THE ROUND OF LIFE.

Two children down by the shinings strand.
With eyes as blue as the summer sea,
While the sinking sun fills all the land
With the glow of a golden mystery:
Laughing aloud at the sea-new's cry,
Gazing with joy on its snowy breast
Till the first star looks from the evening sky
And the amber bars stretch over the west

A soft green dell by the breezy shore,
A sailor lad and a maiden fair;
Hand clasped in hand, while the tale of yore
Is borne again on the listening air.
For love is young, though love be old,
And love alone the heart can fill;
And the dear old tale, that has been told
In the days gone by, is spoken still.

A trim-built home on a sheltered bay;
A wife looking out on the listening sea;
A prayer for the loved one far away,
And prattling imps 'neath the old roof-tree;
A lifted latch and a radiant face
By the open door in the falling night;
A welcome home and a warm embrace
From the love of his youth and his children bright.

An aged man in an old arm chair,
A golden light from the western sky;
His wife by his side, with her silvered hair,
And the open book of God close by
Sweet on the boy the gleaming falls,
And bright is the glow of the evening star;
But dearer to them are the jasper walls
And the golden streets of the Land afar.

An old charchyard on a green hillside,
Two lying still in their peaceful rest;
The fisherman's boat going out with the tide
In the fiery glow of the amber west.
Children's laughter and old men's sighs,
The night that follows the morning clear,
A rainbow bridging our darkened skies,
Are the round of our lives from year to year.

THE WHITE ROSE IN ACADIA.

BY "MAUDE."

But Edith had seen the approach of the sloop, and knew what would follow. She found means, too, of making sure that Gabrielle had been Pierre's companion from Pesiquid, and was then at the Pontrincourt House. So, she sat watching, beneath a crescent-shaped group of willows, as she had often watched before, till she saw Pierre's tall light figure, coming rapidly up the gentle slope that skirted the Cottage. She turned paler than common, and for a moment, longed to stay, and hear his tender explanations, and apologies. But she thought of the cause assigned by Mary Merton, for his voyage; and remembered with a renewal of her resolution, that her words had been partly, if not wholly, true; for he had brought back Gabrielle. She knew perfectly well that the girl had spoken in mere envy, but she could not forgive Pierre for leaving her ignorant of that with which Mary seemed so familiar.

As the young Frenchman drew nearer, she rose, and passed quickly through the trees; and without speaking of her intention within the Cottage, went into the Village by a footpath, completely screened, as was common in these settlements, by the favorite willow of the Acadians. She was anxious to see the Pesiquid beauty, and eager to be among the first to offer her the customary courtesies of their simple mode of life. She was determined to show Mary Merton, and Pierre also, that she had no quarrel with the new visitor; and having no real fear of the young stranger's influence, saw, without pain that her piquant loveliness and grace had not been exaggerated by her admirers. Like all woman of her kind, she felt extreme pleasure in the beauty of her own sex; and showed her appreciation of Gabrielle, so unaffectedly and cordially, that she won the tender little French girl's heart, at her first visit.

Pierre stayed long at the Cottage, hoping for Edith's return, as she knew he would,—and she did likewise in the Village; and successfully evading him on her return home, felt, as the night closed over the Valley, triumphant at his disappointment.

But Pierre was not so manageable, as Edith imagined. He made unlimited allowance for her displeasure, and would not be offended until she should hear his offence; and in her daily paths, and at the evening dances, he was continually near her, recalling their old intercourse, with such earnest, though silent tenderness, that her heart shook with delight, at being so beloved; and rendered the continuance of the manner she had adopted towards him, very difficult. But Edith had rashly and angrily declared to herself, that she would repulse his love, and silence his disclosures; and crushing every transient relenting, she kept well her unreasoning vow. She extended the words and manner of ordinary civility, when she encountered him: and wounded him far more deeply in doing so, than if she had totally shunned his society. But when he spoke entreatingly at her side, as he perpetually did, she turned to him a face so cold and imperious, that he would turn away from her, sick at heart, and come back again and again, to meet the same misery.

So the harvest time came on, and the yellow uplands were gay with the happy villagers, securing their abundant crops: for the kindly, simple community, toiled together, like one large family, and each man's fields were anxiously cared for, by his neighbors. Along the swelling borders of the river, the Acadian men and women, in their picturesque Norman garb, were grouped and sprinkled through the luxuriant grain; reaping, binding, and piling up the golden stocks.

Nearer the river, the meadow, marsh and dyked lands, stretching in broad undulating belts of vivid and changeful green, that varied with every fleeting hour of the fervent Autumn heaven, were strewn and speckled with the sleek, numberless cattle of the Valley, that roamed at pleasure, through the short, sweet after-grass.

