yet. Are the local boards or other agencies he is authorized to work through, yet in existence? The minister has authority to instruct the board, that is the central board, to operate this scheme propounded by himself through any local board or other agency that may be appointed; I forget the exact phraseology. Perhaps the minister has the act in front of him, and if he has, I am sure the committee would be enlightened if he would read the section. That is my criticism. I say again that I would be delighted to see the dairymen of eastern Canada organizing under the act in the regular way and of their own volition. But for the minister just before election to say to them: Here is $1,000,000 if you come under this marketing scheme, is neither ethical nor even good politics.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My hon. friend is right in stating that I had not mentioned section 9. That section is just for the purpose of an emergency such as this while the dairy industry itself is organizing. The dairy industry has gone a long way in organizing under the Natural Products Marketing Act.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Will the minister please read section 9?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Section 9 reads:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this act the minister may, if he is satisfied that the trade and commerce in a natural product is injuriously affected by marketing conditions through the lack of a local board, at any time propose a scheme for the marketing or the regulation of the marketing pursuant to section four of this act of such product in interprovincial and/or export trade, and the governor in council may approve of such scheme and authorize the board to administer such scheme directly or in cooperation with local boards, or through any agency which it may establish. Such scheme shall continue in force until terminated by the governor in council.

While this is in force those interested in the dairy industry are proceeding with their organization, as the hon. member for Melville has suggested.

Mr. YOUNG: At page 3967 of Hansard, the night the bill referred to a moment ago was before the house, I asked the minister this question:

> Mr. Young: In the event of the price of butter declining does the minister contemplate the board having power to order certain farmers to stop making butter and to turn their milk into cheese?
> Mr. Weir (Melfort): No; it does not mean that at all. If the dairy industry decided that it was in their interests as a whole, a fund could be set up through a levy on the producers themselves to be used to assist the whole milk producers, if that product were lower in price than other commodities in the industry, so that it would be to their advantage to continue producing the product rather than switching to the manufacture of another article which would force it on the world market and lower the price. A great deal of work has been done in this connection and agreement reached so far as the dairy industry is concerned, but there is still considerable work to be done.

Now I must confess that in the light of the explanation the minister gave us that night I cannot see the difference between the functions outlined for that fund and those outlined for this million dollar vote we are considering to-day. I wish the minister would explain exactly what is the connection or the difference.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is not necessary that there should be either a connection or a difference between what was stated at that time and what has been stated to-day. The hon. member asked for an example of how the industry could be equalized or stabilized, and I gave him the example. I did not state that it was to be operated in conjunction with the item we are now considering, by any means. If the hon. member will re-read what he has read already I think it will be quite clear to him that at that time I was describing a scheme that might be set up by the dairymen, and I stated that the dairymen were considering setting up a scheme but that need not necessarily have anything to do with this item.

Mr. YOUNG: Then this is the position: We have enacted a law permitting the dairymen to make a levy on themselves in order to raise a fund for a certain purpose, and to-day we are voting a million dollars of government money to be used for the same purpose. Am I right in that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): For a similar purpose, but not in the event of the other scheme being endorsed.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister has stated that the dairymen have made considerable progress in working out a scheme of this kind, yet he is putting through this vote of a million dollars. If the first scheme is to be carried out, why this vote?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This vote is for the purpose of carrying on until the first scheme has been completed, and that will not be done for this season's make of cheese.

Mr. YOUNG: I see; this is not to be repeated another year. The minister contemplates taking this million dollars, or the other fund to be raised in subsequent years in any other way, for the purpose of what he calls stabilizing the dairy industry. He proposes that if the price of butter should get out of line with world prices this fund may be used to encourage farmers to remain in the production of other kinds of dairy products instead of switching to butter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, only to the extent that there may be danger of the production of butter being such as to put it, for a considerable period of time, on the world market level, and so bring down the price of butter to the world market price.

Mr. YOUNG: In the event of there being a danger that the price of butter will get out of line? I wonder what success the minister has had hitherto in estimating what is going to happen to the market price of butter. Two years ago he and his officers estimated that we were going to have a surplus of butter in Canada. Fearing that the surplus would depress the price below the world level he appealed to those in Canada holding large quantities of butter to export it, to dump it on the world market and pocket the loss, and some of them did so. Then as the season advanced it was found that his estimate was all wrong, that there was no surplus of butter but that we actually had a shortage, and we had to bring back some of the butter we had exported. One year ago his officers went out and announced from the public platform that we were going to have a surplus of ten million pounds of butter in Canada, which would have a depressing effect on the market. But before many weeks passed they had to revise their estimate, and at the end of the season it was found that we had a surplus on the market of only one million pounds. We know what success our government have had in trying to guess what would be the price of wheat; as yet we do not know what it is going to cost this country. We know they cannot estimate what the price of butter is going to be or whether there is going to be too much or too little. It is just possible that under this vote the minister may take that million dollars and use it to bonus butter as against cheese when market conditions might actually require him to bonus cheese as against butter, because it is no more possible to estimate what is going to happen in the cheese market than it is to estimate what is going to happen in the butter market. Is the minister sure as to what branch of the industry he is going to give this fund to? I do not think he can be sure at all.

Now we are launching on a policy of bonusing, and we are going to start bonusing cheese. Have the potato farmers no claim for a bonus? I am told that the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island have been throwing out their potatoes because under the marketing act the government put those potatoes at a price which the public would not pay, so they could not sell their product. I suggest that they have a legitimate claim for a bonus. If we are going to bonus the cheese producers we have a right also to bonus the butter producers, the potato growers and the wheat growers. We will be here to-morrow demanding a bonus on wheat. The fishermen also have a right to a bonus; the producers of pulpwood and all other primary producers in this country have a right to a bonus. So I think we can safely take this as our slogan, that we will have bonuses for everybody or bonuses for nobody. All these schemes the minister has in mind have the same purpose in view; that is, to raise the domestic price above the level of world prices. In that I say he is pursuing a wrong policy and as long as he continues to pursue that policy we are going to have unemployment, we are going to have relief camps and we are going to have trouble of all kinds in this country. One-third of our exportable product is exported. One-fifth of the total wealth produced in Canada is exported. One-fifth of our people depend absolutely on the export market for their living. When you raise domestic prices above export prices you put that one-fifth of our population in a position where they cannot sell their goods on the export market because it costs so much to produce and to live in Canada.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. YOUNG: Yes.

Mr. HACKETT: Why did Great Britain abandon free trade?

Mr. YOUNG: Great Britain abandoned free trade because she was ill advised, and my hon. friend's leader can tell him where that advice came from.

Here is what you are endeavouring to do; You are endeavouring to raise the cost of living in this country to the point where those of the population who depend on the export market will not be able to operate their business at a profit, where they will not be able to stay in business, where they will not be able to buy the products of your domestic industries, and as long as that condition prevails I say you are going to have distress among the primary producers, you are going to have unemployment among the industrial workers and relief camps and all sorts of trouble. I ask the minister to abandon this policy at once and get back to the point where all our prices will be based on the prices of export commodities. Then you will be giving employment to the men in the cities, because then your primary producers will be in a position to employ these men in producing the things they want to buy.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If I have a clear understanding of it, what the hon. member has in mind as to what should be done is this: The party of which he is a member, if they are returned to power, will cancel any duty that may exist against butter coming into this country. If they state that they will not cancel the duty against butter coming into Canada then I say they have no choice, if they are assisting the butter industry, but to assist the cheese industry as well. If the hon. member is conscientious in what he states, however, he simply means that if his party is returned to power he will do his utmost, and no doubt his colleagues will support him, to cancel any tariff that may exist against butter coming into this country.

Mr. YOUNG: We are not going to confine our tariff reductions to butter, I can tell my hon. friend; we are going to reduce tariffs all along the line.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Adjustment of war claims: Secretary of State—further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. CAHAN: Certain litigation under the direction and control of the Department of Justice is being carried on in reference to reparations claims. The deputy Minister of Justice informs me that in connection with two suits now pending, Rex V. Hatfield and Logan and in re extradition of Hatfield, the sum of $15,000 will be required. This is the further amount required.

Mr. REID: Can claims still be made on the reparations fund?

Mr. CAHAN: There is no reparations fund. All the funds which have been placed at the disposal of parliament have been expended. There is no such thing as a pending reparations fund. This item is in connection with litigation arising out of what are alleged to be illegal payments made some years ago out of the reparations fund.

Item agreed to.

Expenses in connection with printing amendments to the Election Act (governor general's warrant of October 3, 1934), $20,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is this for?

Mr. CAHAN: The chief electoral officer found that the sum of $20,000 was required for the printing and publication of the Dominion Elections Act and the forms issued by him under that act.

Mr. GRAY: Has the minister had a communication from the Dominion Franchise Commissioner regarding the lists mentioned on Friday last?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, I have had communications with him. If the full lists are to be typewritten and distributed the estimated extra cost would be $120,000. However I had a consultation this morning and I am hoping that in rural districts it may be sufficient to use the printed lists as printed up to April last. The names which have been removed could be obliterated by an ink line, and typewritten additions made. I believe that would be sufficient for rural districts. As a matter of fact for a great number of the rural districts hon. members will receive a new printed list before such a compilation by the registrar could be prepared. We will make every effort to satisfy requirements. The lists are coming in from rural districts, and in the twelve received this morning there are only a few changes in each sheet. Certainly the changes in lists for rural districts have so far been very few indeed. However we will endeavour to satisfy the requirements of hon. gentlemen; as to how best to do it is still under discussion.

To cover cost of machinery and equipment for the public printing bureau, governor general's warrant of November 15, 1934, $200,000.

Mr. YOUNG: Is it the intention of the government to furnish hon. members with printed copies of the final drafts of bills passed at this session?

Mr. CAHAN: That would not come under this appropriation. As a matter of fact as they are passed in this house the bills are printed, and as the revised bills are printed after sanction by the governor general each department of government is in a position to supply copies to those requesting printed bills. I believe in almost every case that is true. If there are any bills, copies of which the hon. member would like to have within the next three weeks, I believe he would secure them if he would request such copies from the respective departments in charge of those bills.

Mr. YOUNG: Not many days ago I was told in the distribution office that these bills would not be printed until the statutes are published some months later. I went to the distribution office only a few days ago and asked for certain bills which had passed, and I was informed that they would not be printed until the statutes are published.

Mr. CAHAN: As a matter of fact I would suppose that the distribution office would have less information about the matter than any other office to which the hon. member could have applied. The distribution office distributes bills only as required in the ordinary course of legislation. I know that the texts of the final draft of bills relating to my own department are printed. I know, as a matter of fact that through the Department of the Secretary of State we supply those bills to departments of government in the United States and England. I have never known the supply to be exhausted. The hon. member must apply however to the proper quarters. If they are bills relating to my department he would simply write the Under Secretary of State, and if applying to the Department of Agriculture he would write the deputy Minister of Agriculture. For their own purposes the different departments procure final prints of the bills as rapidly as possible after they have passed.

Mr. NEILL: I wish to support the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young). A few days ago this question was raised and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) told us that we could obtain them from the clerk of the Senate. I ordered some, and found that I would have to pay $2 each for them. I believe there is an act providing for the publication of statutes in which that fee is indicated. I say that when hon members of parliament go to their respective constituencies it surely is their duty and should be their privilege to have the acts which have been passed. People come to us and ask us what has taken place and we are entitled to know, we cannot know unless the bills are printed. They will not be obtainable for five or six weeks, and I say that that is too long. The cost of printing would be very low, because no more than a dozen of them would have to be reprinted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the item carry?

Mr. NEILL: No. Being Scotch I want to know why I have to pay $2 for a copy of a bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the item carry?

Mr. NEILL: No; take a vote on it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We have not had a satisfactory answer from the minister.

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. member wishes a certified copy of a bill he will have to pay the clerk of parliaments a certain prescribed fee. But if he is content with a printed copy as issued by the departments to libraries and public bodies he may obtain such copies by spending the price of a postage stamp.

Mr. NEILL: By waiting about six weeks. I phoned the printing office twenty minutes ago and was told that it would be from four to six weeks before such copies would be obtainable.

Mr. CAHAN: Who told you that?

Mr. NEILL: When I go home my constituents are entitled to ask me the meaning of certain acts, and I cannot tell them without going through the tremendous work of following up all the amendments made in this house and in the Senate. All hon. members are in that position, and I say it is a foolish and undignified one.

Mr. CAHAN: To whom did the hon. gentleman apply? Who gave him this answer?

Mr. NEILL: I phoned an official in the printing bureau. I do not know what his name is.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman applied to officials of the printing bureau when he should apply to the minister in charge of the department. He cannot obtain that information by telephoning some secretary or minor official.

Mr. NEILL: I will take the minister's advice and apply to the Secretary of State now. When can we expect these things from the printer?

Mr. CAHAN: When the hon. gentleman asks with regard to a particular department. As soon as this house is prorogued and the bills are finally assented to, each department of the government will have prepared for its own use the final prints, which are then available I understand to any member who makes a request for them.

Mr. NEILL: In from four to six weeks. Does the minister not know that there is an election coming on and that we have to go before the people and explain the mass of legislation, 120 bills, that we have passed, and that without them we may have to say, "Well, I do not know because amendments were made to these bills in the Senate and we will not get them for four or five weeks."

Mr. CAHAN: There are some of them, a certain number of private bills, for instance, which I think the hon. gentleman will not need to explain to his constituents, but the public bills are made available at the printing bureau as soon as they are requested by the several departments which have charge of these bills. In my own department they are out within ten days of the close of parliament and are then available, such bills as the Companies Act, the act dealing with copyright, the act dealing with patents, and so on.

Miscellaneous—
Emergency grant to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, $50,000.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to say a word or two in regard to the action of the government in refusing at this session of parliament to enact legislation giving to the blind people of this country pensions commencing at the age of forty. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the blind people of this country were led to believe by what this house had done through its committee this year that they would at this session of parliament receive at least certain benefits from pensions which I believe they are entitled to.

First of all we had a resolution before the house, which resolution was referred to a committee of this house, and on that committee members from the government side of the house sat in a majority. That committee reported in favour of some form of pension for the blind at the age of forty and over. When that report came before the house it was very sympathetically received on all sides, and I believe there was the feeling that the blind over the age of forty should receive a pension. When therefore it was announced by the Prime Minister last week that the government was taking no action in this matter I am sure that there was great disappointment on all sides of the house, and nowhere was the disappointment keener than among the blind people of this dominion. The disappointment would not have been so keen had the feeling not been unanimous amongst members of the house, even among the government supporters themselves, that legislation was to be enacted granting pensions to the blind at this session of parliament. That was the feeling that was aroused on two occasions by a unanimous report from the committee on industrial and international relations.

It may perhaps be too late now to ask the government to bring down legislation at this session implementing the recommendations of that committee, but, Mr. Chairman, I cannot help at this time, in the very last hours of this parliament, saying how much I regret and how deeply disappointed I am that the government could not take definite action at this session to give the blind the benefits of a pension which is so long overdue. In most countries blind people are given special consideration. I do not need to say anything about their condition or about the particular difficulties which they are experiencing in these hard times in making a livelihood, but I wonder if we could not have some kind of statement this afternoon from the ministry or at least some assurance given to the blind people from all sides of this house. If the present government has not been able to see its way clear to bring in legislation implementing the report of the committee, my firm hope is that whoever occupies the treasury benches a year from now at least will see that the blind people of this dominion will get the pension which is so long overdue.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): As I understand it, this is not in any sense a substitute for a system of pension for the blind. I understand, and perhaps the minister will say whether I am right, that this application was made to the government over a year ago. I saw some suggestions in the press from other organizations that this was more or less in the nature of an alternative, but my understanding is that this organization did press the government very sincerely and very persistently for legislation granting pensions to the blind, which has not been brought down this year.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is quite correct. Representations were made to the government by a deputation consisting of Captain Baker and Lieutenant Myers, speaking on behalf of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and my recollection is that it is a year ago or more that the representations were made. This has no reference to annual grants of any kind, nor has it any bearing on the question of pensions. The request was made solely with a view to assisting the institute in a very difficult period, as I explained the other day, to cut down a heavy overdraft which has arisen because of the circumstance that private contributions have in recent years been very much diminished. This is to enable the institute to carry on without curtailment of its work.

Mr. HEAPS: Was any grant made to the institute last year?

Mr. RHODES: No, this is an entirely separate and distinct government grant made for the specific purpose I have mentioned.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not suppose the minister looks on this grant as in any way compensating for lack of recognition of the blind in other directions.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend could not have heard my explanation. I said that this item has no bearing on or relation to the question either of other grants or of pensions themselves.

Mr. HEAPS: Suppose this government is in power a year from now, would it then consider more favourably the introduction of a bill dealing with pensions for the blind?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is the one who is blind just now.

Mr. REID: Might I ask if any of this money goes to the federation of the blind?

Mr. RHODES: No, it goes to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

Mr. McINTOSH: Has the minister any further statement to make in connection with pensions for the blind?

Mr. RHODES: I have nothing to add to what was stated by the Prime Minister the other day.

Mr. COTNAM: Mr. Chairman, as sponsor of the resolution urging that action be taken at this session to grant pensions to the blind, I am very sorry indeed that the government has not seen fit to take action this session to give these much needed pensions to the blind people of this country. That resolution stood on the order paper during the session of 1934 and was never reached or discussed at that session. The resolution again stood on the order paper all during this session. Various opportunities to discuss this matter have presented themselves and the blind people were led more or less to believe that some action would be taken at this session. Pensions for the blind are being paid in practically every civilized country and all countries in the British empire pay pensions to the blind or provide other goverment assistance. When this resolution was introduced there was no opposition from any quarter of the house and the press of the country was unanimous in its support of the proposal. As far as my information goes there was not a single editorial unfavourable to pensions for the blind.

We have about 8,000 blind people in Canada and had this resolution been adopted and a bill enacted it would have involved an expenditure by this government for the coming year of about $125,000 to $135,000. The total expenditure in the country would have been between $500,000 and $600,000. I contrast this with what has taken place in the United States during the recent session of congress. A federal bill was brought down which will involve an expenditure of about $3,000,000 in providing assistance to the blind. Some 25 or 30 states have blind legislation at the present time and where there is such legislation the federal government proposes to increase the pensions paid to the extent of $15 per month. Where no pensions are being paid the government will provide $15 per month towards the assistance of the blind and the maintenance of blind institutes. In the state of Massachusetts alone there are about 4,500 blind people receiving about $750,000 per annum in pensions. During the last twelve years this governmnet has granted in aid of our 8,000 blind people about $158,000. I think it is a sad commentary upon the people of this country that they have been able to assist the blind during the last twelve years only to the extent of $158,000. The provinces have contributed something in the neighbourhood of $100,000 to blind institutes. The supplementary estimates contain some large votes for different purposes. During the last five years this government has voted as federal assistance to the unemployed something like $160,000,000. This money was granted to people who have their sight, who have their hands and feet and are able to help themselves and yet we do not seem to be able to find half a million dollars to take care of blind people between the ages of 40 and 70 years. It is a sad commentary upon this House of Commons that we have seen fit to allow this resolution to remain upon the order paper during the session and then at the last moment decide that no action can be taken and that the matter must be shelved until some future date. The blind have suffered a great deal and they are considerably disappointed that something has not been done at this session.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) has shown that he is a very able speaker and I am somewhat surprised that he did not continue the debate on the C.C.F. resolution in February, 1933.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment and Social Insurance Act, $2,000,000.

Mr. POULIOT: This does not apply to those who are actually unemployed?

Mr. DONNELLY: I thought the amount to be voted was to be $7,000,000. Is this $2,000,000 just for organization purposes or is it to pay for unemployment insurance?

Mr. RHODES: This represents the amount which it is estimated will be required for the operation of the act during the balance of this fiscal year.

Item agreed to.

To provide for expenses of the comptroller of the treasury's office — further amount required, $80,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I have a strong objection to make to this vote because of the manner in which returns have been made. I asked for returns showing the amounts received under various taxes imposed by this government during 1931, 1932 and 1933 and in half of the cases the necessary information was not available. The comptroller of the treasury's office is no good and I protest against this vote. This office has failed to give the proper information to hon. members and I protest against such a waste of expenditure.

[Mr. Cotnam.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The office of the comptroller of the treasury is comparatively new, having been in existence only for about two years. The appropriation in the main estimates for this office was $1,576,851, an increase of $7,112 over the vote of the previous year. We are now being asked to vote an additional $80,000 and I think the minister should give the committee some explanation of why this additional amount is required. As I recall the comptroller of the treasury took over certain of the functions which formerly belonged to the auditor general.

Mr. BENNETT: No, several of the departmental functions in connection with disbursements.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The expenditures in that one branch are getting to be very large.

Mr. BENNETT: It has control over all the disbursements of the country.

Mr. RHODES: This additional amount is due entirely to the anticipated extra expenditure and extra work in connection with the auditing of accounts under the Unemployment and Social Insurance Act and other legislation which has been passed during this session

Mr. POULIOT: Eighty thousand dollars more for red tape is pretty hard to digest.

Mr. TOTZKE: I notice that in both the main and supplementary estimates this item is put under the heading of "Miscellaneous." This is a very important department and it seems to me that we should have the same particulars which are given in connection with other departments.

Mr. RHODES: It is not a separate department, it is a portion of the Department of Finance although that may not be exactly correct. There could be a very marked improvement in the setup of our estimates in general. These things are not very easy to bring about. We have first the civil government estimates and then the estimates of the departments in various subdivisions. It would be much better I think if we could have all the votes of the individual departments kept under departmental headings where they could be shown. It must be remembered, however, that the functions of the comptroller of the treasury have to do with every department of government and possibly that may be the explanation. I will bear in mind what my hon. friend has said.

Item agreed to.

Allowance to the representative of the Department of Finance as a member of the Canadian farm loan board, during tenure, $1,500.

Mr. RHODES: The other night my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Reid) asked for some information with respect to the salary paid to the supervisor for British Columbia. It is $4,500 per annum.

Mr. DONNELLY: In western Canada there are some persons, whether connected directly with the farm loan board or not, who are going about asking farmers whether they want loans or want to have their debts adjusted, and these men are paid so much for every application. Are they paid out of this fund?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend may have in mind the officials under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have both in mind. There are men going throughout the country asking farmers whether under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act they want to have their debts adjusted, and assuring them that they may have it done and, under the Farm Loan Act, receive a loan. They are being paid so much for every application. This is the propaganda that is going on. I know of two or three men who are travelling about doing this very thing, and I should like to know whether they are paid under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act or under the Farm Loan Act. This is not provincial.

Mr. RHODES: There is no one in the employ of the farm loan board nor under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act who is authorized to give any such undertaking. No person representing either of these boards has any right whatever to say to any farmer what the hon. gentleman has suggested; all they could do would be to say to the farmer, "If you make application under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act you will be entitled to apply for a loan to the farm loan board." No one, however, has any right to make the statement that a farmer would as a matter of right secure a loan. I have endeavoured to make it clear in the past that the question whether the individual shall receive a loan must depend entirely on the merits and circumstances of each individual case. There are no employees of either department working on commission, and if my hon. friend will give me in confidence the names of the individuals I will inquire by wire immediately to see what activity is taking place there, because the course he suggests is entirely foreign to the proper authorization of either act.

Mr. DONNELLY: I thank the minister for his explanation, because I know of several men who are so working. The Conservative organizer in the last provincial election has been going throughout my constituency and I did not know whether this was his occupation or whether he was doing it for political purposes.

Mr. GRAY: Is the official receiver under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act the representative of the farm loan board under the Farm Loan Act?

Mr. RHODES: No; he has no official contact at all.

Mr. GRAY: In Ontario, at least in the western part, the official receiver is the gentleman who is handling the forms. I cannot say that he is doing as much as the men to whom my hon. friend from Willow Bunch has referred, but certainly he is giving the farmers to understand that they must come to him if they want loans; and as recently as last week I obtained some forms from the official receiver, who stated then that he was the representative of the farm loan board in that district.

Mr. RHODES: There can be no objection to the farm loan board, as a matter of convenience, asking another employee of the government, the official receiver for instance, to keep in his possession and make available to farmers the necessary forms. I can see no objection to that.

Mr. GRAY: I do not object; I asked whether that was being done and the minister replied no.

Mr. RHODES: It was not as far as I know, but I am prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's statement. But I have no hesitation in saying that no one, neither the official receiver nor anyone else, has the right to tell a farmer that he can secure a loan as a matter of right.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is this representative of the Finance department a permanent official?

Mr. RHODES: He is a permanent official appointed in virtue of an amendment to the act passed this year.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does not the minister think it is proper to have his name put in while he is given an allowance over and above his salary?

Mr. RHODES: It would be, except for two reasons. The Farm Loan Act as amended provides for alternative officials so that it does not follow of necessity that the same official will continue in the office. The other reason is this. I prefer not to put his name here at all because he is receiving a salary out of proportion to the services rendered and this is a matter of justice to this official.

Mr. ELLIOTT: How many persons have made compositions under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and received loans under the Canadian Farm Loan Act?

Mr. RHODES: I have none of that information here but I will make inquiries and endeavour if possible to get it.

Item agreed to.

The Economic Council of Canada Act, 1935, $20,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Has the economic council been appointed, and if so, who are the members?

Mr. RHODES: The members of the council have not yet been named.

Mr. POULIOT: This is a revelation. It was so necessary to have this economic council, this crutch was so necessary for the Prime Minister that he could not get along without it, and yet we have all the social legislation passed without the assistance of the council—most ridiculous, most absurd. If it was so necessary why did they wait so long to appoint the members of the council—and they have not yet appointed them. In their wisdom they have got along without the council; why do they not do the same in the future? All the reform program has been implemented with the exception of one or two matters. This is superfluous; it is pure extravagance, just as ridiculous as the stovepipe letter boxes and all official expenditures made in the same quarter. I hope this vote will be dropped; I will not stand for it at all. I say, it is most ridiculous. What do we need a brain trust for if it has not yet been in action? Twenty thousand dollars is something; a family could live a long time on that sum. This is another red tape official expenditure.

Item agreed to.

To provide hereby, notwithstanding anything contained in The Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to the present Canadian minister to France of an annuity at the rate of $3,000, to commence upon his retirement and to continue thereafter at the above rate during his lifetime, $3,000.

Mr. RHODES: I understand that the occasion for passing this appropriation has not arisen, and I therefore move that item 414 be reduced in the sum of $3,000.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister mean that there is no intention of making a retirement such as is indicated in this item?

Mr. BENNETT: The present incumbent of the position in question was appointed in May, 1911. A change of government took place in September of that year and he was continued in office. He was appointed a minister and he has now reached the age of sixty-seven. The British practice is that ministers retire at sixty. This provision was put into the estimates in order to provide for that contingency. The impaired hearing of the minister makes it impossible for him to function properly and unfortunately that has been the case for some time, but he has not resigned his post and this item is therefore superfluous.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do I understand that it is not the intention to recall the minister?

Mr. BENNETT: I have nothing to say as to that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then I shall have to say a word or two about the matter. This position in Paris is of course different from the others to this extent, that when the present incumbent was appointed, it was merely a commissariat; he was made a commissioner for Canada in France succeeding the late Mr. Fabre who had been there for a very great number of years. Mr. Fabre was the first appointee there and he was kept as representative of Canada until he died. Mr. Roy was appointed—and at the time I was a member of parliament—after the Laurier government then in office found difficulty in getting somebody because the position was not very attractive at that time and meant the absence of the appointee and his family from Canada and their settlement in France. In 1927 or 1928 the office was changed into a legation and he became the first plenipotentiary and minister for Canada in France. Mr. Roy has been there for the past twenty-five years rendering great service to Canada. I desire to read an editorial in the Montreal Star of Thursday, June 27. The writer was obviously under the impression that Mr. Roy was retiring, as I now understand he is not. This is the editorial which reads:

A Good and Faithful Servant

Hon. Philippe Roy, Canadian Minister to France, has without doubt richly earned the leisure and repose which his impending retirement, just announced, will bring to him. But there will be general regret, both in Canada and in France, that the term of his long service is drawing to a close.

To those whose memories carry back to an earlier day, the work which Mr. Roy has done for Canada in France is especially clear. The Canadian commissioner's office, before his day, was a small upstairs affair on a street little known to strangers in Paris, with an almost non-existent staff, with facilities so restricted as to cripple any work it might have hoped to do, either for Canadians abroad or for Canadian business. Mr. Roy changed all that. He moved the Canadian office to the Grand boulevard; he made it a comfortable and spacious place where the "Canadian errant" was made welcome and happy; he "put Canada on the map" of boulevardier consciousness; he was personally the soul of generosity and hospitality and, withal, a shrewd and able business man with Canadian interests always before his mind. How much of the betterment of Franco-Canadian trade was due to Mr. Roy's acumen and to his thorough knowledge of the opportunities for increased business between the two countries, it is, of course, impossible to estimate definitely, but there is no question that his services in this respect have been exceedingly valuable. The splendid Cite Universitaire project was very largely his plan, a contribution to an intellectual and cultural bond between Canada and France that cannot be estimated from blue books or trade returns. Mr. Roy has deserved well of Canada and the thanks of both French—and English—speaking Canadians are due to him.

May I recall his services during the war? Mr. Roy was like a father to all Canadian soldiers. His place, not only his office but his residence, was open to all members of the Canadian forces, and they all knew that as well as I do. He has always enjoyed not only the respect but the esteem and confidence of every public man in France in all spheres of national activity over there, and to think under the circumstances of retiring him compulsorily with a pension of $3,000 when one considers what is being paid by way of superannuation to judges or military men, is humiliating. However, he is not so old; he is only—

Mr. BENNETT: Sixty-seven, two years older than I am.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He is two years older than the Prime Minister, but I am sure my right hon. friend in two years will still be able to fulfil his duties whatever they may be at that time.

Mr. DURANLEAU: They will be the same.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know Mr. Roy very well; I have always been an intimate friend of his and I know he is still able to fulfil his function, to do his work. His hearing is better now than it was a couple of years ago. I know the government can recall him; a plenipotentiary minister is subject to recall. He has to be persona grata not only to the government that receives him but also of course to the government that sends him to the foreign country. But under the circumstances, especially at this time when the government is at the end of its term of office, just before a general election which may bring into power another government, to send to France a minister representative of that future government does not seem the fair thing to do. Of course nobody knows the future, but if I have a share of influence in the future government of Canada, the man who under such circumstances would go there to replace Mr. Roy would be well advised to buy a round-trip ticket.

Mr. BENNETT: With much that the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) has said I am heartily in accord. It must have occurred to him that considerations such as those to which he has referred were in the mind of the government of the day, for Mr. Roy has remained in office since August, 1930, notwithstanding the fact that I have believed that at times his physical condition was not such, because of his poor hearing, as would enable him to function as he should like, he has remained there because, as the hon. gentleman has said, he has discharged difficult tasks with success.

I do not think anyone will quarrel with what the hon. gentleman has said, but I can only say that the difficulty has been the question of a pension. In Great Britain the rule is that career ministers and ambassadors retire at sixty. Some time ago we passed an order in council under which we retired those in the civil service who had reached the age of sixty-five. The banks and other institutions in this country adopted a regulation under which they retire their officials at sixty, because of the conditions referred to in the banking and commerce committee last year. No contribution is made by any minister to the superannuation fund, and any sum that is voted comes directly from the taxpayers. It is an extremely difficult thing to justify, and it was with great personal reluctance that this item was inserted in the estimates at all. Apparently I was wrongly informed with regard to the intentions of Mr. Roy; apparently he does not desire to leave his post, although he has attained the age of sixty-seven.

There must be some understanding with respect to all the ministers in the service of this country. My own view is that the English rule is satisfactory, and the provision for pensions in England would not entitle the present incumbent of the office at Paris to the sum here indicated, for he has been a minister for only a very limited time. It is true that he served from 1911 to 1927-28 as high commissioner, but it was by his own choice that he went to Paris. He preferred that to remaining in Canada, which necessitated leaving his practice in Edmonton for half the year and coming to the Senate. I think that is a well known fact which he himself has stated frequently. So far as the service is concerned it must be known to all members of this house that the only legation in which there was a vacancy when the government came into office, or where a vacancy has occurred since, was at Washington. Sir Herbert Marler, who was appointed to Tokyo by hon. gentlemen opposite, has remained there and no one has suggested that a change of government should result in a change of ministers. I have not looked upon it in that way at all, but there must be times when the public service demands that those who hold office should surrender it.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the hon. gentleman is always thinking of the spoils of office; he thinks of them so constantly that he cannot even forget them in his dealings with some of his fellow members. Need I mention that Sir Herbert Marler was appointed by a Liberal administration, but he has continued in office and is discharging his duties to this administration as faithfully as he discharged them to the last administration. I do not look upon a minister as being in quite the position suggested by the hon. gentleman. Far be it from me to suggest that a minister would want to remain in office who found it impossible to function because of his attitude of mind towards the government he was serving, and as conditions are it is difficult to transfer ministers from one point to another; there are so few of them. As I said a moment ago, of necessity there must be an age when men should retire from these posts. In Great Britain that age has been settled at sixty; in this country we have fixed that age as sixty-five, and while it is quite true that technically the civil service regulations do not apply to ministers and sixty-five is not an age for compulsory retirement while seventy is, in experience in the older countries it has been found that the age I have suggested is reasonable.

I know there is not a member of this house who does not realize that those who hold office under those circumstances should not be easily disturbed. But if, as is the case in some of our courts in Canada, men are unable to hear and have to use devices placed upon their desks to enable them to hear what is said, surely it cannot be said that this is a proper discharge of their judicial duties. I find it difficult, I confess, to understand how men continue to sit as judges and to draw the public money under those circumstances. I am not ignorant of the fact a few months ago, at the meeting of the Canadian Bar Association, an eminent judge condemned both the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and this government for endeavours made to amend the Judges Act, and the condemnation against my hon. friend was greater because he succeeded and I did not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My bill was better advised than the bill of my right hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend says his bill was better calculated to serve the immediate purpose than the bill we sponsored. I just put this to the committee: If a man holds himself out as an expert in any branch of human endeavour, and is so employed; if he ceases to be able to give that expert service for which he was employed, certainly he would find great difficulty in a court of law in recovering his salary, stipend or compensation. There is an implied undertaking on the part of those who occupy positions such as these that they are physically fit to discharge their duties. I realize that, for instance, with respect to the office which I hold. I think it must be perfectly clear that a prime minister, whoever he is, must be physically able to discharge his duties; if he is not he should retire. I think the same thing is true with respect to members of the judiciary and others. But in view of the erroneous impression which I had, and in view of the fact that Mr. Roy does not desire to retire, this item should disappear from the estimates. I should like my hon. friend to realize, however, that I regard this as an exceedingly generous provision for one who has held office as a minister for so short a time, and who has made no contribution to the superannuation fund. I could give cases so numerous as to weary the committee of efforts made to secure small pensions, or what might be regarded as adequate pensions, that have failed because of what I have just mentioned.

Now that we have an understanding of the situation I ask the Minister of Finance to withdraw the item from the estimates. I repeat, however, that I do think if the hon. gentleman will consider the matter carefully he will regard this as a much more generous provision than is usually made for those occupying positions similar to that occupied by the gentleman in question. I do not desire to detract in any sense from what my hon. friend has said as to the services rendered by Mr. Roy in Paris. Apparently, however, I did have an entirely erroneous understanding with regard to his recognition of the limitations imposed upon him, by conditions over which he had no control, to further discharge his duties.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister has indicated that he is largely in accord with what the hon. member for Quebec East has said respecting the Hon. Philippe Roy who is at present the minister representing Canada in Paris. I should like to join my hon. friend and the right hon. gentleman in their observations, and to add that I believe it would be impossible to pay too generous a tribute to the services Mr. Roy has rendered Canada during the time he has held public positions in Paris. I do not believe it would be fair to estimate an allowance to which he might be entitled simply by a computation of the time he has been minister. As has been mentioned Mr. Roy has represented Canada in France since May, 1911. That is nearly a quarter of a century, and includes the trying and difficult period of the war. During the whole of that period and indeed ever since he resided in Canada Mr. Roy's home, as is well known, has been an open house to Canadians. Especially during the war, the services of both Mr. Roy and Madame Roy were placed at the disposition not only of this country but also of France in a manner which could not have been excelled.

It is known, too, that Mr. Roy has held an unique position in Paris both as regards what he has done for Canadians who have gone to that city on official missions or otherwise, and with respect to the confidence he has enjoyed with the members of whatever government may have been in office in France. I do not believe any minister, of any government, at any time, has shared to a fuller degree the confidence of the government to which he has been accredited than has the Hon. Philippe Roy in Paris. I would say, too, that confidence has been enjoyed in equal measure by different British ambassadors who have been resident in Paris. As is known, our country along with other countries has membership in the league of nations, and the minister at Paris has exceptional knowledge of many of the matters which have come before and which pertain to that body. In fact, to some degree he has been the one Canadian minister dealing with European affairs. I do believe that when the time comes to arrange his retiring allowance the government having to do therewith should feel more than justified in considering the entire time Mr. Roy has served in Paris in a representative capacity as being equal to that which it would have been had he been a minister from the beginning.

Inasmuch as the Prime Minister has referred to the subject I should like to say that I believe both he and I are in entire agreement as to the time having come when, with respect to the diplomatic service of Canada, there should be some act of parliament governing the service, which would set out specifically the constributions if any to be made by those who are members of the service, on what basis retirement may be effected, and in what amounts retirement allowances should be granted. If the government had seen fit to bring in a measure of that kind we might well have discussed it, and possibly could have agreed upon it, and have taken action under it. I believe, however, that a measure of the kind might more properly be brought in at the beginning of a new parliament rather than at the close of an old one. I mention the subject at this time, however, so that no matter what the complexion of the new parliament may be there may come from this House of Commons an expression indicating that we do believe—and I believe I may make this observation for hon. members in all sections of the chamber—that if we are to continue to have a diplomatic service the whole service should be regularized as to appointments thereto and retirements therefrom in a manner similar to that followed in the British and other diplomatic services.

I must confess to some degree of relief and satisfaction at what I understood the Prime Minister to say, namely, that there was no intention to retire Mr. Roy at this time.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not mention that at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend did not mention it? Well, I am glad there is opportunity to avoid misunderstanding about it, because what I am about to say should I believe be said at this time. The diplomatic service is somewhat different from other branches of the public service. I have heard my right hon. friend say—he said it expressly in connection with the London appointment—that in making an appointment to that position no government should be expected necessarily to retain the appointee of a previous administration, and that there should at least be an opportunity to a new administration of making an appointment of some one who would be persona grata to itself. That I believe was a perfectly sound point of view.

Mr. BENNETT: That was limited to political appointments, and did not apply to diplomatic appointments.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that what my right hon. friend is contending for may be perfectly sound where diplomatic appointments are made under civil service requirements and in accordance with civil service rules. But I believe the circumstances are entirely different where an appointment is being made to the diplomatic service, of any person who has not up to the time of such appointment been in the diplomatic service, and where such appointment is not in the nature of a promotion within that service.

May I be concrete in my observations and for the moment assume conditions which may or may not arise. In the event of the Liberal party being returned to office I for one would feel that it would mean very much to the government of the day to have the Hon. Philippe Roy in the position of minister at Paris, even if his services were to be retained there for only a short time. He is more familiar than any other person could possibly be with the many matters about which an administration would wish to have full knowledge. He is familiar, for example with all that up to the present has been done in connection with the negotiation of trade agreements. He is familiar, too, with the personnel of, and enjoys the confidence of, members of past and present French governments, and particularly of persons whom a new administration might wish to meet or consult. For these reasons and many others he would, for a new administration, fill the position more effectively than any other person could possibly fill it. Assuming that Mr. Roy is to be retired at some time, however soon or late, I submit that it should not be until after a new parliament has come into being. At that time whatever administration may be in office could indicate its wishes and have them carried out as might be considered necessary. I would certainly feel, however, that if between now and that time an appointment were made to the position of minister in Paris of a person who did not enjoy to the same degree the confidence of a new administration that Mr. Roy has enjoyed, no obligation should or would rest upon a new ministry to retain the services of such person.

I have thought it well to make these observations so that there may be no misunderstanding or possibility of hard feeling in connection with anything which may or may not take place. From what has been said this afternoon I hope it will be sufficiently clear that Mr. Roy is continuing in office to meet whatever fate may come to him sooner or later, and that the decision, whether sooner or later, which is to determine that fate will not be made until the people have spoken and have indicated the administration they wish to have in office during the next few years.

Mr. BENNETT: I must make one further observation. Frequently I have endeavoured to make it clear that in my judgment the position of high commissioner in London is entirely different from that of a diplomatic representative of Canada. One is surely a representative of the government and the other a representative of the Sovereign. The diplomatic representatives who serve us at Tokyo, Paris and other centres are not necessarily representatives of the government, in the narrow political sense. I have acted upon that. If the doctrine suggested had been acted upon we would have retired Sir Herbert Marler from Tokyo and Mr. Roy from Paris shortly after we took office. That has not been done. They have continued in their positions because they were representatives not of a government, but of the country and the King. So long as they continued to discharge their duties in a manner acceptable to the government their former political faith we believed should not be the governing factor in connection with their retention in office. We have acted upon that principle. I will admit that the right hon. gentleman opposite probably would not have done it under similar circumstances.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend should not say that. It is not fair.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of what he said. Here we had Sir Herbert Marler, a former member of his administration. Just think what that means. Here was a former member of the Liberal administration appointed to Tokyo, and yet we have not asked him to retire. Here was a former Liberal senator, a well known and a very pronounced Liberal, very strong in his convictions and in the expression of his opinions, and yet no effort was made to retire him.

In the case of the high commissioner at London I think that the position can be put very simply. He under statute is a political officer. The statute itself indicates that he is a representative of the government, and as I indicated, in the very nature of things he is more closely in touch with the government and with their policies and views than any man who occupies a purely diplomatic post. He has under the statute to deal with so many matters that it is quite clear that that is so. It is an old story now but we certainly did inform Mr. Massey that we thought he should retire from the post to which he had been appointed in the closing days of the former administration, and he did retire accordingly. I think on second thought most men would realize that that was a sound position. I feel perfectly certain that the present high commissioner in London in the event of a change in government will regard it as his duty to retire at once, and I feel equally certain that whether he did or not he would be retired.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understood he had his passage taken already.

Mr. BENNETT: I know that the right hon. gentleman has sources of information that I have not, but I have no such information as would lead me to any such conclusion. He usually comes to this country for his vacation, but he has not even yet applied for leave for his vacation. He usually takes it, if my memory serves me, in August or September, but as I say he has not even yet applied for leave.

I make clear the distinction between the diplomatic position that a minister who serves his country occupies and the position of high commissioner. It never has been the case in England that a minister is retired because there has been a change of government, so far as I have been able to ascertain. If the minister is thought not to be the best available appointment for a particular position he is transferred to another post and somebody else takes his place. That is my information from inquiries.

There is just one thing I do want to say, and it is this: It is not necessary to introduce a statute as the matter stands at present with respect to ministers. I suppose the right hon. gentleman did give some attention to it himself. The fact is that the regulations which are issued in Great Britain with respect to ministers and ambassadors are promulgated by order in council because they are the expression of the terms under which the sovereign's representative discharges his functions in foreign countries. I would put it this way. We had intended to promulgate such regulations and had prepared them accordingly, but in view of the fact that we had but three ministers and that we had passed the general regulations respecting our civil service we did not desire to seem to be endeavouring to press unduly, shall I say, the views which we held as to the desirability of the general terms of the British regulations applying to our own country. The matter rests there. If the minister does not desire to relinquish his post under the circumstances to which I have alluded, that is a matter for him to consider. I do not think it is necessary to suggest that if anyone is appointed the practice which we have pursued would not be followed by hon. gentlemen opposite. We know their attitude of mind would not be quite ours with respect to that matter. We are perfectly certain that if we were to appoint anybody as minister he would be removed as quickly as possible.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not like to enter into a controversy with my right hon. friend as to the status of the ministers representing Canada in foreign countries. He states that those who are diplomatic agents are in a different position from the high commissioner, and seems to suggest that it is not necessary that they should represent their government to the same extent as the high commissioner. Well, the ministers, like the ambassadors, are appointed by a commission under the great seal. They are not ordinary public servants. They are envoys, they are plenipotentiaries, sent to represent their country in a foreign country, and they are subject to recall at any time. I took the trouble to say that my right hon. friend might have done it. They are ambassadors, they are plenipotentiaries, and the country that sends them surely can recall them at any time. Their country is forced to recall them and to issue what is called letters of recall when the country to which they are accredited desires that they be recalled.

Mr. BENNETT: That is very seldom done. There has been only one case on the American continent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: So far as being forced to recall them, that is very seldom done, but in the diplomatic service of any country which has a large number of ministers they are being recalled all the time. As a matter of fact, France since the opening of its legation here has had three ministers within seven years. Mr. Knight was recalled and was replace by Mr. Arsène Henry; Mr. Henry was recalled and was replaced by the present minister. Of course, the case is different with Canada because we have only three ministers, but the doctrine is the same. They are, under international law and practice, envoys, and may be recalled at any time; there is no doubt about that.

My right hon. friend has boasted of the generosity of his government in keeping Mr. Roy in office, an old former Liberal senator. Well, Mr. Roy was senator before 1911; when my right hon. friend took office Mr. Roy had been working for Canada for twenty years in a foreign country, and I think everybody will agree with me that there was no party politics on his part in receiving Canadians while there. He has been working for Canada all the time. Surely his case is a little different from that of a gentleman who might be appointed on the eve of a general election just to find a position for him. So far as Sir Herbert Marler is concerned I must say that I do not know whether my right hon. friend could have easily found a Canadian to go as minister to Japan. When the position was created it was very hard to find anyone to go to that country and I think Sir Herbert Marler went there from a sense of duty to his country. He sacrificed himself and he has done so well that my right hon. friend has given him something which we would not have given him, a title. The conditions are not identical with those which would surround the appointment of a minister to France to replace the present minister on the eve of a general election. I agree with my right hon. friend that the minister represents the king but he also represents the government. The king appoints the minister upon the recommendation of the government and he negotiates for the government and represents the government in everything concerning the public business of his country in the foreign country to which he is accredited. I do not want to add anything to what I have said but I am sure that my right hon. friend will not make any change under the present circumstances.

Amendment agreed to.

To provide, notwithstanding the terms of the Civil Service Act or any other act or law, for payment of honoraria to members of the public service—subject to allocation by the treasury board, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) whose department is most affected by this item prefers that I should make the observations which he would desire to make. There are men in various departments of the public service who have rendered extra services to the country. Upon a former occasion the late Mr. Robb asked for an appropriation of a similar amount to provide for similar payments. In many cases these men have assumed the functions of deputies. Take the case of one gentleman who will be covered by this vote, Mr. Pearson. Mr. Pearson is on the verge of a complete breakdown because of the extra work he did in connection with the price spreads commission. He worked many nights and sometimes well into the next day. This amount is to take care of such cases and the principle was adopted by the late Mr. Robb in dealing with exceptional conditions which arose in connection with public business.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not intend to take exception to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has said but I do think it is desirable that wherever possible the name of the person should be specified.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Robb did not mention names in his estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Whether that was not done formerly or whether it is not being done at the present time, I think it would create a better feeling in the service generally to give full particulars of these special recommendations. In the case mentioned by the Prime Minister, I agree and I think every hon. member will agree that Mr. Pearson performed services which it would have been extremely difficult to have obtained otherwise. The mention of Mr. Pearson's name would not have made it less easy for the item to be passed and I think it might have helped to avoid some of the feeling which is certain to arise among other members of the service where names are not specified and a general power is given.

Item agreed to.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

National research council—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The main estimates contained a vote of something like $400,000 for the national research council and I should like to know what has made necessary an additional amount of $100,000 within the time which has elapsed since the main estimates were before the house.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I shall be glad to give the committee full information. As the right hon. gentleman has stated, vote No. 284 in the main estimates provided an amount of $400,000 which is necessary for existing activities but which does not permit the council effectively to discharge the duties and responsibilities assigned to it. The supplementary estimate is required for four different matters.

First, it is to provide for pressing new activities. These include the transfer to the national research council of the testing laboratories of the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario; the investigation of problems of the building and construction industry, including research on building materials; the organization of a cooperative investigation in the field of aquiculture, limnobiology, and fresh water biology; the coordination of work on the extremely important problem of silicosis; and to provide for any additional new problems which may arise or which may be assigned to the council by the government.

The laboratories of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario at present fix safety standards and test electrical equipment offered for sale in Canada, and their test is accepted by the fire underwriters. There is no such laboratory in any other province, at present the manufacturers depending largely on the underwriters laboratories in the United States. It is extremely undesirable that each province should establish its own laboratory, as this would mean duplication of equipment and operating expense and would inevitably lead to a multiplicity of provincial standards governing the manufacture of electrical equipment, with increased cost to the consumer. The national research council has consequently established a national laboratory for the testing of such equipment for all of the provinces except Ontario, which has its own laboratory. It is now proposed that the national research laboratories should serve the entire dominion in this matter, and although the attorney general of Ontario was at first opposed on the ground of provincial rights, he has changed his view and the way is now clear to transfer these provincial laboratories to the control of the national research council. It is considered expedient that prompt action should be taken in this matter.

