"My graves?" I look him in the eyes
And wonder if his feet have strength
To tread the path that made me wise—
That path ao rough, so great of length;
While all along its side there lie,
Beneath the oversanging boughs,
My graves, the blessed graves that I
Love better than my heaven-set vows.

I love my graves! the pink-hued flower That glows there in a slender wreath Seems to me like a priceless dower, Because my dear ones sleep beneath. Tears through the grave like down of the High overhead, with rippling song. The little birds fill up the air, To draw a heavy breath and pas While green leaves catch a hint of brow And sweet buds wither in the grass.

Sing, little birds, above my graves; , gentle breezes, from the se salty fragrance of the waves What if I bear graves in my heart!
Faith, they are mine to tend and keep! and what if I from life should part

So let the laurel drop a wreath
Down on my graves, and let the vine
Run where my dead ones lie beneath.
For every grass blade there is mine.
Even the hands that used to touch till are my own; I love them much, Though hid from sight and clasped