Beyond the reapers, and between the wooded brows of the mountains, and the outskirts of the scattered hamlets—nooks, and half-cleared patches of green pasturage, were spotted with countless sheep, that lay here and there, like the small white clouds on the skies of lustrous summer. But storms were brooding over the happy Valley, while the guiltless, unconscious people, danced in the moonlight, and gathered their harvest in the sun.

The Colony and Government at Halifax, were exasperated by the continued treachery and violence of the Indians; and though the good faith of the Acadians, was in many instances undoubted, the English found it very difficult to relieve themselves of the relentless enemies, who held retreats and strongholds in almost every French settlement and harbour, from one extremity of the Province to the other. These places being all the time professedly neutral, when difficulties occurred between France and England.

The story of the sudden summons to the "men, young and old," in the districts of Minas, and River Canard, to appear on the fifth of September, 1755, at the Church of Grand Pre, is too familiarly known to need any repetition here.

The Pontrincourts, father and son, were among those unhappy Acadians who assembled unsuspectingly to hear the decision of the English King, upon some matter, as they imagined, of internal government; and heard the decree which forfeited their wealth, and banished them from the land, to which their feelings clung so passionately, with the fortitude and patience characteristic of the Acadian people is misfortune.

The men collected at Grand Pre Church, which was converted into an arsenal for the time, being retained as prisoners, obtained from Colonel Winslow, who was engaged in the painful duty of removing them from the Province, permission to choose a few of their number, to return to the several villages to relieve in some measure the extreme distress of their families, and to make the best arrangements possible in their wretched condition, for leaving the Country together. There was no chance of resistance, so secretly had their ruin been accomplished. And even the few, who, in the despair and unbearable misery of leaving their beloved homes, fled, scarcely knowing what they did, to the forest, with some undefined intention of seeking shelter among the Indians, were so effectually hunted and wrought upon by the threats freely applied to their captive relatives, that they mostly gave themselves up, before the day appointed for the general embarkation.

Captain Leceister, though a faithful English subject, made no concealment of his commiseration for the unfortunate people with whom he had lived so long, though he could give them no actual aid. And he had promised old Henri Pontrincourt, who had been deputed by his fellow prisoners to return for a few hours to "Molanson," to take means to prevent his separation from the women of his family, at the time of departure.

Five vessels of transports, had been lying for some days in the Gaspereau,

EASILY CORROBORATED FACT.

We have been enquiring of our farmers about the potato crop. The result has been one vastly different from what some asinine writers on the subject would have us believe. Out of the large number of practical and most successful farmers in the county whom we have consulted, we have only found one who ever heard of seven hundred bushels being raised on an acre, and that instance did not occur in this county. Of those who have raised from 700 to 1,000, we find not a single one, (nor could we find one willing to lie for two or three hundred bushels at twelve or fifteen cents per bushel. On the other hand we have ascertained that the average crop is not quite 200 bushels, and that from 300 to 400 is called an extra large crop. One farmer told us he once raised 525 bushels to the measured acre, but this is considered a very exceptional yield.

We fail to see any possible way of proving the assertion that from 700 to 1,000 bushels of potatoes to the acre can be raised without hoeing, and think the person who asserted such a thing is in duty bound, for the welfare of his county and the farmers in it to show how such a gigantic feat ever was accomplished, where it was accomplished, and prove assertions by something a little more to be relied upon than his own fertile imagination.

The Halifax Herald calls us the 'honest independent and fearless ACADIAN.' Yes, sir, that means us every time. Honest in our convictions, Independent in our views and Fearless of party, person, creed, or anything else in expressing them. Further than that we wish to say that the Herald is doing just as much, in our opinion, to ruin Nova Scotia as the Chronicle, and the sooner those two papers see what they are doing the better for themselves and the whole country. Try our motto to a while and see if you don't do more good in a week than you now do in a year. You both need more honesty and independence whether you need fearlessness or not.

While the new foundry is rapidly approaching completion, the question arises: Why not start some other manufacturing enterprizes? Surely Wolfville has plenty of capital for any amount of enterprizes, and quite as surely are their openings here for several good factories.

The best we think of now would be a Boot & Shoe Factory. Oh! yes, we hear some one say "we had one and it ruined all who were in it."

We doubt that. Some one certainly made money out of the former factory and there is not the slightest doubt in the minds of many that one would pay a handsome dividend now if properly and honestly conducted. A thoroughly practical man has just moved to this county, and would, we doubt not be obtainable to superintend the work. Now capital show yourselves. Don't give to the poor, but rather let the poor have a chance to earn their daily bread in honest labor.