The construction industry is the third largest in Canada, but only meagre scientific data are available regarding materials and practices used in construction in the dominion. Further, the use by architects and contractors of information secured from foreign laboratories adversely affects the use of Canadian materials. Considerable sums have been provided by the British government for research in this field and much of this valuable information might be made applicable to Canadian conditions at comparatively small expense. There is also great need for definite information regarding Canadian building materials. The Canadian Construction Association, the Royal Architectural Institute, the Canadian Hospital Council and the Canadian Manufacturers Association have all urged that the national research council undertake work in this field. The council is convinced that both the industry and the public would benefit greatly by such work and that the expenditure would be extremely small compared to the benefits to be derived. This work is extremely important at a time when Canada is planning considerable expenditure on a housing plan.

Second, this vote is to provide grants in aid of research and also to provide for applications received during the coming year. During the four years, 1928 to 1932, the average annual expenditure of the national research council on grants in aid of research in laboratories throughout Canada totalled approximately $140,000. Owing to increased commitments in connection with the establishment of the national research laboratories, combined with a reduced appropriation, the council was able to allocate only $5,000 for this purpose this year, from its existing appropriation. It is therefore considered essential that this small additional amount be provided in order that the council may in some measure discharge its obligation to stimulate research work throughout Canada.

Third, it is to provide for general administration, including increased amounts required for the operation of the laboratories and publication, also for travelling expenses of council members, staff and members of associate committees with the object of coordinating and directing research work on main cooperative projects. For the purpose of coordinating and directing cooperative investigations on major research problems the national research council has in active operation more than twenty-five associate committees with a total membership of several hundred eminent scientists and business men, who are serving without remuneration in directing and carrying on this work. It is necessary that these committees should meet at reasonable intervals to report and discuss past work and future activities. The council has been able to provide for this purpose only $2,400 from its existing appropriation. It is clear that these committees cannot function efficiently unless this appropriation is increased.

It has been necessary for the appropriations for the operation of the national research laboratories to be reduced below the amount provided last year by $3,500, and it is considered essential that this allotment be increased in the interest of efficient operation.

It is also necessary that the allotment for the publication of the Canadian Journal of Research be increased to provide for the publication of the results of researches undertaken in the national research laboratories and in other Canadian laboratories. It is essential that the results of the researches carried on should be made available by publication.

Fourth, the vote is to provide equipment urgently required by the national research laboratories. More than $185,000 actually voted by parliament for equipment in the national research laboratories remained unexpended at the end of the year 1932-33. This equipment was urgently required but it was considered necessary to effect this saving, owing to the serious financial situation then existing. However, it was understood that necessary equipment would be provided in instalments from year to year, and in fulfilment of this understanding the sum of $25,000 was voted in 1933-34 and $30,000 in 1934-35. Therefore, of the amount voted by parliament in 1932-33 for equipment in the national research laboratories, there remains unexpended, at the present time, more than $133,000. They take the view that this amount has been standing to their credit, and they are asking to have a portion voted this year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister think that the financial situation has improved since 1932?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I certainly do. The national research council requests that part of these unexpended moneys previously provided by parliament for this purpose be voted this year to provide equipment urgently required in order effectively to carry on the work of the council. A detailed statement of equipment required by the council can be given if desired. The vote requested will be used for the purchase and installation of equipment listed and also such other equipment as may be necessary for the effective prosecution of new projects undertaken by the council.

Item agreed to.

Governor General's Warrants, 1934-35

Expenses of the royal commission on price spreads and mass buying (governor general's warrants of July 30, November 3, and December 19, 1934), $155,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What was the total cost of this investigation?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. gentleman will recall that part of it was under a committee of the house last year and part of it under a royal commission. The actual cost of the two was in the vicinity of $475,000 plus some printing, the actual amount of which I have never been able to get. I do not know that my department is specifically responsible for checking the matter because it did not come through us. The first part was entirely a House of Commons matter and was in last year's vote, but my understanding is that the actual cost of the whole, including the printing, which of course is under the printing bureau, was about $475,000. It may be a little more or a little less.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A half million, in round figures.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A little less.

Mr. FACTOR: There was a rumour among the commissioners—I could never trace it—that the government succeeded in collecting arrears of taxes from certain corporations. Will the minister make a statement in that regard?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We do not generally deal in rumours, but I have it on good authority that as the result of the activities of the commission there was turned into the coffers of the country a very large sum of money.

Mr. SPENCER: Large enough to pay all the expenses of the commission?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is a matter of rumour; the money was not paid to me, so I do not know.

Mr. SANDERSON: I believe this question was asked the Minister of Finance not long ago and he said there was not.

Mr. GOLDING: I asked the Minister of National Revenue that question on March 12, 1935. The question and answer were as follows:

Mr. Golding: Have any sums been collected by the income tax departments as a result of revelations before the price spreads and mass buying commission, and if so what is the amount?

Mr. Matthews: I am informed that the answer is no; no amount has been collected.

Mr. MANION: That is four months ago.

Mr. GOLDING: If any sum has been collected the committee ought to have that information. This investigation has cost the country a lot of money and I would call the attention of the house to the fact that when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) proposed a resolution asking for an investigation into the spread between the price received by producers and the price paid by consumers for certain goods and agricultural commodities—that resolution was brought in on February 6, 1933—he suggested that the investigation be made through the research council. In view of the enormous expense in connection with this affair, I think that was a very wise suggestion; and had it been acted on the same information could have been obtained at a fraction of the cost. Hon. gentlemen should pay some attention to the statements that have been made in regard to the questions that were answered. Take some of the witnesses who were brought here. It is interesting to take the report of the proceedings and read the evidence given by these witnesses, and then to reflect upon the expense involved in bringing them here. We find that one witness coming from the west and giving evidence was paid—this was part of one day—$149.15, and it would not have required more than a three cent postage stamp to secure from him all the information he gave. About all he did in a constructive way was to recommend that we should have a policy of inflation, and that is what we have had to a certain extent. Another witness brought down cost $150 or a little over, and the only constructive suggestions he offered were these two: first, that the farmer should not sell any of his products on the farm, and secondly, that we ought to have hogs graded on the rail, which has been in effect for some time, in Ontario at any rate, where it is optional. I should like this same gentleman to go to the farmers of Ontario and tell them they should not sell anything on their farms; I fancy he would not get a very good reception. But the point is that that evidence cost over $150, whereas all that was needed was a three cent postage stamp—and you would not have needed that.

I do not think the price spreads commission finished their work at all, because in my opinion they should have investigated some of the prices in connection with the commission itself. This was a price spreads investigating commission, and we have Mr. Sommerville receiving $150 a day and $15 expenses, and Mr. Parry receiving $35 a day and $15 expenses. I think they should have had an investigation there to find out the reason for this spread between these two prices. Further, Mr. Sommerville was paid for 196 days while the committee and the commission sat for only 124 days; in other words, he was paid for 72 days when neither the committee nor the commission was sitting at all.

Mr. SANDERSON: Including Sundays?

Mr. GOLDING: No; I checked that. I asked some questions in regard to this matter. The first was:

> How many days did Norman Sommerville, K.C., act as counsel for the committee and royal commission on price spreads and mass buying?

The answer was this:

> Mr. Norman Sommerville, K.C., acted as counsel for the committee and the royal commission on price spreads and mass buying for 196 days; 124 days of this period were spent in actually attending public sessions of the committee and the commission, while the balance of 72 days was devoted to interviewing witnesses—

Mark you!

> —consultations with auditors, investigators, and in preparing the evidence to be adduced before the committee or commission.

The second question was:

> What was his remuneration per day?

The answer was:

> Mr. Sommerville's remuneration was $150 per day for the above period. This rate of remuneration was authorized by the committee and later confirmed by the commission. During the summer Mr. Sommerville—

Listen to this.

> —devoted a considerable amount of time to the gathering and preparation of evidence for submission to the commission, to consultations with auditors and investigators, and to interviewing of witnesses, but for this work no account was submitted and no remuneration paid.

The answer to the first question told us that for those seventy-two days when neither the committee nor the commission was sitting, he was paid, and it gave what he was doing during that time, namely, interviewing witnesses and having consultations with auditors and investigators. In the answer to the next question we are told that he was doing that during the summer and was not paid at all for that work.

Mr. HACKETT: Was that not in addition?

Mr. GOLDING: I can quite understand that may be the interpretation of the answer, but I was under the impression that this was an investigation, not a prosecution; and what I and the country would like to know is why those witnesses were approached, interviewed and no doubt consulted and prompted before they came before the committee or the commission.

An hon. MEMBER: Be careful.

Mr. GOLDING: I have not any doubt that is what happened. My opinion—and I think this is the opinion of the people generally—is that those witnesses should have come before the committee or commission without any interference whatsoever and given their evidence. Furthermore, we find a list of witnesses that were paid and a large number of witnesses that were not paid at all. If this was an investigation and the whole object was to ascertain the facts and the truth of the situation, one witness ought to be paid just as well as another; I think that is a fair submission. We have the spread between the fees Mr. Parry and Mr. Sommerville were paid. I would like to ask the minister this: What did the firm of auditors, Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash put in for the services of their auditors per individual per day? That is the first question.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Without questioning the hon. gentleman's right to discuss this matter at all under this vote—

Mr. BROWN: Why mention it?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If the hon. gentleman will allow me to continue, perhaps I can make the position clear; I do not know that it calls for any interruption at all. I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman and the committee that the expenditures of the house committee and of the royal commission were not under the control of any department of government, and the information, if it is necessary, ought to be sought from the committee or the royal commission itself. We had no control over the amount paid to witnesses or to counsel—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, the auditor general may have had some control, but I understand that in every case the committee voted the money; it was our duty to pay it and it was paid. So far as I am concerned, as minister of this department, I assume no responsibility for what the committee did in the way of expenditures. The house voted the money and it is a responsibility of every member of the house just as much as it is of the government. As regards the amount paid to the auditors, which of course was very large, I do not know how the amount was distributed to any particular individual. That is not the way in which these services are charged for by an auditing firm. They do a job and charge a sum. No doubt the items for the auditors' work came before the committee; the committee must have thought they were satisfactory because my understanding is that the committee unanimously voted to pay these bills.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The question is not whether the committee did so; the point is that we are entitled to receive the information and the minister can get it from the auditor general who must have audited all these vouchers and receipts. Surely when an hon. member asks for information, he is entitled to receive it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If I had had any notice that this matter was coming up—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Get the information to-morrow.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I shall be glad to get whatever information is available, but as a matter of fact the Department of Trade and Commerce had no responsibility for the expenditure.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I quite appreciate that, but the House of Commons is entitled to the information.

Mr. FACTOR: May I as a member of the committee say that we were never consulted about the auditors' bills. The amount of the counsel fee was fixed by the committee and the commission, but the fees of the auditors were never submitted to the committee or the commission. I do not know yet how they were fixed.

Mr. BENNETT: The accounts were rendered to the committee and the commission and certified, and the auditor general paid them.

Mr. FACTOR: They were never submitted to the committee or commission for approval.

Mr. GOLDING: I want to thank the minister because I think he is fair. He has not the information.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the minister bring the information to-morrow?

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, July 4, 1935

The house met at eleven o'clock.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD—DECISIONS

Mr. DUBOIS:

1. Is the government aware that the Canadian Farm Loan Board has not yet reached a decision with respect to certain loan applications it received some two months ago?

2. If so, will the government take the necessary steps to require the board to expedite its findings?

Mr. RHODES:

1 and 2. The government is advised that loan applications received by the board in the province of Quebec are being disposed of as soon as is reasonably possible following the receipt of appraisal reports and of such additional information as may be required in determining the merits of the individual applications. Following the appointment of a chief executive officer for the province of Quebec on May 16th last, the work of securing and instructing competent men to handle the largely increased volume of appraisal work in the province has necessarily taken some time to complete. Appraisal operations in the province are, however, now fully under way.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION—AUTOMOBILES

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. During the last five years of the Quebec harbour commission, under the administration of commissioners Power, Gauvin, Boutin-Bourassa (a) how many automobiles were purchased; (b) of what make were they; (c) what was the price of each such automobile?

2. Under the administration of commissioners O'Meara, Bertrand and Leblond (a) how many automobiles were purchased; (b) of what make were they; (c) what was the price of each such automobile?

3. What was the total amount of travelling expenses allowed to commissioners Power, Gauvin, Boutin-Bourassa during the last five years of their administration?

4. What was the cost of the upkeep of a garage for repairs to the automobiles of Messrs. Power, Gauvin, Boutin-Bourassa, during the last five years of their administration?

5. What was the total amount paid under the Power, Gauvin, Boutin-Bourassa administration for the purchase of automobiles, travelling expenses, chauffeurs and other personal expenses of such commissioners?

6. What was the total amount paid under the O'Meara, Bertrand and Leblond administration for travelling expenses, purchase of automobiles, chauffeurs and other personal expenses of such commissioners?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

The following information has been furnished by the Quebec Harbour Commissioners:

1. (a) Ten.

(b) and (c)—

1926	Ford	$ 545 00
	Cadillac Big 6	5,750 00
	Studebaker Big 6	3,465 75
1927	Studebaker Big 6	3,380 00

2. (a) Two.

(b) and (c)—

1931	Plymouth	$ 880 00
	Studebaker Truck	1,400 00

3. $9.785.30.

4. $15,353.51.

5. $132,752.42.

6. $79,507.79.

*ALCOHOL TAX

Mr. POULIOT:

What revenue has accrued from the tax on alcohol for each fiscal year since 1930?

Mr. MATTHEWS: The only tax on alcohol is a sales tax of six per cent. Information as to the amount collected is not available because separate statistics for each commodity are not maintained. However I suggest that the information the hon. member for Témiscouata may desire relates to the amount of customs and excise duties collected on spirituous liquors during the periods mentioned. This information I now table as follows:

Fiscal year	Import duties	Excise duties
1930-31	$19,069,440 00	$10,693 535 76
1931-32	13,617,437 00	7,100,814 81
1932-33	6,537,315 00	6.320 345 33
1933-34	5,894,311 00	6.333.106 61
1934-35	5,748,342 00	7,208 506 96
1935-36 (2 mos.)	546,425 00	868,649 61

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

GUARANTEE OF RAILWAY BONDS

Mr. RINFRET:

1. What amount of cash was paid to Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways, and what amount of their bonds was guaranteed by the dominion government from 1900 to July, 1911?

2. What amount of cash was paid to these railways and amount of bonds guaranteed by same from July, 1911, to the taking over of each road?

3. What was the estimated value of each road and amount in cash or kind paid by the government for same?

4. What is the amount of bonds of the Canadian National system at present held by public, and what are the yearly interests on same?

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY ON THE APPROACHING TERMINATION OF HIS OFFICIAL CONNECTION WITH CANADA

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was about to proceed with a motion when the first question was called, and I thought it well to conclude that order of business before proceeding with the motion which last night I indicated I proposed to make.

I move, seconded by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) that an humble address be submitted to His Excellency the Governor General in the following words:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Bessborough, a member of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of The Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of the Dominion of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, ... the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, assure Your Excellency of our deep and sincere regret at the approaching termination of your official connection with our country as the representative of His Gracious Majesty. At the same time we hasten to add the hope that this official termination will not mean the severance of those ties which have so happily been established between Your Excellency and our country and its people.

During your term of office Your Excellency has never spared yourself in your efforts to secure accurate and intimate knowledge of all parts of our dominion. You have, accordingly, gained an understanding of our problems and our possibilities, as profound as it has been sympathetic. Your assiduous devotion to the affairs of state, and your deep and human interest in the widespread activities of our people have won for you the warm regard of all Canadians. Your encouragement of dramatic art, an important but often neglected aspect of our national development, will be felt for long years to come.

Your Excellency has been with us during a period of world-wide economic depression and social strain. You have seen the effects of that depression on our national economy. You have, however, also seen its failure to destroy our national morale. Amidst the tribulations of economic distress, as in the stern test of war, Canada has stood firm, and, with renewed courage and determination, is ready again to continue her forward march.

Our expressions of regret at Your Excellency's departure would, indeed, be incomplete if we did not associate in that regret Her Excellency, The Countess of Bessborough, whose graciousness and charm have won for her an affection throughout Canada which is both deep and widespread.

We beg that on your return to your homeland Your Excellency will convey to His Majesty the assurance of Canada's steadfast loyalty to the crown and devotion to his throne and person, so strikingly demonstrated in the recent and unforgettable celebrations attendant upon His Majesty's silver jubilee.

I think it possibly desirable that I should make a few observations before the house adopts this motion. I say that because of the apparent misunderstanding that has arisen in some quarters as to the methods adopted in the appointment of a governor general and the duties and responsibilities connected with that office. It will be recalled by all who are familiar with our institutions that at confederation the British North America Act provided that the executive authority in this dominion should continue to be vested in the queen, now the king, but inasmuch as the king cannot be present in Canada for the discharge of the duties of chief executive of the state, it becomes essential that he should designate and appoint some person to represent him. That person is, by our constitution, designated the governor general, and under the letters patent issued by successive sovereigns the office is constituted in the terms of "governor general and commander in chief of the Dominion of Canada." Obviously, the appointment of such an official is one of very great importance, for it involves two questions; first, the conclusion by the sovereign that the person designated is one possessing his confidence because it involves an appointment with consequences similar in many respects to those which follow from the granting of a power of attorney to a person whom one may select. Once the sovereign was satisfied that a particular person commanded his confidence and was in every way worthy in his opinion to be designated as his attorney or as governor general in fact of this dominion, the next question of course was to determine by whom the recommendation should be made for the appointment.

Up until the last appointment the recommendation in point of fact came from the British government, and the recommendation to the sovereign was the recommendation of the Prime Minister of Great Britain. After the conference of 1926 and the statute of Westminster it of course is clear that the recommendation for the appointment of a governor general is no longer made by the Prime Minister of Great Britain but by the Prime Minister of the dominion affected.

A few days ago I was reading a dispatch that came from London, indicating that there was a profound misunderstanding as to the method followed in connection with the appointment of a governor general for this dominion. Hence I make these observations.

The appointment thus being made the instructions given to the governor general by His Majesty constitute his letters of authority, just as a power of attorney which may be given by one person to another is the document that controls the extent to which the powers and responsibilities and functions are to be exercised.

The additional reason I direct attention to this is because a condition arose when the present governor general took over his duties in Canada quite unparalleled in our history so far as I have been able to ascertain. It will be recalled that in 1926 His Majesty issued his letters patent to Lord Willingdon, now viceroy of India. In the ordinary course of events he would occupy his position until the fall of 1931 or at least until some time in the year 1931. In 1930 when it was apparent that a new governor general would have to be selected I discussed the matter with the British authorities and it was then believed that there would be no possible likelihood of the office being vacated in Canada before the expiration of the usual term of the governor general, but later owing to difficulties that need not here be mentioned the British government by cable asked us whether or not there would be any objection to their suggesting the name of the governor general of Canada, Lord Willingdon, to His Majesty as prospective viceroy of India. Lord Willingdon was advised in the same sense, and the government of Canada had to decide whether or not, having regard to the public interest as a whole, it should give its consent to such action being taken as would prevent the usual term of office being completed by the then incumbent. We chose of course, the course that involved the appointment of the Earl of Willingdon as viceroy of India. We believed that with his experience in India as a governor of I think two of the provinces it was desirable that he should serve the greater cause and become viceroy of India. He was thereupon appointed.

It was not possible on a few moments' notice to appoint a successor, and it is in that regard that I now desire to make a few observations. When Lord Willingdon left these shores and went to England he still continued to be governor general of Canada, and it was essential that he should so continue until his successor arrived in Canada and took office, whereupon his commission terminated. Lord Willingdon left Canada on January 15, 1931, and immediately the responsibility fell upon this government under the new practice to take immediate steps for the appointment of a successor. Obviously had we not been of the opinion from the information received that that contingency would not arise action would have been taken to deal with the matter in the fall of 1930 when members of this administration were in London. But the matter had to be dealt with, and it was dealt with, as speedily as possible, for Lord Bessborough arrived in Canada on April 4, 1931. For the first time the procedure became different from what it had theretofore been. For the first time the recommendation of a governor general had to come from the Prime Minister of Canada, and not from the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and obviously the powers that had always been exercised by the sovereign had to be exercised much more rapidly than had theretofore been the case, because there was no opportunity to discuss matters personally in London with those who were interested.

Names were submitted to His Majesty. So far as I know all of them were satisfactory to the king. But the question of securing the willingness of any person thus named to come to Canada was an entirely different matter. Lord Bessborough, out of a sense of public duty, and in order to deal with a problem of great difficulty so far as we were concerned, accepted the office, and the recommendation having been made he was duly appointed. For the first time the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs countersigned the commission under which the governor general was appointed, it being handed to him on his arrival in Canada for, as he is sworn in the commission is read, and later published in the Gazette. I mention this because there was an interval of about six weeks only in which it was possible to secure a governor general for this country. The usual practice has been to designate the governor general about six months in advance so that he may be able to conclude his business and make arrangements for an absence from home of what may be five years. To any of us that would be a matter of importance, and much more so to those who may be concerned with business and with affairs of many kinds, and who have to look forward to leaving their own homes for so long a period. However, yielding to the request that was made, Lord Bessborough was appointed and accepted office, arriving here on April 4, 1931. The date has a profound bearing upon subsequent events because in the ordinary course it is not usual for a governor general to arrive at that time of year. It is an inconvenient time for reasons that will at once commend themselves to members of this house. When His Excellency's term of office had reached four years he had to deal with the problem in one of two ways. If our request that he should remain until the spring of 1936 were given effect to, Lord Bessborough would terminate his office here in the spring of next year and remain until the fall by arrangements that could be made and thus permit his successor to follow the usual course of commencing his term of office in the fall. But there were other conditions which made it desirable that the other alternative should be adopted. I think I should say frankly that medical advice indicated that it would be rather difficult for the Countess of Bessborough to remain in this country another winter. His Excellency with the full approval of the government requested the king to permit him to retire this fall. His Majesty, in view of all the circumstances and having regard to the delicate matter to which I have referred, agreed that this action should be taken; hence it is that Lord Bessborough is terminating his office now rather than at a later period.

I mention this for another reason. There was a vague rumour, I am not quite sure whether it was published, that His Excellency was leaving Canada earlier than usual because of differences with his Prime Minister and the government. Nothing that I can conceive of could be more wholly inaccurate than that. For many years I have had occasion to have official relations with men in high office and I say frankly that I have never been on terms of greater friendliness and friendship with any official than I have been with the governor general of this dominion. I make that statement because in fairness to him it is not right that a rumour of that kind should find credence or circulation without being denied, His Excellency not being in a position to make a statement himself.

It was essential that a period of months should elapse in which his successor designate should find an opportunity to make arrangements to come to Canada. I shall not deal with that more than to say that the Governor General Designate of Canada, Lord Tweedsmuir, will in ordinary course be here this fall to begin his duties under the new procedure which I have taken some time to describe to the house.

The position of governor general of Canada is not an easy one. There is an opinion on the part of some that it consists of the discharge of very few duties and the enjoyment of much leisure. Such is not quite the case. In the first place, the governor general is the personal representative of His Majesty the King, which is indicated to the public by the king's flag that is flown wherever he may be at any time in this dominion. The governor general has great and onerous responsibilities in connection with the administration of government. Proposed measures are submitted to him for his consideration. If he has had much experience, his advice and counsel are of the utmost value to those who are responsible for the conduct of government. In this case, Lord Bessborough had been for years a member of the British House of Commons. On the death of his father he succeeded to a seat in the House of Lords, where, while in England, he had been rather generally in attendance. That gave him a very wide knowledge of the working of our institutions, a very wide knowledge of parliamentary practice and procedure and enabled the prime minister of the day, whoever he might be, to discuss with one who knew by practice and not by theory the difficulties that governments have to encounter in dealing with problems of legislation and allied problems that concern governments in any British country. In this instance the experience of Lord Bessborough has been of the utmost value. I desire to pay my tribute to his interest in everything that concerned the welfare of this country from the standpoint of legislation and to his willingness at all times to assist those responsible for government with his counsel and advice and with the benefits of his wide and extensive experience.

I can say that also with respect to another matter. His Excellency had had wide experience in business. Before he came to these shores he was interested in many undertakings and his wide business experience in close association with financial leaders in the city of London have been of the greatest possible value to the Dominion of Canada. By maintaining personal contact, by correspondence with his former associates in London, he is sometimes able to correct misapprehensions and misunderstandings which have existed. When matters of business are discussed with him, as they have been, out of the large experience that he has had in the city of London he has rendered great service to our country. I desire to give my personal testimony upon that point.

As to the interest which Their Excellencies have had in the welfare of Canada, it is not my purpose to do more than refer to the terms of the address itself. They have visited every province in the dominion and have seen conditions as they really exist. They have talked with people on the farms, with the fisherman by his boat; they have talked with those in mill and factory, as well as those working in offices and the financial institutions of the country. They have derived in a large measure first hand information of all that concerns our well-being. In moments of depression it has been the privilege of the governor general to make suggestions that have encouraged the people and enabled them to take up their burdens and task with renewed determination in meeting conditions which confronted them. All these observations as to the manner in which the duties of a great office have been discharged I know are unnecessary for me to make, but I desire in my place here to pay a tribute to the disinterested character of the services rendered by His Excellency to this dominion in times of great difficulty.

I need hardly say that there was a peculiar affection for the Countess of Bessborough on the part of the Canadian people when she first came to these shores. The subsequent birth of a son gave cause for an increased sentimental attachment on the part of our people and the fact that the boy bears the name St. Lawrence is a constant reminder of his having been born in the province of Quebec and of the great part which the river bearing that name plays in the economic life of Canada. I have trespassed longer upon the time of the house than I had intended but there were some misapprehensions and misunderstandings which I felt should be cleared up. I shall content myself with saying that for disinterested service, for a high conception of the duties of a great office and in the performance of these duties and responsibilities with dignity and zeal, Lord Bessborough will rank among any of his predecessors, and the gracious charm of his consort, the Countess of Bessborough, will never be forgotten by Canadians who have been privileged to make her acquaintance. I move the adoption of the address I have just read.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in seconding the motion just made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and in associating myself and hon. members on this side of the house with the sentiments expressed in the address which it is proposed to present to His Excellency the Governor General on the approaching termination of his official connection with our country.

As the Prime Minister has indicated, the position of governor general holds for the occupant of that high office, relationships of the greatest significance and importance. The first of these relationships referred to by the Prime Minister is that of the governor general to the crown. There is also the relationship of the governor general to the government and to parliament and, as the Prime Minister has also indicated, there is the relationship of the governor general to the people of the country. I doubt if an incumbent of that high office could wish for more than that it should be said of him at the conclusion of his term of office that, as respects these relationships, he had been faithful to the best traditions which cluster around all three. This, I believe, can truly be said of the Earl of Bessborough. It can be said that, in his relationship to the crown, to the government and parliament, and to the people, His Excellency has fulfilled the expectations of his sovereign, and, as we have just heard, of the government which was responsible for his appointment.

The Prime Minister has referred at some length to the relationship of the governor general to the crown. It is true, as the right hon. gentleman has said, that in common with all our interimperial relations the position of governor general has undergone farreaching and fundamental change with the course of time. It is not so long ago that the appointment of the governor general was made, as the Prime Minister has indicated, at the instance of the government not of Canada but of Great Britain. The extent to which there has been consultation between the two governments has varied considerably from time to time, but I am sure I am right when I say that the voice of the Canadian government has been increasingly heard and recognized as the years have gone by. It is a distinguishing mark of His Excellency's appointment that in letter as well as in spirit the appointment was made on the advice of the Canadian Prime Minister without any intervention on the part of the government of Great Britain. As we are touching on these matters historically it is perhaps permissible at the moment for me to indicate how far that development had gone prior to the time at which my right hon. friend came into office.

The Prime Minister has referred to the appointment of His Excellency Lord Willingdon to the position of viceroy of India. I recall that at the time it became necessary to choose a successor to Lord Byng, then governor general, the British government communicated with the government of Canada in the matter. The British government submitted names which it thought might be acceptable, but the British government was informed by the government of Canada that we would wish to have included, among any names that might be submitted, the name of Lord Willingdon. In a communication to the Prime Minister of Great Britain, speaking as the Prime Minister of Canada, I pointed out that we were not anxious, at that particular time, to raise the question of at whose instance the governor general of Canada should be appointed as between the government of Great Britain and the government of Canada. I stated that if the government of Great Britain was prepared to carry out the wish of the Canadian government in the matter, as had been more or less the case in the past, that question would not be raised, but that we maintained the position that the appointment was one for which, like others related to Canada, the Canadian ministry should be responsible. When the imperial conference of 1926 took place in London I brought up the matter there, and one of the subjects I submitted for consideration at the conference was the position of the governor general with respect to the government by which he should be appointed. I took the position that the governor general should be the appointee of His Majesty's government of the dominion in which he was expected to be the representative of the crown. That matter was fully considered by the conference of 1926, and as hon. members who are familiar with its proceedings know, a resolution was adopted unanimously by the conference of 1926 approving and asserting that as the position. With the enactment of the statute of Westminster no further word was needed to make it quite clear that so far as the appointment of the governor general of a self-governing British dominion thereafter was concerned that the appointment would be made on the exclusive recommendation and responsibility of the Prime Minister of the day, having always in mind, as the Prime Minister has just pointed out, that whoever is appointed is the representative of His Majesty the King and that naturally His Majesty's own wishes in the matter must also be given the greatest respect and consideration.

A further relationship to which the Prime Minister has referred is that of the governor general to the government and to parliament. Of the relationship of His Excellency to the government, I, of course, cannot speak; the Prime Minister alone can tell us of that. But may I say to my right hon. friend at once, when he mentions that there have been rumours of some difference between His Excellency the Governor General and the Prime Minister, that I for one have heard no rumour of the kind, nor am I aware of anyone who has. There have been many rumours of differences between my right hon. friend and some of those who are very close to him; we know of one that has resulted in a very marked separation. But may I say that so far as the governor general is concerned I have heard of nothing of the kind, and I was not surprised to hear my right hon. friend say, as he did, that in the discharge of his own onerous duties he had found the wide political experience of Lord Bessborough and His Excellency's large financial and business experience as well a very great help to him while he has been in office, and that he had found in the intimate associations which he had been privileged to enjoy with the present governor general much for which he will long cherish a grateful memory and appreciation.

As to the relations of the governor general to parliament, there again it is for the Prime Minister to speak. But as leader of His Majesty's opposition and, in that position, having some responsibility to view generally all situations affecting parliament, I might perhaps be permitted to say a word. I believe that, from the beginning of the time Lord Bessborough came to Canada up to the present moment, His Excellency not only has sought but has succeeded, as between political parties in this country, in maintaining an attitude that has been scrupulously impartial. And may I go a step further and say that I feel that, on many occasions, a word spoken in season, and a kindly act on the part of Lord Bessborough as the king's representative, have gone very far in some situations that were extremely irritating and baffling to help to make a rough place smoother than it otherwise would have been. Here again I join with the Prime Minister in appreciation of the difficult position of a governor general in what is expected of him in the matter of travel and speaking throughout the country, particularly in times of great depression and strain. Inevitably there must be a colouring of all efforts of an administration by the character of the times in which the administration is carried on. It has been Lord Bessborough's good or ill fortune to be in Canada in a period when, as mentioned in the address, the country has been suffering great depression, and strain. I think that the addresses His Excellency has given from time to time, and which have always had about them a note of optimism, of hope and of faith, are deserving of mention and praise. He has sought at all times to give encouragement to the people. We know of his effort to become acquainted with all parts of the country, of his effort to become acquainted with the people, of his desire to inform himself of conditions and to identify himself with great causes, and of the extent to which he has been successful in identifying himself with and furthering patriotic and philanthropic as well as cultural developments in our country.

It is wholly appropriate that the address should contain special reference to the interest which His Excellency has taken in dramatic art. I for one would like to have seen that interest and encouragement find its natural and complete fulfilment in the establishment of a national theatre in Canada. However, that consummation may come in the course of time, and, if it comes, it will owe its inspiration more than anything else to the dramatic competitions with which His Excellency's name will be permanently associated.

There is one other memorial expressive of broad human sympathies which I believe will prove to be of an enduring character and regarding which I think it is appropriate to say just a word, and that is the great personal interest taken by Their Excellencies in the inauguration and promotion of the cancer fund established at the time of the king's silver jubilee. We know it is due to the magnanimity of His Majesty that the fund is being used for research in Canada and for the treatment of cancer in Canada, but I believe it is an open secret that the form which the gift assumed owed much to a suggestion of His Excellency.

I believe all hon. members, and the country generally, will appreciate very much, and regard as eminently fitting, the reference which is made in the address to the part which has been taken in all matters pertaining to Government House and His Excellency's social and other responsibilities by Her Excellency the Countess of Bessborough. In referring to Her Excellency's "graciousness and charm" the words of the address have been well chosen. I am sure we all agree that Her Excellency has won, in a very complete way, both the admiration and the affection of the people of this country.

In conclusion may I add that in saying good-bye to Their Excellencies, we shall hope they will carry away from Canada memories as cherished and as pleasant as those which they are leaving in our midst. When again in the old country they will I am sure often think of the days of their sojourn in Canada. In so doing I trust they will always feel there is in Canada an abiding interest in all that pertains to their welfare and that of the members of their distinguished family, and that they have at all times the best of wishes of the Canadian people.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): In the absence of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), I would like to say on behalf of myself and members of this group that we join very heartily in the kindly sentiments expressed at this time by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) to Lord and Lady Bessborough. I trust Their Excellencies may carry with them the very kindliest remembrances of their stay in Canada, and I am sure we will all be glad to welcome them back to this country at any time they may be able to visit us.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT moved, seconded by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King):

That a message be sent to the Senate, informing their honours that this house has passed an address to His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of the approaching termination of His Excellency's official connection with this country, and request that their honours unite with this house in said address.

And that the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

SALMON TRAP REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): I would like to direct a question to the acting Minister of Fisheries. I am in receipt of a complaint from fishermen on Vancouver island in regard to the use of traps on the shore from west of Sooke harbour as far as Sheringham and east of the harbour as far as Beechey Head. I think the chief complaint of my correspondent is that the regulation, that is as regards the thirty-six hours a week close season, is not being carried out. I wonder whether the acting Minister of Fisheries could make a statement in that regard.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries): The hon. gentleman wrote me a letter which he handed me yesterday, and also intimated that he wished to ask a question to-day on this matter. The situation is that the regulations call for the observance of the forty-eight hour weekly close season by the traps. A fishery patrolman is placed on duty in the trap net area each season to see that there is compliance with these requirements. In addition to that the district fisheries inspector makes periodic inspections.

Complaint having been made, it will certainly be investigated further, but I may draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that it has been suggested to the fishermen concerned, that if they will, they may recommend the appointment of an honorary fisheries guardian who can represent their interests and make observations continually as they see fit. The department has no reason to object to that suggestion.

VALCARTIER RELIEF CAMP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has any information he could give the house with regard to conditions in the relief camp at Valcartier where two thousand men are reported to have quit work, and what steps, if any, are being taken by the government?

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Minister of National Defence): One thousand nine hundred and eleven men decided yesterday not to work and they are quietly remaining in the camp for the present, carrying on such camp duties as are necessary for the preservation of the camp and the comfort of the men. It has been intimated to them that if they have a statement which they desire to make with regard to their conditions, a representative of the government will proceed there in due course to listen to what complaints they have to make and to give consideration to them.

LOAN TO NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): On Tuesday the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) raised a question as to whether the guarantee which was given regarding a certain advance to Newfoundland had been referred to in the 1934 report of the director of unemployment relief. He will find that the guarantee is referred to and the reference will be found on page 44 of the report. I may say further to my hon. friend that the guarantee was also referred to in the budget speech of this year and also appears in the public accounts. No demands have accrued under the guarantee.

CANADIAN GRAIN BOARD

PURCHASE, STORAGE AND MARKETING OF WHEAT AND OTHER GRAINS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee on Bill 98, to provide for the constitution and powers of the Canadian grain board (as amended).

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On the short title.

Mr. RALSTON: I think it may be well now for me to make a few remarks in regard to this bill as it comes from the committee. I hope that what I have to say may be of some assistance in connection with the consideration of the bill in committee, and indicate the general attitude which I took and I think which many of those with me may take in regard to the bill. No one intends at this time to detain the committee at any great length on the discussion of this matter, notwithstanding that, as has been agreed I think in the house generally, this is probably the most important piece of legislation which has been before the house during this session of parliament. I think hon. members will agree, I am sure the members of the special committee will agree, that the appointment of a special committee and the reference of this bill to that special committee were amply justified, in view of the information which came before the committee. It is evident, I think, that it would have been a gross dereliction of duty for the committee to have attempted to consider this bill in all its phases without the information which was given by the different witnesses. The matter involves, as we know, a carry-over of something like 228,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the handling of this year's crop. As was agreed by all the witnesses before the committee, I think, and as I am sure was agreed by the committee itself in view of the form the bill has taken, the greatest problem which we had before us and have before us to-day and which this board will have before it is the accumulation of that carry-over of some 228,000,000 bushels as of May 31, 1935. It was felt that in order to avoid, if possible, a further accretion to that accumulation, and in order, if possible, to give the board some lead with regard to the manner in which it should administer the act, there should be some knowledge of the operations which have been carried on from 1930 to 1945 by the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, backed by the guarantee of the government. That information was forthcoming. I do not propose to detain the committee at any length with the figures, because they are on the records of the committee, but I should like to put on Hansard just the highlights of the information which was elicited there.

There were given to the committee the holdings of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, from July 1, 1931, to May 1, 1935, in fact down to June 20, 1935. That involves the study of a good many sets of figures. For the benefit of the committee I think it well to put on Hansard simply the holdings as at the end of each calendar year during the administration of Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited, the holdings as at the end of each crop year, and also the general ebb and flow of purchases and sales during the period. Besides the pool wheat which they took over, they had what is known as special wheat, which means wheat purchased with the idea of supporting or stabilizing the market or assisting in the sale of pool wheat:

	Pool holdings	Special wheat	Total
Dec. 31, 1931	76,728,000	7,825,000	84,553,000
Dec. 31, 1932	76,728,000	75,717,000	152,445,000
Dec. 31, 1933	76,728,000	113,409,000	190,137,000
Dec. 31, 1934	76,728,000	158,483,000	235,211,000
May 1, 1935	76,116,000	152,446,000	228,562,000

The closing prices as of December 31 in each of these years which prices I think would be for the next May future, and are basis Fort William, were as follows:

Dec. 31, 1931	59⅜
Dec. 31, 1932	41⅞
Dec. 31, 1933	61¼
Dec. 31, 1934	78½
May 31, 1935	82⅞

In December, 1932, wheat went down to 38½, that is the month which has been frequently referred to by the Prime Minister as the time when wheat went to the lowest price.

The cost of all the wheat as of May 31, 1935, as given by Mr. Findlay, the accountant of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers, Limited, was 85·94 cents per bushel. That is the cost of the pool wheat and the special wheat. The cost of the special wheat was 79·011 cents per bushel. The cost of the pool wheat as of August 31, 1931, when it was taken over was 60·53 cents. Added to that, in order to make a rough calculation of the present cost, should be the carrying charges for three and three quarter years at approximately ten cents a year, bringing the cost of that wheat to something near a dollar a bushel. That is the situation which we had as of May 31, 1935; there were 228,000,000 bushels on hand of pool and special wheat, and we are faced with what is calculated roughly to be a crop of about 400,000,000 bushels for 1935-36.

Then, I should like to put on record the holdings and prices as of the ends of crop years during that period. These are the figures:

July 31, 1931
Pool wheat	76,728,000
Special wheat	3,178,000
Total		79,906,000	52⅝ cts.
July 31, 1932
Pool wheat	76,728,000
Special wheat	23,620,000
Total		100,330,000	57½ cts.
July 29, 1933
Pool wheat	76,728,000
Special wheat	69,085,000
Total		145,813,000	79⅛ cts.
July 28, 1934
Pool wheat	76,728,000
Special wheat	100,130,000
Total		176,858,000	86 cts.
May 31, 1935
Pool wheat	76,116,000
Special wheat	152,446,000
Total		228,562,000	82⅞ cts.

The May figures are the same figures I gave when I was giving the holdings at the ends of calendar years. Running down through the years I shall repeat the holdings at the end of the month of December and in the present year in the month of May:

	Bushels
Dec. 31, 1931	84,553,000
Dec. 31, 1932	152,445,000
Dec. 31, 1933	190,137,000
Dec. 31, 1934	235,211,000
May 31, 1935	228,562,000

Then in the table I gave previously I indicated that at July 31, 1931, the holdings were 79,906,000; July 29, 1933, 145,813,000; July 28, 1934, 176,858,000 and May 31, 1935, 228,562,000 bushels.

Just to complete the picture, and without going into detail I should like to give a statement of what I might describe as the ebb and flow of purchases and sales during that period. The statement I have given simply indicates the net amounts on hand as of those dates. Those net amounts however have not been produced by constant purchases or constant sales but by purchases and sales. As will be seen by the figures the ebb, I am sorry to say, has been a good deal less than the flow. On July 31, 1931, we took over 76,728,000 bushels of pool wheat. On December 31, 1931, we had made net purchases of special wheat amounting to 7,825,000 bushels. Then, I should like members of the committee to note this. Jumping right to September 30, 1932, we had sold all the special wheat on hand as of that date and had reduced our pool wheat by 5,391,000 bushels. That was as of September 30, 1932. Hon. members will recall that that was about the time of the Ottawa agreements. By December 31, 1932, though, we had again purchased 80,000,000 bushels of wheat, 75,000,000 bushels of which would be allocated to special and the other 5,000,000 bushels to make up the shortage in pool quantities which had been shown as of September 30, 1932. So we emerge on December 31, 1932, with about 75,000,000 bushels of special wheat on hand.

Then, let us follow the ebb and flow from that time forward. We began 1933 with about 75,700,000 bushels. In January we bought 1,000,000 bushels; in March we sold 4,000,000 bushels; in April we sold 1,200,000 bushels and bought 600,000 bushels, leaving a net sale of 600,000 bushels. So it appears that in March and April the net sales were 4,600,000 bushels. That leaves an amount on hand as of April 22, of 72,000,000 bushels.

Then from April 22 to June 24, 1933, the amount on hand was practically constant, there being just one sale inside of those two months. That was a sale of 850,000 bushels; and there was one purchase of 640,000 bushels, so that for these two months the quantities on hand remained practically constant. Prices at that time were stiffening considerably. From July 1, to July 19, 1933, there were various substantial sales. Twenty-nine million bushels were sold between those dates. Then, from July 20 to August 12, there were purchases of 34,500,000 bushels leaving a net result on July and August operations of 77,000,000 bushels on hand. During the fall there was purchased 56,000,000 bushels of wheat, so that the total special wheat as of December 31, 1933, stood at 133,000,000 bushels, plus the pool wheat standing at 76,000,000 bushels.

Then, from January to the middle of June, 1934, we sold 38,000,000 bushels of wheat, and there were very substantial liquidation operations. For the two months from the week ending June 16 to that ending August 11, there were no sales, and prices were still going up. In fact there was a purchase of 3,000,000 bushels. From August 11 to December 31, 1934, we purchased 61,000,000 bushels, and up to May 31, 1935,—the end of the present year—we sold 6,000,000 bushels, leaving a total, as I have said, of 152,000,000 bushels of special wheat plus 76,000,000 bushels of pool wheat.

With those figures before the committee here was the situation which presented itself: What appeared to be the position was that although there may not have been a misunderstanding, it did seem as though there had been a misunderstanding or some misapprehension as to the task which the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited should carry out. In any case what had happened was, as is shown by the figures, that from time to time the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited not only did not sell wheat but in fact went into the market and bought it. These figures are given in more detail in the report of the committee. That wheat was bought not necessarily from producers but it was bought on the market and from the public at large. As was stated by Mr. McFarland before the banking and commerce committee of last year the purchases in the latter part of July, 1933, were purchases back from speculators who had taken wheat and whose hands, I presume, were regarded as being too weak to hold it. The result was that about 34,000,000 bushels was bought back.

That is the situation the committee found. And as a result of recognizing that situation and the danger in connection therewith the committee has made the first and I believe the most important restriction appearing in the bill. I believe the restriction about which I shall speak represents the most important difference between the bill sent to the committee and the one now reprinted and before us. Provision has been put in the bill stipulating that the Canadian grain board is absolutely prohibited from purchasing wheat from anybody but a producer. I repeat, the grain board is prohibited from purchasing wheat from anybody but a producer. In other words, it is no longer possible for the grain board to go on the market and with whatever idea they may have in mind—either of stabilizing or supporting a market or purchasing wheat and holding it for a higher price—buy wheat from anybody but the producer. I believe the committee was unanimous in feeling that that provision was quite necessary. At least if it were not made it seemed to us, I believe to all members of the committee—I am speaking at least for the hon. members associated with me—that a Canadian grain board would get an entirely wrong impression of its job, and that we might again witness a series of operations in purchases and sales which might result in a further accumulation of wheat purchased from other than the producer.

What appeared was this, that somehow or another the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, backed by government guarantees, had failed to appreciate the magnitude of the task undertaken by it, in attempting to stabilize and support the market, or to carry on the operations they were carrying on. What I mean by that is this: The real object I think of this House of Commons and of the people of this dominion was to endeavour to see that through these times of stress and strain it might be possible for the producer to get a fair price for his wheat. It was the producer the country had in mind in connection with the legislation, and it was hoped that it would be the producer that would be had in mind in connection with this whole transaction. But no matter what the motive was, what turned out was this, that in the endeavour let us say to assist the producer, or in the endeavour to support the market, or in the endeavour to stabilize the market, or in the endeavour to bring out the financial transactions on the right side of the book, the result has been that the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited instead of dealing directly with the producer and paying him so much money for his wheat has felt that the only way they should operate was by acting almost as Atlas and attempting almost to support the world price by operations on the Winnipeg grain exchange. That may be one way of doing it, but it has turned out to be I think a disastrous way.

Let me give a reference from a memorandum that was read by Mr. McIvor to indicate to the committee the magnitude of the task which seems to have been undertaken. Mr. McIvor who is assistant sales manager I think of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited said this:

> In stabilizing the futures market as he has done Mr. McFarland has been required—

Note this:

> —to stabilize not only the wheat in Canada being delivered by the farmers, but the flour in Canada, the flour in the United States, the flour afloat, the flour in the British Isles and foreign countries, Canadian wheat in United States in transit, and in non-reporting mills and feed plants in bond, wheat out of bond, wheat on ocean passage and in British and foreign ports, wheat in non-reporting mills in process of grinding, other grains hedged in wheat futures and spreads with other markets.

That is a pretty colossal task, and regardless of the sincerity with which the task was approached it seems to me that the task as set out there was a task too great for any organization, and particularly too great for any one man. The way it appears now—some may say this is hind-sight—it would seem that the best way to endeavour to get the best price for the producer would be to deal directly with the producer. It will be agreed by members of the committee generally that the plan which is now provided in the bill now submitted to this committee of the whole is largely along the lines of the Argentine plan; that is to say, where the board stands by, is ready to purchase from the producer at a minimum price, but at the same time permits the ebb and flow of commercial transactions so long as the producer is assured that he has that back log at all times if he wants to approach the board as a purchasing agency dealing with the producer, and not attempting to assist the producer by supporting the structure of world prices. Because after all it is a pretty big job even with Canada's proportion of the supply of wheat in world markets for Canada to attempt to regulate the whole structure of world prices. So that is the first and I think perhaps the greatest improvement that has been made by the committee in the bill as it is now presented to this committee of the whole. No longer will we have to support world's markets. It may be that the board will have to take a loss in its operations; that is to say, in selling its wheat. That is another matter. But so far as the producer is concerned the board deals directly with him.

What is the next change? The next change is in the matter of sales policy. I feel satisfied from what was said before the committee that there was some misunderstanding of the method at least which was to be adopted in connection with the handling of this transaction. As I endeavoured to point out on the committee the orders in council would seem to me to plainly provide for the marketing of the 1930 crop, and the operations which were to be conducted subsequently seem to be ancillary and supplementary to that first job. But quite a different idea was held by Mr. McIvor. That was apparent from the transactions as disclosed to the committee, the high lights of which I have given to this committee of the whole this morning.

What seemed to be wanting, and what has been remedied I think by this bill, is the matter of a sales policy. The original bill, it will be remembered, provided that the board should undertake the orderly marketing of wheat, but it gave unlimited power to buy and sell. This bill, as I have pointed out, gives only the power to buy from the producer, and this bill expressly contains provisions indicating parliament's desire and direction that sales shall be made.

Many of the witnesses who were heard before the committee felt that the lack of what they called a sales policy was one of the principal causes of our difficulty at the present time, operating as it did to cause the carry-over which we have to-day. One witness, Mr. Smith, at page 155 of the evidence, spoke of the operations of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited and said he would continue the policy of handling this business through the open market in the same way that Mr. McFarland had done, "with the addition of a definite sales policy which apparently has been lacking." It seems to me that that was the whole core of our problem. A sales policy had been lacking in connection with the operations of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited. The same witness at other places in the evidence spoke of the same thing, and other witnesses spoke of it as well. What has been assured in this bill is that what we tell this board is that they are to sell, and not to buy except from the producer.

What has been the result of this lack of sales policy? Well, there is some difference of opinion with regard to it, and I do not propose to enter upon the controversial stage of it this morning because I think this bill represents what has been referred to in the press and around the corridors as more of a compromise, and I am hoping a helpful compromise in order to deal with a very serious problem.

It has been pointed out repeatedly in the country, and I feel that the committee should have this before them, that the result of not having a sales policy, that the result of not selling, has not been beneficial to our market. Some of the witnesses were not prepared to agree with that. Some of the witnesses suggested that it was after all a cold-blooded business, that you sold to a man if you offered him the goods at the lowest price. I have here Broomhall's weekly letter of April 10, 1935, and this is what he says with respect to Canada's sales policy:

Canada has sold more wheat in the past week, but her prices are too high to enable her to get a good share of the international trade, and this applies to the buying of British millers and still more to be continental trade, although official returns of exports, indicate that Canada's trade with the continent is not so stagnant as it often appears from market reports. Canadians are bound to recognize that they are not selling sufficient to reduce their stocks to anything like a normal quantity by 31st July next—as we said in our review of 26th March we are doubtful if the total shipped during the current season will reach our estimate of 30,000,000 quarters, especially as we hear that some British millers recently made a further reduction in the percentage of Canadian in their gristing mixture—

The committee will note that:

—especially as we hear that some British millers recently made a further reduction in the percentage of Canadian in their gristing mixture, being encouraged to do so by the better gluten content of this season's Plata—we recently published a letter from a Liverpool miller suggesting that Canadian wheat, in view of its high price, ought to be quoted per fine ounce.

Which was a bit of biting sarcasm. Broomhall's letter of March 27 says:

If any country puts its wheat out of the reach of buyers, that country loses trade and its shipments fall short of our estimate. Canadian prices recently have been held so high that continental countries have gone without or bought elsewhere, and United Kingdom millers are using as little as possible of the relatively dear Canadian northern grades. We do not apologize for our estimates, but put the blame upon whom it belongs.

And on the next page of the same letter:

It is, however, a very debatable point as to whether Canada's best interests are served by a policy of splendid isolation. If Mr. McFarland were to approach the trade in a spirit of friendly cooperation, and adjust his prices to a reasonably competitive level, it is quite probable he would be agreeably surprised at the amount of business waiting to be done.

As I pointed out in the committee and as I wish to emphasize here, apparently the result has been that we have been losing our place in the British market to the Argentine. The point has been made repeatedly that Canada is maintaining her percentage of British imports of wheat, that is so but the point I wish to make here, and as I indicated to the committee, is that while Canada is maintaining her percentage of British imports, the United States has lost her place in the British market and that place has not been taken by Canada but by the Argentine and other countries. I have a table here I should like to present to the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that from the evidence?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, I read it to the witness, Mr. McIvor. For the five year period 1923-24 to 1927-28 Canada's percentage of imports of wheat and flour into the United Kingdom was 34·5. For the same period the United States percentage was 28·62; the Argentine percentage, 16·26; Australia, 11·55 and others, 8·88. For the five years period 1928-29 to 1932-33 Canada's percentage was 33·04; the United States, 13·21; the Argentine, 20·7; Australia, 17·91 and others 15·1. This period included 1932-33 when Canada had fifty per cent of Great Britain's imports. These figures therefore give Canada the full benefit of any enlarged proportion of British imports. The percentages for the year 1933-34 were 35·36 for Canada; ·18 for the United States; 24·4 for the Argentine; 21·24 for Australia and 19·13 for other countries. For the nine month period from 1934 to April 30, 1935, the percentage for Canada was 36·56; for the United States it was ·23; for the Argentine, 31·4; for Australia 20·64 and for other countries 11·14. A comparison of the five year period, 1923-24 to 1927-28 with the period 1928-29 to 1932-33 shows that Canada lost 1·46 per cent in the proportion of British imports. In 1933-34 our percentage rose to 35·36, an increase of two per cent and for the nine month period 1934-35 it rose to 36·56, showing an increase for the five year period of three per cent. For the five year period 1928-29 to 1932-33 the United States furnished 13·21 per cent of the imports; this dropped to ·18 per cent for 1933-34 and rose slightly to ·23 per cent for the nine month period 1934-35. In that time the Argentine raised her proportion from 20·7 per cent to 24·4 per cent in 1933-34 with a further increase to 31·4 per cent for the nine month period 1934-35.

It seems to me that those figures indicate that the Argentine is taking Canada's place when it comes to the matter of getting the business which Great Britain has to give. If one wants further confirmation it is to be found in the figures placed on Hansard by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) at page 3645. These figures show that Canadian imports of wheat into British markets dropped from 52,957,000 bushels in 1930-31 to 48,103,612 bushels for the nine month portion of 1934-35, whereas the Argentine exports to Great Britain jumped from 30,594,000 bushels in 1930-31 to 47,474,791 bushels in the nine month period of 1934-35. In other words, Canada was down about ten per cent, while the Argentine increased by about fifty per cent. I submit that those figures indicate that the sales policy which Canada has been following or the want of a sales policy has not been good for this country. If I wanted further corroboration of this I would remind the committee of what the Prime Minister said when he came home from the wheat conference in 1933. I think it was in the first speech which he made in Montreal, when he said that he was surprised at the activity of European countries in regard to the matter of raising wheat. He pointed out that the question was the restoration of international trade in Canadian wheat and he is quoted in the Montreal Gazette as follows:

> One solution was through harmonizing the interests of the two groups and he was glad to say that common sense and reason had prevailed and an agreement had been signed on August 21st last which went towards the solution of the problem.
> 63 cents in gold—Liverpool for four months. "Wheat import countries by their greater acreage had demonstrated clearly that they did not again intend to be placed in a position where they would face either starvation or have to pay ransom prices."

My right hon. friend pointed out at that time that because of the fear which these countries had they had increased their production of wheat from 900,000,000 bushels in 1930 to 1,220,000,000 bushels in 1933. That increase had been brought about by a fear of starvation and also a fear of ransom prices. I am afraid that the sales policy which has been pursued by Canada has contributed to some extent to this increase. I should also like to refer to a statement made by Sir Edward Beatty in January of this year. In a characteristically temperate statement Sir Edward reviews the whole wheat situation and says:

> I disagree with those who suggest that it is improper for this country to attempt any measures to protect its wheat producers against fall of the price of their product to the lowest depths. Wheat is far too important in the economy of this country for us to accept unmoved the prospect of its price falling to the levels where its producers are beggared. I believe, however, that it is equally dangerous for us to believe that we can prevent the price of wheat, as recorded by a great world market such as Liverpool, from reflecting even a temporary condition of overproduction, or that we can persuade buyers abroad to pay premiums larger than justified by superior quality for Canadian wheat compared with wheat from other areas. The subject is one of overwhelming importance to this country, and to every citizen. It is to be hoped that our policy will be framed with full realization of this fact. I feel that this task should be given to the best available skill and experience in this matter, and that the most careful examination should be made of the views of our customers, rather than that we should take the risk of drifting into a state of hostility between buyer and seller.

Perhaps that statement will have more weight with some hon. members than with others but it does stand to reason that if we hold our wheat above world prices these countries will turn in self-preservation to raising their own wheat or to buying wheat from other countries. What is the situation in Canada? Does it need any argument to convince anyone that the thing to do in this country is to get our wheat moving? Wheat lying in elevators, even though it is backed by the guarantee of the government of Canada, will not assist in paying transportation charges or wages on steamboats or railroads. It is not going to assist in the income of men at terminal ports, nor is it going to assist in the general activities which are incident to the constant movement of traffic across the country. It all will help. It may be said by some that we cannot afford to sell our wheat too cheaply even for that purpose, but I think the committee came to the conclusion that we cannot afford to hold our wheat indefinitely in the hope that something will turn up. The fact that this wheat has been rolling over and over and has now reached the enormous quantity of 225 million bushels is something that brings home to our minds more forcibly than anything else the importance of adopting some policy. And so there are inserted in the bill subsections (b) and (c) of section 8, which tell the board definitely what its job is. Subsection (b) is:

> to market from time to time all wheat or contracts for the purchase or delivery of wheat which the board may acquire, for such price as it may consider reasonable, with the object of promoting the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets.

So far as I am concerned, that means what it says. It means that you are to sell wheat with the object of promoting the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets; and that involves the selling of Canadian wheat at the world price in order that we may promote its sale and use in those markets. There have been many times when the spread between Canadian and Argentine wheat has been such that it would seem to some that there would be an opportunity of disposing of Canadian wheat if we were prepared to take what the world considers a fair price. While I am on this question of world price, I may observe that in connection with the Ottawa agreements one of the conditions is that the 6 cent preference shall apply only if we are willing to sell our wheat at the world price; and with respect to the inquiries made in the House of Commons in England rather recently as to whether or not they were going to continue to extend the 6 cents preference to us in view of what they thought to be the Canadian attitude in regard to selling Canadian wheat at world prices, at the time the question was raised as to what the world price was, Mr. Hore-Belisha indicated that the world price was the quoted price at Liverpool. So that when we direct the board to dispose of Canadian wheat, for the purpose of promoting the sale and use of that wheat in world markets, we must be prepared to take what is regarded generally as a fair price for wheat. Subsection (c) of section 8 is:

> to sell and dispose of stocks of wheat and contracts for the delivery of wheat acquired from Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited and the wheat represented by such contracts as speedily as may be reasonably possible, having regard to economic and other conditions.

That does not mean that we are to hold wheat indefinitely or add to our stocks of wheat by buying; it means, so far as I am concerned, to dispose of our stocks of wheat as speedily as may be reasonably possible. No one is talking about a fire sale; the endeavour is to get rid of our wheat, making the objective of our activities the reduction of the excess rather than the increasing of it. I believe that these sections will commend themselves to the committee of the whole as they did unanimously to the special committee.

Subsection (j) is:

> to offer continuously wheat for sale in the markets of the world through the established channels: Provided that the board may, if in its opinion any existing agencies are not operating satisfactorily, take such steps as it deems expedient to establish, utilize and employ its own or other marketing agencies or channels.

That again is another indication to the board of what parliament desires with regard to the carrying out of its duties. Now these, in my opinion, are two substantial changes with respect to policy which are made in this bill, and I submit that they are farreaching and should commend themselves to the committee and to the country. I will not at this time discuss the question of responsibility. What we are trying to do is to deal with the situation as it exists. The next point that comes up, and one to which I will not direct very much attention, is the point with regard to the minimum price. I may say frankly—and here I am speaking to my western friends—that it did seem that perhaps this provision for a fixed price and a participation certificate might be regarded as erring on the side of adequacy—let me use that word. But thinking the thing over, I feel that Canada has this obligation. This accumulation has piled up and we have a special situation to deal with, and I can only hope that the board will have wisdom and judgment to be able to satisfy the western producer and at the same time to do justice to itself in relation to its responsibilities. I am prepared to concede that there be a fixed price and that at the same time there be a participation certificate, so that if the board succeeds and its operations are profitable any profit may be distributed to the producers.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Is there any provision in the bill that ensures that the minimum price will be a fair price?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend can read the bill as well as I. The provision is that there shall be a fixed price.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I ask the question because my hon. friend has said something about a fair price. My question is this: Is there any provision in the bill, except a hope, that the minimum price shall be a fair price?

Mr. RALSTON: The words "fair price" are not used in the bill. The provision is that there shall be a fixed price, a price fixed by the board and approved by the governor in council; and I expressed the hope that the board would be able to fix a price fair to the producer, at the same time doing justice to its responsibility in the discharge of its duties imposed upon it under the act. I realize that the board has a difficult task; I realize also that my hon. friends from the west are faced with a difficulty. I am discussing practical difficulties. At the same time, if my hon. friends from the west will permit me to say so, when I spoke as I did I wanted them to feel that the east—at any rate I am speaking as one from the east—while realizing the difficulties felt that there was a great measure of adequacy in this provision for a minimum price plus a participation certificate; and I am sure that if the fishermen of the east, the lumbermen, the cattlemen and the buttermen of the east had the same provision some of them at least would be exceedingly happy.

An hon. MEMBER: And the west too.

Mr. RALSTON; My hon. friend is quite right—the west too. But it is because of the situation that exists, which I in common with everyone else in the house wish to see remedied, that I am in favour of this provision and will give it my support.

And now I come to the final point. In view of the very adequate provisions of this bill—some of my friends shake their heads, but in my view it is a pretty comprehensive bill—I for one feel, and I so expressed myself in the committee, that we ought to deal with the situation as an emergent situation and should not tie anyone down forever to a permanent policy with regard to Canadian wheat. This bill on the face of it and without some reservation of some kind indicates that the Canadian government is going into the wheat business unless another parliament takes positive action to repeal the act.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not suggested that one parliament can bind another.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought I made myself absolutely clear; I do not know why the right hon. gentleman should interject that remark. The very fact that I said that this bill is to be in force until another parliament repeals it is evidence that I do not think for a single instant that one parliament binds another and that a subsequent parliament cannot repeal this act. But I am saying that it seems to me that we should not in the dying days of this particular parliament decide on a permanent policy for Canada when the policy we are adopting is being dictated to a large extent by the emergent situation in which we find ourselves having regard to that accumulation. Other emergency bills, as I am reminded, have been limited to a year. For instance, the relief acts were passed year after year, made to expire, and unless renewed, expiring entirely. Those are emergent measures. I submit that this is an emergent measure due to the situation in which we find ourselves, and to some extent perhaps an experiment, one which will have to be tried out in order that we may find out whether it is the best for all concerned.

There are three classes of people who are concerned in connection with this legislation: first, the customers, who fear a monopoly. If we indicate to the world now that we are labeling this bill as a permanent policy for Canada as far as wheat is concerned, we do not improve our situation with our customers in the world market. They wil at least be reassured if we put some limitation on this bill to indicate that it will expire at a certain time unless it is further extended. Second, the taxpayers will accept in the name of an emergency many things that they will hesitate about if they are regarded and imposed as a matter of permanent policy. Third, last and most important, it seems to me that the producers themselves might well wish to reconsider this matter at the end of one or two years. It may be that a fixed price will prove a deterrent to the commercial trade and at the same time may not give the producer a fair return. In other words, with the government seeking to back this legislation and with the board making a fixed price, the trade may feel they are out of the situation; and if the minimum price should not be regarded as sufficient, the result will be that the producer loses entirely the benefit of the trade competition, the advantage of the marketing connections which the trade has in the markets of the world and the benefit which an active, vibrant, self-reliant trade could bring about in the way of increasing prices.

Before this bill comes out of the committee, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who is in charge of the measure, should reconsider the proposal made to him in the committee and insert some clause in the bill to indicate its nature, namely, that it is an emergency measure; that it is for the purpose of dealing with the situation in which we find ourselves; that it is to bridge the gap; to provide, as suggested in the committee, that the bill should be in force for one year, giving the governor in council power to extend it for a second year and providing at the end of that second year that it should automatically lapse unless it is further extended by parliament. That is the feeling which I have with regard to this matter.

There are one or two other points to which I should like to refer when we come to the particular clauses of the bill. I believe if the government could insert an amendment of that kind, it would be possible for us to present an absolutely united front in connection with this measure to deal with the situation in which we find ourselves and after all to attempt to help to make western Canada what we all want it to be, the habitation of a prosperous and contented people, the place where men and women who have endured a good deal during the past three or four years may be given hope and an opportunity to play the part which they are destined and qualified to play in the development of this dominion, because we all realize—and this cannot be repeated too often—the importance of the great west, and of the wheat producers to the whole of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. LUCAS: As a member of the special committee dealing with Bill No. 98, I think I am within the judgment of all the members of that committee when I say that we all received a great deal of very useful information from the various witnesses who appeared before us. But in my opinion the greatest justification for the setting up of that special committee was the fact that it enabled the representatives of the pools to place on the official record an absolute refutation of the false propaganda that has been circulating throughout not only this country but the world in regard to the selling policy of the pools, suggesting that the situation facing Canada now in not being able to dispose of her grain has been entirely due to that policy. I will deal with that a little later by means of some of the evidence, and I think it is very important because a strong opinion prevails among a large number of people that the setting up of a government board to take over the handling of Canadian wheat is more or less a continuation of the pool policy, and therefore if that policy were false, then of course a number of people believe the board would be carrying out something that would not be in the best interests of this country.

One point we should bear in mind is that the marketing of Canada's wheat is no longer a local or farmers' problem, but has now become a national one. When one considers not only the importance of our crop but also the fact that the government of every important wheat producing country in the world is giving some form of support to its wheat producers. Canadian farmers can not be allowed to shift for themselves. Another factor in this regard is the value of the crop as it is set forth at page 3563 of Hansard. This gives the figures from 1920 up to the present time, running into not hundreds of millions but billions of dollars, and it shows that Canada is now the largest single wheat exporting country in the world. Wheat is the most important commodity in the export business of Canada, amounting I believe to almost one-third of our export business. When the final chapters of Canadian history are written, I believe none will be more interesting than that dealing with the opening up and development of the great western plains.

[Mr. Ralston.]

I think I am safe in saying that there is no man in the house who is more familiar with the struggles, disappointments, hopes and ambitions of the farmers in trying to get a fair price for their product than is the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) who has been out in that part of the country from its pioneer days and who took a prominent part in leading and encouraging the farmers to organize, in order to get a more fair return for their products. Those efforts were not for the purpose of taking from somebody else what was his but to try to get for the farmers themselves that which rightly belonged to them and to give them a fair return for their toil. I am sure nobody can object to that.

I am not going into early history, because the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) when the bill was before the house on second reading gave a very interesting account of the early development of the farmers' movement. We are all familiar with the Canada Grain Act. That act first came into being because of petitions from the farmers and as a result of commissions set up to investigate the problem. Finally the Canada Grain Act was put upon the statute books. Its main purpose was to prevent abuses and protect the farmer. Then came the war, and then in 1919 what was known as the Canadian wheat board was set up. I think it is fair to say that when the 1919 wheat board was established there was a good deal of antagonism among the farmers because there was a belief largely prevalent among them, whether or not it was erroneous, that this wheat board was not established for the purpose of getting the farmer more for his wheat but of stopping the price of wheat from going up. However, when the year was finally closed the results were so satisfactory, as well as the handling of the wheat during that period, that there was a complete change of attitude, and a great effort was carried on in the succeeding years to have the 1919 wheat board reestablished. In 1922, a measure was passed in this house providing for the establishment of a wheat board. We are all familiar with what happened. While agitation for a new wheat board was being carried on, the Saskatchewan government appointed a commission under James Stewart and F. W. Riddell to look into the matter and report. The first question that this commission was asked to decide was as follows:

> Is it possible for any kind of pool comprising less than the whole of the western wheat crop to market the crop to the same advantage from the producers' point of view as a system of national marketing of the whole crop by a Canadian wheat board?

In answering that question they had this to say:

During the early months of the season, when a large volume of wheat is offered for sale, there is a natural decline in prices. This system of competitive selling permits of no intelligent regulation of supplies of either the farmers' wheat or that owned by the elevator companies. To the extent, therefore, that the marketing of wheat outside the limits of the pool is continued, on this basis, the marketing of the wheat within the pool would be affected detrimentally. Therefore the object of the pool, which would be the stabilization of prices by a more even distribution of supplies, would be adversely influenced.

There is hardly a favourable basis of comparison between the advantages accruing to the producer of wheat through a pool under national control, and any other form of pool attempting to control an unknown portion of the crop in competition with the balance of the crop in an open market. It is perfectly obvious that under a system of national control, where only one seller exists, and buyers are numerous, the advantage in trading is with the seller.

Now, when the farmers could not get the government wheat board reinstated, they determined to handle their own wheat, and organized the pools. The operation of those pools in western Canada brought satisfaction not only to many farmers, but to the general business of the country. It relieved the farmer of the worry of deciding when he should sell, and I think any hon. member from western Canada will agree with me that it is very difficult to know when to sell, with the market fluctuating each day and no stability, for it must be remembered that the farmer gets only one crop and when it is sold that is his only chance of getting a return for that year. By the wheat pool he was given an initial payment, and following that he received interim payments which enabled him to carry on his business, and at the end of the year when the crop was all sold he knew he was going to receive a fair average price. For my own part I sold wheat to the pool from the very beginning of its organization, and I am still selling wheat to the pools. I understand that the banks and the business men were well satisfied, because the farmer had money distributed to him through different periods of the year, and so was able to finance much more satisfactorily.

However, when those pools were organized they came into conflict with the organized grain trade. It is just as natural as can be that that trade, seeing some of its business likely to be taken away, set out to oppose the pools. This was done by circulating all kinds of propaganda against the pooling method.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. LUCAS: When the committee rose at one o'clock I was dealing with the fact that when in 1921 and 1922 the producers could not induce the government to reestablish a wheat board similar to that of 1919 they decided to organize themselves as voluntary pools, and endeavour to sell their own wheat. In doing this they had to face the opposition of the organized grain trade. At page 209, of the evidence, we find that Mr. Brouillette stated:

There is another point that I think you as a committee should satisfy yourselves about before you go out of your way to make changes on the supposition that there is something of such importance in this open market that would warrant keeping it operating. There have been a lot of charges. You take the first year we started to operate the pool when the market price was $1.49—$1.51 on August 2, 1929. We continue on operating. We make a dollar initial payment. We decide some time in March or April to make our first interim payment. The 2nd or 3rd of March the open market is $2.05 and a fraction. Unfortunately, we decide on making an interim payment of 35 cents. That brings your total payment up to $1.35. Inside of a month the price on the Winnipeg market goes from $2.05 and a fraction down to $1.38⅜ on the 2nd or 3rd of April. Then within a month following that it rebounds up to around $1.70.

Hon. members will observe that there was in this instance a drop of 67 cents a bushel in the market price of wheat in one month and I think all hon. members will agree that that drop was not due to world causes, because within a month the price rebounded back again. While it may be difficult to prove I am satisfied that there was an actual attempt made by the grain trade not only to embarrass the pools but to praticially put them out of business. Our pools began operating first in Alberta in 1923, and in Saskatchewan and Manitoba in 1924. They had only got nicely into their swing when in August of 1925 the market price of wheat had reached $1.51. At that time the pool set its initial price at what was considered to be a safe figure of $1 per bushel. On March 4, the market price was $2.05⅞, and the pool deciding to make an interim payment to their customers had their cheques written out when the price dropped 67 cents, or from $2.05⅞ to $1.38⅜. The fact that the pools had made an initial payment of $1 and announced an interim payment of 35 cents put them in an embarrassing position: When the market price came down to $1.38 the pools found themselves in difficulties with the bank due to the fact that their credit was gone, because they were supposed to keep a margin of 15 cents a bushel. However within a month's time the market price rebounded to $1.72⅞. The only thing that saved the pools was that before they had their cheques sent out the tremendous drop had taken place and in order to protect themselves they withheld the cheques which had already been made out from the producers. That is one place where the exchange made a mistake. They brought about the drop in price too soon. Had they waited until the cheques had gone out to the producers they certainly would have placed the pools in an awkward position.

The statement has been made that the policy of the pools antagonized foreign buyers and for that reason they are responsible for the carry-over. In this connection I shall quote from the evidence of Mr. Milner, president of the Winnipeg grain exchange. At page 66 of the evidence he is reported as follows:

Q. Well now, is there any other cause you want to mention as an example of past experience in centralized control; or, have you any in mind—A. I have the Canadian pools.

Q. Well, what do you mean by that, just explain that—A. Well, the result of their operations was a large carry-over.

That is the propaganda that has been broadcast throughout the country until it is firmly believed that the pools were entirely responsible for this large carry-over. I believe it is fair to say that if the pool policy had created antagonism and they were unable to sell, it would have shown in the amount of wheat held by the pools and the trade. What are the facts? I turn to page 208 of the evidence and find that in answer to questions by Mr. Ralston Mr. Brouillette gave the following evidence about carry-overs.

Q. We ought to know?—A. Yes, we should know. I think this is the best proof we can get of it. Our Mr. Bredt, who will be appearing before this committee, will go into more detail; but for the four years when we were operating on the largest scale, 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929, the total deliveries of grain in the three western provinces were 1,455,252,835 bushels. The percentage of that total delivered to the three pools was 755,719,373 bushels, or 51·9 per cent of the total. The total carry-overs at the end of each year for that period of four years was a total of 402,000,000 bushels. Now, if we sold more or less of our share in that period it would show up in our share of the carry-over, would it not?

Then, following further questions the witness stated:

The Witness: Yes, the pool's share of all that —that is what we carried at the end of each year, totalled for those four years on the same basis as the figure above referred to was 170,000,000 bushels, which was 42·3 per cent, and we were entitled during that period to 51·9 per cent, to have carried our fair and equal share on that basis.

[Mr. Lucas.]

Dealing with the same question of carry-overs Mr. Bredt is reported at page 236 of the evidence as follows:

The Witness: In 1929-30, the Canadian carry-over again was 127,000,000 bushels. The pool share of that carry-over was 50 per cent, and the pool handlings in that year of the total were 51·3 per cent. It is rather a coincidence that the carry-over of the pool handling and the total are identical; that is, 127,000,000 carry-over and the pool handles 51·3 per cent. Does this indicate that the pools were responsible for the large carry-over? They had 41 per cent in the one year, 50 in another; they handled 51·3 per cent. Now, surely they cannot be accused of not selling, withholding, refusing to sell or holding up the price, because if they had, they would not have sold so much. They sold more, comparatively, than the trade did. They only held 41 per cent of the carry-over in the one year when they might have held off 50; and in the second year they held 50 per cent and they handled 51·3 per cent.

I believe those figures should set at rest for all time the allegation that the pools were responsible for the carry-over.

Then, again, there was a story circulated that when the Hon. J. H. Thomas, a minister of the British government came to Canada he communicated with the pools and tried to make negotiations for a large quantity of wheat, but that the pools had refused to sell.

I want to deal with that for a moment. It will be found on page 221 of the evidence, where I asked this question of the witness, Mr. Brouillette:

Q. Some time ago there was a statement circulated widely in the press that the Hon. J. H. Thomas, minister in Great Britain, had come before the pools and made an effort to buy a large quantity of wheat, and the pools refused to sell to him. Is there any truth in that statement?

The answer was:

There is no truth in that statement whatsoever. If there is any wide circulation of such misunderstandings in this country it might be worth while to read from our records covering exactly that situation.

Further on this same witness said:

Aside from speaking from this record, I was present at the conference at the time the Hon. Mr. Thomas met our central board, if not the executive. This was in September, 1929.

Now I wish to put this statement by the Hon. Mr. Thomas on the record. The evidence continued as follows:

Q. Hon. J. H. Thomas?—A. Yes.

At the request of the British government, conferences were arranged with the right honourable J. H. Thomas, Lord Privy Seal in the British Cabinet, and representatives of the wheat pools on September 2nd and 3rd, 1929, at Winnipeg.

Discussions took place on the possibilities of facilitating the interchange of commodities between Canada and the United Kingdom, having regard in particular to the desirability of ensuring an even flow of outward and return cargoes between Canada and the United Kingdom.

At the first conference with wheat pool officials, it was evident that Mr. Thomas was under the impression that the Canadian wheat pools had been refusing to sell wheat at prevailing prices. The situation was fully explained to him and Mr. Thomas expressed himself as quite satisfied that the Canadian wheat pools were anxious to dispose of their wheat, and were freely offering it to consumers at prevailing prices. When quoted some months later as criticizing the policy of the pools, Mr. Thomas, in an official interview, sent to the Canadian Press by the British High Commissioner, made the following statement:—

My attention has been drawn to comment in Canada upon a statement made by me in the House of Commons on the 1st of April. The suggestion that the statement was based upon any feeling that the pool had been attempting to hold up wheat is wholly baseless. My statement was made in reply to an opposition supplementary question and was based on assurances given me, by you, at Winnipeg in September, that the pool had been anxious to sell at prices substantially lower than those prevailing. I fully accepted these assurances, and welcomed them as evidence of a friendly attitude towards my plans for encouraging more regular interchange of goods between Canada and Great Britain. I trust you will give full publicity to this explanation. As you know, I fully appreciate the difficulties with which the pool has been confronted, and I earnestly hope the situation may soon rectify itself to the advantage of both countries.

I quote that because only last week I was talking to a business man in Ottawa who referred to this very question, that the pools had refused to sell to Great Britain when Mr. Thomas was trying to negotiate with them. The statement also was made that placards were displayed on delivery wagons in London advising against using Canadian flour. This has also been refuted. It has also been claimed that the pools held the price above the market and of course therefore could not sell, but what are the facts? I want to call the attention of hon. members to a table that appears on page 282 of the evidence, exhibit "C" which absolutely refutes that charge. It was filed by the witness, Paul T. Bredt, Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and gives the export offers and comparison with market prices for July, August and September, 1929. Here is the summary of that table. Out of 76 market days the pool offered wheat below the market on 52 days and sometimes over 6½ cents a bushel below the market; on 14 days out of the 76 it offered wheat over the market; on 2 days at the market, and on 8 days there were no offers. A study of this table is most illuminating and absolutely refutes the statements, that the pools held their wheat above market prices.

It was also claimed that because of this supposed antagonism against the pools they were unable to sell their fair share of wheat in Great Britain and in other markets. What are the facts? At page 261 evidence will be found to this effect. The total Canadian exports to Great Britain are given, and the pools' share of those exports. In 1926-27 the total of Canadian exports was 62,979,000 bushels; the pool's share was 50,152,000 bushels, a percentage for the pool of 79·8. In 1927-28 the total Canadian exports were 67,430,000; the pool's share was 36,181,000 or a pool percentage of 53·7 per cent. The 1928-29 total was 69,895,000 bushels; the pool's share was 34,665,000, a pool percentage of 49·8. The 1929-30 total was 43,214,000, the pool's share was 22,980,000, a percentage of 53·2.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that with those facts before us the charge that the pool has been holding up prices and has refused to sell and has antagonized foreign buyers will be disposed of for all time.

I am in favour of Bill No. 98, to establish a Canadian grain board, but I would have much preferred to have seen sections 9, 10 and 11 as part of the bill rather than to become operative only by order in council. Those clauses 9, 10 and 11 are of course the ones which it was claimed would put the grain exchange out of business, and that there were compulsory features in connection with them. It was claimed that the farmer would lose a great deal of his freedom. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the farmer fully understands this question, and that so far as his freedom is concerned it is very limited. So far as prices are concerned, the farmers all know that prices are sent out twice each day, formerly by telegram but now by radio, and it is upon these prices that the farmer is paid and the same price is sent to all elevators. So far as taking away liberty is concerned there was nothing in those clauses had they become operative to prevent a farmer selling wheat any day he liked, to any elevator he liked. The competition in services would have been the same. Talk about the farmer's freedom! About the only freedom he has left is to draw his grain to the elevator and there his freedom ceases, and when his grain has been dumped down the chute he kisses it good-bye so far as he is concerned.

The producers feel that speculation on the market is not in his best interests. I would like to read a quotation from E. A. O'Neal which is found at page 185 of the evidence, but time does not permit. Mr. O'Neal appeared before the agricultural committee in the United States and dealt with this question very effectively. He points out that it appears that the Exchange can only carry on when special licence is given to what he calls the big boys, and while speculation may boost prices it also depresses prices.

It has been admitted that the futures market cannot carry on without the speculator, but to-day the speculator is gone; that is the small speculator that is necessary to carry on this market. It has been admitted on all sides, and evidence before the Stamp commission also brought out the fact that the majority of these speculators lost money. I want to ask this question: Is it fair to encourage these people to speculate when they are sure to lose their money? From what I know of the farmer I would say that he does not want to get a price by this means if in so doing he is robbing those who can ill afford to lose. It is an unsound foundation upon which to base prices. It is common knowledge to everyone that in this futures market bear raids are sprung periodically, and the small speculators of limited means are closed out and many of them ruined. In addition a lot of farmers' grain is sold on these severe drops in the market. That is not only a serious thing to the farmer, it is a serious thing to the country. As I stated earlier in my remarks, a farmer has only one crop of wheat in a year and he depends upon the return he receives from that crop to carry him through. When he is forced to sell on a low spot it means a reduced standard of living for the rest of the year.

A lot of people think that the wheat market is similar to the stock market. I have no objection to a man speculating in mining stocks or in shares of other concerns. When the price of automobile shares, for instance, goes up on the market there is no change in the price of automobiles or the rate of wages paid. A speculator on the wheat market is permitted to sell future wheat without owning or controlling one bushel while a speculator on the stock market can sell only shares which he has borrowed from the owner and which he can deliver when called upon to do so. The price of foodstuffs of the world should not have to depend upon speculation in futures. I cannot imagine a manufacturer standing for a situation whereby hundreds of automobiles could be dumped on the market by speculators who did not have one automobile and the price depressed. Yet that is the situation with which the farmer is confronted.

[Mr. Lucas.]

It has been said that there is no public opinion for a national wheat board, a compulsory wheat board or anything of that nature. I have not time to quote all the resolutions which have been passed in this connection but the attitude of the organized farmers of Alberta is well known and was placed on Hansard a few days ago by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). I would refer hon. members to the Western Producer of June 20, 1935, which contains a whole page giving particulars of resolutions which were passed by various organizations in favour of a wheat board during the period from 1930 to 1935. The first I will quote refers to a resolution passed on April 14, 1931, by the Manitoba legislature, not a farmers' organization, and reads:

> The Manitoba legislature unanimously approved formation of a wheat board similar to that of 1919 last Tuesday. Without a division the legislature went on record as favouring such a board, which would set minimum prices and carry the western farmer through the present period of depression.
> J. R. Griffiths, government member for Russell, moved that the legislature favour the forming of a wheat board along the lines of the 1919 board. There was no debate on the motion and immediately after Mr. Griffiths' motion was introduced it was unanimously approved.

The next article refers to Saskatchewan and reads:

> Falling in line with recent action of North Battleford, the Saskatoon city council on January 30 approved a resolution suggesting to the federal government that it give consideration to a request from argicultural interests to establish a national wheat marketing board.

The next article is dated March 9, 1933, and reads:

> Delegates to the annual convention of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities passed a resolution, unanimous but for two votes, asking the dominion government to set up a national marketing board on which producers would be adequately represented, to control sale of Canada's entire 1933 crop.

The next is dated March 30, 1933, and reads:

> The report of the special committee on agricultural relief was received by the Saskatchewan legislature and referred to the government. Among the committee's recommendations was one supported by all the members favouring establishment of a national marketing board.

The next is dated March 7, 1935, and reads:

> The Alberta legislature last week unanimously adopted a resolution welcoming Premier R. B. Bennett's announcement that a national wheat board is to be formed.
> By an overwhelming vote of 53 to 1 the Alberta legislature endorsed government's support of the federal marketing legislation.

We must recognize that this action is necessary because of changed conditions. Every important wheat producing country in the world has had to adopt measures of a similar nature. It has been said that the refusal of the pools to sell wheat has lost us our markets, but I should like to refer to the evidence of Mr. McIvor, which appears on page 376 of the proceedings, as follows:

Let us examine the situation in France, Germany and Italy. From 1924-25 to 1928-29 these countries imported an average of 215 million bushels annually. From 1929-30 to 1933-34 these countries imported an average of 95 million bushels—an annual reduction of 120 million bushels in the latter period as compared with the former.

Let us look at the situation last year. France, Germany and Italy imported a total of 26 million bushels. Germany, in fact, became a net exporter of approximately 5 million bushels. What has this situation meant to Canada Assuming that we received 40 per cent of the imports of these three countries prior to 1929-30 (a moderate percentage) a market was afforded for about 85 million bushels of Canadian wheat. Last year if we had secured the entire market of these three countries (and we did receive a very large share) we had an outlet for only 26 million bushels. This is one phase of the export problem which must be realized.

The former demand for our wheat does not exist. We might as well be frank about this matter. Mr. James Richardson stated in his evidence that last year he visited all the important countries of Europe and after visiting Germany he decided that there was very little business to be done. He said that he secured his money but that others who had sold later had not yet been paid, and that there was practically no market for our wheat in either France or Italy. I want to take this opportunity of saying that I believe that the stabilization efforts carried on by Mr. McFarland have been of tremendous benefit to the farmers of western Canada. I think the government should receive some measure of congratulation for supporting Mr. McFarland. All the witnesses who appeared before the committee admitted that if there had not been some form of stabilization, prices would have been very much lower. Last October 18 million bushels of wheat were dumped on the market inside of three days. The president of the grain exchange was not as frank as we would have expected in giving evidence in this connection as upon cross examination he could not remember anything about this incident although it was a very serious event in the life of Canada. I think it is safe to say that most of the papers carried headlines on this matter, and nearly everyone was familiar with it, yet after referring to it in a written statement the president of the grain exchange could not remember anything about it when he was being cross examined.

There is one other point to which I should like to refer. It is sometimes thought that low prices mean increased consumption, but I should like to refer to the evidence of Mr. McIvor, as appears on page 363 of the proceedings. Mr. McIvor, quoting from a speech made by Mr. McFarland before the Canadian Club of Winnipeg on April 11, 1935, said:

The lowest price in over 400 years occurred in the season 1932-33, and Stanford university shows the world consumption of wheat in that year of record low prices was less than in either of the two preceding years, and was only a few million bushels greater than the disappearance of last year, which is clear evidence that record low prices did not increase world consumption. It is also a proof that there is a saturation point, even for the most essential product.

There is one important fact which many people appear to overlook and that is, "Exports increased by reason of price sacrifice," do not all go into immediate consumption, but also go to create increased reserve stocks, visible and invisible, in some other country.

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, when Bill No. 98, now under discussion, has been amended in the manner that I shall suggest, it will certainly be the best measure the government has ever presented to the house. At the close of my remarks, I shall submit an amendment the effect of which will be to give to the farmers of all provinces bonuses similar to those that the government grants to the western farmers.

That does not mean that I am opposed to the government spending money to help the western farmers. On the contrary, I think governments never do enough for the farmer, and in order that the country might emerge from the present depression we must begin by helping the farming class instead of spending millions on the militia.

Last winter, at the beginning of the session, the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) received a large number of petitions from farmers of the province of Quebec asking him to bonus certain of their products or to have the government take control of their marketing, as it did for western wheat. I myself have received many petitions from farmers of my county and of the new county known as Mégantic-Frontenac. I shall read to the house the petition I transmitted to the right hon. the Prime Minister on January 22, 1935:

Mr. Prime Minister,

Whereas one of the chief causes of the present unfortunate position of the farmers of the province of Quebec is the low price of their products; and

Whereas the remedy to the situation would consist in the government:

1. Fixing a minimum price for farm products on the following basis: Butter, 30 cents per pound; cheese, 15 cents per pound; eggs, 20 cents per dozen; pork, 10 cents per pound; potatoes, 50 cents per bag;

2. Granting to dairy farmers an export bonus of 5 cents per pound on cheese and 10 cents per pound on butter;

The undersigned believe that with these minimum prices and this export bonus the agricultural situation, which is the foundation of our economic system, would appreciably improve, with resultant advantage to the general business situation of the country.

We therefore respectfully ask you to bring down the necessary legislation to give effect to our request.

To this petition I joined the following letter:

Allow me to transmit to you a petition from the farmers of the parish of Thetford Mines, county of Mégantic, requesting either a bonus or fixed prices on products such as butter, cheese, eggs, pork and potatoes. These farmers claim that you have granted to the western farmers a special bonus of 5 cents a bushel on wheat and I believe that the province of Quebec should enjoy similar treatment.

Hoping that I may be able to transmit a favourable answer to the petitioners and assuring you of my highest regard, I am,

Yours very truly,
Eusèbe Roberge,
Member for Mégantic.

This letter was addressed to the right honourable the Prime Minister, from whose secretary, Miss Bérubé, I received the following answer:

The Prime Minister has instructed me to acknowledge receipt of your letter to which was attached a petition from citizens of Saint-Alphonse-de-Thetford-Mines, asking the government to establish a minimum price for farm products and to grant an export bonus on butter and cheese.

You may rest assured that the matter will be seriously considered by the proper authorities.

Believe me, dear sir,

Yours very truly,
M. T. Bérubé,
Secretary.

My colleague, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Girouard) has also received many similar petitions. On April 9, 1935, he spoke in this house as follows, according to Hansard, page 2568:

The farmers of my constituency—and those of Quebec generally—have signed a petition addressed to the Prime Minister of this dominion, asking the government to fix a minimum price for a number of products and to establish an export bonus on butter and cheese. As this petition is very important, perhaps the house will allow me to quote it. After describing their unfortunate plight, these farmers requested the government, in January last, to fix—

[Mr. Roberge.]

... a minimum price as follows on the following products: butter, thirty cents per pound; cheese, fifteen cents per pound; eggs, twenty-five cents per dozen; pork, ten cents per pound; potatoes, fifty cents per bag.

You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that the farmers who signed this petition are very moderate in their claims.

What was their surprise then at seeing the resolution moved by the Prime Minister in this house on the 4th of March last. They had expected it to include some of the farm products of the other provinces. The resolution, which I find in the orders of the day, read as follows:

March 4—The house in committee on the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to establish a board to be known as the Canadian Grain Board with power to purchase, receive and take delivery of wheat, oats, barley, rye and flax-seed, or any one or more of such grains for marketing and to sell, store, transport and market such grains, and to provide for the appointment of such clerks, employees and assistants as may be necessary, and to provide for their remuneration and for the expenses of, and arising out of, the operations of the board.

Mr. Chairman, ever since 1930 the government has been helping the western wheat producers. Here we are to-day with this resolution and a bill before the house respecting all grains, that is to say the production of 50 per cent of the farmers of western Canada. It is well known that not more than 50 per cent of the western farmers practise mixed farming. Therefore, when the government takes over the products of half the farmers of western Canada, would it not be fair and reasonable to include in this bill some of the products of the farmers of eastern Canada, in accordance with the terms of the petitions to which I have just referred? The province of Quebec supplies nearly one-third of the federal revenue and it should therefore be entitled to its share of the bonuses granted to farmers by the federal government. When the government paid a bonus of 5 cents a bushel on wheat, at a cost to the Dominion treasury of $12,720,121, the province of Quebec furnished nearly four million dollars of this amount.

I will be told, Mr. Chairman, that the supplementary estimates just voted contain an item of one million dollars for the cheese industry. I congratulate the government for this, its first grant to the eastern farmer; but why not place the cheese producer on the same basis as the wheat producer? When the government granted a bonus of 5 cents a bushel on western wheat, they did not say: When the expenditure has reached one million dollars, there will be no more. They paid 5 cents a bushel on all the wheat produced in the western provinces. Why does the government not do likewise in respect of all the cheese that will be produced, and why does it not pay a bonus on all the butter produced? That would be only fair and just and it would make up to a certain extent for what the province of Quebec has done to help the farmers of western Canada.

That is not all, Mr. Chairman. What has been the cost of the government's venture in wheat? Some say 50 or 60 million, others say 100 million, and of this sum the province of Quebec has to pay approximately one-third, that is to say, about twenty million dollars.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to quote the opinion of the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) given at page 3088 of Hansard:

> We have speculated in wheat to the extent almost of hundreds of millions of dollars and we do not know how much we shall lose—possibly twenty, thirty, forty or fifty millions.

I consider that the hon. member has been very indulgent for those who have speculated in wheat, for in view of the large number of bushels of wheat overhanging the market today, the loss will be much heavier. On the same page of Hansard is to be found the following statement of the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell):

> I have listened to the inquest of the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), but I would ask him this question. What condition would this country have been in had we not gone to the rescue of the farmers in the west when we could hear in the lobby talk about twenty-five cent wheat? What would have happened if we had left all these things go to the wall?

The hon. member for East Hamilton was probably unduly pessimistic, as wheat at 25 cents is too cheap. The price would have been higher.

I shall quote the prices given by the Prime Minister when he spoke on the subject, as reported at page 3565 of Hansard:

Fiscal year:	Average price per bushel
1925-26	$1 51.2
1926-27	1 46.3
1927-28	1 46.3
1928-29	1 24
1929-30	1 24
1930-31	64.2
1931-32	59.8

Had the government not taken over the marketing of wheat, the price would have remained at the average figure, probably 54 cents, the inquiry having revealed that the cost to the government was a fraction over 85 cents. I do not blame the government for the price paid to the farmer; what I do blame it for is the high price of wheat sold for domestic consumption, when it should have been sold at market price and no more.

Here are the prices paid in the province of Quebec for flour and other products, from 1931 to 1935, as compared with those prevailing both before and after the government assumed control of wheat marketing. Baking flour, delivered at stations in the province of Quebec, sold at $2.02½ in 1931 and $2.12½ in 1932. In 1933, when wheat was at 54 cents, flour was selling at $1.60, in 1934 at $1.80 and in 1935 at $2.25.

The reason of the high price of flour in 1935 is that the government took charge of the marketing of wheat.

Bran, in 1931, sold at $1.03¼; in 1932, at $1.18; in 1933, at 75½ cents; in 1934, at $1, and in 1935, at $1.35. Meal, in 1931, sold at $1.03¼; in 1932, at $1.23¾; in 1933, at 80½ cents; in 1934, at $1.05, and in 1935, at $1.40, a difference of 59½ cents. Middlings sold in 1931 at $1.18¾; in 1932, at $1.33¾; in 1933, at $1.05½; in 1934, at $1.20, and in 1935, at $1.60, which figures out at 54½ cents per bag.

The 32 parishes of the county of Mégantic bought at least two carloads a day of these products, and with the average extra price of about 60 cents per bag which we have had to pay, we have, since the government took over the marketing of wheat, paid an extra price of $612 per day, which makes $18,360 a month or $220,320 a year. Therefore, the 65 counties of the province of Quebec have contributed $14,320,800 more than they should have done.

Farmers are not the only ones who buy flour and other wheat products; the workingmen and other residents of cities have had to pay an extra price of 2½ cents a loaf for bread since the government took charge of the marketing of wheat.

There you have, Mr. Chairman, the cost to the province of Quebec of the bonuses paid to the farmers of western Canada. The 5 cent bonus on wheat has cost the country at least 12 million dollars, and the two years of government control of wheat marketing have added another 28 millions for flour and other wheat products only, making a total cost of 52 million dollars.

In order to convince some of my hon. friends who may think I am mistaken, I have obtained five invoices from the Ogilvy

Flour Mills, of Montreal, which is perhaps the leading flour manufacturing company in Canada, and I now lay them on the table of the house.

Mr. Chairman, the government has maintained the price of flour at such a high level that we find ourselves to-day importing flour from various countries, as is shown by the answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) to a question of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) given on page 560 of Hansard of February 7, 1935:

Mr. Reid:
1. What quantities of flour were imported into Canada during the calendar year 1934?
2. What were the various quantities from each country?
Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury):
1. Canada's total quantity of wheat flour imported during the calendar year 1934 amounted to 178,175 barrels.
2. Canada's total quantities of wheat flour imported from various countries, during the calendar year 1934, were:—

Imports from:	Barrels
United Kingdom	105,431
United States	3,338
Alaska	1
Australia	69,380
Hong Kong	25

The government has thus maintained the price of flour at such a high level that Canadian merchants have imported some when all the while the country had on its hands an enormous surplus of wheat it did not know what to do with.

In view of the help given to the west by the province of Quebec on this occasion, I hope our western friends will support the following amendment I am going to move in order that the eastern farmers may receive their just share;

Mr. Roberge moved, seconded by Mr. Girouard:

That Bill No. 98 be amended in the following manner:

(1) That the title of the bill be the following: "An act providing for the establishment and definition of duties of the Canadian Grain and Other Farm Products Board."

(2) By substituting the following section for section 1. "1. The present act may be cited under the title: An act respecting the Canadian Grain and Other Farm Products Board, 1935."

(3) By adding at the end of subsection (1) of section 2 the following paragraph:

"(f) other products of the farm" means in the present act: butter, cheese and maple sugar.

(4) By substituting the following subsection for subsection (1) of section 3:

"3 (1) a board to be known as the Canadian Grain and Other Farm Products Board is constituted; it is composed of three members appointed by the governor in council."

[Mr. Roberge.]

(5) By adding the following subsection at the end of section 7:

"(3) the board may grant a bonus of 5 cents a pound on the sale of each pound of butter, cheese and maple sugar, sold by farmers who have no grain to sell or who do not benefit by the present act in any other way."

(6) By adding the following subsection at the end of section 13:

"(2) the board may also adopt regulations respecting the application of subsection (3) of section 7."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Shall I translate the amendment?