A. J. PINEO, Principal.

The Steamer Hiawatha has commenced her regular trips between Windsor, Hantsport, Kingsport and Parrsboro'. Wolfville is left out altogether the same as last season, the owners being afraid to let their boat come into the creek. We do hope this state of affairs will not be put up with much longer by Wolfville people. It is one of the difficult things to understand why our Dominion representative failed to get the necessary grant so that the new pier might be got well under way this summer and perhaps completed.

Hants County people are agitating strongly for a railroad to connect Maitland and East Hants generally with Windsor. The move is a good one and will prove of immense value to Windsor if successful.

After five weeks in hunting up witnesses and evidence Mr. Arthur Trenholm has been discharged, the evidence being insufficient to warrant committal for trial at the Supreme Court. The next move in this case is anxiously awaited by all interested parties.

Another Roman Catholic-Orange commotion has occurred in Conception bay, Newfoundland. A despatch from Carboner says that while the Protestant congregation were deplying from the Episcopal Church on the night of the night of the 13th inst. they were furiously attacked with volleys of stone and other missiles.

—On the 22nd inst. a shock of earthquake of considerable force was felt in the eastern Counties of England. Ipswick the capital of Suffolk County the shock was so severe that the walls of houses were perceptibly shaken; plates were rattled and bells rung. The shock was still more severe at Colchester in Essex, followed by the quaking and shaking of buildings. Church bells sounded as though rung by unseen hands. Tall chimney stacks of factories crushed in ruin to the earth. The spire of one of the largest churches in the city, 150 feet in height, fell with an awful crash to the ground. People were terror stricken; men, women and children rushed shrieking into the streets, where their agonized cries and pale faces made a most impressive scene.

"Got a conundrum for you, Johnnie; invented it myself," said a boy to a playmate. "What's the difference between a poodle you are dragging by a chain, and a rotten tree trunk?" After due deliberation Johnnie passed. "One is a lead dog, and the other a dead log. Them kind is awful easy when you know how." So thought Johnnie, and on his way home he built one on a similiar plan which he tried to explode on the maternal head. "I say, ma, here's a riddle, made it myself. What's the difference between the wax figger of a lady, and pa not letting me go to the circus last week?" "Cause one's a sham dame and t'other's a da—Ow! ow!! ow!!! that hurts, I tell you, can't you take a feller o' your size?" The conundrum factory has been closed for repairs.

 waiting to receive the miserable Acadians, who were to be distributed, utterly destitute, among the older British Colonies.

Upon the wisdom or the cruelty of this measure, it is needless now to offer an opinion. These people, very probably, constituted a dangerous element in the heart of a young and struggling English Colony; but the sudden and total disruption of their beautiful and prosperous settlements, seems to have been, if necessary, to say the least, a terrible necessity. Their lands, crops and cattle were confiscated to the English Crown; money and household goods they were permitted to retain. But these latter were precisely the things of which they had least. In their primitive way of life, they were unfamiliar with money, bartering their produce and simple manufactures with each other, according to their necessities, and exchanging in the same manner with the French and English traders whose vessels were even then frequent upon our coasts. Of their household goods, they could make little profit; their was no provision for the conveyance of cumbersome property; and what articles of value their dwellings contained, were not easily portable.

From these circumstances, it is easy to perceive that the extremity of poverty was added to their other afflictions; and that the cheerful ease and abundant comforts of their former life, rendered them peculiarly unfitted to bear the sudden transition to which they were exposed. Many, in the confusion, and hurry of the general expulsion, were parted for ever, from their nearest relatives; and some died, even before they could be embarked, from fatigue, grief, and exhaustion.

Captain Leceister had not failed to secure to the Pontrecourts the only remaining alleviation of their sorrow; and much of their destitution and pain was forgotten in the privilege of suffering together. The old Englishman saw the ruin of the friends who had been kind and faithful to him, in their prosperity, with an aching and indignant heart; and when he was about to leave them, his clear blue eyes were thick with tears, as he clasped the generous hand of Henri Pontrecourt, and said simply: "Remember me, old friend, if I can ever help you." He turned last to Pierre, saying, tenderly, as he thought of his fair child at home: "God bless you, my son;" and passed quickly over the side of the vessel, to the boat that waited to carry him to shore.

The tenth day of September was fixed for the sailing of the transports, —and upon the night previous, these vessels were crowded with the Acadian prisoners. Very few of these had escaped, and troops were stationed through the late inhabited districts, to secure any such, who might linger in the vicinage of their desolate homes. The beautiful villages upon the Gasperreau, were burning,—the crops and cattle in possession of the soldiery,—and the soft vale, but a few hours before so luxuriant and lovely, a wild scene of devastation.

The few English houses, of course, were spared, but their owners were powerless on behalf of the helpless fugitives.