Mr. BENNETT: There is no duty cast upon you, Mr. Chairman, to do so. If the amendment is as I understand it, it is wholly out of order, but we can deal with that perhaps later.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): The amendment will stand for a few minutes until it is translated.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is an amendment before the committee. It is in French and it ought to be translated at once to enable the committee to continue the discussion.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): If I correctly understood the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) this morning when he was speaking on this bill, he gave us again that old story about the antagonism to the pools and the antagonism to orderly marketing or anything that looked like an attempt on the part of the farmers of western Canada through the pools or by the assistance of the government to get a reasonable price for their produce. It has been argued again and again—

Mr. RALSTON: Is the hon. gentleman referring to what I said?

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Yes, the words I caught were "starvation and holding up to ransom."

Mr. RALSTON: Those were the words used by the Prime Minister.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): That does not make any difference.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will permit me to correct him—he said I had said something about the pools. I do not think he will find, from the start to the finish of what I have said, anything about the pools.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Well, the same argument has been applied to the pools by the grain trade ever since there was a pool in 1923. Whether that was said by the Prime Minister or anyone else, it was quoted by the hon. member here to-day, and I presume he accepted it.

Mr. RALSTON: I am not accepting anything. I quoted it for just what it is, a statement by the Prime Minister in regard to the situation which he found existing.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the whole of it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): At any rate we are told directly or indirectly, as we have been told ever since 1923 by the private grain trade, that if we were not very careful we would get in bad with our customers in Europe. The suggestion is that the farmers of western Canada did hold up the people of Europe, and that is the reason why there is not the demand for Canadian wheat that there ought to be. Now, if I understand the matter correctly, and I shall quote authorities for my view, just the reverse of that is true. The position of Europe to-day, with its tariffs and so forth, is a result of other conditions entirely. The situation as it has developed since 1925 arose from fear of a deluge of cheap wheat, not because of any attempt of western Canada or other exporting countries to hold up the people who wanted their food products. I have a statement by Sir Arthur Salter, I shall not take time to read it in detail, but in a speech made in England appearing in The World's Economic Crisis and the Way of Escape, he pointed out that if there had been no general depression there would in all probability have been an agricultural depression, because of the mechanization of grain production. Then he went on to point out that while there may be an unlimited demand for general products—a man who has a buggy can use a car and a radio—there can be no such increase in the demand for food products, because no matter how prosperous people may become their stomachs do not become any larger, they do not eat any more. The only possibility of increasing the demand for foodstuffs is by an increase in population. In fact he shows that as people become increasingly prosperous they tend to eat less breadstuffs and more of more expensive foods. That argument appears on pages 26-27 of the book I have mentioned.

Another writer, Mr. G. D. H. Cole, writing on the European agricultural situation, a book published in 1933, has the following to say at page 437:

> Naturally, apart from the complicating factor of external debts, which has been of outstanding importance especially in the case of Germany, the countries which have suffered most acutely as a result of the world slump have been those which rely for the means of paying for their imports on the sale of the agricultural goods and raw materials which have declined most sharply in value. Of all commodities that which affects the largest number of countries is wheat; and it is on wheat above all other classes of goods that attention has been concentrated in the attempt to restore the position of certain of the struggling countries of eastern Europe.

Then at page 440.

> In these circumstances there has been strong pressure from the countries chiefly concerned in the export of wheat to secure a preferential outlet for their surplus in the European markets. These countries want of course not merely a market for their exportable supplies of wheat, but a market with a price substantially above that ruling the world as a whole. For this price, determined partly by the more favourable conditions of production in the new world, and still more of late by the existence of large stocks of unsold wheat which have hung continuously over the market with a permanently depressing effect upon prices, is far too low to enable the peasant cultivators of the European producing countries to exist at a tolerable standard of living above all in face of the heavy burdens of debt by which they are weighed down.

The first statement dealt with the international position; this statement deals with the peasant position. At page 422 he continues:

> Nor is this situation at all surprising in face of the fact that in July, 1931, when the price of wheat was about 12 gold francs a quintal at most, the import duty in Germany had already reached nearly 31 gold francs a quintal. In fact, in those states where domestic wheat growing is important but not on a sufficient scale to meet the entire demand, the home consumers are being compelled in the interests of farmers threatened with ruin to pay exceedingly high prices for the absolute necessaries of life.

If we want perhaps better authority than either of these let us turn to the publication of the League of Nations, issued from Geneva in 1935 on agricultural protectionism. Briefly the story is that after the war when millions of men went back to their homes, migration was no longer possible on the old scale. The need of reestablishing these men was just as great in European countries as in this country. We had to adopt the soldier settlement scheme. There was no opening for all these men in industry so an attempt was made to reestablish them on farms and keep them employed in that way. It is remarkable that it seems so difficult to grasp the fact that it is possible to overproduce foodstuffs. During the war it required the British blockade to bring Germany into submission through a scarcity of food. If it had not been for that, notwithstanding the number of men engaged in the war there seemed to be ample foodstuffs to keep the whole world going. Then when twenty million men came back and the progress of mechanical invention turned to the uses of peace, there is no doubt that the world should have expected a tremendous increase in production in all lines. This happened in agriculture as well as in other lines, or even more so. Here is what this League of Nations publication has to say on that point, at page 6:

The attached description of the evolution which has occurred since oversea production began to make its appearance on the European market shows what were the origins of agricultural protectionism as practised before the war.

It is unnecessary to recall here how the war, by taking millions of workers from the fields in the belligerent countries just when the armies were demanding more and more foodstuffs, gave an impetus to oversea agricultural production—particularly cereals—the effect of which is still apparent to-day.

For several years indeed after the close of hostilities, Europe continued to import considerable quantities of agricultural products—particularly cereals and meat—her return to her former productive capacity having been retarded by a series of concomitant causes, such as the Russian revolution and numerous agrarian reforms. But directly her producing capacity was again restored about 1925, the balance between supply and demand was broken; prices were already on the down grade, and the full force of the collapse was felt from 1930 onwards.

Exporting countries with a surplus of goods had to bear the full shock of this catastrophe, against which they possessed only one means of defence—a useful means at first, but one which was later to constitute an additional danger—namely, to slow down the marketing of their crops by accumulating stocks . . .

True, the moment is in sight when, thanks to the increasing extension of technical progress, half the agricultural population of any given country will be amply sufficient to supply a demand which, unlike the demand for industrial products, can after all only increase at the same rate as the population itself.

Here is an additional reason, a very important one, why Europe was anxious to rehabilitate her men on the land and keep them there.

But it is clear that no country in which the peasant class plays a fundamental part—and that is the case in almost all countries—can agree to allow this evolution to proceed so rapidly as to produce highly dangerous upheavals. One has, moreover, to reckon with the idea, somewhat obscure but not devoid of foundation, that the farmer for a series of reasons independent of his will, such as atmospheric disturbances or diseases of animals and plants, is exposed to more sudden and dangerous risks than other classes of producers. It will seem natural, then, in the main, that in countries in which the historical development and dominant conceptions in the life of the people demand such an effort, the population as a whole should be prepared to afford special assistance to the agricultural classes—generally in the form of protective duties—and that such help should be considered more and more imperative in proportion as agricultural prices collapse and the depression continues to exercise its effects.

For social, historical and psychological reasons, the preservation of agriculture appears to the majority of countries as an absolutely vital question, and one which cannot be considered as a purely economic problem. The peasant class, which is an element of order and stability and an admirable reserve of energy, forms, at any rate in the countries of the old world, the basis of the social edifice and plays an essential part in reconstituting and rejuvenating the physical strength of generations worn out by life in industrial and large urban centres.

It seems to me that we have here entirely different reasons from those advanced by the grain exchange or arguments advanced either in or out of this chamber, about holding of wheat by the pool and which we have heard in western Canada for the last twelve years. Europe proceeded in a new way to protect its peasant class, its farmers, to protect agricultural prices so that peasants could live, carry on and pay their debts. In addition to that they were protecting themselves against a large influx of imports as against exports because of the recent cutting off of exports of capital from the United States. I have before me a statement concerning the cutting down of capital exports to Germany and other countries about the year 1929. At page 422 of Cole's book I find this:

The effects of this withdrawal of American capital can be seen in the figures showing the import of capital into the leading European countries. In this connection by far the greatest significance attaches to the situation in Germany. In the five years from 1924 to 1928 the total import of capital into Germany is estimated to have amounted to over 3,500 million dollars, of which over 1,000 million dollars was imported in each of the years 1927 and 1928. In 1929 the import of capital into Germany fell sharply to 550 million dollars, and in 1930 to less than 150 million dollars, thus bringing the movement of German rationalization abruptly to an end.

That deals with the general situation. The argument has been advanced however that we ought to have sold more of our wheat in competition with the Argentine, for instance, on the British market. In face of the fact that five western Canadian crops have been sold at less than the cost of production I do not see how we can be accused of holding up anybody anywhere. If we cannot get away from the charge of holding people up when we are selling at less than the cost of production it seems to me that we will have to turn around and find some other way of making a living. We cannot develop the country and we cannot create conditions which make it worth while for our people to endeavour to carry on until the prices equal the cost of production. After what Great Britain did through the Ottawa agreements in connection with the stabilization of prices and the cutting down of the influx of meat products into that country I cannot believe that the people of Great Britain or its parliament would want to drive a bargain which would mean ruin to the farmer of western Canada. The only people who have said so are those who have associated themselves with the grain exchange; it is an argument of the private grain trade.

Now then, should we have sold against the Argentine? As I understand the situation the Argentine has no granaries, elevators or a storage system. A country which has not a storage system has to sell immediately the crop is off the ground; it must sell as rapidly as possible so that the crop will not rot on its hands. If we were determined to sell our wheat against the Argentine and had adopted no policy of stabilization where would the price have gone? Would there not have been cut-throat competition? Would it not have driven the price lower?—indeed the evidence discloses that when that policy was attempted the price did go lower. Surely on the whole the policy of stabilization was better, and saved us from ruin.

Various estimates have been made as to the advantage of the stabilization policy to the farmers of western Canada, and the figure of 10 cents or 15 cents per bushel has been indicated. I understand the estimate was given to the committee by the assistant manager of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, Mr. McIvor. Various questions were asked regarding the present price of Canadian wheat as compared with the Argentine wheat, having in mind the intrinsic value of both wheats. I believe the statements submitted tc the committee on behalf of Mr. McFarland indicated that there was a difference of 7 or 8 cents. I believe the spread to-day is about 26 or 27 cents. According to the statement of Mr. James Richardson about 16 cents is accounted for,—10 cents per bushel intrinsic value in favour of Canada and a preference of 6 cents. In his evidence Mr. Richardson stated there would have been a good market for Canadian wheat, and that probably another 100,000,000 bushels would have been marketed at from 70 cents to 85 cents. His statement however was rather vague. In another place he stated that a British miller had said he would increase his milling of Canadian wheat at a price 18 cents below the present price. In the light of these statements the 10 cents down would at least be necessary in order to sell the wheat Mr. Richardson mentioned. He does not say it would go into consumption. It is safe to say however according to the information of Mr. Richardson and George McIvor that because of stabilization the difference in price level to-day would be around 10 cents. I submit that if we were selling and forcing this wheat on the world market regardless of the consumer demand we would drive the price down another few cents. I submit that the statement that stabilization has resulted in a benefit of fifteen cents a bushel was not so very far wrong. During the last few years the farmers have been selling wheat, No. 1 at about 30 to 60 cents, an average of about 45 cents at the elevators. About 20 per cent of the wheat delivered and inspected during the last three years, 1932, 1933 and 1934, for which we have records in the report of the board of grain commissioners was below No. 4, and I submit that if there had been no stabilization we would have taken care of the surplus in this way: An amount equivalent to the surplus would not have been worth hauling to the elevators and would have been left to rot on the farm. So I submit it was a far better policy to enter into stabilization, even though it was an arduous task to raise the price and put some value into that wheat. We have exported some six hundred million bushels of wheat during the last few years, and with the ten or fifteen cents a bushel increase, which was still a reasonable price to consumers, stabilization gave us more for that six hundred million bushels than we would have got for the whole of the wheat if delivered at ten cents a bushel less. So I submit that whatever may be said against this policy it has that much to the good so far as the farmers of Canada are concerned, and if it ultimately costs the country something I do not believe it will cost as much as a policy of cut-throat competition would have done, throwing our wheat on the markets of the world.

Mr. GOLDING: Then why not continue that policy?

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I want to continue it. The wheat surplus became dangerous according to reports about 1929-30. The wheat surplus was gradually accumulating from 1924. It did not become really noticeable until we saw those tremendous efforts at deflation, and intense protectionism spreading throughout the world, and the cutting off of credits to Germany and other European countries in 1929 and 1930. The wheat surplus rose from 471 million bushels in 1921, which was the approximate wheat stocks in important areas in that year, to 904 million bushels in 1931. That was the world surplus, and it went later to over one billion bushels. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that that surplus has been coming down at about the same rate as it went up, and that we are holding in Canada a little less this year than we did last year up to the first of August and a little less last year and the year before, if I remember correctly. So it seems to me that the world wheat situation is not such a hopeless proposition as has been stated. The increases in the surplus went up at the rate of about 40 million bushels a year from 1921 to 1931. They are coming down at about the same rate by decreases in acreage and from various other causes.

I hold in my hand the monthly bulletin of agricultural statistics for May, 1935, and at page 152 is shown the world's visible supply of wheat and flour, and the source of these figures is Broomhall's. The table gives the figures of the visible supply on April 1 for each year from 1932 to 1935, as follows:

World's Visible Supply of Wheat and Flour

April 1, 1932..	595,830,000
April 1, 1933..	577,640,000
April 1, 1934..	532,980,000
April 1, 1935..	445,599,000

From 1921 to 1931 the world surplus piled up, and I have these statistics from the report of the imperial economic committee on the wheat situation, 1931: In 1921 the surplus increased 31 million bushels; in 1922 it decreased 46 million bushels, in 1923 it increased 117 million bushels, in 1924 it decreased 159 million bushels, in 1925 it increased 63 million bushels; in 1926 it increased 69 million bushels; in 1927 it increased 69 million bushels; in 1928 it increased 68 million bushels; in 1929 it decreased 49 million bushels, and in 1930 it increased 95 million bushels. The decreases are as follows: 1932-33, 18 million bushels; 1933-34, 44 million bushels; 1934-35, 87 million bushels. Those figures are set out at page 105 of the twentieth report of the imperial economic committee on the wheat situation, 1931, and later figures issued by the dominion bureau of statistics in its monthly bulletin of agricultural statistics for May, 1935, at page 152.

So I submit that stabilization has been of tremendous advantage and there is no indication that our present trouble is in any way permanent at all so far as I can see, not if we have common sense. I submit therefore that the arduous job has been done and done well, and that we are better off than we would have been if we had followed any other policy that has been suggested as an alternative—better off in dollars. If this country loses some money as a result of this carry-over it at least indicates that the farmers of western Canada have benefited to some extent.

Mr. SPOTTON: To a great extent.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I want to deal for a moment with the amendments that have been suggested and accepted. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) this morning called attention to the bill, paragraphs (b), (c) and (j). If I followed him correctly—he was looking the other way and I did not catch every word he uttered—he called attention to the language of paragraph (b) which says that the board may market wheat "for such price as it may consider reasonable, with the object of promoting the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets." Then he referred to paragraph (c), which reads:

(c) to sell and dispose of stocks of wheat and contracts for the delivery of wheat acquired from Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited and the wheat represented by such contracts as speedily as may be reasonably possible, having regard to economic and other conditions.

And then paragraph (j)

(j) to offer continuously wheat for sale in the markets of the world through the established channels.

The hon. member said that the pool had not a sales policy. He criticized the sales policy as not being a sales policy, criticized the government and the pool acting through John I. McFarland. But as a matter of fact they have marketed since 1930 about one billion bushels directly and indirectly, and about 600 million bushels in the last few years, and they have piled up a surplus of roughly 100 million bushels since 1930. Can it be said that that was holding wheat and not selling it? I do not think that is a fair statement at all. But the dangerous thing is this, Mr. Chairman. I do not know any witness who appeared before the committee and suggested that it would be a good thing to throw this surplus rapidly on the market. I think they were all opposed to it, but the danger is that the country and the world will interpret the hon. member's statement on these clauses as meaning that we are going to dispose of this surplus as rapidly as possible, and I hope that when the Prime Minister speaks on this section he will indicate, as he indicated in his speech some days ago, that they have no intention of dumping the surplus.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When did the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) say anything of that kind?

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I am saying that his statement is capable of that interpretation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Please stick to the statement.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): He was contrasting these sections with what John I. McFarland had been doing during the last few years.

Mr. VALLANCE: You are all wrong.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I hope that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) speaks he will indicate that that is not the intention of the government.

Mr. SPOTTON: They are always for and against, they are going and coming all the time.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): It would be a disastrous policy.

Mr. RALSTON: If there is anything in my statement which indicates that I said that this wheat should be thrown upon the market, I will withdraw it. But I say to the hon. member that he will find no such meaning in any remark which I made, either in this committee or anywhere else. I said that we should sell our wheat as fast as is reasonably possible, and I pointed out the wording of the section, having regard to economic and other conditions. My hon. friend must not misinterpret my remarks. The Prime Minister did put those words in the bill. The suggestion which I made was that the wheat should be disposed of as speedily as was feasible and that there should be provision in the meantime for stabilization operations. That was changed to provide that it should be disposed of as speedily as was reasonably possible, subject to economic and other conditions.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): If I understood the hon. member, the interpretation he placed upon these sections was that they meant something vastly different to what Mr. McFarland was doing. If I understood him correctly, he interpreted the policy of the government put into effect through John I. McFarland as being one of holding rather than of selling wheat.

Mr. RALSTON: Quite right.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): And this is contrary to that.

Mr. RALSTON: We cannot forever hold wheat, we must dispose of it reasonably.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Forever is a long time.

Mr. RALSTON: Four years ago we started with 75 million bushels and to-day we have 225 million bushels.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I am glad the hon. member has made that point because I followed him very carefully and I got the impression that he was trying to indicate that this wheat must go on the market under greater pressure than has been exerted during the last few years. I think he indicated that very definitely. I am against such a policy as I am of the opinion that the wheat has been put on the market as fast as it could have been without bringing ruin to the producers.

Another suggestion was that it should be for one year only. I do not know if that meant that we could get rid of this surplus in one year and I shall not place that interpretation upon it. Notwithstanding the fact that the world's surplus is decreasing and that Canada's holdings are decreasing I do not believe that we can dispose of our surplus in one year. You cannot separate the surplus from the general crop as they must be both marketed in the same market. If we could ship our surplus to China or to Mars, it would be a separate problem to that raised by future crops, but we cannot do that. Our surplus is part of the same problem and it must be handled in the same way. There is a reasonably hopeful situation in the world to-day so far as wheat is concerned as a result of the policies which have been put into effect but I do not think this situation can be cleaned up in one year. As far as I am concerned I am opposed absolutely to any suggestion that this is emergency legislation for one year only.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat I would like to have seen the original bill stand. The history of the world is the history of minorities and the history of Canada is the history of compromises. I came into the house about the same time as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and I can tell him and the other hon. gentlemen who sit opposite that back in the years 1921 to 1926, when the Drury administration was ruling in Ontario a great protectionist newspaper spent a large sum of money to send skilled experts through the west. These experts recommended that there should be public ownership of Canada's greatest asset, the grain growing industry. At that time there were Liberal Progressives, Liberals and Progressives but when the elections came along they were all Liberals. This protectionist paper, the Toronto Evening Telegram, formerly edited by the great battling editor and patriot, John R. Robertson, emphasized the fact that grain growing was Canada's greatest industry. They demonstrated that it was not a north and south industry but an imperial industry, as our markets were in England, in the allied countries of France and Italy and the foreign country of Germany. The greatest "carry-over" the poor grain grower is suffering from was the free trade policy of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Where were hon. gentlemen opposite on that occasion? The greatest liability the poor grain grower has to face is the previous policies of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), his colleagues and his former allies, the Progressives. We must look at this situation as it is to-day. Facts are facts. I said in 1924 that the best friend of the western wheat grower was the policy of protection. I said:

> The best friend of the western wheat grower is the policy of protection, as that policy has been and should be extended and administered by the founders and soldiers of the National Policy, the Conservative party of Canada. The western wheat grower has eaten the sour grapes of free trade. No wonder the western wheat growers' teeth are set on edge. The western wheat grower has taught himself to believe, or has allowed so-called leaders to persuade him, that wheat growing in western Canada is a continental industry, an industry that must prosper by reason of the admission of the product to the United States market or perish because of its exclusion. I submit that wheat growing in western Canada is the most truly national, the most widely imperial of all Canada's great industries. The markets of the British empire mean more and the markets of the American section of the north American continent mean less to the wheat growers of Canada than to any other class of Canadian producers.

The government is to be congratulated for the policies it has put forth and this will be recorded in history as one of the greatest things ever done. This party has been consistently a grain protectionist party. A further investigation was made following investigations made by the paper to which I have referred and that disclosed that there was bootlegging in Canadian hard wheat, not only in the elevators of Buffalo but in those of Baltimore, New York and Philadelphia. As I say, this government has been very much handicapped when they came into office in 1930 by the free trade policies of the Liberal party and the Progressives and I am glad to see that the Progressives who were formerly under the leadership of Mr. Crerar and Mr. Forke, and they were all real Liberals, have at last come to their senses and are admitting that the grain growing industry is and never was a north and south industry but an east and west and over the sea. and purely British.

[Mr. Church.]

The poor grain grower has had to suffer from the hit and run policies of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and the Liberal party. Did you ever hear of the Argentine selling its wheat with the aid of brass bands? No; there has been too much of the brass band buying and selling policy of wheat asked for by hon. gentlemen opposite.

I commend the Prime Minister for what he has done; it is the most forward step that has been taken in the British empire or the overseas dominion in matters of this kind. In 1924 the Conservatives in this house proposed such a national policy in connection with grain—a public ownership control policy—in buying, selling and marketing of wheat through a public ownership of grain; it was laughed at in the house at that time. I would refer hon. gentlemen, however, to the history of cheap light and power in the province of Ontario. They want to go back to the condition that prevailed with regard to light and power in 1905 so far as the wheat business is concerned. At that time our natural resources were being given away, and Sir James Whitney and others who took the view that he did were described as amateur anarchists and socialists because they proposed to preserve the natural resources and water-powers of the country for the people. We contended that the same principle of protection should be applied to the grain growers, and what did Mr. Drury do? He was head of the national council on agriculture, and on the 2nd of April, 1924 he came here on behalf of that body and presented a memorandum to the cabinet, intimating that protection was an unmitigated evil and that the farmer had been exploited and plundered by those who enjoyed special privileges. They asked to be relieved of the artificial burden imposed upon them and a declaration was made in favour of reciprocity with the United States and the immediate abolition of the tariff. Their demands were all along this free trade line. But Ontario got one obstacle out of the way on June 24—I refer to the so-called Drury Farmers government, as I said in this house on May 5, 1924—though the policy of the Ottawa branch of that party continued to hinder the growth of the country. That party is the worst enemy of prosperity in this country, an enemy to its own supporters engaged in grain growing and other forms of agriculture in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. If its free trade policy had been persisted in, and if hundreds of thousands of new grain growers had gone into the prairies as they wanted, creating overproduction, where would Canada have been when the depression came in 1930? Who is to blame for all this surplus production? The Liberals and free trade.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth the other night used some strong language which I think was unworthy of him; referring to the leader of the government he used the words "bluff" and "bluster." Well, if there is bluff and bluster anywhere it is to be found in the support now of protection on grain as a policy of the Liberal party to-day. After professing free trade they have been veering round to all sorts of protection, supporting now stabilization, subvention and subsidies and bonuses. After going through the country denouncing the Conservative party as the enemy of the grain grower, what did they say in Ontario? They said that the greatest enemy the grain growers of the prairies had was to be found east of the great lakes in the manufacturers. Let me tell them that the greatest enemy the western grain growers had was west of the great lakes; that enemy was in the grain exchanges, the Winnipeg grain exchange, the elevator combines, the transportation combines and all the middlemen and profiteers who for many years past have had the poor grain grower by the throat. I say, therefore, that if this government has done nothing else to win the support of the people, it will merit that support for the progressive stand it has taken with regard to the nationalization of the grain industry. It has taken a national patriotic stand. There is no doubt that an emergency and a necessity had been created and the government could not have done anything but follow the course it has; it has "hedged" the grain and brought the whole credit of the country to the support of these "hedges" or bankruptcy faced Canada. Every part of the country is interested in the bill, and the other night in my constituency, referring to this legislation, I said that it would forever eliminate the operations of the middlemen, profiteers, the grain and elevator and transportation combines and all the other gamblers in futures who have had a stranglehold on the poor grain farmer. It will remove the middlemen and the profiteers and give the farmers a higher price for their wheat. I said further that the day was not far distant when we would have a national policy in connection with our hard wheat, a milling policy, a policy that would handle our wheat right through this country and mill it in Canada, ship it overseas and place it on the markets of the world. It is fortunate for this country that we have at the head of the government to-day a statesman who has brought about this reform. I have every respect and great admiration for the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, whom I have known for a great many years; I knew him and his partner before coming into this house. But when the hon. gentleman advocates an inquiry into this particular Canadian cooperative wheat association let me say this to him and to the Liberal party in this house. Years ago they were not so anxious to have a grain inquiry. What did Mr. Crerar do? When the Union government made a strenuous and brave effort in 1921 to come to the support of the prairies, to help the poor grain grower who was being fleeced by the middleman and profiteers out of a fair price per bushel for his grain, where were the Liberals and the Progressives? Let me read what I said on May 5, 1924, in Mr. Crerar's presence in this house:

> It cannot be too plainly stated or too often repeated that the United States is now a relatively small factor in making world wheat prices. Canada is a much larger factor and European markets are receiving large quantities of wheat at lower prices than even Canada is making. Moreover, Canada and other countries are able to produce wheat at lower costs than those ruling in the United States. The wheat council in the United States bases its appeal for a higher tariff upon a showing that costs are much lower in Canada.

Let me read what I said in that parliament on that day of the way the Liberals and Progressives blocked grain inquiries:

> I believe in free trade, especially free trade in grain inquiries. The Progressives and their leaders proved themselves believers in protection, yes, in the worst kind of protection, the protection that surrounded the alleged robbery of the western wheat growers, and protection against an investigation into the workings of that system of robbery. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) and others combined courts and lawyers and injunctions into a prohibitive tariff against inquiry into the methods of the big interests that handle wheat, not excepting the big interests in this country represented by the hon. member for Marquette. I was never an extremist in my enthusiasm for Union government. But the Union government honestly tried to protect the western wheat producer against the big interests. The western wheat producers have fulfilled in their experience with the hon. member for Marquette and his followers in this house, the words of scripture, "A man's foes shall be they of his household." The worst enemy of the western wheat growers is the policy of the Progressive party, its leaders and its representatives in this house. The next opponent of the western wheat grower is the present policy of the Liberal party, its leaders and representatives in this house and in the capitals of the prairie provinces. The best friend of the western wheat grower is the policy of protection.

I have lived to see the day when a policy such as is proposed in this bill has been brought down. I pointed out at that time that if the policy of the Liberals and Progressives had been followed out the price of wheat would have come down to 50 cents a bushel. It went down to 38 cents in 1934. That was prophecy, was it not? Wheat plays too large a part in the life of Canada to leave it any longer to the tender mercies of middlemen, profiteers and gamblers in futures, and as a social and economic necessity nationalization and direct public control in such an emergency is imperative.

The wheat growers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have more to fear from hon. gentlemen across the floor. The Prime Minister should be most highly commended for the action he has taken in this matter. I do not agree with everything he has done here because, as I say, while I wear the party uniform I will never wear its plush. I am willing to do my duty in the ranks but it will be as a volunteer and not as a conscript. He has made a brave effort to save Canada from bankruptcy, and succeeded.

Where are some of the hon. gentlemen who were free traders and who are now conscripted to support the policy of the Conservative party along the lines of advanced protection? Where is the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, the free trader from the maritime provinces? When I came into this house and proposed a national coal policy and a policy of protection and of subsidies, bonuses and subventions for the poor miners and for coal, steel and iron in the maritime provinces; when my hon. friend the young labour student from Cape Breton (Mr. Macdougall) on a motion to adjourn the house revealed the starving condition of the poor miners down there, what was the policy of the government of the day? They voted down a resolution of mine for a national coal policy in this country although it was stated at that time that those withering industries, coal, steel and iron, needed aid. What did the Conservative party do while in opposition? They supported that policy and to-day the Prime Minister is moving 2,800,000 tons of coal to the head of the lakes economically. The present Prime Minister has converted a withering industry into one of the most progressive industries in the maritime provinces. The people of Ontario hold out their hands to the people of the maritimes to support protection all along the line. Where was the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth at that time? I think he entered this house on a by-election from Halifax when the late Mr. Mitchell his partner was here also, a gentleman whom I knew welle and respected very much, after resigning. The free trade policies of the maritime Liberals helped to move the head offices of the coal and steel companies and the banks from the maritimes to Montreal with the result that the maritimes were clamouring for commissions to be appointed to carry out investigations all along the line. They got them from this party, the Conservative party. When the prairies were clamouring for protection for their grain, for bonuses and subventions and when they were faced with the present emergent situation with regard to wheat, we had a great leader who met the problems, and the action he took will redound to his credit in the days to come.

I am sorry that there has been any compromise about this bill. It was unfortunate that our leader became sick because, if he had not, he would have had this original grain bill placed on the statute books before Easter, and it would have been a most progressive policy. The day has gone by forever when we shall have any free competition and supply and demand and similar laws applied to this great basic industry of wheat growing the world over. We shall have quotas, stabilization funds and all that sort of thing for many years to come not only in Canada but throughout the British empire. The speculators did everything they could with the market and a bill along the lines of the original one was required. If there was a glut, I can tell you who is to blame for it. The glut was caused by the brass band publication of prices and carry-over. As I said, the biggest carry-over the people in the prairie provinces had was under the free trade policies of hon. gentlemen opposite.

When I was speaking a few minutes ago, I was referring not to the present member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) whose views are well known; I was reading from Hansard of May 5, 1924, when my hon. friend was not a member for that constituency. Mr. Crerar, his predecessor, was the member for Marquette then; I wish to make that clear. My remark referred to Mr. Crerar who was at that time the leader of the Progressive party in the house and the principal exponent in and out of the house of the grain exchanges and all the agencies that prevented an investigation in 1920-1921 in the Maharg case and he and his colleagues got an injunction. It was hon. gentlemen opposite proclaiming with brass bands the carry-over and prices that caused the glut in the market and forced down the price. Did you ever hear of anyone going out and buying real estate on that principle or a big business man announcing with brass bands what he is going to do? No. The government did well to provide the credit of the people of Canada in order to save this great basic industry, because otherwise the whole west including its cities and towns would have been bankrupt. Wheat was headed down to thirty-eight cents a bushel, and if it had not been for the progressive policy of this party, the price would have gone still lower. How far down would it have gone had the Progressives and Liberals had their way? Some of them wanted to bring in half a million, yes a million more wheat growers. Sir Henry Thornton proposed a policy to increase wheat growing in the west along the same lines. What would have happened if those free trade policies had been carried out and what would have been the carry-over? The western producers had no finer friends than the people of Ontario and some of their members were here in 1924. This grain board has been needed for four years and I am sorry that it was not created before and action taken.

Canada is the largest wheat exporter in the world and Britain, as I showed in 1924, was the biggest importer. So far as Canada is concerned, this party did more for the grain growers of the west by the Ottawa trade agreements than all parties on the opposite side of the house who were clamouring for reciprocity and free trade with the people of the United States. Now they are talking about inquiries. Let them have an inquiry into Mr. Crerar's grain exchange in Winnipeg. Let them start where we stopped in the 1921 injunction. But I predict that the more you look into this question from a business standpoint, the more you will come to the conclusion that this government did the only wise and sensible thing.

I am sorry there has been any compromise with hon. gentlemen opposite, but in this hot weather one cannot expect the members to stay here much longer. It is unfortunate that we did not have the original bill in its entirety but the responsibility for that is on the Liberal party in this house and out of it who have by the action they have taken in the house and in the committee secured a compromise. As I say, I am sorry there is a compromise, because Canada has had too many of them. As regards the prairie provinces, it would be far better if we did not have these provincial legislatures at all. In Great Britain with a population of 48,000,000 they have only one legislature, but in this country we have nine Balkan states all fighting among themselves whereas their powers should be under the control of this central parliament.

In conclusion I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman. You have presided in this committee a good deal this year, I do not know if you get an honorarium for it, but at any rate you richly deserve it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not going to spend many minutes on this bill, but I should like first to say a word of commendation of the committee of nine for having worked out so relatively successful a solution of this knotty wheat marketing problem as that embodied in this amended bill. I never saw a perfect bill in my life, and especially in the case of one which is the result of compromise, although that is a policy we all have to follow if we are to arrive at anything like reasonably unanimous or resultant conclusions. What use would it be to thrust this measure into the arena in any other than a compromise form? The government had the power to force the original bill through if they desired; then we should have had a great political conflagration on the prairie which would do no good to anyone concerned. That is why I feel like supporting this amended bill, not as a complete solution of the problem but as an improvement on the old bill and as likely to better the conditions that have prevailed. I welcome the spirit of compromise that evidently actuated the committee all through and I feel like accepting this bill as the best obtainable with the limited time and opportunity at our disposal. Of course if there are further improvements and amendments offered in committee, I reserve my liberty to support them. It will be observed that none of the conflicting interests and parties who gave evidence before the committee are getting in this bill all that they would like to get, but all of them are getting some of their desires, and that is the very essence of compromise. If I were more desirous of continuing a grievance than attaining even a partial betterment of present conditions I also might talk against this amended bill. But that is not my desire; my desire is to find the best solution we can get under the present circumstances, and the only way to get that as I see it is to support the amended bill. No one has the old original bill before him, and no one is advocating the continuation of the present holding policy. It was successful in a degree in its time but I always thought Mr. McFarland was given an impossible task, to stabilize the price to the producer and at the same time sell our full share of wheat at competitive prices with other comparable wheats and no one lose any money thereby. This bill looks to a betterment of such selling conditions, and in this hot July weather, the beginning of the dog days, I do not see why we should continue to argue it; rather let us get along with it. Reserving my right to approve of what I consider further amendments by way of betterment that come from any side of this house I shall discontinue my remarks for the present.

Mr. GARDINER: I shall only take a few minutes in discussing this bill as amended by the special committee. It is not my purpose to follow the argument made by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) but I should like to call the attention of the committee to a statement which the hon. member made when he was discussing the budget, which statement has some reference to the exchange of words which took place this afternoon between the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. When my hon. friend was discussing the budget last March, dealing with the wheat situation and the volume of wheat held by Mr. McFarland very largely on government account, he made the following statement which I shall read, and let the committee determine the rights and wrongs of the argument which took place this afternoon. The statement is found at page 2116 of Hansard.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly ready to stand by anything I have said at any time but I would point out first that my hon. friend is out of order because he cannot refer to a debate which took place during this session, and second that to-day I was dealing with a specific bill and not with the budget. I do point out that the policy which I advocate is the policy embodied in subsections (b) and (c) of section 8, and which was accepted by the whole committee.

Mr. GARDINER: As my hon. friend takes exception to my quoting from his budget speech—

Mr. RALSTON: No, I am only pointing out that it is out of order. My hon. friend knows the rules.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, in his statement made at that time my hon. friend drew attention to the attitude and policy of the Argentine government as compared with the attitude and policy of this government in relation to wheat. He pointed out that the Argentine had to all intents and purposes cleared out its bins, and had done it through the policy of putting its wheat on the market and getting rid of it. He said that the policy of the present government seemed to be more or less holding wheat off the market, and consequently accumulating a very great surplus. As far as the past policy of the government is concerned I must confess that I am very sympathetic towards it, simply because as a practical grain grower in western Canada, unless the government had done something along the lines they did or put some other policy in its place which would have been equally effective, I do not care to contemplate what the condition of the farmers of western Canada would be to-day.

Now I wish to spend just a few minutes on the bill. When I spoke on the second reading of Bill No. 98 as presented by the Prime Minister I said that I accepted the principle of the bill but that there might be some need for amendment when the bill came before the committee of the whole house. At that time I gave an outline of the efforts of the farmers of western Canada to improve the marketing and handling of grain. I say again that during all my thirty-three years experience in western Canada I do not remember a year when the farmers were not interested in trying to secure a better method of handling their grain. I indicated then the very substantial progress the farmers had made in that regard. Through the various institutions which they brought into being they have been able to remove many of the difficulties under which they marketed their grain. But in recent years the farmer has come to the conclusion that so long as you permit the price of the commodity which he produces to be governed largely by speculative interests he has very little hope of securing a stable market and a stable price for his grain. So far as that point is concerned I am satisfied that 95 per cent of the farmers who produce and sell grain in the west would be very well satisfied to see that speculative element eliminated altogether from the selling of Canadian grain. I see no reason why any producer should permit the product of his labour to be subject to speculation. Just look at the cost, for instance, of the Winnipeg grain exchange. Look at the stately homes which these men have been able to build out of their operations on the exchange. Just think of the costs that are added to the handling of grain by virtue of these organizations being in existence. We farmers of western Canada producing grain desire the most orderly method of handling grain that the brains of man can devise, but more than that we want to be sure that every unnecessary expense in connection with the transportation and handling of grain from the time it leaves the hands of the producer until it reaches its ultimate destination, namely the bins of millers in other countries, shall be eliminated. We want to be rid of the superfluous cost added to the handling of western grain. I am satisfied that the farmers of western Canada would support any policy which had that object in view. I can assure this committee that that is my earnest belief.

After second reading the bill was referred to a special committee, and along certain lines I believe that committee has done excellent work. It gave interested parties an opportunity to come before the committee and present their schemes. It is not my purpose even to touch upon any of the evidence heard. I should like to observe however that very substantial amendments were made to the bill while it was before that committee and it is to those amendments I shall address myself for a few moments.

If hon. members will turn to the last section of the reprinted bill they will find it reads as follows:

> 17. This act, except sections 9, 10, 11 and 16 shall come into force when assented to and sections 9, 10, 11 and 16 shall come into force on proclamation of the governor in council.

What does that mean? It simply means that the real heart of the bill, the thing that is vital and of real importance, will not become effective merely on the assent of the governor general, but will have to await the pleasure of whatever government may be in power, such government having the power to determine by order in council whether sections 9, 10, 11 and 16 will come into force. That, Mr. Chairman, is the heart of the bill. If those sections are not proclaimed and are not made part and parcel of the bill then I must confess that in my judgment the legislation will be of very little value to the farmers of western Canada. If these sections are not made effective any board created for the purpose of handling wheat or grain will to all intents and purposes be a nonentity. They would have practically no powers to step in and handle the farmers' grain in an efficient manner. It is true that they will function, but provision is made in the redrafted bill that the board may recommend to the government a set price. The government may accept that recommendation and pass an order in council determining that that may be the minimum or set price. There is no question about that. The action taken by a government in that regard would depend entirely on whether it were sympathetic to the legislation. The set price may be below the market price, it may be the market price or any other price. I would not suggest a set price would be above the market price at a particular time, but it is very likely to be below the market price, having in mind the anticipation that when the wheat is finally sold if the set price is less than the market price at the time of the price setting there may be some funds available for participation when the crop is sold. Under those circumstances and knowing the economic pressure being exerted on western farmers, I maintain that if the set price is below the market price, even if the government of the day passes an order in council making the set price below the market price the board will get very little grain to handle unless sections 9, 10, 11 and 16 are made effective. That is so simply because when the farmer delivers his grain his financial position is so precarious he will be forced to take the market price, as he is doing to-day. It will be a state of financial compulsion, not on the part of the trade but brought about by the financial condition of the farmer. If that is so, of what use will the board be in stabilizing or in creating an orderly market when the bulk of the grain may go into the hands of the grain trade primarily because the set price may be a figure below the market price at the time of setting it? Of what advantage would it be? So far as I can see there would be no advantage. If when the governor general gives assent to this legislation sections 9, 10, 11 and 16 are included and become effective, I am prepared to accept the legislation as a reasonable beginning towards finding a better way of marketing western grain. But if we have to depend upon government action to bring these sections into force by proclamation, through orders in council, I say that as it stands the bill is without significance and is of no value to the western grain grower. The decision whether this will be simply another piece of legislation with no real value will depend upon the attitude of the government which may be in power.

I appeal to the Prime Minister to make the necessary change whereby when the legislation passes it may become effective, so that we may know exactly where we stand, and so that the farmers of western Canada may know whether or not the legislation contains any hope or whether that hope is dependent upon the attitude of future governments.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Earlier in the afternoon an amendment was moved by Mr. Roberge. As translated it reads as follows:

That Bill No. 98 be amended in the following manner:

(1) That the title of the bill be the following: "An act providing for the establishment and definition of duties of the Canadian Grain and Other Farm Products Board."

(2) By substituting the following section for section 1. "1. The present act may be cited under the title: An act respecting the Canadian Grain and Other Farm Products Board, 1935."

(3) By adding at the end of subsection (1) of section 2 the following paragraph:

"(f) other products of the farm" means in the present act: butter, cheese and maple sugar.

(4) By substituting the following subsection for subsection (1) of section 3:

"3 (1) a board to be known as the Canadian Grain and Other Farm Products Board is constituted; it is composed of three members appointed by the governor in council."

(5) By adding the following subsection at the end of section 7:

"(3) the board may grant a bonus of 5 cents a pound on the sale of each pound of butter, cheese and maple sugar, sold by farmers who have no grain to sell or who do not benefit by the present act in any other way."

(6) By adding the following subsection at the end of section 13:

"(2) the board may also adopt regulations respecting the application of subsection (3) of section 7."

Obviously the amendment is out of order. It deals with several sections of the bill which are not at present before the committee, and I am bound to declare that in my judgment it is out of order.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a money measure.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, I have paid a great deal of attention to the discussion that has taken place on the bill that is now before the committee, and I can hardly follow the reasoning of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) when he says that this board will be almost inoperative unless clauses 9, 10, 11 and 16 of the original bill are included in this bill. If he has read the bill, and I assume he has, I am sure he will agree that any power that was given to Mr. McFarland was given to this board; indeed the board has even greater power, because when it comes to the fixing of the initial payment the board has power to do whatever it chooses. Whether clauses 9, 10, 11 and 16 were in the bill or not, the board has still the same power to set the price, and the fact that these clauses are not in the bill does not mean that the board will act any differently from what they would if they were in the bill. So I do not see very much in that point.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

The hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas) compared the functions of this board with those of the pools. I do not think it is fair to make such a comparison, because this board, to begin with, has the financial backing of the government. It has that financial security; it will not be under the dictation of the banks and subjected to the many other influences to which the pools were subjected. If the fears expressed by the hon. member for Camrose were realized and became a factor in the operation of this act, the board itself would have the power to set aside certain sections of this act which would give the board all the necessary power it required subject to the approval of the governor in council.

All governments and every member of the committee, whether politically minded or not, are agreed that something must be done, and regardless of the political affiliations of the members of the committee I believe that this bill represents the best intentions of the committee to deal with the present situation. We believe we have got something in this bill that can be recommended to this house and to the Canadian people. I will say this without fear of contradiction, that in my opinion there was no political thought in the framing of this bill or in the discussions of the committee, more especially when we got in camera. On the contrary there was a desire, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), on the part of all members of the committee to frame a bill that would be acceptable to all concerned.

I listened to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) this afternoon and I could not follow his logic at all. When Mr. McIvor was giving evidence he said that the cost to the government of the volume of wheat now held by Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited amounted to 85·9 cents per bushel. Surely my hon. friend is not arguing that the farmer got that 85 cents, because some of this wheat has been carried for three years, and it costs 10 cents a bushel a year to carry it. As Mr. McIvor pointed out, the 15 cents excess that the farmer had got because of the operations of Mr. McFarland was, to use his own words, hypothetical. The question was hypothetical and the answer was hypothetical. I know that all the members in the southeast corner of the house who have taken any part in this discussion are themselves farmers. Are they going to tell me that many of the farmers in Peace River and northern Saskatchewan and Alberta who took less than 15 cents a bushel in 1932 are going to find any consolation in the fact that they have 15 hypothetical cents in their pockets?

There has been some discussion as to the control of production. We are probably all to blame for the extent to which production has increased. Ever since I have been a member of this house the hon. member for Peace River has insistently in season and out of season advocated the building of a railroad out of Peace River, and what would such a railroad have meant to the possibilities of production in that great country from which he comes? He knows, as every hon. member knows who has given any consideration to the problem of lessening production, that there are large areas in the western prairies which are useless for any purpose other than the growing of wheat, and where if the people were not producing wheat ninety-five per cent of them would have to leave that part of the country.

There are other factors that enter into the carry-over of wheat. I think the farmer members who addressed this house before I did will agree with me that if live stock had been at a little better price, or even at to-day's prices, the carry-over of wheat would not have been as great in Canada as it is to-day, but you cannot feed wheat at 45 cents a bushel to 3 and 3½-cents a pound hogs.

Mr. MULLINS: Does the hon. member know that they are 10½ cents on the Toronto market?

Mr. VALLANCE: That is to-day. I said that if prices were what they are to-day a lot of the surplus wheat would have been fed to hogs and cattle.

It has been pointed out that the Argentine must sell her wheat because she has not storage facilities. Is the hon. member for Acadia going to argue that because the Canadian farmer has been so efficient in building up great storage facilities, which he has built and paid for, he shall be crucified on that account? Is that any argument? Why should the Argentine or Australia build more storage facilities to take care of their crop, as we have done, if they can get rid of their wheat? That argument is simply ridiculous.

As one of the members of the committee, having in mind the huge carry-over and the general position in which the wheat producer finds himself in Canada, and having in mind also the larger world picture, this Bill No. 98 in my opinion is one of the best efforts that could be made in the present circumstances, having the whole world picture in mind.

I do not propose to go into the evidence that was submitted to the committee. What are the difficulties that we are facing? I think that the greatest difficulty with which we are faced is the large carry-over of 228 million bushels.

Mr. BENNETT: That is hardly correct.

Mr. VALLANCE: At the least it has been put at 180 million to 200 million bushels; but whatever the exact figure is, it represents a large carry-over, and we have to compete on the world market with both Australia and the Argentine, our greatest competitors who have year after year a fixed policy with regard to wheat.

Coming back to my friends in the corner of the house, let me say that I am one of those who believe as they do, that Mr McFarland through his stabilization efforts did render to the Canadian wheat grower a service, but let me ask them this question: If Mr. McFarland has been so efficient, why this bill? Why the original bill? It has been said that Mr. McFarland was not as successful as he should have been, but I do not propose to go into the ramifications of his actions. It will not do any good to go that far back to consider the many periods through which the wheat grower has gone. However, I do propose to discuss this bill as it is applied to the problems with which we are faced.

I should like again to direct the attention of the committee to the type of organization in existence in the Argentine. When the resolution was before the house, the house seemed to be of the opinion that there was more than one marketing agency in the Argentine. I hold in my hand a publication put out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) dealing with the grain situation in the Argentine, and giving a résumé of the activities of the control board for the past year. In order to make my point that they do have more than one agency, I should like to read one paragraph of this report. I might mention that I drew this report to the attention of the committee in order to convince the chairman, if he needed convincing, that the Argentine had met only the control board. The paragraph reads:

> There has been only average activity on the market here during the past month. Prices have remained fairly steady, with a slight upward tendency towards the end, when the millers were competing for parcels of good quality to meet current needs. The announcement of the control board that whilst it would buy new wheat at the same rates as last year it would buy no more of the old crop.

I think that proves beyond a doubt that the system in the Argentine is similar to that being proposed by this bill. Australia has a board and provides subsidies to her growers of three pence, or six cents, per bushel marketed and three shillings, or seventy-five cents, per acre sown. In the face of the necessity of meeting competition of that kind I was convinced that it was necessary to take some action at this session. I suggest that the bill now before us is about as good a compromise as could be arrived at. There are some features of the bill which I should like to see improved, but taking it all in all, I think it must be commended. If the hon. member for Acadia will read section 7 of the bill he will find there set out the powers of the board and I believe he will agree that they are greater than those ever held by John I. McFarland. Mr. McFarland was subject to order in council the same as this board will be. One of the powers of this board is:

(a) to receive and take delivery of wheat for marketing as offered by the producers thereof.

That is a very essential section. The definition of producer is as follows:

"Producer" includes, as well as any person actually engaged in production of wheat, any person entitled, whether as landlord, vendor, mortgagee or otherwise, by contract or operation of law to the wheat grown by a producer or to any share therein.

It will be remembered that the five cent wheat bonus was paid only to the actual grower of wheat. I might interject here that I am a farmer but as I was not actively working the land behind the plough and the harrow it was not my privilege to receive any of that bonus, even though I was paying the operating costs and carrying the whole load.

Mr. BENNETT: But your tenant did.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes. Under this definition it will be possible for an owner as well as a tenant to take advantage of the bill. Section 6 of the bill is also to be commended. There is a belief abroad in Canada that some of the mistakes made by Mr. McFarland, provided that we admit that mistakes were made, might have been prevented had a board been set up instead of a one man commission. We have gone even further in this bill; we propose to set up an advisory committee. The section reads:

The governor in council may appoint during pleasure an advisory committee to advise the board, which committee shall consist of not more than seven members of whom four shall represent wheat producers.

[Mr. Vallance.]

The section then goes on to define the functions of this committee. The committee may be called at least once a month and it must report to the minister. Section 7 deals with the powers of the board. It reads, in part:

(e) to pay to producers delivering wheat at the time of delivery or at any time thereafter as may be agreed upon such fixed price per bushel,—

There were some who thought that a clause should be inserted to provide that the fixed price should cover at least the cost of production. It would be very difficult to determine the cost of production of a bushel of wheat. In some portions of the west the average crop will be between 30 and 45 bushels per acre, while in other portions the average is around 12 bushels. The average for the whole province of Saskatchewan is 16 bushels per acre, so it will be seen that it would be very difficult to arrive at the cost of producing a bushel of wheat.

We come now to section 8 which further defines the duties of the board. This section reads, in part:

(k) to make such investigations as from time to time it may deem necessary of the operations of the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Clearing Association and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange in their dealings with wheat and other grains where such wheat and other grains are the subject of transactions affecting interprovincial or international trade, and for the purposes aforesaid the board shall have, without the issue of any commission, all the power and authority conferred upon a commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act, being chapter ninety-nine of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and shall from time to time report to the minister the result of such investigations.

I think this section gives us a weapon to investigate the transactions of the grain exchange. It will be noticed that the board can buy only from producers and that it has no right to buy hedges. The trade itself will have to depend on some other organization to take up their hedges. I contend that the very opposite result to that referred to by the hon. member for Acadia will result from the operations of this board. I believe that the board will have such control of the market that the trade will take very little grain. In my opinion the board will take seventy-five per cent of the grain offered.

I do not know that I can say anything further. I am like the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell): if anyone can suggest an amendment while we are taking up this bill clause by clause which will benefit the producer any more than he is benefited by this bill, I shall support it.

Mr. BENNETT: If agreeable to hon. gentlemen opposite, I was going to ask that the committee be allowed to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again to-day in order that the Secretary of State might, by leave of the house, move concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to the Companies Act. With one exception, they are of a minor character. He will not be here this evening.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Progress reported.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I asked my hon. friends opposite to agree to have the committee considering Bill No. 98 rise and report progress in order that the Secretary of State, who is compelled to be absent this evening, might move concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to the Companies Act. The Secretary of State, with the leave of the house, will proceed accordingly; he has discussed them with the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston).

COMPANIES ACT, 1934, AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): With the consent of the house, I move that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 85, to amend the Companies Act, 1934, be now read a first and second time and concurred in. These amendments are not important, except that in one or two sections I doubt whether the language of the amendments is an improvement on the language we decided upon in this house. For instance, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth and the Prime Minister agreed upon the words, "a just and adequate consideration therefor," —and the Senate amendment strikes out these words and substitutes the following: "the fair equivalent of cash to the total nominal amount of the shares proposed to be issued."

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): An insult to this house.

Mr. CAHAN: The original bill imposed a penalty on directors who might speculate in shares of the company. The Senate has retained the penalty against speculation but it has struck out the definition of speculation. There are one or two verbal amendments. It is made clearer that certain provisions apply to public companies and not to private companies. That was agreed upon by the committee of the whole of this house.

If I may be allowed to refer to a discussion that took place in another place, I agree with the purport of the remarks of the leader of the opposition in that place when he said that after careful consideration he believed that this bill as amended was the best that could be agreed upon at the present time under present conditions, and for that reason I ask this house to concur in this motion.

Perhaps it would be well to go over the different amendments. Section 2 of the bill amended section 5 of the act, and a new provision, subsection (4), is added:

"(4) If any company—

(a) carries on any business which is not within the scope of the purposes or objects set forth in the letters patent or supplementary letters patent, or

(b) exercises or professes to exercise any powers which are not truly ancillary or reasonably incidental to the purposes or objects set forth in the letters patent or supplementary letters patent, or

(c) exercises or professes to exercise any powers expressly excluded by the letters patent or supplementary letters patent, such company shall be liable to be wound up and to be dissolved if the Attorney-General of Canada upon receipt of a certificate of the Secretary of State setting forth his opinion that such company has carried on business or exercised or professed to exercise powers as in this section provided, applies to a court of competent jurisdiction for an order that the company be wound up under the provisions of the Winding-Up Act."

The language is slightly changed. I do not think there is any difference in intent, and I think the section as amended may be adopted. Section 3 of the bill referred to the purposes and objects which it is intended that the company shall actively pursue. They have struck out the word "actively" so that it reads "shall pursue." In line 20 on page 2, section 4 of the bill, they have changed the word "shall" to the word "may." Perhaps "may" is the more appropriate term.

Mr. RALSTON: The Secretary of State was good enough to send me a memorandum showing these amendments. There is one to which attention is called:

2. Page 2, line 4. Leave out the underlining of line 4. Underline lines 6 and 7.

Is that purely for the purpose of assisting us in considering the amendments?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes. The only change was the striking out of the word "actively." In section 5 a change is made by substituting for the words "just and adequate consideration therefor" the words "the fair equivalent of cash to the total nominal amount of the shares so issued," and a provision is inserted that an application may be ex parte on summary petition to a judge to determine whether such consideration was the fair equivalent of cash to the nominal amount of the shares so issued.

Then in the same section 5, a new subsection 11 has been inserted, as follows:

Nothing in the next preceding subsection shall be deemed to prevent the issue, under authority of provision therefor—

I think the expression "under authority of provision therefor" is a rather crude expression.

—either by letters patent or by-law, of any preferred shares to which are attached preferential voting rights, exercisable in a stated event only, although, in the stated event, an exclusive right to control or manage is attached to or is incident to such preferred shares.

Evidently the intention of the Senate is to provide in the case of holders of preference shares that if dividends are not declared upon the preference shares, it may be provided by by-law that the preferred shareholders shall thereupon have a larger direction and control in the management of the company.

Mr. RALSTON: Or the whole control.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Which is the usual term of the existing law in connection with certificates.

Mr. CAHAN: In section 6 of the bill they have reinserted paragraph (f): "Classify or reclassify any shares without par value." In section 7 they have inserted in the 44th line the word "voting" between "dividend" and "return of capital," and have added to that this provision:

Provided that no limitations shall be imposed upon the right to vote.

It is rather casuistical, but I think we may accept it. Then in section 7 they have substituted the following for subsection 2:

(2) Without limiting the generality of the foregoing any such by-laws may provide that the holders of such preferred shares shall have the right to select a certain stated proportion of the board of directors or may give them such other control or may so limit their control over the affairs of the company as is considered expedient—

The remaining words stay the same. That is an express provision that certain rights may be given to the preferred shareholders with regard to the selection of a stated proportion of the directors and otherwise controlling the company.

With regard to section 9, I pointed out when the bill was before the house that in the definition of the word "underwriter" we had in the act of 1934 provided a definition in two clauses which in the act are described as paragraphs (a) and (b), and I stated that doubts were entertained whether the proposed paragraph (c) of the bill was within the competence of this parliament. The Senate have declared that paragraph (c), which appears on page 5 of the bill beginning at line 43, is in their opinion not within the competence of this parliament, and they have struck it out.

Again, where in the bill the draughtsman endeavoured to provide an indirect way of compelling allottees of the company's shares to comply with certain conditions with regard to their resale to third parties, by providing that the company should insist upon those allottees making a contract with the company that they would not distribute or resell except upon compliance with certain conditions, the Senate did not agree with that provision which appears on page 7 of the bill as subsection 4, and they have struck it out and reinstated the subsection 4 of the 1934 act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What does my hon. friend think of that?

Mr. CAHAN: I wish my right hon. friend would not invite an expression of my personal opinion. In section 12 there was a provision with regard to declaration of dividends when the company is insolvent, that no account should be "taken of any increase in the surplus or reserves of the company resulting merely from the writing up of the assets of the company, unless such writing up shall have been made more than five years before the date of such declaration." The Senate have changed the words "more than five years before the date of such declaration" to "more than five years before the date of the declaration of the dividend," to make it clearer.

In section 14 they have made section 94A apply to a public company, and where the bill provides that in the case of any officer of the company becoming aware of any impairment of the capital of the company, he "shall forthwith inform the directors of the nature and extent of such impairment," they have inserted the word "substantial" before the word "impairment," so that it applies to a "substantial impairment."

As I have said, on page 9 of the bill in section 15 they have struck out the definition of "speculate," and they have revised section 96B so as to substitute for the words "a just and adequate consideration therefor" the words "the fair equivalent of cash to the total nominal amount of the shares proposed to be issued." Then there has been a slight change on page 11 in paragraph (g) with regard to the balance sheet which reads:

(g) lands, buildings and plant, stating the basis of valuation, whether cost or otherwise, and, if valued on the basis of appraisal, the date of appraisal and the name of the appraiser and the amount, if any, by which the value of such assets has been written up.

They have changed that somewhat to read:

(g) lands, buildings and plant, stating the basis of valuation, whether cost or otherwise, and, if valued on the basis of appraisal, the date of appraisal, the name of the appraiser, and, if the surplus of the company has been increased as a result thereof, the amount by which the value of such assets has been written up within a period of three years prior to the date of such balance sheet.

That period of three years is a restriction which I think is reasonable. Then with regard to the writing up of good will, they have added a similar provision to the effect that this writing up shall be shown in the balance sheet if it has taken place within a period of three years prior to the date of such balance sheet. In section 18 with regard to that provision they have inserted the words "in the case of a company not being a private company" so as to make the new section 113 subsection 1 apply to public companies only. That exhausts the lists of important changes or amendments which have been made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It seems to me from what my hon. friend has said that the original bill is either vastly disfigured or greatly improved. I wish he would tell us which.

Mr. RALSTON: Striking out the definition of speculation and still leaving in the penalty for speculation seems to me to leave the act in a dangerous position. The only protection is that no action can be brought except with the consent of the Secretary of State. But as it stands, a director holding shares in a company is practically prohibited from dealing in those shares; for I should think almost everyone who sells or proposes to sell shares or who buys them does it for the purpose of making a profit, and I suppose that comes within the dictionary definition of speculation.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say that that section gave me some concern, but as it stands it appears to me it would be left to judicial determination whether or not in the facts of any case there was what in law is speculation. I appreciate the point the hon. member makes; it does impose very considerable obligations on directors who may be dealing in the shares of their companies. Yet the test is this, is it not: Were they bought as investments or were they bought for the purpose really covered by the definition in the bill as it left this house? I have always appreciated the difficulty, and perhaps the hon. gentleman is more qualified by experience in recent years than I to appreciate it, of being able to determine by definition what constitutes speculation. We did endeavour to do it, but the Senate thought it was not wise to do so, and leaves it to judicial determination. I think it would be fatal to remove the penalty; it would be better to leave it there and trust to judicial discretion not to work a hardship on any person whose dealing with shares might possibly fall within what in some quarters would be regarded as speculation and in others as investment.

Mr. HACKETT: I had hoped that the word "public" would be inserted in section 16, line 40, on page 10, between the word "any" and the word "company" otherwise all the restrictions which had been enacted in regard to public companies are going to apply to private companies, where it seems to me there is no reason they should apply.

Mr. POULIOT: If it does not apply to private companies what is the use of that legislation?

Mr. HACKETT: If my hon. friend knew more about companies he would not ask the question.

Mr. POULIOT: I know about the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) and that is why I ask it.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that is covered. In subsection (2) of section 98B, page 9:

(1) The directors of a public company shall not authorize the issue and allotment as fully paid shares in the capital stock of the company . . .

It is a public company; it says so. The only one that is left out is the one to which the amendment was made, and the word "public" added to make it clear.

Mr. RALSTON: By the Senate just now.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, exactly.

Mr. POULIOT: The only way to prevent speculation is to forbid speculation at all. That is the only way to cure all those evils.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CANADIAN GRAIN BOARD

The house again in committee on Bill No. 98, to provide for the constitution and powers of the Canadian grain board—Mr. Bennett—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, I am not going to delay the house very long; as a matter of fact if the Prime Minister had delayed the adjournment at six o'clock for only a few moments I could have said all I desire to say.

So far as I am concerned the bill is entirely satisfactory, and for the life of me I cannot see all the dangers that some of our friends from western Canada claim will develop as a result of the application of the bill. It provides for a board of three members, supplemented by an advisory board, four of whom shall be farmers, which shall meet once a month. With the backing of the government I can see no reason why these men should not protect every interest that may be affected.

All of us are in favour of cooperative marketing. It is true that hon. members on this side of the house have opposed the compulsory features in all marketing bills, and we were not particularly enamoured of the compulsory features in this bill. I do not believe however that we can find a great deal of fault with provisions which may be compulsory if enacted by a governor in council, because perhaps it is necessary, to have some control over the exchange. I do not believe that the operations of the exchange have been detrimental to the interests of producers. I can quite understand the criticisms which have been made against the exchange in recent days when we have had a surplus of wheat. But no one who has followed the marketing of grain and the operation of the exchange can help being struck by the fact that competition has been beneficial to those of us who are producing. Surely no one expects that this condition under which we have a surplus is going to be permanent in Canada. Once we emerge from that position this measure will offer an opportunity for those who believe in cooperative marketing governed by a board and backed by the federal government to demonstrate the utility of such a scheme. They will have ample opportunity to demonstrate the value of cooperative marketing, and all I can say is that I hope the demonstration will be satisfactory. Every person who wishes to sell his grain through the agency of the grain board will have the opportunity to do so, and it must be assumed that the board will be as active in the interests of the people it serves as will any interest operating on its own behalf. Moreover, it seems to me that the bill offers the logical solution of the difficulties facing us to-day. Surely the combined ingenuity of the gentlemen forming the board plus the advantage of the advisory board should be sufficient not only to market the accumulated grain but also to market grain they may purchase from producers. I believe this is an honest attempt to work out a delicate situation, and for these reasons I give my support to the bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Definition.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The province of British Columbia was not directly represented on the committee which considered the bill. I suggest to the Prime Minister that on account of the importance of Vancouver as a grain port and the possibility of oriental trade passing through that port, British Columbia be given representation either on the board or on the advisory committee.

Mr. REID: I have a question I should like to ask in connection with paragraph (e) of subsection 1. A great deal has been heard this afternoon about producers, but very little has been said about consumers, and I should like to make some observations concerning the consumers of British Columbia, and to ask the Prime Minister why that province should be included in the bill. I could see no great harm in its being left out. When one realizes that in the year 1930 the yield in Ontario was over 20,000,000 bushels while in British Columbia it was only a little over 1,000,000 bushels one is at a loss to understand why British Columbia should be included and Ontario left out. Then the point of view of the consumer has not been considered. British Columbia is a consuming province; we consume more than we produce. In ordinary years the poultry industry of our province uses between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 bushels of wheat from the prairie provinces, but we produce only a little more than 1,000,000 bushels. Upon looking over the bill I am wondering what will happen to the poultry producers of the Fraser Valley if a price above the world price is set. I venture to say that we would have an unjust condition if the province of British Columbia were called upon to pay a set price higher than the world price, when we are shouldered with a freight rate twice as high as that enjoyed by Ontario and other provinces.

Mr. WILLIS: Let them eat barley.

Mr. REID: I could discuss barley, too. You tried to put that over last year, but it was no good. It shows you know very little about poultry business when you start talking about barley. Right now I am talking about something I know something about.

I believe an explanation is due British Columbia indicating why that province is included in the bill. If it is included because it is a wheat producing province, the answer is that we produce only 1,000,000 bushels, and when we compare that small output with an output of 20,000,000 bushels from another province it seems strange that that province should be left out while we are included. Only a few days ago we were complaining about being excluded from a bill, but to-day my complaint is that we are being included and other provinces are being left out. I should like an explanation from the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: British Columbia is included because the British Columbia wheat producers in the Peace River district desire to be included. Substantially speaking, they are producers of wheat across the line dividing Alberta and British Columbia. If the hon. gentleman is speaking for the province of British Columbia and states that these wheat producers desire to have British Columbia excluded from the bill, I am content.

Mr. REID: It is all right for the Prime Minister to ask me if I am speaking for the province of British Columbia. Only a few days ago we heard that the attorney general was speaking for that province. I will admit that I cannot speak for British Columbia, but I still say I have not received an answer to my question, namely, why Ontario with a production of 20,000,000 bushels is left out and British Columbia with a much smaller production is included. I hope the bill is in no way designed to control our ports. I would draw the attention of the committee to the fact that in 1933 over 100,000,000 bushels of wheat issued from the Pacific ports as against only 83,000,000 for all other Canadian ports. The decrease in exports of Canadian grain through United States ports has been due to the splendid advantages which Vancouver and New Westminster offer in the shipping of grain.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the Prime Minister consider the representations that have been made regarding representation of British Columbia on the board?

Mr. BENNETT: Like the hon. gentleman I have received telegrams from Vancouver asking that they be given representation on the board, and indicating that they are greatly interested in the exportation of wheat. We have not yet reached that stage, the bill not having been passed, but the representations that have been made will be given every consideration. Ontario is not included in this bill; it is not a producer of wheat for export, but the Peace River valley in British Columbia is exporting wheat. We ascertained that when the five cents a bushel bonus was paid—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) wants curtailment of production.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is thought that British Columbia should not be included in the bill I have no desire to press it unduly, but it was represented to us that the wheat producers in that area should not find themselves in a different position from that of neighbouring producers across the imaginary line that divides British Columbia and Alberta. Those familiar with wheat production in Ontario will not make the suggestion that that comes within the bill at all, or could.

Section agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Body corporate.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, in the marginal note to subsection 3 the word "arrangements" should be added after the word "banking."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Advisory committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will it be the effort to have territorial representation as far as possible on the advisory committee?

Mr. BENNETT: The purpose will be to follow the general principles that governed in connection with the old wheat board in 1919. Distributed over the area where the production takes place, four should represent producers, and the balance might be business men or men engaged in shipping or other matters of that sort.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Powers of board respecting the marketing of wheat in interprovincial and export trade.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, in line 31 the word "the" should be stricken out before the word "producer" and "producers" should be substituted for "producer"; in line 32 delete the first word "a"; and in the thirty-third line strike out the word "year's" before the word "operations," and after the word "board" in the same line insert the words "during the crop year." The phrase "the crop year" is defined in the grain act and it will be recalled that in the interpretation section of this act it is provided that the words used in this act shall have the meaning given to them by the interpretation section of the grain act.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GARDINER: Referring to line 37, paragraph (e), the same paragraph to which the Prime Minister has been referring, would the words "such certificate shall not be transferable," prevent anyone from getting a garnishee against these certificates?

Mr. BENNETT: "Such certificates" appears in my copy—there is an "s" added, but there may not be in the hon. gentleman's copy. I would not like to express an opinion on the point the hon. gentleman raises, because the law of the province would govern with respect to that; it would be a matter purely of provincial law. In general my answer would be no, for it is essential that there should be an affidavit that there is a debt due by the board to the individual in question and it could not in my opinion be properly affirmed that there was a debt due under the circumstances indicated. But each province has its own law governing the question of garnishees, and I would not care to express a definite opinion upon the point.

Mr. LUCAS: I realize that under this section we cannot fix a price, but I do believe there should be something in the bill to the effect that the fixed price should bear some relation to the cost of production or be a price which would enable the farmer to carry on. There is a possibility that the fixed price might be set so low that the board would not get any wheat at all, and if that should happen this bill would be of very little benefit to the producer. I wonder if the Prime Minister could see his way clear to meeting that difficulty.

Mr. BENNETT: I tried to explain to the committee that there was one thing I was not prepared to do, and that was to lay down a rule by which a fixed price might be determined, because we might include four factors and omit the fifth which might be the governing factor. To undertake to indicate in a bill of this kind all the factors which would be considered by the board would be something in my opinion that would be injurious to the very interests that the hon. gentleman desires to serve. It will be observed, however, that this price must be approved by the governor in council, and if in fixing that price disregard has been had of factors that should have been considered, then obviously it would be the duty of the government, whoever might comprise the government, to deal with the matter in a proper sense. I have no idea at the moment as to what price would be fixed, but I think I could name immediately five or six factors that would govern in fixing a price. For instance, the entire world's production would be a factor; the demands of the importing countries would be a factor; the cost of production averaged would be a factor. It would be very difficult to say that the cost of production in every section of western Canada would be the same. In the evidence before the committee one gentleman spoke of a cost of production that in my judgment was entirely too low, and in other cases I heard suggestions made which the farmers regarded as too high. All these are factors. The first factors I mentioned deal with supply and demand in reality. I could name many other factors if it would serve any useful purpose, but I still think it is undesirable to undertake to state in this bill all these circumstances or contingencies that would have to do with the fixing of the price; but inasmuch as the government must ultimately take responsibility for approving the price I think the interests of the producers may be said to be adequately safeguarded.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to make one comment on paragraph (e), emphasizing one point and perhaps enlarging on what was said by the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas). The clause which provides for certain sections coming into force only by proclamation may be looked upon as the centre around which the entire value of the bill will revolve. As I see it, the bill makes fairly adequate provision to enable the board to carry on their operations of buying the crop from the producer and marketing it. It gives them full power to bring order out of chaos, and to the degree that wheat is in their hands to prevent speculation and gambling in that commodity. I think it will be realized that the entire power of the board to carry that into effect will depend upon the board handling at least a very large percentage of the wheat. This will depend wholly upon the provisions of this bill as to the fixed or initial price. In this respect I think the phraseology of the amended bill is a distinct improvement upon the original bill. As the bill was originally introduced it provided that an initial payment should be made, but under other provisions of the bill it was obvious that that payment would be based upon the expectations of what the wheat might sell for in the final result. Under the previous bill that initial payment would have had to be made low enough to safeguard the board and make sure that the final proceeds would cover not only the payment made to the farmer but the costs of operation. I think this is a distinct improvement which has been brought about by sending the bill to the special committee. It makes the proper provision for the payment of what is in effect not only an initial payment but a minimum price.

May I emphasize again the point that the whole success of this bill will depend upon the minimum price being set at a point where the wheat will be delivered to the board. This price might be set so low as to make the legislation inoperative. The trade is being left perfectly at liberty to carry on exactly as it has carried on, except that the hedging support which was given in the past under the stabilization scheme will be withdrawn and the trade will be obliged to take their own risks or find someone else to hedge their futures. If the disparity between the initial payment and the market price is too great the trade will be able to carry on as at present. I believe we have present this evening representatives of the present and future governments. I am not saying who will be the future government, but I think I am safe in saying that its representatives are in the chamber at the present time. I want to impress upon the members of that government, and on the members of the present government in the interim, that there lies the crux and the centre of the power of this legislation. If the price is set high enough, the great bulk of the wheat will be sold through the board and it will not find its way into private hands and the purpose of the bill will be accomplished. Order will thus be brought out of chaos and speculation in our foodstuffs will be reduced or will disappear altogether. I do not think it is too much to say that the responsibility will rest upon that government of deciding whether or not this legislation will be operative and whether or not the grain exchange will be permitted to carry on its operations. Upon that government will rest the responsibility of deciding what is going to be the final result of this policy.

I realize the error of placing any restriction upon the board and the governor in council in the setting of a minimum price. The Prime Minister outlined some of the difficulties in this connection, and I think I can see still others. It is impossible to set up legislation as a guide to what that minimum or fixed price should be. I realize that, and I realize also that the inability of parliament to make this bill effective by law places a greater responsibility upon whatever government may be called upon to exercise its discretion. I do not think that can be too thoroughly understood by the people of this country and by the producers whom this bill seeks to relieve. In the final analysis it will rest upon the government in power at that time to say whether or not this bill will serve its purpose. The producers should be in a position to know exactly who is responsible for the success or failure of this legislation.

Mr. RALSTON: Could the Prime Minister indicate the terms upon which contracts for future delivery of wheat are to be acquired from the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited under section 5? Is it contemplated that these contracts will be taken over at cost or will the board simply take the place of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited with the banks?

Mr. BENNETT: As I said in committee, it is contemplated at the moment—of course what I say is subject to revision—that the board will take the place of the producers limited in connection with wheat but not in connection with other grains.

Mr. RALSTON: There will be no profit or loss so far as Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited are concerned in their operations in wheat?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what is contemplated at the moment, but I want to make it abundantly clear that conditions may arise which may vary that statement.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—duties of the board.

Mr. BENNETT: I have some slight amendments to suggest to this section. We propose to strike out the word "market" in subsection (b), line 5, and substitute therefor the words "sell and dispose of". The beginning of that clause will then read, "to sell and dispose of from time to time." Then strike out the words "or contracts" in the fifth line and the words "for the purchase or delivery of wheat" in the sixth line.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought that was done in the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the intention. Then in subsection (e), line 19, add the words "to the minister" after the word "writing," and delete the words "to the minister" at the end of line 19 and the beginning of line 20. This is simply changing the position of the words; the clause will then read "to report in writing to the minister on Friday of each week. Then substitute the word "its" for the word "the" in line 21, the clause then reading, "showing as at the end of the preceding week its purchases and sales of wheat." Then strike out the word "period" in line 21 and substitute the word "week". The clause will then read, "sales of wheat during such week." Then delete the words "to the date of such report" at the end of line 24 and the beginning of line 25. That is already covered by what has been said. "Auditors" should be with a small "a". In clause (f), at the end of line 27, the word "other" should be struck out; there is no need of it.

Mr. RALSTON: With regard to the amendment to clause (e) I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is quite satisfied that as amended it requires the board to bring the report of the financial operations right up to date, or whether it will not confine the report of the financial operations to the particular week under discussion. It depends on what he has in mind.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it is intended to make clear that the very point the hon. gentleman has in mind shall be before the auditors. Let us look at it as amended:

> to report in writing on Friday of each week to the minister, showing as at the end of the preceding week its purchases and sales of wheat during such week and the wheat on hand and contracts to take delivery of wheat then held, the cost of the same to the board and the financial result of the board's operations, which report shall be certified by the auditors of the board.

Mr. RALSTON: I think that is all right.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman prefers to have the words "to the date of such report" remain, I have no objection.

Mr. RALSTON: Probably the Prime Minister is right. When you do not limit it, it includes all the financial operations.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: If there is any doubt about it those particular words can remain, but I think it is sounder drafting to put it as I have proposed.

Mr. RALSTON: If the Prime Minister is satisfied, I am.

Mr. BENNETT: At the top of page 5 a change should be made, and in this regard I ask the committee's opinion. I understand that there is a grain exchange at Vancouver which is on much the same lines as the exchange at Winnipeg. It might therefore be well to add after the word "Winnipeg" in the first line the words "and Vancouver," and make the word "exchange" "exchanges."

Mr. RALSTON: There is a clearing house association there too.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think so; I believe there is only the grain exchange at Vancouver. Then, instead of the word "with" in the first line on page 5 there should be the word "in"—"their dealings in wheat." I move these amendments.

Mr. GARDINER: What will be the position of the board when it takes over the contracts of Wheat Producers Limited if the words at the beginning of (b) in section 8 be struck out, "to market from time to time all wheat or contracts for the purchase or delivery of wheat?" Would the board still have an opportunity of dealing with these contracts and disposing of them?

Mr. BENNETT: In paragraph (f) of section 7, the hon. gentleman will observe, power is conferred upon the board to acquire from Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited not only wheat but their contracts to purchase or take delivery of wheat in respect of which the government of Canada has given a guarantee.

Mr. YOUNG: Suppose these contracts are all due in October, will the board have to dispose of them before then or can they turn them over?

Mr. BENNETT: They can take delivery.

Mr. YOUNG: Will that be their only option, to take the wheat?

Mr. BENNETT: That was what was intended. If the hon. gentleman thinks it desirable, it can be changed.

Mr. YOUNG: No; I only wanted to know the intention.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In subsection (b) of section 8 lies apparently the direction given regarding the sales policy of the board. I might not have thought it necessary to mention this at all were it not that the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), quite rightly, stressed the importance of this particular clause and gave his interpretation of its meaning and the intent of parliament with regard to it, and the direction conveyed by the clause to the board in respect of its sales policy. I have no desire whatever to misinterpret in any sense the gist of the hon. gentleman's remarks, nor am I competent to enter his mind to know exactly what lay behind the argument he used. But certainly I gathered this impression from his interpretation—and after all interpretations may become serious if they become part of governmental policy at a later date—that a distinct change was to be expected as a result of this clause in the policy of the board as compared with the policy which had been carried out by Wheat Producers Limited through the operations of Mr. McFarland, and that a policy of much greater activity in the sale of wheat and the pushing of that commodity on the markets of the world was not only anticipated but expected. I think that is putting it fairly and not in any sense misquoting the hon. gentleman. It seems to me that the clause may be interpreted in that way if it is intended to carry out the objects stated, that is, if the sole object which shall actuate the board in exercising discretion as to what it considers a reasonable price shall be that indicated in the last clause:

—with the object of promoting the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets.

That is a most desirable object, but if it is the only factor to be considered when the board is determining what is a reasonable price, and if the price to be received is to be governed wholly by that consideration and need have no relation either to the intrinsic value of the wheat or the cost of production, or to the effect of its sale on the producers and on the country, then it becomes a serious matter. I believe that in this clause discretion is given the board with regard to the question what shall constitute a reasonable price, and I am simply stressing at the moment my belief that any board which took this as its direction, that a reasonable price was merely to be the best price that could be obtained, and at the same time endeavoured to make the greatest sale possible in world trade, would be falling far short of its objective. The only proper interpretation, if the bill is to be of value, would be that the object should be to promote the greatest possible sale and use of Canadian wheat in world trade consonant with a reasonable price being paid having relation to the intrinsic value of the wheat, the cost of producing that wheat and the price which the producers might thereby ultimately receive. I think that would have to be kept very firmly in mind by the board, and while the board itself has discretion in this regard; while no statement is made as to approval by order in council or any suggestion made that the government itself shall have any voice in that price, I think we can take it for granted that a government which has made itself responsible for the financing, one that has been consulted in regard to and made itself partly responsible for the initial price, will be a somewhat effective influence with the board as to the price at which the wheat will be sold. I am simply pointing out again that the purpose of the bill could be defeated and the price to the producers put down below any reasonable limits if the board had in mind in carrying out these instructions only the sale of the greatest quantity of wheat which it could sell on the world's markets.

Mr. WILLIS: It so happens that to-day the Liverpool market broke four cents. I do not know whether that break in the market has any connection with paragraph (c) of section 8 which is the selling policy indicated by this bill. Lest it be thought—and I do not think this is in the mind of anyone in this chamber—that the wheat board intends to dump the stocks of wheat on the markets of the world, I think the other meaning of paragraph (c) of section 8 should be given some emphasis. It reads:

To sell and dispose of stocks of wheat and contracts for the delivery of wheat acquired from Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited and the wheat represented by such contracts as speedily as may be reasonably possible, having regard to economic and other conditions.

I desire to refer particularly to those "economic and other conditions," because it would be a very bad thing if any thought went out from this bill or from its clauses that we in this country were going either to dump our wheat on the markets of the world, or on the other hand unduly to withhold it from those markets. Therefore it might be interesting to mention some of the difficulties, some of those things which would prevent us from dumping our wheat on the markets of the world at this time. I desire to make a short quotation from the evidence of Mr. John I.

McFarland before the banking and commerce committee on March 22, 1934. He said:

Looking back at the problems that have confronted Canada, as well as other exporting countries, we find France with an 85 cents per bushel duty, with restrictions on milling and quotas, protecting their farmers up to the hilt so that they will get big prices for their wheat and encourage them to raise more; and that has been going on for three years. Germany with $1.62 duty doing the same thing. Italy with $1.03 duty and doing the same thing, their farmers all protected behind great tariff barriers, barriers that it is impossible for our farmers to climb over. Then there are other lesser countries doing the same thing to a smaller degree but to a considerable extent increasing the prices to the native farmers in those countries. Then we look at Australia. Australia is bonusing her farmers. This year they are paying $1,500,000 to their farmers. The Argentine has virtually got a wheat board, giving their farmers a good deal more money for their wheat than what they are selling it at overseas. The United States during this period have spent I don't know how much of that $500,000,000 in support of wheat farmers, in all probability $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 of it has gone to American wheat farmers. Not only that but now they are paying them a processing bonus of so much per bushel in order for the American farmer to get through these trying times of depression. Japan protects her farmers to the extent of about 40 cents a bushel. China protects her farmers against our cheap wheat to the extent of nine cents, I think. These are all the difficulties that our farmers have had to face in these trying times.

Then further down:

I forgot to mention the United Kingdom. Like all other countries, they are helping their farmers to the extent of $1.35 per bushel.

In view of the fact that for the time being at least the selling of wheat will be continued by the same agency, I think I might very well quote from Mr. McIvor's evidence a paragraph indicating also some of the difficulties in regard to selling wheat at this time, and some of the reasons perhaps why we have not sold more. I refer to his evidence as set forth on page 376 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the special committee on Bill No. 98. Mr. McIvor said:

There are still those who say, however, that Canada might have done better, and this suggestion prompts me to place before this committee a few relevant facts:

(1) All exporting countries, including Canada, have been affected by the reduction of imports into France, Germany and Italy. Broadly speaking, such decreases as have taken place in the other importing countries have been offset by increased requirements in the United Kingdom, Netherlands, Belgium, et cetera.

Let us examine the situation in France, Germany and Italy. From 1924-25 to 1928-29 these countries imported an average of 215,000,000 bushels annually. From 1929-30 to 1933-34 these countries imported an average of 95,000,000 bushels—an annual reduction of 120,000,000 bushels in the latter period as compared with the former....

Assuming that we received 40 per cent of the imports of these three countries prior to 1929-30 (a moderate percentage) a market was afforded for about 85,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat. Last year if we had secured the entire market of these three countries (and we did receive a very large share) we had an outlet for only 26,000,000 bushels. This is one phase of the export problem which must be realized.

(2) It has been repeatedly stated before this committee that Canada should have lowered her price and sold more wheat. Mr. Richardson stated that he could have sold more Canadian wheat if the price had been 70 cents per bushel. I cannot agree with that type of reasoning. Those who hold that Canada could have sold more wheat by lowering prices must at the same time demonstrate, first that such action would have resulted in the lowering of the spread between Canadian wheat and other wheats, particularly Argentine; and secondly that a narrowing of the spread between Canadian wheat and other wheats would have curtailed the movement of competitive wheats—chiefly Argentine wheat.

Let us briefly deal with these two points. In regard to the first point, namely the possibility of narrowing the spread between Canadian wheat and other wheats, I wish to point out that price as such may not be significant. It is not the absolute price of Canadian wheat which is important but rather the relative price; that is, the relation between the price of Canadian wheat and the price of other wheats.

If we dropped our price ten cents and the Argentine dropped ten cents the relative positions would not have changed and both countries would lose. Actually that is what happened last fall.

Then he goes on to quote the figures in that regard. In addition, without quoting more of the evidence, I think it is interesting to look back to the debacle of 1933, to indicate that the sales agency at that time made large purchases; particularly they purchased on one day 15,705,000 bushels. They have been criticized for that purchase. But from the facts given to the committee, it was very evident that at that time the Chicago exchange had closed, and consequently it was necessary for Mr. McFarland to step in and make purchases lest the whole market itself within this country be destroyed. He did that at that time; he made heavy purchases later even though the price was fairly high, but in spite of the purchases which he made, the market continued to decline. It was in the technical phrase a "thin market." Consequently those purchases had to be made. Therefore I think at this time owing to the fact that we do to a degree outline a selling policy, it must be made very evident that there is no intention on the part of anyone in this country to dump our present wheat supply on the markets of the world. Nor is it the hope of anyone in this house that we should withhold from the markets of the world that wheat which we can sell at prices which will give to the producer some return for his labour.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Just one point in connection with the sales policy in disposing of that surplus. I think that the last speaker (Mr. Willis) is perfectly correct; there is no man in this house who would advocate such a foolish policy as a species of fire sale to get rid of the wheat, knowing its effect on the finances of the country and the price of the crop that is coming on. That is why I was disturbed by the phraseology used by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). The average man not being acquainted personally with the hon. member might not set the same value upon his sanity and wisdom that I might, and without that knowledge it is almost impossible to avoid the deduction that this wheat should in effect be forced upon the market regardless of price. My reason for that fear is not only the language used in connection with this particular item; I am bound to couple that with the suggestion that this should be looked upon as emergency legislation to carry on for one year with the right of extending it for a further year by order in council. The language would indicate that it was at least the hope if not the expectation of the hon. member that this entire surplus would be wiped out within one or at most two years. I think it is impossible to avoid that deduction from his words. Yet I think every hon. member familiar with the situation and knowing the prospective crop which now faces us will realize that to dispose of this entire surplus in the face of world conditions and the coming crop would be a fire sale policy and absolutely destructive of wheat prices in this country.

Mr. COOTE: Just a word in regard to the first subsection of section 8, the power of the board to fix a minimum price. I say on behalf of the producers that I think the great majority of them have sold their wheat below cost of production for four years. I hope when this board in consultation with the government comes to set this price they will bear that in mind, as well as the price that our competitors in the Argentine and Australia are receiving. In that connection I would point out that in the June 1 issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal there is a dispatch from our trade commissioner in Australia in which he deals with the question of wheat there, and he says that the price to the grower at country sidings is approximately three shillings per bushel. Hon. members will realize that that is a price above that which our producers have been getting even with the support that has been given to the market.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is sixty cents at the siding.

Mr. COOTE: But when it comes to paying debts and interest it is equivalent to seventy-two cents.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is a four dollar pound. It is sixty cents.

Mr. COOTE: Well, it perhaps would be in this country, but for the Australian farmer that three shillings is equivalent, in his own currency and dealing with his own internal situation, to seventy-two cents.

Mr. RALSTON: May I say a word again with regard to the matter of policy in disposing of this wheat? As far as I am concerned the policy is expressed in the words used in subsections (b) and (c) of section 8. I think those subsections are aptly drafted to indicate to the board the general desire of parliament that wheat should be sold rather than held if opportunity offers and if it is reasonably possible to do it. Nobody has suggested a fire sale; no one has suggested that the wheat will be disposed of in two years. What I have suggested is that in two years we would have experience of the plan, which is a different plan from that which has been in vogue so far, a plan whereby the producer will be paid his minimum or fixed price and the country will then take the responsibility for disposing of the wheat. The producer then, as I see it, will not be affected by the market but will have had his fixed price. That policy is different from the policy which has been followed to date, because so far we have been endeavouring to assure the producer his price by attempting to affect the world market. I hope I have made it clear that subsections (b) and (c) of section 8 express my idea as to the directions we should give to this board, and I think they go as far as we can go in that direction.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) asked a question which I think I did not quite understand when I answered. There is special provision in subsection (c) of section 8 to deal with the very question he asked:

(c) to sell and dispose of stocks of wheat and contracts for the delivery of wheat ...

Amendment agreed to

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 9 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On section 13—Deductions from receipts.

Mr. BENNETT I move:

That in line 12, section 13, after the word "certificates," the following words be inserted: "issued pursuant to paragraph (e) of section 7 of this act."

"Certificates" is too general a word not to be qualified by a clause which provides for their issue. That is the only reason this is added, to show the authority for the issue of them, the terms of them being covered by the regulation.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 14—Application to oats, barley, rye and flax.

Mr. BENNETT: I move:

That in line 16 of section 14 the second word, "and," be struck out and the word "or" substituted therefor;

It will then read "rye or flax."

and that in line 19 the word "oats" be struck out, and in line 20 the words "barley, rye and flax, or any one of them"; and that after the word "to" in line 19 the words "such kinds, of grain" be added.

So that it will read:

Whereupon the provisions of this act shall mutatis mutandis apply to such kinds of grain as they apply to wheat.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 15 and 16 agreed to.

On section 17—Operation of act.

Mr. BENNETT: I move:

That in line 42 the word "seventeen" be struck out and the word "sixteen" be substituted therefor.

Mr. RALSTON: It is "sixteen" in some copies.

Mr. BENNETT: Mine was one of the first, and I just wanted to be sure.

Mr. GARDINER: Have we dealt with the amendment? Would the Prime Minister consider the suggestion I made this afternoon, namely, that sections 9, 10, 11 and 16 become operative when the bill is assented to?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GARDINER: Then I shall have to move an amendment to that effect. I move, seconded by Mr. Spencer:

That section 17 be amended by striking out the following words:

"Except sections nine, ten, eleven and sixteen,"—"and sections nine, ten, eleven and sixteen shall come into force on proclamation of the governor in council."

Mr. BENNETT: All the hon. member would have to do, to obtain the same result, would be to move that section 17 be struck out.

Mr. GARDINER: The effect of my amendment would be somewhat different, namely, that the act would come into force when assented to.

Mr. BENNETT: The rule is that the act would come into force when assented to unless otherwise provided. If section 17 was struck out it would become effective at once, upon assent being given.

Mr. GARDINER: All right; put the question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I am willing to accept the Prime Minister's statement that it would depend upon whether or not the committee accepted the section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Do you withdraw the amendment?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; put the question.

Section 17 agreed to on division.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I propose to make a few observations. I have remained in my place all day and have listened to the speeches made upon this bill which was referred to the special committee, and I have had grave doubts as to whether or not it should have been referred to that committee, in view of the discussion which has taken place. It might have been well to go to the committee of the whole on the bill as it originally stood.

The bill as it now stands was put in its present condition on Dominion day by myself. We had met in the morning and I obtained the views of the members of the committee as to what amendments should be made. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) made suggestions which are largely embodied in sections 7 and 8, and I had certain views with respect to the legislation to which I shall presently refer. In the afternoon these were put in the form of the bill in which it now stands, subject to certain other revisions, and we came back in the evening and agreed upon the bill. We met in the morning, after it had been printed and, with the exception of the desire expressed by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth that there should be a provision whereby it would expire on a given date, the bill was agreed to.

I desire to make clear that the committee heard a large number of witnesses. If it was not to decide on a bill in accordance with the evidence given, the calling of witnesses was only an empty formality. Witnesses were called from Vancouver, Winnipeg and elsewhere. The witnesses from Vancouver spoke of the facilities which through the years had been built up at that port for the transport of wheat and other grain. They spoke of the facilities provided for the chartering of ships and brokers' establishments which had come into being for the purpose of supplying tonnage with which to transport the grain of western Canada through the Panama canal to the markets of the world, and the facilities for transport to the orient.

The witnesses called on behalf of the grain exchange gave evidence of a somewhat peculiar character. I had asserted in this chamber that the grain exchange had broken down. Mr. Milner, president of the grain exchange, joined issue with that statement. He and other witnesses who followed him pointed out that through the years they had built up the most efficient machine existing in Canada, and perhaps anywhere in the world—or at least as good—for the handling of grain. They said that the effect of the legislation would be to destroy those facilities. Subsequently other witnesses, notably Mr. Richardson explained that he believed a larger quantity of wheat could have been sold than had been sold, to the extent of 50,000,000 to 75,000,000 bushels. When he was questioned as to the reasons for his belief—for the man who makes an affidavit must be prepared to make a statement as to why he so believes—he had nothing to say except that he thought if wheat were 70 cents instead of 80 cents and the producer would supply the market he could sell the wheat. The fact was that evidence was produced before the committee indicating clearly that the price of wheat at Fort William had fallen to 38½ cents. The effect of that was that the farmer in the west received 15 cents per bushel for his wheat; one of the members of the committee spoke of having received 17 cents for his wheat on his farm. Mr. Richardson stated further that the cost of production of wheat might be as low as 40 cents. I am bound to say no other person thought that was a reasonable rate for the production of wheat in any part of Canada; one of the members of the committee, however, who had had wide experience indicated that if a person had a very large area and a heavy production per acre, under very favourable conditions he might show a cost of 40 cents or thereabouts. We will leave that. That was the evidence given—that existing facilities were there if they had an opportunity to function, and that those facilities were quite equal to the demand made upon them. Further, the president of the grain exchange said he felt perfectly certain that the presence in the market of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, supported as it was by government guarantees, had the effect of preventing open market operations on behalf of hedge takers, so that when the statement was made that the exchange had fallen down it was partly attributable to the fact that the exchange had not had a fair chance to function. That, shortly, is the case for the grain exchange.

Then came the elevator owners. They said that sections in this bill would place the whole functioning of their elevators in the hands of the board, and that it was equivalent to confiscation of their property. It was explained that no such result would follow nor was it intended that it should follow. It was intended that the elevators thus licensed under the Canada Grain Act, public utilities as they are, should be made available for what purpose?—that they should receive their fees and charges as provided by the Canada Grain Act itself, and that instead of the operations being carried on for numbers of customers they still would be able to carry on as much as they cared to, or where they could get business from the mills within the province in which they operated, but that the operations would be for and on behalf of the board. They made great complaint against such suggested action. They said that that was not giving them a fair chance to do what they could do. That is their case.

Mr. McFarland was ill. He sent a telegram and said he would be only too glad to answer any questions as to why he had taken any course on any day with respect to wheat—why he had bought or why he had not sold. He was prepared at any time to meet any accusers who had anything to say with respect to the conduct of his business; but he was lying in his bed and could not do so. He cannot have a chance until he is out of his bed and can appear before an authority properly constituted for that purpose. He could not answer personally, but he did answer to the only possible extent, through Mr. McIvor, his assistant, the sales manager of the Canadian Co-Operative Wheat Producers Limited. Mr. McIvor came before the committee and made a statement, which doubtless has been read by many hon. members. It is there to read.

To-night I do not endeavour to discuss the evidence which has been given and which is recorded in the minutes of the committee. But this fact did emerge: Mr. McIvor gave his evidence; Mr. Bredt gave his evidence; Mr. Bennett gave his evidence and Mr. Brouillette gave his. Now, why for all these years the pools have suffered the charges which have been made against them without offering a defence, I do not know. In a weekly newspaper published in the city of Toronto, charges were made that the action of the pools had had the effect of preventing Canada's grain from finding a place in the markets of the world, that the monopolistic dealings in grain had the effect of preventing prices being as buoyant as they otherwise might have been, and that for some reason or other the Englishman did not buy his grain from us but desired to buy from somebody else. But what is the evidence that was produced? Out of 76 marketing days, on 52 days the pools had offered wheat at a lower price than the Argentine was offering it in order that they might endeavour to sell Canadian wheat; they offered it one-eighth lower, one-quarter lower, as low as six and one-quarter cents lower, and they did not sell it. Read the evidence; it is written there, the market operations of the pool day after day. What does that prove? It proves conclusively that the Argentine, having no facilities for holding wheat, made up their minds, as the evidence shows clearly, that they would sell their wheat, and they must sell it because they have no elevators or storage facilities. The only storage facilities they have are storage facilities afloat when the wheat is being carried across the Atlantic ocean from Buenos Aires and other ports to Europe. That was the position, and there was the evidence given for the first time that might well have been given on previous occasions, evidence as to why there was not a sale of wheat when the large crop of 1929 was being dealt with. That is the evidence, and that evidence was supported by Mr. McIvor and by others.

Then we come to the operations of Mr. McFarland. I keenly regret that Mr. McFarland was not there to afford the answer that he could give to those who asked him why he bought wheat. One witness was asked this question by me, and the matter ended there. I asked, "Why didn't you sell wheat?" The answer was that he was holding wheat while the farmers realized money on their wheat. He had to hold wheat which the markets of the world would not take in order that the Canadian farmers' wheat might be sold in the markets of the world, and that is the reason there is an accumulation of wheat here to-day; that is the reason it is being held to-day.

What was the evidence? The evidence given, and admittedly true, was that out of every 100 bushels of wheat sold in the last four seasons prior to this season 35 bushels had been Canadian wheat, 20 bushels Argentine, 20 bushels Australian, 10 bushels United States, 8 bushels Russian and 7 bushels Balkan and other countries. There is your 100 bushels; there is Canada selling 35 per cent of it in the last four years. During this season on July 31, for the crop season is defined by the grain act as the 31st day of July, this year owing to the lateness of the crop the flow of exports will not commence until the 20th of September, so between now and the 20th of September any wheat in Canada that is sold must of necessity be the wheat of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited and no one elses—the wheat that has been accumulated by Mr. McFarland while the farmers were realizing on theirs. He had to buy of necessity, or the farmers prices would fall. He had to accumulate from necessity or the farmers could not sell their wheat on the markets of the world. He accumulated wheat under those circumstances for the purpose of enabling the Canadian farmers to sell their wheat.

And who was the hedge taker? Who was there to buy hedges? There seems to be apparently much mystery made with respect to hedges. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) spoke of it as price insurance. One witness said that the banks would not permit business to be carried on by elevator companies or others unless they hedge their operations, unless they sell their grain. There was only one hedge taker, and that was the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited. Why? Because the speculator had withdrawn from the market; the little dressmaker and the office boys in the various institutions and bank clerks could not go into the market any longer. Mr. O'Neal before a committee of congress said: Do you want to save your farmers by destroying these people who should not be speculating? Whether they were speculating then or not, they are not now, and they are not likely to be for some time because of their experience in the past. So the speculator disappeared. Mr. Milner said the speculator disappeared in a large way. He said: What is the good of a speculator coming to the Winnipeg market when Mr. McFarland took all the hedges there were? But Mr. McFarland did not take the hedges, according to the evidence of Mr. McIvor, until there was nobody else to take the hedges.

What was the government's guarantee? As explained by a witness it was nothing more or less than taking the hedges of the Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited with the banks. They could not get a hedge taker. Nobody would buy their wheat, and so this institution acting under government direction has been able to provide hedges for the entire sales of the wheat crop in western Canada during the last five years. That is what it has been doing to enable the Canadian farmer to receive a decent price for his wheat, to receive anough money to pay him meagrely for the effort he made.

What has been the result? Some hon. members suggest in a spirit of reckless criticism what the results have been. I gave the figures the other day, and I think it is worth while to repeat them. During those years Mr. McFarland has sold one and three-quarter billion bushels of wheat. That is what the farmers have sold. That is what they got their money for. Wheat fell to 38½ cents on the exchange, the lowest price in four hundred years. Why did the farmers get a higher price for it? Why did they get fifty cents, sixty cents, seventy cents and eighty cents? Why? Because Mr. McFarland took the hedges on behalf of the Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited to enable the transactions to be carried on. That is the reason why, and there is not a farmer in western Canada who does not know it; there is not a farmer who as had a bushel of wheat to haul that does not know it.

Let us look at the results not from sentiment, not from the point of view of its effect upon the morale and spirit of the people, but let us look at it in cold dollars and cents. What did the farmers receive for 285 million bushels of wheat? The farmers of western Canada sold in 1932, 285 million bushels of wheat and they received for it $86,000,000, and this year up to the end of April, for the same six months' period they have marketed 177 million bushels of wheat and they have received $107,000,000 for that much smaller quantity. There are the facts. For marketing 108 million bushels less of wheat they received, instead of $86,000,000, the large sum of $107,000,000. In other words they received $21,000,000 more for 108 million bushels of wheat less. There is the story of its operations. There is the answer to the criticism, the unfair criticism that has been hurled over this country from one end to the other with respect to the operations of Mr. McFarland, and the man who could have given the explanation of every day's operations, and why he acted as he did was not able to appear and give his explanation.

But let us go a step further. Let us look at the facts with respect to the day after day operations. Last year Mr. McFarland when examined by the committee on banking and commerce said that he found terrific purchases in one day. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) has pointed out that nearly 16 million bushels of wheat was bought in one day by this agency. Why did they buy 16 millions bushels? Because it was against the public interest of the Dominion of Canada that wheat should go to a price where it would yield only $86,000,000 for 285 million bushels. That is the answer. The effect upon the whole national life of Canada of the sale of wheat is better understood if one takes the trouble to examine what it means in our ability to pay the interest even on our national debt. A leading man wrote me since these operations began and said: It is a terrific responsibility which government have to carry but unless you are able to do these things and get a reasonable price for your wheat, it being the largest item of your external trade, what happens to you? I leave the answer to this committee.

I do not intend to deal with these matters in detail but I want to point out why this organization has functioned and why its accumulations have taken place and why the sales which have been spoken of have been made. An argument was made to-day which should be exploded once and for all. It was said that the reason Canada could not sell wheat in competition with the Argentine was because Canada's price was too high. All through the sittings of the committee Mr. Bredt gave the quotations and offers which he made to sell wheat at a lower price than the Argentine and every time the Argentine beat him. That is the answer to that.

Let us go a step further. It has been suggested that as the United States was not able to sell wheat it lessened the quantity. The fact that the United States was no longer an exporting country has very little to do with this. The true explanation was given a moment ago by the hon. member for Souris who read from the evidence given before the committee. What were the total purchases last year of Germany, of Italy and of France, not singly but together? Those three countries purchased only 26 million bushels of wheat. Countries which once were importers are now exporters. France has been selling her wheat and flour in England and has even landed her denatured wheat in the United States market. As I said in Montreal after coming back from England, Italy has been anxious to supply her own wants and has been able to increase her production of wheat by the utilization of fertilizers obtained through the fixation of nitrogen, by the drainage of swamps and by improving acreage production. These things have taken place and the result is that the great importing countries are no longer importing except to the extent of 26 million bushels. Does the committee realize that only a few short years ago these three countries bought over 200 million bushels of wheat? Does the committee realize that prior to the last two or three years those three countries purchased an average of 95 million bushels? The shrinkage in purchases from an average of 215 million bushels per year to 95 million bushels represented the shrinkage in the purchasing power of these countries by reason of the war and the increased production of wheat through the use of fertilizers and by drainage of lands. During that time Canada sold to France an average of 31 million bushels per year, but last year we sold to France, Germany and Italy only 26 million bushels. There is the answer.

A clear and comprehensive statement could have been made based upon the evidence which was given instead of the utilization of decimals and percentages in an effort to make it appear that Canada had failed in her duty to sell wheat in Great Britain and to take the place of the United States. It was quite clear from the evidence that the sale of wheat in London and the bonus system which prevailed made it impossible for France, Germany or Italy to purchase Canadian wheat. We have been able to sell only 26 million bushels to these three countries which a few years ago purchased 215 million bushels and in later years have averaged as high as 95 million bushels. Those are the facts and those facts resolved themselves into the two statements which I made when I came back from England in 1931 or 1932, I forget which year. I stated that these countries no longer desired to pay a ransom. As I explained long ago in the house, this condition was brought about by the prices charged during the war. At that time there was only one Canadian statesman whom I know of—the gentleman is now dead—who said to the farmers of western Canada that they should not endeavour to get $3 per bushel for their wheat as they would feel sorry after the war. There was a shortage of wheat during those years and we were able to get very high prices. The prices went as high as $3 per bushel but those prices were not obtained by pool operations. They were obtained by the farmers and the grain board of 1919 which fixed prices as high as $2.65 per bushel and for some grades as high as $3 per bushel. That fact was known to France, to Germany and to Italy, and in the development of the intense nationalism which has taken place during the last few years this fact has played a great part. We are now faced with an inability to sell wheat upon the markets of the world. These countries have desired to be self-sustaining and self-sufficient and they are no longer on an importing basis. France has been selling her wheat by the millions of bushels in the form of flour and otherwise in Great Britain and the British millers have put themselves on record by saying that because of the competition of French flour and the necessity of their utilizing the 50 million bushels of soft wheat produced under the bonus in Great Britain their ability to buy larger quantities of stronger wheat has been greatly curtailed. In order to compete against French flour they have been forced to buy the cheapest flour possible. That is known to every man who desires to analyse the facts and it will be open to anyone who takes a broad and comprehensive view of the whole situation.

That evidence was before the committee and it considered these matters. Every member had an opportunity to suggest what action should be taken, and the bill which has just been agreed to was based upon the other bill and the suggestions of hon. members in an effort to embody two principles. The first was the price to the producer to be fixed by the board with the approval of the governor in council. In other words, the government of the day must approve of the action taken by the board, ascertain the factors that determine the action they take and arrive at a conclusion. It will be a very difficult conclusion to arrive at and one fraught with grave responsibilities and great implications, but it must be done. The argument with respect to the Argentine was developed during the progress of the examination of witnesses who spoke so highly of the system in use in that country. I thought that if they thought so highly of that system I would put questions to them as to why the same thing should not be done in Canada. The Argentine has a fixed price and anyone can buy wheat above that price. If a producer in a far distant locality is unable to sell his wheat he can sell it to the board at the fixed price and the board then makes provision for its export to the markets of the world.

There is a second principle in this bill with respect to the producer. It was decided that he should share in any surplus which might arise because of the operations of the board. Objections were made to the initial payment and it was pointed out that certain difficulties had arisen in the past and it was undesirable that a fixed price should be paid. That fixed price does not determine the ultimate price which the producer will receive as he is to share in any surplus which might result from the operations of the board. In connection with the producer there are two principles, the fixed price and the sharing in any ultimate profits which might be made. Through this equitable distribution every man will receive for a bushel of wheat the same price on a Fort William basis if he delivered it to the board.

We return now to the next item, the duties of the board. The board is to be prepared at all times to buy wheat and pay for it a fixed price. That fixed price having been determined and the board having paid it, as it will be obliged to do under this bill, it then must consider the next point. How would it be sold? The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth and those associated with him kept pressing the point with respect to sales, and there was introduced into this bill—I got their notes and tried to give effect to their view—the provision that the board should sell its wheat at such price as might be considered reasonable with the object of promoting the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets. That is the principle that governed Mr. McFarland's operations in every particular. The board must regard as reasonable the price at which it sells. Then we come to the next point, which is that it should take over, secondly, the wheat of the Canadian wheat producers; and I pointed out this evening in answer to a question asked that the present thought in our minds was that you would substitute the board for Canadian Co-operative Producers Limited with respect to wheat and wheat only. With respect to other grains they have a small quantity worth half a million or so and the board would not have anything to do with that. That is the position of the board. But it did not end there. What is the provision contained in clauses (i) and (j)? In order that this institution, which it is said has not had a fair chance, should have an opportunity to function without restriction, it is provided that existing facilities shall be used without discrimination. The board shall give an opportunity to these people to sell wheat on the markets of the world; these institutions that have been built up during the years shall be allowed to function for the sale of the product of the producer in the markets of the world, through established channels and existing facilities. You will find that set out in detail in this bill:

> in selling and disposing of wheat as by this act provided, to utilize and employ without discrimination such marketing agencies, including commission merchants, brokers, elevator men, exporters and other persons engaged in or operating facilities for the selling and handling of wheat, as the board in its discretion may determine.

That is just what Mr. McFarland has been doing during the last five years. When he came into office he stipulated one thing and it was that every existing facility of the pool with respect to sales abroad should be withdrawn—why? Not that he did not believe in them; not at all, but the charge had been unjustly made, that the pool had not been utilizing existing facilities and therefore drawing down on its head the condemnation of these old established facilities going back for centuries, instead of that he felt that they should be withdrawn and existing facilities used.

Does this committee realize that neither Mr. McFarland nor his agency has offered for sale abroad, through their agents, any wheat but always through existing facilities, utilizing them to the full? These same men came to the committee and spoke about the facilties they had abroad, and they have been utilized to the full all these years. No effort has been made to substitute new facilities for those that have been in use. But because of the fact that they may fail it is provided in (j) of section 8 that while they are offering continuously wheat for sale in the markets of the world through the established channels the board may set up their own agencies if the other agencies are not functioning satisfactorily. That is a development of the principle that if you cannot get from others the service you require on the basis of paying for it the usual price fixed by statute, you will have to establish your own agency. So much for that.

Sections 9, 10 and 11 were sections dealing with elevators and facilities, and these sections remain in the act. That is the next principle. They are to come into operation by proclamation if, as and when it is thought desirable by the government of the day that it should be done. If the government of Canada believes that in the public interest this is necessary, then I have no doubt, whatever government is in power, it will be done. But there is something more than that. Let us examine what is meant by this. I have been rather surprised at some of the observations I have heard. A farmer has a thousand bushels of wheat, and for the sake of argument we will say that the price on the farm is 60 cents. He hauls it to the elevator and this is his choice: he can sell it to anyone he pleases for any price he likes; he can sell it to the board for 60 cents, and he then has, what he would not otherwise have, the right to share in any added price that wheat may bring during that crop year—not that wheat only but all the wheat, bushel for bushel. Under these circumstances is it suggested that there has been any slackening or lessening of the position which we have taken in this matter from the first? None whatever. And if it is found that it is essential, to maintain the principle I have just mentioned, that these sections should be brought into operation, I am sure that no government of the day will fail to take the requisite action; and once it is done it cannot be undone by order in council: it remains as part of the statute law of the country.

There is another point. Some reference has been made to the fact that this statute provides that the board shall buy only wheat from the producers. I insist that that should be so—why? Because they are not going to take the hedges that they have been doing for other people. That is the reason. There is the answer to the whole question raised by the hon. gentleman from Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). The government is not going to be made a convenience of by any trade or any individuals at this time. Instead of Canadian Producers Limited buying wheat, that wheat will be bought by the board on this basis, that whatever the fixed price is, if anyone else takes the wheat he must pay for it an additional price beyond that; and to compensate for the possibility of there being an increase in price it is provided that the producer shall have the right to share in that added price, so that he gets it either way. He either takes the chance of selling it to a competitor of the board or he sells it to the board, with this benefit attached to it with a certificate.

We did not stop there. We heard the grievances of the producer as expressed by Mr. Bredt, Mr. Brouillette and Mr. Bennett. And what did we say? We have provided in this bill, for the first time in the history of this country, this section—that the board shall have the powers of a commission appointed under the Inquiries Act and the right to inquire with respect to the movement of wheat for export, either interprovincially or internationally, through the clearing house and the exchanges in Winnipeg and Vancouver. I do not prejudge, but if any of the facts they allege exist. then they will become known; and if they are as stated, does anyone in this committee think for a moment that any government would hesitate to bring into operation the provisions of sections 9, 10, and 11? There is the position; that is what has been accomplished.

Now let us proceed a step further. In the bill as originally framed it was provided that all grain should be covered. I did that purposely because I was anxious to know what the views of the committee and the producers of the country might be. It is not thought desirable at this time that all grains should be brought within the act but that it should be limited to wheat. That was the opinion expressed and in that sense it has been done. Now the question is, how shall the accumulations be disposed of? That is the next question. This year's crop is to be dealt with in the way I have indicated. The accumulations, which came about in the way I have indicated, are to be dealt with as provided in the act in a special section, namely by their disposition as speedily as may be reasonably possible having regard to economic and other conditions. In other words, the accumulations are not to come into competition with the crop produced this year. As speedily as may be reasonably possible having regard to economic and other conditions—there are the conditions that you have with respect to the sale of the accumulations, and above and beyond all that—and the suggestion in a slightly different form came from the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth—there is paragraph (h):

> To give effect to any order in council that may be passed with respect to its operations.

That is, the governor in council has the power of directing, prohibiting, controlling, regulating, determining the course of action this board shall take with respect to any matter that comes within its jurisdiction. In other words, the responsible government of the country, in its judgment and the exercise of its discretion, has power to control completely the operations of the board.

Then the board is being assisted by an advisory committee. It was suggested by one of the witnesses who had been and still is associated with the pool, that there should be some compensation paid to the producers at least, as well as others who came to Winnipeg or elsewhere for the purpose of giving their advice to the board. So it will be observed that this advisory board, of whom four out of seven shall be producers, shall be paid their transportation and living expenses and a per diem allowance of $10 while they are away from home. That was to ensure continuity of interest. But it goes further: it provides that the Minister of Trade and Commerce may ask them at any time to give their advice, to meet together. Further, this advisory board shall send a copy of its minutes to the minister in order that he may know what has transpired.

Those are the provisions so far as the operations of this board are concerned. I am not going to dwell longer upon them except to say that this committee and every member of it made, I think, a fair attempt to reconcile contending views in the light of the evidence that was given. I did not conceive it to be the duty of men to take their own fixed opinions with respect to a matter of this kind, but it was their duty, having called witnesses representing every phase of the situation, to listen to what they said, and out of the mass of testimony it became abundantly clear that one group contended they should have an opportunity to show the usefulness of their facilities and that their policies and their programs, based upon those policies, should have an opportunity of being again tried, free from any hampering control, as they contended, such as that of the Producers Limited. That is accorded to them in this bill, but it still holds over their heads the idea that the original provisions of the bill have not been taken from it, but are to be utilized if, as and when in the interests of the producers of this country and of the nation generally it is found desirable to exercise the powers conferred by those provisions. That is one side of the matter. Then the other side was that those who represented co-operative and indivdiual marketing were of opinion that a fixed price was essential and desirable. Some of them urged that the factors indicating how that fixed price was to be determined should be stated in the bill. I am free to say that I urged as strongly as I have done to-night that that should not be done for reasons I shall not now traverse.

We have this bill which the committee accepted for the purpose of doing two things: one, taking care of the surplus accumulations of the wheat of this country at a time when the requirements of importing countries have been enormously reduced, as will be found from the returns, and the production has made no corresponding diminution; second, this year's crop is to flow into the channels of consumption by the methods I have mentioned: a fixed price, a sharing in subsequent profits, if any, and the purchase by the board directly from the producers. It is hardly necessary for me to say to this committee that that is just what has been done, except that Mr. McFarland was buying hedges and that now he will not buy hedges; he will buy the actual wheat from the producers to the extent that this may be necessary, or that the wheat may not be absorbed by those who otherwise might purchase it.

I feel some measure of regret at the very false statements that have been published in the newspapers with respect to this bill. In a great heading by a well known inaccurate correspondent in one of Canada's newspapers appear these words:

Canada to offer surplus of grain in world market.
McFarland ideas and pool repudiated by proposed act.
To fix prices.

What is the effect of this? It is sent out to the world at large during the last few days, in fact during the last few hours as we measure hours relatively, and the price of wheat fell four cents on the Liverpool market to-day. Great rejoicing, I suppose that the wheat that has been accumulated under the conditions to which I have referred is to be offered in the world market! Well, nothing is further from this government than that that should be so. It well may be that other policies may prevail, but they will prevail at the expense of this country. Anyone who knows the intrinsic value of a bushel of Canadian wheat as demonstrated by analysis of its value in protein and other contents as compared with a bushel of wheat of other countries, will understand that the price at which our wheat has been sold is very low as compared with the general price of wheat in the world during the last five hundred years or more of which there is no record. It is true there has been objection, but not to purchasing from one person; there is no objection to that. Some people think there is objection on the part of importers to buying from one agency. To do so simplifies their business. Although I was not a witness, I endeavoured to ascertain from personal inquiry, and the objection was, as I tried to explain to the committee, that there was an endeavour to sell wheat without regard to the old established agencies. Anyone who knows something of, shall I say, the strength of vested interests who discharge great obligations in marketing, whether it be tea or sugar, wheat or other grains, in the markets of the old country, where the price charged per unit is very small, will understand what the result is if an effort is made to establish, shall I say, a new agency in competition with those old established institutions. My primary reason in rising tonight was to have it known I trust by the inaccurate correspondent of the newspaper—and let him be accurate for once—that as long as this government exists, there is no intention that this country should offer its surplus of grain at fire sale prices or throw its surplus on the markets of the world. I am bound to say in fairness to the committee that this legislation, which is not based on any such idea, was unanimously agreed to by that committee, so that the views which I express are those of the committee unanimously, there being no difference with respect to that whatever. The language used, I may say in fairness to those who are being criticized, is language which, according to my memory, I myself employed with respect to paragraph (c) of section 8 in connection with the sale of the accumulations of the Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited during the past few years. I regret that this result should have followed because of any misstatements that have been made with respect to the principles that will govern the future operations of the board. But over and above and beyond all else stands the fact that whatever may be said, the board must be amenable to the orders in council and direction and control of the government of the day.

I have nothing further to say except this—I have been saying that very frequently—the committee in arriving at its conclusions believed on the evidence submitted by the various witnesses that this bill gives effect to every school of thought and affords a fair opportunity to test by experience the value of the claims made by each, and at the same time protects the producer to an extent that I think has never been done before, by ensuring him a fixed price and his share in the ultimate surplus that may arise from its operation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, my right hon. friend must either have been misinformed or have deceived himself when he told the house and country a day or two ago he regretted that he was no longer able to participate in what he called the rough and tumble of debate. If he has not shown this evening that he is in form for the rough and tumble of debate I do not know that we have ever had reason to believe that he was. However, I rise not for the purpose of joining in any bout of the kind but rather to draw the attention of the committee to the difference between what was said by my right hon. friend at the beginning of his remarks and what was said at the close. I am glad there is that difference, because certainly the opening part of my right hon. friend's remarks left a very unpleasant impression on my mind and I think on the mind of the committee generally. My right hon. friend began his address by saying that the bill which the house has been considering this afternoon, upon which we have all worked so amicably and which we have run through without very much discussion, "is mine," and gave no credit whatever to the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my right hon. friend will read his address he will see that is so.

Mr. BENNETT: I wrote it on Dominion day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He now confirms the remark.

Mr. BENNETT: And I said I took the suggestions of every member of the committee before doing so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend, if this is his bill, whose was the bill introduced in the name of the Prime Minister on June 10? I do not wish to deprive my right hon. friend of any credit, which may be his, but I think it is only right that credit in all quarters should be given where credit is due.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: From the month of March there was on the order paper of the house a resolution in the name of the Prime Minister for the introduction of a bill providing for the constitution and powers of the Canadian grain board. On June 10 that bill was introduced and given its first reading by the Prime Minister. My right hon. friend will recall and the committee will recall that I asked him at the time if he would not agree to his bill going to a committee, either a special committee or a select committee, and I gave as a reason for my request that I thought the bill would have to be changed considerably, and that if we could get it before a committee much discussion would be saved when the bill came back to the house. My right hon. friend was not in a position to give an immediate answer; he said he would consider it. He did consider it and he agreed to the bill going to a select special committee, and I thanked him for agreeing to my suggestion, and it went to the committee. The bill that has come back to the house, as I have it in my hand, is quite another bill. True it is entitled to provide for the constitution and powers of the Canadian grain board, the same number and name—

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is changed in the inside to wheat board.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But it has printed on the title page "reprinted as amended and reported by the select special committee."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A new bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is a new bill, a different bill altogether. My right hon. friend's bill was the original bill. It would have gone on to its second reading and into committee of the whole and to its third reading without being referred to any special committee at all but for the suggestion that came from this side of the house and which to his credit my right hon. friend accepted. The bill having gone to the special committee and the members of that committee having worked day and night for days doing their utmost to bring the measure to the point where as far as possible it would be acceptable to all parties in the house, I think my right hon. friend ought to have given full credit to the members of the committee for having achieved that result.

Mr. BENNETT: So he did.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says, "So he did"; he is given to saying diametrically opposite things in the same speech, so that if the necessity arises he can point to whichever extreme may best serve the moment. However, I am quite prepared to acknowledge that in the concluding part of my right hon. friend's remark he did say that he obtained the views or he made notes from and tried to give effect to the views of members of the committee in the bill as finally drafted. Still further on he also said that the bill represented the unanimous views of the committee. All that I wish to stress at the moment —and I do it because I think it is due particularly to those hon. members of the house who served on the committee—is that the bill which has come back from the special committee to this house and has passed through committee this afternoon and this evening is a very different bill from that originally introduced. The bill as originally introduced would not have passed this house without prolonged controversy and discussion, if it would have passed at all. The bill which has passed through committee this day with so very little in the way of discussion has passed in virtue of the changes made by the committee in the original bill, changes which served to make it acceptable to this house, and which I believe will serve to make its provisions acceptable also to the country.

CANADA-POLAND TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 121, respecting the convention of commerce between Canada and Poland, signed at Ottawa, July 3, 1935.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps a short explanation might be in order at this stage. The bill is the usual form of bill adopted by parliament heretofore in connection with the ratification of conventions between Canada and different countries, and I believe there will be no difficulty in adopting the sections as they come before the committee. I should like to make a statement however with respect to the convention attached as a schedule to the bill.

The convention of commerce between Canada and Poland now submitted to the house for approval should be the means of giving Canada ready access to the Polish market for the first time since the establishment of the Polish republic.

The republic of Poland is one of the larger and more populous of the states of Europe. having an area of nearly 140,000 square miles and a population of over 32,000,000, showing the very considerable average density of 222 persons to the square mile. The import trade of Poland in 1934 amounted to a value of $148,569,360, of which Canada according to the Polish returns supplied only $38,688. According to our Canadian trade returns, in the fiscal year ending March, 1935, Canada imported from Poland and Danzig goods to the value of $154,309 and exported Canadian products to the value of $402,067. I have a statement with me giving the details of the principal products imported from and exported to Poland and Danzig in the last three fiscal years.

Canadian trade with Poland hitherto has been handicapped by the absence of a trade agreement. Up to October 11, 1933, the Polish tariff system comprised (1) normal tariff; (2) maximum tariff (three times as high as the normal tariff); and (3) conventional rates on some goods lower than the normal tariff. While the normal tariff was extended to Canada, conventional rates were withheld and, moreover, the import licence system of Poland was administered in a manner so as to make it very difficult to obtain licences to import Canadian goods.

A new Polish tariff came into force on October 11, 1933, which has restricted the sale to Poland of most Canadian products. This tariff established two sets of rates, those in column I being applicable to merchandise originating in countries with which Poland does not have commercial treaty arrangements. The rates in column II are applicable to countries enjoying "most favoured nation" treatment, and are, on the average, about 20 per cent lower than those in column I. In addition there is a third column consisting of special rates of duty provided for in trade treaties which Poland has concluded with other countries. These special rates of duty usually represent considerable reductions below the rates provided for in column II of the Polish tariff.

The convention of commerce will result in Canada securing most favoured nation treatment in Poland. Consequently, Canadian goods would benefit not only from the rates in column II of the Polish tariff, but also from the special rates provided for in treaties concluded with other countries. If no convention of commerce is concluded, Canadian goods would be subject to the rates of duty provided for in column I, or the highest rates of duty in the Polish tariff.

In addition, schedule A of the convention of commerce provides for special reduced rates of duty on some products which are of particular interest to Canada. These reductions in Polish duties, expressed in Canadian currency at par of exchange, are as follows:

Herrings, preserved:
Weighing more than 500 grams, 12½ reduced to 4½ cents per pound.
Weighing 500 grams or less, 17½ reduced to 6 cents per pound.
Canned salmon, 40 reduced to 12 cents per pound.
Sardines, 40 reduced to 14 cents per pound.
Canned lobsters, $1 reduced to 25 cents per pound.
Patent leather:
In whole or half skins, $1.11 reduced to 50 cents per pound.
In cuttings or pieces, $1.22 reduced to 55 cents per pound.
Silver fox skins, $25 reduced to $5 per pound.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Chemical wood pulp for the manufacture of paper, 75 reduced to 40 cents per 100 pounds.
Chemical wood pulp, other, 75 reduced to 50 cents per 100 pounds.
Ice skates, 15 reduced to 10 cents per pound.

These calculations have been made at par of exchange. In order to arrive at the equivalents of the Polish duties at the current rate of exchange it would be necessary to add approximately 66 per cent to the amounts given in this statement.

In addition, the convention of commerce provides that Canada shall receive treatment in respect to quotas as favourable as that extended to the importation of similar articles from other countries. Many classes of goods are subject to restrictions on importation into Poland. As a result of the conclusion of the convention of commerce, quotas will be established for the principal products which we desire to ship to Poland on a basis agreed upon between the two governments. Among other products which should benefit from the establishment of a quota is fresh apples, the trade in which has hitherto been restricted by the difficulty which importers in Poland have experienced in securing licences for the importation of apples from Canada owing to the fact that there has been no trade treaty between the two countries.

The tariff concessions granted by Canada to Poland are embodied in schedule B to the convention. These relate to twenty-one items of the Canadian customs tariff. In the case of nine items the effect of the concession is to consolidate free entry for articles which are now free of duty under all tariffs. Books printed in Poland and in the Polish or Ukrainian language, covered by items numbers 169 and 171 of the Canadian customs tariff, will be made free of duty. In the case of item 171 it was necessary to obtain the concurrence of His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom because this item being included in schedule E to the trade agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom, the margin of preference had been guaranteed. The duty on positive moving picture films made in Poland and speaking the Polish or Ukrainian language, if one and one-eight of an inch in width and over, will be cut in half. To this item and to those relating to books in the Polish or Ukrainian language the government of Poland attach importance from the point of view of cultural rather than of commercial relations. The concessions in respect to the remaining nine items covered by the convention involve discounts from the intermediate tariff varying from 10 to 45 per cent. In the case of two items, those relating to clover seeds and to furniture, similar concessions are embodied in the trade agreement with France, so that no further reductions will be extended to most favoured nations by the granting to Poland of the concessions respecting these products. The other concessions granted to Poland relate to the following products:

Canned hams;
Dried mushrooms;
Manufactures of alabaster, n.o.p.;
Cut, pressed, moulded or crystal glass tableware, decorated or not;
Blown glass tableware and other cut glass ware;
Horse hair, curled or dyed, n.o.p.;
Trunks, valises, hat boxes, carpet bags, tool bags and baskets of all kinds, n.o.p.;
Ornaments, statues and statuettes of alabaster.

When the convention comes into force the duties on these products, imported from countries entitled to most favoured nation treatment, will be reduced to the extent of the discounts from the intermediate tariff specified in schedule B.

I shall be pleased to answer any question I may concerning the different sections, as they are reached.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Convention approved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I understood the minister's explanation, so far as duties are concerned, goods coming from Poland are now to come in free or at a lower rate of duty than exists at the present time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In all cases most favoured nation treatment has been given except in nine, where the duties are even lower, and in other cases they are free.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must congratulate the government in having come around to the correct point of view in regard to tariffs. It may be a deathbed repentance, but it is just as well to have it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is a matter of opinion.

DOMINION HOUSING ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 112, to assist the construction of houses.

He said: There has been but one amendment made by the Senate, and I just asked the opinion of the right hon. gentleman opposite whether he thought the amendment was better than the original wording. Paragraph (d) of section 2 as it passed this house read as follows:

"Housing scheme" means a scheme for the construction of houses and their occupation by tenants or purchasers.

The Senate has concluded to add between the words "and" and "their" in the seventeenth line the word "for," so it will now read:

"Housing scheme" means a scheme for the construction of houses and for their occupation by tenants or purchasers.

That is the only amendment.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

FRUIT, VEGETABLES AND HONEY ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 95, respecting fruit, vegetables and honey.

He said: The amendments made by the Senate are very slight. The word "establishment" is defined in the second section of the act as follows:

"establishment" means any plant, factory or premises in which produce is canned or preserved for food for export.

And "export" is defined as:

"export" means export out of Canada or out of any province to any other province thereof.

The Senate amendment defines "establishment" as "establishment" means any plant, factory or premises in which produce is canned or preserved for food for export or interprovincial trade.

The words "or interprovincial trade" are added. The Senate has amended the definition of "export" to read:

"export or interprovincial trade" means shipment out of Canada or out of any province to any other province thereof.

Then section 10 of the bill and succeeding sections have been amended by the use of three words somewhat different from what we used to express the necessity for licensing. Section 10 reads:

No commission agent shall accept or offer to accept for sale on commission or otherwise deal in any produce shipped from a point outside the province in which he carries on business unless he has obtained a licence from the minister.

The Senate has struck out the words "he has obtained a licence from" and substituted therefor the words "thereto licensed by." The same amendment is made in section 11 and 12. Then in section 14 the words "or interprovincial trade" have been added after the word "export" so that it will now read:

No person shall assemble or ship honey or for export or interprovincial trade unless he be first duly registered in accord with the regulations.

"Export" as amended by the Senate means shipment out of Canada or out of any province to any other province thereof, so I would hardly think the amended section 14 was as good as our own section, but there can be no harm in accepting it as it stands rather than sending it back to the Senate.

Then section 16 is amended by striking out the words "any produce" in the first line of the section and those two words have been inserted in the second line after the word "carry." So that it will now read:

No common carrier shall receive for carriage or carry any produce to a destination without the province wherein the same is received unless such produce is accompanied by an inspection certificate or other evidence of inspection prescribed by regulation.

Through a misprint "any" was used instead of the word "an," referring to an inspection certificate. The amendment is not in any sense important.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

CONCURRENCE IN CERTAIN SENATE AMENDMENTS AND NON-CONCURRENCE IN OTHERS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 79, to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

He said: With the leave of the house I should like to deal with the amendments made by the Senate to this bill, if there is no objection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no objection, but I shall have something to say with regard to the amendments after my right hon. friend has spoken.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman has seen the amendments, I take it?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have before me the Senate proceedings.

Mr. BENNETT: In line 10 of section 2 the Senate have added after the word "combination" the words "having relation to any commodity which may be the subject of trade or commerce," so that it will read:

"Combine" means a combination having relation to any commodity which may be the subject of trade or commerce,

And so forth.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it be convenient to my right hon. friend if I raise my objection now?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I see the effect of this amendment it will rule out of consideration all service industries. Plumbing, for example, would not come within the definition as it is now set forth by the Senate, and anything in the nature of a plumbing combine or a combine of plumbers could not be investigated under the act. That is one of the service industries that have already been investigated. It seems to me that they should not be exempted because of any change in the definition, and I do not think that definition should be allowed to stand.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say that I share the right hon. gentleman's opinion with respect to that. If the act were limited to commodities it could not deal with a combination for services or other non-physical intentions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Of service industries.

Mr. BENNETT: I think we will disagree with that amendment and we will prepare a message accordingly. The next is in line 29 and substitutes the word "designed" for "likely."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The word "designed" will necessitate proof of intention, and that is always difficult. As I recall the evidence before the price spreads commission, that was requested by the manufacturers' association but was not accepted by the commission. The word "likely" was put in as not requiring the same measure of proof of intention. My right hon. friend will see the force of that.

Mr. BENNETT: A thing may be likely to operate and have the most innocent parties in the world behind it; therefore I think it should be designed to constitute that sort of offence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If you substitute the word "designed" you will have one of the most difficult of legal proofs to establish. To that extent you practically destroy one of the essential features of the measure. That ought to be looked into.

Mr. BENNETT: We will let that stand. The next is on page 2 and deals with subsection 4. A new definition is inserted which reads:

(4) "Merger, trust or monopoly" means one or more persons

(a) who has or have purchased, leased or otherwise acquired any control over or interest in the whole or part of the business of another; or

(b) who either substantially or completely control, throughout any particular area or district in Canada or throughout Canada the class or species of business in which he is or they are engaged,

And extends and applies only to the business of manufacturing, producing, transporting, purchasing, supplying, storing or dealing in commodities which may be the subject of trade or commerce: Provided that this subsection shall not be construed or applied so as to limit or impair any right or interest derived under The Patent Act, 1935, or any other statute of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the bill was before the house the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) brought this amendment to the attention of the house but he said he would not press it. I took exception to it on the ground that a patent might be used for the purpose of creating a monopoly; I thought the public interest was more important than the interest of any person holding a patent right, and that the restricting of the definition in that way was a mistake.

Mr. BENNETT: We have an international convention with respect to patents which was signed in 1926 or 1928, and I am speaking subject to correction when I say that this merely gives effect to a provision in the international agreement signed at The Hague.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Patent law is a very special branch of the law, and I shall not venture to give a legal opinion upon this. But if this amendment is to permit the overriding of the public interest by virtue of a right under some patent held by a company, it should not be permitted.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will excuse our dealing with this matter in this way rather than in committee. The right hon. gentleman will remember that I pointed out that the Patent Act contains provisions for the protection of the public interest where the patent is not worked or under various other contingencies. Our patent act largely follows the English act, which was predicated upon the convention signed at The Hague. So far as this amendment is concerned I submit—again speaking subject to correction—that it is made to give effect to our international obligations and the public interests are amply protected by the provisions of the Patent Act. However, I shall look into the matter. The next amendment is to insert a new paragraph (b) reading as follows:

(b) to bring at once to the minister's attention every such application;

I think that is desirable. The next provides for the re-lettering of the paragraphs, and I do not believe there will be any objection to that. The next deals with line 32 and deletes the words "or is being formed." I think that amendment is proper. The same amendment is made in connection with lines 40 and 41 and lines 44 and 45. The next refers to page 4, line 8, and substitutes the word "therefor" for the word "thereof." The same amendment is made in line 11. I think those are proper. The next deals with line 37 and inserts the words "by the commission" after the word "believed."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I read that section it would mean that there could be no investigation until the commission in the first instance had made up its mind that there was a combine. As a matter of fact, the purpose of an investigation would be partly to establish whether or not there was a combine. As I read the section the commission would have to declare its belief before an investigation could take place, and it might be possible to defeat any inquiry at all.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman will remember that under the existing combines act there has to be some belief.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A prima facie case.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. I think the extraordinary powers given to the commission would not make it unreasonable that it should authorize an inquiry.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will be interesting to see how it works out.

Mr. BENNETT: The next amendment deals with line 24 on page 5 and substitutes the word "directs" for "allows." I think that is correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I understand that section it will prevent documentary evidence which has been filed with the commission from being used against the persons who file the evidence at any trial which may ensue.

Take, for example, one of the coal companies which have been investigated; if they had filed certain documents it would have effectively precluded the use of those documents at the trial. In that way it would be possible to thwart any attempt to bring such companies under the provisions of the act.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think my right hon. friend has followed that section quite carefully. Read section 20 of the act:

All books, papers, records or things produced before the commission, whether voluntarily or in pursuance of an order, may be inspected by the commission and also by such persons as the commission directs, and copies thereof may be made by or at the instance of the commission.

That provides for copies being kept by the commission; it is not the section the hon. gentleman refers to. The next amendment is on page 6 in line 41. The words "oral evidence so given" are struck out and the words "evidence or documents so required" substituted. That is the usual provision giving effect to the Canada Evidence Act, that a man is not bound to convict himself. I think that is all right. Now we come to one which is somewhat more difficult. On page 7, section 20, line 11, it is provided:

The commission at the conclusion of every investigation which they conduct shall make a report in writing and without delay transmit it to the minister. Such report shall set out fully the conclusions reached, the action, if any, taken, and any other material which may be required by regulation under this act.

Then is added a new subsection (2):

The commission shall at the same time deliver into the custody from whence they came, if not already delivered, all books, papers, records and other documents in its possession as evidence relating to the investigation, but before doing so the commission may extract from such documents and certify as true copies such relevant parts thereof as it may deem to be necessary for any purpose of this act, whereafter such parts, so certified, shall have and be accorded in all courts the same probative force as the equivalent parts of the originals of which they are copies.

I think that is a rather desirable provision to have. It enables the commission, when returning originals, to keep copies to meet the possibility of the originals being inadvertently lost, and to enable it to produce the copies at any trial that may take place. They have the same probative force as equivalent parts of the originals of which they are copies.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is all right.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no amendment on page 8 but on page 9 there are several:

27. Section forty-one of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

41. The commission shall, annually, report to the minister its proceedings under this act and he shall lay such report before parliament if it be then sitting, and, if it be not then sitting, within the first fifteen days of its then next session.

That is perhaps a very desirable change. As section 28 they have added:

No person shall be charged with, tried for or convicted of an offence against this act, by the same information, upon the same evidence or at the same time as he is charged with, tried for or convicted of an offence against section four hundred and ninety-eight of the Criminal Code.

That is, I think, a proper section to have in a statute of this kind. Section 29 is:

This act shall come into force on the first day of October, 1935.

How we allowed it to go in the form we did I do not know, because it is not the proper form. I would move that the amendments other than the first amendment on page 1 and the second amendment on page 1 be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. RALSTON: With regard to the definition of "combine," do I understand that the whole section 2 as it appears in the act is cut out and that the four line provision is substituted?

Mr. BENNETT: No; I read only the first paragraph. The others all remain. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments, apart from amendment No. 1 and amendment No. 2, both on the first page, be read the second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BENNETT: I move that amendments No. 1 and No. 2 be not concurred in for the following reasons.

1. That a combine may exist with respect to a subject matter other than a commodity, and it is the purpose of the act to deal with such a combine.

2. That it is the intention of the act to deal with a condition where a combination, merger, trust or monopoly has operated or is likely to operate to the detriment or against the interest of the public.

3. To substitute "designed" for "likely" would involve a proof of intention which experience has indicated it is difficult to establish. And that the same be sent to their honours.

Motion agreed to.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 114, relating to the application of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934, in the province of British Columbia.

He said: The Senate has inserted an amendment bringing the act into force only upon proclamation of the governor in council, and I am quite prepared to accept it. I move concurrence.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am in favour of the amendment, but there is an anomaly inasmuch as the bill said that after the first day of July, 1935, the act should cease to be in force.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT, 1934

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 105, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1934.

He said: Before the motion is put I wish to explain that in accordance with the announcement made some days ago sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9 and 10 will be withdrawn, leaving the remaining sections and one or two suggestions that have come recently from the chief electoral officer, which I propose to submit at his request.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Mr. GUTHRIE: While we are waiting for the reprinted bill, I may explain that the only remaining sections in the new bill as reprinted will be: Section 1 which deals with advance polls and which provides that the advance polls shall be open on the Thursday, Friday and Saturday before polling day until ten o'clock at night on each day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is one more day than formerly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Were there three days formerly?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Two.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, this is in accordance with the request of the Trades and Labour Congress and others. The next is a section to waive the necessity of the chief electoral officer going into the preparation of voters' lists for the by-elections which would not be held until after dissolution.

Mr. GRAY: The date was fixed for the by-elections.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is to waive the necessity for the preparation of voters' lists for those by-elections. The next change is for the adoption of a new form of oath of the voter at the poll where he is challenged. At present all that is provided for is an oral oath. The new form is one that has to be signed by the man who takes the oath. It is for the purpose of identification and also of proof if proceedings are afterwards taken.

A new section which has been suggested by the chief electoral officer is to amend section 24 of the act passed last session by striking out the first seven words of that section. It provides that:

> Immediately after he has granted a poll, the returning officer shall, by writing in form 10 executed under his hand, appoint one deputy returning officer for each polling station.

Complaints have come from the returning officers in some of the constituencies which are more or less remote that sufficient time is not allowed between nomination day and polling day for the purpose of appointing deputy returning officers in all the distant polling subdivisions. It has been suggested by the chief electoral officer that the words "immediately after he has granted a poll" be struck out and the following words substituted:

> Immediately after the issue of the writ of election.

So that it will read:

> Immediately after the issue of the writ of election the returning officer shall appoint deputy returning officers.

It so happens that in Canada we do not have very many uncontested elections or acclamations.

Mr. McPHEE: That is not in the bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is a suggestion I am making now; it is one that came to me from the chief electoral officer and I see no objection to it. If we had many elections by acclamation, there might be a great deal of expense in appointing returning officers who would have no duties. I think in only one case in the last election was there an acclamation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Two.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I see no objection to this, and it has been requested to meet the difficulty in some of the larger constituencies that are harder to reach. I would move that as a new section to be section 5 of the reprinted bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the minister moving all of these or is he going to move them individually?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Individually. The other one that is suggested by the chief electoral officer is to correct a mistake in the French translation of the statute. In the present act the term "deputy returning officer" is used in one section where it should be "returning officer" and it is proposed to introduce a new section that:

> The French version of paragraph (f) of subsection 1 of section 30 of the said act is amended by striking out the words "le sous-officier rapporteur" in the fifth line and substituting therefor the words "l'officier rapporteur."

I would like to add that and I will move that it be added as section 6 of the reprinted bill.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Now we can return to section 1 of the reprinted bill.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—When writ for by-elections after date of dissolution deemed to be superseded.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This section has been framed with a view to avoiding the necessity of having by-elections at all. I should like to draw attention at this moment to the constituencies in which there are vacancies and to the length of time they have been unrepresented in this house. Far be it from me to say anything unpleasant at this hour of the night and at this late day in the session, but in view of the new deal and reform legislation that we have had, it is important that we should appreciate the extent to which a large section of Canada has been unrepresented during this whole session. These by-elections cannot now be held under any conditions. There was a vacancy in Halifax on September 1 of last year; another in Long Lake on September 28 of last year; another in St. Denis, Quebec, on October 1 of last year; another in Algoma East on January 1 of this year; another in St. John-Albert on February 5 of this year; another in Montmagny, Quebec, on March 5 of this year, and another in Simcoe East on May 16 of this year—seven vacancies; seven constituencies without representation during the greater part of this session.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Seven deadly sins.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And in the case of six I think the Speaker has issued his writ for by-elections to be held on August 19. Parliament dissolves by efflux of time on August 18, a Sunday, and the following Monday has been fixed for these by-elections. The present section is to obviate the necessity of holding these by-elections, and it is left in the discretion of the chief electoral officer to declare that it is not likely that these by-elections could be held before a dissolution. Personally I do not like the idea of giving to an officer of the house the decision as to whether or not a by-election is to be held. The house itself ought to keep control of all matters which pertain to representation. The section, I think, might have been worded a little differently, for example somewhat as follows, to achieve the end in view and still keep control in the hands of the house:

> Notwithstanding anything in this or any other act, if a writ of election has been issued for a by-election to be held on a date subsequent to the dissolution of parliament as provided by section 50 of the British North America Act, then such writ shall, upon notice to that effect being published in the Canada Gazette by the chief electoral officer, be deemed to have been superseded and withdrawn.

I do not think the House of Commons should part with the control over its own representation even to meet this disagreeable emergency in which the government finds itself. I make that suggestion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move the amendment suggested by my right hon. friend:

> That the words "likely to be" in line 15 and the words "in the opinion of the chief electoral officer" in lines 15 and 16 be struck out, and that after the word "parliament" in line 16 the following words be inserted, "as provided by section 50 of the British North America Act."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—Form 20 amended.

Mr. McPHEE: This appears to be a very drastic affidavit. Take the last section, No. 5:

> That the signature which I have made to this deposition is in my usual handwriting, and is my true name.

That means that a man who is unable to write would be refused the right to take the oath.

Mr. BENNETT: His mark is his signature. There are decisions of the courts for that. It does not say "written" but "the signature which I have made." That is to cover the question of the mark. The mark is his signature.

Mr. McPHEE: Could it not be clarified? I can quite understand that some deputy returning officer might frighten a proposed deponent.

Mr. FACTOR: Under the provisions of the act an illiterate person may take an open ballot. He does not have to mark the ballot; the returning officer marks it for him. If he is compelled even to make a mark there may be some difficulty in registering his vote.

Mr. POULIOT: There is the same thing about the blind. But very few will be blind about the next election.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Add the words "or mark" after the word "signature."

Mr. BENNETT: You could not say it is his usual handwriting.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is this the only case where a written affidavit is required? Usually when a voter is challenged he takes the oath but does not sign anything.

Mr. BENNETT: It is to prevent the fraud that arises by reason of that. There is no sanction to it at all. Impersonators have taken the affidavit by hundreds.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If many electors are challenged in that way and they have to make written affidavits, I am afraid a number of electors will not be able to register their vote because of lack of time. It often happens, it did in my own constituency in the last election, that in the afternoon people are waiting to vote, and there were many challenged votes and we were afraid that a number would not have time to vote. If this is taken advantage of by some representatives of candidates and every voter is required to have an affidavit prepared and sign it, or affix his mark if he is not able to sign, I am afraid there will be a blockade at the door of certain polls. I do not think this has been sufficiently considered.

Mr. POULIOT: Not only that; the distribution of polls has been most absurd. In my constituency there are polls with fifty voters and others with four hundred. If the deputy returning officer takes advantage of that clause to impose an oath on every voter it will be impossible for all on the list to vote. Elections might be stolen with that provision. I strongly protest against it; it should be drafted differently. It has been in the oven long enough to be drafted properly.

Mr. FACTOR: Section 38 of the election act provides that if a man's name is on the voters' list he is entitled to vote. I quite agree that if there is impersonation it ought to be checked, but the proper way would be to administer the oath in the most expeditious way possible. Having this long form, and the returning officer having to have it signed by the elector, will clog up the polling booths and deprive a great number of voters of the right to vote. This is a long form; it will have to be read over—

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is the same form; it will have to be read anyway—the only thing that will take time is the signing of the name. The returning officer has to sign under the present law. There are only three hundred voters on the list for any polling subdivision.

Mr. FACTOR: But the former oath was much shorter; there was nothing about its being in the usual handwriting.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is the same oath except that last line:

> That the signature which I have made to this deposition is in my usual handwriting, and is my true name.

Mr. FACTOR: Is clause 4, about the occupation, in the present oath?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was this particular form in the bill that was presented to the house a year ago?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My recollection is that there was some similar form, if not this one, and that strong exception was taken, particularly by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), on the ground taken this evening, that it might lead to polls becoming jammed on account of the length of time it would take to sign these forms.

Mr. GRAY: As the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor) has pointed out, under the Dominion Elections Act if a man's name is on the list he is entitled to vote. Here again, under section 3 we compel him to say that he is ordinarily a resident and to repeat all the qualifications which were required when he was placed on the list by the registrar. It seems to me that there are many superfluous sections in this affidavit, and I believe it might well be reconsidered.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us read the present oath, which appears as form No. 20 of the act of last year:

> You swear that you verily believe that you are the person intended to be referred to by the entry in the list of voters for this polling division of the name of ..... > whose occupation is given as .....
> and whose address is given as .....
> So help you God.

The blanks have to be filled in.

Mr. GRAY: I say that is all that is necessary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The suggested form shows a residential qualification and complies in that respect with the section—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): With what is already proved to the registrar.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —with the section of the Franchise Act applicable to the case, namely, that the person was on the list of voters on May 15, the date mentioned in the Franchise Act. That is the reason the date has been included here.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): One is an oath administered and the other is an affidavit made. There is quite a difference.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is for the purpose of identification and to reduce the number of fraudulent votes polled at elections. The purpose is so far as possible to stop impersonation.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Last year's form is much better than this one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, because it is an open oath. A man took it, voted and went away and there was nothing to identify him. Now we have his signature. It has been found that if it were desired to prosecute it was difficult to make an identification. Here we have a document upon which he may be prosecuted.

Mr. GRAY: Surely it must have been noted at the time the man voted that he was sworn?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a note made by the returning officer, yes.

Mr. FACTOR: Section 38 of the Dominion Elections Act provides that once a man is on the basic voters' list as revised he is entitled to vote. This affidavit would put him through another test, just as though he were going through another enumeration.

Mr. HACKETT: Merely to identify him with the name on the list.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It simply will not work. It is a discrimination against people unfortunate enough to be illiterate.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. POULIOT: Why not ask the elector to sign his name on the ballot? That would be just as good.

Mr. FACTOR: I repeat that this suggested change is in contravention of section 38 of the Dominion Elections Act, which provides that once a man's name is on the voters' list he is entitled to vote, provided he is not impersonated. Here the suggestion is made again to put him through the test which he was put through either by the enumerator in connection with the preparation of the basic list or by the revising officer when the revision took place. He has already taken a certificate or oath that he has been in a certain electoral district. On the day of election we would be putting him through the same test, so far as sections 2 and 3 of the bill are concerned. I say such procedure would be in contravention of section 38. If we wish to guard against impersonations, all right, but not in this form.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am strongly in favour of this—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Of course.

Mr. MacNICOL: —new form 20.

Mr. POULIOT: Then it must be wrong.

Mr. MacNICOL: It might be wrong if you said it. The revision which has been taking place since May 15 convinces me that such a form should be available, and I believe it would not be used as certain hon. members of the opposition have attempted to indicate. There will be people appearing at the polls in the coming election who will not be entitled to vote for this reason: In enumeration which has taken place in constituencies with which I am familiar the work was done by enumerators sent out by candidates or members. When these enumerators called to ascertain whether there were new names to be put on the lists in many instances they would find that the people were not at home and, under such circumstances, would leave a form. At a later date they would call back and get the forms. I believe there will be occasions when it will be necessary to ask a man if he is a British subject, and, if it is believed that he is not, to ask him to swear to it. I know of polling subdivisions where as many as 105 changes have been made from the list prepared last October. Information which has come to me indicates that several of the people whose names have been added to the lists are not twenty-one years of age. I was told of a young lady—I shall not give her name, because it would not be my business to challenge her vote—who was only nineteen years of age and, contrary to advice, it is said her name was placed on the list. Undoubtedly there will be many cases like that, and I suggest the amended form would provide against this difficulty because the person must state, if sworn, he or she is of the full age of twenty-one years. I can see nothing wrong with that. Then he or she must swear to being a British subject, and I believe people have been put on the list recently who may not be British subjects.

Mr. FACTOR: There is no objection to paragraph 1.

Mr. MacNICOL: And I can see no objection to clause 2. I believe it is quite necessary because I have been told by enumerators in Toronto—I do not know if the same condition exists elsewhere—that those who gave their names were not always asked if they had lived in the constituency three months or in Canada one year. If it is known that a voter has not been in a constituency in which he attempts to vote for a period of three months—

Mr. GRAY: All that should have been done at the revision.

Mr. MacNICOL: But in the present revision the enumerators named either by candidates or members may not have ascertained that.

Mr. GRAY: There has been a revision since the list was established.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes, I know. I am trying to point out that ordinarily it is supposed that the registrar of electors has been making all the revisions. It is true that in my constituency the registrar sat at three different places and my information is that approximately 200 or more names were enrolled at those three offices at which the registrar of electors held his revision. While he did his job efficiently, there have been between three and four thousand other names added in my riding, which goes to show that over three thousand names were added by the enumerators appointed by the candidates or by the member. I am convinced that this is a very necessary form, and I cannot see any objection to it. I cannot see where it would do any harm. It would stop those who have not the right to vote.

Mr. GRAY: Mr. Chairman, may I call attention to the fact that it is now nearly a quarter past eleven o'clock? I think the Minister of Justice would be well advised to consider the representations that have been made from this side of the house.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I will consider them, but I think there is a great deal of force in what has been said on this side. These lists are prepared in the cities particularly by enumerators, and there are a lot of names on the lists of people who are not British subjects and are not twenty-one years of age. The first clause is very essential in the oath; that is the one that I think is most important. However, I will consider it between now and to-morrow morning.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is more to the requiring of a signature that I object than to the sections 1, 2, 3 and 4, because it will have the effect of jamming the polls.

Mr. BENNETT: Only three hundred under the new act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are some people who do not like to be sworn in when they come to register their vote. We have even thought of compulsory voting in this country, so I do not think we should put such obstacles and difficulties in the way of people who are bashful and do not like to have their vote challenged or to have to sign their names, especially illiterate people. I do not think it is right. I do not see what you can accomplish by it, because the man who goes there with fraudulent intent will not hesitate to sign if he is asked to sign. It is the honest people you are going to prevent from voting.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

It being fifteen minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, July 5, 1935

The house met at eleven o'clock.

B. C. RELIEF CAMP STRIKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence or to the Prime Minister—I am sorry I was not able to give notice of it—in response to telegrams that I have received this morning with respect to the movement of the men at Regina back to British Columbia. The question is this: Is the government prepared to cooperate with the government of the province of British Columbia to ensure that only those properly domiciled in British Columbia will be returned to that province? Also, will the Minister of National Defence take steps to see that those who were properly in the camps will not be returned to the city of Vancouver?

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Minister of National Defence): I shall be very ready to take into consideration the request of the hon. member. It is a little difficult at the present moment to make any definite reply because the movement of these men to whom the hon. member refers is at present being carried out by the premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I want to make it very definite that there is no objection to returning to British Columbia those who are properly domiciled in that province, but we know very well that not twenty-five per cent of those in the camps and properly domiciled in the province of British Columbia belong to the active strikers.

Mr. STIRLING: Yes, I think I fully realize that point.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday this house passed a bill approving a treaty between Poland and Canada which had the effect of reducing duties on some of the commodities of each of these countries. May I ask the Prime Minister whether further progress has been made towards effecting such an arrangement with the United States, an arrangement that will have the effect of reducing the duties, on each side, on certain commodities, something that is greatly to be desired?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said the other day. If any finality had been reached I would have advised the house, but no final conclusion has been reached with respect to any of the terms that would enable me to make a statement to the house.

BORSTAL SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, some little time ago my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) asked me if any statement would be made in the house in regard to the establishment of the Borstal system in the penitentiaries of the Dominion of Canada. I have now obtained what is called an interim report on the subject from the superintendent of penitentiaries together with a number of appendices, some five or six, which if the house will permit me I would like to put on Hansard for the benefit of the members.

The superintendent of the penitentiaries visited Great Britain and returned about the first of June. During his visit there he carefully examined many of the leading Borstal institutions. Those particularly noted in the report are the ones at Wormwood Scrubs, Wandsworth, Feltham, Portland, Rochester, Lowdham Grange. Those are the leading Borstal institutions in England at the present time.

In his interim report the superintendent sets out in a good deal of detail his observations, and I would particularly draw to the attention of the house the statement contained in appendix "B" which sets out the youthful population in Canadian penitentiaries as of the seventeenth day of June last. In Kingston penitentiary there are 42 under the age of 21 years; in St. Vincent de Paul, 92; in Dorchester penitentiary, 46; in Manitoba penitentiary, 33; in British Columbia penitentiary, 19; in Saskatchewan penitentiary, 22; in Collin's Bay penitentiary, 12. Of course the house is aware that by far the larger portion of youthful offenders in Canada are not in the federal institutions but are in provincial reformatories, prisons, gaols, homes and various other provincial institutions.

The superintendent reports that the Borstal system may be introduced into Canadian penitentiaries within the next sixty days. There will be no legislation necessary to achieve this end. The Penitentiary Act is already broad enough to provide for it. There is sufficient in the penitentiary vote to cover all the expenses of instituting that system in the Canadian penitentiaries. Some additional staff will be required as is set out in the report and it will be necessary to construct some additional buildings but in the opinion of the superintendent this system can be made applicable to the Canadian penitentiaries within sixty days and be based almost precisely upon the system now in effect in Great Britain. In Great Britain the prison population is under a single government, the prison commission. They do not have provincial institutions to deal with such as we have. There are many different prisons and the report gives a fairly good idea of what is accomplished in this respect in the leading Borstal institutions in Great Britain. The government is prepared to adopt the Borstal system in Canadian penitentiaries for the youthful prisoners. I ask leave of the house to have this report placed on Hansard for the use of hon. members. The report reads:

Memorandum to the Deputy Minister of Justice

Re: Interim report on the Borstal system of England.

Re: Convicts under twenty-one years of age in Canadian penitentiaries.

1. By direction, the undersigned proceeded to England for the purpose of making an exhaustive study of the Borstal system, with a view to advising the government as to how best it could be tried out in Canada, arriving in England on Sunday, April 30, 1935, and embarking for Canada on Saturday, May 25, 1935.

2. The undersigned reported to the home office on Monday, May 1st, and here begs to express his deep appreciation of the courtesies extended to him by the Home Secretary, the chairman of the prison commission, the prison commissioners, and the governors and officers of Borstal institutions and prisons.

3. Commissioner A. Paterson, M.C., devoted some time to the undersigned, and apparently came to the conclusion that the undersigned had a sufficiently wide knowledge of the Borstal system that a program might be immediately arranged for visits to Borstal institutions, with a view to making an exhaustive study of the management and training of the young prisoners who are the inmates of Borstal institutions.

4. The program arranged carried the undersigned through all stages, from the institution of reception to the institution where the greatest amount of liberty is permitted to the Borstal inmate, and included the following institutions:

Wormwood Scrubs (Reception and classification centre);

Wandsworth (Institution for least hopeful cases: disciplinary institution);

Feltham (Institution for treatment of apparent defectives, mental and physical);

Portland (Institution for the training of amenable but more sophisticated "lads.");

Rochester (Institution for amenable, less sophisticated lads);

Lowdham Grange (Open prison system for training of hopeful cases transferred from other Borstal institutions).

5. "Borstal training is a combination of mental, moral, physical and industrial training of a strenuous kind. It is not a fixed system, but like other progressive systems, is in a state of flux." Vide The Modern English Prison, page 181.

6. The undersigned is of the opinion that similar training and treatment can be put into effect for convicts under twenty-one years of age in Canadian penitentiaries, and recommends same (see appendix "A").

7. It is further recommended:

(a) That for the putting into effect of the training and treatment hereinbefore mentioned, all convicts under twenty-one years of age should be segregated into one building, or segregateable part of an existing building, in each penitentiary.

(b) That the classification board of each penitentiary, with the augmentations hereinafter referred to, would proced to select the youthful convicts who would be amenable to, and would benefit by, the type of training hereinbefore referred to (see appendix "B").

8. It is also recommended that each penitentiary staff should be augmented by the appointment of one specially selected person for each thirty youthful convicts confined in each penitentiary, with a minimum of two such persons in any one penitentiary. Persons so appointed might be called supervisors and assistant supervisors of youthful convicts, and would have duties corresponding to housemasters and assistant housemasters in Borstal institutions, i.e., the supervision, management, treatment and training of youthful convicts outside of working hours. Such persons would be in addition to, and distinct from, custodial officers (see appendix "C").

9. It is respectfully submitted that accommodation is either available, or can be made available in a comparatively short time, in each penitentiary, for the segregation of youthful convicts, each penitentiary being considered an institution of reception and classification, similar to Wormwood Scrubs in England (see appendix "D").

10. When discharged from a Borstal institution, an inmate is on licence to the Borstal Association for the unexpired portion of his sentence, and a further year in addition. The prison commission of England states that "The Borstal Association represents one-half of the Borstal system." The Borstal Association is a private body, and is made up of interested persons who are acceptable to the Home Office, there being approximately one member of the association for each lad actually on licence.

11. If such an organization were brought into being in Canada, the membership would be limited to those persons who would agree to act as the adviser and confidant of a youthful convict during the portion of his sentence that he was under conditional release (see appendix "E").

12. It is respectfully submitted that the aforementioned treatment, training, classification and aid after release from an institution could be brought into effect without any amendment to presently existing legislation, or any augmentation of the penitentiary vote for the year 1935-36.

13. It is respectfully submitted that whereas the treatment of youthful convicts in England, as now carried out under the Borstal system, was definitely considered in 1894, and whereas the Borstal Act was not passed until 1908, and that whereas innumerable changes were made in the Borstal system between 1914 and 1919, and that still more drastic changes were made between 1921 and 1935, the inauguration of this type of treatment and training should not be unduly rushed in Canada, but should be developed step by step, only as rapidly as the staffs and youthful convicts can absorb well-thought-out changes. Insufficiently considered, or too rapidly brought about, changes, might work to the lasting detriment of the objects intended to be obtained.

14. It is respectfully submitted that, in view of the experimental work carried out in England and the information so generously made available to Canada, that good results may be obtained and a scheme be put into well running condition in the number of years equivalent to the number of decades that the matter has been under consideration, experimentation and operation in England.

Respectfully submitted.

D. M. Ormond,
Superintendent.

Appendix "A"

Outline of Proposed Training for Youthful Convicts in Penitentiaries

1. Broadly speaking, the great majority of youthful convicts find themselves in Penitentiaries due to a weakness of inhibition arising from a lack of early training at home, which has not been fully assisted by the church, the school, and social organizations interested in the welfare of youths. The majority of these youths have been guilty of crimes of acquisitiveness:—theft, burglary, housebreaking, and embezzlement. Less than one-quarter of them have been guilty of crimes of passion, i.e., sexual offences, indecencies, assaults, and crimes of violence.

2. Largely on account of the reasons abovementioned, and the acquisitivness of their natures, these youths have displayed an utter disregard for the rights of property. It is therefore the duty of the penitentiary service to as far as possible correct existing conditions.

3. In a large number of cases, these youths have been guilty of offences, and have been released on suspended sentence; a repetition of the offence, or a new offence, has caused them to serve terms in industrial schools, reformatories or jails, and the courts have finally decided that a long term of confinement in a penitentiary is necessary. There are youths, however, whose first known offences are of so heinous a character that the public sense of decency demands that they be confined over a considerable period, the courts deeming it inadvisable to commit them for a short term of imprisonment, believing that a long period is required for an all-round programme of training.

4. It is the duty of the penitentiary to make an assay of the youth, in an effort to discover his possibilities and to develop them as far as the limitations of an institution will allow. It is platitudinous to state that reformation must begin with the youth himself. The institution can only provide him with the opportunities and assistance in bringing about a change of outlook and a better standard of morals and ethics.

5. The management of youthful convicts is an interesting and fascinating duty, but should only be attempted by optimistic persons who are not discouraged by failing to obtain the results aimed at. The training of youthful convicts is of necessity based on the belief that there is a very large amount of what is known as "good" in each youth, and that if the proper chords are touched, that favourable reactions will follow. The supervisors of youths require a genius for understanding and exceptional gifts of leadership.

6. The following excerpts are taken from "The Principles of the Borstal System," published by the prison commission. Home Office, 1932:

" . . . The task is not to break or knead him into shape, but to stimulate some power within to regulate conduct aright, to insinuate a preference for the good and the clean, to make him want to use his life well, so that he himself and not others will save him from waste. It becomes necessary to study the individual lad, to discover his trend and his possibility, and to infect him with some idea of life which will germinate and produce a character, controlling desire, and shaping conduct to some more glorious end than mere satisfaction or acquisition.

A Borstal institution is not an end in itself, but a laborious means to the reformation of offenders between the ages of sixteen and twenty one. The training necessary for a change at that age cannot be completely effected during the two or three years spent within the walls. The lad leaves his institution robust in figure and of confident mien, sometimes a shade too confident, but no one knows whether he is reformed, for no man may call himself a swimmer until his feet are off the ground."

7. The following excerpt is taken from "The Modern English Prison," page 185:

"The routing of the institution is that of an active day of 15 hours, beginning with physical training, continuing with eight hours work in workshop or outdoor party, and ending with 1½ or 2 hours of school or study. To place first things first, the work a lad does during his training falls into three stages. First with the cleaners, doing the necessary domestic work: then, while awaiting a vacancy in the trade party to which he has been allotted, he may have a spell of heavy outdoor work with a labouring party, which is good both for his character and his physique. Finally, he passes into a trade party. In the workshops good class work in carpentry and metal work is carried out with power machinery, and employment is also found at tailoring, shoemaking, cooking (especially training for sea cooks), gardening, farming (some institutions have farms of considerable size, all have some land and stock), various adjuncts of the building trades, and other minor trades. . ."

8. The foregoing is in effect in penitentiaries, with the exception of the study period at the end of the day abovementioned. The appointment of supervising officers will meet this requirement, for these officers would be principally employed in work with the youths from the closing of the shop in the afternoon up to 8.45 in the evening.

9. Equipment for study and gymnasia training can readily be arranged in the corridors of those places segregated for the confinement of youthful convicts.

10. A widely varied syllabus of education presently exists, which provides elementary education for the exceptionally backward and correspondence courses for the more advanced, and can readily be adapted to include branches of education not presently touched.

11. The separate training of youthful convicts should include at least one hour per day of physical training, in addition to volunteer evening classes in gymnastics, the intention being not only to improve physical fitness, but to teach the correlation of mind and body. The physical side might be developed to include certain recreational activities, either as a part of, or in addition to, the regular physical training.

Appendix "B"

Segregation and Classification

1. All youthful convicts in penitentiaries at the present time are in either of the following classifications:

(A) Convicts having no previous conviction, under twenty-one years of age;

(C) The large intermediate class, having had experience in reformatories, gaols or penitentiaries.

2. It is submitted that all youthful convicts should be segregated into one building, or a segregateable part of the building, in each penitentiary, for the purposes of observation and re-classification, so that selection may be made of those for whom it is considered treatment as youthful convicts would have beneficial results.

3. On June 17, 1935, there were 266 youthful convicts in Canadian penitentiaries, confined as follows:

Kingston penitentiary	42
St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary	92
Dorchester penitentiary	46
Manitoba penitentiary	33
British Columbia penitentiary	19
Saskatchewan penitentiary	22
Collin's Bay penitentiary	12

4. It is submitted that instructions should be sent to each warden, outlining the steps to be taken for the classification or re-classification of each youthful convict. The first classification would be carried out by the existing classification board, which would be augmented at the earliest possible time by the officers referred to in appendix "C," but no delay in the elementary classification need be caused by a delay in filling the new positions recommended.

5. Suitable questionnaires can be sent out to the parents or nearest relatives of the youth, to the church, school, and convicting magistrate or judge, and to any other person whom it is considered would be in a position to supply useful information. This is the normal method of commencing case-work for institutions and welfare bodies.

6. In those cases in which the classification board considered that special examinations would be required, in order to classify the youth, such special examinations could be carried out by physicians, surgeons, or psychiatrists, according to the requirements of the case.

7. After all available information has been procured concerning each youth, decision would be made as to whether or not he would continue with the "youthful convict" group, or be returned to "A" or "C" classification.

8. In anticipation of the developments presently under consideration, the Laval buildings at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, and Collin's Bay penitentiary, were commenced, and construction is being pressed forward.

9. The Laval buildings at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary will provide employment for youthful convicts for some years to come. Within the next twelve months, the work at Collin's Bay penitentiary will be sufficiently far advanced to utilize it entirely for the segregation of youthful convicts from Ontario, and, if necessary, the maritime provinces.

10. As an indication of the lines which may be followed in making the classification, the following is quoted from "The Principles of the Borstal System," published by the prison commission, Home Office, 1932, chapter IV:

"It may be maintained that, as no two lads are the same, only a policy of separate confinement can provide a perfect system of classification. This reductio ad absurdum shall not, however, deter us from proceeding with as sensible a scheme as we can devise. The first purpose of classification is positive, and consists in putting a lad in such a milieu as is likely to draw out what is best in him. Ideally, therefore, each Borstal lad should be drafted to a group of honest and intelligent lads, to whose level he would wish to aspire. This by the nature of things, is impossible; there are too many rogues and not enough honest lads. For this reason the courts rightly hesitate before committing a first offender to a Borstal institution. But it is possible within rather narrow limits, in assigning a lad to an institution or a house or group, to put him in a place where there is someone or something that will stimulate the better side of him. The second purpose of classification, and it should always be kept in the second place, is the avoidance of contamination. One evil spirit can poison the tone of a whole house, and every Borstal officer is keen to watch the effect of one lad upon the others. A clique may form whose influence on each member is undoubtedly evil. Such a clique will be scatered among different houses or institutions. Transfer and reclassification are ready to our hand to prevent corruption, and should be employed without hesitation where the reasonable prospect of a risk has been established by those who have observed. The community must be protected even at the cost of disturbance to the individual.

The advantages attaching to the system of progresive grades which has grown up have already been outlined. The history, however, of every such system points to certain dangers against which we must guard. As time passes, each grade tends to be more easily attained, each privilege more easily won, till what was once a concession is acclaimed as a right, and the lad who is really remaining stationary is found to be proceeding automatically from the bottom to the top. Steps must repeatedly be taken to ensure the difficulty of ascent, so that the minimum of promotion may reward a maximum of effort. This can be done by emphasizing the responsibilities rather than the privileges associated with each grade, and by a merciless reduction when these responsibilities are not fulfilled. Each grade carries a lad a little further towards freedom. He is practising his wings, developing his power of choice between right and wrong. This is a more difficult life than that of confinement and repression. He must show that he justifies the trust and is indeed growing more fit for freedom. If he fails, he must return to the lower order where it is easy to be good, and wait a little while before taking a step forward again towards liberty. Further, we must scrutinize very closely the claim of the lad for promotion. Let it not come to him. Lay rather the onus on him to show that he has stretched himself to reach it.

Promotion there must be, leaders must be chosen. These are necessary and indeed valuable factors in the system. It is, however, necessary to guard lest a little authority may overbalance a lad, and he may be so convinced of his own importance as to lose proportion, and think that on discharge he will still be a leader, wearing badges of distinction known to all. This is a grave disservice to the lad, for never does he need humility so much as when he leaves the institution and re-enters a world whose only memory of him is adverse. Let, therefore, promotion bring responsibility and balance, steadying the lad and not inflating him, teaching him to be free and self-reliant, but not to be cocksure."

Appendix "C"

Augmentation of Penitentiary Staffs

1. In the English prison service, as in the Canadian penitentiary service, the staff consists of superior and subordinate officers. In England the superior officers are appointed by the secretary of state; in Canada, these officers are appointed by the governor in council. In England the subordinate officers are appointed by the prison commissioners; in Canada they are appointed by the superintendent of penitentiaries, in consultation with the inspectors, after having received recommendations from the wardens of pentientiaries.

2. It is submitted that the introduction of separate training for youthful convicts would require the creation of new positions in the penitentiary service, the duties of which would be similar to those performed by housemasters and assistant housemasters in the Borstal institutions of the prison service of England.

3. It is submitted that, if authorized, the new positions might be called, "supervisor" and "assistant supervisor" until such time as a shorter or more appropriate descriptive name for each position is decided upon.

4. It is submitted that these positions should be graded as coming within the classification of superior officers, the appointment to the position of supervisor being made by the governor in council, and the appointment to the position of assistant supervisor to be made by the superintendent of penitentiaries, after consultation with persons outside of the penitentiary service. It is considered that the position of supervisor should be filled by promotion from assistant supervisor.

5. The duties of supervising officers, would be entirely in connection with the management, training and treatment of youthful convicts, particularly during the periods outside of hours set aside for labour, (see appendix "A").

6. A study of staff requirements indicates that there should be one supervising officer for each 30, or part of 30, youthful convicts, and that not less than two of these officers should be employed in each institution, even when there are less than thirty youthful convicts confined in the institution.

7. The persons selected to fill the supervisory positions require to be men of good character, good education, even temperament, optimistic nature, posessed of good common sense, untiring patience, athletic, and having a wide experience in dealing with men. The hours of duty would be long, broken, and making heavy demands on the physical and mental capacities of the supervisory officers.

8. The rate of pay for these positions may be left for the present, but it is considered that it should be approximately that of chief trade instructor for a supervisor, and that of chief keeper for an asistant supervisor.

9. In the initial stages, the subordinate officers, including trade instructors, doing duty with the youthful convicts, could be specially selected from existing staffs, and would be given a special course of training before being assigned to these duties.

10. The matter of the creation of the positions of matrons would come up for consideration after the separate training had been inaugurated and further experience had been gained.

11. If the positions of supervisors should be decided upon, it would be necessary to assemble the officers appointed at some central point for a period of intensive training.

Appendix "D"

Buildings and Accommodation

1. "The principles of the Borstal system," published by the prison commission, home office, 1932, commencing at the bottom of page 20, reads as follows:

[Mr. Guthrie.]

"The Borstal system has no merit apart from the Borstal staff. It is men and not buildings who will change the hearts and ways of misguided lads. Better an institution that consists of two log huts in swamp or desert, with a staff devoted to their task, than a model block of buildings, equipped without thought of economy, whose staff is solely concerned with thoughts of pay and promotion. The foundations of the Borstal system are first the recruitment of the right men, then their proper training, and finally their full cooperation with one another in an atmosphere of freedom and mutual understanding."

2. The prison commission of England strongly believes in the foregoing, and has adhered to the policy throughout the developments of the Borstal system in England.

3. It was not until the year 1930 that the experiment at Lowdham Grange was commenced, this being the first and only Borstal institution not surrounded by a high boundary wall.

4. Lowdham Grange houses only the selected lads, who are considered to be the most hopeful cases, for whom the full period of training will probably not prove necessary (vide "The Modern English Prison," page 180).

5. In Wormwood Scrubs, the Borstal lads are confined within the same boundary wall, but in a separate building from short term prisoners and prisoners held on remand.

6. The Borstal buildings form a part of Wandsworth prison. Feltham is an old reformatory building converted to use as a Borstal institution. Rochester and Portland were both convict prisons.

7. When making observations on the question of walls, bars on the windows, and other security measures, the undersigned was reminded that the great public schools of England are enclosed within high walls, with broken glass on the top, and that the windows are barred, these precautions being considered reasonable and necessary to assist in the management of the high-spirited and youthful students, and that there does not appear to be any reason why similar arrangements should not be made when controlling youths who have been proven to be delinquent.

Kingston Penitentiary

8. On this date there are 42 convicts in Kingston penitentiary under twenty-one years of age. These could very aceptably be accommodated in the old prison for women, presently utilized for the confinement of selected convicts who are receiving special treatment.

9. Presently before the department is a recommendation to segregate "C" corridor of Kingston penitentiary for the purpose of housing the most unsatisfactory type of convict in that institution. If that is put into effect, it would leave available the east cell block, which might be used for the treatment and segregation of specially selected convicts over twenty-one years of age, or, in the alternative, it might be utilized for the segregation and treatment of youthful convicts.

10. By putting up a brick wall, in the yard a subdivision could readily be arranged in which youthful convicts could carry out their exercises out of view of the other convicts.

11. These youthful convicts could be employed in separate shops, or parts of shops partitioned off from the adult convicts, arrangements being made to pass them to and from work at different hours from those of the older convicts.

St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary

12. In St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary there is existing a cell block containing 104 cells, in which the 92 youthful convicts in that institution could presently be segregated for classification and study purposes. Arrangements to proceed to and from work in shops or gangs could be made in a manner simliar to that recommended for Kingston penitentiary.

Dorchester penitentiary

13. There are 46 convicts under twenty-one years of age in Dorchester penitentiary. One corridor of the north wing could be readily segregated for the confinement of youthful convicts. It would only require the opening of a door from this corridor into the prison yard, and the erection of a short wall, to make a self-contained exercise-ground for the youthful convicts.

Manitoba penitentiary

14. There are presently 33 convicts under twenty-one years of age in Manitoba penitentiary. The south side of the east wing could be immediately put aside for the accommodation of youthful convicts. The rearrangement of the penitentiary yard to provide separate exercise-grounds for convicts is presently under consideration. One of the segregation areas could be specially retained for the exercise of youthful convicts.

British Columbia penitentiary

15. On this date there are 19 youthful convicts in British Columbia penitentiary. The north side of the east wing in this penitentiary could be set aside for the accommodation of youthful convicts, and one of the large lawns could be set aside for exercise-grounds. Arrangements could be made to have work carried out to meet the situation.

Saskatchewan penitentiary

16. There are on this date 22 convicts in Saskatchewan penitentiary under twenty-one years of age. The north side of the east wing of this penitentiary could be segregated for the confinement of youthful convicts, with a large exercise-ground immediately adjacent thereto, which would be out of sight and out of hearing of other convicts.

Collin's Bay penitentiary

17. This institution should eventually take all youthful convicts received in Ontario, but until such time as the construction of the cell blocks and the wall is further advanced, it is not considered that youthful convicts should be transferred to this institution. At the present moment there are only 12 convicts under the age of twenty-one years in Collin's Bay penitentiary. Any of these convicts having more than three months to serve might be transferred back to Kingston penitentiary until the dates of their release.

18. The undersigned fully realizes that certain person interesting themselves in the introduction of the Borstal system into Canadian penitentiaries will publicly express strong protests against such steps being taken or considered, and will advocate the immediate purchase of new lands and the immediate erection of new buildings by contract. Such protests and recommendations could be considered, but in any event, it would be twelve to eighteen months before land could be purchased and buildings erected, whereas the scheme of segregation outlined above can be put into effect within sixty days of the receipt of instructions to do so, and would in any event be necessary during the period of classification of youthful convicts and the selection of those whom it was considered would receive benefit from the type of treatment recommended.

Appendix "E"

Re: Conditional Release and Aid after Discharge.

Re: Borstal Association.

1. The Borstal Association is a semi-official body, acting under the presidency of the home secretary and an executive committee, with central office in London, and approximately one associate for each lad released from a Borstal institution, the associate acting as adviser, confidant, big brother, and friend to the lad during the continuance of the licence under which he is released.

2. The parents of a lad, or a friend, acceptable to the home secretary, may be, or act as, the associate for the lad, but in those cases in which the home surroundings are unsatisfactory, or the lad has no relatives, an associate is found for him.

3. When an associate is selected, he is called upon to interest himself in the lad, and to give him advise, and also "to act in two capacities, the reconciliation of which requires a good deal of tact—first as friend and adviser, then as "policeman": and even the first of these needs boundless sympathy and understanding, for firmness must be combined with persistent patience if the feet of a wayward youth, too apt to throw up an uncongenial job or resent the hard word of a foreman, are to be kept firmly along the narrow path of hard work and right living."

4. During the period which a lad is on licence, he is required to keep in close touch with the associate to whom he is attached, changing neither work nor residence without his consent. The lad looks to his associate for help in finding employment, and for a wise means of spending leisure, and in turn receives encouragement and a bracing word when good resolutions begin to wane.

5. The associate reports to the association at least once a month on the progress of the lad. Should there be definite signs of a relapse, an effort is made to direct the lad in the right path, but should this fail, the associate immediately reports to the prison commissioners, who cause the lad's licence to be revoked and he is taken to a special block at Wandsworth prison for further training and treatment.

6. At Wandsworth, the conditions are substantially those of prison life. The purpose is not to give further Borstal training, but to make it clear to the lad that he has been a fool and the way of the transgressor is hard, and also to allow the authorities to find out why the lad failed.

7. When the authorities "have made up their minds about a lad they fix the time he is to serve, and in due course he is licensed again. It is not often that a licence is revoked more than once—a lad who persists in going off the rails after revocation is, unless he is young and not evidently hopeless, usually written off as a loss."

8. It is respectfully submitted that no new machinery will be required to bring into being in the penitentiary service arrangements that will be equally as effective as the work carried out by the Borstal association. The close liaison presently existing between the remission branch, the department of justice, and the penitentiary service, permits of a facility of close co-operation. The classification board of each Penitentiary, plus the supervisors, if appointed, will have a complete knowledge and appreciation of the life and conduct of a youth while in the penitentiary.

9. The remission branch has full particulars pertaining to the nature of the crime, and of the environment in which the youth lived prior to his conviction.

10. The penitentiary is presently equipped with a staff and facilities to seek out, investigate, and recommend persons who might be approved as adviser, big brother, or friend, to a discharged youth having no suitable home to return to upon release.

11. Existing legislation and clemency practice permit of the release of a convict on licence. The person undertaking to act as guide, philosopher and friend to a released youth would only be called upon to perform those functions during the period for which the licence is granted.

12. There would be no difficulty in arranging for close co-operation between the remission branch, and the selected persons referred to, either direct or through the warden of a penitentiary.

13. Nothing is here proposed which would in any way affect the authority of the crown, or alter existing clemency practice.

DATE OF GENERAL ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as this may be the last day upon which the present parliament will be in session I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if it would not be possible before we prorogue for him to make a statement to the house or to the country as to the probable date of the general elections. I would not expect my right hon. friend to give the exact date but he might see his way clear to indicate whether the elections will be held in the month of August, in the month of September or in the month of October. I do not think the time will make any difference in the results one way or another but if an approximate time were announced considerable uncertainty would be removed which I think would be of benefit to the country generally.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I were in position to answer the right hon. gentleman's question, I would do so. I will say this: Just as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made for the holding of the elections, they will be held. That is as far as I can reasonably go. I mean by that, the completion of the lists and concerning all matters of that kind. They will not be delayed beyond such date as may be necessary to have the machinery properly functioning under the sections which have been enacted in that regard.

MORTGAGE CREDITS FOR FISHERMEN

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 120, for the purpose of establishing in Canada a system of long-term mortgage credits for fishermen.

He said: There is one amendment made to this bill by the Senate and this is made because in some province the word "land" would not be broad enough to cover buildings erected on the land. It is proposed to add the words "and buildings thereon" at the end of clause (d) of section 6. This will remove any doubt as to this section covering buildings. It will be recalled that when the natural resources agreements were under consideration a similar difficulty arose as to whether water was covered by the word "land." I move that the amendment be read a second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY COMMISSION

CONCURRENCE IN CERTAIN SENATE AMENDMENTS AND NON-CONCURRENCE IN OTHERS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 86, to establish a dominion trade and industry commission.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Senate committee on banking and commerce gave considerable attention to this bill and the result is that several amendments of a far-reaching character have been made. I shall indicate them to the house as carefully as possible. The first amendment is to section 11, page 5 and line 12. Subsection 2 in the bill as it left this house reads:

> Any person violating any provision of this section shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars.

The amendment is to insert the words "guilty of an offence under this act and" after the word "be" and before the word "liable."

The next amendment is to section 14, on the same page at line 29. After the word "public" insert the words "or where such agreements exist and in the opinion of the commission but for their existence wasteful or demoralizing competition would exist in any specific industry."

Mr. YOUNG: What is the significance of the amendment?

Mr. BENNETT: Having agreed to the principle of the acceptance of the agreements, they would be extended to cases in which the result of there being no agreement would be demoralizing and wasteful competition. I think that is one of the matters referred to in the report of the commission.

Mr. YOUNG: If I heard the amendment correctly it would seem to indicate that where an agreement exists they might be permitted to sanction it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the principle which we adopted when we passed section 14. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, perhaps I had better read the first part of the section:

> In any case where the commission, after full investigation under the Combines Investigation Act, is unanimously of opinion that wasteful or demoralizing competition exists in any specific industry, and that agreements between the persons engaged in the industry to modify such competition by controlling and regulating prices or production would not result in injury to or undue restraint of trade or be detrimental to or against the interest of the public or where such agreements exists and in the opinion of the commission but for their existence wasteful or demoralizing competition would exist in any specific industry the commission may so advise the governor in council and recommend that certain agreements be approved.

That is repeating the words which appear in the earlier part of the section so as to carry the effect of the proposal into both matters which are mentioned in the section.

Mr. YOUNG: You not only give them the sanctioning of new combines but you permit them to sanction existing combines.

Mr. BENNETT: There is an investigation under the combines act and they must be satisfied that there is no undue restraint of trade or injury to the public interests or anything detrimental to the public interests. Investigations may be made with respect to existing agreements because the early part of the section provides against wasteful or demoralizing competition. This carries into the fabric of the latter part of the section, the wording of the first part.

Mr. YOUNG: In the eyes of some people all competition in itself is wasteful and demoralizing.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If what my right hon. friend says is correct, would it not be wise to insert the word "unanimous" before the word "opinion" in the amendment?

Mr. BENNETT: I think the right hon. gentleman is right as the early part of the section provides for unanimous opinion with respect to wasteful or demoralizing competition and I am not sure that that is not carried into the proposed amendment. I think the word "unanimous" ought to be inserted between the words "the" and "opinion." With respect to the second amendment on page 5 I move that we disagree with their honours and ask that the word "unanimous" be inserted between the words "the" and "opinion" in the second line of the proposed amendment.

The next amendment is on page 6, line 4. For the words "the relevant sections" there is substituted the words "under sections four hundred and ninety-eight and four hundred and ninety-eight A or any other relevant section.

I think that is satisfactory. Then in section 15 the words:

> The commission shall be charged with responsibility to recommend the prosecution of offences against acts of the parliament of Canada.

That is true; they do not themselves carry on prosecutions. In line 10 they have added the words "the attorney general of Canada" between the word "and" and the word "make," leaving out the words "undertake or carry on." They think that possibly it conflicts with the powers of the provinces. I think these amendments are satisfactory. In section 16 it is proposed to delete the words "or commodities," on the theory that the Interpretation Act covers the point without repeating it in the statute. The letter "s" is struck off the word "grades," making it "grade" in lines 29 and 30. The next amendment is one of importance, adding to subsection (1) of section 19 the words:

> Provided that the commission may by regulation prescribe a list of specific commodities to which, in its opinion, it is impossible to apply this paragraph, and this paragraph shall not apply to any commodity appearing in such list.

That refers to "Canada standard," and inasmuch as it has been pointed out that the words could not apply to every commodity because of difficulties in the actual carrying out of it, the commission, it is considered, should have power to prepare a list to which it does not apply. That, I think, is satisfactory. The next amendment is in section 20, which is far more difficult. There is substituted for section 20 the following:

20. The commission shall receive complaints respecting unfair trade practices and may investigate the same and, after investigation,

(a) If of opinion that the practice complained of constitutes an offence against any dominion law prohibiting unfair trade practices may order and require all persons who are parties or privies to such offence to cease and desist from further continuance of such practices and/or

(b) If of opinion as aforesaid may communicate the complaint, and such evidence, if any, in support thereof as is in the possession of the commission, to the attorney general of Canada with a recommendation that such parties or privies to such offence be prosecuted for violation of the applicable act. The attorney general of Canada, if he concurs in such recommendation, may refer it, with the complaint and evidence, if any, either to the director of public prosecutions or to the attorney general of the province within which the offence is alleged to have been committed, for such action as may seem to be appropriate in the circumstances.

In my opinion there is grave difficulty about that, for this reason. When we were framing the section it seemed clear to us that if the unfair trade practice was a violation of the statute then of course the provisions with respect to prosecution would apply, and that as regards any other unfair trade practice that was not covered by legislation it would not be within the competence of this parliament to direct that those engaged in it should cease or desist. The Senate is of the opinion that inasmuch as it has made the limitation to refer to a statute only, this amendment would be valid, and on that understanding of it I quite agree. But it does not touch what is called an unethical trade practice; it only refers to trade practices covered by existing statutes or which may hereafter be covered by statute.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend will appreciate the fact that I have not had an opportunity to more than glance at the proceedings—

Mr. BENNETT: I have not either.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and therefore I cannot speak on the effect of some of these amendments. But a casual glance at the amendments would cause it to appear that under the changes made by the Senate it will now be possible to violate any act named in section 2 without incurring a greater penalty than an unenforceable order of the commission not to do it again. I do not know whether my right hon. friend sees that possible effect.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I wish to make it clear that in my opinion this is bad:

If of opinion that the practice complained of constitutes an offence against any dominion law prohibiting unfair trade practices may order and require all persons who are parties or privies to such offence to cease and desist from further continuance ...

That is the very negation of the principle of enforcement of law as I see it. If there is a statute and the commission is aware that it is being violated, the duty of the commission is to point out to the director of public prosecutions and the attorney general of Canada that action should be taken, and not to tell someone, "Stop doing it and be a good boy." It is their duty to punish the offenders for what they have done, and that is the view I still hold.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The "don't do it again" provision.

Mr. BENNETT: It seems to me to be at variance with the whole theory of jurisprudence. If men have violated the law the mere fact that someone says to them, "Don't do it again," cannot possibly free them from proceedings being taken by any person who desires to make a complaint before any magistrate. I am bound to say I cannot agree with that amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) suggests that the Senate should, at this stage, be asked to cease and desist.

Mr. BENNETT: I know of many hon. gentlemen opposite to-day who would not be unwilling that it should cease and desist until they find a place there.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is something in that.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think, however, that we should place upon the statute books of Canada the idea that you can merely say to someone who has violated a statute, "Don't be a naughty boy." If there is a violation proceedings must be taken. We shall have to indicate that we cannot agree to that amendment. The next amendment, on page 8, line 29, provides that the public prosecutor shall be an official of the Department of Justice, and we will disagree with that. That is not the theory on which he is appointed. He is an official of the commission, and though directed by the Minister of Justice he is not an official of that department. With that one we disagree. The next one is in line 43, where the words "undertake or carry on" are struck out. There is no difficulty about that. On page 9, for the words "is likely" there are substituted the words "appears to be about;" that is to say, instead of saying that it is likely to be committed the words are, "appears to be about to be committed." I am not sure that that is better, but I will not quarrel with it; we will agree to that. In section 23, after the word "may" in the first line the words "from time to time" are inserted.

> The commission may from time to time at the instance of the governor in council or at the request of representative persons engaged in any industry ...

The added words are unnecessary, but out of abundant precaution the addition will not make any difference. In section 25 the words "have authority" in the first line are struck out and the word "to" before the word "study" is therefore also properly struck out.

Now we come to a much more difficult one. They have struck out the provisions of section 26 with respect to investigation of securities issued, and I do not think we should agree with that amendment. This does not place upon the commission any duty except when requested by the Secretary of State to do so. It seems to me that may be a very useful provision having regard to some of the difficulties pointed out the other day by the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) and the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell). I should like that section to remain. Section 27 has been altered to 26. The numbering is only a matter for the law clerks; that need not give us concern. Section 29 which will become section 28 has been changed to read:

> In any case where the governor in council has approved an agreement under this section, no prosecution of a party to such agreement shall be instituted under the Combines Investigation Act or under sections 498A or any other relevant section of the criminal code for an offence arising in the performance of such agreement, except with the consent of the commission.

That is, if the proceedings are being taken under the criminal code, they will be taken with the consent of the commission. I do not like that provision.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was going to say that it would prevent the attorney general of a province from proceeding under the criminal code. I do not think the clause should be retained.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not either. I would move second reading and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate; No. 1 in section 11; No. 2 in section 14; No. 3 in subsection 4 of section 14; No. 5 in section 15; No. 6 in section 15; No. 7 in section 15; No. 8 in section 16; No. 9 in section 16; No. 10 in section 16; No. 11 in section 19, subsection 1; No. 12 in section 22; No. 13 in section 23; No. 14 in section 25 and No. 15 in section 25.

Mr. LAPOINTE: With regard to section 22, I believe it is, concerning the public prosecutor, my hon. friend does not agree with the amendment of the Senate that this officer shall be an official of the Department of Justice; it says that he will be under the commission but will be subject to the supervision of the Minister of Justice. I am not sure that the amendment of the Senate is not a good one. We are now proceeding in a way which is rather an anomaly. Under the statute as it is, the Department of Justice is responsible for all the legal work of the government or of any department, but in recent years, in our time as well as now, ministers in other departments seem to have developed the autonomy complex that they should have under themselves in their own departments their own legal officers, for whom, I repeat, under the statute as it is, the Minister of Justice is responsible, but he does not know what they do. They are doing their work in the various departments; they never refer to the officers of the Department of Justice, but the minister is responsible for anything they do, whether it is right or wrong. Let us amend the statute if parliament considers it is a good thing that each department should be responsible for its own legal work, and not have anything to do with the Minister of Justice. But I do not think it is fair to my hon. friend or to whoever is the incumbent of the office of Minister of Justice to be responsible for the work of gentlemen with whom he has nothing to do, who are not appointed by him and who are doing their work without referring to him. This provision that it will be under the supervision of the Minister of Justice will not, I think, correct what is at issue. Under the statute the minister is responsible. Why not accept the amendment of the Senate that this gentleman will be an officer of the Department of Justice, so that not only the minister but even the deputy minister could have some control over him? What is the objection to that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would fully agree with my hon. friend in his general statement that all the legal work of the various departments should be exclusively under the Department of Justice, but I would make an exception in the present instance. We are setting up a special board for a special purpose as a result of the price spreads inquiry, and we are appointing a prosecutor as a special agent or officer of that board to see that the law is carried out; otherwise I would agree entirely with the principles set forth by my hon. friend.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend will be responsible for the work of that man.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I see the anomaly, but the idea is to convince the public, the business people of the country, that this measure is to be enforced, and we are putting a special prosecutor under the control of the trade and industry commission for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to make it clear, in case there is any letter we have overlooked —there may be a change of a letter plural or singular—that the motion is for the second reading and concurrence in all the amendments made by the Senate except the following: the amendment to section 14; this house accepts the amendment if there is added after the word "the" and before the word "opinion" in the second line thereof the word "unanimous," so that it would read "in the unanimous opinion." That is No. 1. That is for the reason that inasmuch as the former part of the section provides for unanimity of opinion, it is desirable that the same should characterize the action taken under the proposed amendment. The next one is the amendment to section 20. The house does not agree in the amendments made by their honours for the following reason, that it is regarded as a bad precedent to state in a statute that anybody can direct those who violate the statute to cease or desist, for if there is a breach to the knowledge of the commission, it should be its duty to take appropriate proceedings for the enforcement of the law in that regard. Does that cover what we wish to say?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Have a greater penalty than simply being told to cease and desist.

Mr. BENNETT: It does provide for greater proceedings after, but I think the principle is wrong.

The amendment at the end of line 29 in section 21 is not agreed to for the reason that under the special circumstances in this case it is desirable that the director of prosecutions should not be an official of the Department of Justice, although in carrying out his work he is under the superintendence of the minister.

This house does not agree to the deletion of section 26, which it regards as an important section, if in the opinion of the Secretary of State it is desirable to make investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the capital structure of any company is not in accordance with the principles of the Companies Act.

This house does not agree to the amendment to new section 28 for the reason that it is not desirable that the right of the provincial authorities to institute criminal proceedings should be dependent upon the leave of the commission.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Bennett moves, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That a message be sent to the Senate acquainting their honours that this house concurs in the amendments specified by the Prime Minister for the reasons set forth by him, and that the clerk of the house do convey the message to their honours.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the motion I want to make my last remarks for this session. In regard to this proposed legislation, the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce stands half-way between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister himself is halfway between the ruthlessness of the iron heel and Messrs. Litvinoff, Strachey and the like. The reason I am against this absurd legislation is because it is a consommé made with the skeleton bone of broken promises. That is all, sir.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO BROADCASTING

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 99, to amend the Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932.

He said: It merely gives effect to the intention of the commons to continue those sections that were enacted in 1932 until March 31 next year.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I want to say to my right hon. friend that it is customary to give the leader of the opposition a copy of the amendments. I know it has been just an oversight that I have not been furnished with copies, but I would like to have a complete set in order to be able to follow the discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say that I only saw them a few minutes ago myself, because the law clerk only concluded his work upon them since half past ten. I shall ask that they be sent to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I realize that it is not anyone's fault, but I should like to have them as well on file.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 73, to amend the criminal code.

He said: There are several amendments. It will be remembered that in the bill as introduced and passed by this house there was a provision to amend what is known as the horse-racing clause. The Senate have now introduced a further amendment which was not in the bill passed by this house, to provide for trotting race meetings up to fourteen days in any one year. That places trotting races in the same position as running races. Hitherto trotting races at which betting by pari-mutual was allowed were limited to three days. By this amendment they may carry on for fourteen days in any one year or two meets of seven days each.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is that in addition to the ordinary racing?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, the present law is that a racing association which has only running races may carry on for two meetings of seven days each or one of fourteen days. Hitherto trotting races have been limited to three days per year. The effect of this amendment is to put the trotting races on the same plane as the running races.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Then they could have two weeks of running races immediately followed by two weeks of trotting?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, they are different associations. They do not have both at the same meetings. The jockey clubs run the running races and the trotting associations run theirs.

Mr. McINTOSH: It would mean then twenty-eight days of racing and trotting during the year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, that does not follow. The trotting association meets I think are in midsummer, on different tracks, under different auspices, they are different organizations. I am not very familiar with them but that is my idea.

Mr. HEAPS: Would the minister kindly explain the legal distinction between trotting and running?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The act I think sets that out pretty clearly. If my hon. friend will read section 235 of the criminal code he will see. This amendment provides for the race meetings at which there are trotting or pacing races exclusively. They cannot be mixed, there cannot be running and trotting. I think trotting and pacing are well-defined terms that sportsmen understand, and all people who have to do with horses. If this amendment is carried these trotting associations will be entitled to fourteen days racing per annum, just as the running races are now.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend accept this amendment?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no view on the subject. It is a new suggestion to me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are not concerned whether it is trotting or pacing?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I am not. There are some racing experts in the house but I am not one of them.

Passing that for the moment, the next amendment was suggested after the bill had passed this house, I think in the first instance by the county crown attorney in the city of Ottawa and also some other county crown attorneys in different cities of Canada. It is to check as far as possible these gambling devices found in stores and places where the public resort, in regard to which the law is a little uncertain at the present time. The Senate has put in a clause that any person who:

> conducts, manages or is a party to any scheme, contrivance or operation of any kind by which any person, upon payment of any sum of money, or by obligating himself to pay any sum of money, shall become entitled under such scheme, contrivance or operation to receive from the person conducting or managing such scheme, contrivance or operation, or any other person, a larger sum of money than the amount paid or to be paid, by reason of the fact that other persons have paid or obligated themselves to pay any sum of money under such scheme, contrivance or operation;

Commits an offence. That amendment was not submitted to the house, it came before the Senate at the request of certain law officers of the provincial governments. I have no objection to it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That applies only to those who are making money out of the operation of these machines?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, making money out of these slot machines or gambling devices.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It does not apply to those who put their money in them?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, only to anyone who conducts or manages such a machine. The next amendment is to the minimum wage section which passed this house. When that section was under consideration certain objection was taken to clause (b), which provides:

Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence ... who, knowingly:—
(b) permits an employee to work beyond the maximum hours fixed by law or any competent public authority.

I remember that my hon. friend from Weyburn took strong exception to that clause, and the Senate have seen fit to strike it out. Then at the end of the section we had this general clause:

(h) does any other similar act contrary to law or the rules or regulations of any competent public authority.

The Senate have struck out that clause as well. Then at the request of my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) a special clause was inserted in regard to the marking of sawlogs and the placing of initials upon them. The Senate have rewritten the whole clause. We merely amended the clause as it stood then, but the Senate have repealed the present clause and enacted a new clause which probably makes the matter plainer, and it has included the suggestion which passed this house in regard to the initials.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That suggestion is contained in that amendment?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. Then at the end of the bill there is a clause stating at what time the act shall come into force. This is a usual clause in regard to criminal legislation:

This act with the exception of sections one, two A, and five thereof shall come into force on the first day of December, 1935, section five thereof shall come into force on the first day of January, 1936, and sections one and two A shall come into force on the passing of this act.

Section 5 is in regard to the issuing of advertisements, sale catalogues and the like. I think we can concur in all the amendments, but I have an open mind and I want the house to come to a conclusion in regard to the racing section.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am willing to accept my hon. friend as my guide in that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Personally I have no objection to it; the Senate have seen fit to put it in, and I move concurrence.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

MESSAGE FROM SENATE JOINING IN ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to advise the house that I have received a message informing this house that the Senate do unite in an address to His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of the approaching termination of His Excellency's official connection with this country and have inserted in a space therein the words "Senate and."

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT, 1934

The house resumed from Thursday, July 4, consideration in committee of Bill No. 105, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1934—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 3—Form 20 amended.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When the committee rose yesterday we were discussing the affidavit which is part of section 3. I have gone over the matter very carefully since that time; I have considered it from a good many angles, and I think I can make some suggestions modifying the form of affidavit that perhaps will meet with the approval of the committee.

I think we will all agree that the fundamental questions in regard to the exercise of the franchise are first that the person exercising it should be a British subject and second that he should be twenty-one years of age. I do not suppose there is any difference of opinion in that regard. These lists have been prepared, in the cities, to a very large extent by enumeration; inquiries have not been made in regard to the citizenship, in many instances, and I am afraid there also has been some laxity in regard to the ages of the persons who have been put on the lists by the enumerators. The first clause of this affidavit merely reads:

(1) That I am a British subject of the full age of twenty-one years;

I do not think anyone could have any objection to that clause remaining. The second clause, in regard to the residence in Canada, I think may well be stricken out, and I think the third clause might be struck out as well.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This is still an affidavit?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is the affidavit in the bill that I am discussing. I would not hesitate to strike out the fourth clause also. I also assume, however, that it is the earnest wish of everyone in the house that we should have a fair, clean election and abolish as far as possible personation which has become very prevalent in certain parts of Canada. For the purpose of doing so I submit that we should have some means of identifying the man who attempts personation or who actually personates someone else on election day. I am inclined to think we should all agree to the last clause. This will make an oath of two clauses, as follows:

(1) That I am a British subject of the full age of twenty-one years;
(2) That the signature which I have made to this deposition is in my usual handwriting, and is my true name.

"Signature" includes a mark, and anyone who cannot sign his name makes his mark, whether on a cheque, a contract or an affidavit. The only other suggestion is a technical one. At the bottom of the affidavit appear the words "justice of the peace." I would put there, "deputy returning officer or justice of the peace." If these two clauses are accepted I would withdraw paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, and just leave the one "I am a British subject of the full age of twenty-one years," and the other "I have signed this document and that is my handwriting." It was suggested yesterday that the effect might be to choke the poll if these affidavits were taken. I have ascertained that the number of parties sworn runs from only ten to twenty in any polling booth. The chief electoral officer seemed to think it would involve a great deal of printing as there are 35,000 polls and he would have to get out from ten to twenty affidavits for each poll. Well, that can be done. The oath is not a long one; it is a very short one, and it can be printed very readily, and if twenty or even fifty have to be supplied to each poll it would not clog up the poll because there cannot be more than three hundred names on the polling list for any division. I suggest that this is a simple way of remedying what has become a disgrace in some parts of Canada. In Ontario we call it plugging and personation, in Quebec they call it telegraphing. I know that it is the desire of all parties in this house to stop that if we can do so, and this requirement that a person may be sworn and leave his signature for identification purposes will I think go a long way in stopping this thing happening.

Mr. GARDINER: I am rather surprised and regret very much the attitude the minister has taken in regard to this oath. He states he is willing to accept clauses 1 and 5, and delete clauses 2, 3 and 4. Clause 1 simply states "I am a British subject of the full age of twenty-one years." That in my judgment is very important to have in the oath. The last clause, No. 5, which the minister wishes to have included in the oath, states "That the signature which I have made to this deposition is in my usual handwriting and is my true name." That is very important too and should remain in the oath. But now let us look at clause 2 for a moment. It reads:

That I have been ordinarily resident in Canada for at least twelve months immediately preceding the commencement of the annual revision of the lists of electors on the fifteenth day of May last.

Why should not that remain in?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The reason is that that is a part of the franchise act, and this is the elections act that we are dealing with. These clauses that I have agreed to strike out deal with matters that have all been considered before the name was put on the voters' list.

Mr. GARDINER: If the situation is covered in that way I have not the same objection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry I cannot agree with this requirement which forces any elector who is challenged at the poll by a representative of a candidate to sign an affidavit in the way prescribed by this section. Where is that done anywhere else? As I said last night, instead of putting obstacles in the way of electors coming to the poll and registering their votes, we should facilitate their voting. In some countries they have a system of compulsory voting. It is a disgrace that citizens do not take the trouble to go to the polls and register their votes, and we should do what we can to facilitate their voting, rather than put obstacles in their way.

The Minister of Justice says that twenty such forms on the average will be required for each poll. But what is there to prevent a representative who wants to make trouble, and unfortunately there are some even in our country, from insisting on challenging the vote of all the electors, especially in certain polls? In a labour division, as in my own constituency, where it is well known that practically all the voters would vote for me —I do not say that in any boasting way but simply because they belong to the Liberal party—what is there to prevent a man who has nothing to lose from going to the poll and, simply for the purpose of making trouble, forcing everybody to take the oath and to sign the affidavit, the women as well as the men, thereby clogging the polls and obstructing the work of the returning officers? There are certain hours during the polling day when more people come to register their votes than at some other period of the day, and there may be some voters who will be unable under the circumstances to register their votes.

There is also this fact, that there are some people—I know it is so in certain constituencies—who do not like to be forced to take an affidavit. They have some sort of scruple of conscience about it. They do not like to give their signature in order to be allowed to vote. My hon. friend from Quebec West the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) knows that in his own constituency there are workmen and women too who will not like this, and it may make trouble there, a great deal more than in my own constituency.

Why force this thing? It is not done anywhere else. I do not see why the honest people, those who have the right to vote, should be inconvenienced in this way because there are some culprits who would come and personate voters. As I said last night, these culprits will not be prevented from carrying out their intention. They can easily say they do not know how to sign and they will mark a cross. As I said before it will inconvenience the honest voters, and for these two reasons I am strongly opposed to it. I know that this will not be a pleasant thing for a large number of bona fide voters, and I would like to know who is insisting on having this thing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the difficulties which my hon. friend sees in the adoption of this system are largely imaginary. Very few people are sworn at a poll.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But many might be.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very few are sworn. My hon. friend says that if anyone desires to do so he might plug the poll by insisting on swearing everybody that comes along, but even if he did, the voters would all be able to register their votes between eight in the morning and six at night because no more than three hundred can vote at any poll. Experience shows that from ten to twenty sworn is the average. That is from Mr. Castonguay, who says that he would have to supply from ten to twenty forms. Well, I said, supply enough if it passes. I do not think anybody is going to be very much hurt if they are asked to sign their name to an oath. At the present time they can be sworn and they take a verbal oath, and the returning officer enters their name. It is a very slight thing to ask the person making an affidavit, "Please sign this." That is all you have to do. I think everybody will agree that this is going to stop a lot of this personation.

Mr. POWER: Not one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think everybody will agree that the house should stop it, and that we should do everything in our power to stop it. We should not strain at imaginary difficulties in order to accomplish some great purpose which I believe we shall accomplish if we pass this clause with this affidavit.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, with the principle, the stoppage of personation, I am fully in accord, but I think this is a most unpopular way to go about it. The Minister of Justice says he will need from twenty to twenty-five forms in each polling booth. If personation goes on only to the extent of some fifteen or twenty it is hardly worth while going to this trouble. Impersonation does exist and the minister says that he believes it could be prevented and that it would not take much time. I know that there will be learned people, men of experience who will feel hurt to a certain extent if challenged in that way. In certain constituencies there are aged people and illiterate people and if they are challenged it will take a certain length of time to explain to them that they have to make this affidavit. If it was the ordinary oath I would be in accord with it but this idea of explaining to an aged woman, to an old man or to an illiterate person will cause a delay in some cases of fifteen, twenty or twenty-five minutes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Oh no.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend is a lawyer and he knows that when an illiterate person comes into a lawyer's office to sign an affidavit a full explanation must be made. When we were discussing the affidavits that was one reason why this declaration was left out of the act. The enumerators going from house to house would have had to sit down and explain the thing fully to illiterate persons. Everyone realizes how long that would take. Then it is possible that some people will be driven away from voting. Personally I think there is another way in which this matter could be handled but it is not my business to make up this law.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to take up the time of the committee but I have a very strong opinion as to the desirability of having some approach to what I call honesty in the conduct of elections.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We all have; my right hon. friend should not say that.

Mr. BENNETT: There is only one way to have it and that is to provide adequate safeguards to prevent dishonesty. I remember one statement which was made to me in connection with an election in eastern Canada. It was stated that an impersonator came here from an American city and voted forty-two times. There is only one way to stop that kind of thing, have them sign a paper. No impersonator will take the risk as perjury is an extraditable offence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He would be perjuring himself just the same without this.

Mr. BENNETT: The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) knows perfectly well that it is a different thing when a returning officer says something rather quickly and the voter replies, "so help me God." I was impressed by what the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol) said last night that the provisions which have to do with the franchise should be excluded. They have been excluded and the man now swears that he is a British subject, is over twenty-one years of age and is the person named on the list.

A few years ago there was an election in a city in this country—I speak from memory and subject to correction—where thirty prominent persons found that they could not vote when they went to the polls because they had been voted before eleven o'clock by persons who were not residents of this country. There was another case in which evidence was unearthed that wigs and costumes had been used in order to change the appearance of these men. With the happy reputation which Canadian law has these people will not take the risk of signing their names and being charged with perjury to be proved by the production of a document. Perjury without the production of documents is always a difficult thing to prove but when you have a man sign a note that he is the person named you will stop this sort of thing very quickly.

That is the only purpose I have in mind and perhaps I must accept responsibility for the form of this section. I did not draft it but I said I thought it was highly desirable that it should be in that form. I say this from my own experience and in the light of information which has been given to me. I believe this information was correct as it was given to me by a gentleman whom I have every reason to believe knew whereof he was speaking. In a moment of frankness he told me that he had participated in the things to which I referred.

As to the polls being crowded, I do not think that will occur. I recall a case during a provincial election where because of the complexity of the vote it was thought desirable to challenge everyone who came in. Although it was thought that this would crowd the polls, it was found that everyone had an opportunity to vote. These polls will open at eight o'clock in the morning and close at six o'clock in the evening and everyone knows that it is the honest people who will be challenged.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They may be.

Mr. BENNETT: That is always a contingency to expect; I may be challenged or my hon. friend may be. However, this law is aimed at the crook.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It will hit the honest man.

Mr. BENNETT: It will not. How will it touch the honest man unless he is challenged?

Mr. LAPOINTE: He will be.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no chance of that happening to any considerable extent because public opinion would not support a scrutineer who took such action. We are trying to prevent fraud and dishonesty and to permit the exercise of the franchise by those persons who legitimately have the right to exercise it. I do suggest that the committee should adopt this section because not to do so would look as though we were not anxious to prevent what has became a real evil in Canada, impersonation. Speaking from my experience as a lawyer which while it has not been great, at least has been varied, I say that the crook will be through the minute he is asked to sign a document.

Mr. CARDIN: He will not sign his own name, he will sign the name of the person on the list.

Mr. BENNETT: That signature will not be in his handwriting and he thereby steps right into the hands of the prosecution.

Mr. CARDIN: You would not be able to get him afterwards; you would not have his photograph.

Mr. BENNETT: We certainly could not go to the expense of photographing everyone. As a matter of fact, it was suggested that finger prints should be taken. Recently I observed that the Canadian National Railways provide a small photograph of the person to whom they issue a pass on the pass. They have found that passes were being used by people other than those to whom they were issued. We are trying to do that very thing. We all should be anxious, and I believe we are anxious, to prevent fraud by the electors. I do not think there will be any difficulty in the crowding of the polls as we have limited the number to three hundred. Assuming that half are challenged there would be no crowding, or even if two hundred were challenged everyone would have an opportunity to vote. When a doubtful man enters the poll the scrutineer simply says, "challenged," and there are only two clauses to the oath to be administered by the returning officer who obtains a signature and places it in the roll book where it will be for all time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend will admit that I have had a certain amount of experience having taken part in twelve elections. There will be a crowding of the polls if everyone is challenged as may well happen. It is all right to say that honest people will not be challenged but everyone knows that there are some who will be anxious to prevent their opponents voting.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) if the artistic draftsman who had to do with the War Time Elections act of many years ago and the Dominion Franchise Act of last year had anything to do with making or suggesting this change?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

An hon. MEMBER: Have you not forgotten that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am still suspicious of anything done by this government in connection with the elections or franchise acts. I have had considerable experience with elections and I know how polls can be blocked by zealous and offensive scrutineers and returning officers. Sometimes these men are very offensive and they terrorize the innocent voter by asking something which cannot be explained on such short notice. It is just one more attempt by this government to grab at some floating straws to save them from destruction; that is all. Why not make a clean breast of the whole thing and come across clean as was done with regard to the alternative vote? That was a deliberate attempt to get a party advantage in one single province. No one less diabolical than O'Connor could have drafted or thought up that. I object to all these attempts to grab off party advantage at the last moment. My hon. friends might as well have taken the consequences from an indignant electorate standing up, instead of resorting to these dubious devices to save themselves—and then not likely to succeed.

Mr. ST-PERE: In the course of his remarks the Minister of Justice said that the electors had ample time to vote on polling day. If he represents a city he must admit that the large vote, the labour vote, the vote of the common people, is usually given between four and seven o'clock at night. It comes in bulk, so to speak.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a special provision for noon.

Mr. ST-PERE: Placed in the hands of any strong partisan, the amendment may be used against any candidate. As far as the signing of this form is concerned, may I ask the Prime Minister this question. Could the crook who signed an affidavit of this kind be located immediately? Where could you find him? He could not be identified at all. I strongly object to this provision, not because I am a partisan—and the Secretary of State knows that I like to run fair elections—

Mr. CAHAN: Hear, hear.

Mr. ST-PERE: I have that reputation in Montreal in my riding. But for the love of Mike don't enact laws that will strike off the list half the electors in a poll. I have seen that before in provincial elections. If this amendment is put into force we shall see a duplication in Montreal of what I have seen in the past— deputy returning officers, representatives of candidates, purposely eliminating electors waiting at the door, preventing them from voting. I strongly oppose this amendment.

Mr. DUPRE: The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) said that in a constituency like mine, for instance, the people would be opposed to such a procedure. I do not share his view. This is an honest effort to stop impersonation and I cannot understand the position of our friends of the Liberal party. In the rural constituencies impersonation is very difficult; in fact, it is practically unknown. The provision would therefore affect only city constituencies like that of my hon. friend from Quebec East or mine. I do not see anything at all in the objections of my hon. friend from Quebec East and my hon. friend from Hochelaga. I do not agree with that hon. gentleman that the vote is polled to the greatest extent between four and seven o'clock. It is also polled early in the morning and, for the working man especially, between noon and two o'clock in the afternoon. As regards the argument about crowding the polls, our opponents seem to forget that under the old law the same thing could be done. Any elector could be asked to give an affidavit—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no.

Mr. DUPRE:—a sworn statement, which was much longer than the one now being proposed and which consists of only two paragraphs. I do not see any objection, therefore. On the contrary, I think it will be welcomed in my constituency at any rate. The honest voter will never object to such a procedure.

Mr. RINFRET: We are just as anxious as the Solicitor General to prevent impersonation, but every time we discuss an electoral law or an amendment thereto we are confronted with two conflicting principles; one is to adopt complicated devices to prevent impersonation and the other is to make it as easy as possible for the honest elector to vote. I have always stood for the latter. In my opinion the electoral legislation adopted last year and the amendments before the house this year tend to make it harder and harder for the average honest citizen to register his vote. What is written on the document is rather complicated and in addition he may have to fight for his own right during the revision. And now he is confronted with the possibility of having to read and sign a document at the poll. It is well known that the average person objects to taking an oath; rightly or wrongly he considers it an insult. If people have to read a long document and sign it a number of them will object. I am very much of the opinion of the former Minister of Justice that while an impersonator may be stopped by having to sign a document, if anyone wishes to send impersonators to a poll such impersonators will be schooled in what they have to do in order to attain their purpose. For one impersonator who will be stopped by this amendment, from ten to twenty or more honest voters will be prevented from voting. The honest voter expects the ordinary procedure and if he is confronted with a document of this kind he may refuse to sign it. If a candidate or his agents conspired to put through a number of illicit votes, we may be sure that such impersonators would be properly schooled, and I cannot see that the fact that a record remains after the vote is cast is any advantage over the old system. After all, if a man comes to vote for someone else and signs that other person's name, when he has left the poll there is nothing more against him than the fact that he has left a document behind him. There is nothing more by which to trace him than if he had merely taken an oath under the old system.

Mr. MANION: There is forgery against him as well as perjury if he signs another man's name.

Mr. RINFRET: Yes, but when he has disappeared it will be hard to prove either against him. Speaking from my experience in Montreal, I must say that the important thing seems to me to be to make it as easy as possible for the honest man to vote. I am afraid that all these proposals and particularly this one requiring a man to sign his name will keep more people from voting than it will prevent impersonators from registering votes.

Mr. TUMMON: If his vote is challenged now has he not got to take an oath? If he is an honest man will he hesitate to sign a document?

Mr. DONNELLY: As I understand it, this amendment is introduced to prevent people from impersonating voters. I notice that the Solicitor General said that impersonation was almost unknown in the country. The Prime Minister interjected that it was absolutely unknown in the country districts. May I suggest therefore to the Minister of Justice that this section be applied only to the urban centres and not to the rural districts. It can be used in rural districts only to annoy voters where, as the Prime Minister has said, impersonation is unknown. It can be and is used in this way because I have had experience with it being used to annoy voters at the time of an election, and I would suggest that it be eliminated entirely so far as rural districts are concerned.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Like the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), I am opposed to this amendment in the form in which it is. I think we are all agreed that impersonation should be stopped, but this is a very unpopular way to go about stopping it. While we may stop a few of the impersonators and the culprits who are paid to do such a wicked job, I think we will, especially in the large cities, affect the vote of good, honest people, who will not like this form of making an affidavit in the way it is proposed to be done under this amendment. As regards the contention of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Power), his experience is good, but to my mind it is not as good before the committee and the house as that of that of members like the hon. member for Quebec East, the hon. member for St. James and myself who have run elections for many years. He ought to know that in big cities like Quebec, Montreal and others outside our province people come into the polling stations at the last hour, as the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père) has said. If at the time the representative of any given candidate knows his polling division is a Liberal stronghold, or for that matter a Conservative stronghold, because the thing works both ways, and if he wants to be strong for his candidate, he may challenge the vote of any person who comes in there.

I want to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that not only has this been done in cities, but in my own county in a rural district, because some person had been away for a certain time and had been put on the list, everyone who came to the poll was challenged. This was done even in rural or semi-rural divisions. There is a danger that might obtain if this form of affidavit is used. We have the present form whereby a man coming in may be attested and forced to take the oath. He takes the oath and it is marked that he is sworn. If he takes the oath, he is given a ballot because he is on the list. This proceeding we are taking to-day is the last, third degree test after the revision and the main basic lists have been made. It has only one purpose, namely, to make the election more difficult, and to try to keep away from the polls as many people as possible.

Mr. DUPRE: That is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The franchise is in the air; a person has to go and grab it and see that his name is on the list. Formerly every person was on the list and was not bound to under the special circumstances in this case

As the hon. member for Hochelaga has said, what guarantee have we that we have caught the impersonator? The man who is bad, who is the culprit, who is asked to do a wicked job, will be requested to make an affidavit and to subscribe his name. He will subscribe the name of the person he wants to impersonate. We have not his signature; we do not know who he is; we have not his address. We have to grab him on the spot. If he takes the affidavit, impersonates the man and we give him the ballot, he takes it and goes free. What guarantee have we that we can reach that man? We cannot reach him at all, and I doubt whether this amendment will serve the purpose it is intended to serve. If this affidavit were made in the form of an oath to be taken, but not to force the person who would be called upon to subscribe to the oath, to put his signature to it, I would not object to that so much. But to force a person to sign, I think, with the mentality of the people in our province—and I think the same is true in all the provinces—it is an insult to the labourers, the employees, the honest workingman who come to the polls, to be forced at the wish of a representative there to put his signature to a document or, if he does not know how to sign, to put his mark. I repeat that we have no guarantee that we will be able to get the wicked man who wants to deprive the honest voter of his vote. I am against it.

Mr. HACKETT: I suppose hon. members opposite are aware of the campaign which has been carried on for some time in the city of Montreal to identify electors. They are aware that a bill was prepared to force every elector to carry a card of identification bearing his photograph. That measure went forward with unanimous approval. This was a matter of some inconvenience, but it was for the purpose of correcting the very ill which is complained of here. If the signature of the document is in itself a great ill, why should we exact that every person who comes into the country must sign? It is impossible to come in on the train from the neighbouring republic without signing a document as to one's origin and so forth, and it is impossible to go into the neighbouring republic without doing the same thing. If these requirements are exacted for a mere transitory visit, it seems to me that perforce like requirements should be exacted of people who are by their vote going to determine what is going to be the policy and even the destiny of the country.

After all I think we can admit that the practical application and use of this document will be restricted to how many constituencies? A few in Montreal. I know nothing of Toronto or the other cities. The very example given by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) shows that the signature of the document will in no way increase his embarrassment. He said that a deputy returning officer challenged a certain number of people.

It is not my purpose to discuss the question whether he did that with or without reason, but we are not taking away that right, and it will merely mean that the person who takes an oath will do it in a form of which there will be a permanent record. If this legislation is passed, I do not believe it would be brought into practical application to any extent in more than a dozen constituencies, and it will give an assurance of an honest vote. I cannot and will not assume that hon. gentlemen in whatever section of the house they sit are less interested in that result than are those who are bringing forward this bill.

Mr. BAKER: The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) mentioned the blocking of the poll. He will admit that impersonations will be in the morning because if the impersonator does not arrive in the morning, the opportunity for impersonation will be lost, so his point there is very weak.

Mr. McPHEE: In country polls the deputy returning officer will not know anything about the legal effect of a signature, and I would suggest that the Minister of Justice should insert an alternative:

That I am unable to write and have hereto made my mark and that is my true name.

That will cover the difficulty.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am trying to draft a clause to carry out that suggestion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Also there will be nothing to prevent challenging the voter under another section of the act, and he will have to take another oath on form 19 in which he will be required to swear again that he is a British subject, twenty-one years of age, that he has not voted before at this election, has not been employed by any person for pay or reward in reference to this election and has not been promised anything directly or indirectly to induce him to vote. There will be two sets of oaths that may be required from any voter, one he will have to sign in the form of an affidavit, for the other the usual oath will serve the purpose.

Mr. DUPRE: They do not serve the same purpose.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, but they both take time. It is not such an easy thing as some hon. gentlemen claim, and I have had some experience in elections. It takes time to swear voters, especially if someone wants time to be taken, they will insist on having the two oaths forced on the elector who applies to vote, and one of them will have to be signed. There are many people, old ladies and old labouring people who do not like to take affidavits and sign their names just for the purpose of voting.

Mr. HACKETT: They are not impersonators.

Mr. GAGNON: The honest voter is never afraid to sign his name.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is all very well for my hon. friend to say that, he has not had the experience, let me tell him. I know people who have refused to swear although they were the most honest in the world, they do not like it. There are people—we may think it is a mistake of conscience but there are those who think it is a bad thing to take an oath, they are afraid to take an oath under any circumstances, and I think forcing them to do that for the purpose of registering their vote will cause some of them to decline to exercise their right or fulfil the duty of registering their vote at any election. You will not serve any purpose by doing this but you will prevent some honest voters from voting. It is useless to say we want to have clean elections, I do not think anyone will charge me with having any other intention in mind. Anything that will lead to honest elections I will support as strongly as anyone, but I do not believe this is the right way of doing it. I think this will rather hit people who are not the fraudulent persons whom it is intended to prevent doing their evil work.

An hon. MEMBER: You are wrong.

Mr. LAPOINTE: An hon. member says I am wrong. I know when I was representing a rural sitting in Kamouraska this thing would not apply there at all, but let those who are carrying on elections in cities and know something about the conditions say what their experience is in that regard.

Mr. MANION: There are more from cities on this side.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let me tell my hon. friend many of his electors will not like this provision, and he will agree that I was not wrong in the fight I am making to-day.

Mr. POWER: Before this passes I would like to make a few observations. I entirely agree with my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). It will be quite possible for any evil-minded scrutineer to block any of the large city polls in the city of Quebec, let alone in Montreal, without the assistance of the deputy returning officer; a scrutineer who intends to win for his candidate by fair means or foul—and this is fair means under the act —could very easily in the last two hours of voting challenge enough people to block the polls. It is all very well to say there are ten hours to vote, but even ten hours with three hundred voters means a voter every two minutes during the whole day. This affidavit will take five minutes to get signed if it is properly done.

An hon. MEMBER: More than that.

Mr. DUPRE: No.

Mr. POWER: The Solicitor General says no. I think it was the Minister of Justice, or perhaps the Prime Minister who said they wished to correct the present system whereby a voter comes in and they say, "You swear to this," and that is all. It is much easier to say, "You sign this." They will not go through all the formality of swearing, they will just say, "Sign this," and they will sign. If a man is going to telegraph he will sign anything, he will sign his cross, and how can you identify him afterwards?

Mr. MacNICOL: He won't be able to vote irregularly as often.

Mr. POWER: It is all very well for the Minister of Railways to say, "That is different, this is not impersonation, this is forgery." He thinks it is going to be made more difficult because another crime is piled on top of the crime that already exists. I wonder if my hon. friend the Minister of Railways ever saw a properly drawn election petition. A man whose election is protested is accused of every crime they can think of.

Mr. MANION: They never contest mine.

Mr. POWER: No, there is always a saw-off in Ontario, I understand.

Mr. MANION: Never had a saw-off in any of mine.

Mr. POWER: If my hon. friend ever saw an election petition he would be appalled at the number of crimes you can commit under the Dominion Elections Act already.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend ought to know.

Mr. POWER: Everything from hiring a man to drive voters to the polls—which I thought was absurd—to personation, subornation of personation, and the Lord knows how many other crimes. To add another crime that of perjury will not change the attitude of the person who intends to poll a vote which he is not entitled to poll. I can assure my hon. friend that the only effect this can possibly have is first to prevent the honest man from voting. In my early days it was considered quite a favourite trick to challenge the most respectable man on the opposite side, to say, "Now we will put the oath to this fellow and he will probably walk out of the polling booth insulted." He will be far more insulted if you ask him to sign; he will say, "I'll be darned if I'm going to sign." I maintain that given the idea of winning the election, in any polling subdivision where it is fairly certain that one party is predominant, a scrutineer with a certain amount of courage by insisting on these affidavits in the last two hours of voting can block the polls. He can keep twenty-five per cent of the voters in a labour constituency from voting.

An hon. MEMBER: More than that.

Mr. POWER: I can tell my hon. friend the Solicitor General these people can do that if they so desire, there would be nothing fraudulent in it, you could not attack them under this or any other act, they would be performing a perfectly legal action by insisting on every voter who came in after five o'clock being obliged to sign the affidavit. I ask my hon. friend in all conscience to imagine what would happen in St. Sauveur should such tactics be tried either by his side or ours. I think the mounted police would have to come back from Regina.

Mr. DUPRE: The same thing could be done under the old law, and it was not done.

Mr. POWER: The same thing could be done by way of swearing, yes. But it will take far more time for this affidavit to be drawn.

Mr. DUPRE: No, it is very short.

Mr. POWER: Honest people will argue for hours before they will put their signature to a document, but those who are voting dishonestly will take only a second to write their names, they will sign crosses, and they will be gone. It is easy for those who wish to sign an affidavit and so blind themselves to the truth to do so; we all know that in our practice in the courts, but it is extremely difficult to get a man to come before the court and swear to the same thing that he will put his signature to. The dishonest man, or the man who is not fully conscious of his duty, will sign this paper in a moment. The honest man will absolutely refuse to do so, and the unjust scrutineer, particularly if he is backed by a partisan returning officer, can prevent the true expression of the people through their votes. That is why I am opposing this affidavit.

Mr. BENNETT: It is getting on towards one o'clock, when the house will rise unless we pass a motion that we should continue to sit. I am entirely in the hands of the house—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Let us continue to sit.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is the wish of the house we might report progress and I will move that we continue to sit without intermission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is quite agreeable so far as we are concerned.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I move that the house do not rise at one o'clock but that we continue to sit until a further motion is made to adjourn. I assume that would be the proper thing to do.

Motion agreed to.

EIGHT HOUR DAY

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 21, to provide for limiting the hours of work in industrial undertakings to eight in the day and forty-eight in the week, in accordance with the convention concerning the application of the principle of the eight hour day or of the forty-eight hour week adopted by the general conference of the international labour organization of the League of Nations, in accordance with the labour part of the treaty of Versailles of the 28th June, 1919.

He said: There has been a long and extended further discussion in regard to these amendments, and it seems to be the best advice of those better able to speak than I that these amendments meet the views of most of those concerned. If we do not concur in these amendments it is hard to say how long and protracted the discussion may be, so I move concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT, 1934

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 105, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1934—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 3—Form 20 amended.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), in regard to the case of an illiterate voter who does not sign his name I have drafted a short amendment that might cover some of the objections that have been offered to this section. The amendment is as follows:

> That .....is my true name, and that the signature hereto is in my usual handwriting; or in the case of an illiterate voter, that the mark placed hereto is my usual method of signing my name.

I should be content to accept that amendment instead of the section as drawn.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What protection will that be? What will that mark be a protection against?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are very few illiterate voters in Canada. It would not be protection equal to the signature.

Mr. POWER: But "Mr. Telegrapher" would say, "I am an illiterate voter."

Mr. GUTHRIE: We would have to take that chance. This is to prevent fraud as far as possible. We cannot foresee every case.

Mr. POWER: But that is naturally what he would do. If he were afraid of the crime of forgery, as suggested by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, he would say, "All right; I cannot sign." He would walk into the poll; he would be duly sworn; he would go in with the representatives of both parties; he would go through all the performance of an illiterate and they would say, "All right, come and put your mark here." He would place his mark there and he would do it forty-two times, just like the man who is sworn.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then we had better stick to the clause as drawn. I am only suggesting this at the instance of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth.

Mr. POWER: This is not any better.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Section as amended agreed to on division.

Section 4 agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Before the bill is reported, there were two amendments added last night at the end of the bill. Did we get those in order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Yes, I have them here.

Bill reported, read the third time on division, and passed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY COMMISSION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Has the house finally considered the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 86? I understood a further conference was going on, and that we had not received the final report.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): My right hon. friend may be correct; I will ascertain the situation as quickly as possible. I believe so far as we in this house are concerned, however, the procedure is concluded.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We refuse to concur in three of the Senate amendments to that bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We might go through the remaining supplementary and main estimates, reserving one of the readings.

Mr. BENNETT: The Senate have not concluded with Bill No. 86. I had a conference with them. It has not yet come back to the house but will be back presently. There are some supplementary estimates not yet disposed of.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If we have concluded with everything except Bill No. 86 I see no reason why we might not go ahead with supply, and pass it in whole, but it is understood that there is to be no measure considered other than Bill No. 86. Is that it?

Mr. BENNETT: After we get the supply bill through, we want to vote on the Harris resolution because it was a vote the right hon. gentleman asked for, not a discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Forget it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not want to repeat what the Right Hon. Mr. Thomas said, but I think it would be all humbug to have a vote on that resolution at this time.

Mr. BENNETT: It is on Hansard that the right hon. gentleman did not want to be prevented from the opportunity of voting on it. I want to give him the chance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will vote at once if my right hon. friend will guarantee there will be no discussion which will prolong the session.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but somebody will have to make some observations to get the bill before the house. With respect to Bill No. 98 I am just advised that there is an effort to propose some amendments to that bill that we could not possibly accept as it would be a negation of all the effort we have made, but I cannot speak definitely until I see them.

[The Chairman.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

To pay to the estate of the late General Sir Arthur William Currie, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., LL.D., in recognition of the eminent services rendered to his country by the deceased general during the great war, $50,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if I might revert to the item making a grant to the estate of the late Sir Arthur Currie as I was not present when the item was discussed before, and I asked that it stand.

I should like to make it clear that the delay in bringing in this vote was quite anticipated by what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) the other evening. It is a vote as we lawyers say, nunc pro tunc, a vote as if given to him in his lifetime, and is therefore payable to his estate, but it was not paid to the estate until such time as the estate was wound up. The complete estate consists of something around $11,000, and this grant is being made as though it were being made to Sir Arthur Currie in his lifetime so far as that is possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is there a reasonable assurance that none of this money will be used for payments to any bank or anything of that sort?

Mr. BENNETT: It is that which I desired to make clear to the committee. I would not otherwise have mentioned it at all. The estate has been wound up and after the payment of all claims there is a small surplus of about $11,000, so no part of this sum will become assessable for any claims of any character against the estate. That is my advice, and I also received a copy of the disposition of the winding up of the estate under the laws of Quebec.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): While I am not at all opposing this vote I think a life annuity would have been preferable in the public interest.

Mr. BENNETT: The reasons are obvious. The action taken is the action that should have been taken—shall I say, without being offensive to anyone—at the conclusion of the war. Those who have read the speech of Mr. Lloyd George when he proposed a grant of £100,000 to Lord Haig and £100,000 to Admiral Beatty, £25,000 to Sir Maurice Hankey and £50,000 to other generals and army commanders will remember that he pointed out at the beginning of his speech that it had always been the tradition in Great Britain that those who had rendered signal service to the nation in time of peril should be remembered, that that was a distinguishing feature between Rome and Carthage and that one had perished and the other had survived. In this instance the endeavour has been made to vote the grant as though the grant were being made at the end of the war to the deceased general himself, and therefore it is payable to his estate. I am informed that it will be utilized for the purpose of purchasing an annuity for the widow under the direction of the executors. As a matter of fact I believe that has already been arranged. The balance of the estate to which she is entitled will with this amount ensure the widow a reasonable annuity for the balance of her life. It is purely a technical matter that it is being dealt with in this way. I think the principle of paying annuities to those who are the survivors of distinguished persons is one which this parliament has hesitated to adopt. I know now about twelve or fifteen judges' widows who think they should receive an annuity. We have acted upon another principle, and hence I thought it desirable to make this short statement to the committee because of my absence the other evening.

Item agreed to.

Expenses of the royal commission on price spreads and mass buying (governor general's warrants of July 30, November 3 and December 19, 1934), $155,000.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, I wish to give the following information to the committee. The total cost of the price spreads committee while it was a committee was $196,783.51, and while it was a royal commission $217,889.15, making a grand total of $414,672.66. There may be some accounts for printing which have not yet come in and not included in this amount. These figures are given by the comptroller of the treasury.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister was asked the other evening, and stated that he would inform the committee how much was paid to the auditors.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have that detailed up to a certain date. Up to March, Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash had been paid $27,238.21, and there was an account for $5,994.52 outstanding; F. A. Nightingale had been paid $1,655, and expenses of $136.41, or a total of $1,791.41; Fred Page Higgins, $23,520.65, and expenses $2,011.39, or a total of $25,532.04; Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company, $6,235, and expenses $1,583.80, or a total of $7,818.80, and there was an account for $1,908.40 outstanding. That is all the information I have with respect to the auditors.

Mr. DONNELLY: When this committee on July 3 was considering this item the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked how much money had been collected from tax evaders as a result of the price spreads investigation. He said that he did not know exactly, that he had heard only rumours but he understood that a considerable amount had been collected. I understand that during the past month the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue have both been asked the same question, and they both told us that no money whatever had been collected.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They did not say that.

Mr. DONNELLY: At page 1655 of Hansard of March 12, 1935, the Minister of National Revenue was asked this question:

Have any sums been collected by the income tax department as a result of revelations before the price spreads and mass buying commission, and if so what is the amount?

And the Minister of National Revenue replied:

I am informed that the answer is no; no amount has been collected.

That was the answer of the minister. Many Conservative members are going about the country telling of the huge sums of money which have been collected, more than sufficient to pay for the cost of the investigation. I think we should know whether or not any sums have been collected. It has been stated that the MacDonald Tobacco Company and the Canada Packers Limited have paid large amounts in income taxes which would not have been paid had this investigation not been held. If the minister has any information in this connection I should like to have it. I should like to know if he has any information about the rumours which have been going about.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I know nothing about any rumours. Perhaps the hon. member is confusing the recent rise in prices with—

Mr. DONNELLY: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. MATTHEWS: We examined the evidence given before the committee and the commission and we went to the trouble of distributing this evidence to the different local inspectors of income tax for further examination and report. So far as I am aware no additional revenue has accrued as a result of the inquiry although up to date all inspectors have not reported.

Mr. DONNELLY: I am not finding fault with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Matthews) but the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) has said that he has it on rumour that large sums of money have been paid. I want to know what the rumours are with which the Minister of Trade and Commerce is dealing. I want to know if they are based on fact or if they are just street talk.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My understanding was that certain revenue had been received by the department but that none of it had been earmarked as having been received as a result of the investigation.

Mr. DONNELLY: What department?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The income tax.

Mr. DONNELLY: The Minister of National Revenue has just told us there was nothing received.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then that is correct.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Mr. RHODES moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1936, the sum of $16,359,978.34 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 122 for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1936.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, the Senate committee has finished its deliberations and the Senate has reconvened. I am expecting a message momentarily from the Senate and the Prime Minister will be here presently. I think it might be possible to continue to see if we cannot conclude in the next few minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, July 5, 1935.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day at 2.15 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. L. C. Pereira,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that the following message has been received from the Senate:

Ordered that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house that the Senate do insist upon its first amendment to Bill No. 79, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act, to which the House of Commons has disagreed, for the following reasons:—That the whole intent and purpose and letter of the Combines Investigation Act has to do with the restriction of trade and commerce, and the bill in many other particulars shows that it is carefully and strictly following out that purpose. It deviated from it only in this one point. Its constitutional justification is trade and commerce.

And that the Senate do not insist upon its third amendment to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): As will be remembered, the Senate yesterday afternoon suggested amending our bill by adding after the word "combination" the words "having relation to any commodity which may be the subject of trade or commerce." In view of the explanations that have been given and the reasons that have now been read, it would appear that a combination within the terms of this statute contemplated some dealing with a commodity. Plumbing, to which an hon. member referred yesterday is a service, but I am now informed that it had also to do with plumbing fixtures in connection with the combination where an effort was being made to operate illegally. Under these circumstances I am disposed to move that the house concur in the amendment of the Senate. The third amendment to which reference has just been made is that in which we indicated to the Senate our desire to continue the use of the word "likely" rather than the word "designed." The Senate has now agreed to that word remaining as it was in the bill as it left the house. I think that is all the matter that was not disposed of yesterday. I move second reading and concurrence in the first amendment by the Senate to Bill No. 79.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

CANADIAN GRAIN BOARD

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Bill No. 98, to provide for the constitution and powers of the Canadian grain board, has been considered by the Senate, and on page 4 at line 12, the words "as speedily" have been stricken out. That means that as regards the disposition of the accumulation in the hands of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, the wheat represented by such contracts is to be disposed of "as may be reasonably possible, having regard to economic and other conditions."

On page 4, line 49 dealing with the investigations of the operations of the grain exchange, it is provided that this is "with the approval of the governor in council," because otherwise continuous investigations might make it impossible for them to carry on their business. I see no objection to these amendments, although I would have preferred that the words remain as they originally were, but the committee heard the presentation of the case from two angles this morning. The third amendment that was suggested has not been made, and under the circumstances I would move that the Senate amendments be read a second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT: The Senate is still dealing with our trade commission bill. They have sent their reasons for disagreeing with the motion we adopted this morning, and the clerk of the Senate tells me that it will be a minute or two before their consideration is completed. I cannot do anything to expedite it beyond what I have done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will that be the last order of business, when we conclude supply?

Mr. BENNETT: As far as I know.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILLS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 116, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1936.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I notice that section 4 gives the governor in council power to raise a loan of $200,000,000 for public works and general purposes. Is it usual to embody the power for borrowing in the bill which grants supply?

Mr. RHODES: I think my right hon. friend will find that that has been common to money bills for many years, and has not been changed in any respect.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. RHODES moved the second reading of Bill No. 122, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1936.

He said: This is the bill founded upon the supplementary estimates.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY COMMISSION

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE WITH RESPECT TO SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate with respect to Bill No. 86, as follows:

(1) That in respect of section 14 the Senate agrees to the insertion of the word "unanimous" between the word "the" and the word "opinion."

(2) That the Senate does not insist on the amendment made to section 20 of the bill, but strikes out section 20 and substitutes therefor the following in lieu thereof:

"20. The commission shall receive complaints respecting unfair trade practices and may investigate the same and, either before or after an investigation, if of opinion that the practice complained of constitutes an offence against any dominion law prohibiting unfair trade practices, may communicate the complaint and such evidence, if any, in support thereof as is in the possession of the commission to the attorney general of Canada with a recommendation that all persons who are parties or privies to such offence be prosecuted for violation of the applicable act. The attorney general of Canada, if he concurs in such recommendation may refer it with such complaint and such evidence, if any, either to the Director of Public Prosecutions or to the attorney general of the province within which the offence is alleged to have been committed for such action as may seem to be appropriate in the circumstances."

(3) That the Senate does not insist on its amendment at the end of line 29 in section 21.

(4) That the Senate does not insist on its amendment new section 28.

(5) That the Senate does insist on the deletion of section 26 for the reason that said section contemplates a revision of dominion company issues in certain cases by the Dominion Trade and Industry Commission and that consequently such commission would require a staff of competent experts in this special line to intelligently discharge their duties and that in this regard the commission would become a duplication of provincial commissions already created for similar purposes and clothed with ample power to protect the public in respect of these matters.

Further, the Senate is of opinion that the exercise or non-exercise of the right on the part of the Secretary of State to have such issues reviewed, or not have them reviewed, would be regarded by the public as the taking of responsibility by the Secretary of State for the capital structures of companies no matter what safeguards or precautionary provisions are inserted, and that this is most undesirable.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): With regard to Bill No. 86, to establish a dominion trade and industry commission, which has just been returned from the Senate, I move the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): It is obviously impossible at this time to consider these amendments as they should be considered. Under the circumstances existing I shall offer no objection to concurrence.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If my motion needs the words added that a message be sent to the Senate, then I will include those formal words.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the amendments are concurred in, I think that ends the matter.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend The Dominion Elections Act, 1934.

An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

An Act to provide for the Constitution and Powers of the Canadian Wheat Board.

An Act to establish a Dominion Trade and Industry Commission.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1936.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1936.

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following bills:—

Acts for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1936.

To which bills I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To these bills the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to these bills.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the sixth session of the seventeenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada, with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In bringing to a close the last session of the 17th Parliament of Canada I congratulate you upon the extent and importance of your legislative enactments.

My ministers have for some time been convinced that reforms and adjustments in the existing economic system have become necessary to ensure its more effective and equitable operation. Throughout the world there is a new approach on the part of governments to financial and economic problems, and I confidently believe that the Economic Council of Canada, for which you have provided, will in the future become an important factor in the government service for the correlation of information and scientific investigation.

By the Natural Products Marketing Act, enacted at the last session of parliament, you provided for investigations into costs, price spreads, trade practices and other matters related to the production, marketing and processing of natural products.

During the present session you have amended that statute and the Combines Investigation Act; the Companies Act and the criminal code; and provided for the establishment of a dominion trade and industry commission. These measures will ensure to investors security against fraud; to the producer and distributor, the elimination of unfair practices, to the consumer higher standards of products, and to the dominion a condition of healthy competition in industry. The provision made for the appointment of a director of public prosecutions ensures the enforcement of these enactments.

By the legislation enacted respecting minimum wages, hours of work and weekly rest, the parliament of Canada has made an important advance in the field of social legislation. These measures are of great importance because of their bearing upon economic conditions throughout the country and because they represent Canada's determination to maintain fair and humane conditions of labour for men, women and children in keeping with the national obligations under the treaties of peace and the conventions adopted by the general conference of the International Labour Organization of the League of Nations, to which Canada subscribed.

Through the action of my government, in cooperation with the financial institutions of the country, Canada enjoys the most favourable interest rates in its history. The provision which you have made for loans to farmers at low interest rates, and the measure which you have enacted during the last session of parliament respecting farmers' indebtedness have improved their economic condition. The amendments made to these measures during the session will further extend their benefits. You have also made provision for assisting fishermen by establishing a system of long term mortgage credit.

The enactment of the measure relating to unemployment and social insurance will, through the establishment of a national labour exchange service, provide for dealing more effectively with the problem of seasonal and other unemployment, and will afford the means whereby Canadian workers can, with the assistance of the government, make provision for their own security.

Following a conference with the representatives of all the provinces my ministers have decided to appoint a royal commission to make a thorough investigation of our national health problems with a view to proposing a definite plan for the cooperation of federal and provincial authorities in a national health policy.

The measures which you have taken to provide for public works and undertakings throughout Canada, to authorize the guarantee of certain railway equipment securities, and to assist in the construction of houses will, it is confidently believed, do much to stimulate industry in the building trades throughout the country and create employment.

The action which you have taken during the past few years to raise prices paid to wheat producers gives effect to the policy adopted at the Empire Economic Conference held at Ottawa and the World Economic Conference held at London. By your action in providing for the Canadian Wheat Board that policy will be continued.

The provisions which you have made for the revaluation of gold and an exchange stabilization fund constitute an important effort to restore normal exchange conditions throughout the world and make possible a greater volume of international trade.

Important amendments have been made to the Income War Tax Act, and provision has been made for the rehabilitation of drouth and soil drifting areas in the prairie provinces. Other measures include the relief act and an act to amend and consolidate the acts relating to patents of invention.

During the session my government tabled the additional protocol to the trade agreement between Canada and France, which provides for the extension of further tariff concessions by each country to the products of the other. You have approved a convention of commerce between Canada and Poland, by means of which it is hoped to increase the trade between the two countries on mutually advantageous terms. A modus vivendi was also concluded with the republic of Haiti, and the New Zealand trade agreement has been extended.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

You have reason to rejoice in the proud position which Canada enjoys as a member of the British commonwealth of nations. The world-wide celebrations commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession to the throne of His Majesty have impressed the whole world with the unity and solidarity of the Empire, the devotion and loyalty of its peoples to the crown and the extent of its influence for peace and security.

My official connection with Canada is drawing to a close. My interest in the dominion, however, will not terminate with my departure from its hospitable shores. I shall continue to watch its progress and development with deep and abiding interest and the sincere hope and belief that, under God's Providence, it will ever increasingly prosper.

This concluded the sixth session of the seventeenth parliament.
